Legal Decisions.
1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrears, and the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncollected is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

IMPORTANT NEWS.

Something the People of Canada will Appreciate.

A Word from Halifax in the Right Direction.

Annapolis Speaks with no Uncertain Sound.

The late Hon. W. F. DesBarres was for more than 33 years, a Judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and his name of DesBarres is held in the highest estimation by the people of the Maritime Provinces.

His son, Hon. W. F. DesBarres, is Registrar of the Admiralty District of Nova Scotia, having held the office for 22 years. In conversation with our Representative, a short time since, he made the following statement:

"I have used SKODA'S DISCOVERY and SKODA'S LITTLE TABLETS, for a few weeks, with the most gratifying results, and am of the opinion that they are of a high medicinal quality. I have no hesitation in endorsing the Skoda line of Remedies, and recommending them to the people of the Dominion, as articles of superior merit, and well worthy their confidence. I fully believe these Remedies to be all their proprietors claim for them."

The people of Nova Scotia are justly proud of their institutions of learning, and their educators rank among the finest in the country. At the head of many of these institutions in the U. S., are placed men, who hail from the Dominion, and whose methods of teaching and discipline are regarded by the American people, as the finest in the world. For 15 years Mr. S. C. Shaffer has been one of the leading educators in the Province of Nova Scotia.

At present he is Principal of the Public Schools in Annapolis. In speaking of SKODA'S REMEDIES he says:

"Having used two bottles of SKODA'S DISCOVERY with the LITTLE TABLETS, I have formed a very favorable opinion of these remedies. For Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Kidneys, I believe them to be the most excellent Medicines I am so thoroughly convinced of their curative properties, that I shall take the full course of the remedies, as recommended by the company."

AT DEATH'S DOOR.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

EXTREME DEBILITY AFTER THE GRIP.

Mr. Peter Lingley, Councillor, Peterborough, Ontario, N. B., says:

"Oct. 21, 1892.—Last winter I had a very severe attack of the Grip, which left me very feeble and prostrated. I was unable to get up, and was so nervous I could not sleep. I was under Doctor's treatment for months, but received no benefit. My friends thought I had contracted some low fever, but they were expecting my death at any day. At last resort they decided to try"

HAWKER'S NERVE AND STOMACH TONIC, 3 bottles of which Rapidly Restored Me to Health. I slept well, my appetite was restored and I soon became stronger, stouter and more vigorous than I had been for years. I cannot speak too highly of this medicine, as I feel that I owe my life to its virtues.

POETRY.

The Courtier's Reply.

An old Norse king, one dark and stormy night,
Sat with his courtiers in his windy hall,
The oak logs blazed, and shafts of ruddy light Wavered like moving spears along the wall.

Without, like some old Viking armed for war,
The tempest wandered in his robe of rain,

Or, rushing with a clamor from afar, Roared through the castle and was gone again.

The monarch and his bearded courtiers sat
All silent round the fire, with downcast eyes,
No sound within was heard, save when a rat
Scampered across the floor, with dismal cry.

But suddenly a bird, wet winged and bright,
Flashed over them, and vanished as it came.

Out of the night, it vanished into night,
As brief and beautiful as a falling flame.

"Such," said the king, "such is this life
of ours—
A moment's passage through a lighted room;
The taste of this sweet breath—then Life's transient day in its eternal gloom."

A moment no one spoke; then with a tear
An aged courtier hastened to respond:
"True, sire, the tired bird did not tarry here
Because the nest God gave it lay beyond."

SELECT STORY.

HIS OPPORTUNITY.

BY HENRY CLEMENS PEARSON.

CHAPTER VI.—Continued.

The lady saw it, and said,—
"I am sure you will excuse my question when I tell you that almost every stranger who calls here has something to dispose of. Some of them are positively insulting in their pertinacity. It is they who have made me suspicious, and perhaps inhospitable.
Will you walk in, sir?"

Chamberlain followed her into a square, stuffy furnished parlor, and accepted a chair, his hostess seating herself on a sofa opposite him. At his left a door opened into a second parlor in which there was no light.

By a window at the further end he could just discern a white-clothed figure.
From the graceful curves and careless posture, he decided that it was a young girl. She seemed not aware of his presence. Meanwhile Miss Whittier was regarding him with a courteous what-is-it, sir? look that required him to speak.

"I will state the object of my visit as briefly as possible," he said, in response to her mute interrogation.
"I am in the employ of the File Company."

"Indeed," said Miss Whittier's eyes,
"you had better have been a peddler," but her lips remained shut.

"Since coming here I have seen the wretchedness of Steep Street till it seems as if I could stand it no longer.
I believe I know the whole story of the misery that hangs like a cloud over the settlement,—I know every rum-hole."

"Undoubtedly," said the eyes.
"And I think I know of a way to alleviate these evils. I must, however, ask your assistance in carrying out my scheme."

"I think," was the cold answer,
"that I have all the charities on hand that I care to encourage; yet, if you will show that your plan is a good one, I will contribute five dollars."

"You misunderstand me. I ask for no money. Let me explain. The mill people, many of them, drink beer, cider, ale, and stronger liquors, because there is nothing else to drink on the street.
The wells furnish poison. The people do not drink it. There is, and has been, absolute suffering on this account.
I have been here several months, and all I have tasted has been rain-water from a hoghead cistern. Now, my proposal is to furnish good water for the mill people, and wash the taste for poisonous liquors out of their mouths."

"I doubt if it can be done."

"Even if it can be, is it not the duty of the File Company to do it?" replied the lady.

"The Company will do nothing; of that I am assured, and unless others do it, this suffering must continue,"
was the quick reply.

"Can it be done?"
"I think so," said Chamberlain, earnestly, "for this reason: The ridge upon which your place is situated extends to the next village, where the formation of land is nearly the same as here. In that village is a driven well that flows hundreds of gallons of pure water daily. Were such a well at the head of this street, it would amply furnish all the requirements."

"What is your proposition?" asked Miss Whittier, trying to hide her interest.

"I thought," said he, hesitating a little, "that if you would sell, for a reasonable price, a spot in the lower part of your garden, large enough for the well, that I should like to buy it and try the experiment."

"Young man," interrupted the lady, suddenly, "did the File Company commission you to talk this up to me?"

"They did not; nor has any one in the company the faintest idea that it is thought of," was the prompt reply.

"You knew, perhaps, that the tenements were built close up to the line of our estate to gratify a grudge that the Company held against my father?"

"I did not."

Miss Whittier mused a few moments.
"How much would the well cost?" she said, finally.

"The man whom I consulted, offered to do it for one thousand dollars, and take the risk."

"That is considerable money."
"It is with regard to the money that I wished to ask a favor of you."

There was a movement in the next room, and the visitor wondered, uneasily, how much of an audience the darkness contained.

"I wish to put the money in your hands, and have you close the bargain and pay the bill," continued he.

"That is a very extraordinary request. Pray why do you wish it?"
Have you yet collected the money?"

"The money to be used was left me by my father. I shall collect from no one; and I ask you to pay the bills that I may not be suspected of doing it."

"Really, I don't understand it.
Why do you wish to hide the deed?"
inquired Miss Whittier.

"I am, as I said, in the employ of the File Company, if they know that I do this, the consequences will be unpleasant,—that is the reason. Now will you grant me the favor, and keep my secret?"

Instead of answering, she called into the next room,—
"Miriam!"

"Yes, auntie."

"Will you come here a moment?"

The occupant of the lounge chair at the further end of the second parlor rose and came forward into the light.

"Have you been listening to our conversation, my dear?"

"Parts of it," was the languid reply.
"What do you think of it?"

"I don't see why you should care;
you can put the money into the hands of your lawyer, and let him pay the bills."

"Perhaps you are right," was the answer.

During the short conversation, Chamberlain had been closely observing the young girl. When he heard the name Miriam, it sent his blood with a bound to his heart. At once he felt that the fair girl whom he had so awkwardly spattered with mud in the grinding-stone, was about to appear again; nor was he mistaken. She stood in the doorway, looking fairer than when he had for the first time acknowledged the power of her beauty. She bestowed upon him a well-bred glance of indifference, and then turned her attention to her aunt, as if he were not present.

The same anger that had raged in his heart before, when she had raged him a file-grinder, for an instant came over him, and then, with a firm setting of his teeth together, he crushed it.

She glanced again at him, as the determined look so plainly stamped itself upon his face. It interested her, and following the new impulse, she said,—

"Will you introduce me, auntie?"

Miss Whittier complied with no little astonishment, after discovering afresh that the surname of the young man was.

The young girl sank into a huge chair, and said to him, with a winking glance,—

"Is it not very dangerous working in the file factory, Mr. Chamberlain?"
"In some parts it is," he replied.

"I visited the works recently and saw all the departments. Some rooms were dreadful,—full of steam and heat, —and others had terrible machines in them. It seemed hardly possible that men could work there every day for years."

"There are some very powerful machines there," answered Chamberlain.

"They all drink, do they not? Mr Lamson said the works brutalized them so that in a few years they were little better than beasts."

"That is entirely untrue. Many of the men love their families, are honest, and upright."

"Yes, Mr. Lamson should know about this," she said.

"He does know," was the reply,
with unmistakable emphasis.

The expression of mischief that had lighted the young lady's eyes when the conversation began, was replaced by one of offended dignity. Rising, she said to the other lady,—

"Will you excuse me, auntie?" and swept from the room.

The caller also rose to go; as he did so, Miss Whittier, looking him full in the eyes, said,—

"Mr. Chamberlain, will you tell me honestly your motive in trying to help this wretched people on Steep Street?"

With a blush, and voice trembling, Tom witnessed the confusion so new to him; and how hard it was, only those who have fought the battle and conquered, can ever know.

"Because, madam, I have started out to serve the Lord Jesus Christ.
I am but young in the service, and perhaps not over-wise; but it seemed that this sin-stricken street needed help, and such help as I can I shall give,"
he said.

The lady held out her hand and gave him a warm grasp.

"I am glad you told me. Your secret shall be safe. But do not try to hide your profession. Do you attend church here?" she said.

He mentioned having attended the North Church; and as he left, the lady again shook hands and cordially invited him to call, and also to sit in her parlor whenever he attended church.

In passing out, he saw Miss Whitney in a hammock that swung by the path.
In the darkness he could not tell whether or not she acknowledged his presence. Feeling much as if he had again thrown mud at her by his eager awkwardness, he walked slowly down to his lodgings.

Full of his project, and anxious to impart to his friend the successful termination of his negotiations, Chamberlain hurried to Temple's boarding-place. The latter listened in silence until he had finished, then said,—

"Don't you think you are putting out your money rather freely for a laboring man?"

Chamberlain colored. He had never occurred to him that his friend might consider his action at all Quixotic.

"I believe this to be a practical and safe investment," he replied.

"I don't know about that. That amount of money put into a store would pay you interest if nothing else; but this well, which I should fear will never furnish much water, seems to me a visionary undertaking."

"I believe it can be successfully made.
The man who bored that in the village below is sure of it."

"Of course he is; it will be a couple of hundred dollars in his pocket to have that conviction. But really, it does not seem to me that it is actually necessary. There are wells on the street."

How much these remarks discouraged Chamberlain would be difficult to tell. The thought would obtrude itself that he might be wrong, and that the Steep Streeters perhaps neglected water from choice, rather than from necessity.
It would be possible even now to graciously retire from the whole undertaking. The co-operation of the conservative Miss Whittier had been most grateful to him. Yet, he was enough of a man to refrain from carrying a project through for mere pride's sake.

"I will tell you," said his friend, they wouldn't hear to it on account of noting the disappointment expressed on his mobile face "we will investigate this matter. I may not be a judge

I rarely drink water; never did even before I acquired a taste for the strong-or liquors. We know where most of the wells are. Let's test the water by taking a drink from each."

"I need no further conviction as to the badness of the water, but am very willing to convince you. We will do it," agreed the other.

The succeeding day, as they came home to dinner, Forsyth's well, at the foot of the street, was visited. A tin pail, weighted by a stone attached to a clothes line, was the only means of drawing the water.

"You fellows lost something down there?" inquired the owner from his seat on the doorstep.

"Oh, no; we are going to have a drink," answered Temple.

"A drink! a drink! Has Pfaff failed or are you going to commit suicide? Here, hold on, till I get the bottle and sweeten it for you."

"No, thank you; we wish to try it and see how bad it is."

"Well, it's as good as any about, but it's rank poison for all that. I believe, on my word, that there is more typhoid fever to the glass in that water than in any other in the country. Help yourselves; the more you take,
the less there is left."

"Smells rather rank, doesn't it?" remarked Temple, sniffing at the yellowish-colored liquid.

"Drink away; smells for nothing on Steep Street," was the reply.

Most conscientiously the investigator took a few sips and then poured the rest away, remarking as he did so:— "I think this well is poisoned by the drains that have soaked the ground full of their filth. Let us go further up the street and find a place where there is no such accessory, and I believe the water will be pure and sweet."

"Why is it not good in the works?"
"I think it is. Most of the men prefer beer or something stronger.
Few know how the water does taste;
I must confess I do not. You remember the day you were so thirsty, when we went into "Hole in the Wall"?"
even that day I did not touch a drop of water."

A short walk brought them to the head of the street, and abreast the Bowman cottage. Passing through the narrow lane that separated it from the adjoining tenements, they approached one of the rear dwellings. Mrs.
Hidden's door standing wide open, emboldened them to enter.

"Can we have a drink of water?"
"Indeed you can," was the widow's hearty response, peering out a glassful and handing it to them.

Chamberlain passed it to Temple, who raised it to his lips. As he did so, a burning flush swept over his face, and seemingly by a violent effort, he set it down, saying in an unsteady voice:—
"There is liquor in it, is there not?"

"To be sure; it would give you the cramp without. That won't hurt yo-
The children drink it every day."

"I want a drink," hissed a little one, toddling up and receiving a liberal portion of the doubly poisoned dose.

"Is James Hidden your son?" inquired Chamberlain, a thought suddenly coming to him.

"He is that, although his ashamed I am to own him, the dirty little drunkard! What would his father—God rest his soul—say if he knew what his boy had come to?"

"I don't see what else you could expect. You probably find him on this liquor and water until he got an appendicitis."

"Of course I let him drink it. Sure he would have died of cholera if I hadn't. What else could I do?"

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 21, 1893.

The Assessment.

The first assessment roll for the town of Wolfville has been prepared, and was duly filed as directed by law in the office of the town clerk on Saturday last. It has been inspected by a number of the ratepayers, and the comments concerning it have been anything but complimentary to the board of assessors. The assessment seems to have been "fearfully and wonderfully made." Some of the ratepayers are willing to admit that possibly worse assessments have been made, but such a roll was never posted here. In the opinion of some the law has not been complied with, and serious doubts are entertained as to whether taxes can be levied and collected under it. Without wishing to reflect at all upon the ability or integrity of the assessors, we humbly suggest that the wisdom of appointing men to this important position who were opposed to the incorporating of the town and hence not so much interested in the successful operation of the same, is extremely doubtful. Whether through negligence or intention the town will without doubt be put to a considerable trouble and expense in correcting the present assessment, as there will be a number of appeals. Under the law by which the assessment is made, appeals from parties dissatisfied must be filed with the town clerk within one week from the first posting of the roll. Ratepayers will thus see that in order to have their appeals filed in time they must be made not later than to-morrow morning. We would suggest that all appeal who feel that they have grounds for doing so, as from conversation with members of the council we feel assured it is their wish to have the assessment equitable and satisfactory, as far as possible.

Grand Idea.

Mr W. Todd has presented the Boston Free Library with a unique gift that must be thoroughly appreciated by the residents as well as by the "strangers" that visit Boston. The gift consists of $2000 annually to be expended for newspapers alone, and he adds that he will also give the sum of $50,000 as a fund to secure forever the annual payment of this gift. The donor in a letter to the trustees of the library, in asking them to accept this gift, among other things, says: "It is too late to discuss the value of newspapers. They have become a necessity. The business man, the student in every department, the politician anxious to feel the public pulse, the man who like the Athenians of old, 'spend their time either to tell or hear some new thing,' all of every pursuit and condition, must read the newspapers to learn what has transpired the world over. The press has become the great agency by which information is diffused, leading questions discussed, the people educated and public opinion moulded. Words spoken to a hundred people in the evening are the next morning read by a hundred thousand. Newspapers now form a large part of the reading of the whole community. I have heard business men say that they read the newspapers daily, occasionally a magazine, hardly a book in a year. It is not enough to read one paper, and that partisan, if anyone could be correctly informed and judge clearly; yet many newspapers are too expensive for ordinary readers, and a large part are desired only for occasional use. The aim should be to select representative papers, giving the current thought of different sections of our own country and, to such an extent as the trustees may determine, of foreign countries, so as to provide a reading room that shall satisfy the wants of citizens and also of the many strangers always to be found in Boston.

A Brilliant Comet.

Professor Wiggins says that in two or three weeks a very brilliant comet will be seen in the northern sky. He has been watching for some weeks for a comet which he says is the large variable star seen by Cornelius Gemma in 1570 in the constellation of Cassiopeia, as its reappearance was about due. In 1859 he announced that Gemma's star, usually called the "Star of Bethlehem" was only a large comet at its perihelion when it fell surrounded it and gave it the appearance of a star of the first magnitude. He considers that his theory has been proved now, for on the night of July 8th, he saw for a few minutes between the clouds and near the pole of the heavens a star of the sixth magnitude moving rapidly upward, which he pronounced a comet and which is seeking a nearer perihelion than in 1570. On its return from the sun it will be very brilliant. It is now, he says, probably below the horizon.

The hay crop of Great Britain is barely 40 per cent. of an average crop owing to drought. In Germany only one-third of the usual crop will be harvested and great distress prevails in the agricultural districts. In France, also, the hay crop is a failure. It is on account of those disasters that Canadian hay can be shipped to Europe at a profit.

The largest band-sawing machine in the world has recently been completed in England and sent to Tasmania. The machine can saw through a maximum depth of 75 inches, and the carriage will accommodate logs 50 feet long and weighing fifty tons. It is asserted that this saw cuts even faster than a circular saw, while wasting 75 per cent. less wood.

St George's Lodge, A. F. & A. M. REPORT OF PROXY TO GRAND LODGE MEETING AT HALIFAX, 1893.

Published by Request of Lodge. On the morning of Wednesday, June 14th, your proxy took the early morning train en route for the metropolis to attend the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia and to gather such information as might be instructive and profitable. The morning was lowery and cool and the drifting fog from the Fundy bay had completely enveloped all Cape Blomidon and the Cumberland mountains, causing the Basin of Minas to have the appearance of a vast mirror and to reflect upon its bosom passing objects. Speeding quietly along, the various stations of the W. & A. R. are passed and Bedford Basin is reached. At this point the clouds began to disperse and old Sol came out in all his glory and brightness, shining upon the waters of the bay, giving them the appearance of burnished silver marred here and there by a fisherman's or pleasure seeker's boat riding gently and silently upon its bosom. The waters of old Chictouac never seemed more beautiful, not a ripple upon its surface nor a breaker on its shore, but as we sped along, nearing the city, a slight ripple is observed, which grows larger and yet larger until the whole expanse of water is covered with white caps, an indication that we are approaching the waters of the broad Atlantic and that they are in an angry mood.

We reach the R. R. terminus and disembark, and soon after are safely ensconced in a street car bound cityward, which in due time we reach. A hotel is secured and soon after the cry is heard, "The Masons are coming." Your proxy, feeling too tired to join the procession which was on its way to St. Paul's (Episcopal) church to attend divine service, stationed himself at a corner opposite Knowles' bookstore, where he had a fine view of the procession as it passed by. It was the finest masonic procession ever witnessed by your proxy, led by one of the best bands of the city which discoursed sweet music as they marched by. The gathering of Masonic brethren in full Masonic costume was a picture not soon to be forgotten.

The service at the church and the address delivered by our esteemed Brother Bullock, St. George's Grand Chaplain, was from a masonic point of view, all that could be desired, yet I am free to confess that I do not favor the practice of Grand Lodges leaving the lodge rooms to attend church on the occasion of the opening of Grand Lodge. If deemed advisable by members of the Grand Lodge to preface their labors with a religious service, by all means let that service be held in the L. rooms. To my personal knowledge many of the brethren who attend G. L. are not in favor of these religious services which recent custom has established. The annual session of our G. L. is convened for the purpose of transacting the business of G. L. and many who attend in order to spend the extra time necessarily spent in these observances. In order to attend them the greater portion of the brethren from the rural districts are obliged to leave home the day previous to the opening day, whereas if Lodge opened as it formerly did at high 12, many could have on the morning train and reach the city, if held in Halifax, in sufficient time to attend every session.

Wednesday afternoon Lodge called in at two o'clock when the real business of the lodge was entered upon. Most W. G. M., D. C. Frazer presiding. The usual routine of business was proceeded with. The G. M., Secretary and Treasurer read and adopted reports of all departments. D. D. of district No. 1 responded with a voluminous and carefully written report which did not seem to have the least interest to the brethren, and immediately after its close a motion was moved seconded and unanimously passed that the remaining reports be not read, referred at once to the usual committee on reports to examine and report upon at a future time. These reports being out of the way, the other business of G. L. was proceeded with. In accordance with a notice of motion to change the time of the meeting of G. L. to July, a resolution was moved to that effect and carried by a lively discussion but resulted disastrously to the mover of the same. Also a resolution to amend the constitution in such a way as to deprive P. M. when coming into this jurisdiction from another, from retaining their rank, but necessitating them to commence and work themselves up to the position of W. M. in a subordinate lodge in this jurisdiction before being entitled to membership in the G. L. The discussion on this motion was perhaps the most lively of any of the session and was taken part in by a goodly number. The strongest advocate in support of the motion was past Dep. G. M. McSor, who with the mover and seconder of the resolution, were the only ones to support it with their votes. Wednesday evening the brethren of the city lodges entered the visiting brethren with a truly masonic social in the large hall in the basement of Masonic Temple. The evening was very enjoyable spent in listening to speeches and music interspersed with refreshments and cooling and refreshing drinks. This was kept up until low twelve at which time every good mason sought his boarding house or should have done so.

The M. W. G. M. having been called away by business, Dep. G. M. Gillis occupied the chair on Thursday morning and continued to preside until the close on Thursday evening. There was nothing in the proceedings of G. L. that would interest the brethren of St. George's although your proxy was led to believe by attendance of our Most W. G. M. Frazer when making his official visit to St. George's a few months ago that the work of the subordinate lodge would be exemplified and a basis given for uniformity of work in the future. Perhaps his absence on the last day of the session interfered with these anticipations and at a future day the exemplification of the work will be given us. The business being concluded, nothing remained to be done but to elect and install the officers for the current year. G. M., Treasurer, and Secretary were re-elected and a large majority of the remaining officers were elected from the city lodges, which is possibly an unwise thing to do as it may lead to a split between city and country, a thing not unlikely to happen if this course of procedure should continue.

An invitation to Grand Lodge to meet with the brethren of New Glasgow at the next annual convocation was tendered and accepted, when Grand Lodge closed in harmony. Respectfully submitted, J. B. Davison, Proxy.

Medicos in Council.

The Maritime Medical Association met yesterday morning at 10 o'clock in Macleod's hall. Dr Macleod, president of the association, gave an address, which was highly spoken of by all present and it was unanimously resolved that it be published in the Maritime Weekly News. Dr Jarvis read a paper on "The Infancy of Chloroform." The Dr was house surgeon in a hospital in London, the first time chloroform was ever administered to a patient and was an eye witness. It was a very interesting paper, and brought forth considerable discussion from members present.

At the afternoon session Dr Walker of St. John read a paper on "Antiseptic," which was followed by a general discussion. After the adjournment of this session members of the association and their wives enjoyed an excursion in the T. A. Stewart up and down the river visiting Dr Macleod's summer residence at Keppock where they were entertained by Mrs Macleod. A third session was held in the evening at which Dr Bayard opened a discussion on "Cholera," in which he reviewed the history of the epidemic in St. John in the year 1855. Dr DeWitt of Miramichi, read an able and practical paper on "Preventive Medicine" and the discussion which followed had a bearing on the papers read on Dr Bayard's address. Dr. Walker and Christie of St. John, Dr Macdonald of Hopewell and Dr. R. Johnston and Beer of Charlottetown, took part in the discussion.—Charlottetown Guardian, July 13th, 1893.

On the following day at the morning session papers were read on the following subjects: Dr Conroy, of Charlottetown, on "Erysipelas"; Dr Dodge, of Halifax, on "Aural Diseases"; Dr McDonald, of Hopewell, N. S., on "Midwifery." At the afternoon session Dr McKay of Halifax, read a paper on "Excessions of the Knee"; Dr Kirkpatrick on "Dis-eases of the Eye."

At 4 p. m. the members of the convention were again invited to an excursion on the river, which was much enjoyed by all present. At the evening session Dr Kelly read a paper on "Distillation of the Stomach," and Dr Jenkins, of Charlottetown, a paper on "Appendicitis." Interesting discussions followed the reading of all the papers. The convention adjourned to meet at St. John next year. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Dr Thomas Walker, of St. John, President; Dr Coburn, of Fredericton, Vice President for N. B.; and Dr D. M. Campbell Vice President for N. S.; Dr G. E. DeWitt, of Wolfville, Treasurer; and Dr G. M. Campbell, of Halifax, Secretary. At 10.30 p. m. the doctors dined with the committee of management at the Hotel Davies. Thus ended a pleasant and profitable meeting of the Maritime Medical Association.

Will Wonders Never Cease?

The Compendium Monthly Magazine of New York City has been considered for some time the brightest periodical in the list of great magazines and it has always been in the first rank of illustrated publications. Its subscription price for one year is $3, and on this account the wonderful offer made by the publisher of Progress, of St. John, comes in the nature of a surprise. It is well known that Progress has built up a great circulation at a subscription price of $2 and now it proposes to still further increase its readers by offering the Compendium for one year for 85 cents additional. To explain further, any one not now a subscriber to Progress who sends $2.85 to the publisher of that bright weekly will not only receive the Compendium Magazine for one year, but Progress as well for the same time.

The women of Canada subscribed over three thousand, seven hundred dollars for the purpose of securing a present for the bride of Prince George. The Countess of Derby has selected from a number of designs sent her an old-fashioned three-crested family sleigh, which presents a very graceful contour, and, no doubt, when completed, will be a most beautiful piece of work. The body is hollowed out and the sides are perfectly open while the retreating seats look very comfortable. The color of the body is to be dark blue with red stripes and runners painted scarlet. The upholstery is to be very rich and done in blue cloth, while all the metal work is to be silver mounted. The material to be used is to be Canadian as far as possible, the wood being second growth ash with carved panels of mahogany. There are to be no decorations, not even the Royal quarterings, and the sleigh is to be commenced at once and is to be shipped some time in autumn.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

Webster's International Dictionary. The successor of the "Unabridged." Ten years were spent revising, 100 editors employed, and over $300,000 expended. Everybody should own the Dictionary. It answers all questions concerning the history, spelling, pronunciation, and meaning of words. A Library in itself. It also gives the facts often wanted concerning eminent persons, ancient and modern; noted institutions, persons and places; the countries, cities, towns, and natural features of the globe; translation of foreign quotations, words, phrases, and proverbs; etc., etc., etc. This work is invaluable to the household, and to the teacher, scholar, professional man, and self-educator. The Globe, Toronto, says: "The new dictionary is the best book only in the English language. For every one who has a library, it will prove a profitable investment." The Times, Hamilton, says: "It may well be considered the working dictionary and the standard book in the world, and should be in every school and study in Canada." Have your Bookdealer show it to you. G. & C. Merrimac Co., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A. Do not buy cheap copies. Beware of cheap imitations.
