The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ATKEY—REFERENCE TO ANSWER BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a result of a substantive change in Hansard of the answer given by the Prime Minister to a supplementary question I put to him yesterday. My line of questioning concerned one Ronald Patrick Lippert, a Canadian who has been held as a political prisoner in a Cuban jail for ten years. I asked the Prime Minister whether he was taking into account the fact that the prisoner himself, through his family, had requested the intervention of the Prime Minister.

The answer given to me in the House by the right hon. gentleman was, to the best of my recollection: "Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of that fact." My recollection has been confirmed by the hon. member for Leeds who has taken a continuing interest in the subject matter of the question. Yet Hansard reports the Prime Minister's answer as follows: "Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was made aware of that fact."

This is really the opposite of the Prime Minister's actual answer given in the House. Either Hansard has made an important error of substance or, as more likely may be the case, the Prime Minister or someone from his office has deliberately changed the answer on the blues prior to printing when it was found that the Prime Minister had made a mistake. If the latter is correct, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that this deliberate change in substance infringes not only on my privileges but on the privileges of all hon. members in the light of the dangerous and unfortunate precedent which is set.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would rather the Prime Minister did not reply to the hon. member's charge. It is very seldom that the Chair intervenes in matters such as this, but when a serious accusation has been made, as has been made today by the hon. member for St. Paul's with the apparent support of the hon. member for Leeds, the Chair thinks it has a duty to look at the record. I have looked at the record, and the hon. member's charge that someone in the Prime Minister's office has altered the record is without substance. The record shows that according to the Hansard report—and I think hon. members would wish to give some substance to the reports and the records as they appear for the benefit of the House—that the Prime Minister used the following words: "Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was made aware of that fact." That has not been corrected by anyone, so the hon. member's question of privilege is at least questionable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Cossitt: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: It cannot be on the same question of privilege, because I ruled there was no question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: In view of the fact that my name has been mentioned by the hon. member for St. Paul's, I feel I should be entitled to make a brief statement on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is not entitled to make a statement on that point. The hon. member for St. Paul's raised an alleged question of privilege. I have studied the record. I say there is no question of privilege. If the hon. member for Leeds wished to raise a question of privilege he ought to have given advice and notice to the Chair. This, he did not do. I think we have to proceed with the business of the House.

SUGGESTED MEETING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP TO DISCUSS TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43. The motion speaks for itself, so that no preamble is necessary. I believe if hon. members listen to it carefully, they will agree to it. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding):

That Mr. Speaker be requested to seek an immediate meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, so that Canadian parliamentarians can make known to their United States counterparts their views on the movement of Alaskan oil down the west coast of British Columbia and through the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed? There appears to be unanimous consent.

Labour Relations

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not quite hear the motion and wonder if it could be read again. I wonder if the words "bunch of parliamentarians" were included in it.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) and seconded by Mr. Harding:

That Mr. Speaker be requested to seek an immediate meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, so that Canadian parliamentarians can make known to their United States counterparts their views on the movement of Alaskan oil down the west coast of British Columbia and through the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN QUORUM OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ON STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour of advising the House that the Senate has sent a message requesting its approval for setting the quorum of the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments at seven (7) members, provided both Houses are represented whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings and receive evidence so long as five (5) members are present and provided both Houses are represented.

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the message from the Senate just read by the Chair, I should like to move:

That the quorum of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on regulations and other Statutory Instruments be fixed at seven members, provided that both Houses are represented, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings and receive evidence so long as five members are present, provided that both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION BY MINISTER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 and I hope that it, too, will commend itself to the House, because it relates to a matter of some urgency and of national importance. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity based on the following facts.

Reports today indicate that the two sides in the railway dispute are so far apart that only personal intervention by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) can end the threat of a Canadian rail strike. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the following motion:

That this House immediately request the Minister of Labour to meet both sides in the dispute to secure agreement on a contract which will eliminate the threat of a national railway strike and the national consequences thereof.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF STATEMENTS ON TRANSFER OF COLLEGE TO STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Reports have persisted for some time that the government planned to move the Canadian Coast Guard College, now located in Cape Breton, to the Ottawa Valley. I have repeatedly asked questions about this rumoured relocation and have repeatedly been assured by ministers of transport and by the government minister who supposedly protects the interests of Cape Breton, that this would not happen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might indicate the terms of the motion. As the hon. member knows, under the terms of Standing Order 43 it is not possible to bring forward argument or discussion in support of the proposed motion.

Mr. Muir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall come immediately to the motion. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis):

That the matter of the misleading, contradictory and incorrect statements made by the present and former ministers of transport and the President of the Privy Council concerning the future of the Canadian Coast Guard College in Cape Breton, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have heard that there is not unanimity in this regard.

Mr. Muir: Yes. The right hand man of the President of the Privy Council said no.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order reflecting once again on the automatic refusal of government members in respect of motions under Standing Order 43. I would draw the attention of the Speaker to the fact that there was a "no" from the other side of the House in respect of the first motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I heard "no's" in all three cases.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member had a negative ear because I certainly did not hear it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE ON ALL TYPES OF INSURANCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the announcement by the Canadian Underwriters Association to the effect that the costs of car insurance will be increased by 5 per cent to 16 per cent in six provinces which do not enjoy the benefit of provincial automobile insurance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the federal government take the initiative and call together a federal-provincial conference to deal with all aspects of car insurance, general and life insurance, so as to ensure that Canadians in all provinces would enjoy the benefits of insurance programs at reasonable costs comparable to those in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion again is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity in respect of the motion of the hon. member for Broadview?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

WESTERN ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES CONFERENCE—TABLING OF FINAL BACKGROUND DOCUMENT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table in both official languages the final federal background document for the Western Economic Opportunities Conference.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE GRANTING CITIZENSHIP TO NON-CANADIAN MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-214, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hueglin: The purpose of this bill is to facilitate the obtaining of Canadian citizenship by those men who have served in the Canadian armed forces and who are not in possession of Canadian citizenship. It is concerned primarily with veterans, and I am certain it will be dealt with in the manner in which veterans affairs have customarily been dealt with in the House. I commend it to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and to the gentleman in charge of citizenship—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—ALLEGED DELAY IN TRANSMITTING CORRECTED REPLIES TO UNITED STATES INQUIRIES ON CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the revelation yesterday that the government did not make the Canadian position on the Alaska route and the Mackenzie alternative clear in answering questions put by the United States state department, and in view of the amazing delay in communicating corrections in government answers from June 27 to July 16, can the Prime Minister explain to the House whether the original answer was government policy and if the correction concerning Canadian ownership was the result of a change in government policy after June 27, 1973?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to answer. May I say specifically with regard to the last question, the answer is no. It was not a recent change in government policy; it was a position that had been decided last summer.

With regard to the delay in transmitting the clarification, I should point out that the Canadian embassy in Washington communicated the exact terms of the clarification to the state department on July 6 and that the U.S.

government at that time was in full possession of the clarification, including being aware of the fact that there was one answer for the gas pipeline and another answer for the oil pipeline.

An hon. Member: A lot of gas.

Mr. Baldwin: Hogwash.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—ALLEGED DELAY IN PRESENTING CANADIAN POSITION TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): My supplementary question is again to the Prime Minister, although he may wish to refer it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the TAPS proposal has been a matter of concern both for the U.S. government and the government of Canada for several years, and in view of the Prime Minister's repeated assurances that the Canadian position had been clearly and forcefully presented throughout to the U.S. government, can the Prime Minister inform the House why it was not until July 16, 1973 that the government finally presented to the U.S. government the full Canadian position?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That is not correct. The Canadian position was communicated to the American authorities as far back as May 1972 to Secretary Morton. The most recent statement, as I pointed out to the hon. gentleman, was communicated to them on July 6. If the state department chose not to pass on that information, I cannot be held accountable for that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: I might point out to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would like to ask the supplementary question.

Mr. Fraser: Again I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister who once again may wish to defer to the minister. In view of the fact that the government did not advise the House of the U.S. inquiries and the government's replies, and in view of the fact that the existence of such replies was only released to the press after my questions of July 6, can the Prime Minister now advise the House as to exactly what immediate steps the Prime Minister is prepared to take directly with the U.S. government to correct the damage done by this incredibly inept piece of nineteenth century quill pen diplomacy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman should know, the answers given to the State Department were repetitions of answers given to him and to others in public, and indeed some were direct quotations of answers given in this House. In other words, there was no new statement of policy involved in that.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO COMMUNICATE CANADIAN POSITION THROUGH DIPLOMATIC CHANNELS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why did he not communicate the change in the Canadian position, announced on July 6, in response to the questionnaire submitted by the United States Secretary of State, as would be the usual way? In other words why did he not, through his department, communicate formally with the U.S. Secretary of State rather than leaving it for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to write a letter to the U.S. ambassador accredited in Ottawa?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual, in relations between Canada and the United States, for my colleagues to communicate with their counterparts in the United States, or in response to inquiries in their specialized fields, and I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did the usual thing in his usual, efficient way.

Mr. Stanfield: Did not the Secretary of State for External Affairs, through his department, make a formal response to the questionnaire as of June 27, I believe it was? Did not the Department of External Affairs make that communication to the Secretary of State?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might respond to that because the American Embassy did not communicate with the Department of External Affairs but communicated directly with my department. It was for that reason that my department responded, and the actual communication was made through the Canadian embassy in Washington with the State Department, but of course communication was going on at the same time with the American embassy here in Ottawa after we received the inquiry.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it correct then to draw the conclusion that the Prime Minister and his government have taken this matter so seriously and have been so concerned, that the correct position of the government of Canada was communicated by letter to the United States ambassador to Canada some four days after it was published in Canada and, as a result of this inept and careless proceeding, this did not get to the United States Congress until July 16?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will appreciate that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBILITY OF DELIVERING OIL TO POINTS IN UNITED STATES SOUTH OF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the potentially tremendous oil hazard to the coast of British Columbia, and in particular to that part of the seacoast which would be affected by a major oil spill in the Strait of Juan de

Fuca, I would ask the minister if the government has had active discussions with the United States on the possibility of having all Alaskan oil delivered to points on the U.S. west coast south of Vancouver Island, where there are far fewer navigational hazards than in the Strait of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly the point we have made to the United States on many occasions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege with regard to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only fair from my standpoint to indicate that the State Department had agreed to release the information on July 6, and it was only on July 9, when we found they had not released the clarification and, at their request, that we submitted the letter on July 10. It was our understanding that they would release that information on July 6, and it was only when we found out that they did not do it that we sent them further clarification.

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps there might be some order. I realize the hon. member for Kootenay West has a supplementary, but perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. Leader of the Opposition first and then go to the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to point out that the normal way to communicate on a matter of such importance as this—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Stanfield: It is as much a point of order as my hon. friend's question of privilege. I will be very brief and to the point. I just make the point that the whole procedure was sloppy and there was no follow-through, even assuming that what the minister says is correct. There was no follow-through at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize that the hon. minister was rising on a point of debate in the same way as the hon. Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps we might now go to the hon. member for Kootenay West for a supplementary.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West has an interesting and relevant supplementary to ask.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBLE DELIVERY OF OIL TO CHERRY POINT BY CANADIAN PIPELINE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my further supplementary is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What has been the result of the talks for possible oil deliveries to the United States through other United States west coast ports or to the Cherry Point refinery in Washington by way of an existing Canadian pipeline?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said yesterday, and as my colleague, the Minister of the Environment has said on many occasions, it seems to us only to make sense that the Cherry Point refinery should be served from interior points and not from sea and that would meet our main problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate there are supplementaries from the hon. member for Victoria and other members. Perhaps for a change of pace the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CLOSING OF DAVIE SHIPBUILDING—ELIGIBILITY OF LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES FOR BENEFITS—REPRESENTATIONS OF COMMISSION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since a number of employees have become involuntarily unemployed as a result of the closing down of the Davie Shipbuilding yards in Lauzon, and that they are having a hard time obtaining benefits for that period of unemployment, can the minister tell the House whether he has received representations from the Unemployment Insurance Commission in this regard?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge I have not had direct representation but I will certainly consider the hon. member's representation today and see what can be done about it quickly.

ENERGY

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBLE ACTION TO REMEDY MISREPRESENTATION OF CANADIAN POSITION TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the almost unbelievable position in which we now find ourselves that the Canadian west coast is going to get a tanker route to which all west coast residents are opposed, apparently because our affairs of state are now being carried on using the InfoCan Hansard clipping service—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the hon. member appreciates that a question cannot be asked in those terms, and that it is not conducive to the orderly conduct of business to ask questions which are clearly out of order.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I will try to get to the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who must take responsibility for this communications muddle. Can he explain to the House in a straightforward way what he intends to do to retrieve the situation, if it can be retrieved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that the position of the Canadian government has been known, to the Congress of the United States, the State Department, this country and this House, for many months and has not changed.

COMBINES

ALLEGED COLLUSION OF AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANIES TO INCREASE RATES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the recent announcement by the Canadian Underwriters' Association that the cost of automobile insurance will increase in the six provinces which do not have a provincial automobile insurance program by 5 per cent to 16 per cent effective August 1, 1973, would the minister tell the House whether he has instructed his officials to investigate this massive and concerted move on the part of private insurance companies for a possible violation of the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to draw this point to the attention of the officials of the combines branch to see whether any question has been raised or would be raised under the Combines Investigation Act.

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF PRIVATE AND PROVINCIAL AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE SCHEMES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary. Would the minister tell the House whether it is his intention to instruct his officials to study the automobile insurance rates in all provinces and to publish the results of such study so as to inform Canadian consumers everywhere about the relative merits of provincial car insurance programs as compared with private insurance schemes in the other provinces?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will consult with my officials about that and see whether the suggestion comes under the terms of reference of the Combines Act.

FINANCE

CANADIAN POSITION AT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES ON COMBATING INFLATION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance on the general subject of inflation and prices. In view of the magnanimous undertaking by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, yesterday, that the minister is going to play some lead in some international meeting respecting trade, commerce and inflation, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to inform the House today what new initiative he or the government is taking to provide leadership at the international level respecting rising prices and inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be directing the attention of other industrial nations of the world both in Washington when we meet at the Group of Twenty having to do with international monetary reform and as my colleague has suggested, within OECD as well, to pinpointing the central relations between inflation on a worldwide scale and the difficulty it is causing in the resolution of the international monetary problems.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. In view of the fact that Canada's inflation rate is higher than most others, would the minister tell us whether he is seeking information or giving it at this meeting?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's preamble is not factually correct.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER TO COUNTRIES OF THE EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the urgent need, as very accurately expressed in the latest report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, that the Prime Minister should, in the very near future visit the countries of the European Economic Community as have all the leaders of the other leading trading nations of the world, has the Prime Minister already prepared a plan for such a series of visits next fall or does he intend to formulate such plans in the very near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am giving most earnest consideration to this suggestion of the Senate Committee, and I do hope I will have the support of all sides of this House if and when I make that trip.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the reason that he has steadfastly refused to make these visits in the past six years is the fact that these countries were not sufficiently exotic to prove to him that he should make these visits?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE CONNECTION BETWEEN COMMUNIST PARTY AND IRA—SUGGESTION REPUBLICAN CLUBS ARE FRONTS FOR IRA

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the minister's statement on Tuesday that John Murphy, arrested in Ireland, is a member of the communist party of Canada, will he now tell the House if he has any information to indicate that the communist party of Canada is giving assistance to the IRA and specifically, have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police been requested to investigate fully any connection between the communist party and the IRA?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no information at all that the communist party of Canada is assisting the IRA.

Mr. Cossitt: A supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Is the minister or is the RCMP investigating reports that so-called Republican clubs are acting as IRA fronts in certain cities of Canada?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that right now but I will look into it.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN BANK OF CANADA POLICY TO REDUCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. On April 9, as recorded at page 3087 of Hansard the minister stated that where the monetary policy was in conflict with the fiscal policy, the Bank of Canada controls the monetary policy while the government controls the fiscal policy; in light of that fact and the fact that mortgage interest rates for CMHC loans are going up as high as 10 per cent and probably 12 per cent, does the minister now consider that it is time he discussed the matter with the Bank of Canada, because there is definitely a conflict, to bring about a change in policy?

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no conflict. I see the Governor of the Bank of Canada regularly.

Mr. Woolliams: Is it now clearly established that the government policy is high interest rates and there will be no change, except for an increase in the interest rates of CMHC mortgages and conventional mortgages in Canada?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED HIGH FEES OF DOCTORS AND LAWYERS—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE ACCESS TO THESE SERVICES AT REASONABLE COST

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact just revealed by Statistics Canada that in 1971 medical doctors' and lawyers' incomes were on average four to five times higher than the incomes of ordinary Canadians, will the minister responsible for the protection of Canadian consumers be good enough to inform the House whether his department is conducting any studies on the subject of doctors' and lawyers' fees charged to Canadians, and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that Canadian taxpayers seeking to maintain their health and to protect their legal rights have access to these services at reasonable costs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter the hon. member has raised comes essentially within provincial jurisdiction.

ALLEGED HIGH COST OF MEDICAL SERVICES—CONTINUATION OF FEE FOR SERVICE CONCEPT FOR DOCTORS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Given the almost predictable attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the federal tax dollar is being spent massively on medical education and on medicare, and in view of the concern expressed by federal government spokesmen about the soaring costs of health care in Canada, will the minister tell the House whether any serious studies are being conducted in his department to determine the extent, if any, the medical profession is abusing its privileged position in terms of ripping off the taxpayer of Canada and in terms of dispensing extravagant medical services to those few overly concerned about their health?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a question which I suggest ought normally be answered by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked if any studies were currently being conducted by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on these two points, dispensing services and treatment of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If that was the question, perhaps the minister might reply. The question was so long, I had forgotten the first part of it.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there has been put before the provinces a new financing formula that will allow plenty of flexibility on health services to the population at reduced costs. I suggest the hon. member's friend in British Columbia could listen to his question about reducing the cost of health services.

Mr. Speaker: I will return to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. The hon. member for Athabasca rises on a point or order. I will hear him on that.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Fraser Valley West did not intend to mislead the House with regard to the question of fees charged by doctors. I have a statement in my office which I am prepared to table. It indicates that a plumber charges $22 for a house call whereas a doctor charges $10.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member ought to have first declared his interest.

Mr. Rose: I might point out, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a supplementary? That was the reason he was recognized.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rose several times, but I did not feel I had the attention of the House. I might say to the hon. member for Athabasca there might be some very expert plumbers who could justify that kind of salary. I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether his proposals to the province of British Columbia and other provinces to reduce the cost and increase the health care of Canadians contemplates the continuation of dependence on the fee for service concept for rewarding the medical profession.

Mr. Lalonde: As I said in my previous answer, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the proposal that would prevent any province, including the province of British Columbia that my good friend knows, from adopting a system other than the fee for service system. The federal government would be pleased to continue sharing in the cost of those services.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEBEC—OBLIGATION OF EMPLOYEES IN PASSENGER SERVICE TO BE BILINGUAL

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell the House if the employees of the Canadian National in the Quebec passenger service must be bilingual?

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. Speaker: This question could be placed on the order paper. If it is urgent to establish whether the employees of the Canadian National should be bilingual, the question could be discussed at ten o'clock tonight.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN POLICY ON LEASING RECREATIONAL LAND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Has the National Capital Commission reported to him any change in their long standing policy with regard to leasing recreational land to the Ottawa-Hull municipalities? If so, when was the change made and will it adversely affect local municipalities?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, it has not. I understand this question relates to press reports of yesterday with regard to a proposed arena. That is a matter for discussion between the NCC and myself and the NCC and the city of Ottawa.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—ALLEGED ABUSES BY INVESTIGATORS OF CERTAIN CLASSES OF CLAIMANTS—REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could he tell the House if it is correct that investigators of the department, especially in southwest Montreal, abuse the recipients of unemployment insurance, and more particularly immigrants, aged persons, women and young people, and does the minister intend to remedy the situation more clearly and severely than last April 5?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the allegations are correct. However, to make sure there is no doubt about it, I will look into the specifics of the hon. member's representation. I might add that having read the press reports of the incident to which I think the hon. member is referring and which gave rise to this comment, from information I have, I do not believe these are factual representations from the people making demonstrations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

I believe the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has a supplementary question.

Mr. Wagner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

When does the minister expect to table the report of the advisory inquiry committee established last April.

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is referring to the report of the advisory committee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, on benefit control operations. I have answered this question several times in the House. I am now awaiting the final report from that committee which has been delayed by a public meeting that I believe is being held in Toronto today, to be followed by a public meeting in Vancouver. The chairman of that advisory committee tells me that following the completion of those public hearings, it is his intention to submit a report as quickly as possible.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL TO OTHER JURISDICTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Have representations been received from concerned veterans associations in Ontario expressing concern about the handover of the Westminster Veterans Hospital in London and, if so, what stand is he taking?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, representations have been made to me by people concerned about the handover of the Westminster Veterans Hospital. If it is turned over, this will be done with great caution. Certain things will be guaranteed. Veterans will be looked after and given priority. The veterans employed there will keep their employment.

ENERGY

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO MAKE CANADIAN POSITION CLEAR TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Peter Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have an additional question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the subject of the pipeline from Alaska. Last April he said repeated attempts had been made to inform Washington of the government's position with regard to this oil pipeline. Can the minister say why he is finding so much difficulty in communicating with Washington and whether he anticipates he will now be able to make our position clear as it relates to an oil pipeline through Canada.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have stated, our position has been communicated both to the United States State Department and the Secretary of the Interior and, indeed, to members of both the Senate and of the House of Representatives when they were in Ottawa.

Mr. Oberle: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I had occasion to visit Washington in April of this year and I would hate to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs have the last word on this subject. He has said that the Senate and Congress of the United States were aware, and that the House was aware—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows, or ought to know, that this is not a point of order. If he can show me, by reference to the Standing Orders, how an intervention of that kind is a point of order I will be pleased to hear him further.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the point of order is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that the position of the government was made clear to the House of Commons, to the people of Canada and to the Senate and Congress of the United States. That is very difficult for me to believe.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can believe or disbelieve what is said in the House by other hon. members but that has nothing to do with the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

DATE OF COMPLETION OF STAFFING OF BOARD—INQUIRY AS TO FIRST REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the sharpening urgency of the food price situation, can the minister tell us whether staffing of the Food Prices Review Board has been completed. If not, why not? When does he expect this staffing exercise to be completed?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I understand from reports I have obtained from the Board that the staffing activity is quite advanced but I do not have information today as to whether or not it is complete. I will endeavour to get further information and inform the hon. lady.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Bearing in mind the minister's recent promise that the first report of the Food Prices Review Board will be made by early fall, can he tell us whether this report will contain concrete recommendations to the government for dealing with the price of food, or whether it will be merely an outline of a grand strategy for the winter campaign?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—SUGGESTED USE OF EXPORT CONTROLS TO CORRECT

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): A supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the light of the announced removal of controls by the United States government and the resulting sharp increase in imports into the United States of foods at this time, is the government now prepared to use export controls on a temporary basis to avoid scarcities and an escalation of prices at consumer level?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am glad the hon. member has drawn the attention of the House to the failure of the kind of policy his party has been proposing for some months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY RESPECTING MEANS EMPLOYED FOR PAYMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Yesterday, as recorded on page 5751 of Hansard, in reply to a question on family allowances the minister replied: We are proposing that the act provide for an average of $20 per child, and this amount may be more or less, but that the minimum be $12. I would like to ask the minister to state clearly whether the cheques will be mailed directly from Ottawa to the families and what will be the amount received by each child, $12 or $15?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the hon. minister to answer briefly to the question of the hon. member for Témiscamingue but it would seem that those questions are related to a measure which will be eventually before the House. In any case, I would not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Témiscamingue and the minister might reply briefly to this question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the assurance that family allowances cheques will still be issued by the federal government. As regards the second part of the question, the amount of the cheques may vary from one province to the other depending on the provincial legislation provided, first, that no child gets less than $12 and, second, that the average for all children in one province works out to $20 so that if a province should reduce the amount sent to one child this amount will be automatically increased for the other children in this province so that the average be $20 per child in the province.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I realize that we will discuss this question later on, but it is important for the information of the people.

Does the minister mean that the family allowances cheques for each province will be issued by Ottawa, after an agreement with the province?

Mr. Lalonde: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, as in the past all family allowances cheques will be issued by the federal government for each of the provinces.

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY GAS PIPELINE—INQUIRY AS TO UNITED STATES INTEREST

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether the government of the United States has inquired as to the interest of the Canadian government with regard to a joint Mackenzie Valley pipeline to carry Prudhoe Bay gas? Has the U.S. government requested any information as to the possible conditions governing such a pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Discussions have taken place with United States officials over the last several years regarding a gas pipeline route. There is an extensive record there. Indeed, there has been an exchange both of inquiries and responses in this regard.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—ALLEGED DISCREPANCY IN SUBMISSION OF COMPANY—REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT INTERVENE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport and it relates to the railway labour dispute currently in progress. In view of allegations made by the union that there were discrepancies in the submissions made by the railway company to the arbitration board, can the minister tell us whether he has asked his officials to look into this point and thereby remove this obstacle to a solution of this dispute?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): These people enjoy autonomy as far as the conduct of negotiations is concerned. In the event of a dispute it is dealt with by the Minister of Labour, but I do not see why I should intervene and tell the company what they should or should not do.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, who I believe is within earshot, or, at least, he was a few moments ago.

Mr. Bell: The shot part is right.

Mr. McGrath: My supplementary is to the Minister of Labour. In view of this very serious allegation, and in view of the failure of the conciliation board to reach agreement, and, further, in view of the fact that as a consequence thereof both parties are irreconcilably separated, is the minister now prepared to exercise the responsibilities he has under the statute and intervene personally in an attempt to end this strike which could easily take place as of next Saturday?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I am certainly prepared to exercise my responsibility. Whether this means intervening at the present time or not is certainly debatable.

Mr. McGrath: Can the minister tell us whether he has now made mediators available to both sides in this dispute, or whether he is prepared to delegate someone, perhaps the hon. member for Verdun or even the hon. member for St. John's East, to represent him?

HEALTH

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL SERVICES IN LOW INCOME AREAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of my question, which is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, can be judged on the basis of a petition containing over 5,000 names which I have just received in my office concerning counties all over Canada, such as Brome County, which now find themselves without the services of a qualified family doctor. My question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is simply this: Has he been informed that in low-income areas across Canada it is now easier to obtain the services of a veterinary surgeon to treat animals than it is to get a doctor to treat human beings? What action does the minister intend to take in this area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked in those terms is hardly in order, as the hon. member will recognize.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, then I ask the minister what action he intends to take, with the provinces, to make sure that in low-income areas there are more family doctors, more clinics and more medical assistance to rectify this chronic and serious situation.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which has been the object of discussions with the provinces at every meeting of health ministers.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the grave urgency of this situation, because right now people are being deprived of services which they should be getting—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. That is argumentation.

Mr. Grafftey: With respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not argument; it is fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair recognizes the Leader of the Opposition.

Oral Questions

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

LOCATION OF HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the heard office of Canada Development Corporation, about which there seems to be some difference of opinion within the corporation. Can the Prime Minister reassure the House that the headquarters of Canada Development Corporation will be in Vancouver both for purposes of policy determination and also in terms of operations? In other words, will the headquarters of Canada Development Corporation be in Vancouver, as the Prime Minister has assured the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the assurances I gave to the House are well known to the directors of Canada Development Corporation and, for greater certainty, our government representatives on the board of the corporation were told anew what our instructions were when I communicated to the House how the corporation was to be set up.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED RECAPITALIZATION TO ENABLE COMPANY TO MEET PAYROLLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of his straightforward answer to my question of last Friday on recapitalization of the Canadian National Railways' system. The minister said that in his view, in the long-term interests of the country there should be recapitalization both of the CNR and of Air Canada. I ask the minister whether he and his officals are studying this matter and does he have any proposals to put before the government? Will he be presenting proposals to parliament later this year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had this question under active review with the Department of Transport, but for the moment I prefer to see whether we can get the current financing bill through and tidy up the situation.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As we have already informed the government House leader that the bill could go through second reading in one day, if he calls it, I ask the Minister of Finance if he would consider urging the government House leader to refer the matter of CN financing to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications this fall?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the government House leader is aware of the importance of the bill, but I would not want at the moment to add to his immediate problems.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RISING FOOD PRICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CONTAIN INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that, according to Bank of Canada figures, Canada ranked last among the major industrial nations in containing food prices for the 12 months ended last April, is the government giving the idea put forward by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at a global conference, serious consideration with a view to learning how other nations are better containing inflation with respect to food than Canada is, or is the government simply looking for a ploy to distract the attention of the public—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Simcoe North.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED GRANTS PROGRAM TO ESTABLISH GERIATRIC UNITS FOR RESEARCH PURPOSES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increasing aging population in Canada and the consequent increasing burden of chronic illness—50 per cent of a physician's workload being with older patients today—adding to already skyrocketing costs, would the minister give consideration to special research grants or to the establishment of geriatric units where more scientific data could be applied not only to the care of such patients but also to the prevention of chronic disease?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, due to improving health services, it is obvious that there has been an increase in the longevity of Canadians, and geriatrics has become a more important aspect of medicine. I will certainly give careful consideration to the suggestion of the hon. member.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FUTURE STATUS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Since the minister's reason for not making a statement on motions regarding OFY was that the decision as to its future had not been made, and since Cabinet decided on Tuesday not to combine OFY and LIP into a single program, can the minister now give an undertaking to make a full statement on motions tomorrow? Also, will he tell us, now, that in future the OFY program will be based on statute, rather than being run out of the back pocket of the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question was clearly out of order. He cannot ask a supplementary to a question asked in those terms. I think hon. members should know that when they ask questions along the lines of the question of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, which clearly was out of order, they cannot take it for granted that, the point having been scored, they can then rise to ask a supplementary. I think that is an entirely wrong practice, and that is why I recognized the hon. member for Provencher. I see the hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would advise me in what particular my question was out of order when I asked the minister if he would make a statement on motions.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member had asked only that question, it would have been in order. The hon. member for Provencher.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF RIGHTS TO FM BROADCASTING UNIT KNOWN AS SNOW-GOOSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that the Department of Communications initiated research for a compact FM broadcasting unit for remote communities, a project commonly referred to as the Snow-Goose project, and as a company called Mico-Com Electronics, of Beauséjour, Manitoba, was successful in its application to build the new broadcasting units, would the Minister of Communications indicate whether the department will release the world marketing and manufacturing rights in order that production of the Snow-Goose project can be undertaken?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member will allow me to take note of his question and give him an answer later.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth and then call orders of the day.

VILLE DE LAVAL TRAINING CENTRE—FAILURE OF EMPLOYEES TO RETURN TO WORK—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWERS GIVEN TO HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Can the hon. gentleman advise this House whether the failure to report to work of many training personnel at the federal training centre at Ville de Laval is continuing today, and did officials of the Canadian penitentiary service instruct employees at that institute yesterday to give misleading answers to the subcommittee of this House investigating the penitentiary service and the reasons for this failure to return to work?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have an up to date report on that matter, but I will be pleased to get a report for the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This might be one of my last opportunities to ask the President of the Privy Council, as the government House leader, what his plans are for the House for the balance of this week, and next week, as the case may be.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we would continue today with the debate on the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, followed by the immigration bill, followed by the amendments to the Criminal Code, and then the Olympic bill. I have changed the order of business slightly because it is my understanding that some members who might want to participate in debate on the Olympic bill will not be here tomorrow, including the Postmaster General whom I should like to see attending tomorrow a very important historical celebration in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Baldwin: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, as the government House leader said that we were to begin debate on what he called, I think, the amendment to the Criminal Code, is it intended to complete this bill before any other legislation is called?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, save and except the necessity of dealing with the Olympic bill at some point next week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the business of the House, I wonder if the government House leader has had time to think of the suggestion which was made yesterday, namely, that before we deal with anything else we might call order No. 12, the report stage and third reading of the bill regarding crop insurance.

● (1510)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I would say that if we could pass the bill without debate, I would call it as the first order of business today; but I have had no assurance that it would pass in those circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a supplementary point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is, has the minister sought this assurance? He has it from this party.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Suspension

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member to give me an assurance, and the other House leaders, and I will call this bill if they say there will be no debate.

Some hon. Members: Up, up.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say there is a time and a place for everything, and it is not the floor of this House at this time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO SUSPEND OPERATION OF ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 18, consideration of Bill C-208, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Blenkarn (page 5758).

Mr. Speaker: The "time and place" now is to call on the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the difference of opinion varies, increases and multiplies, it seems, as we go through the procedures of this House. It multiplies a little more as we get further into the session. No debate in this House exemplifies more clearly the difference of opinion that can exist among members of the House than this bill which pertains to redistribution and the amendment in respect of time. The change proposed by the amending bill is not new to Canada; it is something which has been necessary before, and unquestionably it will be necessary again.

When Canada was initially developed on the basis of negotiation, there were differences among those parts of Canada now known as provinces when the Dominion of Canada was formed. Negotiations were held and a decision arrived at which was considered at that time to be a fair, contractual agreement in respect of seats. I have listened with interest to those who have said it is not fair to Canada that there should be a minimum number of seats for some provinces. It seems to me it would be better to have a minimum number of seats for more provinces in Canada, so they might at least be geographically more competently and effectively represented.

While it may be a very interesting theory, I am sure in some areas of Canada if one were to say, "Let us alter the fact that there is a minimum number of seats in certain provinces," it would create a hubbub and furor in the general nation of Canada which would not be in line with what we want: furthermore, when the suggestion is made I think we are asking the House of Commons to negate or to fail to honour the contractual agreement by which Canada was formed. That contractual agreement did not relate only to seats in parliament; it did on one occasion relate to the necessity of constructing a railroad: so to me and to many other people it would be a logical move of the Canadian people to say, "Let us take up the rails of the railway which was part of the deal by which one province became part of Canada while at the same time we made the deal in respect of the minimum number of seats for other areas of Canada." This was a contractual agreement entered into by a responsible government.

Having said that, I think it is only fair to add that just because there are a minimum number of seats in certain provinces does not mean there should not be a minimum number in other provinces. I submit there should be, and that part of the redistribution program outlined in this bill should assure a minimum number of seats for certain areas of Canada which find themselves losing representation on our strictly representation by population structure.

I am not one of those who would in any way wish to say that we should not have representation by population in Canada. However, I am one of those who say that when the question is presented clearly and fairly to Canadian citizens, I do not believe anyone in Canada today would fail to recognize that when you try throughout this nation to arrive at a one vote, one person proposition, no matter how one is represented it must be vote for vote, person for person. The people of the cities should be given to understand—I am sure they do not comprehend the complications of rural representation in respect of distance—some of the pleas made in this House based on the so-called "rep by pop" argument. They should consider the fact that a member of this House stated that in perhaps five minutes he could walk across his constituency, and in 15 or 20 minutes could walk its length.

Let us consider the vast areas of the rural country and consider the amount of time a rural representative spends in travelling from one part of his constituency to another. We must consider the consumption of that amount of time in relation to the opportunity of a member to see his constituents, or for his constituents to see him. There are also more factors to be considered than just a one person, one vote basis for the distribution of seats in Canada.

If at any time in Canada's future it must be one vote, one person then it will become absolutely necessary that special consideration be given to constituents and their representation in rural areas, so they can in effect be represented by people whom they know and can be given an opportunity to see these people. I submit some members of this House probably spend more time in the process of transportation from one part of their constituency to another than some city members spend representing their people. I am not casting any reflection on any member of this House when I make that statement.

Again, as I did when I spoke in respect of the New Brunswick distribution, I want to make it very clear that no member of this House has a finer group of people, and no member derives more pleasure out of representing his constituents than I do. I do not object to any part of the constituency as it originally existed and in which I was elected. However, I object with the greatest vehemence at my command to what has been done to New Brunswick in a general way, because this redistribution has completely disregarded the social, geographic, ethnic, economic and political practicalities which should prevail in a program of constituency redistribution.

[Mr. McCain.]

I cite for you, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the filing by members of this House of the objection to the map when it was laid on the table was a non-political presentation, signed by members of the government party and the Conservative opposition, in an effort to obtain a better deal for our people. One great weakness of the present act is the fact that the commission is in no way obligated to listen to people. It has been given the opportunity to hold a hearing at a time and place of its convenience, to hear presentations written out in advance without necessarily any opportunity for rebuttal or discussion. This has limited the possibility of the presentation of the voters' ideas to a degree that most people in New Brunswick threw up their hands rather than attempt to make a presentation.

This is not a reflection on the members of the commission but, rather, on the regulations by which they are bound. Any act relating to the redistribution of seats should also give an opportunity to the people of the area to present their points of view in respect of redistribution. At the same time, it should obligate the commissioners to pay attention to them. The representations made in New Brunswick both by myself and the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), as well as by the president of the Liberal Association, were almost ignored, although not totally. Therefore, the people find themselves in the position in which the commission decreed they should be initially.

This is not a local problem and I do not speak as a prejudiced individual from a particular constituency. The arguments which have been presented in the House have been publicized in one area as an intention by the members to protect themselves. I deny that. It is a misunderstanding of a political situation by somebody who does not have knowledge or expertise in the field of politics. It concerns me to see individuals make comments in respect of this subject when they have not at the same time, in the organization of their media operation, asked a member of the staff to live in that particular section of our society, investigate that facet of society from personal knowledge and then report on it. At no time has any individual, other than my own constituents, made a knowledgeable presentation to me, nor have I been asked why this redistribution should happen.

I do not know how many other members of the House have had the same experience with the media. I respect the media totally and recognize that they have a job to do. On occasion a mistake can be made by them, as well as by a politician. I submit that when you have an illness, you go to a doctor; when you have a political problem, you go to your member of parliament, legislator or city councillor. These are fields of expertise as completely separated from other fields as any, including the legal profession.

Members of the House have a knowledge of the problem, and if the act has a weakness its great weakness is lack of recognition of the political nature of a democratic country. It was intended, of course, to avoid gerrymandering, the lumping together of populations for political purposes by the government of the day. I think it may have avoided that to some degree, yet as I listen to reports from various areas of Canada I find that gerrymandering still exists. In its objective to eliminate gerrymandering, the act has perhaps succeeded in some instances—but it must have political guidance, in the scientific sense of the word, to recognize the necessity of political representation.

What is equality in terms of representation? Is it an opportunity to see your member of parliament in a city or riding five minutes walk away from you? Does this compare with the necessity of a 200-mile drive? What is equality? Is it an opportunity to walk into the unemployment insurance office a few blocks away from home, or is it when you find that your constituents and yourself live more than 200 miles away from the nearest branch of the unemployment insurance office?

What is equality? Is it the lack of a Manpower training centre, a Manpower office within 100 miles of your home, versus the opportunity just around the corner or at most a few blocks away? We have heard a great plea for equality of representation. I submit that this plea is without knowledge of what is equal representation. I am sure some members from rural ridings have not been in all the communities of their constituency since the last election, and will have no opportunity to get to them before the next election. I submit that this is not equality when compared with the opportunity of the member representing a city community who is a matter of blocks away from his entire constituent body.

What is equality? The legislation may have brought about what is considered to be an inequity on a temporary basis. But that, of course, is what confederation is; it is what democracy is. It must be the aim of this House to seek out, and to try to find in whatever time may be necessary—either the time of limitation as imposed by this amendment, the time proposed by the bill, or whatever period of time it takes legislators to come up with a fair formula in the form of legislation—the most equitable representation that rural and urban Canada can possibly obtain.

That is equality, and that must be the objective of the House. It must be my responsibility to compromise, perhaps, some of my rural attitude. At the same time, it must be the responsibility of the city-oriented member of the House to compromise part of his city attitude and recognize that the inequities of this redistribution do not all lie in the city, do not all lie in British Columbia and do not all lie in New Brunswick: they lie all over Canada in a rather equitably distributed fashion, with complaints coming from coast to coast. From Newfoundland it is one complaint, and from British Columbia it is another. When legislation generates a situation which brings about complaints on a coast to coast basis in this country, it is high time we took the time to amend the act and to bring about a situation in which there may be some political reality, in the scientific sense of the word, for the government of Canada and the election of the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol) who is the next hon. member to have the floor. I believe the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) is seeking the permission of the House to ask a question of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), if he wishes to accept the question.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my colleague, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)—I must say, first, that I support entirely many of the things he said in his speech—whether he supports the amendment of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn). This did not come through in his remarks.

Mr. McCain: That is a good and fair question. I did not state my position in that respect. I said that regardless of the time required for an equitable settlement of the dispute from coast to coast—and the time is important—the equality of distribution and proper selection is more important.

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) that the electoral boundaries readjustment suspension be extended only to July 1, 1974, rather than, as proposed in Bill C-208, to January 1, 1975. I should like to remind the House of a rather profound statement of recent times, namely, Parkinson's law. Mr. Parkinson states that work expands so as to fill the time available for its completion.

There should be no delay beyond that which is absolutely necessary to bring boundary readjustments into effect. We must act as soon as possible to bring justice to those citizens of Canada now denied the full value of their vote. I refer, for example, to those from Newfoundland who are now residents of Toronto or Vancouver. I refer to those from the Maritimes, from Quebec, from the Prairies and from northern Ontario who are now residents of urban centers. Because they exercised their choice to move where they would in Canada, are they to be denied a full vote? Are they less a Canadian, less entitled to have adequate representation? An independent commission has said yes, they should be entitled to a full vote. Parliament seems to be saying, in a majority, by its delaying tactics, no.

It would appear that parliament, by ignoring the needs of the cities, is ignoring the needs of 80 per cent of the population. A number of members from rural areas have indicated that the needs of those in the rural areas are more in want of attention than the needs of those in the cities. As a general comment, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the prosperity of all areas in Canada is directly proportional to the prosperity of the urban areas. Unless the cities of Canada, the industrial centres, perform their role of activating the economy through utilizing their resources, we are all poor.

More specifically, in reference to the individual it is unthinking, if not cruel, to state that the city dweller does not need as much service from his member of parliament as the rural dweller. The city dweller, for the most part, is somebody who recently lived in the country. He has left his roots; he has left his family; he has left his relatives. He is alone in the midst of an uncaring throng, be he from Europe, Asia, the West Indies or the Maritimes. There has been talk about, and attention paid to alienation of Quebec and alienation of the west. By our action let us not incite alienation of the cities. We ignore the cities at our peril.

Look at the United States today where, without adequate city representation, they have not had adequate solutions.

There is, I believe, an element of self-interest versus national interest in some of the arguments presented to this House. We would do better, both urban and rural members, to think less of maintaining our present positions as individual members of parliament and to think more in terms of the best interests of Canada. I am well aware that the political life of urban members of parliament such as myself is, generally speaking, short. I believe our time is better spent in doing the best for Canada in what may be the one chance that we get, rather than thinking in terms of the next election.

It has been said that the name of the game of politics is to be elected. But if it is only to be a game it will not be a rewarding kind of life. So what, if our constituency and our political life be wiped out by boundary readjustments? These are relatively unimportant. If our lives are motivated only by political expediency, we will never have any profound satisfaction.

But we do have an opportunity now to follow through with the work of the boundary readjustment commissions, to give Canada more equitable representation and to help solve, with an increased number of members, some of the problems of the cities. So again, speaking on behalf of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peel South, I plead that we get on with the work of enacting the new boundaries.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering Bill C-208, An Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blankarn), and I quote:

> . . . by deleting the words "1st day of January, 1975" where they appear on lines 4, 8 and 9 at page 2 and by substituting therefor the words "1st day of July 1974".

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering exactly why such an amendment is moved; it is only a matter of six months more or less to reestablish fairly the electoral boundaries. Moreover, this matter has already been discussed just four or five years ago. The proposed readjustments of 1965 have been implemented in 1968, at the time of the election, and now we are considering whether this readjustment will take place on July 1, 1974 or January 1, 1975. If we are going to waste the time of the House, this is a good way to do so because it will change absolutely nothing and if we are given six additional months, it is clear that we will perhaps be able to study still more seriously the question of electoral boundaries.

Now, we all know that there will be no change for some provinces. For example, Prince Edward Island has four members and will continue to have the same representation regardless of the population. The constitution wants it that way.

In New Brunswick, the number of people is immaterial since they must have at least ten members whereas the other provinces have to play the game of alterations.

Quebec has lost some members since the last census and it will loose two other members occording to the report of the commission.

Saskatchewan had a rather impressive number of members some years ago, but it will probably see its representation reduced to 11 or 12 members, whereas Alberta will keep its representation and British Columbia will add a few. Manitoba will not increase its representation very much. Ontario will probably have four additional seats.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that we stress the population of ridings almost exclusively and that virtually no comparison is made between rural and urban areas, as underlined in the suggestions included in the bill on new boundaries.

In my area, we now have three ridings: Abitibi, Villeneuve and Témiscamingue. According to the new bill, one riding will vanish—Villeneuve—and be added to the riding of Abitibi which will stretch as far as Ungava, the James Bay, the Hudson Bay and the Duparquet-Senneterre line. It will be an oversized riding, 800 miles long, reaching all the way to Ungava. By eliminating the constituency of Villeneuve, I am given back the municipalities I represented before 1965: Val-D'Or, Malartic, Louvicourt.

At present, the length of my constituency is 150 miles. According to the new boundaries, it will be 250 miles and nobody wants to understand that the time I spend covering these 250 miles, the member from Montreal can stay in his office receiving hundreds of electors of his constituency. In Montreal or Toronto, a square of houses makes a constituency while in northern Ontario constituencies, in Hearst, Kapuskasing or Cochrane, the member must spend his time travelling in his car to meet electors every two three miles. They just don't understand that in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, this is why time must be taken to study a suitable readjustment of the boundaries of electoral constituencies. The population factor is certainly important, but the geographical factor should also be taken into account, yet it is completely disregarded.

For example, Prince Edward Island with a population of 111,041 is represented by four members. What does that mean? If there is one member for 27,000 citizens, how many voters are there: 11,000, 12,000 or 13,000?

The province of New Brunswick has a population of 634,557 with 10 members, which gives 63,455 citizens per member.

In Quebec, where there is a population of 6,027,764 and 74 members, they want to eliminate two members. The number of people for each member will be increased, although there are already 79,865 citizens in each federal riding.

Mr. Speaker, I have more people in my riding than there are in the whole of a Prince Edward Island riding. By virtue of the British North America Act, Prince Edward Island is entitled to four members. The number of voters is irrelevant; what matters is the number of members of Parliament. As a matter of fact, there are four. The same goes for New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to be illogical we might as well be all the way. That is why people everywhere find the matter of representations funny.

I for one am opposed to increasing the number of members for the city of Montreal where there are already too many. I see the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) in his seat and he too knows very well that there are too many members. Some members are very active and one member in Montreal can work ten times more than a member of a rural riding because he does not have to travel. He has his office in town. The hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) nods in approval. That is true. One can represent 150,000 constituents in the city of Montreal, but not in a rural riding.

If we compare federal and provincial ridings, we can see that there are four provincial constituencies in our region, while there are only two federal ridings.

Mr. Prud'homme: They have secretaries.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): As the hon. member for Saint-Denis just said, all provincial members have secretaries who are paid by the government.

Mr. Prud'homme: They also have offices.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): They have offices, expense accounts, everything to serve their constituents. In Ottawa, on the contrary, they want to play politics with that. Every member of Parliament needs some services in his riding, but nobody dares stand up and ask for them. They are real hypocrites!

Mr. Prud'homme: They sit four days a week, four months a year!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, much could be said about it. I think the hon. member for Saint-Denis is getting to like Social Credit.

An hon. Member: That makes sense.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at least he has some common sense.

I am told that the National Assembly in Quebec sits four days a week and at the most four to five months a year. There is a difference with what is being done here. One should note, by the way, that the parliamentary allowance for the members in Quebec is superior to that of federal members of Parliament.

An hon. Member: Disgusting!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I hope this will appear in the official report.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the process of readjusting federal electoral boundaries should take into account the needs of rural citizens so that they may get the best possible services. I see that my friends from the New Democratic Party are applauding, and with reason. When I visit in Saskatchewan the riding of Rosetown-Biggar in the north of the province, around Saskatoon, or in the south in Ponteix or Regina or in Gravelbourg, I realize that hon. members there have huge ridings which they must crisscross, while in the cities, all the constituents are practically on the spot. One meets his constituents on street corners, as I was saying a little earlier. In large cities like Vancouver, a member has to walk only three blocks to meet all the people of his riding.

I therefore believe that we should take our time, study the situation in depth and refrain from moving hasty amendments which mean nothing. Instead of seeing the act come into effect or having us continue discussing it on January 1, 1975, we should discuss it before July 1, 1974. It seems to me that if there is an idiotic argument, that is one. This proposal makes no sense. We are not in such a hurry. These are the same people who say: Let's end the session and go on holidays. But when it is time to go, they move amendments like that. This afternoon has been wasted, completely wasted. We could have undertaken the study of those bills which have to be passed before we adjourn for the summer. For example, the Olympic Games bill for Montreal. Why did we not start on it this afternoon? Because once again there is—

An hon. Member: There is blackmail!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, there is a bit of blackmail in that. In fact, we are told that that legislation must pass before recess. But there is something else too. We are warned that there will be no adjournment now if we refuse to promise to restrict the debate on capital punishment in the fall.

Mr. Speaker, in the fall the debate on capital punishment will perhaps last three days and maybe even twelve or fifteen days. It is up to hon. members. We have neither to compromise nor to get involved in that connection. They should drop it now if they intend to reintroduce it in the fall. If they do not want to discuss it immediately, as I would hope, let us wait till the fall. But between now and then, let us finish the business before the House.

There is no need to discuss the electoral boundaries all afternoon, as well as tomorrow and Monday. If Progressive Conservative members were bright enough to withdraw their amendment and say: "Well, we could discuss this when we return next fall", we should not have to determine whether we shall examine again this bill before January 1, 1975 or July 1, 1974.

Personally, I am fully against this amendment. Instead, let us take the time necessary to review the situation so as to increase especially the urban representation throughout Canada. Moreover, let us make sure that the number of constituencies will not drop more in Quebec than in Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick. And if we must increase the representation in some areas, let us not abolish existing constituencies in others.

This is my suggestion. Let us maintain present boundaries and create new constituencies, because some of them are already too large. For instance, it should be proper for Saskatchewan to send three more hon. members to the House of Commons. This would relieve and help the population of Saskatchewan.

But if more members of Parliament are needed in Ontario, let us add them. If ten members are needed, let us give ten to Ontario, but to do so, we do not have to take some from Quebec, from Saskatchewan, from Alberta, from Manitoba or from New Brunswick.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It certainly is. Now it is said that the number of federal members must be limited to 264. Mr. Speaker, not long ago in Quebec there were 92 provincial members; I think that they now number 114 or 118. They did not hesitate to establish new ridings. In Ottawa we will offer fewer services to our constituents on the pretext that the figure 264 is sacred. Nothing is that sacred. Let us put a new figure in its place through a new law which will allow us to increase the number of ridings in the provinces where it is needed without any decrease elsewhere in Canada.

In studying this bill, we should take our time this afternoon, but we should not discourse endlessly on that matter: we should state clearly our positions and accept to study that matter anew before the January 1, 1975. That will do no harm either to the Progressive Conservatives, the Créditistes, the New Democrats or the Liberals; but that will allow us to go on to something else in order to enjoy holidays like everybody else.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who spoke with such eloquence. He asked that the upholding of the principle of redistribution await the 18-month period. He typifies the position of the rural member of parliament who has the obvious difficulty of travelling great distances. Before coming to this House I followed the career of the hon. member for Témiscamingue in the newspapers. I read about his sleeping in the back of his Chrysler and doing a number of other things because of the large area he has to cover. I understand he has some connection with the Chrysler product.

I listened to the speech of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol) and the speech of the mover of the amendment. They represent another extreme in Canada, the extreme of the congested area. I have some experience in both these settings in my constituency. People in both rural and urban areas have their peculiar problems of communication with their member of parliament no matter on what side of the House he may sit. I think the point is well taken. I experience the difficulties of a rural area in one part of my constituency. In the northern part of my constituency I have the problems of an area that is congested and becoming more congested. The communication problem is growing.

Generally speaking, I support the first principle, that of representation by population. If there is to be a delay, I would support as another first principle that the House get on with the matter of redistribution by the time suggested in the amendment. I have not been in this House very long, but long enough to know that in the period suggested by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) this House will not be able to deal with the many problems that face both rural and urban areas. I would like to have it otherwise. I would like to be able to say with sureness that all these questions can be answered within the short period of time suggested by the hon. member for Peel South. However, I do not believe that is possible because of the workload of members of parliament in their constituencies, in the House of Commons and in our committees. I think it would be improper, from the point of view of the input there must be in connection with this consideration. This would not be possible if we limited ourselves to 11 or 12 months. We may be doing an injustice to the fundamental problem of this House and this parliament, namely, its representation, if we so limit the period for full consideration of this question. I do not believe any member of this House, or any person in Canada would want something so fundamental to be compressed into a short period of 11 months.

I again read the speech of the hon. member for Peel South in which he set forth the problems. He referred to the Alberta problem and the New Brunswick problem. In dealing with the new New Brunswick problem he mentioned the sociological factor. Without being disrespectful to the representation commission, which at least did a good job of dividing my province in terms of the number of people involved, there has been overlooked—even in the province of Ontario—the sociological and traditional aspects.

The sociological factors which the hon. member for Peel South related to New Brunswick relate as well to Ontario and other parts of Canada. They are great problems and cannot be solved by members of parliament talking among themselves. They cannot be solved in party caucuses or in this House. They require input from community groups across the country, from people interested in appearing before a committee of this House to discuss these problems. Problems in the rural areas, such as dwindling incomes, high costs, and weather put pressure on a member of parliament. These people also feel alienated. As the hon. member for York East said, there is alienation in Canada. That alienation is not confined to the cities but exists in the rural areas as well.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue referred to sociological and geographical effects being considered. We would be doing a disservice to this country if we considered them in what for all practical purposes is a very compressed period. I am not suggesting there ought not to be legitimate political input into redistribution; there is nothing wrong with that. However, the input into redistribution ought to go beyond representations before a commission. Representations from the public ought to be made to a committee of this House. Members of parliament who are not members of that committee may also want to attend.

There should be no time limit placed on the work of the committee which would result in a half measure. We must give this very important aspect of the representative life of this country the most complete and most reasoned consideration. As much as I would like to see it done in the relatively short period of 11 months because of the first principles I mentioned earlier, I do not believe it can be done within that time. I believe we would be doing this House and the people of this country a disservice. We would be denying them the right to come before members of this House, assembled in committee, to present their arguments on the sociological, geographical and democratic aspects of redistribution. It is with some reluctance that I say what I do with regard to this bill, because I understand the feelings of my colleague for Peel South.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue said there were ridings in the cities which were merely agglomerations of apartment blocks, and so on. That is true. In other areas, ridings are measured in collections of townships, collections of small cities and towns. The problems which arise are different. We ought, in this period of 18 months, to consider not just the factors which go toward providing for representation for groups of people; we ought to consider during that time the ways in which a member of parliament can best serve the public, the kind of assistance with which he should be provided, whether different standards should apply in different parts of the country, what special assistance should be given to members from the far north with respect to transportation, and so on.

In the past, these things have been considered on an ad hoc basis when they have been considered at all. We now have an opportunity, I suggest, to deal in depth with the sociological and other factors which go to making a member of parliament functionally representative of his constituents in terms of the particular problems of his riding. For these reasons, I fear I must differ from my hon. friend from Peel South whom I hold in great respect. I find myself caught in this debate between the hammer and the anvil, between the large urban areas and the rural areas. I should like all these considerations to be studied. It is important that the House should not attempt to compress into too short a period the type of consideration which the electoral process deserves.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson).

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the observation from across the way was totally unnecessary. He suggested this was a filibuster. I do not know whether he was referring to me. I may express my views a little more often than the hon. member does—I have not heard him say anything yet—but I believe we have a responsibility to represent those who have sent us here, and despite the fact that the hon. gentleman objects I intend to assume that responsibility this afternoon.

As every hon. member is aware, the question of redistribution is of vital concern not only to those who sit in this chamber but also to the people of Canada. It is very gratifying to be elected to sit here in the House of Commons, but it is even more gratifying to feel one is provided with the means of adequately fulfilling the responsibility which has been imposed. It seems to me that every possible facility should be available to members to assist them in fulfilling their tasks. The task which has been entrusted to us is an extremely onerous one, though I realize that this opinion is not shared by everyone. I remember that shortly after I was first elected in 1953, I received an anonymous letter from a lady suggesting it was too bad I had left the profession in which I had been engaged, in order to become a member of parliament because, she said, members of parliament just sat around and did nothing. I assure hon. members I was not here very long before I realized just how wrong that lady was.

There are two aspects of our task here. The first is to pursue and conscientiously discharge the duties which are ours in the House of Commons. The second is to maintain liaison with our constituents so that we may be aware of their views and their aspirations and represent them in parliament. In recent years, at least, we are finding that the demands of the House are making it increasingly difficult for us to maintain this necessary contact. A proliferation of problems is currently being brought to the attention of parliament. There are issues which were formerly matters of provincial concern only but which have now moved into the realm of shared responsibility. New approaches have to be developed in response to changes in a highly organized society, and all these demands have added to the workload of members.

Here we are, at this late date, still in Ottawa at a time when common sense and necessity insist we should be meeting with our people and sharing in their activities. We are a part of community life. I am aware that an expression of opinion such as this leaves one open to a charge of longing to get away to spend a leisurely summer. However, those who take this attitude are not only out of touch with reality but are unaware of the responsibilities of a member and the wishes of those who work hard planning community projects and who appreciate a member showing an interest by his presence and support at those functions.

I believe the failure of the government to properly organize the business of the House and concentrate on priority items has resulted in the situation we face today. Perhaps this answers the question raised by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) when he asked why this question of redistribution had not been dealt with earlier.

As I have indicated, the second aspect of our responsibility is to maintain close liaison with those we represent. The question has been raised whether a member should simply speak for himself, form his own conclusions, reach decisions without regard to the views of his constituents and then leave his fate in the hands of the electors at the next election. If this were true, the necessity for knowing what our people are thinking would not be so great. I believe these two positions should not be mutually exclusive, but should blend together. A member's own decisions, views and conclusions should blend with the views and wishes of his constituents. At least there should be a proper balance and blending of the two in order that the important issues we face may be taken care of more adequately.

The members of this House have become the ombudsmen of the people and, despite all our representations, the federal government has not seen fit to introduce a measure or to support one that would provide an ombudsman. We know that such persons have been appointed in several provincial jurisdictions. I was interested to learn that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) recommended the appointment of an ombudsman for those who are incarcerated. Significantly, those who run afoul of the law and must pay the penalty for breaking the law are to be given the services of an ombudsman, but law-abiding citizens who run into problems are not entitled to the services of one. I do not understand that rationale. One has now been appointed, as I have said, to take care of this field. Consideration should be given to appointing one for all Canadians.

Redistribution must be effected in such a way that the needs of all parts of the country are fully recognized. Adequate representation for our areas of major population density must be assured, and the legitimate needs of rural Canadians for a voice in the councils of the nation must be heeded. As well, there are the claims of the community which must be acknowledged by a dedicated effort on the part of the member, who must assist the community to gain that which is of legitimate concern to it. He should obtain assistance from the national government. We must consider, as well, the needs of the various regions of this vast country. Some regions, although similar in some ways to others, are in other ways dissimilar and require attention.

We must take into account provincial needs that call for attention. In this respect, some provinces are far from adequately represented at present. We must recognize, and this concerns me, that passage of this measure will for a time perpetuate this inequity for perhaps five years. Of course, I am referring to my province of British Columbia. We appreciate the tremendous growth of the province. People are moving there from all parts of the country and, considering our salubrious climate and the beauties of nature in the province, one need not question why people go there. We like them to come. British Columbia is experiencing a tremendous population growth. Under the redistribution proposals we would gain three seats. We must remember that.

I have always maintained, as others have I am sure, that British Columbia is seriously underrepresented in the upper House of parliament. If one analyses representation in this country, one will see that some centres of low population are represented by many more senators than come from my part of the country. That is why I suggest that we are seriously underrepresented in the upper House of parliament, and it will be a disservice to British Columbia if we continue to be underrepresented in the House of Commons. That is why I think the amendment before the House will assist, at least to some degree, in meeting the situation as the time element is being somewhat reduced. On the other hand, I still feel that it would be of advantage to the province I represent if the original redistribution plan were to come into effect.

I realize that urban Canada faces problems, rural Canada faces problems and the provinces face problems, as do the various regions. Although we oppose changes which militate against the interests of any one segment or area, we say that we must guard against unnecessarily maintaining a situation which perpetrates injustices against other parts of this country.

The question has been asked, why has this delay been proposed? Why is the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, to be suspended until the end of 1974? Last evening the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) commented upon the reasons for this suspension being introduced. If his pessimism is justified, we will wait an eternity until changes are made. He suggested, in speaking of the problems that are inherent in this matter, that even if this bill were passed there would hardly be enough time to make the required changes.

What puzzles me is this: the government, apparently, has realized for a long time that injustices are being perpetrated in certain parts of Canada. The parliamentary secretary suggested that what was done in 1964 was not a final step, but one step forward in evolving a satisfactory answer to the whole problem. Since then apparently nothing has been done. Action has not been taken, plans have not been drafted and suggestions have not been announced by the government for bringing before parliament changes that would ensure that all parts of this country are properly represented in the House of Commons.

Now that the provinces which would suffer if there is a delay might be given some relief, this issue is being raised. We are told that we should not proceed until we have had a long time to discuss the matter and come up with answers. We are told that it will take time to bring forward solutions and to bring before parliament something that might be satisfactory. It seems that even if there were to be such lengthy consideration, any suggestion brought forward still would not satisfactorily meet the needs of the country. So I ask, why is there this long delay? We should get down to business and consider changes that would meet the needs of provinces which have gained tremendously in population without jeopardizing the rights of the less densely populated areas.

The changes in representation are necessary and desirable. I maintain they should be effected at the earliest possible time consistent with the need to ensure that they result in justice for all Canadians. I believe the amendment introduced by my colleague from Peel South is very worthy. If the government has been considering, looking at and working out the problems behind closed doors, surely it has something in mind to bring before this House. If we were to give the government a period of one year, I think this would be more than adequate. In the meantime, however, I object to the fact that my province of British Columbia will be denied proper representation until some time in the future when, hopefully, those needs will be taken care of. I believe this should be assured and provided for at the present time.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, both yesterday and today I listened to the debate on Bill C-208 and the amendment. I recall the comment made by my hon. friend from Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) in respect of the time being shortened to 12 months. As a new member of parliament, I am wondering what gave him the idea that parliament could move that fast based on past performance. I would certainly think the 18 months' period would be required.

As some members may know, I am of a very shy and retiring nature. I do not speak very often. I represent a rural area. Rural members sometimes speak parochially, and I suppose city members speak on the same basis. We must all look at this situation in terms of the country as a whole and even those of us from rural areas, probably in the context of a favoured son or daughter ideal, must give consideration to our colleagues from the great urban ridings and agree that probably they are entitled to more representation based on their population. I do not think we should go back to the old days that were mentioned, when "rep by pop" was the slogan. In those days a great part of Canada was populated on a much more even basis, in respect of rural and urban areas, than it is today. In those earlier days, and until recent years, Canadians were classed as drawers of water and hewers of wood. A great part of our population derived its living in rural areas.

Through listening to this debate I have learned from my very knowledgeable and well educated colleagues that this problem is a hiatus. I wonder if their constituents are as knowledgeable as they are. I have also learned from the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) that certain areas are exacerbated. That is really a "50-center." In real English, putting it on the line for my own people, I believe that means rubbing salt on the tender part of the wound, or whatever part it may be. I wanted to clear that up.

A great many members have repeated, verbatim, speeches they made previously on this same matter. I spoke on this question, I believe on July 9. My remarks are on the record and I do not intend to repeat them. However, I do wish to mention one or two things which I believe should be mentioned. The city members told us they have a really difficult job. One member, the hon. member for St. Paul's, measured his riding—as was mentioned today—in minutes; five minutes by 15 minutes. I believe that is the measurement of his riding, and I do not believe he is the world's fastest walker or runner.

A great many rural ridings would be measured in terms of days and weeks. It is on that basis that rural members feel they cannot properly look after as many constituents as a city member. I might point out that the hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol), a fine member and a colleague, who spoke earlier today mentioned a letter he had sent to his constituents in York East. In this letter he listed 25 telephone numbers and 25 departments. It does not matter what a person wants, all he has to do is pick up the telephone and automatically the department answers. This would apply, I suppose, in the great city of Montreal and in other large urban centres.

What is the situation in respect of a rural member? In his case there would be only one phone number, the member's. This is another "plus" for the city member. I appreciate the position of my colleague from Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) who just spoke. British Columbia is being discriminated against. I concede that. I suppose the city of Toronto is being discriminated against. Of course, this happens to be the only item in 10,000 in respect of which they are discriminated against. Everything else is a "plus" in their favour.

On this particular basis we must agree that something should be done, but surely the city members would agree that when there is a larger territory to be looked after in a proper manner, the member should not have to be on the run all the time. Perhaps something can be done. Parliament moves slowly: I have learned that in my six months and a few day here. However, perhaps parliament can do something in this case.

I appreciate that the commissions had a difficult job. In my particular case the commission, in its wisdom, came up with a description figure of 84,000. In rural areas a variation is allowed of 25 per cent. This would bring my constituency down to about 62,000. However, they placed in my riding an extra little corner which, for the information of my city colleagues, includes 22 townships. Most of the city constituencies could be placed in one township and be lost. In addition, we have the county of Haliburton. I am supposed to do a good job in respect of it. If I am left with it, perhaps I shall be able to do a good job, but I think this is asking a little too much.

Parliament might be able to come up with some suggestions for the benefit of the city members. Perhaps we could give British Columbia three more members. I will not mention Ontario. However, we might give five seats to southern Ontario. We could steal two seats from northern Ontario. So we are going to give southern Ontario five seats. I feel that Quebec should not have hers taken away, either. I am hoping that a new plan can be devised for revision of the boundaries in this country within 18 months. I think that 12 months is asking for the impossible.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the amendment that stands in the name of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn). In doing so I should like to refer to the tenor of the remarks made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) who, at least in my view, sought to create the impression that this was a particular responsibility of the government, that it was an initiative taken solely by the government without relation to the sentiments expressed by members of parliament since the beginning of this parliament.

In the course of this debate the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), in his short intervention, made it clear that he was the first person in the House who insisted that action should be taken to deal with this problem that has now been dealt with by the House of Commons. I ask hon. members to take a look at the order paper and at the objections that have been filed by members of this House from all parties, objections against the results of the present over-all framework under which we are operating.

These objections came streaming in from members of the House. They came from the provinces of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta, Ontario, and Saskatchewan. Read the objections and you will find that probably the only way to meet the objections that have been expressed by members of the House of Commons is to try to look at the over-all framework under which we are operating at present.

It should not be a secret that the proposals that are contained in this bill were fully canvassed by representatives of all parties in the House. It was my view from the very beginning that if the official representative of any of the parties said we should not proceed with this, we would not have done so. However, all the representatives of the parties—speaking not for every member, because I understand that there can be differences on this question within parties—agreed to proceed in this way. So it is a responsibility that must be shared by all parties in the House. All the details of this bill were discussed by the House leaders before the bill was introduced.

I believe it is important that that be stated because the bill would not have gone forward if a single party had said, "No, we think this is wrong and we do not think you are proceeding in the right way." I think that is important because this is a parliamentary problem, not particularly a government problem. It is true that the government must take the responsibility for putting proposals before the House of Commons, but this is a problem that must interest every member of the House.

I am merely saying, in reply to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), who asked what was the necessity for the review, that the necessity for the review is contained, it seems to me, in the argumentation that is before the House and in the objections filed by members from almost all the provinces of Canada. The question then is asked by the same hon. member, "Why not proceed with the present program and conduct the review simultaneously?" There are two answers to that. First of all, unless parliament were under some deadline it would probably never complete the review; and second, the review is intended to try—perhaps we will fail—to correct the dissatisfaction that has been so widely expressed by members of the House of Commons. In all good humour I would want to put that before hon. members who seemed to insinuate in their remarks that somehow the government had proceeded and that no one else had been involved. We are all involved.

The hon. member for Peel South has not struck at the heart of the bill in his amendment. He has asked, "Why do you not do the job in 11 months rather than 17 months?" I have attempted to deal with why, in my opinion, 18 months is probably necessary. It is now July 19, and in all certainty the standing committee to which this problem will be referred will not get going until the fall of this year and the government will be putting forward definite proposals to that committee. When I mention definite proposals, perhaps hon. members should remember that in the last parliament I introduced a measure to amend the BNA Act in order to mitigate some of the effects of the present system by increasing slightly the total membership in the House. There was no interest, or very little interest in that bill and it died on the order paper.

We will make another effort to put proposals before the committee in the fall, and obviously other members from all parties will be putting forward proposals then. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and, I believe, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) have stated that it would be essential for such a standing committee, if it is seized with a problem of this magnitude, to travel and hear evidence throughout the country. That is going to take some time. Then we will come back and watch the difficulty that members will have in reconciling all the different points of view in an effort to come up with a better system. In the committee I have mentioned some of the problems that have been raised. I put it this way:

They—

Referring to members of the standing committee.

—will be considering the total membership in the House of Commons. They will be considering the Senate rule. They will be considering the exceptions. They will be considering the principle of representation by population. They will want to consider the question of regional representation. They will be considering, obviously from what has been said even today—

I am quoting myself, having listened to members of the committee.

—the question of the independent commissions versus the politicians.

I am not making any proposal to alter the existence of the independent commissions, but even this afternoon an hon. member on the other side said that an opportunity should be given for greater political input. He asked why it should be that the final word be left with the independent commission. As surely as I am standing here, all these questions and others will be dealt with. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said that we must consider further sociological factors, in response to the speech made by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

I think that that is quite a job. Suppose, after doing all that, they get proposals, they hear witnesses and they reconcile their problems and their difficulties and make specific recommendations to the House. What happens then? If we are going to do anything, we will have to amend the BNA Act, we will probably have to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and we will probably have to amend the Representation Commissioner Act, to name only three at the present time. Then we bring these into the House and we have another debate, and we have what we are going through today going on and on and on. Yet members say ten months is enough time.

If you want this effort to fail or, to put it more constructively, if you want to oblige us to bring in another bill next May extending the time beyond the 11 months, then you will pass this amendment. I am certain, given all the factors I know, that the time limit is a reasonable one and we will be doing well if we complete our task within that time. The question was put to the Representation Commissioner. He was asked by a member of the committee, why the 18-month period, and he quite properly replied as follows:

I cannot give you any explanation as to why 18 months is required. This is a political decision which the House has made to find a solution. There is a period of 18 months until January 1, 1975, in which the House of Commons has time to find a solution to the problem of five provinces losing seats; areas like northern Ontario losing representation, and northern Quebec; and the shift of rural population to urban, rural seats becoming large. This is all a legislative decision. Parliament has to find a solution.

He went on to say:

In my own view, if you judge this time factor by the 1964 bill, 18 months is not unreasonable.

Those of us who were in this House in 1964 will recall how long it took to put through the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. I put through part of that bill, acting for Mr. Pickersgill who was absent from the House, and I recall the frequent consultation and negotiation that had to take place with members of the opposition. We will have to go through the same thing again.

I agree with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) that parliament does move slowly but, hopefully, wisely. In this case it will probably move more slowly than it does on other things because of the importance of the question to all of us. To me, 18 months is a reasonable period. It is put in there as a guarantee to members like the hon. member for Peel South, the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) who are fearfull that this is an effort to put off redistribution indefinitely. To provide that guarantee we have stated that if parliament has not succeeded within the 18-month period in finding a better solution, we will reinstitute the commissions which are being discharged through this legislation.

It may not be any comfort, but hon. members should bear in mind the fact that in a normal parliament, assuming we had a majority parliament, probably there would not be an election until the fall of 1976 under any system of redistribution, and probably we will be just a few months behind that time through the process that we are now undertaking. If hon. members put themselves in that other world a little, they will understand that perhaps not as much is being taken away as is suggested.

Members from the urban areas, from the rural areas, from the big provinces and from the smaller provinces have all expressed their concern. Our job will be to find a framework or a system that will provide better satisfaction to all concerned, and to do it within 18 months. I think that is not an unreasonable period.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I just refer to the other 12-month period that is mentioned in the bill. There has been some confusion and a bit of misunderstanding in the debate on the 12-month period as opposed to the 18-month period. The hiatus to which the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka referred arises from the fact that if the Representation Commissioner in the normal course of events, without this interruption, made his order this fall, as he inevitably would do, or in November or December it would be physically impossible to hold an election for a period of a full year. That is not my evidence; that is the evidence that you will find in the committee. That is the advice given both by the Representation Commissioner, Mr. Castonguay, who has more experience in this field than any man living, and by the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Hamel. They say a year is required.

So despite the best efforts of parliament in passing the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment act the last time, we failed to take account of that hiatus problem and it is covered in a separate provision in this bill so that it would be possible for Canada to have an election at any time. If the provisions of the act were allowed to stand as at present, it would probably be impossible to have an election in 1974, and you can imagine how the rafters would ring in this chamber and how the editorial voices would clamour if, say, the government were defeated in January and we could not have an election until ten months after that. Everybody would decry how negligent parliament had been and how the government had tricked the people and the House of Commons. There might even be the horrible possibility that the Governor General would have to send for the opposition without there being any opportunity of their going to the people. That is corrected in this bill.

If the hon. member for Peel South would just look at the evidence given by the Chief Electoral Officer, he would see that this is a solid situation despite what has been written in the urban press to the effect that this is just a bit of imagination concocted in the House leader's mind because he wants to save his seat. Mr. Speaker, it arises from the very fundamental characteristic of running an election in Canada. So I hope we will not be influenced by this amendment, that we will defeat it and give all members of the House of Commons a reasonable time to come up with a better system. If we do not come up with a better system, we will have to go back and live with the one to which so many objections have been raised by all members of the House.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support Bill C-208, an act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. My support comes from very basic reasons. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the government House leader, has just made an elegant speech in which he reminded hon. members that the impasse which parliament has reached is the result of protests that have originated not only with members of parliament representing all parts of the country, but is also the result of a massive protest from the public itself.

Those of us who attended the local hearings of the redistribution commissioners I think will be able to conclude that it was the most vigorous and active example of public participation that we have engaged in for a considerable length of time. Under these circumstances it was inevitable that some emergency action should take place in order to deal with and respond to those protests.

The point I wish to make, however, is that the reason we are in this dilemma, the reason we have reached this impasse is that there is a basic law in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act itself. We were convinced of this when we were carrying out redistribution the last time following the 1961 dicennial census. Those of us who were members of parliament at that time recall that we went through precisely the same process—"agonizing" process would be a better phrase—that we have engaged in at the present time.

Obviously, from the two applications of the new act—the act is comparatively new, having been passed in 1964, I believe—I think it is time to conclude that there is a fundamental flaw in the legislation itself. I would hope that the government, which has put forward the present emergency bill, C-208, will take this into consideration along with the other problems that were dealt with by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) a moment ago.

When we were debating the act, members of parliament were not unaware of the dilemma we were getting ourselves into. The original act back in 1963-64, as it came from the hands of the governor in council, provided a measure that would make it possible for the two chief officials of the Parliament of Canada, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition, to appoint representatives to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. As a result of strong protest at that time, I think my hon. friend and colleague from the province of Manitoba—the keystone province—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) led the opposition at that time and introduced the amendment which I think has created the problem confronting parliament at the moment. In his amendment the hon. member suggested that to give the top officials of this House, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of the Official Opposition, the privilege of appointing representatives to the Electoral Boundaries Commission would return the whole process to the realm of partisan politics.

The Hon. J. W. Pickersgill was leading the debate at that time and was piloting the legislation through the House and, faced with a confrontation of this kind, he decided to capitulate. Those were the days when the government had a majority.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dinsdale: No, I guess it did not, but it was not in the dilemma it faces today when it is at the beck and call of the New Democratic Party. They could have taken fate by the forelock and carried on with the legislation as it was originally proposed. We would have been spared the agony and the process of sober second thought that we are going through at the present time. I could quote excerpts from the debate on that occasion. Page 739 of Hansard for March 10, 1964, reports Mr. Pickersgill as saying:

—in doing this—

He is referring to this amendment.

—we should not abdicate the final responsibility which is imposed upon this parliament and we would have to find some means of making sure that we did not just turn this matter over to a commission—

Notwithstanding those wise words, the government agreed to the amendment and the whole process of redistribution was turned over to a commission which was made up of the judiciary and two appointees by the Speaker. I am sure those of us who have gone through the experience of two redistributions are quite convinced that this is an entirely unsatisfactory method of carrying out redistribution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Speak for yourself.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tells me to speak for myself. I think the facts speak for themselves. Surely he has been in tune to a sufficient extent that he is aware of the massive protest that has been generated on the basis of a redistribution that has been carried out by an independent commission—a commission that is so independent that it is completely out of touch with the political realities of this country.

Obviously, as I have indicated, Mr. Pickersgill was aware of the problem and we spent a considerable time trying to convince the government to carry on with its original legislation. Had it done so, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the purpose of including representatives of the officials of parliament on the commission would have been realized and we would have had in the redistribution process some imput that would have dealt with the political realities of the country.

As I have indicated already, I trust the government will look back over the debate and will amend the legislation in such a way that it will achieve the purpose that we intended by the original act. It is almost five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I want to go on to another topic, so perhaps we could call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Energy; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social Security; the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger)—Agriculture.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely Notices of Motions (Papers), private bills and public bills.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the member in whose name the motion stands today would be willing to have us suspend private members' hour and get on with the amendment of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn). I am sure he would like a decision to be reached on it.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we have noticed that private members' hour is being done away with far too readily around here. I could inform the House, in order to make everybody happy, that we have only two or three more speeches for tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): There is no unanimity.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LOAN OFFERED TO "CORPORATION DU JOURNAL LE SOLEIL DE QUÉBEC"

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the contract and all documents relating to a grant by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the newspaper Le Soleil of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, with consent of the House I should like to say a few words about the point of order brought up a moment ago.

Unless I am mistaken, I believe Bill C-208 might be passed if the time set aside to study this motion were given up. If that can expedite the business of the House, which would be in the public interest, I am quite prepared to do so. But if it will enable the official opposition to proceed indefinitely with the debate on this matter, then I do not agree. If, on the other hand, this legislation can be passed by six o'clock and the government could then introduce legislation that is expected by the people, for instance, the one concerning family allowances, then I am prepared to sacrifice anything to speed up our business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I think that the hon. member should have made that proposal before we proceeded with private members' business.

Still, we can ask for the unanimous consent of the House to revert to consideration of the bill, and I do not see any objection to that.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO SUSPEND OPERATION OF ACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-208, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted there has not been a long interruption in the discourse I commenced, because it is always difficult to pick up the thread. I will just restate the main point I wish to make in my contribution to the discussion. If we are going to solve this problem it will be necessary to carry out some rather detailed amendments to the original act on the basis of the suggestions I have already made.

Notwithstanding the point I have made, that there is this fundamental flaw in the legislation, the redistribution that precipitated the recommendations of the commissions across the country, which precipitated this emergency bill could have been avoided if the redistribution commissions had taken into consideration the protest they met with at regional meetings across the country.

The protest was based primarily on the failure to recognize what is one of the major social problems in Canada today. That is the tendency of governments at the federal and provincial levels to cater to the process of the continuing drift of population to the city, rather than bringing into being policies to counter this fundamental trend. The impression I received when I discussed the matter at the hearing in Brandon last May was that the commissioners were also accepting the myth, without criticism or reservation, that it is inevitable that the population of Canada will gradually shift to the great urban communities. They accepted the statistical trends put forward by the sociologists and other social scientists who pontificate from great heights that by 1985, 85 per cent of the population of Canada will be resident in a dozen or so major urban communities. If they accept that myth uncritically, obviously they will get a distorted picture when they try to carry out redistribution based on the 1971 census.

As I see the results in Manitoba, the province I have examined in detail, it is obviously they not only took into consideration the statistics from the 1971 census but were trying to anticipate the statistics for 1981 which they feel will conform to the continuing pattern of rural to urban drift. As a result, the redistribution in Manitoba is badly out of whack. This was brought home repeatedly, in clear-cut terms, to the commissioners when they listened to the public protest at the local hearing in Brandon. There was nothing fuzzy about it.

We face the situation where nine out of the 12 electoral ridings in the province of Manitoba could be represented by an urban member of parliament. When you fall into that gross error, obviously you are going to perpetuate this trend which has become a part of our Canadian mythology. Members will understand why there has been such an enthusiastic and vigorous protest from at least the rural parts of the province of Manitoba.

If the commissioners had understood the political protest, and if there had been some practical political input—as would have been the case had the original act been allowed to proceed in this House in 1964—we would have avoided a fundamental error of this kind. We are not necessarily objecting. Some commentators have the impression that Manitoba is objecting to the fact we are losing yet another seat, dropping from 13 to 12. Certainly that is something that has to be regarded. Perhaps I should underscore this by pointing out that in 1941, when Manitoba had a population of 729,744, we had 17 members of parliament. Today, with a population of 980,000—close to one million—we are going to have only 12 members of parliament. We have dropped five members of parliament notwithstanding the fact that our population has increased by almost 300,000. That is an undesirable trend. It is for this reason the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) raised the basic point that perhaps there needs to be an increase in the over-all membership of the House of Commons if we are to avoid that unhappy situation.

Basically, our protest is not on the ground that we are losing another seat, but on the ground that the redistribution commission has neglected to include in its recommendations means of dealing with rural-urban drift. Everyone is seized with this question. Municipalities and provincial governments alike are expressing themselves in favour of public policies which would reverse the drift to the larger communities. The federal government is moving in the same direction. For example, there is the proposal to decentralize DREE, to reverse the old formula under which 70 per cent of the staff would be in Ottawa and 30 per cent outside. In future, 30 per cent of the staff is to be in Ottawa and 70 per cent in other centres throughout Canada. It could be that as these programs take effect, by the time we reach 1981 the recommendations of the commission, predicated on the naïve acceptance of the myth of continued rural-urban drift, will produce further distortions of redistribution patterns.

The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) has asked that the period of consideration be shortened. If the necessary reconsideration could take place in a shorter period of time, I would be inclined to agree with him, Mr. Speaker; but my experience in the House leads me to believe it would be impossible to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I might point out that the reason I asked whether the House was ready for the question was that no member rose to continue the debate. It is impossible for the Chair to determine whether an hon. member wishes to speak, if no one rises.

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, may I say that basically I am in favour of the amendment. One of the reasons is that I believe we must resolve the problem as quickly as we can. The area I come from, the Niagara peninsula, is very diversified, considering its small geographical size, encompassing as it does tourism, commerce, industry and agriculture. The members of parliament representing the Niagara district must represent all these diverse interests and also take into account the great transportation routes contained in the constituency. There is the Queen Elizabeth highway and also the Welland canal on which so much money has recently been spent. This is something about which we learned last weekend. In addition, my riding is contiguous to the border with the United States, which also goes to create diversity and unity.

The Niagara riding which I am honoured to represent was one of the few ridings fortunate enough to remain the same during the process of the previous redistribution. What we saw, however, when redistribution was originally brought down was that no population shift in the four ridings in the peninsula occurred; nothing was added and nothing was taken away. It was almost as if the ridings were a deck of cards just thrown up in the air. Purely on the basis of population they were then reassembled differently. No heed was taken of anything except density of population.

Within the riding of Niagara there are both city and rural communities. The difficulty under redistribution was that we were to get something completely different; the riding was to include a town on the Welland canal based completely on industry. What we need is a quick decision in this respect so that the people in the Niagara area are not faced with the degree of uncertainty about which they have been expressing concern to me over the past few months. Something other than population must be taken into account. History must be considered. My riding has been the same since its inception. Geography must also be taken into account. The Queen Elizabeth highway runs through the riding, and the frontier with the United States is there.

It is difficult for members of parliament to represent as many different economic activities as there may be in a region. I know some of my hon. friends from the east have difficulty for this reason. Population as a sole basis ignores these factors and this is exactly what we have been saying in the Niagara peninsula. I submit there will be no objection on the part of most of the citizenry to some imbalance in strict population if individual concerns are well dealt with and members have increasing assistance to serve them. I think most people are concerned with being well served, not with exactly how many men, women and children live within a given area which the member represents.

It would appear that a new framework is necessary, something other than just throwing the cards up and having four ridings divided into four new and different ways. It appears to me we should attempt to deal with these problems with all haste. Haste means it has to be done more quickly than some of the things we see from time to time. We are not faced, in the Niagara peninsula, with the vast areas that face other members. Our representations have mainly to do with history, geography and economic interests. But it is very unfortunate when questions are left for months or even years without resolution.

It now appears that when the final distribution came down, the argument raised that something other than population be taken into account had its effect. We went to Welland, made representation there and spoke to the commissioners. They said representations of a similar nature had been made all across the province. At least in our happy situation they were effective, because in the final distribution what has happened is that Fort Erie and Niagara Falls will still constitute Niagara riding. So whether this bill is passed and we hold up redistribution for 12 months or 18 months, or whether it is not passed at all will not have any particular effect upon my riding. Other commissions, however, have dragged on. Although this will be, as I understand it, parliament itself rather than some appointed commission dragging on, I am afraid I have very little confidence in commissions coming in with recommendations within the stated time.

Therefore, all I would presume to do in support of this amendment is say that if it is a year instead of 18 months in which a report must be made, then perhaps "all due haste" will be a little hastier than it sometimes is, if 12 months is the limit. It appears to me, therefore that the sooner a report is returned, the sooner the uncertainty will be ended in the country and in my riding.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Hon. members will be glad to know, I am sure, that I shall not unduly delay consideration of this measure by the House. However, I feel it is incumbent upon me at least to outline in the House the position I have already taken outside the House and in my riding in particular. It is not a new position for me by any means. I have had experience of so-called independent electoral boundary commissions in jurisdictions other than this. The fact that I now represent a rural riding has not changed my opinion with respect to previously held convictions which I expressed when I represented a congested urban riding in another jurisdiction. The theory of an independent Electoral Boundaries Commission, presumably free from gross, partisan political considerations, is excellent but in practice it leaves much to be desired.

I complained bitterly when in another jurisdiction I was confronted with legislation almost similar to the bill we are considering in the federal field. I do not understand how those in the federal jurisdiction can commit the same blunders that people in other jurisdictions have made. In some cases the federal people have picked the same personnel for the boundary commissions that the provincial people have picked, despite the errors of the past. Here, as usual, the federal jurisdiction drags along, like a cow's tail, behind provincial jurisdictions in legislation that has been enacted at the provincial level, even when everyone at the provincial level is willing to admit that the province made a mistake. As I said, the theory is good, but it does not work in practice. The history of electoral boundary commissions at both provincial and federal levels proves this.

Somehow or other these commissions are imbued with the ideas of the engineering concepts, with the concept that takes into account only population figures. That is why I welcome the government's move in this respect to hoist for 18 months the whole operation of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. When I say that, I wish that some of these considerations had been taken into account earlier by the government so that we would not be in our present position, because many people, including editorial writers, are taking jabs at us for undoing what they believe to be progressive legislation. It is not progressive legislation in that it simply does not work.

In deciding electoral boundaries one should not only look at bare population figures; one should also look at communities of interest, at municipal boundaries and at municipal electoral and provincial electoral boundaries. The people of this country find most confusing the fact that municipal boundaries are different from provincial electoral boundaries, which in turn are different from federal electoral boundaries. Surely, in these days when mankind can put men on the moon, it should not be difficult for political administrations in this country to get together and work out a realistic and workable system under which municipal electoral boundaries, provincial electoral boundaries and federal electoral boundaries can more closely coincide with one another than they do today.

In the province of Ontario, particularly southern Ontario, there is a hodge-podge of electoral districts, It is my hope that in the 18 months or so that lie ahead of us when this matter will be considered and, hopefully, a more permanent solution will be found, we shall come up with an answer which will make possible some sort of working agreement with provincial and municipal authorities. I hope that a more permanent body will be set up to look into the question of boundaries affecting all three levels of government. Hopefully, it will do so more realistically than these so-called independent commissions.

There is another matter I shall mention, although I feel that I should not talk about it. It is this. The general area of southern Ontario, part of which I represent at the moment, returns 11 members to this House. Of those—I am speaking strictly from memory—eight are Progressive Conservatives, two are Liberals, of whom one is a cabinet minister, and one is a member of the NDP. In the first report of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission, made earlier, changes were made in almost all those 11 seats. Some of the members concerned objected, some political organizations objected and some citizens' groups objected. Some of us did not object because we were aware of the problems that exist in satisfying the great conflicts that obviously appear when something like this is attempted. In any event, opportunity was given to the public and to politicians to object to that first report. Many people took advantage of that opportunity.

Sir, this bill having been given first reading, I found it rather odd, to put it mildly, that the next day the second report of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission came out. No more public hearings could be held in connection with that report or, rather, there could be no more hearings unless there was filed a notice of dispute or a notice of objection. I would have thought that the Ontario commission would have realized that the first reading of this bill indicated that the government intended to bring about drastic changes in this area or at least to put things on ice, as it were, for 18 months. Instead, the Ontario commissioners presented their second report the day after this bill had been read the first time. That report was released to the press and tabled in this House. I find that strange. I do not know why that could not have been held until the House had finished its deliberations in respect of the measure now before us. That is my first point.

My second point is this. I am rather suspicious, being of a cynical turn of mind, of the drastic alterations proposed for many ridings of southeastern Ontario. Of those 11 seats, eight are held by Conservatives, two by Liberals and one by the NDP. I find it passing strange that only the Tory seats were to be affected. The two Liberal seats were really not affected at all, and the one NDP seat was not affected. I am afraid that in my senile dotage I am getting rather suspicious and cynical about some of these things. In any event, the people I represent were rather upset about the second report as they did not have any oportunity to make representations to the commission about it. I think the legislation is therefore deficient, because the tabling of that second report means that unless notice of dispute is filed within 30 days after its tabling in the House, those boundaries become law, or would become law except for the provisions of the measure that we are now debating. There is no opportunity for public hearings to be held.

My point to you today, Sir, is that that second or final report of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission so drastically changes the first report as really to make the two reports completely irreconcilable. Therefore I think, even though it is a brand new report and one which has not seen the light of day before the people in my riding particularly, or in the neighbouring riding where the people are equally upset about it, there will be no opportunity for these people to make public their grievances or complain about it at a public hearing.

That is why I shall vote for the government measure that is before us today. I think this is rather unreal legislation, and therefore I believe an 18 month hoist is good. I also do not intend to support the amendment of my good and valued colleague the hon. member for Peel South simply because I think that a 12 month period is not long enough. A period of at least 18 months will be required to try to straighten out the mess we are now in.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I assure you and the members of the House that I shall not speak long in this debate. I believe, however, that there are a couple of factors which should be mentioned. The committee which will be set up will have the obligation in some way or other of bringing about equity between the provinces. In the province of Alberta the Electoral Boundaries Commission paid definite attention to the proposed growth factor and little attention to the 25 per cent variance factor. We have had city ridings with smaller populations than so-called rural ridings in which there has been a variance, in some cases, of 16,000, yet in the new redistribution in the province of Ontario, for example, this is not the case. Some of the rural ridings could go down as low as 54,000 in the new redistribution and some could go as high as 98,000. But nowhere do we see this same balance hold true in respect of Alberta or Manitoba. I have not looked at the situation in the province of New Brunswick but I am told that there too the preference is given to the growth centres and not the sparsely populated areas.

The other factor which I think the committee should study and which also will take some time—and therefore I am not really inclined to support the amendment of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn)—is the floor for provinces which may well have a slower rate of growth than the general average for Canada. I am thinking here particularly of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The present floor in the British North America Act, as we all know, in essence is the same number of Commons seats as the province has Senate seats. This gives a province like Prince Edward Island, with little more than 100,000 people, four seats in the House of Commons because it has four seats in the Senate. It gives New Brunswick and Nova Scotia a floor of ten seats while the province of Saskatchewan, which has a population similar to that of Nova Scotia, could well go down to the point where it has a floor of six seats.

[Mr. Lawrence.]

In this day and age when all eyes are focused on the west and the new feeling of alienation which may have come to light here in Ottawa I think it behooves the members of this legislature to attempt to justify this inequity which appears in the redistribution act. Certainly we should give this matter a lot of thought. I do think that in doing that we should necessarily enlarge the membership of the House of Commons. From the attendance which has been evident in some committees it is possible that an enlarged House of Commons would allow for greater participation by members in committees, which would therefore allow more committees to function. But I really do not think that has been the real problem in respect of committees. I know that the larger the House of Commons becomes in membership perhaps the more unwieldly it becomes; also the more democratic the process becomes the more voices we hear from the people. However, I think the House could become pretty unwieldy.

I would not be opposed to a minor alteration in the membership of the House of Commons. When I was first elected the membership was 265. Our population has grown. It is hard to equate how the responsibilities of a member of parliament grow, but they have grown. The government seems to be rushing forward in its attempt to do things for people. In this attempt to do things for people we are seeing more and more government participation in business all across Canada. This causes a great deal of concern to many people. That concern, of course, is registered with their representative in the House of Commons. So while we might expect a minor increase in the House of Commons, I do not think it is necessary to consider a figure of 299 or something like that. I do not think we need go that far.

I think a formula in respect of a base for Manitoba and Saskatchewan can be arrived at with less enlargement than that of the House of Commons. Certainly with the spirit of conciliation which has taken place in Ottawa I think this committee of the House of Commons, when formed, would like to hear briefs from the provinces, particularly Saskatchewan and Manitoba, concerning the question of a floor for representation in the House of Commons. This could take some time. I have participated extensively in committee work and I know how difficult it sometimes is to get committees to arrive at a point where what might be called a consensus of opinion is reached in respect of the issuance of a report back to the House. Sometimes this takes a long time.

I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the House which reminds me of an occasion when it took a period of about a year and a half to reach a consensus on a bill in the committee on agriculture. I do not suppose this committee would take quite that long, but I do know that we require the length of time the bill suggests. I believe we would be running an undue risk if we were to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Peel South in his amendment to shorten the time period from 18 months to 12 months.

This is a problem which has plagued Canada. If redistribution must take place after each census—and I am not opposed to that—then we must make certain that it takes place in a fair and equitable manner in respect of all regions of Canada and all segments of society. A little extra time would be well spent in settling some of the grievances which have been voiced in this and other debates in the House of Commons.

The question of adequate representation of rural and urban areas is another problem. I do think that as legislators we should be attacking that problem; we should be attempting to solve it. Because of the differences in the findings of the electoral commissions in the various provinces, I do not think they can solve that problem. In fact, they have aggravated it to some degree. Also, no attempt has been made to solve the matter of the floor which I have mentioned.

For that reason I think that the House should not accept the amendment, although I realize the concern of the hon. member for Peel South regarding the huge size of his constituency and I certainly understand the motivation behind his amendment. However, I want to say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that knowing the energy which he possesses I am sure that he is quite capable of representing that huge riding for the additional six months or so, no matter how long it takes to arrive at an equitable solution. I think that the people in Peel South are well represented and with his energy the hon. member will be able to do a good job in the additional six months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour of the motion will say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I declare the amendment negatived.

Motion (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived.

[Translation]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-208, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have listened intently to the discussions that have taken place on this bill and I was particularly interested, as we all should be, in the remarks that were made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). We have considered the problem of redistribution on several occasions and therefore I am concerned about the government's intentions. I am sure that the people in northern Ontario would like better representation and this may be brought about by the time the government gets around to doing something about it.

Just last week a new agency has been established in northern Ontario whose purpose is to establish a new province in that area. I wish them well, and I certainly hope they will have some success. We have the problem of urban versus rural representation, the problem of distances and of floors, in fact all of the various problems that we were faced with in 1964. These problems have not gone away and some of them have been partly solved.

I have been very concerned about some of my colleagues in northern Ontario. One in particular did not have any interest in this matter and did not even bother making a representation to the judge, as did many other people. He ended up in a very bad situation, and it serves him right; he damn well deserves it. Anything that he got was of his own making. However, that does not change the situation for other members. I would be quite happy to go along with the boundaries which we now have, not so much because I am satisfied but because it would put him in such a bad position that it would please me to see him struggle a bit.

The point I would like to make on third reading is that I wish the House leader could outline what he wants and how long he thinks the review will take. He has said that it will take 18 months, but I do not think it can be done in 18 months unless we start right now. I am sure that we will not get started on this for a long period of time. If we are to do something about it, it seems to me that the President of the Privy Council will have to say that he is prepared to establish a committee immediately to assess what we can do about this matter.

Much has been said about the redistribution which we accepted in 1965. I think that the 25 per cent tolerance for each province is a pretty good system. I think we have a problem in some areas, and northern Ontario is one of them. I sympathize with the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), who represents a very large area which may be enlarged in such a way that it will be very difficult to service. The same has been true for me for a long time.

The boundaries of the riding of Timmins are a disgrace, but from another point of view. No distances were involved. It was easy to represent. Sudbury is another riding of which the same can be said. In northern Ontario we are really not competing with Toronto for urban representation, but Sudbury was the kind of riding that was easy to represent.

I think that the re-distribution was fairly reasonable and in accordance with the terms that we gave to the commission. I know that in my own instance the commissioners looked at northern Ontario and recognized that it was a big area and that they would be foolish to travel across it. There are really no good maps of northern Ontario except for lakes and forests, and no one would try to divide an area which covers three quarters of Ontario. But they did take into consideration the information they were given by us and they did make a number of changes. They gave the public an opportunity to make representations. I was not in complete agreement with the representation that was made to the commission in Kirkland Lake and in Timiskaming, but the people made their representations to the commission and the commissioners listened to them and accepted pretty well their proposals. They redrew northern Ontario on the basis of those representations. I think that the commissioners did listen and did give the public the opportunity to speak out.

I do not think it really matters how long the review will take, whether it is three months, 12 months or 18 months. It depends on what we intend to do in that time. The House leader can ask for 18 months. I presume that he is thinking what most of us are thinking, namely that it will not affect us because there will be an election before that time. If nothing happens in that time and we come back, perhaps we will reinstate the boundaries commissions and start all over again. I do not think that is good enough. I think we have met the needs of members of parliament but we have not done much for the country. What the President of the Privy Council should do is to set down a timetable.

I listened with great interest to the speech of the President of the Privy Council. He knows the reasons why the job cannot be done within much less than 18 months, but he said nothing about establishing a committee to do the job. Surely we will not get back to the position where the government party can gerrymander.

A few minutes ago I heard another opposition member say he was looking with a jaundiced eye on what the commission had done in his area because greater displacement in opposition seats took place than in government seats. Or perhaps he meant that the NDP seat in that area had not been changed. Who he was accusing, I do not know. But I hold that if the government House leader is serious he should be prepared to give an indication on third reading of what he is going to do about the problem.

The period of 18 months may not be too long, but it will not give us too much time if he lets 12 months go by before starting to act. Here we are sitting in Ottawa in the month of July when we should be on holiday, and we may sit on into August. The government House leader knows that what he is doing may make it impossible for us to have a summer holiday next year also. I was one of a number of people who worked to establish a regular, organized summer holiday in June, July and August, but we loused it up by not having a real timetable and by not being prepared to make decisions early.

If we are serious about having an election under a new system of redistribution, we should set down a timetable for that redistribution. Will we have a special committee undertake the job? Will we bring in officials from the redistribution commission as well? Will we establish an impartial committee to which members of parliament will have some input? When will the job start?

If the government House leader is not prepared to get up on third reading and give us a timetable, nothing may happen until next spring. In that case we could have ar election on the basis of the old boundaries and we might not have to worry about this problem for another four years, although I suspect we would have to start worrying about it two months after the next election since I do not think the result of that election would be much different from the last.

A constitutional amendment may also be necessary. In that case there are two sides to the issue. We may have to ask the provinces to give up their Senate floor, or we may add new Senate floor bases for a number of provinces that have been losing population. In that event we would need an amendment to the BNA Act, and this would require the co-operation of the provinces. With one exception we have not been able to amend the BNA Act since 1913 without the unanimous consent of the parties involved.

I think this discussion has been worthwhile although general in nature. Within limits I have always taken the word of the President of the Privy Council as gospel, and I am willing to accept what he says in outlining a timetable to bring together the diverse elements not only in the House of Commons but throughout the country when dealing with redistribution.

I believe we should benefit from the work already done by the boundary commissions. We would be stupid if we did not give some consideration to their deliberations. If the President of the Privy Council does not make a statement on third reading, then I hope he will discuss this matter with his cabinet colleagues and be prepared to give us a timetable in the very near future. I think the 18 month period should date from now, not from five or six months hence.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I feel this debate has been useful, that it has pinpointed the problems, and that it is incumbent on the government to move as quickly as possible. Despite what some editorial writers think about members having partisan considerations, I think that in the case of Manitoba, where every rural council, regardless of the political affinity of its members, has joined in protest against the proposed new boundaries, these are things that must be mentioned and considered. I suggest that we proceed now with dispatch, and I hope we arrive at a reasonable solution.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken on two previous occasions on this bill and have no intention of holding up the House for a great deal of time, but there are some things I should say in view of the number of comments made with respect to the position I took on the bill on behalf of the people of the riding I represent, and generally on behalf of the great urban areas. I am prepared to begin now, but it appears to be six o'clock so I will call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House wish the Chair to call it six o'clock, or is it the wish of hon. members to continue beyond six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lang: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the agreement of the House to revert to motions for the purpose of allowing me to make a statement on motions in regard to wheat prices.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. minister. Is there agreement to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is agreed.

WHEAT—HIGHER PRICE TO MILLERS TO REFLECT CURRENT WORLD PRICE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Governor in Council has approved a change instructing the Canadian Wheat Board to charge Canadian millers a higher price for wheat reflecting current world price.

In order to avoid the total of the increase going on the price of bread, the government will pay $1 per bushel as a continuation of its two-price wheat policy. The balance, and never less than $2, will be paid to the Canadian Wheat Board by domestic millers, basis 1 Canadian Wheat Red Spring Wheat at Thunder Bay.

Under the previous two-price wheat scheme, in effect since 1971, the Wheat Board charged domestic millers $1.95½ per bushel and the government paid $1.04½. This guaranteed farmers a $3 return for milling wheat used in Canada. The important thing to western farmers is that wheat sold to domestic millers will reflect the world price, and farmers will always be assured of no less than $3 per bushel.

Mr. Baldwin: Always?

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to thank the minister for sending a copy of the proposed statement to my office. We appreciate that very much, particularly in view of the statement's brevity and its poor explanation of what the minister is really doing. If I misinterpret the statement in any way I ask the forgiveness of the House and the minister; it is because of his rather poor explanation.

The way I interpret this statement, it limits the liability of the government. Up until this time, if the world price of wheat continued to rise and it reached, say, $4 a bushel, in ordering the Wheat Board to sell to millers at $1.95½, the government's liability would reach close to or above the $2 mark.

One must always acknowledge the fact that the executive must be better informed than the opposition, must be better informed than backbenchers in any party because they have a huge staff researching world conditions. I have had some arguments with the minister about what world prices of wheat do, but it is obvious from this statement that the minister is frightened about the obligation the government might have to assume if his expectations are correct that world wheat prices will continue to rise. The statement says quite clearly:

> In order to avoid the total of the increase going on the price of bread, the government will pay $1 per bushel as a continuation of its two-price wheat policy.

The key word there is "total"—in order to avoid the total of the increase going on the price of bread. He is not necessarily saying there will be no increase in the price of bread; he is saying that part of the increase will be borne by the government.

There has been some mention in this place in recent days of the high price of food. Here is a government contribution to what the low price of bread is going to be.

The second last paragraph states that to date the government has paid $1.04½ per bushel. They are going to lower their contribution. They expect the price of wheat to go higher, so we can expect the price of bread in Canada to go up in the near future. The government is somewhat frightened by the trend in world prices and about their liability, so they come forward with this concept now in order to make it abundantly clear that they will only be liable for another dollar a bushel and that is all.

It behooves one at this time to look at world prices. Depending on what port you buy from in Canada, whether Vancouver, Thunder Bay or Churchill, I think it is safe to say they are hovering in the neighbourhood of $3.50 per bushel. So the increase in the price of wheat to the miller is in the neighbourhood of 35 cents to 40 cents a bushel.

It is interesting to note that in his statement the minister says the balance paid to the Canadian Wheat Board by domestic millers shall never be less than $2. Even in the statement the minister is acknowledging the increase to the miller from $1.95½ to at least $2. It will never be less than $2.

The other interesting concept is the conflict of opinion that has gone on in western Canada as to how the acreage payment or the two-price wheat policy of the minister will be paid. This is not clarified in this statement. The minister suggests in the statement a continuation of this two-price wheat policy. It behooves me to pose the question: will the dollar per bushel of the government's contribution be tacked on to the price of wheat, and will it be paid out through the wheat pools to the wheat farmers, or does he intend to continue with the acreage payment?

I think that would be an interesting question particularly in light of the oncoming wheat crop and the number of farmers who refuse to grow wheat or who did not sow as many acres as the minister wanted them to, perhaps because of a certain reluctance namely on his judgment.

Wheat Price Increase

● (2010)

We must also decide whether cattle ranchers, rapeseed growers, barley growers and all other agricultural producers on the Prairies should share in the buoyant wheat prices of today

Without saying any more about this statement, it should be clear to Canadian consumers that bread prices will rise and that the government's liability will be limited; in fact, it will be reduced, according to this statement.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for the courtesy of providing us with this reasonably short statement some time ago. Like the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), I am more confused by the statement than enlightened.

The indication is that the price of bread will go up. When we originally set up the two-price system, we did so for the purpose of maintaining a reasonable price for the western farmer. He was assured a minimum of $3. The price is now substantially higher than $3. By reducing the amount of subsidy which we pay by 4½ cents per bushel, we are in effect saying this will have to be picked up by the milling trade.

With the price of bread increasing by 1 cent, this will produce about 55½ cents plus the 4½ cents the taxpayer is now paying through a subsidy. There will be a tendency on the part of the milling trade to increase the price of bread in the very near future by more than 1 cent in order to bring it up to the world price and the farmer can continue to get his price.

This is not the time to reduce the subsidy on milling wheat. Rather, it is an excellent time to increase the subsidy, so that the potential price increase for bread will be limited. We must find a way to control basic commodities in Canada as well as their price. An excellent way of maintaining a reasonable price for bread would be to increase the subsidy we have been paying in line with rising world prices.

Most farmers and the trade anticipate a price increase because of world conditions. There will be a scarcity of food. If we are going to maintain the price of this basic commodity, bread, the government should increase the subsidy.

I regret this subsidy is being reduced by 4½ cents. When this is added to the milling price, it will obviously result in an increase. Any increase charged to the milling trade is always charged back to the consumer. If the price of wheat increases, the increase to the consumer is always considerably more. This will result not in a 1 cent increase in the price of bread but several cents.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this increase in the price of bread, the minister responsible for the wheat board always makes the suggestion that more subsidies should be given to the millers of wheat. The minister never thinks of giving subsidies to the consumers of this country. This would help to increase the consumption of our flour and wheat in Canada as far as our domestic market is concerned. At the same time it would protect the wheat trade in the world market.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Every member of this House is willing to help Canadian farmers and the wheat market sell their product both inside and outside of Canada. Canadian consumers are at the very end of all the production in our country, including wheat, flour and bread.

I am surprised that at no time does the minister suggest helping the consumers to buy that wheat or bread at a cheaper price than they pay today by subsidizing the end where the production goes, the consumers of this country. This is why the Social Credit party has been advocating a compensated discount for many years. This would cut the price of bread by 20 or 25 per cent, after the government has agreed with the retailers of this country not to increase prices. With a compensated discount to the retailer, consumers would pay 25 or 30 per cent less than what they pay today. In this way we would have better distribution of our bread and wheat.

The minister is trying to find a solution. He never finds a solution. This is why we suggest the minister, the wheat board and the government accept the Social Credit suggestion of a compensated discount to the retailer, so that the consumers of our country will be satisfied and the producers will be assured of selling their production, first to the domestic market and second to the world market. In this way they would be competitive with every other country in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The House will now return to the consideration of the third reading motion on Bill C-208.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO SUSPEND OPERATION OF ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-208, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) had the floor.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, before the House rose at six o'clock I said I was only going to speak for a very few moments because I had spoken on the second reading debate and on the motion to amend this bill. I was very disappointed the House did not accept the amendment because it would have solved some real problems.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I would remind the hon. member that it is not proper for him to comment on a vote or on a decision which has already been taken. I hope he will return to the consideration of the bill before us.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am disappointed that the House does not wish me to explain my position, as one who represents people living in urban areas. It seems the urban parts of Canada sometimes get pushed around here.

I am also disappointed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) should have suggested to Your Honour that you ought to intervene. I was about to indicate to the House that those who live in urban Canada do appreciate the position of people who come from rural areas. It is clear to me from the speech made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that the whole question of redistribution is now being thrust back into a cocked hat. The efforts which have been made year after year, census after census, to deal with the growth in population and with changes in the distribution of population, culminating in the act passed in 1964, are to be thrown out of the window.

A number of difficult issues have been presented to the House. The first is the question of amendments to the British North America Act involving the minimum representation that each province should receive. I made a suggestion earlier as to the manner in which this might be approached. Then there was the question whether the independent commissions have done their work properly in accordance with section 13(b) of the act. Did they really pay attention to 13(b) in some parts of Canada? This should be a relatively easy matter for the House to determine. The President of the Privy Council suggests that the bill before us, by imposing a hiatus, will resolve this difficulty. I am not sure it will, but at least it is an attempt to do so.

We have heard the suggestion made a number of times during the debate that members of parliament do not represent people at all but represent areas of land. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, what I said during the debate on second reading. I do not represent areas of land, or apartment buildings, or airport runways, any more than the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) represents areas in the province of Ontario called townships. He represents people and I represent people.

The people of urban Canada are prepared to say that the size of some urban constituencies does give rise to difficulty, and that the use of the permitted 25 per cent variation is the way to deal with this situation. That is what the act says, and this is what should be done. But apparently in certain areas some people are not satisfied with this provision. They say that because their community has always been represented by a member of parliament in the past, it should always be so represented in the future and that is all there is to it. Even if their community does not grow as the rest of Canada has grown, or fails to grow in the same proportion, they feel they are still entitled to the same representation.

This amounts to saying that the size of the House should be increased by a large number of members every decennial census. Because as I have already pointed out in this debate, the population of Canada has doubled since 1940. On this basis, if we had started back in 1940 with 245 members, the House would now consist of 590 members. So an approach of this kind is not a solution.

All of us, as members of the House, like the status quo. Usually we all like the comfortable pew. We do not really desire change that much. But change is taking place in our society. There is movement of people away from the country. Or, rather, the increase in our population is in the urban areas. And it is a huge increase. We shall not find a way out of this dilemma by ignoring all the effort and energy expended over the years since confederation in working out a reasonably fair, independent-commission-oriented redistribution act just because some people in this chamber say they may have to do more work, that they may have to represent more people. That is the way it is. Canada is growing. Members of parliament will have to represent more people and they will have to work harder. One of the reasons redistribution is necessary is to spread the load more evenly.

Trees do not write letters. Rivers do not write letters. Shorelines do not write letters. Roads do not write letters. It is people who write letters. It is people who wish to make their views known. To suggest that people in certain parts of Canada have less to complain about because they are crowded together in highrise apartments is utter nonsense. I can understand the inconvenience encountered by members whose ridings are being increased in size. Of course there will be an increase in their workload. And to the extent that my constituency, along with others, would be reduced in size, the workload would be reduced. But this is the way Canada is going.

Canada is becoming a great nation. The way to reduce the impact of a heavier workload is surely not simply to add more members to this chamber. No, Mr. Speaker; the solution lies in giving existing members the machinery and technical assistance which they will increasingly need. The leader of the Social Credit Party, for example, represents a huge rural riding. Is there anything wrong about supplying him with free airplane service around that constituency so that he can see his people? Isn't that what we should be doing? Is there anything wrong about seeing he gets the best facilities possible for telephone communication with his constituents? Perhaps this is the way we should be handling such a situation. He tells us his riding extends for 600 miles in one direction and an awfully long way in the other, and that it takes him 15 days to get round it. We must make it possible for him to get round that riding. This can easily be done in this modern age of fast transportation.

In throwing out the existing act—and we are throwing it out with the bath water—we are saying that our efforts in the 60's, in the Pearson years, to organize redistribution on a non-partisan basis, to get rid of the old gerrymandering, were wasted. Apparently we are prepared to go back to what we had before, to political influence, to what is called political input today. It used to be called gerrymandering; today it is political input.

These troubles have plagued us since confederation. One can read the kind of speeches which have been made in this debate in Hansard of previous years. The speeches were made up to the time of the passing of the bill.

Probably the kind of speech I am making has been made before. I remember, as a boy, reading the speeches of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), then representing Lake Centre. He spoke of the horrors of his riding disappearing. Apparently the fellows on the other side had stolen his riding and wanted to make sure he was defeated.

Is that the kind of thing this House wants? Does it want to get rid of independent commissions? That is what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is talking about; that is what he is saying in going through this exercise.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, what is he saying? Is he not saying to the people of urban Canada, "People of urban Canada, your voice will not be heard in proportion to your numbers in the House of Commons." Actually their representation will be nowhere near proportionate to their numbers. He is also saying, "While your ridings will grow in size and your communities increase in population, we shall not do anything until perhaps after the 1981 census."

I know that this bill seeks to set aside the provisions of the act for 18 months, but this review process will take much longer. All the things we have talked about will be rehashed. Indeed, we may as well say that there will be no redistribution as a result of the 1971 census. Perhaps something will happen after the 1981 census. Really, the minister is saying to urban Canada, which is growing, which is developing, which is faced with problems, that it will not be treated fairly, that it will not get equity. Even though urban Canada is prepared to say, "Give some areas a better break," urban Canada is not to be treated with equity. That is the issue before us this evening. That is the issue in this bill.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two on this bill and on what the previous speaker said about representation. He said, for instance, that we do not represent pieces of land, that we do not represent telephone posts. He is quite right. At the same time I think he should have emphasized more the existing differences between rural constituencies and urban constituencies.

For instance, comparing his constituency of Peel South with mine, I note that it is quite different. His constituency is made up of people doing more or less the same kind of work. Socially, I do not think he has any problems, as most of his voters do roughly the same type of work. On the other hand, in my riding, which is 250 miles long, there are miners who are completely different from farmers; but there are also farmers who are different from forestry workers. And there are forestry workers in my riding. In the southern part of my constituency there is forestry, in the middle part there is farming, and in the northern part there is mining. So I must represent all these sections of the population.

I am not the only one in that category. Other representatives in this House of rural ridings are faced with the same social problems in their constituencies.

Representing people in our constituencies is different from representing, say, 50,000 people in Peel South, which can probably be covered in a journey of less than two miles.

Mr. Blenkarn: No.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Representing those 50,000 people is quite different from representing the 50,000, or even 25,000, in a rural riding which stretches for 250 or 300 miles, which is the case in northern Ontario, parts of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and northern Quebec. For instance, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) represents about 32,000 voters, but he has to fly, or drive 600 miles if he wants to go from one end of the riding to the other. This is nonsense.

That situation is completely different from the situation in which the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) finds himself. In the Toronto area you could add Peel South to York South and one member could cover the whole constituency. Because while we rural members are travelling from one end of the constituency to the other, the urban member can sit in his office in his riding.

The hon. member told us a moment ago that we do not receive letters from townships or villages; we receive letters from people. That is true. Yet I will bet my life that I receive more letters from my riding than he ever gets from his riding, even though he represents three times the number of voters that I represent. I could go to the postman downstairs and ask him to make comparisons, and I would bet my life that I get more letters from my riding than he gets from his.

Mr. Whelan: About 10 times as many. It is about 10 to one.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) says that the ratio is about 10 to one. Let me say this to the Minister of Agriculture: I think I receive more letters from Peel South than the hon. member representing the riding receives. So it is not a matter of not accepting redistribution. However, I am completely against an increase of seats in big cities. The member can be there day after day when the House is not in session, or when it is he can be in his office on Saturday morning, if he wants to be. On the other hand, if I want to be in my office in South Témiscamingue on Monday or Saturday, I have to drive from Rouyn to South Témiscamingue, a journey of 150 miles which takes me a good four hours.

Mr. Blenkarn: Come now. The hon. member drives faster than that.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): You must observe the speed limit there.

Mr. Blenkarn: Does the hon. member observe the speed limit?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Well, I have to drive four or three hours.

Mr. Blenkarn: Say, two hours.

An hon. Member: The roads aren't very good in the area.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I will say about three hours, to be honest. That only leaves me two or three hours for the people of South Témiscamingue, and I have to drive home at night. I have to drive for six hours. During that time the hon. member for Peel South can receive hundreds of people in his office in Peel South.

It is not a matter of my wanting urban people to be deprived of their rights. I want them to be very well represented in the House of Commons, but not to the detriment of our farming districts or to the detriment of our rural constituencies in Canada. This is the reason I am willing to allow as many months as we need to study the matter very deeply and seriously, instead of playing politics with it and saying they are cutting out this village from that district because part of the riding is Liberal, another part Conservative, another CCF and so on.

I do not think the independent commission will play it that way, but I do hope that it will invite us to take part in this before it takes any decision in so far as redistribution is concerned. I will go along with this not for political purposes but for a decent and fair representation in this House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION

MEASURE RESPECTING CERTAIN IMMIGRATION LAWS AND PROCEDURES

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-212, respecting certain immigration laws and procedures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by assuring hon. members of this House, who may be rather surprised to see me back so soon again with another bill dealing with immigration, that I am not trying to presume on the goodwill and the all-party co-operation that existed when Bill C-197 was before the House a few days ago. I have to be honest and tell them I am somewhat surprised to be here in this situation, but two recent and unexpected events threaten to weaken substantially the very foundation of progress in immigration matters after the all-party support of Bill C-197 and really would have the effect of sending us back to square one.

As hon. members will no doubt recall, the change in the immigration regulations of last fall, which revoked section 34 of those regulations, was intended at that time to prevent would-be immigrants pouring into the country in the guise of visitors, with the intention of seeking landed immigrant status once they got here on the strength of regulation 34. In recalling this, hon. members will also remember that one of the goals of Bill C-197 was to ensure that from now on refused applicants for landed immigrant status would not be able to stay on in Canada with impunity or be subject to delay in getting a decision about their appeal.

During the debate and study at all stages of Bill C-197, I certainly sensed a general agreement in this House that Canada must have the right to screen future residents of this country before they establish residence here, and indeed that those who fail to pass that screening should not be able to stay here in defiance of Canadian immigration policy.

The two events to which I have referred which threaten to undermine the efforts of parliament to restore order to the immigration process are two recent decisions interpreting immigration law, one by the Immigration Appeal Board within the last two weeks or so, and one by the Federal Court of Appeal just prior to that.

In the process of discussing these decisions and their implications I want to emphasize I in no way wish to criticize the Immigration Appeal Board or the Federal Court of Appeal for either decision, although I do in fact disagree with them. Both those judicial bodies have the responsibility to interpret the law as written and as they see it. Certainly in meeting that responsibility quite clearly it is the text of the law which they must interpret and not necessarily the intent of the government in drafting that law.

The problem we now face is that either of these decisions alone could have a very serious impact on the administration of immigration law. When put together, just as we are about to put a new immigration policy into effect, the result is that their combined effect would be that the administrative system would be hopelessly overburdened and that in fact the props would be knocked from under all our efforts to restore order to the immigration process.

The result of the Immigration Appeal Board decision, to put it in the most simple and practical terms possible, is to restore the effect of regulation 34 which before its revocation enabled visitors to apply and qualify within Canada for landed immigrant status. When this regulation 34 was revoked last November or last fall, the companion regulation dealing with visa requirements, regulation 28(1), was also amended to require that immigrants, whether seeking admission at a port of entry or applying for landed immigrant status after entry in another category, must in fact have an immigrant visa. As hon. members know, immigrant visas are issued only at posts outside Canada. Short of amending the Immigration Act itself at that time, this was the only means at our disposal for heading off a continued flow of applications by visitors landing in Canada in spite of the revocation of regulation 34. Lacking a visa, applicants in Canada could, as a result of this amendment to regulation 28(1), be reported for special inquiry which could lead to an order for deportation.

The Immigration Appeal Board has now ruled in its recent decision that the amendment of the regulation dealing with immigrant visa requirements went beyond the power that the Immigration Act gives the governor in council to make regulations. In legal terms this decision, if upheld, could mean that applicants in Canada would not be required to have immigrant visas, which also means that the last legal hold on them would be thus lost. In practical terms, as I have mentioned, it would mean that the effect of regulation 34 would be restored—in fact the situation would be worse than when regulation 34 was valid—and that some 1,750 appeals against deportation orders may be upheld because the orders were made on grounds that the board has now had occasion to find to be legally invalid.

The second decision, that of the Federal Court of Appeal, deals with applications made under regulation 34 before it was revoked. Putting that decision in simple terms, it says that my department has had no jurisdiction over these many years to make deportation orders against persons who applied for landing in Canada and who after examination were in fact refused. In this case some 10,000 appeals against such deportation orders before the Immigration Appeal Board are affected.

In light of this federal court decision, all of these applications could be allowed. We have always taken the position, in the belief that it was fully supported by the law, that a person who applied in Canada for landing under regulation 34 ceased in fact, in legal terms, to be a non-immigrant and was reporting for examination as required by subsection 7(3) of the Immigration Act. That position has been backed up for many years by judicial decisions. The recent federal court decision that is now giving us trouble reverses those prior judgments.

The key subsection 7(3) of the Immigration Act reads:

> Where any person who entered Canada as a non-immigrant ceases to be a non-immigrant or to be in the particular class in which he was admitted as a non-immigrant and, in either case, remains in Canada, he shall forthwith report such facts to the nearest immigration officer and present himself for examination at such time and place as he may be directed and shall, for the purposes of the examination and all other purposes under this act, be deemed to be a person seeking admission to Canada.

This subsection, together with succeeding sections of the act, gave authority, which we still hold to be valid, for an applicant's examination as an immigrant, in the legal sense of the word, defined in the act as "a person who seeks admission to Canada for permanent residence". It was from this that the authority came, if the applicant failed to meet the requirements for landed immigrant status, for his or her referral to a special inquiry officer and for the making of a deportation order if the special inquiry officer found that this was warranted.

However, the Federal Court of Appeal has now ruled that a person who applied under regulation 34 while it was in effect until November of last year did not lose his non-immigrant status. According to this ruling, again if it were upheld, the application was not the report referred to in subsection 7(3), as we had believed, and consequently there was no authority for the special inquiry or deportation order.

I do not think it is necessary for me to draw a picture for hon. members of what the consequences of this would do to Canada's image of a country able to control the admission of immigrants to this country, or to the horrendous workload which these two decisions could impose on the administration of our immigration system, coming at a time when the House would not, under ordinary circumstances, be in session, at a time when we have just introduced the adjustment of status program, with the special workload that that will entail, and also at a time when the tourist season is at its absolute peak.

Under both decisions we would be faced with a huge backlog of cases to reassess in light of an uncertain legal position. Under one decision we would be faced with another inundation of false visitors, such as we experienced last year. I would remind hon. members that we reached the peak one October weekend last fall when some 4,500 people arrived by plane at Malton, ostensibly as visitors but mostly with the intention of staying in Canada. This inundation of visitors that we experienced last year will most likely be repeated as these decisions become known around the world, and that will be very quickly, as I find is the case as I get experience in this portfolio.

This whole thing adds up to the fact that the new provisions of Bill C-197 will never get off the ground. I have some consideration for the disappointments that would arise as a result of the false hopes and expectations of people abroad, often very innocent people, who would act upon this and come to Canada, when it really is this Parliament's intention not to repeat the experience that we tried to correct the other day in Bill C-197. I would also draw to the attention of hon. members the danger of the exploitation of many innocent people by unscrupulous so-called immigration counsellors, who could take the substance of these decisions and convince innocent people to come to Canada, many of whom in countries we can all name and who would do anything to come to this country to get away from the circumstances in which they are presently living.

That is not a happy picture. As I emphasized earlier, I mean no criticism of the Immigration Appeal Board or the Federal Court of Appeal. As the minister responsible, I am seeking leave to appeal both decisions and I would be quite prepared to take my chances on the outcome of those appeals, assuming leave to appeal is granted. But I do not think we can collectively, as parliamentarians, afford to risk the possibility, under the circumstances that I have described of this House not being in session and of it hitting us when the peak load of genuine visitors are coming to the country, that leave may not be granted. Nor do I think we can risk the possibility of having to wait out a period of several months at least during which time these appeals are being considered.

I am acutely aware of the fact that, having just emphasized to hon. members the urgency of Bill C-197, I am again making a similar plea in favour of quick action for this legislation. I know that I could soon begin to sound, if I kept this up, as if I were crying "wolf". But I do think that the room that has been made in the timetable of this House, under these circumstances and at this stage of the session, speaks eloquently for the government's view of the emergency that faces us.

Bill C-212, to put it briefly and in layman's terms, seeks the sanction of Parliament for the regulation stipulating that all immigrants, in the sense of the word as defined in the Immigration Act, must have immigrant visas, no matter where they undergo examination. It would give the sanction of Parliament to the long established understanding that people who applied for landing under former regulation 34 did indeed cease to be non-immigrant and became immigrants, thus subject to examination and, as necessary, inquiry and a deportation order. Perhaps most important, it would apply to all cases already dealt with by administrators but not yet finally concluded on appeal.

There are two important observations I would like to make at this point. First, I have always felt, and I am sure many hon. members would agree with me, that legislation that is in any real sense retroactive, unless of course it confers retroactive benefits, which nobody objects to, is repugnant. By retroactive legislation in that sense I mean basically a retroactive change in the rules of the game.

I must recognize that this bill, in an extremely legalistic sense, could be regarded as retroactive because it applies to persons who had been reported for special inquiry, or ordered deported, before it was introduced. But really, Mr. Speaker, I think those who examine the bill and sense the intent will realize that, rather than seeking to change the rules, it seeks to maintain the rules as they have been operating for many years—in the case of regulation 34 from its introduction six years ago in 1967 to its revocation in 1972.

The fact is that the rules for which this bill now seeks the ultimate sanction of Parliament, under the circumstances of emergency that I have described, are the rules that have been known and have been applied to all who have come to this country as non-immigrants and who have later sought permanent residence. The bill takes from no one any right that she or he had once enjoyed or had any real reason to expect to enjoy.

I also want to emphasize, re-emphasize and underline that nothing in this bill will affect the adjustment of status program that was included in Bill C-197. I really cannot stress too much or repeat too often that people should have no fear that their eligibility to register for that program, which is about to be launched and which had universal support in this House, will in any way be impaired by the provisions of Bill C-212. This legislation simply does not apply to people eligible for that program, and it will go forward as planned.

Before I conclude my opening remarks in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I do want to call attention to the fact that a minor typographical error was made in printing, of which I will seek correction in committee.

I think I could sum it up by saying that Bill C-212, through force of circumstances—recent decisions of the court—has become a necessary companion piece to Bill C-197. Without it, Bill C-197 might well fail to achieve the objectives we all agreed upon we wanted to seek. With this bill, if it meets the approval of hon. members, conversely Bill C-197 is virtually assured of success. In that light I would be very grateful if all members would give this bill their urgent and, I hope, their favourable consideration.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could suggest to the minister at this time that he might like to ask the House to engross an agreement that I believe has been reached, that the bill be dealt with in all its stages in this House. There have been some discussions along those lines, and it might be agreeable to have that done now.

Mr. Andras: I would be most grateful if that found merit, and we received the sanction and unanimous consent of the House to proceed with all stages right here in this chamber, in the appropriate manner.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and it seems to have the agreement of the House, that the motion, when presented later this evening, should direct that the bill be read a second time and referred to a committee of the whole. Is it agreed that this change be made in the motion that the minister is presenting to us?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I want to make it clear from the outset that we are going to make every attempt to co-operate with the minister and the government in helping him and them out of the predicament in which they now find themselves.

I think it would be irresponsible on our part to put up a strong opposition to this remedial type of legislation to get the government out of a jam resulting from a court decision. Nevertheless, I think it would be less than responsible of the opposition if we did not take this opportunity to comment on the general procedures by which immigration law has been made and administered in this country, going back to the original source of legislation in this field, as far back as 1952.

To put the point very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the mess that the government now finds itself in as a result of two court decision which were made according to law, and which in my judgment are reasonable decisions, is a product of the fact that regulations have been made under this act, first enacted in 1952, which in many respects were never anticipated by that act.

This is one of the classic situations where the government has made laws by regulation. I think it is cited by lawyers throughout the dominion as the prime example of some of the dangers of law making by regulation, away from the scrutiny of Parliament, away from the public, done for supposed reasons of expedience, speed and flexibility, but with many inherent dangers which I will outline to the House later.

Indeed, I suggest that the bill we have before us is in many respect an admission by the government that the structure of regulations that it has built up since 1952, not in any orderly fashion but on the basis of mere ad hocery, may well be on the verge of collapse. I wonder, particularly in the next few months when this House is not sitting, what other judgments the Immigration Appeal Board and the Federal Court of Canada will hand down which hold that certain regulations are ultra vires the legislation which supposedly gave authority for them to be made.

It might be appropriate at this time to go back to some first principles in law making, which from time to time seem to have been forgotten by the government in the administration of the act. I take as my point of departure a study that is well known in the field of administrative law. Formally it is known as "A Report of the Committee on Ministers' Powers," made in 1932 in the United Kingdom and commonly referred to as the Donoughmore committee. It is a very relevant subject matter which I know a committee of a previous parliament had occasion to deal with when considering the whole subject matter of statutory instruments, a committee chaired by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) and which reported two or three years ago.

To refresh the memories of some hon. members on what the Donoughmore committee said, I am going to quote briefly from the section called "Summary of Arguments of the Critics of Delegated Legislation", or law-making by regulation. That committee at page 53 of the report suggested that:

> Acts of Parliament may be passed only in skeleton form—

As the 1952 act was.

> —and contain only the barest general principles. Other matters of principle, transcending procedure and the details of administration, matters which closely affect the rights and property of the subject, may be left to be worked out in the departments, with the result that laws are promulgated which have not been made by, and get little supervision from parliament. Some of the critics suggest that this practice has so far passed all reasonable limits, as to have assumed the character of a serious invasion of the sphere of Parliament by the executive. The extent of its adoption is, they argue, excessive, and leads not only to widespread suspicion and distrust of the machinery of government, but actually endangers our civic and personal liberties.

I believe those words were relevant in 1932 and they may well contain lessons for those of us wrestling with the problems before us in 1973.

I refer to another comment of the Donoughmore committee. The committee suggested that delegated power may be so loosely defined that the area it is intended to cover cannot be clearly known and uncertainty of this kind is unfair to those affected.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is a relevant commentary on the immigration laws and form of regulations that we have had in this country. As proof of the pudding let me refer to the rather landmark regulations that were introduced by a former minister of manpower and immigration in 1967 and outline to the House the broad and expansive scope of those regulations which, in my opinion, should have been introduced in the form of legislation—legislation which was consistent and which contained clearly defined and enunciated principles for members of the committee and members of the House to follow.

I am going to refer to a release from the office of Manpower and Immigration in 1967 which purported to explain those regulations to members of the House and members of the public. But before I get into the particular problem of what the minister thought he was doing by introducing those regulations, I should add that Parliament passed companion legislation called the Immigration Appeal Board Act. That was the first Immigration Appeal Board, set up in 1967, which in my view negatived any argument that it was impossible to monitor the conduct of Parliament even to introduce such regulations.

First, in 1967 the minister purported to suggest that by regulation—not by law but by regulation—he would set up an assessment system to permit immigration officers to apply the same standards to potential immigrants from all areas of the world. A pretty significant statement and a pretty significant enactment, but done by way of regulation!

Second, the 1967 regulations formula confirmed that Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada were entitled to bring their dependants to Canada. Again, an important matter of principle contained in regulations.

Third, in 1967 the regulations established that the privilege given citizens or permanent residents to apply for other more distant relatives to come to Canada was to be extended to all areas of the world, and new classes of relatives were to become eligible for this assistance. Again, an all-embracing matter of principle incorporated into law without the benefit of parliamentary scrutiny.

Finally, there was the linking of the selection standards to conditions within Canada to ensure that a flow of immigrants was made possible and was more closely related to the economic requirements of Canada. Very sweeping and significant measures, Mr. Speaker, not adopted by law but by regulation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we find the government today, in 1973, the victim of its own law-making processes which have been perpetuated now for 24 years. I think it is high time we had a change in thinking as to the way in which our immigration law is to be made. I am not too sanguine that we are going to have a change in thinking, however.

I was impressed by a comment made by the former minister of manpower and immigration, now the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), when he was speaking in this House on Bill C-197 and commenting on his experience as a former minister. If I may quote him to hon. members, on June 22, 1973, as reported at page 5034 of Hansard, the hon. member said:

> I want to speak really of my own experience in a non-partisan way, provided the opposition will let me do that.

Well, we will let him, Mr. Speaker.

> I hope what I say will be considered constructive criticism relating to a very important department of government. When I assumed the role of minister of immigration I also assumed an archaic, outmoded law which had been adopted in the year 1952. It was hardly a set of rules that was suitable to meet the challenge of a contemporary society.

What an admission, Mr. Speaker.

> So, consequently, as some of the lawyers in this House know ... many of the practices of the past three years have been based on regulations rather than on any concrete, specific provision within the law of 1952.

And then here is the great statement of prophecy of the hon. member for Verdun. I am sorry he is not here tonight. He said:

> Regulations do have a tendency to run well beyond the intent of the law.

It is almost as if he had read the judgment of the Immigration Appeal Board that night and was sorry for what had happened. But what a statement of prophecy, Mr. Speaker. I was also impressed—and I say this as a credit to the present minister—when in committee he indicated that perhaps we may have some change in direction in law making on the part of the government in this field. He did say he was not going to make the usual sort of statement that about eight ministers had made before him, that we were going to have a complete review of immigration policy and perhaps new regulations. He said he was going to have a green paper, and then continued:

Therefore, it is my intention to have produced a public document that will raise a number of essential issues which have to be determined in the establishment of a long term immigration policy. This document will be designed to encourage a response from all sectors of the community who have an interest in such a vital subject. When we receive this variety of views, we will be in a position to recommend to Parliament legislation that should provide a basis for an immigration policy to meet Canada's future needs.

Mr. Speaker, I say hallelujah—a commitment from the minister to have legislation. I want to assure him that I and members of this House will hold him to his word. But it must not be skeleton legislation. It must consider the principles, rights, privileges and obligations of the people of Canada in their broadest and most public form possible under our law. As I say, Mr. Speaker, we will hold the minister to his word.

In committee, pursuing the discussion of Bill C-197, an act to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act, there was another interesting exchange which I think should be brought to the attention of the House. This is the question, I think treated rather facetiously by the minister at the time, which was put by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). He questioned a particular subsection in the Immigration Appeal Board Act in which the governor-in-Council was given power by regulation to amend or vary any regulations made under the Immigration Act. The hon. member for Hamilton West, quite rightly in my view, questioned whether it was proper in the legal sense in one act to be granting authority to amend or vary regulations in another act. The minister and his deputy, who was present at the time of course, replied that they had had legal opinions that it was quite proper to include that particular clause in the legislation. I cannot help but quote the minister's statement at that time. He said:

May I just say, Mr. Alexander, that I hope and pray you will never be in a postion to say, "I told you so"—as a slight aside to my legal advisers.

The hon. member for Hamilton West is not here, so I am going to take this opportunity to say on his behalf, "I told you so".

There is one last matter which I think is important. It deals with another important act which was a product of the last Parliament. I refer to the Statutory Instruments Act. That was a product of a recommendation by a committee which was ably chaired by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). That act created a number of obligations on the executive to ensure that proposed regulations were properly perused, scrutinized, publicized and reviewed, with the object of ascertaining their legality before becoming law and affecting the rights of people.

In particular, I want to make references to section 3 of the Staturory Instruments Act. I might say that was law at the beginning of November when the purported repeal of section 34 of the regulations and the amendment to section 28(1) of the regulations took place. Section 3 requires, and I quote:

Where a regulation-making authority proposes to make a regulation it shall cause to be forwarded to the Clerk of the Privy Council three copies of the proposed regulation in both official languages. . . .

—the Clerk of the Privy Council, in consultation with the Deputy Minister of Justice, shall examine the proposed regulation to ensure that

(a) it is authorized by the statute pursuant to which it is to be made;

I ask the minister to indicate in committee whether this was in fact done. Was there in fact a proper examination by the Clerk of the Privy Council, in consultation with the Deputy Minister of Justice, to see whether the amendment to regulation 28(1) was authorized by section 57 of the Immigration Act? Or was it the case, as it states in subsection (b), that:

—it does not constitute an unusual or unexpected use of the authority pursuant to which it is to be made;

To my knowledge, we have not tested the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act. This may be a good opportunity to begin.

I would be very interested, as would other hon. members, in hearing the minister's comments as to the extent to which the Statutory Instruments Act was complied with. To my mind, it raises some suspicion as to whether the whole process of decision making by regulation in the government really complies in substance and in fact with the Statutory Instruments Act.

This matter will, of course, be the task of the statutory instruments committee, which is a standing committee of this House and the Senate. As a member of that committee, I look forward to participating in the scrutiny of that which Parliament designates it to do. This is an opportunity we ought not let pass on the bill before us.

In conclusion, I may say it was a make-shift manner in which the government introduced the November regulations. It was done hurriedly, rather like a guillotine. Possibly the government did not have much time to give any thought to the regulations prior to October 30. They were engaged in other things. As I said at the outset, what we have here is a classic example of the danger of law making by regulation. I think this will become a very valuable lesson for future governments and future Parliaments.

Our party will co-operate with the government in seeing that this bill is quickly passed through all three stages in order that we can, as the minister suggested, achieve the objectives that the recent amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act sought to achieve.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to take a very few moments to outline the position of this party with regard to this bill.

The reason for Bill C-212 is two decisions, one of the Immigration Appeal Board and the other of the Federal Court of Canada, both of which made a very strict legal interpretation of the act and regulations. I recall that when we set up the Immigration Appeal Board in 1967, it was to be a court of record rather than an administrative body. There was some debate at that time about whether we should make it that. Since the time it was set up it has developed a body of law. I might say it has helped lawyers who prepare and present cases before the Immigration Appeal Board. However, it seems the Immigration Appeal Board is serving as a half-way house between an administrative body and a court of record.

I do not intend to cast any reflection of the Immigration Appeal Board because the composition of that board and its work has been excellent. They have developed a good body of law. They have made it very easy for appellants to appear before them and present their case in a strictly non-legal way. That was probably our intention when we set up the Immigration Appeal Board. Sometimes in a court of law it happens that lawyers argue with regard to the admissibility of evidence and some of the strict legal points. Clients just cannot appreciate or understand the complexities of law and evidence. The Immigration Appeal Board attempted to overcome that when appellants appeared before them. As a result they have developed a very strong body of law and at the same time have tried to retain an administrative approach with regard to the tendering of evidence and so forth.

In both decisions the Immigration Appeal Board took a very strict legal interpretation. The result is that there could be chaos with regard to the cases before them. The minister indicated that if we were to follow the decisions of the Immigration Appeal Board and the Federal Court, nearly 12,000 cases would be in jeopardy, and this would destroy the good intent of Bill C-197 which was basically to clear up the immigration mess.

One of the fine features of the present government is that, every time they have a problem, five or six previous ministers have been involved and the problem has compounded over the years. With regard to immigration, we have had a tremendous mess. No person can really point a finger at one or more of the immigration ministers, especially the present minister and the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). It has been very awkward to pin down the responsibility for the problems that has developed over the past four or five years.

If any person has any appreciation of immigration problems, he will appreciate what has happened to our immigration laws over the past three or four years. Prior to October 30, places in Canada such as Montreal were being flooded by persons who came here for the obstensible purpose of being visitors, but really to get landed immigrant status. There was a tremendous flow of people, and this compounded the difficulty. On November 3, immediately after the election, regulation 34 was changed, with a related change to regulation 28. I think that had the N.D.P. or the Conservative party been in power at that time, they would have done the same thing. There was nothing else which could be done. With all these people in Canada, the government was obliged to take a realistic approach, and I think the contents of Bill C-197 embodies such an approach.

We now have a law which would give would-be immigrants presently in Canada the right to adjust their status. Most of them will probably remain here, and that is a good thing. The minister is before us tonight because of two difficult decisions, decisions which were probably correct in the strict sense of the law, but very difficult to apply in the field of administration. I hope that the Federal Courts of Appeal and the Immigration Appeal Board do not regard this as a slap in the face reflecting on their own approach to the law. I hope they see that, if we were to follow those two judgments, the beneficial effects of Bill C-197 would be lost and we would find ourselves in a worse position than we were on November 3, 1972.

We in this party wish to co-operate so that we can get rid of the problem which exists at the moment, apply Bill C-197 to its full effect, and then get on to the next step. I wish I had understood the erudite exposition of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) concerning the regulations and so forth. This is why we have professors in the House, men who are strong on theory. We also have men who are experienced in practice. The member for St. Paul's presented an erudite exposition of the theoretical aspect of the regulations, and I hope the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) will take up the challenge presented to the House, study the measure in depth and assist in coming forward with a solution.

More important, there is need for a long term program. The Minister has undertaken to study this question. He says he will make no rash promises as to the date upon which a new law may come forward, but he will look into the matter and see that something emerges by way of a study in depth. Once this has been undertaken it is up to us as members to relate our experience and thinking to it and bring forth an Immigration Act which will be applicable in 1974-75.

I think all Canadians want an act of which they can be proud, because immigration is really the keystone of a growing Canada. If we have a satisfactory act, one which can attract the right people, we shall continue to grow in prosperity and culture and this land will be better as a result. We in this party support the bill for those reasons.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to delay the passage of Bill C-212 because we believe it is very urgent to pass it in order to settle many cases of immigration in Canada. Increasing the number of members of the Immigration Appeal Board will be of great help, in my opinion, in solving, current immigration problems as soon as possible, and will also help prevent those which could occur in future and maybe as early as this fall.

Mr. Speaker, we will therefore give our complete support to the minister presenting Bill C-212, and we wish that this new act on the Immigration Appeal Board will contribute greatly to the introduction in Canada of select people, of people liable to become good Canadians. We need people who want to take part in the development of Canada. We want to have a larger population than we now have. Certain immigrants are desirable and I believe that, with an improved board, and one which will take care of them, these people will become good Canadian citizens and will contribute to the economic and social development of our country, which will be, I believe, to the benefit of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have to say some words on this subject although I know that by doing so I am preventing hon. members on the government side from coming to grips with the amendments to the Criminal Code which will follow. I know they are tremendously anxious to do this, and I hate to stand between them and that legislation, but I do not think anyone really wishes to start on that bill tonight. Therefore, I hope that after the few comments I have to make, if we give this bill second reading it might well be your Honour would agree to see the hands of the clock at the magic hour of ten.

A short time will probably be taken tomorrow in discussion in committee of the whole stage. There will be some questions to ask. The bill will, I think, be passed on Friday, though I do not know about its passage in the other place. Maybe the minister has some assurance from the other place as to their state of readiness, whether they are sitting tomorrow. I do not know what their habits are. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is a more assiduous observer of the habits of the other place than I, may know exactly what they are doing.

Mr. MacEachen: They are sitting tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: Well, they will be able to bring the bill on for consideration some time tomorrow.

The minister will expect to be chastised. He has been chastised only mildly so far. Not because of what he himself has done. It is unfortunate for the minister that he is the last of a long line of ministers who have really done some terrible things affecting the immigration practices of this country. I do not know how many ministers we have had. If we look over the last 10 or 15 years we find that the department of immigration has been a stepchild. This has resulted in a tragic situation, one from which we are now suffering. The present minister is, I think, trying to do a good job. I do not blame the civil servants; they have lacked ministers who could give them effective direction. Of course, I am not criticizing the minister personally. He must be given credit for coming forward promptly and saying mea culpa, admitting he was wrong and asking for a remedy.

In his speech tonight the minister said words to the effect, "A couple of decisions are giving us trouble." I sympathize with his position. When I practised law I disagreed with every decision which went against me.

An hon. Member: The hon. member does not disagree with the decisions of the Chair.

Mr. Baldwin: I may disagree with those decisions too, but am not allowed to say so. The minister also said something like, "We are not going to repeat the experience." I do not know whether the "we" refers to the ministerial "we" or the parliamentary "we". As it is not a parliamentary experience to which the minister is referring, surely he is speaking of a government experience. That must be made plain.

As to disagreeing with decisions that give us trouble, let us recognize that the rule of law and of Parliament is supreme. That fact is often forgotten. Let me recount something that happened a short time ago. This story may be irrelevant, but it bears on the attitude of this government. In Yellowknife a judge who is a good friend of mine, Mr. Justice Morrow, was engaged in a case, an issue with which, under the law, he had a right to deal. He was properly seized of jurisdiction. The government, fearing what he was likely to do, or fearing his decision, went before a judge of the Federal Court and asked for an order of prohibition which would prevent Mr. Justice Morrow from hearing the case.

That was not right. Merely because you do not like a judgment or what a judge will do or has done is no reason for saying, "This is bad; this is hurting what the government has done." I do not believe in that, and I do not think other members of the House do. The minister does not take that attitude as an individual, but that has become part of this government's thinking. Of course, in the not too distant future when we form the government, we may adopt the same attitude. However, I do not think so and hope not.

I remember when the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), who was then a private member, sat on a committee of this House and of the other place, established in the fall of 1966 and commencing its deliberations in November, 1966, on the issue of immigration. That was a good committee. It heard many witnesses. It did not have the great urge to travel, as is the case with many committees now, but it nevertheless went to Toronto and Montreal and heard briefs from many groups representing ethnic organizations and other organizations in the country. It called the minister responsible at that time, who is the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and the deputy minister, who has gone on to greater things under the aegis of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

I had not been in the House for too long then and was still fairly innocent. I thought the committee would do something. The government had said, "The Immigration Act passed in 1952 is giving us great trouble. We want to examine important areas of concern to do with how the state should exercise its prerogative in selecting people, what manner of people should come into this country, and under what circumstances." We sat from November until May, 1967. As I said, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was a good member of that committee, not having suffered as a result of becoming a minister; he was then a private member. Probably when he comes over to my side of the House, he will once again become a good member.

The committee did not make too many recommendations, having been advised against it. We discussed lots of issues. I well remember the first appearance of the present Minister of Transport before that committee. He said, as recorded on page 9 of the evidence taken on November 15, 1966:

> The deliberations of this Committee will, I hope, lead both to Parliamentary action, revising the basic legislation needed in immigration and also to administrative arrangements and procedures that will receive the widest possible support from the Canadian people.

Both the minister and the deputy minister wanted to distract attention from the fact, as became evident shortly after, that they were engaged in processing the passage of the Immigration Appeal Board Act which has created the difficulties in which the government now finds itself. That committee was a subterfuge.

Among the witnesses called was the present leader of the Conservative party in Manitoba, Mr. Spivak. I am not talking in any partisan sense when I say that when he appeared he made a tremendous impression on the civil servants and members of the committee. He made a good presentation and pointed out something which many of us had forgotten, namely, that immigration can and ought to be an effective economic weapon. Properly used, it can do effectively what this government has been trying to do without success for many years—deal with economic disparities in the country. He pointed that out and buttressed his presentation with evidence and facts. Members of the committee of all parties and the members from the other place as well were all impressed with what Mr. Spivak had to say.

I recall, in questioning Mr. Spivak, that a sensible suggestion was made. I am referring to the fact that, under the British North America Act, jurisdiction, over immigration is divided between provincial legislatures and the federal Parliament. I do not know if anyone has ever determined where the supremacy in this field lies. Certainly, the federal government has invaded the field and occupied it. Nevertheless, provincial legislatures are interested in the question of immigration.

I suggested that there ought to be a standing council, made up of federal and provincial ministers or civil servants and that they should look at questions of immigration. I do not know whether anything was done about that. I doubt it. I expect that recommendation was treated in the way all recommendations by that committee were treated.

On the last day of the hearings the present Minister of Transport appeared before the committee and told us what a tremendous job we had done, how thankful he was for our contribution, and how much would come out of it. He said, "Don't worry, you will be reconstituted next year and we will pay attention to your recommendations."

Apparently all this work was to lead to a new Immigration Act. This happened in 1967, 15 years after the last bill in this area had been passed. It is in existence today. The minister said, "Yes, we are going to accept your recommendations; we want new legislation." So the committee brought in its third report, which said in part:

> Your Committee therefore recommends that it be reconstituted next session and the evidence adduced during the present session, in both French and English, be referred to it, so that it will be in a position to pursue its work on this important matter, namely Canadian Immigration Policy.

That report was submitted by the chairman of the committee on May 8, 1967. We came back the next session and that committee was never reconstituted. Its recommendations withered on the vine. All the thousands of words of evidence that had been taken were simply scrapped and forgotten.

That is the trouble with this government and with the immigration department in particular. I have a great deal of respect for the officials of the immigration department. I have respect for the ministers, with some reservations.

However, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to questions dealing with immigration it lies with this Parliament, with its knowledge, experience and capacity, to interpret the views of the public with which they deal, to best suit the interests of this country in dealing with immigration policy. I think it has been a tragic mistake.

I suggest this is one of the reasons we have this difficulty today. What has been the result? The recommendations of the committee, as I have mentioned, were entirely forgotten. The Immigration Appeal Board was set up. It did a good job at first and then slowly, by order in council, by regulation and by decree, the widest possible licence was granted in respect of people seeking the right to come into this country or ultimately being in this country to be able to secure the right to ask to remain here. If they were then rejected, through procedures established by the act, they placed themselves on the assembly line of the procedure of appeal available through the Immigration Appeal Board Act.

As a result this backlog of thousands and thousands of cases was built up. Several situations ensued. There was a situation last year in which I was involved. I asked questions a number of times. I remember one particular occasion within the last 12 or 14 months when there was evidence that a man had not only been allowed to come into this country but in fact had been surreptitiously smuggled in by the government under an assumed name. This man was called Pershing Gervais, whose mottled history both socially and in criminal terms left an awful lot to be desired. Because of arrangements made between officials of this government and officials of the United States government this man, who had been an investigator on the staff of the district attorney of New Orleans and was involved in an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the assassination of the president of the united States, for reasons no one has ever been able to tell us in this House, was smuggled in and provided with a job with the Canadian counterpart of a United States firm. This man lived in Vancouver, thousands of miles from his job. He received a salary of $18,000 a year. His family was smuggled in under an assumed name. He was given landed immigrant status through illegal use of the Immigration Act and regulations. That was one case.

What do we find on the other page? We find a case of an unfortunate young Polish woman who had entered Canada properly as a visitor. Her application for appeal and leave to stay in this country had been objected to. She was so concerned, discouraged and disappointed about what she thought was her fate if she returned to Poland that she committed suicide.

There are two opposite sides to problems that have arisen under the Immigration Act in its present form, in addition to the thousands of cases which are the subject of discussion tonight. I have spoken to the minister about this and I think he genuinely believes that something must be done. While there must be left in the hands of the administration some opportunity to act with flexibility and speed, nevertheless it is essential that it be left to this House to deal with new legislation, and in that new legislation take into account the facts which we have experienced and which have been dealt with by the minister and other members tonight, facts of which hon. members of this House are aware.

I suggest we might have a green paper and a committee which would make a most careful and painstaking examination of the facts and recommendations in respect of new legislation. So far as I am concerned, if such a proposal is made—and this government now seems to be addicted to the green paper—I would certainly do all I can to facilitate such an inquiry.

If that were done and new legislation were established, I suggest there be a small standing committee to deal with immigration matters so that there can be constant liaison between the government and members of this House, acting as members and as ombudsmen in respect of people who have immigration problems. This House and its members are better qualified than anybody else to deal with the problems of immigration, and to revise and amend the regulations from time to time. If the minister, as he indicated previously he would, would do something like that, I would certainly go a long distance with him in trying to bring it about.

I shall simply end by supporting what the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) said concerning the Statutory Instruments Act. There has been a most flagrant violation of the Statutory Instruments Act, not only in respect of the section dealt with by the hon. member, but in respect of the clause which says that in examining a statutory instrument the deputy minister of justice must see that it does not trespass constitutionally on existing rights. Retroactive legislation always has that effect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member for Drummond has a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member who now has the floor that if he wants to see the bill passed tonight, he has only 30 seconds left to complete his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is a question between myself and this House. The comments of the hon. member I am afraid are not very conducive to promoting the passage of this bill. I have undertaken that it will be passed tomorrow. The hon. gentleman had every opportunity to make a contribution if he had wished to do so. I do not think he is helping in the passage of this legislation with his inane remarks. Mr. Speaker, I call it ten o'clock.

Adjournment Debate

ENERGY—PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPE LINE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION RELATING TO UNITED STATES INQUIRIES AS TO GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House for a few minutes tonight on a matter about which we have heard a great deal in the last several days, namely the appalling situation in connection with any hope Canada might have of stopping the Alaska TAPS proposal from resulting in tankers going down the coast of British Columbia and the west coast of Canada.

In 1971 this House instructed the government to send a formal note of protest to the United States government in Washington since we took the position that we were opposed to a tanker route down the west coast of British Columbia. Since that day, I want to remind hon. members that ministers of the government have repeatedly assured us that they are doing everything possible to have this tanker route stopped.

We all know what the situation has been in the last few days. We all know that the Senate has passed a bill overriding environmental considerations and everything else in order to push the tanker route proposal through. One of the most vigorous members of the Liberal party in opposition to the tanker route was the former member for Esquimalt-Saanich, Mr. David Anderson, who is now the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia. All hon. members know that he staged for a considerable time a proper, decent and vigorous fight, which he continued since he left federal politics, against this tanker route.

In apparent admiration for the work that he was doing in the province of B.C. the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied to a qeustion that I put to him on March 2, 1973, as reported at page 1835 of Hansard, when I was asking what was happening with the tanker route proposal. After telling me that he was interested in my belated interest in the tanker route—which seems rather amusing in view of the fact that I come from the west coast where people do not have a belated interest in the tanker route but a very real interest—he said:

> Of course, the hon. member is aware of the fact that the Liberal leader in British Columbia is responsible for the very good turn of events in this matter.

I do not know what good turn of events the right hon. Prime Minister was referring to in that answer, but I can tell hon. members today that there are no happy events. I want to remind them that according to the July 16, 1973 edition of the Vancouver Sun, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), in referring to the proposal of the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia to try to use the Mackenzie route as a last ditch stand to avoid the tanker route, told delegates:

> . . . that what Anderson suggested was a bluff . . .

Here we have the provincial Liberal leader doing his best in the province of British Columbia, and at the same time the federal minister telling people in B.C. that all he is doing is bluffing. Now we have the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), who entered this debate in recent months, referred to in the same edition of the Vancouver Sun in the following terms:

In the audience was Environment Minister Davis, who has publicly suggested using the gas line to apply pressure.

On March 29, Davis told the Vancouver Kiwanis Club that the gas line is Canada's "trump card" in the battle to keep tankers out of west coast inland waters.

Here we have at the western conference of Liberals in my city a complete and utter confrontation with respect to policy.

All hon. members will remember the incredible episode of a few months ago when the Prime Minister told us that a committee had been set up to study tanker route controls. He could not find that committee and he could not find out what had happened to it, but finally the Minister of the Environment told us on March 8, as reported in Hansard at page 2017, when we were talking about this committee:

Yes, Mr. Speaker. The word "committee" is inappropriate.

It was "inappropriate" because the committee did not even exist. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said today that continual representations have been made since the summer of 1972. The Prime Minister said on television yesterday that these have been continued. Yet not so long ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked about this, and this is what he said, as reported in Hansard of February 14 at page 1281:

The government has no intention of renewing its representations.

That is to the United States. He went on to say:

Of course, we will be interested in hearing from the United States administration in this regard, but at present we do not plan to take any fresh initiative.

All I can say is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was misleading the House or else was unbelievably unaware of what was going on to an extent that is almost inconceivable.

There has been talk of a railroad. You remember that questions were asked on May 22 of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The minister replied:

—my response to the right hon. gentleman is yes, there is such an evaluation under way.

He continued:

In collaboration with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, that proposal is being evaluated.

Yet today we have an incredible release put out by those four horsemen of disaster, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who have apparently been sent forth by a blind commander, the Prime Minister. This release says in part:

A study will begin immediately on the engineering feasibility and the cost of a railroad to move oil and natural gas southward from the Arctic over the perma frost region.

In view of these incredibly conflicting statements by the government over the last four or five months, I ask where is the credibility, where is the competence, where is the sincerity? I demand, on behalf of everybody living on the west coast—even if this does not matter to a government which is so concerned with central Canada—the tabling of all documents exchanged between the government and the United States government; and I demand the personal intervention of the Prime Minister, even at this eleventh hour, to do something about this disastrous situation.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last comment which the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) has made, may I suggest to him that as quickly as possible he put a motion on the order paper calling for the production of the papers he wants. As the parliamentary secretary in charge of that matter, I will undertake to do what I can to get them for him as quickly as possible. I would make only one caveat, and that would be that any papers which have been exchanged between Canada and the United States government would also require the permission of the United States government before they could be released. But other than that I would undertake, on behalf of myself in this position, to provide him with those papers as quickly as possible.

In terms of the original question which the hon. member raised concerning the time at which the last correspondence or communication between the United States government and this government took place, he is aware, of course, that that material was provided on June 22, and again on June 27. On July 6 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) released a series of questions and answers on this particular issue, which had been provided previously to the government of the United States. The original replies were transmitted to the United States embassy in Ottawa on June 27, and the revised version was transmitted by the Canadian embassy in Washington to the United States state department on July 6.

As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated to this House earlier today, the answers given to the Unites States government were almost entirely repetitions of answers given to Parliament and to U.S. officials. I would also inform the hon. member that the House of Commons is monitored by U.S. officials, just as we monitor the U.S. Congress, and they are fully aware of our position.

SOCIAL SECURITY—SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF 2 PER CENT CEILING ON ANNUAL ESCALATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker on Tuesday, July 10, as recorded in Hansard at page 5453, I put this question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

Mr. Speaker, I have a question that is supplementary to those that have been asked with reference to the rising cost of living and I address it to the Prime Minister because it relates to a matter which comes under the administrative responsibility of at least six different cabinet ministers. In view of the fact that a 2 per cent ceiling on the annual escalation of any pension is out of date, and in view of the rapidity with which the cost of living is rising, will the Prime Minister arrange for the government to consider as a matter of high priority the removing of that 2 per cent ceiling from the annual escalation of all pensions to which it still applies?

Hansard records the answer to that question as follows:

RIGHT HON. P. E. TRUDEAU (PRIME MINISTER): Mr. Speaker, since the government took the very worth-while and bold action of tying down many pensions to the increase in the cost of living, I am sure the hon. member will realize that we are considering this total matter. However, the matter of availability of funds to deal with all categories of people at the same time is the one which the government must also keep in mind.

I offered a retort to that in which I expressed the hope that the Prime Minister might be here for a discussion of this matter some night at the time of adjournment. I realize now that I am going to have to settle for the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid), but maybe it is not all that bad. Maybe I will get a better answer from him than I got from the Prime Minister.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to argue the basic point which I set out in my question, namely that with the cost of living rising 5 per cent, 6 per cent or 7 per cent a year it is no longer sensible or just for pension escalations to be limited to 2 per cent per year. So long as this situation obtains it simply means that pensioners under these conditions are falling behind year after year.

It is true, as the Prime Minister said the other day, that it was a Liberal government that first brought in the escalation of some pensions; but when the Prime Minister boasts of that I ask that he also take the blame for the fact that they put a 2 per cent ceiling on the amount by which such pensions could escalate.

Now the fact is, and I welcome it, that we have got rid of that 2 per cent ceiling with respect to four pensions that I can indicate, namely, old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, the war veterans' allowance and war disability pensions that are paid under the Pension Act. That is fine. Those pensions now escalate in accordance with the actual rise in the cost of living. I put in parenthesis, as I always do when I speak on this subject, that I am not satisfied even with an increase which measures up to the cost of living. I think the escalation of pensions should equal the rise in the standard of living; but at least let us get to the point where pensions escalate to the full extent of the rise in the cost of living.

In my question to the Prime Minister I said I was putting it to him because it related to a matter that comes under the administrative responsibility of at least six different cabinet ministers. May I indicate those? The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is responsible for the Canada pension plan and escalations under that legislation are still limited to 2 per cent. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is responsible for the pension increases that are paid retired public servants and a number of other related groups and those increases are limited to 2 per cent per year. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is responsible for pensions paid to retired armed forces personnel. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is responsible for pensions paid to retired RCMP personnel. Again, in those two categories the 2 per cent limit applies on the annual escalation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in my view, is responsible for Canadian National Railways pensions, and those are limited to an escalation of 2 per cent per year. Even that 2 per cent is on an ad hoc basis; it has not been made permanent.

I could have mentioned Devco, which comes under the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), and the retired employees of the Bank of Canada, who come under the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Certain retired diplomats come under the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), so my list of six is growing to eight or nine. In case, any pensioners are missed, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) is responsible for a regulation that says that no pension plan can qualify for income tax purposes unless it limits its escalation to 2 per cent per year.

Yet the Prime Minister has the gall to stand up here the other day and boast about what the government has done in making a start in tying some pensions to the cost of living, when along with that step the same government has imposed this miserable 2 per cent ceiling which, as I say, is affecting pensioners on all kinds of pensions, both public and private.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council has that better answer that I anticipated. I suggest this is an area where action must be taken and taken soon, namely the removal of the 2 per cent ceiling from the annual escalation of all pensions, both public and private.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to suggest to the House I have been around here as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but I was around when the 2 per cent annual increment for pensions was introduced into the House of Commons. I recall what a revolutionary theory that was and what an impact it had on the development of pension plans in Canada.

Just as a long journey starts with a first step, we took that first step in removing the 2 per cent limitation on the pensions which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated; that is, on pensions paid to senior citizens, the guaranteed income supplement, the war veterans pension and the was veterans disability allowance.

I hope that in short order we will be able to come to an accommodation with the provinces and have the 2 per cent limitation removed from the Canada pension plan. That will probably be the big difficulty. It is currently under negotiation. If those negotiations are successful with the provinces, I hope legislation will be brought in some time this session, probably in the fall.

With regard to pensions of defence employees, RCMP and other government people, I remind the hon. member he was helpful in sending to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates a resolution dealing with those pensions, although not particularly on the point he mentioned. However, I am certain that, on examination, the resolution which we sent to the committee for discussion will permit that committee to make recommendations on this very point.

I assure the hon. member the government is cognizant of the problem. It is sympathetic toward getting a proper solution to that problem. I hope that in this Parliament we will come to a solution that will not only satisfy the hon.

member and myself, but the people who are receiving those pensions.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO ASSIST YOUNG PEOPLE WISHING TO BE FARMERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 22, as recorded at page 5022 of Hansard, I asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that capitalization costs for young farmers have increased by 66 per cent in the past ten years and young farmers cannot always get Farm Credit Corporation loans or afford 10 per cent plus interest rates, will the minister be announcing a program soon to help young farmers stay on the farm or get starting in farming?

The minister replied as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the record shows that more young farmers have received farm credit loans this year than for many years. We are working on a program. We will be meeting with our provincial counterparts to discuss this program on how we can aid more young people who really want to enter farming or remain in farming to do that.

In my short period of years, I have heard politicians say over and over again that they are working on programs to get young farmers started in farming. For years they have stood on platforms and said that, although we have been successful in the past, we are working on a new program to stop the mass exodus of young people leaving the farms and going to the cities.

Perhaps it is necessary to have a definition of a family farm. One person has described the family farm as a way of life, an independent business in the conduct of which a farmer has a chance to live a decent life with a reasonable income, financially dependent less upon the vagaries of the market than on his own efforts to produce.

Canadians should never forget that the family farm, as opposed to the corporate farm, still produces the bulk of Canada's agricultural output. It is ironic that many economists still point to the agricultural sector as one of the last examples of effective private enterprise with substantial economic competition.

Unless something basic is done, this characteristic of the sector will disappear just as surely as it has disappeared in other productive sectors. The continuing decrease in the number of farms in Alberta has gone almost unnoticed in the past few years. Figures show that in 1972 there were 67,702 farms in Alberta compared with 84,000 in 1951. This means we have suffered a decrease amounting to nearly 1,000 farms per year.

The chief factor in this decline has been the ever-increasing amount of capital necessary to begin farming. In 1951, the capital figure was $21,000. In 1961 it was $37,000 and today it is estimated that one needs $80,000. Since an initial outlay of this magnitude is needed, many people, especially young people, who would like to begin farming are unable to do so.

As we all know, the main lending institution is the Farm Credit Corporation. It is to the credit of past governments and of the present government that the number of loans has tripled over the last decade or so. However, I come from an area which is populated by many family farmers and I have received numerous complaints from young farmers, or would-be farmers, that credit is very difficult to obtain. This personal but very real testimony to the inadequacy of government programs should sharpen our critical faculties in the present discussion.

A glance at some statistics indicates that in 1972-73 at least 60 per cent of the loans went to persons who were over 35 years of age. The average age of Canadian farmers is 49, and this figure, rather than decreasing, is increasing. Every social scientist has documented the exodus of young people from the farms to the cities. It has been said that every day 42 farmers leave their occupations.

Not only are farms being bought out and older established farmers increasing the size of their farms, but, more significantly, the programs implemented by the government have reinforced and perhaps encouraged this trend instead of counteracting it. But before we go any further, let us listen to the words of an individual who is actually engaged in the farm credit business. Mr. G. W. Arnold, manager of the agricultural department on the Royal Bank of Canada, told the international credit congress last May that government-backed loans were of decreasing importance because the nature of the farm unit is radically changing. The farmer, he said, was a businessman with a large capital investment in land.

My bank manager says he is leery of lending under the farm improvement and farm credit legislation because of the restriction on the interest rate to one per cent above the prime rate. It is clear that if young people are to be encouraged to enter farming it will be necessary to provide sufficient capital at prime rates or below for those in the lower age groups. Perhaps we could subsidize interest rates for these young people, who would pay the loan back later from their substantially greater yields. This is not a new idea. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) moved an amendment to Bill C-5 on June 26, 1972, to the effect that where a borrower under the age of 30 years first obtains a loan under this act, the governor-in-council shall not prescribe a rate of interest in respect of that loan in excess of 5 per cent.

If the F.C.C. is in theory an adequate means by which to supply those who are willing to farm with the credit to do so, then in practice it fails to do so. The practical proof of what I have said lies in the fact that many young farmers are increasingly turning to small farm loans agencies which some provinces, such as Alberta, are setting up to handle the making of loans to people whose applications have been rejected by the F.C.C. and other agencies.

If we really want to do something effective to counteract the trend toward the dissolution of the small farm, we must institute effective incentives. Prices have increased, but costs have kept pace. With the recent escalation in food and feed shortages, costs to farmers have increased even more markedly. Many of these farmers do not have the collateral base to obtain loans. Perhaps we might consider the actual land, equipment and livestock as collateral and not require a large, previously built-up capital base. I feel the government should adopt the following—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the remarks made by the hon. member, because this is an opportunity to explain to hon. members some of the very important things this government has undertaken in order to help young farmers become established in farming.

One of the first things I did on being appointed Minister of Agriculture was to look into the Farm Credit Corporation, and all offices in Canada were to be visited. I think all western offices so far have been covered. We wanted to find out how many requests were coming in from young farmers. I asked farm organizations and provincial governments to make suggestions to me on how we might amend this legislation, or even bring in brand new legislation, so as to make it attractive for young farmers to begin farming.

Amendments have been made to the Farm Credit Act which increased the loan ceiling of an individual's borrowings from $40,000 to $100,000. The Farm Credit Act was also changed to permit the minimum age at which a farmer is eligible for a loan to be consistent with provincial legislation governing the age at which persons may contract for mortgage loans. This amendment was made because several provinces have lowered the age of majority to below 21 years. This change now makes it possible for younger farmers to qualify for loans.

I should like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that in 1972-73 over 41 per cent of all Farm Credit Corporation loans were made to farmers under the age of 35. The hon. member turned this fact around; he only used the bad figures. In 1970-71 less than 35 per cent of loans were to this age group. So the number of loans to younger farmers who wish to enter agriculture is on the upswing.

In the province of Alberta, the province from which the hon. member comes, there have been over 1,000 applications to date under the small farms program. These have mostly been made by young farmers.

The small farm development program offers another means whereby young farmers can acquire land or expand existing farming operations. This program seeks to assist farmers in acquiring land at reasonable prices and credit terms. I have also indicated that I and my officals will be meeting with our provincial counterparts in Charlottetown next week to discuss how better we can aid young people who want to enter or remain in farming.

May I also point out that recently the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made it possible for a father to pass to his son or daughter who are engaged in farming the family farm without paying a tax, something that no other country in the world has done.

I emphasize, in closing, that we believe the best way to retain young people in agriculture is to make sure that farming is put on a paying basis. As farm income reach a level consistent with those earned by other sectors of society, there will be an incentive for younger people to take up farming. I, as Minister of Agriculture and as a politician, intend to do something about this, not just talk about it. I welcome this occasion for making these comments, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in the report later today.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development presented this day be concurred in.

As a result of discussions with the House leaders of all parties, I believe there is general agreement on this concurrence.

PARLIAMENT HILL

MEASURES TO PROTECT ENVIRONMENT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, for a number of years now it has been recognized that Parliament faces a severe space problem creating a limitation of its effective operation. As Parliament has become, through its committees and in other ways, even more involved in all aspects of the nation's life, it has become much more a year round operation and space available has fallen behind its needs as they have developed in the modern era.

Moreover, concern has been expressed about the danger of visual encroachment on the beauty of the present parliamentary precinct, which is one of the great symbols of Canada. We must ensure that nearby developments do not adversely affect it and furthermore, we have an opportunity, I believe, to enhance the present precinct by enlarging, and thereby completing, it in a fitting manner. The longer we wait, the more costly the solution.

Hon. members are aware, of course, that we have achieved temporary relief of the space problem by refurbishing the Confederation Building and making it available to members. However, it is only a temporary solution as all members are aware and as you, Mr. Speaker, were careful to point out at the time I had the pleasure of handing over the Confederation Building to your very able and competent jurisdiction.

We have all been aware that to properly house the expanded requirements of Parliament for the generations ahead in a way that would both complement and preserve the existing architectural beauty of the Parliament Buildings we must enlarge the present parliamentary grounds.

I wish therefore to announce, Mr. Speaker, that I have today, on behalf of the government, filed a notice of intent to expropriate all the land and buildings in the area bounded by Wellington Street, Elgin Street, Sparks Street and Bank Street. The purpose of this expropriation is as I have indicated to protect the environment of Parliament from any development which could adversely affect it and simultaneously provide the land for an appropriate expansion of parliamentary facilities and other government requirements. The property of the United States Embassy has been excluded from this expropriation but discussions are well advanced for its acquisition.

This action will also provide the National Capital Commission with a splendid opportunity to plan the urban development of this most critical piece of land which is at the heart of the national capital and which constitutes a bridge between parliament and the city of Ottawa. My department will be working closely with the commission to marry the architectural requirements of Parliament to the exciting possibilities this location raises.

[English]

For this purpose, it will be important that Parliament be at the heart of this process and I wish to announce that it is the intention of the government to appoint a commission on parliamentary accommodation comprised of present and former members of parliament representing all parties in the House and in the Senate. The government will be consulting leaders of all parties with respect to appointments to the commission.

The purpose of the commission will be to advise on the amount and type of facilities that parliament will require to operate effectively for the future.

I should like to add a few words, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the existing properties and especially the Sparks Street Mall. It is the government's intention that until Parliament's needs have been fully defined, there will be no disturbances whatsoever of the existing properties. This will be especially true of the commercial operations on Sparks Street. Some of the office accommodation in the upper levels may be used for government purposes from time to time, but the commercial character of Sparks Street at ground level will be left intact.

To underscore this, I wish to emphasize that all leases have been excluded from the expropriation process. I want to assure everyone involved that on the Mall it will be business as usual. Further, it is the government's intention that when a plan is developed for the area, including the architecture of the buildings, space will continue to be provided for commercial operations facing Sparks Street so that the present character of the Mall will be preserved and enhanced.

We are all proud of the outstanding appearance and setting of the Parliament of Canada. It is as impressive as any in the world. I think we will all agree that we have a duty to preserve its dignity, grace and beauty for the years ahead, in accordance with the fundamental position it occupies in the life of the nation. I trust that this announcement and the promise it holds for the improved facilities for the operation of Parliament and the completion of the central architecture of the national capital will commend itself to all members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, let me say that on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition we welcome this announcement today and commend the government for taking this important step.

This is a significant development for Parliament. Not only does it ensure that the basic tool of space for the operation of Parliament is available, but also that the planning for the expanding work of the committees of Parliament and the work of the members of parliament on behalf of the people they represent can be assured. This House will be considering as an ongoing process the work of committees, and if the committee system of the House is to function, then there is no doubt that the staffs of committees must be expanded both in number and in depth. We now have the assurance that this important function will not be limited by lack of available space. It is my hope that in the planning process the interests of the owners and tenants will be respected in that they will be kept fully informed of plans and timetables for development. It is important to observe that the centre block can be put to the use for which it was intended, at least to greater use, that is for the accommodation of members of parliament.

However, I would say that the most significant aspect of this announcement is the aspect of control. Parliament Hill is recognized as a place unparalleled architectural beauty. More than that, it is the symbol and the centre of our national life. As such it deserves protection from the conflicts and differences in points of view that arise between municipalities and developers on land use, even though they may be well intentioned. This announcement today will ensure that the people of Canada whose national capital this city is will have a part in the development of its centre.

The announcement of the intention of the government to appoint a commission on parliamentary accommodation is an excellent one, especially if its composition is as suggested by the minister. It will ensure that the best of experience is joined in the production of reasonable, practical and effective facilities to serve Parliament, the members of which serve Canadians. It is regrettable that the negotiations with the United States with respect to the U.S. embassy property are not complete, and all of us urge the government to press ahead, with the assurance from this House that the government has the full support of all members of the House in completing those negotiations.

Lastly, I would like to pay tribute to the National Capital Commission which, with some notable exceptions, has been mindful of its responsibilities to marry the concepts of the national capital as a place for government and as a place for people. In this new venture it must continue that delicate balance so that this city will continue to grow as a fitting symbol of our national life. In that venture the minister can be assured that he has the support of the opposition with respect to this announcement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for some reason an advance copy of this statement did not reach me, but even so I have the pleasure of indicating on the spur of the moment our strong approval of the announcement that has been made by the Minister of Public Works. Indeed, I join in the remarks that have been made by my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). We are not only friends, it so happens that when I am in Ottawa we are neighbours; we live across the street from each other. He helps me get my car out of the snow in the winter time. But I have one advantage over him. From the side of the street on which I live, from my bedroom window I can see the Peace Tower. Woe betide any developer who puts a high rise building between my bedroom window and the Peace Tower.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Although I have put that on a personal basis, I wish to underline the point—I hope it will not be regarded as a conflict of interest—that we are concerned not only about the beauty and the attractiveness of the area from the river over to Sparks Street but we are also concerned about the view of Parliament Hill from all parts of the city. I hope that in addition to the things that are being done and suggested in the minister's statement, the government and the National Capital Commission will play a very strong role in preserving the view of Parliament Hill from all parts of Ottawa.

● (1120)

Sir, we thoroughly approve of the decision to expropriate the area between Wellington and Sparks Streets, and between Bank and Elgin, for this purpose indicated by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé), and I join in the incidental comments that have been made upon that, both by the minister and by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

We also approve of the decision to establish a commission to survey the whole question of the best use of the Parliament Hill area. I underline the suggestion that this centre block should be the preserve of members of parliament rather than of others. That is why it was built, for parliament. I suggest that in so far as other buildings near by are made part of the Parliament Hill complex, provision should be made for speedy connections. That may well mean a system of underground connections so that those who have to go from one building to another can get there quickly.

On the whole, having just heard the statement this morning, I am happy to say that we are in favour of it. We take this position not only because some of us have the real privilege of spending a great deal of time in this city, but because it is the capital of this country and therefore it belongs to all Canadians. I am delighted that over the years the number of people who have been able to visit Ottawa has greatly increased, and more and more it is true that Canadians recognize this not just as some place off there but as their capital. Anything that is done to make this Parliament Hill area and the whole national capital region a beautiful place, a place where work can be done, and also a place of which all Canadians can be proud, is a step in the right direction. I welcome the statement that was made by the Minister of Public Works, and I trust that action he has outlined will proceed as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for sending me a copy of that statement which should have been made to Parliament some 20 years ago, I think, in order to protect the environment of Parliament, because we must acknowledge that the most important structure in Canada, whatever some people may think—

Mr. Baldwin: What about the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —is the Parliament of Canada, our institution.

The thousands of visitors who come to Ottawa do not come here to see the City Hall, but to visit the Parliament Buildings. For one who comes from my region, the first thing to do is to visit Parliament.

It is quite logical to be told that the government is taking measures to protect the environment of Parliament Hill even if properties must be expropriated, and the Centre Block which we now occupy must be improved and made more attractive.

Mr. Speaker, as does the minister, I deeply regret that some members have to travel from the Confederation Building and the West Block to the Centre Block. It seems to me that the Parliament Buildings could shelter all the members with the greatest comfort, not the one we have known for the two or three days on the sixth floor. It is too warm, in spite of air-conditioning. All members should have an office here. If we have to move someone, let us move the senators to the Confederation Building, leaving the Centre Block to the members—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Send them to Hull!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggest that they should be sent to Hull. I am a citizen of Hull and I do not want them at all, Mr. Speaker. Let us keep them in Ottawa or put them in the zoo south of Ottawa!

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, the Centre Block definitely constitutes an attraction. Personally, I refused to move to the Confederation Building because I am convinced that Parliament is not the Confederation Building but the Centre Block. And this is why I want to stay here.

I hope that the minister will proceed as soon as possible with improvements so that all hon. members will have their offices in the main building with Your Honour in order that we may legislate for the whole Canadian population.

The minister's statement is certainly welcome and I support it entirely, as do all my colleagues here.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY ON FOOD PRODUCTION AND SUPPLY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, because it is a matter of serious concern to all members of this House and therefore they may be disposed to grant my request, I ask leave of this House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43.

It deals with the confusion and the concern that presently exists, not only over the drastic and continuing rise in food prices, but the increase at an even greater rate of all input costs in food production and distribution to a degree that it now appears to be curtailing production at a time when great supplies are desperately needed.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House request the ministers of the government either later this day, or on the next sitting day to make full statements on motions with regard to their present policy and future plans to assure adequate food production and supply for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF WHEAT PRICE ON BREAD—REASON FOR CHANGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board and relates to the statement he made last evening about the price to be paid by domestic millers for wheat. I should like to ask the minister why the government chose this time to reduce the financial liability it had accepted under the two price system adopted back in 1971, a move which in effect forces an additional increase in the price of bread quite independent of any movement of world prices?

● (1130)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it should be appreciated that the so-called reduction in federal treasury money is a very minor item of 4½ cents on each bushel. The exact figure of $1.04½ was an historic one relating to the $1.95½ at which wheat had been selling under the old international grains arrangement. It seemed appropriate to set this figure at $1 rather than at $1.04½, particularly because from yesterday on the Canadian Wheat Board will be selling wheat to millers in Canada not at a fixed price, such as the old $1.95½, but at a price which will move from day to day or week to week within a range of the world price. That range seems to be easier to calculate regularly if the difference is $1 rather than $1.04½. The adjustment in treasury support is a minor one in the over-all picture. Of course, the 4½ cents is added to the return from the miller to the wheat producer and is in addition to the amount that is added from millers to wheat producers because of the increase in price.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would judge that the length of the minister's answer reflects the weakness of his position. Since the minister said that the $1.05½ was an historic figure, and since the price paid for bread by people will be a factor of the day, I ask the minister if he can justify the reduction of some $2,700,000 in the government contribution to the cost of wheat which would, therefore, cause an increase of a like amount in the cost of bread? Can the minister justify this at the present time, and will he not agree that this will hardly encourage millers to exercise restraint in the pricing of bread, because if the government is trying to get out as best it can, will not the millers try likewise?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, and the reply which was given earlier by the minister, are part of the debate which we might have had if the announcement were made by the minister on motions. We have heard the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the minister might be allowed to reply, but I would hope that both answers and questions could be briefer.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the adjustment of the 4½ cents would only lead to the most minute alteration in the cost of bread, perhaps something less than one tenth of one cent. The much greater change has to do with the fact that the world prices are higher and, of course, the switching of this amount, which still leaves us with a $60 million consumer subsidy on wheat for bread making purposes, was something which people like those in the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool had strongly advocated with regard to the whole amount. We felt we should leave the subsidy to the extent of $60 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that members on the government side are applauding an increase in the price of bread.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID THOSE ON FIXED INCOMES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the government's reducing this financial commitment at this time, which is showing a very poor example and will result in an upward movement in the price of bread, can the Prime Minister indicate whether he proposes to recommend any measures to enable those on fixed incomes or inadequate incomes to deal with the increase in the price of bread, to which the government's policy will contribute, or is the Prime Minister now accepting advice from Marie Antoinette?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the preamble to the question, much as the Minister of Justice did, and emphasize that this government is subsidizing, through the taxpayers' money, the western wheat growers to the tune of $60 million, and that is $60 million more than the opposition party ever did by bringing in two-price wheat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF WHEAT PRICE TO OFFSET

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board that the aim was to achieve a round figure, and that is why the government dropped from $1.04½ to $1, may I ask if consideration was given to a round figure like $1.10 or $1.25, so that the price of bread might come down?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that hon. members did not understand, even from my long statement, that the only thing which is in any real way contributing to the increased costs for flour to the miller is the increased price which the Wheat Board will charge to millers, which results from the world price now being at about $3.50, or 50 cents higher than the $3 at which we were supporting it before. That additional 50 cents, which has nothing to do with this minor adjustment in treasury support, is what may increase in due course by a small amount the cost of wheat to millers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is not the higher price all the more reason for the subsidy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is argument. The question asked in those terms is not in order.

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the unprecedented high increase in the cost of bacon, pork products and beef products—

An hon. Member: And fish.

Mr. McGrath: I can assure the hon. member that fishermen are not getting any benefit from it—I would ask the Prime Minister what action the government proposes to take to prevent this exorbitant increase in the price of food. My question is prompted by the fact that a majority of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply. I do not think additional comments are necessary when he is asking a question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider the question, but I will also want to consider very carefully the suggestion that fishermen are not getting anything out of the higher prices for fish. I would want to consider that.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the only action the government has taken thus far to cope with the increase in the price of food is setting up the Food Prices Review Board, and as the majority of the members of the House have no faith in the ability of that review board to cope with the situation, as indicated in the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver South in Calgary—I beg your pardon, in Vancouver—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: —may I ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might ask his question now.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, there are interruptions, which make it rather difficult. May I ask the Prime Minister what new proposals the government intends to bring before the House, in order to bring Canadians some relief from inflation.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the interpretation of the vote of this House that the hon. member has just made by saying that there was no agreement on the role of the Food Prices Review Board. It was set up by this House and, I repeat, we have confidence in its ability to act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking the opportunity to ask supplementaries on this subject. We will return to it, but I suggest that we should complete the first round of questions. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

HOGS—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FORWARD PRICING TO OFFSET PRICE INCREASES AND ENCOURAGE PRODUCTION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of indications yesterday regarding the removal of price controls in the United States, what consideration has the Canadian government, and the Department of Agriculture in particular, given to the establishment of a forward price for the production of hogs to ensure that any limitation of production does not create the 50 cent increase that will take place in the United States and may very likely occur here, according to the industry.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, one of the big things we have to worry about in food production is people suggesting that there will be food shortages, since we have to provide security for people in food production no matter what food may be involved. Also, we have to encourage production in Canada. What the United States of America has done has been to curtail production and curtail supply, and that should be a lesson for all of us.

Mr. Peters: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that within the last year or two many hog producers in Canada have gone broke because of the inability to stabilize their prices in accordance with the cost of production, does the Stabilization Board now intend to assist in establishing a forward price that will encourage farmers to go back into production in order to avoid this possible price increase which would have a great effect on the cost of living?

Mr. Whelan: First of all, pork production in Canada is near an all-time high. The stabilization board is watching what is going on very closely. We are concerned to maintain this productivity, and price is the greatest incentive to productivity in Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING BOMB FOUND IN RICHELIEU RIVER—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

This morning, on a Montreal radio station, people were talking of the emotion caused by the mysterious discovery of a bomb in the Richelieu River, near Lacolle. Would the Prime Minister have any clarification to give to the House concerning this?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot clarify this mystery at this time. I know that this government, through the responsible minister, is looking for the required information, and as soon as this has been obtained, I shall see to it that it is forwarded, if possible, to the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since it has been possible to establish that this bomb is of an American make, the Americans must have found out that one was missing. Does the Prime Minister intend to inquire from the American authorities concerning the time when they lost that bomb?

[English]

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is correct that a bomb was located in about 15 feet of water in the Richelieu River. It has been recovered by members of the Armed Forces, and I think they should be congratulated for their skill and bravery in this undertaking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: We still have to investigate the origin of the bomb, and this is being done.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF WHEAT PRICE WHICH MAY CAUSE INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): I should like to get back to the Prime Minister and to the wheat announcement made last night. In the light of three facts, namely that the price of bread will go up, that the producers will get no more for it and that the government right now has a cash surplus of $350 million, why was it thought appropriate, especially at this time when our rate of increase in the cost of living is the highest in the western world—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lawrence: Why did the government think it appropriate to go ahead now?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member would agree that a question asked in those terms is really an argument.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Lawrence: May I rephrase the question, then?

Mr. Speaker: I suggested yesterday, and perhaps I ought not to have done so, that when questions are asked that are not in order, the questioner should allow another member to put his question. Nevertheless, the hon. member might perhaps be allowed to rephrase his question.

Mr. Lawrence: Can the Prime Minister tell the House why the government feels it appropriate at this time, given the circumstances I have outlined, to increase the price of bread to consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I might begin by correcting the impression given or the facts as stated by the hon. member. Of course, the producer will receive more. He will receive it because the price of wheat is going up. And of course the consumer will benefit. He will benefit to the tune of $60 million of the taxpayers' money because the government is providing this $60 million from the treasury, which is a form of subsidy for the consumer. As to the question about the surplus, it is really a matter of whether the hon. member wants tax revenue and surpluses to be distributed in consumer subsidies right and left or whether he hopes that eventually taxes in this country will go down.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE PROCEEDED WITH IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind the drastic increase which is taking place in the price of basic commodities such as food, and the effect this will have on low-income families, and particularly on the children of disadvantaged families, will the Prime Minister now direct that the family allowance legislation, which is presently low on the priority scale, be put back on top where it should be, and introduce the bill for second reading immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure that if the bill is low on somebody's list of priorities it is not the government's but probably that of the Conservative opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As far as we are concerned, this bill is to come into effect on January 1. Our planning is to this effect and short of some unbelievable filibuster by the Conservatives, this will happen.

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—SUGGESTED STRENGTHENING OF POWERS OF REVIEW BOARD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary along those lines of questioning. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he takes seriously enough the threat of the leader of the NDP to withdraw from the coalition unless something is done to toughen up the powers of the Prices Review Board to propose that those powers be increased?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question does not seem very supplementary to me, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that apparently only militia units were worthy of the Queen's inspection during Her Majesty's recent visit, will the hon. gentleman take steps to ensure that the uniforms of such units are not replaced by the drab, dull greens—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this question could be placed on the order paper.

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCES TO RESOLVE PROBLEMS CONNECTED WITH FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the absolute necessity to increase food production in Canada and the highly detrimental effects of rising farm costs as well as the scarcity of competent farm labour, would the minister call an emergency conference between his provincial counterparts, representatives of commodity groups, consumers and farm organizations in an attempt to resolve a critical problem which can soon become disastrous?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met as late as the day before yesterday with my counterpart in Ontario. I have also discussed this question with the Minister of Labour and with the Minister of Manpower. I would point out to the hon. member that at the present time there is more offshore farm labour available in Canada than at any time in our history. I wish that some of the people who are unemployed would accept the challenge to work on some of these farms and help harvest the crops.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shame!

EGGS—EFFECT OF HIGH COST OF SOYBEAN MEAL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Frank (Middlesex): The minister told us he had been talking to his counterpart in the government of Ontario. Would he also consider contacting all interested parties to consider plans for temporary tariff protection for Canadian egg producers because of the great differential in the price of soybean meal between Canada and the United States, amounting to more than 250 per cent, as a result of the temporary U.S. embargo?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): We have received representations on this question. I have met with the National Farm Products Marketing Council. We have discussed this problem with the trade, and with our officials, and we shall discuss it further in Charlottetown on Tuesday, I hope. It is a situation which requires some attention but I do not consider it as being so urgent that immediate attention is required.

FEED GRAINS—ALLEGED ANNOUNCEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL OF DATE OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Does the statement he made during the UPA convention held in Drummondville as to the announcement of the new policy respecting feed grains still hold?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is aware that, under our rules, he is not allowed to ask a minister questions about statements made outside the House. Maybe the hon. member will rephrase his question so as to make it in order.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, could the Postmaster General advise the House whether the government still intends to announce its new policy respecting feed grains before August 1?

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—ACTION BY MINISTER TO HAVE NEGOTIATIONS RESUMED

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In light of the announced intention of 57,000 non-operating rail employees to proceed with selective strikes next week, possibly as soon as Sunday, will the minister tell the House whether he is now going to personally act to get serious negotiations resumed, and if so, when?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite agree with the premise or the prelude to the hon. member's question as to when the strike is going to commence. From reports I have received, hopefully it will not commence nearly that soon. As far as what intervention we contemplate, I am certainly going to have mediation services offered by my department in an all-out effort to get these parties together. If that includes intervention by myself, I will certainly be prepared to do that.

Oral Questions

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—STUDY BY DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT OF EFFECT OF POSSIBLE STRIKE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Without implying I am satisfied with that answer, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government reached any decision as to whether selective railway strikes are possible without shutting down the whole railway system or without disrupting essential services? If not, is such a study or determination underway and is the minister prepared to make a statement next week?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government has never attempted to shut down part of the railways to see if it could be done.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—CONTINGENCY PLANS OF DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT FOR MOVEMENT OF VITAL MATERIALS IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's department worked out contingency plans for the movement throughout Canada of foodstuffs and other vital materials?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think some negotiations are now going on between the railways and the union for specific cases such as Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and the special circumstances to which the hon. member is referring. I do not know if they will be successful. I do not think it would add any strength to the union to paralyze, for example, the ferries to Prince Edward Island. I hope they will reach some kind of an agreement with regard to those who are in a very special situation.

LOCATION OF ONTARIO REGIONAL OFFICE AS RESULT OF DECENTRALIZATION PLANS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In the decentralization of his department, will the minister indicate if it is the intention of the government to move the regional office for Ontario to northern Ontario and if other offices will be made available in areas such as the Cochrane, Timmins and Timiskaming riding, rather than only in the southern fringe of the north such as Sudbury?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may recollect that when a similar question was asked by another member of the House the other day, I suggested it might be placed on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

PENITENTIARIES

WOMEN'S PRISON, KINGSTON—REASON FOR DELAY IN CLOSING

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Almost three years ago the Report on the Status of Women recommended the closing of the women's prison at Kingston, Ontario. A few weeks ago, the minister said his officials were consulting with provincial officials regarding this matter. Will the minister tell us when the closing will take place and the reason for the delay?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing this matter with the provincial attorneys general. It has been agreed to put the subject matter on the agenda of the Federal-Provincial Conference on Corrections which will take place in early November.

WILLIAM HEAD—REASON FOR CONVERSION TO MEDIUM SECURITY INSTITUTION BEFORE HEARING REPRESENTATIONS FROM LOCAL CITIZENS

Mr. Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Solicitor General, but is in no way to be considered supplementary. On May 23, as recorded at page 4019 of Hansard, the Solicitor General gave an undertaking to the people near the William Head Prison that this institution would not be converted to a medium security prison until the representations and proposals of the community had been considered. Will the minister tell the House why residents of the area have now been advised by the minister that William Head is to become a medium security institution?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we did take the representations of the citizens seriously. They were examined by myself and officials of my department. We found we could not delay the implementation of medium security status at William Head. The representations were fully considered. I recently wrote a letter to the President of the Ratepayers' Association of Metchosin informing him we would have to go ahead with the plans for medium security status at William Head because we had a serious overcrowding problem and were not able to find other places for our prisoners at the present time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is my information that the citizens have not yet submitted—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask his supplementary.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is the minister prepared to release to me what he calls representations made by the citizens of the community, because I understand they have not fully submitted representations with regard to their problems?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it was my impression they had submitted them. It was on that basis we examined and replied to them. They suggested, for example, that we transfer the medium security institution to another location. I looked into that. They also made other suggestions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister and the hon. member might discuss the matter further in a private discussion.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not to my recollection, Mr. Speaker. I have talked to Mr. Spicer from time to time, but not recently about this question.

Mr. Wagner: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Did the minister give instructions to his departments various missions abroad in order that the bilingual and bicultural image of Canada outside the country stood out better, thus resolving the grievances in this area contained in Mr. Spicer's last report?

As everyone knows, every time we want to board a plane in a Canadian airport, for reasons of security we are searched, we are frisked. Might it be possible for members of parliament to use their identity cards to avoid that regulatory search?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not something we have considered. This person escaped from a shipwreck and is now being held as an illegal entrant to Cuba. Will the minister advise whether the Cuban authorities are still holding out for a ransom of $4,000 and whether Mr. Chappel is going to be released?

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO PERMANENCY OF PROGRAM—POSSIBLE MERGER WITH OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that many community groups across Canada are held up in planning their fall and winter programs because of the uncertainty of the continuation of LIP, will the minister state now whether LIP is to become a permanent program of the government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make any statement with regard to the permanency of LIP. I would indicate that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in a recent paper and statement indicated the consideration by the government of an employment strategy in connection with income security. I will also add, for the hon. member's information, a reference to our comments earlier when we extended the Local Initiatives Program this summer in which we gave a fair warning to those people who received extensions that they were for a precise period of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a supplementary, but there are only three or four minutes before the end of the question period. Perhaps I could have the co-operation of hon. members to allow as many questions as possible without supplementaries.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, is it now the policy of the government not to merge LIP and OFY, and when can we expect a clear statement of policy?

Mr. Adras: Mr. Speaker, no such policy decision has been made. It is still the subject of examination and we are proceeding to a decision as quickly as is wisely possible.

TRANSPORT

REMOVAL OF "IRVING WHALE" FROM ST. LAWRENCE—REASON FOR DELAY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the government to attempt to remove the Irving Whale from the Gulf of St. Lawrence before winter sets in and, if this is not the case, could he assure the House that the delay is caused solely by engineering and physical problems, rather than by any other problems? Would the minister assure us that the rumour that there is a police investigation into the circumstances under which the government attempted to let a contract for this undertaking is not accurate and that is not, in fact, the cause of the delay?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the police investigation is completed and the attorney general of Nova Scotia has a report. What action he will be taking, I do not know. The decision about the removal of the Irving Whale has no relationship to the other investigation.

SUGGESTED DISBANDMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Since the Prime Minister has now expressed his view that Information Canada has failed because of "the general suspicion that it was a propaganda machine", is it the government's intention to disband Information Canada?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member is aware from the proceedings which took place before the committee, we were prepared to acknowledge that it has not been able to fulfil its mandate in terms of the federal presence in Canada, as the Prime Minister indicated. That is in no way to indicate that something still cannot be done in that connection. I am certain it is the wish of all hon. members that that objective be reached.

CONSTRUCTION OF STORAGE FACILITIES FOR FRUIT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell us when legislation will be introduced for the subsidization of capital construction of storage facilities for tender fruit growers and apple growers of Canada? I refer to construction for the purpose of increasing storage facilities, which would reduce waste in peak periods of production and would also indirectly increase our food production and help stabilize fruit prices to the consumer.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has been reading one of my old speeches that some people say were non-productive. But if he can wait a few more days, I am sure he will be satisfied.

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONSUMER SUBSIDY PAID TO PRODUCER AND NOT ON ACREAGE BASIS

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the wheat growers will no longer be called upon to subsidize the Canadian consumer, could the minister go further and assure the wheat producer that he will not be asked to subsidize the rapeseed growers and the barley growers, and will he assure the producer that the $1 consumer subsidy will be paid directly to the wheat producer and not on an acreage basis?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that argument is one that has gone on for some time about the best method of paying the $60 million representing the $1 a bushel for wheat consumed in Canada. When the producers themselves, all of whom are potential wheat producers, were consulted about the matter they voted 87 per cent in favour of an acreage payment.

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF PROCESSING OF RETURNS—SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON OVERPAYMENTS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the concern expressed by many taxpayers, could the minister advise the House when his department expects to complete the processing of income tax returns for the year 1972?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, since the end of last month the initial bulk processing of returns has been completed. As of today, about 99 per cent of all refunds to which taxpayers are entitled have been sent out. It is normal that for some weeks hereafter there will be discussions with some taxpayers concerning their entitlement. But I think the department should be congratulated for sending out refunds faster than ever despite so many changes.

[Later:]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the delay in processing many income tax returns, would the minister give consideration to paying interest on overpayment of tax at the same rate as is charged by the department on underpayment of tax?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, if I were permitted by law, I would be very glad to do so. However, we do pay interest from May 1 at the rate permitted by law.

On clause 1—Immigration regulations, part I, s.28.

The Chairman: Order, please. The discussion is on clause 1. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Chairman; we have to continue the lesson begun last night. This is the second phase of the lesson. I am glad to be speaking with the Prime Minister temporarily in the House. It is rather interesting to note that this legislation was brought in only because the government was in difficulties. This government does not believe in legislating unless it has to. It does not believe in consulting representatives of the people unless it is in extremis or in a very grave situation, when they will say: We have to legislate.

I will not be any more critical of the minister because, as I said last night, he is only the most recent of a very long line of ministers who have had this problem. We are here because of the failure of the government to consult us, to secure the advice of the House, and to secure legislation. There are one or two questions which I want to ask the minister. As I pointed out last night, we have to deal with this matter because of the decisions of the Supreme Court, the Federal Court and the Immigration Appeal Board. There were several decisions.

I would like to know—I raised this question briefly last night, and the minister will have an opportunity to make a general statement about it—what the scenario is for new legislation. Are we to have from the government a green paper? Are we to have reference to a committee of the House of the problems related to immigration? Are we to take up where we left off in 1967, have a chance to examine what has transpired since and what needs to be done?

Last night, the hon. member for St. Paul's, followed by myself, dealt with the passage of the new Statutory Instruments Act. I am glad to see the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville here; he will recall that during the discussion by the select committee which considered the question of statutory instruments, one of the major concerns was the extent to which the government could alter by a stroke of the pen the immigration practices, the right to restrict, expand and extend the opportunities of people to come into the country under the order in council provisions contained in section 57 of the Immigration Act. I mention section 57 because it brings us to the first clause of this bill which refers to the right of the government pursuant to section 57 of the act. This is the regulatory granting clause.

I would ask the committee to look at section 57 and the enormous authority which in 1952 the House of Commons invested in the government, giving it unrestricted power of almost life and death over the opportunity of people to immigrate to this country. Section 57 of the Immigration Act provides:

> The governor in council may make regulations for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this act and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations respecting.
> (a) the terms and conditions under which persons who have received financial assistance to enable them to obtain passage to Canada or to assist them in obtaining admission to Canada may be admitted to Canada;
> (b) literacy, medical and other examinations or tests and the prohibiting or limiting of admission of persons who are unable to pass them;
> (c) the terms, conditions and requirements with respect to the possession of means of support or of passports, visas or other documents pertaining to admission;
> (d) the admission to Canada of persons who have come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are nationals or citizens:
> (e) the prohibiting or limiting of admission of persons brought to Canada by any transportation company—

This incredible power was given in 1952 by the Canadian Parliament to the government. Obviously, it is utterly impossible for the day to day decisions with regard to who should come to Canada, how they should come in and under what conditions, to be made by parliament. Anyone will admit that. But there must be a better method and a better opportunity for the House to scrutinize the rules and regulations under which the government operates. I made that point very emphatically yesterday, and I would simply ask the minister now to give us some idea of his plans.

I know, and the minister knows better than I do, that proposals have been made from time to time to draft new legislation. Some of those proposals have reached cabinet, some have been rejected. I can understand the political and other problems which face the cabinet in having to come to a conclusion. Officials of the immigration service would like nothing better than regulations which have received parliamentary approval, in order to avoid having to come to the minister to secure orders in council day in and day out so they can deal with situations which have suddenly arisen.

I recognize the difficulties of people in the service, in the government and in the House of Commons. However, I suggest the minister and the government take their courage in their hands, refer this matter to the committee and let the committee have complete freedom of access to departmental records, to talk to people in the government service and to private and quasi-public associations which have some knowledge of the facts relating to immigrants or people who come to Canada as visitors. We all know of the problems. Let the problems be settled in the forum which exists for that purpose, that is, the Parliament of Canada. I suggest, with due deference to the minister—I think he probably agrees with me—that we should dump the whole thing in the lap of parliament and say, "Here is the problem. Here are the difficulties. Here is the green paper. Here are some proposals.

I suggest that a committee should be established and empowered to consider the whole spectrum of immigration difficulties, not only with regard to admission but with regard to economic possibilities. The committee should consider what can be done, for exemple, with regard to parts of western and northern Canada and problems in Quebec. We know they exist. I can understand the government, faced with the political difficulties, having some hesitation. Let this matter come to the House of Commons, representing all the people of Canada. Let them grapple with it and solve the problems.

Of course, the government is not bound to approve all recommendations. It has the right of veto or of changing them when the new legislation is introduced. I recognize that the minister cannot bind the government, but at least if we had an earnest of his intentions, through a statement made today, it would be of some benefit not only with regard to this particular measure but to the extent to which this problem affects very many people throughout the country.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to have some material in front of me, particularly a judgment of the Immigration Appeal Board which is relevant to clause 1 of the bill. First let me say that I object violently to this type of procedure. Perhaps I wore out my welcome with previous ministers of immigration, telling each of them that the practice in force since 1967 was wrong and that we were building up real problems.

I do not know at how many hearings on the estimates of the Immigration Appeal Board and of the department I raised the problem of the increasing number of appeals. I appreciate what the problem is but I have extreme difficulty in understanding why the House is not being asked to amend the Immigration Act. Section 7(3) of the act, as interpreted by the Immigration Appeal Board, allows people who are rightly in the country to appear before an immigration officer and to obtain a special inquiry pursuant to that section, after which they are in the circuit for the full immigration appeal procedures. If that is the case, why not amend section 7(3) or, for that matter, all of section 7? But now we are being asked to approve a regulation flying directly in the face of a statutory provision. That is an abuse of the parliamentary process.

In future, practitioners who look at the Immigration Act to determine the rights of individuals under section 7(3) will also have to look at this little, two-clause bill. On the face of these clauses, section 7(3) and regulation 28 are incompatible. That being the case, why is this procedure being adopted? What bothers me about the bill is that it has retroactive effect, in the same way that the regulations issued late in November or early December last year had retroactive effect to November 3, thus affecting the rights of people already in the country, depriving them of rights which they had when they entered the country.

According to the Immigration Appeal Board, deportation orders made pursuant to regulation 28(1) on the sole ground that those involved did not have the appropriate visa, were illegal. But parliament is being asked to say that, notwithstanding the inconsistency between the regulation and the statutory provision, those deportation orders were legal. I find this to be an abuse of certain rights. Of course, it must be remembered that in the case of many deportations there are separate grounds. These may be included under regulation 5(t). Other reasons may include suppression of information and the making of untrue statements. Since last November there has been added the further ground of not being in possession of a visa as required by regulation 28(1).

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I have appeared before the Immigration Appeal Board on cases arising out of regulation 28(1). I say that those deportation orders must now be vacated. There is no way in which you can sentence a man illegally and then ask parliament to approve the sentence. We would not do it with a criminal but where, in effect, deportation orders have been declared to be illegal, parliament is being asked to legalize those orders. I contend that if there are no other valid grounds for these deportation orders, they must remain vacated.

Parliament is being asked to legislate retroactively. To that, sir, I object. If my material reaches my desk soon, I hope to go into the wording of the sections and of the regulation and deal at length with the decisions of the Immigration Appeal Board. Again I say I recognize the problem, but I do not think we should hurry to crush the rights of certain individuals in this country. I cannot sanction that.

There is another matter to be considered in connection with clause 2. Again I stress the inconsistency between regulation 28(1) and section 7(3) of the act. I recognize the problem faced by the minister; the door is wide open. But I contend the remedy lies in amending the Immigration Act, not in making regulations.

All too often we are told that the regulations made under the Immigration Act have the approval of parliament. That is utter poppycock, Mr. Speaker. Regulations made under that act from time to time since 1952 are rarely, if ever, subjected to scrutiny by parliament. They are made by the minister on the recommendation of his officials. No one can give an objective assessment of those regulations. It is on that count that I find this procedure difficult to accept. There should have been on amendment to the Immigration Act. Regardless of what parliament is being asked to do here, the governor in council still will have power to pass regulations which are absolutely contrary to the wording and to the spirit of the statutory provisions.

I hope we can get an answer from the minister as to why the government did not amend the Immigration Act in the proper way, rather than asking parliament to give retroactive approval to deportation orders which I submit never should have been made if they were made on the grounds only of regulation 28(1).

Immigration

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with this bill affecting immigration, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that I agree completely with the proposition of the hon. member for Peace River that the Parliament of Canada should play a greater part in deciding upon the major regulations that are enforced by the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

I deal with a specific problem faced by our agricultural industry, where we are now depending more and more upon the importation of offshore labour on a seasonal basis in order to adequately harvest and plant crops. It is completely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to determine how this program is controlled. In my considered opinions, the department is not aware of the peculiar problems that are growing in magnitude because of the way in which their regulations are administered.

The Department of Immigration, through the minister, takes the position that when we have high unemployment in Canada, no matter in which region it may be, this justifies their saying that there is sufficient competent labour available for the harvesting of crops. This question is particularly important now because of the fear of consumers that scarcity of food in Canada can cause an undue increase in its price.

The attitude of this government has been that if you do not want to work, you shuold not have to do so. I raise this matter because the Prime Minister reaffirmed the position of the government that a Canadian should not have to work if he does not want to. Mr. Chairman, many people do not like to work in agriculture. They do not like the monotony, the conditions and the fact that you work sometimes in heat and sometimes in cold. That is all right; they do not like it and they should not be forced to work at it. We all agree with that. But the department takes the position in most cases that Canadians should want this type of work.

Then there is the allegation by the Department of Manpower and Immigration that if the farmers of this country were to pay wages or salaries comparable to those received in industry, there would be no difficulty in obtaining competent farm labour. This is a fallacy. This is not why we have a scarcity of farm workers; we have a scarcity because in many instances it is seasonal work, short-term in nature. There is not the permanency that is found in other positions. When the minister and the government say to me, as a representative of the agricultural industry, that farm labour is not paid enough, let me point out that in many instances the $30 to $40 for an eight-hour day which some farm workers are now receiving is comparable to many industrial jobs, and it is impossible to obtain farm labour at these rates. In desperation, farmers have left it entirely up to the workers as to what their wages shall be; they have put the work on a unit basis so that the worker is paid in direct proportion to productivity. There is no limitation, other than physical capacity, on the wages workers can earn.

I have walked into canning and processing plants where there are cafeteria and washroom facilities comparable to most hotels. I have seen a 19-year old girl making $40 a day. We cannot quarrel with this type of wage. However, most of our harvest season occurs when students, who would ordinarily provide a large block of labour, are returning to university and secondary schools. It is wrong for the government to feel that we do not need offshore labour because students will be available. There are many students who do not want to work on farms. I do not quarrel with this. However, many are prepared to do so, but the school term begins early in September.

What do primary producers do? How do they obtain labour? Many of them have encouraged offshore labour over the years which comes from three sources, the Caribbean, Portugal and Mexico. We need this labour, Mr. Chairman, and these people are used to working in the heat. They are used to working in agriculture, and they are satisfied with the pay scale. Everybody is satisfied: the workers are satisfied, the primary producers are satisfied and the consumers of Canada are satisfied because we are getting the crops harvested. Everybody is satisfied but the Department of Manpower and Immigration. They will not grant work visas now to people from Portugal or to people from Mexico. They say they have made an arrangement to grant visas to Caribbean workers. That is fine. We get very good workers from the Caribbean—we also get poor workers from the Caribbean—but they are not available through a sufficient number of outlets. We need more.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I am so serious about this matter is that we have crops right now that are not being harvested because we cannot get enough labour: it is not available. I talked to a primary producer yesterday who said that in the last week he had hired 45 workers sent by the local Manpower centre to work at his establishment. They came and they left. It was not a matter of wages; they just did not want to work.

We brought in labourers from other regions of Canada. This was encouraged by the government, and I give them full marks for it. but what did they say when they got here? When they were on the job they said, "The work is fine. We shall work from eight until ten, from two until four, and if you need us from seven until nine it will involve overtime pay." How in the world can the producers of this nation make food available to Canadians at reasonable prices under conditions like that?

So, Mr. Chairman, my question to the minister is this: Why not bring this question to parliament and let the men and women of this nation who represent the agricultural industry, and the consumers, have a voice in determining what the regulations shall be and whether there shall be offshore labour imported into this country? I feel that Canadians should provide work for Canadians wherever possible; Canadians should have the first opportunity to work. But, Mr. Chairman, if Canadians do not want to work at this job—many of them do not, and have expressed this feeling in no uncertain terms—then I say that the producers of this nation are entitled to offshore, competent labour from wherever it may come, if these people are willing to work under the conditions prevailing in Canada today and produce crops for Canadian consumers.

This is my quarrel with the minister. I do not think he sees this point or understands the situation, so I take this opportunity to bring it to his attention once more. We must have a solution, and we must have it now.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, the minister last night said that the effect of the Federal Court decision would apply to 10,000 cases which are before the Immigration Appeal Board at the moment, and the effect of the Immigration Appeal Board decision would apply to 1,752 cases. This is approximately 12,000 cases that may be affected by the two decisions. I should like to ask the minister what the state of those cases is now, whether they will be proceeding with them or waiting until this law is passed before proceeding with them under the adjustment of status program set forth in Bill C-197. That is the first question.

● (1240)

My second question is this: What about the two cases which have been referred to, the Immigration Appeal Board decision and the Federal Court decision? What will be the effect on the appellants in those cases? If the board has no jurisdiction to deal with these people, what is their present status? They would not be landed immigrants unless the board directs that they become landed immigrants. I ask the minister, what has happened to those two cases affected by the present legislation?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I will do my best to respond to the various points and questions which have been raised. I will deal first with those raised by the hon. member for Peace River. I find myself agreeing greatly with many of the suggestions he made. We have already stated the substance of what we planned to do today in reviewing immigration policy. I said that on a previous occasion, in another forum of parliament, when I spoke before the standing committee on June 20:

> I can now announce that the government has undertaken a review of the whole field of immigration policy and it is intended to meet the needs of Canada a decade from now as well as those of today. Proposals based on this review will be written into a policy paper for submission to parliament and the Canadian people as a springboard for public examination and debate. That should precede the drafting of a new act.

This policy paper has been labelled by some as a green paper. That is fine with me; I am not concerned about any colour definition.

We intend to proceed as quickly as possible with the development of such a position paper and intend to place it before parliament in an appropriate manner. At the moment I assume we shall place it before a standing committee. It could be the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. We shall put it before the committee for examination and discussion with a view to its perhaps being debated in this House. I hope to go further than that in the sense of consulting with interested groups, parties and individuals in this country on the development of a new and contemporary immigration policy that will serve for several years to come.

In that connection I would agree with the hon. member for Peace River regarding another comment he made about provincial interest in this field. Not being a lawyer and not being a constitutional expert, I would not want at the moment to ask the House to listen to my views on the exact legality or constitutionality of where we stand vis-à-vis the provinces on this matter. I certainly understand that they have a constitutional interest in this field, although I think the federal jurisdiction is paramount. Whether that is the case or not, I bring to this question some biases and observations from a previous portfolio for which I was responsible, that of urban affairs, inasmuch as I sensed the growing concentration of population in the urban centres of this country.

I therefore consider it a practical requirement that there be consultation with the provinces and others on immigration policy. We must consult on the quantity of immigration at any given time, because the provinces, after all, are the recipients of immigrants who reach this country and the provinces must deal with them in terms of education, of housing, of welfare and in a whole series of areas in which, although some responsibilities are joint, the provinces have full jurisdiction in others. I am referring to the ability of provinces to implement necessary government assistance programs that will help immigrants. I think the consultation will need to take into consideration social and cultural factors as well as economic ones, which of course are most important considerations as well.

So I agree with the hon. member for Peace River about the method of obtaining wide debate and on there being full respect for the parliamentary process. He and I are very much in agreement on the necessity of doing this. I am hopeful that we will produce a policy paper, place it before parliament or an appropriate committee, and before the country and then receive from all interested peoples and groups throughout Canada advice and suggestions. All this we could then consolidate into a consensus. Then we would come forward perhaps with a more firm position and introduce a white paper. However, hopefully, by that time we will be moving on to legislation that will reflect a new, enlightened and good immigration policy.

The question arose—I think the hon. member for Peace River referred to it, and I recall that last evening the hon. member for St. Paul's made the point—as to whether procedures laid down by the Statutory Instruments Act has been followed last fall when regulation 34 was revoked and regulation 28, subparagraph (1) was amended. I can only say I have been assured that the procedure required by the Statutory Instruments Act was followed and the required reference was made. I say that on the basis of advice available to me. That matter in question was referred to the Privy Council and to the Department of Justice. So the required procedure was followed.

It then becomes a question of opinion. Legitimately, there can be opposing attitudes on whether an amendment will or will not stand up in law. As I say, according to the best advice of the legal people available to us, the procedure was followed. We were informed that this was possible, and we still hold to that view.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How can the minister deny the Supreme Court judgment?

Mr. Andras: With respect to the hon. member's interjection, I am saying that last night the question arose as to whether under the Statutory Instruments Act a regulation was referred for approval to the Privy Council and to the Department of Justice, as is required by that act. I give the hon. member the assurance, as I have been assured, that this procedure was followed. Not being a lawyer, and as we will be seeking leave to appeal this decision, I would not attempt, nor do I think that this is the forum for me to do so even if I were capable of it, to argue the legality of the decision of the Immigration Appeal Board or of the Federal Court in the case of Koo Shew Wan. I know what my bias and opinion is, and I think that matter will be dealt with if leave to appeal is granted.

The hon. member for Peace River also referred to section 57 of the Immigration Act and quite rightly said that this is the phraseology from which the power of regulation flows. The question as to whether these powers in the act, which are clearly there, are excessive or not I will not take the time of the House in answering. That is the kind of matter, among many others, that will be the subject of productive and constructive examination when we come to the real guts of the examination of immigration policy and of the legislation that will entrench that policy into law in this country.

I admit being impressed by the hon. member's argument. My attention has been drawn recently to the wisdom of such suggestions. I am often surprised about the degree of power contained in regulations. I wonder, however, how one maintains the delicate balance between the flexibility that is required and any possible rigidity in law. I know hon. members realize that flexibility is often required if one is to meet situations from day to day. I know, for instance, that the points system by which we judge the admissibility, eligibility and compatibility with Canadian society of an applicant was developed in 1967 and has continued without refinement. I myself will be examining this. I think perhaps there should be more frequent examinations of these matters, particularly in the earlier stages of any new approach. Nobody is perfect, but you begin with a sincere desire to find a good solution. One finds that practical experience dictates changes in this and changes in that area.

If we have to come back to the House every time we wish to make changes, we might find ourselves in difficulties. However, I do not think it can be argued that there are not parameters and that there are not boundaries within which we can and should be able to move. They may be somewhat narrow, and we must move between too much flexibility in regulation and perhaps too much rigidity in law.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that not the value of discussion in committee? Is not committee discussion bound to be useful?

● (1250)

Mr. Andras: It is, again, a matter of opinion whether an amendment to the Immigration Act would have been a better method of proceeding or whether a separate act should be presented. There is argument on both sides. We chose to go this way, recognizing, and we frankly admit it, the emergency situation we face, the timing, and so on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Bad cases make bad law.

Mr. Andras: Well, that is another argument. Our action in doing this by amendment may cause inconvenience to lawyers at a later stage because they would have to consolidate their information not only with the Immigration Act but with this measure. But again, it might be possible at a later date to tie together those technical, administrative process matters when we deal with the act itself.

I tried to deal with the question of retroactivity last evening. I sense that we may not reach agreement, but I state again my feelings. I find retroactivity, in terms of changing the rules of the game on a retroactive basis, to be repugnant but in this instance I believe we are maintaining what was the intent of the government and, I still say, a validly stated intent through section 57 of the regulations—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is wrong.

Mr. Andras: The hon. member says it is wrong. The Immigration Appeal Board has said it is wrong. We, however, proceed on the basis that it is right and seek leave to appeal. As I said last night, I would take my chances on that appeal to a superior court except for the emergency situation we face right now, the time which would be bound to elapse before a decision was reached, the harm which would be done to this country as well as to very many innocent people, the harm which would be done by irresponsible and reprehensible actions on the part of so-called immigration counsellors who have exploited innocent people in countries abroad before. So we decided to deal with the matter in this way, on the grounds of urgency. I do not argue that this is not retroactive in the strictly legal sense of the word. In the sense that it amounts to changing the rules, I do not believe it is.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex raised a point which has been bothering him for some time. I can tell him that I am concerned about it. However, this is more a manpower situation than one which concerns immigration. But since I have to deal with both I cannot really dodge that issue, either. There are certainly more than 6,000 offshore workers here now, including foreign students, who will work at these jobs and there is an increasingly effective foreign seasonal worker program. We will pay more attention to this.

We do not intend to unecessarily deny an employment visa to Portuguese or any other workers who are in this country or who can be brought to this country. Indeed, we will try to get them here, through the program I have described, to engage in occupations which Canadians will not undertake. I do not think time is available to me in which to embark on a whole discussion about the erosion of the work ethic, and who is or who is not at fault here. I will simply say it is a phenomenon which is occurring throughout the western world.

We have experienced difficulty with some employers when we have suggested bringing offshore workers in. I should point out that we are obliged to conform with provincial labour standards and other standards. We cannot bring foreign workers in if working conditions, including but not limited to wages, are substandard. We will co-operate in an effort to find innovative ways to overcome some of these problems involving housing, accommodation, and so on. The hon. member can doubtless point to many employers who do meet the appropriate standards. But there are, unfortunately, other employers who will not conform and who then scream murder and say that we are contributing to an erosion of the work ethic. However, I am well aware that the important thing is to get food costs down, and this means production.

As to the appeals before the court, where the people involved are eligible under the adjustment of status program I enunciated the other day, to the degree it is within our jurisdiction we shall continue to apply relaxed criteria in recommendations to my representatives before that court. This matter is ultimately under the jurisdiction of the Immigration Appeal Board, but I have reason to beleive the board will look upon this with sympathy as it did in the case of a similar program which was successfully carried out last summer. I am very glad to say, with regard to a particular case with a name attached to it, the case of Miss Nazarali, she will be landed even if our appeal to a higher court is successful. Many of these cases will succeed, but I think on other grounds, grounds which will not jeopardize our ability to control the situation in the future. In the Koo Shew Wan case—that is the Federal Court decision of May 23, I believe—there will probably be another inquiry held, though on what basis I am not sure right now. But I am totally sympathetic to the individual situation there, and I will do my best to make sure that in setting our house in order we do not trap those two individuals.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am more concerned than I was before at the minister's casual approach to what I say is really a case of retroactivity. The minister seems to have the wrong impression as to the nature of my objections. I am not objecting to the closing off of applications to become landed immigrants made by people who come here as visitors. I have never objected to that. Therefore, action taken by parliament to close that avenue is perfectly legitimate as far as I am concerned. However, I do not accept that it is right that parliament should be asked to do it in a way which the Supreme Court of Canada has condemned.

I hope the minister will read the judgment of the majority in the Podlaszecka case. Mr. Justice Laskin was most pointed in his remarks. How the minister's legal officers or the Department of Justice can suggest it is possible that there is a remaining difference of opinion following the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Laskin, I fail to see. It is this point which concerns me. Those people who were ordered deported between the end of November and the end of June, or as a matter of fact up to now, under the general grounds of regulation 28 (1)—

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

The Chairman: Order, please. An hon. member has noted that it is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Laniel): When the committee rose at one o'clock it was considering clause 1.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee much longer. In completing my remarks, I wish to emphasize for the third or fourth time, as some of my colleagues have done, that the people who particularly concern me are those who had an order for deportation made against them under the provisions of regulation 28(1) which was brutum fulmen. There was a total incapacity to pass that order in council in light of section 7(3) of the Immigration Act. Those people have had their status affected by the deportation order.

I cannot accept the proposition of the minister that we are now going to pass curative legislation which has the effect of restoring deportation orders made under regulation 28(1), and possibly section 5(t) when the courts have declared that regulation 28(1) is an invalid ground for deportation. Such deportation order was void ab initio. There were no grounds for it and it must be void. Yet the minister is asking parliament to breathe life into these deportation orders for which there was no ground in the first place.

The minister can talk all he wants about legal niceties, but according to the estimates given by the minister it may be a lesser number; certainly it will not be a greater number than the 1,700 who were caught under inquiry and had a deportation order made against them under regulation 28(1). I refer the minister and his officials to the Podlaszecka case, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which is totally binding and cannot be appealed. With this two-clause bill the minister is asking that that decision of the Supreme Court of Canada be wiped out in so far as it affects the interpretation of section 7(3). The minister has not put forward any grounds why parliament should set aside that Supreme Court of Canada decision. The minister complained about the Immigration Appeal Board decision, but the principle will still apply to the Supreme Court decision.

The only way to get around this is to amend the statute, not to ask this House to deem valid an invalid regulation. Why on earth the statute has not been amended, I do not know. This is merely trying to justify a bad case. If the minister was not satisfied with the Immigration Appeal Board decision and felt he had a case in law, an appeal should have been launched right away. He should not come to parliament to suppress the rights of the 1,700 people whose rights are going to be affected.

I certainly agree that a plug must be put in, but it should be put in there now. Why act retroactively? The minister has a bad case. He now comes to us in an emergency. Visitors to this country can now apply under section 7(3) of the Immigration Act to become landed immigrants. I realize the pressure there, but such pressure is a bad basis for this type of law. All I can say is that I must oppose the minister's action in this regard. I think it is wrong. Let the minister proceed the right way by amending the section, and then I would agree with him; but not retroactively.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Persons deemed to have reported.

Immigration

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there has been a typographical error in clause 2 of the bill. I have an amendment to correct that. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre):

That Bill C-212 be amended by striking out the figure "1972-1616" in line 28 on page 1 thereof and substituting therefor the figure "1967-1616".

Motion (Mr. Reid) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Andras moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before we give approval to this measure, which my friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) regards with such repugnance—and I must say I share his view—may I ask the minister two questions which I have discussed with him. I have particular regard to the fact that a number of people who may be caught by this amendment may be deserving of consideration because of the special circumstances. I can think of no better illustration than that of the girl who landed here and gave rise to this leading case. She left her native land in full and honest belief that in coming here she would be entitled to qualify, and subsequently apply after having been a visitor, for landed immigrant status. She arrived in Canada the day after the revocation of the previous regulations came into effect. I would think that here is a case where discretion should be exercised to allow her to stay.

In addition, I would hope the minister would exercise his discretion under section 8 and examine these cases with his officials. I do not believe in ministerial discretion. I think that is one of the things that was made quite clear by the committee meetings of 1966-67. I am opposed to the handling of these matters through ministerial discretion. However, because this House, very reluctantly, in the nature of an emergency, passed this legislation I would urge the minister and his officials to consider all representations and even seek out, of their own volition, some cases where injustices have been manifested and where there has been inequity.

I hope the minister would exercise the discretion which resides with him and the department and use the same provisions as are contained, for instance, in the Criminal Code which give the benefit of doubt to the person concerned. I do not suggest that there be a wholesale application of that principle, but I urge the minister to make sure that no real injustices are brought about in respect of people who came here genuinely believing they would be entitled to apply to stay, and have no other restrictions against them. If this happens, I think we will feel a little better about having consented to the passage of this bill.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I understand the hon. member's representation, and I think I do and I will re-examine it when it is available in printed form, I believe I can give the assurance. In the case of Miss Nazarali particularly, I am pleased to note in the Appeal Board judgment that in addition to creating the situation with which we are dealing in Bill C-212, there was a further expression of opinion, that had that not been the case the Appeal Board would have seen fit to perhaps grant her appeal on other grounds. That makes it, happily, easy for me to agree to the hon. member's suggestion.

There is another factor there which makes it quite possible, as illustrated by my comments under Bill C-197, in that she did arrive before November 30, 1972, and so on that ground also, to the degree that it is within my jurisdiction, since it is now before the Appeal Board, I will certainly make recommendations to my representative in this case to apply a relaxed approach to that appeal. I am reasonably confident that that effort will be successful, as I have previously indicated in the case of all appeals of that nature that were made by people who arrived here on or before November 30.

I am very happy in that particular case, with the name identified to it, to acquiesce. I had intended to do that in any event. Also, I think it is a good suggestion to examine other cases. I cannot commit myself to a wholesale removal of the prohibitions which may exist on many grounds. I want to be quite sure of my ground before I make an individual case commitment. But we will examine them. I think the objectives stated by the hon. member are shared by me and the department and, I am sure, by every member of this House. We are not trying to be punitive in respect of those people caught in this particular legal argument. We are most concerned about our ability to control the future. I would add my appreciation for the dispatch which this bill has received. He intend to see that it is carried out with the intent expressed by most of us.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I want to explain which I did not deal with before. My vehemence in this debate is not related in any way to the fact that the young lady in this case happened to be a resident of my constituency. I have never met her, and had never heard of her. I must commend counsel who represented her through her appeal for a very skilfully and intelligently argued case.

Again I will say to the minister that I am disappointed that the department has chosen to travel via this route. I think it is a shameful way to proceed. The right way to proceed would have been to amend the Immigration Act and to ensure that its implementation would have been as of now. I find it totally repugnant to accept that parliament is asked to resurrect deportation orders made on grounds that were found to be beyond the power of the minister. I cannot for the life of me see why we should be asked to validate that type of action.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. members expect the Chair to refer briefly to some of the motions which are before the House. I should like to refer in particular to motions Nos. 1, 4 to 10 inclusive, and 12. I must tell hon. members that I have serious reservations about the procedural aspect of these motions. I do not want to prejudge them in any way, and I know they are motions about which hon. members have thought a great deal.

I appreciate the fact that they were debated from a procedural standpoint when they were before the committee as amendments to the bill, and it may well be that hon. members would want to give their views from a procedural standpoint before the Chair is called upon to express his opinion on these motions. I would be grateful if hon. members were to offer advice and guidance to the Chair in this respect.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, having heard your comments, and having attended committee meetings at which discussions were held regarding the admissibility of various amendments to the bill, including some which are before you for your consideration, I have the feeling that I may have difficulties, together with my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who shares responsibility for putting them forward, in having them accepted by you. I rise at this time, not in any way to question your wisdom or the decision you must ultimately make, but to at least bring to your attention our arguments and our views on why we feel these amendments should indeed be accepted.

During the second reading debate on Bill C-2 about 130 speeches were made in which the constantly repeated issue was that of the degree of punishment. This matter was constantly raised and it was suggested repeatedly that it would be decided in committee the degree of punishment to be contained in the bill. On January 29, in the early stages of the debate, I gave notice while speaking on Bill C-2 in the House that it was my intention, along with my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Denis, to put forward certain amendments, and I gave the basis of those amendments then. Several days earlier I, together with my colleague, announced my intention to the press. I also spoke to colleague on both sides of the House who I felt had some sympathy with our point of view.

Having done that, over a period of some five months speeches were made in a lengthy debate in the House and amendments or proposals to come before the committee were supported by some members and rejected by others. Never over that period of five months during first and second reading of the bill in the House, and then in committee, was there any suggestion of any procedural problem or inappropriateness in the approach until there was some question about the amendments and it was suggested that they would not be appropriate for consideration by the House. If I have erred in not checking with the table officials and asking for their opinion at an early stage back in January, I also erred in my conclusions regarding the committee meetings in 1967 when amendments, which included total aboliton, were put forward, without challenge, and then defeated.

I would not be putting forward these amendments had I not balanced total abolition with another aspect ensuring severity of punishment, and that is the next point I want to make. What is the principle in the bill, and is it indeed challenged? Are we attempting to change the principle with the amendments I have put forward? In committee, while the chairman of the committee ruled that to alter the one extreme of punishment in the bill, that is, for certain categories the penalty of hanging, would be to change the principle, there was no such ruling and an amendment was accepted for consideration to change the other extreme in the bill, that is, the ten-year minimum sentence by reducing it.

I am trying to argue: What is the principle, versus what are the specifics in the bill? I am saying that if the chairman of the committee ruled that the death penalty abolition changes the principle of the bill, then I fail to understand how the other extreme regarding a ten-year minimum sentence for the most heinous crime does not also change the principle. I agree that the principle of Bill C-2 cannot be altered, but I argue that the principle is the provision of an appropriate punishment for various categories of murder; it is not the specific punishment but the principle of appropriate punishment.

Whatever amendments have been offered either in the committee or now in the House, the principle of the bill, that is punishment for the crime of murder, has not been removed, nor do amendments put forward in committee or here suggest that that principle of appropriate punishment be removed. If the principle were based on death or no death as a specific, rather than general principle, of severe punishment many people might argue that a definite 25 years of incarceration more terrible than death. Whatever those arguments, my amendments to the existing contents of the bill or the contents of the original bill continuing to deal with the specifics of punishment all maintain the principle of the bill, which is punishment and the deterrence of this terrible crime.

I should like to summarize my arguments. It was the will of parliament as expressed during the second reading debate that real changes be made in the type of punishment in the committee and, if not there, that they be made here during the report stage, especially in the area of the degree of punishment. Also, in those speeches the possibility was mentioned of the removal or harshening of the death penalty factor. It was also the will of the House that the principle of severe punishment be maintained. Certainly that was the general feeling during the second reading stage. I feel that my amendments live up to that principle.

Very early in the debate on this bill notice was given of my intention, along with that of the hon. member for Saint-Denis, and during the five months this was not challenged. In fact, it was accepted as material for debate during second reading. The amendments were expected to be presented in committee, and they were found acceptable when they reached committee and voted upon. It is quite possible that a tight procedural interpretation may jeopardize the admissibility of these amendments, but I would like you to consider, sir, the free vote status of this bill, the lengthy notice given and the general acceptance of parliament over the months that these alternatives would be acceptable for consideration in committee. Surely this justifies their admissibility if parliament is to make a responsible decision on such a controversial matter without the constraints of party discipline.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, did I understand you to indicate that you also may have some doubts about amendment No. 11?

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker: The remarks which I made a moment ago were only to the amendments which stand in the name of the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming). I thank the hon. member for York West for the considerations which he has just put forth for examination by the Chair. Hon. members will appreciate the difficulty with which I am faced at the present time. I might say that the main difficulty with which I am faced results from the form in which the bill which is before us has been returned from the committee.

I have serious doubts as to the procedural admissibility of some of the amendments which were made in committee, but at the same time I wonder whether the Chair ought to exercise the initiative required to refuse to accept a bill as it has come to this House from the justice committee, and ask that it be returned to the committee for further consideration. There is no recent precedent that I know of, even with the assistance of the advisers to the Chair at the table, to indicate that the Chair could take this rather bold step of refusing, on behalf of the House, to accept a bill as amended in committee. I think that committees to some extent have to accept some responsibility and return to the House bills which contain amendments which are procedurally correct.

If the Chair were to take the initiative and suggest that some of the amendments, particularly an amendment or amendments which in effect amend the Parole Act, cannot be accepted, I would be placing the Chair, the committees and the House in the position that in every instance where a bill returns from a committee there might be an appeal from rulings of committee chairmen, to the effect that the ruling of a chairman on a procedural point, accepting or refusing an amendment, should be reviewed. I wonder whether this is the position in which hon. members would want to place the Chair. It would be a very difficult position. Perhaps we should give the matter some thought.

If this were not a bill on which there is a cross-section of views on both sides of the House, there might be a tendency on the part of the Chair to take bolder action, refuse to accept the bill and suggest that some of the amendments proposed should not be received. But in view of the character of the bill, in view of the nature of the discussion which has taken place both in committee and in the House on second reading, I would very much hesitate to rule at this point that this bill should not be accepted and that the many hours, days and perhaps weeks of work spent by the committee in studying this matter, preparing amendments and referring the bill to the House for third reading should be discounted.

This is why at this point I would be prepared, on behalf of hon. members, to say that what we have before us is a bill with these amendments, and I will try to make my rulings on the motions now before us on the basis of the bill that we now have before us from the committee. But having said this, it does not necessarily make the hon. member's amendments more in order. I still have, in respect of the hon. member's proposed amendments or motions, the reservations which the chairman of the committee had when he was called upon to rule on those amendments.

I would think that hon. members would tend to share the hesitancy of the Chair in accepting the hon. member's amendments. The hon. member has referred to the principle of the bill and that, of course, is the difficulty with which we are faced. The purpose of the bill which was given second reading by the House, as I understand it, is to provide for the reinstatement of the law relating to capital punishment. The hon. member's motions in effect would remove those provisions from the bill. In other words, the amendments proposed are negative of the principle of the bill as approved on second reading. That is really the difficulty with which the Chair is confronted.

With particular reference to these several motions, I should mention that motions Nos. 2 and 3 would appear to be irregular on two or more grounds. These motions may be relevant to the subject matter of capital murder, but my understanding of Bill C-2 is that it is specifically directed to capital punishment. I would hope that hon. members, in comparing the bill which we had before us five years ago with the bill we have now under the title of Bill C-2, would note they are different in this sense, in that there is a different accent. What we have before us is, as I said, Bill C-2 which is essentially directed to capital punishment rather than to capital murder.

Secondly these amendments would purport to introduce into the bill provisions over and above those contained in the bill as given approval by this House on second reading. The first group of amendments purport to eliminate capital punishment. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 would increase the number of offences subject to capital punishment and, at the same time, reduce the number of offences punishable by imprisonment. In doing so, these two motions appear to me to run contrary to the provisions of the bill which was given second reading by this House. It would appear to me, also, that motion No. 11 is defective in that it proposes to introduce into the bill a provision unrelated to the purpose and provisions of Bill C-2.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In connection with motion No. 12, it appears to be procedurally acceptable, but considered in isolation it may be that the hon. member for York West might wish not to proceed with that motion. In other words, if the Chair looks on it as a separate motion, it only removes certain words from the bill before us. There is nothing wrong with that, but I assume the hon. member is proposing this amendment only if the other amendments are carried after consideration by the House. For these reasons, and with much hesitation, I would have to rule that the hon. member's motions are not in order and cannot be put to the House.

The next motion is the one which stands in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). The Chair, again, had some reservations about this motion but it seems it is relevant to the bill as it has come back to the House from the committee. I again insist on the fact that if the bill had been returned to us in strict or in correct procedural form, it may well be that this motion would have been out of order. But in view of the fact that we have a bill before us which has come in a certain form, defective as it may be, it has the result, in my estimation, of making the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert in order, at least to the extent that the hon. member should be given the benefit of the doubt so that it could be put to the House for consideration. If hon. members wish, the Chair would put this motion now. However, in the absence of the hon. member is it the wish of the House that this motion be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The remarks which I have just made in relation to motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert would also apply to motion No. 4. Again, I would be prepared to give the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) the benefit of the doubt. I would think it would be the wish of hon. members that this motion be put, and if the House so wishes I am prepared to put it at this time.

● (1440)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I rise on a related point of order, Mr. Speaker? I gather that the motions that the Chair will allow are Nos. 2, 3 and 11, if I am correct, and I should like to raise as a point of order the question of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think perhaps the hon. member is assuming a little too much. We have not come to No. 11 yet. We were dealing with Nos. 2 and 3. We have now before us No. 3. Although we have not reached this point in our proceedings, I would have some doubts about motion No. 11. At this time I am inquiring whether it is the wish of the House that motion No. 3 be put so that the debate might be initiated by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point of order I wish to raise applies even if only two of the motions are to be put, and that point of order relates to the taking of the vote, if votes are asked for on these amendments. I think it would be the wish of the House, and I think it is probably a wish shared by both sides on this debate, that votes come at a time when we would all know about them. In view of the fact that there is provision in Standing Order 75 for Your Honour to defer the taking of a vote, if a vote is asked for, when the report stage of an amendment has been concluded, I wonder if it could be understood that all of the votes at report stage of the amendments would be deferred to an agreed time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I am in a somewhat embarrassing position this afternoon because, not knowing what your Honour's intentions were and being well down on the list of amendments, I had assumed in the event that you did accept the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), as I hoped you would, and that you would find it in order, as you have, we would then proceed with the debate on that amendment first of all. I am rather horrified at a quarter to three on a Friday afternoon in July to find that perhaps we may be proceeding with my amendment.

May I suggest that if all members want to facilitate the debate and the taking of the votes in respect of this fairly controversial measure, we not accede to the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), simply on the following ground. The taking of the vote on the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, when it comes, would be an indication to some of us who have intentions in respect of other amendments. If by any means we voted on the hon. member's amendment and, for instance, that amendment were lost, then we might save a great deal of time in respect of the debate and the subsequent taking of the vote in regard to the first amendment standing in my name.

I would therefore say to you, Sir, and I understand this is an exercise of the Chair's discretion alone, that in opposition to what you have just heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we might proceed with the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. If that is permitted to stand, I think I should have the privilege of permitting my initial amendment to stand. I think it will save time and it will save discussion—I hope I am making my point clear—if we have the vote at the end of every question at the time those amendments are put.

Perhaps I could resolve the difficulty that we may be in now by asking Your Honour to stand the first amendment standing in my name, and perhaps we could proceed with a dicussion on whether No. 11, standing in my name, might be in order. Of course, I should like to speak in relation to that.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that we have been asked to stand motion No. 2, but the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham would prefer to proceed with this motion. After we have had a debate on motion No. 2, which I think is reasonable, the suggestion of the hon. member is that we should dispose of motion No. 2 before we attempt to dispose of motion No. 3. I am in agreement with this.

The Chair would not want to take advantage of the Standing Orders to impose his wishes or suggestions on hon. members. This leads us at this time to consideration of the procedural point relating to the hon. member's motion No. 11. I would certainly be grateful for advice from the hon. member or other members of the House in respect of the procedural acceptability of this proposed motion.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of talking too much this afternoon, I shall attempt to be quite brief on this one as well. First of all, as you indicated in your ruling on the amendments which you declared out of order a short while ago, the principle of this bill is related not to capital murder but to capital punishment. I think that is important.

My amendment relates strictly to the form of execution in the event that the penalty of capital punishment is imposed. I do not want to get into the merits or demerits of the case, but I cannot resist the temptation to say that in my belief the actuel form of execution in this country at the moment, namely, hanging, is an extremely archaic, medieval way of imposing the ultimate punishment, capital punishment, on anyone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I would think if we are going to have capital punishment in this country, then it certainly should be carried out in a far more humane manner than it now is. This is the purpose of the amendment. I know, sir, that you do not want me to get into the argument on the merits or demerits of the actual amendment, and I am trying to resist that. I must point out to the House and to you, if I may, that my understanding of the procedures—and believe me, I have studied them in another capacity before coming here—in regard to execution in this country is that sedatives are administered, or have been in the past, to people who are going to have the sentence of hanging imposed upon them.

The form of this amendment would permit, by regulation, the government of the day to indicate a far more humane, sensible, sane and less cruel way of imposing capital punishment. It is on that basis, and because it falls within the principle of the bill as you enunciated it not more then ten minutes ago, namely, capital punishment and not capital murder, that the amendment was brought about. Sir, you have indicated that there are some doubts in your mind as to whether this amendment really is in order. I would assume, if I may be so presumptuous, that the mental processes of the Chair, for simplification purposes, would run along the lines that there was no mention made in the original bill of the form of execution; this amendment comes along now to attempt to lay down a different form of execution, and therefore it is out of order.

May I merely point out to you that there was no mention in the original bill of any details or any procedures or any length of time in respect of parole, and the committee, albeit in my absence, decided in its wisdom to insert in that bill restrictive provisions regarding parole and parole procedures. My point, put as simply as I can, is this. The Chair is accepting amendments from the committee as being in order. I appreciate you have very grave doubts about this one, but I assume you are accepting it. If the Chair is accepting amendments that come from the committee as being in order, then I submit that in fairness you have no choice but to accept motion No. 11.

If the only ground for ruling motion No. 11 out of order is that there is no mention of this question in the initial bill, then I am sorry and we must leapfrog back one further stage and you should also refuse to accept the bill as coming to the House from the committee. It should be returned to the committee. I suggest that you have a duty to perform if a committee reports an improper bill to you. I know Your Honour would be making a precedent-making decision, if you make it. I submit that the Chair has the duty and responsibility to supervise the actions of committees of this House. The only way Your Honour can exercise that responsibility, obviously, is by refusing to accept improper reports to you. If you are about to rule that motion No. 11 is improper, I submit you should also rule that the committee's report is improper, because it deals with exactly the same type of matter. The same question of principle is involved in this matter.

I will not flog the matter any further, Sir, hoping I have made my point. It is simple: if you accept the committee report, in all fairness and equity you should also accept motion No. 11.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, for obvious reasons, as the chairman who ruled on this amendment in the first place, I was reluctant to enter this debate on whether the amendment or the bill is in order. I only do so now because the previous speaker in his argument referred to the fact that the amendment was moved. The amendment was in a certain form and a ruling was made on it. The amendment was rejected, but that amendment is identical to the one which is before you now as motion No. 11.

There are two comments I want to make. The hon. member has conveniently overlooked two important distinctions. The first distinction he overlooked has to do with the power of the Chair at this juncture. The power of the Chair, of course, is absolute with respect to motions which are before the Chair at this time. Accordingly, it is the privilege and obligation of the Chair to rule on whether motion No. 11 is in order, because it is before the Chair at this time. So Your Honour must rule on it. As Your Honour pointed out in your preliminary remarks, the Chair does not possess anything like the same powers with respect to an amended bill, which is before you, and therefore your handling of the matter in that regard would have to be totally different.

[Mr. Lawrence.]

The second distinction that the hon. member conveniently overlooked has to do with the nature of the two motions that he is discussing, the first being motion No. 11. That motion is a direct affront to the rules of procedure in that it proposes to go beyond the amending bill, Bill C-2, and do one thing only, amend a section of the Criminal Code which it is not intended will be amended by Bill C-2. That is a direct contravention of the rules. A comparison of amendments which have now been passed by the committee and now form part of the bill, and the provisions of the Parole Act, which are included in the bill, is not a valid comparison inasmuch as the amendments to the Parole Act are only consequential to the main thrust of the amendment which was accepted in committee.

The amendment which was accepted in committee was to define or clarify what is meant by life imprisonment and to give the judge certain powers with respect to those parts of Bill C-2 which deal with life imprisonment. If that amendment, which automatically is part of Bill C-2, is on any dangerous ground it is because it went beyond that matter and dealt with an amendment to the Parole Act; this would have to be done in due course. That is the only consequential aspect of the main thrust of the amendment. Also, it is separable. It would be entirely possible for the government not to go that far. The government could do that at any other time.

In other words, faced with the main thrust of the amended bill, the government, if it did not want to amend the Parole Act, would have been obligated, in order to bring the Parole Act in line with the Criminal Code as amended by the passage of Bill C-2, to present a further bill to amend the Parole Act. If that simple step had been taken to cut adrift that consequential aspect that relates only to the Parole Act, the amendment, surely, would have been beyond attack. Therefore I submit that the comparison is not valid.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) for their guidance in respect of this very important motion. I wish to assure the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham that I fully understand the strength of his argument. This is what perhaps caused me most anguish in the last hours and days when I have been giving this matter serious consideration.

The hon. member states that his amendment, or motion, should be treated in the same way as amendments which are accepted in committee and adopted by the committee, so that they are now part of the bill. I think there is some distinction between the two. In addition to the distinction to which the hon. member for Sudbury alluded, there is another distinction. While I had some doubts as to the validity of the amendments, I was not prepared to make a clear ruling that they were clearly out of order. I said that I had some doubts. When I referred originally to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, I said that I had some doubts as to the procedural validity of his amendment. I might say that this was a polite way of putting things. I had perhaps more than doubt. I was basically convinced that the amendment was not acceptable for the very simple reason that it goes beyond the terms of the bill which we have before us.

The hon. member, with his lengthy experience in law, in government and in parliamentary affairs knows that one cannot propose an amendment to a statute which is not before us. The hon. member's amendment is not to the bill before us but to the act which stands behind the bill, the Criminal Code itself. The hon. member's suggestion, and I know that he put this forward as argument in support of his proposition and perhaps was not 100 per cent convinced that it was right, was that we should accept the amendment because it relates to the subject of capital punishment. Because an amendment or motion refers generally to the subject of capital punishment does not make it automatically acceptable. If the amendment seeks not a modification to the bill before us but, rather, a change in the statute which the bill seeks to amend, the Chair has no alternative but to say it is not acceptable. It is for that reason that I hesitate very much to accept the hon. member's motion from the point of view of procedure.

I repeat, I have general doubts about the whole procedure which has been followed in connection with this bill in many respects. I should make a distinction to which I should refer. The hon. member referred to a report which would not be in order. We are not dealing here, of course, with a report, but with a bill which has come before us. It is not the report, but the bill which we have before us for consideration at this time. While it may be possible in some instances for the Chair to take exception to the form of a report which comes before us—and there are many precedents to justify such intervention on the part of the Chair—I suggest there are few, if any, precedents which would justify the intervention of the Chair in the case of a bill which comes before us in a certain form from a committee. For these reasons, I would have to rule that the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in accepting Your Honour's ruling, may I pose this question in regard to the bill as reported to the House? Perhaps now or at some future time, so that it may be clear, Your Honour would indicate for the benefit of generations yet to come your reasons for refusing to intervene at the report stage of the bill even though there might be serious doubts in your mind as to what has been done in committee itself.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the Chair tries not to rule for generations to come. It is difficult enough to rule for this generation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that future generations would be easier to rule for than the present one. In any event, I suggest that whatever reasons, if any, can be gleaned from what I said a few moments ago should be sufficient for this moment; and if there is another occasion I may find other explanations, perhaps more valid, for ruling one way or the other.

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order related to that made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I note the suggestion made by the hon. member that if any divisions are necessary on the proposed amendments at the report stage they should be deferred. I realize this is a matter for the Chair to decide but I would certainly support the desirability of that discretion being exercised in favour of deferring votes until all of them can be taken at the same time. However, this is merely an expression of opinion.

My second point is rather more important. Bearing in mind the type of bill with which we are dealing and the desirability that the maximum number of members be present in the House when a decision is taken, I wonder whether at this stage we could secure some sort of understanding between the parties that we would consult, and that the timing of any divisions would be mutually agreeable. I say this because there will be absentees from time to time on this side and on the other side, and if there are surprise votes we might reach decisions which are not expressive of the views of the total membership of the House. This is a serious point.

The third point I should like to make is this. I certainly would not raise points of order myself against those who might in the course of debate on the amendments stray from the rule of relevancy—if they wanted to make general speeches on what are, really, specific motions to amend the bill. I wish to make that clear, realizing there are a number of members who wish to speak on this subject. It would be unfortunate if they were prevented from doing so by insistence on the rule of relevancy.

Mr. Baldwin: I am taken by the second suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council, that there should be some mutually agreed time at which we would be called upon to make our decision. We might well, in the course of the next two or three weeks, specify, for example, that each Tuesday is the appropriate time at which votes can take place.

Mr. Prud'homme: Agreed. Every Tuesday from now on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In this atmosphere of unanimity, may I support the suggestion put forward by the President of the Privy Council, namely that we seek to reach agreement among the House leaders as to when any votes on this issue will be taken. If there could be an understanding that there would be at least 24 hours, or preferably 48 hours, between the ending of debate and the taking of votes so that persons who might not be here can get here, it would be appreciated. At the moment I am joining with the hon. member for Peace River in the sensible part of what he said, supporting the idea that there should be agreement as to the timing of the votes.

An hon. Member: We would like to have Labour Day off.

Mr. Bell: I can see some difficulty about this, but providing we are only saying at the moment that we are trying to seek agreement, that is certainly all right.

[Translation]

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, I also agree with my colleagues of the other parties. When the House will vote on the bill, it will have to be truly representative of hon. members.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Certainly no one could object to some attempt being made to reach agreement. However, there are two points I should like to make at the risk of being extremely verbose today. First, the government must bear the main share of responsibility in the event that no such arrangement can be made or no such agreement reached with respect to the timing of votes in a matter of this kind. It is high time the government realized that, though it is a way out in certain circumstances to call for a free vote, it must also bear responsibility for what occurs when there is a free vote. They can take the coward's way out—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lawrence: —but it is not an open door. I say that when there is a free vote, the party whips are off. The caucus has no responsibility for me or for anybody else on our side in those circumstances, and the party whip has no responsibility for me either. I assume the same applies to members on the other side.

The government House leader now attempts to impose an unfair condition upon the whips of other parties. When he and his hon. friends call for a free vote they should realize the implications of what they are doing.

My second point is this. If the government House leader is really, in the depths of his soul, concerned about everyone having the opportunity to express his views in the House in accordance with his responsibilities to the electors who sent him here, I must deplore in the strongest terms the fact we are being held here way into July to discuss a measure such as this when, really, I for one can see no urgency attached to it. If the government feels there should be full debate of this issue, with everybody participating, this is one of many matters which could just as easily be put over until the fall session of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If I might refer to the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council, my understanding originally was that there was agreement that hon. members should seek agreement. Apparently there is disagreement now—disagreement as to whether there should be agreement to seek agreement. In view of the hon. member's comments I would think there is no question to put to the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Crop insurance!

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that both amendments have been stood and that it would probably be more appropriate for me in these circumstances to call for the rest of this period other items of business in the hope that one or two of them might be acceptable. If nothing I suggest is acceptable at this time I would propose calling it four o'clock and considering private members' business, if that is agreeable.

● (1510)

Mr. Baldwin: I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) calling for the crop insurance bill. We, of course, would prefer to deal now with family allowances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed. Let's make it unanimous.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that further proceedings relating to the report stage of Bill C-2 be adjourned?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it further agreed that we call it four o'clock and proceed with the consideration of private members' hour?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to call Item No. 7, the Fisheries Development Act. I understand there have been discussions among the parties and agreement has been reached that this item could be passed without debate. That would be helpful.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT ACT

AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENTS FOR CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT OF CERTAIN FACILITIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Fisheries Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I am only going from memory, but as I recall it the committee dealing with two of these bills agreed that the minister could by unanimous consent introduce an amendment to one of those. The committee agreed this should be done. As a matter of fact, this proposed amendment was dealt with in committee. I am not sure whether it is the wildlife bill or the fisheries development bill, but I think it is the fisheries development bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to carry the bill, and if there is a further amendment we can consider it at a later point. With unanimity, we could do this quickly.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the bill has already received third reading.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to call Item No. 14 respecting wildlife. I understand there is also agreement on that bill.

CANADA WILDLIFE BILL

PROVISION FOR RESEARCH AND CONSERVATION AGREEMENTS, CONTRIBUTIONS TO COSTS, AND PURCHASE, ACQUISITION OR LEASE OF LANDS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-131, respecting wildlife in Canada, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have already tested the House on Item No. 12, crop insurance. I understand there is some wish to discuss that further so I will not try that one. I wonder whether it would be possible to deal with Item No. 43, the Canada Pension Plan. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) has been talking to me about the necessity for dealing with that bill. I would be happy to call it now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would be happy to deal with the bill, but it cannot be passed without debate. There are a few things some of us would like to say.

Mr. MacEachen: Would the hon. member be prepared to say them now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Certainly.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

CONTRIBUTIONS OF MEMBERS OF CERTAIN RELIGIOUS SECTS, INTEREST RATE ON DELAYED PAYMENTS, PAYMENT OF LEGAL EXPENSES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-190, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, could we have an explanation from the minister sponsoring this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not present at the moment. We are sending for his parliamentary secretary. I am sure my understanding of the bill is quite imperfect, but the essence of the bill is to provide exemption from payments to the Canada Pension Plan for certain groups, particularly the Mennonite community and the Hutterites. That is the basic purpose of the bill.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some trepidation because we seem to have made a great deal of progress rather quickly. There was no notice that this bill would be called. I had wanted to take some time to speak on the matter, but I do not have all my material. Perhaps the House will bear with me under those circumstances.

It is too bad we do not have somebody from the executive to explain the bill in a little more detail than has been done by the government House leader. As I understand the bill, it is to exempt two main classes from contributions to the Canada Pension Plan, the Mennonite people and the members of the Hutterian Brethren.

This amendment is not really in the spirit of the governing legislation, the Canada Pension Plan, which is to provide universal coverage of social security for everyone in Canada. I wish to say at the outset I have never been a great fan of the Canada Pension Plan. It was passed by this chamber before I had the honour of being a member; therefore I did not have anything to do with its being placed on our statute books.

I have always distrusted and have been unhappy about the legislation since its passage. One might think that, because I dislike this legislation, I would not be taking this opportunity of suggesting that these classes of people should not be exempt. All I can say is that any piece of legislation that is of general application should be applicable to everybody. I might feel different if I could bring myself within some class which would be exempt, but for some reason or other there does not seem to be any likelihood of that.

In order to give an indication of my distaste for this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have not to this day made application for a social insurance number which seems to be one of the requirements of the Canada Pension Plan. Those two things were produced at the same time and the action of the government of that day was directly opposite to my very deep feeling about numbers being assigned to people and plans being imposed upon them without any direct consultation. Medicare is another similar program. We find now that many hon. members complain about shortages of doctors and medical services all over this country, and I believe it can be said that the medicare legislation has not been a great boon to large numbers of the Canadian population.

The same thing applies here; that is, it is a law of general application and no one is exempt from it. Even though it is imperfect and poor, everyone must support it. I suggest the Canada Pension Plan is not perfect by any means, but it probably is not as bad as the medicare legislation. I really do not see why those of us who do not support the Canada Pension Plan cannot be exempt from it if various other groups and organizations can be, as proposed by this legislation.

Apart from that, however, there are a great many other complications flowing from the Canada Pension Plan. The contributions from the government of Canada under that plan go into a fund and at least part of it becomes available to the provinces for provincial and municipal purposes at low rates of interest. As I understand the situation, various provinces draw from that fund in proportion to the amount of money they contribute to it. I believe it makes a great deal of difference to the provinces how much money they have contributed to the fund. I think that follows as night follows day.

In order to obtain the greatest possible benefit from the Canada Pension Plan fund a province must have made the maximum possible contribution to it. It is all very well for the Mennonite and Hutterite people to say they do not require social security and that the precepts of their religion and way of life allow them to look after their own and themselves in their old age. I have a great deal of respect for those tenets. Indeed, I believe it is very unfortunate that more people who live in this country do not follow the same principles they happen to teach and practice in their way of life.

The fact remains, however, that the Canada Pension Plan contributions are really a form of taxation. The proceeds from those payments go to the provincial and municipal governments to use for the good of all people living in the jurisdictions of those municipalities and provinces. If large groups of the Canadian population are to be exempt from contributing to the plan, that money will not be available to make up provinces' credit which can be drawn upon for works within their jurisdiction.

If it is necessary that these works be carried out, the money must be found somewhere else, either through direct taxation or by borrowing in different markets at higher interest rates, resulting in higher costs to the remaining population in a given jurisdiction, whether it be municipal or provincial. I think in proposing this legislation the government has not taken into account the result that would flow from it.

The Hutterian Brethren and the Mennonite people I believe have always suggested that they should pay their share of taxes. I know the Mennonites at least have always done that. I have been honoured to represent a number of them in my constituency. As a group they are among the finest people one could expect. They are very happy and productive people. They are not in any way a drain on society. They have certainly made no complaint about payment of taxes.

So far as the Hutterian Brethren are concerned, the same cannot be said. It is true that in their religion today they follow the maxim: Render unto Caesar that which belongs to Caesar. They have never made any complaint about paying their proper land or municipal taxes, although there has been some difficulty in respect of income taxes.

Within the last four or five years there was a dispute between the Department of National Revenue and various members of the Hutterite Brethren in Alberta with regard to their liability to pay income taxes. That has been resolved for the time being and these people are now paying taxes. The fact remains, however, that if the proposed amendment is carried, the Mennonites and Hutterian Brethren will not be contributing to the general welfare of Canada in the way I believe the majority of the people of Canada expect them to.

I think it is important to note for other members in this House that not every part of Canada is affected by this bill. Perhaps the reason I am somewhat concerned about this legislation is that a great number of Mennonites and an even greater concentration of Hutterites are located within the province of Alberta. I know there are settlements of Mennonites in Ontario and in all parts of western Canada, but there is a great concentration in Alberta. If these people are exempt from the making of contributions to the Canada Pension Plan, then the province of Alberta will be able to draw less money from the fund of the Canada Pension Plan for provincial or municipal purposes at a low rate of interest.

I really do not think there is real justification for allowing passage of this bill, though I know there will be at least one other speaker from this part of the House who will disagree with me. He nods his head in the affirmative. But the fact is this is a bill of general application. I do not think it is like many others in respect of which it would be possible to opt out on the basis of conscientious objection. There has been nothing from the other side, from the proponents of the bill, that would lead us to believe that.

Perhaps my hon. friend who will be speaking after me will be able to explain why the consciences of these people should be so offended with regard to paying for the support of a general social security plan. It certainly has not been explained to me why they should receive the benefits they are. If I might go back for a minute, while there have been income tax difficulties between the Hutterian Brethren and the Department of National Revenue—and so far the position of the Hutterian Brothers has not been accepted—I suggest there is still a feeling among many people in western Canada, at least in Alberta, that the Hutterian Brethren do not pay their fair share of income taxes as a result of the way they are treated by the Department of National Revenue.

I suggest that now is not the correct time to try to assist these people and to try to relieve them from what in fact is a form of taxation. I look forward with interest to hearing the remarks of my colleague from south western Ontario who, I believe, will be speaking next on this measure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to be mistaken for my deskmate, the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn), but I do not think he would be flattered. It is a great pleasure for me to be able to speak in the debate on this subject because it is a matter of great concern to me. As the hon. member who spoke before me indicated, my constituency has perhaps a greater proportion of people who will be affected by this bill than any other constituency in Canada. This is a matter that is personal to me because it affects my constituents and their right to freedom of religion as well as their rights as Canadians. This is something that has been promised to them for a long time and something which they deserve. It is a matter of giving them the justice for which they have been asking.

It is with a great deal of pride that I joined my party after passage of the Bill of Rights which was brought in by a former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). One of the provisions of the Bill of Rights was that there be enshrined for Canadians the right of freedom of religion. Surely nothing could be more important for any of us than the right to freedom of religion. This is why this bill is a good bill and deserves our support.

Let there be no equivocation about where we stand. Members of this party and all members of the House will stand up and be counted when it comes to standing up for the rights of Canadians to freedom and justice. This is what this bill is for. I am disappointed with the government because back in December 1971 the then minister of national revenue and the then minister of national health and welfare put out a joint news release which stated that in the next session of the House legislation would be brought in to exempt from the plan people such as the Old Order Mennonites, who for reasons of conscience are not allowed to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

However, this promise was not kept. The next session of the House came and went. Throughout this session, since my election, I have been trying to get some assurance from the government that the bill would be introduced and passed. They refused to do so before tax filing time came this year. Then because the government was bringing in new legislation they promised not to enforce the old legislation, but it made the position of the Old Order Mennonites and groups like them very tenuous. It was certainly a cause of great concern to each of them.

The reason there is concern on the part of the Old Order Mennonites with respect to the Canada Pension Plan is that their religion expressly forbids them from taking part in any insurance scheme whatsoever. They have no objection to participating through taxes in helping other groups. While their religion does not allow them to participate in welfare schemes in terms of taking benefits—they do not take benefits from the family assistance plan, old age pensions, or workmen's compensation—they do not object to contributing and pulling their fair share of the load when it comes to helping other members outside their community.

If the Canada Pension Plan were to have been financed out of the tax revenue, there would have been no objection on the part of the Mennonites in my constituency. The problem that existed here was the special provision whereby the Canada Pension Plan was designed as an insurance scheme and the contributions were kept separate from the general tax revenue. The Mennonites were required to make full contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and the government acted to restrict their religious freedom by going before the Ontario marketing board and seizing their grain cheques. That is a shocking affront to their rights as Canadians. Fortunately this bill will change that and the procedure will not be carried out another year.

The argument has been made that, because the provinces are able to borrow from tax revenues which come into the federal coffers for the Canada Pension Plan, they are able to finance other schemes in the provinces of which Mennonites and other groups like them are able to take advantage, and that therefore the Mennonites would not be pulling their share of the load. Such an argument is specious because it is clear that payments made by Mennonites and other such groups to the government for welfare and other benefits, in return for which they do not collect benefits, are much greater than any potential loss from this fund. If a person who pays into the scheme and takes money out is a good Canadian, at least the people who pay in so much more money than they take out of any scheme are much better Canadians than the rest of us.

The argument has been made that because the Canada Pension Plan was designed as a universal scheme, no group should be allowed to opt out. Of course, this does not make sense. I cannot accept that, on the basis of bureaucratic niceties, we should deny people the right to religious freedom, which is what we would be doing if we refused to make this amendment. If there is a need to increase the amount of the fund—and I believe there is—to be made available to provinces and municipalities for capital construction purposes, to build roads and so on, let us bring in legislation that will do that. Let us start decentralizing the funding of programs. But let us not try to achieve our aims by depriving people of their religious freedom; there is no excuse for that.

I am a member of my party because I believe in the ability of all people to live in freedom and dignity, unburdened by bureaucracy and not threatened by insensitive and intolerant people who would refuse each of us the right to be ourselves. I believe that is a fundamental right that each of us should share. I support this legislation because I know that if the freedom of religion of a small sect such as the Old Order Mennonites is threatened, it may not be too long before the freedom of religion of other members of the House, myself included, might be threatened. This is surely something which we cannot allow in a democracy.

I will sit down now to give the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) an opportunity to give his party's position on this, but let me make the plea to members of the House that there be no doubt about where members of the House stand when it comes to justice and equity and freedom of religion. Let us support this legislation.

● (1540)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was correct as far as he went in indicating the purpose of this bill. Indeed, its main purpose is to make the provision which has been debated, pro and con, by the last two speakers, namely, that members of certain clearly defined religious groups be exempted from payment into and benefits out of the Canada Pension Plan. I shall come back to that in a moment or two.

The bill does one other major thing, and it has several minor points in it as well. The minor points are technical details that are improved because of experience with the act. The other major point in the bill is that it makes provision for the legal expenses of a claimant to be paid under certain circumstances.

As the legislation now stands, if a contributor to the Canada Pension Plan applies for a pension and has his application refused, he can take his case to a review committee. If that review committee makes a ruling in his favour, it is still possible for the minister to appeal that ruling to the Pension Appeals Board. In that case the contributor is faced with additional legal expenses, and one of the major purposes of this bill is to provide that, in a case where the minister has appealed against a decision favourable to the claimant, the claimant's legal expenses will be paid. That is certainly a proper provision which I am sure everyone will support.

With regard to the first issue, the one that has been discussed by the last two speakers, may I say that this is another of those instances in life which occur from time to time when two valid principles happen to clash.

I think there is validity to the principle of universality, which says that in a society like ours we are all in it; we should all share in its responsibilities and in its benefits. There is also the principle of religious freedom, of respect for the clearly held views of individuals. It just happens in this case that these two principles clash. I am not happy about breaking the principle of universality because I think that any social insurance scheme works best when, as Churchill once said, we bring the magic of averages to the benefit of millions of individuals. However, I recognize the strong appeal that has been made by one or two clearly defined religious groups.

The language in the bill is very precise when it makes it clear that the right to be exempted from the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan will be extended only to a person who belongs to a religious sect that has established tenets and teachings that oppose the acceptance of benefits from any private and public insurance that provides for payments in the event of death, disability, old age or retirement, and which hold that that sect or group must practice and make provisions for the support of dependent members, provisions that are reasonable in view of their general level of living.

It is also provided that any such sect or group must have been in existence prior to January 1, 1966, which was the date on which the Canada Pension Plan came into being. In other words, this bill does not open the door wide to individuals who just do not want to pay a tax to claim some kind of religious scruple, and thus benefit by it. There has to be clear, bona fide evidence of a deeply held religious conviction practiced by people for a long time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, despite my tendency to put the greater weight with respect to social legislation on the principle of universality, I am not opposed to this bill being passed.

If my hon. friend from Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) were here he would probably want to get into this debate and say not only is he not opposed to the bill but that he is strongly in favour of it being passed. Because he, like the hon. member who has just spoken, has a number of groups of the kind clearly defined in the bill in his constituency.

So I think the government is to be commended for having wrestled long and hard with this issue, and for having come up with a reasonable proposal which I think, even though some of us may have some misgivings about it, we ought to accept. As I have already said, other parts of the bill are concerned with technical details that ought to be improved, and there is the provision for legal expenses in certain cases. All of this ought to be passed without question.

But, Sir, the main reason I wanted this bill not to be in the category of bills that get passed without debate on a Friday afternoon is that I wish to express my disappointment that the bill before us to amend the Canada Pension Plan does not have in it the major and important things, which the government of course tells us are yet to come. I know that the Canada Pension Plan can be amended twice, thrice or even oftener in the course of a session or the course of a year, but it is at the point when a statute is being opened that it is possible to get various matters corrected. Since we have been asked to accept this little bit of amendment to the Canada Pension Plan, I make a very strong plea that the rest of what the government has promised as amendments to the plan be brought forward in the current calendar year, 1973.

There are quite a few details of the Canada Pension Plan that some people would like to have improved, such as those dealing with problems that arise in the case of people who are between 65 and 70 years and able to earn a little bit from employment, and so on. But the two main things that need to be improved are the ceiling on the annual escalation and the level of the yearly maximum pensionable earnings.

The government is discussing these matters with the provinces. It has declared its eagerness to remove the 2 per cent ceiling on the annual escalation of pensions. It has declared its eagerness to raise the yearly maximum pensionable earnings. But I am a bit concerned when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) says that he hopes this will be in effect by January 1, 1974, but never made any clear commitment to that effect.

I realize that he has to reach agreement with the provinces and all that, but it seems to me that if the provinces agree on either one of these points, then it should be brought before us. There will be a great deal of disappointment, and justifiably so, if when January, 1974 comes around pensions are still escalated by only 2 per cent, when the cost of living is rising by 5 per cent, 6 per cent or 7 per cent per year.

I express to you, Mr. Speaker, my appreciation that you have sat quietly in your Chair. You have not called me to order for talking about something that is not in the bill. Maybe I am putting that idea in your head right now, but I will not abuse your kindness any further. I make the very strong plea that, since the House has co-operated with the government in putting through this little bill amending the Canada Pension Plan, the other major amendment, the one that removes the ceiling from the 2 per cent escalation and increases the YMPE, be brought before us this year, and definitely in time so that, like the family allowances measure, it can come into effect on January 1, 1974.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about the Conservative party is that there is room for diversified opinion. Indeed, this is nothing to be ashamed of. Rather, it is something to be proud of that in our party we see things from many different points of view. Let me say this, however, especially to my good friend the government House leader, that if the Conservatives were running the government we would hopefully program legislation in a more systematic manner. We would not be attempting on a Friday afternoon to bring in a bill that I and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) were assured by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would have 24 hours' notice. I do want to express my protest especially on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, who had prepared a speech to be given on second reading in view of the importance of this bill to himself and to many others.

I think that it is an important bill. I understand it will go into committee of the whole where the hon. member for Provencher will then give us his thoughts. I do protest again the change which brought it in so quickly this afternoon without sufficient notice. It is an important bill despite the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who sees it as an ancillary part of the Canada Pension Plan. Indeed, it is not central to the working of the plan, and I would not want to see it lightly handled by the House.

I believe members of the House should support the amendment that has been introduced in Bill C-190 which will provide for exemption of certain groups on the basis of their religious belief from participation in the plan.

Members of communal religious groups, such as Old Order Amish and Mennonites, have refused to participate in the Canada Pension Plan because of their religion, which opposes insurance schemes of any kind. They believe that their own religious community, not the government's or any outside insurance plan, should carry the responsibility for the welfare and support of its members.

Religious principles forbid them from making voluntary contributions to a state pension plan. But they co-operate—and this is relevant to the dilemma we are facing today—with the National Revenue Department when it executes garnishees on milk cheques and other income which comes to these people. The government officials intercept their cheques until the $180 annual payment required by law is made. The garnishees are for non-payment of Canada Pension Plan assessments.

Although they have been forced to pay into the plan, members of the sect have not been credited with money in the fund because they have no social insurance numbers. Thus, on May 15 and 16, 1971, the Canada Pension Plan advisory committee recommended to the then minister of national health and welfare the following motion:

> The minister give sympathetic consideration to an amendment to the Canada Pension Plan whereby coverage and consequential provisions would not extend to members of religious denominations which satisfied the minister that such participation is contrary to the religious principles of the denomination.

That motion was carried, and I say to you and the House, Mr. Speaker, that I support the principle behind it. I therefore support the bill which is built on that motion. It is now more than two years since the motion was passed, and it has taken the government that long to act. I am critical of a government that would take so long to deal with the motion, on the one hand, and then because they are in a jumble as to what to bring before the House quickly by way of legislation, just dump this bill in. I say that is not the way to run the government. It is no way to treat an important principle and it is no way to treat members of this House.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal involved in this legislation and yet, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has stated, there is too little involved. If we are to amend this act, then it seems to me it should not be for a certain group of people for whom a special arrangement is to be made, but rather for Canadian citizens as a whole to whom certain opportunities are denied by the terms of the legislation.

As a result of a trip to my home for the weekend not long since, I had the misfortune of having to go to the funeral of a young man who had been married for some ten or 12 months. He had been employed in a position where he made contributions to the Canada Pension Plan for less than a year. Since he had contributed only for that short period of time, his widow is not eligible for a pension under the Canada Pension Plan. There are several widows in my constituency who unfortunately have had a comparable experience, one of whom finds herself the mother of three children and with no eligibility under the plan.

I do not believe this was the intention of Parliament when it passed the Canada Pension Plan with certain limitations as to payment. I do not believe that it is the intention of this House that limitations should be imposed upon citizens who make contributions of any kind to the plan. It is not in line with any ordinary, publicly owned pension scheme in which an individual takes out insurance, pays his premiums, and then in some cases is eligible forthwith. Or, in the case of an early, unexpected demise, the benefits are payable because he has paid the premium.

This is an important principle in relation to this act. It is not comprehensive; it does not close gaps which need to be closed for good social reasons. I am rather surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would accede as quietly as he did to such a mild amendment to this act when such consideration is in fact required. The mere inclusion of legal expenses for those who have to go through the courts of this land to obtain their just rights is not adequate. The mere review of an application by a review committee, and the appeal procedures, are not enough either. These are items which, with corrected administrative procedures, probably would not be necessary in the first place; these are items which probably could be considered under the act as it is, exercising wisdom in its administration.

I want to point out one further thing in respect of this act. Do you want to declare it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker? I will not be through before four o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Before we start the important business relating to private members' hour, in view of the changes we have had I wonder if the government House leader would indicate the business of the House for Monday. I think I have an idea but it might be of some importance to have it on record.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we propose to resume discussion of the report stage of the Criminal Code bill.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in when we can plan on the Olympics bill from the standpoint of our members, particularly when its approval was given such importance last week and we did co-operate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I had planned to call the Olympics bill today, but because members who wanted to participate were not here I put it off. I will certainly call it at some point next week, but later in the week rather than earlier.

Mr. Bell: It still has the same priority?

Mr. MacEachen: Absolutely.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

ENTITLEMENT TO PARDON FOR FIRST OFFENDERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North) moved that Bill C-27, to amend the Criminal Records Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill has to do with young offenders who have been convicted once of an offence such as smoking marijuana or driving while impaired, who have gone on to lead useful lives and whose progress has been impeded by having a criminal record. I am sure most of us know of cases like that. Many of us might have been in trouble if we had been caught at a moment of indiscretion by the wrong person, so to speak. There have been growing problems associated with drugs, and also with the lowering of the drinking age, as younger people can now obtain liquor legally.

I became interested in this matter in 1960 when I was confronted with the case of a successful businessman in one of our large cities. The man then was in his late forties. He was married and had a family of three. Many years ago he had risen from a poor background and now was a respected man in his community, a member of the church board and of several clubs requiring good citizenship status and standards before admittance. However, in his younger days this man stole two radios and was convicted of a criminal offence. Thirty years later, his business growing, he wanted to enter the American market and, in the process, found his record uncovered by the RCMP. You can imagine how upset was this man who had forgotten about his youthful folly and become a respected man in his community.

This case was brought to my attention. Here was a man who, when young, had overcome great difficulties, greater than many face, inasmuch as he had risen from unfavourable circumstances. However, by good fortune, by meeting the right kind of friends, marrying the right girl, keeping company with the right associates, being a member of the church and associating with the people in the club, he had taken the right path. Fortune smiled on him. Unfortunately, he ran afoul of pharisaic legislation; there is no forgiveness in it. Every Christian principle I have been taught creates within me a revulsion against this attitude on the part of the state.

I could tell hon. members of other cases. One that came to my attention involved an 18-year old grade 13 student who, not too many miles from here, was caught smoking a marijuana cigarette. That was all. He had bought a reefer from another high school student and tried to smoke it. That was his first attempt at such smoking. He was caught, brought before the court and convicted of an offence. His father was a disabled veteran and his mother was working. The boy was a good student but he now has a record. That boy finished grade 13 with a good standing and went on to apply for a position, only to find that, because of his record, the position was refused.

Let me tell hon. members of another case. As you know, in Ontario the drinking age has been lowered. As well, alcohol causes probably the most serious problems with which we must deal. The previous minister of national health and welfare said that alcohol causes more problems than any other drug. After the new law came into effect in Ontario a young lad whose case was brought to my attention went out with other boys and one teacher; they were listening to a hockey game and, as usual, hoisting some beers. I do not know whether they drank Molson's. At any rate, when it came time to go home this boy, because he had not drunk too much, offered to drive. On the way home he was accosted by the police. The other fellows were in the car with him. He was not charged from the standpoint of having been involved in an accident; he was stopped because he might have been driving closer to the centre of the road than he should have been. He was asked to take the breathalyzer test and his breath sample registered slightly over the allowed limit.

That fellow wanted to take law, but did not. Instead, he applied to the police for a job. He wanted to do police work, as he thought it would be useful when he practised law in the future, since he intended to do work in that area. What do you think he was told? The police authorities said, "No, you have a record," and he was rejected.

How many of us realize how serious are the consequences of breaches of the law? This lad had not committed an offence. He had been driving closer to the centre of the road than he ought. Such incidents occur time and again. In that case these was no accident. I learned that the police had been lying in wait for someone whom they suspected, with little or no foundation, of having thrown a stone through the windshield of a parked police cruiser. This young lad was stopped because he was driving closer to the centre of the road than he ought, and he was taken to court and fined.

I am mentioning that case to illustrate my point. There are many more such cases that could be mentioned. We ought to act from some sense of justice. For instance, how many in this chamber might have been in trouble but for the actions of some compassionate policeman? He came along at the right time, instead of the chap who had a grievance, who was out of humour, who had a grudge, or who had had a fight with his wife. I believe that so often it is little things like that which count in marginal cases.

Of course, the policeman must exercise discretion. Many kids who might have been charged and saddled with a record have escaped that fate and become businessmen because a policeman came along and, on catching them doing something wrong, kicked them in the pants and said, "If you do that again you will be in real trouble."

Let me recount my own experience. Many years ago I was in a hurry to get to the hospital. This was in the days before power steering on cars and all the other fancy gadgets we now have. I was turning the corner more quickly than I should because the wheel was very stiff, hurrying to be on time for an operation, when a police cruiser came up on the inside. I well remember the look the policeman gave me. It was a hopeless look, the kind that you do not forget. He did not say anything to me, but I have never forgotten that look to this very day. That old police chief is still living. He is 90 years old. His look said more than a thousand words. He did not pull me into court; I would have resented it if he had.

I believe that the quality of mercy will not be strained if this bill passes. It should be said of all of us that he who is without sin should cast the first stone. I hope my fellow members of parliament will allow this bill to go to committee for further consideration.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance and of the extremely serious consequences of a criminal record when an accused has been found not guilty and was not sentenced or when it was only an offence punishable on summary conviction, it devolves that this person should have the right, automatically, to a pardon without having to make application for a pardon to the Parole Board, as proposed in the first supplement to clause 1 of Bill C-27 now under study.

For an individual to have to drag behind him a criminal record is the same, unquestionably, as having a second conviction for the same crime, because, in addition to having been punished the first time for the offence, he is punished a second time by carrying, as a ball and chain, a criminal record which impairs his possibilities of finding employment and which, often, prevents him from playing an active role in society.

As an example, I have now in mind the case of a well-known citizen, president of two social clubs, who must go on business trips to the United States but is unable to do so because of his criminal record resulting from being found in possession of American cigarettes two years ago. His request for pardon is under study, but let us hope that in the meantime the surrounding society will not find out about his troubles with the law, because his reputation would certainly be shot and he would not deserve this as he has since been acting as an exemplary citizen.

From these various facts, you can well imagine now in what untenable position an individual would be placed if he wanted to go into politics. It would then be absolutely impossible for him. Society has lost and will lose powerful assets simply because the Criminal Records Act is not flexible enough. With this bill we hope to remedy this unthinkable situation for an evolved society which speaks about rehabilitation and the rights of man.

Furthermore, the period of two years required after the crime before granting automatic pardon seem a reasonable delay to me, because during this period justice has time to assess the progress and goodwill of the person found guilty if, obviously, this person is not found guilty of a new infraction during that time.

Before the end of this two year period, or in certain cases which are not included in clause 2, it seems logical to us that this case be referred to the minister for special consideration.

But to be fully in agreement with the bill, we would need the assurance that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) had at his disposal an adequate tool which would allow him to ascertain the good conduct of the accused during this period of two years. This remains a problem if we take into account the fact that 100,000 judgments concerning minor charges are rendered each year and that it would, obviously, not be very wise to grant 100,000 pardons automatically, without really ascertaining the good behaviour of these citizens.

Thus, even if the bill seems necessary to us in principle, it would also be necessary to decide at the same time on the enforcement mechanisms of this act, which would not happen if the bill was passed immediately. I suggest that the motion of the sponsor of this bill be referred to committee for further study, because I believe its interest is obvious.

I know we will have many amendments to move. The Solicitor General and his department are preparing amendments—if not for this session, it will be for the next one—precisely in order that this bill be enacted as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps hon. members would allow the Chair to interrupt the proceedings for just a few moments in relation to a motion which was adopted unanimously by the House yesterday, a motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). This motion instructed that the Speaker be required to call an immediate meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group to discuss the matters referred to in the motion.

I think I should advise hon. members that I have been in touch with our colleagues in the United States and that a meeting has been arranged to take place at 12.30 in the afternoon of Tuesday. I believe there are discussions going on between representatives of the parties, and between the House and the Senate, to determine the exact numbers of representatives from both Houses who will be going to Washington, and also the representation of the different political groups in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have listened this afternoon to several debates. When we turn from one piece of legislation to another, I am impressed by the moral changes which can take place in people and the great respect they have for religion and for other people's views. I was impressed by the fact that even some of those far out religious views were being represented. I have also been interested by the great desire not to engage in a debate on capital punishment shown by some members who believe in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, particularly by the mover of this motion who I believe is on that side.

The bill he has introduced this afternoon, however, is broad, acceptable, moderate and progressive. Most people would agree that it meets one of society's major problems, not in terms of the Bible or of any religious group but in the light of the fact that conditions have changed and our laws must change. I believe that particularly in relation to summary conviction, after a two-year period there should be a mandatory withdrawal of the record of the person convicted.

The hon. member who introduced this bill called attention to the fact that in making an inquiry the authorities really are re-opening the case. His last example was a very good one. The offence happened many years before and had been pretty near forgotten. Most people did not know about it, yet the police and the RCMP visited not only the six people used as a credit rating or reference but they interviewed the neighbours, they interviewed workers at the job, and they asked about him at the grocery store. If nobody knew the man had a criminal record before, they all knew when the inquiry was finished.

As long as we have the present Parole Board and the present chairman, this legislation will serve no purpose. I know of a young person who made an application one and a half years ago and he has not even had the courtesy of a reply. Everyone has been interviewed, including the professors at the college he attended, most of the businessmen in his town, his employer and two of his neighbours. They have stirred up as much trouble as they can without re-convicting him, but he still does not have his pardon.

I agree that if someone applies for a pardon of a summary conviction, there has to be some investigation; but surely it can be discreet. Interviews should only be conducted with those who can shed some light on the matter. Everyone in town should not be asked what they know about John Blow, whether he is a traffic hazard, would rob a bank and so on. Discretion should be used in making inquiries. These investigations should be carried out by qualified people, not a new officer on the police force. A person should be able to have a pardon considered in a logical way and granted without undue delay.

The only reason this section is not working is because the Parole Board is not capable of handling this. The committee should give serious consideration to having this handled in some other way than by the Parole Board. The Parole Board is not able to handle paroles in the penitentiary system. There are 25 or 30 per cent more people in our pentitentiaries because the Parole Board has broken down. It no longer visits the penitentiaries but operates as an administrative body, making all its decisions in the office.

This bill not only covers summary convictions but indictable offence convictions where people have been involved in much more serious crimes. This bill states a person must be on good behaviour before asking that their sentence reports be eliminated. More care has to be taken in these cases. I am sure there will have to be further investigations in cases of conviction for an indictable offence. It is wise to know the background of other offences which may have been committed prior or subsequent to the sentence. However, discretion should be used. These matters should be speeded up.

In addition to considering the parole structure, which is a disgrace to this nation, the committee should consider another matter. What happens to the records when a pardon is granted? They should not be available to the police. When a parole is granted, the records should be sealed and only opened if the person commits another offence and the court orders that the records be re-examined.

In many cases records are now available to the police which were not available before. If a person convicted of a number of offences is convicted of a summary offence, these are not necessarily involved in the trial. Even though a parole is granted and the record is in effect no longer in existence, it is reinstated by police investigation. They accumulate considerable evidence which is to the detriment of a person applying for a pardon.

This House has passed other bills which have also been open to abuses. I remember three or four occasions where we granted amnesty to immigrants. Chinese immigrants are a good example. The minister, the immigration people and members of parliament lied to those people because we did not grant them amnesty. We asked them to come out in the open so that we could take a look at their case. It was not until the late Mr. Favreau was immigration minister that true amnesty was granted. Mr. Favreau said to these people that even if they had come here illegally, had been smuggled in or came here in some other way, if they came forward and made a declaration they would be granted true and reasonable amnesty. When that happened, everyone, including members of parliament, felt much better about the amnesty that had been granted than they did about the pseudo-amnesty which had been granted previously.

There is a lesson to be learned from the parole being granted under the present legislation and the bill introduced by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). If we are going to grant parole, it should be done automatically for summary convictions, without all the hullabaloo we now have.

I am sure every member has a number of young people getting in touch with him who would like as little fuss made as possible about their indiscretion. The police only have the responsibility of ascertaining whether the person is now living a reasonably good life and whether justice will be done by making a favourable report. I disagree violently with interviewing teachers, schoolmates, employers and business people in the community and all the other things that take place. The Parole Board will not pay much attention anyway.

In terms of the second section, obviously closer attention must be paid to the question of indictable offence convictions. But again, surely the committee should consider handling this matter as nicely as possible with a little as possible disruption in the community in respect of persons who apply. If this is not done most people will be very reluctant to make application. Again I hope the committee will go one step further than the member has recommended and will substitute some method of adjudication for that of the parole board.

The parole board under its present leadership is a total failure. At the present time 25 per cent people than should be are in jail because of the failures of the parole board. I suggest that if we add the provisions in this bill to the work of the parole board, we will be adding insult to injury. Therefore, I sincerely hope that a special branch will be set up in the parole board to handle this particular field. Many of the convictions in provincial courts, because of the length of the sentences involved, find their way to the offices of federal members of parliament. Therefore I hope that this special committee might give some consideration to the part members of parliament can play in this matter.

It seems to me this might involve a totally new field and one which has not been previously handled by the parole board. This bill lends itself very much to the support of this House the development of an agency to handle parole in a much more expeditious manner than is now possible.

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, since the bill under consideration has been introduced by a member and not by the government and that if in 25 minutes the question has not been put, it will be put off indefinitely, I will only make some brief comments so that the House may vote.

I entirely agree with my colleague from Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) on the contents of the bill. Indeed, it is abnormal in our modern society to make someone bear during his entire lifetime the burden of a minor offence which in many cases has no effect on the remainder of his life but which as a result of the frequent application and interpretation of the legislation, would contribute to have him make a bad start.

A criminal record often involves a vicious circle. If a person has a criminal record and loses his job, he will become discouraged, which will lead him to despair and often he will see only one solution—relapse into crime, which he would not do if he did not have a criminal record.

As it happened, I found out about a case last week. While an individual was working on a construction job, a policeman did the "good" deed of warning the boss that this man had a criminal record. He lost his job and was saying: Listen, I want to live right, I want to assume my responsibilities as a citizen, and the first time I find a job, what with all this unemployment, I am fired because I was guilty of committing a small crime in my life.

Consequently, I suggest that a period of two years' of probation be granted to an ex-prisoner, which would be wiser because after all, we must have time to find out if the person who committed a crime really intends to change his behaviour. At the end of two years, a person without reproach and who, as cited by the member for Simcoe North, was, for instance, found guilty of smoking a marijuana cigarette after two years, if he has not relapsed into crime, should not bear all his life the stigma of a criminal record, as if he were a criminal, a paid killer. In practice, very often there is not much difference.

Furthermore, we find that often highly spirited young people are involved who, in fact, become later most remarkable men. It is quite rare to see a young person unable to come out of his shell become later a prestigious man. Often, the spirited young, precisely because of this spirit, are led to go over the limit, but they should not, just for that, have to carry to the end of their days the stigma of their mischievousness.

I close my remarks in wishing that this bill be referred to the committee and amended, if need be, to allow the young of 1973 to be dealt with fairly, for if we consider present procedures, although society needs to protect itself, the fact remains that it must also be just.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak for a few moments in this debate. I intend to make a very few remarks because I hope it is the intention of the House to allow this bill to go to the committee.

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), my colleague, who for years has championed this cause. I first heard of it in his name before I came to this House. I do not think any of us in this House have not at some time or other said what most lawyers say when they appear in court with a young person—"There but for the grace of God go I". Because of the compassion of a policeman or school teacher or because of compassion on the part of some good person in a community, it is often recognized that a young person may not have had the judgment of an older person and that his act or offence at that stage under the Juvenile Delinquents Act should not mean that this indiscretion would be placed on the record in his name.

In the course of the experience I have had as a member of the bar of Ontario, I have stood in courtrooms and prosecuted young people and older people for offences. I also had occasion to be an assistant crown attorney in this province. But more often I have had the privilege of defending people charged with offences. I have often looked at young people and wondered why they were in court. I have found in many cases, particularly juvenile cases, that it is thought smart to smoke a reefer, just as it was smart to smoke a cigarette in earlier days. It is also thought smart in certain cases to take a drink. These people who are acting smart are trying to be leaders and to stand out in their own particular way. Although they get into trouble they really are not bad. Perhaps they are misguided.

This bill would ensure that those people, particularly young people who are first offenders, do not have to carry the burden of that record for a period of time, and this is a worthy provision. There have been advances in the whole system of penology in Canada and in the world, and I think this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe North is a further advance to which this House should give every consideration.

One of the things that concerns me about the present situation is the fact that section 7 puts a person who has been granted a pardon under the law under the continual cloud of having that pardon taken away. It provides that if there is evidence establishing to the satisfaction of the governor in council that the person to whom the pardon was granted is no longer of good conduct, or is guilty of some other particular misdemeanour, then the pardon that society has seen fit to grant to that person may be taken away.

This bill does away with a bad philosophy. Surely if people are appointed by government to decide on a matter of pardon and that pardon is granted, then the right should not be revoked by law and the pardon removed. I think that the fact that this bill moves against such a provision is excellent and it should be considered seriously. We should all be looking, as the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has done, at our legal system and system of penology to see whether it can be improved, having regard for the interest and protection of society.

I believe that this bill, which has been advanced for a long time by the hon. member for Simcoe North, is one that will achieve this purpose. In the course of our investigation of it we should look at a few other statutes, such as the Juvenile Delinquents Act. This is a very important statute. We should ensure that those persons who because they are young, are deserving of a second chance should be treated in such a way as to show them that they are entering into adulthood and should look forward to adulthood in a reasonably responsive and concerned society.

I believe that the bill put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe North is a stepping stone in reaching that concern in our society, and we should support it. I urge the House to let this bill go to committee. Because I feel very strongly on this subject I intend to sit down in the hope that someone will call it five o'clock.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I too am greatly impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) and of all other speakers. I think everyone has a great deal of sympathy and compassion for those who are caught up in the coils of the law, sometimes because of thoughtlessness, ignorance or exuberance, and who can never wipe their record clean. That is the main point which I am sure most concerned the sponsor of the bill, although many other things were mentioned relating to parole in general.

I do not support completely the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who expressed a strong and acerbic condemnation of the chairman of the Parole Board and of the Parole Board itself. I think they are doing an excellent job with our laws in view of the problems of modern population. People have a tendency to disregard laws more than they ever did, and they have a tendency to be more violent in their reactions. I think that the work of the Parole Board is most onerous.

The background of the bill before us goes back a long way. I could tell you a great deal about what social workers have been concerned about and what they have been urging. I would like to quote a typical newspaper clipping which appeared in July of last year and which reads:

> Under new amendments to the Criminal Code, three teenagers who pleaded guilty to minor drug charges in a Toronto court yesterday were given conditional discharges, which means they will have no court records providing they fulfill the conditions of their probation.

In other words, we are working toward the goal which the hon. member for Simcoe North has suggested.

Also, we had a social worker before a committee of the house, Mr. Kirkpatrick, who said that the present act does not go far enough in clearing a person's criminal record when pardon is granted. He was referring to people in general, not just to young people. A person who has been pardoned should be considered never to have been convicted of a crime, he said. We should listen to these social workers because they are closer to offenders than most of us are.

A rather interesting comment was made in the May 17, 1972 issue of the Globe and Mail about the situation in British Columbia. It refers to a Vancouver prosecutor—it is different from what we have in the east; they have a city prosecutor who looks after young people who have committed misdemeanours—who said:

> One thing I hate to see is young people getting involved in something that will have a serious effect on their lives for years.
> Lots of these young people don't know what they are getting into and a criminal record could mark them for years. It could keep them from going to the States for a job or for postgraduate studies, from getting bonded or from a job, period.

What he did was to get them before him and scare the living hell out of them, and 80 per cent of them never came back.

I think that is probably the way in which we should approach this matter. A few years ago, when I was about 13, I committed a misdemeanour on Hallowe'en and I had to appear before a magistrate. However, that is not on my record. Of course, he gave us a stern admonition, and not in court but in his own living room. I never did let my father, who was the local parson, know. I do not know how I kept it from him, but I have never done any wrong since.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you sure he did not know?

Mr. Railton: That was the best thing that could have happened to me. When it comes to other ages, however, the problem is much broader: what should we do with people who are pardoned and paroled, how long should their sentences be, what type of investigation should be carried out? All these matters are complex, and they should be so because of the very fact that all human beings are different and their reactions, both to the environment and to each other, are different in every case. So naturally the law does not fit people individually.

This is why we need such understanding people as were mentioned by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to look after the paroling of offenders, to make sure that this is done quietly, as the hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned, and that the knowledge of this indiscretion is not spread around.

● (1650)

There are many other issues, as I have mentioned. For example, at what age should a child who commits an offence, be tried in court? Should all children be tried in juvenile court? Under the Scandinavian system a child must be over 14 years before he is brought to court for any offence. Those younger than that are looked after by the equivalent of the Children's Aid Society.

The treatment of young people is very important. I have a son who is a law student. He has been lucky enough to get a job in British Columbia again this summer with another law student from there. They take out about 20 young people from a correctional institution, rather bad delinquents, and go mountain climbing and sailing with them. By the way I don't think that's a very bad summer job. He reports that these young people are fine as long as they are kept busy, as long as they are given a little bit of praise and companionship. They have put them on the buddy system. I would like to see more of this in our institutions instead of just seeing to it that young people have enough to eat.

We have made many attempts to change the Criminal Code and the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The latter is a very old act. It was first brought in when I graduated from university, and that wasn't yesterday. Attempts were made as recently as 1971 to amend it, but the bills died in the House. These were small amendments along the lines of today's bill.

I am interested in supporting this bill and in referring it to a committee, but I realize there is no standing committee at the present time to which it could be referred. I also realize that it is the intention of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to bring in a comprehensive amending bill in the fall. We should strongly support the present bill, and I urge that it be considered as one of the clauses of the more comprehensive bill that will be dealing with the penal code in a general way, and with the Juvenile Delinquents Act in particular. I strongly support the bill in principle but I think the matter would be better handled through comprehensive legislation in the fall.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) on presenting this bill. I am sure it reflects the sentiments of most members of the House, particularly since it is aimed at young offenders.

When people become adults they are considered more responsible for what they do. Younger people, often due to immaturity, or just for kicks, sometimes will do things they should not do, and we should not consider them completely responsible for doing them. Sometimes conditions of society are a factor in young people doing certain things, but their record should not remain against them all their lives to impede their progress in society.

The hon. member for Simcoe North is a member of the medical profession. He knows there are different ways to treat a patient. You can treat the cause or the symptoms. Sometimes you have to treat the symptoms when you don't know the cause. This is rather like what his bill proposes, to treat some of the symptoms of our society. But even better than treating the symptoms is getting to the cause through the use of preventive medicine. It is better to get an injection of Salk vaccine than later having to cope with the disease when it takes hold.

Similarly in the case of young people, society must get to the crux of the original cause of misdemeanors. Young people will make mistakes, but those mistakes should not be held against them for the rest of their lives. While we are getting more and more permissive in modern society we are becoming less and less responsible for the actions of young people. In modern society discipline at home is disappearing. That trend has to be reversed because it is changing the whole structure of society.

Governments cannot help by legislating against such root causes, but they can help by fostering an attitude that does not cater to permissiveness. If in certain government departments we have people who want to side with revolutionary ideas, with marginal opinions, in opposition to the opinions of the silent majority, then we contribute to this permissive society. We have seen that kind of thing in some of the programs that came from the Department of the Secretary of State in years gone by. It is such situations that the government can help.

I certainly agree that the government has to take some kind of action as suggested by the hon. member for Simcoe North, but as pointed out by the previous speaker it is the intention of the government to do just that in a comprehensive bill. For this reason I would not want the hon. member to think I would talk out a bill of his to prevent it coming to a vote. I simply point out that there will be an all-encompassing bill this fall, and it will be voted on by the House.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT

On the order:

July 19, 1973—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane) (Chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts):

That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, presented to the House on Monday, July 16, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane has given notice of his intention to move concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I have to advise the hon. member and the House that the Chair has had a cursory look at the report and there are some procedural difficulties in relation to the form of the report.

As hon. members know, the Chair has pointed out to the House from time to time the importance of following the time honoured form in which committees make recommendations to the House and that the government give consideration to the taking of certain action. This form was not followed in respect of this report and I have some doubt that the House would want the Chair to accept a report presented in this form. I am not making a firm ruling in this regard but I am asking the House to give the Chair an opportunity to look at the matter a little more closely and perhaps discuss it with the chairman of the committee.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION FRANCE ABANDON FURTHER NUCLEAR TESTS IN ATMOSPHERE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, without debate, but expressing the deep concern which I am sure is felt on all parts of the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House of Commons strongly deplores the action of the government of France in exploding a nuclear bomb in the South Pacific, and urges, in the name of humanity, that any further tests in the atmosphere be cancelled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The motion of the hon. member is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: My impression is that there is not any "no". If there is, I think that should be made clear. On the assumption that there is agreement, with the approval of members I will put the motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 which reads as follows:

That this House of Commons strongly deplores the action of the government of France in exploding a nuclear bomb in the South Pacific, and urges, in the name of humanity, that any further tests in the atmosphere be cancelled.

Motion agreed to.

MANPOWER

MEASURE TO PROVIDE SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion whose urgency is more serious than ever. In view of the lack of jobs offered to students and graduates in June 1973, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That before this House adjourns for the summer, it take steps to spur our national economy so as to enable June 1973 graduates and other students to find jobs and thus earn a living, while at the same time making their contribution to the development and prosperity of our country, which must be our objective if we are to ensure economic prosperity and peace in our society.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion put by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot therefore be put.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT

AMENDMENT RELATING TO FARM TRACTORS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-215, to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act (farm tractors).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, in very simple terms, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act to provide that the Governor in Council may make regulations requiring farm tractors to be equipped with safety roll bars or safety cabs, and seat belts and thus avoid the tragic consequences which have too often occurred when a tractor has overturned. About 25 farmers a year lose their lives in Canada through this kind of accident.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXPAND CLASSES OF ENTITLEMENT

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

July 19, 1973—Mr. Stackhouse—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Family Allowances Act".

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the bill of the hon. member for Scarborough East the Chair has to bring to the attention of the hon. member that there are procedural difficulties relating to the amendments proposed by the hon. member to the Family Allowances Act. My understanding of the hon. member's bill, which I have looked at earlier today, is that he wishes to expand the classes of individuals who could be beneficiaries of payments under the Family Allowances Act. I am sure that if such a bill were introduced by the government, a recommendation would be required, and I have difficulty in seeing how the hon. member can make this kind of amendment to an act without a recommendation. However, I am only pointing that out to the hon. member now so that he might reflect on the difficulty which faces the Chair in the hope that perhaps in the next few days he might have an opportunity to enlighten the Chair on how he thinks that this difficulty can be overcome.

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE A MARITIME CODE FOR CANADA

Hon. Warren Allmand (for the Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-216, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Text]

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—OVERTIME PAY

Question No. 927—Mr. Knight:

1. What were the names of full-time employees in each federal department, departmental corporation, agency corporation and proprietary corporation, who, in the calendar year 1972, received over-time pay in excess of $1,000?

2. What were the amounts of over-time pay in each case and what were the salary ranges of each of those employees?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available because it involves the searching of approximately 423,746 accounts covering employees of departments, departmental corporations, agency corporations and proprietary corporations and a very large number of these individual files would have to be looked at. To attempt to answer this question would involve a very large amount of work which costs in manpower and time would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—TRAVEL EXPENSES

Question No. 928—Mr. Knight:

1. What were the names of full-time employees in each federal department, departmental corporation, agency corporation and proprietary corporation who, in the fiscal year 1971-72, submitted travel expenses in excess of $1,000?

2. What were the amounts of travel expenses and what were the salary ranges of these employees?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of all departments, departmental corporations, agency corporations and proprietary corporations, which costs in manpower and time would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE—COST OF REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1971

Question No. 936—Mr. Andre:

1. What was the cost of production, printing and distribution of the Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971, for the Department of the Secretary of State?

2. How many copies of the Report were distributed?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. $4,346.59.

2. 1,700.

AIR CANADA—EARLY RETIREMENTS

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many employees have been separated from Air Canada service before attaining the normal retirement age of 65 (account reorganization, on early retirement pension, with separation allowances, ets.) since January 1, 1970?

2. (a) What has been the Company policy in terms of a separation allowance for those retired early (b) has the policy been consistently applies to all employees?

3. (a) Have there been special arrangements made in certain cases (b) are there still some employees on leave of absence with pay who were retired early in 1970 and 1971?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1. Approximately 130.

2. (a) When mutually agreeable to both the employee and the Corporation, a separation allowance is offered based on age, length of service and management level. (b) Yes.

3. (a) No; (b) Information concerning specific employees must be regarded as an internal management matter.

AIR CANADA—PASSENGER TRAVEL RATES

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Haliburton:

What are the passenger travel rates that Air Canada is charging on a mileage basis (a) within the Province of Nova Scotia (b) within the Maritime Region (c) between points in the Maritime Region and points in the Central Region (d) between points within the Province of Ontario (e) between points in the Central Region and points in the Western Region (f) between points within the Western Region (g) between Toronto and Montreal?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Air Canada management advises: The current domestic fares structure for normal or regular fares is based on the following formula: Routes of 1,100 Miles or Less; $12 plus 5.8 cents per mile; Routes of Over 1,100 Miles; $13.50 plus 6.0 cents per mile for the first 500 miles; $13.50 plus 5.5 cents per mile for the next 500 miles; $13.50 plus 5.0 cents per mile for the next 500 miles; $13.50 plus 4.5 cents per mile for the remaining miles.

Selecting points at random in the areas requested, this formula produces the following fares and rates per mile:

	Mileage	Economy Fare	Rate per Mile
(a) Halifax-Yarmouth	222	$ 20.00	9.00¢
(b) St. John's, Nfld.-St. John, N.B.	666	51.00	7.65¢
(c) Halifax-Toronto	800	58.00	7.25¢
(d) London, Ont.-Sudbury	299	29.00	9.69¢
(e) Calgary-Toronto	1,670	104.00	6.22¢
(f) Winnipeg-Vancouver	1,158	79.00	6.82¢
(g) Montreal-Toronto	315	30.00	9.52¢

The current structure also provides for a number of discounts, as follows: 8/30 Day Excursion available October 1-May 30 on routes over 700 miles, blacked out Fridays and Sundays between 3 and 9 p.m., at 30 per cent discount; Weekend Fare one way or return available all year, midnight Friday to 3 p.m. Sunday at 30 per cent discount; Family Plan 25 per cent discount for spouse, 33⅓ per cent discount for additional dependents and 50 per cent discount for children. Available all year except on Fridays and Sundays; Senior Citizen available all year except Fridays and Sundays at 20 per cent discount; Youth Standby available all year except Fridays and Sundays at 40 per cent discount; Group Fare for 15 persons or more available all year except Fridays and Sundays 3 p.m. to 9 p.m. at 20 per cent discount.

OPERATION SEALIFT

Question No. 1,983—Mr. Forrestall:

1. When the bids are received for the 1973 contracts for hauling Arctic cargo by water, operation Sealift, will special preference be made in awarding the contracts on the basis of ownership of Canadian-owned and registered ships and, if not, for what reason?

2. Will such ships be required to have existing Canadian registry at the time of the contract being made?

3. Will the government permit foreign registered ships to change their registry to obtain contracts?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Department of Transport tender specifications and contracts for the 1973 sealift requires the contractor(s) to guarantee that all ships used to haul the Arctic cargo will be of Canadian registry and if not British built, then fully duty paid.

2. No, but ships must be in Canadian registry prior to acceptance for loading.

3. Yes, providing they meet the requirements of the Canada Shipping Act and the Coasting Trade Regulations.

OFY—APPLICATION FOR GRANT BY GANANOQUE COMMUNITY PARK

Question No. 2,013—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what date was an application for an Opportunities for Youth grant received bearing file number 31081833 and in the name of Gananoque Community Park?

2. Was this application rejected and, if so, for what reason was rejection made?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Opportunities for Youth application, "Gananoque Community Park", No. 31081833, was received March 3, 1973.

2. The project was rejected for the following reasons: There was no satisfactory evidence to indicate that project members possessed the necessary skill and experience relating to the project's proposed activities, and little evidence was produced of their specific community support or available skilled expertise.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

Question No. 2,058—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Was an agreement made in 1970 suspending the provisions of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, Part II, and arranging for the Department of Labour to collect the information required by law to be filed with the Dominion Statistician and, if so (a) by whom (b) under what authority (c) for what reason (d) what was the outcome?

2. (a) By what authority does the Department of Labour publish union membership data and related information coming within the purview of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (b) does the Minister plan to take action to resolve this jurisdictional incongruity?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of Labour as follows: 1. Early in 1970, at the request of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, interdepartmental arrangements were developed aimed at eliminating the duplication caused by the concurrent operation of the Department of Labour's annual survey of labour arganizations and the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Under these arrangements, information submitted by unions to the Department of Labour in fulfillment of the January 1, 1971 survey requirements were made available to Statistics Canada to satisfy the major portion of the 1970 reporting requirements of Section 9 (a) of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. For this reason, certain additional items of information were requested of unions by the Department of Labour in their January 1971 survey. This arrangement did not reduce the legislative requirements of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act as information which was not available through the Canada Department of Labour survey was obtained directly by Statistics Canada. Following the 1970 survey year, this arrangement was terminated.

2. (a) The Department of Labour publishes union membership data and related information by authority of the Department of Labour Act, R.S., c. 72, s. 4; (b) there is no jurisdictional incongruity.

REVIEW OF INCOME TAX FORMS

Question No. 2,089—Mr. Crouse:

In view of the universal unrest throughout Canada over the present inadequate, complicated, and unjust income tax forms, is the Minister of National Revenue planning to review this matter, with the objective of providing a more practical, simplified form for the payment of income tax next year?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Insofar as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation is concerned: The premises on which the question is based are considered to be invalid and therefore no review has been planned based on them. There is a continuing program aimed at simplification of income tax forms and the forms are reviewed each year. During this review, suggestions made by taxpayers, tax practitioners and other interested persons are considered as well as the experionce of the department during the previous filing season. Furthermore, the Minister has invited suggestions in this respect from all members of parliament and still awaits with interest those of the hon. member for South Shore. It should be noted that in addition to providing for the various features of the Income Tax Act, the 1972 Income Tax form was designed to serve the needs of nine provincial Income Tax Acts, Canada Pension Plan, Quebec Pension Plan, Unemployment Insurance Act, Ontario property tax credit, and Manitoba education property tax credit. This relieved the public from having to file a multiplicity of separate forms. Every effort will continue to be made to keep the form as simple as possible and at the same time provide adequate guidance to the taxpayer both as to the declaration of his income and as to the deductions to which he may be entitled.

INFORMATION CANADA—PRINTING CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,132—Mr. Stevens:

1. How many individuals were either laid off or allowed to go on vacation from their jobs with the printing department of Information Canada (i.e. The Queen's Printer) in the 12 month period between October 30, 1971 and October 30, 1972 as compared with the period October 30, 1970 and October 30, 1971?

2. How many printing contracts were awarded to the private sector in the period from October 30, 1971 to October 30, 1972, as compared with the period of October 30, 1970 to October 30, 1971 (a) were public tenders requested in each case (b) were the tenders opened in public (c) what were the total amounts involved in each case?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): If the reference in the question to the printing department of Information Canada (i.e. The Queen's Printer) is meant to mean the Printing Operations of the Department of Supply and Services, the answer is: 1. No employees were laid off and no employees were allowed to go on vacation, other than those absences provided for in the Union agreements, during the period October 30, 1970 to October 30, 1972. By attrition there was a reduction in staff as follows: October 31, 1970 to October 31, 1971, 0.8 per cent; October 31, 1971 to October 31, 1972, 4.6 per cent.

2. Five thousand fifty-six printing contracts were awarded to the private sector by D.S.S. Printing Operations during the period October 30, 1971 to October 30, 1972. Two thousand nine hundred seventeen contracts were awarded during the period October 30, 1970 to October 30, 1971; (a) An invitation to tender was issued for all requirements. In a very limited number of cases, such as when there is only one known source of supply for an item, a sole source tender was issued; (b) No; (c) October 30, 1971 to October 30, 1972: $22,731,000; October 30, 1970 to October 30, 1971: $11,501,000.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—PLUMBING CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,134—Mr. Stevens:

What are the names of the plumbing contractors and suppliers who have regular service contracts with the government in the National Capital area (a) were public tenders requested in each case (b) were the tenders opened in public (c) what are the contract amounts in each case?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Palmers Plumbing Supply Ltd., Ottawa was awarded a Standing Offer contract on February 25, 1972 for the period ending June 30, 1973 for plumbing supplies. The financial limitation of this Standing Offer is $260,000. Interprovincial Plumbing and Heating Registered, Ltd., Ottawa was awarded a Standing Offer contract on March 16, 1973 for the period from April 1, 1973 to March 31, 1975 for plumbing services. The financial limitation of this Standing Offer is $16,000. (a) Yes; (b) no; (c) See above.

*OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,161—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. How many programs or applicants proposed for support by Opportunities for Youth this year had previously been denied support by (a) Canada Council (b) any agency of the Department of the Secretary of State (c) any other federal grant-giving agency?

2. Of the above, how many were approved for support by Opportunities for Youth?

3. What was the name of each such program or aplicant?

4. What was the reason for approval in each case?

5. Of the programs or applicants cited in Part 3, which ones had been denied support by (a) Canada Council (b) any agency of the Department of the Secretary of State (c) any other federal grant-giving agency?

6. Of the programs or applicants cited in Part 5 (b), what was the agency of the Department of the Secretary of State which originally declined support?

7. Of the programs or applicants cited in Part 5 (c), what was the other agency which originally declined support?

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is the answer to the question: 1. Opportunities for Youth does not require applicants to provide information regarding previous unsuccessful requests for support by the Canada Council, any agency of the Department of the Secretary of State, or any other federal grant-giving agency. However, Opportunities for Youth does ask applicants to divulge all aid other than the OFY grant which is available to the project; such aid may take the form of financial support, materials and supplies, facilities, or expertise. Projects are specifically required to identify the source of this support. In the 1973 Programme's "Notes for Applicants", applicants are encouraged to seek additional support from non-OFY sources to partially cover the expenses of their project submission.

2 to 7. Not applicable.

CONTRACT FOR BLOTTING PAPER

Question No. 2,166—Mr. Hales:

1. Was a contract KP.66600-2-W334 for blotting paper during the period April 12, 1973 to April 11, 1974 in the amount of $13,527 awarded to Domtar Fine Papers Ltd., Montreal, Quebec?

2. Were tenders called and, if so (a) what are the names and addresses of those who tendered (b) was the lowest tender accepted?

3. Were there any extra charges over and above the above figure and, if so, what were they?

4. Where were the goods used and by what department of government?

5. How were suppliers notified of government requirements?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. No. Domtar Fine Paper Ltd., Montreal is the only known manufacturer of this grade of paper.

3. No.

4. Requisition was raised by the Department of Supply and Services for warehouse stocks and subsequently supplied to all requesting Departments.

5. By formal Invitation to Tender to sole source.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—FUNDS PROVIDED TO "IMAGINE PENTICTON"

Question No. 2,183—Mr. Whittaker:

1. (a) What departments supply funds to "Imagine Penticton" through the Penticton Human Resources Organization in Penticton, British Columbia (b) what sums of money have been designated to this organization to date?

2. (a) What are the specific objectives of this organization (b) are regular reports of its activities being received and, if so, what are they and to whom are they sent?

3. (a) How long is the grant to be continued (b) are any funds from this grant being shared with the Penticton Human Resources Society and, if so, how much?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) National Health and Welfare, under the Non-Medical Use of Drugs Program. (b) 1971-72, $10,000; 1972-73, $75,000; 1973-74, $40,000, (for fiscal year).

2. (a) The specific objective of this program is the prevention of drug related problems through stimulating the development of available community resources. (b) Yes, regular reports are received by Non-Medical Use of Drugs Directorate Headquarters in Ottawa in the following manner: (i) Field reports prepared by the British Columbia project officer, as required; and, (ii) Year end progress report prepared by the staff of the project, accompanied by an assessment report prepared by the British Columbia project officer.

3. (a) Funding of the project is to remain until October 31, 1973, with continuation of funding dependent upon the project's progress up to that date. (b) No.

CNR—COMMUTER TRAIN SERVICE OPERATION

Question No. 2,212—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. What were the operating profits or deficits by CNR for commuter train services into Montreal during the years 1970, 1971 and 1972?

2. How much of these deficits, if any, were paid by (a) CNR (b) the government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises: CNR incurred a deficit of $2.1 million in 1970, $2.2 million in 1971 and estimates a deficit of 2.4 million for 1972. These deficits apply to both the Mount Royal Tunnel and South Shore Commuter Services. No subsidy has ever been received for losses incurred on commuter operation. CNR has been obliged to cover these losses from general revenues.

PROPOSED R CLASS ICEBRAKERS

Question No. 2,228—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to the proposed R class icebreakers presently under consideration by the government (a) will such vessels be equipped with bow thrusters (b) what will be the total fuel capacity (c) will such hulls be totally or partially ice-reinforced (d) will the fuel tanks be insulated from the shell plating by either (i) ballast tanks (ii) bulkheads and, if not, what structural precautions will be taken to avoid an oil spill in the event of hull rupture in the vicinity of fuel tanks?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Yes; (b) 2,075 tons; (c) totally; (d) Special interior strengthening and high grade steel in hull.

Order Paper Questions

4. The building was not offered for sale, neither was the land on which the building sits.

5. No.

FEDERAL TAX LEVIED ON AVIATION GASOLINE

Question No. 2,373—Mr. Barnett:

1. What direct federal tax per gallon is levied on aviation gasoline?

2. What direct provincial tax per gallon is levied on aviation gasoline in each or any of the provinces?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as National Revenue is concerned: 1. There is no specific federal sales tax per gallon levied on aviation gasoline. However, the Excise Tax Act provides for a sales tax of 12 per cent based on the sale price.

2. Matters relating to provincial taxation do not come within the jurisdiction of this Department.

PRICE SUPPORT POLICY FOR POTATOES

Question No. 2,418—Mr. Godin:

1. Under the price support policy for potatoes, how many persons received payments in 1970, 1971 and 1972?

2. What are the names and addresses of such persons in the constituency of Portneuf and what amount did each receive?

3. What are the names and addresses of such persons in the constituency of Montmorency and what amount did each receive?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Agricultural Stabilization Board did not pay any subsidy to potato growers in 1970. For the fiscal year 1971-72 a total of 1,230 producers were paid.

2 and 3. This type of detailed payment information is considered to be private between the Board and the producers and, because of its confidential nature, is not included with this reply.

IMPORTATION OF PUREBRED EXOTIC CATTLE

Question No. 2,446—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

1. What were the total numbers of purebred exotic cattle imported in each year 1969 to 1972 inclusive?

2. What was the breakdown, by province, of permits allocated for each of these years?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Number of purebred exotic cattle imported

EMERGENCIES, DISASTERS AND CRISES IN CANADA SINCE 1948

Question No. 2,450—Mr. Rowland:

Since 1948, have there been any emergencies, disasters or crises in Canada which, in the opinion of the government, have not been effectively handled by existing agencies of provincial and federal governments and, if so (a) on how many occasions (b) what were they?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): All emergencies, disasters and crises since 1948 of concern to the Government of Canada have been effectively handled, and the experience gained from past incidents has been, and will be used to improve effectiveness of response in subsequent instances.

CRISIS MANAGEMENT CENTRE

Question No. 2,451—Mr. Rowland:

1. Have senior officials of the Privy Council Office, Security Service of the RCMP, the Treasury Board, the Office of the Deputy Minister of National Defence, discussed the creation of a crisis management centre or similar organization in the Privy Council Office and, if so, has such a recommendation been made to the government?

2. If such a recommendation has been made (a) what would the relationship of such centre be to other agencies or departments which have in the past dealt with a variety of emergencies, ranging from pollution, air crashes and natural disasters to civil planning for war emergencies (b) does it envisage any change in the relationship of existing federal arrangements with appropriate provincial agencies for the purpose of dealing with emergencies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As indicated in the response to Question 20 on February 21, 1973 (Hansard Page 1493):1. A study has been made of "crisis handling methods and structures within the federal government.

2. A full summary of findings will be made public in due course.

SALARIES PAID TO LOCALLY ENGAGED STAFF IN VIET NAM

Question No. 2,454—Mr. Knight:

What is the annual breakdown of salaries paid to locally-engaged staff who worked in South Viet Nam from 1954 to date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Prior to 1971 all locally-engaged staff providing services to Canadian personnel were employees of the International Commission of Control and Supervision in Indo-China and as such their salaries were paid by the ICCS. Since then the salaries paid by the Department of External Affairs are 1971, $272.30; 1972, $1,931.54; 1973 January to June, $1,193.44. These salaries (1971-73) were paid to locally-engaged staff performing support work for personnel of the Canadian International Development Agency.

SPECIAL STUDY OF NATIONAL CAPITAL

Question No. 2,474—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. What are (a) the terms of reference (b) the operating budget (c) the personnel (d) the expected date of report of the Special Study of the National Capital?

2. Was it the decision of the Minister that the Study would not involve public hearings and, if not, by whom was it taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. (a) "To undertake a study of the most effective arrangements for the future administration of matters directly affecting the National Capital and its development, including the role of the National Capital Commission and its relation to other bodies concerned with the governing of the Capital Region and the coordination of those federal activities which bear upon the development of the Region as a national capital". (b) For the fiscal year 1973-1974, $130,000. (c) At the present time, in addition to Mr. D. H. Fullerton, one administrator and one secretary. Several other additions to the staff are contemplated, together with the part time assistance of consultants. (d) Within one year from June 1, 1973.

2. The decision on public hearings rests with Mr. Fullerton, although the Study has not been constituted under the Inquiries Act, and he therefore does not have the power to summon witnesses. No final decision on hearings has yet been taken, although Mr. Fullerton has said in his advertisement seeking submissions that "It is not my present intention to hold public hearings, since these would more appropriately flow from the review of the National Capital by a Special Committee of Parliament, the establishment of which the government is considering recommending at the next Session." He has added in correspondence on this question that the time, staff, and cost involved in public hearings would make it difficult to finish the study within the time and budget allotted to it, but that the matter would be reviewed in the autumn.

DISPOSAL OF MEDICAL SUPPLIES AND EQUIPMENT AT BROCKVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,484—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Who was in charge of the recent disposal of certain medical supplies and equipment maintained at Brockville, Ontario by the Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. Was a truck rented to transport such materials to the Brockville City Dump and, if so, from whom was the truck rented?

3. Is the Department aware that such material was disposed of in such a way that children were able to obtain needles and other equipment not properly destroyed or covered?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Emergency Health Services, Department of National Health and Welfare.

2. Yes, from Ryder Truck Rentals.

3. The material in question was crushed by machinery at the dump, and completely buried by six to ten inches of earth. This procedure was carried out under the supervision of an officer of the Emergency Health Division. There is no doubt in this case that a number of the administration sets, consisting of rubber tubing and an infusion needle, were not properly pulverized, but they were buried. A subsequent inspection by an official of the Department and a public health inspector from Brockville concluded that the material was well buried, not only by earth, but also by new garbage. The Department is aware of the Police Department report wherein a youth from the nearby town of Lyn admitted having dug up a carton containing several administration sets.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—RENTAL OF PREMISES AT R.R.2, BROCKVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,485—Mr. Cossitt:

2. From whom are these premises rented and what is the rent paid per month?

3. Does the government have a lease on these premises and, if so, what is the expiry date?

4. Does the government sublet a portion of this building and, if so, to whom and at what monthly rent?

5. What use has the Department of National Health and Welfare been making of this building since rental began?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. September, 1963.

2. Industrial Avenue Realties Ltd., Brockville. Rent is presently $3,900 per month.

3. Yes. February 1978.

4. Yes, a portion is sublet to the Emergency Measures Organization of the United Counties of Leeds and Grenville at $125 per month.

5. The building is used for the storage of emergnecy health medical units for distribution as required and for a reserve stock of the national medical stockpile.

DISPOSAL OF MEDICAL EQUIPMENT MAINTAINED FOR CIVIL EMERGENCY PURPOSES

Question No. 2,486—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare recently ordered the disposal of certain medical equipment maintained for civil emergency purposes at various depots throughout Canada and, if so, was this because the material was considered unsafe for human use and what tests were taken to determine that this was so?

2. What was the nature of all the equipment disposed of?

3. What was the estimated total value of all supplies or equipment disposed of?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, the Department of National Health and Welfare, recently disposed of Dextran, a blood plasma expander, and administration sets, which had been purchased for the Emergency Health Program between the years 1959-62. This action resulted from tests taken by the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department which found that the material had been in storage too long and could no longer be recommended for medicinal purposes. (Dextran is a harmless substance which would not be injurious to health even if taken orally).

2. Intravenous Dextran and administration sets.

3. $550,000.

PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR, BAGHDAD?

Question No. 2,408—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. For what reasons did Canada decide not to participate in the International Trade Fair scheduled for October 1973 in Baghdad?

2. Is consideration being given to reversing this negative decision?

3. In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce knows, what countries are planning to exhibit at this Fair?

4. At what International Trade Fairs since 1963 has Canada been a participant?

Return tabled.

Mr. Knight: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the parliamentary secretary promised me that he would have answers for questions Nos. 927, 928, 929 and 931. He has answered two of those questions, or at least I assume the answers are coming to me, but the other two have not been answered. I wonder would he take this into consideration. I am referring to questions relating to travel expenses outside the country incurred by those employed in the office of the Prime Minister, and by other departments and agencies of the government.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, with respect to question No. 929, there is only one governmental agency that is outstanding, and I hope to have the reply from it shortly.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary about questions Nos. 2271 to 2279 inclusive, asking for lists of lawyers maintained by the Department of Justice to do government legal work. I asked the parliamentary secretary about these two weeks ago, and he said it involved getting the names of these lawyers from all the various departments in order to compile the list. I suggest that that statement is not entirely accurate, as the list in the first place is maintained by the Minister of Justice, and I see no reason why it could not be obtained immediately. Therefore, I would ask the parliamentary secretary to assure me that the list can be made available before the parliamentary recess. Surely, the government would not want to hide the list of lawyers who do business for it?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I am not a prophet and I cannot foresee when the House will rise for the summer recess.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—ACCEPTANCE OF MEDIATION BY UNION—POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the chairman of the non-operating railway unions has stated in a letter to the Department of Labour that they are now prepared to accept the mediation services of the department, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the federal mediators have been in touch with both parties with a view to bringing them together again for negotiations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the assistant to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Kelly, is in Montreal meeting with both parties at this time, or has been meeting with them.

Mr. McGrath: As a supplementary question may I ask if the government has been in touch with the railways and the unions, after the failure of the conciliation board to reach agreement, with a view to coming up with a new set of proposals which would form the basis of new negotiations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the meetings I have just alluded to have been taking place, and it is not for me to disclose the nature of them.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE FROM UNION AND RAILWAYS ESSENTIAL SERVICES WILL NOT BE DISRUPTED IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary to the Acting Minister of Transport. May I ask the Acting Minister of Transport if the government is now prepared to state that they have received assurances from the unions that, with the threat of a nation-wide rail strike or rotating strikes, essential services will not be disrupted and specifically that essential food will be transported, grain will be transported and essential ferry services between Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island will be maintained?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot reply to each one of those items specifically because I do not know the extent of the commitment that has been made. I can assure the hon. member that representations have been made to the parties concerned with regard to essential services, and very specifically with regard to the maintenance of ferry service between the mainland and the two island provinces.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, a supplementary.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary has been pre-empted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he has had assurances from the two major railways in respect of the movement of essential food and feed grains, in fact all grains needed, in the possibility of a strike or tie-up?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that such assurances have been sought but in that particular case, with the hon. member's indulgence, I will have to take the question as notice and get an answer later. I am not sure what assurances the railways have given.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED GIVING OF GRANTS CONDITIONAL ON FAVOURABLE TREATMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. May I ask the minister if he was aware of the alleged offer made by a Liberal member of parliament to a certain group to the effect that a grant would be obtained if they would treat the minister with honey rather than vinegar, and in any case is he in a position to make a statement on this allegation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the allegation first came to my attention when I read the newspaper this morning. I have had no part nor any discussion on the possibility whatsoever of such an offer involving a grant. I would categorically deny that there was any such arrangement made to which I was party. I am not privy to the discussions that took place between the hon. member mentioned and the group he referred to and I doubt very much that there was such an implication.

LOCAL INITIATIVES AND OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH GRANTS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF MINISTERIAL AUTHORITY IN GRANTING APPROVAL

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the government will review its policy of using ministerial authority to approve LIP and OFY grants which enabled the government to buy the silence of groups opposed to its policies?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that a question asked in those terms is entirely out of order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED RUG-RANKING SYSTEM OF PROMOTING SECRETARIES—REQUEST FOR SUBSTITUTION OF POINT RATING SYSTEM AND TABLING OF RELATIVE TREASURY BOARD MINUTES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. The priority recommendation of the public service secretaries' brief was for the replacement of the rug-ranking system by a system which would provide for promotion by way of merit for secretaries. In light of the fact that other professional groups and clerks in the public service were granted such a system more than a decade ago, is the government now going to replace the rug-ranking system with a point rating system for secretaries and if so, will a statement be made this week?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is not aware that the same system of classification and rating is applied to secretaries as is applied to all other appointments in the public service. The difficulty, of course, is that there tends to be a highly personal relationship between a secretary and his or her employer—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not on this side.

Mr. Drury: —and a tendency to regard the employer rather than the office as being the important factor.

Mr. Baker: A supplementary. In light of that impressive defence of the status quo, would the minister indicate whether the rug-ranking system has been a matter for Cabinet discussion and whether alternatives have been formally considered during the five years he has been President of the Treasury Board? Also, would the minister be prepared to table Treasury Board minutes in this House with respect to discussions and studies that have gone on in connection with this distressing matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have doubts about the first part of the hon. member's supplementary but perhaps the hon. minister might reply to the last part.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I did not quite hear your comment. I would say that Treasury Board minutes are not published and the agenda of cabinet is not published.

Mr. Baldwin: Only leaked.

Mr. Drury: I would also hope that my colleagues in Cabinet would not be in the habit of discussing slogans.

[Mr. Bawden.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD—REQUEST FOR ALTERATION IN METHOD OF PAYING SUBSIDY TO WHEAT FARMERS TO HELP CONSUMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the reduction in the subsidy to grain farmers to $60 million. In the result it is generally estimated that the cost of a loaf of bread will increase by between one cent and three cents or even four cents. As this $60 million to be paid from year to year is actually the amount that was paid by my administration for acreage payments, on the two occasions when that payment was made, would the Prime Minister, in order to assist in keeping down the cost of living, alter the method of payment, to the end that the consumers of Canada would not have added to the already overwhelming load of the cost of living the additional price they must pay for bread?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman wants to ascertain for himself the mathematics, I am sure he will find that the government is subsidizing the consumer of bread to the tune of $60 million a year. What relationship that has to the acreage payment under his administration is something that he can determine better than I can. Whether or not that was a subsidy to the consumer or the farmer, in this case it is obviously a subsidy to the consumer of $60 million a year. The mathematics of it would indicate to the right hon. member that this might result in an increase in the price of bread of one tenth of one cent, certainly a far cry from the four or five cents that he mentioned.

An hon. Member: He did not mention five cents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister apparently did not read the press when he was on the western tour for the purpose of ascertaining the feelings of the people. I ask him again, why should the consumer of Canada, at the time we have the highest cost of living in history, be loaded with a further addition to the cost of one of the staples, bread, because of the action of this government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure of the relevance of reading newspapers on my tour of the west, but I would want to think that over and perhaps I might find intelligence in the comment. On the point of the subsidy, the right hon. gentleman should realize that if we were to increase the subsidy to something above $60 million per year, it would mean an increase in taxes, and I am not sure that this is what the right hon. gentleman would support.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister walked around in a circle in that answer. I simply ask him this: now that he is about to approach the west to find out what western Canada wants, is he not prepared to do something along the lines suggested, so that the consumer of Canada will not be loaded down still further by the failure of this government to contain the rise in the cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members might not agree that this is a restatement of the first supplementary asked by the right hon. gentleman?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there was a substantially new element in that question and I wonder if I might be permitted to reply to it. It is the suggestion that we have to do something for the west. Surely, the right hon. gentleman realizes that the announcement made by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the Minister of Justice, is to the effect that the western farmer will now be permitted to get world prices for the wheat he sells to the miller, instead of the price he got earlier. I see the right hon. gentleman laughs, but he obviously does not understand this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would have expected that applause. While the gabbling of geese saved ancient Rome, I doubt whether that type of thing will save this government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the debate might end at this point and we might return to the question period. I will recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands in a moment on a supplementary to the previous question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Meadow Lake.

ALLEGED POOR CONSTRUCTION OF BAL-MAN HOMES, MEADOW LAKE, SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, may I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that Bal-Man Homes Ltd. built some homes at Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, of substandard quality, and in view of the fact that this company has not paid some of the subcontractors, this resulting in mechanics liens being registered against the homes, has the minister requested the Saskatoon office of CMHC to conduct a full scale investigation of this matter, to ensure that the home buyers are protected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member's question ought to be placed on the order paper. If I am wrong and there is urgency, it could be considered at the time of adjournment this evening.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN RUG-RANKING SYSTEM OF PROMOTING SECRETARIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked earlier of the President of the Treasury Board. Is it the position of the minister that the rug-ranking system does treat secretaries as chattels, and, if so, is that acceptable to the government or is this unfair and discriminatory practice, which I can assure the minister does exist, going to be corrected?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if there is an unfair and discriminatory practice, I would be glad to join the hon. member in seeing it is corrected. I would like to suggest that the problems appear to lie rather with our inability to adequately rate secretaries according to their competence, not to the classification of jobs they currently hold.

Miss MacDonald: In light of the minister's reply and his notable lack of enthusiasm to do anything about this, will he consult with Katherine Cooke, Chairman of the Status of Women Advisory Council, in order to get some expert advice as to how this can be done?

MANPOWER

MEASURES TO PROVIDE SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that some students are still unemployed and that there are only five or six weeks left before school starts again, will the minister make a statement this week and announce new measures designed to help the young workers immediately and thus lighten the burden of their parents?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are always concerned about this segment of the labour force which has more difficulty finding employment than other segments. I believe we have already announced several measures which have been publicized in this House and elsewhere, indicative of our special efforts to find suitable employment for them. I can assure the hon. member that student Manpower centres across the country and student employment programs embarked on by my department, and several other departments, including Opportunities for Youth, are making increased efforts, but I do not have anything new to announce at this stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, is the minister also aware that some May and June graduates are unemployed, and will his new policy take into consideration the fact that those young workers are now in a very awkward situation?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the number of graduates coming from our universities and schools. We are making diligent efforts to find them jobs through job placement agencies, my department and many others. I might say, as members opposite and members in this party have mentioned, there are many jobs available right now for students. We have some 4,200 people on our list seeking jobs. We have jobs in southern Ontario amongst the food processors and agricultural employers who would be glad to get help. We face some difficulties in that when some people find out what kinds of jobs they are, they do not show all the enthusiasm for them we would otherwise expect to see. This creates some difficulty in placing them and matching applicants to jobs available.

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—ALLEGED PREPARATIONS OF MINT FOR PRODUCING COMMEMORATIVE COINS—MINISTERIAL AUTHORITY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Supply and Services. Is the minister aware the Royal Canadian Mint commenced making preparations for the minting of Olympic coins as far back as last March and, in particular, two Olympic coin designs have been chosen and engravers have been working on the dies? If he was aware of the Mint's action, will he inform the House whether this action was taken on his instructions or did the Mint take these steps without authority bearing in mind that the 1976—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply to the question. He is now about to make an argument in support of his question and that is not in order.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will surely agree with me that the administration can do the planning. Now, with regard to the Royal Canadian Mint and the actual design of the coins, I do not believe any final decision will be made before normal consultation and final authorization has been granted.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Bearing in mind what the minister has told the House, will he now state if he is aware that two heavy coin presses, suitable for handling the proposed Olympic coin sizes, which were originally ordered for the Winnipeg Mint, are now ready but have been diverted to Ottawa from Winnipeg so that the Mint may be in a position to commence minting the Olympic coins without delay. Was this change in plans on the minister's instructions or did the Mint take this action without his authority?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not know but I shall certainly inquire.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Did I understand the minister to say that the officials of the Mint have the authority to proceed with the preparation of Olympic coins prior to approval being given by this parliament to the minting of those coins? Is that the position of the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, it is quite sure that if Parliament rejects the government proposal nothing will be done. However, it is also sure that if Parliament authorizes the government to proceed, we could normally do so with the greatest possible haste and we are now working with that in mind.

STUDENT CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGATIONS OF IMPROPRIETY IN TENDERING—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of State for Urban Affairs or the parliamentary secretary. Two weeks ago I asked the minister about certain charges in connection with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Can the acting minister or parliamentary secretary advise the House whether a report will in fact be made to the House by the minister or the government with regard to these very serious charges of corruption, collusion and fraud in connection with the tendering practices in construction of certain student co-operative housing projects?

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand from remarks by the minister in the House that an inquiry into this matter began toward the end of February. When that inquiry is complete, I presume the minister will make it available to members of the House.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact five months have elapsed since this mythical inquiry was instituted, will the minister or the government now indicate if they are satisfied that no meaningful inquiry is being made and refer this matter to the Auditor General for a thorough and complete study under Sections 62 and 63 of the Financial Administration Act?

Mr. Watson: To repeat my earlier answer, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that an inquiry was started in February and when the finding is complete, it will be made available to members.

AID TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES SUFFERING FROM DROUGHT—POSITION OF CANADA AT MEETING OF FOOD AND AGRICULTURAL ORGANIZATION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the drought in Africa and the steps being taken to assist the people resident there. Is it correct that the Food and Agricultural Organization will be meeting toward the end of this month to discuss this question? If so, will Canada be represented at this meeting, at what level and do we have specific proposals to put forward?

● (1440)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that Canada has been in the forefront of countries that have been helping in this tragedy in Africa. Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, President of CIDA, has just returned from a personal inspection of the efforts we are making. Our planes were the first to arrive and have been the most useful in carrying food from the ports to the interior. As to the specific question, I am not quite sure whether the food and agriculture organization is having a meeting. At any rate, I had a letter on Friday from the Director General of the organization thanking Canada for its co-operation.

ENERGY

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CANADIAN POSITION MADE CLEAR TO UNITED STATES IN MAY, 1972

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to recent problems connected with the tanker route and a trip tomorrow by some parliamentarians to Washington. In view of the government's position that answers given to the United States have been on public record and known for many months by the United States, can the minister assure the House that the vital question concerning ownership of the pipeline was made abundantly clear to United States secretary Rogers Morton in May, 1972?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in the House he had been carrying on these talks with the United States administration directly, I think he ought to answer the question rather than myself. I did not have any conversations with Secretary Morton.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, there is some urgency in having this answer as this trip tomorrow may well be abortive. In view of the fact the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources seems to have some doubt himself as to whether he made this position clear to United States Secretary Rogers Morton in May, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure the House that this position was stated publicly by the government before July 6, 1973 and, if so, when?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the statement by the hon. gentleman about the position taken by my colleague, but I think this question should be directed to the minister responsible. I am not responsible for pipeline policy in my portfolio, and this question should be directed to him.

Mr. Baldwin: We do not think he is responsible, either.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I should like to direct the question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It will be too late tomorrow to ask this question, and I would ask the Prime Minister whether he can advise the House that Canada's position on the ownership of the oil pipeline was made clear to Rogers Morton in May, 1972, as was indicated in respect of the whole question of Canada's position by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on Thursday last?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to recall what the minister said in the House, and no doubt the hon. member like myself could find it in Hansard. I have some doubt that he said every aspect was made clear in May, 1972, but I do recall him having said that every aspect had been made clear to the United States well before the date in July, 1973 about which the hon. member is asking. If that is not correct I will try to ascertain from the minister, who I believe is travelling west, or rather at a meeting of the National Advisory Committee on Petroleum, later today and perhaps have an answer for the hon. member.

FEED GRAINS POLICY—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONTROL WILL REMAIN WITH WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the growing concern of many western grain producers with regard to the government's forthcoming feed grain policy, will the minister assure us now that feed grain will not be removed from the control of the Wheat Board without the approval of grain producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the intentions of the government have been outlined in an announcement on feed grains policy. We intend to adhere to that policy and it will be announced by August 1.

AUTOMOBILES—ALLEGED INCREASE IN PRICE OF PARTS BY GENERAL MOTORS—CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Given the fact that industrial sources indicate that General Motors has increased the price of its replacement parts by 20 per cent to compensate for the 1973 price freeze on automobiles, can the minister advise whether he was consulted on this matter and will other automobile manufacturers be following the same course of action?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I notice the hon. member referred to replacement parts rather than to new automobiles. In regard to the direct question as to whether or not my department was consulted, I will be pleased to make inquiries.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise the House whether the subject of automobile replacement parts prices was discussed when he negotiated the price freeze on 1973 automobiles with the manufacturers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps that question might be placed on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO OBJECTIONS FROM PROVINCES ON JURISDICTIONAL GROUNDS TO IMPOSITION OF PRICE AND INCOMES CONTROLS BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would tell the House if any provincial premier at the last Dominion-Provincial Conference indicated any intention to dispute on constitutional grounds the jurisdiction of the federal government in the event the federal government desires to get into a prices and incomes control policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not to my recollection, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to be put in the position of stating definite constitutional positions of all provinces, but I cannot remember any vociferous expression of opposition.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that at least three or four of the premiers immediately after the conference, and some of them even since, have publicly gone out of their way to indicate they would certainly not dispute jurisdiction of the federal government, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could recollect if there was a discussion on that particular ground and, if so, inform the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, the subject was raised and some provinces did volunteer the opinion that they would not oppose federal government action in that field. I just answered the previous question by indicating I could not speak for all the provinces, as I do not believe they all expressed an opinion on that. I might add that this was not the real bone of contention, if I could use that expression. It was not so much the constitutionality of measures, but whether they would work, and on this there seemed to be a strong feeling that they would not.

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF FOOD—POSITION OF CANADA AT GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the world situation and the fact that it is becoming all too apparent there will be a short supply of foodstuffs, will the minister inform the House what moves and actions he will take on behalf of Canada on upcoming negotiations on trade under GATT, and can he inform the House whether his department has considered this situation in terms of what policy will be presented?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to say, first of all, that I am more optimistic than the hon. member about the world's supply of grains, etc. Crop reports from the U.S.S.R. show a 12 per cent increase in the production of grain this year, and the United States forecasts a tremendous increase in the production of grain and soybeans. Our people are discussing these things at GATT, as far as that goes, but for me to try to give a full report at this time as to what stage they are at, how they are doing or what they are doing would be impossible.

POSITION OF CANADA ON NEW INTERNATIONAL GRAINS AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, would the minister inform the House whether he is prepared to make a statement on motions in the near future, informing the House whether the government is attempting to get another international grains agreement in light of the need for grain supplies and the need to be in a position or in a mood to consider this type of agreement? Will the minister inform the house whether he would be prepared to do that?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the OECD in Paris sometime ago this topic was discussed by governmental officials at all levels of each government concerned. This is very much on the mind of the government here as well as an the minds of many other governments; that is the fact that this is the type of program that should be negotiated. We are studying and looking at it very closely, but I cannot say when I might be prepared to make a statement to the House as I leave this afternoon for Charlottetown, and then from Charlottetown I go to Calgary. If you can be patient until I get back maybe a statement can be made.

SOYBEAN MEAL—DIFFERENTIAL IN PRICE BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister be attempting to have the cost of soybean meal equalized as between Canada and the United States in order that our Canadian producers will not be at such a disadvantage, keeping in mind that soybean meal for protein supplement is costing our Canadian producers twice as much as the United States producers have to pay?

● (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is a great discrepancy in the price of this protein. We are watching the prices very closely and comparing what the United States producers of agricultural products pay and what the agricultural producers pay in Canada. How quickly we can rectify the situation I do not know, and I do not believe anyone knows. However, so far as we are concerned there is this great difference between what producers of agricultural livestock and poultry have to pay for this protein in Canada and what the United States producers have to pay who are in direct competition with Canadian producers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I must bring to the attention of hon. members that we are running short of time. A number of members are waiting to ask questions, and with the situation in the House this afternoon I was hoping all hon. members to my left who wished to ask questions might be permitted to do so. It seems that perhaps the members in the fourth and fifth rows will not have an opportunity unless we limit supplementaries.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, the minister suggested what he would like to see done in this regard. I should like him to tell the House what he is doing specifically to rectify this situation?

Mr. Whelan: I would like to get some suggestions from the opposition, if they have any, rather than have them just tell me to do something, because we certainly have programs which we can initiate but it would take tax dollars to do this.

PROTEIN FEEDS—SUGGESTION CANADIAN POLICY DEPENDENT ON UNITED STATES POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia. I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture, in view of the fact that an official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce some time ago said, that the Canadian government and the Department of Agriculture were awaiting a policy development by the United States before they took a definite stand on agricultural policy in Canada, are the government and his department still awaiting the development of United States policy before Canada takes a stand in this House?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, I think we are dependent on the United States for protein because, to a great extent, it comes from the United States. Whatever they do has an effect on our situation here. I visited the United States in February and one of the questions we asked was whether they intended to freeze the price of protein or whether they intended to restrict supplies. At that time they had no intention of restricting supply because they thought they had an ample supply for all their world customers, including Canada. The situation changed later, and has changed again just recently. I think it is too soon to say how quickly the prices will level off or where the program will go from here.

ALLEGED PROHIBITION OF MEMBERS FROM PARTICIPATING IN CEREMONY COMMEMORATING OLD STONE MILL IN VILLAGE OF DELTA

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of the ceremony commemorating the Old Stone Mill as a national historic site in my riding in the village of Delta last Saturday, July 21. Will the minister tell the House whether instructions were given to his department and by whom that the federal member for Leeds, the provincial member for Leeds and the local municipal reeve were to be prohibited from taking part in the commemoration ceremony on the ground that they are members of the Progressive Conservative Party?

FEED GRAINS POLICY—INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER DECISION MADE ON RETENTION OF CONTROL BY WHEAT BOARD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to questions asked some time ago of the Minister of Agriculture. I would ask him whether or not the cabinet has made a decision concerning exclusion of feed grains from the Canadian Wheat Board. Has there been any such decision made?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I said to some other members, the decision and announcement will be made by August 1.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a simple question like that should be answered clearly. If the government pretends that no decision has been made I should like to ask the minister what will be the nature of the discussion he is to have in Prince Edward Island in connection with feed grains?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have been invited to attend the meeting. It is not my meeting in Prince Edward Island. I am invited to attend the meeting of provincial ministers of agriculture from all across this land. They are to make their suggestions and requests to me. I am to be there to listen, but you can be sure that will not be all I will be doing there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the right hon. gentleman for a supplementary, but again I ask for co-operation of members because there are only two minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a question which affects western Canada to a degree no other matter does.

Some hon. Members: Oh!, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you will notice how the Liberal members ridicule western members by their attitude.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman might ask a question now. We are running short of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if you would direct your observations to the government members who sneer and yell when I mention western Canada I would appreciate it.

Mr. Trudeau: Don't lecture the Chair.

FEED GRAINS POLICY—REASON FOR ANNOUNCEMENT ON AUGUST 1—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH WHEAT POOLS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister why August 1 has been chosen as the time for the announcement, and does the minister, when he goes west along with the Prime Minister to learn what the west wants, intend to interview the various wheat pools in western Canada to ascertain their suggestions and will they be listened to, too?

[Mr. Goyer.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question which the right hon. gentleman has asked, and I want to say that the Minister of Agriculture for Canada is concerned about the interests of all farmers of Canada. It will be my concern, as it is the concern of the government, to make sure that all farmers in Canada, wherever they may be, those who use feed grain or not, will be treated in an equitable fashion. This is my job as a member of the government and I understand it is government policy to listen and consult. I have discussed this with members of the wheat pools of the three provinces and leaders of farm organizations. I know some of their views. They are not all opposed. All have different views. We are also listening to the provincial governments, and I certainly cannot say so far that they are unanimous in their feelings about what should be done in respect of a feed grains policy.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar who also has a supplementary on this matter, then the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and then call orders of the day.

FEED GRAINS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that this government, the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board, and the Minister of Agriculture are responsible for a grain marketing policy, I should like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to take a responsible stand, be responsible to this parliament, and announce to the House what their policy is with regard to marketing feed grain.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this minister is responsible and any stand he takes will be a responsible one.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—SUGGESTION NO CO-ORDINATION OF DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES BY DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises because of the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the question put to him by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver South, claiming that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is unaware of the exact nature of the exchanges that took place between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the United States embassy. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if it is now government policy to allow relations between Canada and foreign governments to be carried on through any and all ministries of government, without even a co-ordinating role being assigned to the Department of External Affairs.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, that is not the policy of the government and I am quite sure my friend misunderstood what the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated. It was that ministers, such as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, do have contacts with their opposite members, in this case United States Secretary Morton, on subjects which are specific to them, but always with the knowledge and under the general co-ordination of the foreign policy conducted so ably by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: That may be the problem.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed, from Friday, July 20, consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert) moved:

That Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, be amended in Clause 2 by deleting on page 1 the comma in line 15, by inserting an "(a)" immediately before the word "in" in line 16, by re-numbering paragraphs (a) and (b) as (i) and (ii), and by adding immediately after line 5 on page 2 the following new paragraphs:

"(b) in respect of a male person, where such person causes the death of a female person while committing or attempting to commit rape, and

(c) in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit an offence under section 247, or, if while committing or attempting to commit that offence, such person abandons a human being and death ensues as a consequence."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to apologize to the hon. member.

[English]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of a matter that was left in the air on Friday when questions were raised as to whether Your Honour might defer the vote on one report stage amendment since there is to be another one. Of course, this is Your Honour's right under Standing Order 75(11). I think it would be helpful for the House in this debate to know whether that is Your Honour's intention.

Mr. Speaker: The position of the Chair in such matters is that although there is, under our Standing Orders, the authority granted to the Chair to make such a decision, it might be better to see how the debate develops. Perhaps some time in the month of August the Chair might give the matter further consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues have accused me of unduly delaying the work of the House and our adjournment by presenting this amendment; consequently, I will be very brief in enumerating the reasons which prompted me to present it. I have no intention of discussing the pros and cons of capital punishment, as this question was covered during the many debates in the House since the presentation of Bill C-2.

[Translation]

The amendment before this House today is aimed at the retention of capital punishment in cases of kidnapping or rape during which the victim is murdered. In other words, any person found guilty of murdering a person whom he has kidnapped or raped, would be liable to the death penalty. Of all criminal acts, kidnapping or rape followed by murder is certainly the most odious. Capital punishment is the only just punishment for the most odious crimes and it is the only penalty that can atone for an unpardonable crime.

The death penalty by hanging embodies all the repulsion and all the horror that society feels towards the most serious of all crimes.

The punishment inflicted for a serious crime should clearly show the repugnance it evokes in most people, and in the final analysis a punishment is justified not so much by its value as a deterrent but because it constitutes the categorical condemnation of a crime by society. Thus, some murders, for example, a kidnapping or rape during which the victim is murdered or is subsequently murdered, require the ultimate punishment, the death penalty.

Why, Mr. Speaker, these crimes in particular, and not all other crimes in which there is loss of life? Because, quite simply, kidnapping or rape followed by murder involves a two-stage decision—and this is the point I wish to stress—the decision is sometimes premeditated in both cases. They are two, separate criminal acts. In the case of kidnapping in particular, in view of the fact that it is not a single decision—once the kidnapping is carried out, the aim is to obtain ransom or the liberation of a criminal—it is logical to assume that the deterrent power of capital punishment, in the second decision, that of whether or not to murder the victim, will have its deterrent effect on the conscience of the person who is considering committing a second criminal act.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, unless he is not fully in possession of all his faculties, an individual who, after due consideration, decides to kidnap or rape his crime once committed, is the master of a second decision, whether to kill or spare his victim. If this individual does not go beyond his first crime and liberates his victim, he is liable to life imprisonment and it is at this very point that capital punishment may exert its deterrent or preventive effect.

If the first crime is a spontaneous and thoughtless act, the second crime which implies a second decision is not, as was the case in Pierre Laporte's murder, for some time elapses between the first and the second crime. In other words—I repeat—the individual who is in possession of all his faculties has a choice between capital punishment and life imprisonment. The choice being his own, the individual chooses between the two sentences.

Not only would capital punishment have deterrent effects in these definite cases in preventing the second crime, but it would have the persuasive effect of liberating the victim.

Some hon. members from both sides of the House have objected, when this amendment was debated in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, that the amendment I was proposing meant that crimes involving two criminal actions were liable to capital punishment, particularly armed robberies when one individual is killed whether he be a bank employee or a passerby. This is totally different and this kind of murder does not involve premeditation. Certainly an armed robbery involves premeditation but the murder of a bank employee or a bystander is accidental because the objective is to rob the bank and not to kill such or such a person. It is not a double decision. An armed robbery involving murder is one thing while kidnapping is a criminal action as well as the execution of the victim. This is what I am trying to say: two criminal actions or a double decision.

The second reason which compels me to propose this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is that this kind of criminal act is a twentieth century crime which seems to have become prominent lately. For instance, South America has already experiencesd its ninetieth kidnapping: the victims have been presidents of companies, diplomats, and children of wealthy families.

If memory serves me correctly, in the province of Quebec in the last three years there were three cases of kidnapping followed by murder, and there is no proof that one of the victims would not have been spared if capital punishment had been in force for these particular cases.

In case of rape when the victim is murdered or subsequently murdered it is true that those criminal actions are totally different from kidnapping followed by murder but they are both foul. It is true that the individual's overexcitement may influence his first criminal action. It can even happen that the victim is murdered before being raped but, once more, this is a double decision and here again I think that the death penalty cannot but have a preventive or deterrent effect.

While preparing those few remarks, I read again the comments of a few Canadian politicians following the assassination of Pierre Laporte and I would like to quote them.

The Alberta attorney general, for instance, said that the kidnappers and murderers of Pierre Laporte were "wild dogs" and should be treated as such. Now, how are wild dogs treated?

British Columbia Attorney General Leslie Pearson urged the authorities of this country not to be merciful towards Pierre Laporte's kidnappers and subversive elements responsible for this murder. Well, one of the accused was acquitted from the kidnapping and murder charges.

I know that many hon. members will say that my argument is based on the deterrent effect of capital punishment. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I must at this stage inform the House of the inquiry I carried on among prison guards and correction officers of the various penitentiaries I visited recently.

All but four of the guards and correction officers who were interviewed believed that the retention of capital punishment as it existed in December 1972 was an additional protection for them, and therefore that it had a deterrent effect on murderers.

A murderer who is serving a life sentence, they said, has nothing to lose if he kills two or three guards who are hostile to him. Therefore, they think that capital punishment is an additional protection. A few guards even told me that they would resign the day following the abolition of capital punishment.

Other hon. members of the opposition, in particular on the far right, have called me a "hangwoman", raising the argument that capital punishment was inhuman. This may be true, but is murder less inhuman? At the bottom of his heart, does the murderer have any regard for the dignity of his victim?

I wonder how these hon. members can call me a hangwoman because I propose a deterrent in cases of kidnapping or rape, while many of them support the abolition of capital punishment, that is true, for murderers who have acted contrary to the rules of society, but they pronounce at the same time or in another time in favour of abortion, that is to say the murder of innocent children who have done nothing wrong against society. How in all logic can one support total abolition of capital punishment and abortion at the same time?

[English]

I repeat that the ultimate goal of this amendment is to prevent killing in the case of kidnapping and rape. If by my proposed amendment I am instrumental in preventing the murder of one such victim, I will have accomplished more than certain members of this House hope to accomplish by the abolition of the death penalty.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this amendment and hope that hon. members, voting according to choice in a free vote, will see the merit of adding the amendment to the bill before us.

There are a number of reasons why it should receive general support. One of them, as indicated by the mover of the amendment, is that kidnapping itself is a heinous crime. In our Criminal Code we have already made the distinction between one kind of crime justifying execution and another kind where a more moderate penalty would be appropriate. The Criminal Code thus distinguishes between capital and non-capital murder. Bill C-2 itself distinguishes between the murder of a prison guard or police officer and any other homicide. Therefore, in principle this amendment is following those precedents, suggesting as it does that this particular crime of murder committed during kidnapping is the kind that would call for the death penalty.

I think this is an amendment which would receive widespread support from the public which has been shocked by the general laxity on the part of the government over the years in the treatment of offenders, by its generally permissive attitude toward many kinds of crime in terms of moderate sentences, and in terms of generous and lax administration of parole and other programs. We must recognize that there is general public demand for a firming up in our administration of the law.

Just a few years ago, for example, a young woman in a rural community not far from metropolitan Toronto was kidnapped by a gang of men and held for several days while they demanded a high ransom. But this crime led only to moderate prison sentences and within a couple of years most of these kidnappers were out on parole. It is this lax attitude toward serious crimes which has aroused the concern of the public. I believe the public would generally endorse this amendment, saying, "Should a life be taken during a kidnapping, execution would be the approriate penalty." Therefore I hope that the amendment will carry.

Another reason is that we must be mindful of the way in which the threat of the death penalty can deter a potential murderer who is a kidnapper. We know that frequently kidnappers have taken the lives of those whom they have held for ransom, simply because this freed them from the threat of being identified by their victims at a later time. Having obtained the ransom, they were ruthlessly callous toward their victims. I believe they could be deterred by the threat of the death penalty. I would hope there would be general support for this amendment as an act of compassion to the kidnap victim. We see a lot of compassion for the people who commit these heinous crimes, but seldom do we shed a tear for the person whose life has been taken, perhaps after great suffering. I would hope that through compassion for that kind of person we would be prepared to offer these legal protections. Surely the law ought to be the arm by which society will protect its members against those who are really carrying on a war against society.

Similarly, the amendment calling for capital punishment in the instance of murder committed during rape calls for our support because this is an equally heinous crime, an example of heinous, indefensible murder. I hope that in the debate that may ensue nobody will mislead the House again by misrepresenting the issue, as has been done so often in the House and in committee, by pointing out how in times past there was capital punishment for theft, pickpocketing, horse thieving, and so on. I hope nobody will say that here is another example of wanting to have capital punishment for a whole series of crimes. Note, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment does not call for the addition of any more crimes; it calls for capital punishment to be invoked upon the perpetrator of the same crime, namely, murder. It is not calling for capital punishment for a kidnapper or a rapist as such, but for a murderer. It could be argued that one murder is like any other, but we have accepted in this parliament over more than a decade the distinction between capital and non-capital murder; we have accepted the distinction between one crime of murder and another—for example, between an act on impulse by someone who would not otherwise commit any crime, and a crime caused by ruthless disregard of the interests of others, the callous, lustful desire to impose one's will over others.

I believe that if we were to accept this amendment we would be moving in the direction that it is obvious an increasing majority of Canadian citizens want their government and parliament to move. It has been demonstrated by many members on both sides of the House that polls and surveys taken throughout the country have indicated a growing number of Canadians want a firming up in the administration of the law. They look upon the capital punishment issue as an example of that, because to a large degree Bill C-2 is not simply an act of legislation; it is a symbolic act, an act that symbolizes a permissive attitude on the part of many members of government who over the years have given priority to the interests of those who are committing crimes, rather than a priority to those who are their victims.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will have a change of direction here and will follow the direction that the Canadian people want us to follow. I believe that while this amendment could be called into question in this way or that, fundamentally it is pointing us in the direction that has majority support. this is not because most Canadians have some kind of blood lust that they are trying to satisfy, not because the Canadian people have a kind of sadism that they have to express through capital punishment but, rather, because the Canadian people want to put the criminal element of this country on notice that when a person takes the life of another, he risks the supreme penalty.

We might very well extend the list of crimes where capital punishment would be the penalty that could be invoked. Certainly, in the interests of protecting the lives of policemen and prison guards we have a minimum list, and in adding kidnapping and rape we are equally modest in extending the list available to us. I would therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that in line with the desires of the Canadian people, expressed on a large number of occasions, parliament would support this amendment as a demonstration to the people that we mean business, that we are going to firm up our law enforcement and that we are going to use the law as it is intended, that is, to protect society.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) to Bill C-2, amending the Criminal Code, and aimed at adding provisions to the existing legislation which stipulates that murderers of policemen or prison guards may be sentenced to death.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) certainly deserves to be congratulated for her proposal, for the government is clearly set on the total abolishment of capital punishment in Canada.

For reasons well known to the House, the amendments introduced by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) have been "withdrawn from circulation" and we have resumed our consideration of Bill C-2, to maintain in effect the existing legislation for the next five years.

● (1530)

Now the hon. member for Louis-Hébert proposes, in her amendment, the following new sub-paragraphs:

"(b) in respect of a male person, where such person causes the death of a female person while committing or attempting to commit rape, and

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that nowadays we hear so much talk about the equality of the sexes, I would also have added "in respect of a female person, where such person causes the death of a male person"—That happens too, and the law must be made equal for all.

Mr. Speaker, in sub-paragraph (c) the hon. member for Louis-Hébert proposes, and I quote:

(c) in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit an offence under section 247, or, if while committing or attempting to commit that offence, such person abandons a human being and death ensues as a consequence."

Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment that cannot be defeated. I believe, however, it will still not be sufficient. Only this morning I could read about so many squaring of accounts in the Montreal newspapers during which two or three persons were murdered last night.

Everywhere we sense a lack of security among people. People are afraid to walk the streets because of hoodlums who are not afraid anymore or scarcely afraid of the law. They are sentenced to life imprisonment. After 20 years, they are released, if not after ten years, and they cannot be rehabilitated because society is not adapted to that kind of treatment. For instance, is there a member of Parliament who would employ a former convict upon his release from prison? One would be frightened at once and would say: He is a murderer; he has been in prison and his rehabilitation is almost impossible. Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that in some cases, it may be possible, but it is often impossible, and in most of the known cases in Canada, it was impossible. Indeed, as the hon. member for Louis-Hébert said a while ago, when she made an inquiry among prison guards, asking them about their opinion, they said: If capital punishment is abolished, we quit right away. And it is true.

Recently, I took part in a hot line broadcast in Vancouver, from my hometown in Rouyn, for an hour and a half, during the broadcast of Mr. Pat Burns, whom many have known when he was in Montreal. And among the people who called me, there was not a single abolitionist.

Recently, during the program "Choc du futur" on radio station CKAC in Montreal, there was a two-hour discussion on capital punishment and the amendments submitted, and the abolition of capital punishment was firmly opposed.

I sent a questionnaire to thousands of citizens in the province of Quebec. All, without exception, were for maintaining capital punishment, but not as it was 15 or 20 years ago, when risks were taken and innocent people executed, but for capital punishment when there is infallible proof without the shadow of a doubt. If there is some doubt, then let the prisoner benefit from it. But if there is not the shadow of a doubt, Mr. Speaker, the population of Canada is not for abolishing capital punishment, and that is why I suggested to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not to take my word but to hold a referendum across Canada and ask the people what they want. The Prime Minister answered that hon. members had to take their responsibilities because they are elected to represent the people. We have not been elected to abolish capital punishment, however. This is not true.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert said earlier that hon. members who are at her far right—we are at her far right too but to the left of the chair—are in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. Yet, at the same time, they are in favour of abortion. In fact, in the name of society, of humanism, these people claim that we should not take the life of the murderer. And if a mother which has been pregnant for two, three or four months decided to abort, this would be justifiable, according to the members of the New Democratic Party. Then they will tell us that they thought about it. This is a strange way of reasoning.

I defy any hon. member of the New Democratic Party to make a random inquiry in his own riding on the timeliness of abolishing capital punishment and he will see that people are not in favour of it. This is why I am asking for a referendum. In fact we receive letters from people from all parts of the country who are opposed to the abolition of capital punishment. We receive a great number of letters from everywhere, even from former justice ministers. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), for instance, adopted a definite position against the abolition of capital punishment. Yes, we are in favour of improving law. The law must be changed not only to protect prison guards. I want my wife and my children to be protected and I want hon. members to be protected too.

If an hon. member is attacked or killed by a murderer, there is no capital punishment whereas this punishment would be given for the murder of a prison guard—I feel much sympathy for them because they are human beings like others, neither superior, nor inferior. I am for protecting these people, but I want the whole society to be protected in the same way and no treatment of favour for a few people. A law applicable to the whole Canadian people would be necessary and I am convinced that when the murderers see the sword of Damocles or the rope above their heads, they will be a little more hindered in their movements.

Mr. Speaker, we will have a chance to get back to this amendment. In fact, there are two amendments before the House and we will have the opportunity of getting back to this bill on third reading, just as we had today the opportunity of doing so in order to discuss this question again which should have been deferred till fall so that members of Parliament might go on vacation just like anyone else. But they preferred to introduce this bill at this time. We shall discuss and struggle with the best of our energy in order that this bill does not come up for third reading. As far as the amendments are concerned, we shall certainly support them because they already represent an improvement over the existing legislation which provides that only the murderer of a prison guard may be sentenced to capital punishment by a court, and this is not enough.

I repeat that every human being is entitled to live in security, has the right to feel free in a free country, and the criminals who commit murders are still responsible for their actions. And if there are people who are afraid to talk about it, I am not.

● (1540)

And earlier, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) spoke of the Laporte case. Now, to try to cover up, I think, the murder of Pierre Laporte, they are inventing things. They are trying to prove that there was collusion between Mr. Laporte and the Montreal underworld. Mr. Speaker, these are under-hand procedures and they are unworthy of human beings; and if there is proof of these things, let them produce it, but if not, they should shut up. There is nothing else to be done. However, these are unfortunate things that are happening, and Mr. Laporte is not here to defend himself. Everyone knows that.

His murder in 1970 was a sordid affair, and his murderers are now trying to pass themselves off as perfectly respectable people, as heroes. Mr. Speaker, when you are not afraid of what you have done, you do not have to hide in a rat hole. You do not have to run away if you are not afraid, if you have no reason to reproach yourself. You can face the music, or accusations, and prove that you were not there, that you were not responsible.

The murder of Pierre Laporte is a sordid murder, as well as the murder of police officers in Ville-Saint-Laurent by people dressed up as Santa Claus. It was sordid. Young girls of Cap-de-la-Madeleine or Trois-Rivières have been assaulted, raped and killed in cold blood by young hoodlums. Those crimes were also sordid and this Parliament is going to pass a legislation to save these people from the rope. Let us be logical, Mr. Speaker. If we really want to save society, this is the question I wish to ask publicly, on T.V., on the radio and here in this House: Are we to protect criminals from society or society from criminals? This is something we have to decide on.

As for a free vote in the House of Commons, I have my doubts as to the freedom which exists on some occasions. Some hon. members from the Montreal area whose constituents are strongly opposed to the abolition of capital punishment voted in favour of abolition. I warn these members that they will have to account for that in their own ridings, as I shall see to it personally. We are here to express the will of our constituents, failing which I am sure that some hon. members will lose their seats if they do not take the will of their constituents into account.

Those are the few words I had to say this afternoon; when the motion for third reading is introduced, I intend to mention examples chosen on a nation wide basis. We are going to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, in order to make some small improvements in the existing legislation. We want more improvements, more strictness and more categorical rulings as far as the law is concerned, as far as order, justice and safety for every human being in Canada are concerned.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to speak briefly against this amendment. I propose to vote against it. This will come as no surprise to those who know the firm convictions I have expressed from time to time, both in this House and elsewhere, against capital punishment and in favour of its total abolition. I do not believe it has a useful place in a civilized jurisprudence. I do not believe it works; I do not believe it deters.

The amendment has the effect of extending capital punishment even beyond the provisions of the bill, which I will support. The effect of the amendment is to extend the penalty of capital punishment to cases where death results from rape. I do not wish to be considered as making light of the horror of this offence. Indeed, I think every decent person regards the crime of rape with horror and repulsion. The very fact that it is such an emotional matter makes it necessary for us to pause and inquire whether we are improving the situation in any way by imposing capital punishment. I think the facts show the reverse.

Some members of this House are aware that up until 1955 the crime of rape was punishable by death, and at that time capital punishment was abolished. In fact, no person in Canada has been executed for that crime since confederation. I appreciate the present legislation does not attempt to apply capital punishment to all convinctions of rape, nevertheless it is a fact that that was the law for many years. For various reasons it was repulsive to the people of Canada, and even though it was part of the law of the country it in fact has not been applied since confederation. In 1955 it was abolished.

What was the result? The result was a clear demonstration that the existence of this punishment was not a deterrent in any way. Even though there was the threat that one might be executed for the commission of this offence, essentially an offence of passion and emotion, the fact is that the number of convictions decreased after the abolition of capital punishment in spite of the population increase. In 1954, the year before the abolition of capital punishment, the number of convictions for rape was 44. In 1955, the year of the repeal of the provision for capital punishment in the case of rape, the number of convictions was 46. In each year thereafter the number of convictions for rape decreased. The details can be found in a book issued by the former solicitor general entitled "Canada on Capital Punishment, New Material 1965-1972" at pages 68 and 69. I will not read the details; all I say is that what is said there clearly indicates the futility of imagining that capital punishment successfully deters the offence for which it is imposed.

There is another reason why we should be particularly cautious in this regard. Of all the crimes in the calendar, rape creates the greatest number of dubious cases, cases in which emotions can be aroused and, having been aroused, innocent people can possibly be convicted. Every member of this House knows that what sometimes appears to be rape is the result of provocation and, to be perfectly frank, the result of invitation, yet the so-called victim wishes to vindicate her reputation and charges are falsely laid. This is a very real danger. This is not the only case in which our system of justice, however excellent it may be, is not perfect. We should be wary of imposing the ultimate penalty, the deprivation of life, in cases of this nature.

In my view, and I know it may not be particularly popular, this amendment is a retrograde step, a mistaken move. It cannot and should not receive the support of this House.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, capital punishment should certainly be extended to more cases than are now covered by Bill C-2, which provides for capital punishment in the case of murder of policeman and prison guards. When speaking of rape, the previous speaker said that often it is committed as a result of invitation rather than a person seizing an opportunity. I remind the hon. member that the purpose of the amendment is not to have capital punishment for rape, and rape alone; it is for rape plus murder.

Mr. Brewin: I made that clear.

Mr. Arrol: The extension to include capital punishment for kidnapping plus murder is one which all members could well support. One of the main reasons capital punishment is necessary is that the public must feel that the power it has given to the government will be exercised for its benefit. The main purpose of capital punishment was a progressive step rather than a regressive one.

● (1550)

In olden days, if murder was committed—this goes back a century or two in the United States—involving a member of one family against another, than a blood feud was on. If murder was committed in the wild days of the west in the United States, without proper law enforcement in the vicinity, the public took it upon itself to lynch the murderer. Lynching is bad, yet it relates to a strong feeling within everyone that justice must be done. If there is a strong community feeling that a wrong has been committed against society, the community concerned will have either lynching or vigilante gangs, or will entrust justice to a government which is out to protect society. When this is not done, when you have the death sentence repeatedly commuted and when, in many of the states of the United States, you have capital punishment repealed, then you have a feeling among the public that society is not being protected. The result is that in another way the public takes the law into its own hands. When this happens, the public regards it as a democratic and constitutional right for each individual to carry a gun.

When justice does not appear to be done, and capital punishment is abolished, you then have the feeling among the public that it is not being protected by the government. Then, as in many areas of the United States, you find people with a little armoury in their homes: they have guns upstairs, downstairs and in the living-room, in order to protect themselves.

We in Canada do not have this form of individual protection, but we might well think in terms of what might happen in the future with the extension of social problems, with the feelings of one segment of the community against another, and with the general feeling of being fed-up about world situations today. It may well be that Canada, in the absence of a firm law on capital punishment, will itself become a land where there exists cities such as those now condemned in the United States. Unless we make clear to the public that we intend to protect it, there will not be a feeling among the people that their protection and security has been taken into account.

Whenever I make a speech in favour of capital punishment, I receive letters from those who speak about the hangman's noose, asking me how I would like to take over the next hanging, and so on. I should like to say that although the purpose of the bill is not to change the method of punishment, unfortunately an amendment which would change it has been disallowed on good procedural grounds. But capital punishment need be nothing more than the removal of a person in the most humane way.

When I speak in favour of capital punishment, I do not necessarily speak against a certain segment of society or look upon those who might be murderers as different from myself. I think each and every one of us in his heart, and sometimes in his actions, could be capable of murder. I think there is not one of us who has not said at some time, "I could kill that guy." If the opportunity had been present at the time of that resolution, it might well be that many more of us would be guilty of murder.

If we look into the hearts of men, and the whole idea of good and evil, we will see that in fact evil largely develops in the context of a particular time, place and society. I can see that a youth of 16, 17 or 18 in the Germany of Hitler, a youth who looked at his country and saw it was going nowhere, and whenever it made some advances having to pay money to the other side in war reparations, might well respond to the call of Hitler. That youth might be looking for an affirmation, a focus or some way in which he could be positive. He might respond to Hitler's request to follow him, and become a person dedicated to violence. That same youth of 15, 16 or 17 years living 2,000 years ago, looking for affirmation, for a purpose or for some positive way in which to live, might have responded to the call of Christ going by the shores of Galilee who said, "Follow me." Each of us has the capacity for good and evil and each of us, given the circumstances, might have answered the call 2,000 years ago to follow an individual with some purpose, while each of us in Hitler's Germany might well have become a young Nazi or a young thug.

This is why many people feel it is society that is to blame and that it is society which creates particular circumstances. Many people feel it is a person's upbringing and his home that might be to blame, and that to understand is to forgive. Yet I would say that if I ever became guilty of murder, despite the fact that I might understand why I committed the crime, and that if I were to speak to some others they might feel they understood the circumstances, knew how this built up and why I committed murder, I would still hope that somewhere, objectively, I would see the need in society to exact the supreme penalty for the supreme crime.

We can go too far in allowing democracy to go wild and in believing that everybody is as good as anybody else. We can go too far in saying that even a cruel and vicious murderer who has had a lifetime of robbery, a lifetime of being a vicious animal, someone who has robbed and who has beaten people up, if only understood and given proper encouragement could be a proper individual. I take the stand, and I think it is a true one, that there are those, no matter how you might understand their actions, who are incorrigible. They are beyond the point of being saved. To treat them well is to be regarded as a sucker.

Unless we realize there is such a thing as evil in society, then we reach the peculiar situation in which we say that if a person is not to blame for his actions which are evil, we cannot praise someone for actions which are good. This, of course, is utter nonsense. The only way in which society can function is by having law and order based on a recognition of that which is wrong.

● (1600)

If society becomes too permissive, we than have a situation in which society is blamed for everything and in which no one takes responsibility for himself. I do not want to see a situation in Canada where everyone would feel that because the government is not exercising its responsibility, everyone has a right to carry a gun. I do not want to see a situation in society in which the public will not feel justice is being done. I do not want to see a situation in society where democracy has gone wild and where anyone may feel able to do his own thing, yea even unto murder, and have the complete compassion of society. So I affirm that I am in favour of the amendment now being discussed.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to intervene very briefly in this debate. I supported the government bill during second reading and shall support it whether or not this amendment passes. However, I wish to indicate to this House that I support the amendment presented by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

Although probably in most cases the death penalty does not act as a deterrent, I am convinced there is a chance in some cases of kidnapping and perhaps in some cases of rape followed by murder that the existence of the death penalty would act as a deterrent. I do not think this very often is the case. Most of these crimes are committed by people who are not deterred by any criminal penalty. It seems to me, however, that we must look at another factor. I refer to the attitude of the general public toward law enforcement and the application of justice.

It is characteristic of this generation that more and more people tend to believe that our criminal justice system is an unfair system. I do not think this is correct. Our system today is more fair than ever before, but some aspects of it are lacking in the eyes of the general public. There are also some aspects which I believe are sorely in need of correction. The area which disturbs me most in respect of our present criminal system is the inequitable treatment accorded to the casual criminal and to the member of organized crime. It seems to me we must face up to the fact that in a modern society organized criminals are a different breed and should be treated under a different set of laws. Until we achieve this we will not have the kind of public respect we wish for the application of justice.

It is a fact that members of organized crime, rich persons or professional criminals who have resources behind them, can afford the kind of legal expertise which will enable them in almost every case to escape conviction as a result of a murder charge. The poor person has never had that chance in the past. Even with the much improved system of legal aid there is still, at least in my mind, a possibility that a person who does not have adequate financial resources conceivably could be convicted of a murder which he did not commit, because of inadequacy of his access to legal expertise.

It is really more on this basis than on any other that I consistently have supported the bill that was brought in in 1967 establishing a five-year trial period of abolition in all but two areas of murder. I also supported the present bill, and will support it regardless of what happens in respect of this amendment. But I am convinced that this House should examine its conscience with regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

Perhaps in one of three instances which come to my mind, the assassination of Mr. Laporte, the kidnapping of a young woman in my constituency last summer and her murder about 15 hours later, and the situation which occurred in Hull in which a boy was kidnapped, ransom was asked for and a day or so later the bludgeoned body of the boy was discovered, the purpose of the murder was to cover up or safeguard the identity of the person who had committed the first crime of kidnapping. In the case of both the Hull boy and the girl who had been kidnapped, I realize arguments could be made with equal force that the punishment would or would not have acted as a deterrent. I doubt very much whether either side of that argument will ever be proven conclusively.

I do not know whether my report is exact, but I understand a study was undertaken recently, within the last year or two, by an association somehow related to the office of the Solicitor General and that the result of this study showed that five out of every six persons who had been convicted of murder since 1967 did not even realize that capital punishment for all but two crimes had been abolished in 1967. That kind of conclusion does not really surprise me, but it does not dissuade me from the logical argument which I believe has been made by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert in respect of her amendment. I submit that along with this legislation, or soon after it is passed, we will have to consider changes in the approach to organized criminal activity. I think we will have to re-examine the whole way in which we approach criminal law and its application, and we will have to do it if we want to maintain the confidence of the public in our judicial system.

We will have to decide to split up our criminal law and have two categories, as I said earlier, one for the occasional criminal who when he is caught is usually so sorry about what he has done that he is prepared to plead guilty, often without the advice of lawyers—this poor guy ends up getting years, sometimes decades, in prison—and the real criminals, those who devote their lifetime to criminal activities, those who kill or rob for hire, those who can afford the very best legal advice and are able to get off with a minimum sentence. If they end up in jail, because of the expert advice they receive from their counsel they behave like the most model prisoner and are eligible for parole at the earliest possible date, because parole is largely granted on the basis of the reported behaviour of the prisoner while in prison and on the opinion of parole officers. When they get out, if they do not immediately return to criminal activities they form a sort of backdrop of assistance to organized crime.

We must think in terms of dividing our Criminal Code into categories for organized and non-organized crime. Also, in the re-examination of our parole system I urge the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) to give every consideration to the problem which I have outlined. What do you do with the organized criminal who happens to be caught and convicted in spite of all the expertise which his backers can amass? This fellow then behaves like a model prisoner and is eligible for parole quickly, even though he is not reformed. What do you do in such instances?

I would argue that with the officials one must devise a parole system that will take into consideration the kind of crime in which a person was involved prior to his conviction. If it was organized crime, there must be different parole procedures. I would also submit that in the case of individuals who show no indication of remorse for what they have done, and no wish to reform, there should not be automatic eligibility for parole. I am 100 per cent in favour of an even more liberal parole system. We should be putting more people on parole. But there is a real deficiency in the way in which we are examining convicts who become eligible for parole. I do not think we are being liberal enough with many of them; yet a large number who become eligible, in my view should never become eligible because of the nature of the crime and because they were part of organized crime or a criminal association prior to their committing the offence, and they will be looked after by this association once they get out, in one way or another—in some cases in a rather unpleasant way, but in most cases financially and otherwise.

Mr. Allmand: There are special rules now.

Mr. Watson: I would hope that these special rules would be further refined to take care of the types of criminal activity which concern me and which I think are engendering among the public at large an unreasonable lack of confidence in our judicial system. I for one believe that our judicial system is immeasurably better now than it was 50 years ago, and vastly superior to what it was 50 years before that. But having said that, I think there is no reason for us to sit back and accept that what we have is good and will be acceptable in the years to come. There is much room for improvement, and that is the area where I believe improvement can take place more effectively and in a way which will increase public confidence in our system.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this amendment I would like first of all to commend most sincerely the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) for being so courageous as to introduce this amendment for our consideration today. I believe her action demonstrates that although, presumably, some discipline has been used within the party ranks of the government to avoid such amendments, there are some hon. members who felt sufficiently strongly on this issue, including the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, that they were willing to suggest that this amendment be added to the amendments which were agreed to with respect to Bill C-2 when it was at the committee stage.

Having said that, I would like to add that while I hope to keep my remarks with respect to the amendment reasonably brief, I also hope to have an opportunity as this debate ensues to reiterate some arguments that I feel justify having the death penalty retained in Canada for at least some criminal acts. I would be the first to admit there is almost an inevitable argument raised by members in the House, and sometimes by the public, that it is necessary that this matter be decided by a free vote. It is stated that in a sense it is a matter of conscience whether or not the death penalty should be retained.

I find it very odd on the part of the government—having followed to some extent the actions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) with respect to this bill when it was referred to committee—to find now that the government still insists that there be a free vote on this matter in the House. Surely if the government, as represented by the Solicitor General, believe in abolition—as I understand the Solicitor General's representations to the standing committee, he feels there should be complete abolition—why does the government not introduce an abolitionist bill, get the party whips working and be done with it? Surely there is no question of conscience if you are suggesting that there should be no death penalty. Surely if there is no question—incidentally, I understand that the vast majority of the Liberal caucus support such an abolitionist measure—that it has nothing to do with conscience, why should the Trudeau government worry about the matter? Yet we find that the government does not have the courage to introduce a complete abolitionist measure into the House.

I can only assume that it is, therefore, not so much a matter of conscience that is disturbing the government as a matter of votes. It knows on this particular issue that it is out of step with the people of Canada, namely, the electors. For reasons that I am earnestly trying to discern, it intends, by devious means or otherwise, to have us accept a postponement of the death penalty provisions for another five years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is unfortunate that a government is so indecisive in this respect that it does not have the courage of its convictions to bring in a bill which specifically does what the government intends to do anyway, regardless of what we do in this House today, this week, or at any time with respect to the death penalty. They are abolitionists, yet they will not admit it. This is not being fair to the people of Canada. If its members are in truth part of an abolitionist government, let them stand up and be counted, and explain during the next election to the electors why they ignored the popular demand and refused to allow the death penalty to stay in our criminal procedures.

Mr. MacGuigan: They explained that during the last election.

Mr. Stevens: I am very pleased that the hon. member has made that interjection, because obviously something went wrong for them in the last election. I would suggest to him that one of the things that went wrong for the government is that people feel throughout the country that law and order has deteriorated under the Trudeau government.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): We need a Nixon.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, we need Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Which Nixon?

Mr. Stevens: Isn't it odd that the government is so obsessed with the leader of another country that even during debate on this important issue it is that leader's name that is the first name to flash into their minds when any question comes up that ministers may feel in the slightest is a little embarrassing or damaging to their position on this issue. Let me reiterate what I was saying. The fact is that the government under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) lost support in the country partly due to the fact that it did not maintain a law and order type of government during the five years it was in power.

Mr. Speaker, my point is simply that it is wrong for any government to come into this House and pretend that somehow it is a retentionist government, slip a bill through, and then at committee stage go to the lengths that the Solicitor General did to attempt to amend that bill into an abolitionist bill. I believe his true intentions, the intentions of the Prime Minister and of the government were shown clearly through those attempted actions of the Solicitor General. That is why I feel every member of the House should commend the hon. member for Louis-Hébert for introducing the amendment that we are considering today—because, bear in mind, she has done so as a member of the party that is supporting a government that is really a 100 per cent abolitionist government. I believe it is important that we first refer to the two main aspects of the hon. member's amendment. She is suggesting that the crimes punishable by death be extended to include "a male person, where such person causes the death of a female person while committing or attempting to commit rape."

During an earlier speech by the hon. member for Broadview, a member of the NDP, in which he spoke on this amendment I was most startled—

Mr. Gilbert: On this amendment?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Gilbert: I did not speak on this amendment.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may correct my mistake. I had the right party, but the wrong riding. I was referring to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Gilbert: You probably have the wrong ideas too, but go ahead.

Mr. Stevens: During his speech on this amendment I was most startled to hear him comment that he felt that somehow the death penalty was not a deterrent. I was startled because, surely, the argument as to whether the death penalty is or is not a deterrent could be used with respect to any penalty, be it imprisonment or a fine. With equal weight you could argue that the fact that people are fined for speeding on the highway, or jailed for robbing banks is not a deterrent, so why have either penalty?

I would suggest it is wrong to feel that you can distinguish between a deterrent in one sense, as long as it is not taking a life in the form of capital punishment, but in the other sense it is a deterrent if one is penalized by a fine or imprisonment. But let me be a little more specific, because I find this question of whether there is a deterrent is really one of colouring. During our consideration of Bill C-132, which deals with foreign ownership takeovers in this country, at committee stage I was rather amused, to put it mildly, to hear NDP representatives on the committee propose two amendments with respect to infractions that might ensue under that bill if it is enacted. Both of those amendments were offered by the NDP because they said they would be a better deterrent against an offence being committed. In both cases their remedy was, granted, not capital punishment but the raising of the fine from $5,000 to $100,000, and in the second case raising the fine from $10,000 to $100,000 with possible imprisonment from six months to one year. In that case the representatives of the NDP had no hesitation in indicating that this penalty was a deterrent at which all people in business would shudder, if it was ever accepted. But they now suggest, as the hon. member for Greenwood has done today, that the ultimate deterrent—you can lose no more than your life—is not a deterrent.

Having thrown out that general observation concerning the point raised by the hon. member for Greenwood, I owe it to this House to refer to the specific figures on murder which were published by Statistics Canada in 1971. They show what has transpired with respect to the number of murders reported by the police to Statistics Canada, and homicidal deaths, on a per 100,000 of population basis. In 1954, murders in Canada reported to Statistics Canada were one per 100,000, and yet by 1971—I point out each year in the interim it is almost consistently up—the rate had reached 2.2 per 100,000. Under the column "Homicidal deaths," for the year 1954, the rate is shown at 1.2 per 100,000, yet for 1971 the rate was 2.4 per 100,000—an increase of exactly 100 per cent. Mr. Speaker, how can those who say that the death penalty is no deterrent justify their stand when the facts themselves show that the death rate in this country, as far as homicidal death or murder is concerned, has gone up?

The second thing that alarmed me, if it did not dismay me, was the fact that the hon. member for Greenwood said words to the effect that the amendment before us which proposes the death penalty in cases of rape where a death has occurred should not be taken too seriously. Often, he suggested, the girl provokes or even invites the man in this situation. He seemed to pass this off rather lightly, and suggested that we must bear in mind that in many cases the poor, unfortunate rape victim wants to vindicate herself. How, after her death, she is able to do this I am at a loss to know. How can the person who is raped and dead, as she would be before this amendment would have effect, vindicate herself? Be that as it may, I should like to refer to the figures because it is so convenient to be emotional but ignore the facts.

If we look at the Statistics Canada "Murder Statistics, 1961-1970" publication we find they have a separate heading under "Murder incidents and victims". One of these headings is "Sexual assault and rape". We find that between 1961 and 1970 there were 86 victims of rape involving females. Of that number—and I believe this is significant—21 were young girls under the age of 15 years; that is, approximately one-quarter of the victims of this type of rape were girls of 15 years or less. Sixteen were in the 16 to 19 age bracket, and 19 were in the 20 to 29 age bracket.

I know it was unintentional on the part of the hon. member for Greenwood, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is unfortunate that he introduced the comment that he did in this debate. We are dealing with a situation where almost half of the rapes that might have been punishable by death, had these provisions before us today been in effect, involved young girls who should never be victims, under any circumstances, of this type of crime.

I think it is also important, when dealing with the question of the increase of crime in our country, and consequently with the lack of law and order that many people sense, to look at the figures with respect to rape to determine whether crime has actually been rising. Has the number of murder incidents increased? Here, again, I should like to refer to the Statistics Canada figures which show that in 1970, 21 incidents of sexual assault and rape involving murder were committed, compared to three such incidents in 1961. I would also point out that in the past five years the murder incidents involving rape as far as females are concerned totalled 60 victims, compared to 26 victims in the previous five years. If nothing else, these figures certainly cannot be taken by those who intend to vote against this amendment as supporting their contention that crimes of this nature are on the downswing.

If I may, I should now like to touch on the second aspect of the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. This deals with crimes attempted or committed under section 247 of the Criminal Code. Here again she suggests that the death penalty should apply if death ensues from such a person being abandoned during a kidnapping, or as a result of the kidnapping. I feel this aspect of the amendment should be supported because, surely, unlike the situation referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood concerning rape, there can be no suggestion of the absence of premeditation in the case of kidnapping. Surely few crimes which can result in death and murder are as clearly premeditated as kidnapping.

I agree that skyjacking that has been capturing public attention for several days in the Middle East is not kidnapping in the normal sense in which that type of crime is generally understood. I would suggest however, that in a way skyjacking is the modern, 1970s type of kidnapping. Surely nobody in this House feels that the law should not be as strict as possible against those who have held the lives—in that case, of over 100 people—at bay for whatever reasons they feel are justified.

I am making the point, Mr. Speaker, that there is no more clear crime which could result in murder and which has a premeditated aspect to it than kidnapping. For that reason I again commend the hon. member for proposing her amendment to this House, and I urge hon. members to vote for it when it comes to a vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret, indeed, to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He could, however, continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Some hon Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. Is the House ready for the question? The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert).

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to participate in this debate. I spoke at length on second reading of the bill and participated in the debate at committee stage, and thought I had set my views forth so that it would not be necessary to speak again. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) prompted me to speak, but more especially what prompted me were the remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol), the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

I fully appreciate why a woman would be concerned with the crimes of rape and kidnapping. I think they have a certain hangup with regard to those particular crimes. I believe there is an emotional involvment and women feel they may be the victim at some time, and this seems to blur their thinking with regard to the general principle of capital punishment. I am sure, even though the hon. member for Louis-Hébert has brought forward her amendment in all sincerity, that she will agree that many women have such an emotional interest in rape and kidnapping that they find it difficult to be rational about the problem.

Let me mention the argument of the hon. member for Scarborough East. He is a biblical scholar who represents the Anglican Church and lectures at university. He is well aware of the distinction between the Old Testament and the New Testament. In the Old Testament there are words to the effect, "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord". The hon. member for Scarborough East made a slight change: his version would be, "Vengeance is mine, saith the hon. member for Scarborough East." He tried to bring feelings of rage, passion and retribution to bear on the subject.

I would have thought that the biblical scholar from Scarborough East would prefer to move from the Old Testament to the New Testament and adopt some of the teachings of the carpenter from Galilee. He taught that we should show forgiveness, understanding, compassion and love. But the hon. member did not dwell on those teachings. Does he not appreciate history, which shows mankind as moving from barbarism to enlightenment? He does not appreciate that in the past there was a whole catalogue of crimes for which capital punishment was the penalty. In our forward movement we have reduced the number of crimes for which a man can be put to death in Canada to two, the murder of a prison guard and of a policeman on duty.

An hon. Member: We did that in the past.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, we did that in the past. That is what we have done in Canada. What has been done in the United States? I ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the hon. member for Scarborough East, and the hon. member for York East to look at what has been done in the United States. What has that country done with regard to capital punishment? It wants to see it abolished. And on what basis? On the basis that it constitutes cruel, inhuman and unjust treatment. Within the last six months the Supreme Court of the United States, in pronouncing on this problem, has made this finding. I think that Canada ought to follow the enlightened direction given by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Whicher: That is the only country following that pronouncement.

Mr. Gilbert: I ask the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) to look at what has been done in England. A few years ago that country passed a law very similar to the one we are attempting to pass today. After an experiment lasting ten years, I believe, a motion was moved in England for abolishing completely capital punishment, and that motion passed with a great majority supporting it.

An hon. Member: Not so.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, with respect, it is so. Our friends in the United States and in England have pronounced in an enlightened way on capital punishment. On the basis of their experience and reasoning that is the conclusion they have come to. But we in Canada, especially some of my friends in the Conservative Party and particularly the biblical scholar from Scarborough East, want to retain capital punishment on the basis of fear, prejudice and retribution. That is not worthy of them; it is not worthy of Canadians. I ask the hon. member for Scarborough East to find out what the Anglican Church has pronounced with regard to capital punishment. That church has said that capital punishment should be abolished totally, and it is supported by the major churches in the country. Yet the hon. member for Scarborough East wants to impose this terrible punishment, this terrible passion, this terrible retribution.

The hon. member for York East made the point that the Canadian public will not feel protected if we do not accept this amendment regarding rape and kidnapping ensuing in death. He suggests we will be doing a disservice to Canadians if we do not give them full protection. Mr. Speaker, one of the things I am proud to say about Canada is that Canadians feel secure within their society. There is no evidence to show that they do not feel protected. The people of those states of the United States, and of England, where total abolition has been brought in are protected. The policeman in the United Kingdom does not even carry a gun.

Directing my attention to the question of rape and kidnapping, I am sure that most people who commit such heinous crimes are mentally or physically ill. Any jury trying such a case would find, in most instances, that the accused person is mentally or physically ill. Yet out of our feelings of vengeance we want to impose the death penalty on these people. I do not think it is worthy of us to do so, more especially in view of the enlightened methods we have for treating these people. I would think we should want to see establlished a system of penology with concepts of rehabilitation and reformation rather than what is suggested by the amendment. Such a system would be based on reformation rather than retribution. People who are ill and who have committed such crimes should be subjected to the type of treatment that is necessary.

I am sure the hon. member for Louis-Hébert would agree that the amendment will not act as a deterrent. Of course, there have been many arguments for and against with regard to deterrence and it is safe to say, I think, that in the final analysis capital punishment acts neither one way nor the other. It really boils down to the particular person concerned. You will find in most cases involving rape and kidnapping that the person committing the crime is both mentally and physically ill.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Watson) talked about the parole system and suggested we have reached the stage where there should be a difference in the treatment of organized criminals and persons who are first offenders. The distinction he tried to draw, I suggest, is an impossible one. I suggest that our parole system should move in the direction of giving some hope, some chance to the parolee. We commit human error in some cases. What has happened in the past year or so has underlined some of the errors we have made. But this is life, Mr. Speaker. This is the purpose of taking a chance with regard to people. We have to exercise a certain faith and trust. It is impossible to categorize people with regard to the offences they have committed.

I was rather amused by the hon. member for York-Simcoe who said the members of the Liberal Party were almost total abolitionists. I certainly wish they were. We would not have some of the difficulties we are experiencing today. The hon. member suggested the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) made a grave error with regard to the amendments he submitted to the committee. I would like to tell the hon. member that when the amendments are submitted to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, the spokesman for the New Democratic Party fully supported them. The spokesman for the Progressive Conservative Party also supported them.

Mr. Stevens: He was not our spokesman.

Mr. Gilbert: The usual spokesman.

Mr. Lawrence: He said he was speaking for himself.

Mr. Gilbert: I will accept that, but he is the usual spokesman. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) spoke personally in favour of the amendments.

Mr. Lawrence: He is not the spokesman of the Conservatives.

Mr. Gilbert: There seems to be some debate as to who is the Conservative spokesman. The spokesman was the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. To put the total blame on the Solicitor General is most unfair, and certainly is not true. He had a great deal of support within the committee with regard to the amendments he proposed. Unfortunately, and we all accepted the verdict, they did not carry. However, the hon. member for York-Simcoe should not place the total blame on the Solicitor General.

I notice the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin) is in the chamber. He is a former Crown counsel in the city of Ottawa. He has probably handled many rape and kidnapping cases. I would like to hear his views on this matter. I have suggested that many persons convicted of rape or kidnapping are mentally or physically ill. This has been my experience. Your Honour has experience in criminal law and may have drawn the same conclusion. I would like to hear a former Crown counsel speak with regard to this particular amendment and give us the benefit of his experience on the question of rape and kidnapping. He knows that in many rape cases there is a great deal of invitation and provocation. These are surrounding circumstances. But in most cases the persons who commit these offences have disordered minds. I would like to hear the views of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

The hon. member for York East spoke of the good and evil concept in society. I suppose most of us are an amalgamation of both good and evil. Surely the pursuit of man should be the attainment of good. The principles we follow should be toward attaining good. Perhaps this is the reason why the members of the New Democratic Party are so progressive with regard to this subject. We want the type of society which is based on man's goodness, enlightenment and achievement toward goodness. I cannot see any way of controlling evil by wreaking vengeance on a fellow human being, swelling within the human mind and soul hatred, passion and prejudice of one man toward another. I cannot picture that type of society.

I notice there are only two minutes left before private members' hour. I will summarize briefly what I feel with regard to this amendment. I am sure it was brought forward with good intentions, but the mover has the mistaken conception that it will in some way act as a deterrent. I respectfully submit that the whole basis of the amendment is fear. You cannot develop with any success a society which is based on fear. I ask the mover of this amendment to look at the experience in the United States and England to see whether their thinking and experience is the type we should have in this country. In the final analysis, what we want is a better Canada and a protected Canada. This amendment will not produce that result.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member entertain a question?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Stevens: Does the hon. member disagree that the bill before us today, which has been sponsored by the Solicitor General, is an entirely different measure from the bill referred to at Westminster, which was simply a Conservative backbencher's bill to attempt to restore capital punishment and was handled simply as a private member's bill?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, in all honesty I am not familiar with the content of the motion that was dealt with at Westminster. I am familiar with the previous bill that was the law of England. The law of England said that capital pusnishment was abolished. The motion by the backbencher was to reinstate capital punishment. That motion was defeated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—National Capital Commission—Alleged notification to municipalities that dumping on its lands will be prohibited in 1974; the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly)—Housing—Alleged poor construction of Bal-Mon Homes, Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan—Request for investigation; the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark)—Information Canada—Suggested disbandment—Government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTION THAT CANADIAN CONTRIBUTORS RECEIVE BENEFITS WHEN UNEMPLOYED OUTSIDE OF CANADA

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove the inequity whereby a contributor under the act, who is not resident in Canada, cannot receive benefits upon becoming unemployed outside of Canada and, in fact, receives no benefit from those contributions upon returning to Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my notice of motion asks the government to remove the inequity whereby a contributor under the Unemployment Insurance Act, who is not resident in Canada, cannot receive benefits upon becoming unemployed outside Canada and, in fact, receives no benefit from those contributions upon returning to Canada.

It seems to me that by regulation the government should simply not deduct unemployment insurance contributions from persons outside Canada who cannot, under the act, receive benefits. As far as I am concerned, this is a very straightforward matter, but I am sure from conversations I have had with some of my colleagues opposite they will confuse the matter and it will not be as simple as I see it.

This whole matter came to my attention early this year, in January in fact, when a constituent normally residing in my riding of Halton-Wentworth received orders to proceed overseas with our Canadian armed forces to Europe. As my constituent is a member of the armed forces and his wife moved with him to Europe, upon receiving his notice to move, my constituent's wife applied for unemployment insurance on the assumption that having contributed to the UIC for 12 years she would be entitled to receive benefits for the prescribed period of weeks. She then found she must be resident in Canada in order to collect unemployment insurance.

It is not uncommon for persons, having contributed to the unemployment insurance fund for a number of years, to feel entitled to collect at least their contributions or a specific amount of money. We do this for people who upon reaching age 65 apply for a pension. They are directed to the UIC by Manpower and told they can collect three weeks' benefits. In the case of my constituents, who had contributed for a period of 12 years, she felt she was entitled to collect some of her contribution. She wrote to the UIC and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but received little satisfaction. For that reason I put the notice of motion on the order paper. I think it would be appropriate for me to read into the record the letter my constituent wrote the Prime Minister on December 14, 1972. She said, if I may be allowed to quote:

Dear Sir:

Being so far away from home, we Canadians overseas seem to lose all contacts with our government and its policies. The following incident with which I have been faced has made me wonder what "A Just Society" really is. Our government has so often used this term over the last few years and I must say that I truly believed they intended to implement this policy. However, the situation in which I was personally involved has raised doubts in my mind.

My husband is a member of the Canadian armed forces and last July was transferred to CFB Europe. Before our departure for Europe, I inquired through the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Quebec City as to my entitlement to unemployment insurance since I had to resign from my position due to my husband's transfer. I had, up to this date, worked for 12 years in Canada and had therefore been paying unemployment insurance for all those years without, at any time, collecting any unemployment insurance. I was advised that because I would not be a resident of Canada, I was not entitled to any benefits. I found this quite unfair since the government of Canada was my husband's employer and the government was the party sending my husband to Europe. He was not coming to Europe for a trip or holiday but to work here as a Canadian, as a member of the Canadian armed forces on a Canadian base. But I was formally told that I had no right to any benefits. Who is really entitled to Canadian benefits? I have known many wives and mothers back in Canada who went to work for a period of time and then resigned purposely because, as they would quote, "It pays a lot more to stay home and collect unemployment insurance than to work all the time." Is this what you call "just"? After 12 years of continuous work and paying unemployment insurance, I am refused a benefit and yet a person who goes to work for one year with the idea that after this period she will resign and stay home collecting unemployment insurance.

However, I left Canada and although I was not in agreement with this policy, there was nothing I could do about it. After I arrived here, I went to work at CFB Europe for a short period but had to resign because of my child. When I received my pay, I noticed that Canadian income tax and pension were deducted from my pay. This seemed strange to me after being told in Canada that I was not considered to be a resident of Canada, but I was truly shocked to notice that unemployment insurance dues were indeed deducted from my pay. The government was not willing to consider me for benefits here but they were most willing to enrich their treasury with all those deductions.

She went on to make a few other remarks which I do not think would be appropriate to read into the record. I read this letter with a great deal of interest. My only purpose in putting this matter on the order paper was to try to clarify what I consider to be an injustice. I have checked the matter with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and find that indeed you receive no benefits for your contributions while outside Canada; but on return to Canada, after waiting for a period of eight weeks you can collect benefits. This in no way relates to the fact that you were employed and contributing outside the country.

I believe it would be unreasonable to expect the government to pay unemployment insurance benefits to people employed outside Canada, as I do not think you could control this situation. I am prepared to accept that fact. But surely it is just as unreasonable and unjust to ask a person employed outside Canada to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund with the full knowledge that they cannot collect benefits because they are not resident in Canada. The clear solution seems to me to be just to stop deducting UIC premiums from persons employed outside Canada who cannot collect benefits because they are not resident in Canada.

That is about the sum and substance of what I have to say on the subject. This is something the government could rectify by regulation. I do not think it is political in any way, shape or form, but I think it is an injustice. I do not suggest it was done deliberately, but was perhaps an oversight on the part of the government and the commission. I cannot help but feel my constituent has a just case. She has every right to be heard, and when she could not get satisfaction from other avenues of approach she wrote me. I have taken this opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the Parliament of Canada in the hope that the department or the parliamentary secretary will convey this injustice to the minister, an injustice which I believe should be rectified.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to comment on the case the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) has brought to our attention. I should like to remind him that the unemployment insurance scheme is an insurance scheme. If you owned an automobile and paid insurance on it for ten years, and at the end of that period sold it and swore that you would never again own an automobile, the insurance company would not give you back your insurance money.

The motion before the House suggests that the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove the inequity whereby a contributor, who is not resident in Canada, cannot receive benefits upon becoming unemployed outside the country, and in fact receives no benefit from these contributions upon returning to Canada.

I should like to point out various aspects of the motion. I think the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth in his comments said that the person who comes back to Canada can indeed collect some insurance, but I should like to point out and emphasize that it is clear that the premise of the motion is partly unfounded in another aspect and it is really quite untrue, as the hon. member himself has pointed out. I wish to deal first with the inaccuracy. The motion states that an unemployed person who has become unemployed outside Canada cannot receive benefits from unemployment insurance even upon returning to this country. This part of his motion is inaccurate.

Mr. Kempling: Do not play with words.

● (1710)

Mr. Stollery: In fact, the contributor once he comes back to Canada, is perfectly within his right to file a claim.

Mr. Kempling: After eight weeks. You did not listen to what I said.

Mr. Stollery: I am reading the part of the motion which says that he cannot receive benefits from his contributions upon returning to Canada. I am pointing out to the hon. member that as I understand it, a person who comes back to Canada after a period abroad can in fact claim unemployment insurance.

Mr. Kempling: No. Check with the Unemployment Insurance Commission.;

Mr. Stollery: Persons who return to Canada upon becoming unemployed, or who become unemployed upon their return to Canada, are covered by the contributions made when outside the country. I must say I fail to understand the point in respect of the woman who went overseas and who seemed to be concerned because she did not receive a refund of her unemployment insurance payment.

Mr. Kempling: That is not it at all.

Mr. Stollery: A major reason for establishing universal coverage in the act was to ensure that all persons working in insurable employment, whether inside or outside Canada, would benefit from the program. If the hon. member would do his research, I think that is what he would find. But I should like to explain another important area where contributors under the act will receive benefit outside Canada. That is in relation to the reciprocal arrangements which Canada has with the United States. I would direct the attention of the hon. member to those arrangements. Section 12 of the Unemployment Insurance Act grants authority to the commission to establish agreements with other countries. Part of this section reads as follows:

> With the approval of the governor in council, the commission may, notwithstanding any other provision of this act, enter into agreements with the governments of other countries to establish reciprocal arrangements on matters relating to unemployment insurance.

Sections 34 and 37 of the Unemployment Insurance Act stipulate that recipients of unemployment insurance benefits who do not reside in Canada are not entitled to those benefits which are determined by national and regional unemployment rates. They are entitled specifically to benefits accrued by virtue of the length of their labour force attachment. As the hon. member knows, Canada is divided into areas, and if those figures go to over 4 per cent the rate of unemployment insurance alters. It is very clearly pointed out that people who are subject to the reciprocal arrangements that Canada has, specifically with the United States, are entitled to benefits accruing by virtue of their labour force attachment. At the present time Canada has reciprocal arrangements with the United States in matters of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Kempling: What about Germany?

[Mr. Stollery.]

Mr. Stollery: The Canadian-American reciprocal agreement is an administrative arrangement whereby the American states, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and Canada—I will get to Germany in a moment, if the hon. member will be patient—take each other's claims on interstate forms but payments to claimants are made by the liable state or country authority; that is, the place where the claimant acquired his unemployment insurance credits pays him his benefits under the terms of its act which governs unemployment insurance. The place where the claimant resides while claiming benefits ensures his availability for employment and may recommend his disqualification to the liable state if, in their opinion, the claimant is not meeting the provisions of the act which would determine his benefits. Benefits, then, are paid by the country where the credit was established, and not by the country in which the claimant is seeking employment. The volume of traffic between Canada and the United States is about equal—I think this refers specifically to what the hon. member was suggesting about Germany—and therefore the time and cost of administration is also about equal.

There is another circumstance in which a Canadian claimant in a foreign country is covered by the unemployment insurance scheme; that is, if he falls sick in a foreign country, the regulations state that his period of actual hospitalization in a foreign country is covered by the Canadian unemployment insurance program. I should like to deal for a moment with the coverage provisions of the present act and the relationship of those provisions to persons employed outside this country. The provisions of section 52 of the legislation are a carry-over of the old act and read as follows:

> The employment of a person outside Canada, other than a person employed on a ship or vessel as described in section 51, is included in insurable employment where that person:
> (a) normally resides in Canada,
> (b) is employed outside Canada or partly outside Canada by an employer who is a resident or has a place of business in Canada, and
> (c) would be employed in insurable employment if such employment were in Canada, and
> (d) is not employed in employment that is insurable under the laws of the country in which he is employed.

The impact of section 52 was greatly increased by the provision of the new act which, because of the universal nature of coverage, included members of the Canadian armed forces and the public service. I am sure we remember the protests of a few years ago when this universal aspect was being considered by, for example, people in the nursing profession who felt they should not have to pay unemployment insurance and who now, I think, are content to pay because, of course, if they become unemployed they are eligible.

When you consider the various alternatives relating to payments to Canadians abroad, there are a number of solutions which are possible that would continue the universal coverage of the program as well as allow us to pay benefits to those who are contributing under the act wherever they may be. The following are a few possibilities. First, we could enter into reciprocal agreements with all countries—this, I think, is what the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth is suggesting—because surely reciprocity is the most important aspect. If we are to have an unemployment insurance scheme which becomes part of the West German scheme, we must have a reciprocal agreement. This, of course, would be true of all countries.

Another possibility would be that we could repeal section 45 of the act and make the benefit payable to residents of all countries who have sufficient Canadian credits to qualify, whether or not they are Canadian citizens. Another possibility would be for us to eliminate coverage for those persons identified in section 52, or we could provide for the payment of sickness and maternity benefits to persons living in foreign countries, provided they otherwise qualify.

Now I would like to say a few words about reciprocal arrangements, which are a little more complex than the hon. member would imply. For example, a reciprocal agreement with a foreign country could consist of several alternatives. The Unemployment Insurance Commission could pay benefits to persons who have established eligibility, according to the Unemployment Insurance Act, while employed in Canada and have gone to a foreign country with the intention of seeking employment in that country. The other country could pay unemployment insurance benefits to persons who established the right to benefits while employed in that country and then came to Canada, or Canada could pay benefits to persons who immigrate to Canada from a foreign country who are unable to find suitable employment on arrival and who have built up unemployment insurance credits in their country. Another possibility would be for the other country to pay benefits to persons who have obtained unemployment insurance credits in Canada, who went to the foreign country and were unable to find suitable employment upon arrival.

At the moment Canada does not entertain reciprocal arrangements with any other jurisdiction except the United States. To enter into such reciprocal agreements with foreign governments would have serious implications which, of course, we would want to consider. In fact, Canada has been approached by both the United Kingdom and Italy to enter into reciprocal arrangements with the Canadian Unemployment Insurance Commission. Essentially, the proposal of the United Kingdom advocated that both countries recognize contributions under the unemployment insurance plan of the other country for the purpose of rates and duration, and the country where the claimant was residing and unable to find employment would pay him unemployment insurance benefits. In the negotiations, the commission indicated that they were not prepared at that time to enter into a reciprocal agreement which would require the commission to recognize the United Kingdom contributions as a qualification for receiving benefits from the Canadian unemployment insurance plan. Part of the rationale for this position—I am sure the hon. member would agree with this—was that the traffic is mainly one way; most people come from the United Kingdom to Canada looking for work.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member cannot raise a point of order unless he is seated in his own place.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, when I was making the various points I was not referring to reciprocal arrangements with the United States, the United Kingdom or any other country. The simple point I made was that the government was deducting unemployment insurance from someone from whom it should not be deducted; that is all.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I also wish to rise on the point of order. The House is not considering the hon. member's words, although we listened to his words with great interest, but the motion which is before us; and the motion is not as limited as the speech was. Therefore I would argue that the comments which the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) was making are very much in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member will admit that all these points are not points of order but, rather points of debate, I do not think the hon. member was straying from the motion before us, and I think he should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to try to respond to the hon. member's speech. I can only respond to the motion, and I am afraid that is a limitation I must accept in pointing out the error of his ways. I was explaining that the rationale for the position that the Unemployment Insurance Commission is not prepared to enter into an agreement with the government of the United Kingdom is that most people come from the United Kingdom to Canada. This would work to the detriment of Canada. People would be able to come from the United Kingdom to Canada, become eligible for unemployment insurance and then return to the United Kingdom and collect unemployment insurance there after eight weeks' of work in Canada. I think people would find that objectionable.

Another central issue was the fact that there would be difficulty in administering any such agreement, and the effective administration that would be required would be very expensive. Also, it was felt that the difference in currencies would cause a problem. I might add that the commission's views have been fairly well received and the United Kingdom has not pursued this position very strongly.

With regard to the government of Italy, they have approached the Unemployment Insurance Commission with a view to establishing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), not so much for the logic of his motion—although he is usually a logical fellow—but for going to bat for his constituency as a good member should. After all, what he is doing is trying to help his constituents rip-off unemployment insurance, as everybody else is doing.

Perhaps what we should be discussing is some kind of entitlement. This is really what his constituent is saying in between the lines in her letter—"Everybody is ripping off the unemployment insurance, so why not me?" The reason I rise to speak on this is that I think there are some things that need to be said.

I have witnessed many occasions since the last election when Conservative members and others have risen to denounce the inequities under the Unemployment Insurance Act, telling how the administration is prosecuting so and so, bringing the law to bear on so and so, being unjust, and behaving mercilessly. Yet the Conservatives were the party that virtually fought the last election on a campaign against abuses of the Unemployment Insurance Act, saying how they hoped to clean it up.

Mr. Kempling: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is absolutely twisting what has been said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is no point of order.

Mr. Kempling: There is no case of anybody ripping off anything. What my constituent is asking is that unemployment insurance premiums not be deducted from her income. She does not want to pay in, and she does not want to collect from unemployment insurance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why did you not make your speech while you had the floor?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I wish to remind hon. members that they should not take advantage of points of order or points of privilege to try to explain or rectify the arguments they have made in their speeches. Hon. members are entitled to their own interpretations of speeches, and as long as they follow the rules and regulations of the House and stay within the subject matter of the debate, they should be allowed to continue their speeches without intervention.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear to the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), who I am sure will send a copy of his speech to his constituent to indicate how he has gone to bat for her, that he at no time suggested she was ripping off the unemployment insurance. The hon. member was putting her case forward as a legitimate complaint for this House to consider, and I hope nothing I have said suggested anything else. But I am suggesting that what his constituent is saying is, "Everybody is ripping off the act, why not me? I am contributing; I am entitled to take it. She has pointed out that people contribute under the act for eight weeks and then collect maternity benefit. I say that the hon. member's constituent is absolutely right, that the act is being ripped off right, left and centre.

When the amending act was introduced by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) I may have been the only member of the House who rose to criticize it sharply.

At that time I said it was no longer an Unemployment Insurance Act, and that by no stretch of the imagination was it an insurance program. I said it had become a giant welfare scheme. Events subsequent to that have demonstrated the truth of what I said. The trouble is that a lot of people are collecting unemployment insurance as if it were a welfare program, treating it as supplemental income. These are people who would be horrified if they had to go down to city hall to make an application for welfare.

The point here is that the hon. member's constituent who wrote him a letter is saying, "I am making contributions and I cannot get any benefits." I ask in which way is she different from many people who are making contributions and not getting benefits? I say there is no more sense to the act. There is no more relationship between the contributions people pay under the act and the benefits they receive.

What we have in this country are people who go to work, punch the clock, work conscientiously at what they are doing, while many other people, some of them legitimately unemployed but many of them unemployed strictly by choice, prefer to collect unemployment insurance rather than work. Something has to be done about this because moral decay sets into society when this takes place.

What was once a great Unemployment Insurance Act that I supported and that many others supported because we felt it gave people the income maintenance that was necessary has now become an entirely different thing. Anyone who rises in the House and tries to relate the premiums to the benefits, or the risks to the premiums, is really off the point. We should not even call them premiums. It has no relationship to an insurance program. It is straightforward taxation that we are imposing on people, and we might as well call it taxation. If we are going to continue with this system, then I say let us get rid of all premiums and simply add the cost to the tax system. It would be a fairer way.

Who are the people who are abusing the act? They are not particularly the poor. A lot of them are middle class people with a somewhat superior education who have learned every single line and comma in the act. They know to the day how long they have to work in order to qualify, and how long it takes to collect benefits. They make a very simple calculation to cover an eight week period. They say, "It is going to cost me something like $10, and I will get $1,500 back." What kind of justice is there in a society that permits that kind of thing to go on? The girl who cannot go to work for the necessary number of qualifying weeks because she is pregnant will not get benefits. But somebody who is smart enough can rip off the system for $1,500.

While it may not be a very popular thing to do to stand up and denounce the act, I think it is necessary for somebody to bring this matter up. What is the point in fishermen being included under the provisions of the act? Insurance is supposed to take care of unpredictable hazards. What is unpredictable about fishermen being unemployed?

If all fishermen were poor, of course, people would understand that this is a form of income maintenance; but many fishermen—and here I am talking about west coast fishermen—earn more in the few months they are working than some guys will earn working a whole year in a factory. They work for a few months and collect unemployment insurance for the rest of the time. Up until recently that was not taxable income. At least now it is taxable income.

I remember the time when people in jobs were using seniority in order to hang on to their jobs. But when the time comes that people use their seniority in order to get laid off so that they can collect unemployment insurance, then I say our society and the motivations at work in our society have to be looked at again.

It is not a question that people do not understand. I have many people who call me and ask about their rights under the Unemployment Insurance Act. When they are talking to me they may say, "I guess you are not very happy about what I am doing. I am not happy either. I know I am ripping it off, but then everybody is doing it."

An hon. Member: Everybody is not doing it.

Mr. Saltsman: I am saying that there are tremendous abuses of the act the way things are set up now. In effect, it has become a disaster area. The time has probably come when it must be changed from a separate attempt to maintain income and become a far more comprehensive program that includes income for all kinds of losses, integrated with workmen's compensation and other plans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but he is engaging in a rather wide examination of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I think he should return as quickly as possible to the motion that is in front of us, which is really directed to one special type of case covered by the act, as put forward by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can understand your concern. If I have ranged somewhat widely it was for the purpose of demonstrating how ridiculous it was to try to make any change in the Unemployment Insurance Act in this case.

In effect the motion is an attempt to point out that there is an abuse in the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Payments are being collected from some people who simply have no way of collecting benefits. What I am suggesting to the hon. member who moved this motion is that to argue anything on a rational basis to try to get an adjustment of the provisions of this act is pouring water into a sieve.

I want to conclude what I have to say but I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will appreciate why it had to be put in that somewhat larger context. We now have a situation that we are paying for because a former minister of the Crown could not get his way in cabinet in terms of economic policies and he was going to solve all of the welfare problems of our society in one fell swoop through unemployment insurance. The consequences of that attempt have been very harsh and have changed in many ways the psyche of our society very much for the worse. I think it is time that some serious corrections to the Unemployment Insurance Act were made, though not along the line of suggestions made today because something far more fundamental will be required.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons I have enjoyed listening to the the contribution of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) and the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) is that the positions which they have suggested this afternoon are not typical of those their parties normally take. I recognize, of course, that the Conservative Party has tried to play it both ways on unemployment insurance. Normally, I think, the majority of them like to come down on the tough side, but here we have the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth pleading for more benefits. By contrast we have the member from the New Democratic Party taking a tough line on unemployment insurance. Knowing that he is somewhat an individualist, I am not sure that he presages the views of his party on all points involving unemployment insurance, but it is interesting to hear such views from that corner of the House.

The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth began by saying the this was a very straightforward matter and he thought we would make it too complicated. I may say that is just what we have to do, not because we are making it complicated but because the facts and legislation do so. The presentation that the hon. member gave is somewhat too simple for the situation. I refer to the inaccuracies both in the motion and in the comments which he made this afternoon. There are some five or six of these which change his perspective considerably.

I should like to begin by quoting from the notice of motion, which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act, to remove the inequity whereby a contributer under the Act, who is not resident in Canada, cannot receive benefits upon becoming unemployed outside of Canada and, in fact, receives no benefit from those contributions upon returning to Canada.

The first objection I would take is to the last clause in the motion which states that a person who is not resident in Canada and has paid contributions receives no benefit from these contributions upon returning to Canada. Mr. Speaker, that is not so. In his spoken remarks this afternoon, I take it that the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth was repudiating the statement in his motion and suggesting—

Mr. Kempling: Not at all.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member says "Not at all", but the suggestion orally was not that no benefits could be obtained but that there was a 12-week wait. It seems to me that is a contradiction of what he suggests in his motion.

Mr. Kempling: I said 8-week.

Mr. MacGuigan: Well, I took down the figure 12 at the time the hon. member said it. In any event, he is wrong on both counts, whether he is saying that there are no benefits when they return to Canada or is suggesting that they must wait for 12 weeks or 8 weeks. Such a person is in exactly the same position as anybody else who contributes; he has the normal waiting period, and providing he has the proper amount of insurable weeks of contribution during the previous year, he has no more waiting period than any other person. There is no requirement for requalification either. That is a very considerable limitation on the picture which the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth painted at the beginning.

There are also some qualifications to be made which considerably change the first part of the motion before us. To refer to the words and the clause just before the one I previously referred to, the motion reads:

> . . . a contributor . . . who is not resident in Canada, cannot receive benefits upon becoming unemployed outside of Canada . . .

That is not true in all cases, and again these limitations are of considerable importance. The first of these, as the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) has pointed out, is that where there is a reciprocal arrangement with another country, there is an exception. The United States is the only country with which we have a reciprocal arrangement at the present time. Another exception mentioned by the hon. member for Spadina was where a Canadian claimant in a foreign country falls sick and requires hospitalization in that foreign country. During his period of actual hospitalization in the foreign country he is covered by the Canadian unemployment insurance program.

There is a third and important exception which is in the process of being established, and this we could not have expected to have come to the attention of the hon. member of Halton-Wentworth because it is not yet entirely a matter of law. I can say this afternoon on behalf of the minister and the unemployment insurance commission that there is the intention to make this further change with respect to sickness and maternity benefits. The new policy would make provision for claimants abroad to claim sickness or maternity benefits providing their residency abroad was due to their participation in insurable employment or their spouse's participation in insurable employment. It follows, of course, that the individuals would also have to qualify in their own right.

The unemployment insurance commission has adopted a policy which can be implemented by regulation. Administrative procedures are now in the process of being worked out and the policy is expected to be implemented in short order. The bulk of the claimants for whom serious questions have been raised include service men and women, members of the Canadian public service abroad, and employees of Canadian multinational corporations who are working in insurable employment abroad.

The proposed solution, which would allow for the payment of sickness and maternity benefits, would not necessitate reciprocal agreements with other countries concerned and, therefore, would not have any of the disadvantages which might be attached to paying regular benefits. The individuals concerned could file their claims through a Canadian office designated to handle such claims. There would be no need to police availability as entitlement would be based on the adequacy of medical evidence. The act would not have to be amended and administratively we could expect, particularly in large armed forces bases overseas, that the staff would receive some training material which would enable them to assist claimants in making application.

Finally, there would be no need to seek a change in the coverage regulations which are the responsibility of the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, as the commission could implement this change by amendment to section 169 of the regulations.

It should be recognized, Mr. Speaker, that for the most part Canadians who are serving abroad and who are in insurable employment have contracts of service with employers, mainly with the Canadian government, which would not leave them unemployed overseas. Any termination would include transportation back to Canada. In this event, the individual concerned could file a claim and would be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits as if his credits were established in Canada. Those people who go overseas will become eligible for maternity benefits; for example, a servicewoman who, while granted leave without pay by the armed forces, receives no further remuneration would be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits while abroad for the designated 15 week period. This would also hold true for those persons who became sick and could establish that fact by medical evidence. Since there is no need in these cases to establish availability or capability, then there would be no difficulty in paying these persons without the need for reciprocal arrangements which would cause administrative and other difficulties.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this policy has recently been adopted by the unemployment insurance commission and it is the intention of the commission and the minister to change the regulations to implement the policy. This matter had been brought forcefully to the attention of the minister and the commission by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) on behalf of armed forces employees. As a result of this and other representations it was decided that a change in the regulations should be sought. However, to make the change on the broader scale suggested by the motion would, it seems to me, open a can of worms that would be very difficult to deal with.

We have had UIC problems in this country. For example, as hon. members know, there have been difficulties in enforcing all the regulations and ensuring that claimants are available for work. We must recognize that there are not any officers of the department in Europe who act in a policing capacity. Unless we enter into reciprocal arrangements with European countries, we could not take advantage of their services. Indeed, their conception of unemployment insurance is sufficiently different from ours to make it hard to say whether or not we could use their administrative services. We do not know whether their services would enable them to cover the claimants we might have.

There are skiers in this country who have gone on holiday to Banff by taking advantage of their unemployment insurance benefits. If the hon. member's suggestion were adopted, we should have people taking their holidays in the Alps, or in Austria, at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. It seems to me that that is not what the hon. member wishes to suggest.

That is not the sort of loose administration which can be countenanced by the unemployment insurance commission or by the government. I suggest that, if he considers all the implications, this scheme will not be countenanced even by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling). Therefore, it seems to me that it would not be advisable to follow the line suggested by this motion. At the same time, it is important to understand that the motion has, albeit erroneously and inaccurately, drawn the matter to our attention. Inasmuch as there is already a considerable area within which there is protection for Canadians who are employed abroad and who make contributions abroad, it would not seem wise at present to expand that protection.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) has given us an opportunity to go over this general area of concern, even though he has spoken about his constituency. For that I wish to thank him. Without looking beyond our borders, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth can point to people who fall into two additional categories which might benefit from his intervention in this House. I am speaking of their eligibility for unemployment insurance payments.

First, let me refer to constituents who might presently be or might have been in the past workmen's compensation cases. On re-entering the labour force after absence due to an accident, after which they might have found a new skill, they are confronted with difficulties. Many people acquire new skills in their forties and fifties. Such people as these may have contributed for a number of years to the unemployment insurance scheme. They find themselves attempting to re-enter the labour force. They seek employment and yet are without protection; they are without income benefits on a weekly basis, and without the advantage of protection under the unemployment insurance scheme. This category would embrace a number of people in the hon. member's constituency and in the constituencies of many members of this House.

Another group affected, of course, is the group alluded to by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth. Perhaps the government should look at this matter and try to find an equitable answer. This group consists of ex-inmates who have been out of the labour force, for obvious reasons. They may have contributed considerably and, at a certain point, found themselves re-entering the labour force; yet because of their absence from the labour force, they do not qualify for any benefit or coverage.

That situation, of course, entails an economic strain on those individuals who are, in most cases, seriously determined to re-enter society and find employment in a normal way, just as everybody else does. Yet they must turn to special agencies for economic assistance instead of drawing benefits from the fund that has been established, also with their help.

We can understand the dilemma of the commission in being asked to cover people who have been out of the labour force for a certain period. In the case of the man who has been injured and who has been covered for some time by workmen's compensation, the unemployment insurance commission can say that such a man has not been available for work, has been under the jurisdiction of another commission, and therefore constitutes a case for which the commission has no responsibility. I suppose a similar reply could be made by the commission in the case of an ex-inmate.

The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth, in giving examples, raised the question of the eligibility of individuals in our society who, for some reason or other, have not belonged to the labour force in Canada for some time but who, at the same time, feel that they have a claim on some form of benefit.

This raises a much broader question. I would not want to incur your displeasure or be ruled out of order, Mr. Speaker, but I am looking at the clock, and it is almost six o'clock. In other words, we must deal with the much broader question of whether in modern times the whole system of unemployment insurance really meets our needs, or whether or not in Canada we should introduce a system which will be based on ensuring employment rather than on ensuring benefits for the unemployed.

The present system of unemployment insurance entails the setting up of all sorts of rules and regulations that result in frustrations and confrontations between applicants and claimants, on the one side, and the bureaucracy, on the other, with the government getting the blame in the middle. Mr. Speaker, as it is six o'clock, perhaps I may be permitted to call it so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, here we go again on the capital punishment debate, Bill C-2. In my view, this debate is a waste of time. Many bills have much greater priority than this. I believe about 150 speeches have been made on this bill since it was introduced earlier this session.

Let me repeat what I stated when I spoke in this debate on May 22. There are many bills, such as the family allowances bill, which could have been debated earlier this session, passed by Parliament and be in effect by this time. People could have been receiving their increased family allowances by July 1.

It is about time somebody told it like it is. No one has been executed since 1962. At present, no one is in the death cell awaiting execution.

I had the privilege today of speaking to a former distinguished member of this House. He said we might as well resign ourselves to the fact that there will never be another execution in Canada and we should get on with other business. I might qualify this by saying there will never be another legal execution. Every day and every night people are plotting executions, whether it is of members of this House or someone else. They are being plotted and carried out. If the executioners are unfortunate enough to be caught, they will be subject to the usual life sentence which will be commuted in 10 years. This is not a big gamble for them.

This afternoon I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). She spoke in support of her amendment which would provide capital punishment for kidnapping and rape where killing ensues. She cited cases of kidnappings of prominent people and the children of prominent people. Time and again ransoms have been paid and murders committed.

I also listened to the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) who referred to the amendment and the remarks of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. He questioned the hon. member about rape killings. He stated that women have a particular hang-up fear of this type of murder. He can certainly view this type of crime in a detached and compassionate way as there is no way he could possibly be the victim. That certainly would not apply to the beautiful and eloquent member for Louis-Hébert.

The hon. member for Broadview stated that most Canadians feel protected. I disagree; most Canadians feel they are not protected. I live in a small town where the crime rate is among the very lowest. Years ago we never locked a door or closed a window. Now when I am at home on weekends my wife lives in fear that someone will break in and commit a crime. I have to check all the windows and doors.

Time and again the song-singing abolitionists—and there are a great many of them—talk about terrible crimes. They point out that many of these dastardly crimes are committed by mentally ill or deranged people. They talk as though these people would be subject to the supreme penalty. That is absolutely ridiculous. Everyone knows that if someone is proven mentally incompetent, he will be sent to a hospital or institution. If he can be cured, he will return to society in due course.

We hear a lot about the words compassion and mercy. They are beautiful words, very poetic. In Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, Portia said:

> The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
> It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
> Upon the place beneath.

In view of the majority, too much mercy has been handed out and there has been too little justice. There has been too much concern for the killers and little or none for the victims or their families.

It was suggested in another amendment that was not approved that we should provide a 25-year minimum mandatory sentence for first degree murder. I believe this is just as severe as the death penalty. Let me repeat, I consider death by hanging a cruel way to take a person's life. In my previous speech I stated that these cold-blooded or mad dog killers should be eliminated from society as painlessly as possible by administration of a drug.

Those in favour of abolition talk about vengeance and the state becoming a murderer. The public is unhappy with the present crime wave, too lenient sentences and murderers being allowed out for weekends and holidays—and on one occasion to get married. I am aware that the majority of members in this House are not in favour of the retention of capital punishment for murder in the first degree. However, let me say loud and clear that the majority of the people in Canada are certainly in favour of it.

It would seem to me that members of this House should give consideration to public demand for tightening up our laws and severe punishment for these criminals. Those espousing the cause of the abolitionist have some very powerful allies in the press and news media. Let me repeat that the majority of newspapers, TV and radio stations or broadcasters seem to be in favour of abolition. However, this is one case where they have come off second best, because they have not been able to sell this bill of goods to the public at all.

It has been mentioned in this chamber before, and I repeat it, that this question should be put on a general referendum at the next general election. Let the people of Canada decide once and for all, instead of leaving it to 264 members of this House. This is supposed to be a free vote but we know that is not so. This is a government-sponsored bill, and I am quite sure there are members on the other side who deep down in their hearts feel, as many of us do, that capital punishment should be retained. If they voted on this basis they would be voting on their own convictions, and in 99 per cent of the cases would be voting as the great majority constituents would want them to vote.

The sooner we get this bill out of this House and this issue decided, the better. We can then get down to the serious business of priority matters such as unemployment, inflation, family allowances and so on.

We were supposed to amass data on whether capital punishment in respect of killers of policemen would be a deterrent to this type of crime. No data is available for the simple reason that killers of policemen in the past five years—and there have been far too many such murders—have all had their sentences commuted by the cabinet. Since we cannot ensure that the government will in fact allow the execution of murderers of policemen and prison guards, this debate is simply a time-consuming exercise. In my view our time is too valuable to waste in this way.

I would far rather the government asked for a vote on what it really wants, total abolition, and then we could get down to the business of the House. The government has brought this matter before the House during this hot time of the year assuming a lot of those opposed to the bill would be home in their ridings. I for one would like a holiday, but I am quite prepared to stay here during the entire summer and right through until Christmas, and I know I speak for many others. I certainly feel that this bill should be brought to a head right now; we should get rid of it and then get on with more important business.

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I find it very good that the mini-caucus has broken up and hon. members are paying some attention.

In entering this debate in favour of the proposed amendments I do so in the hope that some of those who voted for the bill on second reading will be willing to see the terms for which capital punishment can be brought down enlarged. I know there is no hope of persuading members of the cabinet because they voted as a block, not as individuals, and as such will not accept any amendments. Neither is there much hope of influencing our friends, the hon. members to the left. Their speeches earlier today showed clearly how befogged their minds are by emotion.

There is hope, however, in respect of private members in the government party. They are not bound by cabinet decision. Indeed, the very fact that this amendment was introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) shows that some retain their independence, and for this she and others are to be congratulated.

I support this amendment not because it fulfils my personal belief, but because it will afford some better punishment and deterrent than otherwise would be the case. It offers protection to persons other than prison guards and policemen. It will give no fit punishment for a hired killer and it will not punish or deter someone killing for personal profit or premeditated revenge.

But while it will not prevent a woman being raped, or men, women or children being kidnapped, it will, if passed and if executed—and this is important—protect their lives once the act has been consummated. While the Nelles kidnappers, had they received the money they sought, would have had no fear of the sentence for kidnapping which they subsequently served, they would have thoughts about destroying evidence if their lives depended upon it. Certainly the sentences served for rape and kidnapping, and even murder, have no deterrent today, but the loss of life would.

Members have suggested that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert is acting as an irrational and emotional woman in bringing in these amendments. May I say as a husband and a father that I share her concern, not out of an irrational fear but out of a very real fear for the lives and safety of my own kith and kin, and those of others.

I have known students of mine who have been attacked, and have witnessed the effect it has had upon their lives and the lives of their families, and it has not been very nice. Let the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) be as objectively emotional as he will. Let him say women often provoke men to rape. Let him call it "perfectly frank, the result of invitation", that these things happen. But I say that no girl ever invited her own death. Many, many girls are accosted, women are accosted, mothers and wives are accosted, as they mind their own lives, as they wend their own way home on our streets.

It is not death for rape that we are speaking of in this amendment, though as a result of replies I have from my riding I believe many more would support this than some would think; it is murder during rape. The hon. member for Greenwood surely misunderstood the amendment, misrepresented it, or knows little in suggesting that women wish to vindicate their reputations by inviting murder. We are so concerned about the murderer these days, but if one person is saved by the deterrent effect of this amendment, it is well worth the while.

The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), if I interpreted him correctly, stated there is little fear among our people as they move about our streets. If this is a correct statement of his views—and I stand to be corrected—he has surely had little contact with his people, or has not sought their attitudes; or else his part of Toronto gives a stronger impression of security than Niagara Falls does to my people.

The first debate on this bill, which took place in a time period when people were politically aware and not engaged in pursuing their own holiday pleasures, engendered great response among my people. Be it in a store, a senior citizens' centre, a hotel or a women's gathering, the same statements emerge: "We lost, didn't we? It used to be safe to walk home. How is it that the Commons voted against what the people want"?

It mattered not to whom I spoke in the weeks since that debate—young, old, well-to-do or struggling—the overwhelming consensus was that the death penalty should be preserved, not because these are blood-thirsty fanatics, but because they perceive their lives to be in peril.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol) has stated his concern and hope that we do not reach the state of our neighbours to the south, where shoot-outs and murder and local armed guards are everyday occurrences. When someone from Toronto phones through to Detroit and says we have had 24 murders, they think of this as being on a weekend rather than in a whole year. My people share his concern and I share theirs.

Some will say that Americans who come to our great cities feel free from care. But it is a relative freedom, and our people perceive this diminishing year by year as permissiveness for the individual overcomes concern for the common good of society.

Have the abolitionists consulted their people? Have they asked them their opinions? If so, let them enter this debate and give us their statistics. Some, like the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), in their newsletters have written their constituents of their opinions, but I wonder if they have consulted them.

Some argue that Parliament must lead the people. This is true, but it must be in directions that the people feel comfortable with, that rest their minds and that commend themselves to the people. We have had five years of leading, and it has been rejected totally by the people of Canada. It has been said that in the U.K. abolition has been brought in; but it has been by the will of parliament, and people are demanding the return of the death penalty. In the United States it is by the fiat of the courts; but both the people and governments are in opposition, and not only at the federal level, I might add.

Our people are concerned about the lack of control on individual licence in respect of drugs, pornography, murder and virtually all aspects of life. This abolitionist government, however, is determined to obtain its way. The very interesting amendments in committee showed their true colours. It is too bad the amendments were not accepted because then the government could have been held totally responsible for what would follow. But the amendments of the Solicitor General and the cabinet were ruled out of order.

These amendments advocated complete abolition, a position opposed by fully 88 per cent of those polled in the Niagara Falls riding. Over 55,000 people replied to the questionnaire sent out in this riding. The amendments were introduced with the concurrence of the cabinet, I presume in the belief that the true aims of the cabinet could be realized in legislation as well as in executive decree because of the 14-vote spread on this bill when it received second reading. This debate should have been delayed until the fall when people would have had a full interest in politics and public concern could have manifested itself more fully.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Hueglin: Of course, you are not interested in the people. It has been introduced now when many electors are more concerned with living their private lives—

An hon. Member: Talk about yourself.

Mr. Hueglin: Mr. Speaker, let the hon. member at least attack me if he is going to speak. Otherwise I hope he remains quiet. It has been introduced now when many electors are more concerned with living their private lives and when our actions here fall on fewer ears than usual. This debate should have been held in the fall, but that it is held now is the government's will supported ably by some backbenchers.

We are addressing ourselves to the first amendment. This amendment does not go as far as the people wish. It will not allay all the concerns. However, it is a step in the right direction. If this amendment should pass, and I hope it will, it will be interesting to see whether, if a murder should occur under this provision, the law will be honoured, or whether the expressed will of the cabinet will prevail.

Almost three years ago now Canada was greatly upset by what was called a threat to our life as a nation. Lately we have seen the last of those who were accused of murdering Pierre Laporte convicted of a crime, but so late after the fact and so limited in gravity that little satisfaction is derived by those who have followed the case. Indeed, there is some discontent. The country was unsettled by the situation which developed in October 1970, and it is still unsettled because the rehabilitation of the individual rather than the protection of society is the priority of this government. The individual feels threatened. He must be granted security if life is to be lived in freedom from fear. The people of this country demand security. The government has denied them this. This amendment provides some deterrence to kidnapping and rape. For this reason it has merit and therefore I shall support it fully.

In his defence of abolition the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) introduced history to support his position. He said we move from barbarism to enlightenment and that this should be stressed. He said we should look for good and not evil. History will show periods of refinement and enlightenment.

History shows that man is a mixture of good and evil. The good must be fostered, but if the evil is not controlled by society, individual licence will destroy a civilization. We are in a period of permissiveness in which individual freedoms and demands dominate. But these are infringing on the paths of those who seek only to live their lives in peace and security and have no causes to promote. In the minds of the people the death penalty is the keystone; it is the ultimate sanction against anti-social acts. Let hon. members poll their constituents and they will find this is so. Let them prove whether the people fear, or whether, as the hon. member for Broadview says, the people walk the streets with no fear.

Our people want and need a strong statement from their leaders that society will be maintained, that permissiveness will end, and that order will be restored. It is my hope that this amendment will pass. It will perhaps deter some people from killing, and if it is put into effect it will certainly bring retribution to those who disregard society. This bill is an abomination. It should be withdrawn and replaced by the true feeling of the cabinet as shown by the amendments of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). It should be a bill of complete abolition. This amendment improves the bill, but allows others who commit premeditated murders to escape their just reward.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on Bill C-2 entitled An Act to amend the Criminal Code. This bill was sent back to the House by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with two proposed amendments, one of which by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). May I be dispensed from reading it since the Chair has already done so.

I can understand that it was difficult for the members of the committee to pass those amendments according to the wishes of the members while respecting the Standing Orders. That explains the confusion at one point, of which the public was not made too much aware.

Still, the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) adds to the provisions of the act two types of murders which could be punished by death. And I commend the hon. member who made this afternoon a most convincing speech in support of her amendment. It was a speech by a true mother who knows life and who wants at all costs to see it respected in this country. And whoever jeopardizes the right to live in a truly Christian society should be punished.

In any event, in the past capital murder was punished following fair judgement. I think the time when justice should be forgotten and not be allowed to proceed is not over. However, I am surprised to find that the abolitionists are aware that life is the most precious gift made by God to humanity. They all know that to keep his life one must struggle day after day. In fact, they all know that this invaluable treasure is the most precious gift God made to humanity.

A few day ago, I attended the celebration of the one hundredth birthday of one of my constituents. I was able to see the great happiness experienced by this person at being still alive. You could see on his face his happiness at being still alive with all his lucidity and faculties. On that occasion, I heard very moving tales of heroic actions by our ancestors who saved the life of a mother, of a newly-born child or of a father wounded while working.

As many other members, and also as many other citizens, I cannot understand how members may be in favour of the abolition of capital punishment under the pretence that they consider that as revenge and a lack of respect for life while on the other hand, they are for abortion, namely the murder of innocents who have a right to live, right that was given to us and that nobody could dispute. Why show such a lack of respect for innocent victims and be so compassionate for those who are found guilty of capital murder?

I can remember very well when I was eleven years old and my father lost his wife accidentally as he was helping a needy neighbour rebuild one of his farm buildings. I understood then the self-sacrifice of a father who was helping a neighbour, a fellow citizen and I have kept to this day an indelible remembrance of that generosity, of that charity one can have for his fellow men. But I would not have the same kind of remembrance today if my father had been the victim of a murderer. That is why I can better understand what may happen in the heart of a mother, or of children whose father or mother was the victim of a murderer.

Now we live in society, and I think that we have the right to make certain rules, to pass certain laws, so that we can have mutual respect for what is most precious to us, for what we all seek to preserve, and that is life itself.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to say that the abolition of capital punishment has not helped to reduce the crime rate, but we should remember certain statements made by persons in office several years ago; they quoted figures that cannot be questioned to prove that the abolition of the death penalty, on the commuting death sentences by the cabinet, did indeed contribute to a rise in the number of murders in Quebec.

I refer now to the testimony of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who, in 1961, as Quebec Minister of Justice, stated, and I quote:

The Minister of Justice, Mr. Claude Wagner, made a strong impression on the delegates at the federal-provincial conference of Attorneys-general and ministers of justice, when he presented statistics to prove that the number of murders has steadily increased in Quebec since 1946, but especially since 1961, when the practice of commuting death sentences to life emprisonment started.

What was done, quite simply, was to remove the fear that is essential: the fear of punishment. He showed his statistics that there was an increase in the number of murders and I think that he was right.

In 1965, the present member for Saint-Hyacinthe, who was still Minister of Justice at the time, in a statement published in the newspapers, urged the public to write to the federal government saying that the death penalty should not be abolished. Here was a Minister of Justice who had had courtroom experience, since he had been a judge for some time, and who was now asking the public to write to their elected representatives, to the government of Canada, asking that capital punishment not be abolished.

That was the testimony of an informed man; I think that he had a certain amount of experience, and at that time it was given little consideration. In fact, the Criminal Code was amended, and the death penalty was kept only for the murder of police officers, law enforcement officers and prison guards.

And it happened—as I mentioned in a speech on second reading—that a number of policemen, law enforcement officers and prison guards have been murdered and that criminals were condemned after a fair trial for capital murder, when they were undoubtedly guilty. I still agree with my leader who said this afternoon in this House that the death penalty should be retained for capital murder, if there is no possibility of miscarriage of justice, if the evidence and circumstances show that it was definitely capital murder.

I feel that we should retain that penalty for criminals who in cold blood kill their fellowmen.

I will now quote a former Minister of Justice who was a member of this House, Hon. Rémi Paul:

—Mr. Paul stated in particular that the death penalty was necessary as a deterrent within the community. To abolish capital punishment would mean to believe that right is in the power of the individual, that might is right and that justice leans on the side of the stronger, said that lawyer.

● (2040)

—he repeated that sentiments have nothing to do with the legislation concerning capital punishment. They consider with too much sympathy the fate of the criminal, he said, and feelings of false pity and love of man lead many people to ask society to avoid capital punishment.

In my view, this is neither a question of vengeance nor of saying like the old lex talionis: an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. This is merely a measure of justice and equity.

In England, in 1971, a lady led a campaign in order to ask the government to restore capital punishment. I have here an excerpt from her statement which has been published September 5, 1971—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, The hon. member will permit me to intrerrupt him for a moment. He knows that under our rules, he has 20 minutes at his disposal to debate this motion. May I remind him more specifically that we are considering the motion moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

I hope that hon. members who will participate in the debate will find the way to relate their speeches to the motion.

May I remind the hon. member for Bellechasse. (Mr. Lambert) and all other hon. members who intend to take part in this debate that we have not reached the third reading stage yet, that we are considering the motion introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert and that we may continue to do so tomorrow and for the next few days. There will be another motion to consider later on. I therefore suggest to hon. members that they limit their remarks to the amendment under review; eventually, they may have the opportunity, when the time comes for third reading, to make speeches with a more general approach. For the moment, I would urge the hon. member and all his colleagues to limit as much as possible their comments to the motion now before us.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take your recommendations into account. As always, I like to respect the Standing Orders as well as your authority.

Therefore, according to your recommendation, I will deal only with the motion now before us, that is the amendment moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert. Nevertheless, this amendment prompts us to make certain considerations and bring forward some evidence to show to what extent we wish that our fellow citizens' life be protected in all circumstances.

In any event, the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert reads, and I quote:

"(b) in respect of a male person, where such person causes the death of a female person while committing or attempting to commit rape,

That is the first part. I fully agree with this amendment because it often happens—we have witnessed it on a few occasions—that newspapers report that such and such person, such and such young girl was the victim of a murderer who assaulted her and resorted to cruel means in order to kill her and try to hide her body so as to conceal his murder.

What happens is that if there was in our Criminal Code a least one provision relating to the particular fact stated in the amendment, we would then have a third argument to justify the retention of capital punishment, since we have already two basic points in the bill itself, that is the murder of policemen and prison guards.

The amendment under consideration provides that we should add also, in cases of murder for rape, and I quote:

This is the third item which I quote:

(c) in respect of any person, where such person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit an offence under section 247, or, if while committing or attempting to commit that offence, such person abandons a human being and death ensues as a consequence."

Mr. Speaker, this fourth item in particular justifies the upholding of capital punishment in such circumstances. Thus, it is evident that the amendment could not anticipate all circumstances under which a murder could be committed. In my capacity as member for Bellechasse, whose population is in favour of upholding capital punishment, I consider it to be my duty to express its wishes in this House and I can say, after carefully studying these amendments, that I must give them my support so that we may extend as much as possible the circumstances surrounding murder punishable by death. Naturally, the same arguments could be used in many cases, which would be as just as those mentioned in the amendments to Bill C-2.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks which I wanted to make on this amendment. Faced with the facts, with the wishes of the population I represent, I will of course have to vote in favour of this amendment.

[English]

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me say that I support the amendment to Bill C-2 submitted by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). This afternoon I was shocked to hear her say that she had been accused of trying to prolong debate on this bill. Such an accusation must come from the government side, because no one in this party would deny the hon. member the right to voice her opinion on this subject. If this is a truly free vote why should anyone be denied the right to speak?

The suggestion that the hon. member was accused of prolonging the debate is perhaps an example of the motives of those persons who are trying to ramrod this bill through the House. We must be given time to state our case, present arguments, consider amendments, and deal with the bill on third reading before the door is closed on this matter.

At this point I might say that the remarks by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) about the mover of the amendment were a little inappropriate. To suggest that women are too emotional to exercise good judgment in such matters shows a complete lack of understanding on the part of the hon. member for Broadview. I am sure there are many female members of the hon. member's party who will certainly take issue with him over his remarks.

The amendment proposed is a proper one and I would like to see it applied more across the board to cover all acts of murder. But if it be that we must take part measures, then let us get on with it, and perhaps if the hon. member's amendment is adopted we could make a further amendment at a later date to add to the list of crimes that we deem should be punishable by death if an accused is found guilty.

I suppose everybody's opinion on this subject is tempered by his or her personal experiences. If you are one of those who are unafraid to view life as it really is, then your opinions are hardened by your experiences. If you live in a make believe world then you find it hard to accept the punishment suggested in this amendment for the crimes of kidnapping and murder and rape and murder.

If you read the Ottawa Journal tonight you will find in it an article reporting that two people were killed in a cafe in Quebec. As a result of the incident one woman was injured and two men are dead. The police said that the shooting "appeared to be the settlement of an account." In another report you read about teenagers tortured in a house of horrors.

If you are in the group who just cannot accept the idea of hanging, of being put to death for a murder, then as part of your experience in life I think you should visit with a family of a victim who has been kidnapped and murdered, or raped and murdered. It is a strange thing that in our society we seem to be very conscious of the person accused of such a crime. There are those who would have you believe that there is not adequate opportunity for the accused to prove his innocence. Some shrink away from the idea of hanging. Others will take the over-simplistic view that we are indeed barbarians if we would hang a person judged guilty of murder.

I have yet to hear one of those who stand for abolition discuss the family of the victim of the crime, those who are left behind to try to make a new life from one shattered by such an emotional experience.

My riding is one of the fastest growing in Canada. It is a riding of great mobility and we have had some murders in the past few years. I have personal friends whose daugther was murdered. I know the anguish they suffered, I know the months of rehabilitation, and I know the empty feeling they have when they look at you and say "Why, why was it our daughter"? They suffered invasion of their privacy by the press, some of them looking for cheap sensationalism that they might use for a headline.

When the guilty person was brought to trial and found guilty on a lesser charge in front of the courts, he was sentenced to the lesser crime and given ten years. After the sentence the police in their systematic way put together the facts and they found that this murder was similar to three others that had been committed in Montreal. They confronted this man with them and he confessed to them. He was brought to court again and was given ten years for each of the murders. He committed four and he was given ten years to run concurrently. Ten years for four murders. I find that hard to take.

I spoke earlier today on a notice of motion and the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) in his usual style took many of my words out of context in the same style as people who oppose capital punishment for kidnapping and murder and rape and murder will take out of context the sentence meted out to the man who murdered four times. They will say, after this man has served four, five or seven years or whatever the Parole Board gives, that he has paid his debt to society and should go free. All the rehabilitation groups will say he can soon be made useful in society again.

What about the victim's parents? I do not see any rush of people trying to get them into the mainstream of life again. I have heard of no groups trying to rehabilitate the survivors of a murder victim. I have heard the sanctimonious statements of abolitionists, but not one word has been uttered on behalf of the survivors of a murder victim.

I know of a policeman killed in the line of duty, or murdered in the line of duty, whichever way you put it. He left a wife and family. I have heard some abolitionists say his family will be looked after by the police benevolent society. That is a pretty tough case for a kid who wants his father.

We know of cases where the taxpayer has paid for weekend accommodation with all the trimmings for hardened criminals when some rehabilitation officer felt the prisoner needed a change of scene. It is no consolation to the survivors of the murder victim to know a person accused of the murder of their wife or daughter or son is enjoying rehabilitation.

A kidnapping itself is a heinous crime, although kidnapping and murder is worse. But rape that ends in murder is probably the worst crime of all. I do not know of any crime that angers men more than rape that ends with murder. Rape in itself is bad enough, but rape and murder is committed by people who are little more than animals. I can find no room in my heart for them. I can find no compassion for them.

If they commit the crime and are found guilty after all the numerous avenues of appeal available to them, they find no sympathy in me. I myself have seen victims of rape and murder, and I say to an abolitionist I would like him to look in the face of a person dead of rape and murder and tell me if he really has any compassion for the person who committed the crime.

Pick up your weekend paper and read a story that was in my paper last week of a little girl enticed into a car by a man and never seen again. It takes little imagination to realize what happened. The parents and family of that victim suffered beyond belief. I have a constituent who recently lost her young child due to an act of murder. I have talked to her many times and cannot find words to console her. Can someone find the words to bring her back into social contact? She has no chance of living a normal life again.

Which of you abolisionists has the courage to face the people left behind? They are victims equally with the person murdered. They never come back. There is a sadness to them that you cannot imagine, an empty feeling that you no doubt will never experience unless, God forbid, you lose one of your own.

The crimes of kidnapping and murder and rape and murder are beyond the imagination of the average man. Anyone who kidnaps and murders, plans it. He planned one or the other act. Anyone who rapes and murders in my mind is little more than an animal, and I have no compassion for him at all, I cannot condone either act, Mr. Speaker, and therefore I support the amendment put forth by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I spoke at some length at second reading so I do not want to spend much time at this stage and I will make some remarks on third reading. But I do want to deal with the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). The hon. member has expressed great concern for those who have been raped and murdered or kidnapped and murdered, and I am in full accord with her in expressing that concern.

I think, quite contrary to the views just expressed by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), that we do have great concern for the victims of murder and their families. I have said it time and time again. I do not know where he has been but if he cares to read the speech that I gave on second reading as well as those of other hon. members he will see where we stand on this matter.

But the question is this: How in God's name do we help the victim or help the family by hanging the murderer?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: If any hon. member on this side or on the other side who supports this amendment or supports the retention of capital punishment can show me how we can help the victim or the family of the murdered person by hanging somebody, I would be happy and willing to consider changing my position. If we study the situation over the years where they applied capital punishment with great vigour in this country and others, it did nothing whatsoever to help the victims of crime. It may do a lot to satisfy the sense of recrimination or revenge, or the punitive nature of man to see somebody hanged or executed for a murder, but it does nothing to help society, does nothing to help the victim, does nothing to help the family.

The hon. member said "Look at the face of a murder victim". I agree, it is a horrible thing. Murder, as killing of any kind, whether by the state, by individuals, or by criminals, is a terrible, terrible thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I agree with the hon. member. There is great sadness, a great loss in the family. I think if we are really serious about doing something about murder we must get to the causes of crime. Let us do something about family life, about the socio-economic causes of crime.

Mr. Yewchuk: Such as what?

Mr. Allmand: Let us do something about public and police protection, the economy, improving the cores of our cities where crime takes place.

Mr. Yewchuk: Why are you not doing it?

Mr. Allmand: We are doing many things and we ask for your support. These things are not easy. They are not open to facile answers. Countries all over the world are looking for solutions to crime. There have been executions for centuries and they did not work. They did not reduce the crime rate.

● (2100)

In Europe now there are only two countries that have retained capital punishment, and those two countries, France and Spain, have the highest murder rates in Europe. France still retains the guillotine, which it has used recently. That country, with Spain, has the highest murder rate in Europe. In the other country, Spain, the garrotte is still used. It is a very pleasant sort of punishment, done in public. They take a man outside and execute him in public. I have a friend who recently watched such an execution. They bring the murderer to an arena, and they put this thing, this garrotte, around his neck and gradually tighten it until they crush his neck and head. Yet Spain still has one of the highest murder rates in Europe. How does this protect society effectively? All we do by executing such criminals is descend to the level of the criminal and go backward on the road of civilization.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) has presented this amendment for two reasons. She has suggested that the crimes of rape and kidnapping should be punished with death because they are committed deliberately. She suggests they are committed after planning aforethought and so on. I do not know about that. I am in touch with the RCMP; they come under my department. Not too many rapes are planned in advance. They are usually committed under severe emotional stress, when the accused is under the influence of drink, drugs and so on. They are certainly not planned in advance, and if the victim is killed afterwards, that killing is not planned in advance either.

Kidnapping is different. I think kidnappings are planned, but they are planned so well that the kidnappers do not think they will be caught. There have been kidnappings for years. There used to be kidnappings when kidnapping was an offence punishable with capital punishment. In the case referred to by the hon. member, the kidnapping of Pierre Laporte, there is no doubt that the kidnapping was planned, but all the evidence at the trial showed that there was no advance planning in the killing of Pierre Laporte. The death resulted from a scuffle between Mr. Laporte and his kidnappers, apparently, in which the metal chain around his neck was tightened when he attempted to escape. I am not minimizing the horror of that murder. I am merely pointing out that the murder was not planned in advance, and there was no evidence at the trial to suggest that it was.

Mr. Yewchuk: What's the difference; he died, did he not?

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member is right, he died. We must do something effective to reduce murder in this country. However, as I say, we are deluding ourselves if we think we are doing something effective by returning to capital punishment.

Lots of points were raised about this particular amendment. All I want to say on behalf of the government, as Solicitor General, is that we are concerned about murder committed with rape and about murder committed in connection with kidnapping, but we do not think that this amendment is the way to handle it. There are much better ways. If we are really, seriously interested in this, I suggest to the House that we should reject this amendment. If we accept the amendment we shall extend the area to which capital punishment will apply. We shall be widening the area of violence in this country, and we need less violence, not more.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) who wishes to extend the death penalty to cases involving rape and kidnapping in which the victim dies. I was interested to hear the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) trying to defend his stand. He asked a difficult question, to which he has no answer. He asked how we can help the victim by hanging anyone. I suggest that our difficulties today stem from the fact that the government has not had the courage to enforce the laws of this country during the last five years, the result being that no one, including a prospective killer, has any reason to be deterred by fear of punishment or to think that there is any remote possibility of the ultimate penalty, as prescribed by previous parliaments for taking the life of another person being carried out.

Certainly the victim of a murderer will not be helped after the murder if anybody is executed. However, I suggest that applying the type of law enforcement that the people of this country expect would bring about a sufficient deterrent, and we should thereby make sure that those contemplating murder, at least planned murder, would know that, if they are caught, brought to trial and convicted, they will face the ultimate sanction of this country as prescribed by law, namely hanging.

The Solicitor General dealt with statistics and referred to what is done in France and Spain. I do not have those statistics before me and cannot comment on them. I can say this, however, that the crime of murder in this country has increased by over 100 per cent in the last few years. You can draw your own conclusions from that. Certainly that is a fact of which we are aware and with which we must deal. The legislation as proposed by the Solicitor General will not deal with this effectively.

He asked what effective steps are to be taken. I ask him, in turn, what effective steps has the government taken to deal with the ever increasing number of murders in this country. The answer is obvious if one studies the statistics to which I have alluded.

The position we are in today is awkward and is becoming misunderstood. It is apparent, in view of the government's extension of clemency to those convicted of murder, that the government has no intention of enforcing the laws of this country in cases of capital murder. We all know that a capital sentence has not been carried out for over 11 years, to be exact. The reason for that is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet will not enforce the death penalty, but simply use the prerogative of mercy and commute death sentences.

I am not suggesting that the Prime Minister and the cabinet should not have authority to commute sentences. I merely suggest that when it is known in advance how the prerogative of mercy will be exercised, the law in reality becomes meaningless.

In 1967 this House passed legislation that stated that persons who kill police officers or prison guards shall be subject to the death penalty. Since then courts have, in good faith and in accordance with the legislation, imposed such sentence in cases where it applied. However, when each of these cases came before cabinet for review, it was, without exception, summarily commuted. Apparently there was not too much consideration, the cabinet having made a prior expression of intention. The accused in two cases in Manitoba in which police officers were killed had their sentences commuted. That aptly demonstrates that mitigating circumstances apparently are not required before the cabinet will commute the sentence of the cold blooded killer of a police officer or prison guard.

As I said before, I support the continued existence of the prerogative of mercy. However, it must not be invoked automatically, because that effectively makes law without the required legislation having been passed. That, Mr. Speaker, would make a mockery of the law of the land and of Parliament itself.

The government still apparently opposes the death penalty. It seems that it has decided that it is having enough trouble pleasing the electorate without ramming such an unwelcome measure down the public's throat. I say unwelcome because poll after poll has indicated that the people of Canada want the death penalty restored and imposed. However, it only appeared that the government was going to do nothing in this regard when the Solicitor General, at the committee stage, tried to sneak in an amendment espousing total abolition.

An hon. Member: He sneaked it in.

Mr. Taylor: It is a strange circumstance indeed that the Solicitor General should have been the one to put forward such an amendment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Taylor: After all, considering the difficulty—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat?

• (2110)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I object strenuously to the suggestion by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Taylor) that I tried to sneak something in at the committee stage of the bill. When a member exercises his right under the standing orders of this House to present amendments when amendments are to be presented, I do not see how his intentions can be misrepresented by stating that he tried to sneak in something. It was done openly before the whole committee. The amendments were rejected and I accept the ruling of the committee. The hon. member should withdraw his suggestion that I tried to sneak in something.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. As far as the Chair is concerned, this is debate. It is a question of opinion. It is very difficult for the Chair to pass judgment on remarks by members from one side or the other. The hon. member should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. When talking on television on many occasions, the minister said he would present amendments to the House. He has denied tonight almost everything he said. The minister had to withdraw. It was right for him to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: You sneaked it in on TV.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I feel that hon. members are taking advantage by rising on points of order to participate in the debate. Hon. members may have all kinds of opinions, but we will not make progress unless we allow the hon. member to complete his remarks.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand the Solicitor General being a little sensitive to the debate. He should be more than just a little sensitive when you consider the way this matter has been handled. It was a very clumsy attempt to do something directly opposed to what initially was the intention of the bill. Of course, we have already dealt with that.

It is very strange that the Solicitor General would put forward the amendment he did, considering the difficulty he has keeping prisoners confined. He should be more aware than anyone of the illusion that is intrinsic when we speak of a life sentence. After the various incidents of late, most notably the much publicized escape of five dangerous prisoners from St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, it seems that a life sentence today lasts only as long as the individual prisoner, be he murderer, rapist, kidnapper or whatever, wants it to last.

We have been repeatedly told that the death penalty has not served as a deterrent to crime. The reason, we are told, is that a murderer is sick, either physically or mentally, or that his action was a crime of passion, a reflex action.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) suggested that increased stress in modern society is the basic cause for an increased crime rate, and that the increase in murders is no more than commensurate with this general increased crime rate. Perhaps such is the situation in certain cases, but not in the cases we are discussing here.

I was amazed at the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). He stated that rape giving rise to murder is quite often the result of invitation. He said the so-called victim wishes to vindicate her reputation in some way or another and that charges are falsely laid. We are talking about a victim who is dead. She is in no position whatsoever to vindicate her reputation. Surely hon. members realize the import of that statement.

I am not advocating the use of the death penalty in cases where the killer is sick, acting out of reflex or is unable to cope with the stresses of living. I am talking about cold-blooded, premeditated murder, murder that is planned and in many cases committed by those whose livelihood is gained by committing murder, by illegal activity in the course of which murder is committed. The amendment we are discussing deals with the situation.

The blame for such premeditated acts cannot be laid at the feet of society or on the stress of living in society. Figures have been bandied about by all sides on this question, each side using figures which support their respective contentions. In my opinion, they more or less cancel each other out.

One point must be clear. It has been conclusively proven that the incidence of premeditated murder, that kind which before the introduction of the moratorium would likely have resulted in a death sentence, has significantly increased since 1967. I have indicated to the House that there has been over a 100 per cent increase.

Premeditated murder does not result from increased stress. Rather, it is cold-blooded and calculated. Anyone who would plot such a foul deed as murder, rape or kidnapping would surely calculate the consequences of such an act. Further, he would hesitate if among the consequences of that act was the death penalty. Notwithstanding this belief, I believe there is still valid reason for maintaining the death sentence in such cases.

We hear time and again that capital punishment is not a deterrent to murder. However, the argument seems to stop at that point. No one seems to ask the logical follow-up question, the gist of which is, if capital punishment does not act as a deterrent, what does? The problem is that no practical method of deterrence has come into practice in the Canadian penal system. Similarly, there is no sure method of rehabilitation.

If the Solicitor General could guarantee to the members of this House that any given murderer would never commit another murder, or if he could guarantee that any incarcerated, unrehabilitated murderer would never again be able to escape and mingle in open society, we would have a deterrent. However, while the Solicitor General might make such an assertion, and we have found he is capable of anything these days, he could not honestly do that. There have been too many cases of supposedly rehabilitated murderers killing again and too many prison escapes for such to be the situation.

The people of Canada have a right to be protected as much as possible from killers. Even if you accept the contention that capital punishment is not a deterrent to premeditated murder, it seems a reasonable man must accept that no other effective means of deterrence has been developed. Until the time such a deterrent is developed, capital punishment for premeditated murder will serve a necessary function—the protection of the people of Canada.

We are not talking about using capital punishment for anything but the most deliberate type of murder. While the number of applicable cases is small, it is absolutely essential for the security and preservation of society that the judicial system have the right to mete out the utmost penalty, death, especially since its use is safeguarded by a very thorough legal and political review. For these reasons I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Would the member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): In the midst of his remarks he talked about the victims of murderers. Would the hon. member suggest that the government give the victims as much money as it is giving to murderers today by keeping them in prison at the rate of $12,000 to $15,000 a year?

Mr. Taylor: I assume that in asking the question the hon. member was referring to the relatives of victims rather than the victims themselves. I certainly doubt that he meant the victims. Certainly this country is far behind in aid or compensation to victims of crimes, and this is one area where society as a whole does have a responsibility.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have not taken part at all in this debate at any of its stages up to now, but I feel compelled to make a few remarks at this juncture on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I would like to congratulate the hon. lady on her initiative in this regard because the amendment is a thoughtful one, and because it goes without saying that some of the most heinous murders are committed in conjunction with kidnapping, frequently when kidnappers extort sums of money after having kidnapped a child, and on many occasions the child has then been murdered in order to get rid of a possible witness against the criminal.

However, this amendment, like almost every concept having to do with this very important question of capital punishment and whether it is a fit punishment for murder, hinges on the very important question; what is the right thing for society to do in such situation? What about the sanctity of life? If there is such a thing, how do we interpret it and what does it mean?

I have assumed that even the most ardent abolitionist works on the premise that the occurrence of frequent murders in our society is (a) not a good thing and (b) an indication that there is some deficiency in our society and level of civilization, or in our system of justice, or both.

Because I frequently hear these same ardent abolitionists glibly advocating abortion on demand, even that premise is a bit shaken in my mind. If one regards life as sacred, it is sacred even in the case of the defenceless who cannot speak for themselves. I cannot prove this, but I think the advocates of abortion on demand are biased. I cannot prove this but as a lawyer would say, there is strong circumstantial evidence to indicate that those who advocate abortion on demand have themselves already been born. Therefore, I believe if the unborn could speak they would demand the right of life. This is a sort of an aside to this general question of the sanctity of life and how society should deal with those who take it upon themselves to extinguish the life of one of their fellow citizens.

I suggest it seems inconsistent that an abolitionist as far as capital punishment is concerned should at the same time support the concept of abortion on demand. I suppose in fairness the other side of the coin may, too, seem inconsistent. For example, I believe that the life of the unborn, the fetus, should be saved if it is at all possible, yet I do not believe that capital punishment should be abolished, at least not in every case. Perhaps some people would find a contradiction in that. If I have regard for the sanctity of life in the case of an unborn, why do I not regard the life of a murderer so highly that under no circumstances or system of justice should it be taken away, no matter how heinous his crime might be?

We hear a great number of expressions, such as capital punishment being ritualized murder carried out by the state, that capital punishment is no more civilized an act than murder itself. I do not agree with that sort of woolly and confused thinking. Let us look at the situation. A citizen of this or any other country could live in the most circumspect way, a model citizen in every way, yet he cannot protect himself against the possibility of being murdered in cold blood. He may be perfectly innocent of crime of any sort yet become the victim of a cold-blooded murder.

How does one avoid being murdered? I suggest when murder is as frequent as it is it is impossible to guarantee one can avoid being the victim of a murder. If capital punishment is ritualized murder carried out by the state, is that possible to avoid? I suggest that it is. All a citizen has to do is avoid murdering, as capital punishment will then never apply. This is the basic difference. If one lives in a civilized or even semi-civilized fashion he need have no fear of the rope ever, and this is something we should bear in mind.

In addition to that, we take pride in the fact that our legal system and its traditions are based on the British system of justice in that no one is considered guilty until proven guilty. Or, putting it the other way around, everyone is considered innocent until proven guilty.

The whole structure of our law seems to be heavily balanced on the side of justice for the accused, so that as seldom as possible is one convicted of something of which one is innocent. The whole legal system is designed to give the benefit of the doubt to the accused. I think everyone would agree with that statement. Even when capital punishment was imposed as part of our law to a greater extent than now—indeed, it has gone out of style entirely so far as this government is concerned—many murderers were not convicted of murder because the evidence against them was not conclusive. They were given the benefit of the doubt, and that is as it should be.

However, what about the victim? The victim is not given any chance at all. He has no defence. The victim usually suffers terrifying and lonely death. There is no press or TV to cover the horror, agony or terror the victim suffers in his last moments. But when someone is accused of a crime, his name is on the lips of everyone who watches TV or reads the newspapers, with the result that the public is far more aware of the accused than of his victim. The victim of a gruesome murder receives about as much attention as a bridegroom at a wedding. He is just there; he does not receive the attention of the TV or news media or of the general public.

I think if there is any shred of mitigating circumstance, public sympathy tends to build up for the accused. He is the centre attraction in the legal process over a long period of time. He is given the benefit of every doubt. He has the right of appeal, and reappeal in many cases if the decision is against him. Many of these murders are cold-blooded and premeditated. Some of them are carried on in conjunction with organized crime as a matter of course.

A great deal has been said in this debate about statistics in an attempt to prove whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent. I think statistics of this type covering a short term are unlikely to prove anything in a convincing fashion. A period of five years may be a very short period. I do not believe there is any evidence from the statistics to indicate that the abolition of capital punishment would reduce the number of murders. However, there may be a time lag in respect of the effect.

As a society we know far too little about human behaviour in the scientific sense. I think we know far too little concerning the root cause of crime and why criminals are criminals. We know too little about what effect our clumsy ad hoc methods of dealing with criminals have. In this state of affairs I do not believe we can rest happily on the assumption that if we treat criminals kindly, generously and softly, criminals will disappear. That does not necessarily follow.

I believe the effect in respect of the abolition or retention of capital punishment is a long term one. I think there is an effect in respect of society's attitude toward crime in the general sense. For example, if a youngster knows that someone can carry out a cold-blooded murder, be committed to a penitentiary for a few years and then be let out on parole and become a member of society, naturally the notion grows up in that youngster's mind that, after all, murder is not such a serious thing and that perhaps in some circumstances it is an option one has.

On the other hand, a few decades ago when capital murder was considered a heinous crime and a murderer was beyond the pale so far as society was concerned, very few of the rising generation had this kind of attitude. With the permissive attitude we have today murder might be thought of as being sort of smart, at least among members of certain gangs, especially in large metropolitan areas. What I am saying is that the general attitude of society toward crime makes an imprint on rising generations with regard to what is or is not acceptable conduct.

Now, of course, there is a wider question with regard to what society should do, not only in respect of those who commit murder, but also in respect of the apparent growth of crime generally. It has been a long, slow, painful struggle for humanity to reach even its present level of civilization. On occasion the human race does not, even now, exhibit a high level of civilization. We have still a long way to go. All the accumulated wisdom of the ages so far as civilization is concerned must be transmitted to each new generation in the formative years of childhood. That is a tremendous, awe-inspiring responsibility, or it should be, on the part of parents, schools, churches and every other organization which has some responsibility in transmitting civilization, hopefully improved, to each new generation. It takes only one brief breaking of the link for that civilization to become degraded, and sometimes I feel—I hope I am wrong—that we have been living in the last few years in an era of permissiveness and have lacked knowledge about human reactions to living in large metropolitan areas, as unnatural a habitat for man as it is for animals.

A few elementary sociological studies have been done in some large universities which indicate that some of the trends in society today are caused by the environment which society has created for itself. For example, in some cities in the United States they have discovered the alarming fact that the crime rate is in direct ratio to the height of the buildings in the city. That seems very strange but nevertheless it is a fact. We do not know enough about the effects of crowding on human beings, for example. I would like to see a great deal of basic research carried out in the field of human behaviour so that we could gain a better idea of what produces criminals and try to eliminate the causes at the root.

However, since we do not have these facts, I think it is foolhardy and unreasonable to pass laws which, in effect, would allow individuals the right to terminate the life of another individual and not suffer an equal deprivation themselves. I believe that this is true in the case of cold and calculated murder. I believe that at least until such time as we have a stronger scientific basis for adopting another course we should retain capital punishment for the worst crimes, and for that reason I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, the topic of capital punishment is a matter of concern to all members of the House. Probably many of us feel that under the circumstances, with so many other pressing matters demanding our attention, this may not be the best time, in terms of absolute priority, to discuss this matter. However, it is not for me to quibble about the priorities of the House, and in speaking to the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) I should like to state at the outset that, in my opinion, it is a reasonable and constructive amendment and I intend to support it.

It seems to me that in instances where death follows rape, attempted rape or kidnapping there is always a great deal of premeditation in the committing of the crime. It is not the type of crime that is usually committed impulsively, in a spirit of anger, or for any other reason. This amendment is very necessary if we are to make a distinction between cases where the death penalty should or should not be imposed. On the basis of the experience I have had I am not at all certain that a valid case can be made for making such distinction when murder has been committed.

Under our legal system which has been evolved over the centuries, mostly based on English common law, a great many safeguards are built into the system in the case of people who have taken the life of another, without making distinctions between the specific acts of the persons involved. I am thinking of some of the more recent defences in which the concept of automatism has received judicial approval. Of course, insanity is always raised when one person takes the life of another, and in serious cases involving murder it has become almost automatic for the accused person to be sent for observation to a suitable institution to determine whether or not he is truly able to understand the nature of his action.

In my understanding of the reasoned speech made by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), he was saying, in effect, to paraphrase Winston Churchill on another topic, that perhaps the mild and ameliorating influence of education and the increasing moral responsibility of society will ultimately create a social climate which will make this type of legislation not such a pressing issue in society.

In other words, as I said earlier in the House when we were discussing the subject, when society changes, when more comprehensive administrative and legal procedures are evolved through experience to rehabilitate and supervise people on parole, and when the necessary adjustments are made in our legal system, perhaps at that time we can vote in all conscience to abolish the death penalty once and for all. However, I do not believe that the time is yet right, and for that reason the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert deserves the attention and support of all members of the House.

I should like to go back to the religious context for a moment. It has been said that the idea of a fire and brimstone hell may be scientifically silly, none the less it has kept many bad people good. It seems to me that the same analogy applies to the criminal law and to such deterrents as the death penalty. I believe it was the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) who, in a speech earlier in this session, referred to a transcript of a trial in which he either participated or of which he had knowledge.

He spoke of the murderer being confronted by officers of the law while he had a loaded gun in his hand. However, he did not pull the trigger and was heard to say words to the following effect: "What do you think, that I am crazy or something to shoot you? You are an officer of the law and if I shot you I would be liable to receive the death penalty for killing a policeman." If this is actually true—and we have no reason to doubt this—we must remember that there are many such cases across the nation, and this in itself should make us pause to see whether or not we are doing the right thing at this time in moving toward the abolition of capital punishment or the reduction of cases for which the death penalty is imposed, no matter how heinous the crime might be.

I would like to say at this time that, of course, I respect the motives and the views of those who have an opposite opinion from that put forward by myself and those of us who are not in favour of softening the penalties for capital crimes to any great extent. I have great personal regard and respect for the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). None the less I feel that this matter may have been handled unfortunately in committee, something which may have changed the atmosphere in which many of us considered the motives and weighed the pros and cons of this legislation. I feel that he and the government would have been acting in the better interests of Canada had they, in the first instance, brought in an outright abolitionist bill, rather than attempting to make such drastic changes after the bill had been considered on second reading in this House.

As far as the priorities are concerned, again it seems that we could go on considering amendments such as the one we are now discussing. We could talk a great length on these amendments. We could talk on other amendments, which I understand may be introduced. We could continue on third reading. We could discuss all the ramifications, pro and con, all summer. Yet if we do this we are neglecting very urgent priorities that should demand the attention of the House, priorities and pieces of legislation that, ironically enough, we were considering at the time the House was adjourned for the summer not much over a year ago. At that time we were considering electoral reform, family income security, and matters of that nature.

Returning to the debate being held this evening, as the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) said so ably, until we have determined exactly what is the basis that makes capital crimes so prevalent in this nation, what makes them at least appear to be on the increase, until we are sure that there is no particular merit in the concept of deterrence, then I suggest that amendments such as the one moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) should be considered seriously. The whole concept of capital punishment must remain before us. It would not be in the best interests of the nation, or indeed of this House, to continue to erode the traditional methods that have been found tried and true over the years in dealing with capital crimes.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I say that our legal system provides, in the form of trial by jury, preliminary hearings, and all the other safeguards, every opportunity for an accused to establish not only his innocence but the various degrees of culpability that may have caused him to commit the act with which he is charged. This is all the more so at the present time when one considers the assistance given by both federal and provincial administrations through so-called legal aid funds, so that an accused person has no longer to contend with the former situation where, in effect, he was throwing himself on the charity of the local bar society to provide his defence. Through the means of legal aid he can now get a solicitor of his choice, an experienced criminal lawyer, to avail himself of the many defences, some of which I have enumerated, which he may be called upon to put forward to justify the act for which he is charged.

As I said at the outset of my brief speech, I have no hesitation in supporting the amendment and I compliment the hon. member for Louis-Hébert on her sagacity and concern in bringing it before the House at this particular time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in this mid-summer of madness we are engaged upon, it seems odd at three minutes to ten o'clock to be talking about these facts; but we are here, we cannot go back, and we must do what we have to do. I am going to vote against the amendment. What I have said in the past would indicate that. However, I have a few comments to make.

I just want to point out one thing on the technical aspects of the matter. I give credit to the hon. member who introduced the amendment. I think she was working towards a very logical and laudable conclusion. But if this amendment were to pass, from the point of view of the courts it would create almost a monstrosity.

There are two criminal offences involved. First, there is the criminal offence of rape, which would have to be established, and like any other criminal offence it would have to be established beyond any reasonable doubt. One of the general principles in law with regard to any offence charging rape is that it is necessary not only to prove the offence beyond a reasonable doubt but, in cases of this kind, it is essential that there be also established some form of corroboration in certain material respects. It would therefore be essential to prove rape had been committed, or attempted rape had been committed.

I know from my own professional experience how exceedingly difficult an offence like this is to prove. I am not saying it does not occur quite frequently, but to prove it along the lines which the law would require to satisfy the onus of proof is a very difficult thing. So one would have to prove beyond reasonable doubt that rape was committed, and also in some material way that there was corroboration of that particular offence.

In addition to that, one would have to prove a murder had been committed by the person who is charged, and that murder in turn would have to be established beyond any reasonable doubt. I am not saying that the fact that it is difficult to establish an offence does not mean we should not, if we in our wisdom think it is essential, put it on the statute books—

Mrs. Morin: It is not difficult to prove when it is a four year old.

Mr. Baldwin: That may well be, but I am just saying that no matter how difficult it might be, that alone should not deter us if, in our wisdom, we come to the conclusion that we genuinely believe there should be an additional crime in respect of which capital punishment should be inflicted. But I thought I owed it to the House, before calling it ten o'clock, to deal with the difficult aspects connected with proving such an offence, and to point out the very serious difficulties involved in prosecuting an offence of this kind. Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Chair accepts the hon. member's calling of ten o'clock I might be allowed to refer to the discussion which took place earlier today, and also on Friday last, with regard to the application of Standing Order 75(11) in connection with the deferring of votes. The Chair indicated at the time that I would give the matter serious thought, and that also I would listen to comments or advice which might be given to me for guidance of the Chair.

Having followed the debate today and the discussion of Friday afternoon, this has led me to the conclusion that there is really nothing to justify changing the practice which has been established over the months and the years to defer a vote. Hon. members know that this is a practice which has evolved during the last few years under the terms of Standing Order 75(11), so that when there are a number of motions at this stage of proceedings the votes are deferred.

I would think that, in the circumstances, the Chair would be required to follow the practice which has been established. At the same time I would indicate to hon. members that, if there were to be some degree of agreement on this particular point that we follow a different practice, I would, of course, accept the unanimous suggestion or general suggestion of the House. For the moment, however, I suggest to hon. members that I have no other alternative than to follow the long established practice.

The hon. member rises on a point of order?

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if you are inviting comment?

Mr. Speaker: No, I am not inviting comment because I received comment, particularly from the hon. member, last Friday and it is taking into account the hon. member's comment that I have commented as I did.

Perhaps I should add that to some extent this is theoretical, or hypothetical, because the Standing Order does provide that when a recorded division is called the Speaker may then call for a deferred vote. Of course, it has not been called yet, but that is when the decision of the Chair would be announced. It was felt, because of this interest, that the Chair should indicate for the assistance of all hon. members the way I tend to think at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Does that mean that the vote on the amendment now before this House would be postponed in order to put it to the vote at the same time as the next one to be studied by the House?

Mr. Speaker: That was the suggestion made last week and which I am again making to hon. members, namely that the two amendments be put to the vote consecutively. The motion of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) would be first, followed by that of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION—ALLEGED NOTIFICATION TO MUNICIPALITIES THAT DUMPING ON ITS LANDS WILL BE PROHIBITED IN 1974

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on June 8, 1973, as reported at page 4575 of Hansard, I asked a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) about the growing concern of the people generally in the national capital area with respect to problems affecting waste management disposal in the area. I asked the minister specifically whether the national capital commission had notified the municipalities within the area that dumping on its lands would be prohibited in 1974 and, if so, what was the cut-off date for that order. I am quoting almost exactly, Mr. Speaker. The minister at that time indicated that he would take the matter under advisement.

Subsequently, I had a letter from the general manager of the national capital commission which indicated that there was indeed a problem with respect to the dumping of garbage on national capital commission land, that the land presently being used in this area was being very quickly filled, that by 1974 it would in fact be rendered useless from the point of view of land fill, and that consideration had been given to other methods of disposal.

One of those methods of disposal unfortunately, according to sources that I have, is the acquisition of further dumping ground elsewhere within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. Speaking personally, Mr. Speaker, this concerns me greatly because I think it is really a perpetuation of what is generally regarded as self-destroying and a non-modern practice of waste disposal.

The national capital commission, however, did indicate to me that they were considering a technical process of waste disposal, one involving incineration, that they had indeed suggested to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and perhaps to other municipalities that there was a process available, and that it would be available to the relevant municipalities within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. I think this is very important, and not only from the point of view that the national capital must prove itself to be a leader with respect to urban problems, only one of which is waste disposal. The national government ought to give some meat to the attitude that it would like to project in the country, an attitude showing it is interested in urban problems.

I hope the parliamentary secretary's answer tonight will show for the record that the government is considering the technical process of incineration; that the federal government is preparing to finance or fund out of the federal treasury a major proportion, at least, of a pilot project; that the national capital of our country ought to be a leader with respect to municipal services available in this area, and that there will not be any consideration of land acquisition so that municipalities will not need to acquire large tracts of land for 20 years duration, such as is the case with respect to the site south of the Jock River in Nepean township. That, I understand, was one of the considerations brought forward in a consultant's report.

I emphasize to the government through you, Mr. Speaker, that the government should not stop with the national capital area in the funding of programs of this nature. It should as well consider making available this expertise, this technology and, more important, similar funding for these vital municipal services to other large cities across Canada, such as Toronto, Hamilton, Vancouver and Montreal, which are experiencing great difficulties in this area. I hope we shall never see in the national capital area what we are seeing in the metropolitan Toronto area. The garbage and waste from the metropolitan area is being trucked out and deposited in other municipalities. As I said at the outset, this is a self-perpetuating, self-destroying system of waste disposal.

If the answers by the parliamentary secretary to the questions which I have asked in the course of this debate are in the affirmative, I urge the government to give permission to other municipalities to apply for similar funding, so that we may attack on a national basis one of the problems that is affecting municipalities and, particularly, the municipalities within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the NCC has been assisting the city of Ottawa for the past nine years by providing approximately 109 acres of land which is used as a garbage dump and operated as a sanitary land fill site. The ten-year legal agreement for use of this NCC Greenbelt land expires December 31, 1973. The users are fully aware of the expiry date and have been advised that alternate disposal methods must be considered for the future. The capacity of this land fill site is nearly exhausted and another area for sanitary land fill or an alternative means of disposal must soon be found.

Realizing that the problem of waste disposal is of regional concern and that similar problems are being faced by cities and regions across Canada, the NCC, together with MOE, the Municipal Regional Councils of Ottawa-Carleton and Outaouais, have financed a comprehensive study by consultants of waste disposal in the national capital region. The study is to make recommendations for waste disposal with due regard for the protection of the environment. All modern methods of disposal are to be considered, including incineration.

I might add that there are a number of municipalities across the country which would like this type of test facility. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) makes a good case for the Ottawa region, but he must realize that there are many members from across this country, myself included, who would like to see this kind of test facility installed in their regions, at the expense of the national taxpayer. Ottawa seems to get quite a few of these items. It is worth reminding members from the Ottawa region that there are others in this country who would like a national contribution of this kind in their areas once in a while. In saying that I speak not as the parliamentary secretary but as the member representing Laprairie.

This phasing out may occur sooner than 1975, with the existing sites being covered with soil, landscaped and made into an area suitable for future reforestation. It should be emphasized that the NCC is not prohibiting waste disposal and dumping, but that the agreement will have expired by the end of this year, that the site is full and better solutions have been found for the disposal of waste on a regional basis.

Accordingly, it might be said that there will ultimately be a solid waste disposal system in the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. Recognizing this, the NCC and the Department of the Environment are concentrating their efforts in this regard.

HOUSING—ALLEGED POOR CONSTRUCTION OF BAL-MAN HOMES, MEADOW LAKE, SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Watson) whether, in view of the fact that Bal-Man Homes Ltd. built some homes at Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, of substandard quality, and in view of the fact that this company has not paid some of the subconstractors, this resulting in mechanics liens being registered against the homes, the minister had requested the Saskatoon office of CMHC to conduct a full scale investigation of this matter to ensure that the home buyers are protected. In his wisdom, Mr. Speaker ruled that this question was out of order. Of course, I accepted that. He invited me to participate in the debate tonight which I am doing.

If I had been allowed to ask a supplementary question, it would have been something like this—I hope the parliamentary secretary takes note of it. Is it the policy of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to require borrowers to pay interest on the full amount of mortgage, in spite of the fact these borrowers have not received the full amount of mortgage money because of a holdback due to improper finishing of a home?

This may sound like a minor problem, but seven householders in one town have complained to me on various occasions. The minister's office has received some letters about this problem, dating back some time. To top it all off, I received a telegram this morning urgently requesting some action on this matter. I feel that action is required.

I spoke to several of these householders over the telephone. I have a rough transcript of what one told me. During 1970-71 and 1972, Bal-Man Homes of Saskatoon built several houses in Meadow Lake. He understands there were several built in other centres, including Biggar, Rosetown and Saskatoon. He said he does not know much about the ones in other centres, but in Meadow Lake it appears the houses are basically structurally sound. However, substandard workmanship did go into the finishing of these houses in many instances. There were things like paint jobs with inadequate sanding, inadequate covering of the material on the gyproc, and so on. Initially, the CMHC inspector passed these homes. He took exception, stating that this was not correct, that the houses had not been painted properly. The inspector came and inspected them and agreed it was not up to standard.

He wrote to Bal-Man Homes and CMHC, but to no avail. Approximately two months after they had moved into their homes they started getting notices from the land titles office in North Battleford that mechanics liens were being placed against the homes by different contractors such as roofers, plumbers, suppliers of materials and so on.

They asked the CMHC lawyer in Meadow Lake what could be done. No one got a satisfactory answer except that it appeared they would have to pay off these liens. They wrote many letters and received a different answer each time. Sometimes they were told they could take legal action against Bal-Man Homes. At other times they were told that Bal-Man Homes was bankrupt, or there was impending receivership and legal action. They were told their statutory declaration was signed to the effect the work was completed and paid for before CMHC approved disbursement of the funds. It seems odd, though, that CMHC did not insist on having receipts as well as a statutory declaration from the contractor. He said they had contacted the manager and assistant manager of CMHC in Saskatoon but had not managed to get any satisfactory answer as to what effect these mechanics liens would have on them. One person was told to forget about them, that they did not mean anything. Others were told that the mechanics liens would stay on indefinitely and collection made either before or at the time of sale.

He said they were paying CMCH the full amount of their mortgage payments, or were until July 1 when he discontinued until he got some satisfaction. He said he notified the minister that he was doing this. He said that CMHC continue to tell them they will have to wait until a trustee is appointed and an investigation conducted, that an investigation is being carried out and that eventually their homes will be fit to live in.

In many cases he said they could not afford to wait. There are three who are subject to immediate transfer by their employers, one to be transferred on August 1. He must be able to sell his house to some one else with a clear title, except for the CMHC mortgage, in order that he can move and recover his investment. There has just been no action on this at all.

He said they are waiting for the finishing to be done on these homes; they have piles of dirt in the front yards, the shingles on the roofs are not properly fastened down and the venting is not completed properly. He suggested that small things like this will cause the homes to deteriorate and that they have no money right now to fix up what they have already paid for through their mortgages.

I understand the money was loaned directly by CMHC for the purpose of building low-income homes on speculation by Bal-Man Homes Limited. Furthermore I understand that money was held back as homes were not adequately completed, but that the borrowers had to pay interest on the entire principal. I should like to have some comment from the parliamentary secretary on the matters I have raised tonight.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the subject matter raised, the 11 units in Meadow Lake are being built under the assisted home-ownership program, the builder having obtained speculative loans under the program. The 11 units have been sold with the majority being occupied by the purchasers who have been making payments on the mortgages.

Final inspections have not yet been made on any of the houses and the corporation has mortgage moneys on hand sufficient to complete the houses should the builder not be in a position to do so. Under these circumstances the purchasers are not in any danger of losing their equity or the money paid on monthly mortgage payments. I am sure the hon. member will be happy to be able to assure his constituents of that fact.

Incidentally, the purchasers would also be eligible for assistance, as I mentioned privately to the hon. member this afternoon, under Section 8.1 of the new legislation, Bill C-133, although there would seem to be no reason to expect in this case such assistance would be necessary as CMHC has withheld funds.

Although purchasers are making full monthly payments on their mortgages, even though all mortgage moneys have not been advanced, they are not in the final analysis being called upon to pay interest on money not advanced—and this the hon. member can report to his constituents as well—because interest credits will subsequently be made to their accounts.

The hon. member will also be interested to learn that the manager and assistant manager of CMHC, the Saskatoon office, are meeting the purchasers in Meadow Lake on the evening of July 24, that is tomorrow night, for the purpose of reviewing the situation and answering the questions of the homeowners. This afternoon I asked CMHC officals to ask their people in the field to exert maximum pressure on the builder and whoever is responsible there to complete these houses, remedy the deficiencies which apparently do exist and try to bring matters up to the satisfaction of the purchasers.

INFORMATION CANADA—SUGGESTED DISBANDMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my comments tonight arise from a question I asked on Friday last of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) concerning Information Canada. I asked it in light of the Prime Minister's expressed view that the agency was now regarded as a propaganda machine and it was going to be disbanded. The minister lamentably replied it was not.

I want to cite three particular reasons for disbanding Information Canada. The first is the waste involved, the second is partisan abuse, and the third, the most important, is the view that it is simply an improper power for the government to have at this time.

● (2220)

I want to deal first with waste. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) introduced Information Canada during the 1970's, he said:

The object will be to increase effectiveness as well as to save money by reducing duplication in the use of staff and equipment and by better joint use of the government's information resources.

I want to draw attention to two particular phrases; the first "saving money", the second, the idea of "reducing duplication". Since the establishment of Information Canada, nine departments alone have increased their own internal information budgets from $19 million in 1970-71 to fully $36 million in 1972-73, almost a doubling of expenditure. There was a commitment at that time that only 150 individuals would be associated with the on-going activities of Information Canada. Now there are 192. There was a commitment then that there would be only 25 information officers; already there are 38.

What is worse, Sir, is that despite this waste and growth Information Canada is not doing its job. Most members in this House are acquainted with the slowness of the agency. Far more important, the director of regional operations said in May of this year that the program, which is designed to reach out to the 43 per cent of Canadians whom the government considers do not know what is going on in Canada, is not working. One of the reasons it is not working is this; the government is running offices of the kind these people never reach. As a bold new initiative they are sending out a salesman on a bicycle in Nova Scotia to try to acquaint people with the work of Information Canada and to drum up business. That is a complete confession of failure of the agency. Much more stark is the Prime Minister's statement the other day. One other indication of that is that Information Canada, which was presumably created to meet a public need for information, has now had to set up its own public relations bureau to create that need that it was designed to meet.

Mr. R. A. J. Phillips, the former deputy director, in a document which the present director said was "never supposed to be published" said, and I quote: "It is urgent to consider some projects to justify our budget and existence." The upshot of that was that he was moved out of Information Canada to a safer haven. That is a clear example of the outright waste that exists in Information Canada. The greatest effort now is to create a demand for its services and to consider some projects to justify its budget and existence.

I want to make a quick reference to partisan abuse. The first director was a very prominent Quebec Liberal who has now moved out. I think probably that capacity has diminished somewhat, and once the suspicion that there is partisan abuse subsides it will be used for party purposes again.

So beyond the waste and beyond the capacity for partisan abuse, what is really wrong with Information Canada is that it represents a power which it is improper for a government to possess. However it is disguised, it is a means by which the government seeks to impose its particular view of what is right and what is real. It is, to use the Prime Minister's phrase, a "propaganda machine". That is clear whether you accept the official defence that there is a "right to know" among the 43 per cent of Canadians whom the government believes did not know much about what is going on, or whether you need the more frank defence, which members of the government party have expressed to me privately, that the government has to have a better means of reaching Canadians than relying on those guys in the Press Gallery. It is, in short, an attempt to get around the normal filters of democracy; an attempt not to present information, but to manage it.

The failure so far of Information Canada does not make it any less sinister, because the government is determined not to let it fail. That was the clear purport of the statement by the Prime Minister, who proposes to conquer the west by reforming Information Canada, and the response by the Minister of Labour that nothing is wrong with what the government is doing. That betrays the complacent, persisting view that nothing is wrong with what the Liberal government has done; the only fault is in telling. All that is needed is a better propaganda machine.

I wish to suggest in passing that if there were a genuine desire to inform Canadians, the government would not hide so many documents, or avoid so many inquiries, or stamp "secret" on so much public business.

Information Canada must be seen as part of the overweighted capacity of the government to influence opinion and restrict options in Canada. It is a clear example of adding power to the powerful. The native people of James Bay have no Information Canada, nor does the small businessman quietly going broke, nor the legions of the unemployed, nor the old. The weak have no weapon. Even the parties in opposition in Parliament have no Information Canada, no powerful means to present an alternate view. Indeed, while the rules of Parliament have been changed to weaken the opposition, Information Canada has been created to strengthen the government.

That is the context in which the idea of Information Canada is truly alarming. It is a terrible waste when it does not work, as it does not work now. But if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ever upgrades it, if he ever succeeds in creating the kind of propaganda machine he wants, there will be less freedom of opinion, less examination of options that we need to survive as a modern democracy.

This question should not end here. I hope the government will have sufficient honesty to refer to the parliamentary committee the whole question of the imbalance of power to influence opinion and express opinion in Canada, instead of staying with Information Canada which is designed to make that imbalance worse.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, Information Canada activities related to the reinforcing of the federal presence are as follows. Federal inquiry centres and bookstores have been established by Information Canada in prominent locations in Canadian cities, namely, Montreal, Ottawa, Halifax, Winnipeg and Vancouver. Each is clearly marked with the bar and leaf federal symbol. Some 500,000 inquiries were received last year and the rate is increasing some 20 per cent a year.

Plans for the current year call for the opening of federal inquiry services in the hon. member's province of Alberta, in Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. Once in place, it can be expected that many more thousands of citizens will avail themselves of the services offered and thus become more aware of the federal presence in this country.

In both Manitoba and Nova Scotia Information Canada is currently working with the regional offices of other federal departments on a development plan to strengthen and support the relationship between the federal government and the people, and in so doing is, of course, extending the federal presence beyond the urban centres to areas where the need for communication is every bit as pressing. Through the activities of the mobile information offices and federal offices, the presence will become manifest in areas previously rarely reached.

Through the launching of the federal identity program, the largest such corporate identity undertaking in the world, Information Canada has made the bar and leaf symbol the sign of the federal presence from one end of Canada to the other. It is seen everywhere on federal buildings, vehicles, aircraft, uniforms, post boxes and so forth. Over 50 federal departments and agencies incorporate the bar and leaf symbol into their letterheads, press releases, on the cover of their publications, and each time it is seen it is recognized as a manifestation of the federal presence.

Given the opportunity to continue the development of its citizen's inquiry service, which is probably unique in the world, the federal presence will become even more manifest in all corners of this country. But it cannot happen overnight and it cannot happen if the agency is not encouraged in its work.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) sought to move concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. The Chair expressed reservations about a procedural aspect of the report, more particularly in relation to the form of the recommendation of the committee. I undertook to look into the matter more closely. It now appears that the French language text of the report was correct as to form. The chairman has agreed to make the necessary correction to the English text so that the recommendations of the committee are now couched in the required words to the effect that the committee recommends that the government give consideration to the advisability of taking certain action. The hon. member may therefore proceed with the motion.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved that the second report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, presented to the House on Monday, July 16, be now concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is an agreement that there will not be a debate on this motion and as chairman of the committee who put forward the motion it is my duty to make a mis au point with regard to the reporting of this matter in the press because of the importance of this subject. I would commend the body of the report not only to hon. members but also to the press because in it is contained the substance of what was discussed in the committee. It was the feeling of the committee that, although a complete ban on children's advertising would not be the route to follow, the CRTC will be asked to regulate in such a way that there will be no direct advertising exclusively aimed at children; in other words, that it be aimed at the parents. This is something that should be well understood because, although it was not possible for the committee to prove scientifically that there was actual harm to children, it was considered that an exploitation of children exists when advertising is directed to them, and this is not at all desirable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I must say that, since the hon. member for Cochrane has moved concurrence in the report, and since there is to be no debate on this motion—I do not know how much consultation there has been with other members of the House—as a member of the committee who attended the committee meetings for over a month, it was unfortunate that I had to be away when the report was drafted, I believe, in one session late Friday afternoon. I did not really have a chance to put forward many of my views on the report. I must say that the report which I finally saw covers many of the interesting points that were advanced in the testimony before the committee, but I cannot agree with what the chairman of the committee just said or what is set out in the report regarding the use of the word "exploitation". If we are to refer to exploitation in connection with advertising, depending on how exploitation is defined, we can say that there is exploitation in any and all forms of advertising.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I know my friends to the left, and friends farther left than that—

Mr. Baldwin: Where?

Mr. Nowlan: —are the first to use the term "exploitation of the masses" and other such terms ad nauseam and ad infinitum.

• (1410)

Mr. Nowlan: What I do not like, Mr. Speaker, is the unseemly haste both in drawing up the committee report after a month's long debate, and in this move for concurrence today. I did not see any notice of any committee meeting, although the steering committee may have met and decided to move concurrence in the report today. But still I do not quite understand why the move has been made today.

If such a term as "exploitation of children" can be applied to television advertising, I would point out no one has a monopoly on children and on what happens to them with respect to television. I have four children myself. That does not quite tally with the numerals of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), but I would point out that children are exploited by their parents anyway, at least up to the ages of four or five, so that they may start to learn some of the guidelines laid down for adulthood. I do not believe that eliminating television advertising will necessarily be the cure for this problem. As a matter of fact, I think the committee missed a golden opportunity to put the CBC right on the spot. If it is to act as a public network I do not believe there should be advertising on the state system. The state pays for that system.

We do not have a distinctive Canadian television system right now. Canadian radio is distinctive, but not television, and if we are ever to have a distinctive Canadian system I think we could have taken a small step forward by having no children's advertising. Let the state system be supplied with funds, either through underwriting or in some other way, to make up for the lost advertising dollar. That applies to the state system. Let the private network show advertisements, but only in conformity with the advertising code that we are told is going to be administered more strictly by the CRTC. Instead of that, Mr. Speaker, we have a hodgepodge in the recommendations contained in the report.

First, the CRTC in some mysterious way is supposed to define exploitation. Second, it is to have the almost impossible task of trying to define what advertising is geared to parents and what advertising is geared to children. I do not know how some of my hon. friends view the realities of the situation, but what of the program called "M-A-S-H"? Incidentally, that is a good word when one starts thinking of committee reports. M-A-S-H is sponsored by an advertiser, and is shown sometimes in the afternoon and sometimes at night. I suggest that children of six years and over, probably under 12 years, will look at this program if their parents let them, and are just as interested in M-A-S-H as they are in Bugs Bunny on Saturday mornings.

Take the case of the program "Man from U.N.C.L.E." or "Girl from U.N.C.L.E." which is shown from five to six o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the girl from U.N.C.L.E. any day, any way, and that program is supposed to be geared to the grey area between adulthood and childhood.

An hon. Member: Where are you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I suppose there are some very adult things in that program, yet the children seem to like it a lot. How in the world can the CRTC deal with that situation?

The Broadcasting Committee has not even touched the fundamental problem that it should be dealing with this session. A green paper on communications was filed by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) three months ago. As I say, the Broadcasting Committee has not even touched it. The committee has dealt with advertising directed at children, something which is important and interesting. Some hon. members deserve a lot of credit for raising the subject, but I believe it has been raised out of all proportion to the fundamental problems of broadcasting and communications. Loading another element of responsibility on to the CRTC to help decide whether a program is designed for adults or children, and whether there is exploitation of children in advertisements, I think makes the work of the committee rather ridiculous. These are the remarks I should like to make now, even though the chairman said there is not supposed to be a debate.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Broadcasting Committee, I rise in support of the motion for concurrence. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member who just finished speaking. He admitted that he was not at the steering committee meeting, or the final broadcasting committee meeting, which drew up the recommendations. His comments obviously indicate his absence because most of them were directed at children's programming. That is not what the committee recommended; it recommended that advertising not be directed specifically at the child. We heard evidence that the child is too immature to make rational decisions on advertising that is designed primarily to make him act as a salesman or, although he has not the money, to make him pressure his parents into buying goods. We found that the child could not gain information from the 30 second or 50 second commercial which was mainly designed to pressure him into buying or to pressure parents into buying.

This is a sound recommendation which attempts to eliminate a serious problem in our society, a problem on which parents have expressed their concern to members of parliament. I would urge that all members of the House support this resolution that the committee has drawn up.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the committee in question, but from what I hear, the report deals with advertising aimed at children, and which exploits adults as well as children.

It has just been said that it is not good for children to see such advertisements, and I would add that there are some fifty-year olds who have about as much sense as five-year olds. Television advertisements would be just as harmful to them, as to the children.

If agreement has been reached between the various political parties, within the committee, that the report be tabled without debate by the chairman, who is undoubtedly the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), I will raise no objection. Only it would be very important for the committee to take into account the attitude of the CRTC and the CBC.

It was said earlier that it would be acceptable if no advertisements were televised on the government network. I am in total agreement on this point. The national network, which is financed by the people of Canada, must at least spare us the moronic advertisements one sees all day long on the CBC.

Once again I say that I will raise no objection if agreement has already been reached that the committee report be tabled in this House without debate.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that I consider this to be a good report. I agree with the interpretation placed on it by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) who did such a distinguished job as chairman of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I should also like to say in fairness to the chairman of the committee, that this report was tabled in the House more than a week ago. The motion for concurrence was placed on the order paper last Friday which I think gave hon. members ample time to consider it.

May I say in conclusion that I thank hon. members for the fairness with which the subject matter of Bill C-22 was examined by the committee. As far as I am concerned the report has, unfortunately, been misinterpreted by the press but it certainly meets the objectives of my Bill C-22.

Motion agreed to.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSITION OF CANADA IN DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES IN 1970

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister on the subject of a pipeline to move oil from Alaska to the main body of the United States. May I ask whether, back in 1970, the government of Canada took the position that this was not even a subject that could be discussed. I ask this question because, although it relates to three years ago, it is of current importance to Canada today.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is, no.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister what position the government of Canada took, if the position as described and attributed to the government of Canada by a senior official of the United States is denied now by the minister. Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could tell the House briefly what position the government of Canada took.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the position that the government has taken is that we would welcome an application by the American oil companies to build an oil pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley. This application should, under the laws approved by this Parliament, be made to the National Energy Board.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSITION OF CANADA ON OWNERSHIP TRANSMITTED TO UNITED STATES IN MAY, 1972

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As in May, 1972, our position was apparently expressed on a comprehensive basis to the United States authorities, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether at that time Canada's position with regard to the ownership of such pipeline was as set forth in the message sent to the United States embassy early in July of this year? Was that position with regard to ownership put forth as part of our comprehensive position in May, 1972?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak as to dates but I do reaffirm what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, that the position of the federal government with respect to an oil pipeline was decided by the government last summer. I cannot say in what particular month that was.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—SUGGESTION CANADA RECOMMEND MOVING CHERRY POINT REFINERY FARTHER SOUTH

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Having in mind the discussions going on or pending in Washington at this time following the green light which has been given by the United States for the shipment of oil down the Pacific Coast by giant oil tankers to the Cherry Point Refinery, which is approximately 13 miles from Surrey-White Rock, may I ask, is the government giving consideration to making strong representations to the United States government aimed at the removal of the Cherry Point Refinery to a point farther south on the Pacific Coast and farther away from Canadian shores?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this question gives me the opportunity to clarify a point that seems to be a bit obscure. The Canadian government's principal objection to the TAPS line proposal has to do with the possibility that large tanker's would enter the narrow waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. The question of whether the United States should build a pipeline across Alaska and carry oil down to California is not really a question upon which we have much of an opportunity to express a view. However, with respect to the narrow waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, I believe we have just as much interest as the United States. It is on this point we have centered our objections. I say to the hon. member if we could remove that problem, the rest is a matter that does not concern us directly.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF INDEPENDENT MEDIATOR

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Labour relating to the possibility of almost certainty of a strike of the railway employees. Has the minister discussed with the parties or has he himself been giving consideration to the appointment of a mediator, not someone from his department, but an independent mediator to seek a settlement to the dispute without interfering with any rights the employees may have?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker. I have been considering both alternatives. I have acted now with reference to having mediation services provided by my department. As to whether an outside mediator would help, that is being explored. If it would help, it will be entertained. In the meantime, Mr. Kelly from my department is involved.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION AGREEMENT NOT TO INTERFERE WITH GRAIN SHIPMENTS IN EVENT OF STRIKE—POSITION OF COMPANIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary arises out of a statement made by a spokesman for the union some time last week. It was that the union and their members are prepared to make sure grain shipments continue, even if there should be a rail strike, on condition that the companies co-operate and do not abuse the situation. Has the minister followed up or does he intend to follow up this possible offer of the union's concern and have discussions not only with them, but also the companies on that point to make certain that there is no interference with regard to grain shipments?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had some discussions with the union officials on this question as well as the over-all strike situation or possibility of a strike situation. As far as the companies are concerned, I will be making approaches to them to determine their intentions in this regard. I have not precisely done that to this time, but I know communications have been made with them to explore their intentions in this regard.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION DISSATISFACTION WITH PENSION PLAN—SUGGESTED INQUIRY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): There is one central point to the dispute of which the minister is well aware. There is widespread dissatisfaction among railway employees with the pension plan negotiated and agreed to some time ago which is to form part of any final settlement. In view of that widespread discontent and the relevance it will have on the kind of railway stoppage, is the minister considering acting without too much delay to appoint someone to make a thorough inquiry into the pension plans of the railways which have been the subject of discussion in Parliament for many years because of the historical inadequacies?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it is worth noting there has been a considerable movement towards the improvement of these pension plans for the railway workers. We are very aware of the importance workers are attaching to this and are giving consideration to some formula in this regard. One of the reports of the union representative on the conciliation board advanced certain suggestions. We are looking at those at the moment.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION AGREEMENT TO EXCLUDE FERRIES SERVING PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEWFOUNDLAND FROM STRIKE ACTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister confirm that the unions concerned have agreed to exclude CNR operated ferries serving Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland from any strike action that may be taken in the near future in connection with the present labour dispute?

● (1430)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker. The union has indicated that it will co-operate in every way to ensure that the ferry services to which the hon. member has referred will not be interrupted.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF LOWERING AGE OF PENSION ELIGIBILITY TO 60—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Are consultations now in progress between the federal and the provincial governments with a view to granting old age security pensions to persons aged 60 and over?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question on several occasions. I have nothing new to add. It is one of the matters which is being considered as part of the general review of social security in Canada. It is only one of the many questions being examined.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since the provinces are now giving some financial assistance to persons of 60 or more, can the minister tell us what proportion of that assistance is paid by the federal government?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE AGREEMENT OF UNION ON MOVEMENT OF FOOD TO NEWFOUNDLAND IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary to the Minister of Labour. Notwithstanding the assurances by the union that the ferry services to and from the island provinces will not be disrupted and that grain shipments will continue, I ask the minister whether he has consulted with the union with respect to the movement of essential food items into my own province of Newfoundland, bearing in mind that most of the essential foodstuff entering the province does so by rail.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I believe the union has given consideration to these aspects but there is no indication that the same guarantees will apply to that situation as is the case in respect of grain and the ferry services.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION DISSATISFACTION WITH PENSION PLAN—APPOINTMENT OF INDEPENDENT EXPERT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the sharp difference between the company and the union with regard to an assessment of the monetary value of the pension plan, and the importance at arriving at an agreement in this dispute, is the minister considering the proposal of the union that he appoint an independent expert to advise the government as to the real value of the pension plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION AGREEMENT TO MOVE GRAIN AND FOOD IN EVENT OF STRIKE—POSITION OF COMPANIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I asked yesterday whether the management of the two major railways was prepared to continue to move grain and essential foodstuffs, the unions having already indicated that they are prepared to do so. Might I again ask the minister whether the government has sought such an assurance from management and, if so, whether it had received an assurance to this effect?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I am not aware of having received assurances, to use that phrase, from the companies.

Mr. Gleave: Then, may I ask again whether the minister has sought those assurances?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The companies are aware that we would very much like them to be able to operate in a way which would lead to as little dislocation as possible.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—LENGTH OF STRIKE BEFORE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to ask the minister whether the cabinet has come to a decision as to the number of weeks which must be allowed to elapse before, in its opinion, the public becomes sufficiently exasperated to not accept the additional burden, involved in the increase, which would be passed on to it through a settlement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The government is very concerned about the public interest in this matter and both parties involved are well aware of this.

Oral Questions

CP AIR

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE OF MACHINISTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT—SAFETY OF OPERATION WITHOUT MACHINISTS

Mr. Duncan Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): My question, too, is addressed to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister outline the progress of the negotiations between CP Air and the machinists union, and tell the House what steps have been taken to avert this strike?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with both parties with respect to the dispute. As of the moment, neither is desirous of mediation services of any kind. The parties are engaged in direct negotiations at the moment.

Mr. Beattie: In order to avoid an unsafe situation, the machinists' union has called on the government to shut down CP Air if the machinists strike tomorrow. In the light of the minister's direct responsibility in this dispute, has the government considered this important matter and, if so, is the government satisified that the airline can be operated safely without the machinists?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As far as CP Air is concerned, it is a private corporation governed by regulations, and responsibility for those regulations rests with the Minister of Transport to whom the hon. member's question might properly be directed.

PRIVACY

ALLEGED TAPING OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST BY CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, both in that capacity and as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Throughout the years, as he will agree, the essence of communication between nation and nation, and their representatives, has been its entirely confidential nature, and to my knowledge, with the exception of one or two communist countries, there has never been any question of eavesdropping on those discussions, or of their transcription by tape. In view of what has been revealed, that in the White House, in Washington, when leaders of other countries have met with the President, secret eavesdropping has taken place, has the government of Canada made any protest to the United States against this practice, one which unless it were prevented and discontinued would undermine the whole basis of international discussion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. We have not made any such protest. The Prime Minister expressed it very well last week, I thought, when in reply to a similar question he said he continued to believe that his conversations with the President of the United States would be treated as secret and confidential.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that was a pious expression of hope. I ask the minister whether the government has examined what took place during the discussions between the President and the Prime Minister and concluded that it would not really matter whether their contents became public or not?

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCIAL OBJECTIONS TO PRINCIPLE OF EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Has the minister reconsidered his position on the issue of equal pay for equal work done by employees under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board no matter where in Canada they may be employed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacKay: I should like to ask the minister, now, whether he has received any indication from any provincial administration that it objects to this concept of equal pay for equal work?

Mr. Drury: Not to my knowledge, but I will inquire.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I would ask the President of the Treasury Board how it is that he is not aware of an objection put forward by provincial governments with respect to equal pay for equal work, though it was reported to a committee of this House that such a position had been expressed by the provinces to the government? As President of the Treasury Board he should be the first to know. But as usual he will be the last.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REPOSSESS—POSITION OF HOLDERS OF SECOND OR THIRD MORTGAGES

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that a coroner's jury recommended last week the closure of Rochdale College in Toronto, and despite the fact the college is now fighting in the courts a foreclosure order by CMHC, would the government consider the possibility of taking further action so that the will of the people in Toronto might be served?

● (1440)

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the minister has replied to this question on a number of occasions. The government has given instructions to its attorneys to proceed as quickly as the courts will allow with the question involved in taking possession of Rochdale. As soon as the courts allow the proceedings to continue, this action will be brought to a conclusion.

Mr. Arrol: Mr. Speaker, is action being blocked by those holding second or third mortgages?

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the answer to that. I will look into that question and try to supply an answer.

ENERGY

TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL TO UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE REQUEST IN 1970 FOR TREATY FOR A PIPELINE CORRIDOR

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising from questions asked earlier by the Leader of the Opposition and in view of the ambiguity of the statement attributed to deputy assistant secretary Katz. I should like to ask the minister whether in the 1970 discussions the request from the United States was for an agreement or for a treaty? If it was a request for a treaty for a pipeline corridor or right of way through Canada, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate to the House in what particular respects that proposal differed from the kind of arrangement which exists currently whereby certain Canadian oil is transported from one point in Canada to another point in Canada through the United States.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not participate in all the discussions which took place in 1970, but my recollection and my exchange of recollections with my colleagues leads me to believe the conversations at that time were of a very general character and were not specifically related to a pipeline. They concerned many aspects of energy and this was only one thing that happened to be discussed at that time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister, as Secretary of State for External Affairs or perhaps as Acting Prime Minister, specifically whether the United States at any time approached Canada to enter into a treaty arrangement with it for a corridor or right of way for an oil pipeline between Alaska and the main body of the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if any such proposal had been made it would have been made to me as Secretary of State for External Affairs, and no such proposal was made. There may have been some people in the United States who had some general ideas like this, but no proposal was made by the United States government to the Canadian government at that time.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Following the appeal made in Canada yesterday by Mr. Trevor Page, one of the directors of the United Nations movement set up to help the people of Sahel, does the government intend to extend to the end of August shipment of food supplies to Nigeria, shipments which were due to cease at the end of July?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have an on-going program of several million dollars. INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. With reference to his announcement yesterday of a contract of some half a million dollars awarded to the Saskatoon Fire Engine Company for 14 firefighting pumpers, could the hon. gentleman inform the House if this equipment will be available to cope with the fires ignited in western Canada by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR SMALL CRAFT FACILITIES TO DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I should like to address a question to the parliamentary secretary. The minister indicated on several occasions in committee and in the House that the decision to transfer responsibility for small craft harbours would be handed over to the Department of the Environment. Would he advise the House if this decision has been made?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the minister intended to make a statement on this matter last Friday, but will be making a statement this coming Monday. I believe at that time the answer will be provided.

AIR CANADA

DISPUTE WITH CANADIAN AIRLINE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION—REQUEST OF UNION TO PROSECUTE—DECISION OF MINISTER

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and relates to the strike of Air Canada employees in Winnipeg now in its ninth week. Has the minister finished his consideration of the union's request to present a case before the labour relations board regarding alleged unfair labour practices on the part of Air Canada and if so what decision has been reached?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have given the consent requested under the act for the union to bring its complaint before the Canada Labour Relations Board.

ALLEGED USE OF NON-UNION PERSONNEL DURING STRIKE—RESULTS OF INQUIRY BY MINISTER

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he has now completed his investigation of the union's allegation that Air Canada is forcing non-union clerical personnel to work in the capacity of strike-breakers and if so what are the results?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied there has been a concerted effort in this regard. There was no concrete evidence. However, the number of employees working there is of minimal proportions.

MANPOWER

SHORTAGE OF FARM LABOUR—POSSIBLE GRANTING OF WORK PERMITS TO MEXICAN AND PORTUGUESE WORKERS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister undertake to direct competent Canadian labour to southwestern Ontario or allow work permits to be granted to Mexican and Portuguese labourers in view of the fact that crops of food are now being lost as a result of the lack of harvest labour which local Manpower offices stated as recently as yesterday was not available?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been in regular communication and conversation with the provincial government of Ontario on this matter. Some problems have been identified. From information I have now, I think the problems have been somewhat exaggerated. We have identified some 4,200 applicants for jobs in this area. They sometimes find that the conditions under which they are asked to work are not satisfactory to them. I would not take sides on that issue. To sum up, in view of representations made, we are looking into it with a view to making special efforts to permit the bringing in of named foreign workers. Where we are absolutely satisfied that this is required, we will move very quickly and we will be in touch with the affected employers within the next few hours as a matter of fact.

[Later:]

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Kent-Essex put to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It relates more specifically to the issuing of permits to Mexican families coming to southern Ontario on a contractual basis to help in the harvest of canning crops.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I missed the specific point of the question. Would the hon. member mind repeating it?

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We made an approach to the minister's department some time ago—I am referring to farmers in the area—asking that Mexican families be brought in as a unit on a contractual basis to assist in the harvesting of canning crops.

Mr. Andras: We are in consultation with the particular employers to whom the hon. member referred. There is some difficulty in giving blanket authorization to Mexican families, particularly in view of the employment of children of a very tender age which, I understand, may have been the practice in the past. I would sum it up by saying that where working conditions are acceptable according to provincial and other labour standards, we would be sympathetic to bringing in those families, not only Mexicans, but Portuguese and people from other countries.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH THE THREE GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the promise made by the government to assist in the rehabilitation of Viet Nam after years of devastation there, is it the intention of the Canadian government to take steps to establish diplomatic relations with the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam, commonly known as North Viet Nam, the Republic of Viet Nam or South Viet Nam, and the Provisional Revolutionary Government, all of them recognized as parties to the Paris agreement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our embassy in Peking has been having talks with the embassy of the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam proposing the establishment of diplomatic relations. Our delegation in Saigon has had discussions with the Republic of Viet Nam proposing the establishment of diplomatic relations and the opening of a Canadian embassy in Saigon. We do not propose to establish diplomatic relations with the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Viet Nam.

If so, can the minister outline to the House what the government's position is on the threat to safety caused by the strike and the requests of machinists to shut down CP Air?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not consulted directly with the Minister of Transport in this connection, but I am aware that the Department of Transport and the inspectors responsible for the implementation of these regulations watch situations of this kind constantly and very closely. I am sure they are taking it into account.

If so, will he soon be making a statement on motions about the subject or about the Johnston Commission of Inquiry report which he has had for the past three or four months?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of whether I have studied the particular report on the compressed work week to which the hon. member referred. I must say that I studied many reports on this matter and I am not prepared to make a recommendation to the government at present as to an over-all government policy with respect to it.

Mr. Joe Hueglin (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, may I address this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Earlier today he spoke about evaluation. When consideration is given by the minister's officials to extending Local Initiative Programs over the summer months, were these programs screened to make certain they would not duplicate Opportunities for Youth programs in the same areas?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, they were not necessarily screened to ensure that they would not duplicate OFY programs in the sense that they might be doing similar work or other kind of work, but they are certainly screened to try to ensure that there was no unwarranted duplication of grants, if that is what the hon. member is implying.

Mr. Hueglin: It would seem that the minister and the Secretary of State should get together somehow, since—

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to have details of the specific instances to which the hon. member is referring in order to give him a satisfactory answer. I would certainly request him to send that to me as quickly as possible and I will try to deal with it.

AUTOMOBILES—ALLEGED STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT FAVOURING REMOVAL OF DUTY ON IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Could he inform the House whether or not the Minister of the Environment was stating government policy when he announced at the conference of all the western Liberals meeting, I understand, in a phone booth in Vancouver last week, that he favoured the removal of the 15 per cent duty that individual Canadians must now pay on cars ordered from the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume the hon. member was bugging the phone booth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

YVES GEOFFROY—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON REQUEST FOR PARDON OR NEW TRIAL

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, also in his capacity as Acting Minister of Justice. When will the government inform the House as to what its decision will be with respect to the petition of Yves Geoffroy for a pardon or a new trial?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, so far as my department is concerned, we have no intention of granting a pardon. I will have to consult the Minister of Justice with respect to those aspects which relate to his department.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—RESPONSE OF UNITED STATES TO CANADIAN OBJECTIONS TO TANKERS MOVING THROUGH STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the movement of Alaskan oil through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and the efforts that the Secretary of State for External Affairs ways he made to prevent this. I should like to ask him what response he has had from the United States, whether he has had specific success or any reason to believe that the United States is not planning to move that oil through the Straits of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think we have had some success at least in acquainting the members of the administration of the United States of the very serious danger, not only to Canada but to the bordering areas of the United States of the movement of these oil tankers. The secretary of state of the United States has spoken to me about the possibility of setting up a group to look at this problem. My own view is that we have only begun to fight on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: This is why I think there should be a distinct separation between the question of the approval of the TAPS line and the movement of oil through the narrow Strait of Juan de Fuca since there has been some confusion about this. I hope the statements I have made today will help to clarify the point. We are not particularly concerned about the movement of oil across Alaska. What we are concerned about is the movement through the narrow waters, and we are making a distinct impression both upon the government of the United States and upon the people in that area.

● (1500)

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that it has been the announced intention for a number of years to move this oil through the Strait of Juan de Fuca, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain to the House why the government of Canada is only beginning to fight?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think I should remind the Leader of the Opposition that there is a great deal of opposition in the United States to the TAPS line; indeed, the bill in the U.S. Senate was only approved by a single vote. So I think it is quite right that we are only beginning to fight, because now we have something tangible to fight about.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON RAILWAY LINE AS ALTERNATIVE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, while the government of Canada is in the position of just beginning to fight, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any consideration has been given to provide a railroad to haul the oil across Canada. I understand a committee connected with the Cabinet is giving consideration to this matter. Would he let the House and the country know the present position in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that was an idea put forward originally by the premier of one of the NDP provinces and I gather that the right hon. gentleman is supporting it. We have been looking into the possibilities. It is an interesting idea. We have not yet reached any conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert on a supplementary and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister let the House and the country know who he means by "we" when he says, "We have been looking into the possibilities"? Is there a committee, and could he tell us the personnel of the committee? This alternative is strongly pressed by the Queen's University group of whom the minister, of course, is fully aware.

Mr. Sharp: When I said "we" I was referring to the government of Canada.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed, from Monday, July 23, consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had two or three minutes before ten o'clock and was dealing with the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I said I thoroughly subscribe to her intentions, her desires and what the hon. lady hopes to achieve by this amendment. She and I are in agreement on this score. I know the problem. All of us know it. We abhor the violence involved in these matters: it is a very terrible thing.

I also pointed out that there was a serious technical problem with regard to the establishment of the offences mentioned in the motion. That by itself need not be enough to stop us, but the motion is trying to establish what could be called a double offence. First, it is calling upon the Crown, in any charge which would be laid if this amendment became law, to prove that rape or attempted rape had been committed. This has to be established by evidence beyond any reasonable doubt, and as it involves a sexual offence of this type it has been held by the courts—although it is not in the written law of the country—that there must be corroboration in some material respect.

These are exceedingly difficult cases to prove. As I said last night, anybody involved in the professional career of law, either prosecuting or defending such cases, will realize this fact. In the event of the death of the poor unfortunate victim, the capacity for there to be corroborating evidence becomes exceedingly slim, if not impossible. Even if that offence is proved and having gone on to the next stage, you must then establish that the death of the person involved can be laid at the door of the person charged with the offence. I am only putting this forward, Mr. Speaker, not as a reason for not passing the amendment but simply to set out the problems and the difficulties which are conjured up by the hon. member's amendment. Indeed, it would probably require very substantial changes in the law of evidence if there is ever to be a conviction under this proposal of the hon. member.

There are others, of course, who say that such a provision constitutes a deterrence. There are elements of deterrence in the punishments which we have on our statute books, but from my experience I must say that in addition to deterrence there are substantial elements of fear and vengeance involved. I think these are not emotions which need be hidden. I do not say they are healthy emotions, but they exist, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the progress of society over thousands of years, fear and vengeance are emotions which are still very much present in our society as a whole and in its individual members.

I understand these emotions. There is fear by parents about the perpetration of any of these horrible offences on their children. There is the very human element of seeking revenge or vengeance when you are either involved in such cases or know the people involved, or simply because you believe the offence is so wrong, so abhorrent, so repugnant to human nature that revenge must be a part of the punishment. These elements do exist. Let us not delude ourselves by saying they do not. With all members of the House, I believe it is necessary, in the kind of society in which we live, to provide opportunities for our families, friends and neighbours to walk the streets in safety and to protect our families and friends from crimes of violence which, unfortunately, have become so predominant.

I go along that far with those who take the other side of this argument, but there I part company with them. I am not going to attempt to convert the hon. member. The course of debates in this House over the last ten or 12 years has made it abundantly clear that very few people do change their minds on the issue, and in effect these debates are an opportunity to put on the record the reasons why hon. members feel as they do and vote as they do. But I part company with those who believe that the enlargement of the number of offences for which the punishment shall be the infliction of death constitutes a deterrent to the commission of such offences. This has been my experience. I put it on the record previously. I part company with the hon. member and her supporters in this regard. I give them full credit for the fact that they genuinely believe that this may be the case. They are entitled to that view. But, I cannot accept it. It is for that reason, as I said yesterday, that I will vote against the amendment.

Last night my hon. friend from Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), for whom I have a great deal of respect, mentioned the coddling of criminals and their glorification. I go along with him on that. There has been a tendency in certain elements of the press, not necessarily in Canada, to emphasize violent crimes as news that is of interest to people. As the hon. member for Malpeque said, there is a tendency to play up some of these particularly atrocious and colourful crimes. I think there ought to be a responsibility for moderation in this respect, and I agree with him on that as well.

I would point out that the dramas and other programs depicted on the television screen are bound to have some effect. I do not want to say things that perhaps ought not to be said, but it is not long ago that Senator Dodd of the United States headed a subcommittee of the Senate investigating the relationship between illustrations of crime on television and the growth of juvenile delinquency and crime. During the course of the inquiry a witness stated that one reason the growth of crime by juveniles had not spread was that many of these television shows were broadcast at a late hour and therefore were not seen by many young people. The television executives, after reading that evidence, immediately took steps to change the hour of these shows and brought them on earlier. I think this was a shocking thing to do. There is no question that this kind of relationship exists and I think that at some time a committee of this House might well examine it.

I know this has been scoffed at, but it seems to me that the crimes we are striking at are not susceptible of easy solution. It is all very well to say that we will hang more people, make more crimes susceptible to punishment by hanging and this will cure the problem, but I do not agree with that at all, Mr. Speaker. There is no single, simple, easy solution. We have allowed these things to develop over the years, and we have a responsibility in this House to examine with care and in detail every single method which can be employed to curtail the extent to which violence has become so prevalent in our society. It seems to me that the improper use of television films is something which we should certainly examine.

I also agree with the hon. member for Malpeque when he talked about permissiveness. There was a time, especially during the 1960s, when it was fashionable to glorify permissiveness, to accept it. I believe we are heading the other way now. That is another aspect of our society.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) wishes to ask a question.

[English]

Mrs. Morin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that my amendment was not about films or movies shown at the end of the day but, rather about capital punishment for kidnappers and rapists.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that is the text of the hon. lady's amendment, but I am trying to assist her by indicating that the offences at which she is striking will not necessarily be solved by her motion and other possibilities are inherent in this question. I was simply adhering to the proposals advanced by my hon. friend from Malpeque which the hon. lady received yesterday without any objection. Mr. Speaker, this relates precisely to the point I made before, the question of the rule of law. There are those who suggest that in an attempt to strike at crimes of violence we should relax the strict requirement of proof which has grown up over the years. This is particularly the case in the United States. I suggest that it is not a practice which should be adopted by any country. There are comparatively few countries in the world which have a rule of law which serves as protection for society. It has taken a great many centuries to build up this type of protection for society. I am sure the hon. member for Malpeque and the hon. lady would not want to see this requirement eased.

Mr. Speaker, I abhor violence. I have seen something of killing in wars, and I have lived with the effects of it in my professional life in times of peace. I certainly join members of this House in any way, in any measure, in any effort which serves to stop violence and violent killing. But in doing so I cannot forsake the principles which I have advocated on a great many occasions in this House, that we do not make it any better by encouraging or by allowing the passage of laws which say to the state: You, too, can engage in violent killing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Violence of any kind begets violence. Bloodshed encourages bloodshed. I think the attempt which the hon. member is making in her amendment to secure a very desirable objective will not be brought about in that way.

I simply conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that in the journey of life our society has many miles to travel, many mountains to climb, many rivers to cross and the destination is not that clear to any of us yet. I do not think we will ease that journey, nor will we make our destination any more clear by stopping from time to time as we journey to erect scaffolds and hang people from those scaffolds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have risen to speak on capital punishment in this House. On the first occasion I stated the case for capital punishment for murder without distinction as to whether the murder victim was a policeman, shopkeeper, housewife or prison official.

An hon. Member: Or politician.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Or politician. I was one of those who voted against the government's bill to extend the partial ban on capital punishment, and I have not changed my position one iota. In the first place, even if I were prepared to go along with capital punishment for the murder of policemen or prison officials, I do not believe the government has any intention of exacting such punishment for capital murder. We have had a partial ban on capital punishment for more than five years, but the government has no intention of living up to the existing law. As all of us know, every convicted murderer of a policeman over that period has had his sentence commuted by the cabinet.

Before I proceed, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that I am in the forefront of those who support the excellent amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin. I do not believe, as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) stated yesterday, that women have a hangup about the crime of rape. I believe, simply and sincerely, that women are entitled to this protection. The penalty for rape, especially when it results in murder, should be as severe as we can make it.

Mr. Speaker, I have noted that the government has not ever intended to live up to the will of Parliament as expressed in the vote that took place on the original bill five years ago to impose the death penalty for the crime of capital murder. This was borne out very dramatically by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). He tried to influence the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and have Bill C-2 emasculated still further with his amendment to abolish capital punishment completely. That move on the part of the government was sneaky and devious and I cannot help feeling that we in this House have been deceived. The Solicitor General's amendment had all the earmarks—

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) that we had a debate yesterday on whether amendments which were or were not moved in committee could be the subject of debate at the present time. I think the hon. member and all hon. members ought to know that the most important rule of debate is that of relevancy. We have before us a specific motion. Hon. members have been given 20 minutes to put before the House their views in relation to the amendment. I would think hon. members should use those 20 minutes for that purpose and not discuss amendments which are not before us.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was simply saying that we have not had a true representation of the facts. I invite the Solicitor General to rise in his place and correct me. I invite the minister to state in this House that the attempt to press the amendment on the committee was just a last-minute thought.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member does not appear to have heard what I said a moment ago. The hon. member should know that there are rules of this House. The Chair has brought those rules to the attention of the hon. member. An attempt should be made at least to make a speech which comes within the rules. It is not often that the Chair reminds hon. members of the rule of relevancy. It is my impression that this rule is not overworked by hon. members. However, an attempt should be made by hon. members who take part in debate to at least take under consideration the suggestions made by the Chair.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I devoted a large part of my first speech on this topic to the history of capital punishment, hoping to make the point that there is nothing new in the principle of imposing the death penalty for capital crimes. The fact is that this principle has survived intact since the dawn of civilization. Let me say something to those who insist that we are more civilized now and that capital punishment is uncivilized. I invite them to suggest to me that those who commit the brutal and senseless crime of murder are entitled to all the benefits of our civilization. The coddling of a murderer in the name of humanity is not a civilized act. In my view, it is an irresponsible act.

I have said that some members must have been of two minds when they voted to give this bill second reading. I wonder if the government is hoping that the bill will be defeated in the coming vote. I do not know why they would take such a great risk if they really want to get this issue settled. If this is an election gimmick, I must say that the government is miscalculating badly. The consensus of all surveys I have seen on the subject weighs heavily in favour of capital punishment for capital crimes. The government must surely know by now that the Canadian people favour drastic measures to curb the rise in the rate of murder and other violent crimes.

When I spoke on this bill, I posed a hypothetical case for my colleagues and asked: If one of my colleagues was confronted in his home by an armed intruder and knew that he was about to be killed, would he shoot the intruder to save his own life? If the answer is yes, then there is the answer as to whether capital punishment is compatible with what we call civilized conduct. I cannot imagine anyone hesitating to kill a would-be murderer in defence of his own life. So why is there all the anguish and soul-searching about whether or not to take the life of a convicted murderer?

My sympathy is not with the armed intruder. My sympathy lies with the innocent victim of the intruder. My sympathy is with the law-abiding citizen who deserves the protection of those elected to represent him in parliament. We have a responsibility to protect innocent citizens against those who would take the law into their own hands, especially those who would take another life in the course of committing a heinous crime such as rape or kidnapping.

I cannot throw my support to a murderer simply because he is alive and the victim is dead. All too often the victim is forgotten in the course of what is usually a long, hard-fought and expensive trial. All the instruments of justice are at the disposal of the murderer because he is still alive. None of the instruments of justice, none of the advantages of our great civilization is available to the victim because the victim is dead.

When this bill was first introduced in January, most of us here agreed that if capital punishment were to be retained for any crime, it should apply to the murder of a policeman or prison official killed in the line of duty. That provision was in the bill that we passed on second reading a few weeks ago, and it was part of the bill that was passed by parliament more than five years ago. It can be said, then, that this is indeed the will of parliament. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it was also the will of the parliament of 1967. We should now be debating the question of whether we will have capital punishment in Canada or whether it should be abolished. But we are not debating that at all. We debated a few weeks ago, and are again debating today, whether we should pass the buck to another parliament five years from now.

We are expected to make a decision. It has been shown by the present government that there is no point in delaying the decision for another five years. We have been told that over the next five years we will be able to accumulate valuable data that will help us to make a firm decision at some future date. That is what the government said in 1967. And what do we have? We have nothing, absolutely nothing in the way of valid data. This government has commuted every death sentence imposed by the courts of Canada for the crime of capital murder. All of us in the House know that this government imposed a total ban on capital punishment more than five years ago when it adopted the practice of commuting death sentences and, in so doing, made it impossible for us to determine whether the death penalty would indeed be a deterrent.

Today, a criminal who is determined not to get caught will not hesitate to shoot at a policeman. I recall the case of the Toronto policeman who was killed a few months ago when he stopped an automobile that was being driven erratically. The driver simply stepped out of his car and shot the policeman dead. A few days ago a policeman was shot three times in Peterborough when he went to investigate a suspected break-in at a supermarket. In these and other cases relating to the murder of policemen the penalty for the crime committed has been relatively minor. We find that policemen are becoming fair game for anyone who feels that murder is no more serious than break and enter or purse-snatching.

Surely it is the fault of parliament that so many people today lack proper respect for our laws and for our law enforcement officers. It is our fault that this situation has deteriorated to such an extent that a policeman can be shot dead while investigating a minor traffic infraction. We have to consider putting a higher price on the luxury of killing people. The earliest recorded laws of man provide for the execution of criminals for certain capital offences. it may well be that that is one of the reasons why civilization has been able to move forward. I feel certain in my own mind that if there had not been some provision in those early times for controlling the base impulses of man, these impulses would have been paramount and would have won over the instincts that took man out of the caves and the trees.

There is already evidence in our country to show that the permissive policies of the present government are eating away at the fabric of our society and eroding the foundations of traditional concepts of law and order. The victims in this drama are the innocent, the law-abiding and those who want to preserve our society. The winners are those who scoff at our laws, sneer at our institutions and poison the minds of the young and the impressionable. They take all, and give nothing. In far too many cases they take the ultimate: they take another human life. I say again, Mr. Speaker, in far too many cases they take another human life bacause the price is too cheap. We have an extraordinary situation in existence today in this respect. We have a law in Ontario that provides for compensation for victims of violent crime. Almost daily someone is paid damages by the provincial government for injuries suffered by victims of shootings, muggings and other crimes. At the same time we are debating whether we should impose a penalty in kind on the person who inflicts the injury. There are scores of cases where victims of crime suffer the after effects for the rest of their lives, while the criminal serves a few months or a few years in jail and is then free to repeat the crime.

● (1530)

In the case of murder I cannot accept the premise that execution of a murderer does not bring the victim back to life or ease the burden on the victim's family, so there is no point in executions. There is a very valid point. The point is that murder should carry a price as high as the value of the life taken. Anyone who is prepared to take the life of another person, deliberately and calculatedly, should have to pay with his own life. To say that that is uncivilized is pure and utter rubbish. The life of a murderer is no more sacred that that of his victim. That, Mr. Speaker, is what we should be talking about here today.

I would like to answer those people who might construe my position as bloodthirsty. Nothing could be further from the truth. Anyone who draws that conclusion from my remarks has missed the point. The point is that we should be prepared to adopt the strongest possible measures against those in our society who do have a thirst for blood. We should be debating right now the issue of who in Canada is entitled to our protection. It is the law-abiding citizens and the victims of crime who are entitled to our sympathy and our support. I am tired of hearing about how important it is to spare the life of the murderer. In the name of civilization, let us recognize the true role of parliament in this matter. Let us establish once and for all that we do not place the life of the murderer on a higher plane than the life of the victim.

In concluding my remarks, I would like to say to my colleagues that the partial ban on capital punishment over the past five years has resulted in a totally unsatisfactory situation. As we know, it has really been total abolition. We have seen a gradual breakdown of law and order, and in respect for the law and law enforcement personnel.

In place of this bill I would rather have us impose capital punishment for all crimes of murder, where there are no extenuating circumstances, for a period of five years. If this new law were followed to the letter, we would be able properly to assess the value of capital punishment as a deterrent. Another effect, I am sure, would be to place the value of life in the proper perspective. We would in time tend to place as high a value on the life of the victim as on the life of the murderer. This would bring a very worth-while result: if we were to do that, the majority of Canadians might come to feel that we in parliament have their true interests and their welfare at heart.

[Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain).]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion on which I have risen to speak in this debate. In my earlier speech, on February 20, I outlined some of the reasons why I favour reinstatement of the death penalty for murder in Canada. Like the last time, my remarks today will be brief. This is because every conceivable argument regarding the entire subject of capital punishment has been advanced before in this House. Thus, parts of my address may sound repetitious and familiar. However, in view of the several proposed amendments to Bill C-2, and because of certain recent actions by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), I feel it is necessary to once again articulate the feelings of my constituents in Winnipeg South Centre.

The great majority of my constituents favour capital punishment, as do most Canadians judging by the opinion polls. It is a fact that this parliament must accept, and not ignore or try to sneak away from via the back door, in the fashion of the Solicitor General. Approximately 80 per cent of all the correspondence I have received regarding capital punishment has been from constituents who advoacte retention of the death penalty. Like myself, a great many of these retentionists, and even some abolitionists, were astounded by the Solicitor General's attempt to have the death penalty banned completely. Like his predecessor, the present Solicitor General appears to be having some difficulty adapting to his portfolio. As a minister of the Crown, one would certainly have expected him to know that if a cabinet minister wants certain legislation passed, he should introduce it in the House. He should not, as the Solicitor General did, introduce a bill and then, encouraged by favourable reaction, try to change it to suit himself and the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) expects me to remind him, as I have attempted to remind other hon. members, that we should attempt to limit our contributions to the specific motion before us. I am sure the hon. member's remarks are introductory. I hope he will come to the meat of his remarks very soon, and that they will relate to the motion now before us.

Mr. McKenzie: I will come to the meat right now, Mr. Speaker. Because I favour capital punishment, I cannot support certain amendments to Bill C-2 which is currently before us. Should the government bill be defeated, amendments such as those proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) and the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) are not acceptable for they would guarantee total abolition on condition that murderers of policemen and prison guards serve a minimum of 25 years' imprisonment. I am against abolition and also against doling out 25-year sentences. Convicted murderers imprisoned in the Drumheller penitentiary are also against the idea of a 25-year minimum sentence. The prisoners are quoted as saying such a sentence would turn a convicted killer into an animal who would have lost hope for rehabilitation and might kill again.

Therefore, I can accept no amendments to Bill C-2. Bill C-2 must be defeated, and capital punishment brought back. However, future legislation regarding capital punishment must be flexible. In conclusion, it is not capital punishment that is barbaric, but murder. Capital punishment seeks retribution. This retribution is what my constituents and the majority of Canadians demand.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I do not intend to comment on the entire problem of applying the law in cases of murder, since I already had the opportunity to participate in this debate when the bill before us was given second reading. I also had that opportunity in 1966 and 1967, and the opinions I expressed then have not changed today, so I do no intend to repeat myself on that topic. Nevertheless, I must say that I am in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I have said on other occasions that I am in favour of the death penalty as a punishment for premeditated murder. If it should happen that we were no longer able to apply this law, I believe that the death penalty should be retained in some special cases, such as that mentioned in the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

I feel, however, that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert has made a distinction between rape and attempted rape. I feel that the judges who will be called upon to preside at trials in cases of rape or attempted rape accompanied by murder will be able to make the juries understand the seriousness of these crimes.

Once upon a time, I believe, the laws on rape were very severe, and it was a crime punishable by death. Today the laws have been greatly relaxed, and we realize that real cases of rape are increasingly rare. In fact, rape cases are often brought to court, but when the testimony is heard, it becomes clear that the victim is not always the female, for the provocations of some young girls or women have been such that the man has, in some degree, been led to commit rape.

A clear distinction must be made between rape or attempted rape and a less serious crime, so as to avoid doing injustice to those who may have let themselves get carried away on occasion.

Mr. Speaker, if we trust the judges who will have to conduct such trials, we may admit that mistakes will be avoided as much as possible and that once this legislation is established, those who will be tempted to act according to their feelings will think about it twice before taking such measures.

However, I am asking myself a question: once the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert is passed, when there is murder while committing or attempting to commit rape, and when a verdict of guilty is pronounced by a jury, will the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) respect the jury's decision? He stated quite clearly some time ago that whatever may become of Bill C-2, the death penalty would never be applied as long as he is Prime Minister. If he continues to think along these lines, even though the House pass the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, the situation will remain quite the same as long as the present government is in office. I suggest that in such cases, the Prime Minister, the cabinet should comply with decisions rendered by those who will be called upon to consider cases before them and to take necessary decisions.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert, even though I would prefer a much harder legislation as regard premeditated murders committed in any circumstances.

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give an explanation and make a correction. The hon. member for Abitibi referred to "an attempt to commit rape"; my amendment does not relate to an attempt to commit rape but to a rape followed by murder. I want this point to be very clear.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I am entering this debate for the first time, although the subject was debated at some length before being sent to the committee. We are now on the report stage, considering amendments which in one way or another would modify the objectives set out in the bill. The bill as originally submitted by the government would continue the law as it existed from 1967 to 1972, imposing a ban on capital punishment except when murder was committed against police officials or penitentiary personnel.

In 1967 it was my opinion that we should give limited abolition a trial, to demonstrate the effect it might have in alleviating some of the concern felt by the public generally, while at the same time establishing a certain degree of protection for specific categories of people in our society who assume special responsibilities for us in the field of law enforcement. Unfortunately, in that five-year period the government ignored the legislation. Even in cases where capital murder was committed against police officials and penitentiary guards, action was not taken to impose the death penalty. As a result, the legislation was really a fraud, or a farce. Members of parliament were duped, because they had voted for something which never happened. Now, five years later, we are asked to extend the legislation for a further five years. What the government is asking us to do, in effect, is to support the complete abolition of capital punishment under the guise or the pretence that is would be implemented in the case of capital murder of police officlals and penitentiary guards.

The amendment before us would extend the area in which capital murder calls for the death penalty. Specifically, it relates to rape in the course of which the victim is killed. Really, the amendment involves only one segment of the offence of capital murder. I believe it should cover all cases of capital murder where there is in the mind of the person committing the offence a deliberate intention to carry out the action in question. There is some doubt in my mind as to this amendment because this type of murder often takes place in the absence of any deliberation. It is a crime of passion. It is a crime often committed by a person of unbalanced mind, a person who really requires special mental treatment. Perhaps such a person should be classified more often under the category of non-capital murder rather than murder. There are many such instances.

I cannot say I am a strong retentionist, because I believe that if the system worked properly abolition could be achieved. I cannot agree with one of the amendments proposed, to the effect that capital murder be completely abolished but that people be kept in penal institutions for 20 or 25 years. I believe the only way in which a rehabilitation program works in institutions is by the provision of some hope to inmates that if they are able to indicate they are rehabilitating themselves and are preparing themselves for return to society, society will give them an opportunity to return. But they must indicate that they have learned their lesson and can make a worth-while contribution for the remainder of their lives.

From that point of view I could not under any circumstances support any amendment to the effect that people be placed in penal institutions, much as people are placed in mental institutions, for the rest of their lives. I think there is nothing more inhumane than to say to a person that there is no hope left for him and that the rest of his life should be spent in a solitary way within an institution. From that point of view some arguments which have been offered have given me a great deal of concern.

At the same time, I believe society in general feels, because of the many things that have happened within our penal institutions, because of the increase of crime in the nation, because of the coddling of inmates in institutions, and because of a breakdown in the effectiveness of the rehabilitation programs that have been in effect in Canada or which supposedly are in effect, that parliament should restore, at least for a limited period, the death penalty because it lays a foundation on which a system can be built which says that at least the paid killers who roam the streets of our nation, if they commit this type of crime will pay with their lives.

If the government is desirous of securing the abolition of the death penalty—and I have no objection to that objective because I believe it is the ultimate objective in an enlightened society—it must first prove to the people of Canada that there is a system operating within our penal institutions which guarantees the ultimate security of the public. I believe there is a very strong feeling among the public generally that the death penalty should be retained because of the lack of confidence members of the public have in the type of penal rehabilitation programs in effect at the present time. While some people may say the two are not related—and perhaps they are not—I think in the main they are. I believe the public feel that because of the way we have been playing around with this subject it is not receiving the protection desired; therefore the public is urging members of parliament to give it the ultimate protection.

[Mr. Coates.]

When parliament moves as strongly against the views of the public as was indicated on second reading, then I believe the public becomes very alarmed about parliament and the fact that parliament does not speak for it. If parliament does not speak for the public on this issue, then it is very easy for the public to conclude that parliament does not speak for it on any issue. I think this is one of the mistakes in respect of this debate and the whole concept adopted by the federal government.

I was very disappointed when the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) suggested he would propose the complete abolition of capital punishment by amendment of the original legislation. Then the public really became upset and said that the government did not care what the people of Canada thought. The public generally expressed concern that there was not a full return to retention of the death penalty, and the fact that the government had the unmitigated gall, through the Solicitor General, to suggest that parliament go further and completely do away with capital punishment rather than merely for another five years.

Cartoons sometimes display the views of people better than anything else. An interesting cartoon appeared on the editorial page of the Daily Colonist of Victoria, British Columbia, the other day. It depicted the Solicitor General pouting. There was this inscription:

Warren Allmand is my name,
Abolition is my game,
The death penalty is unfair,
As for murder victims, they're gone—why care?
Through the Commons it will be rammed.
Public opinion? Public opinion be damned.

That is the unfortunate history of this debate. This is a description of parliament because parliament does not mirror the views of the public and its apprehension about the state of affairs in this country, especially in so far as law enforcement and penal reform are concerned. At times I believe the Solicitor General could stand a sense of humour. Recently Harold Ballard received a ticket of leave. This type of leave from prison has been provided a great many times to people all across this country, some of whom have committed much more dastardly crimes.

I might say I do not know Mr. Ballard, I have never met him and I do not know any member of his family. I come from Nova Scotia, and he comes from Toronto. However, I can say that this man has a sense of humour, because having done all the things he has done at his age, it must have been a terrible thing for him to face the consequences of his acts and serve a term in a penal institution. He came out of the institution and made some humorous crack about the institution. Nobody in his right mind would have thought the man was serious when he was speaking about filet mignon being served, and this sort of thing. But what did the Solicitor General do? He was really uptight about this. He thought it was shocking and that the fellow should never be allowed out of the institution.

At the same time, in recent history this government is said to have had great compassion for Yves Geoffroy, a convicted killer. He killed his wife. They were so concerned about that man that they let him out of prison so he could marry someone else and provide another mother for his children. To me the situation indicates the type of thinking and the inconsistency of this government as related to this debate. All Harold Ballard did was to admit he still had a sense of humour even though he was in a penal institution. What Yves Geoffroy did was commit an unthinkable act and none of us can have any respect for him. Mr. Geoffroy was even allowed to go for his honeymoon out of the country, whereas Mr. Ballard will not even be allowed out for weekends, even for good behaviour.

Some sense of proportion must be put back into the whole matter of capital punishment, penal reform and all the questions related to the subject before I can support the abolition of capital punishment. I say to this government: Prove to me, to members of parliament and to the people of this country that you have a sensible, realistic and reasonable program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) is rising on a point of order.

Mrs. Morin: The hon. member is not dealing with my amendment in support of capital punishment for kidnappers and rapists, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I must point out to the hon. member for Louis-Hébert that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has himself asked the Chair, when the debate resumed, to give more freedom to hon. members wishing to participate in this discussion so that they may at one stage or the other stray from the amendment. It is, therefore, for this reason that until now the Chair has allowed hon. members to deal in general with this subject.

[English]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with the hon. member's amendment to the best of my ability. I have indicated that, among the other amendments proposed, it is one that should receive consideration. In effect, I have tried to indicate that if there were a return to capital punishment and the recognition of capital murder as an offence that is punishable by death, the amendment proposed by the hon. member would in effect be carried out.

At the same time I indicated—the hon. member may not have heard me—that this type of amendment gives me some concern, not because it is not a terrible type of crime but because people who commit it are usually mentally unbalanced and require a great deal of medical attention, psychiatric or other; and because there would not be the same degree of mens rea involved as there would be in the type of crime which resulted, for instance, in the death of Mr. Laporte. In that case the people involved started upon a mission which they knew might very well end in murder. They embarked upon it, they carried out the murder and, in my opinion, they should pay with their lives for having done that.

That is not the same sort of situation as the one that is covered by the amendment. But in some instances, if there were a return to the Fulton formula, where murder is divided so that there is capital murder and non-capital murder, there would be instances where a rapist who murdered his victim would pay with his life because it was capital murder.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to speak to the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) referred to as the Morin amendment, a term which I believe is out of order. The hon. member for Louis-Hébert has suggested attaching to section 214 of the Criminal Code two further categories of crime for which a convicted person would receive the death sentence—not only for the murder of police officers and prison guards but for death ensuing kidnapping, or death which takes place in the case of rape. So now, according to the amendment, we would expand to four exceptions what is generally the abolition of capital punishment as proposed by the government. This creates a conundrum that murder is murder, and why should the lives of certain people be more valuable than the lives of others?

I think we would have to look at this question in another light. If this bill is defeated, then not only would the person who commits murder while committing rape be liable to a charge of murder, and those who commit homicide when involved in a kidnapping be liable to a charge of murder, but it would widen the scope to the degree contained in section 213 of the Criminal Code which provides:

Culpable homicide is murder where a person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit treason or an offence mentioned in section 52, piracy—

Which would involve hijacking.

—escape or rescue from prison or lawful custody—

Which would cover prison guards.

—resisting lawful arrest, rape—

Which would include the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

—indecent assault, forcible abduction—

Which includes kidnapping.

—robbery—

Which would cover the people who murder bank tellers and customers in banks.

—burglary or arson, whether or not the person means to cause death to any human being and whether or not he knows that death is likely to be caused to any human being—

So really the suggestion of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert that we increase the exception to the government's legislation so that offences punishable by death be not only the murder of prison guards and police officers, but also murder as a result of rape or kidnapping, would be adequately covered if the government's bill were defeated.

● (1610)

I do not believe that we should clutter our statute books with more exceptions. It appears that every day we make an exception to this and an exception to that, rather than painting the broad picture. Therefore, my tendency at this time is to vote against the amendment, hoping that its proponents will not feel that I am voting against the idea. In fact, I hope that the mover of the amendment will vote against the government's bill, because in defeating it she will gain what she seeks.

Once more we are debating capital punishment, Mr. Speaker. Although I am in my freshman term, it is interesting to me that this parliament has its priorities reversed. For some years there was discussion on changing the family allowance legislation so that many law-abiding people who are contributing in a useful way to society would be better able to do so. Now we have decided to deal with capital punishment, with the government's legislation proposing more benefits for the criminal element and murderers. We are discussing this question instead of trying to help people in need of financial assistance through such means as a revised family allowance plan.

When this bill was first introduced it was introduced with priority over increasing old age pensions. It was introduced with priority over increasing the veterans allowance. It was introduced with priority over reducing income taxes. What I am concerned about is that the government has proposed to confer benefits on criminals with priority over conferring benefits on the law-abiding citizens of the country who foot the bill. I feel that this is improper.

In the month of June, in response to a question from me, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) indicated that at that stage there was no person in Canada who had committed culpable homicide, who had gone through his preliminary hearing, his trial and all appeal stages, including appeal to the Supreme Court, and was awaiting the death sentence. Indeed, I believe that is still the case. But although no person has exhausted all the legal remedies in connection with the killing of a police officer or prison guard, we are spending the time of this House discussing capital punishment. We could easily be discussing family allowance legislation to put more money into the pockets of law-abiding Canadians at an earlier stage than can now be expected simply because we are giving it lower priority than affording murderers extra benefits.

Dealing with this particular amendment—and as others come along I may wish to talk briefly about them—I feel we should not make further exceptions. I hope that the government's legislation will be defeated. If it is, then the Morin amendment—if I may call it so—will take effect because we will be returning to the Fulton formula of 1961 according to which a person, no matter what offence he committed, if he committed a murder in the process could be charged with murder or with the original offence. I say this with some background in criminal law; I prosecuted criminals for over three years in the capital of Canada. I discussed the matter at some length with the senior Crown attorney this morning, just to refresh my memory because I have not been active practising criminal law for a year. I wished to assure myself that this was the case. As I say, the hon. member for Lous-Hébert will succeed if the government's bill is defeated.

[Mr. Dick.]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to miss the opportunity of giving ny opinion on this amendment.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, where the government wants to come to. Five years ago, we tenaciously pleaded to maintaining capital punishment in Canada and, in spite of all our efforts, the government succeeded in having a motion passed by the House to the effect that capital punishment would be abolished for a trial period of five years, whereas we had the evidence that 90 per cent of the population was against this legislation. The proposal was accepted and today, five years later, when the law made two exceptions for the murder of prison guards and policemen, such murders occurred and the law was not applied.

Today, we ask for a new extension of five years, and I would like to ignore the bomb the Sollicitor General (Mr. Allmand) launched in this House by saying that he wanted total abolition of capital punishment. I no longer understand anything. In fact I fail to understand the Liberals or the Progressive Conservatives and still less the members of the New Democratic party.

For the NDP, it is a total contradiction. There are in this party disappointing contradictions. They simply want to give death to the fruit of rape, and they are going to vote against the death penalty for rapeists. On one side, they will vote for abortion which is the fruit of rape and on the other side they are going to vote against an amendment asking for capital punishment for those who commit rape. Thus the situation in this House is incomprehensible; it seems to have become a Tower of Babel.

Once again, I wonder where the government wants to come to: does it want to extend indefinitely the study of the matter or is it trying by all means not to submit this question to the people's will. What we are pressing for is a referendum. We are here to serve the will of the people. Let us have a referendum and then we can pass legislation accordingly. But no! We are having lengthy discussions on whether capital punishment will be abolished as well as under what circumstances it should be abolished. I support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) which says that capital punishment will be imposed, and I quote:

(b) in respect of a male person, where such person causes the death of a female person while committing or attempting to commit rape,

Attempting to commit rape. I want to come back to those words because the hon. member for Louis-Hébert corrected my colleague a while ago when she said that the amendment merely suggested that capital punishment should be imposed upon those who commit rape. But the amendment goes on to say, and I quote:

—or attempting to commit rape,

However, if the hon. member for Louis-Hébert reads the amendment carefully she will see that it says "attempting to commit rape." But here again this amendment is a monumental farce. I will be voting for that farce because I am for capital punishment in all cases of murder.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert says—and I understand her feelings as she is a woman—that when a man rapes a woman the death penalty should apply. Today there are men who are nearly carnivorous, and she foresees that. But do you know that there are also tigress women who can eat and rape men? Do you know also that there are homosexuals who eat men? In those cases too, let us have a general application of the act.

Homosexuality was legalized but here again even though rape is somewhat legalized today the issue is no longer raised. In the past, rape was punishable by death; today, it is a normal thing. However, I wish to call the attention of the House to a still more serious issue. The death penalty will be inflicted for rape, when we know that rapists are mentally unbalanced like homosexuals. They are sick and mentally unbalanced those who will be condemned to death.

It will readily be seen—and this is what I hate—that it is somewhat like setting up a cock-fight with lawyers. It is easy to imagine the lawyers in court; such a nice fight! Was it a rape or not? The witness is not there, she is dead. Now the rape will be discussed for a year or two and after it is ascertained, it will then be proved that the accused is mentally unbalanced. The death penalty will no longer be involved because it will have been proved that the accused is a sick person. That is why I suggest that the amendment is but a grain of sand, a monumental farce, for it is too incomplete and will lead to interminable discussions before the courts on the matter of rape.

In spite of it all, Mr. Speaker, I think I shall vote for the amendment. I heard some hon. members say they opposed the amendment because they favour restoring the death penalty. To my mind, that is fighting somewhat with opposites, because if you are in favour of the whole, you must also be in favour of the parts, however minimal. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the part is very minimal, but I shall still support it; and I hope the hon. member for Louis-Hébert understands that we are here to do the will of the people. If the people want such and such a regulation to be passed by referendum—the usual procedure—I hope Parliament will respect their wishes, especially in view of all the requests that were sent out, five years ago, to the Minister of Justice. I feel that should be sufficient to prevent once more these discussions that will drag on and will end up with a five year extension.

But, let us at least do the contrary: Let us reinstate capital punishment for five years. It has been removed for five years without success. Let us reinstate it for five years; we will see what happens. Let it be reinstated for five years, but, this time, the minister should cease to commute death penalties into 20, 15 or 7 years of imprisonment. There is no justice any longer. But who prostitutes justice? It is not the Canadian public, Mr. Speaker; it is those on the benches, the lawyers. That is why people do not believe anymore in justice, they consider it as a gigantic farce, and they are partly right.

However, Mr. Speaker, coming back to the amendment, I say that I shall vote for it and I sincerely hope that the reinstatement of the capital punishment will be passed for a five year period.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I have not availed myself of an opportunity to speak on this measure, but I feel compelled to speak on the motion of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). In the short time that the hon. member has been with us we have learned that she represents her constituents with a real sense of responsibility. There is no doubt in my mind that when she proposed this motion she had their welfare and the welfare of the majority of citizens of Canada at heart and had no desire for personal publicity.

I have no hesitation in supporting the principle of the motion because I think what the hon. lady is trying to do in this day and age is very sound. She is trying to bring in an amendment to enlarge the jurisdiction of Canada so that the death penalty will apply to cases of rape, attempted rape or kidnapping where murder is committed.

I will not burden the House with figures and with what has happened in the past in this country and in other countries, because that would not be pertinent to the measure with which we are dealing. We are entering into a brand new phase all over the world, and we must evolve new laws and new regulations for coping with the evolution through which we are going. The growing apathy and lack of responsibility shown by many in Canada as well as in other countries is causing many people great uneasiness and concern. We must be guided by something. Perhaps we shall need to control the emotions of those who cause harm to others by instilling a sense of fear or by showing force. We shall need to do that until we are thoroughly convinced that other ways of restraining people are just as effective.

Today there is not that assurance. Today the churches and schools do not influence the thinking and conduct of people as they did in the past. Certainly, our schools do not influence our philosophy of living as once they did. As well, the change in our way of living has brought a change in the influence of the family itself. At one time the family controlled its own members. All this change is happening at once. It is almost as if we are like a ship without a rudder. We are losing many of the guides that determined conduct in Canada in past years. Without those guides we sometimes flounder in our attempts to achieve something.

I do not think what we do in Canada should necessarily be the same as that done in other countries. For example, in the case of the Northwest Mounted Police, whose glorious hundredth anniversary we are celebrating this year, Canada departed from normal practice and established this first-class police force. With it we proved that a few responsible individuals are able to maintain order and peace if they are backed by the authority of government. Hon. members will recall that then we sanctioned capital punishment. At that time passions were perhaps stronger than they are today, and crime went undetected sometimes for months.

I want to deal with the rape aspect of the hon. member's amendment and say why I think it is so necessary to consider imposing capital punishment. We are living in a new age. The young girls and ladies of our nation are without the protection of home and relatives that they had in previous years. Our womenfolk are going out into the world, into the labour force and entering all aspects of Canadian life which are changing. We have industrial areas such as we never had before. We live in concentrated areas, packed elbow to elbow as never before. Such conditions create tensions and chaotic situations such as we have never before experienced and did not anticipate.

Many crimes take place because our way of living has changed, because many people are concentrated in small areas. We eat differently, live differently and work differently, and our churches and schools do not exert the same influence on us. The family is different too. That is why the crime rate is going up as it has never gone up before. Under these conditions we must take further measures in order to safeguard our people.

Let me deal with the other aspect of the hon. lady's motion, kidnapping. I was interested in the minister's remarks of Monday last. He almost sloughed off the suggestion that we should impose capital punishment for kidnapping ensuing in death and said that where a murder is committed in connection with kidnapping, the murder perhaps was not contemplated. Mr. Speaker, murder is murder, and it is only one man's opinion against another as to whether murder was contemplated or not.

As society becomes more complicated and more affluent, and tremendous sums of money become involved in our dealings, the temptation for kidnapping is greater than ever in history. Many countries worry about the safety of their ambassadors and respresentatives living in other countries. These people are being kidnapped and held for ramson, sometimes with disastrous results. In air piracy, entire groups of people are exposed to what may be contemplated murder.

In considering the phase into which we are now entering, and the new lifestyle which is now emerging in Canada as well as in other countries, it behooves us as representatives of the people to look at these questions in a manner different from that of five years ago. It is no use the government saying that there is no proof that capital punishment will restrain any of these violent crimes since, equally, there is no proof that it will not. Should we, as representatives of the people who are concerned about the safety of the nation, gamble and say that perhaps capital punishment will not act as a deterrent; or should we assume our responsibilities of safeguarding the majority of Canadians against the violence of the majority, and not gamble? This is what we must consider seriously.

In some quarters one hears tremendous expressions of sympathy for a minority of people involved in these crimes. It is said, perhaps on compassionate grounds, that what was done was not contemplated, that it was an accident or the result of undue influence of drugs, intoxicants or something like that. For how long can we make excuses for those who commit these crimes and show such callous disregard for their victims and the families of their victims? I do not think we are justified in adopting that attitude. That is why I have no difficulty in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert.

The hon. lady's amendment amply reflects the majority feeling of the people I have the honour to represent. The people of my riding—as of the hon. lady's, I am sure—are most concerned about what is going to happen in Canada. Fifteen years ago we did not think that women would be afraid to walk the streets of our cities at night. We did not think that police would patrol in pairs for reasons of additional safety. We knew what was happening in other countries; we did not think it could happen in Canada. I wonder if the softening of our laws has perhaps not contributed to some of the conditions we face today. Some say that the crime rate in Canada is not increasing more quickly than anywhere else. Certainly, once our society became more permissible, conditions were ripe for the violence that existed in other countries to be introduced into Canada.

I am very pleased to have had an opportunity to speak on this subject today and lend my support, on behalf of the people I represent, to the hon. lady. She is to be complimented for the fact that in her first session in this House, and on a subject as deep, complicated and as important as this, she has taken the time and trouble to research the subject and to assess the feelings of those she has the honour to represent. As a woman and a mother, she has brought this amendment to parliament. I have the greatest admiration for her and I ask the House to support this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like in turn to make a few comments on the amendment now before the House.

Like many members, I have participated in the debate on second reading and I find the amendments under consideration very thoughtful. I agree with the remarks of the previous speaker and with the congratulations that he has offered to the representative from Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin), in view of the value of the said amendment as well as its necessity in the present context.

According to the amendment now before the House, capital punishment would apply in cases of kidnapping or rape following which the victim is murdered. Now, it is important to recognize the merits of this amendment in view of the problems which multiply every year and that we experience in our life. According to me, the fact of presenting this amendment at this stage is justified and altogether timely if the problems facing our society because of this are to be seriously acknowledged.

Of course, the member who spoke before dealt with the major changes which happened in our society and showed that our traditions and certain principles are unfortunately fading away, and that the influences certain sectors had on the good behaviour of citizens have also diminished, if not disappeared. That is why then I think that it is more and more becoming that this amendment be adopted and, according to me, if we had a real national enquiry 95 per cent of the people would be for this amendment.

I think quite honestly that 95 per cent of the people welcome this amendment which perfectly satisfies the needs for security which they are entitled to.

This amendment is important, most significant and very well presented. I too take this opportunity to congratulate the sponsor of the motion. I also wonder how this amendment can be implemented, in the light of the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In fact, he said quite clearly that as Prime Minister he would certainly not be in favour of the death penalty.

We know perfectly well that in our present system, it is up to the Cabinet to allow or disallow the application of the death penalty. I therefore feel that it would be very important for all hon. members to demand that the Prime Minister agree to respect the decision and the will of this House. If you look at the statistics of the past five years, you will see quite clearly that Parliament had decided to suspend capital punishment, except in two instances, the murder of a policeman or a prison guard.

We know perfectly well that this decision made by Parliament has not been respected. In fact, we are now presented with this legislation aimed at continuing this experiment for another five years, and at considering the possibility of maintaining the death penalty for two categories of murder, namely the murder of police officers and prison guards. The amendment now before us provides for the death penalty in two more cases, rape and kidnapping where the victim is murdered, but we are never given any assurance that the Prime Minister will respect either this amendment or the decision that will be made.

If this amendment gathers the support of the majority of the hon. members—and I hope that it will—in view of the Prime Minister's statement, we will have to question ourselves seriously, we will have to believe that we are speaking in the wind, unless the hon. member who introduced the motion can obtain from the government the assurance that it will respect the decision of the majority of the members. I think that people expect the government to respect any decision taken by Parliament on such an important matter, which is one of those rare occasions when a free vote is held. And the majority of the hon. members have proved that this is so; they are expressing themselves freely.

Thus, it is imperative that the Prime Minister, in this debate, should commit himself in a very particular way to respect the decision taken by Parliament. Then, we shall have good reason to believe that the amendment will be followed through, which I hope.

Of course, at the second reading stage, I brought up many times, in my speech, the importance of establishing prevention procedures. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) can talk of rehabilitation.

Much has been done in the last few years about rehabilitation. I think it would be more important to try to establish prevention procedures in our society.

I am doubtful in my mind about rehabilitation at 40, 50 or 60. But where the government has much work to do, for the prevention of cases such as those mentioned in the amendment, is in the development of prevention procedures. To identify dangerous environments which effectively are responsible for young men going wrong.

I believe that capital punishment is not a solution per se, but considering that we do not seem to have more valid solutions, I believe that a person which has taken upon itself to take the life of a citizen deserves no less than death. Kidnapping or rape followed by murder is a very serious offence which has been more and more current these last few years. So, considering the fundamental changes in our society, it is interesting to note that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert has moved this amendment which is the perfect answer to present-day needs.

I hope most hon. members will support this amendment which meets present needs. Indeed, there was no need for it 15 or 20 years ago, but every day we witness some unfortunate incidents which makes it necessary to implement such a measure.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the few comments I made on this amendment will receive the support of a majority and, above all, that the Prime Minister will undertake to comply with the decision made by most members of this House. Then, we shall have done a good job.

● (1650)

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): It is over two months ago that I rose in the House to speak in the debate on capital punishment. Now I find myself on my feet again. I should like to reflect on one or two remarks I made in May which I think have some validity today. I said the question of imposing the death penalty was one of the problems which plague our society. I said the government had brought down stop-gap legislation to be dealt with at a time when we should be addressing ourselves to economic issues of real importance. I said the Criminal Code already contained provisions adequate to deal with this subject, so the legislation need not be brought in at this time.

I said, further, that it was a bad bill, so confusing that the abolitionists would support it even though it provided for capital punishment. In my view, the bill gave the abolitionists no real choice when it came to voting. It was typical of the government to have behaved in this way. If they had felt this was an important issue, they could have called parliament together in November or December to deal with it. In fact, the official opposition urged the government to do just that. Nevertheless, here we are today concerning ourselves, at this point, with an amendment moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

A great deal has been said since I made my own contribution to the debate earlier this year. I am still in favour of capital punishment; more so, if anything, having heard the speeches made from the other side of the House. I favour capital punishment. For this reason I find myself in agreement with the amendment. At least it is a step in the right direction. If I had a choice, I would go further than the amendment does, but we have to start somewhere.

It is curious, but if this amendment is passed it might deter someone from voting in favour of the bill as amended, for the reason that the bill calls for capital punishment for the murder of police officers and prison guards, and someone who agreed with that might take the view that a rapist was a sick person and should not be sentenced to death. This is a further indication of the fact that one law is needed for everybody. We do not want various degrees of capital punishment—I guess there is only one degree of capital punishment. There is capital murder, which is described adequately in the law, and therefore we should have capital punishment which would then fit the crime. There is no suggestion we should hang or otherwise execute someone who had committed a murder on compassionate grounds. It is wrong to have two categories of murder, one allowing a special status to prison guards and police.

If murderers are to be sentenced to life imprisonment, it is true there is no further penalty, which would deter them from escaping by whatever means possible, including murder. The worst that could happen to them would be to return to serve a further life sentence. If the law were less confused, its administration would be less confused and the government of the day would not be faced with the difficult task of deciding whether to commute death sentences or not. We have heard about the dilemma confronting juries which may feel clemency is deserved in certain cases. But again, if there were a rigid set of rules, juries would not be faced with this problem.

We are living today in a complex society, one in which it is impossible that each individual should receive the attention he might wish to receive or which he may think he deserves. In these circumstances, rigid rules are needed so that people may know where they stand. I am amazed at the arguments put forward by the abolitionists. They say it is the fault of society that murders are committed, and that murderers should not be put to death. I counter this assertion by saying that in today's complex society, if a man cannot cope with the situation I do not think there is any way in which the do-gooders will be able to correct him after he has committed a murder.

They say killing is wrong. Well, it is only wrong some of the time. They condone killing in the course of a war. Also, I am sure, they would not submit to a personal attack without reacting. And perhaps murder would be the result of that. They also say capital punishment has no deterrent value. I suggest that capital punishment is a deterrent, as are other penalties. We are brought up from earliest childhood to know there are penalties attached to certain acts, whether a spanking on mother's knee or a slap with a ruler in the classroom or, later on, a fine for some breach of the law, or a jail sentence and, finally, the death penalty. People are educated to understand that acts which are abominable to society are subject to penalties.

Statistics cannot prove that capital punishment has no deterrent value because, of course, the crimes which are prevented do not form part of the statistics. I find it curious that the abolitionists should feel they must pay more attention to a very small group of murderers who are probably not worthy of their consideration, while forgetting the millions of old people who built this country and who are suffering a worse fate, probably, than imprisonment. We have heard about the state of our prisons these days. They have been likened in the press recently to motels and nice vacation resorts.

We have heard many arguments put forward on religious grounds but there is no clear consensus emerging from them. There are clergymen in this House whose opinions differ on this question, and anyone who wishes to quote scripture can certainly find a text which will suit whatever argument he wishes to present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motion.

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think there might be agreement to take item 7 in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved that Bill C-36, to establish an administrative review board, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) leave the chamber. I know he will be around for the debate tomorrow on the Olympic bill, but I have something to say which perhaps compared to any other business will be more meaningful to this particular minister than any other.

My initiation of this debate today through the means of private members' public bill C-36 comes, I hope, under the heading of a positive suggestion designed to ameliorate certain problems I have encountered since becoming a member of this House. It could be argued, I suppose, that the matter with which I propose to deal could have been handled better under a resolution rather than a private bill. But whatever the means, I believe it to be important to make the point here that a problem exists, and with an ever-growing public service this House should begin to concern itself with a solution which may not be possible through some other measure.

For the benefit of those members wishing to speak in this debate, I will summarize the problem and my suggestions for a solution before I go into any great detail. Let us take the case of a public servant who has a problem, who has been denied a promotion, who has been allegedly unfairly discplined or who has been refused a transfer to some other area of the country. This public servant, after exhausting the normal avenues of appeal or grievance through the Public Service Staff Relations Act, comes ultimately to his MP seeking justice. Usually, the MP has little alternative but to write the minister seeking a review of the case on behalf of the public servant. The minister sets the wheels in motion. Perhaps he has time to do little else. The case ultimately filters down to the public servant's superior who made the controversial decision in the first place.

I am sure many members have had this experience. Hence the problem. How much of an independent appeal or disinterested review of this man's case can be expected when the person in charge of the review is the identical person who made the original decision which is being questioned by the public employee through his MP? This is why as a proposal to get around this problem and to achieve a better method of dealing with grievances, I have suggested the establishment of an independent administrative review board.

Today, then, I would like to make a positive suggestion by calling for the establishment of an administrative review board to provide protection for our federal employees. Like many MPs, I have constituents who are federal employees and sometimes, because their problems are so desperate, they have written to me for assistance. Having made many representations on their behalf, I have begun to appreciate why they express such bitter exasperation.

I recall a specific case of a couple of years ago. A constituent whom we will call Mr. Jones had accepted a position in the Northwest Territories. Although he had accepted a position in the Northwest Territories, he still wanted to keep in touch with British Columbia. Most people who visit British Columbia feel the same way. However, the department could not accommodate his preferences. So because of other latent dissatisfaction, Mr. Jones applied for a transfer to northern British Columbia.

This request was denied by the director in Edmonton. Subsequently Mr. Jones applied for a transfer from the region. When this was turned down on the basis of there not being any vacancies, Mr. Jones appealed to me. I, in turn, appealed to the minister—in this case the then minister of national health and welfare—who generously agreed to review the case. The minister's reply was the same as the director's. It is no wonder. The minister passes the request on to his staff, who in turn pass it on to the deputy minister, who passes it on to the assistant deputy minister, who passes it on to his assistant, who passes it all the way down the line to the director in Edmonton, who prepares a reply for the minister, which eventually is passed on to me, and in turn to the constituent.

The trouble is that the director in Edmonton who prepares the reply for the minister is the same director who makes the decision in the first place. How can one expect anything else? A dispute such as this is a matter of interpretation. It is necessary to allow other interpretations to be heard by an impartial judge or board. Otherwise we have a situation of the proverbial sheriff who is also judge, jury and—if you will forgive me—executioner. Under the present system, how are the Mr. Jones's to get a fair hearing? I have a case involving a lady who worked in the UIC office. She wrote me and said:

> If there were promotions the young got them without competition. The older had to apply and in most cases were told they didn't have the qualifications even in some cases for their own jobs. Even the casual young got preference over permanent older employees. They have tried to put in grievances through the union but the union rep. are employees and are working for promotion, so side with management.

I think that is natural enough. We all remember the celebrated case of Ann Booth. Miss Booth was striving to be a Liberal candidate and was dismissed by the CRTC. Her case was heard by the committee on broadcasting. I believe it was a unique case so far as civil servants are concerned. The broadcasting committee had power to recommend. Although the committee did make a recommendation, Miss Booth was unable to regain her position after she had been dismissed on the ground of political activity.

It is cases like those I have described which caused me to reflect on the present grievance procedure within the public service. As an example of the administrative inquiry, the grievance procedure itself tends to allow management to confirm their original decision. There is a tendency for people to want to save face and to back up their colleagues. I do not blame the individuals. It is quite natural for people to want to defend themselves. We all do it. This is not something involving merely civil servants or politicians. The point we must consider, however, is whether this allows for the fairest and most just appeal. And I would argue that this is not the present case.

I would suggest that an alternative to the present structure would be one similar to that of the Pension Review Board of the Department of Veterans Affairs. This board was introduced after considerable and persistent pressure had been applied by the veterans' organizations. The veterans' organizations argued that a new appellant procedure was necessary, one that would add a Pension Review Board that was independent of the department. Both the veterans' associations and the department are pleased with the new board. They have found that it has reduced much of the animosity that was felt previously in the department and directed toward the department. They suggest a number of reasons this is so. Today, I think one of the reasons, the most important reason, for separation is that separation itself allows a guarantee of protection for the case. But the veterans have found, as well, that within the new structure there is less pressure on the lower levels of the grievance procedure to want to be tight-fisted when it comes to handling the grievances of the veterans. So the net consequence has been liberalization—if you will pardon the expression—all along the line.

If we compare the new veterans' structure with the present public service grievance structure, we find that there is an outstanding difference. The present grievance structure is limited by section 91 of the act which provides:

—having completed the three levels of grievance, the adjudication is limited to cases of interpretation or application in respect of the employee, of a provision or a collective agreement or an arbitral award or the disciplinary action resulting in discharge, or suspension or financial penalty.

Of course, this leaves a great number of areas of grievance outside the bounds of the adjudication process. I submit that a review board would provide greater latitude to hear such grievances. But a call for fairness or justice is not just a moral question; it is not solely confined to a moral question. I think this is a very important point. It is also a matter of good organization. How badly has the morale of our public service been worsened because public servants do not have confidence in their grievance procedure? I submit, also, that they do not have confidence or the feeling that their rights are protected at present.

We note similar discontent among railroad workers. At present railroads have a court mechanism to hear grievances, but this court is staffed by the employer and it is responsible to the employer alone. Therefore, in effect it acts as a kind of kangaroo court. Decisions are known to have been made by this body that would never have stood up in a proper court, but it was all right for the kangaroo court. These decisions have resulted in disciplinary action—I have a sheaf of them—or brownie points, as they call them on the railroad, and in some cases even in dismissal.

Some might say that such a kangaroo court can be eliminated, depending on the bargaining power of the unions. However, the old-line parties have never exhibited an interest in rectifying the situation. Indeed, some have argued that the managements of railroads know that they can be a stubborn bargainer because the old-line parties will always send the men back to work if they dare to strike. They might be on the brink of such a situation at present. If that is the case, then we must be able to find some other means by which employees can express their grievances to management. In my opinion, a review board that is independent of the present administration in the civil service or even in the rail companies could allow for a more fair and more impartial hearing of grievances. Accordingly, the decisions that it would make would be treated with more respect and confidence by the men if the board and its members were truly independent of the government and of management.

This bill, then, is in response to the many frustrated individuals who have made representations to me, and I sympathize with them deeply. I have even to some extent sympathized with the ministers of the Crown because I realize that it is not ill-will that sends the representation to the person who makes the decision, then back through the minister to me and brings back the same answer that was given in the first place. I know it is not ill-will on the part of the ministers but, rather, it is a question of organization. The present administrative organization does not allow for the kind of independent review board that would be satisfactory to both parties. Usually it is only satisfactory to one party, and that is what is wrong.

If one were to examine the many individual cases, one would find that the majority of these grievances are due to the fact that the federal government is, in a sense, a far-flung empire. We have people dispersed all over Canada, and therefore there exist many intermediaries between the individual with his problem and the minister in Ottawa. Of course, that leaves a lot of room for many personal problems and for tension, and that is what we have. Tension, if it is allowed to continue at a high rate, is bound to affect morale. It means, of course, that the minister must rely on his staff to provide the answers. Unfortunately, his staff is often the same staff that made the decision in the first place.

Common sense tells us that the most effective way of ensuring a fair examination of any case is to appoint someone different. someone other than the person who made the decision, to consider it in the second instance. What we must come up with is an effective substitute for physical proximity because our public service is dispersed. I hope that this review board will be part of that mechanism and will act to bring the two parties closer together.

To conclude, may I say that I know someone from the other side, and perhaps also from this side, will make the observation that the independent review boards under the Canada Pension Plan and considering veterans' cases are client-oriented and there is quite a different relationship between client and government agency and employee and government agency. I think it is a fair to say that to extend this principle of an independent review board—even though the two situations in the examples I have given are not congruent—is a worthy one. So it is worth while to consider that the principle of independence in terms of grievances is a valid one. Someone will say also that it should be done by the unions. I do not think the unions have that power within the present Public Service Staff Relations Act in their grievance procedure, and there are other impediments in the way.

In conclusion, I should like to say that in my view the federal government must set a good example for an effective employer-employee relationship and I believe that the place to start this is within the public service.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I find it particularly expedient that the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) should come up for debate at this time. Anybody who helps to unravel and to make more digestible the mass of regulations, directives, rites, orders, controls and massive red tape which thwart and frustrate the contribution and working practices of hundreds of thousands of civil servants would be welcome, provided that such a board did not in itself constitute a further hazard to dealing expeditiously with the thousands of complaints and inequities which exist within the public service at present.

There are approximately 250,000 persons in the public service of Canada, and I am sure many of them feel they have justifiable grievances which they are hesitant to air through established procedures. An administrative review board, an independent body, might provide the outlet they seek. I have mentioned that there are some 250,000 persons in the public service of Canada. Of these, 63,000 are women. The federal government is the largest employer of women in the country. But the Archibald report on sex and the public service found that 83 per cent of these women were concentrated in administrative support roles.

An hon. Member: This is where they belong.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): This concentration does not reflect the levels of education or the competence of Canadian women. It was reported earlier this year that only 25 women in the public service earn more than $26,000. Another report I have shows that of these public servants earning $20,000 or more, 97.3 per cent are men while only 2.7 per cent are women. Whichever way it is viewed, the status of women in the upper echelons of the public service is admittedly bleak. I mention these figures to stress a matter which was raised in this House yesterday.

● (1720)

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) was questioned about the abhorrent practice of rug-ranking which exists among women employees in the public service. This practice, which has existed throughout all of the five years in which the hon. member for Westmount has held that portfolio, is one to which the government has devoted minimal, if any, attention. This discriminatory practice was forcibly brought to the attention of the President of the Treasury Board in a recent brief submitted by the Association of the Public Service Secretaries. It had to be pointed out to the minister that rug-ranking is a system by which a secretary's job level is determined by the importance and rank of her boss rather than by her own abilities.

The brief recommended the immediate adoption of a point-rating system and an honest appraisal of the secretary's value and potential in working as part of the management team rather than as a chattel. The President of the Treasury Board, regrettably, had not read the brief of the Association of the Public Service Secretaries. When it was explained to him, he reacted with sympathy, so it is said, but with very little in the way of recommendations. In his reply yesterday he said that if members can suggest ways in which the situation can be corrected, he would be glad to consider them. He said he tought that the problem appeared to lie with the inability adequately to rank secretaries according to their competence. I do not think that approach, or that reply, is adequate to meet the situation which exists among women in the public service today. I think that a much more positive and practical approach on the part of the government would commend itself not only to women in the public service but to women in the country generally.

The report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women forcibly pointed out the basic difference between equality of rights and equality of opportunities for women. In speaking to this bill submitted by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), I contend that if an administrative review board could have the effect of helping to correct the inequities to which women in the public service have been subjected for years, it would be a worth-while measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) when he says that a board should be created not only to look out for abuses, but also to supervise federal government agencies. Here is the purpose of Bill C-36:

> It is the function and duty of the Board to investigate and review any decision or recommendation made relating to a matter of administration and affecting any person or body of persons in or by any department or agency, or by any officer or employee thereof in the exercise of any power or function conferred on him.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind the bill is excellent from the administrative point of view. I should like to mention just one example to prove it. In the Canadian civil service, we need competent people, with a good command of both official languages, in order to provide services to the public. I know very well that there is a shortage of personnel in some federal departments.

Not long ago, a physician from Hull phoned me to ask if there was a job opening for his son-in-law. He is a young university graduate of 29, fully bilingual. He made an application and received an application form to fill from the Public Service Commission of Canada; he wrote an examination whose results were excellent: he got a 83% mark. But he was told on the phone by a Public Service officer: "If you had some political backing there would be some chances for you to get that job".

This has just happened, only 15 days ago. Mr. Speaker, I do not accept this procedure in the Public Service. They should take into consideration the skills of the candidate, not his political affiliation. Whatever he may be liberal, socred, new democrat or conservative, everyone has the right to earn a living in Canada and if after passing a serious examination there is a department which needs his services, he should not be told that he would need some assistance from a minister or some political organiser to be immediately hired to fill the position for which he made an application.

Mr. Speaker, this is terrible. And the guy gave me the name of the person who suggested to him on the phone that he find someone to obtain this position through political influence. Can you imagine that? If this is not settled I will disclose in the House the names of the people involved and I will show them what stuff I am made of.

Patronage dispenses do exist in the public service but there are even more of them among politicians and organizers. That a liberal, a new democrat, a conservative or a socred should recommend someone to help him get a job, I have no objection provided his application is treated fairly. They should take into account competence and bilingualism within the services—and God knows that we are short of bilingual and competent people able to speak both official languages fluently—because there still exist departments where we are dealt with in English. I do not want those people to be fired or told they are going to be replaced immediately but we need bilingual personnel in many departments. I will give the example of a federal organization, of a Parliamentary organisation: the Treasury Board. I am not referring to the Quebec, Ontario or Nova-Scotia Treasury but to the federal Treasury Board which should be controlled by a review board such as that mentioned in Bill C-36.

We need bilingual secretaries but we are told by the Treasury Board that they are short of money. Therefore we cannot get any secretaries. The other day, I was reading a list of people made available to political parties. I noticed that four press attachés were made available to the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and that some were paid up to $25,000. per year. As for me I have been requesting one for three years and did not get even one. I do not know whether the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Lewis) has one but I know that the leader of the official opposition has four. We are told by the Treasury Board that they have no money.

It is that same Treasury Board which decides to spend thousands of dollars to have beautiful wall-to-wall carpeting and special tapestries fitted in ministers' offices. They are throwing money out of the windows because they are in power. And those from other parties who need help are set aside and are denied secretaries and press attachés under the pretence that we are a small group in the Commons, as if we had no right to be treated on the same footing as any other political party.

If there were not a board of patronage dispensers but an independent board as proposed under Bill C-36 to contend with abuses, to pintpoint them, to inform the people on the ways money is spent in Ottawa, we would probably be better served by the Treasury Board. It is a federal agency. I will be told that it is a matter of internal administration, but nevertheless it is a federal agency. An internal administration to offer everything to big parties and nothing to the other ones, I am fed up with that, Mr. Speaker, and no matter who sits on that internal administration board it is all the same to me, but I say that there are abuses and that we are not treated fairly. There you are!

If a board could tell the Treasury Board: Listen, take it easy with the rugs, they are almost six-inches thick and you practically need snowshoes to walk on them, I would agree, Mr. Speaker, you should come and have a look at the sort of rugs we have in our offices. I think that they are ten year old hand-me-downs from the ministers' offices. it took me six years to get air conditioning in my office on the sixth floor of the Centre Block, six years to get a small unit that doesn't even work that well. It is better than what I had, which was nothing, but it isn't very effective. It must have cost about $150 or $160. It took me six years to get that. The Treasury Board didn't have any money before that, it was "broke".

Now, I am asking for assistance, because my office is overloaded with work, and I'm told: We do not have the necessary money to give you a larger parliamentary secretariat. Mind you, what I am asking for is not a secretariat for my own riding, but one to deal with all the correspondence we receive from all parts of Canada. We do not even have the means to answer all the letters received, because the Treasury Board says: We have no money.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-36 provides for the setting up of a board composed of five members, independent of any political party, and not one which would take charge of the publicity or the propaganda for the party in power, or the official opposition party, the New Democratic Party or the Social Credit Party of Canada. It would be a board made up of independent members who would watch over expenditures in Ottawa. Then you would see a change, considerable savings, and fairer treatment. You would no longer hear what I said in my opening remarks: If you had a little help from the bosses, a bit of political "pull", you would get the job you want, for which you applied.

Mr. Speaker, I said before that I would give names. I shall not give them today, but the House may rest assured that I will do so because I will not put up with a bureaucrat saying: "Go and see the political bosses and you stand a very good chance of getting the job"; when you are told bluntly: "We need you but we cannot hire anybody until we get the okay from a member of the party in power." This is what is going on at the present time.

If Bill C-36 could only open up the eyes and ears of those who are responsible for hiring, it would serve a useful purpose. If Bill C-36 only allowed the hon. member who introduced it to express his views and allowed me to express mine about the absurdities that occur not only in Ottawa but throughout the country it will have been most useful. We are told the same thing in Quebec, as far as the federal government is concerned and in western Canada: "You did not accept the party in power and you will be punished for that."

Mr. Speaker, I think that the time for punishment is over. We need justice. We must treat people as human beings, regardless of their political affiliation. It is normal to speak about elections during the electoral campaign, but once it is over, it is very bad to reward one at the expense of the other, or not to take ability into account. I think this has lasted only too long. That sort of thing took place 40, 30, 25 years ago but in 1973 it is outmoded. Then we should get back in fashion. Let us bring in the fashion of dealing with Canadians; let us treat them as Canadians and not as supporters of political parties, which is something I deeply regret right now.

• (1740)

As for Bill C-36, I know that it will not pass. It will not be voted on. The parliamentary secretary to the minister is prepared to rise in order to talk it out. Another member will rise to speak. We will not vote on that bill, but yet it has its significance, if they wish to put some order in the federal administration, since there is none right now. We must provide for more justice in the administration; we must administer in view of the country and not the party.

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, one of the pleasures of a member of this House of Commons is to listen to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). However, I would say that it is not really a pleasure to have to follow him after he has just made a speech in this House. He has a command of language and imagery, although I would not want to confuse that with having a command of logic and necessary facts. While he was speaking he did, almost by accident, it seems to me, touch upon some of the things covered by the bill.

Perhaps I might reply to him and answer a number of questions that he raised outside the scope of the bill but which I believe to be rather important not only to him but to all other members. They deal basically with the provision of staff for members of parliament and particularly for the leaders of the parties.

Hon. members may not be aware that for some time now I have tried to place on the order paper a question designed to find out exactly the staffing provided by the House of Commons for the leaders of the various political parties. That was not possible because that information comes through the Speaker of the House. However, I want to tell the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, that I did obtain that information. It is available and I will undertake to have it delivered to his office tomorrow so that he can be aware of exactly what staffing is provided through the House of Commons to members of parliament and particularly to all party leaders. He will be able to discover the formula that is used for the allocation of the moneys of the House of Commons to provide him with his staff.

● (1740)

Concerning his office furniture, rugs, and whatnot, I am happy to tell him that he is not being furnished with cast-offs from ministers but that it is all new. He does not need to worry about being given what ministers no longer want. I hope the hon. member will understand that there is a distinction to be drawn between the administration of the civil service and the House of Commons; it is not a case of Treasury Board being niggardly in the provision of services to members of parliament but, rather, of our making a judgment as to how much we require and how this amount is to be divided between ourselves.

I should like to turn to the subject matter of this bill. Until the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) agreed to bring it forward last Friday, I had not had an opportunity to look at it. I wanted to find out what the government thought of this bill and whether or not it should be proceeded with. Unfortunately, there was some difficulty in determining the precise nature of the bill and there was confusion over a number of the phrases contained in the bill.

I will not go into detail except to say that it was felt that the drafting was not adequate. There was confusion as to whether the hon. member was trying to deal solely with the grievances of public servants which arise from time to time or, perhaps, more importantly, with the grievances which citizens being served by public servants might have. Apparently we would be dealing with two different aspects. However, the wording of the operative clauses was such that it was not clear to the officials who examined the bill or to myself which route we ought to take.

Unfortunately, today I am in the embarrassing position of having prepared some remarks on the ombudsman aspect which applies to citizens and not on the aspect to which my hon. friend addressed himself, which is specifically how we deal adequately with the grievances of public servants who feel that they have not obtained a square deal from their immediate supervisor.

I will be the first to deny that this is not an important subject and not an important area of concern for many public servants. Like the hon. member, I have had occasion to take up the cause of public servants who feel they have been wronged and not treated properly by a supervisor. Unfortunately, members of parliament often have not been able to act because there is a union organization in the field which is responsible for considering these grievances, taking them up with the government and arriving at adequate solutions. These organizations are new in many areas, particularly in areas such as the one I represent, which consists of a considerable area of northern Ontario. These unions have not been able to set up a properly functioning operation in order to process the grievances of public servants in such areas. I have taken up a number of cases but have not been able to obtain complete satisfaction. I have not satisfied myself or the public servants involved, because we have always had to reckon with the interposition of the union between the public servant concerned and the government.

Whether we think they are efficient or not, we must recognize that unions are responsible for considering grievances brought forward by their members, and they must deal adequately with those by approaching the Public Service Commission or Treasury Board, as the case may be.

The bill brought forward by the hon. member indicates that he feels, as do other members, that some other method must be discovered for dealing with these matters. At the moment he obviously feels that the present method is not satisfactory, and I tend to agree with him. My solution would not be one which he proposes, namely, the setting up of an independent administrative tribunal, but, rather, one which encourages, perhaps even forces if necessary, the union involved to take up the cudgels on behalf of its members.

I recognize the dilemma involved in setting up a properly effective and operative union organization in this way, give the nature of our country and the difficulties inherent in screening properly the quality and quantity of complaints brought forward for attention. Without doubt the problem is genuine. However, it is my feeling, having been here longer than I care to recount, although not as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that setting up another piece of bureaucratic machinery in the form of an administrative review board would not be satisfactory.

Such action would not take into account the actual operations of bureaucracy and of similar organizations in our society today. This comment is valid not only for government bureaucracies, but, as well, for all large organizations, because they all tend to exhibit the same kind of behaviour. For example, the behaviour of a large private organization such as General Motors is not significantly different from that of a bureaucracy connected with a department of the federal civil service or with a provincial government. Bureaucracies tend to operate under very much the same rules of survival. Consequently, it seems to me that the hon. member's proposal for setting up an administrative review board, independent and unpaid, to adjudicate and make decisions, does not take into account the way in which bureaucracies operate.

I refer the hon. member to the studies of C. Northcote Parkinson on the operation of bureaucracies, to the book "Parkinson's Law" and subsequent developments of it, and also to the two invaluable books on the Peter principle. These, I think, are useful in determining the nature of bureaucracy and what can be done about it.

It strikes me that the problems public servants face at this time in this place will not be solved by this bill. That is not to say that the problem has not been recognized and that action has not been taken. Let me advise the hon. member that action has been taken by this Parliament. Let me give him a brief history.

About two years ago the then minister of manpower and immigration, who is now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), announced the establishment of the Bryden Commission. It was to examine the workings of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Its work culminated in the Bryden report which, due to the interposition of an election and other matters, was never seriously acted on by the government. As a result this Parliament, on April 17, passed an act which gave an opportunity for Mr. Jacob Finkelman, who is widely respected for his ability to mediate between employees and Treasury Board, the Public Service Commission and other employers, to take leave of absence in order to carry out a further study that will complement the Bryden report.

That report was never presented, mainly because by the time it came out it was considered to be out of date. The president of the Public Service Alliance asked the government not to proceed with it and the government acceded to the wishes of the union as well as to the wishes of its own management side, which in this case I believe was Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission. That study is in the process of being carried on. A time limit has been put on it.

It is anticipated that following our summer recess, if we ever have a recess, this matter will be brought forward and legislation, if required, will be introduced in the House of Commons. So this matter has been under consideration by the government and two studies have been undertaken. The co-operation of the various public service unions is being sought as well as input from the management side. Attempts are being made to understand the problems connected with this delicate subject, and perhaps some time in the fall there will be an opportunity for some committee of the House of Commons to carry out a study of its own, if that is felt necessary. As a result legislation would be introduced by the government to clarify some of the difficulties which have arisen in what I suggest is the trend setting legislation passed in 1966.

The federal government was the first government in Canada to provide union representation to its employees. In working out this new system and developing the new relationships, moving from a paternalistic relationship to a relationship based on equality, there were difficulties. However, progress has been made and we are headed in the right way. I do not believe the solution to this problem lies within the confines of Bill C-36. Regretfully I must say I hope it will not be proceeded with when we leave this place at six o'clock.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the occasion to speak on Bill C-36 which was presented by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) in his usual colourful way. I am delighted to see his red shirt. I do not know if it is an indication of his politics or the 100th anniversary of the RCMP.

His case was plausible and interesting, one that is worthy of a great deal of consideration by members of this House. All members of parliament are accustomed to receiving complaints from constituents who are members of the public service and feel they have been unjustly treated. I do not know if I share all the hon. member's frustrations, but I have the frustration of dealing with cases where you are never certain you are getting the right answer, and I can understand the frustration of the employee.

I do not think this bill was intended to be a specific vehicle to increase the number of women in the public service. This government is committed to that and I am sure all future governments will be. I do not feel this is the major thrust of this bill. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who referred to a report on sex in the public service. I am most anxious to read it. I do not know whether it has been banned, but I will try to get a copy of it.

I was concerned about some of the remarks of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). He stated you need political pull in order to get a job in the public service. That is quite foreign to the experience I have had. As a member of the government side, I find that any intrusion by a member, regardless of what political party he belongs to, certainly a member of the party in power, just about guarantees the person will not get the job.

I suspect that if I approached the Public Service Commission and suggested a person should not get a job, he would probably get it. I have a batting average of 1000 per cent on assisting people to get jobs in the public service. A recommendation from a member of parliament, no matter what party, has no bearing whatsoever. In fact, it is detrimental to the person's chances.

I am not suggesting this is all bad. Perhaps that is the reason we have a Public Service Commission. In days gone by it was necessary for people to have political connections to get a job. That method of patronage is the one to which the hon. member for Témiscamingue referred. Although I have only been here five years, I have found it to be absolutely non-existent.

I agree that part of the solution to the difficulties which the hon. member for Fraser Valley West is trying to resolve in his bill is to give greater facilities to members of parliament, both in the constituency and in Ottawa, to pursue some of those problems. We could do this more vigorously if we did not have so many demands on our time. We cannot get to the root of our problem without greater assistance. I am not even sure that this would solve the problem.

I would like to see us get to the root of our difficulties, but I wonder if this is the way to do it, certainly as far as agencies and Crown corporations are concerned. We have Crown corporations for many reasons. One of the reasons is that they are at arm's length from the political process. I wonder if it would be appropriate to have such an agency or review board in areas of employer-employee relationships for Crown corporations. The CNR has adequate union procedures, as does Air Canada. I do not think Crown corporations, such as Polymer Corporation or Atomic Energy of Canada, should be subject to this sort of external review. The answer is to get at the root of the problem.

We have been dealing with problems that are difficult and complex. There are no easy answers to them. In the case of inflation and the high cost of living, the simplistic answer is we cannot find the real solution. Many people feel we should have price controls. When we come to capital punishment, we have problems in our society. Some people feel that if we cannot solve a problem, we should remove it and be rid of it. This does not have the same relationship, but I am suggesting the root of the problem here is employer-employee relationships. There should be more specific management techniques and implementation of the recommendations in the Bryden report. These are the basic problems that must be solved.

I would be concerned about the attraction of a board like this to handle complaints. There are many complaints about people feeling they are improperly treated with regard to merit pay. The line-up of complaints before such a board could be horrendous.

The problem explained by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West is evident. I do not know if we have time to vote on the bill tonight, but I think it was his intention to bring this up for discussion. He has brought forward an interesting problem on which we can cogitate. If the Bryden report is brought forth for study in the fall, it will attract more of our attention.

Mr. Rose: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Danson: If it is a question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member made reference to my beautiful ideological shirt. Can he inform me whether his ideological hair, which is the same colour, also represents his views on matters?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, you cannot judge a rose by its colour. I am not trying to judge the hon. member for Fraser Valley West by the colour of his shirt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, the House stands recessed until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and Motion No. 2 (Mrs. Morin).

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I had just disposed of some of the arguments put forward by abolitionists against capital punishment and, therefore, against the amendment we are now considering. As one who supports the amendment, I wish to reflect for a moment on the attitude on society toward this proposal, as I see it.

Many members send questionnaires to their constituencies. They receive thousands of replies. I have yet to hear of one member receiving replies the majority of which were opposed to capital punishment. I have not sent out a questionnaire, but I can tell from the hundreds of letters I have received from my constituents that the overwhelming majority of people there favour the retention of capital punishment, and presumably therefore, they would favour the amendment we are considering.

These people know there are problems within the penal system and they recognize that a swift solution is not possible. But they want us to take a step in that direction, and the first thing they want is a return to capital punishment, for whatever value it has. I have already dealt with this aspect. I am certain they would support the amendment because it is a step in the direction of returning to society some of the conditions we enjoyed when we felt easy about walking around in our neighbourhoods and in our own ridings without worrying about what would happen to us.

Society as a whole has a responsibility not only to rehabilitate criminals and murderers but toward the innocent masses of society who are being inconvenienced, frightened—there are any number of words we could use to describe the conditions which exist. There is a quotation which I thought worth mentioning, taken from an article written on this topic.

Perhaps convicted murderers are not fit to live in our society and rather than imprison them with its care and menace—

They are interesting words—"care" and "menace".

—better to kill them and be done with it.

If a man is not fit to live in society I think society owes it to the people to rid society of that man. I do not intend to get into the life imprisonment angle, but it has been said that this could be a worse punishment than being executed.

There is another aspect which is overlooked when we talk about the innocent masses. It is the type of protection they need. This sentence illustrates it well:

Some people may take the law into their own hands if they think the state will not. If a man knows his wife's murderer will serve only seven years in prison for the crime he may be inclined, and understandably so, to execute the man himself and serve the seven years in place of his wife's killer.

I have said this before. The innocent who suffer as a result of a murder deserve the protection of society and of the law. There is always a danger that these innocents will take the law into their own hands in other ways and form vigilante or other undesirable groups. The people in my riding want safety in the streets for themselves and for their families. They are very much aware that some of the laws are too lax and that enforcement is too lax. They think of places like New York city, which perhaps at one time was a pleasant place to visit and walk around at night but where now not only do you not dare go out at night but you find hardly any people living there, it is such a dreadful place. The people in my riding want to know there are certain rules which will be enforced. They think society needs to be saved from itself. They think we can save society by restoring, among other things, capital punishment, which would implement the amendment we are talking about in respect of murder resulting from rape.

The people cannot understand why parliamentarians, at least the abolitionists, apparently reject the view of the law enforcement agencies all over the country, if not all over the world, that there should be a return to capital punishment for this sort of offence. A return to law and order is wanted by all these people and they have made their views known to me. I do not have any difficulty agreeing with the view of the majority of my constitutents. I think this is still a democracy. The people think this too. They know the majority of Canadians are in favour of capital punishment and in favour of this kind of amendment. I am in full support of it myself. I think we owe it to the majority of Canadians to pass this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, we are now at the report stage of Bill C-2, an act concerning capital punishment. In order to make this act still more effective, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) has moved an amendment incorporating into the bill the case of murders which might be considered as punishable by death.

For the past five years, the government—as far as I know, it is the same old gang—has wanted the abolition of capital punishment for all murders except that of a police officer or prison guard.

For the past five years, we have constantly been hearing about murders of women as well as men, young as well as elderly people, policemen and prison guards as well as ordinary individuals. With such a sampling, we are therefore able to analyze the situation, to probe files, to turn everything upside down in order to find out whether, under the act, punishment has been dealt out or better still, whether the law has simply been applied.

I surely need not discourse any longer to convince the House that in spite of the law passed by Parliament, in no case did we respect our commitments towards society. Policemen have been killed. Did we, as the law stipulates, punish the murderers with death? No. So why should we waste our time enacting laws if we are the first to ignore them? And then, we expect the people to enforce the laws we pass.

Mr. Speaker, the past is the guarantee of the future, and despite what some government members may say, even if we should pass some law or other, we know in advance they will not enforce it. The government is using Bill C-2 to play politics, to play blackmail politics, to try to convince the people that we, federal members, work hard at serious problems.

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

What difference is there, Mr. Speaker, between discussing and studying this bill on July 24th and discussing it on November 24th? We know ahead of time that it will never be enforced. But to play politics, the government wants to compel the opposition parties to pass bills at full speed before the summer recess.

That is simply the petty method used by the government not to legislate according to the will of the people, but to threaten opposition parties and try, as I said, to railroad bills as loony, frivolous and thoughtless as the one now before the House.

Yet, throughout Canada, surveys have shown clearly—surveys conducted both by members of Parliament and agencies without political allegiance—that most people are calling for the restoration of capital punishment, and that, because society wants to be protected.

In spite of this consensus, the government, the Liberal party wants at all costs and without delay to force Parliament to pass a legislation which goes against the wishes of the majority.

In my riding, 82 per cent of the people are in favour of retaining capital punishment for premeditated murders and not only for people who murder police officers and prison guards or, according to the amendment under review, for people who kill a woman after raping her.

We favour this amendment because, first, it demonstrates the stupidity of the government, second, it widens the concept of the protection of society. I say "the stupidity of the government" because if a man kills a woman after raping her, they want to punish him by death, but the case of a woman who would kill a man in the same situation is not provided for in the amendment. She will probably be commended for such an achievement. If a homosexual attacks a man and kills him while raping him, fine, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has had a law passed that legalized homosexuality. Therefore, no capital punishment for this privileged race, unless obviously it is discovered afterwards, and here I am interpreting the legislation, that the victim of the murder was a police officer or a prison guard. Then according to the law the murderer is punishable by death even though in effect this is not enforced. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not, for one, comply with the legislation that he and his colleagues pass in the House.

Mr. Speaker, here is another example. If a woman rapes a young boy who dies from it, no capital punishment because the murderer was a woman. These are the terms of the amendment. If a man rapes a girl—I do not know if the word "woman" implies any segregation between unmarried and married girls—he is sentenced to death. We could give many such examples, but I will only mention that murder is punishable by capital punishment whether carried out during or after the rape. Culpability also depends on the victim's sex and occupation.

A skilled gangster should choose his victim carefully and however ridiculous it may seem, he should kill the Prime Minister's wife rather than a woman who is member of the police force. He should make sure to rape her only after her death, because if he did so before it could cost him his life. After all, if he kills her before raping her, I doubt that there has been a rape, since the victim was unable to spurn or yield to the advances of the criminal.

So many fine distinctions, so many ways to amuse the lawyers. And I point out in this House that those same lawyers are divided, some being for the death penalty, others against it. However, they have all studied the same laws, but they realize how important it is to complicate them, because their daily bread is involved. Indeed, they can be pleased, because they are assured of obtaining more interesting cases than those they now have.

Mr. Speaker, the people refuse to become the plaything of gloomy politicians such as those who hold power. People want laws to be respected and law-abiding individuals to be protected.

Not only do the government and its departments not respect the laws established by Parliament, but what is even worse, they encourage those who unhappily do not abide by the laws.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Charlevoix will excuse my interrupting only for a moment, because his speech is interesting. I know that his colleagues want to hear him, but I remind him that under the Standing Orders, only 20 minutes are available to him and the Chair hopes that he will come to the point and consider the amendment presently before the House in the period of time allotted to him. I generally remind all hon. members that they must limit their remarks to the amendment under study. We are not at the third reading stage, that will come later on, but at the report stage providing for particular motions, including that of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I think that hon. members should not at this stage make speeches which they could deliver at the stage of the third reading or which they have already made on second reading; they should rather stick to the amendment before us. This motion is in very specific terms and hon. members participating in this debate at this stage should observe the rule of relevance.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely the motion I was talking about when I indicated the segregations the amendment seems to introduce in the bill. It would be against the wishes of the people who would like to see an amendment which would reestablish capital punishment not out of segregation but in a general way for all murders premeditated or not.

Then, in this perspective, we have to consider that the system as a whole which supposes compliance with the laws, as we see now, does not seem to afford individuals the protection they have a right to expect and this to the extent that we see—and we saw it this year—murderers or outlaws, prisoners get the permission to entertain themselves, to go and see hockey games at the Montreal Forum. On the other hand, we never heard that unhappy, miserable people, those who live on welfare, could get tickets from the government to entertain themselves and see hockey games too.

I was saying that somehow the government favours those people who do not comply with the laws. The poor people are never that lucky; on the contrary, they are penalized. But murderers must be rewarded; after all, a good hockey game or a walk through the Salon de la Femme is probably a reward for getting rid of a future welfare recipient.

To show you the extent of our leaders' madness, Mr. Speaker, I would go so far as to say that I know a good many cases of unhappy, but law abiding people, depending on social welfare, who are not entitled to any recreational activities. If, by any chance, they own a car, their allowance is withdrawn and they are told to sell their car, often an old jalopy, worth about $50, if they want their cheque. On the other hand, the same people on social welfare are not entitled to get out of their misery or to be entertained; but a bandit, in short a smart bandit who infringes the law, is rewarded. Not only he is entitled to an automobile to go to his recreational activities, but he is provided with a private chauffer, paid by the state, to be entertained while serving his sentence.

This is the society that our practical jokers, our leaders, are building for us; on the one hand, by legalizing murder of an innocent, of a child, and on the other hand, by rewarding the murderer of an individual. It is with this kind of position that the government wants to obtain a "just society".

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that not only is the present act unfair but it is discriminatory in respect of those who do abide by the law. This government seems to want to say, go ahead, ladies and gentlemen, kill, you will be rewarded for having contributed to solving the alleged problem of overpopulation. But before you kill, make sure that the man is neither a policeman nor a prison guard, or if you prefer to kill a woman make sure that it is not in the course of making love and also that she is neither a policewoman nor a prison guard because that would cost you your head. And, finally, go ahead, kill anybody, anywhere, anytime, because the law will not really be applied as has been seen in the past.

The Prime Minister undoubtedly prefers to listen to the demands of those sentenced to death for murder than listen to society which suffers from insecurity. We have seen enough people thus sentenced to death, blessed people who will have three meals a day for the rest of their lives, watch colour television, occasionally attend sporting events at the expense of the state and finally be released with the blessing of the right hon. government of Canada.

● (2030)

In conclusion, I simply want to ask those responsible both for the bill and the amendment to stop looking at themselves as angels and be human with everything that that entails, that is respecting those individuals who respect their fellow individuals. Then we will see legislation to protect society and not wrongdoers. We will see the restoration of capital punishment for all capital murders without any restriction of segregation and we will thus contribute to protecting society. After all, Mr. Speaker, that is our role and the approach people expect from us.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to speak in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). Basically, her amendment makes sense to me. It suggests that persons who deliberately commit an act which results in the death of another person shall be punished by death. That makes sense to me and to many people across Canada. While I do not wish to belabour the matter of the sentence of death and whether or not society has the right to punish the guilty in this way, this is the supreme test of those who are chosen to govern society, namely, whether or not they can take it upon themselves to adjudicate or to rule in authority in the case of acts of violence or acts against society.

The hon. member's amendment suggests that anyone caught and charged with this offence may be subject to the supreme penalty. In saying this I am not necessarily saying that I am absolutely in favour of that supreme penalty. I think as legislators we could devise a better system than hanging for the taking of the lives of violators. But that is not the point now before the House of Commons. The question before the House is the hon. member's amendment, and we must address ourselves to it.

Under the present law one who commits premeditated murder is charged with what is commonly called capital murder. One who causes a death as a result of anger, jealousy, or other emotional outburst, just on the spur of the moment, is charged with non-capital murder. In the hon. member's amendment we have a further clarification or differentiation between capital murder and non-capital murder.

The hon. member's amendment suggests that anyone convicted of rape and murder be subjected to capital punishment. Under such circumstances, I could agree with the hon. member. But I have seen the opposite argued, that rape cannot be committed without consent. I do not necessarily believe that. Rape is a supreme example of wanton pilferage. We have seen many examples of it in the country of our neighbours to the south.

What is society doing to protect itself? In suburbia we see housewives arming themselves with pistols, or some other means of defence against what could be called wanton pilferage. If as legislators we allow the law enforcement agencies in our society to become engaged solely in reprimanding the persons caught, this is not at all sufficient. We have to go one step further. We must caution people in society that they cannot do certain actions.

I do not know how many hon. members have been reading the newspapers in recent days, but from reports in them I have no hesitation in suggesting that the occurrence of rape in Toronto, Montreal and in the west has been on the increase. One must ask why. Is it because of a lack of appreciation of the judicial system? I think more severe penalties should be imposed on people who deliberately take advantage of others unable to defend themselves.

Some two or three weeks ago the attention of the House of Commons was directed to the bludgeoning to death of an 82 year old lady in the city of Edmonton, Alberta. She lived in an apartment house and had refused to hand over her money. That is not an uncommon thing. The people who broke into her apartment did not know her age. They thought the most they faced was a couple of months in jail for committing burglary.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

The same thing happened to an elderly lady of 78 or 79 years in the city of Calgary. I do not think Alberta is different from the rest of Canada in this respect. I may be accused of being hypersensitive to incidents in the province of Alberta, but from my reading of the press I believe such incidents are increasing all across Canada—in Montreal, in Quebec, in Toronto, in Vancouver, and even in the Maritimes. From studying newspapers and RCMP reports one could discover the exact statistics. One must ask why these break-ins took place. Were these elderly ladies bludgeoned to death merely that others could steal the money they had received as pensions? No, I really do not think so. They were break-ins committed by those desirous of some other extreme pleasures, which some people take upon themselves and which I do not think society appreciates happen. I think this House of Commons should recognize the fact that 70 per cent of the people of Canada seriously doubt that a murderer today really takes into consideration the ultimate penalty for his crime. Why do those people committing the ultimate crime not take into consideration the desire of most of the people of Canada? It is because of loss of confidence in the judicial system in our country.

This is a sad thing in this day and age, a time when we in Canada throw out our chests and boast of our educational system, and how knowledgeable we are in understanding one another and of the comprehensive desires of the individual. It is a sad thing in an educated society today that most of the people that commit the ultimate crime have no confidence whatsoever in the judicial system. They say "I know a deliberate murder will not result in my receiving the death penalty; I will serve X number of years and then I will go scot free, so why should I worry?"

It is a strange situation when we reach that degree of misunderstanding within the educated society in which we are living. One would think the direct opposite, Mr. Speaker, was true. One would think that in an educated society those people committing the crime would really believe they would pay the penalty, but the direct converse is true.

I think this is a question which the governing power should answer, the governing power being that body which is putting forward this bill which will continue the so-called experiment. The governing body is putting forward this experiment. There is no question about this issue in the minds of the Canadian people; Gallup poll results suggest that 70 per cent or 80 per cent, whichever figure you want to relate to, are in favour of obtaining the death penalty. Among the urban people it is 80 per cent and among the rural people it is 85 per cent, and I suppose, being a Conservative, I have to say it is 70 per cent, because playing it safe is part of my nature. But certainly between 70 per cent and 85 per cent of the people of Canada believe that we must retain in our society an effective system of capital punishment.

How effective should capital punishment be? The bill before the House of Commons suggests it should be effective in the case of one committing a murder of a police officer or a prison guard. As a representative of a fair percentage of Canadian voters, I suggest that perhaps that does not go far enough. I do not necessarily believe that all murderers should have their sentences commuted; neither do I necessarily believe that all murderers should be hanged. But I do believe there should be degrees, that there should be qualifying factors.

Now, with murder with intent I am in no trouble. In cases of murder with a degree of deliberation to involve the death of a certain person there is no question in my mind that the person who commits that murder, or who orders the death of that person, should be committed to death himself. I have no question in my mind about that, no qualms, no loss of sleep. I know many solicitors general, Mr. Speaker, who have found that question a problem.

How much further do we go? Well, we provide in the present Criminal Code that in the case of any murder which can be declared by our courts to be a deliberate murder with intent, the murderer shall be sentenced to death. Then in this particular bill we provide that the murderer of a prison guard or policeman will be sentenced to death. I do not get over concerned by the murder of a policeman. I do not believe that a policeman should deserve all that more protection. He has a gun at his hip and because he has a gun at his hip he sometimes provokes the use of that firearm. He is trained very, very well to use it. Therefore, I think that he is a special case, but is he a special case beyond the rest of society? That is the question that the hon. member's amendment proposes to this House of Commons. Is the prison guard who has a duty to perform and also has a gun available, whether it be at his hip or in prison or wherever, also a special case? Those are a couple of particular situations which the present bill suggests we should provide for. But the hon. member's amendment goes one step further. It goes to the question of a female in trouble, a female subject to rape. There is no gun at her hip. She has no gun available. She is a defenceless person and nobody comes to her defence.

I urge this House of Commons—and I see the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in his seat—if it sees any desire to create a halfway mark between complete abolition and complete retention, to accept this thoughtful amendment proposed by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) because I think it makes sense. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it appears obvious to me that the government, in pursuing this lengthy debate at this late stage of the summer recess, has no desire to entertain any amendments. They want to proceed because they believe in commutation to the end.

Mr. Ellwood Madill (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the amendment brought to the House at this time by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) affords us the opportunity of ensuring the Canadian people a certain amount of security and safety within the framework of Bill C-2. There are few crimes as serious or as horrendous as the two dealt with by this amendment. I wholeheartedly support both the principle and the facts behind this amendment.

We should look at this proposal as a safety measure in a bill which will experiment with partial abolition of capital punishment for a further period of five years. In this case we are acknowledging that the previous five-year trial period was not successful in the eyes of the majority of Canadians. Therefore, another trial ban must distinguish in better fashion between those crimes which are capital crimes and those crimes which are not. We may find that partial ban legislation, which defines murder-rapes and kidnap-murders as capital crimes, will assure Canadians of the security and safety to which they have a right. We may find after five years that we still have not gone far enough. But to refrain from including this amendment in the bill would be a forfeiture by this Parliament of its primary duty, that of serving Canadians.

Rape and kidnapping are two terrible crimes which, according to statistics and news reports, are increasing at an alarming rate. The figures have been quoted previously by other speakers and I do not need to repeat them. They are particularly terrible because they damage the moral and mental fibre of the victims and persons close to the victims. The terror and anguish which is experienced as a result of these crimes is something which no person should have to endure. On these grounds alone, rape and kidnapping should be recognized as capital crimes.

The amendment does not go as far as that. It requires that a murder be committed as well as a rape or a kidnapping. While I would be in favour of stiffer legislation, I am prepared to accept this amendment as it stands because it will in all likelihood act as a deterrent to potential criminals. All too often the threat of murder is an important factor in these crimes. And all too often death is the result of these crimes. If a criminal knows that murder, in conjunction with either rape or kidnapping, is punishable by death, he may have second thoughts about committing the crimes at all.

I do not accept those arguments which claim that capital punishment is not an effective deterrent to murder. Proponents of this theory overlook the impact that the threat of execution has on all criminals who carry a weapon, whether they be professional killers or milk store bandits. Many prisoners spoke freely of using unloaded weapons prior to the temporary ban on capital punishment, but they spoke just as freely of loading those guns after the ban went into effect. These feelings are common to most criminals.

The amendment suggests that members of parliament are aware of the need for deterrents with respect to certain crimes. Murder as a result of kidnapping or rape is certainly a crime for which deterrents are needed.

It is difficult to enter into a discussion of this amendment without straying into a more general discussion of abolition or retention of capital punishment. At the risk of straying, I would like to say that I do hope this amendment signifies a trend toward developing a safer society for Canadians. Is murder as a result of rape or kidnapping any more final than murder as a result of other premeditated crimes? How can we construct a partition between, for example, the acts of a kidnapper and the acts of a thief who murders a storekeeper? Both crimes contain elements of planning and strategy. Both involve the possibility of death. The need for a crackdown in law enforcement is recognized by most Canadians. Our entire society is jeopardized by weak laws, especially as they apply to the maintenance of society.

To return to this particular amendment, I will support it in the hope that it will act as a deterrent to potential rapists and kidnappers and in the hope that society will be protected. I hope, too, that legislators and administrators will see the need to return to a more practical approach in the enforcement of law and the development of a safe society.

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise to continue this discussion in the face of the very poor logic that has been exhibited here yesterday, this afternoon and this evening. The basic issue is simply one of law and order, and how we control that within our society. Do you just get rid of people because they disobey the law? Is this what we are coming down to at this stage of the game? Is this how we have advanced in the twentieth century? Is this where we say we are going?

Hon. members have talked about having respect for our fellows. How can we expect the young to have respect for the law when we have no respect for life? I find it difficult to anticipate what some of the people who have participated in this debate would have done in the olden days when they hanged people for stealing a sheep, so cheap was life. They talk about dollars and cents and say, "But look at the money we are going to waste if we keep these people in prison". Have we reduced the value of human life to dollars and cents? I hope not, Sir.

It really bothers me that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) tried to bring in by the back door what certain members of the House were willing to bring in through the front door. He could have proposed some good amendments to this House, not the ones we are debating tonight. I think he cost his country a great deal by what he did. He lost us five years. That is nothing but a cop-out. Surely, after what we went through in 1968 and after everything that we have been going through on the present occasion we should have enough guts to make up our minds where we are going and what we are doing, and not put off this decision for another five years. But he denied us that opportunity.

Surely it must be apparent that you either impose capital punishment for all crimes or you do not impose it, and introducing exceptions such as the amendment speaks of is foolish. You do not choose and say what is against the law and what offence is within the law, because no offence is within the law. And do you sacrifice a human being because he has disobeyed the law? I think not.

The amendment goes further than the bill itself. I really laugh at the exceptions within the bill as it presently stands. Without being facetious, may I say this to the House that if I, with my poor eyes, take a shot at the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and miss, and hit the Mountie near him, I will hang, but if I am lucky and hit him, I will not. How laughable! How stupid! You either hang or you do not hang, and I say you do not.

I urge on all members as pointedly as I possibly can that the sacrifice of a human life for the sake of sacrifice accomplishes nothing. Milton had something to say on this; he said that our law is all too curious to discover sin but not to prove the solution of it. This is what we must be after. This is what our law must be directed toward.

I do not know how many members of this House have ever defended people on a charge of murder. I have and it is not an easy task. You suffer. You stay awake nights. One life hangs in the balance.

I agree with what my colleague who sits in front of me said this afternoon. If we are going to adopt this amendment, go all the way. If death results, hang the culprit. If that is what we think of life, then I say we have come nowhere in the past 100 years of our culture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Morgan: The only point I attempt to make is this. If we want the people of this country to respect our laws and respect what we as legislators are doing for this country, we must impress upon them what Albert Schweitzer said in his book, that you must have a reverence for life.

I say quite simply there is no statistical evidence available that capital punishment is a deterrent. By the same token, some say there is no evidence available that capital punishment is not a deterrent. I will buy that. You can go on both sides of the fence, but once you hit that square, then hit square two. Do you hang people because there is no evidence in support of it? Of course not.

If I could be shown by statistical evidence or in some other way that the execution of a person, whether by hanging or some other method—and I do not think there is an easy way of doing away with life—is a deterrent, I would take a second look, but you cannot argue that. There is no evidence one way or another.

We should value what we are as human beings. We have a frontal cortex, some place to think. We are not just animals. You do not get rid of us like animals. We must have a respect and reverence for life.

A member this afternoon said that if there is rape and an abortion results, you are doing away with life. What is the inconsistency there? It is illogical to want to hang a rapist. Do not say he deserves it. I bet that member has never defended a rapist in his life. He has no idea what he goes through, no idea of his mental process and the trouble he goes through in life. He could be a married man with a wife at home.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the victims? Do not they go through a process of agony?

Mr. Morgan: Of course they do; but when a person is sick, are you going to hang him?

Mr. Nowlan: I am speaking after you.

Mr. Morgan: Without being personal, if some of these people had followed me around for a couple of years, they would have seen the agony these people actually go through. They are not well. They do not have a men rea. They do not say they are going to rape a little girl. They do not know what they are doing. Their mind is not with it. They need help. Do you hang a person who needs help? Do you hang a person with scarlet fever or a broken leg? Of course not.

I admit there are many faults in our penal system. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) knows that. There is room for reform. Perhaps we should have life imprisonment for some of these people. If the Solicitor General could have brought in his amendments, we could be a little more realistic about what we are trying to do in dealing with these people. Perhaps life imprisonment should mean no parole or remission until these people are cured of their ills. Unfortunately, that spoiled it for those of us who want to bring in amendments, and I sincerely regret the amendments were ruled out of order. This is a bill to abolish capital punishment, with two exceptions. I wish the exceptions were not there.

I will not prolong my remarks. This House has a very clear choice in front of it. I do not care what amendments are introduced; I do not like the two exceptions in the bill. If I have to live with them, I can, but I certainly do not want them expanded.

For many years I have talked with police officials and detectives. They do not want these exceptions. They think they are foolish because they feel their lives are no more important than anyone else's. They agree that life imprisonment should mean a little more than seven or 10 years. As police officers and detectives who are fighting crime, they know the value of life. They want to protect life. They do this every day. They do this for the rest of us.

I will close by saying that this House has a clear choice. The amendments add nothing except more exceptions to the rule. You go one way or the other. I ask members of this House to make up their minds which way they are going to go, amendment or no amendment. You either have a respect and a reverence for life or you do not.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). It extends the discrimination which the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Morgan) so ably pointed out. In addition to the exception for policemen and prison guards, this amendment also makes an exception for murders or killings that take place while rape is being committed and during or after a kidnapping.

I respect my colleague, the hon. member for St. Catharines, who has proven himself to be a very eloquent man in the short time he has been a member in this House. I agree with him that the issue dealt with in Bill C-2 should be crystal clear: Will we have capital punishment or will we not? Unfortunately, we are confined to the restrictions of this amendment, and this is what I intend to speak about in the few minutes available to me.

While I respect the legal sagacity and experience of the hon. member for St. Catharines before the criminal courts of this land, I do not back off from him because of that. While I have not defended a murderer, I have certainly defended many people who were alleged to have committed rape.

I certainly admire and respect the fortitude it must have taken for the hon. lady to move this amendment. If the government had any doubt about the strong feeling on the basic issue in the bill before us, it can have no doubt left after the strong debate the first amendment has evoked. Look at the deep-felt and sincere emotion of my hon. friend from St. Catharines (Mr. Morgan), who asked the House some rhetorical questions which may be hard to answer. When my friend asks, Mr. Speaker, how one can have respect for the law when there is no respect for life, I turn to him and ask in return: How do you have respect for the law when there is no penalty befitting the crime? I say to my friend: How is it that you have respect for the law when there is no sanction in the sentence?

And my friend questions again: How can you believe in capital punishment when you have, or should have, a reverence for life? I am sure my friend did not intend to infer that any member of this House, regardless of the strength of his feelings on the issue of capital punishment, has any diluted reverence for life. I want to assure him that I have as deep a reverence for life as any member of this House, and because I feel this great sense of reverence for life I respect people and believe that the ultimate crime should be met by capital punishment after all the due processes of law have been followed. The case of Tanya Bush is the incident which finally swung my opinion from abolition to retention.

Three times, Mr. Speaker, in the seven year period in which I have been a member the House has been confronted with the fundamental issue here, life, or the philosophy of life, the poetry of idealism or the actuality of reality. None of us want to pull the door that makes someone lose his life, but I say that the House of Commons, regardless of public opinion, cannot get lost in philosophic homilies and beautiful platitudes which we would love to believe. The state takes life every time there is a war. War is a crime against society. I say murder is a crime. I say murder is a war against an individual, and because it is a war against an individual after due process of law the potential ultimate sanction should be there in our rule books.

We all know that armed with the power to exercise executive clemency, or the Royal prerogative of mercy, this government, if it stays in power, is not going to follow the law. They have not followed the law since it has been in the books. Because of reverence for life, because of respect for people, the House of Commons must discharge its responsibility too, in the most reprehensible of situations.

My friend, a learned criminal lawyer, fully knows the facts on Tanya Bush. And they fit directly into the amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). Three child killings and then while the culprit is out on weekend leave from a penitentiary, because he has a grudge against Tanya Bush's father, he kills Tanya Bush who is eight or nine years old. Four child killings, three girls and one boy.

I have four children, Mr. Speaker, and I am not going to get overly emotional about this, but it is because I have a reverence for life and a respect for life, and because I do not want a Tanya Bush situation to repeat itself, that I have no hesitation about voting for this amendment, which at least extends the principle of capital punishment up to a point.

To follow my friend's argument to a conclusion, he says there is no logic to this debate; and he is right, Mr. Speaker. The issue of capital punishment is one which evokes the primary instincts of everybody, and that is why I do not think there is an issue since I have been a member of parliament which has sustained the interest of so many people from my constituency and from coast to coast. I agree with many of my friends and certain of the abolitionists up to a point; statistics do not mean anything in this debate. That is why you can walk into a barber shop, into a cocktail party, into a constituency meeting or into a church, and once the business is over the question comes up: What are you going to do about capital punishment? You do not need facts to cloud the issue. It is instinctive, as I say. It goes to the fundamentals of life, and that, basically, is simple.

If you follow what my friend says, that because the crime is so reprehensible in the case of rape that the fellow must be so sick that he ought not to be punished too severely. Where do we find ourselves? Pierre Laporte lost his life two and a half to three years ago. One man has been sentenced, I think, for his murder. No one has been faced with the ultimate penalty. No one has been hanged because of that heinous incident, that blot on our history.

If we were talking about the situation 50 years ago or even 25 years ago, I would most likely have joined those who were urging us to move forward. But the balance has shifted and as the hon. member from Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) said the other night, provoking an angry response from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), there is too little concern for the victims of these heinous crimes. I have listened to speeches, as I say, for the last seven years telling us that capital punishment is not a deterrent. But, Mr. Speaker, those statistics are only developed on the basis of those who have committed crimes. I agree it is most likely you cannot prove the contrary, but who knows what goes through the mind of someone who has a grudge, or wants to exceed all reasonable conduct. If there was a capital penalty, he might just not carry out the offence he contemplates.

Look at our jails. We are talking about prison guards and prison treatment. There is a higher rate of killings in the jails, if my reading of the newspapers is correct, than there is on the streets. This always happened to a degree. There are always grudges in penal institutions and undoubtedly some will go to extremes. But I think such crimes have been increasing, and they can increase with impunity. Because if a man has been sent to jail for life, what has he to lose under the present system? Do you want to put a man in a cage for the rest of his life? If he has committed an unfortunate crime, do you want to put him in a cage and leave him there for his natural life? I cannot get caught up on that argument. I think that with our penal system, our parole system and proper safeguards for those who commit the ultimate crime, there still should be a process of proper review. But I say the heinous crime, the repeated crime, the crime under contract, out to kill, the organized crime, comes into a different category.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to stay calm in this debate. We have had a five-year trial period in theory, but it has not been followed in practice. I could go on and get a little political, but my time is running out and we are debating this issue for the third time in seven years.

Ironically, there are some members interested in family allowances, which is at the opposite pole of the capital punishment debate, I suppose. If you are going to deal with capital punishment on one side, why should you not be thinking about the children of the world, the family allowance situation and the social security situation?

We have heard about high taxes, election expenses, foreign takeovers, crop insurance, mortgage money to help people get homes, and we have heard about the Olympics in Montreal in 1976. We have all these matters to deal with yet we keep this House going all summer on this matter of capital punishment. I hope the research people will dig up the number of days this and the previous Parliament spent on this issue. I do not think half the people of Canada know we are in session and I do not believe the other half care. However, the priorities of this government are twisted. I shall not belabour that point.

I think the government and some of the leaders of all parties have fatally underestimated the deeply held feelings on this issue. Why should we be in session debating this eternal question at this time? Some people may think we should be having a summer recess because we are not dealing with some issues of higher priority. What priority has capital punishment? We have not followed the law for the past five or six years. Is there any more guarantee that we will follow even the sham law, as it was described by my friend from St. Catharines, in the next five years?

This is supposed to be a priority item through the summer recess. It is not really. To show how unreal it is, people in the outside world are still going to cottages. Some people in the gallery here are still on vacation. Some of these people may have seen a cartoon which appeared on the editorial page of the Daily Colonist of Victoria the other day in which there appeared a drawing of the Solicitor General with a script over his shoulder which I thought was pretty good.

An hon. Member: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Nowlan: I will read it again. It states:

Warren Allmand is my name,
Abolition is my game.
The death penalty is unfair,
As for murder victims, they're gone—why care?
Through the Commons it will be rammed.

Public opinion? Public opinion be damned.

I say to my friends to the left, who sometimes have blinkers on their eyes, that if they think they are in tune with public opinion they should start to give some of their views on the floor of this House so that we will have that rhapsody of blue or that objectivity of thought that we always have when they enter a debate. I listened to a man this afternoon for whom I have the highest regard, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He added a most eloquent phrase which I wish to repeat. He said that on this journey of mankind as civilization moves along we will go down many miles, cross over many rivers and climb many mountains and on this journey we do not want to be stopping and erecting scaffolds on the way. I listened to his fervent and sincere views on this issue, and I thought this was very hard to resist.

In conclusion, I wish to say that on the same journey, walking those same miles, crossing those same rivers and climbing those same mountains, if we do not stop and build the odd scaffold—which is a pretty picturesque and graphic way to describe it—then we will still be stopping and digging the odd grave for some of the victims who have been victimized, in effect, by a repeat performer.

The amendment of the hon. member for Louis-Hebert would extend even this sham bill, as it has been described, to cover this type of repeat act. It would also cover situations respecting the agonies of rape or the situation of the people who were on that Boeing 747 for three days without knowing whether or not they would be blown up. If they had been blown up, or if murder had occurred during a rape, surely the person who committed those crimes should not necessarily hang but at least be exposed to the ultimate sanction.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, for many years I have held the view that the ultimate psychological reason for which some people support capital punishment is a firmly established attitude of vengeance that remains once every argument in support of capital punishment is shot to the ground. Nothing could more vividly demonstrate that to me, or to anyone else who reads these debates, than the bundle of illogical argument we have just heard, following perhaps one of the most moving speeches on this subject by a man who obviously feels for mankind, the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Morgan).

The hon. member from Annapolis Valley who spoke after him got up and used every illogical argument that has been used in this debate by a number of members on both sides of the House. I should like to challenge the hon. member who preceded me to consider my arguments as I take his points one by one, and see if he can refute them. I challenge him to point out the error of my reasoning in respect of any of his points. If he can do so I will be prepared to consider his argument. If he cannot, then I suggest the reason he supports capital punishment—and I hesitate to say this but I do so because I feel seriously about this matter and any human being is entitled to an emotional response on the question of violence—is pure vengeance.

I should like to trot out the hon. member's arguments and deal with them one by one. First of all, in reply to the moving address of the hon. member for St. Catharines he said, "What about respect for law?" He said—and this was his first argument—that if we do not have capital punishment there will be no respect for the law. He received a number of cheers from the ranks of his own party.

I should like to ask the hon. member what evidence he has from any authority in this or any other country in the world to show how an act of violence by the state of anyone else brings respect for the law? The modern teachings of psychologists, either behavioural or Freudian, completely shatter that view. It has been shown that violence does nothing but create more violence. I agree that in time of war military commanders use violence in their training of troops to provoke the attitude of violence. I say to the hon. member that if he wants to rid us of violence the best way to do it is not to perpetuate capital crime because this will bring only more response in the form of violence and indeed breed more violence in our society.

• (2130)

Do not take my opinion for it; look at the evidence and all the studies that have been carried out at home and abroad. If the hon. member can bring out any evidence pointing in the other direction instead of acting on his passion, I will consider his arguments.

Mr. Nowlan: Can you get evidence?

Mr. Broadbent: I just said I would be glad to give the hon. member a list of books the length of my arm which will provide the evidence.

The second point he made is that we all admit the legitimacy of using violence in wartime. He says that all members of the House would agree that in wartime the taking of another person's life is permitted. I say to him that there are some pacifists who would not go that far. But I also say to him—and I include myself in this—that most of us would say that violence is justifiable in wartime.

I ask the hon. member, just what does that mean? It means the following. The only time violence is justified in war is when one collective body of human beings, one state, is defending its very existence and its very life against another state or against another collection of human beings. In that sense only am I prepared to admit the right of people to take anyone else's life, and we apply that exactly in society in peacetime. We say that if a man, woman or child is being murdered, if an act of murder is being attempted on another human being, certainly that human being has the right to defend himself and certainly, if necessary, he is justified in killing the person who was trying to kill him. But I say to the hon. member that that example by no means supports his argument, because after an act of murder has been committed it is not the victim who defends himself then; unfortunately the victim is dead. The act of violence then committed is a cold, calculated and deliberate act of murder by the state. That is what is committed after an unfortunate victim has died.

I say therefore that the hon. member's analogy between justifying violence in wartime, when one society defends itself against another, and the right of a state after a murdered victim is lying dead to defend that victim who is no longer with us, is not valid.

Mr. Alkenbrack: They do not believe that in Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come to that point in a minute.

The third argument which the hon. member used—and it is perhaps the most insidious of the lot in terms of its logic—is that now we have reached the state in our society where we are more concerned with the murderer than with the victim. This is absurd. Does the hon. member think that anyone in the House is not concerned with a victim of a murder or with victims of society? I say that his own leader and many members of his party, indeed all members of the House of Commons, are concerned with potential victims of crime, and it is absolutely ridiculous to say that any of us who oppose capital crime are more concerned with the wellbeing of the murderer than with the unfortunate murdered victim.

It is our view that both are human beings and have the right to life. It is a very unfortunate and tragic circumstance when one man or woman has murdered another, but that tragic or unfortunate circumstance does not justify our murdering the man who has committed the act. If I may use a Christian analogy, when Christ was on the cross, when he was being murdered by others, did he turn to those who were murdering him and say that they must be murdered as well? Did he say that of his executioners? Of course he did not. The hon. member knows as well as I that Christ on the cross said just the opposite. So to be concerned with the murderer and to be concerned with the victim or the potential victim is not to say that one is more important than the other, as was clearly implied in the hon. member's fallacious argument.

Let me come to the fourth point which was called out by one hon. member in the Conservative party. He asked me what the people in Oshawa-Whitby believe. I say to him frankly that the vast majority of my constituents, I believe, favour capital punishment right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Look at the people opposite. I say to them that the vast majority of Germans in the 1930's favoured Adolf Hitler. Did that make Adolf Hitler right? They smile now. I say to the same hon. members that the majority in that case and in many countries around the world did indeed favour the wrong principles at times, and I do not hesitate to say that. I was elected, as were all members of the House, not simply to respond to the prejudices of our community. That is not my work here. We are elected to look at the evidence in every case, whether it is capital punishment, taxation, or any other matter. We are elected to look at the evidence, to consider the wellbeing of mankind, including our constituents, and to make an honest decision.

If after four or five years the people in my constituency, or indeed any constituency in the country, think we have done a bad job, they have the right and duty to throw us out of office. But if they consider perhaps that some of us in the House, and indeed I hope most of us, try to act in good conscience on the basis of evidence, I have enough faith in the democratic process to believe that there will be members in every political party, including the Social Credit party, who will take what I regard to be the correct stand; and the people in their constituencies, whether or not the majority at this time happens to agree, will respect the honesty and integrity of that decision. I think it is a bastardization, if I can use that term, of the theory of democracy as we know it and have practised it in the British Commonwealth and elsewhere for over 100 years to say that all a responsible politician does is do a Gallup poll in his riding and respond to that. That would not make a good member of parliament, and I do not hesitate to say that.

I have gone through the four arguments presented by the hon. member who preceded me and, as I said, I feel strongly about this because I believe that human life is very important and that neither the state nor any individual has the right to take it. I conclude by saying that if the hon. member accepts my comments regarding his arguments, the only thing he has left is the emotional feeling of vengeance. Then he has to say regarding capital punishment: I believe it is right to take the life of another human being just because I feel vindictive. Vindictiveness is no foundation for morality.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could just, since the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) directed—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is generally not within the accepted practice that there be a rebuttal by an hon. member after another hon. member has dealt with a point. If the hon. member has a question to ask, this of course would be permitted.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to let the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby get away with such a serious phantom-like argument—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: —by first challenging me and then not letting me have a chance to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member knew when the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby made, as he said, the challenge that there was no right of reply at this particular stage. There will be other opportunities perhaps during the debate when he will have the opportunity to reply.

• (2140)

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of privilege, I was interested in the interjection of the Solicitor General—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not know what statement was made. It did not come to the attention of the Chair, in any event.

Mr. Nowlan: I just wanted to point out, on a question of privilege, since the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was being so brave in laying down a challenge, that I, as he well knew, would be precluded by the rules from responding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask the hon. member to take his seat. I know that this is the type of debate in which emotions can become very highly disturbed, but I suggest to the hon. member that he will have other occasions during the debate when he can make his reply to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, if at that time it seems a reply is warranted.

Mr. Nowlan: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no—

Mr. Nowlan: You have not heard my point of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no question of privilege in this particular debate, and I recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Nowlan: I stand on a point of privilege, and I do not care who you recognize.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think on reflection the hon. member for Annapolis Valley will agree with me. Now that he has taken his seat I am grateful to the hon. member for co-operating with the Chair. This is a difficult debate, and I think that we would be better served if I could recognize a member other than the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, who will have his opportunity on another occasion on report stage, and certainly on another occasion on third reading, to answer the debating points that have been raised.

I underline that they are debating points. The hon. member could answer back, and then the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby could answer again, and so the story would go. I suggest that the hon. member permit me to recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Nowlan: Normally I would, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: I stood here on a point of order, and I have been interrupted from the time I stood and I have not had a chance to express my point of order. Then I had to go to a point of privilege, because, Mr. Speaker, you called me off and wanted the debate to continue. I can understand the position of the Chair.

Your Honour says that I will have a chance to reply, on August 15 or August 30, whenever this debate may conclude. I point out that I was rudely interrupted by the Solicitor General, and for co-operation in this debate he can forget about me. I was going to ask whether this House would give me a chance for 30 seconds to state, in one sentence, my response to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I am not going to transgress any further, but I just could not let the opportunity pass, since the speech of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was entirely a so-called rebuttal of mine, knowing full well I could not get in a reply. I did not get that consent. The Solicitor General would not give that consent, and that is fine with me tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his co-operation. That is a point of order indeed, and I will put the question to the House. Does the House give unanimous consent that the hon. member be allowed 30 seconds to answer the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not hear unanimous consent. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Hon. G. W. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I think it was the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who, in the final moments of the debate last night on this subject, referred to the exercise in which we are engaged as mid-summer madness. I would like to reiterate that sentiment as I begin my remarks tonight, because it is obvious from the emotional atmosphere in which the discussion is being carried on that nothing is going to be resolved with respect to the fundamental subject of capital punishment.

It was anticipated that the government, in particular the government House leader and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), as a result of the deliberations on the bill in the standing committee, would have stayed further discussion on the matter at this juncture in our sessional career. But in their wisdom, or I would suggest lack of wisdom, they are forcing members of the House to debate the subject.

There is no consensus on this question. We are operating on the basis of a free vote. If the government is going to press on regardless, then not only will we fail to reach a definitive decision on this matter but other topics that we should be debating will be completely neglected and ignored.

Mr. Sharp: Then why don't we have a vote?

Mr. Dinsdale: This demonstrates that the government is completely confused in its priorities—

Mr. Sharp: It shows that the hon. member is confused.

Mr. Dinsdale: —and completely irresponsible in selecting its priorities. If the Solicitor General were really sincere in trying to come to grips with the problems of law and order that are exercising the people of Canada—and this has been amply demonstrated by everybody who has taken part in the debate—he would be dealing with other matters. The people of Canada are concerned at the direction that the government is taking us through its permissive attitude to the whole subject of law and order.

If the Solicitor General, who made another emotional appeal last night, were concerned about this subject he would give priority to the question of penal reform, because we are not going to resolve the question of capital punishment until the good citizens of Canada once more have confidence in our penal system. In this regard I would like to re-echo the sentiments expressed in the Globe and Mail on July 19 in an editorial headed, "Anarchy in the Prisons." It reads in part:

> Capital punishment exists in Canada. It exists in our federal prison system at the discretion of Solicitor General Warren Allmand, Commissioner of Penitentiaries Paul Faguy and the guards and administrators of the Canadian Penitentiary service. Convict Terrance Landry, 25, is the latest victim of the death penalty. Stabbed to death in his Collin's Bay cell. This week, in Kingston's Frontenac County court house, the charges against his accused executioners were dismissed after the Crown witnesses—all Collin's Bay convicts—found some reason for not testifying. One announced he was mentally incompetent. Another said he feared reprisals. A third said he could not identify the accused. Case closed, said the judge. Nothing said or suggested about the witnesses being charged with obstruction of justice. Just . . . case closed.
> Our prisons are becoming a no-man's land beyond the rule of law and civilized men.

I suggest that this is the issue that requires the priority consideration of the government if we are going to come to grips with the emotion-laden subject that the government is force feeding Parliament at this particular moment. The very fact that government supporters are introducing amendments indicates there is no more consensus on that side of the House than there is on the opposition side of the House.

I want to say that I support the amendment that has been put forward by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin). I support it on the basis of the comments I made on second reading, at which time I said that at this juncture in our political and judicial procedures Parliament is not ready to go beyond the solution of this very difficult problem that was arrived at by the Parliament of Canada back around 1960, when the decision was made to divide the treatment of homicide into the two categories of capital and non-capital murder.

● (2150)

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) pointed out last evening that in her amendment murder combined with rape and kidnapping is a form of premeditated murder, because obviously murder follows the other act. That is the sort of category of homicide that is taken care of by the division into capital and non-capital murder which was the solution of this Parliament just over a decade ago.

When this comes to a vote, I hope that hon. members will support the hon. member because, as one of the few women members of this Parliament, she has that special sensitivity and humanity which takes in both sides of the question and not only considers the fate of the murderer but also the fate of the murder victim and the loved ones and family of the murder victim.

I should like to point out to those who are emotionally arguing this case from the standpoint of blatant humanism that this flies in the face of Judaeo-Christian traditions. I have never debated this question from the religious standpoint because correspondence from both sides of the question, within the same denomination reveals divided opinion. Humanism ignores completely the Christian understanding of man's nature and his destiny.

A moment ago the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was quoting the Prince of Peace and the Son of God and the Son of man. When He Himself was the victim of capital punishment in the most heinous form, He forgave His tormentors. But I would remind the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) that He also said that the heart of man is desperately wicked. To ignore that fact of the Christian interpretation of man's nature and destiny is to be accused of naïvety, if not complete unawareness of the real nature of the evil that lurks in the deepest recesses of the human mind.

This view is also supported by the Freudian psychologists—if you want to get into that area of human behaviour—who describe the id as the murky recesses of the subconscious which bubble to the surface and cause human beings to perpetrate the most heinous crimes. Society, from the beginning of time to the present moment, has through the judicial process endeavoured to cope with the evil that lurks in the human heart by the due process of law.

I would also remind hon. members that the whole political process involves more than this legislature. Are we going to ignore and completely downgrade the responsibility of the judiciary in this matter in dealing with the problems of law and order, in dealing with crime and punishment? That is what humanists would argue in their unadulterated, almost blandly innocent, humanistic approach to the great issues of life. I would say that the legislation under which we are operating now, which automatically came into effect after the five-year experimental period, gives the judiciary its responsibility in this matter and makes it possible for our judges, who after all are experienced and learned in the law, to decide in which category homicide will be judged, whether it is capital or non-capital, and then to judge the culprit in the light of our system of jurisprudence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: In his appeal to the House last night the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) made an impassioned plea for outright abolition. According to Hansard, he was interrupted in the course of his remarks and asked how we were dealing with problems of law and order which are reflected in the breakdown of some of our basic institutions at the present time. He replied that this is a very difficult and complex matter.

Everyone, I am sure, is sufficiently humane to wish that we lived in a society where we could do away with capital punishment. This is the objective toward which the whole human family, we would anticipate, has been marching since the dawn of creation. This is the objective which is envisaged by even the Old Testament prophets when they say there will come a day when the lion will lie down with the lamb and we will beat our swords into ploughshares, that there will be no more war and every man will live under his own vine or fig tree, and so on and so forth. But that day is not yet, and that day is not even going to come if we have the socialist Utopia that some hon. members in this chamber look forward to.

As a matter of fact, whenever we have looked forward, on the basis of ideological doctrine, to some sort of politically dominated system which describes itself as communism or socialism, the due process of law has been ignored.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: The due processes of the judiciary suffered not only in capital punishment, but in mass extermination and all the other phenomena we have witnessed in the twentieth century. It is the dreamers, those philosopher kings, who in the last part of the last century said, "Every day and in every way we are getting better and better". They thought that as we moved into the twentieth century we had at last reached the age when mankind was able to resolve all the problems of evil. But they have been shaken to the core, I am sure, during the twentieth century by the fact that it has been the century of two worldwide conflicts, the century of genocide, mass extermination. Yet the humanists blandly stand up in this House and suggest that the time has come when we do away with the due process of law—

An hon. Member: That is not true.

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Dinsdale: —and we condemn the victim.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: We are so confused in our moral outlook, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Keep it up, you are getting to them.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are so confused in our moral convictions that, on the one hand, certain members are suggesting that we save the life of the murderer and advocate infanticide through abortion on demand.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE TAKEN TO AVOID ACCIDENTS WHICH RESULT IN DROWNINGS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on July 4 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) if he was aware of the mounting number of tragic summer accidents which result in drownings in the Great Lakes, the Trent canal and other waters of Canada. If so, was he prepared to take the necessary steps to halt this appalling loss of life? The minister replied by saying that we are doing all we can.

● (2200)

One of the reasons, perhaps the most important reason, for my bringing this up is that quite recently a new houseboat, supposedly built by experts, floundered. It sank within a few feet of the dock with the loss of two lives. This boat was supposedly built by expert builders. Why did it go down? This is merely one example of the sort of thing I mean, and I do not intend putting cases on the record that all of us know about.

Over and over again we see tragedies that shock and disturb the whole community. Last season a boat set out from the shore of one of the Great Lakes. There were nine people in it. It was overloaded, the gunwales being almost down to the water line. It sank about half a mile out with the loss of all but two.

I ask, is it not about time we did something about this problem? The responsibilities of the federal government are serious enough. It should take a close look at this area. Are wharf users supervised? Are they told to use certain areas? Are inspectors appointed in all congested boating areas? What inspections are made of boats before they go in the water? Is instruction given, and is education available in this area?

Of all forms of accidental death, drowning ranks third, surpassed only by motor vehicle accidents and falls. As you know, Mr. Speaker, motor vehicle accidents on highways maim over 500,000 people a year on the roads of North America. Those accidents kill over 5,000 people in Canada. Drowning comes next but one in importance as a cause of death. It is interesting to note that 88 per cent of drowning accidents involve males, that of total male drownings, 44 per cent involve males under 20 years of age, and a further 33 per cent involve males who are between 20 and 40 years old. Among young people of school age, between 4 and 24 years of age, accidents claim far more deaths than all kinds of diseases combined. In this age group motor vehicle accidents rank as the leading cause of death, and drownings rank next as the cause of death.

Taking the normal life expectancy of these young drowning victims as 70 years, their deaths represent a combined loss of nearly 60,000 man years. The male-female sex ratio of drowning victims in these ages was less than seven to one—that is, seven males drowning to one female—compared with a ratio of over 13 to one for ages over 24. Canada's record of drownings at 6.5 per 100,000 of population is substantially higher than that of either the United States or Great Britain. Twice the number of people per capita drown in this country as compared with England, and our drowning ratio is 50 per cent greater than that of the United States. While drownings occur every month of the year in Canada, they appear to be most heavily concentrated in the couple of months of summer recreational activity and annual vacations, when more people go on our waterways. On the other hand, in England and in much of the United States, people can swim 12 months of the year.

Three quarters of the fatalities were due to unexpected submersion. That means that the people involved were thrown into the water. This may have happened because of boating mishaps and falls. Only one fifth of drownings occurred as a result of voluntary submersion involving swimming, wading and diving. That shows that where lifeguards supervise the accident rate has been much improved. Small boat accidents account for 31 per cent of all victims.

The greatest factor in drownings involved falls into rivers. This hazard caused 25 per cent of the drownings. Accidents while wading, diving, etc. were responsible for 20 per cent of all drownings, and 47 per cent of drownings involve the age group between 15 and 19. In 90 per cent of the cases a male was involved, females comprising only 10 per cent, and two thirds of those girls were under 15 years of age. Falls into rivers and lakes constituted one of the greatest hazards for the pre-school age group in which girls accounted for about one fifth of drownings. Swimming accidents in the 5 to 14 year age group accounted for nearly a third of drownings. Falls into lakes and rivers claimed the next largest group of victims, and ice accidents were a particular hazard for this group.

In the age group beyond 50 years, males predominated by more than ten to one in involvement in accidents; accidents in small boats were almost as frequent and accounted for a third of drowning fatalities in this age group.

You will see by these statistics, Mr. Speaker, that younger people make up the bulk of all those involved in accidents in the water. Many are in their most productive years or are just approaching those years. It is for this reason, regardless of who is responsible, that I want to see action taken. Certainly the federal government is liable on the international and federal-provincial waterways and on its own canal system. We need more accurate reports of all water accidents, a study on how to cut this loss and the funds with which to do it.

I hope the minister will have something definite on this. He said he was working on it. I hope he has something to tell us. The minister will say there are certain written laws governing boating and equipment, but are inspections made regularly? The law may be there, but is it being respected?

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Transport regulates pleasure craft by means of the small vessel regulations which set forth the mandatory requirements for life saving and fire fighting equipment. They also make mandatory the affixing of a Ministry of Transport load and horsepower capacity plate which sets out recommended maximums for normal boat operation on any outboard motor not exceeding 16 feet in length powered by a motor of 10 h.p. or more. Provision is made in the regulations for enforcement by peace officers.

The boating restriction regulations provide a means whereby a local government or authority may initiate action through a provincial government to have a formal request from a provincial authority made to the federal government to have a restriction imposed on a given body or area of water. The purpose of the regulations is to prohibit or restrict some or all types of boating activity on the waters specified. It has the very great advantage of having all local differences of opinion sorted out before the province concerned makes formal application to the federal government to have a restriction or prohibition imposed.

The Ministry of Transport approves small vessel lifejackets on the basis of the requirements set forth by the lifejacket committee of the Canadian government specifications board. One of the requirements of this ministry is that every ministry-approved small vessel lifejacket sold be accompanied by the ministry publication "Your Lifejacket," which sets out advice in both official languages on the care and usage of lifejackets.

In an effort to inform the boating public and to alert them to the necessity for safe boating procedures, the ministry publishes and circulates free of charge the pamphlet "Boating Safety Guide". This is published in both official languages and circulation this year has passed the 500,000 mark.

In addition to the foregoing, there are penalties provided in section 240 of the Criminal Code of Canada for operating a boat in a hazardous manner, operating a boat under the influence of alcohol or drugs, towing a water skier during the hours of darkness or without having an observer in the boat.

The ministry is in the process of developing standards for the safe construction of pleasure craft. This is being done in consultation with industry with a view to making such construction standards mandatory. An ongoing program of liaison, public speaking and information dissemination is carried out by the coast guard rescue officer at Trenton with a view to encouraging the safe operation of pleasure and commercial craft. A rescue co-ordination centre is maintained at Trenton, Ontario, which has as one of its tasks the co-ordination of marine search and rescue operations. This centre is manned jointly by Canadian Armed Forces and Canadian coastguard personnel on a 24 hour per day, seven day week, basis.

The Canadian coastguard operates three primary search and rescue cutters, the Spray, Spume and Spindrift, on the Great Lakes. In addition, the coastguard operates numerous other vessels that are also available to respond quickly to search and rescue missions. The possibility of reactivating an "R" class search and rescue cutter for service on the lakes is being investigated at this time.

An equipment evaluation program is taking place this summer with a view to expanding the trial program of inshore rescue boats introduced with great success last year on the Pacific coast.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—NORTHERN ONTARIO—JOINT ACTION WITH PROVINCE TO FORMULATE CO-ORDINATED DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on June 4 last I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) what action for co-ordinated federal-provincial planning was being taken to promote the economic development of northern Ontario, especially the development of secondary industry. I also asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this question:

● (2210)

Bearing in mind that a DREE report said . . . that thousands of jobs would be lost in northern Ontario due to redundancy in the next few years, what immediate steps will be taken to prevent such an economic upheaval in our area?

The parliamentary secretary said studies were under way, and blamed the province of Ontario for lack of development in the north. The Prime Minister gave a vague reply to the effect that developments were taking place.

Today marks the opening of the conference between the western premiers and the federal government on the subject of the economic alienation of the west. I am gratified to see that the Prime Minister has finally discovered the west and admitted that the development of the west has been neglected by the federal government. Indeed, as the Prime Minister said, the role of the west as primarily a supplier of raw material is over. I hope the Prime Minister will also discover northern Ontario, for we have been for decades suppliers of raw materials with the result that people in our part of the province have been unable to find jobs in secondary industry. I hope the Prime Minister can make the same promise to us in the north and assure us that we will no longer be merely suppliers of raw materials for the heartland of Ontario.

We have been hewers of wood and drawers of water for too long. We have exported our pulp, our iron ore, our minerals, and in doing so we have exported jobs. Between 1966 and 1971 the population of northern Ontario showed a net gain of only 886 people. Between 1965 and 1969 only 14 new manufacturing plants were established in the whole of northern Ontario, employing 527 people. Contrast this with what has happened in the southern part of the province. Over half of all the new manufacturing capacity has gone there, and in a three year period the population increased by almost half a million people.

It seems to me the federal government has failed in its DREE program to take into account the relationship between the south and the north of this province. I find its working paper, its report, to be a very shallow one, much of it already outdated, particularly with reference to the Abitibi Pulp and Paper plant in Sault Ste. Marie. No reference is made to the fundamental problem in northern Ontario, the failure of federal and provincial governments in the past to do more than provide incentives for northern development. This is the old carrot and stick approach carried out by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Northern Ontario Development Corporation and other agencies, both federal and provincial. We must move beyond this idea of merely giving incentives to the north and adopt a co-ordinated plan of development. We need incentives in the north, but there should also be disincentives to discourage industry locating in the golden horseshoe. In the absence of such disincentives the advantages of locating in the south will always outweigh the attractions of the north, no matter how many incentive programs apply in northern Ontario.

There is need for a comprehensive examination of transportation costs. I might mention that Simpsons-Sears and Eaton's put out two catalogues, one for the south and one for the north. We have to pay between $5 and $20 more than is paid in the south for identical products because of the extra cost of freight. There is need for a complete reassessment of the schedule of rates which discriminate against northern Ontario. A Crown development corporation should be established to co-ordinate plans and promote industry through the expenditure of government funds in the north similar to the arrangement which has been set up in the Maritimes.

Attention should also be paid to the growth centre concept so that communities may have a chance to develop around cities in the north which have some potential for industrial expansion. A Liberal federal government has in fact failed to promote secondary industry in northern Ontario in the past, and so has a Conservative provincial government. These two governments are acting together and tell us they will come up with a great new plan. I hope both governments will listen to the people of the north such as representatives of the municipalities, industrial commissioners, interested businessmen and labour union people who have some very sound ideas about our problems and what is wrong. We have ideas for the north. We will not be content any longer with mere vague plans and promises. We want action now. I should like a response from the parliamentary secretary concerning what specific action will take place now in northern Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) did, in fact, ask a question some time ago, to which I replied, and I might very briefly elaborate on the measures which have been taken since then.

As the hon. member is aware, the minister appeared before the parliamentary committee on several occasions. He announced that he was undertaking a series of consultations with the provincial governments. This was done, and they have now been completed. The various levels of government are in the process of developing the solutions which may be applied to this very serious problem raised by the hon. member.

The report of the various provincial committees was tabled in the House last June; the details on the reorganization of the department were announced to the committee members, and in particular to the employees of the department, on July 5, and the minister has, moreover, been prepared to table the internal management documents since last July 5.

The minister also announced, not only that a regional office will be set up in each of the major centres, such as the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and the western provinces, but also that special measures concerning a very special office will be considered, and possibly approved for northern Ontario.

The hon. member pointed out, in his remarks, that the time has now come to act, but in the same breath he said that we need—

[English]

If I am quoting the hon. member correctly, I believe he said we need a comprehensive study of transportation rates. The hon. member said we need action now. The hon. member at the same time stated that we need a whole re-assessment; that we need a Crown corporation to study the situation, and at the same time he said we need action now. Then he said we need a new centre concept, and he wants action now.

Needless to say, if we really want to know where we are going we must definitely be sure of what action will be taken. This demands much co-ordination between the provincial government and the federal government. I am not trying to pass the buck, but I must say that much of the responsibility for this is in the hands of the provincial government. In this connection, however, I wholeheartedly agree with the hon. member that not only has the time come for action, but that the time has come to see whether the natural resources of Canada will be sent out of Canada in their raw state or as finished products. This is a major problem not only for northern Ontario but also in respect to natural resources in the province of Quebec and in the western provinces. So I think some action will be taken having in mind the very good words of the hon. member.

TRANSPORT—INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OFFSET SERIOUS EFFECTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to raise again the matter of the transportation policy of the federal government in eastern Canada, a subject which has been raised constantly in the chamber over the years and more specifically during the month of June by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and myself. On June 18, both the hon. member for Hillsborough and I inquired of the minister whether or not he would shortly take action to alleviate the very serious situation with respect to freight rates in the Atlantic provinces. This is a matter with which the minister is not unfamiliar inasmuch as a major delegation of Atlantic premiers plus interested parties approached the minister earlier this year, and at that time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) gave extensive assurances to them as well as to representatives of major organizations that action would very shortly be taken.

Unfortunately, in recent weeks the Minister of Transport has apparently preferred to shift the burden of responsibility for federal transportation policy to the Atlantic premiers, and to my mind this has been a rather poor effort on his part.

It is somewhat of a coincidence that tonight I have the opportunity again to raise this matter, because just yesterday an announcement was made with respect to transportation in the Atlantic provinces and in Quebec. The announcement—I will not read all of it but only the first few lines which set out the basic aspect—reads in part:

> The government of Canada and governments of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec have reached agreement in principle that to assist regional industry the existing westbound Maritime Freight Rates Act and Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act 30 per cent truck and rail subsidies will be augmented for selected commodities. This increase will be subject to existing regulations of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act, and in addition the following conditions are intended . . .

I plan to speak about those conditions for a moment, but I want to comment, first of all, on the basic announcement. The announcement really leaves out more than it includes. The basic question of the extent of the increase above 30 per cent which has operated since 1969 is not defined, and I think this is an incredible omission after this length of time.

In the late 1960s we adopted a new transportation policy, and I think since September of 1969 there have been successive increases which have detrimentally affected the economy of the Atlantic provinces. These increases run to something like eight or nine in number, and the impact extends in a major way to almost 68 per cent in increases in the past four years. Now we are given this announcement by the minister with very little indication of what it will mean to producers in the Atlantic provinces. There is no indication what commodities would benefit or to what degree. There is no indication how much of a rate increase we can expect. We are simply told that there will be an augmentation of the present one.

Will it significantly close the very large gap that has opened in freight rate increases in the last four years? We are not told. Will it be a token gesture to placate some of the more vociferous elements of the economic community of the Atlantic provinces? We are not told. When will it start? Again there is no indication. Most important of all, who will make the basic decision in terms of the variety of rates and the commodities which will be covered? In terms of the qualifications that are attached to this announcement, we are shown again that there is no willingness to face in a serious way the considerable transportation difficulties that exist in the Atlantic provinces. This is a very selective kind of announcement in that it will only cover one way traffic; that is, outbound western traffic from the Atlantic provinces. It in no way will deal with the very serious problems for manufacturers and processors in the Atlantic provinces who often must import at very high charge, because of transportation costs, materials and items used in the manufacture of finished products either for distribution and sale in the Atlantic provinces or beyond.

This announcement will not deal with our export situation. This is an incredible admission when you realize that the Atlantic provinces are on the doorstep of major export markets both in Europe as well as in the eastern seaboard region of the United States.

There is no clear-cut assistance, as I said previously, for manufacturing materials. Also there is no grappling with the fundamental problem of what to do with intraregional transportation. This, in addition, will be complicated by the fact that the administration that is likely to be loaded on to the carriers, and to some degree on the shippers, may add to costs. I do not think that matter has been examined in view of the very brief announcement by the minister.

I hope that the parliamentary secretary, in replying this evening, can give us some indication that there will be a much more positive, comprehensive and detailed program announced very shortly. Otherwise the alienation that has been greatly discussed in western Canada will become even more apparent in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, concerning the rate increases, the railways have given notice that they will increase agreed charges for all contracts by 6 per cent. One of the conditions under the law is that these contracts may be terminated by either side on three months written notice. Agreed charges are low contract rates voluntarily agreed to by shippers and railways, in return for which the shippers agree to ship a stated percentage of their traffic by rail.

Shippers who are parties to agreed charges affected by the railways' announcement have the option of agreeing to the higher rates that will be effective September 1, or afterwards, or of withdrawing from the agreed charges, in which case they could ship by rail at open tariff rates, or by another mode such as truck, or ship their goods by their own trucks. But there is no general increase in freight rates anticipated in the Maritimes.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) met on April 9 with the premiers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island to discuss transportation matters affecting the Atlantic provinces. It was agreed at that meeting that steps should be initiated to increase westbound Atlantic region freight subsidies above the current 30 per cent level on a selective basis, aimed particularly at helping the manufacturing and agricultural industries in that region. It was also jointly agreed that the federal-provincial committee on Atlantic region transportation would begin working out such a program.

While an officer of MOT is chairing the committee, the definition of commodities to qualify for the selective subsidies was made the responsibility of the provincial members of the committee. They felt that they could not draw up this list from their own resources but should consult with local industry.

On June 21 the Minister of Transport announced that the federal-provincial committee was making good progress toward finalizing recommendations for the selective increases. He said that the increases were intended to aid Atlantic region shippers east of Quebec City in reaching the central Canadian market. He said that shippers in the Atlantic region would be notified shortly by public advertisement of the general basis of eligibility under the selectivity criteria being developed, and that they would be invited to submit to their respective provincial governments lists of commodities they wish included in the expanded subsidy program. This process will likely take some time, and at least one or two more committee meetings, before matters are finalized.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

TRANSPORT

TABLING OF AGREEMENT ON DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM IN NORTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I am tabling copies in both official languages of an agreement in principle concerning a joint transportation development program in northern British Columbia.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE DR. JOSEPH FRANCIS SHIELDS, IRISH AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is with great personal sadness that I advise the House of the death yesterday of His Excellency Dr. Joseph Francis Shields, the Irish Ambassador to Canada. Dr. Shields was a true representative of his country with a warm and understanding personality, well seasoned with Irish wit. He devoted all his efforts while in Canada to furthering Irish-Canadian relations, at no little cost to his own health. I know that the many members of this House who also knew Dr. Shields will share my sorrow at his passing.

ETHNIC STUDIES CENTRE

Question No. 1,913—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. On what date does the government plan to begin construction of an Ethnic Studies Centre?

2. In what city (or cities) will such a centre (or centres) be located?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The government does not plan to construct an Ethnic Studies Centre.

2. Not applicable.

DISPOSAL OF SHIPS USED IN HAULING OF ARCTIC CARGO

Question No. 1,966—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Of the ships involved in the contracts issued in 1971 and 1972 for hauling Arctic cargo by water, how many of the ships involved were during the life of the contract or shortly thereafter sold for scrap (a) what were the names of each (b) to which companies did they belong?

2. If the government is not aware of the eventual disposal of such vessels, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. None to our knowledge, however, M. V. Tavastiand, operated by Federal Commerce & Navigation Co. Ltd. was damaged during the 1972 sealift and it is understood the vessel will be scrapped.

NATIONAL DEFENCE PERSONNEL—RECOVERY OF COSTS

Question No. 1,998—Mr. Lawrence:

What amounts were charged by the government and subsequently forgiven, for the use of Canadian Armed Forces personnel and equipment to, in or for the use of any of the provinces or territories within Canada, in the year 1958 and in each of the years 1962 to 1972 inclusive, for any purpose, listing the number of Forces personnel and type of equipment utilized, the dates and purposes of the operation, the details of the charges and the reasons and authority for the subsequent forgiveness of "write-offs"?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No charges to the provinces or territories for the use of Canadian armed forces personnel or equipment have been written off. As reported in the Auditor-General's Report for fiscal year 1971/72, there are outstanding accounts with six provinces and one of the territories for a total of $845,000.

2. The federal government, in accordance with Section 13 of the Financial Administration Act and the then applicable Privy Council Order 1962-13/653, waived charges to the Province of Quebec for Canadian Forces personnel and equipment called out in aid of the civil power in October 1970. Within a few hours of the request from the province, the forces were placed under the authority of the War Measures Act and thus deemed to be performing a federal service in a national emergency. This was a role provided for within defence priorities and hence an integral part of a departmental program for which provision had been made within departmental appropriations.

POST OFFICE—OVERTIME WORKED IN VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 2,094—Mr. McKinnon:

Has there been an increase from September, 1972 to March, 1973 in the hours of overtime worked in the Victoria Post Office, City Floor and, if so (a) by how much (b) on this basis, will the Postmaster General now consider thawing the freeze on hiring permanent employees in that area?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): (a) The following are the amounts of overtime worked in the Victoria Post Office, City Floor, during the months shown: September 1972, 1,228 hours; October 1972, 1,369 hours; November 1972, 1,351 hours; December 1972, 457 hours; January 1973, 1,635 hours; February 1973, 1,755 hours; March 1973, 2,319 hours; (excludes overtime worked on Statutory Holidays), (b) There has not been a "freeze" for many years, relating to the hiring of employees.

FEDERAL DEFICIT 1962-1972

Question No. 2,236—Mr. Mather:

What was the total federal deficit in the period 1962-1972?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): For the 11 fiscal years commencing with 1962-63 and ending with 1972-73, the total federal deficit was $3,336 million.

MR. IVAN HEAD

Question No. 2,310—Mr. Cossitt:

Has the Prime Minister or his office received any notification or indication from Mr. Ivan Head of his intention to terminate his employment for purposes of seeking nomination as a candidate of the Liberal Party in the next federal election and, if so, on what date will such termination take place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No.

Question No. 2,311—Mr. Cossitt:

Has the Prime Minister or his office received any notification or indication from Mr. Martin O'Connell of his intention to terminate his employment for purposes of seeking nomination as a candidate of the Liberal Party in the next federal election and, if so, on what date will such termination take place?

[Mr. Lawrence.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No. However, Mr. O'Connell has indicated his intention at some future date to seek nomination as a candidate in the next federal election.

MR. JOHN ROBERTS

Question No. 2,312—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Prime Minister or his office received any notification or indication from Mr. John Roberts of his intention to terminate his employment for purposes of seeking nomination as a candidate of the Liberal Party in the next federal election and, if so, on what date will such termination take place?

2. Is it the intention of the government or the Prime Minister to replace Mr. Roberts with a person who was a defeated Liberal candidate in the 1972 federal election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. John Roberts tendered his resignation on June 5, 1973 to become effective as of June 22, 1973.

2. In due course, a suitable replacement will be found for Mr. Roberts.

MR. JOHN ROBERTS

Question No. 2,313—Mr. Atkey:

1. (a) On what date was Mr. John Roberts appointed Program Secretary to the Prime Minister (b) on what date did he resign this position (c) what was the annual rate of salary he was paid in this position (d) what was the total amount of salary and expense monies actually paid to him during the time he held this position?

2. Since his resignation as Program Secretary, has any department or agency of the government, or any Minister, entered into any type of contract or arrangement with Mr. John Roberts or with any corporation controlled by him or of which he is an employee and, if so, what is the per diem rate for fees and expenses that are to be paid to him or his corporation or employer for his services and what fees and expenses have actually been paid to him to date?

PACIFIC ENVIRONMENT CENTRE

Question No. 2,360—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did the Task Force Report of December 15, 1972 in connection with the requirements for a Pacific Environment Centre (TEAG) state that employees and the public will have difficulty with access to this site and, if so (a) what plans have been made to overcome this problem (b) do the estimates for the Environment Centre include additional costs which will be required to meet this problem?

2. Did the Report indicate that a Third Crossing of Burrard Inlet may be necessary, particularly with respect to location of site facilities and, if so, what has been the reaction of the Vancouver City Council and the Government of British Columbia to such a proposal?

3. Did the Report indicate that by the time the Centre is ready for occupancy in 1976 or 1977 there will be over 400 persons employed at the proposed new site and, if so, has the government taken into consideration (a) the environmental impact (b) the traffic congestion (c) the additional air pollution which may be generated on this route and in the area of the proposed site?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): 1. The TEAG Report recognized that the proposed site will cause a major change in commuting patterns for many employees. The Report suggested the need for over-or-under crossing of the railroad tracks and for at least two access/egress roads to the site. TEAG is being re-engaged to report further on solutions to these problems.

2. The third crossing was being actively considered by all three levels of government at the time of the TEAG study. The TEAG Report indicated that the possibility of a crossing of Burrard Inlet being built near the site may prove a significant factor in site planning. An in-depth study of the matter will be needed before final decisions are made regarding location of site facilities. There has been little evidence since that time that the three levels of government will proceed with a third crossing in the near future.

3. The TEAG Report estimated 446 employees on the site by the end of 1977; (a) the Centre will enhance the immediate environment and is planned as a stimulating working milieu for employees and an attractive information centre for visitors: (b) TEAG is being re-engaged to provide a further study of traffic problems; and (c) it is the intention that the Centre will set a good example by strictly observing existing criteria and regulations designed to preserve air quality. It is planned to accommodate a tower, equipped with air quality sensors, at the Centre.

LOCATIONS RECOMMENDED FOR PACIFIC ENVIRONMENT CENTRE

Question No. 2,361—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did the Task Force Report on a Pacific Environment Centre consider or recommend locations other than the North Shore and, if so (a) which ones (b) for what reason were these locations not considered satisfactory?

2. Who decided on the proposed site?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): 1. Yes; (a) False Creek, U.B.C. Endownment Lands, Steveston, and (b) False Creek site was rejected because some of the long-term leases would unduly delay planning and construction of the Centre; U.B.C. Endownment Lands because they were too remote to be readily accessible to downtown public and because of lack of dock facilities; Steveston because it was too remote and unsuitable for the development of adequate docking facilities.

2. The three sites proposed in the preliminary study were determined to be unsuitable or unavailable at that time. The Department was advised in the spring of 1972 that the Fullerton property in North Vancouver was expected to become available. Because of its size and suitability for the construction of docking facilities, TEAG recommended this site.

Order Paper Questions

ATMOSPHERIC ENVIRONMENTAL SERVICE, VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 2,362—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Has the government considered the advisability of retaining the Atmospheric Environmental Service at Vancouver International Airport where the weather office is now located and is to be enlarged?

2. Where do the majority of the weather office staff reside and is the government considering some measure to alleviate the financial penalty on the majority of aviation weather forecasting personnel which will be brought about by a change in location?

3. Will the government reimburse employees who relocate to North Vancouver?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): 1. Enlargement of the main weather office (the Pacific Weather Central) was done two years ago. The decision to move this office from the airport was based on three considerations: (i) The Ministry of Transport has indicated a future need for the space now occupied by the Pacific Weather Central. (ii) It was determined that the encroachment of buildings and hangars, and the increase in noise levels will make the present site less suitable, possibly unacceptable. (iii) It is the policy of the Atmospheric Environment Service to locate major components in DOE Environment Centres as they are built across Canada when possible.

2. Seventy-nine per cent of the staff live south of 41 Avenue; 51 per cent south of the Fraser River. Studies are under way to assess the time and financial penalties which will be brought about as a result of the proposed change of work site. When these studies have defined the problem, the government is prepared to examine measures to alleviate any undue hardships which become apparent.

3. Present government regulations do not provide reimbursement for employees whose place of work is moved within a metropolitan area.

PACIFIC ENVIRONMENT CENTRE

Question No. 2,363—Mr. Reynolds:

Did the Task Force Report on a Pacific Environment Centre indicate that the proposed Environment Centre will contain a public education display in order to attract visitors, tourists and school children on a regular scheduled basis, as well as influential visitors from the International Community concerned with matters of the environment and has the government considered the impact of the image that will be projected by having a proposed centre located near a dirty polluted heavy industrial area?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Yes, the Centre will set an example of good environmental management for surrounding activities. The site is large enough to permit development as a successful functional complex and as an attractive site for visitors.

COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION ON PACIFIC ENVIRONMENT CENTRE

Question No. 2,364—Mr. Reynolds:

Is the proposed Pacific Environment Centre to proceed at the North Shore location and, if so, on what date will construction commence?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Yes, negotiations to acquire the property are proceeding. As soon as the property is acquired, site investigation, detailed planning and design of the complex, preparation and approval of drawings and calls for tender would be followed by beginning of construction. It is estimated that construction could begin approximately 18 months after the site becomes available.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FISHERIES RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,368—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What were the fisheries research expenditures in the Rivers Inlet/Owikeno Lake area of British Columbia for the past five years?

2. What was the purpose of this research?

3. Is this research being actively pursued at present?

4. Have any of the initial research objectives been completed and, if so, which ones?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Fisheries and Marine Service expenditures in the Rivers Inlet/Owikeno Lake area of British Columbia total $345,000 for the period 1969-73.

2. The purpose of this research is salmon management studies and logging impact studies.

3. The salmon management studies are continuing at present. The logging impact studies have been transferred to Carnation Creek, Babine Lake, Lake Lakelse and Slim Creek.

4. Initial research objectives that have been completed are: (a) Determination that no significant trends exist in age composition, size or sex ratio of the sockeye salmon taken in the commercial catch; (b) Determination that Rivers Inlet sockeye salmon can be distinguished from those of Smith Inlet by physical parameters; (c) Determination that it is not possible to show any significant difference in timing of stocks to Owikeno Lake; (d) Determination that there is a positive correlation between smolt abundance and resultant adult returns which offers promise for prediction of total returns; (e) Determination that the optimum escapement appears to be 500,000 adults, (sockeye); (f) Determination that early catches can no longer be used as an indication of stock abundance.

MR. ZAVIE LEVINE

Question No. 2,423—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On what date was Mr. Zavie Levine appointed Executive Assistant to the Solicitor General?

2. What previous positions did Mr. Levine hold with the government and what were the specific periods of time that he held such positions?

3. Does Mr. Levine have access to all files of any nature whatsoever maintained by the Department of the Solicitor General or maintained by any entities under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Solicitor General?

4. In the course of his duties does Mr. Levine at any time have access to files or documents of a classified nature pertaining to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or to the Police and Security Planning Analysis Group?

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. December 1, 1972.

2. Special Assistant to the Minister of Labour: September 8, 1971 to January 25, 1972.

3 and 4. Special Assistant to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration: January 26, 1972 to November 27, 1972. It is not considered to be in the public interest to provide information as to who does and who does not have access to classified information of the government of Canada.

STOLPORT, ROCKCLIFFE

Question No. 2,442—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Were tenders called for the installlation of the STOLport at Rockcliffe and, if so, who submitted bids and in what amount?

2. Have contracts or tenders been called for the terminal buildings and, if so, on what date will they be awarded?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Francon, Division of Canfarge Ltd., Ottawa, $603,428.75; Dibblee Construction Co. Ltd., Ottawa, $612,299.00; H. J. McFarland Construction Co. Ltd., Ottawa, $637,364.95.

2. Yes. Contract awarded July 10, 1973, to the lowest tenderer.

STOLPORT, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,443—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Were tenders called for the installation of the STOLport at Montreal and, if so, who submitted bids and in what amount?

2. Have contracts or tenders been called for the terminal buildings and, if so, on what date will they be awarded?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Miron Company Ltd., Montreal, $1,593,975.13; Francon, Div. of Canfarge Ltd., Montreal, $1,650,656.40; Desourdy Construction Ltd., Saint Hubert, P.Q., $2,629,012.25.

2. Yes. The date of award is indefinite. The Ministry is awaiting the authority of Treasury Board to enter contract.

DREE—COMPANIES IN RECEIPT OF GRANTS WHO HAVE DECLARED BANKRUPTCY

Question No. 2,447—Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

Have any companies in the Province of Saskatchewan who received DREE grants in either 1971 ro 1972 declared bankruptcy or discontinued operations since receiving the grant and, if so, what are the names of the companies and the amount of the grants paid to each?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, the following two companies ceased operations or were declared bankrupt, after receiving payment, during the control period stipulated under the respective legislation. This Department does not review the operations of applicants beyond the control period. Under the Area Development Incentives Act, Premier Feed Co. Ltd., North Battleford, ceased operations due to fire. Amount paid is $37,622. Under the Regional Development Incentives Act, West-Core Steel Limited, Saskatoon, Bankruptcy. Amount paid is $78,880.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 929—Mr. Knight:

1. What were the names of full-time employees in each federal department, departmental corporation, agency corporation and proprietary corporation, whose headquarters were in Canada and who, in the fiscal year 1971-72, travelled outside of Canada and submitted their travel expenses?

2. In each case, what were the amounts of travel expenses, what were the destinations and what were the salary ranges to these employees?

Return tabled.

ENERGY

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—AMOUNT OF OIL TO BE SHIPPED TO CHERRY POINT REFINERY—POSSIBLE CANADIAN COMMITMENT OF SUPPLIES AS ALTERNATIVE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Inasmuch as the Acting Prime Minister now considers the TAPS line and the associated tanker system no longer simply hypothetical matters, can he tell the House what information this government has acquired from the government of the United States as to how much Alaskan oil in terms of barrels per day or barrels per week will be moved through the Straits of Juan de Fuca?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have before me now the quantities, but I think it is relative to the position we have been establishing with the United States administration that it is only a very small proportion of the oil that will be moving from Alaska to the mainland United States. I have heard figures of around 10 per cent, so that if the tankers were to bypass Juan de Fuca, as we would like them to, it would not have any over-all effect of any significance for the project which could proceed without any damage or danger to the Canadian environment.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. What moves does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to take to get some firm information on this? I presume, since he is talking about only starting to fight, he intends to offer some unambiguous and possibly attractive alternatives to the Americans in this connection. In relation to supplies of crude for American refineries in the Puget Sound area, what is the Canadian government offering by way of firm guarantees with regard to deliveries of Canadian crude overland to those refineries as an alternative to them being supplied by sea through the Straits of Juan de Fuca? Has the government of Canada made a firm commitment and if so, for how much?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer is we have not yet done that. I think it would be logical that if we were to expect that this refinery is to be supplied from inland rather than from tankers entering the narrow waters of the Straits of Juan de Fuca, that we would have to enter into some agreements with the United States that would not expose that refinery to the possibility of being unable to operate.

SUGGESTED STUDY OF CANADIAN CAPABILITY TO SUPPLY CHERRY POINT REFINERY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary. No commitment having been made, no such assurance having been given by the government of Canada clearly from what the Acting Prime Minister has just said, has the government of Canada ordered any special study on Canadian preparedness or capability of supplying American refineries in the Puget Sound area as an alternative to this oil coming in through the Straits of Juan de Fuca? Has any study been definitely commissioned to date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been from the beginning the position of the Canadian government that the Cherry Point refinery can be and should be supplied from inland. We have done some studies, if that is what the Leader of the Opposition wants to call them. The Department of the Environment has been looking at this question very carefully and it is on the basis of the information that we have that I am saying the refinery can be and should be supplied from the interior.

POSSIBILITY OF SUPPLYING CHERRY POINT REFINERY FROM CANADIAN SOURCES—SUGGESTION CANADA MAKE UNITED STATES AWARE OF POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as Secretary of the Interior Morton in his letter of May 11, 1972, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated that the capacity of the Alaskan pipeline would be 2 million barrels per day and the amount entering Puget Sound would be only 190,000 barrels per day, or some 10 per cent, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government intends immediately to open up negotiations with the government of the United States, to ensure that this small amount of oil can be supplied by overland routes, so that we shall not endanger the ecology and the good relationships between our countries for the sake of a comparatively small amount of oil?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the hon. member supporting the government's position, both on the dimensions of the problem and on the way in which we can avoid the possibility of serious damage to the environment. As I said to the Leader of the Opposition, since this is the position we are taking, of course we will have negotiations of this kind. Now that there is a possibility of the TAPS line being built, the negotiations will have to proceed.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If this is the government's position, why has it not been communicated to the government of the United States? And, if it has not been communicated to the government of the United States, is it the intention of the Canadian government to communicate it to that government at an early date and also to make a public statement, so that the senators and congressmen of the United States will be aware of it, because it is apparent from the discussions which we held with them yesterday that some of them are of the opinion that their state department has not given them full information relating to communications between the two governments.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this has been the position we have taken with the United States government from the beginning. We have always insisted that the Cherry Point refinery, which is now being supplied from the interior, can be fully supplied in that way in the future. However, I say to my hon. friends opposite that if we want to negotiate and be successful, we do not give away our cards at the beginning.

Mr. Hees: What cards? The Joker?

MEETING BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES PARLIAMENTARIANS IN WASHINGTON—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since the meeting held yesterday in Washington between Canadian and American parliamentarians seems to have created more confusion than understanding, does the minister intend to report to the House on what exactly has been discussed in Washington and tell us what Canada's position will be in these circumstances?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot answer for the group of parliamentarians who went to Washington. They went without instructions from the government and they will not report to us. They will report, presumably, to the members of parliament. But I am very happy, from what I hear from members on all sides, to learn that it was a most useful delegation. It promoted understanding between our two countries and that, of course, was its purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West on a supplementary. I appreciate that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton also wishes to ask a supplementary. Perhaps we might complete the first round of questioning, and then return to supplementaries. However, before doing this I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF CANADIAN OIL NOW GOING TO CHERRY POINT REFINERY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is this: As the Cherry Point Refinery complex is supplied essentially from western Canada by inland pipe line, has the government considered making representations to the United States as to the disposition of that particular quantity of oil that is now going there; or, does the government anticipate that the Canadian domestic market will absorb the equivalent quantity, or is the whole system to go down the drain?

● (1420)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be one of the objectives of Canadian policy to retain that rich oil market in the northwestern United States for Canada.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ATTACHMENT OF BANK ACCOUNTS TO OBTAIN REPAYMENT OF OVERPAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT FROM MINISTER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister had an opportunity to look into complaints about the attachment of bank accounts of people who have been overpaid unemployment insurance benefits and are in arrears? Has this happened once, several times, or is it a regular practice?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have been able to ascertain that this flows from the authority given the UIC under the act. However, I have suspended this approach until a total examination is possible. I am awaiting a thorough report on it. I can only confirm those two actions at this stage.

ALLEGATION INCOME TAX INFORMATION SUPPLIED TO COMMISSION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Can the minister comment on the claims that arrangements have been worked out between his department and the Department of National Revenue whereby income tax information which is given to the Department of National Revenue is being made available to his department?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice. I will endeavour to obtain the information to see if I can advise the hon. member shortly.

ALLEGED GARNISHEEING OF SALARY TO COMPENSATE FOR OVERPAYMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Manpower and Immigration inform the House whether it is usual for persons who once collected unemployment insurance benefits to have their salaries garnisheed by the commission as compensation for unemployment insurance overpayments?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this authority is given to the Unemployment Insurance Commission under the act. In fact, the commission is required to collect overpayments. I can say there have been situations when third party attachments have been exercised, but generally speaking it is the instruction of the commission to negotiate with these people who have received overpayments in order to try to work out a reasonable program of repayment that does not embarrass them too much. However, there have been some occasions where garnishee orders have been issued.

BENEFIT CONTROL—EFFECTIVENESS OF MEASURES IN VIEW OF SMALL DROP IN PAYMENTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that Unemployment Insurance Commission payments dropped to $179 million in May from $186 million a year earlier and this drop is only the second year-to-year decline in more than six years, is the minister satisfied this drop is sufficient considering the fact the commission has had an all-out program to rectify excessive deficits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the measures we took to ensure those people receiving benefits were in fact entitled to them are working reasonably well. There are still some rough spots. This is a very complex matter. The reason payments remained at the level they did is related to the maturity of the plan; better information about the plan now exists in this country compared to a year ago. This could be a subject of considerable examination, perhaps in committee, at an early stage in order to get all the details placed before hon. members.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY RESPECTING AMOUNT OF MONEY ALLOCATED TO QUEBEC FOR 1973

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Can the minister tell this House whether the amounts allocated to Quebec for economic expansion in 1973 are as large as in 1972?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that a question of that nature could be placed on the order paper. If the minister or someone who can answer for him has the information and can tell the House, of course, I can see no objection.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REASON FOR DELAY IN CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the minister's statements in the House yesterday and a few moments ago that the government has now decided to fight for the environmental rights of Canadians in British Columbia, can he inform the House when the government decided to wait until the United States Senate approved the TAPS line before starting this fight against TAPS and the Cherry Point terminal and whether this decision was made with the approval of the Prime Minister and the Cabinet?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has been very vigorously opposing the movement of oil by tanker through the Straits of Juan de Fuca for a period of some two years. I, personally, have made many representations to the United States Secretary of State. What I said yesterday, I say again today: members on the other side of the House are taking a defeatist attitude toward this problem, but we are only beginning to fight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Can the minister tell the House how he intends to carry out this fight against the movement of the oil through the narrow Straits of Juan de Fuca and, second, how the government intends to overcome the disadvantage which results from its reluctance to begin this fight earlier?

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—VISIT OF PARLIAMENTARIANS TO WASHINGTON FOR DISCUSSIONS—REQUEST FOR DAY TO DEBATE FINDINGS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In view of the hon. gentleman's suggestion a little while ago that members of this House and the other place who were in Washington might wish to report on their visit, would the Acting Prime Minister discuss with the government House leader the setting aside of a day so that there may be a debate in this House and consideration of a report as to the information they acquired from the United States congressmen regarding the extent of the government's failure to do anything at the appropriate time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I think it might be very useful. I have heard some of these reports about the talks that went on. I think it was a very useful exchange. A report which was full and not biased, as was the one given by the hon. member, might well be considered after the capital punishment bill has been approved, when I think we should set a day aside.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS TO BOARD IN VIEW OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the second report of the special committee on trends in food prices which was tabled today underlines the need for the Food Prices Review Board to adhere to its terms of reference respecting investigations, monitoring prices and studying developments in other countries, and to refrain from setting itself up solely as an educational agency, would the minister advise the House whether he is prepared to issue specific instructions along these lines to the chairman of the board, Mrs. Plumptre?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Board which has been set up is independent of the government. I trust it will be as aware of its terms of reference as are members of this House.

Mr. Atkey: Has the minister issued any instructions to Mrs. Plumptre concerning a price and incomes freeze, a subject on which she has very decided views which may preclude her and the board from taking any objective action in the matter?

Mr. Gray: I have issued no such instructions. It would be inconsistent with the terms of reference of the board. However, I do recall her saying that the board would approach the subject with an open mind.

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—REQUEST FOR COMMISSION OF INQUIRY IN VIEW OF FAILURE TO DISCOVER ESCAPE TUNNEL—ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF CUSTODIAL OFFICERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Solicitor General. In view of the peripatetic excursions of Harold Ballard, going in and out of penitentiaries at his pleasure, apparently, and the recent discovery that for seven months a tunnel was being constructed beneath the walls of the Prince Albert penitentiary from the outside without being suspected by the various penitentiary officials who have visited that institution, would the minister agree that consideration should now be given to the setting up of a commission to look into the penitentiary situation across the country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yesterday the penitentiary authorities found that a tunnel was being dug by certain inmates in the Prince Albert minimum security prison—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —from outside the walls of the Prince Albert maximum security institution. The two people involved were transferred to maximum security and an inquiry is continuing.

Mr. Fairweather: No OFY or LIP grant?

● (1430)

Mr. Allmand: I might say that there are several inquiries going on at the present. There is the committee set up by this House to look into conditions in penitentiaries and, as I said about a week ago, I hope it will visit the west to look into conditions there as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister is slightly in error, because it was eight days ago that dogs looking for illicit liquor among the prisoners made the discovery of the 35-foot tunnel.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under all the circumstances, I should like to ask the minister whether he would explain why it was that these various officials including the head of the department, who was in Prince Albert to look into the institution, had not been able to discover this very large tunnel, a fine architectural piece of work I am told, and why it is that in that institution the situation today is that there are 28 fewer custodial officers than there should be? Will he explain how this unusual occurrence took place, because in another month or so the prisoners could have walked out?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the report I have now there is no indication as to how the tunnel was found, but it was found. If it was found with the help of dogs, I think that is to the credit of the penitentiaries service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: It is precisely for this reason we have dogs in our penitentiaries service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: With respect to the charge made by the hon. member regarding certain custodial officers, I will have to check into that. I have no information whatsoever that there are 28 officers short, but I am surprised to hear it. I will check into it and report back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the right hon. member on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would not like any "doggone" false information to go out, but those dogs were not in the penitentiary service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert which I address to the Solicitor General. In view of the lush conditions existing in our penitentiaries as described by Mr. Harold Ballard, and as this appears to be the only institution in which you can get a steak dinner at a reasonable cost, would the Solicitor General ask those in his department who are investigating this tunnelling operation outside the Prince Albert institution to ascertain whether those who conducted it had in mind helping people to get out of the institution or to get in?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ALLEGED DETENTION OF CIVILIAN PRISONERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who announced yesterday that Canada proposes to set up an embassy in Saigon. What action, if any, is Canada taking in respect of well authenticated reports that the regime in question is detaining tens of thousands of political prisoners under inhuman conditions in contravention to the universal declaration of human rights?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt about our attitude on human rights and about the opposition to the imprisonment of civil prisoners of this kind. I say to the hon. member that unless we do establish permanent diplomatic machinery in Saigon, and not have to depend upon the fact that we are a member of the International Control Commission, there will be no opportunity for us to enter into conversations with the government of Viet Nam on this question.

Mr. Brewin: Is the minister prepared to give an undertaking that if we do establish an embassy this question of the many thousands of political prisoners will in fact be one of its main concerns?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the main concern of any Canadian embassy abroad is to protect the interests of Canadians, but I can assure the hon. member that it will be paying attention to this question too.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for York Simcoe and return to this matter shortly.

MONTREAL OLYMPICS; 1976—MEETING OF PROVISOS ENTERED BY CERTAIN PEOPLE IN QUEBEC BY PASSAGE OF BILL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Would he tell the House whether his government has now received written assurances from the Prime Minister of Quebec, Mayor Drapeau and Commissioner Rousseau that the provisos set out in each of their letters tabled in this House February 2 have been met to each of their satisfactions upon passage of the Olympics bill which is now before us?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. It seems to me to be a very complicated and precise question intended to elicit precise information. I will try to get it for the hon. member.

An hon. Member: Call in the dogs.

[Later:]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board with whom I believe the Acting Prime Minister has been consulting. Would the minister indicate whether the government has received any written or oral assurances from the three I already referred to that the provisos in their earlier letters dated January 31 and February 1 have now been met, providing the summer Olympics bill is passed by this House?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the bill has not been passed we have no such formal assurances. However, I would undertake to get assurances from the letter writers that the provisos will have been met with the passage of the bill.

BROADCASTING

CABLEVISION—REASON FOR CHARGE OF VIOLATION OF BROADCASTING ACT AGAINST COMMUNICOMP DATA LTD.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the statement of the minister when he filed his green paper and met with ministers of communication on November 26 to negotiate on the question of the jurisdiction over cablevision, would he please tell this House why he has authorized, or the CRTC has allowed a criminal information against Communicomp Data Ltd. on July 4 in respect of violations of the Broadcasting and Radio Acts, since this is open for negotiation?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is very simple. As long as the law remains unchanged, it must be respected. The CRTC believed that the Broadcasting Act had been violated, while the Department of Communications felt that the Radio Broadcasting Act had been violated. That was why we undertook civil proceedings, at the same time as those who held a franchise for the territory invaded, illegally in our opinion, by Communicomp.

CABLEVISION—SUGGEST COLLUSION IN CIVIL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST COMMUNICOMP DATA LTD.—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION OF MINISTER

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the strange coincidence of a criminal information being laid on July 4 and a civil proceeding being commenced on July 10, was there any collusion between the CRTC, the minister or the Department of Communications on the criminal aspects of this matter and the civil proceeding instituted by Keeble Cable Television Ltd.? Does the minister intend to intervene in the civil proceeding if the constitutionality of the Broadcasting Act is raised?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as regards the hon. member's second and final questions, I would have to obtain the opinion of legal counsel before I could answer. As for the existence of collusion, there was none. Of course, everyone was aware of what the other was doing, as these civil proceedings are public matters which no one hides from anybody.

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What action does the government intend to take with regard to future atmospheric nuclear testing by France and other countries? Does the government intend to take any specific action that will be effective?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I only wish I knew the kind of action this parliament or this government could take that would end nuclear testing in the atmosphere. We do none of it and we have protested most strongly against China and France doing this testing. We hope that world opinion will convince them that it is not in the interests of humanity.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED SUBMISSION TO TREASURY BOARD FOR MONEY TO COMBINE LOCAL INITIATIVES AND OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAMS ON PERMANENT BASIS

Mr. Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have some doubt as to whether this question should be addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or the Secretary of State, but I will try the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister aware of the submission to the Treasury Board for $150 million, presumably from the contingency fund, to launch a combined LIP and OFY program an a permanent basis?

● (1440)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not aware of such a submission, and I would be if it existed. So I can assure the hon. member that no decision leading to that has yet been taken.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if the decision is taken, I wonder if the minister would announce the program in the House and whether it would be his intention—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that a supplementary question asked in those terms is obviously hypothetical.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST YUGOSLAVIAN GYPSIES BE ALLOWED TO REMAIN IN CANADA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister respond positively on humanitarian grounds to the appeal of the United Nations Association and other groups of individuals in this country so that the 45 Yugoslavian gypsies may remain in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the case of the 45 or 47 gypsies, which has been the subject of some comment in the House, not all favourable, is now before the Immigration Appeal Board. I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment further until I get more information.

Mr. Fairweather: Does the government, which acted with magnanimity toward refugees from Hungary, Tibet and later Uganda, not recognize the similar humanitarian aspect in this case?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is an argument.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTEMPT OF COURT AND ONUS OF PROOF—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Solicitor General acting for the Minister of Justice.

In view of the increasingly frequent use of the exceptional procedure which contempt of court constitutes, does the minister intend to recommend, as the present Prime Minister, among others, suggested ten years ago, amendments to the penal code designed to limit recourse to this archaic procedure and transfer from the accused to the Crown the onus of proof?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting proposal, and I will bring it to the attention of the Minister of Justice when he returns.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

SUGGESTION INVITATIONS TO PRIME MINISTERS OR MINISTERS SHOULD INCLUDE HUSBANDS OR ESCORTS AS WELL AS WIVES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, also in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the social program for the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference includes an invitation from the Prime Minister to Commonwealth prime ministers and their wives to a weekend at Mont Tremblant and that a similar invitation is being extended to visiting ministers and their wives by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would the minister take into consideration the fact that certain Commonwealth prime ministers are women, that certain cabinet ministers are women, and that invitations should include husbands or escorts as well as wives?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that admonition could have come from a better source.

AID TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES SUFFERING FROM DROUGHT—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF PLANES SUPPLIED BY CANADA

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of reports from the United Nations and from the Food and Agriculture Organization that 70 million people in Africa face the continued threat of death from thirst and starvation, and in view of the estimate that 50 planes are needed in July and August to distribute emergency supplies to these people, is Canada going to add to the several planes which, I understand, we have made available to help in this tragic situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can answer this question at the moment. We were the first with planes on the site, and, if I may say this, if other countries were to respond as we did, then there would be the required number. I cannot really answer the question. It may be that we may even step up the present effort.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): May I ask the minister whether in addition to the three planes, I believe, which we are making available out of the 50 needed we are doing anything else to help those 70 million people?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are providing something like $7 million worth of food and we are also engaged in some projects to try to help settle the problem permanently and not just temporarily.

IMMIGRATION

DISCOVERY OF LEPROSY AMONG RECENT IMMIGRANTS—REQUEST FOR NEW MEDICAL REGULATIONS

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Having regard to the report that over 70 cases of leprosy have been discovered among recent immigrants to Canada in the last several months, have any new medical directives or regulations been issued to ensure that this does not happen in the future and, if not, why not?

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands).]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have a very hazy knowledge of this matter which was brought to my attention only the other day and I have asked for a full report. Of course, it would involve the operations of the department under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of National Heath and Welfare. I can only say that we are aware of this and are looking into it.

YUGOSLAVIAN GYPSIES—POSSIBLE GRANTING OF WORK PERMITS PENDING HEARING OF APPEALS

Mr. Harold T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the gypsies be granted work permits while the investigation is pending?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As is the standard practice, these cases are before the Appeal Board. If it is proven that they require work permits, then permits will be granted. On that subject, it is interesting to note the compassionate view of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal which is in direct contrast to the admonitions and scoldings from opposition members I received a month or so ago, as well as questions as to why I was not exceeding my authority by issuing deportation orders for these people in the light of certain allegations of crimes which they were supposed to have committed at that time.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADA GROUP TO STUDY POSSIBLE ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who said yesterday that he and the secretary of state of the United States were discussing the possibility of setting up a group to look into the problem of damage to the environment. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House what would be the relationship of this group to the group the Prime Minister said on February 16 had been established for that purpose also?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke to the U.S. secretary of state it was many, many months ago when we first raised this question with the United States. Subsequently, there were discussions between the Minister of the Environment and his counterpart in the United States. A group was established at that time to inquire into the environmental problems related to the movement of tankers through the Straits of Juan de Fuca.

Perhaps I should also say to the Leader of the Opposition that the matter of the movement of supertankers from Alaska down through the Straits of Juan de Fuca is not the only environmental risk. At present there are tankers moving into those narrow straits carrying oil and we do not feel that there are adequate measures taken as yet between Canada and the United States to deal with even the present risk. So altogether apart from what may happen to supertankers coming down from Alaska we have a problem at which we are looking.

Mr. Stanfield: If the Secretary of State for External Affairs now says that the group has already been established and is at work, why did the Secretary of State for External Affairs say in the House yesterday that the U.S. secretary of state had spoken to him about the possibility of setting up the group to look at this problem? What impression was the Secretary of State for External Affairs trying to give?

Mr. Sharp: The Secretary of State for External Affairs was trying to remove the impression that had been created by the opposition that we had suddenly awakened to the problem.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN MONETARY POLICY TO ASSURE ADEQUATE FUNDS FOR HOUSING AT REASONABLE INTEREST RATE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of statements by certain financial institutions that the supply of funds for home mortgages is beginning to dwindle and will soon dampen the housing market, is the government considering making changes in the present monetary policies of the Bank of Canada and meeting with chartered banks to assure that adequate funds for housing are made available at moderate interest rates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer this question for the Minister of Finance, except to say that he has been meeting with the governor of the Bank of Canada on a regular basis and from time to time has had discussions with chartered banks. I do not think anyone has been more diligent on behalf of the needs of the Canadian community.

Mr. Baldwin: And less successful.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca. There are only two or three minutes left before the end of the question period and perhaps we should have as few supplementary questions as possible.

● (1450)

Mr. Yewchuk: In view of the fact that 9.75 per cent of 10 per cent mortgage interest rates have resulted from government policies, is it the position of the minister that such mortgage interest rates are in the over-all interest of the economy, and that restricted funds for housing are appropriate at this time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, all I would point out is that we are having a record volume of housing starts in 1973, which seems to indicate that at least we have a fairly adequate volume of mortgage funds.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the CP Air dispute we have advised the parties that mediation services are available. We hope they take advantage of them.

With regard to the railway dispute, I am advised that Mr. Kelly is meeting with the parties now.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF TEXAS GULF STOCK—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN POLICY OF CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the reported purchase of stock in Texas Gulf by the so-called Canada Development Corporation, would the Acting Prime Minister inform the House if this purchase indicates a change in policy by the corporation, moving away from what we felt was its intended purpose of increasing Canadian participation on our own economy?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer this question on behalf of the Acting Prime Minister. I think this proposed purchase does not indicate a change in policy, and is quite in line with the statement of objectives announced for the corporation by Mr. Benson in 1971, when he said the acquisition policy should "emphasize areas involving the development and application of new technology, those which involve the exploitation and utilization of Canadian natural resources, those which have special relevance to the development of the north—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the minister might want to return to motions to make this statement. We are reaching the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough East on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and will have to call orders of the day thereafter.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, in light of the direction you gave the minister with respect to returning to motions, would he agree to make a statement on motions, when this matter might be more fully discussed by the House?

Mr. Drury: I will look at that to see whether a statement on motions is needed, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED REVISION OF BUILDING CODE TO IMPROVE STANDARDS FOR RESIDENTIAL CONSTRUCTION—NEED FOR PROPER INSPECTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs I would like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In light of the fact that many new homeowners across Canada are experiencing such problems as roofs and shingles blowing off, chimneys and walls collapsing, and basement walls and floors cracking, would the minister consider revising the national building code to improve standards for residential construction? Also would he investigate whether the CMHC and builders are carrying out proper inspections?

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the minister. If he would like to bring to my attention or to the minister's attention the particular cases he is referring to, we will make sure that CMHC takes a look at them.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and I will not take up much of the time of the House. I am not quite certain to whom I should direct this question, and so I shall direct it to you, Sir, and perhaps you can give me some guidance. It relates to the protective staff in this House, for whom I believe all hon. members have a great deal of respect. It has to do with their uniforms. For some time it has caused me a great deal of concern to see people associated with this excellent service wearing what I consider to be a rather out-dated type of uniform in the hot, humid weather of Ottawa during the summer months. Whoever is responsible for determining the decorum of this service should find a way to ensure that the members of the protective staff have a sensible type of uniform for the humid weather.

OLYMPIC (1976) BILL

PROVISION FOR ISSUING OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS AND STAMPS AND HOLDING OF LOTTERY

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-196, respecting the 1976 Olympic Games, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this bill was given considerable attention in committee, both by members of the standing committee and by other interested members of the House. As an observer at the committee meetings, I am of the opinion that a great disservice will be done to the Canadian people by passing this legislation.

I am not at all sure of the ramifications of the lottery or of the postage issues. I am inclined to believe the public will show considerable interest in buying postage stamps, costing an additional two cents, for mail to be sent from the Olympic site during the Olympic games in 1976. However, I view with great reluctance the provision in the bill with regard to coinage.

It is proposed that a major part of the financing of the games be undertaken by issuing a new type of coinage in denominations of $5 and $10. These will be packaged in a number of ways. There will be proof sets, souvenir package sets and sets containing all the additional silver coin denominations. The market for coinage and commemorative monetary tokens have grown over the years, particularly during the last ten years, to the extent that many organizations use the minting of coinage and medallions to assist in financing their operations. This has been particularly true in Canada since 1967 when most cities across this country put out a medallion—which may or may not have contained silver—to commemorate, in effect, a particular event in their area. There is no question that this market has grown and in Canada we now have two or three mints producing medallions.

It is also true, Mr. Speaker, that in the minting of coinage Canada has been able to expand its operation to a considerable degree. Only a few years ago we were asking the United States government to mint our ten-cent coins because we did not have the capacity to do so. I am pleased to see that the Mint has been expanded and has achieved a degree of expertise in the development of coinage so that we are now producing silver and metal currency for 20 countries. This is a credit to the Canadian Mint and to our ability to meet the growing need for currency.

With regard to developing coins in Canada, I am told that since confederation we have minted in total $317 million. Mr. Speaker, $317 million in silver currency is not a very large amount, but it has been sufficient to meet our needs for the past 100 years. Now we are being asked by Mayor Drapeau and by COJO to allow the minting of approximately $450 million of new currency. This is not a medallion but a piece of currency that can be used in trade by Canadians, that is legal tender and can be used in financial transactions within our country. It is, in fact, the issuing of more coinage currency than we have used in this country for the past 100 years.

Mr. Speaker, for hundreds of years medallions have been issued to commemorate the holding of the Olympic games. Only relatively recently countries have asked for the production of tenderable currency that could be used for the promotion of the Olympic games. In Canada in the past ten years, we have experienced with the development of commemorative coins and these have received considerable support from the public and Canadian coin collectors. A limited number have been bought by coin dealers in other countries as well.

It is interesting to note that little has been said about the fact that most countries prohibit the importation of another country's coinage. It is interesting to note, too, that in 1967, when for the first time in many years we included in our centennial sets a $20 gold piece, this coin could not legally be purchased even by numismatic organizations in the United States. The United States had laws that prevented its importation, therefore, coin dealers in that country were prohibited from buying our centennial sets containing the $20 gold piece.

Mr. Speaker, during the year that we celebrated our one hundredth birthday we had as large a market as we have ever had for coin sets produced in Canada. During that period we produced and sold to the buying public in Canada and across the world slightly less than three million commemorative coins. This involved the $1 coin, the coin sets that ranged from a penny to $1 and the special presentation sets. The latter included the coin in which I am very proud to have played a considerable role leading to its production by persuading, over the years, three different finance ministers to allow it to be minted. I refer to the $20 gold coin that became the highlight of the coinage presentation sets put out in 1967.

In 1967, Mr. Speaker, we sold slightly less than three million sets. Now we are being asked by COJO to put out in stages legal tender to the extent of 65 million coins. To me this means that unless everybody in this country decides to keep coinage there will not be the number of collections that will dispose of 65 millions pieces. In effect, this would mean, if we were to sell the currency within this country, that every man, woman and child would end up with at least $20 worth of commemorative coinage to make up the $450 million issued. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that many people in this country have little interest in carrying around $5 or $10 silver pieces. Anyone who has studied this situation is aware that there is no possibility of our putting out $450 million worth of commemorative coinage and having it bought by collectors. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, how do we expect to dispose of it?

I listened to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) indicate that consideration had been given to methods of disposing of the coinage. We are aware that in this bill we are establishing an account for the Olympics committee that will allow the minting of this coinage in batches, starting in 1974, and that this account will be debited and credited, as the case may be, for the coinage that is bought. This is almost the system that was used in Germany. In the heat of national pride, the West German government decided to mint and print a very large commemorative issue. Most of this issue was handled through the German banks. Mr. Speaker, almost 50 per cent of that coinage is still sitting in the banks that bought it for national reasons, and they are now asking the government to buy it back.

It costs approximately 30 cents to make a $5 or $10 silver coin. These are not necessarily what they call proof sets, but are proof-like coinage. As I understand it, a proof set is struck with special dyes and is struck for a second time to give it a very clear image. The coinage we are speaking about will not be proof coinage but will be proof-like. It will be in a container. What will happen? Pressure will be applied in Montreal, where they are not above blackmailing the people of Canada, the federal government and even their own people. I am sure that at the height of their enthusiasm the authorities there will exhort the companies, various offices and entities such as our national banks to buy, buy, buy and, hopefully, dispose of the coins at a later date.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I am not sure whether my point is a question of privilege. I do not think the hon. gentleman really wishes to accuse the National Assembly or the council of the city of Montreal of engaging in blackmail.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, they have blackmailed us a number of times. I can think of two instances. The mayor of Montreal blackmailed us in the matter of the War Measures Act, and he blackmailed us into the centennial celebrations for which this parliament picked up much of the tab. Nobody objected particularly. Perhaps I should not use the word "blackmail" but I leave that connotation. I define blackmail as the use of strong methods to persuade people, perhaps for many good reasons, to do things they do not want to do. They do those things because they fear the consequences of not doing them.

I would not be surprised if the workers in Montreal go home with coinage in their pay packets as part payment for their work. They can take the coins out of the plastic wrapper and use them, or take them to the banks and get dollar bills for them. This will happen: it will have to happen, for the Olympic committee wants to raise something like $200 million. I suggest that the government will be less than honest with the country if it does not retain control of the minting of the coinage. The coinage should be sold and should not be dealt with as if one is operating a concession. It should be pruchased.

In 1967 the Mint struck centennial coinage. You sent in your order with the money, the Mint accepted the order and filled it later. It limited the number of coins which could be issued to one individual. Each package of coins had a face value of $1.91 but was sold for $3. Obviously, if too many packages were sold they would lose their value as collectors' pieces, so sales were retricted. The collector paid $3 for coins with a face value of $1.91, and the seigniorage on each sale was approximately $1.09. That nice profit accrued to the Canadian Mint. The Mint was reaslistic in issuing those coins. If you are asking $3 for $1.91 worth of coins, the coins must be collectors' items. If they are not collectors' items worth more than the face value of the coins, why would anybody be idiot enough to pay $3 for $1.91 worth of coins?

An hon. Member: A Liberal might be.

Mr. Peters: The Liberals might do that. They seem to have adopted Social Credit ideas in this particular piece of legislation, because they are almost going to make money out of thin air. Obviously, if the Mint had said that it would issue more than so many sets of proof-like coin, each package of coins would have been worth $1.91 and not $3. Therefore, only by making such coins scarce could they be valuable as collectors' items.

That will not happen with the Olympic coins. We are talking about putting out coins that will be worth just about what you pay for them. Presumably, you could take them to the grocery store and spend them. As well, we are prepared under this program to put out more coinage than we have put out in our history as a nation, and we will do this in a period of two years.

The Americans steal our coins and melt them down. They make a profit on our coins because a number of them are made of silver. I remember when the little five-cent piece was worth more than ten cents on the silver market. Melted down, it was 90 per cent pure silver which was worth more than ten cents on the silver market. The Americans have been melting down our coins during the last six months. We have put out debased coinage to prevent a considerable capital loss occurring to this country through the carrying away and melting down of our silver coins.

Apparently it will cost $2 to produce a $5 coin. The seigniorage on that sale will be about $3, less the 30 cents cost involved in the manufacture of each coin. Therefore, the seigniorage on each coin will be greater than the basic cost of the coin. One might call that the basic value. If silver does what gold has done in the last year, the advantage in the long run will accrue to the government. On the other hand, it may accrue to the collectors, or even to the United States government which seems to be smarter in this field than we are.

Why do I say that? If silver prices double, it may be more advantageous to melt down our new coins and turn them into silver bullion. Of course, I am speculating. The fact is that if we are putting out this amount of currency, the minting of it should be under the control of the government, of the Minister of Finance. It should not be under the control of an agency which will not sell the coins as currency but as medallions, and will receive about $3 profit per coin. The agencies will sell these coins regardless of the disruption in our system of coinage that may result.

I believe we were pushed into the Olympics. I am opposed to cities having any say about the Olympics in this day and age. We are not city states; we are nations. I have some knowledge of how the Olympics began. The cities of Carthage, Athens and Sparta competed against each other. Some of my colleagues may remember it, but I have no personal knowledge. These were city states. We no longer have city states. It is not to anyone's advantage to allow cities to hold the Olympics. Montreal is not alone; there are also the cases of Denver, Vancouver and Munich.

It is a fact that once the Olympics are awarded, they do not belong to the particular city but to the country. There is an obligation on the country to be responsible for them. Canada should be the most of the Olympics, not the city of Montreal. Representatives from Montreal see millions and millions of dollars being spent on a two-week show. That money should be spent on the development of parks, housing and sewage disposal. I question the priorities of some of the representatives of the city of Montreal.

Be that as it may, it is a fact that young people in every community from coast to coast are deprived of training facilities to prepare them to compete in international athletic competitions. They do not have a decent rink, pool, stadium or track. They do not have the elementary facilities for basic training which a nation as well off as Canada should expect of every community in this country. If we have this kind of money to spend, we should ensure that all communities have the facilities to develop amateur athletes.

We do not have an Olympic-size pool in northern Ontario. I remember a young fellow from Matheson. He learned to swim in the Black River, which is not very large. He did not have any professional training. He came third in at least two major events at the Canadian National Exhibition. Some of the best athletes in North America competed in those events. He came from an earea which was not able to provide proper training facilities.

The town of Schumacher received the gift of a skating rink with artificial ice from McIntyre Mines long before most other communities had such a facility. We were able to train people like Barbara Ann Scott who went on to become the world figure skating champion. Most other figure skaters in North America trained in Schumacher, near Timmins: it was the only Olympic-size rink with full facilities which operated during the summer. We can expect great things from ordinary communities in Canada if we provide the basic requirements. If this government has the kind of money that is needed to provide a two-week international show, surely it should be able to help some of these communities.

I think the Olympics is all very nice; I sincerely believe that. However, I believe it will be a black mark against Canada if the people who compete in the Olympics are not provided with accommodation and the necessary facilities. This government should not have been tricked by Mr. Drapeau and Mr. Bourassa.

We should not have been tricked by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, in his overzealous assessment of the results of the last election, made it very clear that if the Olympics were to be held in Canada the taxpayers would not have to pay for it. We will have to pay for the Olympics. The Prime Minister will not be here, because the cost will not be known until 1978. Some of us will still be here. We will have to raise the money from the taxpayers to pay the debt incurred by the Olympics. I suggest it would be more honest for us to participate in the Olympics as a government. We should decide what the Olympics are to cost and put up the money.

It is unfortunate we do not have any say about where the Olympic events will be held. Some events should be held in Quebec City and Three Rivers. Kingston will be used to some extent. I do not think Ottawa and Toronto are too far away. Some of the events could be held in northern Quebec and northern Ontario. However, that could only come about if we were part of COJO, and we are not. I suggest that in the end we will have to put up the money.

Of all the hair-brained schemes Mayor Drapeau has dreamed up in the past, this one of selling the amount of currency he anticipates is probably the most unrealistic. If this were a medallion, I would not care.

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Will the hon. member explain whether he is in fact speaking for his party, or was the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) speaking for his party on February 2 when he said:

—my party welcomes the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today in which he took some trouble to outline the parameters of federal involvement in Canada's first Olympic games. We wish our first Olympic games every possible success as a potentially great moment in the history of our nation.

—my party approves the concept of the issuing of special coins and stamps.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I see little contradiction in those remarks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: The hon. member who asked the question should be able to answer it better than I can. A number of years ago he appeared before the same committee asking for a charter for a bank. Obviously he knows something about the banking industry. What I am objecting to is the fact that we are going to issue more currency in a two-year period than we have in the whole history of this nation. That is wrong. It is not possible nor feasible. It is certainly not the way to finance the Olympics. If this were a medallion, I would be in favour of Montreal, COJO or anyone else issuing as many as they want.

● (1530)

I have never questioned the right of the city of Cobalt to put out silver medallions every time they can find some occasion to justify doing so. Those medallions are worth as much in silver as the price at which they are sold, so no one can lose on that kind of proposition. But I maintain it is irresponsible to put out this quantity of currency and expect there will be no repercussions on our monetary system. In the second place, it is a hell of a way to finance a national event.

I welcomed the statement by the Prime Minister that no money was to be spent by Ottawa on the Olympics. To be frank, I did not think the Olympics would go ahead in Montreal. I did not think the people of Montreal would tolerate the levels of expenditure which were contemplated. Now, two years before the event is to take place, with the arrangements well under way, I find myself unable to credit the Prime Minister's statement that we are not going to pay. I think we are. I think the Quebec provincial government is going to pay, too, though I do not know how much, and I do not know how. I feel we are being offered an impossible proposition, and that if carried to fruition it will be a disaster for our currency. I believe it is not a proper way to finance the operation.

If we are determined to put our currency in the form of collectors' items, the Mint must control its issue and make all decisions as to the quantity involved, and so on, as has been the case whenever commemorative coins have been minted in the past. Unless this is done, we shall be acting irresponsibly. For these reasons, I move:

That Bill C-196 be not now read a third time but be read this day six months hence.

My motion is seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert).

Mr. Rose: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Jelinek: On a point of order.

Mr. Rose: A question of privilege takes precedence over a point of order, as the hon. member should know. That is why the Speaker recognized me. My name was taken in vain by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) in connection with a position I took in February on the subject before us. In my speech of June 28—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. If the hon. member wishes to clarify a speech he made at another stage of this bill, he can do so by taking part in the debate. I do not think the point he is raising can be considered to be a question of privilege. He has to show that his privilege as a member of parliament has been affected.

Some hon. Members: No privilege.

Mr. Rose: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Rose: I think I should have an opportunity to put forward my question of privilege. I am saying that the hon. member for York-Simcoe made an assertion about me—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Apparently the hon. member is alone in believing he has a question of privilege. Neither his colleagues nor the Chair can accept what he is saying as being a question of privilege. He is just making an argument which he can advance on a later occasion.

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have had some consultation with the House leaders of the other parties and, based on their agreement, I am proposing that we revert to motions at four o'clock or thereabouts to allow the Acting Prime Minister an opportunity to make a statement. This would be followed, possibly, by comments from the leaders of the other parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion put forward by the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Is it agreed that we revert to motions at four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, it is with both amusement and amazement that I have heard yet another side of the story today from an NDP spokesman on this issue of the Olympics bill. However, we must bear in mind the rapid changes in position made by the NDP from time to time. I should like to reiterate what my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said. On February 2, in this House, a spokesman for the NDP stated—and I quote from Hansard, page 899:

> We wish our first Olympic games every possible success as a potential great moment in the history of our nation.

He went on to say:

> My party approves the concept of the issuing of special coins and stamps.

Yet on second reading the same party went on record as being totally opposed to the holding of the Olympic games in Canada in 1976. Fortunately, the people of Canada have become accustomed to these tactics on the part of the NDP, and their action in this regard did not surprise many of them. What is surprising is that while the Conservative Party, through its spokesmen, proposed that a ceiling be set on the amount which should be made available for the financing of the games through methods requiring federal participation, the NDP opposed such a ceiling and felt there should be no limit to the funds thus provided. This could only have the effect of discrediting any further comments which members of that party might wish to make concerning the bill before us.

Before commenting directly on Bill C-196 I should like to refer briefly to the background of the legislation before us. Seldom has a piece of legislation been presented with such apparent carelessness and lack of precision. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) offered no explanation for the lengthy delay in bringing the legislation before the House. This needless delay has caused hardship not only on those who will ultimately be responsible for organizing the games and for financing the games, but has caused confusion in the minds of Canadians as to just what the method of financing will be. No attempt has ever been made by the Prime Minister or by any minister of this government to explain the benefits that will accrue from the Olympics to Canada and to Canadians. In fact, Mr. Speaker, at no time has the Prime Minister ever expressed his support for the Olympics. Among other things, had there been time the opportunity could have been seized to decentralize the games and utilize existing facilities right across this country. In this manner, the final outlay would have been a fraction of the present costs and the entire country would have been much more directly involved.

At second reading, the Progressive Conservative Party supported in principle Bill C-196 but we could not have accepted the bill without much-needed amendments to safeguard the Canadian taxpayer and to offer guidelines in spending. Consequently, when this bill was presented to committee, sufficient amendments were insisted upon by this party and subsequently incorporated into the bill. Even throughout the committee proceedings, however, there was little effort made on behalf of the government or its spokemen to clarify the confusing issues contained in this bill. It became increasingly apparent that the government itself and the ministers responsible had spent little time in trying to understand the ramifications of this bill in terms of financing, and had little more knowledge that many Canadians who were toally confused as to the entire Olympic structure.

The Treasury Board forecast a deficit of $172 million. This deficit was never disputed. All we ever had presented to us were letters from the province of Quebec, the city of Montreal and COJO that the Canadian taxpayer would not be asked to pick up any deficit. The Premier of Quebec has guaranteed $25 million to Montreal to assist in offsetting any deficit which might occur. This would leave $150 million, based on Treasury Board estimates, that would have to be picked up elsewhere. How this deficit would ever be looked after has never been fully explained, except for the government to say that it would not be foisted upon the Canadian taxpayer.

On behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party I would like to make clear the fact that this party will not accept any further financial obligation than is outlined in this bill. The Olympic committee has pledged to this House that financing will be undertaken by them with the authority of this bill and they will not approach the federal government for any additional funds. As far as this party is concerned, we shall honour this commitment to the Canadian taxpayer. It was realized, however, that the study used the market distribution structure of the Munich games as its basis. The fact that Germany issued 90 per cent of its coins within its own boundaries, and the fact that only 25 per cent of the coins are to be issued on the Canadian market, could account for such a deficit prediction.

At the committee stage there was no evidence of any market research conducted into the coin and stamp proposals that would substantiate the government's proposed deficit.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) maintained that production would be regulated by market demand. In light of the lack of a market study, this appears to be a somewhat short-sighted reply or statement to the basis of the majority of the proposals which would supply the key financing for the Olympics. The original market distribution of coins announced by COJO was 35 per cent European and foreign, 25 per cent Canadian and 40 per cent United States. These figures, Mr. Speaker, if realized would account for COJO attaining its budget aims.

The proposed Post Office marketing board under the Postmaster General continues to be authorized to administer the promotion, distribution and merchandising of Olympic coins both within and outside of Canada. I sincerely trust, along with many Canadians, that the Post Office will be better able to distribute the coins than it has been able to distribute the mails.

To demonstrate some of the confusion and contradiction by the government on relevant issues of this bill one need only examine the proposal for a premium on the coins. The idea of a 10 per cent premium on the coins was first mentioned in committee by the Postmaster General. Later the same day the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) disputed this statement by saying that no premium was to be charged. These conflicting statements by two senior government members continue to illustrate that from the outset the government has been totally confused, ill-informed and ill-prepared in its dealings with the entire Olympic matter. We have once again, through the existence of an amendment, assured the Canadian taxpayer that no Olympic coins will be sold at less that face value.

The only people within the federal government who seem to have any knowledge whatsoever of what is taking place are the employees of the federal Mint who, I understand, had geared up for production of the coins even prior to second reading of this bill in the House. If the Prime Minister felt that passage of the bill was assured in its initial form, and on the strength of this he instructed the Mint to proceed with preparations of the coins, I can assure the hon. gentleman that he was most definitely mistaken, for without the amendments presently incorporated in this bill he would have had no such support from this House in so far as financing through the minting of these special coins is concerned.

The most effective way to assure sufficient sales is to adhere to the policy of limited mintage; in other words, a production and distribution ceiling. By promoting limited mintage the coin sales could be regulated and monitored to ensure that the market is available. The value of the coins would also be increased if limited mintage were practised. For example, the 1948 dollar, of which only 18,000 were minted, is now worth approximately $240.

In order to ensure that the Olympic organizing committee would receive its maximum expected revenue, our party took strong steps to add amendments to the bill which would place a $450 million production ceiling on the value of the coins issued. This was opposed by the NDP. This is more than enough to allow for a $260 million revenue to be obtained by COJO to satisfy their budget. To prevent a federal deficit which could result from overpayment, we initiated a $260 million revenue ceiling on moneys going to the Olympic organizing committee; $250 million from the sale of coins and $10 million from the sale of stamps.

The most important omission from the bill was the provision for an audit and general report to parliament. How this was omitted when Bill C-196 was first proposed is completely beyond any understanding. It continues to reflect the Prime Minister's attitude of not caring about this bill, save saying to the people of Quebec that he approved the legislation giving them authority to have their games. At the same time, he has offered no safeguards to the rest of Canada or to the taxpayer in general. The Progressive Conservative Party feels that safeguards are necessary and these safeguards must be explained to all Canadians so they will fully understand just how the Olympic financing is structured and how it will affect them.

The amendment insisted upon by this party is to allow for a biennial report from both the Postmaster General as well as the Minister of Finance, allowing parliament to retain strict control over its financial responsibilities to COJO. From these reports we will be able to gauge the market expectations for the coins and stamps and align production accordingly. Without such reports, as outlined in the initial bill, the Postmaster General would have had no real basis for calculation, nor could he ever expect to have had any basis for calculation. The same amendment provides the opportunity to bring this bill back into committee for any needed adjustments if and when necessary, this dependent upon the signature of 60 members requesting such action.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, of prime concern to this party was the likelihood that the coins would circulate, and had this in fact happened there were no contingency plans for the possible redemption of these coins. Therefore, we have now proposed an amendment, which has been accepted, to the legislation to control the circulation of this currency by giving the Minister of Finance the right to redeem coins at face value if, in his opinion, the amount of these coins in circulation would be detrimental to Canadian currency. The cost of redeeming the coins, minus the value of the silver content, will then be charged back to the Olympic account.

It was also feared, Mr. Speaker, that at some point in time these coins, being legal Canadian currency, would be re-sold at less that face value. In order to ensure that the organizing committee and the federal government were not hindered in realizing their full expectations, the Progressive Conservative Party proposed an amendment to disallow the sale of these coins below face value. In this manner both parties should receive maximum value from the sale of each coin.

● (1550)

There is yet another point. The manufacture, distribution and sale of postal-related products could have had a damaging effect on the Canadian arts and crafts business, as these products were not adequately defined and the decision was left to the Postmaster General. There can be no question that the four year period from 1973 to 1976, inclusive, can provide an economic boom for Canadian crsftsmen from the sale of Olympic commemorative items to the tourist trade. If the postal-related products are not clearly defined, it can put the government in direct competition with private individuals who do not have the low overhead costs and the public funds of the Post Office Department. We strongly suggested that the bill be amended so as to discontinue this practice and to clearly define postal-related products. This has been done and the bill has been amended to cover this discrepancy.

We acknowledge that within the Canadian Olympic structure Montreal applied to become the host city for the 1976 games, and that it was a Canadian decision to nominate Montreal as the representative Canadian city for consideration as the host of the 1976 Olympics. The award went to Montreal on behalf of Canada, so let us not make any mistake or have any misunderstanding, some of which may have arisen because of the secretive way in which the Prime Minister has handled this matter from the outset. Had the Prime Minister been forthright in this respect to both the House and the Canadian people at the outset, this last minute panic, confusion and uncertainty would never have arisen.

In conclusion I reiterate, however, that we do not support the method in which this bill was presented to the House. The inexcusable delay in introducing this legislation serves only to illustrate the inaction and ineptness of the government. It is unfortunate that an event such as the 1976 Olympics, which can have such long-term advantages for the youth of Canada, the youth of the world and Canadians in general, should have been subjected to the secretive confusion surrounding the entire event. Nor will we relent in our questioning regarding the financing of the housing in the Olympic village where CMHC will be so heavily involved. To date, answers to questions regarding CMHC have been far from conclusive, have been far too general in scope and leave far too many questions unanswered in the minds of the members of this party.

Also, we should ensure that sufficient security is provided so that we do not have to concern ourselves with a repetition of the unfortunate incident at Munich. This matter also has been treated with vagueness and indifference by the Prime Minister and has resulted in questions being raised in the minds of of many Canadians as to what security in fact will be provided and at what cost to the Canadian taxpayers.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

We shall continue our investigation into what appears to be a $25 million grant to the CBC to act as host televiser for the Olympic games. Unanswered questions in this area include, among others, why the CTV has continually offered its resources in the area of television and has not been asked to participate, thus greatly reducing the expenses of the CBC and ultimately the taxpayer. It is a known fact that CTV operates at a fraction of the cost of the CBC and provides a similar quality of coverage and commentary.

While the present administration has taken this matter lightly and has burdened private industry with its own responsibility, our party does not intend to sit idly by without closely scrutinizing the entire operation. It is with these amendments to the bill and with the points which I have mentioned in mind that the Progressive Conservative Party gives its support to Bill C-196 in its present form.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. When the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) completed his speech the Chair did not realize that the hon. member had moved an amendment to the motion for third reading of the bill, so before proceeding further at this time, and having checked the transcript, the chair would invite the hon. member to again put the amendment to the House.

Mr. Peters: I move:

That Bill C-196 be not now read a third time but be read this day six months hence.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in line with what my colleague has just stated concerning Bill C-196, I would like to trace the rather strange history of the financing of the summer 1976 Olympics in particular relation to the debate that has ebbed and flowed in this House and the questions that have been asked for many years. I should like, also, to outline the inconsistency between the statements that have been made from time to time, in particular by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), concerning the fact that no special financing arrangements were going to be made to finance the Montreal Olympics.

In short, I suggest that when this is all put together and we see the bill that has been produced and is now being given third reading, and when we consider the evidence that was given before the standing committee, we can only presume that the Prime Minister has either been extremely naïve on this entire matter, or that he has not been naïve but, rather, has been most deceptive with the House and with the public of Canada. Possibly, he has simply not understood the officials who reported to him, or else the officials have not understood the matter sufficiently in their proposals with respect to the financing of the 1976 summer Olympics.

I see it is almost four o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I would have the consent of the House to call it four o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Four o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) propose to adjourn the debate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would move that the present debate be adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE LATE RIGHT HON. LOUIS ST. LAURENT

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that we have learned of the death of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Canada has lost a great Canadian, but his work lives on and his name will always be associated with qualities that are respected and admired throughout the country.

The Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, as a person, as a public servant and as a statesman, long ago won a permanent place in the affection and esteem of Canadians. His unfailing sense of courtesy and respect for others gave to him a quality of courtliness and kindliness which are encountered all too rarely today.

Mr. St. Laurent had a profound faith in Canada. He was motivated by a deep sense of public duty and believed there could be no greater honour than to serve one's country. He entered public life primarily to foster Canadian harmony. His contribution to the better understanding of Canada by Canadians was immense, and everywhere he became the symbol of tolerance and unity. His 16 years of public service were fruitful years for this country, domestically and internationally.

● (1600)

His legacy to Canada permeates Canadian life. As Minister of Justice, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and Prime Minister he played a leading role in the social, constitutional and judicial development of this country. He was, to use a phrase he once applied to others, an enlightened patriot. Canada is a better place because he lived among us.

I know that all Canadians join with me in expressing sympathy to Mr. St. Laurent's family.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec and our country as a whole have lost a most distinguished citizen. His name was a symbol of the very strength of Quebec. As a Canadian citizen, father, lawyer and statesman, his life was an example of courage, determination and integrity. He was a great Quebecer, a great French-Canadian, in short, a great Canadian.

Passing of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent

[English]

Mr. St. Laurent achieved great respect in his profession as a member of the bar. His name was highly respected. When Mr. King called upon him to enter the government of Canada as minister of justice during the war, in the service of his country, Mr. St. Laurent was a great unifying force for Canada. He was a minister of extraordinary capacity and resourcefulness, as I was frequently told by one of his former distinguished colleagues, the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley.

It was not my privilege to serve with Mr. St. Laurent in the House of Commons. I observed him at a distance as a formidable, able party leader, a man who obviously inspired great public confidence. He was held in great respect throughout this country by those who served with him politically as well as by those who opposed him politically. He was regarded as a non-partisan leader. Although one may have differed with Mr. St. Laurent in opinion, one never questioned his sincerity or his intention to further the interests of his fellow citizens. He was regarded with great affection throughout this land.

I share the sorrow of the House in paying my respects at this time to the late Mr. St. Laurent, and I wish to extend my sympathy and the sympathy of the members of my party in this House to the members of his family.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the death of any person, humble or great, is always a cause for sympathetic sorrow on the part of anyone with any sensitivity. But I think it is perhaps appropriate to say that one need not feel sorrow at the passing of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Life is not eternal. It has to come to an end. And when it comes to an end at the age of 91 for a man who has given so much to society, and has won for himself so great a name in the history of his country, one can feel great joy in having been privileged to live in the same country with such a person.

I did not serve in parliament during Mr. St. Laurent's term in the various offices he held, but I did have the pleasure of meeting him on a number of occasions and of knowing him.

[Translation]

I learnt that he was a very gentle, courteous and civilized man, Mr. Speaker, a man whose heart was one with that of the people of Canada. He understood the difficulties this country faces and with all his heart he wished for a united Canada. He was not only a politician, but the leader of a nation. He was not only the leader of his party, but the leader of the people of Canada as a whole.

[English]

Because he was such a person he won the respect of every Canadian. The great fact about a democratic system such as ours is that people differing in their politics or social philosophies have respect one for another.

On behalf of my colleagues and myself, I pay tribute to a man who won, and deserved, the respect of Canadians from coast to coast, who gave of himself unstintingly in the cause of Canadian unity and Canada's future. I join others in sending our sympathy to his family, in the knowledge that this man deserved to live and that Canada is the better for the fact that he lived so long and so well.

Passing of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I are deeply moved by the sudden death of an illustrious son of Canada, and particularly of French Canada.

I had the good fortune to know the right hon. Louis St-Laurent when he was Minister of Justice and Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was a member of Parliament when he became Prime Minister, replacing the right hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King.

Often, in the evenings, when we were leaving Parliament, it happened that I left by the main door at the same time as Mr. and Mrs. St-Laurent. Having known him at a time when I was a relatively young member, I must say that I saw Mr. St-Laurent somewhat as a good Canadian family man, affable and not at all haughty. Everyone could talk to him. He was a true Canadian in the widest sense of the term, and I will never forget the role he played in keeping the various regions of Canada together.

Someone stated earlier that he was a great Quebeker, a great French-Canadian and a great Canadian, but I am sure that he was above all a true Canadian, a great French-Canadian, a man who was attached to his province, of course, but never to the detriment of anyone.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we are so moved by his sudden death. May I, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, offer our most sincere condolences to Mr. St-Laurent's family.

● (1610)

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I speak with a heavy heart this afternoon. I knew Louis St-Laurent as a friend from the days when he was president of the Canadian Bar Association, one of the most distinguished lawyers of our country. I was a member of the council of the bar in those days, and the impression that he left with me in the early 1930s, when I got to know him well, has never been effaced with the passing years.

As has been said, he came into the House of Commons, I think it was in 1942. He had a call to come here to do his part to bring about a unity within this nation which at that time was deeply challenged. He gave up a tremendous law practice. I remember the first day that he spoke in this House as minister of justice. It was a lawyer's speech; it was a speech representing the epitome of the service that he was to render his country.

It is strange how our paths have crossed during the years. When he was minister of justice, I was opposition critic. He talked very freely with me at all times. I shall never forget the degree to which—I have spoken of this before—he made me the confidante of many of the things that he intended to do. Those things will not be written by me but they will always be a memory of one for whom I had not only respect but affection.

He became secretary of state for external affairs, and in large measure it was his concept that brought about the establishment of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He became prime minister. Later, I became leader of the opposition in 1956, and the first message of good wishes that I received was from Louis St. Laurent.

Later I became Prime Minister and leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I think of him not only as the great lawyer that he was but as a devoted servant of the Crown, for it was his invitation that brought about the visit of Her Majesty the Queen and the opening of parliament by the monarch for the first time in our history. He understood the meaning of justice and of equity. While reared in the province of Quebec with a knowledge of the Code, he had an abiding admiration for the common law.

It is difficult for me to speak of him in an impersonal sense. On occasion he would touch the heights in debate in this House. He and I were the last surviving members of Her Majesty's Imperial Privy Council in Canada. I do not speak of him with that admiration that I possess only now that he is gone. He knew it: he knew how I felt while he lived, and I never forgot his birthday, which was something that he very much appreciated.

A great Canadian in this place made his contribution to a united Canada, his life devoted to the establishment of one Canada, one nation, while at the same time maintaining, and rightly so, the traditional constitutional rights of his paternal ancestry. It is hard to speak of him as freely as I would like. He gave of his best and he loved his country. He never quite understood, despite his years at the bar, the clash of debate in the House of Commons. He represented the concept that, I am not ashamed to say in that I followed it through the years, realized that this institution is a place in which, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said, we may disagree but we build up tremendous respect and regard for those who sit opposite.

I join in the expressions of deep mourning at his passing at a very advanced age, and in the sympathy extended to the members of his family. I couple with that my deepest appreciation that I was privileged to sit in this House for 15 years while he sat opposite. He loved Canada, he lived for Canada and his memory will be forever honoured in our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, one will understand that being member for Quebec East and succeeding Mr. St-Laurent who had represented this constituency for 15 years, I wish to join my humble voice to that of the previous speakers and pay tribute to a great man who has just disappeared, the right hon. Louis St-Laurent.

I knew Louis St-Laurent quite well. For 15 years, I was not only closely involved in his political activities in the riding of Quebec East, but I had many opportunities of holding most interesting conversations with him. What always impressed me about this former Prime Minister of Canada is the dignity and composure of his conversations that made him so interesting as well as engaging.

In 1965, when it was a matter for me of being a candidate in the riding of Quebec East, I recall that the first person whom I visited and asked for advice was the right hon. Louis St-Laurent. And I still remember his words: Duquet, you have been in politics long enough and acquired a lot of experience; if you really want to be a candidate and become a federal member of Parliament in Ottawa, the only advice I can give you is to do it with the same dignity as I myself tried to fulfill my mandate, always in a spirit of truth and in the specific purpose of trying to serve your fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, with such advice coming from such a man, it has been easy for me, for eight years, to fulfill my mandate and succeed the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent in the riding of Quebec East. The people of this constituency have maintained a sort of veneration for this great man and I am convinced that in the riding of Quebec East people are now crying because of the announcement of the death of Mr. St. Laurent, even though, due to his old age, we had to expect that.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute, like previous speakers, to Mr. Louis St. Laurent. To my mind, his death will leave quite a gap, not only in Canada, in this House and in the province of Quebec but everywhere he has been; it will stir deep emotion in all those who have known him; that is why I wanted to make a few modest remarks.

On behalf of the people of the riding of Quebec East, which I represent and which he so worthily represented from 1942 to 1957, I offer to the House of Commons, to the St. Laurent family, my very deepest and most sincere condolences.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, with consent, I would like to join all my colleagues and express my sorrow at the news of the passing away of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, as well as the pride I take in having learned much from him. He always struck me, as well in his behaviour as in his speech, as the very incarnation of the most noble values that distinguish the statesman.

For us, who endeavour to better serve our fellow citizens, we could find no better example of generosity, devotion to duty, wisdom and credibility.

In the story of his life, Canadians, the young ones in particular, will read whole chapters that will stir in them new faith in public men.

To the family of the illustrious deceased, I offer my heartfelt condolences.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as a mark of our respect for the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, I move the adjournment of the House for the remainder of this day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest, if it is agreeable to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp), that Your Honour convey to the family of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent the deepest sympathies of this House.

Mr. Speaker: It will, of course, be the duty of the Chair to convey these messages to the family of the Right Hon. Louis St.Laurent.

It is moved by Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Stanfield, that this House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On the motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 4.26 p.m.

SUGGESTED PERSONAL INTERVENTION OF MINISTER IN DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter requiring immediate consideration. In light of the fact that the conciliation report on the rail strike was received on July 13, and that the three-man board could not reach common ground, at that this strike is now in fact taking place, with potentially serious national consequences, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That in the opinion of this House the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) should now personally intervene to end this dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUPPLYING OF SUMMER UNIFORMS TO PROTECTIVE STAFF—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to ask leave of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That this House goes on record as believing action should be taken that will provide to the uniformed members of the protective staff of parliament, uniforms of appropriate summer weight and design that will allow these employees the utmost comfort in the carrying out of their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: At this point I have to advise the hon. member that he may place the Chair in a very difficult position. I think I owe it to the House to advise the hon. member that members of the protective staff are already supplied with uniforms of this type, that is with summer weight uniforms. In the circumstances, I would think the hon. member might not wish to embarrass the Chair and the staff of the House in the way the motion would have to be put. I am sure that all hon. members wish that our staff, including I am sure, members at the table, work in the best possible conditions.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reply to that suggestion. Yesterday, I indicated to the Chair that I was not quite certain just how arrangements were made for supplying uniforms to the protective staff. I must go on record as saying that, even if some people involved in the problem of supplying uniforms to the staff feel that is a summer weight uniform, there are more appropriate summer weight uniforms. Just look at the armed service personnel in this country. They certainly try to maintain a decorum that is appropriate and look much more comfortable than these men.

CRASH OF BEECHCRAFT 18 AT WINNIPEG—SUGGESTED RE-OPENING OF INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I should like to move a motion relating to the fact that on June 24, 1972, a Beechcraft 18 aircraft crashed at Winnipeg, Manitoba, killing eight Indian school children and the pilot. The Department of Transport report of February 23, 1973, listed the cause of the crash as loss of engine power and the failure of the pilot to respond effectively to the situation. However, new evidence has come—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entirely out of order when he makes a speech in support of his motion, I have to remind the hon. member, and all hon. members, that motions under Standing Order 43 are in a special category in that they do not provide for the possibility of a response to allegations which are submitted to the House in support of such motions. Hon. members are asked, and have been asked in the past, to indicate what the motion is, without argument and without a long recital of facts.

• (1410)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I will come directly to my motion under Standing Order 43, which is as follows:

That the Department of Transport immediately re-open the investigation of the crash in light of the new evidence about the competence of the pilot, and that this report be tabled in the House of Commons.

In the absence of the Minister of Transport, I presented this new evidence to the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre under the terms of Standing Order 43. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—UNION ASSURANCE OF MOVEMENT OF GRAIN IN EVENT OF STRIKE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Labour arises out of his assurances that everything possible will be done to prevent disruption in the movement of grain and also from the evident interruption in the movement of grain which will come about in the next 48 hours. What proposals or arrangements to guarantee the movement of grain were prepared by the government, were such arrangements conveyed to the parties concerned by the government mediator, and what new action is the government now taking to prevent further disruption in the movement of grain?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, the unions concerned in this dispute have given every assurance that they are going to co-operate to the maximum extent to move the grain. I think they should be commended for this. We expect the companies to co-operate to the fullest extent possible. I think this is the most constructive solution we can imagine to ensure that grain is moved adequately.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister satisfied that the action taken by the unions will not interfere with the movement of grain at the Lakehead? Is the minister satisfied with this?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there may be some dislocation in terms of precise timing, but I am optimistic that the grain will move, and I remain optimistic.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT CONTINGENCY PLAN TO KEEP GRAIN MOVING IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the assurance given by the Prime Minister on July 16 that the government had prepared and was prepared to use a contingency plan to guarantee the movement of Canadian grain to world markets, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House if the government is prepared to introduce any such plan in the event that the movement of grain is halted at the Lakehead?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we should all be interested in the settlement of this dispute. I listened to what the Minister of Labour said about the assurance given by the trade unions. For the time being, I certainly would rely upon that.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—LAYING-OFF OF WORKERS BY COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is aware that the two major railway companies, CN and CP, have laid off thousands of workers not on strike and not in Ontario, and that the companies are suggesting that when the 48-hour strike is over in Ontario not all these striking employees will be re-employed. As such action by the railway companies is bound to create a general strike on the railways, instead of the limited strike that the union now proposes, is the minister prepared to tell the heads of the railways that they should stop acting in this provocative way?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to discuss with the railways any possible means that can be adopted in order to cause as little dislocation as possible.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION BY MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the minister's assistant deputy, Mr. Kelly, failed in his most recent attempt to bring the two parties back together, as evidenced by the walk-out in Ontario today, does he now intend to exercise his responsibility under the law and and personally intervene with a view to bringing these two parties back together?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to agree with the premise of the hon. member's question that Mr. Kelly's efforts have failed because of the temporary walk-out identified by the hon. member. As far as I am concerned, I have already intervened to some extent with the parties and I am prepared to intervene a great deal more if it will assist.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT PRESENT NEW PROPOSALS TO UNION FOR NEGOTIATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact the rotating strikes have already started and this could result in a lockout by the railways, thereby tying up the whole national transportation system, will the Acting Prime Minister advise whether the government has met or is prepared to meet with the railways with a view to placing new proposals before the union as a basis for future negotiations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the procedures being followed by the Minister of Labour are most likely to produce results, for the time being at least.

[Translation]

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE RECOURSE TO LEGISLATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Drummond wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Still concerning the railway conflict, would the minister intend by any chance to resort to special legislation to end the railway conflict?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this party and the government are committed to the principle of free collective bargaining, and I take it most opposition parties are also,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —I sincerely hope that type of action will not be necessary.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—CO-OPERATION OF COMPANIES WITH UNIONS IN MOVING GRAIN IN EVENT OF STRIKE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport discussed with the railway companies methods by which they could co-operate in implementing the desire of the union that grain shipments be not interfered with by the rotating strikes that are taking place? Have actual plans been worked out between the companies and the union with government assistance in order to keep the grain moving?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure various studies have been made by the Wheat Board and departments concerned on this matter. However, in terms of specifics, I believe the minister who is directly responsible will be back in the House soon. Perhaps the hon. member could ask his question at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain on a supplementary, try to complete the first round of questions and return to this question in a short while.

Oral Questions

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE WITHOUT LEGISLATION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): In light of the fact it would be in the best interest of all parties concerned if the dispute could be settled without legislation, can the Minister of Labour outline to the House what action the government is prepared to take at this time to facilitate the settlement of this dispute before it becomes necessary to legislate the men back to work?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already answered that question.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PURPOSE OF OFFER TO PURCHASE SHARES IN TEXAS GULF—POSSIBLE APPEARANCE OF PRESIDENT OF CORPORATION BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board who yesterday seemed to reply to questions concerning the Canada Development Corporation. Can the minister briefly inform the House the purpose of CDC offering to purchase 10 million shares of Texas Gulf, an act which may be very useful to Canada if it is part of a policy framework to buy back parts of Canada for Canadians?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): As I indicated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, this is directly in line with the stated objective of CDC to acquire a significant interest in Canadian resource industries.

● (1420)

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that this is a most significant action by the CDC involving a very large outlay of $290 million, and since the CDC found it necessary to offer a price considerably higher than the market price at the time, may I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he would agree to refer the matter of the action taken by the CDC with regard to Texas Gulf to the appropriate parliamentary committee so that the president may appear and explain the theory, policies and framework within which this action was taken.

Mr. Drury: I am not sure that now would be the appropriate time to do as the hon. member suggests at this stage of our parliamentary proceedings, but I am quite sure that in the ordinary course of events officials of the CDC will appear before the appropriate parliamentary committee.

Some hon. Members: Read the Act!

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF SHARES IN TEXAS GULF—CONSULTATION WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Even though I appreciate that the CDC is, by the decision—a bad decision in my view—of the government—

Some hon. Members: Parliament!

Mr. Lewis: —of parliament, if you like; a parliament which the government at one time controlled—even though the CDC is an independent corporation, I should like to ask the minister whether the officials of CDC consulted with him or, to his knowledge, with any other member of the government, or any officials of the relevant departments, before it decided to make this offer to Texas Gulf?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): It is my understanding that the offer being made to Texas Gulf, or to the shareholders of Texas Gulf—

Mr. Bell: To the American ones, not the Canadian ones.

Mr. Drury: —was consequent on a decision by the board. The board includes as ex officio members respresenting the government as shareholders, the deputy ministers of finance and of industry, trade and commerce.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF SHARES IN TEXAS GULF—LIABILITY FOR EXPENDITURES OUTSIDE CANADA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Can the hon. gentleman tell the House whether he has had any discussions at all with officials of CDC regarding the assets and liabilities of this large multinational corporation and, in particular, whether in fact the multinational character of Texas Gulf would involve the CDC in the expenditure of taxpayers' money in countries outside Canada, including Australia?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): When one talks about the expenditure of taxpayers' money I think it is in the sense of expenditure of either earnings or capital,—

Mr. Baldwin: How about the $300 million?

Mr. Drury: —and control of this is in the hands of the board, as in the case of other independent Crown corporations.

[Translation]

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF SHARES IN TEXAS GULF—DISCUSSION WITH DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the hon. President of the Treasury Board. Can he tell this House if the Canada Development Corporation has consulted the Department of Regional Economic Expansion before taking this decision, and does he intend to suggest that the CDC regularly consult the Department of Regional Economic Expansion so that the funds available be used for the development of Canada's resources for Canadians?

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am quite sure the officials and directors of CDC do maintain liaison with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

ENERGY

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—SUGGESTED ASSURANCE TO UNITED STATES CHERRY POINT REFINERY CAN BE SUPPLIED FROM CANADIAN SOURCES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In the light of a statement made yesterday concerning studies which show that Cherry Point Refinery can and should be supplied from inland, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House why the energy adviser at the Canadian embassy in Washington has consistently dismissed suggestions that Canada can guarantee increased oil deliveries to Washington over the inland route?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I cannot speak for the oil adviser to the government in Washington. I do not know whether that is what he said or not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In that case, Mr. Speaker, could the Acting Prime Minister take a positive course and assure the House that the government will now supply the embassy in Washington, for transmission to both the executive and legislative branches of the United States government, with all studies of Canada's capability of supplying the Cherry Point refinery with inland oil, and that these studies will also be tabled in the House here in Ottawa?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, now that it appears as if the TAPS line is going to be built, it becomes necessary, if we are to carry out our undertaking to do everything possible to protect the inner waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, that we should be having negotiations of this kind. I do now say to the hon. member, as I said yesterday to hon. members, that these will be the negotiations and, therefore, I do not think I would want to reveal all the cards that we are holding at this time.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT OIL SHIPMENTS ENTERING STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask one further supplementary? Will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that every device will be used, including reference to the IJC, to prevent oil shipments entering the Strait of Juan de Fuca being increased?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I think the House has perhaps forgotten that this was a suggestion made by the Canadian government. In June, 1972 a unanimous resolution was approved by this House of Commons endorsing the government's view. This was rejected by the United States.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—ASSURANCE OF CANADIAN SOURCE OF SUPPLY FOR CHERRY POINT REFINERY AS ALTERNATIVE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Canadian government at any time transmitted to the United States government our willingness to make some arrangements to supply Cherry Point with Canadian crude in return for an assurance that large tankers will not enter the Strait of Juan de Fuca and, if so, by which minister in the Canadian government was such as offer communicated to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was communicated to the United States government on several occasions that this was a possibility open in the event that the TAPS line was approved. As I have said on several occasions, we are not opposed to the TAPS line as such across Alaska and the transportation of oil down to California. All our submissions to the United States government have been on the undesirable effects of big tankers moving into the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement that this information has been conveyed to the United States government on a number of occasions, would he be prepared to have the correspondence tabled, from whatever minister made this offer to the U.S. government, so we will have an opportunity to see what the nature of that communication was?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that we had made any offers of that kind in writing, and I think it would have been most undesirable to have done so at that time. What I did say was that this was a possibility we had discussed generally with the United States. I think I should also say to the hon. member that the United States has resisted all of these proposals we have made in the past simply because the administration was absolutely committeed to proceeding with the TAPS line and did not want any studies or discussions going on that might have thrown any doubt upon it. That is the truth.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADA GROUP TO STUDY ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister with reference to the group which he said yesterday had been set up sometime ago, and which the day before yesterday he indicated was about to be set up, to examine the environmental difficulties and recommend measures to offset these. How long has this group actually been at work and when may we expect some word as to what it is up to?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, after the government of the United States turned down the Canadian proposal that this question should be referred to the IJC, my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and Mr. Train got together to discuss this question. They have had a number of discussions which have dealt with oil spill emergency arrangements, means for improving navigation conditions, possible joint scientific studies of the inner waters and questions relating to legal liability and compensation. These talks have been going on continuously since that time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Vancouver South will allow the Chair, perhaps I should recognize the hon. member for Richmond first, following which we will return to this subject by way of the hon. member for Vancouver South.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED GARNISHEE OF SALARY TO COMPENSATE OVERPAYMENT—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that the unemployment insurance offices in charge of getting reimbursement of amounts paid in excess to former beneficiaries of unemployment insurance, and that several formerly unemployed persons are having their salaries garnished merely on the strength of civil servants' findings, can the minister tell the House whether this corresponds with the instructions of his department or the government?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated in answer to similar questions, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is required by law to do its best to collect overpayments from benefit recipients. Its present policy is to negotiate this with recipients to make an arrangement that is not overly onerous in attempting to repay it, but it is required by law to seek reimbursement of overpayments when those have been made.

ALLEGED GARNISHEE OF SALARY TO COMPENSATE FOR OVERPAYMENT—REQUEST GOVERNMENT HELP CLAIMANTS IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

As it is very costly for those former unemployed to defend themselves before the courts, and especially against the simple conclusions arrived at by the employees of the department, can the minister say if he will enable those former unemployed to defend themselves in any way before the courts in a more satisfactory way?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that before the matter ever reaches the courts, every attempt is made to negotiate with the particular person who has received an overpayment to make arrangements that will obviate that formal stage.

TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBLE MEETING WITH MINISTER OF PARLIAMENTARY GROUP WHICH WENT TO WASHINGTON—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF DAY FOR DEBATE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Will he assure the House that the interparliamentary committee which went to Washington two days ago will be able to meet immediately with the appropriate government ministers before the debate on this subject is set. I remind the Acting Prime Minister that he indicated yesterday that such a debate would be set.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be very happy to meet with all members of the group that went to Washington. I think I can also speak for my colleagues in that regard. I hope we can finish the capital punishment debate and be in a position to set aside a day to discuss this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate we are not making very much headway. I think we are still on the first three or four questions because we have had so many supplementaries on the first questions raised which hon. members said would be brief, but supplementaries are always said to be brief. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver South, followed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you very much for your indulgence Mr. Speaker. My question is very brief. Can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the meeting just referred to will take place, and a debate will take place, before the House is adjourned for the recess.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. That matter is not in my hands.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST MINISTER REVEAL BASIS FOR OPTIMISM AND NUMBER OF CARS OF GRAIN DELAYED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, mine is a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a couple of questions arising out of the answers already given. With the railway strike in the present position there is a grave feeling that our contracts for wheat may not be upheld. The minister mentioned that he is optimistic about the situation as a consequence of a couple of interventions, if I understood him correctly, he made with the labour leaders. Would he tell the House the basis for his optimism and also what report he has to date regarding the number of cars of grain being held up because of this strike.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In terms of living up to our contracts, I do not believe there is any immediate danger there. If the hon. member for Prince Albert wishes specifics on that I can get them for him. I cannot relate them in detail to him. In terms of the basis for my optimism, it is based on the good sense of both parties to the dispute, and I believe there has been already evidence that that type of confidence is justified.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—LENGTH OF TIME STRIKE PERMITTED BEFORE LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been laden with optimism in the past which did not turn out to be justified. I ask him how long the government anticipates this state of affairs will continue before parliament will act so that the economy of this nation will not be unnecessarily weakened. Has the government any plans in this regard or does it simply intend to paddle along day by day?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear this question from the right hon. member for Prince Albert who always has been a man who has stood for free collective bargaining, as I understand it, and historically always against intervention in respect of giving people their legitimate rights recognized by parliament. I think the parties should be allowed to bargain in a free and collective way, and when the public interest is at stake I think this government will exercise its responsibility, but I hope that will not be necessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this attempt at a lecture from the Liberal minister has no particular effect on me. I ask him how long it can be expected that the strike will be permitted to continue without this government having the backbone to bring before parliament the necessary action. How long will the security of the nation be undermined because of such generalities as those in which he has just indulged.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could be allowed to reply briefly. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has a supplementary. It appears that the question period will not be moving along, and I am not sure whether this is what hon. members wish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Does the minister not want to answer—

Mr. Munro: Yes, I do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —or is he afraid?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

DISPUTE WITH NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE COMPANIES WILL CO-OPERATE WITH UNIONS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert concerning whether or not the minister consulted with the unions, particularly on the grain movement. In view of the fact that the workers will continue to move grain as well as operate ferries, may I ask the minister if he has met with the management of the railway companies to secure assurance from them that they will co-operate with the decision of the workers to move grain and operate ferries to the island of Newfoundland.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I did not get the import of the hon. member's question. Will he please repeat it.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am asking if the minister has met with the management of the railway companies to secure assurance from them that the offer of the workers of the railways to continue to move grain and operate shipping to Newfoundland and other points off our coasts will be matched by the railway management?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I have not personally had those discussions. I believe discussions have been held. I believe to this point we have not had the absolute assurance to which the hon. member is referring.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO SECURE EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE—SUGGESTION MINISTER MEET WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since there are now 85,000 young Quebecers without work, does the minister intend to introduce a special policy to remedy this deplorable situation or, at the very least, to meet the Quebec government authorities to discuss and improve the situation?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, discussions of this kind are going on almost constantly with the Quebec authorities. I would say as I said the other day, that we are gratified that although this situation is still at a level that satisfies nobody it is showing improving characteristics. There are fewer young people unemployed this year than last year, and we are exerting every effort, as I have stated very often in this House, to relieve the situation in respect of finding employment.

● (1440)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since an official of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, Mr. Doyon, has stated that if people spent 40 hours a week seeking employment, there would not be 85,000 young unemployed in Quebec, is the minister prepared to assure that Canadian industry is now capable of absorbing 500,000 unemployed?

OUTBREAK OF HOOF AND MOUTH DISEASE IN EUROPE—ACTION TO PREVENT IMPORT INTO CANADA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Revenue are away from the House. In light of the announcement by the Director General of Veterinary Services of the Department of Agriculture that there has been a very serious outbreak of hoof and mouth disease in Europe and a warning that Canadian travellers should take appropriate precautions, can the minister tell the House whether there has been any action taken by the government on a concerted plan to prevent any Canadian travellers coming back from Europe from bringing this disease into Canada, with the disastrous results we all know can occur?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those half dozen or so ministers the hon. member referred to, I will have to take this question as notice.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. For the benefit of all hon. members I would like him to clarify the answer given by him to a question yesterday with respect to the Canadian parliamentarians' visit to Washington. In an answer at page 5965 of Hansard he said:

> They went without instructions from the government and they will not report to us.

In answer to the same question asked by the hon. member for Peace River as reported on the following page the minister had this to say:

> I think it was a very useful exchange. A report which was full and not biased—

Will the minister tell me in which of those statements he is telling the truth?

ALLEGED GIVING OF GRANTS CONDITIONAL ON FAVOURABLE TREATMENT OF MINISTER—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION IN VIEW OF RELEASE OF TAPE RECORDINGS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of press reports to the effect that tapes have been released pertaining to a telephone conversation in which a Liberal member of parliament told a certain group in Montreal that they would not get certain grants unless they kept quiet about the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and in view of the minister's statement in the House on Monday that until he read about it in the press he knew nothing about this, is he now in a position to make clear what he told the hon. member for LaSalle?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation has not been changed in any way. I was not aware of any request for such a grant. I did not discuss such a grant with anybody. I have since checked with the UIC and they advise me that they have no knowledge of an application for such a grant. I have asked departmental officials responsible for Local Initiative Programs to check, and they advise me they have no record of any such application being made or rejected. They are searching again to see if there is any possibility that this group is part of a larger group, for instance, the Greater Montreal Poverty Group.

So far as I am concerned there was no discussion of a grant. The discussion between myself and the hon. gentleman to which reference is made involved methods by which we could learn of and deal with specific details of concern to this group in respect to claimants in the Montreal area. When there have been representations made to us with respect to very valid complaints we have been able to follow these up, but it is very difficult to deal with others of a very general nature. I have no knowledge of any possibility of a grant being involved in this situation.

Mr. Baldwin: Will you produce the tapes, or are you going to follow Nixon's example?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear hon. members asking for the tapes. These tapes have been made public. Would the minister comment also on the assertion that he had discussions with the Secretary of State about such a grant?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I certainly make the assertion that I had no conversation with the Secretary of State about this grant whatsoever. He is in the House and I am sure he can confirm that.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY WATER PLANT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but in his absence, I shall put it to the acting minister.

Could the minister tell the House whether the cabinet or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. are considering projects for building a new heavy water plant in Canada, and if so, does not Quebec meet all requirements for the establishment of such a plant?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Canadian government and Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. are now considering the possibility of building a new heavy water plant. Several sites are being considered in Quebec. Subject to detailed environmental studies, these sites would seem appropriate. I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me advance notice of his question.

POSSIBILITY OF BUILDING HEAVY WATER PLANT IN QUEBEC—SELECTION OF GASPÉ AS SITE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Following his affirmative reply, could the minister say if Gaspé is considered as the future plant site?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, although the hon. member did not give me any notice of his question, I can tell him that the Gaspé Peninsula is really one of the areas that have been considered as possible sites.

CRASH OF BEECHCRAFT 18 AT WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR RE-OPENING OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of new evidence indicating that, contrary to the report of the Department of Transport, the cause of the crash of a Beechcraft 18 at Winnipeg on June 24, 1972, was the complete incompetence of the pilot, will the Minister of Transport undertake to re-open the investigation immediately, and table in the House of Commons the report arising from such further investigation? I direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister.

SUGGESTION PROVINCIAL AMBULANCE SYSTEM BE INSURED SERVICE UNDER MEDICARE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of my question directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is based on the fact that far too many Canadians die unnecessarily each year because of the state of our ambulance and emergency services. Has the minister recently received a working paper on ambulance and emergency services in Canada recommending, among other things, that the federal government accept a provincial ambulance system as an insured service under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act? If so, can we expect action very soon in this regard, or does the minister intend to table this report?

POST OFFICE

PURPOSE OF SURVEY OF FORMER EMPLOYEES—POSSIBILITY OF MAKING RESULTS AVAILABLE TO UNIONS AND MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General and I have given him notice of it. Arising from the current rapid turnover of postal employees due to deteriorating morale in the service, is the Post Office Department conducting a survey of these former employees in an effort to improve working conditions, and is the department using the expertise of the Department of Labour in carrying out this survey?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. I can confirm indeed that a questionnaire has been sent to former employees of the Calgary area. It is the only place, to my knowledge, where a questionnaire was sent. I can assure the hon. member that the questionnaire was specifically sent, because the authorities of my department, in order to improve their relations with employees, wish to know the reasons of their departure, their views on working conditions, training, opportunities for promotion and various other aspects dealing with the status of employees within the department.

● (1450)

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Could the hon. gentleman inform the House if it is the intention of his department to carry out similar surveys across Canada? If so, will they be carried out in conjunction with the expertise of the Department of Labour? In the interests of restoring confidence in Canada's postal service, will results of the surveys be made available to postal unions and members of parliament?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: As to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, may I remind the hon. member that we have within the Post Office Department a Staff Relations Branch which indeed maintains close and constant contact with the Department of Labour of Canada.

As to the second part of the question, it goes without saying that if this investigation in the Calgary area proves very useful, we shall institute similar actions in other areas of our country.

As to the last part, when in possession of the findings, we shall decide whether it is appropriate to convey them to the union representatives of the Post Office employees.

EXHIBITIONS

EXPO '74; SPOKANE, WASHINGTON—REASON FOR FAILURE OF CANADA TO HAVE PAVILION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister or the appropriate minister if another department is involved. In view of the recent disappointing announcement that Canada would not have a pavilion at Expo '74 which is to be held in Spokane, State of Washington, next year, I would ask the minister why Canada, at this late date, has decided not to participate in Expo '74 after indicating to Expo officials months ago that a Canadian pavilion would be constructed for Canadian exhibits?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure how urgent the question is. It seems to me that perhaps it should be placed on the order paper, but if the minister has a reply it could be given now.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question was considered very carefully over a period of recent weeks, and we came to the conclusion that the Canadian government had higher priorities and limited resources, and this was one of the projects that would have to be sacrificed.

Mr. Harding: A supplementary and this is rather urgent, Mr. Speaker, because if construction is to take place it must take place immediately. In view of the exceedingly favourable publicity which a Canadian pavilion would generate for Canada, and in view of the modest $1.5 million involved, I would ask the minister if the government will reconsider its position on this important matter?

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY AS TO MINISTERIAL APPROVAL OF TWO WEEK HOLIDAY GIVEN INMATES

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Would the minister advise the House whether he was personally consulted before the two-week holiday period for inmates was instituted at Archambault Institution and other institutions in the province of Quebec, and did the minister give his direct approval for those weeks of sun bathing, tennis, golf and other similar activities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that the question asked in those terms is in order. The minister seems anxious to reply, and perhaps he should be given the opportunity.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was not consulted but these two week periods are held in conjunction with the holidays which are given to the instructional staff and they are also quite in accordance with our attempt to place men in institutions as much as possible almost in the conditions of life they would have when they return to civilian life.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REASON FOR DENIAL OF PERMISSION FOR MEMBERS OF PRESS TO ACCOMPANY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): A supplementary. In view of the fact that the parliamentary committee of this House investigating the Canadian Penitentiary Service was denied permission to have members of the news media accompany it during its tour of penitentiaries, can the minister advise the House why media respresentatives were able to tour the Archambault institution yesterday and even photograph the smiling countenances of such inmates as the FLQ conspirators?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. I must say that members of the press do go into institutions from time to time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Explain.

An hon. Member: Do they ever come out?

Mr. Allmand: —to interview inmates and so on. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in asking his question the hon. member greatly exaggerated the conditions that prevail during these two-week vacations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane—order, please, I apologize to the hon. member. Is the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly am sorry that it is necessary for me to rise on a question of privilege and I hesitate to do so. The minister has stated that I have exaggerated the conditions in the Archambault institution. As a member of the committee investigating the Canadian Penitentiary Service, I have returned from a visit to Archambault and other institutions. I saw those conditions personally. Perhaps the minister has not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has taken the floor on a question of privilege that I suggest to him respectfully was not a question of privilege but rather a point of debate. These questions and answers could always be the subject of debate between the member who asked the question and the minister who gave the reply. I suggest to hon. members that this kind of dispute should not give rise to questions of privilege. The minister claims the right to reply to the hon. member and perhaps he should be given this right in fairness, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Cochrane.

Mr. Allmand: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has said that the inmates at Archambault were playing golf. As far as I know there is no golf course at Archambault.

An hon. Member: Miniature golf.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister with a change of pace. Is it the intention of the government to get rid of the blue piece of metal in front of the External Affairs building before Her Majesty the Queen opens the building officially?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that there are understandable differences of opinion about the artistic merit of this particular thing.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the question might be placed on the order paper or considered at an appropriate time, that is when it is dark, at ten o'clock. The hon. member for Cochrane.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to insist on this but since the Queen will be coming next week perhaps the minister would consider covering over this monstrosity so that Her Majesty will not think that Canadians are as naïve as the emperor in Hans Christian Anderson's story—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the last question. I ask the government House leader whether he has a fairly short answer as to what we will be doing this week and next week.

OLYMPIC (1976) BILL

PROVISION FOR ISSUING OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS AND STAMPS AND HOLDING OF LOTTERY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury that Bill C-196, respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games, be read the third time and do pass; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Peters (page 5975).

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I was saying yesterday that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been either naïve or deceptive with this House and the people of Canada during the past five years with respect to the financing of the 1976 summer Olympics. In many ways he could be likened to a plant manager who under questioning about a pet project that the manager seems interested in, tells his employers, who may have heard rumours to the contrary for five years, that he has made no special business concessions, has agreed to no special contributions, commitments or assistance and has not agreed to give direct financial assistance. Finally he states categorically that the project will not cost the employers a penny.

Then the manager explains at the last moment that he has agreed to turn over the bulk of his plant's production—which in this case is the Royal Canadian Mint—for four years. The plant is to be run at four times its normal volume on a non-profit basis, all of the net proceeds from the special run will be going to his pet project. To make matters worse, the employers find out that while they will make nothing out of the run, they will be contingently liable with respect to all sales made during the four-year period. I suggest the employers in such a position would first fire the employee and then make the best of the bad deal to which they had been committed by the fired employee. In this case we will have to wait for the voters who, hopefully, will do the firing of the Prime Minister. In the meantime it is up to this House, and particularly the opposition, to make the best of a bad deal.

I feel that members of the NDP have not acted responsibly in this matter. As was pointed out yesterday, representatives of that party on February 2 said they were in favour of the Olympics and in favour of the coinage and stamp issue that was contemplated and finally announced by the Prime Minister for the first time on that date. The NDP want the luxury of disassociating themselves from this Olympics deal, now that they know the nation is hooked. Whether we like it or not, the nation has been hooked by a Prime Minister whom the NDP has propped up for nine months. The nation has been hooked by a Prime Minister who, because of the NDP vote in committee on July 11, was not invited to appear before the committee and required to explain how he got the country into the position of having to turn the net proceeds from our Mint over to a private corporation for four years. He should have been required to explain why he spent four years denying what was going on, and why he now persists in pretending that what is happening is not happening.

The Conservative's proposal to have the Prime Minister appear before the committee was turned down as a result of a vote taken in committee. Eight of our members voted unanimously for the Prime Minister to appear before the committee, but the Liberal and NDP representatives on the committee said that in no way would that happen and voted against hearing the Prime Minister. It was a recorded vote.

Consider the inconsistency of the NDP. They made a statement on February 2. Yesterday one NDP member admitted that they had changed direction in the subsequent speech made on June 28. That hon. member ought to read the report of the committee meeting that occurred subsequent to June 28. He would see the direction that his party took that evening. As I said, the NDP voted against hearing the Prime Minister in committee. When my party moved an amendment, hoping to tidy up this bill and limit to $250 million the amount the Olympic corporation may get from the coinage issued plus another $10 million from the stamp issue, one or two Liberal members voted for the proposal. But not the Prime Minister's most trusted allies, the NDP. They did not vote for it.

At that time one of the NDP members of the committee made the startling comment, recorded at page 40:48 of the committee proceedings, that the limit of $250 million was unnecessarily rigid. Another of their spokesmen on the committee said he could not see voting to limit this amount because in the unlikely event that they should make a profit of the kind that had been suggested, then more power to them. He was speaking of the Olympic corporation. Earlier that member had said, as recorded at page 40:50 of the committee proceedings, that those who take the risks should also have the opportunity of receiving whatever profit there may be.

For reasons that will become evident later in my address, it was unfortunate that the committee was not allowed to question the Prime Minister. So that hon. members may know the thinking of the sponsor of this bill, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), they should know that during the committee hearings he said that the Prime Minister did not have much to add to this particular bill nor any information regarding it. When asked if the Prime Minister would appear before the committee, the President of the Treasury Board said the Prime Minister's time "is more valuable." This is recorded at page 38:17 of the committee proceedings.

The comment made by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) as recorded at page 38:23 of the committee proceedings is interesting by way of background information. When we were discussing whether the Prime Minister should appear at committee, the hon. member said, as translated:

> —we also know, and many of us will not admit it, perfectly well there were frequent meetings between the Prime Minister of Canada and Mr. Drapeau; and we know perfectly well if the political context, since October 30, were different, if we had a majority government, Canada's commitment would have been on a much broader scale than it is now. We must admit it, and of course a compromise has to be found.

Perhaps unwittingly, or possibly with much more knowledge than many of us have in this chamber, I believe the hon. member put his finger on the question. If I may, I would like to trace through what is reported in Hansard, including documents that have been tabled, to show the contradictory position that has been taken by the government, particularly by the Prime Minister, with regard to this matter.

Before commencing to do so, I think it is wise to get our terms of reference accurate because in the quotations I intend to refer to we will find words such as "coinage", "financial", "special" and "contribution" used in very loose terms. It is wise to put on the record how the Oxford dictionary defines these words. "Financial" is defined as pertaining to revenue or money matters. "Money" is defined as current coin, coin and promissory documents representing it. "Coin" is defined as a piece of metal made into money by official stamp, metal money, money. "Contribute" is defined as to pay, furnish, that is, to contribute to a common fund. "Contribution" is defined as the act of contributing. Finally, "special" is defined as being of a particular kind, peculiar, not general.

In the records that have either been tabled in the House or printed in Hansard, the first reference to the 1976 summer Olympics is a letter to the then minister of national health and welfare from the mayor of Montreal, dated November 18, 1968. In that letter the mayor stated he had just read Mr. Munro's letter of October 25. He stated it seemed to sum up in substance the discussions they held in Mexico City on Friday, October 11, 1968. I am sorry we do not know what those discussions were. The mayor of Montreal then attempted to summarize what he considered to be the Olympic financing plans. In the body of the letter he stated:

> We believe that the necessary expenses will be financed by public authorities, under existing legislation—

This I emphasize:

> —or under legislation which could be passed anyway for all kinds of related purposes—

Was the mayor of Montreal a little psychic as far back as 1968 in referring to new legislation which was introduced in 1973 for all kinds of related purposes, namely, coins, stamps and lotteries? In another paragraph of the same letter he said:

—we do not feel we will have to ask governments at higher levels for special grants in order to hold the 1976 Olympics. We are not giving up, however, the right to any advantages which might be extended to us under existing or future legislation.

The words "future legislation" are repeated several times throughout the correspondence. I find it interesting that in all the government's correspondence to the Montreal organizers of the Olympics not once is the simple question asked: What future legislation do you mean? Is it that the federal authorities knew what the mayor meant? In any event, the Olympic organizers always qualified their statements by saying they wished to keep their option open concerning future legislation.

We then come to two more letters. One is dated May 21, 1969, to which the Prime Minister habitually refers. It is a letter addressed to the mayor of Montreal, in which the Prime Minister states:

—since the federal government made major contributions for various installations in connection with Expo, and some of these can be used for the Olympic games, I am sure that you will understand that we cannot provide any financial support for the organization of the games or for its publicity.

Next is a letter sent to the president of the International Olympic Committee, dated the same day, in which the Prime Minister said:

The Government of Canada warmly supports the application of the city of Montreal—

I note that in this letter he very carefully did not put a rider or qualification on any support that might be going to the city of Montreal. Apparently, the original of the letter sent to the president of the International Olympic Committee was lost. Later, the Prime Minister conveniently supplied a new original copy so that the Olympic file would be complete. Presumably, in 1969 the Olympic committee put a fair amount of stock in the letter from the Prime Minister. I would also point out that the words used are "financial support". I also refer to their Oxford dictionary definition. On January 15, 1970, the mayor of Montreal wrote to the Prime Minister as follows:

I thank you for giving your official support to our application to host the 1976 Olympic summer games.

I wish to refer to what is recorded in Hansard during this period. On January 22, 1970, the then parliamentary secretary to the minister of consumer and corporate affairs said, as recorded at page 2729 of Hansard:

Montreal did not request direct financial assistance and therefore no commitment has been given to them . . .

Montreal will be seeking indirect financial support under either existing legislation or legislation that might exist in the future concerning urban renewal and public housing.

I emphasize that nowhere did Mr. Drapeau speak about future legislation being restructed to urban renewal and public housing. On March 17, 1970, as recorded at page 5111 of Hansard, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) as to what role the federal government is playing in assisting both Vancouver and Montreal is their Olympic bids, the Prime Minister said:

—this is a rather complicated and lengthy question to answer . . .

But until a decision is taken on the Olympics I do not think it is useful to make any further statements.

It is interesting to note that three years later in this House, on May 10 last, in answer to a similar question by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) the Prime Minister indicated that it was still a very complicated question and he felt the right hon. member for Prince Albert could not understand it. On May 20, 1970, as recorded at page 7105 of Hansard, documents relating to the Olympic games were tabled by the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp). On May 11, 1971, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), the Prime Minister replied:

In the case of Montreal it was that we were not prepared to assist financially in the organization and carrying out of the Olympics.

● (1520)

It is at this point in the tabled documents that I find an interesting letter from the mayor of Montreal to the Prime Minister in which the mayor requests that the services of His Excellency Roger Rousseau be made available to the Olympic organizing committee. He states it would not be necessary to announce the appointment before February, 1972, but that it would be desirable to obtain consent during the next few weeks. Shortly thereafter, as reported in Hansard at page 109 on February 22, 1972, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated in answer to a question:

There has been no request for financial assistance from Montreal for the 1976 Olympic Games. On the contrary, the city has always assured us that the games would not cost a cent to the federal government and we have always thought the city would keep its word.

On March 29 of the same year, as reported at page 1261 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said, again in answer to a question, that it had been agreed to both sides that the very substantial contribution made by the federal government at the time of Expo was sufficient, and that no special contribution was contemplated by the federal government for the games. At page 1262 he said:

There is not special contribution contemplated by the federal government for the games.

Yet we find that on November 25, 1971, the Prime Minister had sent a letter to the mayor replying to the November 4, 1971, letter and saying:

The Canadian government gladly agrees to make available to you the services of Mr. Rousseau . . . It seems logical to me that Mr. Rousseau's salary should continue to be absorbed by the federal government after he assumes his new duties.

I understand that his salary of $30,000 per year is still being paid by the federal government. On August 15, 1972, we find a further letter from the Prime Minister to the mayor in which he states:

The Government of Canada cannot help but be concerned about the international implications of a project such as the Olympic games.

He went on to say his officials had indicated that there could be a deficit. Generally, the letter expresses concern as to what was taking place in Montreal and how the Olympic expenditures were to be financed. I then find Mr. Rousseau, Chairman and Commissioner General, writing three letters to the Prime Minister, dated November 17, 1972, in which he attempts to clarify three points, namely, the question of the coinage, the question of the stamps and the question of the lottery. He says his committee would like the Prime Minister to authorize and prepare federal legislation to make it possible to do the coin issue, etc. He felt it would make sufficient profit, based upon the experience, in similar circumstances, of Germany, to cover expenses. On parliament's return, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) said, as reported in Hansard of January 9, 1973, at page 88:

Mr. Speaker, the position of the federal government has not changed from that stated by the Prime Minister in the House some time ago.

Then there is a very interesting letter dated January 20, 1973, from Mr. Rousseau which reads as follows:

I felt it would be useful to review briefly the financial thinking which has always accompanied the various developments relative to the Olympic games.

He says the committee hopes to have recourse to all existing and future legislation and believes it is now imperative that a decision be made and that, to use his words, "this delay cannot be further prolonged." Then he said:

The procedures to follow have also been largely studied with persons authorized, respectively, by the Postmaster General and the Minister of Supply (summer and fall of 1972). They are easy, realistic and effective.

On January 18 we find the Minister of State for Urban Affairs saying there had been some requests of a non-financial nature from the organizing committee. He went on to admit that the non-financial items concerned coins, stamps, and things of that sort. He may call them non-financial, but that is not the way the Oxford dictionary defines them.

On January 25, in answer to a question by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Prime Minister again stated the federal government would not make any special financial aid available to Montreal. In fact, he said, Mayor Drapeau's statements had confirmed his understanding that there was no commitment nor any request that the federal government make any special contribution available for the holding of the games. It is particularly interesting to note that on January 23 the Prime Minister had written to Mayor Drapeau stating, in light of Mr. Rousseau's letter to him of January 20, 1973:

My colleagues and I are greatly concerned about the assumptions which appear to have been made as to the extent of the federal government services which would be provided.

The Prime Minister said it would not be prudent to accede to any "request for federal . . . revenue schemes . . . such as Olympic Coins" without knowing how costs are going to be covered without direct federal involvement. The Prime Minister's concern apparently arose after the Rousseau letter to which I have referred. I would point out that in answering questions, the Prime Minister referred to the fact that he had received a letter from Mr. Rousseau from which he was satisfied that the Montreal group understood the federal position, though he had sent the letter on January 23 stating that he was alarmed. He then asked for guarantees with respect to financial responsibility in case a deficit should arise.

In this connection, three letters have been tabled, one from the Prime Minister of Quebec, one from Mayor Drapeau and one from Mr. Rousseau. In effect, these letters state: If you give us the cash we shall not come against you for any future deficit. Each of the three letters contained a proviso that unless the federal government agreed to give the net proceeds from the coinage and the stamp issues, the federal government would presumably be required to cover any deficit. I was pleased to hear the President of Treasury Board agree, in answer to a question by me, that he would secure from these three gentlemen an assurance that upon the passage of this bill they would at least recognize that the provisos they mentioned in their letters of January 31 and February 1 have been met by the federal government.

A financial analysis was produced by the government on January 31 in which it was indicated that the deficit might amount to $172 million. It was also pointed out that of a total projected budget for the Olympics of $310 million, the cost of the main arena complex would amount to some $182 million. This is, of course, a major portion of the projected cost, and I would point out that the convertible roof for the arena is not even required as far as the Olympics are concerned.

• (1530)

Coming back to Hansard, in spite of this type of correspondence, the Prime Minister stuck to his story on January 29. Again, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), the Prime Minister said that the Olympics would not cost the Canadian government a penny. He went on to state, on January 31, at page 831:

—we are simply waiting for some valid assurance not only from a political point of view but from a legal point of view that the Canadian taxpayer will not be the backer in the final analysis.

As has been said, he did receive three letters which, from a legalistic point of view, really say nothing. They simply say that provided the government does certain things, namely, give the Olympic corporation the cash, it will not hold the government responsible for any resulting deficit. In spite of that, on February 2, against a deadline of February 3 when a presentation had to be made in Europe to the International Olympic Committee, he indicated finally that he was satisfied to go ahead with some legislation. That brings us to today. Perhaps I should touch upon one other point. It is interesting to note that on May 10, in answer to what I thought was a very relevant and direct question by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the Prime Minister gave what I felt was an extremely misleading answer. The question by the right hon. member for Prince Albert is found at page 3611 and reads as follows:

Does it not amount in fact to the people of Canada having to put up, because they will not receive the benefit of the coinage, some $200 million by indirect instead of direct contribution?

The Prime Minister answered:

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no, but I think the fact that it was asked proves, indeed, that the complexity of the question is not understood by the right hon. gentleman.

I think what I have related is an unfortunate tale to have to relate to this House. It is difficult to understand how the Prime Minister of a country like Canada could so systematically attempt to create the impression he is not going to contribute to a project, that he is not in any way going to give financial assistance or special aid, yet does exactly that. I believe there is an answer owing by the Prime Minister to the country. My point is that this is not a question of whether the Olympics is good or bad, or whether Montreal should receive this type of assistance but, rather, it is a question as to whether it is right for any government to be so deceitful about participation in a plan. At some stage do they not admit that they had planned for a significant period of time to do exactly what we have under consideration today?

As I said at the beginning, I believe as members of this House we have to accept reality. We have been led into a situation which is unfortunate. It sets a precedent that I feel will be repeated. In fact, if we read the letter from Mr. Rousseau we find he points out that as one of the advantages of his scheme is that it can be used to finance all kinds of various projects throughout the country he referred to the coinage seigniorage scheme.

We must accept the fact that our Prime Minister got us into this spot. If he wanted to make a grant for the Olympics in Montreal, I wish he had had the courage to say so by introducing whatever estimate he wanted in this House. It is my belief he would have received general support. He did not choose that route, and now having committed us in the name of Canada, we in the opposition had little alternative but to review the provisions of this bill in an effort to determine, by questioning the various representatives who appeared before the committee, what in fact they planned. In that regard I must say most of us were disturbed with the lack of planning that had gone into this matter.

I was pleased that our members were able to propose and have accepted six significant amendments which now appear in the bill before us today. One of these amendments put a limit on the number of coins that may be issued, the limit being set at $450 million. The amendment also limited the maximum amount that may be turned over to the Olympic corporation. It is $260 million. The amendments also require that there be a six months' reporting to this House concerning coinage and related matters, and that if 60 members of the House so desire, they may have the matter debated in the House and referred to the committee.

The amendments dealt with two very great discrepancies in the bill. The first is the fact that the Government of Canada could have been in the position, with the original wording of the bill, to have to issue coinage at a net consideration, which would have resulted in the coinage selling for less than face value. We now have a provision in one of our amendments which prevents that. We have a further provision that ensures that there cannot be side deals, indirect concessions, bonuses or kickbacks, whatever you like to call them, which would have the effect of allowing some persons to buy these coins at a discount.

We also have an amendment which specifically spells out the term "philatelic products" to make sure these are better defined. Finally, there is a provision which requires the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to call in any coins if he feels there is a circulation problem. As long as the Olympic corporation is in operation when the coins are called in, we have an assurance from the President of the Treasury Board and from representatives who appeared before the committee that a charge-back would be made against the Olympic corporation to cover any net loss as a result of the call-back of the coins.

There was one point that came up subsequent to the committee hearings. We have heard rumours that the Olympic organizers are contemplating the issue of privately minted coinage which might appear to be Olympic coinage. I have taken this matter up with the President of the Treasury Board, who has assured me that he will see to it that this type of coinage will not be issued if it would in any way result in confusion within or outside Canada between legal Canadian Olympic coinage and Olympic coinage which has no value as legal tender.

In short, I believe the committee has made the best of a poor situation. It is unfortunate that something which should be a great national event, the 1976 summer Olympics, has been the subject of this indirect and deceitful type of financing. I see no reason why this nation could not openly finance any project that this or any provincial parliament felt desirable, yet for reasons known only to the Prime Minister and the government they have systematically attempted to mislead the House and the public concerning their true intent. It was not necessary. I hope no government in Canada will stoop so low again. But faced with the reality, as we are today, I feel we have no alternative but to support the bill. However, I would emphasize that we should support it as amended.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, before the bill under consideration was introduced in the House, all parties, I think, had the opportunity to meet with His Worship Mayor Jean Drapeau, as well as the Commissioner General for the Olympic games, His Excellency, Mr. Rousseau. When they came to Ottawa, they met with representatives of practically all parties. I personally received them in my office, where I was told that even the New Democratic members supported their project.

When Mr. Drapeau came to Ottawa with Mr. Rousseau, both unfolded their project for the Olympics, and I think they seemed responsible people who were conversant with this matter. After having set forth their self-financing project, they asked for assistance from Ottawa. They did not come to beg from Ottawa funds that would be taken out of the federal treasury itself to be spent in Montreal. They came to suggest a plan studied by experts, and designed to ensure the funding of the Olympics.

Now, Bill C-196 mentions three projects: first, a national lottery, which would be held in all provinces; secondly, the issue of postal stamps which would enable the City of Montreal or COJO to make 2-cent profit per stamp, and thirdly, the issue of commemorative Olympic coins designed for collectors and which would be on sale throughout the world.

Yesterday, I heard the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) say that this would be a complete fiasco. He based his argument on this fiasco of Canada's centennial. But, Mr. Speaker, there is no possible comparison between the centennial which was a national celebration and in no way an international event as the Olympic Games will be, when we will greet people from all countries. As regards Canada's centennial, the hon. member for Timiskaming said that we had, I think, sold 3,500,000 coins and that the Olympic Games would require the coinage of 65 million coins.

Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker—if they do not, I do—that following the centennial, we have received orders for coins and we had all sorts of trouble getting any. We ran short of series, for instance, that were being asked. I got countless telephone calls and letters asking me how to go about getting those Canadian centennial commemorative coins.

In Germany, during the last Olympic Games, there was also a shortage of those coins and I believe the Olympic Games authorities, the mayor of Montreal and Mr. Rousseau went to Europe and here and there throughout the world to determine whether it might be possible to sell those coins to collectors and the general public. Mayor Drapeau tells us it might be possible to finance the Olympic Games through the sale of coins minted on that occasion. So, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Olympic Games constitute, for Montreal and the whole country, an excellent means of acquainting millions of people throughout the world with Canada.

In 1967, 52 million persons went to Expo. They stimulated commerce and encouraged Canadians in general, but especially Montrealers, Torontonians and westerners. We took advantage of our trip to Montreal to visit Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver, and I think that the Olympic Games will provide us with a similar opportunity.

We hear a lot about the losses resulting from Expo 67 in Montreal, but nobody mentions the revenue it provided, the economic development it fostered in Canada. Before Expo, Mr. Speaker, we did not have the highway system we have now; there was no subway in Montreal. Thanks to Expo, Montreal developed remarkably. By way of consequence, this helped even Toronto and Winnipeg. Even the riding of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) may have benefited. Mr. Speaker, if we consider only the liabilities and do not take into consideration how it benefited the people, our assessment is all wrong. Have we taken into account, for instance, the income tax paid by the citizens of Montréal and other Canadians who benefitted from Expo? That was never done. No one ever said either what Canada gained through income tax. The same thing will happen with the Olympic Games in 1976.

I realize that the possibilities would be greater if we had another system for financing the Olympic Games, which, whether we like it or not, will in the end have their justification. Vancouver had applied for the Olympic Games. Denver, in the U.S., and other cities in the rest of the world, including Moscow, made the same application. Why? Because it is an opportunity to make the city and the country where the Games are held better known.

When I visit France and ask the French if they know where Canada is situated, they answer they think it is close to China, which is far from the truth. If we invite them and if they come to visit us, they will find out that we are quite far from China. In fact, we are closer to France than to China.

Mr. Speaker, the Olympic Games will benefit Montréal and the whole of Canada; they will attract visitors from all parts of the world.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

This bill deals with a lottery. I am not what they call a gambler, but when one is against lotteries, one does not get any money in his pockets. It is profitable for the one who wins, but many have to chip in, and everybody knows that. Even when lotteries did not exist, people used to gamble. The Mini-Loto, the Super-Loto, Loto-Quebec and all other "lotos" in Quebec bring in profits; people just love to buy tickets. Even the Irish sweepstake operates wonderfully in Canada. I bet the hon. member for Timiskaming buys tickets for the Irish sweepstake. Instead of buying these tickets and sending his money to Ireland, he will be buying Canadian lottery tickets to finance the Olympic Games or part of them. He will thus promote something in this country. But yesterday, he spoke against the lottery—not against the Irish sweepstake which is not there to help the financing of the Montreal Olympic Games.

And now, the postage stamps. Nobody will be required to buy them. But if we do buy some, two cents per stamp will go to COJO. But we will not have to buy any. We will still be able to use the postage stamps showing the Western wheat fields or those in honour of Sir John A. Macdonald, at the regular price. But stamp collectors will buy a lot of those on the occasion of the Montreal Olympic Games.

If the hon. member for Timiskaming or his colleagues of the NDP do not want to buy any stamps, let them not buy any, but let them not prevent others from buying some if they wish to do so. It seems to me it is as simple as that. And, at the same time, we help the Olympic Games.

Concerning the coins, they are afraid too many will be issued; the hon. member said yesterday "out of a windbag—or something like that", coins based on nothing. But those who will be buying coins will indirectly contribute $2, I think, to COJO. These people will keep the coins and the money now in circulation will not be devalued. Those who will have them are not going to take anything from anyone. However, these coins will constitute a souvenir for their purchasers all over the world.

During centennial year coins were selling at higher cost than their value. We bought them just the same; this has not thrown the Canadian economy out of kilter. My set is at home and I am not using it. So it does not create inflation at all. And all those who have kept those coins obviously do not use them; so this is not what creates inflation or unbalances the economy of a country like Canada.

But the important point, the capital point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Olympics will be held in Canada, in the City of Montreal. Instead of objecting to it, we should with one voice congratulate the mayor of Montreal who brought them here. He really did and God knows how he devoted himself, travelled, spent his time, his money, everything, to put Montreal and Canada on the map.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, even at some cost, it is worth to make Canada known and to show the entire world that we too, a small nation of 20 million inhabitants, can hold the Olympic Games which, I think, will attract millions of people and enable Canada to show her great hospitality, her intellectual, physical, and material development, while the nations that do not know Canada today will have this unique opportunity of making themselves known.

That is why my colleagues and myself strongly support the request of Mayor Drapeau and the Organizing Committee of the Olympic Games. I suggest that the members stop opposing a bill that will enable Canada to be better known and have a stronger voice not only from the economic point of view, but also from the Olympic Games point of view, and to show that we, as every other nation, are interested in sports.

We saw not so long ago the Russian hockey team give us a surprise here in Canada, with regard to our national sport; we were almost beaten by people whom we thought were second rate. We found out that people learn how to play hockey outside Canada, and we learned it the hard way.

But now, in turn, we can show the whole world and our own people in Montreal that we are not only hockey players, but that we can train in other sports that our young athletes are first rate, enterprising, that they have achieved something. Those young people, I am convinced, will thank Mayor Drapeau of Montreal, Mr. Rousseau and COJO, and will be grateful to the Canadian Parliament for Bill C-196 which provides for the self-financing of the Olympic Games, not at our expense, but through a sensible program.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by reassuring the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) that my party is not opposed to the Olympics, nor is it opposed to sports generally. Had he read the remarks I made on June 28, he would know that I dealt with a number of the matters that he raised. Certainly I am as concered as he is about the success of the games. I will be as proud as he and all Canadians were of Expo. That is not the point of the argument. If that is what it appears to him, then he missed the point.

I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He spent a great deal of time attacking the irresponsibility of my political party, pointing out with a great deal of force and, I suppose, with a bit of logic some inconsistencies in our position. He interrupted the debate yesterday to suggest that we had somehow switched our position since early February. That is true: we have. That was admitted by me when I spoke on second reading on June 28, less than a month ago. I suppose it is the height of egotism to quote myself, but I said on that date:

> We recognize also that our opposition to Bill C-196 is a departure from the position I, personally, took last February in my response to the Prime Minister's statement on motions, which at that time was intended to assure the House that any deficit accruing from the games would not be borne by the federal government.

I make no apology for this. I think we would be irresponsible to pursue blindly a course we felt was wrong merely because in a quick response to a statement on motions we committed ourselves to God knows what deficit, approximately $500 million, which is as much as we spend per year on post-secondary education in this country, now to be spent on a two-week extravaganza, a two-week carnival of sweat. I hope my attitude would be no different if the same kind of financing scheme were dreamed up to finance the games kind be they held in Montreal, Vancouver or any other city. Let us get that straight.

I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe did an excellent job on the committee. But he was trapped. I realize he was trapped because a very prominent member of his party had pretty well committed them to what I think is a bad deal. As a matter of fact, his concluding remarks indicated that it was a bad deal and that they were going to attempt to make the best of it. The first response was to attack the irresponsibility of my party. I reject that, Mr. Speaker. What it exhibits to me is the well known psychological phenomenon associated with guilt, known as reversal formation—blame somebody else for your own problems.

● (1600)

The hon. member for York-Simcoe said that we have to accept reality. That sounds like a quotation from my words of February 6, but I no longer agree with that; and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that some other places no longer agree with it either. Denver, Colorado, did not agree with the winter Olympics: the population turned it down. And it was not to cost $500 million or $750 million, but a mere $3½ million. That figure is pale in comparison with the amount we are considering. My party was the only one consistently to oppose this bill on second reading as vigorously and as vociferously as we could, and through committee as well. We intend to vote against it on third reading. I am only sorry that we were not here to vote against it in a standing vote on second reading.

My colleagues, members of the government and those members of the opposition who are locked in—they might as well be members of the government—on this issue have a right to ask why we oppose the bill. I will tell those hon. members why. I cannot help their embarrassment; that is their own problem and has nothing to do with me. I think it would be fair to say that our position on this matter is based on the following grounds. First of all, we take the position that if the Olympic games are worth funding at all, they are worth funding properly through an outright federal grant. If they are not worth funding that way, then they are not worth funding by any method, especially by a gimmicky, half-baked assortment of coins, stamps and lotteries.

When we spoke on February 6 we had no idea how the funding was to be done, nor had anybody else. Nobody knows, not even the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) or the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). About 80 per cent of the Olympics is to be financed by this gimmick. We think that is ludicrous, patent nonsense. But 80 per cent of the Olympic financing depends on the coin scheme alone. Nothing has convinced me or my party that a deficit can be avoided.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has assured us that there will be no additional request for federal support. The mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec have assured him of that. But if there is a deficit and the federal government does not pick it up, who does? The deficit will be borne by those Canadians who live in Montreal and Quebec, those people who by and large have an income of about half the national average but who have twice the unemployment experienced in other provinces. We are going to ask those Canadians to pick up the deficit.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Rose: My colleague says that we will do it eventually. I would rather do it now. If it is worth while, let us do it now; let us not get ourselves involved in this kind of nonsense. The analysts working for the President of the Treasury Board predicted at the committee hearings a deficit of $150 million to $170 million. At that time I asked the minister whose analysis he would be more inclined to accept, that of COJO or that of his own department. I think he is loyal to his staff; he replied that he preferred the response of his own officials.

We are committed to a downhill run with such momentum that it cannot be stopped. Well, Denver stopped it. I do not think the Olympics necessarily need be stopped, but I think we need a much better financing foundation. Members of the opposition are not reassured at all, but they are muzzled. They have the same misgivings they have always had, but they are committed.

According to the Postmaster General, this scheme contemplates the minting of $450 million worth of gold and silver coins over the next four years, roughly half of which are to be sold overseas. All the silver coins circulated in Canada since confederation have amounted to only $317 million, according to the master of the Mint. We are going to put all that extra coinage into circulation, which will mean the importation of 51 million troy ounces of silver in a world desperately short of silver for industrial purposes. We are going to make souvenir coins and thus bury the silver after we have spent time taking it out of the ground. This is legal tender which will go into circulation. It will cause trouble to everybody, including COJO. This is my first reservation.

My second reservation is that the priorities are all wrong. I am sorry that the hon. member for Témiscamingue has left the Chamber, because he made reference to something which I should like to correct. We feel that the spending priorities in this connection are all wrong. The amount involved is $500 million. Somebody will say it is really only $350 million, but the Germans started out at $152 million and ended up at $700 million. Also, on second reading the President of the Treasury Board said there could be some escalating costs over the four years, so I think $500 million is reasonably conservative. One per cent of $500 million—that is, $5 million—would build 100 community swimming pools in the city of Montreal for the youth whom the hon. member for Témiscamingue is so concerned about. They are desperately short of recreation facilities in Montreal and could use 100 outdoor pools, not necessarily of Olympic size. That is why we question the spending priorities.

I mentioned earlier that Mr. Drapeau and Mr. Bourassa would pick up the deficit. But how do we know that either of these hon. gentlemen will be in office in 1976? We have no assurance of that. These gentlemen are honourable in all ways, but we do not know whether they will still be in office in 1976. We are going to be asked to help with the deficit, and I for one want to help; make no mistake about that. Across the river is the city of Hull. For the last ten years that city has been trying to get an indoor swimming pool. The city officials recently cancelled a $12 million recreation complex on the ground that there is no money for it. They need $12 million. The Olympics want $500 million.

Let us for the moment forget about pollution, slums, traffic and problems such as providing plumbing and preventing illiteracy in Montreal. The point is that there is no money in the budget for the city of Hull. They go to the province and are told there is no money. They go to the federal government and are told there is no money. Other communities across the country are in the same difficulty. If they want to play ice hockey and ask for money to build a rink, they are told, sorry, but there is no money from the federal government; why not do it with volunteers? If they need a stadium for a track team, the answer is that there is no money. They go to Sports Canada who say, sorry, we are not in the business of capital financing; we can help with coaching, but not with money.

Yet we are to spend $500 million in this area. Why could we not spend $500 million to meet Canadian recreational needs, raising the money as the money for the Olympics is to be raised? Why should we not put out special coins in order to supply every community with recreational amenities such as stadiums, community pools and that sort of thing? But no, we do not do that because, we say, we do not have any money. That is nonsense.

Mr. Peters: What about hockey?

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has mentioned hockey. That is one of the sports at which we do well. Why? Is it because we spend a great deal of money on rinks? No. We are a northern country, and our kids skate on rivers and ponds. Yet in every community kids get up at four o'clock in the morning, with their coaches, because there is not enough ice time to allow them to play during the day. We lack these facilities. If we build stadiums, pools and tracks, I am sure that in ten years we could be as good at other Olympic sports as we are at hockey. That is why we question the kinds of priorities represented by this bill. We are fed up with this attitude of the government.

The Fitness and Amateur Sport Act has been in existence since 1962. Since that time some $60 million has been budgeted for the purpose of fitness and amateur sport in Canada. In the last ten years only half of the allocated budget has been taken up. Every year $5 million has been devoted to this area, which means that roughly $60 million could have been spent. Yet only about $30 million has been taken up. That being so, why is the allocation to be raised to $9.8 million this year? Some people are a bit cynical and suspicious about these things. The Fitness and Amateur Sport Act entitles the government to make special arrangements with certain provinces, so there may be more to this iceberg than the tip we see at the moment. I realize that is "insinnuendo".

An hon. Member: That's a good word; leave it in Hansard.

Mr. Rose: I meant insinuation. As well, we do not have all the necessary information. The President of the Treasury Board assured us that each province would get its fair share of the $9.8 million, and I have no reason to doubt that. The act entitles the provinces to that. I suggest, however, that as one province may have entered into an agreement under this act, the other provinces may get their fair share—but perhaps not for several years. That amount may not be split right down the middle in any one year. I will leave it at that.

My third misgiving is this. We were denied information in committee. The hon. member for York-Simcoe made much of the NDP voting with the government against what I regard as the questionable political manoeuvre of bringing the Prime Minister before our committee. I do not know that the Prime Minister could have added a great deal. Of course, I would not have opposed his appearing if he had wanted to give us information. What troubled me was that only the Postmaster General, the master of the Mint, and the President of the Treasury Board were called as witnesses. Any moves for calling Mayor Drapeau, the Green Space people of Montreal, Bruce Kidd or other athletes who might be opposed to this bill were disallowed. We even moved to have the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) testify as an expert, but were not allowed to call him.

We wanted proper information and were prevented from getting it in committee. I do not know why. The thing is that the statement on motions had been made on February 6. Why did it take so long? Why did we need to wait from February 6 until the hot days of July before the committee could consider this bill? Why were we put on the block and bludgeoned into processing this bill? I do not know. Well, I do. It was getting warm, summer was here, and we were expected to get on with it. Yet motions for the appearance of witnesses were turned down uniformly by a coalition of Liberals and Conservatives on the committee. The motion by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) for limiting the number of coins that could be put into the pay envelopes of poorly-paid Montreal civic workers was turned down by the Liberals and Conservatives on the committee. I am not saying the Conservatives did not put forward good criticisms: they put forward excellent ones but did not back them up.

An hon. Member: They were in bed with the Liberals.

Mr. Rose: I am not worried about that; that is not my concern. They are a party of principle, and I wish they would back their convictions with their votes. I do not know what brought about the change of heart. I only know one thing, that the committee was absolutely deadlocked on Thursday two weeks ago. When we came back, by Tuesday night all the amendments went flying through. I do not know how it happened. I think the Conservatives were trying to make parliament work. Anyway, all the Conservative motions were passed.

The Conservatives tried to make a good deal this afternoon of their putting this and that through in committee, yet they did not ever question the principle of the bill. They took what I termed the cornflakes approach, accepting the prize in the cornflakes package. That was their approach to funding the Olympics. They were not against the bill. They limited the total expenditure package to $450 million and wanted to limit the income to $240 million. I do not know why they were interested in limiting the net returns on these sales.

Hon. members to my right will demand reports in future, and want to include in the bill what I term a 60-member review clause. They stole that idea from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who introduced it in connection with the corporations bill. Those hon. members know a lot about corporations. In any event, they did not really question the principle of the bill, and it is the principle that my party attempted to question. I want to make that clear.

We must not forget that we were told this scheme will not cost the federal government any money. Let me remind hon. members that the basic cost to Canadians, the seed money, if you like, to start this venture is $100 million. There is about $50 million for housing, $27 million for security and $25 million for broadcasting. If you add the seigniorage for $250 million which the government will not get from the sale of these coins, that brings you pretty close to $350 million. So don't suggest this will not cost us anything, because that is misleading. Such suggestions mislead the public and I think the public will wake up to this one of these days.

In the second reading debate my party was concerned, as were other hon. members, about the lack of concrete planning. The Postmaster General and the President of the Treasury Board admitted before the committee that they did not know how things would work out. They suggested that in the matter of the coins we are breaking new ground. They were in the dark and did not know what would happen. They are probably pushing on like lemmings, to be drowned in the sea of their own optimism. I do not mind so long as they do not take the Canadian people with them. I would object to that because it would be most unfair.

My party is concerned in case the Olympic village funded by Central Mortgage and Housing becomes a ghetto of the future. We know that at least 70,000 citizens of Montreal back the Green Space committee which sent in a petition objecting to the present location of the village. I know that Dr. Goldbloom, the municipal affairs minister of Quebec, is also concerned.

An hon. Member: They should fill a lake.

Mr. Rose: I don't know if they will fill a lake or chop an island in two. In any event, my party is also concerned about the $27 million worth of armed forces and police security which will turn Montreal into an armed camp for two weeks in 1976. The security personnel will not be there to protect us from the citizens of Montreal but they will be required, hon. members may agree, if they recall what happened in Munich and in Mexico City. Security forces are needed because people like the Black September gang use these large spectaculars to make some kind of point which their warped minds can understand but mine cannot. Hon. members know this will happen: They know the place will be an armed camp. We would be concerned about these things happening, whether the Olympics were being held in Vancouver, Toronto or Halifax. It does not have anything to do with the location; that is irrelevant. It is still a bad deal.

● (1620)

It has not escaped the notice of many members, including some members opposite, that leading editorial and sports writers have applauded the stand of the New Democratic Party. This is not confined to English language newspapers such as the Globe and Mail and the Star. It includes such prestigious French language journals as La Presse and Le Devoir. These editorials in themselves do not make the NDP position right. However, I think it is. Truth is not a matter of how many people believe in something. The fact that we have this type of support indicates that the stand we have taken, regardless of its linguistic overtones, is right.

I do not know how much time I have left. It is fair to ask what our party proposes as alternatives. There are basically two alternatives. We want a less expensive Olympics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: At the moment, there are perhaps only five cities in the world that could host an Olympics of this magnitude. This rules out many countries such as the developing countries of Africa and Asia. They cannot afford it. We would like a less extravagant Olympics. We are prepared to openly grant up to $200 million. We do not want it to be financed in the same way as paying off a church mortgage.

The second point is that, for reasons of security, we feel the Olympic games should be dispersed among the cities of central Canada such as Quebec City, Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. Facilities already exist in these places. There are college campuses with dormitories and stadiums. It is not necessary to build a stadium costing $178 million which will only be for the benefit of the NFL or the Expos baseball team.

I regret we have to stand alone on this issue. There has been excellent criticism from the party to my right, and by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané). I am sorry the misgivings and criticisms voiced have gone virtually unheeded. I am sorry the hon. member for Matane could not get the help of his colleagues on this matter. This event will not do anything for the average citizen of Montreal. However, he will have to pay for it. He probably will not even attend the games. He will be able to watch it on television, but he could do that if they were located in outer Mongolia.

Companies will probably purchase tickets in large blocks to be given to their friends, as is the case with hockey games and the National Arts Centre. They give these tax free gifts to the boys for promotional purposes. The average Canadians will be lined up from the Ottawa River to Vancouver in an attempt to get tickets.

I share the hopes of many Liberals and Conservatives that I am dead wrong on this question. I hope I am dead wrong.

Mr. Stanfield: I just hope you are dead.

Mr. Rose: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is not serious in his hope for my instant mortality, or is it immortality? I certainly feel the same toward him. Maybe a few severe chest pains would help him see reality and how close we are to being involved in this ludicrous nonsense.

All Canadians were proud of Expo. I am sure they will be proud of the Olympic games. We agree on that. However, that is not the point. We do not like the method of funding the games. In spite of the Treasury Board's analysis, I hope the estimates of the President of the Treasury Board and the Postmaster General, who are sitting benignly surrounded by silver coins, are correct and mine are wrong. It would be a pleasure to hop out of my cozy bed and have my place taken by members of the official opposition on this: it would be a nice change.

For my efforts I have been called a racist and a bigot. An hon. member called me something else which is not parliamentary. These things may have some relevance, but I do not think anything in our record warrants that kind of appellation being applied to me or my party. I regret the government saw fit to include only Francophones on this committee. I think the linguistic overtones were enhanced by that decision, and I am sorry about it. Recently, the CBC took a poll with regard to the acceptance of the Montreal Olympics. It showed that 80 per cent of the people in the province of Quebec are in favour of the Olympics. When a second question was asked, whether they would be in favour of the Olympics if there was a deficit, 80 per cent were against.

I would love to have been in cabinet and overheard the discussions on this bill. I hope the optimist will be accurate and the pessimists will be wrong. If we are going to have the Olympics, we want them to be a success. We have outlined our objections in detail. I am sorry we did not have a more searching examination in committee. I am sorry we had to be dependent upon the gentlemen I mentioned earlier. However, I feel we have at last had some opportunity to examine this question and, on the basis of that examination, to expose its faults. On the basis of that examination we are voting against the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly for fear of being unjustly accused of unduly delaying the passing of this bill.

Now that we are about to dispose of the motion that the bill on the 1976 Olympic Games be read the third time, we must not once again forget that since the end of the 1972 Munich Games the whole world, and especially the younger generation, have an appointment in Montreal in 1976. I would like the most incredulous of us to know that, in accordance with the spirit of the Olympic movement, many developing countries will be participating in the 1976 Games. We will see on the podium the greatest champions in all the disciplines and undoubtedly athletes from underprivileged nations who, because of their achievements and their long training, will find the required energy and courage to have faith in the building of their countries. And would it be only for them, the most sceptical among us should consider and reconsider their judgment about the opportunity and advisability of holding these Olympic Games.

As far as I am concerned, to reiterate what I stated clearly during the debate on second reading, I believe in the Olympic Games. I believe in the 1976 Montreal Olympic Games and I cannot accept the pessimistic utterances of some NDP members.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we must commend however the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) who tacitly at least did not seem to endorse the views of some of his colleagues and did not readily yield to the temptation to disparage Montreal, its mayor, Quebec and the Olympic Games.

In the same breath, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fair to single out the Leader of the Social Credit (Mr. Caouette) who this afternoon in an enthusiastic and vigorous speech expressed his deep feelings about the Olympic Games and has undoubtedly impressed all members by clearly saying what most of us believe at the bottom of our hearts.

Mr. Speaker, the 1976 games will leave in Montreal and throughout the country some new infrastructure components and more particularly a genuine infrastructure for amateur sport and physical fitness.

Because of the Games a stadium and related facilities will be built capable of accommodating in addition to the professional baseball, football, soccer, and other teams, record crowds coming from all corners of the world to participate in various conventions, world-wide rallies which will benefit the whole country.

Because of the Games and for the very benefit of its industrial and commercial institutions, or even for the benefit of any one of its levels of government, severely schooled in new challenges, Canada will have acquired modern techniques and human skills.

Because of the Games, and somewhat as a result and consequence of the 1967 World Exhibition, people or social groups from Panet Street in Montreal or Grande-Allée in Quebec City, from Matane or Saint-Hyacinthe, as well as Halifax or Vancouver will have taken a liking to opening up to the world and, as one could say, to having "windows fully opened on the world." They will have tried to make our problems, our inspirations known to others but also they will have learned to better appreciate the problems, inspirations and accomplishments of others and thanks to those international exchanges, a new spirit will evolve, a spirit that will inevitably have the effect of inspiring in its wake the development of elements of that new cultural, social and economic substructure and even the setting up of facilities likely to increase our means and add to the well-being of the community.

Because of the Games, Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal who already have on Mount Royal one of the greatest natural green parks in the world will have recovered more than half of notorious ViaPark, the use of which, unfortunately, until now was restricted to a very few privileged people, who even at that had to be golfers. And perhaps here again, Mr. Speaker, the Games might have the consequential effect of increasing in Montreal and elsewhere in the country the number of green areas and above all the number of those who will truly want to use them for purposes of pure relaxation or as a place to do their physical fitness exercises.

Thanks to these games—and this is most important and certainly will be available to all citizens of our large country—a permanent substructure in the area of amateur sport and physical fitness will be set up throughout Canada. No doubt it will be from this long term result that we will be able to judge the opportunity and the wisdom of holding the Olympic Games in Canada in 1976.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a country where our professional sport is as much out of our control as our economy. I am convinced that with the representations made by our young people, the games of 1976 will force us, after the event to get out of this kind of amateurism of ours, in the area of amateur sport, an amateurism which is revealed by the absence of a real government policy on sports and spare time activities, by frictions in this area at the different provincial and federal jurisdiction levels, by the reluctance of the educational world, unfortunately by the lack of specialized instructors and highly qualified trainers.

Between now and 1976 the Games will at last give Canada as a whole the opportunity to discover a new kind of motivation and a reinforced determination to secure in the area of sports and spare time activities the qualified resources which will remain with us after 1976. These resources, strengthened by the fire of the olympic flame, will enable young people from Point St. Charles or from other districts in Montreal, who live in houses without running water or bathtub, or shower, or whose father is unemployed, to have other option than drug or the lane "macadam". They will be encouraged to throw themselves wholeheartedly into pole jumping, javelin throwing or what have you. Mr. Speaker, I want to say here that before 1976 and afterwards, we will have to combine our efforts at the different levels of government to solve the unemployment problem, to check the constant increase in the cost of living, in food prices in particular, pharmaceuticals, clothing and housing. We will have to ensure that every Canadian, in Montreal and elsewhere, enjoy normal health conditions and, on a broader scope, that they all have equal opportunities to develop in life. But—and everyone without exception will likely admit it—they were not matters brought forth by the spirit of Bill C-196 as such and which it could solve or had to solve. For once, Mr. Speaker, politics can serve sport instead of using it. Therefore, I urge all my colleagues to grasp this occasion firmly.

Given the 1976 Games, and this Bill C-196, let politics have a chance to serve sports. It can and must serve them, especially considering the fact that amateur sports, and even more so the Olympic Games, have a bearing on all the great problems that condition the future of our civilization: youth, the use of leisure, urbanization, environment and even medical research.

There is no doubt that resounding lessons, that will benefit all Canadians, will be learned because the Olympic Games will be held in Canada. Mr. Speaker, the social impact of the 1976 Games, a few aspects of which I have just pointed out, deserves our attention, but we should not forget their economic impact as well, which will be measured mainly by the increased flow of tourists throughout the country, not only while the Games are being held but long afterwards.

These are arguments that reach much farther that national pride and international prestige. Those are arguments which, I am convinced, will stir in all Canadians a feeling of solidarity with the 1976 Games, and in that feeling of solidarity, the will to contribute to their success.

Commemorative coins, stamps, a national lottery, will all be as many opportunities for Canadians to say "yes", according to each individual's possibilities, to the 1976 Olympic Games. First, the promoters, then the Canadian people, must discharge their very special responsibility, that of proving to the world that from here on, the Olympic Games will be financially within the reach of the developing countries, whether they be African or Latin American.

In the course of the debate on second reading, as well as in a committee, during the exchanges of information and the introduction of amendments, everybody managed to throw light on and define this bill. Now, on third reading, I have no doubt that in every part of the nation, regardless of political affiliations, through their constant interest, and interventions, hon. members who represent those areas, who represent those political parties, hear testimony today to the national and truly Pan Canadian responsibility of the 1976 Games.

Let us make sure, Mr. Speaker, that once this legislation is passed, it will not become the sole responsibility of the present government, but that of Parliament as a whole and, consequently, let us be in our constituencies the promoters of the 1976 Games for the Canadian people.

Let us inform our constituents of the national challenge of 1976, of the costs of such a challenge, but also of the real and already anticipated benefits. Mr. Speaker, all Canadians, regardless of their province, their mother tongue and their culture, should be proud, as they are, I believe, to see their country be in 1976, the host and the crossroad of a world event which is essentially peaceful.

● (1650)

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I make it a point to express a few thoughts on third reading of this very important bill. Since I have always taken an interest in recreational activities, I did not want to miss this opportunity to make a few comments.

On second reading, I have had the opportunity, as a good many other members, to make some comments on the bill designed to finance the Olympic Games of 1976 and, I regretted, of course, the mitigated part taken by the government. I would have hoped that, considering the national character of the games and the national and international participation in these games, Canadians would not hesitate to take the risk of making some profit or incurring deficits, and I realize at the stage of the third reading that while we are considering the possibility of financing the games, we are very careful not to commit ourselves in the event financial problems arise.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I say, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) pointed out earlier, if politics serve sports, perhaps the political context badly serves COJO. I was very pleased to hear the comments of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, and I do not question for a moment his interest in the success of these games, not only for the benefit of the province of Quebec but also for that of all participants, in whatever capacity they act, as spectators or as amateurs.

[Mr. Wagner.]

But I said that the political context could ill serve the interests and the possibilities of success of COJO because we know perfectly well that the government, on the one hand, found it a little embarrassing to open wide its doors to provide more assistance and, on the other, we also know that certain political parties are opposing it for other reasons, in attempting to shift the problem or in assuring themselves that Canadians will not have to pay a penny more that what the bill provides.

But we agree and we accept and we boast to whoever wants to listen that these events will be beneficial, which also constitutes a commitment, I think, by all Canadians, if we recognize—and we all do—the national character of the Olympic Games of 1976.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that there has been talks between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Mayor Drapeau of Montreal. It is also obvious that, after the elections held last October, it was embarrassing for the government to do more than it does.

It is also obvious that, unfortunately, political interests often take precedence over the interests of society. This has led the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) to say yesterday, on behalf of his party, that he would accept no other financial obligation than those described in the bill before us.

So, I think that, politically speaking, we are trying to protect some regions which would be less favourable than others to these Olympic Games, while we are showing eagerness in saying that those events are a national feature, and since we recognize it, we have to take part in those events and commit ourselves as Canadians.

I certainly deplore the position of the New Democratic Party which persisted in shifting its ground when maintaining that if all those millions were earmarked for housing, sewer services, infrastructures of all kinds, it would readily endorse the bill. We know perfectly well that the Olympic Games will take place, as other members were saying a moment ago, and that there still will be some problems in that area.

Some people are suggesting that the games will be a two-week affair, and that the millions involved are an unacceptable expense for Canadians, particularly if ever Quebecers had to shoulder a deficit as foreseen by the government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think we solved the issue by shifting the problem. On the contrary, these social or economic problems exist and will continue to exist but it will become possible to do more in the field of leisure as the Olympic Games will arouse a motivation which will last much longer than the two weeks of the games. Some regional and provincial leisure organizations are already in operation. The federation of leisure organization will operate better than ever and after the olympic events these structures will continue to operate. I think it is an advantage and an honour for Canada to host the games. As Canada is a relatively young country compared with others, I think it will achieve remarkable success as it will have made sensitized not only the federal government but also provincial governments, municipal organizations and municipalities themselves deeply aware of amateur sports.

Municipalities complain about the lack of necessary institutions, the lack of basic tools, the lack of educators, instructors and trainers. I think the motivation that young and also older people are already getting will prompt to vote the funds which will enable Canadians to improve their physical fitness.

We know the importance of being physically apt in our society today.

Mr. Speaker, no doubt that even if this bill is limited to the financing of the games, quite contradictory views have been expressed in committee and at the second and third reading stages. To come back to the position taken by the New Democratic Party, I do not want to forget the statement made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) following the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the involvement of the Federal government. Mention was made of it yesterday and I think that it is worth repeating. He said, and I quote:

—my party welcomes the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today in which he took some trouble to outline the parameters of federal involvement in Canada's first Olympic games. We wish our first Olympic games every possible success as a potentially great moment in the history of our nation.

Since then, we have heard quite different stories. However, I am not at all surprised by the NDP's new position, considering that since last January 4, that party has often changed its mind and made sure that this legislation which might embarrass the government is adopted. I would even go so far as to say that if the Progressive Conservative Party was against this bill, the New Democratic Party would be for it. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canadians who have seen members of that party at work since the beginning of the session are very much impressed by their statements.

I regret that they tried to put Mayor Drapeau on trial or tarnish his reputation concerning his administration, because I feel that several political parties would have liked to be able to count on such a popular man with tremendous achievements to his credit. Of course, some people in Montreal will complain about not having such and such a service, but I think that Mayor Drapeau has done one extraordinary thing for Montreal: he put that city on the map so that is better known throughout the world, and the participation that we will witness in 1976 will be beneficial not only to Montreal, but also to all Canadian cities. We will be welcoming important visitors and I think that the economic impact will be worthwhile, because there will be opportunities of inviting people from abroad to come and visit us, and they will leave something as was the case with Expo '67.

Before concluding I would like to talk about the deficit which the government expected. Even if some members of COJO are rather optimistic towards the possibility of a deficit, nevertheless the responsibility of Quebecers should not be ignored. I think we should especially consider that such a situation could occur.

We know the present context and position of Quebec within Canada. Let us imagine for a moment that there will be a deficit and that Quebecers and Montrealers would be solely responsible for it.

Oddly enough, in the committee last week limits were put on the possibility of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret but I must interrupt the hon. member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse)—Air Transport—Suggested provision of shuttle service between Toronto-Montreal and Toronto-Ottawa; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Exhibitions—Expo '74, Spokane, Washington—Reason for failure of Canada to have pavilion; the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard)—Canadian National—Quebec—Bilingualism among passenger service employees.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills; notices of motions, papers; public bills.

● (1700)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels and I think there is agreement to deal with notices of motions for the production of papers. If that is agreeable, we would call No. 79 standing in the name of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert). I understand that the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) wishes to move it on his behalf.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the parliamentary secretary. Is this agreed by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LOAN OFFER TO THE NEWSPAPER "LE SOLEIL" OF QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi), for Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse), moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the contract and all documents relating to a grant by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the newspaper Le Soleil of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all my hon. colleagues very sincerely for allowing me to move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who had to attend the funerals of one of his brothers, and I take this opportunity to offer him my most heartfelt sympathy.

The motion now before us which I had the honour to move on behalf of the hon. member for Bellechasse has been on the Order Paper since February 21, 1973. It asks that the House order the ministry to issue all the documents relating to a grant offer which has reportedly been made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to the Corporation du journal Le Soleil of Quebec City. As this is a motion of public interest, I hope that I shall be supported by all my colleagues, so that the motion may be carried before 6 o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, it is neither on a sudden impulse that we are requesting the issue of these documents nor to satisfy our own curiosity. On the contrary, we aim at enlightening the Canadian people as to the way appropriations which are made available to the various departments are being used.

During recent days, through the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who made a long statement in the House and through the tabling of a green paper on conflicts of interest of ministers and members of Parliament, the government has tried to reassure the public concerning the honesty of ministers and members of Parliament who are responsible for the administration of public funds.

The government also tried to inform the public about the measures it intends to take to ensure the independence of its members against the economic dictatorship which exerts increasing pressures upon the political power, both at the legislative and executive level.

Lastly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a long statement in which he put before Parliament the measures he intends to have accepted in order to prevent conflicts of interest.

Under the rules governing this House, hon. members are given extraordinary privileges based upon the principle of democracy. Among those privileges, there is the right for every member to control funds made available to the various departments of which the minister is responsible to Parliament. Consequently, it is reasonable and normal for a minister to reply to an enquiry made by a member. One may reply that the government set out criteria for the production of such papers that were published on March 15th, 1973. The general principle of those criteria is the following:

General Principle

To enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistant with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Following that, we find a list of exemptions which I will not read entirely, with the permission of the House. However, I should like to quote section No. 10.

Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

That means that the papers could not be tabled as long as negotiations leading up to a contract have not been concluded. In the present case, which is mentioned in the motion, section 10 does not apply, since it is not a matter of pending negotiations prior to a contract. On the contrary, the negotiations ended a long time ago, the agreement was signed and the subsidy granted, since it was the topic of the article published in all the newspapers.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was set up by an act of Parliament. Regulations governing the application of that legislation were drawn by senior officials. This department's purpose is to encourage regional economic development by granting special advantages to industries through loans or subsidies. Subsidies can be offered to manufacturing or processing industries which set up, enlarge or modernize their plants in designated areas, or special areas.

Most manufacturing and processing industries are eligible for subsidies except oil refineries, industries transforming minerals into concentrates, and pulp and paper industries.

● (1710)

However, it is stipulated that in some "special areas" subsidies can be granted to industries that are not eligible under the terms of the regional development incentives program. Was that rule applied in the case of Le Soleil mentioned in the motion?

Can printing be considered as a manufacturing or processing operation? If the answer is yes, why can the same not be said of milling industries, which use all types of grains and other products and transform them into cubed feed? Recognizing that grants can be made to a newspaper—whether it be Le Soleil of Quebec or any other—while refusing to grant them to milling enterprises, constitute to my mind a most serious weakness which should be remedied right away.

This reminds me of the case of the Meunerie coopérative de Saint-François, which was destroyed by fire. Members of the co-operative have decided to rebuild the millstone factory and to modernize their industry. Eleven jobs have thus been created, but that firm could not benefit from any grant from the Department.

If by subsidizing newspapers we in fact help them to get better organized in order to provide the public with a better quality information and to free them from the obligation to accept any kind of dangerous advertising which gives our children a bad orientation and causes a lot of concern to parents and the authorities in general, at least the government will have a valid argument to justify his policy.

What we are asking for through this motion is simply some information. And as representatives elected by the people and members of Parliament, which is after all the highest authority in this country, it seems that we have a right to know in detail the arrangements which have been reached concerning the subsidies granted by the executive.

Who will monitor the way in which the taxpayer's money is spent if the government refuses to answer the inquiries of members of this House?

It will be perhaps answered that the Auditor General is responsible for that. I agree; however, my hon. colleagues know quite well that in the last few years the reports of the auditor have been quite severe, but did the government take them into account?

In the notes of the last report of the Auditor General one can read at paragraph 107: "Shared costs under a development contract not verified. Basic documents not released."

Mr. Speaker, even the Auditor General complains about a lack of information due to the unavailability of basic documents.

At page 91 of his last report the Auditor General states in his remarks on the use of funds allocated to local initiative projects, and I quote:

1. Extensions to the Program from May 31 to June 16, to September 30 and then to November 30, 1972, substantially altered it from a winter job-creating program to one of continuing employment aid.

2. Contributions were made to projects in circumstances where improvements to privately-owned property were being financed in whole or in part from funds provided under the Program.

And at paragraph 5 one can read:

5. Some project workers were self-employed, such as farmers and fishermen, while others were full-time students. Several instances were noted where individuals received wages from projects while employed elsewhere on a full-time basis.

Mr. Speaker, all this to say that in addition to the Auditor General the official opposition has an important role to play not only at the legislative level but also at the administrative level.

The Prime Minister himself one day stressed the value of a good parliamentary opposition. He noted the increasing complexity of the business of the state and the difficulties facing conscientious members as well as the necessity of modernizing the way in which the House of Commons deals with the business of the state.

I know the parliamentary secretary who will be rising on the subject will talk about the importance of preserving and respecting the confidential nature of corporate relationships with the various departments.

However, while trusting the executive, the fact remains that the whole thing is administered by human beings who are subject to errors; that is why it is important for our democracy that the opposition be enabled to discharge its duty. This is also the reason why the procedure is to the effect that, in some cases, members are entitled to move motions to demand the production of papers.

In a way, the government has created another department by establishing an agency called Information Canada. It is a necessary agency which will surely be helpful to the Canadian people, if it discharges its duty in an suitable manner.

Must we now create another agency for the information of members of Parliament? I hope not! That is why, on behalf of the hon. member for Bellechasse, I ask for concurrence in this motion.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out the quite remarkable tenacity of the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada. This is the third motion of this kind moved in the House under similar circumstances.

They are of course still dissatisfied with the government's position. This is why I wish to reiterate certain points which perhaps have not been sufficiently clarified by previous interventions.

First, the government's reply is quite clear. If the documents which are demanded or at least requested are not produced it is not to deprive the opposition of an opportunity to review the merits of the grant but because of a question of privilege.

As indicated in the past, and as so competently emphasized by the member for Abitibi (M. Laprise), when an invitation is made to certain applicants, that is to say corporations or individuals interested in benefiting from the program which has been developed, it is understood that any information supplied to the department will be considered confidential.

Indeed it is indicated in the documentation gathered by the parties that the government undertakes to keep as confidential all information supplied and everyone will agree this is justified.

We must admit—and I am convinced that this is recognized by members of the Social Credit—that we still live in a country where capitalism is most important and, in fact, is the basis of our economic system. They will also admit that in our commercial exchanges, we have always accepted the necessity of maintaining discretion and keeping for ourselves the information exchanged between the parties. If the department is to discharge its duties as responsible department, it will have to obtain all available information to make its choice and take the right decision. Therefore it must be fully informed. To obtain this information the department must guarantee to the applicant that it will be kept confidential.

The same thing will happen when the member for Abitibi will see his banker and ask him to lend him some money or grant him some financial advantage. He would not like the banker to begin spreading here and there the information provided to him.

Someone argued that the member must have the information and that it must be given to him. But we use some procedures; the estimates have been mentioned, how they must be reviewed and dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, we have just completed the consideration of the government estimates.

● (1720)

The Social Credit Party of Canada is entitled to go to the committee on regional development to consider the estimates of that department. It rests with its members to obtain information, if there is an issue to be raised, that is any indication that in the approval of an application something was not entirely right.

There are advantages. Previously, the Creditist member may have had difficulties, since the estimates were considered in the House, but thanks to the amendments to the Standing Orders of the House, the review of those estimates has been transferred to the various committees and necessarily, if anything has brought up questions to the member's mind, he might have inquired during the consideration of the estimates.

In addition, he points out that his notice of motion has been on the order paper since February 21. We have had since that date the opportunity to examine the estimates of the department. The hon. member could have then delved into the matter that interested him in view of the fact that he introduced his motion in the House through private members business.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) mentioned he was proud that the department was created and that he hoped it would expand. If he really did he sould make sure that all people who submit an application to the department are protected and that the information they will provide will be held in strict confidence. On the other hand, if the objective of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), as presented by the hon. member for Abitibi, is to obtain or require some information I can assure him that he will obtain almost unlimited co-operation from the department.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a case which, to my knowledge, has been a great help to my constituents: I obtained on request, with the co-operation of the department, that a seminar should be held in my riding to inform the merchants of the benefits available to them through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and according to the reports I read, the officials did a good job and they provided all the essential information required to complete the applications. But, at that time it was clearly stated, with the public's approval, that all this information was held in the strictest confidence to the satisfaction of the people concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to mention that the department has deemed it advisable, for sometime, to table in the House a monthly report which outlines the government's policy concerning the point raised by the hon. member. The table of contents of the report for April 1973 which I have at hand gives an idea of the report. Part I gives summary statistics. Part 2 deals with incentives grant activity during the month, detailing all grants. Part 3 deals with loan guarantee activity during the month and Part 4, with definitions.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to quote the third paragraph on page 2 of the Report on Regional Development Incentives of April 1973. I understand that this paragraph is reproduced in all the reports. It reads, and I quote:

> The purpose of this monthly report is to provide Parliament and the general public with up-to-date information on the operation of the regional development incentives program. The report contains summary statistics on administrative actions taken from the inception of the program until the end of the month in question, together with listings of essential facts pertaining to each offer of incentive assistance accepted during that month.

Mr. Speaker, this report contains, in fact, all the information that can be given. I also note, on page 5 of the same report, another part which could be of help to hon. members. I quote from the introduction of the report the following:

> In conclusion, it should be noted that applications for incentive assistance and supporting documentation contain a large amount of information that must be regarded as commercially confidential. It is for this reason that, as a matter of policy, the department is unable to make public certain types of data. It is for the same reason that the department does not reveal the fact that a particular application has been received unless and until it results in an accepted offer of incentive assistance. This policy is, of course, consistent with the aims and objectives of the program, which is designed to encourage investment in the designated regions and special areas of Canada.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, in several cases the applicant must give the department information which could indicate a certain weakness as compared with his own competitors. Of course, if they want to encourage this applicant to call on the department in order to remedy and eliminate regional disparities, they must assure him that in fact they will not reveal information which will be given to the department.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to deal with a point which has been raised earlier by the hon. member for Abitibi, namely the question of the Auditor General, in order to add to the argument I put forward when I said that the hon. member had access to the committee which reviews the DREE estimates. He also has access to the committee which reviews the estimates of the Auditor General, and when the report indicates that some expenditures were not administratively justified, he can still pursue his investigation by asking the Auditor General, when he appears before the committee, for additional information.

The member for Abitibi also drew the attention of the House—

An hon. Member: The honourable!

Mr. Blais: Yes, I should have said the honourable member. I apologize.

The notice of motion of March 15, which was printed as Appendix "B" to Hansard clearly states the general principle which justifies or, at least, determines the criterion that governs Parliament, members of the House and the ministers as to the production of documents.

Then exceptions are given. Nevertheless he did not quote a paragraph I consider as very important, and he should do so, and I draw his attention to this document. Paragraph 16 reads as follows:

> 16. Papers requested, submitted or received in confidence by the government from sources outside the government.

This is the exact paragraph which applies to the case before us.

● (1730)

Undoubtedly the documents in question have been confidentially requested, submitted or received and it is on the basis of this principle that the government feels it is justified in refusing to produce them. Some other paragraphs could also be applied and I would draw the attention of the House on paragraph 14 which reads as follows:

> 14. Papers that are private or confidential and not of a public or official character.

I wonder what could be more confidential than documents of economic or financial nature and related to the communications between the applicant and the government which tries to help him. Thus, paragraph 12 reads as follows:

12. Cabinet documents and those documents which include a Privy Council confidence.

I also think that this definition would directly cover this case.

Paragraph 5 reads as follows and I quote:

5. Papers containing information, the release of which would allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons.

I am quoting this paragraph so as to again justify what I said earlier for the benefit of the hon. member.

In fact, some pieces of information might be used by competitors or suppliers who could take over the applicant's market thanks to their awareness of a possible economic weakness of the applicant.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to indicate that I am very interested by that as well as the development of the program, and I am very interested in not allowing the passage of legislation which could make it less effective because my riding is eligible for grants

And as a matter of fact my riding benefitted from that program and it was never my intention to examine the accounts and the history of those companies to determine why they applied, in what circumstances and what were the conditions attached to those grants made by the government. I was satisfied that the grants were made, that the choice was judicious and that the operations of some companies increased and that they were set up through grants made available to them.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that we are dealing with a new legislation and a new program. The minister recently announced that he would see to it that over 70 per cent of his administrative staff is sent to affected areas because he wants to obtain all the information that could be useful.

It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that with that information decisions will be even more effective and fruitful. And I urge the hon. member for Abitibi to gather as much information as possible if he has any reason to believe that a decision was improperly made and to bring that information to the attention of the House. Furthermore, I am convinced that a study will be made on the criteria on which that decision rested.

Mr. Speaker, that is far from the request made by the hon. member calling for the production of all papers relating to a grant which was made in the past. That would be creating a very dangerous precedent. Why? Because, by providing non the hon. member for Abitibi with this information, it would mean that any information could be required at any time. This is what is dangerous because it means that any information that is provided with the assurance that it will be kept secret, will have to be made available to hon. members who request it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this would directly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. i regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

Regional Economic Expansion

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr.Speaker, following the hon. members for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) and for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I have supported this motion for papers. I do not intend to speak at length because we sincerely hope to end the debate before six o'clock in order to get the requested papers.

I would not like to do like the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) who skated all around without tackling it, in the hope of getting as near as possible to six o'clock in order to kill the motion.

The first duty of a member of this House, regardless of his party, is to try and get enough information to enable him to check the administration of the executive. The duty of the legislator, of the legislative system, of the House of Commons, is to check everything, if possible, and with the means available to us, including the device of motions for papers, to check the administration of the government.

Mr. Speaker, I should only like to deal with a few points made by the hon. member for Nipissing in order to convince him ot perform his real duty as a member and to grant his colleagues the privilege,—which is no longer a privilege—the possibility to obtain papers.

What the hon. member for Bellechasse is requesting and what we are requesting with him is, and I quote:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the contract and all documents relating to a grant by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the newspaper Le Soleil of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, to summarize the discussion, the primary reason for this request, which was very well explained by the hon. member for Abitibi is as follows: we find in our municipalities, in our ridings—and I have no doubt there are some in the Nipissing riding also—a certain type of industries, among others for example, the flour mills which also ask for subsidies in order to create new jobs in a developing area, and they are denied all subsidies on the pretext that they do not process any commodity.

And, Mr. Speaker, according to the information we and the hon. member for Bellechasse have, the daily Le Soleil, not because it is Le Soleil, it could just as well have been Le Droit, Le Devoir or La Presse or any other paper—asked for a subsidy which we are told has been granted.

We would like to know, Mr. Speaker, how these negotiations have been carried out so that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion recognize that a newspaper industry processes material, while an industry which also does a processing job is refused any subsidy even if the latter would be accepted under all other requirements.

Mr. Speaker, refusing these documents is depriving the hon. member and the Canadian people from their privileges if, given the motives of the hon. member for Nipissing, pretending to protect the competition—and I fully agree with him—to protect individual interests of a particular company, to encourage the development of a specific region, they refuse to release certain information. Mr. Speaker, how can we encourage development in a specific area, in Bellechasse, Lotbinière, Abitibi or Nipissing, if the other companies do not know how to make the Department of Regional Economic Expansion understand that they too are doing some processing.

On what criteria does the department differentiate a company that does some processing from another one that does not? On what criteria? On what the minister tells us? On what we are told in committee?

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nipissing is honest enough, I know he is, to agree with me that at the committee level, things do not go as far as he pretended, and that even the Auditor General of Canada, who has been so aptly quoted by the hon. member for Abitibi, does not have the documents which could meet the members' needs.

What is the role of the Auditor General, named directly by Parliament, if it is not to represent all members and investigate the finances and the administration in all departments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Auditor General finds it impossible, to get the required documents in the case of a grant to a company or another, then how can one agree with the hon. member for Nipissing and say that we should be satisfied with what we are being told, with what is being thrown at us.

I would like to raise another argument which he used to try and convince him if I can: he gave the example—and I was quite surprised—of the honourable member for Abitibi who goes to a banker, to the Caisse populaire, and who would like his financial transactions not to be disclosed.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the point! The honourable member for Nipissing and his colleagues should distinguish between private and public funds. When a Caisse populaire—and this is for the information of the honourable member for Nipissing—grants a loan to one of its members, it is lending private funds. But when the department of Regional Economic Expansion makes a grant, whether it be to the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil, IBM corporation or any other company in his constituency or mine, the department is making as many grants in the creditist ridings as in the liberal ridings—it is public funds distributed in the form of grants.

Therefore, the people's representative have the right and not just the privilege, to know how this money is spent, why the beneficiaries have invested it and all about this operation.

It is precisely for this positive purpose to help other industrialists and other corporations to invest more and create employment that we want to know the reasons for this investment in the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil; we do welcome it and we would like this experience to be repeated not only with newspapers but in other specific fields more in accordance with Qudbec's reality.

Finally, I am led to believe that the reasons advanced to reject a motion for the production of papers which is however quite simple, are the following: did the government invest in such corporation and, if so, under what terms?

That does not disturb absolutely no one, and it is the money of the people from Lotbinière, Bellechasse, Abitibi, Richmond and everywhere that is invested there, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, all things considered, it is not indirectly a question of patronage.

If there is nothing to hide, it if is perfectly honest, I cannot understand why one would go through such trouble, Mr. Chairman, to beat around the bush, in order to turn down a motion which is after all very simple.

If there is something to hide, then it is quite normal that they should not want to disclose such information, but if everything is above board, as I hope it is, if the investments have all been sound, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why we should not know about them.

And I will conclude with an example: The federal government, through the Department of Economic Regional Expansion, did grant in the past a subsidy to the Manic Company, in Granby, and we know that that company went bankrupt shortly after.

Mr. Chairman, that is an unfortunate experience, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion cannot always make good investments. We understand that. However, Mr. Chairman, it is our duty as members of Parliament, to know why that has happened, to know about the circumstances, to see whether or not serious studies were undertaken before such investment was made or such grant was approved.

Mr. Chairman, to the extent that it pertains to an unfortunate experience of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, it seems to me that, as a positive approach my colleagues should agreed to this motion for production of papers, in order to know whether an investment such as the one made to the newspaper Le Soleil of Quebec could not be made also to other related, similar or different industries in our respective constituencies, as for instance to the flour mills.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues and members from other parties to discharge their duty as members in a functional and effective manner, jointly and severally by asking the government to tell us exactly where the people's money goes.

When a taxpayer invests one dollar in his country by way of direct or indirect taxes, he expects, Mr. Speaker, that the government will not waste this money and that it will be invested in a profitable way. He also expects when he votes, that his representative in this House will serve as an intermediary between him and the government to check on the management of this tax dollar.

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the role which we play and I cannot see how the hon. member from Nipissing (Mr. Blais) could blame us for fulfilling this role, while he protects the government and seems to want to hide things. As to us, we have nothing to hide, we only want to protect the people.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on the merits of this motion I hesitate to follow either of the two hon. members who immediately preceded me. Each has discussed the aspects involved extensively from his point of view.

I should like, however, to make several points. On the surface, certainly, I can see the merits of a motion such as the one before us. It involves a newpaper which has an obvious influence on the public. It plays a role in judging public issues and has an influence, also, on politics. This paper finds itself receiving moneys through a program which is being run by the federal government. In these circumstances, why, indeed, should we not produce this information if there is nothing to worry about, if there is no patronage involved.

That is a point to be considered, but I think there is an even more important principle involved here. It is the right of an individual or company not to be prejudiced by the revelation of information which might be injurious. In this instance a newspaper has received a grant and encounters criticism for doing so. Some members of the House would like to know the details respecting that grant.

It could be said in this chamber that by refusing to give these details we leave ourselves open to allegations of patronage. I say, however, that the very fact the government is not anxious to give these details is proof we have a viable reason for not doing so. Surely, if we are willing to stand up to a line of criticism which can be advanced with great strength by members of other parties and by that portion of the press which is in competition with Le Soleil, it cannot be argued that the government which I support is not being very brave in taking its present stance.

The opposition may accuse us of patronage and, perhaps, make political ground as a result. Yet we stand firm on our position. I suggest we are taking our present attitude for one main reason: If the information were made public in this one case, it would have to be done in every case. We cannot give all the details with respect to one DREE grant while refusing similar information with respect to any other organization receiving grants under this program. To proceed in such a way would result in the failure, I suggest, of the whole program—one of the most important programs initiated by the government.

The object of these grants is not to make companies wealthy. They are intended to assist them in maintaining business when their operations are in jeopardy, to help them to expand, where possible, when a reasonable request is received, but, at any rate, to continue in existence, to maintain the amount of employment they normally provide, and, hopefully, to provide additional jobs. To provide such information as the hon. member requests would prove disastrous to any grant program where the confidentiality of personal and other information is vital to the success of the organization concerned.

The officials of the department are certainly willing to discuss the case of Le Soleil with the hon. member who brought forward this motion. They maintain they are completely satisfied that there is real need in this case. If hon. members accept my general argument that a company is likely to be prejudiced in its operations by the disclosure of information of the type now demanded, does this argument not apply with even greater force to companies which find themselves in difficulty and which, because of those very circumstances, feel they must call upon an agency of government for assistance?

I understand that the dealings of the department with Le Soleil were conducted on the basis that the operation of a commercial printing undertaking was involved. Those of us who are in politics are well aware that the section of the information media concerned with printing is under serious pressure. In fact, its very existence is in question. In my own area of metropolitan Toronto we have seen a major newspaper fold. We have seen newspapers go under in New York City and other large United States urban centres. Those newspapers which are staying alive, those which I know of—and I have some experience in the media—are succeeding in doing so, except in very few extremely successful cases, by diversifying their operations. The most obvious way to diversify is to run a commercial printing operation by means of which a company can acquire stability or gain revenue independent of what may happen on the circulation side.

According to my understanding, the application made by Le Soleil was on those grounds: it was connected with their printing operation and designed to enable them to continue, something which would not be possible if they had not received this money. If a question should be raised as to the general policy followed by DREE in terms of assisting operations of this kind, may I say I have here a list of 97 different commercial printing operations across Canada which have received such assistance. This includes, for instance, Canadian Publishers of Winnipeg, Hignell Printing Limited of Winnipeg, Duha Printers of Winnipeg. The Stovell Advocate of Winnipeg also received a grant, and the name suggests to me that its operations might be compared with those of Le Soleil, the subject of the motion before us.

Let me make a further point about the difficulties faced by Le Soleil. Revealing the private business of any company seeking assistance would lead to the argument that all of us have probably faced here during private members' hour. We have all heard the argument on previous occasions on other motions, not just those moved by hon. members of the Creditiste party but motions from other parts of the House. I can recall debating one motion put forward by an hon. member for the NDP which called for the revelation of private information. All these motions which call for such information are based on the feeling of individual people that we must have answers to questions which arise in our minds.

As long as we have governments running the country there will be a question as to how much information can be revealed and how much must be retained for reasons of security or for the protection of an individual or a company. One of my colleagues suggested earlier that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) was talking around the question and not coming to the point, or perhaps trying to talk the time out. Certainly nobody is fooling anybody else by suggesting that I am only talking on this subject because I am concerned about it. Indeed, we would be setting a very serious precedent, and destroying a very important program, if we were to let this motion go through. I make no bones about it; I am taking some time because I would find it extremely dangerous simply for us to let the motion go through.

In spite of all that has been said about a newspaper which has had some influence, we must turn the matter around and look the other way as well. The government must take certain precautions, in order to protect a principle; and that principle is the right of privacy, the right of fair business competition without your competitors knowing the details of your business, especially when you are in jeopardy and seeking assistance.

There is my point in reverse. Why should a newspaper be picked upon, or why should one particular operation be placed in jeopardy, simply because the business may relate indirectly to the government? This is particularly true in this case even though this company legitimately needed assistance.

When a company seeks assistance in order to maintain itself as an operation, as is the situation in this case, the information must fall within the rules. These rules do not primarily relate to the newspaper operation but in fact to the commercial printing division.

The government will always be vulnerable to the kind of motion we are faced with today. As a backbencher I must say I always have some sympathy toward this kind of motion moved by members of parliament who are not in the government party but are honestly seeking information. I understand their situation when they believe something may be suspect. This is especially true when they are seeking information seemingly, as argued by one hon. member earlier, not on the basis of something crucially important, and not because they smell something very rotten in the woodpile, but simply because they want to know the facts and understand the situation.

I suggest it is not that simple. If we let this one insignificant motion go through during this private members' hour, during the middle of a hot summer, we will be opening up a can of worms, particularly in respect of those companies who might want to come to the government seeking assistance, trusting that the information they provided would be private. We would be starting a domino effect which would destroy the ability of the government to deal with the private affairs of any individual or company in order to assist them.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the session the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) brought down a series of guidelines which were designed to provide the government with methods by which motions for the production of papers would be judged. One of the main criteria was the question of confidentiality of internal documentation and the confidentiality of information exchanged between governments and the private sector. This includes not only companies but also the sanctity of income tax forms and other information which one gives the government, for example at census time.

What we are dealing with almost every time we debate private members' motions for the production of papers is this question of confidentiality and the question of trust. We really have not come to any solution which is satisfactory to us all. We have not come to any solution to which we can point with some pride that takes into account, on the one hand, the needs of the government and the private sector to exchange information on a confidential basis, and on the other hand, the needs of legislators to have access to the kind of information which is brought forth to governments at this time. One of the frustrations we have as legislators is that we do not have access to all the information that is truly available on any given subject. Sometimes that information is confidential and does exist, but sometimes that information simply does not exist at all.

[Mr. Fleming.]

We have referred these guidelines of which I spoke earlier to the Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments. That committee is going to make an examination as to how these guidelines have operated in the six months they have been accepted by the House. We have been making an investigation into the way in which questions on the order paper and motions for the production of papers have been treated by various government departments in order to ascertain if in fact there has been a significant change in the amount of material being made available by the government which was not the case before, or whether government departments are carrying on in their merry old way of keeping information secret largely for the sake of keeping it confidential and away from others.

This is a very important point because it is the intention of the authors of the guidelines to open up, so far as practical, information which the government collects, sometimes by accident and sometimes deliberately, and make this information available not only to legislators but also to the general public.

The way to do this is not yet known. The amount of information which any government department has at any given time is simply mountainous. The question of determining how much of that information should be made available without request and how much should be made available on request, how much should be made available for limited circulation and what part of it ought to be kept secret in the interest of confidentiality and of the state, is a question on which, I suspect, there will be no conclusive judgment simply because it amounts to a judgment by individual men.

The standards in this regard change. The standards of today will not necessarily be the standards of tomorrow. Today we probably release more information by way of these motions, and just on general principle, than was the case 10 years ago. Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLYMPIC (1976) BILL

PROVISION FOR ISSUING OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS AND STAMPS AND HOLDING OF LOTTERY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury that Bill C-196, respecting the 1976 Olympic games, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto (Mr. Peters, p. 5978).

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks tonight on this bill regarding the 1976 summer Olympic games by saying this bill runs counter to the solemn promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few months ago regarding these games. I refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister in this House to the effect that the city of Montreal must bear the full burden of the financing of the games and that under no circumstances would the people of Canada be asked or required to foot the bill for any deficit incurred by either the city of Montreal, the Olympic committee or the province of Quebec.

Members of this House will recall that Mayor Drapeau of Montreal stated at the time he was successful in getting the games for Montreal that it was his victory and that it would be his responsibility. He not only stated he would not ask the federal government to pay off the deficit on the operation of the games, but repeatedly assured us that there would be no deficit. However, we find in this bill clear evidence that there has been some sort of consultation between the federal government and Mayor Drapeau, and possibly the government of Quebec, concerning the games.

We also find clear evidence in this bill that the federal government has in fact committed the people of Canada in direct contradiction to the Prime Minister's solemn promise. We find that the federal government has committed itself in several ways in respect of the financing of the games, and now in this House of Commons we are asked to formalize these commitments. This has been done without the formality and without the courtesy of a statement by the government that the Prime Minister's promise was not really a promise at all. The people of Canada have been committed to financing the games without being told in advance that all the solemn assurances to the contrary were in fact a put-off.

I cannot help but think consultations were taking place along these lines at the same time as we were told the federal government had adopted a hands-off policy in respect of the financing of the games. Before I go into the specifics of the schemes that have been worked out to try to raise money to finance the games, I should like to refer my colleagues to clause 11 (1) which states:

> There shall be established in the accounts of Canada an account to be known as the Olympic Account.

Further along, subclause (3) states:

> There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and charged to the Olympic Account
>
> (a) all administrative, merchandising, distribution, promotion and other costs incurred by Canada in connection with the distribution and sale of Olympic coins, as determined by the Postmaster General; and
> (b) all amounts paid to the Olympic Corporation pursuant to subsection (4).

We find that subclause (6) allows the federal government to authorize payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the extent of $500,000. This is a far cry from the position the Prime Minister adopted a few months ago and announced in this House. We in this House, and the Canadian people, were reassured by that announcement on the position and policy of the government. But I cannot help feeling that members of this House are going to be asked some very searching questions by their constituents when the full impact of this bill is felt across the country.

● (2010)

I can well remember the hoopla and the fanfare that attended Mayor Drapeau's pyrrhic victory in having the summer games awarded to the city of Montreal. He was hailed as the super salesman from that city, and many people even compared him to the great P. T. Barnum. At that time I was apprehensive, even though Mayor Drapeau assured one and all that he would take care of everything. For one thing I was not so naïve that I could accept the thesis that Mayor Drapeau could commit the city of Montreal to host an international event of this magnitude without in some way committing the federal government of Canada.

On February 9 of this year I told my constituents in a news letter that Mayor Drapeau had in fact committed the Canadian people and the Canadian government when he committed Montreal to host the games. I have been proven right, Mr. Speaker, but the mere fact of being right on this point does not make me feel any less apprehensive. In my view, this has been a shabby and devious way for the federal government and the Mayor of Montreal to work out the details of financing the games.

I stated at the time the games were awarded to Montreal that I was under the impression that Mr. Drapeau had assured the Olympic committee that he had worked out the financial details as far as the games were concerned; that the committee had been shown some facts and figures, together with a comprehensive plan setting out procedures to cover housing, games facilities, security and all other pertinent aspects of holding the games.

We now know that that was not the case. In retrospect we can be forgiven for believing that Mayor Drapeau had in fact committed the federal government on such matters as financing, security, housing and other matters. We saw recently, for example, that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation got into the picture very quickly, and that there will be tens of millions of dollars available in CMHC money to finance the construction of housing for the athletes at the games. This is a major item of expense, and it clearly shows that the federal government has been deeply involved in the Olympic games for quite a long time, long before this bill was drafted, and certainly a long time before the bill was introduced in the House.

Here I want to say just a word about security at the games. In this aspect I will have to agree with my colleague to my left, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), who stated it was common knowledge that the matter of security is beyond the capability of the police forces of Montreal and the province.

This means that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Canadian Armed Forces will have to be involved. The recent experiences of other countries holding the Olympic games show clearly that security is one of the most important aspects of the games. In fact, Mr. Speaker, surveys have shown that a great many Canadians are against holding the games in Canada because of the unhappy experiences of countries such as Mexico and Germany.

There are radical groups in the world today who plan ahead to the Olympic games. They use them as platforms to vent their hatred on countries that they feel have slighted them, or have prevented them from expressing honest and legitimate views. Whether these people are right or wrong as far as their beliefs are concerned is immaterial; the fact is that they are prepared to commit murder to disrupt the games and publicize their grievances.

I will not dwell on these matters any further, Mr. Speaker, because as we all know by now these aspects of the games have been worked out by the city of Montreal and the federal government. I will only say, before I deal with the amendments that have been added to the bill by the standing committee, that I wish the government had taken us into its confidence back in the early days of the negotiations.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am relieved to be able to say to my constituents that an amendment to the original bill limits the extent to which the Olympic Corporation can dip into the public till—"trough" is a better word. This has been set at $260 million, but I am not certain in my own mind that this is going to be enough to finance such an ambitious undertaking. I am reminded of the experience we had with Expo 67, and I am rather uneasy, to say the least.

Going back to clause 11, I note that the net cost of the redemption of any Olympic coins left unsold will be charged to the Olympic account. This is not exactly a guarantee. It will only serve to identify another item in any deficit that occurs in the financing of the games, and this will be picked up by the federal government. It will have to be paid off by the federal government because there simply is not anyone else to whom Mayor Drapeau can turn.

The taxpayers should take some comfort from the amendments that make up the whole of clause 13. These amendments call for periodical reports from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) concerning the progress of the selling, redemption and production of Olympic coins. This is a refreshing departure from the way in which the Expo 67 accounting was handled, and it will also allow for regular accounting of the amounts of money paid into the account of the Olympic Corporation.

I am also relieved that reports filed by the government concerning the Olympic coins account can be referred to a standing committee for scrutiny if a motion to do so is signed by at least 60 members and is filed with the Speaker of the House. I have no doubt that from time to time there will be 60 members who are interested enough to take the trouble to petition for a committee examination of these reports.

We would not be debating such an important matter as hosting the Olympic games in this atmosphere of distrust and animosity if the government had come clean with us several months ago. It should be apparent to everyone directly concerned with the games that it would have been far better for general public acceptance of the games if the federal government and the city of Montreal had not been carrying on these negotiations as though it were a private and personal deal.

This is a public matter, Mr. Speaker, and I must say to the House and to all of the principals in the proceedings that, as long as Mayor Drapeau persisted in grandstanding, the federal government should have kept its hands out of the stew. We were assured by the Prime Minister during that period that that is exactly what it was doing. However, we now know that during this grandstand play the mayor was being backed, supported and abetted by the federal government.

That is the reason we are going to have to buckle down now and try to convince the Canadian people that the Olympic games will be conducted in the very best traditions of Canadian hospitality, Canadian ingenuity and Canadian sportsmanship. It is certainly not to our credit that the games were awarded to Montreal in a manner that is not in keeping with the spirit of the Olympic tradition, but we must go on from here and try to ensure that the games are an overwhelming success.

It will help a great deal if we can be assured that future negotiations will be moved out of the dark corners and smoke filled rooms into the open. I think there has been enough grandstanding. There has been far too much deception in the handling of the games up to this point. This bill commits us totally, Mr. Speaker, and I want us to move forward now and show the rest of the world that Canada can do this type of thing better than anyone else. I would even like to see us set the tone for Olympic games of the future.

• (2020)

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) and I must say that at the end he was engaging in a considerable amount of wishful thinking. It is all very well for us to decide here that we should do our best to speed this legislation in order to have the Olympics in 1976, but the simple fact is that once the bill is passed, once it goes through this House, that is the last chance any one of us has to talk about it. Because we are not in any way connected with the games. We can have reviews and so forth, but when it comes to the planning of the games we will have nothing to say. That is all right. We can give them all the good wishes—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Right on!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, order. I should like to remind hon. members that Standing Order 12 states that when a member is speaking no member shall pass between him and the chair nor interrupt him except to present a point of order. Perhaps hon. members would be good enough to allow us to hear the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Harney: I should like to thank you and my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, and particularly the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

When once prepares a speech one spends a lot of time on one's own points. This evening I have been listening to what other members have said, and there are some things that I approve of and some which chagrin me. For example, I was rather hurt that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) construed the fact that the leader of the New Democratic Party had not spoken on this bill as evidence that the leader of our party was not in favour of the stand taken by members of the party in this House. Certainly I will not construe from the fact that the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has not spoken on this bill as evidence that he is in disagreement with the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. I would not want to do a thing like that.

Another thing that was not nice at all was the hon. member's combination and process of non sequiturs and guilt by association when he made a remark to the effect that we who are opposed to this bill are opposed to Montreal, the mayor of Montreal and the province of Quebec.

I invite the hon. member to attack the mayor of Toronto whenever he feels like it. I would not for a second think he was attacking all the province of Ontario in the reversal of Mr. Crombie. There are some times when I disagree with Mr. Crombie, but I am not opposed to Ontario completely!

There was something else in the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe which rather overwhelmed me. He made reference to the young people, the children in the Point St. Charles area, and said that these poor poverty stricken children would be given something to look at by the 1976 Olympics. He said that might just change their world so much that they would not fall into the patterns of drug taking, petty crime and so on which he signified were so prevalent in the Point St. Charles area.

I suggest there is an important direct method, which involves less Pollyanna, of doing something with these people. Take some of the money we are going to spend on the Olympics, build sports facilities for them and provide proper recreation programs for them. Take them off the streets directly. Do not just give them a distant vision of an Olympics that they will not be able to attend because it is far too expensive; give them real help in the city.

After all, Mr. Speaker, it is important to realize that the city of Montreal now spends a measly 7.4 per cent of its budget on sports and recreation, that it stands 70th among cities of 5,000 population or more in the province of Quebec in terms of money spent on sports and recreation. If the object is to do something for Canadian youth, let us do it directly and not indirectly.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the parables of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) somewhat remind me of the aphorisms found in a booklet entitled "L'homme des tavernes". I do not know whether the hon. members have read this booklet, but this beer drinker, a chap from Montreal, a sage, has a rather astute way of commenting on the social and political situation in Montreal, Quebec and Canada. He sometimes makes ingenuous but straightforward remarks on the situation, and I remember that he once said: "One wonders whether poor children are more healthy than rich children, because if you walk through the slums of Montreal, you see very few children wearing glasses while in better districts, many wear some."

Mr. La Salle: It is because they cannot afford them.

Mr. Harney: The hon. member for Joliette is right.

[English]

Just to make it easier for my English speaking colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the hon. member also remarked that in the poor areas of the city obviously the children were healthy because very few had braces on their teeth, whereas in the wealthier areas many children had braces on their teeth.

An hon. Member: What has this to do with the Olympics?

Mr. Harney: It has a lot to do with the Olympics, because the money that is going to be spent on this lavish enterprise could be better spent. I will not detail now how it could be done because the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) did that this afternoon.

The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) said something yesterday which chagrined me. He said that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was either being naïve or deceitful. That is not much of a choice if you stop to think of it.

An hon. Member: We do not have much of a Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: How are you voting?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I do not know if it is because the hon. member who has the floor is attracting more attention than normal, but there is so much noise from an area on the left side of the House that it is difficult to hear and to follow the speech. I would remind hon. members that they should observe the decorum of the House and permit the hon. member who has the floor to speak so that we can follow what is going on.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the words that were attributed to the hon. member for Simcoe North should be attributed to me. I hope that Hansard will report that correctly.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. It was the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). At any rate, the words that the Prime Minister was either "naïve or deceitful" were well chosen. I was suggesting that was not much of a choice since such a statement is predicated on the belief that the world is made up of fools and knaves. That is not much of a choice to give any one of us.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Harney: Well, if you are a knave you are a fool; if you are deceitful you are a knave. I want to ask, Mr. Speaker, who would it be that would notice if a man was a fool? What choice has he got?

At the committee stage, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party proposed an amendment. I want the people on the other side to listen to this, particularly the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), because he was not there the other night. The amendment said, in effect, that if COJO should make a profit beyond a certain point, none of that extra money would go to COJO, the people of Montreal or the province of Quebec. I said, perhaps in naïveté, certainly not in deceit, that if it is clear that the people of Quebec will be responsible for the deficit—we shall not be responsible, that is clear—they should also be allowed to keep the profit, if any. Our friends to my right never put forward that amendment.

• (2030)

Surely, in the finest spirit of free enterprise, if the people of Quebec through COJO make a profit—which is chimerical, as I do not think it will happen—they should keep it. They take the risk, and they should keep the profit. The point is, as the hon. member for Témiscamingue should know, that we are saying to the people of Quebec who are organizing and supporting the Olympics that they are to incur a deficit, but that they cannot make a profit. That is not a nice way to run any business. I am sure my colleagues to my right would not run that kind of business.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Nonsense.

[Translation]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, coming back to what I was saying, I simply want to say that I am opposed to that Pharaoh's banquet of Mayor Drapeau on two very logical grounds. First, the proposal in this bill is based essentially on the sale of coinage, on the minting of coinage. It must be kept in mind that what is proposed here is impossible because if the minting and the sale of Olympic coins were successful, that would mean that $417 million worth of coinage would have been sold. If $417 million worth of coinage were sold, those coins would not be rare, would have no value for collectors who like to collect rare items.

The bill contains an inconsistency, an impossibility. If such a quantity of coins were sold, people would not buy them, would not keep them as collection items. Furthermore, I cannot believe that if $417 million worth of that coinage were spread across the country and the world, people will not use it for legal tender.

Mr. Speaker, an amendment moved by a member of my party in committee to the effect that such coins could not be used to pay salaries of civil servants and military personnel. And the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) admitted earlier at a committee meeting that the distribution of that coinage by Canadian employers would be disastrous. An amendment moved by a Tory member was rejected but there was some kind of a deal that night between the two major parties. The Liberals accepted all Conservative amendments and supported them, even if some Liberal members could hardly understand them. They rejected all the amendments from my party although they had supported them earlier. Strange thing but that is what happened.

In such situations. Mr. Speaker, new members even NDP members do not stay ingenuous for a very long time; they become dissillusioned and this afflicts me a little. I strongly object to this bill because it places Parliament in the situation of Pontius Pilate, the one who washes his hands. We say: in a way it will make things easier but we will not be responsible; a lower court will be. Like Pontius Pilate, we say: it is not my business, try to settle it among yourselves. But I want to make things easier by providing troops, the materials needed and the right to do it, but do not come and tell me that I shall be blamed.

We cannot act this way, Mr. Speaker; we are the ones who are responsible because we do more than making things easier. We will allow the games to take place this way. As I said earlier, these games will be held under the form of a feast, another kind of monument the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec do not need. As the hon. member for Fraser-Valley West (Mr. Rose) said this afternoon, we could do so many other things with this money.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): They have no money.

[English]

Mr. Harney: I could comment on the remarks the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) has made. We said, "Look, we will support a bill"—

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Well, you are supporting it.

Mr. Harney: Yes, but we would support a bill which would finance the Olympics directly from the public treasury, and we could be accountable to the people of Canada and take part in the planning as well as bear part of the responsibility.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): And you would be the managers, of course.

Mr. Harney: That might not be a bad idea. I want to mention a couple of things in conclusion. First, I want to read from some excellent literature. The first item I shall read is taken from the Prime Minister's letter to Mayor Drapeau, dated January 23, 1973. It says in part:

> Taking the additional operating costs and the short-fall in projected revenues, our assessment would indicate that the budget would not be balanced, and instead you would be faced with a deficit of between $100 and $200 million. This assumes, moreover, that costs would not escalate between now and 1976.

Considering the way costs have escalated, the deficit would be between $150 and $250 million. I continue:

> While we have every reason to believe that you and COJO will be making strong efforts to keep the costs to a minimum, we must bear in mind that they would well increase as a result of large unforeseen contingencies.

Later in the letter comes this telling passage:

> You will appreciate that these would almost certainly require legislation by Parliament and that could not be expected to pass without a clear indication as to how the very large costs are going to be covered without direct federal involvement.

There it is. Have all members of this House now received the clear indication mentioned? Certainly we did not receive it in committee, Mr. Speaker. I have read from the Prime Minister's letter. It is excellent prose, I suggest, very well balanced, very telling, but nevertheless forgotten.

The other author from whom I want to quote is Percy Bysshe Shelley. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will not mind being associated with Shelley. I certainly would not. You know, there is something about this project that is very much like the project Ozymandias built. I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) smiling as he recalls his college and high school literature. This poem is as follows:

● (2040)

I met a traveller from an antique land—

I keep meeting travellers from antique lands in this House. It is just a 14 line sonnet, and it is so rare that I ought to read it. Should I?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harney: To continue:

I met a traveller from an antique land
Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
Stand in the desert . . . Near them, on the sand,
Half sunk, a shattered visage lies, whose frown,
And wrinkled lip, and sneer of cold command,
Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
Which yet survive, stamped on these lifeless things,
The hand that mocked them, and the heart that fed:
And on the pedestal these words appear:
'My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!'
Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare
The lone and level sands stretch far away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harney: To those people who think they will be bringing benefit to the city of Montreal in terms of development, employment and a permanent increase in the wealth and well-being of its citizens, I wish to point out that through this bill they are supporting the kind of monumentalism that Ozymandias stood for, nothing for the people, everything for circuses, and very little bread in this particular case.

We now have a monument in Montreal which, if it is not decaying, is at least rusting. I am speaking of Expo and what remains of it. The part of it which is not going to fall to rust and rot—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harney: Take a look at what remains of Expo. It will be cut up to make another canal for the Olympics.

I am opposed to this bill because it puts before the people of Canada a totally distorted sense of priorities. I would be in favour of a more modest Olympics with controlled expenditure. I would be in favour of direct federal participation in the financing of this Olympics.

However, I cannot accept this kind of expenditure when there are crying needs in this country. There is no use kidding ourselves that the money is going to come out of the air; it is going to come from the people of Canada indirectly. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) should realize this is the first time ever his monetary theories have been accepted in this Parliament. We are going to stamp money, plenty of it, without increasing the real wealth of the country. All we will do is create an inflationary factor. We will be debasing our Canadian currency. Every $5 that finds its way into the market place to buy bread or beer is going to cost the Canadian treasury $3. There is no getting out of that.

In conclusion, I would support a more modest Olympics and direct federal participation, both in terms of planning and financing. But I cannot support this bill.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes an ingenious method of achieving the objective of self-financing the 1976 summer Olympics without cost to the taxpayers. If it succeeds, it may inspire a new slogan, "Play now—pay never," because it will mean that a mammoth spectacle can be produced without an equally mammoth subsidy from the government.

It sounds almost too good to be true, and members of the public as well as of this House may be pardoned if they doubt it can be done. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has had his moments of uncertainty. On August 15, 1972, in a letter to Mayor Jean Drapeau, the Prime Minister said that in spite of repeated requests by federal officials the government had not received any detailed information about how the games were to be financed. On February 24, 1972, the mayor had estimated the cost would be about $124 million, but in August the Prime Minister said a federal government cost analysis estimated the cost might be about one half billion dollars, four times the mayor's estimate.

On January 23, 1973, uncertainty about financing the games was still perplexing the Prime Minister. In a letter to the mayor, he pointed out that the city of Montreal and COJO had approved capital and operating budgets of $310 million. That meant an increase in five months from an estimate of $124 million to $310 million, an escalation of two and one half times. The Prime Minister informed the mayor that federal officials feared operating expenditures would be greater than those projected in the COJO budget and that revenue sources for financing capital works would yield $100 million less than was previously expected. The result would be a deficit of between $100 and $200 million, assuming that costs would not escalate between 1973 and 1976.

On the basis of this gloomy prospect, the Prime Minister indicated the government could not accede to any request for federal authorization for revenue producing schemes, such as issuing coins and stamps and holding lotteries. That might have stopped a lesser man than the mayor of Montreal. Many might well have expected this meant the end of the Olympics.

Just eight days later, however, the premier of Quebec wrote the Prime Minister to say that the federal government would not have to assume the interim financing of costs relative to the games during the period leading up to and including the holding of the games. Provided the federal government agreed to remit to COJO the net proceeds of the sale of these special coins and stamps, premier Robert Bourassa agreed the federal government would not be asked for any special contribution toward the cost of the games.

My reason for citing this correspondence is to emphasize how commitments have been made that must inhibit either Montreal or Quebec from coming to the federal government for any further assistance. Mr. Roger Rousseau, the Olympics commissioner, has outlined his hope that the games will be self-financing if parliament passes Bill C-196. I hope he is right, but he may not be, so it must be made absolutely clear to the premier, the mayor and the Olympics commissioner that if their costs exceed their revenue, they cannot look to this government and this Parliament for more help.

We are mindful of the way the costs of Expo '67 escalated. Parliament had to pay a subsidy far in excess of what had been anticipated. That kind of escalation must not happen again, and there should be no doubt left in the minds of officials in Montreal or Quebec about the determination of Ottawa to hold the line.

This is not because taxpayers in the rest of Canada are unwilling to share in the cost of this great spectacle. They are already committed to sizeable federal expenditures. Costs of building the Olympic village will involve CMHC funds estimated to range from $26 to $54 million, and that project will be of permanent use to the city of Montreal.

A Treasury Board financial analysis on January 31, 1973 estimated that the cost of Armed Forces involvement in the program of the games would be $8 million; that the cost of the R.C.M.P. and other federal employees attached to the games would be $20 million, and that the cost of CBC services would be around $25 million. The total is a possible $107 million of federal money, according to 1973 costs. That should indicate the way in which people across this country are supporting the project, even though it is only a few years since they paid the deficit for Expo amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Will the people be asked for still more? The Premier of Quebec has told the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) that they will not. This assurance, however, has been given in the face of a Treasury Board forecast that revenues from all sources, including the games, will be $172 million less than costs: a possible deficit of $172 million. Where will this money come from? No one has answered that question except to claim the sale of the coins, the stamps and the lottery tickets, added to regular Olympic revenues, will be so great that there will be no deficit.

What a promise! What a vision! If the scheme works, I suggest all party leaders offer to serve in a coalition government under Jean Drapeau. He will be the first man in Canadian history ever to have achieved so much for so little, and he is obviously the man this country needs. If we can finance games this way, why not housing, why not roads, why not parks? Why limit such brilliance to so short a display?

Let us just suppose the scheme does not work. Has the Premier of Quebec made any commitment that his government will assume the deficit? Has the mayor of Montreal indicated how much his city could underwrite? Just as important, has the Prime Minister of Canada made any arrangements for federal authorities to supervise and audit the way COJO's funds are managed? If the government is investing $107 million in the games, surely it is entitled to some voice in their management. In spite of all these assurances, by 1976 or 1977 a new mayor of Montreal and a new premier of Quebec may approach a new prime minister of Canada to lift them out of a hole they will claim others dug for them.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

Surely the federal government should be playing a much more active role in the management of this massive event. I suggest the government appoint an auditor general to keep a close eye on how the money is spent by COJO, and who could do it better than Mr. Maxwell Henderson himself?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: The amendments to Bill C-196, accepted in committee, have made it a better bill because they have provided for more government supervision of the coin issue. They have provided safeguards which could prevent the coins being misused in such a way that COJO could pay off its debts with Olympic coins. They have set a limit on the aggregate amount so as to prevent the coin issue from being so great it could debase the currency.

I think this is the right approach. One option which I believe the NDP favours would be to defeat the bill, a move which could seriously jeopardize the possibility of the games being held. Another option, and a better one, is to accept this measure, but to demand much more efficient management or administration so that the promised result of the schemes put before us would be more likely to be achieved.

We need to be mindful of the value of the games to the entire nation. They give us an opportunity to return the hospitality our athletes have received in Olympics held in other countries when other countries have assumed the cost and the burden of those events. They afford us an opportunity to unite this country in one great experience, as a result of which athletic development will be stimulated in every community. Several speakers criticizing the Olympics have pointed out that various local communities need arenas, stadia, swimming pools and the like. I believe these communities have much more hope of achieving those ambitions because of the inspiration and stimulus they will receive from the games.

It is therefore incumbent upon us to do what is required of us at this time; that is to say, not to jeopardize the possibility of these games being held but to take action which would lead to their realization; not to sink the Olympics, but to take the steps needed to assure the efficient administration of the project's finances.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to speak during this debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-196.

I have followed attentively the various steps this bill went through, first in this House and then in the parliamentary committee. I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I personally feel greatly satisfied when I think that Parliament is about to authorize the Post Office and also the Royal Canadian Mint to proceed with the issuing of Olympic stamps and coins this year as well as during the next three years, so as to provide for the financing of the 1976 Summer Olympic Games.

Through such issues and the lotteries that will be established, the Canadian government is going into a unique undertaking which—I emphasize it—is unprecedented in the history of Olympic Games financing.

I should like tonight to raise six points that were brought forward by members and which deserve explanations.

First I should like to say very clearly that the government wants this bill to be approved.

Second, I should like to remind all hon. members that the government members have taken every possible means to accelerate the passage of this bill.

● (2100)

Thirdly, I would like it to be clearly understood that the government's attitude about this bill has never changed and its enthusiasm has never wavered.

Fourthly, to those who are wondering what support the government will give the Games, I would like to remind them, by listing a host of cases where the government has shown how efficient it can be, that in fact it will play an extremely important role in the success of the Olympic Games.

Fifthly, I would like to say that in spite of the wish expressed by some hon. members, the Canadian government cannot substitute itself to the city of Montreal in the organisation of the Olympic Games proper.

Finally, I would like to invite all hon. members to realize that the 1976 Olympic Games are a unique opportunity to promote Canadian unity and rekindle the enthusiasm that prevailed in 1967.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that it is quite clear that the government wants this bill to be passed within the shortest possible time. My colleagues from the cabinet, the Liberal members of Parliament, all save one maybe, as well as many members of our party, from all the provinces, have repeatedly expressed their support of the Games.

Now I would like to point out to the House that differences of opinions are allowed within our party. The statements made by my colleague from Matane (Mr. De Bané) were those of a private individual and not those of a government representative. He spoke as any member of our party can speak in this House or outside. His opinion is a personal one quite exceptional within our group. The ministers, the members, the rank and file throughout the country have repeatedly given their unconditional support to the Olympic Games and I think that the position of the Government and of the Party I am representing is quite clear in this connection.

Furthermore, I would like to say that we did our best in an attempt to speed up the passage of this legislation. During the debate on second reading, government members restricted their remarks. In committee, there were very few contributions from the government side and this, in order to allow opposition members to express their views and ask all the questions they wanted.

I even recall a sitting when several government members gave up their allotted time to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who had the floor practically all the time.

Finally, government members co-operated fully, first, in the drafting and, secondly, in the passage of some of the amendments moved.

It is beyond doubt that, as far as we from the government side are concerned, we have been ready to support and pass this bill for a long time.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize this: the government's position and enthusiasm with regard to the Olympic Games have remained the same since May 1969, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) officially endorsed the application made by the City of Montreal to the International Olympic Committee. Therefore, this government's position has been known from the start. The federal government, while supporting the application of Montreal, said it could not share in the costs of the necessary facilities and related infrastructure. I think that the Prime Minister's letter to the Mayor of Montreal is quite clear in this respect, and I quote:

Dear Sir:

I am pleased to send you a copy of a letter that I sent to the President of the International Olympic Committee in support of the City of Montreal which is seeking the honour of hosting the 1976 Summer Olympic Games.

However, the federal government having already provided, within the framework of EXPO, substantial contributions for various facilities, some of which can also be used for the Olympic Games, I am sure that you understand that we cannot give financial support to the organization of the Games or its promotion.

Now, this position has not changed. Ottawa has been supporting Montreal for the holding of the Games since the beginning. The federal government states that it will keep its promises, that it will do its duty, but that is all. And I disagree with the comments made earlier during the debate by the member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) who said, and I quote:

—it is Canada which has chosen Montreal as the city which will represent our country for the 1976 Olympic Games . . . therefore we must not make any mistake . . . In view of the secretive manner in which the Prime Minister has handled all this from the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that there has been no secret dealings or underhand practices behind this. The formal statements of the Prime Minister are very clear, and at no time have we tried to go through the back door in order to do some things or to prevent some things from being done. The position is quite clear and I think that it is very well understood by both Montreal and the Olympic Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help stressing—and with malice to none—that the attitude of the Progressive Conservative party towards the Olympic Games has been, to say the least, confused and even quite involved, especially in the last election. At that time, the official opposition party took great care not to take an official stand on the 1976 Olympic Games. Instead, the hon. members opposite were suggesting a national policy on sports as vague as could be. I admit, however, that their position has become clear during the debate on this bill and I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) on the remarks he made in this House. I wish he could have a good influence on all his colleagues so that they will all use the same frank and strong language, because, unfortunately, we have heard far too many inconsistencies in the remarks of some of his colleagues on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have been taken to task and maybe we still are, because in some cases, we are unable to give at this stage specific guarantees about the anticipated revenues through the sale of Olympic coins and stamps. In the same breath, our colleagues opposite blame the government for allowing the Royal Canadian Mint to get ready for the minting of these Olympic commemorative coins.

On the one hand, Mr. Speaker, the opposition members who sat on the committee spoke abundantly about the shameless deficit that will be incurred by holding the games. On the other hand, they presented an amendment for the sole purpose of limiting the amount of money that will be handed to the Olympics Committee.

After speaking at length and very highly about the games, they presented an amendment which would greatly limit the possible financing of those games by setting at $450 millions the total value of coins that could be minted and circulated.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, some members of the opposition sharply accused the government of not wanting to finance the games directly. However none of them wished to move an amendment which would have modified Bill C-196 that way.

Nevertheless, I welcome the support of a very large majority of members from the official opposition.

I am glad they took such a position and I wish to tell them that I fully expect their most thorough co-operation when the time comes to promote the sale of coins and stamps limited and issued with this Parliament's authorization.

I would also like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian government will play an extremely important and foremost role in the success or the failure of the 1976 Olympics. This government is ready to do what should be done to ensure that this undertaking meets with the most complete success. The international scope and the fall-outs that will result for Canada imply a concern on the part of the government at the level of services connected with the games, which are of federal jurisdiction. That is how the participation of federal departments will take place normally and to a great extent without involving any extraordinary expenses.

I can say that about fifteen departments will be directly or indirectly concerned with the organization of the Olympic Games of 1976.

First of all, the Department of External Affairs will be responsible for the formal arrangements occasioned by the visits from numerous foreign dignitaries, and will provide valuable assistance for the coordination and advertising of the Games through our embassies. As a matter of fact, His Excellency General Commissioner Rousseau has been loaned by this Department to the Organization Committee of the Olympic Games.

The Manpower and Immigration Department through its Manpower Centres will help COJO when recruiting casual employees required for the Games. The Immigration Division will also be involved in the coordination of the entry into this country of the numerous athletes, officials and visitors.

As far as the National Defence Department is concerned, it will provide the necessary security in connection with the numerous sporting events.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

The Department of National Revenue will share in the reception of visitors by providing the necessary additional staff.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General, will carry out the very important duties of security co-ordinating body in cooperatin with both provincial and city police forces, in Montreal as well as in Kingston.

Other government agencies will fulfill their normal responsibilities and take an active part in the holding of the games. Suffice it to say that the Departments of Environment, Agriculture, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Public Works as well as Information Canada and various other agencies will lend a precious and helping hand in the organization and holding of the games.

I should like to say a few words on the matter of federal services and agencies which will result in major expenses which, by the way, have already been made public and which will be incurred within the next three years.

● (2110)

In the vital field of security, the federal government is responsible for providing the Olympic Games with security arrangements capable of ensuring the protection of 9,000 athletes, some 4,000 journalists and more than 250,000 spectators who will see the games every day.

The government has also allocated a grant of some $25 million to the CBC which, at the broadcasting agency of the host country, will look after the radio and television coverage of the Olympic Games.

This money will enable all Canadians to watch the various competitions at home thanks to radio and television. To the very many foreign commentators who will cover the games for their own countries we will offer a complete range of radio and television facilities. It is estimated that over one billion people across the world will receive reports on the Olympics Games from Montreal in 1976 and by the same token get to know better our wonderful country.

Finally, the funds allocated under CMHC programs will depend on the number of housing units built in the Olympic village and will be paid out to the extent that those units will meet the usual standards of the corporation.

I would also like to stress the importance of the role that will be played by the department of National Health and Welfare which, without making any direct financial contribution to the organization of the Olympic Games, will also participate in a very important way through Sports Canada in their preparation. Assistance programs for the preparation of teams, the training of referees and judges, the organization of clinics, and travel and shelter grants for Canadian athletes participating in national and international competitions are as many accomplishments already underway. That department will also be subsidizing national amateur sports associations which will organize competitions across the country in coming years.

The "Mission 76" co-ordination committee will ensure that our Canadian athletes can participate in international events in order to acquire preparatory experience for the 1976 games. Thus our young Canadians will go to the World Student Games in Moscow next August, the Commonwealth Games in New Zealand next February and the Pan-American Games in Chili in 1975. They will also have the opportunity of participating in competitions to be held domestically, particularly the Canada Summer Games which will be held in coming days in New Westminster and Burnaby, British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the government of Canada responded to the request made by the city of Montreal and the Olympic committee by drafting the bill before us. This act will make it possible to collect revenues through the issue and sale of special commemorative stamps and Olympic coins as well as through the organization of a national lottery. In this way, the government will ensure the basic financing of the Olympic Games without taxing directly the Canadian taxpayer.

As all hon. members know, the Post Office Department will issue commemorative stamps to mark the staging of the 1976 Olympic Games. The first series of stamps, if the government passes this bill in the next few days, will be issued on September 20. These will be the first two stamps of a series of very high quality stamps which we intend to issue. These two stamps will have low nominal value, i.e. the value most frequently used to pay postage.

As minister responsible for the sale of the Olympic commemorative stamps and coins, I should like to reassure hon. members and all Canadians who could be somewhat apprehensive as to our issuing programs and the means that will be used to provide for their sale in Canada as well as abroad. First I should like to tell them that a marketing advisory committee will be set up and include all the people concerned in this coin program, including the federal departments and COJO.

I should like to tell them also that I will have the pleasure of leading a group of experts who will supervise all aspects of marketing within a new branch that my department will create for those special programs.

With the help of those two groups of sales experts and thanks to a market study and a publicity promotion, I am confident that the Canadian government will be very aptly and sensibly advised as to its sales program, its marketing methods and as to the choice of the institutions and agents who will co-operate in the sale.

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to reiterate my confidence in those prospective sales. We rely very much upon the international market and our program has already aroused much interest in foreign countries. Half of our production will probably be sold in North America and we have every reason to believe that we can rely on a great number of clients in the wealthiest countries in Europe and Asia.

There is throughout the world an increasing interest in precious metals and their products, such as coins. The intrinsic value of our collectors' items and of our numismatic samples will be such that Canadian Olympic coins will surely draw the attention of the whole world.

The collectors' market is very large. We shall direct our efforts towards that sector of the market that is already obviously interested in such articles, be they of a numismatic or philatelic nature. Moreover, we can count on the interest of all Canadians who will see in these issues an opportunity of directly supporting the Olympic Games and to do so freely here, in this country.

It must be realized once and for all that these Olympic coins and stamps will give all Canadians a unique opportunity of supporting the games and pave the way for other countries that cannot now hope to finance the games but that will some day be able to through the self-financing procedures that Canada will have been the first country to attempt successfully.

In conclusion, I would like to say to many members who would like the Canadian government to serve as a substitute for the City of Montreal and assume the entire responsibility for these games that it is in fact a city which is getting the games, assuming the responsibility for them, taking the task of building the required facilities. A country cannot therefore act as substitute for a city, according to the criteria of the international organization committee of the Olympic Games and there we must follow the long established rules of the International Olympic Committee.

I feel the time has come for this House to support what the COJO and the City of Montreal have been asking us for a long time, namely to support a bill allowing self-financing of the 1976 Olympic Games.

I am convinced that the 1976 Games will offer all Canadians, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a splendid opportunity to make a national effort without equal since the extraordinary festivities of our 1967 centennial. All Canada and especially our youth, can prove one more, at the Olympic Games, that our national pride and will to excell are without equal, in the world.

We had this great feeling when we watched the performance of an athlete like Karen Magnussen or those of Team Canada during the Russia-Canada series. We all had this warm feeling of satisfaction in seeing these Canadians take up the challenge of the best athletes in front of the world.

I am convinced that all Canadians from coast to coast will relive these same emotions, these same sensations during the Olympics Games of 1976.

I therefore invite all hon. members to join in this Canadian endeavour in which the whole world will see another proof of Canadian initiative and unity.

The hour has come for all Canadians to co-operate. I therefore ask all hon. members to rally round us as soon as Bill C-196 has won the support of the majority.

● (2120)

Mr. Dan Hollands (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight not to delay unduly the debate on the Olympic bill but to congratulate the Mayor of Montreal for bringing the games to Canada. In this he has shown great ingenuity. We should all be proud of athletic progress in Canada wherever it takes place. In many quarters the method of financing approved by the federal government is deemed to be devious. But if the system works, members of all parties will be happy.

I rise tonight to say that we in Edmonton, Alberta, are going to host the 1978 Commonwealth games, and I would like some assurance from the government that we in the city of Edmonton will be treated with kindness equal to that which we on this side have shown to the holding of the Olympic games in Montreal.

It is not too early to start planning for the Commonwealth games. Over the past year a number of people in Edmonton have worked hard to get those games for Edmonton. The Exhibition Association is now in the process of building a coliseum, and again I hope the minister will give me some assurance that the people of Edmonton will be given consideration equal to that shown the people of Montreal.

We in Edmonton are proud that we have some outstanding athletes. Those athletes will develop if we hold the Olympic games and Commonwealth games in Canada. I repeat, I hope the minister will give an assurance tonight that the same consideration will be given to the Commonwealth games in Edmonton in 1978 as is given to the Olympic games in Montreal in 1976. I would not have risen tonight had I managed to ask the minister for this assurance during question period this afternoon, but I rise now and ask him if will he give that assurance.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not the only member of parliament to have received a number of letters over the past year and a half objecting to the holding of the Olympic games in Canada because, it is argued this country cannot afford the cost, which is estimated at somewhere between $300 million and $500 million.

I am opposed to the holding of the Olympic games not because Canada cannot afford that kind of expenditures, and not because I am opposed to the encouragement of sports and recreation. I am opposed to the Olympic games because I believe, on the basis of our past experience, that we will do quite poorly in the 1976 Olympics. We will do poorly simply because we have not had the facilities in this country to provide proper training for our young people, our potential athletes. We do not have fully qualified coaches to develop the skills of our athletes.

If we want to compete in international sport and at the same time avoid our athletes having a poor record and somewhat disgracing the country, then I believe we must build the necessary facilities to allow our young people the training they must have.

I am not opposed to the expenditure of $300 million to $500 million on athletics, but I am opposed to the expenditure of that kind of money in one city. I would oppose it whether we had the Olympics in Vancouver, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg or Montreal. I think Canada should spend something in the neighbourhood of $200 million to $300 million on building sports facilities in all the major cities of the country. Let us have Olympic size swimming pools and diving platforms in Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Hamilton, Halifax. Let us also have track facilities in those cities. Let us have hockey rinks. Let us not forget that the best hockey players in this country barely beat the Russians in that relatively recent competition.

● (2130)

That is what we need, not expenditures in one city. I would like to see us do for sports what was done for the arts some years ago through the Canada Council, and that is set up a trust fund of $100 million or $200 million. That way we would not have to depend on a particular government or a particular minister to provide the money required for a real program to train the coaches needed in the various athletic competitions that are held during the Olympics. Let us have a fund and use what it earns each year to train the coaches.

It has been suggested that we ought to approve this bill because Montreal needs an economic boost, that it has been left behind in the competition with Toronto and Toronto is growing faster. Neither I nor members of this party have ever oposed any proposal to improve the economic or social life of Montreal or any other city. If the vote were to allocate $300 million or $500 million to improve living and working conditions in the city of Montreal, we would support it. Montreal has tens of thousands of children living in houses which are a disgrace to any modern city. Yet what we are proposing is not to give CMHC the financial resources to encourage Montreal to build public housing units, but to give Montreal, through CMHC, enough money to build an Olympic village which will house something like 10,000 or 15,000 athletes and related personnel. We do not know how many of these units will be allocated for public housing, but on the basis of the experience of the United States we do know that if it were to be devoted to public housing it would end up as a ghetto to breed crime and everything else.

Montreal is a city of 2½ million people which dumps almost 100 per cent of its sewage into the St. Lawrence River—untreated sewage. If the proposal were to spend federal money to help Montreal build a modern sewage system, not a single member of the New Democratic Party in Parliament would oppose it. What we are opposing today and will vote against is the expenditure of a substantial amount of money in one city, the city of Montreal, in a way which we believe to be completely wrong.

We are not against sports, we are not against Montreal, we are not against Quebec, but we believe that to hold the Olympics anywhere in Canada in 1976 is a mistake. We believe that the money that the people of Canada will be required to pay in one way or another could be better spent in this country, and better spent in the province of Quebec. Because we believe that, Mr. Speaker, we intend to vote against this bill.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I bow to my colleagues; I know they will be interested in what I have to say. If there was an Olympic medal to be given for kicking the can, I am sure it would be won by a member of this House. As a matter of fact, I think the best way to end this debate would probably be to give out a few medals. I should like to recommend that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois) be considered for a medal for "jumping to conclusions". During our committee meetings he displayed great skill and style, and it is a matter of record that he jumped to more conclusions than anyone else on the committee.

Probably the most outstanding performer of all those on the committee was the hon. member from Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose). He not only beat all his party colleagues, but he had the fastest about-face in the time trials. Not only did he about-face, he turned himself inside out while doing an about-face. Even the most experienced gymnasts blanch at the thought of such a feat.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that an about-face in itself is extremely difficult, especially for a member of the NDP. We find the hon. member for Fraser Valley West on February 2, as reported at page 899 of Hansard, saying:

> My party welcomes the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today in which he took some trouble to outline the parameters of federal involvement in Canada's first Olympic games. We wish our first Olympic games every possible success as a potentially great moment in the history of our nation.

He went on to talk about keeping to budget and said he looked forward to Canada leading the way to staging the Olympic games on a budget scale. But when this bill was brought into this House on second reading, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, whose only sporting credentials are that he owns a jock strap and has athlete's foot, led a spirited battle against staging the Olympic games in Canada.

Then to show off to all who cared to see, after pleading in February for Canada to lead the way in staging a "budget Olympics"—that is his term, Mr. Speaker—after pleading for economy, we find him voting against an amendment to limit the amount paid to the Olympic committee through the sale of coins. How can you compete against talent like that? So I award him a medal, Mr. Speaker. I think he deserves it. As for his colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney), well, he led the way in committee with points of order and deserves at least an honourable mention for his efforts.

Of course, we could not have really made much progress with this bill had the stage not been set by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He started the bill on its way with considerable confusion, which is normal. Many hon. members recall our early questions about the Olympics in January of this year, just after this Twenty-ninth Parliament opened. Hon. members will recall the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) directing a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), only to be told he did not answer for the Olympics. They will then recall several questions being put to the right hon. the Prime Minister about the Olympics. The answers were obscure and contained little information, which again is normal. Then in reply to direct questioning he told a surprised House that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) would answer questions on the Olympics.

Well, now, this was clearly no way to start off on the Olympics. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs wears slip-on shoes because he cannot tie his shoelaces. That is about par for the course.

After watching the performance of the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) when he appeared before the committee, we really should award him a medal for being the most evasive witness. His footwork was fantastic. He would say one thing, then another, then contradict the first statement; then, when pressed, he blamed it all on the translation. Anyone who attended the late sittings will recall how the hon. members opposite barked when the Postmaster General commanded. When he shook his head they placed their gags in their mouths.

Of course, we all know about the famous letters from the Prime Minister to Premier Bourassa, Mayor Drapeau and Mr. Rousseau, and the famous guarantee replies he waved before the House before he tabled them. As the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) pointed out, they have little legal value and would not stand up in court.

If we could give a prize for a sloppy bill, we would award it to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). He should also be given honourable mention for his efforts on the silver blades. He skated all around the bill, and it appeared to many of us that he was wrongly placed for he was clearly more evasive than was the Postmaster General. But he did his compulsory figures well, except they did not add up. He could not explain the difference in the budget drawn up by the Olympic committee and his own Treasury Board. After two nights of skating around the problem, someone whispered in his ear that the Olympic committee would run a lottery and settle the deficit in this way. I think that official deserves honourable mention because the minister at that point was about to throw in the towel.

• (2140)

The events we watched were amazing. We learned that coins which are to be minted are to be sold at a discount. Never in our history have we sold our money at a discount, so we put in an amendment to stop that.

An hon. Member: What happened?

Mr. Kempling: We learned that COJO was classed as an amateur athletic association and would be eligible for grants under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act. There is a slick way to balance the budget. We will have to watch it, and will have to watch future estimates submitted by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West drew our attention to this in committee; I commend him for that.

Then, to our surprise, we found that Bill C-196 was open-ended. There was no limit as to the amount of coinage that could be minted, so we put an amendment in to cover that. We also found that there was no limit on the profit or seigniorage that could accrue to COJO, in spite of the fact that COJO had asked for a specific amount of money. So we covered that with an amendment.

As well, we defined by way of an amendment what was meant by postal related products, as this term was unclear even to the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). All in all we submitted six amendments and one new clause. The bill only had 12 clauses; it was printed on six pages. We made several significant changes to the bill. We put in several safeguards and generally made the bill a little more palatable than it was when we had first read it.

The committee meetings were the worst I have attended. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) remarked that they were the worst meetings he had attended in 20 years. The turning point came about two o'clock one morning, after a particularly bitter meeting. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) had previously blown the meeting by confusing the hand signals of the Postmaster General. The President of the Treasury Board and the Postmaster General stood talking to two members of my party at two o'clock in the morning. I will not betray the confidences of private conversations, but the two ministers at this point realized we really wanted the bill passed, and that some straight talk was necessary with no more "fancy Dan stuff". We just wanted straight talk from here on, or it would be no show.

From that point we made good progress, and the bill was in due course amended. It passed through the committee stage and came before this House on the report stage. The tragedy of the bitterness that was evident at the committee meetings was really all unnecessary. If the President of the Treasury Board or the Postmaster General had had any foresight, they would have circulated an information paper and avoided much of the time spent in debate in committee. They would have had an explanation at hand to explain the difference between the COJO budget and the Treasury Board budget. The Postmaster General would not have had to hide behind the translators. The Master of the Mint could have told us openly that he had proceeded in February to design the Olympic coins; he could have revealed his authority for such action and thus saved the committee much time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that all this is behind us and I think it would be better if we ended this debate on a conciliatory note. When this bill passes we will see the people at COJO swing into action. I wish them well. I hope that the Olympics in 1976 are a great success. I hope we will be able to capture some of the spirit of the games. I hope that those who expressed doubts about the financial aspects of the Olympics will be proven wrong. We want the Olympics to succeed. We hope the Olympics will become a symbol to the young people of this country and to the world.

We hope that all those persons of the press who have up to now been overly critical of the Olympics will, with the passage of this bill, climb on board and help us to make the 1976 Olympics a success.

An hon. Member: Has the hon. member finished yet?

Mr. Kempling: I will speak for about 30 seconds more. Let the Olympic motto, citius, altius, fortius, become the national motto of our youth. The Olympic Oath states:

—in the name of all competitors I promise that we will take part in these Olympic Games, respecting and abiding by the rules which govern them in the true spirit of sportsmanship, for the glory of sport and the name of our teams.

The Olympic Creed says:

The most important thing in the Olympic Games is not to win but to take part, just as the most important thing in life is not the triumph but the struggle. The essential thing is not to have conquered but to have fought well.

Let us resolve, Mr. Speaker, that this oath and creed will become our Spirit of '76.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You have five minutes.

Mr. Leggatt: Someone says I have five minutes. I will try to be brief. I do not think the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) needs defending. Someone said he is inconsistent. I remind the House that consistency is the hobgoblin of tiny minds. It seems to me the hon. member was flexible enough to examine this bill carefully and see the tremendous holes which have developed in it since we first looked at the financing of these games.

Many here have said that they are not opposed to the Olympic games but are opposed to the method of financing. I do not speak for my party when I say that I am opposed to the Olympic games, regardless of the Mickey Mouse method of financing that has been brought forward. Even a cursory review of the history of the last two games ought to convince anyone that they make no real contribution to international understanding.

When you remember, Mr. Speaker, the assassination of the Israelis at the Munich games and the slaughter of Mexican students in the 1968 games, you realize that the games do nothing whatsoever to advance or encourage the health of participating athletes. If the games do not do either of these things, why should we bother with them? It will be far better to restructure the Olympics and eliminate the national chauvinism that goes with the games than tolerate them as they now are.

Let us look at the effect the Olympics will have on this country and compare them with the kinds of national athletic events that we ourselves sponsor outside the international field, events like the one in my riding. I am referring to the Canada summer games in New Westminster. For a federal investment of less than $2 million, 3,000 athletes will participate. How many Canadian athletes will participate in the Olympic games?

An hon. Member: Many.

Mr. Leggatt: What real contribution will we make to national fitness through these games and with this fantastic investment of money?

The hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) said this afternoon that the games are desirable because there is too much emphasis on professionalism in this country I agree. The Olympics do not represent amateurism; they represent "shamateurism," and we have known it for a long time. The Olympic oath is more honoured in the breach than otherwise. The Olympics are simply another extension of professional sport; and it is appropriate that the edifices which will be created for the games and funded by the people of Canada will probably be used for professional football and professional baseball in Montreal.

The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said that we should not worry so much about the lack of community facilities since the facilities to be built will stay after the games. I think it is far better to spend the money this way and advance the cause of genuine community sport than spend it on the kind of wasteful extravaganza that is to take place.

If we spent that same amount of money on Montreal and the surrounding area in providing facilities, we could have Olympic champions for the next 40 years instead of the wasteful circus that is going to take place.

The comment has been made that this is an anti-French position. On the contrary, this is a pro-French position. It is the kind of position that supports the provision of money for thousands of people in Quebec who are denied adequate community facilities. Instead of giving them these, we are giving them circuses. I was delighted with the speech of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané). His attitude towards these games is genuinely patriotic. He understands the true social significance of what is being done with regard to those games.

• (2150)

I want to read part of an editorial that appeared in the Windsor Star. I quote:

Canada should seriously consider the implementation of this sports-for-all program. The demand for sport facilities is there, the goals are desirable, and most important, the concept of financing the program with would-be Olympic funds should be agreeable to the taxpayer.

I believe it is time for the government to abandon the Olympic Games, subdue its hysterical concern to develop Olympic athletes, and place emphasis on public recreation.

Sport is not for the elite performer—it is for everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the desire of the House to proceed with the passage of this bill this evening. I assure Your Honour and all members I am not going to prolong the debate on this bill far beyond the normal hour of adjournment. If I request five minutes or so after ten o'clock, I hope I will have the permission of the House. I will sincerely try to limit my remarks to the time between now and ten o'clock to make my remarks on this bill.

I have severe reservations whether this is the right way to raise money for the promotion and development of sport facilities to enable Canada to be host to the 1976 Olympics. Having been a politician for a number of years and representing a constituency in Alberta where Social Credit finance has been advanced, I am not particularly keen on this method of raising money. For the past 15 years I have had some success in rejecting Social Credit finance. I have some degree of hesitation in suddenly finding myself having to accept the theory of Social Credit financing in supporting that which appeals to my nationalistic pride and to my physical well-being, namely amateur sports.

I have always considered myself something of an athlete.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am somewhat prepared to play the game, whether it be baseball, fastball, hockey or football. I have run a few races in my day and have entered myself in some track and field competitions, such as hop, skip and jump. Even with my desire to prove myself in those sports, I fail to find myself overwhelmed all of a sudden by becoming involved in voting for Social Credit theory. As much as I might like my confreres in the far right of the chamber, I have not to this day accepted their philosophy.

Whether this House likes it nor not, the bill before us endorses their principle and concept. Is it good for those things we hold dear to our hearts, such as hop, skip and jump, the Olympics, pole-vaulting and other rugged sports that Canadians hold dear to their hearts? Is it good for them but not for those who are handicapped, or deprived of that food, shelter and clothing which we say is a necessity for all Canadians living within the bountiful boundaries of our nation? I do not think one should hasten the passage of a bill so endeared.

It causes me some concern to look upon the provision for coinage, stampage and lotteries that we have approved for this purpose but for no other. For a number of years I have sponsored a lottery bill in this House. It has repeatedly been rejected. I have always paid close attention to the postage privileges that are enjoyed, but on this occasion we are going one step further and saying that coinage is also necessary.

I do not want to repeat what has been said before with regard to coinage. However, I have a letter in my possession which was written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by Mr. Rousseau, chairman and commissioner general of the Olympic games. In his letter he states:

May I emphasize that the self-financing formula in question presents a very important advantage:—

I would be the first to agree with that. It certainly does present an important advantage. He went on to say:

—it can be drawn up in general terms so that it can readily be applied, when necessary, in the case of other major events that the federal government may want to support.

I am thinking in particular of the Commonwealth Games that are to take place in Edmonton in 1978 and perhaps other international games that might be held in Vancouver, Halifax or Toronto.

I do not know about other international games that may be held in Vancouver, Halifax or Toronto. I do know that the Canadian summer games will be held in Lethbridge in 1975, and I hope the federal government will make a sincere contribution toward them. This person linked the all international games as one. He suggested the 1976 Olympics should be linked relatively closely to the Commonwealth games to be held in Edmonton in 1978.

Before this bill is passed, I hope the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will state whether the same consideration will be given to the Commonwealth games that are designated to be held in Edmonton in 1978.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I have not been in close contact with the mayor or any other person with regard to the Edmonton games, although I have received some correspondence. I have been asked to be an honorary director of the 1978 games and I have accepted that privilege. By so doing, I must pay close attention to the financial obligations those games will place upon the citizens of Edmonton, the province of Alberta and Canada.

Before proceeding with the passage of this bill, I hope the President of the Treasury Board will say that he agrees to the issuing of coins, postage and lotteries for the Commonwealth games in order to sustain the Commonwealth games. Let us support amateur athletic ability in the countries of the Commonwealth.

• (2200)

Having said that, I recognize the hour is closely approaching ten o'clock. I hope the President of the Treasury Board will rise quickly before then, before anyone in this House has a desire to call it ten o'clock, and assure us that these same privileges will be afforded the city of Edmonton when it plays host to the Commonwealth games. If he would do this, it occurs to me the House might not see the clock and might readily agree to pass the bill. But if he does not find himself in a position to do so, then I think there are members here who would call it ten o'clock, in which case we could not pass this bill tonight. I notice the hon. gentleman appears anxious to rise, and in these circumstances I quickly resume my seat.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker an invitation has been issued to me. I only wish I had the authority to respond in a positive way and give the assurance the hon. gentleman is seeking.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have been considering at some length the measures which should be taken by the government, by Canada, in respect of the Olympic games. This is a program tailored for the Olympic games. Consideration has not yet been given to the Commonwealth games, which I understand will come two years later, but it would be my own personal view that the Liberal government would not be prepared to see done either for or against one part of the country something which it would not be prepared to do, to the extent it was appropriate, either for or against another part of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears the House is ready for the question. The question is on the amendment (Mr. Peters). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Peters) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has called it ten o'clock. I have to remind hon. members that a motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been put and seconded at this time. May we have order, please.

Order. Might I remind hon. members that this House is still sitting. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) has the floor.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—SUGGESTED PROVISION OF SHUTTLE SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO-MONTREAL AND TORONTO-OTTAWA

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss the implications of the question I addressed recently to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) on the subject of the shuttle service between Toronto and Ottawa. More than 1400 passengers fly back and forth by Air Canada between those two cities on any typical business day. Their number will increase as each year the nation's capital becomes the place where businessmen must come for negotiations with, and decisions from, a growing number of federal agencies which are making this city the head office of almost every enterprise in Canada. It is therefore time we looked more closely at ways of improving the vital air link between these two cities, each of them a political and financial capital.

One improvement might be a shuttle service, since it is often difficult for a person to know when his business in Toronto or Ottawa will be finished. He may make reservations only to find he must stay longer. Then he must attempt new reservations, which often are difficult to arrange, and on some days, such as Friday, impossible. The advantage of the shuttle would be that the individual would know that at certain times planes would be leaving and that he would have a number of chances to get a flight to Toronto or Ottawa.

Shuttle services are provided now by Eastern Airlines in a network that links Boston, Washington, Newark, New York and Montreal. In the Montreal-New York shuttle, each passenger is guaranteed a seat on the plane. When a plane fills up, another is provided so that no one is left standing at the terminal. In spite of this guarantee the cost is no greater than that of the economy flight on Air Canada from Montreal to New York. Thus, anyone travelling between those cities knows that at scheduled hours he can get a flight just by showing up at the terminal with his $34.

Pacific Western Airlines runs a shuttle between Calgary and Edmonton. It does not guarantee a seat to everyone who shows up but at peak times it does add extra planes. At rush hour times it provides a flight every half hour. Both privately-owned companies inform me that their shuttle services are operating in the black, Pacific Western having operated the Calgary-Edmonton shuttle for many years.

I therefore urge the minister to recommend that Air Canada look again at this proposal. If there is good reason why it should not be tried out in the Toronto-Ottawa service, I recommend this compromise: let Air Canada add extra planes during certain rush periods, or, at least, let it provide a shuttle in Toronto's terminal No. 2, itself almost a mile long. The present jitney service is totally inadequate. Often the cars are not working; never are there enough. Surely the ministry of transport can do as good a job at terminal No. 2 as the House of Commons buses do for M.Ps here. If the minister cannot give us a shuttle between Ottawa and Toronto, let him at least give us one between one end of terminal No. 2 and the other.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, further to the hon. member's question about domestic shuttle service possibilities between Toronto and Montreal or Toronto and Ottawa, I should like, first of all, to elaborate on the rapid air system which is now in effect between Toronto and Montreal.

A year ago Air Canada introduced the rapid air system in order to better serve the local needs of Toronto-Montreal passengers. Although the rapid air system is not a full shuttle in the open, no reservations sense, those people who do show up without reservations are usually accommodated on the flight of their choice. Most of the exceptions occur at peak traffic time, when passengers with no reservations may have to wait for one or more flights. Rapid air is, however, a very frequent service, contrary to U.S. shuttle services which tend to operate every hour or two. Rapid air offers an average of 22 flights per day in each direction.

A shuttle is just one of the number of ways of carrying passengers, but it cannot be introduced without taking into account the travel demands of the public at large. For example, many of the flights now operating as part of the rapid air system carry passengers beyond Toronto and Montreal to other parts of the country. Scheduling these passengers through the Toronto-Montreal corridors has been beneficial to them because it has permitted greater flight frequency to these other points. Similarly, the local Toronto-Montreal passengers have benefited because these through flights have meant a more frequent rapid air schedule.

In addition to rapid air, in the past year Air Canada has introduced an innovated pricing structure on domestic services that has lowered average fare levels considerably, mainly through general fare reduction on long-haul services and through all peak 30 per cent "Explore Canada" fare discounts on long and short-haul services.

These two programs demonstrate that Air Canada does its best to provide the best possible service at the lowest possible prices, and I am advised that further improvements can be expected over the next year.

EXHIBITIONS—EXPO '74, SPOKANE, WASHINGTON—REASON FOR FAILURE OF CANADA TO HAVE PAVILION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in the House of Commons I asked the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) why Canada had decided not to participate in Expo '74 which is to be held in Spokane, in the State of Washington, in view of the fact that months ago Canada indicated that a Canadian pavilion would be constructed for Canadian exhibits. I also asked the minister if the government would reconsider its position on this very important matter.

In replying to the question the minister indicated that the government had given the matter a great deal of careful study and had come to the conclusion that there were other and more important priorities for the $1.5 million than the building of a Canadian pavilion at Expo '74.

In my frank opinion the government has received some very poor advice in regard to this matter. I do not know what kind of study was carried out, but it looks to me as though some civil servants tucked away in a ministerial office in Ottawa have again scratched out an important project simply because they knew very little about it. This is another example of federal bureaucracy ignoring important issues in Canada.

It is my intention this evening to outline for the minister a number of reasons why I feel the government should re-consider its position on this very important matter.

The first point I would like to make is that a Canadian pavilion at Expo '74 would be an excellent investment as far as favourable publicity for Canada is concerned. There will be many hundreds of thousands of visitors to Expo '74 from all over the United States and many other countries. The excellent opportunity which this offers to publicize our country and its many assets should not be passed over. Spokane is very close to the Canadian border and a number of Canadian exhibits to advertise what our country has to offer in the way of tourist attractions could generate tens of millions of dollars in tourist revenue, even during the time the exposition was in progress. It seems to me that this one major aspect alone is well worth the investment involved.

The tourist industry has become a major revenue-producing asset for Canada. We spend vast sums of money at every level to promote it. Canadian scenery is something we can sell over and over again without depleting the resource, yet when a major opportunity presents itself to us to really promote our scenic grandeur, at a time when many hundreds of thousands of visitors will be within a short drive of the Canadian border, we find our federal government unaware of the opportunities presented by Expo '74.

A Canadian pavilion would not cater only to tourism. It could be the display centre for our arts, crafts and a host of other Canadian skills which we wish the world to know about. This investment in a pavilion would be the most economic and effective type of advertising that any country could devise. It is not a one-shot affair, for the advertising carries over for several months. This is something the federal government should not take lightly.

One of the most disappointing aspects of the federal government's short-sighted decision will be the feeling by many western Canadians that once again Ottawa has failed to help promote western Canada, which stands to gain most by Expo '74 and any federal participation in it. It is discouraging to the large number of organizations in British Columbia and Alberta which have been promoting Expo '74 to realize that our federal government wants to have no part of it. If private organizations and provincial departments realize the value of Expo '74 to the Canadian scene, then surely the federal government can make funds available for a Canadian pavilion and give some real leadership in promoting it.

[Mr. Harding.]

There are many other aspects which enter into the picture of Canadian participation in Expo '74, including that of good public relations with our neighbour to the south. It seems rather odd that the Canadian government, after committing itself to participate in Expo '74, suddenly decides that a Canadian pavilion cannot be built. No doubt some reason can be advanced for the federal decision, but it will appear to many Canadians to be just another weak federal excuse to overlook Canadian interests, especially in the west.

There is another aspect of Expo '74 which I would like to bring to the attention of the government. A Canadian pavilion would mean a large number of jobs for young Canadians over a period of several months. A major increase of tourists to Canada during this period would also result in a large number of additional summer jobs for young Canadians. Active promotions by means of federal participation in Expo '74 could be a major factor in improving the job situation, and this aspect should not be overlooked.

Time does not permit me to expand further on this topic, Mr. Speaker. Frankly I feel the federal government has made a serious mistake by withdrawing from its proposed participation in Expo '74. I would urge the minister and the government to immediately reconsider the decision made yesterday and I trust that any reconsideration will result in a Canadian pavilion at Expo '74.

● (2250)

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre de Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be most difficult not to agree with the hon. member when he speaks of the benefits of Expo '74. The problem lies in the cost, and I feel that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) gave the hon. member quite a clear answer this afternoon.

As he explained, Canada's participation in the Spokane World Exhibition on the human environnment was studied in detail, and we reached the conclusion that in view of the budgetary restrictions of the government, earmarking credits in the order of $1,850,000 to that end would not be justifiable in 1974. This having been said, I am sure we all hope that Expo '74 will be a real success.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY—QUEBEC—OBLIGATION OF EMPLOYEES IN PASSENGER SERVICE TO BE BILINGUAL

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) on July 19, 1973, which is reported in Hansard at page 5782, reads as follows:

Can he tell the House if the employees of the Canadian National in the Quebec passenger service must be bilingual?

Since I did not get a reply, I want to point out to the House, and in particular to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), that it is unthinkable that in 1973, one should have to ask such questions, after the Canadian government spent millions of dollars to promote bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, there is at this time in Quebec an explosive political climate in respect of language problems. Therefore, what is the federal government doing about this ticklish matter? Let me give you some examples of the way Quebecers are treated.

Some of my constituents have complained that CNR employees in the passenger service could only speak English. Others have complained that some governmental services in the National Capital had no bilingual staff.

Also what about departments which are looking for English-speaking unilingual employees saying nothing of messengers who suffer from blatant injustice? By that I mean that there is no difference in pay for a bilingual messenger as compared with an English unilingual one. The same situation prevails for the security personnel of the House of Commons.

I received another complaint this morning; the Public Works Department is advertising an open competition, bearing No. 73-PW-CR-CC-15, for hiring a foreman for various jobs. It is provided on page 3, in the language requirements section, that knowledge of English is essential. Nothing is said about requirements concerning the French language. It seems that this is the procedure followed by most departments with respect to the working language; it is a strange way to implement the language policy announced in this House some time ago.

The purpose of my intervention, Mr. Speaker, is not to play politics, but rather to point out to the government the frequent inadequacies which are observed in all departments so that the leaders of this country may be fair and equitable to all Canadians, whatever their culture.

The government's behaviour which I denounce now is but provocation aimed at French speaking Canadians. Let us recall that during the 1968 general elections, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would enjoy talking to Quebecers about his so-called policy of bilingualism and his just society.

Ever since that time, his promises have fallen into oblivion, as though in a deaf ear. The same applies, by the way, to all the election promises made over the past hundred years.

I shall take a few more minutes to denounce also some opposition members who, during the last election campaign, used French Canadians as a springboard to win seats in some Western ridings at the expense of other parties.

Mr. Speaker, I dare not use the words that are coming to my mind in these circumstances; but I wish all hon. members to know that if I speak tonight it is in an effort to make this government realize the necessity of protecting the unity of our country.

Before my election to this House as member for Rimouski, I was often inclined to condemn certain French-Canadians who were saying that life in French Canada was dreadful. Today, I understand and I can tell where separatism originated from. Wherever they are, to my left, to my right or in front of me, in this House, I have been able to spot the real agitators since the beginning of this session.

In future years, we will have to try by all the means at our disposal to find solutions to enable all Canadians of whatever culture to live in a healthy atmosphere favouring understanding between the different groups so that our people may be against segregation.

In conclusion, I ask the House, Mr. Speaker, to keep a careful watch over our national unity, if we want the Quebecers to keep on paying taxes to allow the federal government to continue its grants to Western Canada.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking tonight on behalf of the Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) who is not in Ottawa today.

Since the fall of 1968, all new employees hired to work on passenger trains in the province of Quebec must be bilingual pursuant to agreements concluded with the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers as well as with the Brotherhood of Railway Workers.

Currently, the situation in the province of Quebec may be summarized as follows: out of a total of 416 employees in the passenger service and meal service, only 50 are unilingual English-speaking people, i.e. only 25 out of 150 employees working in passenger trains; however, the latter have at least followed a French course of 17 days.

I am informed that the seniority agreements with the unions involved prevent—for these employees hired prior to 1968—the Canadian National from forbidding the few English-speaking unilingual employees to fill in the passenger trains certain positions which they are entitled to occupy because of their seniority.

However, we are assured that the passenger train services are always provided in both official languages.

It is to be noted that the previous information concerns the St-Lawrence region.

Other trains in Quebec are staffed by personnel from Toronto or Halifax. In both those cities, the knowledge of French is being improved progressively for the personnel likely to work on trains travelling through Quebec, through an appropriate hiring policy and especially French courses.

A bilingual service is offered by the Canadian National at all its passenger stations.

I wish to thank the hon. member who just rose—

Mr. Speaker: I regret I must interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but his time is expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.59 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to make a statement about the possibility of concluding this part of the session today. There have been a number of discussions among the representatives of the various parties and I believe that we have a basis for proceeding, which is that we would adjourn, following royal assent to the Olympic bill, until October 15 barring any emergency that would require the recalling of the House.

We have also provided for a method of dealing with the capital punishment bill, Bill C-2. It would be dealt with under certain conditions which are specified in the motion. They are, that on the first day the order is called we would deal with the amendments at the report stage, and then we would have third reading, with extended hours, without any amendments and with the length of speeches being limited, but not their number. Finally, we have agreed that we will have the vote on third reading at a time to be agreed upon by representatives of the parties. On the basis of that statement, I wish to seek unanimous consent to have this motion moved by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury).

May I also seek the consent of the House, once this motion is put by unanimous consent, not to proceed with debate on the motion immediately, in order that we may deal with another matter, namely, the Olympic bill. If we could call it immediately, by consent, it would get to the other place and it might be possible for us to adjourn after royal assent at about four o'clock.

May I first ask for consent to have the motion moved by my colleague. If that is forthcoming, I will then ask for consent not to proceed with debate on the motion, and call Government orders solely for the purpose of giving third reading to the Olympic bill.

● (1110)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what the minister has in mind with respect to the capital punishment bill. Does this mean it is off until October? If that is so, will he advise the House what the attitude of the government will be respecting applications that may come before the government between now and October, on behalf of convicted persons, for commutation of the death sentence?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not given consideration to that problem, nor have I anticipated the question. However, the tradition has been that each case is dealt with on its merits by the government. Exactly the same procedure will be followed with cases which come before the cabinet prior to our dealing with this bill.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I will not object if we forgo the debate and immediately pass to the concurrence of the motion on third reading of the bill, but I would like to raise the question of privilege to advise Your Honour and all members that in addition to the 1976 Olympic Games, we will have this year, the Quebec Summer Games in Rouyn-Noranda from August 15 to 26. I invite all members and especially Your Honour.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to say we are prepared to give consent to the putting of the motion for adjournment as outlined by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That when the House returns from the giving of the royal assent to Bill C-196, an act respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games, it shall adjourn and shall stand adjourned until October 15, 1973, provided always that, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultations with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

That in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purposes of this order;

That the hours of sitting on any day on which Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code, is designated as the business to be taken up under government orders shall be as follows: Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Wednesdays, 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Fridays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.

That there shall be no consideration of private members' business on any day on which Bill C-2 is considered;

That on any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday on which the House, in accordance with this order sits at 11.00 a.m., government orders shall be taken up between 11.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. and routine proceedings shall be taken up at 2.00 p.m.;

Olympic Bill

That 15 minutes before the hour of adjournment, as established under this order, on the next day that is designated for the resumption of the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then in progress and he shall put forthwith, successively, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-2;

That no amendment shall be permitted to be proposed to the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, nor shall any other dilatory, superseding or privileged motion, including any motion pursuant to Standing Order 46, be permitted to be proposed on any day designated for the continuation of Bill C-2 except with the unanimous consent of the House:

That during the debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-2 the first speaker from each party shall speak no longer than 30 minutes and subsequent speakers shall speak no longer than 20 minutes; and

That should a recorded division be requested on the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, the said division shall be deferred to a time to be announced by a minister of the Crown, after reaching agreement with representatives of each party, but the said division shall not be deferred for a period of more than one week.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understood that we would suspend our proceedings at this point and return to them after we have dealt with the third reading of the Olympic bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OLYMPIC (1976) BILL

PROVISION FOR ISSUING OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS AND STAMPS AND HOLDING OF LOTTERY

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury that Bill C-196, respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the inconsistencies and irrelevancies, quoted by some hon. members in support of this Olympic bill. Some of the statements made by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) struck me as being particularly farcical. The hon. member spoke about the ability of Canada to bring back a more human and modest dimension to the games. Mr. Speaker, can you imagine 9,000 athletes, 250,000 spectators a day for two weeks, and an expenditure of $500 million being equated with a modest and more human dimension to the Olympic games? I think it is absolute bunkum to suggest it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I should call the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor. There are many conversations going on in the chamber. I appreciate that members have much to talk about before they leave for a few weeks, but I suggest those conversations might be carried out behind the curtains.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that hon. members wish to get out for the summer break.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: But I am sure they can wait 40 more minutes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Don't forget crop insurance.

Mr. Rodriguez: I should like to point out, also, that on the same day the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley stated that to win a gold medal was the goal of every athlete, and that the Olympics offered such an opportunity. It seems to me that is opposite to the view expressed yesterday when the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) read the Olympic creed which states that the most important thing in the Olympic games is not to win, but to take part. I suggest this is just the same as life; the most important thing is not to triumph, but to struggle. When we consider the forerunner to the Olympic games, we think of the Pythian games which were held in Greek times; we find that the first prize was a cauldron and the second prize was an unblemished fair maiden. As history would have it, everyone strove to be second, not first.

● (1120)

This leads me to ask whether this is what we are striving for. Is that what we are training people to accomplish, as far as the Olympic games are concerned? Is the purpose to win a gold medal? Is that the purpose for which we embark on any kind of sport program in this country—to be first? Is that the important point? I think that is what is wrong with the whole concept of the Olympic games, apart from the financial aspects of this bill. It seems to me that to be first is not the important thing but, rather, the important thing is preparing the athletes involved, preparing young people through an athletics program that is ongoing, rather than for three or four years in order that they can make an Olympics team and win a gold medal.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, two days ago an hon. gentleman, speaking on the bill, stated there was opposition to the financing proposals for these games. He said there was confusion. I suggest that if there is confusion about the financing of these games, that hon. member should not stand in this House and vote for the bill, particularly when members of his party raise legitimate questions about the way in which the games are being financed. Speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party, the hon. member said they will not accept any further financial obligation. That sounds to me as hollow as bamboo. As a matter of fact, hon. members to my right seem to be taking the position of what I call a mugwump. If you do not know what a mugwump is, let me explain.

An hon. Member: I know.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know you know, but I will explain it for the benefit of those who do not know. A mugwump is a creature that sits on a fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other. It seems to me that is the position being taken by some hon. members of this House. The hon. member also pointed out that plans for housing the athletes are up in the air and far too many questions are unanswered. If all these questions remain unanswered, how can those hon. members vote for this bill? It amazes me that they can pose these questions but are willing to support the bill. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) also reiterated very serious doubts about the whole bill and dismissed the minister and his officials as not understanding the financial proposals. If this is so, it seems to me they have no alternative but to vote against the bill.

It is fairly obvious that there will be a deficit of about $172 million. I want to know whether the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party, whichever one is in power in this country, will say they will not accept responsibility for that deficit. I suspect that they will very quietly pick up the tab and pay the bill, despite all the flim-flam they have shot around this House in the last few weeks.

I know that hon. members want to get away on their holidays, so I shall close now with an urgent plea to the Conservative members of the House not to support the bill on third reading.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That when the House returns from the giving of the royal assent to Bill C-196, an act respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games, it shall adjourn and shall stand adjourned until October 15, 1973, provided always that, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultations with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

That in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purposes of this order;

That the hours of sitting on any day on which Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code, is designated as the business to be taken up under government orders shall be as follows: Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Wednesdays, 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Fridays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.

That there shall be no consideration of private members' business on any day on which Bill C-2 is considered;

That on any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday on which the House, in accordance with this order sits at 11,00 a.m., government orders shall be taken up between 11.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. and routine proceedings shall be taken up at 2.00 p.m.;

That 15 minutes before the hour of adjournment, as established under this order, on the next day that is designated for the resumption of the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then in progress and he shall put forthwith, successively, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-2;

That no amendment shall be permitted to be proposed to the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, nor shall any other dilatory, superseding or privileged motion, including any motion pursuant to Standing Order 46, be permitted to be proposed on any day designated for the consideration of Bill C-2, except with the unanimous consent of the House;

That during the debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-2, the first speaker from each party shall speak no longer than 30 minutes and subsequent speakers shall speak no longer than 20 minutes; and

That should a recorded division be requested on the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, the said division shall be deferred to a time to be announced by a minister of the Crown, after reaching agreement with representatives of each party, but the said division shall not be deferred for a period of more than one week.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, did I hear the order of the day read? I thought we were now back on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Speaker: The order read from the table was resuming consideration of the adjournment motion.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are some brief comments I think I ought to make before the question is put on the adjournment motion. First of all, with regard to the statement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) when he referred to the adjournment being to October 15, it is possible to interpret his remarks to indicate that the date October 15 was part of an all-party agreement. I should like to make clear that we in this party have not agreed to the date October 15. The selection of that date and the adjournment until that date is clearly the responsibility of the government. I wish to make very clear that we have not agreed to an adjournment of that length of time.

At this time I do not intend to review the work of the session and what has or has not been done, but I do wish to make a brief reference to two great problems which confront the country, as it is now being proposed that this House adjourn. The first problem to which I should like to refer briefly is, of course, the dispute between the railway companies and the non-operating unions—a matter of great concern—a dispute which is capable of doing great damage to the economy of the country as well as cause great inconvenience to the Canadian people.

We have been pressing the minister for some time to accept his responsibility, intervene in this dispute and play an active role in trying to bring the parties together with a view to settling the dispute and avoiding possible disruption of the Canadian economy. The minister's attitude has been that he believes in the collective bargaining process and that it should continue. He has expressed belief in the good sense of the parties to the dispute. He says that if it seems to be desirable or in the public interest, he will play any role which seems to him to be proper, and if it becomes necessary the government will do what it ought to do. It seems to me and to the members of my party that the minister has been displaying a very casual attitude. The situation appears to be degenerating. We now have selective strikes taking place. We have the danger, at least, of retaliation from the railway companies. There is the possibility of lockouts, either partial or complete. The country is therefore faced, as this adjournment motion is before the House, with the possibility of grave disruption in the essential elements of our transportation system.

It is in this atmosphere that the government is proposing the adjournment of the House. I want to make it very clear that this is on its own responsibility, and that we are ready to stay here, if necessary, to face up to our responsibility as parliamentarians in this situation which virtually amounts to a crisis. We have been pressing, we continue to press and we shall press today for some assurance from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) that he is prepared to accept his responsibility as Minister of Labour and intervene actively with a view to bringing the parties back to negotiations and to a settlement. We have had no success in persuading the minister to accept his responsibilities.

The minister and the government are proposing nothing except a "wait and see" attitude, with offers of mediation. Parliament is subject to recall and, of course, we are ready to come back any time, at very short notice, to meet any emergency that may develop. But I say to the minister and to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) that the government must not let the economy of this country and the people of this country suffer. There comes a time when the public interest must prevail, and we will expect this government to discharge its responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What we want specifically at this time is some assurance from the minister that he will fully discharge his responsibilities, play an active part and involve himself personally by taking the political risk that is associated with making a personal effort to get this dispute settled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The second great problem that exists and to which I want to refer—

An hon. Member: Politics.

Mr. Stanfield: Politics? The second problem to which I want to refer, that exists at the time the House is being asked to adjourn, is the rapid increase in the cost of living that is taking place. I say, Sir, that the government has no approach to combat the increasing cost of living except to allow interest rates to increase and the possibility of tight money to develop. I remind the government again that the unemployment figures issued last month were a warning light that other problems may develop in the economy as a result of a slowdown in the rate of growth of the economy.

We have put forward a specific proposal regarding the fighting of inflation. The government does not accept that—that is its right—but I say that the government has prepared no effective attack on the cost of living, and in this respect the government is not governing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: They have not for a long time.

Mr. Stanfield: The kind of toothless review board which was set up by the government to review the price of food is no effective response. This government has insisted on holding on to office, and I say that if it is going to hold on to office it will have to discharge its responsibilities to the Canadian people. If anybody on that side of the House thinks the government will get away from opposition pressure on these issues just by having the House adjourn, I suspect he is in for a surprise. I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressed the view three or four years ago that all of us in the opposition were nobodies once we were a few hundred feet from Parliament Hill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All members.

Mr. Bell: Look at what he did when he was away.

Mr. Stanfield: I just want to say that if the Minister of Labour does not accept his responsibilities in this railway dispute, and if the government allows the cost of living to continue to escalate as it has been escalating, they will quickly find out who really are the nobodies and how quickly they will become nobodies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is always easy when a motion of this sort is put before the House to sound as if it were somebody else's responsibility and to attack the government for introducing the motion. However, I think in all fairness the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) should have said, as I intended to say, that the motion which is now before the House was agreed to by the leader of the Opposition's party as well as by the other opposition parties in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Another Liberal apologist.

Mr. Lewis: I do not think we serve the cause of parliament and the cause of relations among the parties in the House by trying to give the impression, when there has been an all-party agreement, that only one party is responsible for it.

Mr. Bell: It took you a week to find that out.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, let me remind the members of the Conservative Party—I will come back to that remark in a moment—that before their leader spoke today they went around the House and in the lobbies telling everybody that we would be out of here if it were not for Stanley. These holier than thou people who wanted parliament to recess several days ago are now accusing others of putting the motion at this time. There really should be an end to hypocrisy at some point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Then we have the statement that there is a crisis on the railways—there certainly is—and the Leader of the Opposition and other members of the Conservative Party keep telling the government to do something about it. Let them be honest enough to say that they want the government to bring in a law today ordering the striking railway workers back to work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: That is not so.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): That is erroneous; it is not correct.

Some hon. Members: Cheap.

Mr. Lewis: If they are right, and that is not so, that is not what they want—and I hope they are—what, in heaven's name, do they want?

Mr. McGrath: We want the government to live up to its responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. It is extremely difficult for members at this end of the chamber to hear the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I would hope that the hon. member who has been recognized will be given an opportunity to make his remarks. Perhaps other hon. members who feel they have comments to make will have the opportunity to speak on the motion later.

• (1140)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to live up to his responsibility and I want to make some specific suggestions to him. The idea that if the Minister of Labour appears at the negotiating table tomorrow it will settle the strike is a naïve and inexperienced idea. The time for him to appear is when there is an opportunity to settle the strike, which I suspect is not yet here, so demands that the minister go to Montreal and sit down at the negotiating table can only be made by people who know very little about negotiation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: But there are things that the Minister of Labour can do now.

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Lewis: I invite him to do them. One of the major problems which is embittering the railway employees at the present time is the widespread opposition among them to the pension plans that have been agreed to and the way in which those pension plans are handled by the railways. One of the things that undoubtedly would very quickly ease the situation among the railway employees out on strike would be the Minister of Labour immediately appointing an independent inquiry into the railway pension plans.

The minister should appoint someone to make an independent analysis of the railway pension plans, to make an analysis of their actual cost, to make an analysis of the plans in comparison with other industrial plans and with government pension plans. He should divulge to the workers of the railways the facts of their pension plans. If such an inquiry shows they are behind other industrial plans, as they are, and behind government pension plans, as they are, then the inquiry ought to make specific recommendations for changing those plans. Since Canadian National Railways are government-owned, there is no reason in the world why the government and this parliament should not order the CNR to treat their employees as they ought to be treated in the area of pensions.

There is another thing which the minister can do immediately, and in my opinion ought to do, to carry out his responsibility in this matter. It is obvious to anybody who is watching the situation that the railway employees are anxious to exercise their right to strike, and to exercise it in such a way as to minimize the harm it does to the economy and the people of Canada. It is equally obvious that the railways are determined not to let them carry on a strike which will minimize the harm to the economy. It is obvious that the CNR and the CPR in particular are threatening lay-offs, threatening not to recall those who are out on temporary strike, and are deliberately taking action to provoke a general strike or a general lockout in this country, hoping that this parliament will help the railways out by passing the kind of law ordering the employees back to work that some members of this House would like to see passed.

I believe that the Minister of Labour, speaking on behalf of the people of Canada as well as on behalf of the employees of the railways, ought to tell the railways, particularly the CPR and the CNR—more particularly the CNR—to cut out their shenanigans and act like responsible corporations, as they are a public utility of this country.

The railways ought to be requested, and if necessary in some way ordered, to play ball with the unions and to allow the unions to carry on the strike with the least possible damage to the economy of Canada, with the least possible damage to grain shipments and to the ferries that the unions have agreed to run. I say, Mr. Speaker, if the arrangement to work the Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland ferries should break down, and if continuing to ship grain should break down, it will not be the responsibility of the railway workers; it will be the responsibility of the railways and their deliberate provoking of a general strike. That is what will bring about a breakdown of the intentions of the railway unions.

An hon. Member: Baloney!

Mr. Lewis: I expected the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I think it was, or somebody from that group to say "baloney," but I say this is the key to keep the strike under control, doing as little damage as possible to the Canadian economy. The railway workers are suffering from the fact that they are in an essential service. They are given the right, under the law, to take action like all other workers in this country, outside of certain excepted groups, are permitted to do. But the moment they do that and the moment their strike becomes effective, then everybody screams that they must go back to work because they are in an essential service. I say that men and women who are employed in an essential service in Canada are entitled to the same rights, the same conditions of work and the same decent wages as are all other employees in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: These are the things that the Minister of Labour can do. I cannot, from my not inconsiderable experience in labour negotiations, tell him that he should go to Montreal tomorrow to the negotiating table because it does not look as though the settlement is there yet. I think that kind of intervention is better at a later stage.

There is a third thing that the minister can do immediately, and no one can stop him, and that is appoint an independent mediator. There is not much value in one of the officials of his department meeting with the unions and the railways. I do not say this because they are not competent, because Mr. Kelly is not a competent negotiator and mediator with a great deal of experience in labour matters, particularly railway labour. However, the Minister of Labour knows as well as I do that at this stage an officer of his department is not going to carry very much weight. He ought to appoint immediately, just as the strike has settled down—with a time limit, not of months but of a week or ten days—an independent mediator of standing in the community. The minister knows such people better than I do. He should appoint someone to go to Montreal, sit down with the two parties and try to squeeze a settlement out of them. In my view, a competent mediator could accomplish that within a relatively short time, a matter of a week or ten days. Particularly would that be the case if the minister appointed an independent inquiry into the pension plans and the monetary value of those pension plans which would give the mediator a chance to obtain the facts on these matters as he discussed them with the parties to the dispute.

These are practical things an independent inquiry into the pension plans, a strong statement by the government to the companies to stop their shenanigans and to co-operate with the unions in having the strike produce as little harm as possible, and the appointment of an independent mediator, a person with experience in the realm of labour relations, who has standing in the community and carries weight with both sides in the dispute. If the minister would do those three concrete things immediately, I think it would do a great deal to shorten the dispute and reduce the danger of real damage, particularly to the farmers of western Canada in the shipment of grain.

Mr. Speaker, on this kind of motion one should not make a lengthy speech. There are various things that concern us, but I do not know that parliament's sitting for another two or three weeks would solve those matters. Of course, it would not. But there are problems that concern us about the cost of living and the general economy. We dealt with them at our convention last week.

I merely want to say to the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that now that we have a sensible arrangement for completing the debate on Bill C-2, it will take a reasonable time, rather than an unreasonable time, even if there is no time limit. Obviously, it will take a reasonable time to complete that bill. There are on the order paper other bills which we are anxious to debate as quickly as possible. We should deal with the family allowances bill, the election expenses bill, the foreign investments bill—which has been dealt with by the committee and with other bills of that sort.

Finally, I suggest to the leader of the House that while the Senate is sitting and considering the Olympic bill, the crop insurance bill should be brought in and passed this afternoon. We do not see any reason for anyone to object to increased facilities for farmers in the area of crop insurance. That bill ought to pass without debate. If it does not pass, provincial governments will need to carry a much greater load of expense, because they have already reduced premiums in anticipation of the passage of the federal crop insurance bill. I do not see why that should not be done today in a few minutes before we recess.

My colleagues and I are disappointed that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board did not find it necessary to come back to this House today, as it was his duty to do. Some time ago he gave an undertaking to the House in reply to a question by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)—who is also not here; I must say that in fairness. The minister undertook to make a statement on the government's new policy on feed grains before this House rose for the summer.

It was his duty as a minister, and his moral duty—in view of his undertaking—to be present and to make that statement. His failure to be here is an affront to the House. What is more important, it leaves the farmers of this country in uncertainty. It leaves them in the position of not knowing what is happening, and it leaves the government in an unhappy position. If it is stupid enough to take the authority for feed grains away from the Canadian Wheat Board, it will suffer even worse consequences on the prairies next when there is an election than it did the last time.

I end on the note on which I started. We agree to the motion, but not to the date of October 15 for the recalling of parliament. We would have preferred parliament to be recalled one or two weeks earlier. However, that is not a matter of such import now, in view of the present situation. We agree to the motion because we think it necessary, particularly in view of the railway strike, for the minister to have a chance to work at it, for the government to bear its responsibilities and take action, and for parliament to be recalled if that action is not satisfactory. We feel that parliament has done useful work in the present session. We expect the fall sitting to be productive of even more useful things. That we shall see when we come back, Sir.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, if the sessions opened and adjourned on set dates, as is done in Great Britain, in France and in many other countries, we would not witness the show we had this morning.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), Leader of the New Democratic Party, is entirely right when he says that under an agreement made among the various parties we will be adjourning till October 15.

However, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Stanfield) rises offended and blames the government for introducing the motion to adjourn. He says that he is prepared to carry on and remain here. Mr. Speaker, for at least three weeks, I have been meeting Progressive Conservative members telling me: "When will the session end? When will we be on holidays?" Some have already left. Indeed, we noted it last evening. Thirty members present out of 107, that is not too bad.

Mr. Speaker, we all agree that during this session we would have liked to discuss the economic surge. We would have liked to discuss right away about family allowances so as to start paying them on September 1 instead of January 1. The consumers' purchasing power should be tailored to the cost of living through compensated discounts. We would have liked to speak about conflicts which exist throughout Canada.

The member for York South mentioned the railway dispute and said that it was no time for the Minister of Labour (M. Munro) to intervene. I maintain that he should have intervened much sooner, that is to say he should have been preventive instead of curative so as to prevent disastrous strikes from occurring. Everyone wants the railway workers to be well treated but we have had railway strikes before. It has been said that the problem was settled and today again we have a new railway strike. Therefore, I am right when I say that a strike does not settle the labour problem. A strike is no help to a worker because it is at his own expenses. The only ones benefiting from a strike are the labour leaders, the strike organizers and the union lawyers. This is why I have been asking them for 30 years: Show me a strike which helped settled the labour issue in Canada or elswhere in the world. Strikes in the USSR led to a regime set up 60 years ago. Did that settle the problem?

An hon. Member: There are no strikes in the USSR!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): They no longer have strikes precisely because guys like the New Democrats hold power in the USSR. Through their work and in the name of freedom, union leaders succeeded in overthrowing the regime which existed then. And today former union leaders are at the head of USSR departments and people are forbidden from striking. If a worker is planning a strike he is immediately shot or deported to Siberia. That is what those people would like to give Canada!

Some hon. Members: Ha! Ha! Réal!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): There they are: they say "Ha!" We need only read the Regina manifesto; it says the same thing that occurred in Russia, in Czechoslovakia.

An hon. Member: Give it to us!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): For sure! Mr. Speaker, you hear them. Questions have been asked about the rail dispute for two weeks now. It has not been solved and the minister is told: You must act. It is obvious that if the minister introduces a bill in the House, it will be to order the workers back to work. To my mind, it would be much more logical to guarantee them security and freedom, through a government measure, than to allow them to be pushed around by the socialists and communists who head the unions in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Lewis: Come on, Réal, that is not true; that is an insult.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): You won't tell me that Laberge is not a socialist right through and through. He said so himself.

Mr. Speaker, I understand. People say lawyers live off the unions. The hon. member for York South knew it before he became a member. Those are the people who accuse me of being against the unions. I am in favour of them provided they are controlled by the members and not by people like Laberge, Pépin, Chartrand, and perhaps soon, in some cases, by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: But there are good unions. They exist.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): There are unions. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was a union man too. He has improved. I believe that he received the sanctifying grace of the liberal party!

Mr. Speaker, my riding is a working-class riding, the people work in the farming and forestry industries, and there are thousands of miners who belong to unions. I have often been invited to come and help settle disputes. Though I was not a negotiator myself I met with the negotiators and said to them: Do your job yourselves, I will not interfere. I also met with the employers and with the workers and their wives and sometimes even the children.

When the women didn't have any milk, they would say: Jean-Baptiste, go out and work. But Jean-Baptiste was on strike and it lasted for quite some time. I was obliged to intervene in many disputes, at Val-d'Or, at Malartic, at Rouyn-Noranda, and I was never afraid to tell the workers' leaders what I thought, to their faces, not behind their backs. I also said to the workers, and I say it again, here in the House this time: Go ahead and join the unions, but take control of them yourselves. Don't let yourselves be controlled by trouble-makers like the ones we find everywhere in Canada nowadays. I know a fellow in Montreal who has just left the Canadian Labour Congress because his life was threatened by members of the CLC in Montreal. Mr. Speaker, what was solved by the strikes in the construction industry? Two years ago there was a general strike of construction workers throughout Quebec. In Rouyn the people wanted to build a composite school, but what happened? Three vehicles arrived from Montreal carrying 16 union thugs who threatened the people, saying that they would beat them up, break their legs and set fire to their houses.

Mr. Speaker, you are about to rise, and I am about to take my seat. In any event, the four parties in this House have agreed that we adjourn until October 15. I hope that the railway employees dispute will be settled as quickly as possible, and I hope that when the House reconvenes, we will get on with the business of passing legislation that will give the people of Canada security, and freedom, and not slavery.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the New Democratic Party and the leader of the Social Credit Party. May I first make reference to the comments of the Leader of the Opposition. As Minister of Labour, I do not need the pious pontification of the Leader of the Opposition to remind me what my responsibilities are to the Canadian people; nor do we need the pious pontification of the Leader of the Opposition to remind this government of its responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We are fully aware of the serious implications of a railway strike in this country. Who wouldn't be? For us to act now would be an arbitrary denial, before a complete strike takes place, of the workers' rights to express their dissatisfaction with their working conditions and rates of pay.

The party which the Leader of the Opposition leads, the Progressive Conservative Party, is well on record as endorsing the principle of free collective bargaining in the long term public interest. I assume that is their justification for endorsing that philosophy. Be it so-called essential services or not, it can be argued, and I think has been argued successfully within the councils of the Progressive Conservative party, that free collective bargaining, in the long run, is in the public interest.

The Leader of the Opposition says he wants my assurance that I will accept my responsibility. He has that assurance, as do the people of Canada. I think there was some cynicism exhibited in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. He said I should personally intervene. If he means by that personal intervention, this also carries with it the connotation that the government should come forward with a bill that would intervene—

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: It is sophistry.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is not sophistry. The Leader of the Opposition shakes his head in a negative way. I take it the official position of this party is that he is not recommending at this stage legislation that would impose a settlement or force the men back to work. What alternatives is he suggesting? He has suggested personal intervention on my part. I have personally intervened whenever I found that intervention would be constructive.

In this particular case, I quite agree with the leader of the New Democratic Party when he says that personal intervention by a Minister of Labour does not necessarily lead to a settlement, and in some cases is not even conducive to reaching a settlement. It is misleading to the Canadian people to suggest that intervention by a Minister of Labour by somehow corralling the parties, taking them by the scruff of the neck, throwing them in a room and walking out will lead to a settlement. It just does not work that way. I know the Leader of the Opposition is fully aware of that.

The Leader of the Opposition said we should take the political risks. That is not even a factor of my thinking or the thinking of the government. Trying to arrive at a settlement of this particular dispute is the overriding concern; politics is not a consideration at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): While talking about politics, I might say that to try and resolve this dispute with minimal dislocation to the country, Canadians and the employees involved is a two-way street. Alarm that is injected purposely, and to some degree falsely, is not conducive to trying to arrive at a settlement of this dispute.

To play on people's fears by exaggerating the implications, however serious they may be, indicating that the country is somehow going to be on the verge of economic disaster if something does not occur right away, is to mislead the Canadian people. That type of responsibility should be exhibited by members of the opposition as well as by members of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If the right hon. member does not mind, I have just about finished my remarks. With regard to the comments of the leader of the Social Credit party, accusations of a most exaggerated kind as to political affiliation, and derogatory terms about leaders of the labour movement, are also not conducive to arriving at a settlement of this dispute and the serious implications of it.

• (1210)

I have noted the comments made by the leader of the New Democratic Party. He mentioned three things. He spoke of pensions. He said there ought to be an independent adjudicator, a man with high qualifications and experience in the field, who would examine the situation and make recommendations. I have already said that this suggestion is being given serious consideration at the present moment.

As to appeals to the employers—the hon. gentleman put it more strongly than that—not to take any action which would exacerbate an already serious situation, such appeals have been made and I hope they carry some weight.

As to the services of a competent mediator being provided at some stage in the dispute, consideration is being given to this proposal. The proposition is arguable, I believe, in the present circumstances, but the idea is certainly being given consideration.

I want to assure members of the House and the Canadian people that we do not belittle the implications of this impending strike, particularly in view of the dislocation caused by the commencement of rotating strikes. We shall do everything possible within our ability to bring this dispute to an end.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister now be prepared to accept a question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is simply this. The minister has stated he is doing everything he can, and that the situation is serious. If the situation we have seen in the last few days continues, how long will it be before the government considers taking effective action?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. The right hon. member very well knows we have to consider the implications, and weigh the inconvenience to the public against the philosophy and principles of free collective bargaining, which are also very real and which are also in the public interest. The point at which these two considerations come into balance is a matter of judgment to be reached in the circumstances.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to say much in response to the statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). In so far as he has a case—and I doubt whether he has much of a case—it will be dealt with by other members of my party. I will say only this: he based his case, such as it is, on the extent to which he has a responsibility to exercise. It is the opinion of members of this party that this responsibility has not been exercised, that the minister's position is that of Mr. Micawber in David Copperfield; he sits back, hoping that something will happen.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Nonsense.

Mr. Baldwin: We believe there is a case to be made for the government and the minister exercising ingenuity and diligence and working hard in an effort to develop, through their own initiatives, a solution lying between the necessity of having to take parliamentary action and their sitting on their seats doing nothing. We think there is an intermediate ground but that the government and the minister have not been diligent enough to find it. That is our complaint.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I was prepared to take issue with him, but in the latter part of his speech he did put into context the position of the various House leaders with regard to the motion before us. We worked to produce an order with particular reference to the amendments to the Criminal Code. That is common knowledge. Even the Chair might take judicial notice of the fact that this was the "sticker" with which we were confronted. I pay tribute to my colleagues in the other parties for their work in reaching a compromise which was acceptable to members in all quarters.

In working out this order our minds were directed to the details required to develop a solution which would find some measure of general acceptance. There was no suggestion of dealing with any matter beyond this. The government House leader, as was his duty, indicated the intention of the government with regard to an adjournment date. This was within our knowledge and I wish to make it plain that it is not our intention to oppose this motion in its present terms. On that issue, bearing in mind the grave problems which confront the country, the responsibility is one which falls squarely on the shoulders of the government. It is for the government to take that responsibility and to answer for it if and when the occasion arises.

When an hon. member comes to consider his position with regard to an adjournment motion, I think he asks himself: What are the serious problems which confront the country and what hope exists that legislative or other proposals will be forthcoming from the government which would amount at least to a reasonable attempt to find solutions? My immediate impulse would be to say the House should not be allowed to depart and the Parliament should not be allowed to adjourn as long as these problems continue to exist and there is hope that legislative proposals can be advanced to deal with them. But in this light, we are surely entitled to examine the government's record—its rather pitiful attempts to deal with other problems. We are entitled to compare what was promised in the Speech from the Throne with what has been brought forward, and to ask ourselves whether there is any reason we should object to this motion, and say to Parliament: Stay here.

In the light of its record, in the light of what the government has done and failed to do, I must say to myself, as I am sure a good many members of the other side of the House say to themselves—because they dare not say it aloud: Why in the name of Heaven keep Parliament in session, having regard to the pitiful record of the government in bringing forward legislation to deal with the problems of the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: If it would be of any value, I could place the legislative record before the House. Apart from appropriation measures, 13 bills have received Royal Assent.

Mr. MacEachen: Twenty-seven.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member and I part company on that. I am not talking about measures which were passed. I am talking about measures which received Royal Assent. Maybe His Excellency has been here at a time of which I did not receive notice. Consider that list with the measures listed in the Speech from the Throne, those glorious, golden promises contained in the Speech from the Throne.

We all remember sitting here and listening to the government tell us, in the words of His Excellency, that it would continue its discussions with the United States to settle certain difficulties which had arisen in our trading arrangements with that country, and to promote stable economic growth. And today, six months later, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is starting to fight. Six months have been spent in making an appreciation of the situation and acquiring the intelligence needed.

● (1220)

I would ask those hon. members who are doing their jobs as representatives of the housewives and the people of this country who buy foodstuffs and clothing and the housing they need to contrast the situation which exists today with this promise to promote stable economic growth and attain reasonable price stability.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I note that the applause of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is as weak as his fight. The next promise was a major revision of the general adjustment assistance plan to enable industry to take advantage of opportunities for increasing our foreign trade, followed by aid to small businesses through new incentives to strengthen management.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Again we hear some weak applause.

Mr. Sharp: It is a weak speech, that is the problem.

Mr. Baldwin: We then find reference to extension and improvement of the Industrial Development Bank. We have had an announcement but we will probably wait months for legislation. There is reference to assistance to co-operative and credit unions, and that bill is on the order paper. Then there is reference to renewed measures to reduce deeply entrenched regional economic disparities, and a review of research and development incentive programs. There is also reference to a social security system containing incentives to work, with greater emphasis on the need to get people on social aid back to work.

I could take hours and hours showing how these golden promises made by the government, which now read like the Arabian Nights fables, contrast to the actual pitiful, atrocious legislative record in respect of which we have to go back and apologize to our constituents. On that basis, with this government's record of ineptness in respect of its administrative accomplishments, what would be the use of trying to stay here to deal with these problems at this time, much as we would like to?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I am not one of those who say that because this is a minority government it cannot act, because it is not a minority government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) are equally guilty of parroting the phrase "Our main objective has been to make minority parliament work". There are two things wrong with that phrase: This is not a minority Parliament and it does not work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for York South led his 31 paper tigers back from Vancouver not so long ago.

An hon. Member: Covered with bedsores.

Mr. Baldwin: He made some challenging statements about what he was going to do to the government, knowing well that we were coming close to adjournment, and knowing well that the only occasion on which they dared show their teeth was when we in this party had already indicated in respect of certain measures that we intended to support them. Only on those occasions did the junior partner of this coalition government indicate his willingness to fight. What a party and what a fight, Mr. Speaker.

I want to conclude by referring to two other issues. What concerns me and must concern us all, without regard to partisanship or region, and without regard to any other issue at all, is what is going to happen to the people of this country and our economic situation during the time when we will be absent, until October 15?

When we examine the situation that is developing in the United States, when we realize the extent to which they are rationing certain items, when we read about housewives in that country buying foodstuffs and hoarding, and when we read that people are now anticipating that before the year is over there will be a considerable food shortage, we must realize that it is inevitable that the same situation will develop here to some degree. I want to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the members of the cabinet who are here: If this situation does develop, what do they intend to do about it? Do they intend to call Parliament back? Ministers talked about a contingency plan. Does the government have a contingency plan which can be introduced without legislative authority? Is there any way by which this government can act in the event of that type of emergency arising?

I do not want to hear a lot of nonsense such as that which we heard from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro)—that the government has a responsibility. It has responsibility for creating the situation, but we on this side of the House have a responsibility for calling to the attention of the government something it seems to have forgotten in its rather selfish attitude about staying in power without regard for the real problems of the country that are developing.

It is almost inevitable that this situation will develop into crisis proportions on the North American continent. Therefore, we are entitled to be told before we leave this place what the government proposes to do. Obviously the government is not able to tell us in chapter and verse precisely what it plans, but will it need parliamentary approval or does it have authority without calling parliament back to deal with the situation? Is it, as I suspect, waiting with faith and hope that something will turn up? This is what we are entitled to know before leaving this place, and I urge the government to give a categorical assurance to members of this House that there are in existence and under consideration plans to deal with this emergency.

If the government does not give us some idea what those plans are, this will be, in our view and in the view of the people of Canada, a further reason why we should have no confidence in this government or in the Liberal party of which it is composed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is one more reason I should have liked this House to continue sitting. I have been for some time trying to obtain an agreement from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) to institute a commission of inquiry into what appears to be a potentially very serious situation involving fraud and corruption in connection with certain student co-operative building projects in which the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been involved. The minister has told us that he instituted an in-house or internal inquiry last February.

The facts in connection with this sordid situation, as they appear from sworn evidence, have been publicly known since November, 1971. The statements of a senior adviser to CMHC are on record and give in some detail the facts of this very serious situation involving the CMHC and the government. We do not accept the fact that the minister has launched any meaningful inquiry. If this Parliament recesses today without the government doing something about this, I would take that as being prima facie proof of the fact it is aware of the existence of these facts but is afraid to do anything about the matter.

I conclude in respect of this issue by simply putting on record extracts from the sworn testimony of Mr. Vincent Lapetina, given in the Supreme Court of Ontario on November 3, 1971. He talks about contractors, architects and other people. This testimony was sworn before a Commissioner for Oaths on his examination in respect of an affidavit. He refers to "Murphy" who was one of the contractors, and states:

—Murphy was negotiating the contract for the Waterloo project, there was a certain deal worked out between Murphy and the architects, Tampold Wells, and Howard Edelmann. The deal was that C.M.H.C. requires open bids on jobs; the deal was that Murphy was to get the job regardless of the open bids, but the profits were to be split three ways between Tampold Wells, Howard Edelmann and Murphy. This was done, and the tenders were rigged. I delivered the Murphy bid after the actual bids were opened, delivered it personally to John Wells.

Then there is one more sentence later on:

Bids would be called; Murphy was to get the job; profits were to be split three ways between Murphy, Tampold Wells and Howard Edelmann. Okay? And this was done on the various projects. At this time they had to look for a vehicle to get the funds from Murphy Construction, or Galway Realty into something where Tampold Wells could share on the profits. This is when Winal Properties was incorporated.

I suggest that if the minister is not aware of the facts he should be. There is a responsibility upon him and this government to launch not the kind of inquiry that could only be collateral to a cover-up but a full, unabridged inquiry through a royal commission, so that the people of Canada can know something about these facts. The failure of the government to do something about this before Parliament leaves here today, I suggest, is strong evidence that at least some members of the government know about this, but are afraid and do not want to act.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the motion placed before us today by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) contains two basic elements; one that the House be adjourned today until October 15, and the other an agreement on how the bill on capital punishment will be dealt with after that adjournment. I have no quarrel or objection in respect of the agreement concerning this important bill after the House reconvenes on October 15. However, I must admit I have some severe reservations in respect of the date set today for adjournment, October 15.

I should like to outline, if I may, the reason for my concern; it is very specifically related to a problem of very great significance to the people I happen to represent. I am speaking about the airport at Pickering. The people in Pickering and the immediate area of Markham were concerned by an announcement on March 22, 1971 to the effect that the government proposed to build an airport in the Pickering area.

It is now two and a half years later and this question, even in theory, has not been resolved. The severe uncertainty affecting the lives of hundreds and indeed thousands of people today in that area is still present. I believe it is essential that we eliminate this degree of uncertainty one way or another and as soon as possible.

In addition to the very severe uncertainty there is the question of the credibility not only of the government but more specifically of the Department of Transport. The Department of Transport made this announcement, and has made subsequent announcements since that time which I think leave much to be desired. As I pointed out earlier, the announcement was made on March 22, 1971, two and a half years ago. On August 31, 1972 a further agreement was finally publicly made in the House of Commons. On the dates of August 31 and September 1, 1972, as recorded in Hansard at pages 3897 and 3940, in response to questions raised by myself it was stated that the government would in fact have an independent inquiry, a broad inquiry, allowing input by people in the area, others in the metropolitan area, the provincial government and municipal governments.

That was quite some time ago. What has happened since that time? After the magnificent delay of many months, almost a year, on June 21, 1973 the terms of reference for such an inquiry were announced. In my view, those terms of reference live up to the commitment made nearly a year before. The agreement was that there would be an inquiry conducted by an independent group and that group would be allowed to make recommendations to the government of Canada.

Ever since then there have been many delays. The three independent people have not been named to that inquiry board. Shortly after that announcement of June 21 I raised a question in the House of Commons asking when that inquiry group would be named. The minister gave, if I recall it correct, a rather vague answer and I put the question in more specific terms. The minister then said it would be reasonable to assume that the composition of that board would be announced within a two-week period. To date that board has not yet been named.

I view an adjournment at this time with grave reservations, because at least when the House is in session and I am here and the ministers and others are here I can feel some confidence that I can exert daily pressure upon these people to see that something is in fact done, and done soon. I have reservations because there is the other side to the coin. When the House is adjourned and ministers have more available time, by not having to be in the House on a daily basis, they could direct more of their attention to the problem. In spite of this I have a deep and abiding fear that it is possible that we will wait until after the House comes back for the announcement concerning the naming of people to that independent board.

This would be unacceptable to the people who have waited this great length of time. They deserve better, and they will get better if I have anything to do with it. We need a commitment from this government before this House adjourns today that it will in fact treat this matter with the kind of priority it deserves, and that the people of my area will be relieved of the agonizing uncertainty to which they have been subjected because of the lack of action on the part of the government over such a long, extended period of time.

I am willing not to oppose an adjournment if in fact I can be assured that action will be taken during this adjournment period to speed up the process and name those people within the next week or so, rather than use the adjournment as a medium to extend the delay and thus further the agonizing process to which the people concerned have been subjected.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the motion before the House. It provides for a recess and also makes special arrangements to deal with Bill C-2, the capital punishment legislation, when we come back in the fall. I must say that I have seldom been involved in negotiations that were so tough and so determined so far as the parties on both sides were concerned, and yet out of these negotiations we did reach a settlement which, I suppose, is typical in that both sides gave a bit and both sides feel they won.

The fact of the matter is that all of this week there has been terrific pressure from members of all of the other parties in this House for us to get out this week, indeed today, but the issue at stake was, of course, Bill C-2. Those who take the retentionist position were very determined not to agree to any order that would cut off debate. In other words, they would not consent to any time limit on the debate. Yet, I think it can be said that it was for the most part those on the retentionist side who were most anxious to get out.

Those of us who are abolitionists felt very strongly that we did not want the fall session to be jeopardized by a lengthy debate on Bill C-2, and therefore we were equally strong in our position that we were not going to agree to an adjournment of that debate until the fall unless there was an agreement to limit the debate at that time. These positions seemed irreconcilable. Perhaps what we have achieved might be an example to the companies and the unions, in the railway dispute, namely, that irreconcilable positions can be reconciled at some point. What we have achieved is an arrangement which does not provide for a cut-off of the debate in the fall at a precise time, but it does provide for extra hours, shorter speeches and no amendments. The practical effect is that the debate in the fall can hardly last more than five or six days.

It is one of those collective agreements in which both sides have won. The side that did not want a time limit has before the House an order in which there is no time limit. Those of us who wanted the debate to have a practical time limit have won in the sense that there cannot be more than five or six days of debate on capital punishment when we come back to this bill in the fall.

[Mr. Cafik.]

Another issue among us was whether it was desirable to settle the issue now or have it settled in the fall. Those who share my view on the issue—the abolitionist point of view—felt that the issue has been debated long enough, that it was desirable not to have it re-opened in the fall but that it was desirable to get it settled now before we leave. We have conceded that the decision is to be made in the fall. We may be somewhat unhappy about that, but we are pleased that part of the agreement is that the times when votes will be taken will not come as a surprise to anyone. The votes on the two report stage amendments will come at the end of the first day on which the debate on Bill C-2 is called again in the fall, and the vote on third reading, the final, crucial vote on this issue, will come at a time to be arranged by agreement among the four House leaders.

I submit that this is an exceedingly fair arrangement. Neither side will win by default on the part of the other side. No one will be caught by surprise. The debate at some point will come to an end, a decision will be made on when a vote is to be taken, so that every member can be here and we can have a clearcut vote on the basis of as full attendance as possible in the House of Commons. So even though some of us may not be completely happy—I suppose that is true for both sides—about the agreement that has been reached, it does seem to me to be a sensible arrangement; and since we have agreed to it on a four party basis, we should be quite prepared to say so and therefore give our support to this motion.

Once this motion is passed, it is likely that there will be some time this afternoon when the House could do some other business, and I press very strongly that the government House leader—or, if he has to leave in the meantime, the acting government House leader—call order No. 12, the order having to do with crop insurance.

We have been trying to negotiate and I know that the negotiations are still going on. Even if we are not able to reach an agreement by negotiations behind the curtains or in the corridors, I think the order should be called. Maybe there are some who want to debate it, so an hour or two could be used for that purpose, but I do not think we should go out of this place today with that order not dealt with because it was not called. It has come back from committee without amendments, I believe. There are not amendments on the report stage, and there is only third reading left. I can speak for my party and say that we are prepared to pass it without debate; but even if there are members of any other party who want to debate it, let us call the order, have the debate and see if we can get that bill through before we leave here this afternoon.

I suggest also that the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act, which has come out of committee and contains certain provisions that the government would like to have enacted, is one that might be dealt with this afternoon as well. I do not use so many words about that because I do not think there is a dispute over that, but surely that could be done as well.

I think also that if there is a statement on feed grains policy—and some of my colleagues may have a few words to say about this later in this debate—has been prepared by the government, then the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) should not stand in the way of that statement being given to the House today. It may well be that the statement has not been prepared. We cannot ask the government for a statement of policy if it has no policy, but if a policy has been brought into being by the government, I think that the time to make that statement is today, even if some other minister has to make it. There will be a great deal of anger if a statement is not made today simply on the excuse that the Minister of Justice is not here, and then he makes it on Monday or Tuesday when the House has gone away. I press that point and, as I said, it may be pressed further by some of my colleagues.

The only other area in which I wish to say a few words has to do with the session that will commence on October 15. Mind you, there could be a session in the meantime if there is an emergency that brings us back. So far as the railway strike situation is concerned, my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), has stated very clearly our feeling that for the next week or so it would be better for us not to be here so that the collective bargaining process could go on without the fear that there will be back to work legislation.

With respect to the fall session that will commence on October 15, I want to say without hesitation—despite my interest in other matters of legislation to which I will refer—that we must get the capital punishment issue out of the way first. I know that when it is called there will be some catcalls on the floor of the House as to why we are dealing with capital punishment, why not something else.

However, the capital punishment bill is an important matter of public policy and an important element in the law of the land. We have invested a great deal of parliamentary time in it, and I urge that it be got out of the way in the first six or seven days after we come back in the fall. But then let us give top priority to some of the pressing matters that are before us. The family allowances measure, in my view, should have had second reading a month ago. We did not get it, but the bill is on the order paper and it has been printed. We have seen the bill and there is pretty general support for it. I do not think the debate at second reading needs to be long. Let us pass that bill early when we are back in the fall so that there will be no question about its provisions coming into effect on January 1, 1974.

● (1250)

I urge also that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in the two and a half months we are now giving him to come up with a few things, be ready in the fall with his other bill on the Canada Pension Plan. I say "other bill" because we do have a little one on the order paper having to do with certain religious groups and a few technical points, but I am referring to the other bill which has been promised, the aim of which is to raise the yearly maximum pensionable earnings under the Canada Pension Plan and also to remove the 2 per cent ceiling on the annual escalation of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan.

It was certainly my understanding when the orange paper, the working paper on social security, was brought in earlier this year that it was the hope and the intention of the government that the changes in the Canada Pension Plan would be effective on January 1, 1974.

Summer Recess

Some of the things that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said lately have cast some doubt on the certainty of that. I think that has to become a matter of certainty, Mr. Speaker, namely, that the escalation of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan when they next occur, namely at the beginning of 1974, will not be limited to 2 per cent but will at least match the full rise in the cost of living. I put this as a matter of very high priority on our legislative program for the fall. I press it vigorously, because, unlike some of the other things I referred to, it is not on the order paper, but it must get there.

One of the reasons we must get the Canada Pension Plan amending bill before us and get it passed is that there are a dozen other pension plans and arrangements where the annual escalation is still limited to 2 per cent, and the government keeps using the excuse—and no one gives it to us more often than the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury)—that these other plans cannot have the rate of their escalation increased until the rate of escalation is increased under the Canada Pension Plan.

I set that out as a program for this fall; that the Canada Pension Plan bill be brought in and passed, and that all other pension plans that come under the jurisdiction or responsibility of the federal government be dealt with this fall so that in 1974 those escalations will be at least the full extent of the cost of living and not limited to 2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker—yes, I will use the term—it is highway robbery to limit the escalation of any pension to 2 per cent at a time when the cost of living is going up 5 per cent, 6 per cent and 7 per cent. Someone says 8 per cent and maybe by January 1 it will be even more, Mr. Speaker. I put this very high on the priority list; something has to be done about it this year.

I also remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs earlier this year, when some pressure was put on him to provide escalation more often than annually, such as semi-annually, quarterly or even monthly, he deprecated that as not having much value and said it might be better to have periodic increases in the basic amount of pensions like old age security. I say to him that, with what is happening to the cost of living and the standard of living generally, the government must not go on thinking that $100 is enough as a basic old age pension. This, too, is something that ought to be considered, but certainly this fall let the months between October 15 and Christmas not pass without dealing with this whole problem. I am speaking of the problem of the annual escalation of pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, pensions for retired civil servants, retired RCMP personnel, retired armed forces personnel, railway pensioners, and all those who are affected by government legislation. Let us have them dealt with this fall without fail.

While these things are dealt with may I remind the House, in case some pension gets missed, that the government passed regulations under the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) which provide that even private pension plans cannot get income tax consideration unless they hold their escalation to 2 per cent. This is something that is a disgrace. It is highway robbery of our retired people and it can and must be dealt with this fall.

I just want to mention two or three other things that, in my view, should have very high priority this fall. One is the election expenses bill which got to committee. We had hoped that the committee would have dealt with it by now but that has not been the case. That committee should certainly meet in the fall, if not between now and then, and get that bill back so we can get it through before the end of the year. Then there is the bill regarding foreign investment which has been reported out of committee and has been improved considerably. It should be high on the priority list for the fall.

So, Mr. Speaker, I join with those with whom I have contended this week in an attempt to arrive at an agreement by saying that none of us is fully satisfied with the arrangements we have made for the disposal of the capital punishment bill in the fall, but we feel we have reached a sensible agreement. I believe, therefore, that we should welcome and give our support to this motion, but that we should put the government on notice that, not only do we want certain items brought forward this afternoon, but there are these priorities I have dealt with on which we want action as soon as possible after the House returns on October 15.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is now three minutes to one o'clock and while I do not intend to cover the whole gamut the way the last member did in making again the speech he has made on several occasions, there are a number of things I want to deal with.

It has been an interesting session so far. The government has swallowed itself several times. The west has been discovered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Queen has suddenly ceased to be anathema to the Prime Minister. Chameleons are noted for changing themselves according to their environment. Perhaps during the noon hour some hon. members would like to confirm that in front of the Prime Minister's office there are three sculptures of animals. As well, quite a large expenditure was made for carpets in the hall there. But there is only one animal that should have been placed there as a trademark of this government, and that is the chameleon.

I intend to deal with one or two of these matters, Mr. Speaker. It has been a session in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has started to read American history, and has quoted John Paul Jones. We have just begun to touch on it.

In the last six weeks or so the government apparently has repeatedly changed its mind. Up to that time it could rely at all times, and even now, on the support of the NDP. Mind you, I was disturbed to read the frightening words of the leader of the NDP in Vancouver—I will quote his words later—when he pointed out that the government must now realize that it is in jeopardy. He said that the parliamentary caucus of the NDP cannot tolerate much longer the Trudeau government, but he could not say how long that would be. This represents a complete somersault in attitude.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the numbers present on the government side, which include one minister, one hopeful parliamentary secretary and five members, indicate the interest of the government in public affairs.

Before the House rose for lunch, I had been alluding to the interesting fact that in front of the Prime Minister's office there are costly sofas where the wayfarer may rest and that there are three statues of animals. Having regard to the change of front on the part of this government, I suggest one statue has been omitted, that of the chameleon, which changes colour whenever circumstances or the environment make that necessary in the interest of its survival.

In looking at the remnants of this government, I see the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) present, and see in his eye that pugnacity which is synonymous with the declaration made the other day that, We have just begun to fight. That was one of the proudest statements anyone ever made. History knows that event turned out all right for the original author. However, when I think of the way in which Canada, in the last few months, has lost standing and status all over the world, I would think that the minister, as head of the Department of External Affairs, would stand up once and for all for Canadian rights all over the world.

I am thinking of one thing in particular, and I will not intrude on the work done in this connection by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). I am thinking of that Canadian who has been in prison in Cuba for over ten years.

Mr. Sharp: For doing what?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister tell me?

Mr. Sharp: The right hon. member must know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, the minister does not know.

Mr. Sharp: You tell the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no justification whatsoever for imprisoning that man—

Mr. Sharp: Not for smuggling arms?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no justification—

Mr. Sharp: Not for smuggling arms?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will begin to fight in a moment. There was no justification whatever for this government, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not to get in touch with Premier Castro and—

Mr. Sharp: The right hon. member would not have done it when he was prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, one may make remarks from a seated position that may get on Hansard, but that action does not really show the kind of statesmanship we expect from a man occupying the minister's portfolio.

Mr. Sharp: Nor from a former prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, what manner of mumbling is this that is going on? Sir, even in the days of the aboriginals, if one was speaking and the others had nothing to say, they did not mumble and grumble. All I wish to say is this: the failure of this government to make representations to Castro for the release of Ronald Lippert is disgraceful. After ten years of imprisonment there should be representations on personal and public grounds, having regard to the serious condition of his mother. Of course, I do not expect any action from this government because it will not speak out internationally. Muted words are the only response. All the minister would have to do, with the acquaintanceship between the Prime Minister and Mr. Castro, would be to get in touch with Castro and ask for consideration of this case.

● (1410)

We have the same situation in connection with the Canadians who were killed in Africa. We have had nothing but generalities from the minister. Two Canadians were murdered in cold blood. At the same time, the nation which participated in that murder is receiving tremendous grants from our country and will receive further grants. What was the unctuous reply of the minister? He said, you would not expect us to not act to help the poor people of that country by giving assistance? I cannot understand the attitude of this government in the face of what has been done to Canadians. What is the reward? The reward is hundreds of thousands of dollars of extra money to that country which has not done anything to expiate the crime committed in the murder of two Canadians. I hope the minister will, with regard to international actions, have his own department adopt those strident words, we have just begun to fight.

I was going to refer at some length to the New Democratic Party. In the absence of the leader of that party, I am not going to do that. I never do. I quoted his statement this morning, so the quotation will be clear. The leader of the New Democratic Party, speaking in Vancouver, said:

"I can't tell you when the next election will take place but I find it difficult to imagine being able to tolerate the Trudeau government much longer."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The NDP are now all together. Until that statement, they were divided. Is there any wonder there is an article in today's Ottawa Citizen headed "NDP looking for divorce from Grits". They are right up to date and have already joined in the applause. James Ferrabee, a very experienced and responsible writer, says and I quote:

The marriage of convenience is over. It's now only a question of finding a good pretext for divorce.

Are they applauding again?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are. That is what they are waiting for. Once you get the approval of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), you know where the party is going and he approved that statement. I say to the government, watch out; be careful, because the hon. member has applauded that suggestion. They are just waiting for an excuse. I do not know what the grounds for divorce are politically. No doubt it is the indecency of dilly-dally by the government that is going to form the basis for this unusual occurrence.

What are some of the other matters with which we have not dealt? I would like the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to give us some idea of what happened on the safari to Calgary. There was a tremendous build-up. The Prime Minister found that western Canada existed. He admitted it. How could people live in three provinces and the Prime Minister not know they existed? That was difficult in itself, but it was even more difficult when he had to go to the provincial premiers to find out what western Canada needed.

Did the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), that well-known agriculturalist, not speak to the government about that? What about God's gift to the Liberal party from Saskatchewan, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang)? Did he not let them in on the secret? What about Mahoney who has risen to great heights since the election in return for value received? What about the former Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Olson? Did he not let the government know?

Then, we come to British Columbia. There are two ministers from that province. They are not here now. Have they not let the government in on the secret? Do they hold cabinet meetings in secret in which ministers cannot speak? I get an affirmative answer by a bow of the head of the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanfield: They have just begun to fight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says they have just begun to fight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a most preposterous situation. Did the Minister of Justice not let the government know what the result would be with this tinkering in connection with the so-called two price system? Did he not let them know the farmers in western Canada will get less this year than last?

Mr. Drury: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest that again the Acting Prime Minister moves his head indicating a negative reply. If he would just stay in international affairs, he would learn just as much about them as he apparently has about agriculture. I remind him of this. The other day I said the price of bread would increase from one to four cents a loaf as a result of this tinkering. The Prime Minister said there was no foundation for that. He said it would only be about one-tenth of one per cent.

Mr. Sharp: Quote him correctly. Quote from Hansard, not newspapers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is that babble?

Mr. Sharp: Be fair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the minister, knowing nothing about the situation, wants some information. If he wants to speak, I will give him an opportunity, but if he does not have any written material before him I know he will not say anything. I quote from an article in the Vancouver Sun, home edition, of July 24:

Bread price to go up two or three cents

A flour milling firm spokesman today said the price of bread will go up two or three cents a loaf as a result of new wheat prices.

He went on to say that the price of flour had been raised by a very considerable amount to $6.50 per hundredweight, an increase of 45 cents to 55 cents a bushel charged millers by the wheat board. The Prime Minister said there was nothing to it. He had not been to the provincial premiers' meeting at that time. He had not discovered the west. He had not followed in the footsteps of Henry Kelsey who was there in 1691.

Yesterday, flour increased by $2.35 per hundredweight. What is the government doing about it? Nothing. It refuses to face the situation. When I raised this matter in the House last week, the Prime Minister brushed it aside. He said there was nothing to it. The government refuses to act. The cost of living of the average Canadian will go up very considerably as a result of this increase in the price of bread. What does the government say it will do? First, it says there will be no increase. When it does happen, I suppose they will turn it over to this board with the $40,000 a year chairman for the purpose of ascertaining whether anything took place. Why does the government not act?

I should like to deal next with the remarks of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). He was here this morning. He spoke and he left. What a picture! He gave us a lecture on conciliation procedures and labour discussions. Nobody is in disagreement with that. But when it comes to acting and doing, there is nothing to report. I do not blame him, because he does not know anything about the subject; he gets his direction from someone else.

● (1420)

I asked him what he intended to do about the dispute between the company and the non-operating railway employees, as reported at page 5988 of Hansard. He said he did not believe there was any immediate danger. I was dealing with the shipment of wheat. Then, I asked this question:

How long does the government anticipate this state of affairs will continue before parliament will act so that the economy of the nation will not be unnecessarily weakened? Has the government any plans in this regard or does it simply intend to paddle along day by day?

The word "paddle" was well chosen judging from the general attitude of the minister this morning. In reply, he said that historically, as he understood it, the Conservative party had always stood for free collective bargaining and for giving people their legitimate rights as recognized by parliament. He went on to say:

I think the parties should be allowed to bargain in a free and collective way. When the public interest is at stake I think the government will exercise its responsibility, but I hope that will not be necessary.

I ask him today: When is he going to act? What has he been doing in the last few weeks? From the explanation he gave today, it is obvious the answer is that he has just been sitting on the problem. He refuses to face it. He has refused to accept any of the suggestions made to the government. He is just waiting around, and while he waits the economic situation becomes worse. Immediately upon conclusion of his statement this morning, I asked him a question. I asked him: When are you going to act? And what did we get by way of reply? A massive explanation with many words but a total failure to convey any idea of when the government proposes to act.

As to the motion we are considering, I say at once that when agreements have been entered into among the representatives of the parties, they must be upheld. But what is behind all this? Is this sudden desire for an adjournment the result of the fact that the government does not intend to do anything regarding the cost of living? Is another reason the fact that it does not want parliament to be sitting while the price of bread goes up, not as a result of the forces of demand and supply but as a result of a government action which cannot be justified?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: There can be no question that this is the situation. They are afraid to have the House in session. They do not want to have this subject discussed.

Again, there is the question of feed grain, dealt with by one of the hon. members who preceded me. Why does the government not make a declaration? The Minister of Justice almost torpedoed the western meeting with the provincial premiers by his lack of finesse in saying he was afraid those various premiers were using tunnel vision. Why has the hon. member no revelation to make as to whether feed grains are to be taken from the Wheat Board? Certainly, if this were done when parliament were sitting, the government would know where it stood. We have made that perfectly clear. I warn the Acting Prime Minister that if the announcement is made after parliament has adjourned that feed grains are to be taken from the Wheat Board there will be an explosion on the Prairies which will make the nuclear explosion at Nagasaki look like a fire cracker parade on May 24.

Why is there no announcement? Has a decision been made? For weeks the Minister of Justice has been going about intimating that some great announcement would be made, but that it would not be made until after the conference of the premiers. Well, the conference is over. The Minister of Justice is not here. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not here. Why has there been no announcement? In the last election the Liberal party ended up with no seats in Alberta. It did a little better in Saskatchewan, and a little better in Manitoba. Let me say this to hon. members on the other side of the House, and let me make it abundantly clear: if you start this nonsense in connection with feed grains you will not have enough Liberal elected members in the next election to provide seed for the one after!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know what the Minister of Labour really has in mind. I do not know whether he has any plan in mind. I was very interested to hear that in the month of June the Liberal Party went into solemn conclave to decide whether or not they might go into a kind of retreat called transcendental meditation. Is that what they want to do during the next couple of months?

There is even division over there. There is the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik). I like him. He comes from a constituency and an area where I was raised as a boy. I like him, and I have never heard him more outspoken that he was today. I have always said, and I have been criticized for it, that parliamentary secretaries should not be answering questions in this House because they have no responsibility. I have said I would not be answered by a parliamentary secretary because they are helpmates of the ministers and have none of the responsibilities of cabinet knowledge or authority. I say to him: Beware! After a speech like that today there is likely to be a vacancy during the period when parliament is not sitting. I am amazed at the strength of the attack the hon. member made on the Department of Transport. It was harsh. It showed the department acting in a way which, to say the least, was inexcusable. The hon. member bows his head in full approval. They have been at it for two years. No, for three years— beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, I am always conservative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even the mountain, when it laboured, brought forth a mouse. For three years, he, with knowledge none of the rest of us can possess, by reason of his propinquity to the powers that be, has been unable to discern what the government may do. That speech deserves the utmost consideration by every member of the House for it represents only the second occasion on which, since the present government was elected last fall, any member supporting that administration has dared to speak against it.

● (1430)

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): They don't think Trudeau tells the truth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Western farmers have not forgotten that Mr. Trudeau did not know they raise wheat. He had no idea about that. He had been all over the world, to China, the U.S.S.R. and elsewhere but he did not know that. He said in Winnipeg he did not know the Wheat Board existed, yet he is the Prime Minister. He asked: "Do you expect me to sell wheat?" The farmers have not forgotten that.

What is the government doing today? I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Finance has promised to "debank" the banks. I want to say to him that out of that conference, and the announcement could have been made in the House without consultation with the provincial premiers, has come that declaration. I join in giving it my approval as it is the one thing that came out of the conference, or rather out of the mouths of the ministers at the conference, which enabled them to place before the western premiers something that had been done.

I ask what is going to be done to help the farmers, to give them an additional amount at this time? The plan that he has evolved which masquerades now as a two-price system, is simply a complete delusion and a sham. What this government did was ascertain how much wheat would be consumed in Canada, and then it fixed a fair price for that wheat. That fair price brought about a quotient and that quotient was to be divided as evidence of a two-price system. I have already pointed out what is going to happen to the price of bread as a result of that action. This government would not introduce a system of acreage payments. Oh, no, it would not do that because a Conservative government had done it. We are going to have a two-price system so that wheat farmers will get a fair return, but they are making payments under it in respect of all grains, wheat, oats, barley and every other variety, and it will not cost the government anything.

I find the Minister of Finance is one who listens. I suggest to him that the very first thing that should be done now, and it will prevent the rise in the price of flour and bread, is simply to take the $60 million, which is the amount that we distributed by way of acreage payments and is the amount this government is bonusing the baking industry, and pay it out on an acreage basis. You will get the farm support for that action. It is a course we followed. At the same time, you will stop another increase in the cost of living across this country, namely the increase in the cost of bread which will affect every home in this nation.

The government will not do that. The government has not even listened to the variety of individuals who surround the throne. When I was Prime Minister it cost $50,000 to run the Prime Minister's office. Today, it costs $1,300,000, and it only cost $25,000 more under Mr. Pearson than it cost when I was Prime Minister. There are hoards of individuals.

An hon. Member: Shadows.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Shadows at least have some existence. All these people are doing is drawing tremendous salaries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have desks for the east, the west, the north and the south to tell them what the western provinces and other provinces desire. It has cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars for these desks, yet the government did not have any information regarding the western provinces. What do these people do? Are they decorations? What responsibility do they have? They simply gather together and pretend they are doing something. I suggest that none of the views of these people are passed on to the government. If any minister will say to me that they are, my simple question would then be, show me one example that the government has followed. There is not one single example of any change that has taken place to the benefit of the western provinces, Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and B.C., as the result of this western desk.

I notice there has been no endeavour to explain why there has been so little for the western provinces out of the fabulous expenditures under DREE across this country. Why is it that we in the province of Saskatchewan received a paltry $1.5 million out of these vast expenditures? Now, in 1973, after the shellacking this government took in the election it has suddenly realized that the west exists. Mr. Marchand has said: "Well, now I can see the picture". Those were his views, and they are going to do a lot more for western Canada. All I have to say is go ahead and do it, but if you think the people of western Canada will believe there is any sincerity in what you are doing I can only tell you that the conclusion they will come to, and it is a proper one, is that you are endeavouring to get forgiveness for the wrongs you have done in forgetting the west throughout the last several years.

There are other matters I could deal with but I am not going to on this occasion, except to say this: It was a great meeting in Calgary.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A dandy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister gives it approval. When it came to sartorical perfection and masculine attractiveness on television I have to give it marks, and I am not going to start to identify. One has to give it marks, but what did it accomplish? Why did the ministers not take the advice of the opposition members representing those western provinces who over and over again placed these matters before them? Do not let the government, even the Acting Prime Minister, believe that it has deluded anybody in western Canada by this massive endeavour of propaganda and deception, and that is all it was.

When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) advanced any of these matters he was ridiculed. When members of the opposition advanced these matters they were ridiculed. When members of the NDP placed views before the House that could be generally accepted, they were ridiculed. Then, suddenly the Prime Minister had to admit they were right. You talk about the road to Damascus, but I remind you that this Prime Minister said he never realized the west existed. We have lived out there many years and we are certainly glad that the Prime Minister knows we exist.

I warn the government that on the basis of its failure to act on behalf of western farmers, and on behalf of expansion of industrial opportunity, not only in the west but also in the Maritimes, when the election comes they will get their reward and it will not be what they expect, or possibly they do. They cannot get away with such deception.

I conclude by saying that the animal which is able to change its colour and appearance whatever the environment now has a counterpart in the Prime Minister, but this will not work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I did not know whether I was listening to the opening speech in an election campaign, and it may be that the right hon. gentleman, like many of us, was speaking for his constituency, because as I gather from the machinations that have taken place recently we are not headed into an election but are facing another session this fall.

The right hon. gentleman outlined many of the problems we have, but I think it would have been better had he considered the problem we have been faced with during the last month. I refer to the problem of a regular recess, not necessarily one set by agreement, for the months of July and August. We have heard from two House leaders this afternoon. Probably it could be detected in the remarks of the third House leader who spoke that the agreement on the motion before us was reached not because of their efforts but because the government more or less forced it on them. This raises in my mind a problem I have mentioned on many other occasions; that is, the desirability, if this parliament is to sit for 10 months, that we at least have the common sense to arrange our sittings so that in this northern hemisphere, where our summer if we are lucky lasts for the months of July and August, these be the two months in which we have our summer recess. There is absolutely no reason for sitting here in the month of July.

There would have been a reason had the government decided it would do something about capital punishment. But what happened in respect of capital punishment? The greatest offender in respect of having some decision, good or bad, reached with regard to capital punishment was the Solicitor General. There have been at least three bad Solicitors General and they keep getting worse. The previous Solicitor General had absolutely no understanding of the fact that most of this country operates under the common law. He believed everybody operated under the Napoleonic Code. So, he really did not understand the law relating to the British system. This is the reason there were so many mistakes made in respect of the penitentiary system, the parole system and other matters.

The present Solicitor General, however, does know something about these things. He introduced the debate on capital punishment, but he kept putting not only one foot in his mouth but both feet. This is not a very benevolent place and, therefore, I am surprised how benevolent it has been in respect of the present Solicitor General as he keeps changing feet. Everyone seems to feel sorry for him. Had this debate been conducted by the House leaders rather than by the Solicitor General, it would have been a simple matter of deciding whether or not we would have capital punishment for an additional five years in the same manner as we had the original five year period.

The Solicitor General, however, adds all sorts of things. He allowed the introduction of the female chauvinist resolution. He allowed the introduction of a number of other additional items, most of them at his own insistence. Then, he decided after making these arrangements that he would go for total abolition. How could there be anything so stupid? He could not have listened to the vast majority of the speeches in the House on the three previous occasions when this matter was before the House.

The House leaders are partly responsible for the mess in which we find ourselves. Certainly, the government House leader was responsible for it because when he keeps changing priorities in respect of items which he believes are absolutely necessary he cannot count on the co-operation of the other House leaders and cannot count on the co-operation of the members. Sooner or later, we should make the decision that we will be here for regular four-year periods barring other developments because of the democratic process. This being the case we should count on having regular holidays.

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, the one time we had no Easter recess simply because, when the House could not make up its mind, I insisted that we sit on Good Friday. We sat on that occasion just long enough to adjourn, and since that time there has been no problem in respect of having an Easter recess. It is now a formal arrangement. As intelligent adults, we obviously ought to be able to arrive, in this northern hemisphere, at a point where we decide that our vacation period will be held in the summer, a time when members will be able to visit the farmers working in the fields and visit the people at their leisure. If I were in the southern hemisphere I would perhaps be recommending that we have our holiday in the winter. The government House leader should visit northern Ontario. This is the first summer in three years in which we have had summer weather. This chamber is not the place in which members should be enjoying summer. In my opinion when this happens very little is accomplished in this place.

I am concerned about the remarks made today in relation to settling labour disputes. Sooner or later, I believe we must decide that the federal government should not be muddling around in negotiations. In this present situation I understand that the negotiations concern pensions on Canadian National Railways. There is a great deal of interest in pensions. The average worker on the railway does not trust his union leaders. In the field of pensions, there probably will not be any settlement even if this parliament decides there will be. We have reached the stage where members call on the government to bring in legislation just as a strike begins, even though it is merely a rotating strike which affects a very limited number of communities in this country.

I would like to see legislation passed in respect of Canadian Pacific Airlines. It seems to me this would be a good time to bring it under Air Canada so that we can make up our minds which airline is to fly to Rome and which airline is to provide domestic services. In my area Air Canada has suddenly decided that it does not have aircraft suitable for service in northern Quebec or northern Ontario. It is ready to give the service to somebody else and if no one wants it; then Air Canada will desert the field. This problem relates to the line between the area of the one member for Timiskaming and the other member for Témiscamingue. Air Canada seems to have shut off any sort of service on a regional basis between northern Ontario and northern Quebec.

It may interest hon. members to know that there may be other reasons for this situation. Recently, an organization has been established in North Bay which is interested in vigorously pursuing the establishment of a new province in northern Ontario. There has always been a reciprocal movement in northwestern Quebec which believes it could well join with northeastern Ontario in setting up a new province based mainly on resources.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, no.

Mr. Peters: The Minister of Finance says no. Certainly this is no more possible than that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should follow Social Credit philosophy and double the value of Canadian currency. I admit that this is a field about which I do not know too much, but it is supposed to be something about which the minister knows, so at least let him give me credit for knowing that the people are dissatisfied.

• (1450)

I do not know how the people in his department will feel about the kooky arrangement in which we find ourselves. We may be back here in two weeks. I am intrigued by the argument that is being put forward that we had better leave before somebody forces us into legislating against the strike, and that is why we need the recess. We have all agreed to go home from today until October 15. I do not know how many families will be home to see their MP when he is in the constituency between the end of July and October 15. In my area even the fall fairs will be over. I will be able to go to the ploughing matches, but they only last so long. Mr. Speaker, by then it will be snowing and the weather will not be sufficiently good to allow us to go anywhere.

This year there will not be an election because I believe all the politcal parties have made that decision. Certainly the Liberals will not call one. They are sending the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Peking when the fall session of parliament opens, and Mao Tse-tung will not give him any advice that will influence him much, even with regard to the province of Quebec. I do not think the Prime Minister will be able to change the situation there, nor will he be able to change it in the west. So I do not expect that during his trip to China an election will be called here. I do not see any way in which any members of the House can cause an election to be called. There will probably be more goodies in the throne speech, which will be supported, and more goodies in the budget, which will also be supported.

Frankly, I have begun to look forward to the budget now that we are in the business of printing money without any backing. I would like the minister, whom I have always found to be fairly responsible, to have a long, serious talk with two of his colleagues, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), for the purpose of getting the gold mines operating again. We now have a fairly good price for gold and at least the minister will be able to back some of the money with gold, particularly if he puts it in the treasury at $38 an ounce and sells it on the European bullion market at $125. I can think of no better way in which to correct the mistakes he has made in the last few days than to embark upon the production of gold immediately and sell it on the European market.

This raises another problem that I have, that is, that we should be providing assistance to the gold mines. This would be very useful to northern Ontario and many other areas where the rate of unemployment is high. This is the type of industry that we have supported on many occasions simply because our monetary system depended upon it. I suggest that that situation has not really changed, although certainly our ideas have changed. The production of gold in this country may provide a valuable bulwark against the decline of the American dollar. When that decline results in the fall of an empire, Canada will not, unless it has a separate basis for protecting its existence, find itself in too happy a situation.

There are many matters that could be raised. My colleagues have been very concerned about the crop insurance legislation not having been debated. They will probably have something to say about that. I know that the feed grains legislation has concerned some of my colleagues. One of my colleagues has expressed concern about the proposed sale, which the government is allowing, of the Bessborough Hotel in Saskatoon. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance has ever stayed at the Bessborough. I have found it to be a fairly good hotel. Yet I am informed it is up for sale, that it will be no more a property of the CNR but will go into the hands of a new group. Also, my colleagues are concerned that the Minister of Finance has not been here to answer a number of questions regarding his delay in the appointment of CNR auditors. I agree that he had very legitimate reasons for firing Mr. Benson's auditors for the CNR, but why has he not appointed new ones?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let the bill go to committee.

Mr. Peters: I think we have an agreement that we will allow the government to appoint them, and certainly I do not think the bill is needed for that. But if the minister wants to scribble out a small bill now, we would be prepared to pass it this afternoon and have the auditors appointed. Let him not hide behind that excuse. The Auditor General is being paid to do that audit. He can sit down with his staff and prepare it, and we can look at the matter of CNR financing.

The Minister of Finance knows that he has been allowing the CNR to borrow money rather than let us provide the money, as is done in normal financing practice. We have not considered CNR financing for the last two years, and this will catch up with the CNR in terms of the interest which will be compounded on top of the other interest which we have to pay now. The minister shakes his head. Obviously, he knows that there is a greater expenditure on the interest rate for the financing of CNR than there is profit. He is well aware of that fact. The profit is usually about $28 million, and our expenditure on interest amounts to around $70 million. To compound that interest by allowing CNR to borrow money rather than having the government finance the railway seems to be a waste of time.

My reason for rising is to make a plea to the House. My request will not be granted now, in all probability, and I am not suggesting that we consider it now. I make a plea that as adults, as people many of whom have had some experience in business where there is some order, we demand of our caucuses and our House leaders that an agreement be reached to allow for an orderly system of recessing parliament for the summer. This business of everybody negotiating at the end of June for new priorities and new emergencies for which legislation must be passed is a ridiculous way of operating. For three years we have tried to set July, August and September aside for a summer recess. My guess is that by sitting until July we assure ourselves of having to sit until the end of July next year.

The fact that we have put off the date of our return for the regular session until the middle of October almost guarantees that the work of the House cannot be completed in a reasonable period of time so as to assure us of a recess at the end of next June.

I know that this presents problems to the government House leader, for whom I have great respect—and I have had dealings with a number of House leaders. I find the government House leader to be honest and generous. In fact, often he is too generous with the people with whom he associates. He makes all sorts of concessions which in my opinion it would be better not to make. I suggest, also, that he should be treated fairly by other members of the House, and in particular by the cabinet. It seems to me unreasonable that the cabinet should continually hold over his head the threat of putting forward another piece of emergency legislation at the last minute. By the end of May he should be able to tell the House exactly what he wants passed before the end of June, and we should have the discipline to keep that schedule.

If you look back, you will find that if the type of agreement that has been worked out had been made at the end of May, then there would have been other pieces of legislation that would have been deemed just as urgent as Bill C-2. I believe that members of parliament each have a responsibility. It is all right to go to your caucus and say "me too" all the time, but it seems to me you should have some guts and be prepared to take a position in caucus that would bring about some order. Most hon. members were not here when the fight took place over a period of eight or ten years for an orderly Christmas and an orderly Easter recess. The solution was not arrived at too easily.

I suggest that every member has a responsibility to see that we do not again get into the box we are in today because of our inability to set a predetermined recess period which, in the northern part of the North American continent, should be the months when the children are out of school, July and August. This is not going to be done by the government nor by the opposition; it is going to be done by the backbenchers who have not the pressure that I am sure individual cabinet ministers have to get their particular pieces of legislation through. The ministers say to themselves that if they wait another two or three hot days they will get their bill through. It may be necessary for some of us to become obnoxious and to take the position that we are going to force the government to arrive at that kind of conclusion. I am sure there are many who agree with me that the recess should not be arranged as it has been now, with the threat of a deadline and the threat of other action, during this last two month period. We should have a more orderly method of arranging it.

Mr. Speaker, I have made this speech before. I am surprised that it has not lent itself to the consideration of the government. When the late Mr. Pearson was leader of the government, for some reason or other, he supported the suggestion and for three or four years we did have a recess during July and August. Perhaps the decision was made even before that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let us in on the conversation.

Mr. Peters: Again, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has something to say. Mr. Speaker, during the time that he was Minister of Justice he never had a piece of legislation passed that he designed himself; it was all there from the previous minister of justice. The same is true of the present minister of justice; his legislation came from the previous minister. Nothing moves very fast in this place, Mr. Speaker. That is why I am making my pitch now, so that members will have an opportunity to give it full consideration before next year. We have spoiled most of this year, but I am hopeful that members will seriously consider doing something about the recess next year. I shall certainly start a little earlier to do my part to see that my objective is achieved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my understanding that there is unanimous agreement to revert to presentation of reports from standing and special committees for the purpose of giving the opportunity to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to present a report. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF STATEMENT RELATING TO SALARY REVISIONS, RECLASSIFICATIONS AND NEW CLASSES FOR LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the next hon. member, I have the honour to lay upon the table copies of a statement relating to the approved salary revisions, reclassifications and new classes for the Library of Parliament.

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That when the House returns from the giving of the royal assent to Bill C-196, an act respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games, it shall adjourn and shall stand adjourned until October 15, 1973, provided always that, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultations with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purposes of this order;

That the hours of sitting on any day on which Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code, is designated as the business to be taken up under government orders shall be as follows: Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Wednesdays, 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Fridays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.

That there shall be no consideration of private members' business on any day on which Bill C-2 is considered;

That, on any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday on which the House, in accordance with this order, sits at 11.00 a.m., government orders shall be taken up between 11.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. and routine proceedings shall be taken up at 2.00 p.m.;

That 15 minutes before the hour of adjournment, as established under this order, on the next day that is designated for the resumption of the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then in progress and he shall put forthwith, successively, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-2;

That no amendment shall be permitted to be proposed to the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, nor shall any other dilatory, superseding or privileged motion, including any motion pursuant to Standing Order 46, be permitted to be proposed on any day designated for the consideration of Bill C-2, except with the unanimous consent of the House;

That during the debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-2, the first speaker from each party shall speak no longer than 30 minutes and subsequent speakers shall speak no longer than 20 minutes; and

That should a recorded division be requested on the motion for third reading and passage of Bill C-2, the said division shall be deferred to a time to be announced by a minister of the Crown after reaching agreement with representatives of each party, but the said division shall not be deferred for a period of more than one week.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too long to say what I have to say but I think it should be said this afternoon. I want to remind the House that we are about to adjourn today having left hanging a matter of considerable importance, especially to the west coast of British Columbia. I refer, of course, to the recent events that have taken place with respect to the United States legislation approving the TAPS oil tanker route and the confusion regarding the Canadian position up until now. I want to remind hon. members that we have been faced with these problems since 1968, and throughout this entire period of time the government has, in one way or another, attempted to assure the people on the west coast that everything possible was being done, not just to keep tankers out of Puget Sound as has been suggested recently, but to stop the tanker route.

Mr. Sharp: No, that is not so. The hon. member knows that is not so.

Mr. Fraser: The hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) interrupts and says that is not so. That has not been the thrust of the remarks of members speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party in Vancouver over the past several years. There is no question that the present Leader of the Liberal Party in British Columbia has been adamantly opposed to a tanker route, and throughout the last election campaign he had support on this point from members of the Liberal Party, both new candidates and those standing for re-election.

No matter what the minister may want to say now, I say that the position of the government today is not the position that people on the west coast thought they were taking earlier. The position of the government today is that our only concern has always been to keep tankers out of Puget Sound. If that is so, why has there been no attempt to offer an oil pipeline to the Americans if they would apply to the National Energy Board, as an alternative? After all, an oil pipeline had to be an alternative to the tanker route, not just to the tankers in Puget Sound.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that in 1971 the former minister for energy, mines and resources met with the companies involved in the Prudhoe oil fields and they made it quite clear that they would not fight the National Energy Board for a trans-Canadian oil pipeline. At that point, unless the Canadian government was prepared to adjust its position and enter into some sort of agreement, treaty or otherwise, with the Americans, it was clear that no matter how long we kept saying we invited an application to the National Energy Board, no invitation was going to come.

It seems incredible to me that we now say "what a shame the Americans did not accept our invitation" when we have known since 1971 that they would not. I see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is agitated about some of my remarks. He says that perhaps my interpretation—I put that the kindest way I can—is not correct as to the government's position. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, how is it that on March 2, 1973 in answer to a question I asked in the House, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was lauding the former member for Esquimalt-Saanich now the Liberal leader in British Columbia, David Anderson? He lauded Mr. Anderson and the quoted words are "for the very good turn of events". We have now reached the incredible position where the Americans finally have to come to us with a specific set of questions which we answered on June 27, which we changed on July 6, which we then told them about by telephone and which we delivered on July 16. My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs would agree that that has to be the definitive point in terms of diplomacy. We made our delivery and the Prime Minister's remarks were reported in the press, but that was one day before the Unites States Senate voted on it.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot go back and change what has happened. However, I should like to remind all hon. members that we have not appeared credible on this particular issue in terms of our diplomatic action. Second, the government does not look credible to people who have been concerned about this. What happened? On July 18 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) moved a motion to send a parliamentary delegation to the United States. It did not have the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to clarify the situation with our United States friends. The following day, the New Democratic Party moved a motion to send a parliamentary delegation from the Interparliamentary Union. This did not have the leadership of the government. Apparently it did not even have the aegis of the government. On July 25, as recorded at page 5965 of Hansard, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said:

They went without instructions from the government and they will not report to us.

This committee did go to Washington. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs fairly and properly said the other day, some good may well have come of this. I thank him for saying that. He also indicated he perhaps would have a report, but there has been no report. There has been no arrangement whereby members of this committee can meet with ministers of the Crown to discuss what took place the other day in Washington. Nor has any arrangement been made for a debate on this matter.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs now says that the Americans have definitely decided to go ahead with the TAPS line, and that, to use his great words, we have just begun to fight. What in the name of heaven is the use of starting to fight after the battle is over?

Mr. Sharp: The battle is not over. It has not begun.

Mr. Fraser: The minister says the battle is not over. I'll say it is not over, but most of it is being waged on the opposition side of this House to try and get the government to do something.

Mr. Sharp: Why are you so defeatist about it?

Mr. Fraser: We are going to adjourn for two and a half months. We will perhaps be back here in October. We are leaving without any assurance from the government as to what this government is going to do about meeting with this committee who went to see our American counterparts. We do not know the position of the government as to whether we have a quid pro quo from our American friends to supply Canadian oil. We are not having a debate on this subject of vital importance. We are faced with a long adjournment. We will not be back until the middle of the autumn. As far as we are concerned, if what has happened in the past is any indication, nothing more will happen.

I ask hon. members on the government side to consider this. We cannot change what has happened, but there is a great moral responsibility on the government to act. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs wants to act. I invite him immediately to call together some of the members of the committee and arrange to meet within the next week so that some co-ordinate action can be taken by this country to keep the tankers out of the Pugit Sound area. The government owes that much to the House and to hon. members who have been involved in this question. It owes that much to the Liberal member from British Columbia whom I will be the first to applaud for his heroic and apparently very lonely fight in opposing this tanker route.

I beg the government not to let this matter slide. Otherwise we will adjourn without a meeting of this committee, without government negotiations with the United States, without a debate and without a position. If this process continues, we will be adjourning without a hope of stopping tankers in Pugit Sound.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There might be some feeling in this House toward adjourning this motion for the purpose of taking, without debate, the report stage of Bill C-128. The report of the committee was just made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Possibly we could deal with the report stage and third reading so that the bill might be sent to the other place an possibly included in the Royal Assent later this day. If the House by unanimous sent will allow an interruption at this stage, we might accomplish some useful business.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable to that. Our party feels the bill is in a much better condition than originally, and we contributed to that. We are quite prepared to have all stages completed so the other place can give it the calm, deliberate consideration it deserves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Is there unanimous consent to proceed to the report stage of Bill C-128?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AERONAUTICS ACT

PROVISION OF SECURITY MEASURES AT AIRPORTS

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-128, to amend the Aeronautics Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do passe.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay this bill. However, after the discussions that took place in committee, I must say that it is regrettable, to put it mildly, that a schedule is not attached to this bill allocating the costs between the Department of Transport and the air lines.

There are a number of costs ancillary to security. A number of suggestions have been made and I reluctantly agreed to this bill without the schedule. This flows from the fact that I believe Canada is going to make more than a minor contribution to the international conference to be held in Rome. In view of the role we have played, we certainly should not restrict those who are going to act on behalf of Canada.

From an internal point of view, I believe this would have been a much better, more satisfactory and acceptable bill if it had a schedule of fees and regulations attached, rather than leaving this for drafting and presentation at a later date.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That when the House returns from the giving of the Royal Assent to Bill C-196, an act respecting the 1976 Summer Olympic games, it shall adjourn and shall stand adjourned until October 15, 1973, provided always that, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultations with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

That in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purposes of this order;

That the hours of sitting on any day on which bill C-2, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, is designated as the business to be taken up under Government Orders shall be as follows: Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Wednesdays, 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m., 8.00 p.m. to 11.00 p.m. Fridays, 11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m., 2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.

That there shall be no consideration of private members' business on any day on which Bill C-2 is considered;

That, on any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday on which the House, in accordance with this Order, sits at 11.00 a.m., Government Orders shall be taken up between 11.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. and Routine Proceedings shall be taken up at 2.00 p.m.;

That 15 minutes before the hour of adjournment, as established under this Order, on the next day that is designated for the resumption of the consideration of the Report Stage of Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then in progress and he shall put forthwith, successively, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-2;

That no amendment shall be permitted to be proposed to the motion for Third Reading and passage of Bill C-2, nor shall any other dilatory, superseding or privileged motion, including any motion pursuant to Standing Order 46, be permitted to be proposed on any day designated for the consideration of Bill C-2, except with the unanimous consent of the House;

That during the debate on the motion for Third Reading of Bill C-2, the first speaker from each party shall speak no longer than 30 minutes and subsequent speakers shall speak no longer than 20 minutes; and

That should a recorded division be requested on the motion for Third Reading and passage of Bill C-2, the said division shall be deferred to a time to be announced by a Minister of the Crown, after reaching agreement with representatives of each party, but the said division shall not be deferred for a period of more than one week.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will be to the point. Earlier in the debate the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon.

member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to the fact the minister in charge of the wheat board made a commitment to announce his new feed grains policy before the House adjourned for the summer recess. I think it is regrettable that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) in charge of the Wheat Board is not here today to make a statement about the new feed grains policy. In these circumstances, the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) or some other minister should rise on motions to tell us what the new policy is to be.

● (1520)

The farmers on the prairies are most concerned. The farmers unions, the co-operatives, the wheat pools, are most anxious that the government not remove feed grain from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. It is important that the authority of the board to market feed grain should not be eroded. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was absolutely correct in saying that, if the government were to do this, the uproar on the prairies would be greater than ever before, that the Liberal party there would be totally annihilated because, to the people of the west, the Wheat Board is in many ways what collective bargaining is to a union man—something fundamental.

The orderly marketing of grain is important if a decent price to the farmers is to be maintained. It is also important to the consumers if they do not wish to see the price of food escalating year after year. I have it on good authority from people in the department concerned that a policy was decided on as long ago as March or April of this year. If this is the case, I strongly urge the Acting Prime Minister to make a statement on motions today telling the farmers and the people generally what they may expect in the future.

I am sure the Minister of Justice has deliberately chosen not to appear today because he does not wish to make a statement in the House. He does not want members of opposition parties to be given the opportunity to reply in this chamber where a reply ought to be made. The crop year ends on Tuesday of this week, at the end of July, and the minister must make his announcement by then.

I suggest he is deliberately withholding it in order to make such an announcement outside the House on Monday or Tuesday. I do not think any of the opposition parties want this to happen. The minister should not weaken the powers of the Board. On the contrary, he ought to increase the authority of the Board, giving it jurisdiction over more grains so as to offer farmers a better guarantee of decent prices.

The crop insurance bill has now been considered in committee. No amendments have been made to it. The party to which I belong is prepared to pass this bill without debate. I plead with the government House leader to bring it down so that it may be approved without debate. This would facilitate action by the governments of the prairie provinces which have anticipated that the bill would be passed. It is important that before the House rises the bill should go through, and I believe we could secure an all-party agreement to this effect.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative party sent a delegation of western members of parliament to observe the western economic opportunities conference held in Calgary this week. I was one of those delegates and I have come to the House today to state that the national government has once more pulled off a gigantic public relations spectacular, but that their wooing of the west was not reciprocated. Indeed, the Liberals are as jilted today in the west as they were last October 30. And the reason is plain. The one thing the western premiers sought above all else was precisely what they failed to attain, namely, a new attitude by Ottawa toward the west.

Even from a distance, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was able to observe the propaganda which dominated and characterized the meetings in Calgary. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to the conference with a massive amount of documents which said little except that Ottawa was looking after the west. Various ministers then took turns lecturing the premiers in a condescending manner. The premiers submitted short position papers on four subjects, transportation, industrial development, agriculture and capital financing, in which they made specific proposals. Taken together, these proposals would have formed the basis of a new national policy.

Some of the proposals, such as disclosure of freight rate costs on a limited and confidential basis and the provision enabling provinces to own partial equity in banks, were accepted. But the federal government made only small concessions in areas in which the premiers wanted major action; for example, the amendment of the National Transportation Act to specify that a major objective of the legislatures is the fostering of regional development. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) flatly refused that submission. I strongly support the request that this be written into law. Failure to provide such a legislative guarantee means that the west must continue to plead for economic justice rather than receive it by law.

Here we see clearly the way in which Ottawa has again missed the boat. The Prime Minister and his colleagues thought they could soothe western discontent by offering some goodies and promising more subsidies. It is not subsidies or special privileges that the west wants but the removal of federal barriers such as the iniquitous freight rate structure and the injurious tariff system which hinder diversified development in the west. The Calgary conference showed that the Liberal government still fails to understand or appreciate the potential and vitality of the west and its capability to solve its own problems.

It is little wonder that Premier Lougheed of Alberta should have said at the conclusion of the conference:

> Frankly, we would have forsaken any federal dollars, any federal programs, in exchange for improved understanding. We are not looking for special privileges but to avoid unnecessary obstacles . . . We feel we made some limited progress but we still feel fenced in.

Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan said at the closure of the conference:

> I regret to say that after three days I did not see any progress toward that new national policy.

It was difficult in Calgary to escape the conclusion that the government was more interested in the future of the Liberal party in the west than in the future of the west itself. When it comes to slick salesmanship, nobody can beat the Liberals; but as the western conference clearly showed, they do not have the goods to back up the talk.

Finally, I wish to point out that practically nothing was said at Calgary about western potential and problems which has not been said many times in the House of Commons by western members of parliament. But the government does not listen to members of parliament, especially to western members of parliament. When the government does become serious about the west, its ministers run out to see the premiers, bypassing the representatives who were elected to bring regional concerns before the national forum. I protest the subverting by the government of the legitimate role of members of parliament. We all recall that the Prime Minister used to assert that federal M.P.s from Quebec were the representatives of that province, not the provincial government. In dealing with the west, he bypasses the M.P.s. Could this possibly be because 61 of the 68 western members of parliament are not Liberals?

● (1530)

Since the government wants, to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Calgary, "a stronger western voice in national decision-making", I urge the government to pay more attention to what western members of parliament advocate in parliament. Televised regional conferences as a showcase for the exhibition of political talent is undoubtedly a powerful weapon for the government, but we are in danger of their becoming substituted for parliament as the central forum for the conducting of national business.

I say to my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces, maybe you would like to have an Atlantic economic opportunities conference, but watch out. If this government sets up such a conference, it will use you for its own political advantages as it has just attempted to use the west. The result will be a lot of local excitement, and when the federal people go back to their enclaves in Ottawa, life will go on the same.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise on behalf of the government to answer all the speeches made this afternoon, but simply for the purpose of assuring the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) that the government is working as speedily as possible to appoint the members of the review committee on the Pickering airport. As he knows, it is proving to be very difficult to find people of sufficient status and impartiality who can devote a year or more of their time to this purpose. We are working, and now that the House is adjourning we will have a little more time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was glad the minister answered the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), who had a very legitimate complaint. Do I take it that his refusal to deal with the very legitimate complaints made by members on this side of the House means he has no answer?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I am looking forward to the House adjourning this afternoon and it would take quite a long time to answer all those unwarranted charges.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Drury. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members; Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa 27 July, 1973

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Bora Laskin, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 27th day of July, at 4. p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House might be in the mood to adjourn until we are summoned by the bells.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I suppose is a point of order. May I remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), now the acting House leader, that earlier today we agreed to use this period of time for various things. We interrupted the business of the House to deal with two other bills which were put through. Would this not be an excellent opportunity to deal with the report stage and third reading of the crop insurance bill?

Mr. Baldwin: In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I have canvassed the opinion on this side of the House and am informed by members of the committee, who have laboured very hard to produce a good bill, that they have requested certain information from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) which has not been made available. Until that information has been made available, our members are not adequately equipped to debate the bill on third reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that we are still on motions?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I am surprised that I have not heard a motion under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have one.

CROP INSURANCE ACT

SUGGESTION TO PROCEED WITH REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in so far as this side of the House is concerned, I think this is an appropriate occasion to ask leave under Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House now proceed to the consideration of the report stage and third reading of Bill C-129, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which requires unanimous consent.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to give unanimous consent to the motion being put, but we would like the opportunity to have a meeting of the House leaders in order to arrange when we could discuss the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said earlier, it is obvious there is no chance of the House being able to dispose of this matter at the moment. For that reason we cannot agree to this motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who is saying no? Is it the member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I heard several no's; therefore the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it should be pointed out very clearly that the no's came from the Conservative Party.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that it is improper to make that kind of suggestion. The Chair hears some no's and does not attempt to identify them. As long as they are loud and clear, which they were, that should be sufficient.

Considering all the circumstances, I am wondering whether the House might not view favourably the suggestion by the Minister of Finance that we rise to the call of the bells. I have the impression that if we are going to limit ourselves to points of order between now and four o'clock when we are called to the other place, we might consider seriously the possibility of rising now for a few minutes.

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek leave to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly):

This House calls upon the governments of the Republic of France and the People's Republic of China to recognize the mounting world opinion opposing nuclear testing and cancel their atmospheric tests.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who said no to that?

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, and the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTION RECREATIONAL FACILITIES BE FINANCED BY SALE OF COINS AND LOTTERIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of national importance to seek leave under Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House urge the government to provide communities across Canada with ice rinks, stadia and swimming pools and other urgently needed sports and recreational facilities through a $500 million fund to be financed by the sale of commemorative coins and stamps and a national lottery.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure this motion is submitted with a degree of levity and that the hon. member does not propose that it be put. Unless there is a motion under Standing Order 43 to abolish Standing Order 43, I suggest to the House that we might rise to the call of the bells.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I might just add one word before we rise to remind hon. members that, as usual, there will be an opportunity for members to meet for a short while in room 16 after royal assent. I hope hon. members will find it possible to call on the Speaker at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE EFFECTS OF RAIL STRIKE ON ISOLATED COMMUNITIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with the many effects the rail strike has had and is having across this country, in particular, the effects of the rail strike on isolated communities all across the country. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That the government take immediate steps to provide vital services to alleviate inconveniences suffered by travellers on our island provinces, to facilitate movement of feed grain to livestock producers, to provide vital food supplies to isolated northern communities and to ensure that the health and welfare of all Canadian citizens are not affected in any way by the detrimental consequences of this national strike.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members well know, a motion presented under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. I will inquire whether there is unanimity.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS AND SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-217, to provide for the resumption and continuance of operations of railways and for the settlements of the disputes with respect to terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to seek consent of the House to proceed with second reading of this bill later this day. If this were possible, we would call it as the first item when Orders of the Day have been dealt with.

Mr. Baldwin: There has been some discussion of this question through the usual channels and we would be prepared to give our consent to this agreement. We feel, however, that we are entitled to examine the bill to see what the government has put together, and I believe there is an understanding that any debate which may take place on the bill will not begin until a period of two hours has elapsed during which all hon. members will have an opportunity to study the legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Peace River has stated the substance of the agreement we reached a while ago. We are prepared to stand by that agreement, namely that we are willing for second reading of this bill to be called for debate later this day. By that we mean there shall be a two-hour suspension of the sitting of the House at the end of the question period, and when those two hours have gone by, and we have had a chance to study the bill, the House can be summoned again to proceed with debate on second reading.

We are also prepared to agree now to the suspension of the private members' hour today.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have participated in the discussions concerning this request for unanimous agreement to consider a motion for second reading of this bill today; we have given our assent as well as for the two hour delay that we requested in order to be able to give this bill appropriate consideration. We are here to work and are prepared to do so.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The understanding of the Chair is that there is to be a two-hour suspension of the sitting immediately after calling second reading of this bill, by leave and by unanimous consent. Is this agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I also understand that the private members' hour will be dispensed with today. Is that agreed and so ordered?

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT

On the Order:

July 19, 1973: Mr. Stackhouse—Bill intituled "An act to amend the Family Allowances Act".

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) introduced his bill in the first instance some weeks ago before the House recessed for a short while and that there was some difficulty in relation to possible financial provisions to the bill. It was agreed that the matter might be allowed to stand for the time being. I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps later on there might be argument heard from the hon. member or others in respect of the acceptability of the bill in question, so the bill will stand.

NON-SMOKERS RELIEF ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE RELIEF TO NON-SMOKERS IN TRANSIT

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-218, respecting relief to non-smokers in transit.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think you and the House for recognition of this bill which was placed on the Order Paper just before the House recessed. The purpose of it is to give relief to travelling non-smokers by requiring that railways, planes and buses under federal jurisdiction provide them with separate seating accommodation. This is in line with the fact that there is now medical evidence that secondary smoke inhalation not only causes distress to non-smokers in Canada, who constitute a majority, but can jeopardize their health, particularly if they suffer from respiratory or lung ailments.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES TO HALT INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question or two, not about specific items and measures, but in respect of the fact that the annual rate of inflation is now about 8 per cent. I should like to ask whether the government has prepared a comprehensive and decisive program to deal with this rate of inflation and halt it and, if so, when that program will be instituted, and, most specific of all, when those measures and that program will be presented to this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is most anxious to use the fact that the House is reassembled to take steps to deal with the hardships which have been caused the people of Canada as a result of inflation. As soon as the House can dispose of the bill in front of us now on the railway disputes, we will be anxious to give leadership in the other field.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES RESPECTING OLD AGE PENSIONS AND COMMENCEMENT OF ADJUSTMENT PERIOD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I hope the government will do something to provide some form of leadership besides leading prices upward. I should like to ask the Prime Minister when we may expect the measure adjusting old age pensions and the guaranteed income supplement to a quarterly escalation and whether we can expect that will be immediately and whether the date for the commencement of the adjustment will not be October 1 but July 1 last.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the support my answer brought on this side of the House indicates the willingness of our members to assist the government in getting the government's legislation through. I am sure it is the will of all members on both sides of the House to get on with this action. The question asked by the Leader of the Opposition relates to an announcement I made during the first part of August. If he looks back at that statement, he will see we indicated that this escalation would take place on October 1st, and would take into account the increase in the cost of living which happened before October 1, so the answer to his question is that we are going to follow on the announcement I made in early August and will do so in a way that the pensioners will have the benefit of their escalation dated from October 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In other words, Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the change will not be effective as of July 1, as I requested. One final supplementary.

Mr. Sharp: He did not say that.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, he did. Mr. Speaker, may I seek clarification. I do not want any misunderstanding among my friends opposite. I asked the right hon. gentleman whether he would make this measure effective as of July 1, and he said no, that it would be effective October 1.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition is now on a point of order, a point of debate or some point, but I respectfully think we should make an effort to get on with the question period which is a 40 minute period. I am sure that many members are anxious to ask questions. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might ask his supplementary and the Prime Minister could reply.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary relates to the pricing of wheat for domestic consumption. In view, among other things, of the call by the Food Prices Review Board for this subsidy as a matter of great urgency, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether his government intends to inaugurate such a subsidy to revise the price of wheat for domestic consumption, and if so when?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition would want me to clarify the unintentionally misleading impression he gave about my first answer. The answer is that the cheques, of course—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: The cheques cannot be issued before this date. They will only be issued on the date of October 1. But it is our intention to ensure that the cheques do take into account the increase in the cost of living which took place since July 1. So, I think that the intention of the Leader of the Opposition is the same as that of the government.

On the second part of the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure at this point whether the Prime Minister is on the point of order or is answering the supplementary question of the Leader of the Opposition. Obviously, we are not making much headway and I would ask for the co-operation of both the right hon. Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to try to get through the question period a little faster.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like the right hon. gentleman to answer my last question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I resent his suggestion that I made a misleading interpretation of his answer to my previous question. It is very clear.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please? I am sure hon. members can see that perhaps there is no point at all in having a question period if we do not have order and if we spend the time on points of order and arguing about what was said. Following the next question and reply, I will recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Stanfield: I just want to remove any suggestion that I misinterpreted the Prime Minister's answer to me. His answer to me indicated that the increase in pension cheques would start after October 1, but they would take into consideration the increase in the cost of living up to that time. What I asked the Prime Minister was whether he would commence the increase in the cheques as of July 1, rather than October 1.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the cheques for July have already gone out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: What I was telling the Leader of the Opposition, in answer to his question, was that rather than wait for the escalation, which would be annual based on the increase in the cost of living, we will do it quarterly, but the first quarterly increase which we will bring in from October 1 will take into account all increases in the cost of living until that date. Surely, the Leader of the Opposition is not suggesting—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might now go on to the next question. If hon. members feel they want a debate on this interesting point, it could be taken up some other time. Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of order? Perhaps he might allow me to complete the first round of questioning, and I will return to him if he wishes the floor at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member allow me first to complete the first round of questions and then we may perhaps be able to get back to the subject that he wants to discuss?

I recognize the hon. member for York South.

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN SUBSIDY ON WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, before we got into this confusing exchange, the Leader of the Opposition did ask a question that I was going to ask. May I put it to the Prime Minister now. Does the government intend to increase the subsidy on wheat in view of the fact that it reduced it from $1.04½ to $1 and in view of the fact that the price of wheat has gone up considerably? Is the minister considering adopting the recommendations made by Mrs. Plumptre and the review board that there be an immediate increase in the subsidy on wheat?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not linking the two premises when he says that we reduced the subsidy from $1.04 to $1.00. This, it should be well understood, is not the reason the price of wheat has gone up the way it has.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I think every member of the House is aware that the price of wheat has increased considerably, and this is well beyond the question of the subsidy. On the other question, I shall have to ask the Leader of the Opposition and all members of the House to wait until we have dealt with the bill, then we will see what action we are prepared to take on that possibility.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH COST OF LIVING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the House on whatever side appreciate that the details of any program that the government may or may not have will be presented to us at some future date. I want the Prime Minister, none the less, to inform the House, if he can, whether a program to deal with the cost of living that he proposes eventually to present to the House will be limited to the matters he mentioned in early August or whether his program will go beyond those matters to deal with such things as greater powers to the review board or the government, whichever it may be, to roll back prices and other subsidization of basic foods and costs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply to the hon. member's question now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I will have to ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party to be as patient as everybody else on this subject, and perhaps more patient. We feel that the House was brought back for a very urgent matter, the matter of getting the trains running again. We will—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They should not have stopped.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South for a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue who has a supplementary or supplementaries on the same subject.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON RATE OF PRICE INCREASE DURING 1973

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the ever wise Minister of Finance who is so good at forecasting. May I ask the minister whether he can give the House any idea of the information he has with respect to the rate of price increases that we may face in the course of the full year of 1973 related to the productivity or to the gross national product increase and the difference between actual figures and real figures?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that answer because a good deal of the price increases in this country are affected by world commodities, both agricultural and non-agricultural. There is no way I could estimate the conflicts of demand and supply forces around the world and pinpoint them as accurately as the hon. member wants.

Mr. Bell: Don't forget the weather, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member.

Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: On a brief one, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that the Minister of Finance cannot be serious when he says this today—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Lewis: —or alternatively, could not have been serious when he informed the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is not serious when he suggests that is a point of order.

SUGGESTED HIGHER GRANTS TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the No. 1 problem in Canada affects the consumer rather than the producer, are the Prime Minister and this government considering seriously the need to make more substantial grants available to the consumers so as to help Canadian producers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the hon. member in very specific terms but if he looks at the measures announced by us in August he will see that they are in fact aimed at increasing the purchasing power of some consumers. We talked about older people earlier and we want to increase their purchasing power.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister says that some categories of people in Canada are receiving increased pensions, which contributes to increasing their purchasing power, but does the government think about consumers as a whole which would help avoid situations as disgraceful as those we were faced with at noon time in front of Parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance in his last budget reduced the income taxes of all Canadians and at an average rate affecting people up to 13 per cent it was a way of giving them greater purchasing power.

TRANSPORT

SUGGEST EIGHTEEN MONTH FREEZE ON FREIGHT RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. May I ask whether, since he made the announcement at that rather uncertain western economic conference in Calgary that he was asking for an 18-month freeze on freight rates, it has been brought about?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think what I said exactly in Calgary is as follows: I said that I would ask the railway companies, and particularly Canadian National Railways which is state owned, not to increase their rates for 18 months and up to now they have accepted what I asked them to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have the railway companies agreed? Then, I ask the minister as well, in the event that they did apply for increases and they were granted by the Transport Board, would the government turn down such increases?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member appreciates, as the minister does I am sure, that the question is hypothetical as asked in those terms.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY MINISTER ON ENDING STRIKE OF NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I will not ask any hypothetical question. I will ask the Minister of Labour why we are here today, because on August 21 he made the statement in Montreal as reported in the press, "We will end the strike tonight". Then, describing himself in the Imperial and plural "We" said, "We are down here to wrap this up". What took place that prevented this wrapping up operation in this and the other pronunciamentos that were issued by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the quotations that the right hon. member for Prince Albert has mentioned are precisely accurate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): There is no doubt that it was my firm hope, and there seemed to be—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not a hope, but a statement of fact.

Mr. Munro: Could I finish answering the question please? There was a hope on the part of all parties involved that we might—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. minister who is attempting to reply to the question asked by the right hon. gentleman. I have two reservations about the question as it was asked and the answer which the hon. minister is quite rightly attempting to give. I have indicated to hon. members before that we do not achieve very much by initiating debate on statements made outside the House. According to the rules and long established practice, questions should be asked directly rather than asking ministers to confirm or deny statements made outside the House.

My second difficulty in relation to the second question of the right hon. member is that it is anticipating an order of the day. I gather that later today, and for some time after, we will be discussing a very important piece of legislation, and I hope that hon. members will not get themselves involved in discussion of that situation too deeply at this time.

● (1440)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the last thing in the world I want is to indulge in anything that would be contrary to the rules.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, Ringling Brothers never had such trained seals.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister this. In view of his definite statement on August 7, that he, describing himself as "we", "will end the strike tonight," and that "we are down here to wrap it up," what happened between the time that he uttered those immortal words and the fact that his words were not accepted?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It might have been easier to allow the Minister of Labour to reply briefly to this question in the first instance. The right hon. gentleman has simply repeated the question which I suggested to him was not in order. But the question having been asked twice, the minister should be allowed to reply, and we will try to make some headway afterwards.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have already cast doubts on the accuracy of the quotation; but there is no question that it was my hope—

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was a statement of fact.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —that there was some basis for optimism that we could get a settlement—

Mr. Diefenbaker: We.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —without the necessity or recalling Parliament. That did not prove to be the case. I am sure, as Mr. Speaker has indicated, when we come back after all parties in this House have had a chance to study this legislation, that I will be prepared to answer all questions along the lines that the right hon. member for Prince Albert is asking.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL MEASURES TO SUPPLY COMMUNITIES AND AID STRANDED TRAVELLERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the many hundreds of tourists who are stranded in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, and in view of the fact that essentials such as food, oil and gasoline are not available to isolated communities across the nation, can the Prime Minister advise this House what immediate steps are being undertaken to relieve this critical situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already had occasion to reply to that question by way of telegram to Premier Moores, and I believe also that the hon. member has had communications from people in my office indicating to him what had been done. Certain measures had been taken, such as airlifts to help people to move from where they were stranded. As to the question of moving vehicles, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is not equipped to satisfy all requests in that regard.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Prime Minister for the answer. In view of there being some 300 American tourists stranded in Newfoundland who have no quarrel with the strikers, has the Prime Minister been in communication with the United States, to try to obtain relief for the situation in which these tourists find themselves?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the best way we could try to assist them, beyond the measures which have already been taken, would be if the House would co-operate in getting this legislation through very quickly so that the railroads can begin working again.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Since one of the missions of the Department of National Defence is aid to the civil powers, would the minister be prepared to send in air transport aircraft to carry some of the citizens and vehicles, which they are capable of doing?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO BILL OF RIGHTS TO ENSURE PROVISIONS AGAINST DISCRIMINATION WILL PREVAIL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the far reaching decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Lavell case, will the Minister of Justice give consideration to introducing an amendment to the Canadian Bill of Rights, to make it clear that the provisions of the Bill of Rights dealing with discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex are to prevail over any other legislation and invalidate any other legislation of Parliament inconsistent with the Bill of Rights?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member is an extremely important one and, of course, requires a careful analysis of the judgment and its implications before any opinion can be finally arrived at. We will be certainly looking at it from this point of view, to see if any further legislation is required.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION AGAINST PRICE GOUGING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement earlier this month by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that the government is considering legislation to make price gouging a criminal offence, in order to modify the sharp increase in food prices, does the government intend to introduce such legislation in the near future and, if so, when can it be expected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would refer to my own statement made at the same time, he would see that it was indicated by the government that its intention would be to seek parliamentary authority to prevent such abuse of the market system, if and when required. We said we would be waiting for reports from the Food Prices Review Board and indications that such "gouging" was taking place to see what the best way would be to bring an end to it.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary, the hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary and the hon. member for Skeena on a supplementary to the previous question. I hope that we can proceed quickly with those three supplementaries.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. As several weeks have passed since the Prime Minister and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made that statement, has the information that the government received since that time indicated to it that it should introduce such legislation right now, and will it be introduced at this present sitting of the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would be able to answer that for himself—

Mr. Hees: Why don't you answer it?

Mr. Trudeau: Because you should be reading what the board reported publicly, George.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East. I ask the co-operation of hon. members.

Mr. Hees: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have read those reports and they indicate that the government should be taking that action right now.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE OF SUPPLIES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the very critical situation developing in the province of Newfoundland as a consequence of the strike and in view of the very strong representations from the government of Newfoundland and the constitutional responsibilities of the federal government in relation thereto, may I ask the Prime Minister if he intends to enter immediately into negotiations with the government of Newfoundland, to provide special assistance and special means to alleviate the very serious and critical shortages, especially in northern communities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered a moment ago that I had already sent the Premier of Newfoundland a telegram on this subject. I take it that he has made the representations to me that he wanted to make, and I answered him.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH NATIVE PEOPLE ON AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN ACT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development related to the response just given by the Minister of Justice. Will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development reconfirm that it is his and his government's intention to prepare amendments to the Indian Act after listening to what the Indian people have to say and not what the Minister of Justice might have to say.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have already started reexamining the Indian Act with the Indians themselves; we financed an Indian committee to draft a bill that we could reexamine but we have not yet received its report.

INCREASE IN BANK INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Has he made inquiries from the chartered banks of Canada which over the past couple of months have announced two or three successive increases of their interest rates which are decidedly abusive.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have contacted the President of the Canadian Banking Association and, although there has been no thorough investigation, I have conveyed some points of view as to our banks' present profit margin.

HOUSING

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO REDUCE CAPITAL AND LAND COSTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of housing prices having risen across the land at an alarming rate in the past year, in my area by $10,000 per home, a 35 per cent increase in 12 months, and in view of predictions currently that they may rise by another 15 per cent in the current year, has the government decided to introduce legislation of a tax nature, or at least to relieve such capital and land cost increases? If so when?

● (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the question of future legislation, I am afraid the hon. member will have to await any action or announcement in the House. Since he is interested in land costs, I might refresh his mind by recalling that the government has already approved $100 million per year for five years so the provinces can embark upon useful land assembly programs. No province except Newfoundland has decided to act on this. I wish hon. members would urge provincial governments toward more action in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGEST ROLL BACK OF INTEREST RATES UNDER NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question. Since mortgage rates have jumped along with house prices so that a $10,000 increase in the price of a home results in an extra cost to the owner of $27,000 by the time his mortgage is paid in full, and with the prediction that mortgage interest rates may be as high as 10½ per cent or 10¾ per cent by the end of the year, is the government now going to order CMHC to roll back its increase in the NHA mortgage interest rate and, if so, when?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is undoubtedly an expert on high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of the CMHC lending is made at rates of 8 per cent which is 3/16 less than the level approved by parliament in June.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I remind the minister that all Canadians are now experts on high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members appreciate that this kind of intervention is debate. We will proceed with the question period as expeditiously as possible.

The hon. member for Shefford wanted to ask a supplementary question a while ago. I apologize for not having immediately recognized him.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Does he intend to let interest rates go up or will he take steps to control that condition which is the prime cause of the cost of living increase at the present time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we may have the opportunity to deal more extensively with this matter next week.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARRANGEMENTS TO SUPPLY COMMUNITIES ALONG ARCTIC COAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in connection with the rail strike. Has the minister yet requested assistance or set up contingency arrangements with the Department of Transport to provision isolated northern communities along the Arctic coast whose supplies are initially dependent on transportation over the Pine Point railway?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the situation and my department is ready to do its utmost to solve the problems of those remote communities as we generally do throughout Canada.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Is the minister prepared to make a report to the House later today as to the situation of these northern communities at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if there are some particulars to communicate to the House, I will readily do so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISTREATMENT OF CREW MEMBERS OF "GREENPEACE III"—PROTEST TO FRANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the boarding of the Greenpeace III in international waters and the apprehension of the crew and the manhandling of Captain McTaggart, has the government of Canada made any representations or protests directly to the government of France and what was the nature of those protests?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were informed of this incident by the French government. In response to our responsibility for Mr. McTaggart as a Canadian citizen, we arranged to have an eye doctor sent to Tahiti, as well as a consular official, to ensure that Mr. McTaggart was released as soon as possible, which we were successful in doing. At the same time, the French ambassador in Ottawa was called in and we registered with him a very strong protest about the legality of the boarding. We are now seeking further information as to the nature of the alleged maltreatment of Mr. McTaggart. When we have further information, we will decide what further action is appropriate.

ALLEGED MISTREATMENT OF CREW MEMBERS OF "GREENPEACE III"—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO UNITED NATIONS OR WORLD COURT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I assume the minister and the government are considering the matter of reparations and compensation. I will not deal with that. In view of the seriousness of this incident, involving what has been called piracy on the high seas, is the government considering taking this matter either to the security council of the United Nations or the World Court?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not ruled out any action. What we want to do, and I am sure that this is what Mr. McTaggart wants us to do, is try to persuade the French government not to engage in nuclear testing in the atmosphere. That was the purpose of Mr. McTaggart's trip which he undertook on his own responsibility. We are very anxious to see that the law of the sea is observed. There is the second question as to whether Mr. McTaggart should be compensated for damage for assault upon him. The French government takes a completeley different view of this incident from Mr. McTaggart. We are now looking at the evidence. If the evidence justifies us taking appropriate legal action, this we will do. I cannot say in what court this would be taken at the present time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC INTEREST DISPUTES COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact work stoppages in essential industries and services cause irreparable harm to Canada, is the government prepared to introduce legislation to create a public interest disputes commission, as recommended to it in 1968 by its own Woods Commission report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no announcement to make in that regard today.

Mr. Blenkarn: Can the government assure this House it will introduce legislation so that it will never again be necessary for Parliament to be called to settle industrial disputes?

ENERGY

GASOLINE—BASIS FOR JUSTIFICATION OF INCREASE IN PRICE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the price of gasoline in Canada has always been higher than the price of gasoline in the United States, even taking into account the difference in the size of the gallon and the current shortage of gas in the United States, on what basis are the recent increases in the price of Canadian gasoline justified?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be speaking to the industry on price increases in the very near future. I will be glad to report to the House any consequences of those discussions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. I know hon. members are anxious to proceed with the business called for today. Perhaps the hon. member might be recognized for one supplementary.

Mr. Arrol: Is the government considering regulation of the oil companies under the National Energy Board? Is the government planning to investigate increases to determine if the cost increases are real or whether there is collusion? Will the minister's investigation include such points as these?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should indicate that an inquiry has been launched under the Combines Investigation Act against the petroleum industry.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—ALLEGED LOSS TO WESTERN PRODUCERS AS RESULT OF LOW PRICE IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. As a result of the minister's intended feed grains policy, feed grain has been selling in eastern Canada at about $1 a bushel less than in the world market. Does the minister intend to compensate western producers for this loss of revenue which would have been received had the grain been sold at the regular price?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must be looking at some strange prices because the policy is not yet in effect. It is expected to be in place by the middle or end of September. The point of the policy is, of course, to ensure that the same price prevails for producers all across the country who want to buy grain for feeding to animals, subject, of course, to proper estimates of the cost of carrying, storing, and so on.

● (1500)

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister carrying on a day-to-day investigation into the effects of the Wheat Board pricing policy, and would he inform the House—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Ottawa sold out Saskatchewan.

Mr. Korchinski: —whether there is a reduction in the price of grain in eastern Canada relative to the world price at the present moment?

Mr. Lang: As I made clear a moment ago, no action—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Ottawa sold out Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously we are not going to make much headway. Perhaps this matter could be proceeded with during another question period. I believe the hon. member for Peace River rises on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to follow the scenario which a kind member of the press gallery wrote for me and ask the President of the Privy Council what is to be the business of the House for next week.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not in my usual forthcoming Thursday mood, so I think I shall have to wait a little longer before I can indicate with any precision what we shall be doing next week.

An hon. Member: Capital punishment?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Because of the unusual nature of the answer, I should like to ask one question in light of the fact the Prime Minister has hinted at a number of proposals to deal with the serious issue of inflation. Is it the intention of the government to put all these proposals into one package and try to secure from the House a renewal of the confidence which it gained last January but which has since lapsed?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, the sitting of the House stands deferred until the call of the bell at 5.05 p.m.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS AND SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order made earlier today, Mr. Munro (Hamilton East), seconded by Mr. Davis (Capilano), moves:

That Bill C-217, an act to provide for the resumption and continuance of operations of railways and for the settlement of the disputes with respect to terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as members of this House, I am sure, are well aware, the bill which is now before them concerns the government's legislative proposals respecting the resumption of rail services. The reasons for these proposals are, I believe, equally well known. The suspension of railway operations and subsidiary services which began regionally on July 26 and nationally on August 23 has resulted in widespread economic loss to the extent that the welfare of the nation has become imperilled. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated, it is essential to the interests of the people of Canada and the welfare of our nation that railway operations be resumed immediately.

● (1710)

Before examining these legislative proposals in some detail it would be appropriate for me to outline to hon. members the sequence of events leading up to the recall of parliament. First, however, I would refer to the parties involved in the present, three separate disputes: these are the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railway companies along with other short-line companies while, on the union side, the associated non-operating railway unions, the United Transportation Union and division No. 4, Railway Employees, department of AFL-CIO, representing the various shopcraft unions. In all, the disputes involve approximately 91,000 employees across the country.

The current strike involving the non-operating unions stems from unsuccessful attempts to renegotiate a collective agreement that expired on December 31 last. Disputes involving the shopcrafts and the United Transportation Union also result from agreements unrenewed since the same date, but in these disputes no strike action has as yet been taken.

In all cases early mediation assistance was sought, and this my department provided in full measure. With regard to the dispute involving the non-operating unions, failure to negotiate an agreement after intensive mediation led to the appointment of a conciliation board chaired by Mr. Justice F. Craig Munroe of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. The board report, which was released to the parties on July 13, recommended the following wage increases: effective January 1, 1973, 30 cents an hour or 8.5 per cent of the basic rate; effective January 1, 1974, an increase of 5 per cent on the rates in effect as of December, 1973; effective July 1, 1974, an increase of 3 per cent on the rates in effect as of June, 1974.

Subsequently, the union announced its intention to conduct selective strikes. The first such strike occurred on July 26, and others followed in other regions of the country. On August 7, I appointed Judge Alan B. Gold, of Montreal, as mediator and he met with the parties continuously over the next 11 days to try to bring about a settlement. The non-operating unions began their national rail strike on August 23. Since then I made a further effort and, with the assistance of experienced mediators in the department, explored every avenue to find a solution short of recalling parliament.

On August 27, after a complete review of the situation with my officials, I advised the Prime Minister and my colleagues that, in the public interest, parliament be recalled to restore railway service. With regard to the dispute involving the shopcraft unions, a conciliation board was established on June 26, 1973, after the union membership had rejected a negotiated settlement. The board's majority report, which was received on August 13, proposed a wage increase of 8.25 per cent effective January 1, 1973; an increase of 6½ per cent on January 1, 1974, based on wages in effect as of December, 1973; and an increase of 1½ per cent as of July 1, 1974, based on wages in effect in June, 1974.

Two days after the release of the board's report, the president of division No. 4 advised that his negotiating committee, representing 22,000 employees, had rejected the majority report. The shopcraft employees were in a position to strike on August 21 and are presently conducting a strike vote, with the results to be known about September 10. With regard to the dispute involving the United Transportation Union, which represents some 14,000 trainmen, conductors and yardmen, a conciliation board was established on May 29, 1973, chaired by R. A. Gallagher, Q.C., of Winnipeg. The board held hearings in Montreal on July 25, 26 and 27 and the report was received on August 24. The board report contained no recommendation on wages. At present, the general chairmen of the UTU are considering the board report and would be in a legal strike position on September 1.

This brief résumé, while by no means a complete analysis of the events backgrounding the situation facing us today, does, I think, provide some useful perspective. Many are the opinions that can be ventured, many are the criticisms that can be levelled; but at this juncture, to no avail. Suffice to say that this strike has occurred despite the most sustained and painstaking efforts at mediation; that the task now before parliament is to restore rail operations and allied services and to provide a process that can fairly and equitably settle, finally, the terms and conditions of employment of the employees involved for the years 1973 and 1974.

The proposed legislation now before hon. members may be cited as the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act, 1973. Basically, the provisions deal with the three disputes individually. However, there are a number of provisions that are common to all, and with hon. members' consent I will enumerate those major provisions affecting all three groups. Firstly, in so far as the resumption of services is concerned, in this most vital area the act states that every company and every employee shall resume work, or continue work, as the case may be, forthwith upon the coming into force of this legislation. This order invalidates and overrides any prior authorization that may have been given to take strike action. The act also forbids any railway company personnel to refuse to permit any striking employee from resuming work duties forthwith. Further, no such striking employee may in any way be disciplined for having been on strike.

Secondly, the act provides for the extension of all collective agreements pertaining to the three groups, with certain important amendments to the agreements which I will explain in a moment. In all cases, the extension will be from January 1, 1973, to the day on which any new collective agreements come into effect, or December 31, 1974, whichever is the earlier. This extension, and the amendments, are binding.

Thirdly, the act orders all railway companies and unions involved to resume negotiations forthwith with a view to settling matters presently in dispute. It further orders that they negotiate in good faith and make every reasonable effort to conclude a new settlement. Any new settlement, it should be noted, can in no event expire before December 31, 1974.

Fourthly, the act empowers me, as minister, to appoint mediators in the reopened negotiations. In addition, the governor in council may, on my recommendation, appoint an arbitrator whether or not a mediator has been appointed.

These four areas that I have mentioned are common to all three groups. I will now deal with those provisions that affect the groups individually. First may I deal with the non-operating employees. The amendments to the non-operating employees contract are as follows, as set out in this bill: an increase of 30 cents per hour effective January 1, 1973; an increase of 5 per cent effective January 1, 1974; and an increase of 3 per cent effective July 1, 1974. In each case the increase refers to each hourly basic rate of wages. It will be quickly realized, I am sure, that these increases are those recommended by the chairman of the conciliation board.

Shopcraft employees are the next group. The amendments to the shopcraft employees contract are as follows, and are identical with those recommended by the report of the conciliation board: an increase of 8¼ per cent effective January 1, 1973; an increase of 6½ per cent effective January 1, 1974; an increase of 1½ per cent effective July 1, 1974. In each case the increase refers to each hourly basic rate of wages.

The third group is the railway operating employees. The amendments to the railway operating employees contract are as follows: an increase of 8¼ per cent effective January 1, 1973; an increase of 6½ per cent effective January 1, 1974; and an increase of 1½ per cent effective July 1, 1974. In each case the increase refers to each hourly basic rate of wages or mileage basic rate. I should emphasize that the wage increases for all employees involved in the three disputes, which are provided for in this act, are minimal. Any subsequent negotiated wages settlements or decisions reached through arbitration can in no case reflect wage increases which would be lower than those stated in this act.

Now I would like to speak about pension plans. Hon. members are well aware I am sure, of the significance of the question of pensions and their costs throughout the negotiations. I understand that a number of members of all parties have received representations on this subject. Agreement with all unions bargaining with the railway companies on the matter of pension benefits was reached on March 16. It should be emphasized that pension gains made by all the unions acting in unison are a major accomplishment in the history of railway negotiations.

However, there has been some controversy concerning the railways' cost estimates of such benefits, estimates which are alleged to be exaggerated. I have come to the conclusion that harmony will not prevail among railway employees unless this cost question is aired and answered by an independent inquiry. Consequently, I have appointed an industrial inquiry commission, pursuant to part V of the Canada Labour Code, to estimate the cost of the negotiated settlement relating to pensions and comment on any differences between its cost estimate and that of the railway companies. I might add that today I appointed John Deutsch to be the industrial inquiry commissioner to conduct this inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In making any recommendation to the governor in council regarding the whole matter of an arbitrator, to which I have referred, I intend to recommend that in addition to the matters that would be referred to him he should consider the results of the inquiry into pension costing that I have previously mentioned. This important proviso will, I am sure, meet with the fullest approval of the employee unions concerned in these disputes.

It is obvious, I think, to all members that the question of job security, which is of grave concern to all rail workers, is one of those items that would be considered during the mediation process, or by arbitration. I think this should be underlined and noted by the employees and the unions concerned.

Before attempting to answer any questions there may be concerning the legislation that I have outlined, I should like to respectfully reiterate a statement made by the Prime Minister when he announced the recall of parliament on August 27. He said:

> In recalling parliament our first priority will be the immediate restoration of rail service throughout Canada. I also want to assure the railway unions and managements that the government will continue to respect their interests.

I am satisfied that both these priorities will be achieved by the legislative proposals and the inquiry commission whose appointment I have just announced. I might add, in terms of some of the concern that has been expressed by the workers with reference to the cost of living, that the increases now being implemented—and of course this will involve retroactive payments to all those concerned back to January 1 of this year—can be taken into account by any arbitrator who might be appointed with reference to this dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am also confident that the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act, 1973, will serve to protect all Canadians and the Canadian economy as a whole from further serious suffering. I hope, therefore, that the intent of this legislation will serve well the workers involved and the country as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we meet here today on the seventh anniversary of the last occasion when parliament was recalled to deal with a national rail strike. The legislation now before the House is in many ways similar to the bill that was introduced on August 29, 1966. This is the third time in less than 25 years that parliament has been called upon to take this kind of extraordinary action. There are some striking coincidences that should be noted for the record. First of all, as I have said, it is seven years to the day since the previous bill of this kind was introduced. Second, the chairman of the conciliation board in the present dispute is the same Judge Munroe who presided over the conciliation board in the 1966 dispute; and I might say, for the trained gentlemen opposite, that we have the same Liberal government in power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: There is no doubt in anyone's mind that inflation, which is currently running at an all-time high of 8 per cent, and the failure of this government to successfully tackle it is the cause of so much labour unrest in this country at present. Mr. Speaker, my leader has put forward a position on inflation on a number of occasions both inside and outside this House. We advocated, back in February, an immediate 90-day freeze across the board on all prices, wages, incomes and dividends. We all know how the situation has deteriorated since that time; it has deteriorated to the extent that the February 19 budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is today a shambles.

● (1730)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The consumer price index for the month of July recorded an annual increase of 14.7 per cent in food prices, the highest such rise since World War II. Mr. Speaker, since contract talks first commenced between the railways and the non-operating unions back on November 1 last, inflation has already robbed railway workers of 3.5 per cent as reflected by a 3.55 per cent increase in the cost of living for the first five months of 1973.

An hon. Member: You are slipping.

Mr. McGrath: You are slipping; and you are the one who needs help, my friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, to see what the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the leader of the New Democratic Party, said during the course of debate on the 1966 bill. His remarks can be found at page 7847 of Hansard for that year. They are relevant to the present debate and are as follows:

> What we are really suffering from in Canada, I suggest, is not fearful inflation in the economists' sense. What we are suffering from at this time is an increase in the cost of living for ordinary people, an increase in food prices, in rents, and in this kind of thing. These increases are due to the reasons that my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) gave. They are due to administered prices; to increased mark-ups by the chain stores, and to profiteering of a kind which should not take place. This government and this parliament ought soon to do something about it.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who made that speech back in 1966 now wields a big stick in this House; he now holds the balance of power in this parliament, and therefore he must share the blame with the government for the mess that we are in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I suspect that for him and his colleagues it is too late because, as my friend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said so eloquently, the hon. member for York South keeps huffing and puffing but never brings the House down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We are about to pass a law—and this is a very serious matter—that will in effect take away the right that is presently written into our laws, the right of these unions to strike. What we are saying to these men and women is, "We realize you have a legitimate grievance, but the national interest demands that you must accept the wage offer contained in this bill. Accept it as a floor"—I emphasize, as a floor, and only as a floor—"for further negotiations so that you can get back to the negotiating table and work out a fair and just settlement to this dispute." We are not here to settle this dispute, Mr. Speaker. That is not our role; that is the role for the conciliators and the mediators.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We are here, Mr. Speaker, because there is in this country a national rail strike, and this legislation is necessary in order that the trains of this country can start moving again. In the meantime, we are aware of the fact that inflation, if it is allowed to continue unchecked by this government, will continue to erode the value of every dollar earned, while food prices continue to soar. The cost of shelter has risen to the point where only those in the higher income brackets can afford to buy a house.

It is easy for us to forget, as we talk in terms of percentages and millions of dollars, that it is human beings that are involved here—men and women and families. Mr. Speaker, they have to pay the same inflated price as you and I have to pay for a loaf of bread, and the same inflated price for a pound of bacon. There is no doubt in my mind that railway workers have fallen considerably behind because they are an essential service and hence for them the right to strike, as their leaders have said, is only a theoretical right.

We have, therefore, a very special responsibility to the men and women of these unions. This is the message that we wish to get across to those who will be charged with the responsibility under this bill of bringing about a fair and just settlement to this dispute in the weeks and months subsequent to the passage of this bill. That is the message, that is the mandate we give them as they resume negotiations in this dispute.

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, this is the third time since 1950 that we have had to legislate the railway unions back to work. It will be, therefore, painfully obvious that this bill is merely another band-aid. We really solve nothing by this bill; the problems of the railway workers—inflation, job security, collective bargaining and the right to strike—will still be with us.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You can do better than that.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I do not expect the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) to understand that, and I do not expect him or his colleagues to provide the kind of leadership that this country needs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I note that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) laughs, Mr. Speaker. Well, he should laugh because he is one of those who is responsible for the dispute taking place this very day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In his intemperate outburst at a very critical stage of these negotiations he said there would be a freeze on freight rates, and this caused the railways to take a hard line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: This government, Mr. Speaker, in spite of repeated requests from the House, continues to ignore the recommendations of the Woods committee report which was presented to them in December, 1968. They ignored the major recommendations of that report, recommendations which addressed themselves to the problems I have outlined for negotiating strikes in essential services.

Our party has put forward a proposal based on many of the recommendations contained in the Woods report. We have said we would establish an essential services disputes commission which would define essential services and prescribe the procedure for settling disputes within these essential services. Accordingly, our party endorsed the recommendations made to the government back in December, 1968, in the Woods committee report for the establishment of a public interest disputes commission. This commission would advise whether particular services are essential, set out procedures for resolving differences where the public interest is threatened and, where it is unsuccessful, would report to the government for possible parliamentary action to end a strike or lockout. That is the kind of leadership this country needs.

There can be no doubt that the present rail strike constitutes a national crisis. We meet in an air of crisis. Neither can we doubt the fact that this government had ample warning. It knew this strike was coming, but did nothing about it. As a result, grain shipments have been stopped: this could have long-term, serious consequences to our wheat markets and to the economy of western Canada. Beef and produce are rotting on rail sidings. Ferry services to our two island provinces have been disrupted, stranding thousands of tourists in Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

What is even more important, serious food shortages are developing in many parts of the country. This is especially true in my own province, Newfoundland, which depends on the railways for most of its food, which has to be imported from the mainland. It is clear, certainly, to the government of my province and to the government of Prince Edward Island that the federal government has constitutional responsibilities to ensure that vital ferry services to those provinces are maintained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the government had ample warning. The question is: Why did they not act? What are the facts? They are as follows: negotiations for a new contract began on November 1, 1972. The government knew that the contract was expiring, or would expire at the end of that year. On December 21, 1972, federal mediation was required. On February 16 those negotiations collapsed and the assistant deputy minister of labour was called in.

On March 17 the minister was requested to establish a conciliation board, and the board was set up on May 16, 1973. Early in July the reports of the conciliation board were officially submitted to the minister. At this point I submit the minister should have intervened personally, but he did not. Instead, the government adjourned parliament, knowing full well that there was little or no hope for a negotiated settlement without government and parliamentary intervention. So we end up with a costly rail strike. Finally, on August 7, the minister appointed Judge Alan Gold of Montreal as federal mediator. Why did the minister not intervene? When he intervened, it was too late. When the minister finally decided to intervene, we were not witnessing rotating or selective strikes; we were witnessing a full-blown, national railway strike—and then it was too late.

We were all witnessess to the minister's performance. We all saw on television the charade and theatrics played by the minister in the hours leading up to the Prime Minister's announcement last Monday. There he was, with his collar open, running from car to car and from hotel to hotel, trying to make us believe that he was trying to bring about a settlement of this dispute when he knew that no such settlement at that point in time was possible. Just last night the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Turner) was quoted on the CBC national news as having said that the railways did not negotiate in good faith; they held firm, knowing that the government would have to intervene.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. McGrath: He was dead on. He must be right, because the hon. gentleman is himself a former trainman, now Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, and hence must have inside knowledge.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the railways did not bargain in good faith; that is a fact. Whatever else can be said about the railways, this can be said of them: they had their hands tied by the Minister of Transport and his intemperate outburst in western Canada. I say that the railways have a lot to answer for in this whole affair. Parliament has been denied, by this government, the traditional right to examine the Canadian National annual report in committee. That right has been denied to the members of this House for the past two years. What does the government and the railway have to hide? For the past two years we have been denied the right to a full examination of the budget and finances relating to the CNR and, as a consequence, no auditors have been appointed.

How can the government expect parliament to vote on the matter of wage increases when the financial position of the CNR, a Crown corporation, is unknown? Whatever can be said for Canadian Pacific—and I understand that the CN usually falls into line with their thinking—there is no doubt in anybody's mind that we have a right and, indeed, a responsibility to have the management of this Crown corporation come before a committee of parliament and give a full accounting to the representatives of the people. If the CN annual report for the current year had been referred to a committee of this House, in keeping with past customs and practices, and if we had been given full and ample opportunity to examine in detail the CN financing bill, as we are entitled to do, we would have been in a much better position today to assess properly the attitude taken by the major employers, the CPR and CNR, in this dispute.

According to the evidence that is available, the railway companies are not too badly off. We understand that gross revenue for the CPR is up considerably. We know that the railways have had a good year. Last year, CN's profit was up to $48.3 million, their best year ever. Based on an average hourly wage of $3.64, a 10 per cent increase to all three union groups—that is, the non-ops, the shopcrafts and the trainmen—representing a total of 90,000 workers would cost a minimum of $68.1 million per year. That may seem like a lot, but when you think in terms of a gross revenue of $1,405.8 million for CN in 1972, that is not so much after all. Only then can one get a much truer perspective. We can better appreciate the human problems involved if we bring those figures down to human terms and think of the difference that an increase from $3 to $3.30 per hour will make to a man with a family, to a man who is bringing home the food, or bringing home the bacon as we say in Newfoundland. Of course, he cannot afford bacon today. Nevertheless, that is the issue. That is what this government fails to understand, because it is a government without heart.

Finally, it is unfortunate that this legislation will also cover the shopcrafts and trainmen, even though they have not exhausted the full process of the existing law with regard to a strike vote and final mediation attempts. Though the shopcrafts were much better off than their brothers in the non-ops, they had not had a change in their base rate for many years; and while they have rejected the report of the conciliation board, they have not yet taken their strike vote. Consequently, I am not too proud about what we are doing with respect to the shopcrafts union in this bill.

The United Transportation Union, or the trainmen, are faced with railway company demands to reduce train crews. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour knows what that means. If the railway companies get their way, it will mean a reduction in the work force of some 2,000 men. More important, Sir, this will create very serious operating hazards, and the hon. member for London East who is Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour knows this full well.

We need new ways of resolving disputes which arise within federal jurisdiction. There is no doubt in my mind that public interest sectors under federal jurisdiction, such as the railways, have not kept pace with all other aspects of society. They have not kept pace with their fellow workers because they are, by the very nature of their work, classed as essential. They know full well that if they resort to the ultimate protection the law affords them—that is, the right to strike—parliament will be recalled and they will be legislated back to work. As a consequence, they have fallen behind. We must start to find new ways to improve the bargaining process in industries under federal jurisdiction. By example, through that bargaining process throughout the country, we must find ways to make certain that bargaining takes place well in advance of the expiry date of a contract.

• (1750)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In fact, one can almost make a good case for saying that negotiations should continue throughout the duration of a contract. At present there are too many advantages for both the union and the employer in delaying talks until the last minute. The eventual victim is the one body that does not have the right to strike—the consumers, the general public of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We will move amendments when we arrive at the committee stage of the bill. We were going to put forward an amendment dealing with the differences of the two parties with regard to the administration of the pension plan. We would have much preferred the minister to insert a clause in the bill to ensure that this kind of independent, outside adjudication takes place. Nevertheless, he has announced the appointment of a well respected gentleman who will adjudicate this area of the dispute.

We will be moving amendments at the committee stage with regard to the time limit allowed for the various stages of the bargaining process, with a requirement that any settlement—this is the keystone of our policy—shall take into account the rise in the cost of living since the minister received the respective conciliation reports earlier this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether hon. members would permit me to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we would, of course, agree to that, but we do have to get on with the legislation this evening.

Mr. Lewis: If there is an objection, I can use up the five minutes remaining before six o'clock; but it would be much better if my speech was not interrupted.

Mr. Speaker: We obviously require unanimous consent if we are to rise now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: I heard one "no". That is sufficient.

Mr. Lewis: Let us not use up the time in getting consent. I have some useful things to say about the bill before us and perhaps I could get rid of a few matters with which I have to deal.

I do not know whether some of the political non-sequiturs in which the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) indulged require a reply. However, members of this House, and the unions concerned in this dispute and disputes that might occur in other areas of essential services, ought to know that the hon. member for St. John's East, speaking on behalf of his party, castigated the Liberals for having had to end strikes and send people back to work on three occasions in 25 years; it was necessary for parliament to be reconvened to do that. He ended that part of his speech by outlining the policy which he proposed. The policy terminated in a proposition that on every occasion, not three times in 25 years but regularly and permanently, there be advice to the government to take parliamentary action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Lewis: Hansard will show tomorrow that those were the precise words used by the hon. member. He said this new body should find new ways of negotiating. Following that, he said there would be advice to the government to take parliamentary action to end any strike or lockout that may occur. That will be shown in Hansard tomorrow. All through this dispute the Conservatives have talked, not through both sides of their mouth but they have managed to have six sides to their mouth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: They have talked through every side of their sexagonal mouth. I do not agree with what they say, but one should make an honest argument. They do not have the courage to make an honest argument and say they are against strikes in the public service and essential services; that they propose some form of ending any right to strike in the public service. That is what they mean, but they do not have the guts to say it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Without stretching, Mr. Speaker, may I now call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to spend any more time on things which may have been said by spokesmen for the official opposition. Our appeal is to the government as well as to the members of the official opposition with respect to the bill which is now before us.

My hon. friends and I agree, of course, that a national rail strike causes extreme hardship in many sections of the country and that it is very deleterious to the economy as a whole. We, of course, agree that parliament has a duty to the people of Canada and to the public interest, and that there comes a point in a strike such as a national railway strike at which members of parliament must take the responsibility of making certain that rail operations are resumed so that the harm, the difficulties, the hardship caused by the strike are ended.

To say this, however, is to accept only half of our responsibility as members of parliament—only half of the responsibility of parliament and of the government of Canada. It is not enough for us to say to more than 90,000 Canadians that their normal democratic rights are to be taken away, and to order them to go back to work on the basis of a settlement such as is contained in the bill before us, a settlement which is clearly inadequate and unjust.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Therefore, in spite of our anxiety, which is as great as that felt by members in any quarter of the House, to see the rail strike come to an end, we cannot accept the bill as introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). It was suggested by the minister in his speech that the wage settlements proposed in the bill were minima. As a matter of fact, I suppose it was a slip of the tongue; he said they were minimal. He was right; they are minimal. But the word in the written version of the speech was "minima". The rest would be done by somebody else, by a mediator or an arbitrator. It was suggested by another speaker this afternoon that parliament would not negotiate an agreement, that this must be left to someone else. I think we should face the truth and acknowledge that this is precisely what parliament is doing; what we are doing is making amendments to the collective agreement of the railway employees involved.

There is provision in the bill for some things to be decided elsewhere, but we all know what will happen. I say to the minister that the proposal for further mediation which the bill contains is, to put it mildly, fatuous. Negotiations have gone on for nine months. There have been four mediators—Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Kelly from the minister's department, Judge Gold, and the minister himself. What more could be done by way of mediation? I say to the minister, because I have some experience in these matters, that once this bill passes and the men and women are ordered back to work—assuming for the moment that they obey the order—all the pressure on the companies, all the pressure on the mediator or arbitrator is gone. Perhaps after that some improvements will be made here and there, but no real justice will be forthcoming for the workers involved.

The minister said the wage proposal contained in the bill is the one suggested or recommended by the board. I am sure he knew this was a mistake. It was not recommended by the board, because there was no board report. It was a settlement proposed by the chairman of the board, Mr. Justice Munroe of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. What is more significant is that the proposal which the minister's bill contains represents the latest offer of the railway companies, the one they made just two days ago when they said they were prepared to accept the Munroe recommendation. So what the government is asking parliament to do is to order the men and women now on strike, and those who contemplate going on strike, to accept the latest railway offer. If that is not serving the railways, I do not know what is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Other members of the House have already heard this and I am very sorry to have to put it on record in Hansard because, like every other member of the House, I regret any determination by any citizen of Canada or by any group of citizens of this country to refuse to obey the law. But it is a fact that the general conference of the non-ops met this afternoon, 60 of them, including the whole negotiating committee, and they have made public by now or are about to make public—I do not know the timing—a decision, taken unanimously, that they, and I quote, "will refuse to order our members back to work on the basis of the legislation as it has been introduced". If I have ever known a group of men who have been responsible and law-abiding and do not easily take steps of this sort—and I have had years of experience—it has been the leadership of the railway unions in this country.

● (2010)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Indeed, they have been so careful in their behaviour that they have unfortunately lost a great deal of the confidence of many of their members across the country; and that, too, I regret very much. I merely say that this parliament should not yield to threats of this sort or of any other sort, but the fact that responsible, law-abiding men who have always acted responsibly are forced by circumstances and a situation within their membership to make this kind of decision should cause the Minister of Labour, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), all the members of the government and all members of parliament to open their minds and to see that the bill which has been put before us is simply inadequate and ought not to be shoved down the throats of responsible Canadian citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: There are seldom real negotiations between the railways and employees' organizations. Someone mentioned the fact that there have been three parliamentary actions in the last 23 or 25 years. That is true. None the less, I think we ought to recognize that while there was a strike and parliamentary action in 1950, there were settlements in 1952, 1954, 1956, 1958, 1960, 1962 and 1964, and it was not until 1966 that there was another disruption. Let us not say that the situation has been awful over the years, because both sides have behaved very well since 1966 when there were two negotiated settlements before the difficulties which have occurred at this time.

The reason for the difficulties are twofold. I am grateful to the hon. member for St. John's East who quoted words I uttered in 1966. I did not bother to look up my words of wisdom, as I often find when I look at them seven years later that they sound a great deal less wise than when I first uttered them. Of course that was the situation in 1966, and that is still the situation today; the rising cost of living and the non-action of the government to deal with it in some effective way has added fuel to the negotiating fires. The fact is that the railway employees have fallen behind lamentably. They have validated their case by facts which have not been controverted except by misstatements by the railways, to which I may come if I have time.

As of January 1, 1972, I think all of the employees covered by this bill, certainly the non-ops, received an increase of 7 per cent in their wages. The increase in the cost of living from January, 1972, to July, 1973, has been 10 per cent. They are now 3 per cent behind the position they held when they got their last increase on January 1, 1972. They are already 3 per cent behind. I suggest to the minister that the roughly 8 per cent he proposes for the first year of the agreement, which is an increase of 30 cents an hour, will do no more for those employees than cover the likely increase in the cost of living in 1973—if it does that. I suggest the increase in the cost of living for this year will be between 7 per cent and 8 per cent, or higher.

What the minister is asking the employees to do is to kindly go back to work on the basis of the wage arrangement in this bill which takes them not one step forward but leaves them in exactly the same position they were in nine months ago.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: I ask hon. members whether any one of them would accept that kind of settlement at the end of a strike. And let me remind hon. members that some of the employees on strike have been out for weeks and have not received a single, solitary cent in strike benefit or strike pay. They have lived out these weeks on whatever little money they received before, or more likely have gone into debt.

The media have said that the proposal for the second year is 8 per cent. It is nothing of the sort. It is only 5 per cent for the first six months, and 8 per cent for only the second six months of next year. If you average that out, what is proposed in the bill is an increase for 1974 of 6.5 per cent. I suggest that in all likelihood the suggested increase will not even come close to covering the increase in the cost of living if the international situation remains the same.

I say, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, that we simply cannot accept this kind of injustice to the people concerned. I am entirely in favour of action by this parliament to end the strike, but on behalf of my party I demand that the action be just, not only to the Canadian community as a whole but also to the employees of the railways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That means the bill ought to give the employees, as a floor, what is recommended in the Weldon report, namely 38 cents for the first year, or 10.8 per cent on the $3.54 average wage rate for the group of non-operating employees dealt with in the first part of the bill. Even if that is done, this parliament will have given the non-operating employees only about 3 per cent above the point of equalizing purchasing power as it was nine months ago. All we would give them, by the 10.8 per cent, is about 3 per cent more than the amount they require to catch up to the increase in the cost of living.

Whether you take general productivity in Canada, which is on average more than 3 per cent per year, or the increased productivity of the railways, which is over 6 per cent per year, surely these men and women are entitled to a 3 per cent cushion above the amount they require to meet the increased cost of living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I have had many occasions to participate in debates in respect of railway disputes. When I was able to practise law, before I was elected to parliament, I acted for the employees in various capacities, but when I was elected to parliament I felt there might easily be a conflict of interest if I continued to do so. During those years from 1952 to 1962, the area of comparability used related to the durable goods industry and there was an average developed between employees in the durable goods industry and non-operating employees so far as wages are concerned.

Let us consider the situation in respect of the traditional non-operating employee group, including not only those now covered by the first part of the bill but also those covered by the second part, namely the shopcrafts employees. I do not want to be technical about it, but I merely want to point out that in June, 1973, the average hourly earnings of durable goods industry employees was $4.17. The average rate of earnings of the non-ops in the first part of this bill is $3.64, or a difference of 53 cents between the two. Even if you take the traditional non-ops, in other words take the employees in the first part of the bill, together with the employees covered in part II of the bill, the shopcrafts, you have a difference of about 37 cents between the durable goods average rate of earnings and the non-ops average rate of earnings. Even on that basis of comparison, which is no longer valid in my opinion, the offer in this bill is just not enough and is unjust. It seems to me we cannot accept it.

There is just no question about the ability of the railways to pay. The hon. member for St. John's East dealt mostly with the CNR.

An hon. Member: I wonder why?

Mr. Lewis: One of my colleagues says he wonders why. I think the most important company to deal with is the Canadian Pacific Railway. We built that railway. It was built with millions of dollars donated from the public treasury, and with millions of acres of land donated right across this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Indeed, years ago I heard that a high school teacher in one of his classes, when teaching Canadian government and the Canadian constitution, after he had finished asked a question. He was speaking to a high school class in Calgary. He said to the students, if they looked out of the window and saw a buffalo coming down the middle of the street, could they tell him whether it would come under municipal, federal or provincial jurisdiction. A voice from the back of the class said it would come under CPR jurisdiction.

We built the CPR on the basis of the millions of dollars and millions of acres given by the people of this country. That company has built an immense economic empire without any risk. In 1972 the CPR increased its profits over 1971 by 27 per cent. In the first half of 1973 it increased its profits by 53 per cent over the first half of 1972. This is the company which we say ought to have the advantage of this parliament sending its employees back to work on the basis of this inadequate settlement. I say no.

The fact is that this poverty-stricken company received in subsidies, in 1972, more than it paid in taxes in 1972. It received in subsidies $30,367,000. That is the rail operation. I am not talking about the various gifts given by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to Cominco and other subsidiaries. The CPR rail operation received subsidies amounting to $30,367,000 in 1972, and indicated in its 1972 annual report a tax liability of $30,200,000.

The fact is that out of that there is a deferred tax of $1½ million, so that in 1972 this poverty-stricken railway company received about $2 million more out of the public treasury than it put into it in taxes. Yet we are told that this company is entitled to some consideration by this government and by this parliament. This corporate welfare bum had, as of December, 1972, deferred taxes totalling $143½ million. Those are taxes from the people of Canada, and that is an interest-free loan to the CPR. It is no wonder I have always had the view that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be nationalized and that we would take a big step forward if we did that very shortly.

There is no validity in any argument by the railways that they do not have the ability to pay any legitimate and just increase to which the employees are entitled. I want to make it very clear that I do not agree with the statement made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) made an intemperate statement in Calgary, that there would be a freeze on freight rates for 18 months. He did not impose it, but said to the railways that there should be such a freeze. I would ask the hon. member who spoke previously to ask the Conservative Premier of Alberta whether he would agree that the Minister of Transport was wrong.

The railway companies, particularly if you take their entire empires, are well able to pay a decent wage to their employees. I say that this House ought not to pass any legislation that does not give them a decent wage and makes at least some advance. However, the Minister of Labour did not bring in a bill which even covers Mr. Justice Munroe's recommendation. It covers only the matter of wages. Mr. Justice Munroe made recommendations with regard to job security, which is of great importance to the non-ops in particular.

What hon. members and what the people of Canada, if I may say so without presumption, ought to realize is that the work force of the railways in Canada has been cut in half in the last 20 years. It has gone down by 37 per cent in the last 15 years. The work done by the railways, with half the force they had 20 years ago, is two or three times as great as the work done 20 years ago. With half the work force, and therefore having to pay relatively half the wage bill they had to pay 20 years ago, their productivity is two or three times as high as it was 20 years ago. I simply ask, are not the employees of the railways entitled to part of that productivity increase? This productivity increase was created not only by additional capital, although that played a part, and not only by the capital to buy new equipment, although that played a part; it was also created by the employees of the railways doing their work in a better or newer fashion, in a better trained fashion. They made some contribution to the increased productivity of the railways; and I ask the members of this House, are they not entitled to part of that productivity increase?

The Weldon recommendation would give them no more than about 3 per cent above the increase in the cost of living. Surely they are entitled to part of the productivity increase of more than 6 per cent which annually has taken place on the railways. There are some other details with which some of my colleagues will deal. The Weldon formula suggests that if we are to do justice to the people concerned, we should have a more stringent guarantee that everyone will be employed if this strike ends and when it ends, and that there will not be the usual days of delay before some people are called back.

As a matter of fact, in the case of the shopcraft workers and members of the UTU, the bill does not provide any job security when the strike ends except for those who are on strike, and since none of them has been on strike but many have been laid off because of the non-ops strikes, there is no job security for those who were laid off and did not strike. The bill should contain a provision that the unions have argued for, namely, for job security.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have about six or seven minutes left. Let me take a minute or two to deal with that matter. I have said, and I say again, that in the last 20 years there has been a cut in half of the work force on the railways, and in the last 15 years a cut of 37 per cent. That has meant a reduction of a good many jobs. In 1957 I was involved in the dispute between the firemen and the CPR with regard to firemen on the diesel engines. The firemen were not very happy, but we finally settled the dispute, despite their unhappiness, on the basis that no firemen with more than two or three years service would be laid off—I forget the exact details—and that attrition would take care of the reduction in jobs. It took 10 or 12 years to achieve that, but finally it was adopted.

According to the report of Professor Weldon which gives the details on this, what the unions have asked for and what Dr. Weldon has recommended with regard to job security is that any person with four years' service should not be laid off. The unions have referred to two years' service; Dr. Weldon proposes this with regard to four years' service. Anyone with four years' service or more should not be laid off by the railway companies, and attrition will take care of the reduction in jobs. In this the unions have taken a step far in advance of any they have taken before. The unions, as well as Dr. Weldon, propose that if a job becomes redundant, the employee who has over four years' service should be given an opportunity to relocate, to retrain, to take another job in some other locality, and if he refuses the railways will be free to terminate his employment. This was a proposal they made to avoid any suggestion of featherbedding or make-work arrangements. I see no reason why this bill should not provide for job security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: According to the Weldon report—I have known Dr. Weldon for many years and I am certain he would not state anything the factual accuracy of which he was not convinced about—30 per cent of the employees in the non-ops group, and here I am referring only to the non-ops group on the railways, have less than four years' service, and there has been a rate of attrition every year of about 4 or 5 per cent through ordinary resignations and deaths. So, as it were, the railways have a 35 per cent cushion in dealing with job security for the remaining 65 per cent of their employees who have had more than four years' service. It is obviously an ample cushion, and it would not cost the railways a penny to provide this job security.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister, to the Prime Minister and to members of the government that in my discussions with the non-operating employee leaders—and I have had many of them over the last few days, and indeed few weeks—the fact has been underlined that job security is a very important issue for the people concerned. In fact, it is of great importance to everyone in this rather uncertain and difficult world.

Despite what I have said about our anxiety to see resumed rail and other operations related to the railways, I must say to you, Sir, that we cannot support the bill as presently presented to this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I know that there are thousands of people across this country, perhaps tens of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, who are anxious for this strike to end, and I am as anxious as they are. But I would misread my fellow Canadians—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —were I to think that anyone would suggest that the Canadian people are ready to force the railway workers back to work without a just law. I was very pleased this afternoon to hear the hon. member for St. John's East say, if I heard him correctly, and I think I did, that he thought the railways—I am not quoting him but this is what I understood him to say—could easily give a 10 per cent wage increase to their employees. I was glad to hear him say that. I want to inform him and other members of his party, as well as other members of the House, that when we are in the standing committee or in committee of the whole House—it is not clear at first how this bill will be dealt with—we shall move an amendment to increase the wage offer in the bill precisely in accord with the Weldon recommendation, which proposes a little over 10 per cent.

I assume—and I say this without in any way wanting to trap anyone—that the statement of the hon. member for St. John's East meant that he would support such a proposal before the House. In order to make clear the position which my colleagues and I take, I will move an amendment to the second reading motion. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you may raise some points about it, but I want to place it on record and I hope you will find it in order.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill C-217 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the introduction of a measure to provide Canada's railway workers the wage settlement recommended in the Weldon report, plus provisions for job security, and that there be no submission of work rules to arbitration.

The reason for the last phrase is that so far as the members of the UTU are concerned—the running trade employees involved in this bill—one of their major concerns is the demand by both railways to reduce the crews on freight trains. As hon. members may know, at present at the head of the train there is an engineer and a brakeman, and a conductor and a brakeman in the caboose at the end of the train, and the railways, particularly the CPR, are demanding that this work force be reduced by one so that there would only be an engineer, a conductor and one trainman to run a large freight train. I do not think that is a matter that should go to an arbitrator. This is a technical matter on which the parties concerned should continue their discussions. No one will be hurt if it is not resolved exactly in this year.

In short, I agree that there should be a law sending these people back to work and resuming rail operations, but that law should be just with regard to the workers whose rights are being taken away.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish to bring to the attention of the House that the hon. member's time has expired, and at the same time the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) seeks the permission of the House and of the hon. member to ask a question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My question to the hon. gentleman is this: If the amendment that he is moving passes the House, will he regard that as a vote of non-confidence in this government?

● (2040)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the right hon. gentleman, who is a practised cross examiner, is that I will consider that question when his—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: You had your chance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: I should have the opportunity to complete my answer, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman of the Conservative Party—you just wait a moment, you smart alecks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Lewis: My answer to the right hon. gentleman is that I will consider that question when his colleagues have the courage to vote for the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The same old pussy-footing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, please! May we have order please?

I am tempted to suggest at this time that the question asked by the right hon. gentleman is hypothetical in that it assumes that the amendment is in order—something about which I have serious doubts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to make a ruling on the amendment immediately but if hon. members would like to attempt to convince the Chair that the amendment in those words is acceptable I will hear them. However, I must tell hon. members in all honesty that I have very serious reservations about the procedural acceptability of the motion proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and I am prepared to rule.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is not an occasion for a lengthy discourse—

An hon. Member: You are right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —on what is a reasoned amendment, and if Your Honour finds that this amendment is not in order at this stage of our proceedings we shall endeavour to make appropriate amendments when we are in committee on the bill. However, Sir, I should like to quote once again a portion of citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

Sir, there are a few more lines to citation 382 but they are not relevant, and my not reading them is not a case of leaving out anything that is important. As a matter of fact the same description of a reasoned amendment is found on page 487 of Erskine May's 18th edition, and reads as follows:

It is also competent for a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move what is known as a "reasoned amendment".

Then, after a few words of connection, there are given three headings under which such a reasoned amendment can be moved. The first one is:

(1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

Sir, the amendment moved by my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), states our opposition to the bill. There is nothing contingent about it. It is not a case of trying to have it both ways. The amendment states our opposition to the bill and advocates principles and policies that differ from and are adverse to those in the bill. It says those things clearly by saying that we do not want a wage settlement that we regard as inadequate and calling rather for the wage settlement recommended in the Weldon report. It also calls for provisions for job security which are not in the bill and for a declaration against referring work rules to arbitration.

We submit, sir, that this is a reasoned amendment in that it offers an alternative to the present bill. I do not think it could be argued that all this could be achieved by the making of amendments to the bill, though we shall try that if we have to do so. What it really calls for is a whole new bill based on the principles in the speech made by my hon. friend. Therefore, for these reasons, we hope you will find this amendment in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his enlightened comments but I am sure he appreciates the difficulty of the Chair in respect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

There are very few amendments that can be moved on second reading. Hon. members know what they are: they are the traditional amendments such as the three months' hoist, the six months' hoist and the referral of the subject matter of a bill to a committee. There is also the reasoned amendment. It is somewhat difficult for the Chair to make rulings in a general way as to which amendments, which so-called reasoned amendments, are acceptable, but it is fundamental in understanding reasoned amendments that members should be aware that such amendments must attempt to indicate why one proposes to vote against the bill. There must be something in a proposed so-called reasoned amendment which indicates why the mover of the amendment will vote against the bill.

In this particular instance it seems to me that what the hon. member is doing, rather than what I have just suggested, is to propose an entirely new proposition. It is, I suggest to the hon. member, in this way somewhat irrelevant. It is always difficult for the Chair to suggest an amendment is irrelevant. I use this word with some caution and care because I am not suggesting that there is no relevance at all between the amendment proposed and what we have before us, but the precedents and the authors have required that these amendments be particularly relevant, and in some cases the authors and precedents have stipulated "strictly relevant".

When an amendment of this kind seeks to propose, for the consideration of the House, an entirely different proposition I suggest to the hon. member that to this extent it is not relevant in the way that our precedents require.

For this reason, and also because in my view the amendment proposed by the hon. member to some extent anticipates the committee stage, I would think that the amendment should not be accepted.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-217 proves to us, beyond any doubt, the inconsistency of the present government with regard to labour relations. In fact, looking on the one hand at the law that allows public sectors to strike and on the other at the government which convenes parliament at this time to put an end to a strike it has itself authorized, we must recognize the stupidity in this state of affairs through which the public sector is deprived of the right to strike it was granted by law. And we are not the only ones to have noticed this inconsistency!

This afternoon, we had a striking example of it in front of parliament when 1,200 strikers walked up and down in front of the parliament buildings. At one point, hundred or so strikers decided to shatter the glass doors leading into parliament, and shatter the glass windows and doors of the library.

Listening to the news a while ago, I heard that people from Montreal were responsible for what happened this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, I have even been told that fanatic PQ supporters from Montreal found their way in the ranks of the strikers to cause trouble in front of parliament in Ottawa. They sneaked in among the strikers whose case we are now discussing. That gives us an idea of the mentality created by René Lévesque in Montreal and the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I also heard on the news this evening that the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) tried to address the strikers. About half of them did not want to listen to him, whereas a few did. The leader of the NDP was trying to make political hay out of the poor CN and CP employees by extoling the beauties of socialism.

So, I say to the members of the New Democratic Party that instead of trying to settle the rail dispute here in Ottawa, they ought to go to the aid of their little friend, Mr. Barrett, in British Columbia, in order to settle the strikes which the government of British Columbia is facing.

These people dare tell us what to do but they cannot do anything when they are in office. That is exactly what is happening in British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, never before has a BC government been so stuck with government corporations than since the election of CCF or New Democrats in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, it is very well to try and stir up the poor railway employees and, as the hon. member for York South was saying earlier, the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party spoke about the Canadian National, but he forgot about the Canadian Pacific. His solution would be to nationalize the Canadian Pacific which is making profits in order to turn it into a deficit ridden company like the Canadian National. That is his solution!

Mr. Speaker, private enterprise is always to be blamed. We say: why not nationalize it and then we will support it with public monies. In fact, $291 millions have been granted to the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, while private companies are showing profits—this is what the hon. member for York South was saying—in charging the same freight rates and the same fares for passengers.

If a privately-owned company is reaping profits, we say: let us nationalize it. But in the case of state-controlled services we tolerate deficits after deficits, with a possible tax increase for those who make use of them.

Mr. Speaker, unsightly demonstrations like those we had this afternoon remind me of what is going on in Chile, in Argentina and in most socialist countries. Some people have the nerve of attending such demonstrations.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP does not have any solution, nor has the government. Bill C-217 is ordering the employees back to work. If they do, it will be against their will and this will not solve the dispute. This is so true that, as someone said a while ago, Parliament has had to reconvene three times in the last 20 years to settle rail strikes. But it is not settled yet.

This means I am right when I have been saying for at least 30 years that, if it is ever proven to me that a strike has solved the labour problem, I shall join the picket line, but not before that. It is so true that the strike is not settled and will not be with Bill C-217.

What I find amusing is the fact that some people change their mind depending on which side of the fence they stand. And within a few years—I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) sitting on the front benches of the Government. For those who do not know he once was the president of the CNTU—

Mr. Prud'homme: The CNTU was reasonable in those days.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): During the Asbestos strike, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau)—

Some hon. Members: That strike has been settled.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —not to forget the hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier).

● (2100)

In 1949, those three musketeers took part in the Asbestos strike in the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister wrote that the late Maurice Duplessis was a dictator, that he was forcing the employees to go back to work. That is what is being done with Bill C-217. Let us ask that to the hon. Prime Minister.

Do we think, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Transport was saying to the Asbestos workers to go back to work? No, he was telling them: Face up to the Canadian Johns-Manville Co. Ltd., to Duplessis. If you have to throw stones at the Quebec policemen do so. The Prime Minister was throwing stones, Mr. Speaker. And so did the Minister of Communications; he was communicating then!

The Minister of Transport was then saying the opposite of what he is saying today since he is telling the striking CNR Canadian National employees: Gentlemen, go back to work, otherwise you will have to bear the consequences.

An hon. Member: Go back but with what?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): With .30c an hour from January 1, 1973. And let us note that I believe that .30c an hour is reasonable. But what is not reasonable to me is to wait until now to tell the people to go back to work whereas, especially in the public sector, the whole mechanism of employer-employee relations should have been established long ago to avoid a strike as disastrous as the one we are now witnessing.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Speaker, we do not want compulsion; on the contrary we want order in the public sector as far as the 56,000 people on strike are concerned. I was reading this morning a press release from a certain Mr. Smith; according to Mr. Smith and to the people who discussed with him, the Associated Non-Operating Railway Unions, representatives, it was reported, and I quote:

[English]

First, we want the MPs to consider the merits of our case, instead of just acting as strikebreakers for the companies.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those are NDP words, that is clear; they must have had the visit of the NDP then. I come back to the quotation:

[English]

We now regard Parliament as our last court of appeal.

[Translation]

Parliament should have long ago passed legislation whereby the workers or the strikers in question should not have had to submit to Bill C-217 now before us.

I go on quoting:

[English]

We will have the spectacle of 264 Parliamentary Pilates,—

[Translation]

If I say "Pilate" they will think I mean aircraft pilots.

[English]

—piously washing their hands of a serious moral issue, and handing our members over to the companies to be underpaid and overworked for another two years.

[Translation]

It is as if we were here, Mr. Speaker, to martyrize workers whereas I believe each member of Parliament is sincerely trying to give a maximum of justice to groups of Canadian workers and not only to the 56,000 railway employees. Even if there were 560,000 of them instead of 56,000, it would not prevent me from saying what I think.

For example, it is clear that with the increase in the cost of living, the employees—any employees—want better wages to face the rising cost of living. Everyone knows it but higher wages paid directly from taxes or from Crown Corporations funds or other funds are an increase in the cost of living or in the cost of production and that leads to inflated prices. Salaries run after prices and prices run after salaries, just like a dog which turns in circles to catch its tail and never succeeds in doing so. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Speaker, salaries going into costs bring about higher prices. The increase in freight rates brings about a higher cost of living. We suggest an increase in purchasing power through new credit, and not price increases. Price increases breed inflation when—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Some say "no". Members of the New Democratic Party think that is funny. That is funny! Let us tax the big to give to the small so that in the end there are only small people and no more big people. That is a logical system in which the number of small people increases, poorer than ever before, while the big disappear. Once they have disappeared, you hear: we won, we are poorer than ever, but we won; that is the rationale of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, it all boils down to the cost of living, inflation, the decrease in value of our dollar. Here is what we could read on this subject in the daily Le Droit:

The climbing prices in the food products sector have forced a lot of people to reflect upon the solutions to be brought about in order to allow the consumer to come out of it alive.

One cannot say that everybody drew a lesson from it. Some seem unable to comprehend the problem, others do not want to see the true solutions, others finally admit them with reluctance while those who propose valid solutions find it impossible to put them into practice—

—It has always been said of the Conservatives, even when they top it with "Progressive", that they are people "trailing the field."

They do not change much, they are behind the times.

They are traditionalists—

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): They are what?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Traditionalists.

Mr. Grafftey: What is that?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Not only that, but you are limited to that—"blinkers".

—fear change and want to preserve old things.

Just like the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey): old potatoes!

● (2110)

Furthermore, as their leaders and main supporters are recruited mainly in the ranks of the well-to-do——that is true; look at the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—

—and as they have strong ties with big business, the Conservatives are reluctant to accept any change.

Let us proceed slowly, not too fast!

To wit, their attitude towards the price escalation. They have been unable to come up with any original suggestion. They saw that the United States, where capitalism flourishes and where big industry and finance rule the roost, had adopted a policy of price and wage freeze. The Conservatives followed suit. They asked the Canadian government to freeze prices and wages in Canada——for 90 days.

Well, that policy was a real flop in the United States; it resulted in the artificial shortage of food products and a still greater price advance; yet, the Conservatives are still struck on the idea of price and wage freeze in Canada. And they have the nerve to call themselves "progressive".

As for the NPD—

To cope with price increases—

—because I like them, I would like to make them understand, but it is a hard job!

To cope with price increases, one of the first reactions of the NDP was to suggest price controls without, of course, mentioning wage controls.

Let us control prices only, not wages. For a smart solution, that is really smart. As for wages, they will get them from the man in the moon!

Now one measure is unthinkable without the other. How is it possible to prevent prices from rising if one of their components, namely salaries, can rise quickly because of union pressures and strikes? (The strike of the railway non-ops is a conclusive example.)

The NDP has revised its policies and no longer talks about price controls.

That is true, Mr. Speaker. Let us listen to them; they find it embarrassing now to speak about price controls.

But strangely enough, it so happens that the NDP, instead of taking up the cause of consumers and demanding direct assistance to consumers, has come to plead in favour of production concerns. The corporate bums, as they were so blithely referred to by Mr. Lewis during the last election campaign, should be subsidized from the taxes collected by the federal government.

It is a bit thick! The NDP who wants to subsidize the large flour mills, dairy farms and packing houses! Obviously the NDP has gone right off the track. Wishing to save its bacon while protecting the Liberal government, Mr. Lewis' party is becoming inconsistent.

—but it is adept at manoeuvring. I saw at 6.30, the leader of the NDP doing some fancy work, but he does it well. He pretends to be dead against the government, but when it is time to vote, he supports it, because he does not want to defeat it now. He waits and tries to keep the government under his control and decide when the election will be called.

Mr. Speaker, this is a misuse of power.

coming back to the Liberals—

With time, will the Liberal government improve like a good wine—

—according to the Liberals.

—or is the fear of being defeated making them wise?

Mr. Trudeau has rejected the idea of a price and wage freeze like in the United States. On that point, the facts have proved him right, thus bitterly disappointing the Conservatives.

And now, following the suggestion of the NDP, the main supporter of the Liberal government, asking that producers be subsidized, Mr. Trudeau answers, according to La Presse of August 22: "The Trudeau government has indicated up to now that it is clearly in favour of income support measures for individuals and families."

If the Liberal government intends to subsidize consumers instead of producers, why not do it right away?

Are the timid measures intended to increase the benefits for senior citizens and the reshaping of the Family Allowances Act as proposed by the Liberals enough to bring an efficient and definite solution to the problem of price increase and inflationary spiral?

Do the Liberals—

An hon. Member: We are not Socreds!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I know that but it's about time you did!

Do the Liberals and Mr. Trudeau believe that by staying, like the Conservatives, as retarded and reactionary when it comes to reforms that must necessarily be applied in the field of the financial system, they will provide good solution to the problem of price increase and inflation? Do the Liberals think that by further taxing producers, industrialists, manufacturers and workers, which has the effect of reducing everybody's income, they will really check rising prices? On the contrary, in reducing the income of manufacturers, industrialists, and workers by imposing heavier taxes, the government simply invites industry leaders and manufacturers to boost their prices and workers to ask for higher wages.

The Creditists agree with the Liberals—

An hon. Member: This is difficult to swallow.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Wait a minute! One must not say "agreed" too soon.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Réal Caouette.

The Creditists agree with the Liberals to reject the price and salary freeze and they do agree with the Liberals when they proposed as a solution to subsidize the consumers instead of the producers.

But what the Creditists do not admit is that these subsidies must necessarily come from taxes. Social Credit has always claimed and still claims today that the total sum—

Let us look and listen well, instead of trying to talk nonsense.

—of prices which is linked to the total production is always superior to the amount of money paid in purchasing power in respect of this production.

The reason for this is quite simple: any producer, industrialist or manufacturer is in business for making profit. With the present system, how can he show a profit other than by selling at prices higher than his costs. As in the course of production he distributes a purchasing power equal to his costs, his selling prices are always higher than his costs or this purchasing power.

The Social Credit Party proposes a mechanism to correct this anomaly: to increase the global purchasing power to the price level, that is, to create new purchasing means which are not included in the prices and an amount equal to the difference between the sum total of the prices and the sum total of true costs or purchasing power distributed in the course of production.

This could be achieved in two ways: first, an increase in the guaranteed income for everyone and, secondly, a decrease in prices equal to the difference between the sum of the prices and the effective distributed purchasing power, through a consumer discount, such discount being refunded to the retailers (producers) by a drawing on the national credit account.

An hon. Member: What is the bill's number?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, there lies the solution. Bill C-217, which relates directly to this.

Mr. Speaker, we hear complaints, such as union demands, at this time. The first and main demand of the non-operating employees is security of employment; they want that employees with four years service may not be fired as a consequence of technological change.

● (2020)

That is the problem of automation and useless jobs that must be dealt with. If in industry ten men are replaced by a new technology, push buttons, electronic gadgets using only one man the ten men who were replaced should nevertheless be kept, thus further increasing the cost of production and prices.

Mr. Speaker, railway employees are not interested in job security as such, but the salary attached to the job. That is what interests them, and the salary attached to the job should be guaranteed through a national dividend based on the great production of Canada. There is no other solution than that. So job security is a smoke screen, a hoax. I am a businessman myself. If I have too many employees, of course I will dismiss some. The same thing goes for railways.

Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues will deal with those issues in detail but I wanted to give the general opinion of our group, and I think that the right hon. Prime Minister and this government should seek the light of Creditist theories and solutions.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to intervene in the debate now, but it is no secret that there were discussions through the usual channels on this subject earlier today, and there is some interest, certainly in our party, in the course which this debate is likely to take. I should like to know whether the motion, as originally put by the minister, calling for the bill to be referred to a standing committee for discussion and report, does in fact represent the manner in which we are to proceed, or whether the House will be asked to follow the course which was followed last year and go into Committee of the Whole.

● (2120)

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, in an issue of this kind time is of the essence, but consistent with the right to speak of hon. members who feel they have a contribution to make and have things they must say I suggest we must consider the times and dates of sitting. I do not suggest—as I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the House leader of the Créditiste party and the government House leader would not—that the floor of this House should be the place for discussion, but I think that before ten o'clock we might have some idea as to the way we are to proceed. We should know whether there is any disposition to accept the suggestion that this bill be considered in the committee of the whole, or whether we are going to refer it to the standing committee. That and other things are of interest to us now and, I hope there will be some discussion on these matters before ten o'clock.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could clear up at least the question concerning the bill being sent to a standing committee or being considered by the committee of the whole. It was my intention to ask the House to deal with the bill in the committee of the whole, and, if hon. members will agree, we might decide on that now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: It was my hope also that it might be possible for the House to agree to continue this evening at least until we give second reading to the bill. That would be my suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For the record, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we agree to the bill being sent to the committee of the whole rather than to the standing committee, but on the question of sitting beyond ten o'clock tonight we have an alternative suggestion to make. If the debate is concluded before ten o'clock and the vote is called on second reading, of course that will be the end of it, but we do not think the House should be asked to sit beyond ten o'clock tonight. We are prepared to have the House sit at ten o'clock tomorrow morning to make up for any extra time that might have been gained tonight.

An hon. Member: Why not tonight?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned, we agree with the suggestion that we should continue this evening until we give second reading to the bill. I am sorry to see that the New Democratic Party disagrees on that and that the concurrence of the motion for second reading is being delayed. We came here to work, and we have amendments to move to improve this bill.

Mr. Speaker, as presented this bill is not fully satisfactory to our party. We want to improve it, and we believe that during consideration in the committee of the whole we will have a better opportunity to do so, instead of simply moving a motion which would amount to a non confidence motion.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): To make my point clear, Mr. Speaker, I was not objecting to the vote on second reading being taken tonight. As a matter of fact, we are prepared to have it right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My point is that if there are to be further speeches on second reading we should not be asked to go beyond ten o'clock tonight, and, as I suggested, we might make up the time tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Perhaps we should solve one problem at a time. There is a proposal by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that, by unanimous consent, we should amend the motion of the minister so that it will read that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole rather than the standing committee. Do we have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): As to the second proposal, it is difficult for the Chair to see any agreement.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There does seem to be an agreement to put the question at this time. The question is on the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-217 be now read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member now standing please resume his seat?

[Translation]

If the hon member would wait a moment, I shall complete the reading of the Standing Order.

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 54, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole on the said bill. I am not sure what is the pleasure of the House. I am not sure what is the wish of the House, whether it is the wish that we adjourn at this time—

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I could have Your Honour's indulgence, and that of the House, to suggest that because of the unusual nature of the circumstances facing the whole nation, parts of Canada in particular, the discussions of the House leaders which have taken place could be repeated to the House. Possibly this could result in the House sitting beyond ten o'clock, hopefully to the point where we could dispose of the bill before us, knowing that arrangements have been made which are satisfactory to the majority of the members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I make this suggestion with great sincerity in view of the fact that the circumstances facing certain regions of the country have reached the stage where hours are more important than anything else. We certainly cannot afford to wait for days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know it is after ten o'clock. I can remain in my chair only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I wish to call your attention to a rather important fact. Is it to show Parliament that the government is topsy-turvy that the flag on your right is upside down?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is sometimes difficult for all hon. members to understand fully the impact of circumstances on each part of the country. There have been a lot of discussions. I beg Your Honour's indulgence to allow hon. members to hear the report of the House leaders in anticipation of reaching some kind of agreement. This country is faced with a national emergency, certain parts in particular.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The situation is clear. I appreciate that the hon. member wishes to plead for the House to continue its sitting. I could hear many speeches on the point, both for and against, but as it is after ten o'clock the Chair has no authority to remain unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have again inquired. Obviously there is not unanimity.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we, and I do not know whether there are others, do not see any value in sitting—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: We do not see any value—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: I ask hon. members to pay me the courtesy of listening as courteously as I listened to the hon. member who preceded me. We do not see any value proceeding in committee of the whole tonight. Some of us want to prepare amendments. On behalf of my colleagues I am prepared to agree to an earlier start tomorrow, if that should be the wish, possibly starting at ten o'clock instead of eleven. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are likely to accomplish less rather than more if we continue this evening. May I remind the House that we facilitated the vote on second reading?

• (2210)

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Lewis: I merely remind hon. members that it was the NDP House leader who made the suggestion—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May we have order? It is obvious there is not unanimous consent.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION—SUGGESTED MOVING OF SOME SERVICES TO ALBERTA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as if there were nothing else of importance for this parliament to be considering, for the moment we are now engaged in the usual adjournment debate. I protest this "business as usual" procedure. Our party was ready, willing and anxious to proceed with discussion of the rail bill in Committee of the Whole. We have to thank the NDP for the delay which has taken place. The NDP has shown its true colours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: The NDP champions the rights of the working class, but when we are here, in the midst of a national crisis, to defend their interests, they want to delay action when we want to proceed. I protest—

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member is not referring to the subject of his question. He knows that the rules governing the adjournment debates are very strict. He should direct his remarks to the subject matter.

Mr. Roche: I agree with Your Honour that I have been called upon to discuss the subject of decentralization. I only wish to say that I do so under protest.

An hon. Member: Then sit down!

Mr. Roche: On April 5 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to explain the government's policy on decentralization of government services. I asked him what the policy of the government was, and he said decentralization had already been brought about. That was certainly not the fullest of answers. It was also somewhat premature. In the interim, of course, we have witnessed the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in Calgary which emphasized that the west should share more intimately in the decision-making process.

The government has sought to give the impression that it is taking decentralization seriously. Thus, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) has announced a decentralization program in accordance with which the proportion of departmental staff in the capital has been reduced from 70 per cent to 30 per cent and staff at regional offices expanded from 30 per cent to 70 per cent of the total.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has outlined plans to make more purchases from regions which are distant from the national capital. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is increasing the resources and responsibilities of regional offices, especially in counselling programs for small business. The Royal Canadian Mint extension is being located in Winnipeg. The concept of decentralization of federal government activity, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) tells us, is nothing more and nothing less than a concept of equality. "It is essential that every Canadian know that the nation's business is nationwide", the minister says. And I agree.

One might think that with all this activity the need for decentralization is being met. But it is not. Decentralization means more than a slight shifting of the federal payroll out from Ottawa. It means stopping the shocking proliferation of government buildings here in Ottawa as indicated by the plan to take over huge amounts of commercial space south of Wellington Street. It also means bringing the decision-making process closer to the people, and this implies essentially that regional interests will become a priority of the federal government.

For too long we have silently watched government grow and grow to the point at which we are now one of the most overgoverned people on earth. The joint parliamentary committee on the constitution of Canada has warned us about the danger which arises as a result of the over-centralization of power in Canada.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when I speak of decentralization as the vehicle to a better society in Canada I do not mean just spreading out some convenient services as if they were some sort of pork barrel. I mean a bold, new concept of government which would recognize that our national unity is dependent on the degree that all Canadians can be close to and participate in their national government. There is no reason the decision makers within certain departments cannot be located in areas other than Ottawa.

Why cannot the agricultural policies be formulated in western Canada; why not the formulation of policies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Atlantic area, with energy policies formulated in Alberta? Why must the head offices of Crown corporations be in Ottawa?

Such positive steps would not only help various regions get their fair share of the economic benefits of federal spending, but the federal process would be enriched by the infusion of creative thinking at the policy-making level. Then the eastern and western provinces would not be just appendages to central Canada's domination of the federal government; they would be active participants.

That is the message of the Western Canada Opportunities Conference, Mr. Speaker, but it is a message the government gave no sign of receiving. I am afraid that the government's half-hearted attempt at decentralization will actually amount to nothing more than sprawling government, in which the departments will add staff on geographic fringes while retaining their decision making apparatus in Ottawa. Without the bold, new concept I have outlined, decentralization will just make a big government bigger and frustrations will multiply.

Let us take advantage of modern communications and transportation to bring government to the people, and true decentralization is the way.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the government favours decentralization of its services, and the matter is under continuous review to ensure that opportunities to this end are taken advantage of fully.

Since last spring, when the hon. member asked what steps the government was taking to decentralize services specifically to western Canada, a number of initiatives have been started. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion announced a major decentralization with the proportion of staff in the capital to be reduced from 70 per cent to 30 per cent.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce began a program to expand the resources and responsibilities of its regional offices, including such initiatives as extending to three new areas the Counselling Assistance to Small Enterprises Program; appointing regional tourist officers in each province, and delegating on an experimental basis to regional offices the granting authority under programs such as the Advancement of Industrial Technology, the General Adjustment Assistance Program, the Program to Enhance Productivity and the Industrial Design Assistance Program.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is setting up a number of consumer help offices at the community level, and Information Canada is expanding its system of regional enquiry centres. The Department of the Environment is developing extensive marine geoscience facilities as part of the new oceanographic institute at Patricia Bay. The National Film Board is opening a Prairie regional production centre.

In addition, consideration is being given to relocating the Science Council out of the National Capital Region, and establishing on the Prairies a new defence research laboratory and a new communications systems engineering facility. The extension of the mint in Winnipeg is well known.

Finally, for perspective, it is worth remembering that as of September last year 207,000 of the 277,000 public servants, or 75 per cent, were employed outside the National Capital Region.

• (2220)

Among this group are included such agencies as the research centres of the Department of the Environment at Burlington, Bedford and Winnipeg, the regional production centres of the National Film Board in Vancouver and Halifax, the Transportation Development Agency in Montreal, the Atmospheric Management Headquarters of DOE in Toronto, and the headquarters of such major Crown corporations as CNR and Air Canada. In other words I would reply to the hon. member that the process of decentralization of the public service is a continuing one and concrete progress is being made. I hope the hon. member will continue pressing the government to decentralize not only, as he said, the offices but also the decision-making power.

AGRICULTURE—FEED GRAINS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I refer to a question I asked on July 23. At that time, addressing a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), in charge of the Wheat Board I asked if he would tell the House what his policy was in respect of the marketing of feed grain since he repeatedly had said there would be changes. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) replied that this minister is responsible and that any stand he takes would be a responsible one. Tonight in these few minutes I wish to call to the attention of the House the deterioration which has taken place in the orderly marketing of feed grain, barley, wheat and oats, from western Canada and call to the attention of the House the concern that has been expressed in western Canada.

I want to point out to the House that the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba has stated that although the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board set September 15 as the date for the new policy to come into effect, right now the Canadian Wheat Board is selling No. 1 feed barley at $2.20 per bushel to eastern Canada while the export price is $3.20 per bushel. This statement was made by Mr. Uskiw, the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba, on August 24. He states that for every bushel that is sold to eastern Canada the prairie grain farmers lose $1. This is the situation at which we are looking. At this point in time we have no indication of what the regulations or Orders-in-Council will be as of September 15, although this is the date upon which the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board said the new policy would come into effect.

Now we find the market disorganized. In a wire to the provincial ministers the Minister of Justice said he was working toward stabilization of marketing policy. We had a stable marketing policy until the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture mucked it up. We had a stable policy, and now we have an unstable and disorganized market.

One might look at the record and see that officials of the federal Department of Agriculture met the representatives of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. When the meeting was over the Minister of Justice from Ottawa, who had not even attended the meeting, said they could like it or lump it. Out of that meeting emerged the representatives of the two governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan saying that the farmers of western Canada would no longer be well served.

If we move from marketing through the Canadian Wheat Board to commodity exchanges in Winnipeg, according to a story put out on August 30 there is a statement to the effect that the commodity market in Winnipeg, the futures market, is no longer in operation. The situation has deteriorated to the extent that there is no regular market pricing system for feed grains being sold in western Canada.

At one time the price of western barley was competitive with the price of United States corn. This is no longer the situation. The ministers responsible said they would set up a pricing policy in eastern Canada comparable to or based on the feed mill price in western Canada, but the feedmill price in western Canada is unknown.

The government has thrown the marketing of feed grains from western Canada into complete disarray. Stability is a thing of the past according to the wheat pool budget of July 20, and I suggest that the government read it. The western farmers are subsidizing the livestock industry in eastern Canada. This is the situation in which they find themselves.

I disagree with those to my right who said this evening that this matter is not of importance. This matter is of importance because it involves not only the well being of the farmer in western and eastern Canada but the unity of this country, and the basis upon which we can do business and have a good understanding of how to carry on business. I can only deplore the lack of information and clear policy of the government which should have been provided by the two ministers who are responsible for agriculture.

I plead with the ministers that if they have anything in mind other than total disorganization, if they have anything in mind which would be to the benefit of Canadian farmers, let them make a statement, either here or elsewhere, on what their policy is so that some kind of an orderly marketing system can be adopted because at present there is a disorganization. They have destroyed the stability of the Canadian Wheat Board. At a time when grains are in short supply and when, above all things, we need an orderly market they have chosen to disrupt and disorganize what was a stable marketing system.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply tonight on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to the question asked by the hon. member.

This question was asked prior to the statement concerning the new policy (proposition) on domestic feed grains. As the hon. member knows, this statement has already been made public. The hon. member's question is also related to the fact that this statement should have been made in the House. Such was the minister's intention, Mr. Speaker, but this was impossible since the House was adjourned.

I think all hon. members are aware that the temporary measures which have been announced are welcomed by a great number of Canadian producers. Every one can rest assured that strong efforts are being made to put the proposition into effect as soon as possible.

POST OFFICE—RE-EXAMINATION OF REQUIREMENT FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF RURAL ROUTES IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on April 12 last I asked a question of the minister in charge of the Post Office in respect of the extension of rural services. In the past few years we have witnessed a phenomenon that has been commonly referred to as rural depopulation. Rural depopulation, I suppose, has been due to various reasons and causes, but one contributing factor which no one denies has been the lack of government services in rural areas, whether they be municipal, provincial or federal. Services which are taken for granted in small towns are often not available in the rural area or if they are, are only available on a limited basis and are often of a second quality.

• (2230)

In recent years decreasing rural population has resulted in the closing of many rural post offices. Some were very, very small indeed and it was not economically feasible to keep them open. However, the government clearly came up with a policy which stated that despite the closure of these small post offices the areas would have postal service better than that being provided through the rural route system. What has happened since that time? The delay in mail deliveries has become almost a national catastrophe. A letter sent on a Wednesday in a so-called remote area will not be delivered perhaps until the next Tuesday. That is not an efficient postal service, Mr. Speaker.

There is also a formula devised by the post office according to which a certain number of people must live along a rural route in order for the service to be extended. In my riding there are areas where the rural route ends, but had it been extended for another mile, three or four more people could have been serviced. The formula does not allow this to be done, and so the truck turns around and retraces the distance already covered. This has created hardship and has forced many people to travel to post offices, sometimes nine or ten miles each way, where apparently they get service.

On April 12 I asked that the government live up to its commitment to review rural routes, and asked that the routes be extended despite the fact that a contract had been signed with a carrier. An additional payment could be made to carriers if the routes were extended to give the service that was promised when the post offices were closed.

Sometimes the post office officials will claim that they cannot extend the rural route for another mile because there are not enough people, but they offer to put a box in the middle of the country where there are large farms and allow the mail to be delivered there. That is not an adequate service, having the mail delivered two or three miles away from a farm, and left there unsupervised. If the mail is delivered mid day, sometimes the people do not only have a chance to pick it up until the end of the day.

We are asking the post office to establish a system to extend the rural routes even during the time of the contracts with the carriers in order to provide service. In many cases the post office is the only regular federal government service that rural people see. They are taxpayers and are entitled to the service.

I submit to the government and to the post office that it is time for more flexibility, without all the bureaucratic redtape and formulae, to be applied to the extension of rural routes.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of the hon. member.

According to the last figures available, there were 5,014 rural routes in operation in Canada serving a total of 808,000 households. The criteria for the frequency of the service on those routes are now based on the number of households per mile travelled. When there are more than three households per mile travelled, the mail will then be delivered six times a week. When there are between two and three households per mile, the mail service will be provided four times a week.

Under the current regulations of the department, 4,420 out of the 5,014 rural routes are served six times a week. This means that 88 per cent of the rural routes have a more frequent service than that available to urban users. It is true that most of the routes which are not so well served are in the Prairies because of the continuous increase in the size of the average farm and of the generalized tendency among farmers to move to town or to travel frequently to their farms.

In spite of a less frequent postal service in most of those routes in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, its cost per household is 36 p. 100 above the national average.

If the department decided to give a six day a week service in all of these routes instead of the present four day at least it would cost $1,450,000 more per year. Therefore, the Post Office Department is trying to find other means to determine the frequency of the service.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

SUGGESTED POWER OF ENERGY BOARD TO SET PRICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I seek unanimous consent to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That this House is of the opinion that the government should immediately introduce legislation to authorize the National Energy Board to set maximum prices for crude oil, gasoline and home heating fuel, including the authority to roll back prices, such legislation to be dealt with following third reading of the resumption of railway services legislation.

Mr. Speaker: This motion, proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under Standing Order 43 to seek leave to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the extravagance and wasteful expenditure in which the federal government engages at the Ottawa level and the effect this has on inflation and the rising price spiral.

I should therefore like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That this House is of the opinion that government expenditures at the Ottawa level should immediately be cut back by 10 per cent with special reference to travelling expenses, the employment of non-governmental consultants, and advertizing.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PENITENTIARIES

ABOLITION OF INSTRUCTOR'S UNIFORMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of this House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that, effective September 3, penitentiary instructors will be deprived of their uniforms, that these instructors may be called upon to help security guards when escapes occur, and that they run the risk of being confused with inmates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That this House grant an extension of powers to the Committee on Justice presently investigating the living conditions of inmates within penitentiaries in order that the committee may submit recommendations concerning this.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH FLOOR PRICES FOR PRODUCERS AND MAXIMUM RETAIL PRICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House express the opinion that the government should immediately introduce legislation to give the Food Prices Review Board, in conjunction with other departments, authority to establish floor prices for prime producers of foodstuffs and maximum retail prices for consumers in order that this action might also help to weed out profiteering.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF TWO PER CENT CEILING ON ANNUAL ESCALATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, hope never fades. I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), to move:

That this House urges the government to place on the order paper forthwith legislation to remove the 2 per cent ceiling from the annual escalation of all pensions to which such a ceiling still applies and that this legislation be proceeded with immediately following the disposition of the railway strike legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF EXCESS PROFITS TAX—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the effects of inflation, namely, the excessive profits being made by companies such as food chains. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House is of the opinion that the government should immediately introduce legislation to establish a corporations excess profits tax, the proceeds therefrom to be used to increase old age pensions, such legislation to be dealt with immediately following third reading of the railway strike legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this provides an opportunity for the Chair to express the hope that the Committee on Procedure and Organization will, as suggested a while ago, take a serious look at the operations of Standing Order 43.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: In respect of the matter you have just raised, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether that committee might also consider the possibility of requiring those who hide in their seats and say "no" to stand up and be identified.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: Like that group of Tories there.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in respect of the business the House will be dealing with when we finish the urgent matter now before us relating to the railway dispute. I should think the Prime Minister would agree that the House is entitled to know what the business will be in order that we can plan our work in an orderly way and form some idea as to the government's program. I would, therefore, ask the Prime Minister in an earnest way to indicate to the House what the order of business will be following the completion of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House of Commons knows, there are many matters on the order paper now with which the House can deal, and we intend to—

An hon. Member: Which ones?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The usual arrogance.

Mr. Trudeau: Insolence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is another example of arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the opposition does not want to let me finish my statement. If they want to know what the legislation will be, I should think they would be inclined to listen to what I have to say.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated that there are a number of matters on the order paper. I should like to ask which matter on the order paper he intends to proceed with following completion of the present urgent matter now before the House. What matter on the order paper does he intend to proceed with, or is there some matter not on the order paper with which he intends to proceed? I think, with all respect, as Leader of the Opposition I am entitled to put this question and insist on an answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to repeat my answer, I was going to say there are many matters on the order paper now with which the House could deal, and there are other matters we want to give notice of later in the day in the usual manner under the rules, before five o'clock, which can be dealt with on Tuesday. The government House leader will be consulting with other House leaders to determine the order of procedure in which they would like to take these matters up, and the opposition will have ample time to prepare themselves for the debate next Tuesday if, indeed, as I hope, we will finish the legislation in respect of the railway conflict before the end of this day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF INCREASED PRICE OF WHEAT ON PRICE OF BREAD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further supplementary question in the hope that the government is not as confused as the Prime Minister seems to be about the order in which we will take up the business. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has now had a further opportunity to consider the question put to him yesterday by myself and the hon. member for York South about the price of wheat, and the effect this has on the price of bread. Can he now tell the House if and when the government proposes to take any action? While it is all right for him to ask me to be patient, the price of bread seems to be going up very rapidly. Could the Prime Minister give the people of Canada some assurance in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CONTROL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister informed the House—I am not sure I remember the words correctly because I have not looked them up in Hansard—that the government intended to give leadership on the issue of the cost of living. I can appreciate the Prime Minister not wanting to go into details today but may I ask him when this House may expect a statement from him or someone else on the government benches concerning the package of measures the government has in mind in this attempt to give leadership on this issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my previous answer there will be notice given on the order paper today of some matters with which we would intend to deal next week. When these matters are brought up in the House, the government will have occasion to state its position on the various aspects of the cost of living.

SUGGESTED SUBSIDY FOR FLUID MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister or to any other minister who may answer, any other of his cabinet colleagues. The Prime Minister no doubt has seen reports in the press today about an increase in the price of fluid milk consumed by children and adults. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether action is intended to subsidize fluid milk as industrial milk is now subsidized in order that the consumers may not face an increase in the price of milk.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as on the other matter previously mentioned the Leader of the New Democratic Party will have to wait until the government makes its announcement in that regard.

INQUIRY AS TO ADEQUACY OF STAFF

Mr. David Lewis (Yorth South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the vital, invigorating and dynamic Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Someone suggested I left out the adjective "sparkling". May I ask him whether he can inform the House what staff the Food Prices Review Board now has, and whether it has sufficient staff to do even the narrow work that is now entrusted to it, namely to carry out inquiries into food prices.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member, who is such a shrewd observer of Parliament, has observed certain vital attributes of my personality. I should like to inform the hon. member that according to the advice I have from the Food Prices Review Board work has been going on to assign to them the further investigative staff they require. I understand they are presently able to carry out their mandate.

SUGGESTED GRANTING OF POWER TO ROLL BACK PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is supplementary to the first question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation in the near future to give the Food Prices Review Board power to roll back increases in food prices, and if so when is it intended that that legislation will be introduced.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made an announcement in this regard in the early part of August and I would ask the hon. member to refer to it.

INCREASE IN BANK INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

As reported on page 6067 of Hansard yesterday, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in reply to the hon. member for Shefford, stated that there may be an opportunity next week to discuss the excessive increase in interest rates within the cost of living, so I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, as a result of the statement made by the Minister of Finance, the House will deal more specifically with the rise in interest rates and its consequences on the general cost of living in Canada.

EFFECT OF COST OF FEED GRAIN ON MILK PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture regarding the prices for milk and dairy products. Has he been informed by eastern farmers that because of the soaring cost of feed grain in many instances they can no longer feed the cattle, that production will go down and we can expect further increases in milk prices? What immediate action does he intend to take to relieve the eastern farmers in this grave situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member is aware that we raised the government subsidy for industrial milk in all of Canada by $1 a hundredweight on August 1. I understand that they are satisfied.

HERRING—INQUIRY AS TO ADHERENCE OF RUSSIANS TO ICNAF AGREEMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. Prior to closing down the herring fishery in Atlantic Canada, how many Russian ships presently catching herring in our coastal waters were examined below decks by Canadian officials in order to determine whether the Russians are adhering to the ICNAF agreement?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, all North Atlantic nations other than the U.S.S.R. now permit inspection below decks but, as the hon. member knows, the U.S.S.R. does not permit it, officially. We have, however, been following their vessels closely and our officers' estimate is to the effect that they have not yet taken their quota as we have done.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary question, then the hon. member for Malpeque, followed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, and then the hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Crouse: My supplementary question is a brief one. What process is used by Canadian officials, if we are not permitted to inspect Russian catches below decks, to determine whether they are adhering to their agreements?

Mr. Davis: Close observation of the vessels, the gear they use, and the extent of their catch as it comes on deck.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEWFOUNDLAND—SUGGEST CROWN CORPORATION TO OPERATE FERRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the government giving consideration to setting up a separate Crown corporation charged with the responsibility of operating the vital ferry transport links joining the provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland with the mainland or taking some other action so that when there is a work stoppage in the railway system anywhere this would interfere automatically with the operation of these vital links.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I know that up to now the railways were inclined to relate the activities of the ferries to the activities of the railways. It might be worthwhile to look into this problem to see if it will improve the situation to establish a separate Crown corporation.

GRAIN

PRICE OF FEED GRAIN IN EASTERN CANADA—PRICING POLICY OF WHEAT BOARD—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board whether, in view of the statement made by the provincial minister of agriculture in Manitoba on August 24 that No. 1 feed barley from western Canada was sold at $1 a bushel below the export price to feeders in eastern Canada, the minister can tell the House if this pricing policy by the Canadian Wheat Board is adhered to at the direction of the minister? Is it now government policy that western grain farmers should subsidize eastern feed lot operators?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it perfectly clear to hon. members, as I tried to do yesterday, that the existing pricing policy in the domestic market is completely in the hands of the Canadian Wheat Board and follows the practices in the past. The new policy for this year under which the Canadian Wheat Board will be asked to relate the prices to feeders in eastern Canada to prices at which farmers on the Prairies are willing to sell grain on an off-board basis will come into effect in the near future but it is not yet in effect.

Mr. Gleave: May I ask the minister when he will make a statement in the House telling us what the policy is, especially in view of the reports in the last day or two that the commodity markets, the futures markets, are no longer operating in Winnipeg with regard to the establishment of futures prices for western feed grains. When is he going to give this House an assurance that there is any kind of pricing policy that the farmer in western Canada can understand.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that the western farmer knows for certain is that off-board prices are much higher now than they have been before and various actions on the part of the government, including better information for the farmer, have made it clear that those prices should be higher. I think I may take an opportunity on some early occasion to elaborate further on the workings of the market at the present time in order to improve information available to farmers, and also on the changes which are being made in the near future.

FEED GRAIN—SUBSIDY ON FREIGHT RATES AND TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for grains.

Since the new feed grain policy announced by the government in early August has in no way brought about the reduction in the price of these grains in Eastern Canada, could the minister now tell us whether the government intends to grant subsidies to either carriers or producers in order that at last these prices might be reduced?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the policy announced on August 3 will begin to take its real effect with the introduction in the latter portion of September of the selling policy of the Wheat Board related to a more orderly off-board price. It therefore does not exist at the present time. Existing stocks of feed available in eastern Canada are those which have been accumulated on a price basis before August 3. It will be a little time, therefore, before the effect of the new policy is felt throughout the country.

NEED FOR REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising from the non-answer given yesterday by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with regard to NHA mortgage interest rates. Has the government any intention at this time to roll back mortgage interest rates or to revise its over-all monetary policy in order to restore acceptable mortgage interest rates in this country as one method to assist in checking galloping inflation.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, more money is going into mortgages through institutional sources such as banks, trust companies and life insurance companies than ever before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have said to the president of the Canadian Bankers Association that in view of the healthy state of bank profits I would not favour any further movement in mortgage interest rates. Indeed, although bank profits are primarily due to volume of business and to the expansion of the economy, and not due to the spread between the amount of money that they pay for deposits and the amount of money they charge for loans—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might allow the hon. member the opportunity to ask a supplementary, which would give him the occasion to complete his reply.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the minister's answer. Of course, the people are now shackled with high interest rates and their mortgage payments are higher than at any time in the history of the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask his supplementary.

Oral Questions

SUGGESTED CEILING ON INTEREST RATES—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister this: has he had any real, meaningful interviews with the governor of the Bank of Canada? If not, since the Bank of Canada can keep increasing its rate, would he now, on behalf of the government, assure us that it is going to legislate a ceiling on interest rates, to protect the consumers and people of this country.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. gentleman that I meet regularly and meaningfully with the governor of the Bank of Canada, and I say to him that we are looking into the general structure of interest rates in this country. On the short and medium term, they are 2 to 3 points lower than those in the United States, 5 points lower than those in Europe, and lower than in any other industrial country in the world.

Mr. Woolliams: I have one further supplementary. I did not know the minister was in a race with other nations to increase the rates. What is his ceiling, one hundred per cent?

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE OF DURUM WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Could the minister inform the House whether, in lieu of the going international price for Durum, the Wheat Board is considering an increase in the initial price of Durum?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Not at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

FEED GRAIN PRICING POLICY—SUGGESTED NEED FOR REVISION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board on the subject of feed grains. The minister's statement was made on August 1 this year and since then the world price for wheat on off-shore commodity markets has escalated. I believe it was selling on Chicago futures yesterday at $5.30 to $5.70 a bushel. Is the minister reconsidering that policy so that he can bring some help to domestic producers and thus avoid headlines like those which appeared in a Vancouver newspaper yesterday announcing an increase in the price of eggs by 17 cents per dozen because of the cost of feed grains in the west as well as in the east?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it may seem a little easy for the member from a non-farming area to point the finger—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Hees: Have you ever been in the Annapolis Valley? Get around the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —to point the finger at the returns being received by grain farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order please? Perhaps we might allow the minister to reply to the question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think the reference the hon. member has made may be to a particular grain price situation arising from the strike which we hope will soon be over with quick action on the part of this House of Commons. Grain prices have, of course, been rising in recent months and the price of animal products has been rising also in relation to grain prices. In my view anyone who knows anything about farming areas knows this is a long overdue increase in returns to farmers who, for far too long in this country, have been lagging behind every other group.

Mr. Nowlan: I must say, being a gentleman from—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —a farming area, that part of the riding I represent is King county, and it is the King county for agriculture in Atlantic Canada. We on this side of the House have suggested that the Minister of Justice should be relieved of the onerous task of being responsible for the Wheat Board because he does not know anything about it. He stayed too long in the classroom teaching law, and does not know where the farming areas are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not recognize any question in what the hon. members said. I point out to hon. members that we are running out of time and I see a number of members waiting for an opportunity to ask questions. I suggest to hon. members that we should try to limit the length of the questions and the number of supplementaries as well as the length of replies given. The hon. member is recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I was just sort of setting the right premise after the example of tunnel vision given by the Minister of Justice. My question, Mr. Speaker, was on the basic policy announced by the minister on August 1 when I think the price of wheat was $2.02 per bushel. Since that time it has escalated two or three times, so that yesterday or the day before it was $5.30 or $5.70 per bushel. Surely, that type of change in world commodity markets—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: —necessitates a review of the price of feed grains in Canada.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to me suffering from a great deal of confusion about which policy had anything to do with anything else. A decision was taken in July which allowed the producer of wheat to obtain for his wheat the value which was indicated for it by world prices so that he would be on the same basis as the producers of other products. That was the decision in July. Since that time, the price of wheat in the world has gone up $2 per bushel and the grain farmer will be receiving the full benefit of that increase. At the same time, there was a feed grains policy statement in August—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the minister. I appreciate he is trying to give a reply to the question asked by the hon. member but we are running short of time. I suggested to members that the questions should be short and the replies should be brief also. Perhaps we might attempt at this time to obtain a supplementary. I believe the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has a supplementary.

VALUE OF LIFT PROGRAM IN VIEW OF SUPPLY SITUATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a further question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the situation in Canada and the rest of the world in terms of grain supply generally, I wonder if the minister could refresh our memories and advise whether he still insists that Operation Lift was a good idea. Could he explain to us why—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question in those terms requires a general statement which should not be made at this time. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

THE CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REDUCTION IN POWER TO CONTROL IMPORTATION OF GRAIN—CONSULTATION WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Has the minister made any decision to reduce the power of the Canadian Wheat Board to control the importation of grains and turn that over to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the act to control imports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that decision was part of the August 3 announcement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): A supplementary. Has the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa West would bear with me for a moment. There is a supplementary after which he will be recognized.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Has the minister had any consultation with farm organizations about the serious decline that he is proposing in the power of the Wheat Board?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should make clear to hon. members that the change in the location of the power over export and import does not indicate any general intention to change the manner of full control by the Canadian Wheat Board of all exports, and the general rule that when Canadian supplies are available grains will not be allowed into this country from outside. It simply locates the difficult decision of certain special cases in a place which makes that decision for other products. On the question of consultation, there is of course full consultation with farmers and farm organizations on all these questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

REQUEST FOR DISMISSAL OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the palpable incompetence of the chairman of the so-called Food Prices Review Board, and in view of her gratuitously affronting advice to the people of Canada to eat cake if they cannot get bread, will the minister dismiss this woman immediately?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the test of the lady's competence is whether she allowed the hon. member to attend a meeting of the board. I do not think he should take out his pique about this through his question in this House but the answer is no.

Mr. Reilly: A question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, it is the privilege, not the privilege the right, of every member of this House to be informed about matters as important as this and if this minister believes that the Chairman was right in refusing not only me but members of the press, access to her meetings then that minister does not have the vaguest understanding of the democratic process.

An hon. Member: We allow you in here.

Mr. Bell: She insulted the minister but he did not know it.

FISHERIES

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE BE GIVEN TERMS OF REFERENCE TO CONDUCT INQUIRY INTO OPERATION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of the Environment relates to the fact that in the last sitting of this parliament the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry unanimously passed a recommendation that an inquiry be conducted into the operations of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. In view of the fact that the government of Canada has now asked other participating governments to share in the payment of the loss incurred by that corporation, would the minister at this sitting of the House bring forward a reference to the committee so that the investigation referred to can be conducted, thus assisting the provinces in making a decision with respect to requests for money?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I might comment that it would be helpful if the province of Manitoba would make its contribution so that we do not have to cut the price of fish to fishermen.

FINANCE

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—POLICY OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Since the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has suggested that borrowers find other sources of financing for the purchase or construction of houses, is the hon. minister aware that the corporation asks 9½ per cent interest rates while chartered banks such as the Provincial Bank of Canada now ask 11½ per cent interest rates? Does the minister believe that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be more lenient in approving housing loans?

Hon. John Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that this question should perhaps be put to my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

In any case, I believe that the number of new houses in Canada is increasing since the present annual rate is close to 300,000 despite the fact that the cost for borrowers keeps rising.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I am not asking the hon. minister how many houses are being built nor how many will be built. I only ask if the department has any control on the 11½ per cent interest rate charged by chartered banks, while the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation asks 9¼ or 9½ per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is a Crown corporation whereas chartered banks are regulated by the Bank Act. It is impossible, under the present act, to limit that rate of interest.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I would like to put a last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell us why CMHC asks borrowers to seek out other sources of funds, sources which are considerably more costly that those of the corporation itself?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not directly responsible for the corporation; my colleague might perhaps be willing to give the hon. member that information.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE—REQUEST THAT INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSION BE ADDITIONAL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the recent announcement of contemplated increases in October for those receiving old age security, is it the intention of the minister, and will he take the necessary action, to ensure that the increased amount is exempt for those veterans receiving War Veterans Allowance who are also qualified for OAS/GIS?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that veterans have not been forgotten. We are preparing legislation for those receiving OAS/GIS, as well as other items that came to my attention previously.

REQUEST THAT INCREASE IN DISABILITY PENSION BE ADDITIONAL TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question. The minister is becoming very qualified in being evasive. In view of the fact increases were announced for those receiving disability pensions and those receiving partial disability pensions, will the minister consider giving these people the advantage of an increase in disability pensions so they will not lose the benefits, however derived?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the present situation is that disability pensions have to be assessed as income. Some people receiving War Veterans Allowance do receive disability pensions. If the disability pension is high enough, they do not qualify for War Veterans Allowance.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

NEED FOR NEW FISCAL POLICIES TO AID SLOW GROWTH AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is supplementary to those asked earlier by the hon. member for Calgary North. In view of the fact that present restrictive fiscal policies on run-away inflation are exacerbating the difficulties of slow growth regions in this country and defeating the aims and objectives of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, will the Prime Minister be announcing new initiatives, and I underline the word "new", to correct this situation? Perhaps even an equal pay for equal work policy for employees under Treasury Board jurisdiction would help.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid there is no announcement to be made on that today.

GRAIN

SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN ATLANTIC AREA—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF GRAIN IN POSITION FOR EXPORT

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the wheat board. Inasmuch as the farmers in the Atlantic area are paying approximately $10,000 per day for unusual transportation costs to get grain in the Atlantic area where it is needed, and since that supply of grain is estimated to be available only until the end of next week if the transportation system of Canada is not in operation by that time, will the minister consider releasing grain presently allocated for export to farmers in the Atlantic area and any other area where it may be required?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question is not only hypothetical, but includes events which I hope will not come to pass. I would inform the hon. member that the Canadian Wheat Board has already adopted the practice of making grain available to people in the domestic area who need it, even though that grain was intended for an international buyer who is standing by waiting for it. They have already been following that practice, although the price has been higher than that which the domestic user would ordinarily pay for his grain.

Mr. McCain: Did the minister say yes or no? I would like him to say yes.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I said the wheat board has already been doing what the hon. member has asked us to instruct them to do.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO ALLIANCE FOR LIFE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that abortions have tripled in Canada in the past two years and are now 10 per cent of live births, why does the government refuse to provide financial assistance to Alliance for Life, which is a national, non-denominational, pro-life movement working to provide positive alternatives to the abortion problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of that question this morning from the hon. member and I will consider his representations, but I think that I can immediately answer by saying that it is not the policy of the government to subsidize either organizations advocating abortion or those against it.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Roche: In his reply, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that the government would not subsidize movements for pro-life. Why do they persist in that policy when they have subsidized movements for abortion through LIP grants? I have received positive proof of this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is an argument in support of his question.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION OF DOCUMENTS PRESENTED IN COURT CASE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Will the minister undertake to examine documents presented in a recent court case by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and also examine the evidence given before a parliamentary committee in order to determine whether the Cape Breton Development Corporation is in contempt of parliament or in contempt of court?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO RAILWAY EMPLOYEES LAID OFF AS RESULT OF STRIKE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In view of the fact that certain railway employees who have been laid off by the rail companies because of the strike, but who are not participating in the strike, are being denied unemployment insurance benefits because of information which has been given Unemployment Insurance offices by the railway companies, will the minister investigate this situation and make sure that this practice is discontinued?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are examining all categories of employees who are affected to differentiate between those directly involved in the labour dispute and those who are not. Instructions will be issued shortly to clarify this matter.

Mr. Rodriguez: Will the minister inform the House whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission is planning to make a blanket decision concerning all railway employees not involved in the strike based on the word of the companies?

Mr. Andras: No, Mr. Speaker. There will be a much more thorough investigation of the situation than that suggestion implies.

INCOME TAX

REGULATIONS COVERING MANUFACTURERS AND PROCESSORS—REQUEST FOR TABLING AND PRINTING IN "HANSARD"

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister advise whether his department has completed drafting the regulations for the income tax reductions for those engaged in manufacturing and processing, as passed by parliament earlier this session? Have the regulations been published? If so, will the minister have a copy tabled in this House and printed as an appendix to Hansard so that it will have the widest possible distribution?

● (1150)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the order in council imposing these regulations has been passed. It was published yesterday or the day before, and each member should have a copy. In any event, if the House were so disposed I would have no objection to following the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

An hon. Member: It will appear in the Gazette.

CANADIAN CONSUMER COUNCIL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON NEW APPOINTMENTS TO COUNCIL AND POLICY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the hon. gentleman explain why no appointment of an executive director to the Canadian Consumer Council has been made and when such an appointment will be announced?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I expect to be presenting recommendations to my colleagues shortly concerning new appointments to the Council.

Mr. Speaker: I hope that between now and the end of the question period we can limit supplementaries, because we are running short of time.

Mr. Lawrence: One supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will an announcement or policy statement be made on Tuesday, or whenever the economic anti-inflationary package of the government is to be announced, and will a statement respecting the Consumer Council and the work it was doing be included in that package?

Mr. Gray: I cannot give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

ALLEGED INABILITY TO MEET EXPORT DEMAND—SUGGESTED REPORT FROM WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Gordon L. Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of reports that export possibilities for Canadian grain far exceed our ability to fulfil them, has the minister requested any assessment of the situation from the Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I discuss the grain situation with the Wheat Board from time to time. Certainly the world demand for grain, particularly for certain types of grain such as Durum is presently very strong indeed. The two limitations which constantly arise are the availability of particular supplies and the availability of transportation and handling facilities in a particular period.

FINANCE

SUGGESTION MINISTER ASK BANKS TO INCREASE EMPLOYEES PENSIONS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's acknowledgement of the healthy state of bank profits, will he urge the Canadian Bankers' Association to deal more fairly with former bank employees and substantially raise pension rates which are now quite inadequate having regard to the cost of living?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I would be glad to transmit that representation both on the hon. member's initiative and on my own.

PICKERING—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT NAMING BOARD OF INQUIRY

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On July 27, the day the House adjourned for the summer recess, the Acting Prime Minister indicated the government would take advantage of the recess to appoint the three-man inquiry board into the Pickering airport question. Is the minister now in a position to make an announcement and tell us the names of those who are to be appointed to the board?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I hope that today or tomorrow or at the latest on Monday I shall be in a position to announce the three names. I am just waiting for written acceptance of the mandate we want to give.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF A BUDGET

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question goes back to the questions posed originally by the Leader of the Opposition and the answer given by the Prime Minister yesterday with respect to the hardship caused by inflation and the programs to be introduced by the government next week. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether these programs will deal in a comprehensive way with economic policy and whether the government has sought new economic advice having regard to the disastrous nature of the advice it has been receiving in past years, and, in particular, whether the government is giving serious consideration to introducing a budget shortly in the hope of establishing a more effective economic policy than the one presently being followed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I understand the hon. member to have made a series of representations. I will consider them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION FRANCE BE ASKED NOT TO SEND REPRESENTATIVES TO MEETING IN CANADA IN VIEW OF MISTREATMENT OF CREW OF "GREENPEACE III"

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that we expect four members of the French Assembly to visit this House next week, and in view of the fact that pictures show that the French government lied to Canada about the boarding of the Greenpeace III, has the minister asked the French government not to send representatives to this meeting until it owns up to the fact that its men illegally boarded one of our ships and beat up our sailors?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On the contrary, I would think that this afforded an excellent opportunity for all members of parliament to impress on members of the French Assembly the justice of our case.

An hon. Member: Why don't you do your job?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will recognize that there have been no supplementaries to the last three or four questions because we have reached the end of the question period. I was anxious to give the hon. members for Egmont, Ontario, Fundy-Royal and Northumberland-Durham a chance to ask questions. Perhaps there will be an opportunity for hon. members to ask remaining questions and supplementaries another day.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Both yesterday and today we have attempted to determine from the government whether it intends to introduce a package of economic proposals, but so far the Prime Minister has refused to tell us whether or not this will be the course to be pursued. If parliament is to deal effectively with measures to be introduced next week, the Prime Minister has a responsibility to give us some indication of the policy to be pursued by the government.

[Later:]

Mr. Reynolds: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I know we would all like to get on with the business of the day, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs has told us there would be an opportunity to make our views known. Would he agree to set up a meeting so that the members from British Columbia could be sure of getting an opportunity to express their views?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the House wishes the minister to respond to the question I would have no objection, but that is not a question of privilege or a point of order. Members will recognize that there is a responsibility resting on the Chair to call orders of the day when we reach the end of the question period. When I allow additional questions beyond the time allocated by the rules I always hope there will be no supplementaries. The hon. member rose on an alleged point of order to ask what is really a supplementary question. However, as I say, if the House so wishes the Secretary of State for External Affairs may reply.

Mr. Sharp: I wish the hon. gentleman had been more consistent, but I am glad he has come around to my point of view that it is worthwhile maintaining these contacts. I will see what can be done to facilitate a meeting.

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would it be possible for the government House leader or for the Prime Minister to tell us why it would not be possible to give first reading today to the government bills dealing with inflation and the economy in order that members of the House might have an opportunity to study these matters over the weekend and perhaps facilitate the passage of the legislation next week?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS AND SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

The House in committee on Bill C-217, to provide for the resumption and continuance of operations of railways and for the settlement of the disputes with respect to terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees—Mr. Munro (Hamilton East)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to rise on a point of order. Yesterday it was indicated by spokesmen for the various parties that there might be amendments forthcoming to clauses of the bill. It would be helpful if those amendments could be laid on the table as early as possible in order that members might have an opportunity to study them.

● (1200)

Hon. members will recall that it was necessary to suspend the sitting of the House for two hours in order to study the contents of the bill. It may be that some of the amendments will have as broad implications as the bill itself, so if it were possible to have the proposed amendments laid on the table as early as possible that might remove the necessity later in the day of asking for a suspension of the sitting in order to consider them. I make that suggestion at this point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, we would be glad to facilitate that suggestion and do what we can to advance the progress of this bill and other proposals that may be made regarding times of sitting. If we can obtain royal assent today, I feel very strongly that in view of the unfortunate confusion of the Prime Minister and the government as to what we will be considering next week, we should get something done this week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect to the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council, Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure of the answer just given by my friend, the hon. member for Peace River.

An hon. Member: That is normal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might say that we have amendments to a number of clauses, and we are prepared not only to lay them on the table but to read them out at this point so that members of the committee will know what we propose as the various clauses are considered. If that is the wish of the committee, I can read them now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is it agreed that the Chair receive the proposed amendments and read them to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I assume that this would not exclude the possibility of further amendments. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is so proud of his amendments that he wants to table them, that is fine. We have undertaken that we will disclose our amendments in ample time to facilitate the discussion this bill requires, but we are not going to be forced into precipitate action.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, in view of the request of the President of the Privy Council, and in view of the discussion raised with respect to this matter, I would ask for the privilege of reading the amendments we intend to propose now, or of submitting them to the Chair on the understanding that the Chair will read them, putting them on Hansard, in order that members will know what we propose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order in relation to this matter. When the first speaker for the NDP makes his speech, he will be entitled to put on the record such amendments as the rules of this House allow or in respect of which this committee gives its consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I feel this is totally irregular. We will have an opportunity to speak about this general matter when it comes before the House this afternoon. The request which would enable the government to ascertain in advance what the amendments will be indicates that the President of the Privy Council is more concerned with finding out what the amendments will be than he is with following the ordinary procedures of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: As for myself, I was here last evening; I did not know a vote was going to be called and I left at 9.30, having been here all day.

An hon. Member: Some contribution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, would this gaggle of geese be quiet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If not, would they identify themselves?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of dealing in general with a matter that concluded altogether faster than it should have last evening. I am not criticizing in any way the fact that a vote took place on this matter, but this is a matter which deserves to be considered fully by this House and not rushed through. I intend to have my say in connection with this bill which represents the stand of the government after weeks of indecision, finally having been pushed into action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that has been raised, I merely wish to inform Your Honour and members of the committee that I have sent to the Minister of Labour a set of the amendments we propose to move, in order that he and the officials may study them. I think it would be worth while to have them read to the committee, but I do not think we ought to continue to take up time on this procedural point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What wonderful co-operation between the government and the NDP!

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order, I endorse entirely what the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has just said.

It is evident there was some collusion between the New Democratic Party and the government to present immediately at this stage of the debate amendments recommended by the NDP.

Mr. Chairman, one can fool everybody for a certain time but one cannot fool everybody all the time. And it is exactly what the New Democratic Party is doing now with the Liberal government.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I do not want to limit the remarks of the hon. member on the point of order but I think it is a matter the committee must settle as soon as possible and as there is no agreement, the Chair will be forced to invite hon. members to debate clause 2 without delay.

[English]

Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I rise on a very important question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I realize, Mr. Chairman, that every court has its jester and every parliament has its clown.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lewis: I want to inform the leader of the Social Credit party that what he has just said is a total falsehood—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —as are most of his remarks in respect of the NDP here or elsewhere in this country. I said, if I may complete my question of privilege, I had sent a copy of the amendments to the Minister of Labour, as I believe it is appropriate to know what is before this committee and so he can decide whether any of them are acceptable, as all of them may be.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on the same question of privilege.

The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) has just stated that the amendments are already on the minister's desk. I agree, but his party did so at the request of the government; this is the way it goes.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There does not seem to be unanimous consent in respect of distribution. Whatever is done outside this House or the committee does not concern the Chair. I shall call clause 2 immediately, and invite hon. members to make their speeches and discuss whatever points they wish, as the clause is broad enough to cover many items.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Under our rules, the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) proposed an unusual way in respect of amendments; the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was right in rising against it as did the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and as we did, because it is not the usual procedure. In view of what has been said, Mr. Chairman, I feel that we contravened the Standing Orders because we supposed that the amendements have been tabled in order to improve the situation and expedite the business of the House. I would like the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) to tell us, if he is honest, why we did not receive a copy of those amendments if he wished to accelerate the business and obtain our co-operation.

[English]

On clause 2—Words and expressions.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No; I am rising to speak on clause 2 of the bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Minister of Transport.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think the last few minutes of the time of this committee were lost, because you can be sure some of the amendments which I have read will never be supported by this government. So if there was collusion, it was not between the NDP and the Liberal government. Mr. Chairman, I have a very simple philosophy which I think is the truth. The NDP, until it is not in its political interest, will support the government: until then it will not overthrow the government, so let us stop this talk.

We do not have to be grateful to the NDP, and they do not have to be humiliated. I think it is a normal political game. Everyone knows about it. If we did not have such an urgent problem facing us, I might take more time on this subject; but now I wish to speak about the problem before this House, which is a very important problem for the workers, for the public, for the government and for this House. I think we are setting a precedent here. It would be interesting for all parties to know exactly what we are doing and what will be the consequences of what we propose. Therefore, I shall not necessarily discuss all the objections I have heard and other matters which are not related to the problem before this House, such as inflation, interest rates, unemployment and the people who are caught in Sydney and Port aux Basques.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those things do not matter to the government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, they do matter; but they are not problems that we will solve with this bill. I should like to talk about this bill, why we are taking this position and why I believe it is not wise to adopt any other procedure without taking into account at this stage which positions of the parties are just and which are not, because I do not think this body has been or is constituted in order to solve this type of problem. This does not mean that the unions are wrong. It does not mean that the railways are abusing the employees. It just means we are not in a position to pass judgment on the merits of the question. We have not been set up for that.

Just to give a short history, Mr. Chairman, we might consider how wages, outside of interventions of government in respect of minimum wages and regulations, are set in Canada. The general rule is through free collective bargaining in which the employers try to get together with the unions. If they do not get together, of course, there is a strike or a walkout. This is the general rule.

How is the level of wages established? Is it according to a certain rule of justice, as I heard yesterday? No. It is according to the strength of each party. I have been in that trade all my life. I was involved in certain strikes where the justice of the cause was very clear, and we lost. I was involved in others where it was less evident, and we won. Why? Because we were weak in the first case and strong in the second. This is the way disputes are settled. They are not settled according to certain criteria or principles known or accepted by everybody. It is free bargaining. In certain cases and in certain provinces there is what is called compulsory arbitration. What we call the right to strike has been removed, or is never given. Elsewhere we have what is called binding arbitration. This is where a judge says this is or is not the truth, and the problem is solved in that way.

Many strikes in this country have gone on for months and months. I think some have lasted as long as seven or eight months. Parliament has never been convened nor have any provincial assemblies been convened in these cases. The fight has been carried on in the streets in an effort to reach an agreement. Why are we here dealing with this problem? We are here because of the very nature of the activities of the railways. When there is a strike, it is not only the employers and the employees who are fighting one against the other; the public is involved. Here, as a government, we must try to find a procedure whereby the public does not suffer. This is the only reason. The right to strike is not at stake at the moment. We may discuss it at another time.

I notice that all parties, including the NDP, agree we should do something to compel the men to go back to work. Everybody recognizes it is the duty of parliament to send the men back to work. Even in the proposals of the NDP which I have seen, this is included. Of course, the conditions may differ. This is what we should discuss. If the NDP had really adopted a socialistic attitude, they would have been opposed to any kind of settlement legislated by this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is agreement because they are in politics. I recognize that. I know the general public of Canada says, "Well, this is enough", so we have asked parliament to reconvene to try to find a solution. Of course this is not a normal procedure; it is not normal bargaining between the parties. The parties have been negotiating together for months, the railways and the unions, and they know something about the problem. They were not successful. A conciliator was called in. He was not successful. There was a board of conciliation of three men, one representing the employees, another representing the employers, and a chairman who according to the law is supposed to be a neutral party. They could not get together.

Then a special conciliator, Mr. Justice Gold, was appointed. He could not get the parties together. So we come to this House and say, "We have the answer. We can solve, not the procedure but the problem itself". I heard a figure of 10 per cent mentioned, and other figures, but I really do not know what the figure should be. Who in the world knows exactly where the truth is on this question?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Where are the witnesses we have called, in order to know whether the position of the railways is right or wrong? I do not intend to say they make a profit or do not make a profit. That is not my business. I do not intend to say that the workers are wrong. I cannot say it because I have not been at the negotiations. I was not there when the evidence was produced, and I was not there when the witnesses were heard. How can we, as members of the House, say that this is what the settlement should be? We cannot say that, Mr. Chairman.

• (1220)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only reason we are here is that this is a national emergency, and the only thing we can deal with is this emergency, not the disputes between the parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We know that these men have been waiting for months and months. Usually in the past the House has accepted as a base either the majority report or the report of the judge. This has not been accepted as a solution but, rather, as a basis. I do not know personally whether Mr. Justice Munroe was right. Perhaps if I had been there, my judgment would have been different. I am told that another judge made a different decision with regard to shopcraft employees. Nobody knows the eternal truth in this matter. There are conflicts of interest here, and we have to base ourselves on something. So the judge's report appears, according to our laws and according to the philosophy recognized by all governments, as the safest basis from which to start, and on this basis we should try to reach a final settlement.

We say that Mr. Justice Munroe is supposed to be impartial according to our law. Maybe his report is not satisfactory. Since he brought down his judgment, very important events have taken place in Canada in reference to the cost of living, and productivity may have changed. So instead of saying that we will legislate Mr. Justice Munroe's judgment, we say that his report will be our basis for a return to work. Now we will nominate an arbitrator who will look after those points which have not been considered. We, as members of the House of Commons, cannot do what the NDP is proposing and say we will just take as a basis one of the minority reports which represents the interests of the employees. Perhaps Professor Weldon is right. Perhaps, if I had studied the case, I would have agreed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why don't you read it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Don't be childish. You can please a small group on this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will go further and say that perhaps the employers' report is the one to consider. I do not know. We are not here for that. Who knows this, honestly, in the House? Perhaps some hon. members such as the hon. member for York South do know, because he has been involved with these problems for a long time and he has his own opinion on the merits of the matter. I would have liked to represent this group, but I did not so I do not have an opinion and I cannot, as a legislator, say that this is what the truth is in this case.

I think the only thing we can say is, let us try to legislate on the basis of the report of the chairman. I do not know if my memory serves me well, but I think it was in 1966 that the hon. member for York South presented an amendment, in the same circumstances, introducing Mr. Justice Munroe's proposal as a settlement of the railway strike. I will check that and see whether it is so. Anyhow, it does not matter.

Mr. Lewis: The amendment was accepted.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If the judge was right at that time, why do you think he is wrong today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): These are very special cases. Perhaps we should work to find better formulas. A few years ago we had the Woods report. I am not ready to accept it, and I am sure my friends in the NDP do not accept what has been recommended in it. Nor does the labour movement. So we have not found a formula.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is not an ordinary dispute, and the reason for the intervention is economic and social, not to settle the dispute between the parties. This strike is having an impact on the whole of society. We regret that there are so many people caught in between, that the cattle are not fed, and all the other consequences of this work stoppage. We say: Please, will you go back to work and let us try to find a solution which will be acceptable to you? This is all that we do, and it is the safest thing because from the moment we start to bargain one party will propose 10 per cent in the first year and another will say that 13 per cent is much better. How can you vote against a 13 per cent increase? Another party will propose 15 per cent and will say, "We will give it in the second year" or "We will give you 20 per cent in the second year." Who can vote on that? This is nonsense. We are not organized for that. I know it is painful for the workers and I have much sympathy for them because I have been in these circumstances many times.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Judge yourselves, and let me judge myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): So far as the pension plan is concerned, I have probably done much more than the NDP has in all its life. Anyhow, I am not here for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have heard all kinds of arguments used, but I will take only two used by the leader of the NDP, arguments which I do not accept. He made reference to a meeting of the union leaders at which they said they will not recommend a return to work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think he should not have repeated that here in the House, not because he would not support it but because it was wrong to have mentioned it. Why did he mention it? To impress us? Do you think I will be blackmailed by that, or the official opposition will be blackmailed? It is not possible. I can understand the unions mentioning it, but I do not understand a political leader who might at some time be responsible for governing this country saying such a thing in the House.

The hon. member for York South used a second argument which I find unacceptable. He said he had heard that the railways were ready to accept Mr. Justice Munroe's proposal, so what we are legislating upon is the employers' position. This is all wrong. I will try to be a little more ethical—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —than some others in the House. Personally, some things I will never repeat here because I know that in this kind of bargaining that goes on, sometimes one party will say that if the other party will accept so and so, perhpas they will accept something else. This is the way bargaining is done. To say that at one moment one of the parties said—

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think that the minister, in his eloquence—

An hon. Member: Struck home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —did not bother to check what I said. I did not say anything about what anyone said in the negotiations. I said that two or three days ago the railways had announced publicly their acceptance of the Munroe report.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Even if this is true, you can have the reverse situation at one moment but I do not think it would change the position of the House. When there are three reports, one must try to bring the parties together on the recommendation of the third party, and if the third party accepts it one would find that it was in his interest to say yes. Maybe they agreed because they knew the other party was refusing. This I do not know, but I do not want to discuss it and I do not think we know all we need know in order to judge the merits of the case.

I was accused by my friend, the hon. member for St. John's East, of being responsible for the strike because of the announcement regarding a freeze on freight rates a few months ago. Of course, immediately before that he had said we had not done anything to counter inflation. Nevertheless, because he had said that, that is, with regard to imposing a freeze as a move against inflation, we had become responsible for the strike. As his leader has proposed to freeze all rates, all prices in Canada in the same situation, therefore, he would have been responsible for all strikes in Canada. However, that was the hon. member's position.

I do not know of all the amendments that are to be proposed in this House, and I am not going to say blindly that anything that should be proposed should be discarded. I am not that kind of fanatic. If there are amendments the value and consequences of which we can see immediately, they might be acceptable in the interests of the country. Nevertheless, I say that from the moment this House starts negotiating it would be the worst employers in Canada. I believe that.

I know, and I am speaking in my capacity as Minister of Transport, that those men who have been in real trouble and who have been fighting for what they thought was justice still have their problems. For example, there are men who have been laid off because of the stoppage of work resulting from the rail strike. I think the companies should take care of those men and give them the same protection as the others enjoy, because they were the victims of this whole business. I hope the companies are going to do that. As far as job security is concerned, I think we are going to give these men all guarantees possible, but we will not guarantee that there will be exactly the same number of workers forever employed by the railways of Canada.

An hon. Member: Who asked for that?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): All right. I think the men should have some kind of security. I hope that in this way we can give it to them, and I hope I am doing my utmost to bring that about.

[Mr. Lewis.]

What I want to convey to this committee, Mr. Chairman, is that it is very easy for those outside of this conflict to cry out. I know that many people in Canada are in a bad situation and have bad working conditions. The unions are fighting to improve those conditions, and I am going to support them. However, when we talk as an institution, what can we do in this dispute? What is the best procedure so that we do not become involved in a lot of problems which we are not competent to tackle and which may lead to worse problems?

As far as the workers are concerned, they have my support and I hope they understand that. Of course, the NDP have always believed that only they deserve the support of the workers. That view is too bad, because it is not right. I say that this is an institutional problem, first. We know the circumstances surrounding the problems which have faced the workers for a few months, and that is why we say that an arbitrator is going to take care of them and, hopefully, solve them.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I feel it will be easier in French—I even noticed several statements which are not connected with the issue of railway employees. At the moment, the danger is that some people try to mingle the railway employees' issue and many other problems that the House will discuss, but the case of railway employees cannot be mixed up with other real problems. That is why we want the House to deal with that issue; we must solve that problem and attempt to find an acceptable solution.

As to the possibility . . .

[English]

May I say in English that I do not think the workers are going to refuse to go back to work. I am sure they will go back to work. If they are not going back to work, of course this parliament will have to see if there is a government in this country. We will have to decide that, because this is a very serious matter. I understand that many militants will be reluctant to return to work. I know that when we fight a cause like this we are so deeply involved that we cannot change our minds overnight. This I understand. I understand the reticence of those people. I hope they will understand that what we are trying to do is in the best interests of the country and in their own best interests.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, may I first, without any condescension, compliment the Minister of Transport for his eloquence in a language that is not his first language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He speaks almost as well in English as I speak in French!

This parliament, as it resumes sitting, has three clear responsibilities before it. It must, of course, deal with the government's legislation that is now before us. Parliament must deal in as fair and humane a manner as possible with this matter and, within the constraints of that consideration, we must deal with this matter expeditiously. And, because this is part of a larger piece, when this first priority is met, parliament must demand that the government immediately bring forward other urgent and necessary measures to afford some relief to those Canadians who are already in desperate circumstances as a result of the government's miserable and ineffective approach to the rising cost of living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As a third responsibility, we must demand from the government a comprehensive program that will deal effectively with the cost of living and restore some stability and order to the economic life of this country. I emphasize these matters at this time because they are all part of a piece. These three responsibilities must be met by this parliament. They must be met quickly. If this government thinks that parliament will settle for anything less, or that Canadians will accept anything less, the government is in for a shock as well as a shaking.

Surely we did not come here to order others back to work and then go back on holiday ourselves. We are not here just to deal with this emergency situation, although that is our first priority. Surely, Sir, it would be an act of brazen callousness for this government to run away from its responsibilities, and it would be a faint-hearted parliament—indeed, a chicken parliament—that would let the government get away with it if that is what the government tried to do. We are here to get the trains moving again, but we are not here just to get the trains moving again—we are here to try to get the country moving again in the right direction.

I realize that having parliament in session at the end of August instead of on October 15 will create some discomfort and in some quarters some danger and difficulty. There is the discomfort of the government being confronted by parliament as further reports are forthcoming from Statistics Canada on the cost of living or on unemployment conditions in the country. There is the discomfort, if not the inconvenience, of the government being obliged to produce legislation, announce its plans and reveal its intentions to parliament. That is very, very much a part of the emergency that we are discussing here today. Presenting such a program may be a difficult thing to do, especially when there is no legislation and no plan. But the presence of parliament can serve as the conscience of the government and perhaps even as an inspiration to the government.

We are here to face our responsibilities in the public interest. I have outlined three of them. Of course, I believe—and I know that more and more Canadians are subscribing to the belief—that parliament has another responsibility as well, a responsibility to deny continued confidence to a government that sits on its hands, very content with itself, while the most serious bout of inflation psychology in recent memory takes hold and wreacks its terrible consequences. My party will accept that responsibility too, and there will come a time shortly for a test of confidence. The government cannot put that off too long. In the meantime, we will deal with our responsibilities in priority as we see them.

Our first responsibility and the first priority of this House, the legislation dealing with the railway dispute, is a matter that summons feelings of disappointment and regret, I know, for all members of the House. An intervention of this kind is an occasion that must have a deeply sobering effect on anybody who values our system and our institutions, as I am sure the Minister of Transport does. We are faced with this responsibility because, as the minister recognizes, the broader public interest demands our action to meet a national emergency.

Members of my party have agreed to support such action, but we will not support what we feel is insupportable in regard to the interests of simple justice to the workers who will be affected by the actions we take. Neither do I intend to imply support on a carte-blanche basis for any omissions in this legislation which, if corrected, we feel would contribute to reaching as fair a judgment as we can make.

I want to assure you, Sir, and all members of this House that my party will accept and support the will of parliament on the final form of the legislation as it is adopted, and we will expect and insist that the railways and the workers do likewise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to turn now to the general field of labour relations in essential industries and services, as I did in this House a year ago almost to the day. At that time parliament had been recalled to deal with a dock strike. It was another occasion of regret, as this one is today, when members said then, as we say now, that we have to find a better way. The Canadian public surely despairs that parliament has not yet found a way to bring an end to recurrent assaults on the broad public interest. Patience with our failure to do this is virtually exhausted among the public. There is no excuse for this inaction and there can be no allowance for further stalling on the part of parliament. It has been demonstrated once again, at great cost and great suffering, that the strike as a weapon and the lockout as a weapon are unacceptable in this kind of situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: They are weapons that in certain circumstances of public interest are not available, and therefore must be abandoned and replaced by something better.

There are those—and the number always swells when an emergency such as the present one is upon us—who strongly urge a return to simple compulsory arbitration. I view this with reluctance. A move to such automatic over-all compulsion could raise as many new problems as the old ones it would solve, and it could have a very damaging effect on the attitude of both management and labour.

I want to see us avoid a move to automatic, across the board compulsory arbitration in this kind of situation if at all possible. But let there be no delusions about one thing: we must act quickly, because continuing emergencies such as the one we are faced with now will certainly generate a public outcry for total compulsory arbitration for settling disputes in the public service. Let us not kid ourselves about that. In the immediate aftermath of settling this strike in parliament we may well have our last opportunity to institute other alternatives for settling disputes in essential industries and services.

In the course of the present non-ops dispute one new technique, the technique of selective strike action, was attempted. As a variation of the rotating strike approach applied to the national railway system it was indeed something new to be tried on the side of labour. In the absence of any other mechanisms or processes it was an attempt at some form of innovation. It was coupled with some assurances that essential goods and foodstuffs would continue to move.

When the House took recess, this process was under way and my party did not call for an immediate, legislated settlement of the dispute. We were prepared to see this new approach given a trial, and we simply demanded that the government accept its responsibility to move the process to mediation and then to use the office of the Minister of Labour in seeking a settlement. The minister, as it turned out, ended up generating something new in labour relations himself. For the first time we had the spectacle of a windmill tilting at people. That, of course, is beside the point now. The point is that a new approach, could not in fact be maintained and events again brought us where we are today, taking emergency action after the fact and after enormous damage has been done. Let us resolve not to keep following this futile and damaging script in the future. The integrity of parliament itself demands nothing less than a change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I appreciate that it is a very serious matter to remove strike and lockout opportunities from the collective bargaining process, even very selectively. But I appeal to the good will of workers particularly to recognize that until some better, over-all system is devised this is the only honest approach. Railway workers have already recognized that in fact they do not really have a strike weapon in any event. It is axiomatic that to conduct an effective stoppage, the fact that it is effective makes it quickly intolerable in the broad public interest, so the railway workers do not have a strike weapon, in the effective sense, anyway. Let us try to seek justice and fairness for them in some other kind of process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1250)

Mr. Stanfield: The policy which my party advocates and which we would implement in government involves adopting the recommendation, which the Minister of Transport says is not acceptable to him, in the 1968 Woods report, namely, establishing a public interest disputes commission. In our approach, the commission would advise which particular services are essential. It would also recommend procedures for resolving differences where the broad public interest is threatened, and would report to the government at all stages of contract negotiations. We would insist on negotiations throughout the term of a collective agreement, instead of relying upon talks just prior to the termination of a contract and after a contract expires.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: All reports of the independent public interest disputes commission would be public. The recommendations of such a public body would have a degree of moral force that would make anybody, employer, union or government, think twice before ignoring them. Parliament would be asked to consider recommendations of the commission relating to essential services where strikes and lockouts are unacceptable in the public interest, where they must be replaced by mediation and arbitration proceedings and the recourse of subsequent appeal to parliament as a final step.

A public interest disputes commission reporting and recommending to the government and parliament could well have had a major role in generating support for a move back to some more useful guidelines in connection with the incomes of railway employers. There could possibly be a move back to something like the durable goods standard as a basic guideline for wage settlements on the railways. I just cite that as an example; I am not suggesting that should be the guideline in this case. Conciliation members and mediators cannot function in the same kind of public way as could a public interest disputes commission. I do not say that this is a magic wand but I can see that in this situation, for example, such a commission could have played an active and constructive role in anticipating difficulties and in trying to resolve them long before the contracts were to expire and long before the difficulties which resulted in a work stoppage came to a head.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: While I am in no way claiming that this approach is a cure-all, I say it is unquestionably better than what we have now. It deserves a sincere trial. In government, we would give it that trial and continue to refine it in the interest of the country. I repeat, the government has displayed contemptible complacency in not taking any innovative or imaginative action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is one reason we are back here today, faced again with this kind of difficulty as a result of the government's incompetence and lack of concern for the real interests of the country.

I want to make a few rather specific comments about the bill. I accept the general principle laid down by the Minister of Transport as to our responsibility. This was emphasized very effectively yesterday by the hon. member for St. John's East, namely, that we are not here to write a new contract for those involved; we are here to deal with this emergency and provide a basis upon which the railways can again start to operate.

On the matter of further negotiations, we feel that a realistic and firm time limit should be imposed with regard to negotiations, bargaining and arbitration. The parties in the dispute are near accord on a number of items which make up the collective agreement, so this should work no hardship. In the public mind, the imposition of such specific deadlines in the bill would have an appearance of orderliness.

My understanding is that the representatives of the union feel it would be a waste of time to be sent back to the bargaining table when, after being there a long time, they have not made any progress. There should be a definite limit on the time in which the bargaining can be strung out. We will, therefore, be moving an amendment to include in the bill a specification of durations for the ongoing periods of negotiation and mediation.

If developments proceed to the point of having an arbitrator appointed by cabinet, we feel there should be an opportunity for review and debate by parliament of the developments that have ensued to that point. Accordingly, we wish to see in this bill a clause such as was in the 1966 bill. This would provide such an opportunity. That clause provides for ten members of parliament bringing about a discussion following the appointment of an arbitrator by the minister or by cabinet. This is not a novel suggestion; it was in the 1966 bill.

On the matter of wages, we are not negotiating an agreement but, rather, back to work terms as the hon. member for St. John's East emphasized yesterday. He expressed the principle that governs the amendments we will propose. That principle involves building into the bill a protection to ensure that any settlement adequately takes into account increases in the cost of living as they can be more realistically projected since the time the members of the conciliation board drafted their reports earlier this year. In imposing a settlement, this parliament can do nothing less than provide that kind of insurance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Above all, we must recognize we are imposing a floor below which any final wage settlement cannot fall. I repeat, we are not here to impose the final settlement but to impose the floor. If that floor is not realistic, it may have an adverse effect on the attitudes of trust and good will that are necessary to set the stage for a satisfactorily negotiated final settlement.

At this exciting point, Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock, the committee will adjourn until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to be difficult, Mr. Chairman, but I have some remarks to make which I should like the Minister of Labour in particular to hear. I do not know when we may expect his arrival.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Leader of the Opposition asking a question?

Mr. Stanfield: I was just wondering whether we might wait for the Minister of Labour to get here. I realize, of course, that the government House leader is a former minister of labour and is familiar with these matters, but I think it would be helpful if the Minister of Labour were here to listen to some of the suggestions I am about to make.

Mr. MacEachen: I understand the Leader of the Opposition's concern. I have just come from a meeting with the Minister of Labour. I hope my colleague will be in the House almost immediately and I will send him a message to that effect.

Mr. Stanfield: When I broke off at one o'clock I was emphasizing again, as some others have done, that we are not engaged here in working out a final settlement of the dispute but that we are, rather, involved in proposing a floor below which any final settlement may not go. I was emphasizing that such a floor must be a realistic one so that it would not have an adverse effect on attitudes of trust and good will which are necessary to set the stage for a satisfactorily negotiated final settlement.

Parliament, through the actions and the policies of the government of the day, does bear a responsibility for the general economic position of the country. With conditions as they now exist with regard to the cost of living and the escalation of the cost of living, parliament cannot simply pass the buck to the parties in the dispute, or to a mediator or arbitrator, without some clear expression and direction of the matters for which parliament is responsible, that is to say, the cost of living. This is particularly necessary when we are dealing with an imposed floor, that is, a floor proposed by parliament, an imposed back to work arrangement covering a two-year agreement. With the cost of the living picture as it is today, the amendments we will put forward are designed to see that parliament accepts its responsibility in this regard.

With respect to the second year of the contract term proposed in the bill, we will attempt to assure some cost of living protection by putting forward an amendment which would instruct an arbitrator to produce a final settlement which could be no lower than the percentage floor set by the legislation, plus a revised cost of living projection component based upon the most recent figures available to the arbitrator when the matter comes to arbitration. This would involve some consultation between the arbitrator and the members of the original conciliation board to ascertain the cost of living components which were in their recommendations as they relate to the second year. It is my recollection that for the year 1973 they were working on a basis of a cost of living factor of about 4 or 5 per cent; but I am now talking about the second year, the year 1974.

We are disturbed that in the bill as it now stands there is a better second year floor for the shopcrafts and the UTU than is provided for the non-ops. As a union might see it, there is a poorer second year provision for the non-ops than there is for the shopcrafts and the UTU. Surely if we are concerned about fairness and the necessity to avoid unnecessary bitterness, we cannot allow the bill to become law in the form in which it presently stands, particularly as it is the non-ops who would sustain the loss of recourse to strike action under the law as it now exists. To give them a lesser, or poorer arrangement for the second year than their brothers in the other two bargaining groups would seem to me to be a travesty of justice.

The shopcrafts and the UTU are provided a floor of 6½ per cent and 1½ per cent for the second year, an effective average increase in the second year of 7¼ per cent over the first year. The non-ops, on the other hand, are provided with a floor of 5 per cent and an additional 3 per cent for the second half of the year, an effective average increase of 6½ per cent for the year 1974 as opposed to the 7¼ per cent proposed for the other two unions. The floor provided in the bill for the first year is essentially the same in respect of the three unions, except that in the case of the non-ops it is in cents whereas in the case of the other two unions it is in percentages. So it is evident that the non-operating unions are offered in this bill as it now stands a floor that is lower than for the other two, and this should be changed. Our proposal, in the form of an amendment, would call for the second year floor for the non-ops to be as good or no worse than the floor for the other two unions, and this would involve 6½ per cent and 1½ per cent for the non-ops.

• (1410)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, would the Leader of the Opposition permit a question? I am not arguing at all with the figures he has pointed out in reference to the second year, but it seems to me, again, that we are dealing with what the chairman of the conciliation board did in respect of the shopcrafts as opposed to what was done by the chairman in respect of the non-ops. If we can assume, and perhaps we can straighten it out this afternoon, that the arbitrator will make his award prior to the end of this year—we certainly hope that will be the case and will undertake to see that it is done—perhaps that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Stanfield: That is hardly a question, Mr. Chairman. I recognize this does involve some departure from the recommendation of the chairman, and I do not want to be critical of Mr. Justice Munroe, but I should point out that while the judge said he was awarding a 17 per cent increase to the non-ops over two years, that is correct if you compare the December 31, 1974, rate he recommended with the average non-ops wage for the year 1972, but if you compare the December 31, 1974, rate as he recommended with the December 31, 1972, rate it is only about 15 per cent.

I do not want to get involved in the recommendations of the chairman of the conciliation board in respect of the non-ops arrangement, but I am saying that this House should not impose a poorer settlement for the second year on the non-operating unions then we are providing for the other two unions, regardless of what difference there might be in the recommendations of the chairman of the conciliation board.

Actually, as the minister well knows, the scale of pay for the other two unions is substantially higher than for the non-operating unions, and even the same percentage increase gives them more in terms of dollars. The bill the minister puts before the House not only gives less in terms of dollars but a lower percentage increase, and I do not think he can justify that. I hope the minister will accept my point of view in that regard. The point I was making is that we have to propose as good an arrangement for the non-operating unions for the second year as we are prepared to give the other two unions. I emphasize that fact.

In summary, the effect of our proposal in relation to the floor for the second year, 1974, would see a floor for all workers involved in the legislation of 6½ per cent and 1½ per cent, which is no worse than provided for the shopcrafts and UTU, plus a revised cost of living component to be determined by an arbitrator. We frame the cost of living aspect in terms of a direction to an arbitrator simply because this is the most simple and efficient method of inserting the principle into the bill. In other words, if the principle and the resulting improved floor are guaranteed to be available at the end of the ongoing negotiation line, they will automatically be presumed all along the line.

What we shall propose is that the percentage increase for the year 1974 should be no worse for the non-operating unions than the government is prepared, as indicated in the bill, to allow the other two unions, plus instructions to the arbitrator with regard to the cost of living component for the second year.

As to the first year, 1973, which we are now over halfway through, we consider we should continue to apply the principle that the cost of living component should be included. This was emphasized by the Minister of Transport this morning as being something which would have to be considered in the course of negotiation or arbitration. I am proposing that we are far enough along in the year 1973 to assess this ourselves for the year, rather than leaving it to arbitration and negotiation. In line with the principle I have expressed, we are far enough along in the year now for parliament to set its own revised cost of living component and make it part of the defined floor in this legislation. The board of conciliation worked on the basis of the cost of living factor in 1973 being close to 5.5 per cent. Clearly, the cost of living factor for 1973 will be about 1 per cent above that, and 1 per cent in terms of these average wages would amount to about 4 cents.

Therefore, in line with this principle which has been generally endorsed but which the government wishes to leave to conciliation and arbitration, we believe we are far enough along now in the year for parliament to assess this itself. We feel we should realistically establish the floor at 34 cents, and that this figure should replace the 30-cent floor figure which is now in the bill. I say that recognizing that the escalation of the cost of living will be about 1 per cent higher than the figure on which the board worked.

I emphasize that such action could in no way be construed as taking sides or attempting to make a final settlement judgment here in parliament. This would simply be parliament, in this case, accepting its responsibility in regard to the extraordinary cost of living situation which now prevails in the country.

I also assure the House that there is nothing intended in my approach to be considered as engaging in an auction. I agree wholeheartedly with the Minister of Transport that we should not be in an auction game in this House. At the same time, I appreciate that the government is virtually bound to bring in a bill in line with the recommendations of the chairman of the conciliation board and this is what the government has done. At the same time, I have heard both the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport say they are assuming that a final settlement would have to take into account, regardless of any other components, some component of adjustment for the rising cost of living over and above the floor figure now in the bill. I would hope, therefore, that these ministers and indeed all members of the House will be able to support our amendments giving effect to an assurance of such an additional cost of living component in the final form of this legislation.

With regard to the other two unions, the increases there in the first year are in percentage terms, and that would have to be left to further conciliation and eventually arbitration if it comes to that. I am suggesting that for the non-ops, for 1973, we recognize the fact that the cost of living escalated faster than envisaged at the time of the conciliation report. Above all, I am emphasizing that the floor we propose for the non-operating unions should be no worse than the arrangements we propose for the other two unions.

We feel these proposals would have a salutary effect on the employees concerned. Surely this is a very important consideration both in ensuring an orderly return to work and setting the stage for ongoing negotiations. We believe that parliament would be doing no more than it should, in line with its limited role at this time, in supporting our amendments. We also believe that in doing so it will be doing what it indeed must do in the interests of justice in imposing a settlement at this time. These amendments will be presented formally, in detail, as the committee stage proceeds.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, when I indicated this morning that I wished to speak on clause 2 of this bill my purpose at that time was to have something to say about railway pensions and in particular to make a direct appeal to the Minister of Labour in connection therewith. I still intend to do that, but before I do so I should like to say a few words with regard to the impassioned speech of our good friend, the Minister of Transport, which was delivered before the luncheon break. Some of my colleagues are asking whose friend he is. By his own definition, he is a friend of the workers; he sympathizes with their case and he gives them his full support. He said so.

However, I want to say that I fully agree with the Minister of Transport that legislation forcing workers back to work is an anathema to all of us who believe in the principles of free collective bargaining. He said that this morning and gave us a bit of a lecture. I remind him that that is one of the reasons for our vote last night against this bill, as indeed we have voted no on a number of previous occasions when we have had bills which legislated workers back to work.

In his speech this morning, the Minister of Transport insisted that the floor of parliament is not the place to legislate a collective agreement. I hear one of my Tory friends say "Right on". I agree, Mr. Chairman, but the fact of the matter is that this bill, Bill C-217, which was given approval in principle last night by a majority of this House, Liberals, Tories and Social Crediters all in the same bed, does in fact legislate an agreement in so far as wages are concerned for our railway workers.

An hon. Member: It does not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Minister of Transport shakes his head and I hear mutterings from that other good friend of the workers, the hon. member for Hamilton West. I say that with the same generous tone of voice as when I said that the Minister of Transport is a friend of the workers.

May I point out that for many months the railway companies have been holding back, knowing that they did not have to agree to a settlement because by experience they knew the government and parliament could be counted on to bail them out. So there has been no real collective bargaining. This bill which the government brought in, which has the support of the Conservatives and Social Crediters, specifies certain wage rates. They are in terms of cents per hour for one group and in terms of cents per hour, mileages and percentages for the other two. Then it provides for some more negotiating, the same process that the employees and the company have been through for months. And behind, or on the other side of that so-called negotiating is provision for mediation and for an arbitrator. I submit that the same railway companies which held back and refused to bargain in good faith when they were in the collective bargaining process will do the same again.

The railway companies know that all they have to do is wait and say nothing until the Minister of Labour, under the law, refers the matter to an arbitrator. Although the arbitrator might give the employees one, two or three cents more, they know they will not come out of that arbitration with anything that is substantially different from what is set out in this bill. The employees, by this bill supported by the other three parties in this House, are called upon to go back to work on the terms of this inadequate settlement.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Gladly.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As the hon. member knows, this bill follows the usual pattern. It does indicate that prior to the appointment of an arbitrator there can be negotiations between the parties. It also indicates there can be further mediation. This action can be very quickly discharged and they can move into arbitration very rapidly indeed. I take it that the hon. member has looked at that, and if he wishes to make any suggestions concerning how we might move into arbitration quite quickly, which in my view would be in the interests of the workers concerned, this indeed would rule out the validity of the point the hon. member makes about the companies stalling any longer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I shall not argue with the minister whether that is a question, but I submit that the minister missed my point altogether. He thinks I am asking for arbitration to be brought on more quickly. Not at all. I say that when arbitration comes, whether sooner or later, it will result in a decision which is in practice dictated by this bill. The arbitrator may get in somewhere, for example, between the 30 cents in the bill and the 38 cents suggested by Professor Weldon, but past experience says the companies will know they have everything to gain just by holding back. The point is that this bill is legislating a collective agreement for the workers and railway companies.

I have no objection to the interruptions, but I hope that I shall have 20 minutes from each time I am interrupted.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I promise the hon. gentleman that this is the only time I shall intervene. The hon. member for York South did it once while I was speaking, and I am asking for the same privilege. What we are proposing is exactly what you are proposing. The only difference is that you start from the Weldon report and we start from the report of the chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for pointing out that the only difference is that the government is proposing an inadequate settlement and we propose an adequate settlement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1430)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We did not ask for this collective agreement to be legislated by parliament. The government made that decision and received the support of the other three parties in the House. Now that parliament has committed itself to dictating an agreement to the parties, we contend that we have the right to try to improve that agreement. That is why we are prepared to suggest 38 cents an hour to the non-ops, plus 10.8 per cent in the second year, and comparable changes with respect to the other groups.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that experience has shown to management that it can count on parliament to bail management out. If there are members in the House in other parties who wish that this kind of thing did not happen, and who wish that parliament did not have to deal with railway strikes, may I suggest that one way to put a stop to it would be to give the workers, by the power we now have to legislate their agreement, the amounts for which they are asking—more, if you will. It will be a long time again before the companies let a dispute come to parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If they discover that for once in history parliament came down on the side of the workers instead of on the side of the companies, they would think twice in the next negotiation before holding back the way they have been doing every two years since 1950 when we had that first terrible experience. So we agree with the Minister of Transport that parliament should not legislate a collective agreement. But parliament, by the vote of the other three parties, is doing just that. We say that if we are doing it, we should legislate an agreement that is fair.

The Minister of Transport had a good deal of fun this morning and, like the Leader of the Opposition, I enjoyed his speech and confirm that it was eloquent and in the best tradition. He also enjoyed taking my leader to task in two or three respects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My leader is like all the rest of us; we like it when attention is paid to us. This morning one of the points the minister made was that in 1966 the hon. member for York South made the same kind of pitch that we are making now, namely, that the agreement should be improved. Specifically, what the hon. member for York South was asking on that occasion was that the rates of pay in the second year of the contract should be improved.

What did we get in response to that? We got a wonderful, strong, eloquent and impassioned speech by the present Minister of Transport, making the same arguments he made this morning to the effect that we should not be legislating an agreement on the floor of the House. It was a strong speech. What happened? He took his seat. He was hardly comfortable in his seat before the prime minister of the day, Mr. Pearson, rose and accepted the terms of the proposed amendment put forward by the hon. member for York South and, since it had to be moved from the government side, arranged for it to be moved by Mr. Nicholson, the then minister of labour. So I suggest to the Minister of Transport that it is probably fortunate for him this afternoon that the present Prime Minister is not in his seat, lest he do the same thing Mr. Pearson did, namely, pull the rug out from under the Minister of Transport.

This morning the minister also chided the hon. member for York South by referring to his wisdom and knowledge in knowing what the wage levels ought to be. He contended that none of us in this place knows what the wage levels should be. He said he did not know; he professed his ignorance to the country. But I remind him that this bill has been brought in by the Minister of Labour, the head of the department which has all the facts, figures and statistics that can possibly be collected, and I submit that the Department of Labour is probably in a better position than any other body in the country to know what is a fair and reasonable settlement of the railway workers' wages. For the government, through the mouth of the Minister of Transport, to use as an argument against producing better figures the fact that he does not know what they should be is just silly.

The other charge which the Minister of Transport made against my leader was that there was something sinister and unfair about his referring to the announcement last evening by the leaders of the non-ops to the effect that if the bill, as the government has brought it in, is passed they do not feel that they can order their workers back to the job. For some reason or another we are not supposed to mention that. It is the same Minister of Transport who said that what we are here for is to legislate an emergency, to legislate an end to the railway disruption, to get things moving again. Surely it is the part of common sense to bring in the kind of bill that will do that. Surely it is the part of common sense not to say you are being blackmailed when the facts of life are being put before you and when you are brought face to face with the fact that the kind of bill the government is trying to put through will not do the job for which it is designed.

What the Minister of Transport says is the government's purpose is to legislate the emergency out of existence. I submit, therefore, that the case that we have been making from this side is a valid one. We do not think this matter should have been brought here at all, but it is here and it is a case of legislating a collective agreement. Right now this job is on parliament's shoulders. Someone said, quite appropriately, let us do it well. Let us bring in the kind of agreement that will be fair to the workers, that will encourage them to go back to work and also that will discourage the railway companies from holding back in all future negotiations, counting on parliament to bail them out.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know from which of the interruptions you started counting my 20 minutes, but I see that my time is running out so I had better get to the subject on which I wanted to speak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friends need not indulge in that kind of discourtesy. They know that in committee of the whole one can speak times without number, and some of us are capable of it. But I do want to say a few words on the subject of railway pensions, which was my main purpose when I rose this morning and unsuccessfully sought the floor.

Yesterday in his speech the Minister of Labour announced the appointment of Dr. John Deutsch as commissioner, under part V of the Canada Labour Code, to study a certain aspect of railway pensions. We welcome this appointment and we approve of the person who has been named to do this job. We are pleased that that action has been taken. But I want to register a strong complaint at the narrowness of the terms of reference given to Dr. Deutsch and I appeal to the minister either to give him another set of terms of reference or, if he wants to give it to some other person, to appoint another commissioner.

Let me try to express this as quickly and as directly as I can. The job which the Minister of Labour has given to Dr. Deutsch is simply to assess the cost or the value of the pension changes that have been agreed to between the unions and the companies, the unions claiming that they represent a cost factor of 2.2 per cent, the companies claiming that they represent 4.3 per cent. This is a dispute that certainly should be settled by an independent person, and we find Dr. Deutsch to be such an independent person. I hope that if he finds in favour of the unions, or if he finds a figure somewhere in between, the terms of reference of the commission are such that the advantage thereof will be given to the workers in the wage settlement.

Mr. Chairman, that is not enough at this stage of the game with respect to railway pensions. I know the minister said yesterday that the pension agreement arrived at between the union and the company is an historic one, and so on. I know there is a lot to be said for it, but there are two things that stand out as deficiencies. In the first place, for some of those now at work, some of those not yet on pension, I do not think the deal is as good as it is claimed to be. This applies especially to the old timers, especially to those who were working for either of the major railways prior to January 1, 1956.

The new 2 per cent per year formula is there for those whose entire employment has been since 1956. I am not going for the moment into the Canada Pension Plan arrangements, which raise other questions, but for those whose employment goes back to a time prior to January 1, 1956, there is a deficiency. They will not get a pension of 2 per cent for each year of service. So I say quickly, but say it to have it on the record, that I do not share the complete satisfaction of the minister and some of the union representatives with respect to the deal so far as the present workers are concerned.

There is another group we must think of, those already retired, or those who were retired at any time prior to January 1, 1963. For them there is nothing at all in this pension agreement. There is not even any guarantee that the 2 per cent ad hoc increase that Canadian National has been giving from year to year will continue to be given. So this whole area of railway pensions, Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and those of any other companies that are in the group, needs to be gone into thoroughly by a man like Dr. Deutsch or some appointee who is given the same kind of job. I see the minister getting to his feet.

May I spell out one or two things. I suggest that either Dr. Deutsch's terms of reference should be broadened or that additional terms of reference should be given to someone else. I think the whole question of the amount of money in the various pension funds should be gone into and how much the railways have put in, as well as whether they have kept their agreements. I think the whole question of the rate of pension, the 2 per cent formula, and whether it is right to limit it only to those who have been in service prior to this year and since January, 1956, should be gone into.

As well, the question of widows' pensions and whether they should remain at 50 per cent, be increased to 65 or even 75 per cent, or even more, should be gone into. These are all problems which we need to examine. Likewise, the question of the annual escalation of pensions needs to be gone into. A few years ago the 2 per cent annual escalation started and it is a fetish with which we are stuck. We are gradually getting rid of that. We got rid of it from the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement. We got rid of it from war veterans pensions and war veterans allowances. However, it is still there in the Canada Pension Plan and all sorts of pensions coming under the government. It is still there, though on an ad hoc basis, in Canadian National pensions; and, of course, the CPR is lagging behind.

I do not want to run the risk of the Minister of Transport telling me that we are trying to negotiate railway pensions here in committee of the whole House. I have suggested areas which need to be looked into. I am as certain as that I am standing here that there is just as much concern about this among those now working for the railways, those who would get the benefit of the new contract, as there is among those already retired. I am glad to see the Minister of Labour nodding his head in the right way. I am glad to see he wants to ask me a question. My appeal to him is that he find, either by appointing another commissioner or broadening the terms of reference given to Dr. Deutsch, a way for bringing about a complete and thorough examination of railway pensions right across the board, with a view to a way being found to make those pensions more fair to all retired railway workers, both for those now retired and for those who will retire in years to come.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, may I make a short comment on what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. Speaking in terms of the pension benefits themselves which the hon. member mentioned, as he is aware this very significant improvement was made as of March and it was agreed to by the union leadership and the companies. If there is to be further examination of that along the lines that the hon. member has suggested—and I think it was a fair and legitimate observation on his part—I think the union leadership and the companies should get together and conduct further discussions along those lines. But I doubt, again, whether anything tangible along that line can be done in this committee. If it should appear at a subsequent time, and after talking to the unions concerned and management, that a separate study might be of assistance to both sides and should be conducted under the auspices of another commissioner, we would be prepared to consider that.

May I add this. The hon. member indicated that he thought the terms of reference for John Deutsch were too narrow. I think he was speaking of the costing arrangements. As hon. members will recall, yesterday I indicated that his findings would be turned over to the arbitrator, assuming that an arbitrator is appointed under the act, and would be taken into account in the determination of all other issues before the arbitrator, including wages. However, if the hon. member is of the view that his terms of reference should be extended so that we may do this more adequately, I am quite agreeable to that. I am receiving now suggestions as to how those terms of reference might be expanded and I hope to be in a position later this afternoon to let the House and the hon. member know what will be the extended terms of reference for John Deutsch.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? I appreciate what he said about the breadth of the terms of reference given to Dr. Deutsch, and I am glad to know that any deficiencies will be covered. When I said that the terms of reference were too narrow, I was not thinking that they were too narrow with respect to the assignment made to him. I was pleading that they were too narrow because of the other problem which needs to be investigated, namely, the rights of those already retired.

May I ask the minister this: does he not realize that although the unions representing the workers may want an inquiry into the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific pension fund with respect to the value of the changes they have won, there is another group for which, surely, the minister is responsible, the retired railway workers? They do not sit at the collective bargaining table. Their pension position is not negotiated. That is why we think there ought to be a special inquiry for them. I ask if the minister will give that matter very serious consideration and make arrangements for such an inquiry, across the board, right away.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I think I made the necessary distinction. I realized that the hon. member was talking more about the benefit side when he was referring to another commissioner. Notwithstanding the agreement reached between the union leadership and the companies in March, I am prepared to meet again with leadership and with management to hear their views and then set up an appropriate device by which the objectives the hon. member has spoken about might be obtained. I am prepared to do that, but I do not think that can be done today.

I say, although this is not directly related to the hon. member's point but is of interest to him and his leader, I think, that the terms of reference given to John Deutsch with respect to the manner in which the costing will be done will be gone over before the matter of the arbitrator comes into question. That aspect we are looking at today and I hope to have some further elaboration on it this afternoon.

An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had the floor for almost three extra minutes. I understand there is an arrangement that we hear speakers from each party in the first round. I think questions and answers should be short, especially after the first round. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, we have listened with interest and attention to the opinions expressed in this House since the beginning of the special debate on the railway dispute and it leaves us perplexed.

The present situation throughout Canada requires—we agree unanimously on that—immediate action on the part of the federal government. The economic situation is so much more precarious that several other major problems are involved and are creating discontent, tensions, strikes and even sometimes anger and violence throughout Canada.

The House has been summoned to an emergency session to force 56,000 workers of the Canadian National Railways to return immediately to work, thus taking away from them the right to strke that the same Parliament had given them previously. Parliament had given the right to strike to the workers in the public sector. Yet every time that the situation grows worse, that the negotiations do not produce results, that we come to a dead end, an emergency law, a special law is adopted by the House to take away their right to strike and force them to return to work. Instead of improving, and this is specially the point I would like to make, the mechanism of negotiation, instead of promoting permanent negotiations of labour agreements, instead of establishing in advance a labour tribunal or a permanent arbitration mechanism, and on this question I differ with the Leader of the Opposition

(Mr. Stanfield), representing fairly all the different interests, the government, for reasons which are of course obscure or political, gives the right to strike to the public sector, lets the situations rot to the point that they create a national crisis requiring emergency legislations and then in the same breath, takes away the right to strike.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to object strenuously against that philosophy of the working world, those evasive procedures of the present government before labour problems in general. I demand a long-term labour policy governed not only by a proper up-to-date labour code, but especially through permanent bargaining mechanisms for the renewal of collective agreements and above those mechanisms a labour court representing the various interests involved and this, Mr. Chairman, not only to solve the problems of the CNR employees but also those existing in other sectors of the public service where public interest is more often threatened.

The basic reasons which led to the introduction of the legislation are evidently plausible: the rotating strike since July 26 has shaken up the Canadian community. However, since August 23, this national strike, as mentioned by the minister, has jeopardized the welfare of the nation by isolating the Maritimes, let alone the many manufactures and companies which have been compelled to dismiss hundreds of employees since they were unable to obtain their raw materials.

Through this bill, Mr. Chairman, we shall force back to work 56,000 Canadian workers who were on strike because both bargaining and arbitration had failed. These workers are asking for a wage increase in order to meet the high cost of living. This is what they are fighting for. Must they be blamed for that? Is the government acting both as judge and employer? To this question fraught with consequences, I shall answer in the affirmative and the negative. Let me explain.

These 56,000 workers are not to blame, not any more than a great many other workers who are fighting with patched-up means, namely the strike, to secure a better income to support their families. They are not to blame because they want to improve their condition. But, under the present system where renewable collective agreements ahve been left to sleep on shelves for a long time instead of being seriously negotiated on a permanent basis, what else can they do?

Mr. Chairman, to my mind, that is the point. If, in the Labour Code, in the mechanisms of the labour world, we had a permanent system of labour negotiations to renew agreements instead of letting them gather dust on shelves for the benefit of private interests, we would not get into the type of difficult situation we are now witnessing.

How much will the work stoppage have cost each one of the railroaders who struck in order to improve their lot? How much will the settlement give them? Was it a profitable endeavour? If I worked for the railroads, if I saw this sitting of the House where in turn hon. members suggest 5 per cent, 3 per cent and 30c. increases, I would be disappointed because those workers are trying to tailor their salaries to the cost of living which is now beyond control.

This House should have but one objective: not only to enable the 56,000 employees of the Canadian railways to tailor their income to the cost of living, but to take steps to ensure that all Canadian workers can do so.

Mr. Chairman, finally, whose interests does this situation serve? Through rotating and full-scale strikes, the workers inadvertently served the interests of finance.

As long as governments tolerate the old-fashioned mechanisms of the world of labour, workers, regardless of what sector they belong to, will run into crying injustice, at times provocation, endless tugs-of-war and especially, constant failures.

● (1500)

Mr. Chairman, here is an important question upon which I urge my colleagues to reflect: Have you ever seen a Canadian worker emerge as a winner in the present bargaining system? Have you ever seen a worker emerge as a winner in the present financial system, in spite of his efforts?

That brings me to say, Mr. Chairman, that the public enemy No. 1, the one that is not talked about in this House, is the omnipresent world of finance that plays around with people like puppets, making them laugh or cry as they wish, dividing them among themselves, setting them up against imaginary enemies when the combines, the monopolies, the big companies—often multinational—protected by governments that indeed they finance continue to dominate our economic, social and consequently political life.

Mr. Chairman, that is the truth. Why do we let labour disputes last so long? Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that companies do not do more in the bargaining process? Why do governments wait until the last moment to intervene? Why do we not bring our bargaining, mediation and arbitration system up to date?

Mr. Chairman, if the 56,000 workers currently involved as the thousands of others in Canada put as much sustained effort in fi⅞ting the present financial system, in fighting high finance as they do in gaining a few cents an hour after months of pressure, wild talks and strikes we would see that the result would not be the same as today.

I will give an example that I consider most important and which is relevant to the subject matter we are discussing. It has to do with the present strike, the current situation, the workers' demands, the increase in the cost of living. Previous speakers talked about tailoring salaries to the increase in the cost of living rather than always having to come back charging. Mr. Chairman, I agree with those proposals. If one looks at the current situation what does one see? Who is gaining from increases in the cost of living?

That is the question which everybody should ask instead of being satisfied with crabbing because we cannot make ends meet or of playing ostrich as this government is doing and blaming it on the world situation only to hope for better days, after studies have been made to see if prices are actually increasing. We have reached an unbelievably ridiculous level.

Mr. Chairman, we have reached a critical point in the increasing cost of living, food, housing or money because of abusive and exhorbitant interest rates and a solution must be found as soon as possible. There are all those people whose income is frozen and set, all those salaried people have got to a point where it is impossible for them to catch up with the increasing cost of living to satisfy essential needs such as feeding their own families. Nevertheless, it is a matter of essential needs. Why are the railway workers protesting? It is precisely in view of satisfying those needs.

Mr. Chairman, as far as we are concerned, we are not considering the claims of the railway workers for them only, but from the point of view of labour as a whole. The present economic and financial system, which is almost openly protected by governments illustrates best those scandals now described by the newspapers and it is leading us towards a bursting point of society and a struggle for power. This is unacceptable, Mr. Chairman. The primary role of a government is not only to protect public interest, for instance by bringing a rail strike to an end, as we are doing today, but also and above all to allow every citizen to live decently in his country, in all security and freedom of choice.

To deal with the rail strike, which jeopardizes society in general, is, I would suggest, one small item of the situation as a whole. And actually, will the situation of those workers be really settled both by the strike which they called in good faith and by this legislation formulated at the last minute by the government? Will what we are doing here this afternoon really solve the problem? Will we not find ourselves, in one year or even in ten months, in a similar situation as this one today in connection with employees in other areas of the public service or the public sector?

Mr. Chairman, we are not here to defer problems until next year or even later. We are here so solve them. This is what the Canadian public expects of us and it is not by bringing 56,000 workers to heel by telling them you will get so much, or by telling them either you go back to work or you will be penalized according to the Canadian Labour Code that the problem will be solved, because in other sectors of our Canadian economy, there are still cries and requests for reasonable comfort and a sufficient income that allows for the cost of living.

This morning, I heard the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) speak with an unusual eloquence to tell us that we were not here to negotiate, but that the mechanisms should do so. And I will tell him that if we are here it is precisely because these old negotiation mechanisms have not worked and that the first duty of a government is not to tell Parliament "You have no business negotiating", but to create new negotiation mechanisms in order to avoid making fools of ourselves in this House.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, settling the railway strike is a detail, it is only a drop of water that will not quench the thirst of the workers in the country as a whole.

Not very long ago I saw on Quebec television that the provincial minister of labour was facing countless rotating strikes, strikes that have not been settled while heads of families live on miserable strike funds. Entire families can no longer live adequately in their country because mechanisms in the labour field are out of date. Indeed those mechanisms suit, I am sure, certain big financial interests and certain labour leaders.

Mr. Chairman, now is the time to say certain things. Now is the time to realize that the labour world constitutes the basis of our society and that it is not with unemployment insurance or welfare legislation that we shall build a country but with legislation to enable workers to really do their utmost in an atmosphere of calmness and serenity. And in this respect the primary function of a government is to make sure that its labour relations are healthy, productive and that competent work in the industrial and trade fields brings to the worker sufficient earnings to enable him to provide his family with a decent standard of living. Such is the purpose of work, Mr. Chairman. But there is a need to go still further. For the last 25, 50 or 100 years, the income problem of a person has been considered according to the work of that person. Now, Mr. Chairman, with the advent of automation, of technology, that is not valid any more. It is not true any more that work should necessarily be related to income because machinery is a growing substitute for man, because automation is with us for good. One cannot for all that discard the electronic machine and say: "Let us make men work with their hands", just for the sake of providing full employment.

Mr. Chairman, the government's primary duty then is to provide just the same an adequate income to counteract the increase in the cost of living and to enable every Canadian citizen to live in his own country regardless of work since work is no longer a guarantee of income.

• (1510)

The Leader of the Social Credit (Mr. Caouette) was right yesterday when he said that when the workers are talking about job security, they are not really fighting for the job but rather for the earnings that accrue from that job. There are very few people in this House who would work for nothing and it is the same for the population and that is understandable.

Mr. Chairman, there are plenty of contradictions in our society because of our corrupt financial system and the railway strike is an example. I would like to mention some contradictions connected with the railway strike in the present economic situation.

First, while some Canadian workers are fiercely fighting to obtain job security—if it is possible—and for higher wages, other Canadians are forced by the government to refuse jobs because of the rules set by public servants who administer the Unemployment Insurance Act.

While some Canadian workers are fighting for their jobs, others are literally obliged to refuse jobs because of the legislation. In certain fields of work, it is more interesting to draw unemployment insurance benefits than to try to find a job. That is the situation the Canadian workers are faced with: one law for some and another for others.

Here is another contradiction: While some citizens are trying to make both ends meet, the federal government controled and backed by financiers—we should repeat it again and again—lets the Bank of Canada increase its interest rate, its prime rate and consequently allows also chartered banks to raise their interest rates and their profits that the workers and people will have to pay to build a house or to borrow money. In certain areas, Mr.

Chairman, and in some financial or banking establishments, mortgage rates have reached more than 10 or 11 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, at the very moment when such an exploitation of man by finance is encouraged, 56,000 workers are told: Get back home, get back to work, you are endangering society. But for me, I say, as an out-and-out Creditist, that those who are most endangering society are those who now control the increase in the cost of living and who take advantage of it, those who control interest rates and take advantage of it. Those who are most endangering society are not those who come and demonstrate in front of Parliament, but those people who are not seen, those who play with the citizens like puppets.

Mr. Chairman, a special legislation, an emergency legislation should not be necessary to force 56,000 Canadians who are willing to work to go back to work. But there should be one to bring to heel the financial power which controls these governments and the citizens.

Thousands of families are now doing without quality food in Canada—not in communist China—for lack of sufficient financial means when for the past few years governments have been trying obstinately to control and restrict agricultural production, for instance, going as far as penalizing dairy producers for having produced too much, and this while encouraging imports. Today, the awakening is brutal and in the category of farm workers as well as in that of railway workers, operating or not, we have the same situation: they are discouraging individual initiative, they penalize the individual through all sorts of government red tape, inquiries and legislation. Therefore, can we really say whether the Canadian worker is being rewarded for his work? That is why anger is rising in the public sector, among railway employees and why—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I have listened, as have most hon. members, with a great deal of interest to this discussion of the subject matter at hand. I have heard a great many hon. members establish their credentials, quite properly, before participating in the debate. I do not suppose mine are any greater or any less than those of others who have taken part in the debate so far. But I must say that I did work for the railways for 12 years—my father worked for 42 years at Moncton and Quebec—and during the four years I served in the cabinet I spent at least three of them as minister of labour. And during those three years as minister of labour I had the opportunity of participating in the conclusion of several collective agreements involving railway workers.

I am not trying to be rude to anybody in this chamber if I make certain obervations, because they are meant to be just that, and nothing else. I have never been able to understand precisely what it is about industrial disputes that makes everybody an expert. All of us who are involved in labour disputes inevitably find someone, some well-meaning employee, or vice-president of a corporation, who wonders why the whole thing cannot be settled in 20 minutes because the issue appears to be so simple. The reason this is not possible is that you cannot really find answers to these things in books; industrial relations are nothing more than human relations. The Leader of the Official Opposition made a very good speech today along these lines.

My good friend from York South was with me in 1965 when we visited Poland together as members of a parliamentary delegation. I was naive enough to ask the minister of labour in Poland when was the last time they had a strike. The answer was, in 1956. I recalled that in 1956 there was a rebellion not only in Hungary but in Poland when the workers were shot down with machine guns because they demanded a little more in the way of wages.

I take second place to nobody in this House when it comes to concern for the workers. I think I should remind the NDP that they do not have a monopoly of concern for the working people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Look at the bill!

Mr. Mackasey: If hon. members in that corner want to heckle me I could show them a telegram I received during the last railway dispute in 1970. The locomotive engineers announced on a Wednesday morning that they intended to strike on Monday. And the first telegram I got came from the newly-elected premier of Saskatchewan, one Mr. Blakeney, I believe, demanding compulsory arbitration before the strike had even begun.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: I know the members of this party were shocked at the time. I know the hon. member for York South was as appalled as I was.

Mr. Nesdoly: On a point of order, I should like to remind the hon. member that Mr. Blakeney was not elected until 1971. Mr. Thatcher was in power in 1970.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member has drawn attention to a very serious error, not that there was no telegram, but that the strike situation—a strike did not actually occur—arose in 1971 rather than in 1970. Mr. Blakeney was a year older in 1971 and he should have been a year wiser.

I want to say something else while we are in committee of the whole; incidentally I am one who would like to return to the days when we made regular use of the committee of the whole, when we had decent debates and when one could answer questions in democratic, hard-hitting fashion, though never in an insulting way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I want to point out, as an observer, that we have under federal jurisdiction the finest department of labour in the eleven jurisdictions of this country. I wish to make another point also. Sitting at the officials' table is the finest deputy minister the Department of Labour has ever had—and the department was established some 50 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: If people think the federal scene is dominated by industrial strife they are not aware of the record of the Department of Labour or of the hard work done by people under this deputy minister—Mr. Wilson, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Gibbons and the other people in the department. I am not making this point idly. I have a purpose in doing so, and I shall come back to it.

The first thing that bothers me—and my feelings are based on the experience I acquired in the few years during which I was minister of labour—is this. Everybody who has spoken so far has been filled with good intentions and anxious to propose amendments or improvements to the bill. If each one of those amendments was accepted then I don't know one qualified arbitrator in this country who would take on the job of settling the rail dispute. For instance, when hon. members say that the collective agreement must include a clause to deal with the cost of living, they are advocating the removal from the workers of a flexibility which is important to them.

An hon. Member: That is what the bill does.

Mr. Mackasey: They may prefer a lump sum payment. And the man who just made that remark shows he knows nothing at all about industrial relations. In recent weeks I have been involved in two labour disputes, one of which was settled by the inclusion of a cost of living clause. In the other case the membership of the union refused the inclusion of such a clause and opted for a lump sum payment instead—as you might have done, Mr. Chairman, if you had been on strike for five and a half months in British Columbia.

● (1520)

Let me make a point which has not been emphasized enough with regard to railroad workers, in an effort to explain what occurred here yesterday. Railway workers by their nature have always been what might be termed the aristocracy of the labour movement. This is natural because a worker in any capacity on the railway requires a particular skill; he must serve an apprenticeship and adjust to a particular environment. You cannot acquire this skill or the ability to adjust unless you work on the railway.

I was appalled in the spring of 1971 to find that a locomotive engineer operating down the Fraser Canyon earned $1800 more than my secretary who types on an IBM electric typewriter. I asked myself where our scale of values was in this particular community of ours.

At one time if you worked on the railway you were a leader in the community, you had the best wages and the best living conditions. Landlords sought you out because you had a guaranteed income. If you had worked on the railroad for 10 years you had seniority for life, and at one time a man who had 10 years' experience received a pass entitling him to travel free of charge on certain trains. Such a man had security until age 65.

That changed in the 1950's when the railways switched from steam locomotives to diesel locomotives. Shortly afterwards we saw the virtual disappearance of blacksmiths and boilermakers from the railways. Their jobs became redundant because the steam engine had outlived its usefulness. We saw patternmakers and moulders, who had spent five years learning their profession, finding their jobs becoming obsolete and redundant. They were unable to work in other aspects of industry because of changing technology.

As a result of this the position of railway employees changed from that of importance in the community, reflected not only in stature but in wages, to a position of something less than leaders in the community. Today an electrician working for the railway might earn $4 and some cents an hour after five years' apprenticeship, covering everything from air conditioning to rewinding motors. Compare that with an electrician in the province of Quebec who, by government decree, will be paid $7.90 in 1975, plus an additional 80 cents toward his pension plan. If you were a railway worker and knew of that comparison, would you be prepared to kick in the doors of parliament? That action was not justified any more than not going back to work will be justified. If the law of the land is wrong in your individual opinion, it is still the law of the land and must be obeyed. The important thing is that we have a democracy, and this brings me to the point I really want to put forward.

On several occasions the Leader of the Opposition, who has shown concern for the working man on many occasions, has emphasized that the Conservative party would establish an industrial disputes commission which, as you know, is one of the recommendations of the Woods Task Force. I do not want to get my dates wrong again and be corrected, but I think the Woods Task Force Report was deposited during Christmas week of 1968. That commission cost the government $2 million. It was composed of leading academics and intellectual experts in the field of industrial relations.

The former leader of the NDP is smiling because he knows, as I do, that in the final analysis you do not settle labour disputes as a result of what is contained in the Woods Task Force Report; you settle them by negotiation.

All an industrial disputes commission, such as suggested by the Conservative party, would do in a democracy—and this is significant—is substitute the judgment of the Department of Labour, the judgment of the deputy minister, the judgment of the assistant deputy minister and the judgment of industrial specialists and branch heads for the judgment of the three-man board described loosely in the Woods Report as being independent.

I do not know whether the three men would be selected from the ranks of labour, but I doubt it. Perhaps two would be employers and one an employee, but more than likely they would be three academics, selected because of their experience and ability in writing on a blackboard.

In any event this commission would have access to a 30-man part-time board which no doubt would be representative of the party in power. If all politicians are as partisan as I, it would contain members from their ridings. Whether they were experts in industrial relations or in some other field, they would have the responsibility of helping this three-man independent commission to substitute its judgment for that of the Department of Labour and its civil servants, and to recommend to parliament the measures it should impose upon the railway workers.

Unfortunately most of the members who come from the province of British Columbia are in the opposition, but they know the results that restrictive labour legislation breeds. Fortunately Judge Parker is no longer in British Columbia, but I suggest it will be years before labour reaction to his restrictive measures in British Columbia will disappear. I hope, for all time now, that that government has finally brought in a decent and civilized piece of labour legislation.

We are elected by the people to make unpopular decisions, and no matter what form this bill takes it will be unpopular with the railway workers of Canada. We assumed the right to stand for office and we must assume that responsibility, but we should not be prepared to cede our responsibilities, on the basis of the Woods Task Force Report, to some independent commission made up of three academics from various universities.

I could recite many statements that have appeared in editorials which condemn this type of strike action on the part of workers in industry. Many statements have been made to the effect that we cannot have strikes in essential industries. Nobody has defined an essential industry, but certainly the railways, airlines and other such industries are essential. Certainly the duties of policemen and firemen are essential.

• (1530)

In 1907 the then deputy minister of labour, one Mackenzie King, made the same statement the Leader of the Opposition made this morning, that when private rights become public wrongs the House of Commons must stand as a man and exercise its responsibility to the general public. It is unfortunate that in reality this legislation, which will be for the general good of the country, will work certain hardships on the unfortunate workers of the railways.

As one who has had some experience in this field I plead with members to stop playing petty politics with a piece of legislation of this importance. We should stop negotiating in respect of 8 cents or 10 cents, and 10 cents or 13 cents or something else. An hon. gentleman made a case for 13 cents, and someone else made a case for 34 cents. I could take productivity figures and make a good case for 40 cents. This will be the arbitrator's job. We do not negotiate collective agreements on the floor of the House of Commons.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. Does the hon. member have the consent of the House to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman from Ottawa wishes to speak and I promise that I shall not take too long. What I am about to say of course may surprise many. I was never left with the impression during railway disputes, and I was involved in more than one, that the railway companies necessarily hide behind legislation or government action if they can avoid it. As the labour critic of the Conservative Party astutely put it yesterday, there have been two pieces of back-to-work legislation in 25 years. He could have said 75 years, but he started of course from the date of the first one.

The hon. gentleman who is talking from his seat should remember another piece of legislation I have in my memory in respect of compulsory legislation, which would have ordered the dock workers in the city of Montreal back to work. Fortunately that piece of legislation never saw the light of day. The author of that piece of legislation is still a member of this House. I shall not identify him, but he is a member of the New Democratic Party.

When we start throwing stones in respect of our relationship toward the workers we are being hypocritical because few of us worry about the workers. We worry about our political future and what effect our position will have on voters the next time around. The difference between a parliamentarian and a puppet is that one is a man who will get up and vote for unpopular legislation if it is in the general good of this country. I say, leave the bill as it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The Minister of Labour is a sensitive person who represents a labour riding. Through the many years in which I have known him he has always shown great sympathy for the cause of the labour movement. If you take the legislation before us and couple it with one or two amendments—one that I recommended to the minister and one which places a limit on the time the arbitrator might take—the plight of the railway worker, for the first time in 20 years, may be recognized by the Canadian public. There may be a decent settlement, and should be a decent settlement. But we must give the arbitrator something with which to work. Otherwise the dispute will deteriorate further. That might help us but it will not help the workers. If too much is put in the legislation then we will impede the flexibility of the negotiating team, the flexibility of the mediator and the flexibility of the arbitrator.

If you share Blakeney's philosophy at least have the courage to get up and say what this parliament needs is compulsory arbitration, and that is the end of it. You fellows in the corner know you cannot have it both ways. Every time you try to have it both ways in this House of Commons—I will not say it. You fool nobody. I shall put it that way.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone beyond my time. In conclusion I should like to say we have a piece of legislation before this House, as we had on other occasions such as the waterfront strike, to bring an end to this sorry mess. At the same time it will make it possible for the employees of the railways to come out of this with the advantages they deserve, and the railway companies with an understanding that never again can they hide from or shirk their responsibility to the railway workers of this country. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member for Verdun would not have denigrated my position. I wish he had mentioned my name when he spoke about the introduction of a certain piece of legislation which I, as a private member, introduced. I want to point out to him, and to the House, that at the time I did that, it related to an industrial dispute on the waterfront in Montreal with which the hon. member for Verdun was quite familiar at that time. I am quite proud of the fact that I did give notice of the introduction of that bill because if I had not done that the damn strike would never have been settled.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am not surprised at the hon. gentleman's intervention. It is typical. He is a courageous member of parliament. He says what he thinks. The point I was making was simply that included in that legislation was an order for the men to go back to work. Am I right or wrong on that?

Mr. Howard: That is why I rose on the point of order. I wish the hon. member had—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair feels that hon. members are raising points of order rather than carrying on the debate. I think we are wasting the time of the House. The hon. member has the right to identify himself but I do not think we should prolong the debate on this matter. If hon. members wish to express views on this matter later they may do so.

● (1540)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, thanks to the hon. member for Vegreville who was on the list to speak at this time I am now given the opportunity to speak. I had waited impatiently yesterday and today. I have waited to hear from the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister should make it perfectly clear what the stand of the government is on matters such as this. In every other case from 1950 the prime minister, in connection with matters such as this, has taken a prominent part. Indeed, my predecessor in office did so. He led off, and on one occasion when the minister of labour in my government spoke, the late Mr. Pearson said that the first requisite course to be followed was that the Prime Minister should speak. I followed him immediately, and I pass on to the Prime Minister the examples of the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the late Right Hon. Lester Pearson. We would like to know where he stands on this matter. He can smirk, I do not mind that.

Mr. Trudeau: We stand together, which your cabinet never did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He presumes to be an authority on labour, and he was at the bar. It would be interesting to hear him speak and explain the very lengthy delay which has taken place and why no effective action was taken by his government for months and months on end. As late as July 26 the government was still playing around with this matter. The hon. member for Verdun has just spoken. We Baptists have a course that is sometimes followed. When there is a vacancy, or a vacancy is anticipated, individuals come and preach for a call. Having listened to the hon. member for Verdun today, and with the attention that his remarks received from the Prime Minister, I feel sure that he was actually doing that, and the Prime Minister was indicating, by his total indifference to what the hon. member for Verdun was saying, that there is little, or no hope, for the return to the cabinet of the hon. member for Verdun.

[Mr. Howard.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He touched a sore point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I listened to the Minister of Transport. I always do. He has a way of debating that should be emulated by many of us in the House. He has clarity, a vocabulary, enthusiasm and knowledge, and I am wondering why, after all the blundering and meandering that has been going on for months under the present Minister of Labour, the Prime Minister had not called in the experienced labour leader, the present Minister of Transport, to give him and the government some ideas as to what might be done to prevent this strike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has the answers. He has the experience. He has the knowledge of the NDP that no other member of the House has. He is able to expose their weaknesses because it is not too long ago that he was weaned from that party.

I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre today, and I can only say that there was about his address that unctuous attitude that only in that party resides a feeling for the people of Canada and for the labour men of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what they feel, and they applaud the statement. I am glad to have their approval. It is passing strange that with all their knowledge of the subject today British Columbia is simply inundated with strikes.

Mr. Broadbent: Not one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member from Ontario is one who does not know anything that is going on in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: He does not even know what is going on in Ontario.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But why do they not apply in the province of British Columbia the vast knowledge that they have in the settlement of labour disputes? It is not a simple matter, but the responsibility for what is before us today rests on the government of Canada. They are responsible for their failure to act in connection with inflation, and I want to make that very clear.

One of the best articles that I have read lately on the subject of labour appeared in the July 30, 1973, issue of U.S. News and World Report. There appeared an article on an interview with Peter J. Brennan, U.S. Secretary of Labour, who had been a most distinguished leader in union circles in the United States. In answer to one question he pointed out the reason for the strike mentality, and indeed the need sometimes for entering into the strike world on the part of labour. The question was:

> Why aren't the unions pressing for larger pay increases in view of what's been happening to the cost of living?

His answer was:

I can only tell you what I hear in talking to some of them. They're very concerned with fighting inflation. They realize that higher living costs are taking a serious toll on their members. If they just try to get a larger bite in each new contract, it means they are only running to catch up, never really getting ahead.

What have they done in the United States. What about the steelworkers? He refers to them, in particular in connection with compulsory arbitration, to which Secretary Brennan takes the strongest possible objection. He said:

When negotiations are going on and both sides know that a strike is possible, then more issues are forced into the open and you get better bargaining.

I think that was the viewpoint as well of the Minister of Transport as I listened to him today.

Under compulsory arbitration, where the government is standing there threatening to make you work, it is very difficult to get good, acceptable agreements.

Some unions, such as the Steelworkers in their industry, are moving toward a method called "voluntary binding arbitration", in which both sides agree voluntarily to abide by the terms of the final decision. Under this system, if negotiations get to a stalemate, an impartial third party chosen by both sides is brought in who hears all the facts and decides on the terms of the contract.

Unions have shown this year that they can act responsibly and make this kind of bargaining work. We have been working on this kind of plan with the President's Commission for Industrial Peace. It is a much better system than passing a lot of punitive laws.

Then he mentioned railway unions in the United States. The question was:

Do you see a need now for any law in the transportation field?

The answer was:

I don't think so. The railroad unions have leaders that have been around for some time, and we all get educated after a while to move in the direction we should be moving. They settled their agreement 3½ months ahead of time, which was the first time it's been done in the history of the country.

What have we been doing? The Prime Minister diddles and the Minister of Labour daddles on and on, whereas in the United States a settlement was brought about three and a half months before the expiry of the contract.

And for the first time a number of unions were able to get together.

There has been no serious endeavour on the part of this government to act. It has refused to admit that there is any inflation within our country. Indeed, it is only a few weeks ago, when the Prime Minister was asked questions in the House, that he gave his answer in connection with bread. It is one that should be referred to. On that occasion, I said that government action to keep down consumer costs by a subsidy to the manufacturers of bread and the like, or the reduction of the amount paid by four cents per bushel, would increase the price of bread in this country by an estimated two or three cents a loaf. What did the Prime Minister say? He said no, the increase would be one-tenth of one per cent. Well, he was 200 per cent wrong, because since then the price of bread has gone up by as much as I had predicted on that occasion, and even more.

● (1550)

The government that refused to consider any action to meet the situation within our country has allowed this snowball of inflation to go on and on, and has failed to reduce government expenditures. Indeed, today the government is engaged in an orgy of expenditure in this country, as never before. The Minister of Transport laughs. Under my administration the maximum expenditure was $6 billion per year. Now it is $20 billion. Under my administration the cost of living in Canada advanced more slowly than in any other country in the world. The Minister of Justice was in the seclusion of a university at that time and does not know anything about the matter.

An hon. Member: He is going back there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not sure. That statement was made by the then president of the United States, the late John F. Kennedy. However, in the last two or three years there has not been any serious endeavour on the part of this government to meet inflation. The Prime Minister laughs.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not laughing. I am listening.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When those poor people came from Montreal, those employees of the taxi company, who said, "Would you do something for us", has he forgotten what he said? What did he say to them.

Mr. Trudeau: Do you remember, John?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister asks whether I remember. He said, "Mangez de la merde". He can do the translating.

Mr. Trudeau: It didn't come out like that, John. You had better rehearse it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is the first time we have activated the Prime Minister. He now has said a word on this matter. So, I am happy that he is taking his position in dealing with this matter. Mr. Chairman, months have gone by. What did they produce? The mountain in labour produced a mouse, unacceptable to the men who work. They will be forced to go back to work and to receive less than they should be receiving in view of the rise in the cost of living since the report was made by Mr. Justice Munroe. Why? Why are they taking that course of action?

I do not countenance the endeavour to intimidate parliament, but only a very small number yesterday engaged in that. The members of the labour unions who are asking for action are responsible men. The unions that want action are led by responsible men who want to keep the law. They demand fairness, but they are not getting fairness and justice under this bill that is before the House. There is no question about it.

Why has the minister not given the actual amount that the government intends to provide? What did the government do? It set up legislation that provides for the appointment for an arbitrator or mediator, who is to make recommendations after these men are forced back to work under terms that I say are unfair and unjust. That provision is put in as a carrot. The men who work are to expect something more, after the appointment of the arbitrator or the mediator. That provision is to deceive them that something is going to be done. It is a psychedelic carrot, designed to produce delusion.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has had weeks to speak, and for weeks now he has been speaking everywhere on how successful he was going to be and actually was, and, oh, he was so wrong! Never has a minister been so wrong for so long. I must say that some of the interviews he gave would qualify him as a minister of bromides, as he endeavoured to make the people of Canada believe that something was being done. When I asked my question yesterday, he said that the matter was not correctly reported. I always believe in having these reports, and I give him the opportunity now to say what part of the report is wrong. On August 2 he went to Montreal, accompanied by a group of sycophants and press artillery, and made one of the immortal statements of all time in labour relations.

He mentioned himself in a very modest way and said, "We're down here to wrap this up". That is one of the strangest statements I have ever seen. He said, "We're down here to wrap this one up and settle it." He said he was optimistic. In another interview on August 20 he said, "We'll end the rail strike tonight".

Mr. Trudeau: We still hope to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which night?

Mr. Trudeau: Tonight, if you sit down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad of the assistance of the Prime Minister. When the minister said that on August 20, he meant the night of August 31. I am glad for that interpretation.

Mr. Chrétien: Tonight is not the 21st but the 31st. Change the two to a three.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development interjecting? He is closed out of his own office. I did not want to bring the minister into this, but if he interjects himself—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the right hon. member, but, it being four o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR—LENGTH OF TODAY'S SITTING

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels and I think you will find there is agreement not to proceed today with private members' hour but instead to return to committee of the whole and continue with the bill before it. I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that those same discussions involved the possibility of the House sitting until six o'clock this evening, then rising for dinner, and returning at eight o'clock, to continue sitting until some progress is made in the completion of this bill this evening.

• (1600)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker I have made it plain before that we are perfectly willing, in fact most anxious, that we should waive such of the rules as are necessary to proceed with this bill. We agree to carry on until six o'clock, then come back this evening and proceed until the bill has completed all stages as far as this House is concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, our views about this bill are well known. Nevertheless, we think that parliament should reach a decision on it without undue delay, and we are a party to the suggested schedule for this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we are in complete agreement with everybody.

Mr. La Salle: On behalf of the independents, I gave my consent, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in order that we have firm guidance I was going to suggest that we might put this agreement in the form of a House order.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), that we suspend the private members' hour, that is, from four o'clock to five o'clock, and that this House pursue consideration of the present order of business until six o'clock; that the House rise from six o'clock to eight o'clock and pursue the sitting after eight o'clock, again on the consideration of the same order of business.

The Chair is not clear, however, whether the order should include some finality in respect of the decision on this order of business. Perhaps some guidance could be given on this subject.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that we will pursue this order until all stages have been completed.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS AND SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-217, to provide for the resumption and continuance of operations of railways and for the settlement of the disputes with respect to terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees—Mr. Munro (Hamilton East)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose it was considering clause 2. Maybe before allowing the right hon. member for Prince Albert to complete his remarks the committee would consider the possibility of consenting to allow the right hon. member to go beyond his time as there are only a few seconds available to him.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 2—Words and expressions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I will just take a very few seconds. I wanted to summarize the situation. This government must get off its seat and act in connection with inflation. It has refused to admit that it has been asleep on the job, and the result is that today our people are in a position which has never been equalled in this country.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, there must be justice for the union people who are being ordered back to work, and that is not contained in the bill now before the House.

Thirdly, Mr. Chairman, I should like someone to tell me who is going to pay for the increases. Let me, as strongly as I can before this House, say that we rely on the so-called promise of the Minister of Transport that, as far as freight rate horizontal increases are concerned, they are to be frozen for 18 months. We on the Prairies have been paralysed under the last two governments. When the war ended the discrimination against the western provinces in freight rates was about 17 per cent; since that time there has been an increase across the board horizontally of 180 per cent. The result is that today in the western provinces it is impossible for industry to be developed because of the diversity of these rates.

I want to make it as clear as I can that there is no spirit of alienation in western Canada such as some people endeavour to conjure up, but there is a determination that we should not continue to be simply the recipient of crumbs from the rich man's table. We will not stand for another horizontal increase in freight rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are many other matters I could have dealt with Mr. Chairman, but I shall not do so because I do not want to keep other members from having an opportunity to speak. I conclude by saying that in no way do I approve the exercise of force against parliament. That cannot be condoned, and it would substitute anarchy for the right of each individual to freedom. There were a few people yesterday who acted in a way they should not have acted, and they were condemned for it by their responsible leaders. But, Mr. Chairman, that does not deny the right of individuals across Canada to come to Parliament Hill when action is not being taken by a somnolent government, to place before that government and the Canadian people their needs, their rights, and to demand an assurance that something will be done for them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I think from now on each of us really should try to confine his remarks to the time available to him. I know that the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert and the hon. member for Verdun did not ask for additional time, but there was a generosity in the committee to extend it. However, I think we really should try to contain that generosity because we are all anxious to have an opportunity to say something with respect to this measure, and to say it in a relatively short time.

I should like to commence with a quotation from that all revealing volume called Hansard, which I could not help remembering as I was listening to the right hon. member for Prince Albert. At page 2606 of Hansard for July 24, 1958, there appears the following:

> The chronology of this unhappy business of a labour dispute which began, as the Minister of Labour has just reminded us, over a year ago and of a strike which began on May 16, is a monument to an inept governmental performance... this procedure has exhibited a careless unawareness of a labour problem which was permitted to develop into a crisis, and which has created loss, distress, great inconvenience and business dislocation to an important section of the Canadian people.

Those were the remarks of the Hon. Lester B. Pearson when he was leader of the opposition in 1968 and the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert was prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not prime minister in 1968. You have the wrong year altogether. That is the muddle you are in.

Mr. Howard: In 1958, I am sorry. He was talking about a situation in which there was a dislocation of the Pacific coast steamship service, operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Very briefly, in that situation in 1958 the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, who was prime minister, saw fit to bring in a bill relating to compulsory arbitration, forcing back to work those people on strike.

There was a provision in his bill for a wage increase. That wage increase had a relationship to the conciliation board report which showed that the employer representative on the board recommended a 17 per cent increase, while the employee nominee on the board recommended a 31 per cent increase. The conciliation board chairman recommended a 25 per cent increase, and the right hon. member for Prince Albert brought in a bill containing an 8 per cent increase.

● (1610)

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Howard: Enough of that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My recollection is that there was no division in the House on that matter in 1958. The CCF stood with us on that. They certainly did not vote against us.

Mr. Howard: That is absolutely correct. It is also correct that the then prime minister sold the people down the river at that time as well. The question, in terms of a settlement of that dispute, is what it is now. What could we as a parliament do to settle the dispute? I simply point out that the prime minister of that day was talking out of two sides of his mouth, which he also did today.

I do not know why there is so much testiness and hesitancy on the part of members when talking about compulsory arbitration. I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Labour and many others say they do not believe in compulsory arbitration, and then go ahead with it. Why the timidity? Why don't they recognize a factual situation and admit that what we are doing today is imposing an arbitrary settlement upon a group of workers and companies? Why don't they be honest and cut out all this b.s.? Why hide behind some theoretical concept of collective bargaining? We had compulsory arbitration in 1950, in 1958 when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was Prime Minister, in 1966, and we have it today. Why in hell don't we say so?

Do hon. members think that the 56,000 non-operating workers being sent back to work do not recognize this for what it is? Do they think the shop crafts, who have not yet reached the stage of being able to determine whether they will go on strike, do not recognize this for what it is? What about the running trades involved in the UTU? Do members not think they know what is happening? It is compulsory arbitration, and let's quit beating around the bush about it.

We must recognize one other fact of life. In 1950, when the first compulsory arbitration proceedings took place in this country, we destroyed the process of collective bargaining for railroad workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: We have a situation today where the Minister of Labour is able to stand up and say we are following the usual procedure. Of course, it is usual. It is an intrusion into free collective bargaining. We in this country and in this parliament do not want free collective bargaining to operate in the railroads, except to the extent that if a settlement can be reached without a strike or lock-out, we endorse it. The minute there is a strike or lock-out, we do not want to have anything to do with it. That is what we are doing today.

The Minister of Transport, knowledgeable as he is in the process of collective bargaining and his involvement in it, laid it right on the line. The only effective collective bargaining that takes place when there is a dispute is when there is a test of one strength against another. The strongest wins. The Minister of Transport said he had been involved in an industrial dispute and strike situation where they had an excellent case, but lost because they were weak. He gave another example where they had a poor case and won because they were strong. We are not permitting that to happen with the railroad workers.

We should quit trying to kid ourselves and everyone else. The railroad workers do not have any effective mechanism for collective bargaining. The procedures set out in the act are a myth and a sham. Yesterday, the government reinforced the position that if this parliament goes along with them on this, in any subsequent railroad negotiations it is forever committed to say, regardless of the justification of the case, whether good, bad, strong or weak, whatever the chairman of the conciliation board says, that that will be the imposed settlement. How can there be any free collective negotiations with that knowledge in the minds of the CNR and CPR?

They know full well that all they have to do is sit back, drag their feet, delay, procrastinate, and go through the mechanics of appearing before a conciliation officer. They know their case has to be made with the conciliation board chairman. No matter what the chairman says, all they have to do is be tough and that will be the settlement. What kind of collective bargaining is that? How do you classify the position of a government which says that is what it is going to impose upon the workers, a position which supports that of the companies? That is exactly what is happening.

In a normal strike situation the intention of those on strike is to create some difficulties for their employer. It is to cause a loss of production, loss of sales or some financial injury so that the employer cannot stand the losses any longer and will sit down and sign a contract. That is also the process in a lock-out. The employer causes difficulty and injury to the workers by locking them out. When the workers find it too difficult, they are willing to sign a contract. That is what collective bargaining is in a strike or lock-out situation.

In the railroad industry, the injury is not to the employer. It is to everyone but the employer. The difficulties are not experienced by the CNR or CPR. They are experienced by farmers on the Prairies who cannot ship their grain, by people in isolated communities who do not receive their shipments of goods, and by auto manufacturers who cannot get their materials in or ship their products. The difficulties are experienced by everyone but the employers. That is where parliament comes into the picture.

Regardless of all the histrionics of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport, when an industrial dispute takes place among railroaders there is no alternative but the imposition of a settlement. The way the situation is today, there is no other agency that can do that except the parliament of Canada.

By imposing a settlement upon the workers, we are destroying free collective bargaining. It has in fact not effectively existed for the past 23 years. It was destroyed in 1950. I agree that arbitration is the only way. Does anyone have any other solution? The Babe Ruths of the negotiations, such as the hon. member for Verdun, are few and far between. Even he has outlived his usefulness in that regard.

Let us not keep up the myth about collective bargaining, how important it is and how we respect it, when every time it breaks down we discredit it more. Do members think that the railroad workers, the negotiators and the companies do not know this? We talk about the necessity of finding some other procedure. The Conservative party seems to have opted for the Woods report, and the concept of some peace commission to deal with collective bargaining such as a public interest disputes commission. Apart from that, I doubt if you will get three independents, as the hon. member for Verdun pointed out.

● (1620)

I want to draw the attention of the committee to another fallacy when it comes to accepting that concept. The difficulty is that it is cumbersome. There will be some outside group established for the purpose of analysing and assessing collective bargaining procedures in what are called essential industries, and deciding how they work. And then, when all else has failed the issue will be placed before parliament—precisely what is happening now. Why go through the charade of setting up a series of mechanisms to reach the point we have reached right now?

I can tell you this about the Woods Report: it is the result of my experience gained from operating under the law as it presently stands. The more obstacles you place in the way of collective bargaining the greater the frustration created for the worker on the job and the more strikes you will get, because the worker sees that collective bargaining is getting nowhere. Direct negotiations are engaged in. No settlement. The next step is a conciliation officer. No settlement.

Then a mediator is brought in, maybe more than one. After that, possibly, the public interest commission, and so on. Every one of these steps and obstacles in the way of the collective bargaining process is frustrating to the men concerned. A public interest commission would just be one more obstacle. Its establishment would create more difficulties than it would overcome.

Conciliation boards, as I know them, do not operate on the basis of the information and statistics presented to them. The chairmen—not all of them, but a goodly number—sit down after listening to all the briefs and all the evidence, including all the documents and statistics, and say to the union members and to the company members: Can you guys agree? All the statistics and so on are pushed to one side. If the representatives can agree, that is the basis of the settlement, and that is what the board recommends. If they cannot, the chairman tries to find some middle road, some compromise, and this becomes the basis of a settlement. What is the difference? It is the collective bargaining mechanism through stooges, who are not free agents.

I have gone through it. That is the way the system works. That is not collective bargaining in good faith. I think that under collective bargaining a simple situation should exist. First, the law says there is a contract binding for a certain period of time. At a reasonable point in time before the expiration of the contract, say three or four months, allow the union and management to negotiate—and keep everybody else out of it, including fumbling, inept, incompetent ministers of labour. Let the parties attempt to reach a settlement through the collective bargaining process.

If they fail to do so by the end of the contract period, the employers should have the right to lock out, and the employees should have the right to strike. If this happens in the case of the railway industry, parliament will be in the picture again to institute back-to-work legislation and to propose a settlement. It would then be in a position to do so without relying on the ineptitude of whatever solution board chairmen might conclude in their minds was an equitable settlement. We could act on the basis of a level which we thought was fair and just, a level arrived at publicly and not behind the scenes.

I assess the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition with regard to the collective bargaining process as being a very simple one. Shorn of all its trappings, such as the public interest commission he talked about, and the Woods Commission, his position is a simple one. It is that if union and management can reach an agreement there would not be compulsory arbitration, but if they could not agree, there would be compulsory arbitration. That is the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition. Why does he not say so? Why doesn't he make it clear? I know it is difficult for him to do that, but surely there are some in his party who could spell it out. This is the position I want to take. We are involved at the present time in compulsory arbitration; let us face it.

If we wish to do something worthwhile for the railroad industry and for the unions and the workers, if we want to do something worthwhile for collective bargaining, this is the line we should take. The companies were not bargaining in good faith. Why not? Because they knew their position could be salvaged by governmental and parliamentary action. I say this to the government: If you really want to do something meaningful to promote collective bargaining and the reaching of a settlement, without the intervention of parliament and without compulsion, you should make it so uncomfortable for the CPR that it will not dare come back to parliament again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: I do not mean to be cruel and destructive. I am not talking about wage increases which will destroy the position of the company, or about demands which are inordinate. I am talking about fairness, justice and equity.

The Canadian Pacific and the CNR have the government in their pockets. They knew before this dispute started that whatever the conciliation board chairman said would be adopted as the position of the government. That was their final offer, and they felt they needed to do no more. Do we have to buy that? Do we have to say halleluja to the conclusions of Craig Munroe? I use the first name to distinguish him from the present minister. Did he know what he was talking about? It is likely not, when he talked about 30 cents. He was likely trying to find what he thought might be a compromise position which the parties would accept. Isn't that what we would be trying to do? We are in that position.

We are not negotiating, we are imposing. We are not making suggestions to the parties as to what they should accept. We are imposing a solution, and the basis of that imposition should be the Weldon Report. We could settle the dispute along those lines. The workers would go back to work, there would be no dislocation, and they would not come back again—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, though I do not have the credentials the hon. member for Verdun possesses in the area of negotiations between labour and management, I rise to take part in this debate as a concerned Canadian and I do speak with some knowledge of the devastating impact which this strike has had upon the Canadian economy and upon the welfare of many millions of Canadians.

I have never been involved in any labour-management negotiations but I own a business in the Town of Vegreville which employs some 65 persons, and I do know one thing: in order to get a fair day's work out of any individual you must reward him with a fair day's pay.

● (1630)

I believe the government has failed miserably in its attempt to deal with and avert this strike in an expeditious manner. I listened to the very eloquent speeches, of the hon. member for Verdun and the Minister of Transport, who attempted to explain away the government's position in relation to the strike. They attempted to tell this House the reason the strike came about, but I should like to state that they failed to convince me. This government failed to expedite a satisfactory solution to the problems which led to this strike.

It is the responsibility and the job of the Minister of Transport to see that goods and people move uninterruptedly in this country, and I suggest he should take stock of his position in relation to this strike.

We are assembled here this afternoon to restore services in Canada which are not only essential but which represent a national lifeline. The cost of this disruption and its effect on our economy has amounted to untold millions of dollars, and the government cannot continue to ignore the situation. This strike has caused a great deal of suffering, discomfort and misery to millions of people.

We are lucky that the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island have shown such generosity, kindness and hospitality. The residents of those two islands have opened their doors and their hearts to the thousands of people stranded there. I must commend the provincial governments and the service clubs, particularly the Lions and the Kinsmen, for the admirable job they have done in helping to overcome the hardships and misery caused by this strike. These organizations and the two governments are to be commended for their outward kindness in accommodating these unfortunate victims.

The innocent victims of this strike have no recourse; they can take no action against anyone. If strikes are to be a way of life in this country perhaps it is time to consider ways and means by which innocent victims, who are detrimentally affected by a work stoppage, can take action against the unions, management, or both.

We have had too many strikes in this country, particularly in essential services. Many services have been interrupted; services which are fundamental and necessary to the orderly functioning of our economy and our society. Most of these services enjoy a monopolistic position because we are provided with no alternative. This has caused corporations, small businesses, farmers, and many others untold hardship and financial loss. Transportation is indeed in this category.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

This country is fed up to the teeth with strikes. The people have had their fill and are demanding alternative methods to the negotiating process. As far as many Canadians are concerned a strike is an obsolete and archaic tool. I understand there are something of the order of 54 strikes taking place in our nation at the present time, and a number of others pending. These will involve thousands of people.

There has been a void of action on the part of this and former Liberal governments to grapple with new devices or techniques which would be more effective in dealing with management-labour disputes. This is especially true in respect of essential services. What has this government done to improve the bargaining process? What has it done to protect the public from disruption of essential services? What has it done since the last legislation in 1966? I suggest the answer is nothing.

When the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson introduced the back-to-work legislation in 1966 he said, as reported at page 7771 of Hansard for August 29 of that year:

> We must find better methods for the negotiation and settlement of disputes in the railway industry, and in other industries; new and improved mediation and conciliation procedures which will take into account new circumstances, new conditions in industrial society; which will more effectively preserve the right of the employee in these new conditions and also adequately protect the national interest, particularly in respect of essential national services.

This government has failed to act or live up to that commitment made by a respected Liberal leader who, I am sure, made that statement in good faith.

What is to be done about future strikes in essential services and future disruptions in transportation? Does the government intend to go along merrily as it has in the past, reacting to each crisis as it happens? Does it intend to continue to act in this way in respect of disruptions in airline service and the service provided by longshoremen and grain handlers, ignoring the fact that this is all part of a larger problem? Or is the government prepared to present to parliament a program to provide for better ways and means of negotiating, in order that the public can be protected against the devastating and damaging effects of strikes in essential services?

Our party has put forward a proposal which I think marks the beginning of a new mechanism. It has been outlined by my leader and by the hon. member for St. John's East. I will not go into detail, but it could be the starting point of a new approach to labour-management disputes, and I hope the government is prepared to give it serious consideration. The government has been known to borrow our ideas in the past and I am sure we will not mind if it does so in the future, particularly, if this will serve the public interest. Perhaps a parliamentary committee should consider the Woods Report and other factors in an attempt to find ways and means for the better settlement of disputes. This government and this parliament should consider this issue immediately.

When considering a public industrial disputes commission it should be noted that it is essential to the proposal that workers in essential services receive fair and just payment. I believe an appropriate pay scale must be established. If the non-op railway workers are considered to be essential workers they must be paid on that basis, just as we pay policemen and firemen in this country on the basis of the essential services they perform.

Many hon. members have alluded to the fact that railway workers perform an essential service. There can be no doubt about that fact. Those employees who are a part of this network must be treated as essential employees. We must ensure that they receive a decent income for their labours, decent working conditions, adequate security, decent pensions and so on.

● (1640)

Furthermore, I believe management and the unions must be encouraged to commence their bargaining process at a much earlier date. Under the existing framework there is too much opportunity to play around rather than bargain meaningfully before the expiration of the contract. This is tantamount to playing a game with the public, all of which is devastating and costly. I believe that appropriate incentives could be put in place to encourage the expedition of the bargaining process prior to the expiration of a contract. These are just a few ideas, but they are ideas which I believe the government can consider.

I am sure there are many other ideas which could be brought forth. The point I want to reiterate very strongly is the fact that we must address ourselves to establishing a much better system of collective bargaining, and a much better system to overcome labour-management disputes in essential services.

I believe it is precisely because of the incompetence of this government in the area of labour unrest, and its poor record in respect of economic management, inflation and the cost of living, that we are presently in a climate of confused economic chaos. Previously I said I believe the people of Canada are fed up with strikes. I want to say, however, that they are also fed up with this government. They are fed up with the economic mess we have at the present time. They are fed up with the deterioration in labour relations. They are fed up because of the government's inaction in respect of averting the strike we are now legislating during this special sitting of the House.

The government was forewarned regarding the implications long before the strike occurred. I am one who believes this strike could have been avoided. I am sure it could have been avoided with a settlement as good as the strikers will receive as a result of this legislation and the negotiation and mediation which follows thereafter.

I do not believe the government accepted its proper responsibility in July. I think we could have moved to settle this strike before the House adjourned in July. On July 26, for example, when the first round of rotating strikes occurred, the hon. member for St. John's East asked the Minister of Labour a question about the strike and the Minister of Labour failed to even recognize that a strike was on our hands. He referred to it merely as a temporary walkout. This is recorded at page 5984 of Hansard. This is an example of sheer incompetence.

What has happened? Grain deliveries have been disastrously affected. Our reputation as a supplier of grain has again become tarnished. Because of additional carrying charges, because of additional demurrage charges, and plugged elevator systems there is less money for the producer. We are now in the midst of the harvest season and the elevator system is plugged because of the railway strike. In the area of livestock the ill-conceived implementation of the export restrictions in respect of beef and pork, which sent thousands of cattle back to farms which originally were destined for market, coupled with rail strikes, has complicated the orderly marketing process of cattle and hogs.

This was a very costly error on the part of the government. Untold millions have been lost in the livestock industry and in the grain industry, the two main industries of western Canada. There is a backlog of processed meat. Cattle are being bought in quantities of one, two, three of four, rather than in hundreds and thousands. The manufacturing industry is being paralysed. Huge lay-offs are being experienced in our communities in western Canada. The merchants are without shoes and clothing to sell. This situation exists not only in western Canada but in central Canada as well.

Then there is the matter of repair parts for machinery and equipment. This has an effect on the harvest. Farmers are unable to buy repair parts in order to keep their machinery in operation. This situation could have been anticipated long before the strike occurred. We are now faced with a gasoline shortage. Even if the trains begin to roll on Monday we could still experience a temporary gasoline shortage which would affect the harvesting operation. This is a matter of life and death because one must take advantage of harvest weather when it is present.

All across this country the detrimental effect of the strike has been recorded. What did the Minister of Transport do during the period leading up to the strike? His expertise in labour-management negotiations has been mentioned previously. Did he exercise his responsibility? Did he use his force and sheer determination to encourage the parties to get together and settle this strike before it actually occurred? I do not know, but I did not gather from his speech this afternoon that he undertook his task in a responsible manner. Perhaps he has been as ineffective here as in mapping out a new national transportation policy.

This is an area in which some radical changes and approaches might be mapped out, rather than the piecemeal approach that was taken at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. We also wonder about the role of the CNR and Air Canada that was alluded to by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East. These two bodies have not been scrutinized by the parliamentary committee.
