"No, sir, not precisely, but,"— Paganni fixed his great black eyes on the girts troubled countenance.
"Come," he said, "I see how it is. After having made you a thousand promises he has quitted you, and you no longer have any tidings of him."

"Ah, poor fellow! He has quitted me certainly, but it was not my fault."

"How is that.""

"How is that?"

"Because in the conscription he drew a bad number, and he has been sent away with a great long gun on his shoulder, and I shall never see him again," sobbed poor Nicette, as she buried her face in her white apron.

"But, Nicette, could you not purchase a substitute for him?"

The girl, withdrawing her apron, smiled sadly through her tears.

"Monsieur is jesting," she said; "how could I ever buy a substitute?"

"Does it cost very dear?"

"This year men are tremendously dear, on account of the report that there is going to be a war. Fifteen hundred fr ancs is the lowest price."

The musician pressed Nicette's little plump hand hetween his long sallow fingers as he said:

"If that's all, my girl, don't cry; we'll see what can he done."

Then, taking out his pocketbook, he wrote on a blank leaf:

"Mem.—To see about giving a concert for the benefit of Nicette."

A month passed on; winter arrived, and Paganini's physician said to him:

"My dear sir, you must not venture out of doors again until after the month of March."

During the winter a comparative degree of health and strength returned to Paganini. Having no longer the pleasant, shady arbors of the garden as a refuge, he began gradually to linger a little in the drawing room. After dinner he used to throw himself on a sofa of crimson velvet and pass an hour or two in turning over a volume or engravings, or sipping a glass of sugared water flavored with orange flowers. The old ladies of the society gossiped on about him and his odd ways, but he affected not to hear, and certainly did not heed them.

OVERSHOES,

"Yes, for this evening; that's settled," replied another.

After dinner Paganini was, according to his custom, seated on the drawing room sofa, sipping his eau sucree, when an unusual noise was hoand in the corridor. Presently Nicette entered and announced that a porter had arrived with a case directed to Signor Paganini. "I don't expect any case," said be; "but I suppose he had better bring it in." Accordingly, a stout porter entered, bearing a good sized deal box, on which, besides the address, were the words, "Fragile, with care." Paganini examined it with some curiosity, and, having, WATERBURY maid who attended on him; a cheerful innocent country girl, whose gay prattle when she served his meals often availed to dispel the cloud which habitually darkened the brows of Paganini.

One morning Nicette presented herself with a sad, drooping countenance, and served breakfast without uttering a word. The musician, who was amusing himself with carving a piece of ivory for the handle of a dagger, noticed the change in the young girl and questioned her upon it.

"What's the matter, my child? You look sad; your eyes are red; some misfortune has befallen you, Nicette?"

"Oo, yes, sir."

"Would it be indiscreet to ask you what it is?"

"Would it be indiscreet to ask you what it is?"

"No, sir, not precisely, but,"—

This one represented Irst the departure of a conscript, the tears, the wail ing of his bethrothed, then his stormy life in the camp and on the field of bat the, and finally his return, accompanied by triumph and rejoicing.
