CHAPTER VIII. HE courthouse bell ringing in the night! No hesitating stroke of Schofields' Henry, pealing out to wake the countryside, a apid clang! clang! clang! that struck clear in to the spine. The courthouse bell had tolled for the death of Mor-ton, of Garfield, of Hendricks; had ton, of Garneid, of Hendricks; had rung joy peals of peace after the war and after political campaigns, but it had rung as it was ringing now only three times—once when Hibbard's mill burned, once when Webb Landis killed Sen Bardlock and introched himself. Sep Bardlock and intrenched himself in the lumber yard and would not be taken until he was shot through and through, and once when the Rouen acnmodation, crowded with children and women and men, was wrecked within twenty yards of the station. Why was the bell ringing now? Men and women, startled into wide wakefulness, groped to windows. No red mist hung over town or country. What was it? The bell rang on. Its loud alarm beat increasingly into men's hearts and quickened their throbbing to the rapid measure of its own. Vague forms loomed in the gloaming. A horse, madly ridden, splashed through the town. There were shouts; voices called boarsely; lamps began to gleam in the windows; half clad people emerged from their houses, men slapping their braces on their shoulders as they ran out of doors; questions were shouted into the dimness. Then the news went over the town. It was cried from yard to yard, from group to group, from gate to gate, and ers shouted it as they sped by, and ooys panted it, breathless; women with oosened hair stumbled into darkling hambers and faltered it out to new wakened sleepers, and pale girls, clutchng wraps at their throats, whispered across fences. The sick, tossing on eir hard beds, heard it. The bell mored it far and near; it spread over he countryside, and it flew over the vires to distant cities. The White Caps

Lige Willetts had lost track of him ut near Briscoe's, it was said, and had come into town at midnight seeking him. He had found Parker, the Herald foreman, and Ross Schofield, the type-setter, and Bud Tipworthy, the devil, at work in the printing office, but no of Harkless there or in the cottage. Together these had sought for him and had roused others who had in-

In the foreglow of dawn they gathered in the square and listened to Warren Smith, who made a speech from the courthouse fence and warned them to go slow. They answered him with angry shouts and hootings. But he made his big bass voice heard and bade, them do nothing rash. No facts were known, he said. It was far from certain that harm had been done, and

There was a yell at this, and those who heard the speaker would probably have started for the Crossroads had not a rumor sprung up which passed rapidly from men to man and to a forrapidly from man to man and in a few moments had reached every person in the crwd. The news came that the two shell gamblers had wrenched a bar out of a window under cover of the storm, had broken jail and were at vividness. They had sworn repeatedly to Bardlock and to the sheriff and in the hearing of others that they would "do" for the man who had taken their mon ey from them and had them arrested. The prosecuting attorney, quickly perceiving the value of this complication in holding back the mob that was already forming, called Horner from the crowd and made him get up on the fence and confess that his prisoners had escaped, at what time he did not know, probably toward the beginning of the storm, when it was noisiest.

"You see," cried the attorney, "there is nothing as yet of which we can accuse the Crossroads. If our friend has been hurt it is much more likely that these crooks did it. They escaped in time to do it, and we all know they were laying for him. You want to be mighty careful, fellow citizens. Horper is already in telegraphic communiner is already in telegraphic communi-cation with every town around here, and he'll have those men before night. All you've got to do is to control your-selves a little and go home quietly." He could see that his words (except those in reference to returning homeno one was going home) made an impression. There was a babble of shouting and argument and swearing that grew louder and louder. Mr. Ephraim Watts, in spite of all confusion, clad as carefully as upon the preceding day, deliberately climbed the fence and stood by the lawyer and made a single steady gesture with his hand. He was listened to at once, as his respect for the law was less notorious than his irreverence for it, and he had been known in Carlow as customarily a reckless man. They wanted illegal and desperate advice and quieted down to hear it. He spoke in his professionally calm voice.

"Gentlemen, it seems to me that Mr. Smith and Mr. Ribshaw," nodding to the man with the rawhide whip, "are both right. What good are we doing here? What we want to know is what's happened to Mr. Harkless. It looks just now like the shell men might have lone it. Let's find out what they done. Scatter and hunt for him. Soon as anything's known for certain Hibbard's Keep on looking till it does; then," he finished, with a barely perceptible scornful smile at the attorney—"then we can decide on what had ought be Six Crossroads lay dark and steaming in the sun that morning. The forge was silent, the saloon locked up, the roadway deserted even by the pigs. The broken old buggy stood rotting in the mud without a single lean little old man or woman-such were the children of the Crossroads-to play about it. Once, when the deputy sheriff rode through alone, a tattered black hound, more wolf than dog, half emerged, growling, from beneath one of the tumbledown barns and was jerked back into the darkness by his tail, with a snarl fiercer than his own, while a gun barrel shone for a second as it swung for a stroke on the brute's head.

The hound did not yelp or whine when the blow fell. He shut his eyes twice and slunk sullenly back to his place. The shanties might have received a volley or two from some of the mount-ed bands, exasperated by futile searchquired at every house where he might have gone for shelter, and they had heard nothing. They had watched for roads appear doubtful in the minds of the storm. He had not come, and there was no place he could have gone. He was missing. "I reckon there ain't many crazier than them two Bowlders, father and son," interrupted a patron, wiping the drops from his beard as he set his glass on the bar. "They rid into town like a couple of wild Indians, the old man beatin' that gray mare o' theirn till she was one big walt, and he ain't natcherly no cruel man either. I expect Lige Willetts better keep out of Hartley's way." "I keep out of no man's way!" cried a voice behind him. Turning, they saw Lige standing on the threshold of the door that led to the street. In his hand he held the bridle of the horse he had ridden across the sidewalk and that now stood panting, with lowered head half through the doorway, beside his master. Lige was hatless, splashed with mud from head to foot; his jaw was set, his teeth ground together, his eyes burned under red lids, and his hair lay tossed and damp on his brow. "I keep out of no man's way." he repeated hoarsely. "I heard you, Mr. Tibbs, but I've got too much to do, while you loaf and gas and drink over Landis' bar. I've got other business than keepin' out of Hart Bowlder's way. I'm lookin' for John Harkless. He was the best man we had in this ornery hole, and he was too good for us, and so we've maybe let him get killed, and maybe I'm to blame. But I'm goin' to find him, and if he's hurt I'm goin' to have a hand on the rope that lifts the men that did it if I have to go to Rouen to put it there. After

At 11 o'clock Judge Briscoe dropped wearily from his horse at his own gate and said to a wan girl who came running down the walk to meet him:
"There is nothing yet. I sent the telegram to your mother-to Mrs. Sher-

Helen turned away without answering. Her face was very white and looked pinched about the mouth. She went back to where old Fishee sat on the porch, his white head held between his two hands. He was rocking himself to and fro. She touched him gen tly, but he did not look up. She spoke to him. "Father," she said.

He did not seem to hear her. "There isn't anything yet. He sent the telegram. I shall stay with you now, no matter what you say." She sat beside him and put her head down on his shoulder, and, though for a moment he appeared not to notice it, when her father at the door, the old man had put his arm about the girl and was stroking her fair hair softly.

Briscoe glanced at them and raised a warning finger to his daughter, and the felds had been trampled in many the fields had been trampled had been trampled in many the fields had been trampled had been tramp they went tiptoeing into the house, where the judge dropped heavily upon a sofa. brought him. She had interpreted "coffee" liberally and, with the assistance of Mildy Upton, whose subdued nose was frankly red and who shed but many kept on searching the woods, not feeling the need of food or caring an appetizing table at his elbow. "Yes," responded the judge, "and I'm glad she sent it. I talked the other way yesterday, what little I said—it isn't any of our business-but I don't think any too much of those people somehow. She thinks she belongs with Fisbee, and I guess she's right. That young fellow must have got along with her pretty well, and I'm afraid when she gives up she'll be pretty bad over it; but I guess we all will. It's terribly sudden, somehow, though it's only what everybody half expected would come, only we thought it would come from over yonder." He nodded toward the west. "But she's got to stay here with us. Boarding at Tibbs' with that old man won't do, and she's no that old man won't do, and giri to live in two rooms. You fix it up with her—you make her stay."

"She must," answered his daughter as she knelt beside him and patted his top. There were smaller stains above coat and handed him several things and below, none beyond it to left or to eat at the same time. "Mr. Fisbee will help me persuade her, now that He knew how to take care of himself too well. He'd have got away from them."

Her father shook his head. "Then why hasn't he turned up? He'd have gone home after the storm if something bad wasn't the matter."

"But nothing—nothing that bad "But why hasn't he come back, on our souls!"

"Well, he's lying hurt somewhere, that's all." "Then why haven't they found him?" "I don't care," she cried and choked with the words and tossed her disheveled hair from her temples, "it isn't true! Helen won't believe it. Why should I? It's only a few hours since searched every stick and stone of Six Crossroads and found him."

"It wasn't the Crossroads," said the old gentleman, pushing the table away and relaxing his limbs on the sofa. "They probably didn't have anything to do with it. We thought they had at first, but everybody's about come to believe it was those two fellows that he had arrested yesterday." "It wasn't the Crossroads!" echoed Minnie, and she began to tremble violently. "Haven't they been out there

"What use? They are out of it, and they can thank God they are."
"They are not!" she cried, very much agitated. "They did it. It was the White Caps. We saw them, Helen and I."

The judge got upon his feet with an oath. He had not sworn for years un-til that morning. "What's this?" he said sharply.
"I ought to have told you before, but we were so frightened, and-and you went off in such a rush after Mr. Wiley

He laid his hand on her shouland Helen had seen, and he grew more and more visibly perturbed and uneasy, biting his cigar to pieces and "please t' be so good ez t' show de ole" the truth. I didn't mean to tell it to-day, but somehow"— He paused. "The hounds!" he eried. "They deserve it. My daughter saw them cross-easy, buting his eight to pieces and groaning at intervals. When she had finished he took a few quick turns about the room, with his hands thrust deep in his coat pockets, and then, charging her to repeat the story to no one, left the house and, forgetting his fatigue, rapidly crossed the fields to the point where the bizarre figures of the night had shown themselves to the two girls at the window.

The soft ground had been trampled by many feet. The boot prints pointed to the northeast. He traced them backward to the southwest through the field and saw where they had come from near the road, going northeast; then, returning, he climbed the fence and followed them northward through the next field. From there the next field to the north, lying beyond the road that was a continuation of Main street, stretched to the rallroad embankment. The track, ruggedly defined in trampled loam and muddy furrow, bent in a direction which indicated that its terminus might be the switch where the empty cars had stood last night waiting for the 1 o'clock freight. Though the fields had been trampled in places by the searching parties, he felt sure of the direction taken by the Crossroads men, and he perceived that in the hunt. On the embankment he saw a number of men walking west a sofa. Minnic stood before him with a look of pale inquiry, and he shook his head.

"No use to tell him, but I can't see any hope." he answered her. biting hand, and he knew it.

The men on the embankment were walking slowly, bending far over, their eyes fixed on the ground. Suddenly one of them stood erect and tossed his arms in the air and shouted loudly. Other men ran to him, and another far down the track repeated the shout and the gesture to another far in his rear. This man took it up and shouted and waved to a fourth man, and so they pessed the signal back to town. There came almost immediately three long, loud whistles from a mill near the station, and the embankment grew black with people pouring out from town, while the searchers came running from on both sides of the railway.

Briscoe began to walk on toward the embankment. The track lay level and straight, not dimming in the middle distances, the rails converging to points both northwest and southeast in the clean washed child's drawing book. About seventy miles to the west and north lay Rouen. ballasted with sand. "You see, them two must have knowed about the 1 o'clock freight and that it was to stop here to take on the empty lumber cars. I don't know how they knowed it, but they did. It was dow they beat through the sto straight for this side track. At the same time Mr. Harkless leaves Briscoe's, goin' west. It begins to rain. He cuts across to the railroad to have a sure footin' and strikin' for the deepo for shelter-near place as any, except Briscoe's, where he's said good night already, and prob'ly don't wish to go back, fear of givin' trouble or keepin' 'em up. Jim Bardlock swore a violent oath. "That's the talk!" he shouted. "Ef I ain't the first man of this crowd to set my foot in Roowun and first to beat in "But nothing—nothing that bad could have happened. Much satisfaction was expressed that Labor Day came on Mon this year, as it gave an opportunity which was taken advantage of by a large number of people to make week-end visit extending over the holiday. It was hoped that the coming holiday might be arranged to ofa similar opportunity, and considerable disappointment is felt at this

-The North Pole still retains its peculiar attractiveness for Lieut. Peary. In a recent public address he on a new expedition to the Arctic regions, and he further intimated that the ship in which he plans to sail is already in course of construction. It seems a little doubtful whether we should regard this rage for Polar exploration as a mark of bravery or of madness. Granting that much has been added to our knowledge of geography and natural science through these hazardous expeditions, we cannot shut our eyes to the fearful cost of such knowledge, in human suffering and loss of life, not to mention the immense destruction of valuable property. The story of Franklin, of De Long, and of Greely, causes us to petition of these tragedies. But men are fond of desperate undertakings, and we suppose there is at least as much glory in dying in a snow-bank as upon a gory battle-field. For this reason we have no serious objection to altar of Old Boreas.

-The general public has been much gratified by the recent arrest at Moncton of a train official who has for some time past been engaged in freight and mail robbery. A "Royal Household" · Story from the · Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Arthur Cochran, of DeLong & Seaman, Boston, tells of an in ident which he observed not long since while travelling through the Annapolis Valley.

Some five or six miles from Middleton, Mr. Cochran called at the tore of a friend and customer of his firm; and while discussing general business questions with him, a carriage drove up to the door and a rosperous looking fruit-grower pulled up his horse and got out. "I came over for a barrel of that 'ROYAL HOUSEHOLD' Flour,' said he. "Suppose you have got lots of it left. My wife told me not to get any other kind, so I hope you have it here." The merchant said he was very sorry but he had sold his last barrel

f ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" the day before, and didn't expect a new upply till the first of the following week. He said :--of good reputation."

But the buyer said :--"No, we have used both those flours and we have used 'Royal Household' and my wife thinks 'Royal Household' so superior to any flour she has ever tried that she must always have it in future." The merchant talked for a while and put up a pretty good argu ent, but finally the farmer said :-

"It's only five or six miles to Middleton and, as I am hitched up, night just as well drive over there and get what I want."

He thereupon drove to Middleton and got the flour he wanted; at east, Mr. Cochran presumes that he did, as he started for Middleton where 'ROYAL HOUSEHOLD' is now sold in large quantities. Mr. Cochran thinks that there can be no doubt about 'ROYAL Orange, best dish of 5, 2nd; any other sort, 2nd; Raspberries, preserved, 2nd HOUSEHOLD' being the very best flour in this market when people will take such pains to be sure that they get it.

Kitchener Range

It is not the first cost of a range which makes it cheap or expensive, but the amount of fuel it afterwards consumes.

If you buy a range a few dollars cheaper than Kitchener, and it burns from 15 to 25°/o more fuel, what do you gain? Nothing, but you actually lose money, besides putting up with all the inconveniences of an old-style range. The Kitchener range is equipped with every device known for reducing the consump-
