CHAPTER XXIII.

"But she's sleeping now, my lord, and I thought it better not to disturb her."

"Quite right," he said approvingly. "Don't wake her, Janet. She has been doing a great deal lately; far too much, I'm afraid. No, no, don't disturb her."

He wandered about the hall and the smoking-room with patient impatience; they came to tell him that the dog-cart was ready, and he nodded and went out, and stared at it in the way men have when they are waiting. Then he consulted his watch. It was a fairly long drive, the factor was a busy man, and it would be scarcely the thing to keep him waiting—novel consideration for Dalesford to display and perhaps the drive would be too long for Diana if she were tired and overdone. He would go up and suggest that she should go without her, and that she should keep her bed until he returned. Going up two stairs at a time, he stopped outside her door and listened. There was no sound within the room, and, concluding that she was still asleep, he sighed and went down again.

"Tell Miss Bourne that I thought it best not to disturb her, and that I will be back as quickly as possible," he said to the butler; got slowly into the dog-cart, and, with a wistful glance at her window, drove off.

It was past two o'clock before he got back, and the butler met him in the hall, and, with a grave face, said: "The earl would be glad if your lordship would see him in his writing-room."

Dalesford nodded, and strode quickly across the hall. At the drawing-room door he paused and looked in. He had failed to see Diana on the terrace; perhaps she was in there trying some music or reading; but the room was empty, and he went on to the earl's. The old man was seated in his chair with the paper, behind which he almost hid his face, as he said, with a cheerfulness which instantly struck Dalesford as forced: "Oh, you've got back, Vane. Have you—er—seen Diana?"

"No," replied Dalesford. "Where is she? She is not—ill?"

"No, no," said the earl quickly. "She—she is out somewhere; with Mabel and young Selby, very probably. Really—testily—these young people must not be allowed to—ramble about the place in this irresponsble way, without leaving word where they are going; of course Diana is with them, but—Here is a telegram for you, Vane."

He handed it across the table, and Vane murmured "Thank you," but did not open the ugly envelope; he was too absorbed in Diana.

"She was asleep when I left this morning," he said. "She was to have gone with me; but I thought she was better resting." As he spoke he took out the telegram, and the words died on his lips, to be followed by a sharp exclamation.

"What is it, Vane? What is it?" demanded the earl quickly and nervously. "What a hideous invention the telegraph is! I've not yet got used to it. It seems to me that people should find time—"

"It is from Diana," said Vane almost to himself. "She is in London."

"Diana—in London!" echoed the earl with amazement. "In London? Surely, Vane, there is some mistake."

"Listen, sir," said Vane; and he read the telegram aloud:

"I am going to London unexpectedly, and will write from there, Diana."

The earl frowned, but drew a breath of relief; Vane stood staring at the telegram with a surprise too keen to permit of reflection or conjecture.

"Tut, tut!" said the earl. "Gone to London, unexpectedly. What—?"

"Mrs. Burton must be ill," said Vane, in a low voice. "And yet, no; Diana would have said so, would have been sure to say so."

"She must have heard some news, received some message," said the earl. "She has not been seen for hours; I can find no one who has seen her the whole of the morning—indeed, since last night."

Vane went to the bell and rang it. "Ask Miss Bourne's maid to come here, please," he said to the servant.

"Ah, the maid!" exclaimed the earl. "Of course. How quick you are, Vane!"

"Where Diana is concerned—yes," responded Vane with a smile. "Janet will tell us all about it. Don't be alarmed, sir; there is no cause for anxiety."

"I'm not alarmed," retorted the old man irritably. "Good heavens, why should I be? There is nothing ominous in a lady going to town suddenly. Depend upon it, she has received an important communication from her modiste or the man who is making her boots." He laughed, and Vane nodded and smiled; but neither of them looked reassured; and Vane went to the window and drummed on the pane until his father got him away by asking him to look at a business letter he had received.

Presently Janet entered. She looked pale and frightened; for both the earl and Vane, though kind and courteous to their servants as became their rank and breeding, were held in awe by them.

"Oh, Janet," said Vane, as casually as he could, "did your mistress leave any message for me?"

"No, my lord," replied Janet in a low voice. "I—I have not seen my mistress since she went out early this morning—"

"Early? What do you mean by early?" asked Vane involuntarily; and he would have recalled the hasty question, but it was made; and it seemed to be the last straw to Janet's endurance for she began to cry in a subdued fashion.

"A little before seven, my lord. I met my mistress ready dressed, coming from her room; she said—"

"Why do you cry?" asked Vane rather sternly, as she paused to check a sob. "There is no cause for alarm. Your mistress has wired to say that she had to go to London suddenly."

Janet fought with her agitation, and hastily wiped her eyes.

"Oh, I'm so glad, my lord! I—I mean that my mistress looked so ill this morning that I was afraid—that I thought something might have happened, some bad news—"

"You appear to indulge in singularly baseless apprehensions, my girl," broke in the earl reprimandingly. "Lord Dalesford and I sent for you in case you could add anything to the information which the telegram gives us; a telegram is necessarily short. Your mistress had a restless night, and, waking with a headache, went out for a walk. She was better, I hope, when she returned?"

"I—I—don't know, my lord," replied poor Janet, ready to sink into the earth under the sternness of his voice and glance; for the earl, aware of her affection for Diana, had generally a smile and a kindly word for her when he met her. "My mistress did not come back."

"You told me that Miss Bourne was asleep when I asked for her after breakfast," Vane reminded her.

"Yes, my lord. I—I thought she had come back and gone to bed again. I listened at the door and did not hear her moving; and she had not rung. She had told me not to disturb her—and she sleeps so lightly that I was afraid to go in, to open the door, even."

"Has your mistress taken any luggage?" asked Vane as casually as before.

"No, my lord," replied Janet, beginning to threaten tears again. "That's—that's what upsetting me so. She must have gone to London without anything; and without me to take care of her—"

Vane nodded by way of dismissal, and Janet, fighting with another attack of tears, was leaving the room when the earl called her back.

"It is a very terrible thing that your mistress should make a journey to London, to visit some friends, without her luggage; but it is not so terrible as to serve as an excuse for your weeping, my girl. Be good enough to dry your eyes—and hold your tongue."

Then—the worm, especially the loving worm, will turn—Janet flashed an indignant glance at the grand earl.

"My lord, I—I don't deserve it!" she said. "I—I never talk of my betters, especially of my dear mistress."

There was silence when she had gone, then the earl said:

"Seven o'clock; no telegram could reach here until half-past eight or nine."

"Th? What, sir?" Vane said. "No telegram? She may have met the man bringing one that came last night; she must have done so."

"Of course, of course!" exclaimed the old man, welcoming the suggestion. "Or—or one of the other maids. Janet being out of the way, may have taken it to her room."

"But she did not come back to the house," said Vane absently. Then suddenly he drew himself up and, with a hauteur he seldom displayed, said:

"Pon my soul, sir, we're discussing this little journey of Diana's as if there were some mystery in it. We are both rather absurd, don't you think?"

"Yes, yes; we are, Vane!" responded the earl, gratefully. "Deuced absurd! And it's all so explicable. The child met the man with a telegram saying that a relation was seriously ill—Mrs. Burton, very likely. Diana may, in her flurry, have forgotten to put that in—"

"Yes. I think I'll run down to Rivermead—"

"No, no," said the earl, with a return to nervousness. "I would not. She may have gone somewhere else, in quite a different direction. The letter saying where she is will reach us to-morrow, and you can go to her and bring her back. You can take Mabel. Well, what is it? Come in!" he broke off testily, as some one knocked at the door.

Lady Selina entered.

"Oh, sorry to disturb you, Edward; but have you heard anything of Diana?"

Vane looked at her calmly, even smiled, as he said, easily:

"Oh, yes. She has run up to town on some sudden business—she is going to be married, you know, Aunt Selina. And I am going up to-morrow to travel back with her. I'll take Mabel, please. Perhaps you will tell her that she's going?"

Lady Selina opened her lips, but changed her mind, and with a nod went out.

"Now, sir, we'll leave it at that," said Vane with quiet decision. "I think I'll take a gun or two and try that West Spinney. Something will have to be done with it, by the way, this winter; the cover wants thinning."

The two men talked about the West Spinney with unnecessary earnestness for some minutes, then Vane went out.

He shot until the light faded, then he tramped home and dressed and came down to dinner outwardly serene and smiling, but fighting with the dread, the shadowy fears that gathered about him. It was hard to be compelled to listen to, and answer, Mabel's questions; and as she followed him into the smoking-room with them, his restraint almost gave way, and, with a roughness unusual in his treatment of her, he bade her go and see about her packing—or flirt with Bertie.

"I shall have time for both, thank you, Vane," she retorted haughtily.

"Good heavens, I hope no one will be so desperately in love with me as to become transformed by my temporary absence into a perfect bear. Bertie, shall we play just one game of billiards?" she asked that quite-willing young gentleman, and marched off with him, her head aloft, her "red-ripe" lips pouting.

Vane sat up late that night, smoking alone and hard, and thinking of Diana and her sudden journey. A cloud of darkness and gloom seemed to have fallen on the whole place; the hours dragged along with weary, tardy feet. Great heavens! what should he do if—if anything happened to her, if by some unimaginable cause she disappeared from his life!

Calling himself a nervous idiot, he at last went to bed—to lie awake and count the hours as he had counted them in the smoking-room. But he would not get up earlier than usual, and when he got down and went for his accustomed walk before breakfast, he could not stroll to meet the postman.

Indeed, when the letter-bag was placed beside him, he did not hasten to unlock it, but helped himself to some bacon before doing so, though there was already some on his plate. Mabel and Bertie were at the table, and he opened the bag and tossed them their letters. Among his was an envelope, a plain, cheap envelope, addressed to him in Diana's handwriting. He took it up, feeling Mabel's eyes upon him, but he could not open it.

"Diana—she has written?" asked Mabel eagerly.

"It is a very terrible thing that your mistress should make a journey to London, to visit some friends, without her luggage; but it is not so terrible as to serve as an excuse for your weeping, my girl. Be good enough to dry your eyes—and hold your tongue."

Then—the worm, especially the loving worm, will turn—Janet flashed an indignant glance at the grand earl.

"My lord, I—I don't deserve it!" she said. "I—I never talk of my betters, especially of my dear mistress."

There was silence when she had gone, then the earl said:

"Seven o'clock; no telegram could reach here until half-past eight or nine."

"Th? What, sir?" Vane said. "No telegram? She may have met the man bringing one that came last night; she must have done so."

"Of course, of course!" exclaimed the old man, welcoming the suggestion. "Or—or one of the other maids. Janet being out of the way, may have taken it to her room."

"But she did not come back to the house," said Vane absently. Then suddenly he drew himself up and, with a hauteur he seldom displayed, said:

"Pon my soul, sir, we're discussing this little journey of Diana's as if there were some mystery in it. We are both rather absurd, don't you think?"

"Yes, yes; we are, Vane!" responded the earl, gratefully. "Deuced absurd! And it's all so explicable. The child met the man with a telegram saying that a relation was seriously ill—Mrs. Burton, very likely. Diana may, in her flurry, have forgotten to put that in—"

"Yes. I think I'll run down to Rivermead—"

"No, no," said the earl, with a return to nervousness. "I would not. She may have gone somewhere else, in quite a different direction. The letter saying where she is will reach us to-morrow, and you can go to her and bring her back. You can take Mabel. Well, what is it? Come in!" he broke off testily, as some one knocked at the door.

Lady Selina entered.

"Oh, sorry to disturb you, Edward; but have you heard anything of Diana?"

Vane looked at her calmly, even smiled, as he said, easily:

"Oh, yes. She has run up to town on some sudden business—she is going to be married, you know, Aunt Selina. And I am going up to-morrow to travel back with her. I'll take Mabel, please. Perhaps you will tell her that she's going?"

Lady Selina opened her lips, but changed her mind, and with a nod went out.

"Now, sir, we'll leave it at that," said Vane with quiet decision. "I think I'll take a gun or two and try that West Spinney. Something will have to be done with it, by the way, this winter; the cover wants thinning."

The two men talked about the West Spinney with unnecessary earnestness for some minutes, then Vane went out.

He shot until the light faded, then he tramped home and dressed and came down to dinner outwardly serene and smiling, but fighting with the dread, the shadowy fears that gathered about him. It was hard to be compelled to listen to, and answer, Mabel's questions; and as she followed him into the smoking-room with them, his restraint almost gave way, and, with a roughness unusual in his treatment of her, he bade her go and see about her packing—or flirt with Bertie.

"I shall have time for both, thank you, Vane," she retorted haughtily.

"Good heavens, I hope no one will be so desperately in love with me as to become transformed by my temporary absence into a perfect bear. Bertie, shall we play just one game of billiards?" she asked that quite-willing young gentleman, and marched off with him, her head aloft, her "red-ripe" lips pouting.

Vane sat up late that night, smoking alone and hard, and thinking of Diana and her sudden journey. A cloud of darkness and gloom seemed to have fallen on the whole place; the hours dragged along with weary, tardy feet. Great heavens! what should he do if—if anything happened to her, if by some unimaginable cause she disappeared from his life!

Calling himself a nervous idiot, he at last went to bed—to lie awake and count the hours as he had counted them in the smoking-room. But he would not get up earlier than usual, and when he got down and went for his accustomed walk before breakfast, he could not stroll to meet the postman.

Indeed, when the letter-bag was placed beside him, he did not hasten to unlock it, but helped himself to some bacon before doing so, though there was already some on his plate. Mabel and Bertie were at the table, and he opened the bag and tossed them their letters. Among his was an envelope, a plain, cheap envelope, addressed to him in Diana's handwriting. He took it up, feeling Mabel's eyes upon him, but he could not open it.

"Diana—she has written?" asked Mabel eagerly.

"Oh, Janet," said Vane, as casually as he could, "did your mistress leave any message for me?"

"No, my lord," replied Janet in a low voice. "I—I have not seen my mistress since she went out early this morning—"

"Early? What do you mean by early?" asked Vane involuntarily; and he would have recalled the hasty question, but it was made; and it seemed to be the last straw to Janet's endurance for she began to cry in a subdued fashion.

"A little before seven, my lord. I met my mistress ready dressed, coming from her room; she said—"

"Why do you cry?" asked Vane rather sternly, as she paused to check a sob. "There is no cause for alarm. Your mistress has wired to say that she had to go to London suddenly."

Janet fought with her agitation, and hastily wiped her eyes.

"Oh, I'm so glad, my lord! I—I mean that my mistress looked so ill this morning that I was afraid—that I thought something might have happened, some bad news—"

"You appear to indulge in singularly baseless apprehensions, my girl," broke in the earl reprimandingly. "Lord Dalesford and I sent for you in case you could add anything to the information which the telegram gives us; a telegram is necessarily short. Your mistress had a restless night, and, waking with a headache, went out for a walk. She was better, I hope, when she returned?"

"I—I—don't know, my lord," replied poor Janet, ready to sink into the earth under the sternness of his voice and glance; for the earl, aware of her affection for Diana, had generally a smile and a kindly word for her when he met her. "My mistress did not come back."

"You told me that Miss Bourne was asleep when I asked for her after breakfast," Vane reminded her.

"Yes, my lord. I—I thought she had come back and gone to bed again. I listened at the door and did not hear her moving; and she had not rung. She had told me not to disturb her—and she sleeps so lightly that I was afraid to go in, to open the door, even."

"Has your mistress taken any luggage?" asked Vane as casually as before.

"No, my lord," replied Janet, beginning to threaten tears again. "That's—that's what upsetting me so. She must have gone to London without anything; and without me to take care of her—"

Vane nodded by way of dismissal, and Janet, fighting with another attack of tears, was leaving the room when the earl called her back.

"It is a very terrible thing that your mistress should make a journey to London, to visit some friends, without her luggage; but it is not so terrible as to serve as an excuse for your weeping, my girl. Be good enough to dry your eyes—and hold your tongue."

German Kaiser Offered to Cede Tsing Tau

IF JAPAN WOULD FIGHT RUSSIA. Petrograd, Nov. 28.—The Retch prints an explanation of the mysterious reference by Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, ex-premier of England, at the Guild Hall banquet in London on November 10 to "one of the most important messages ever addressed by one monarch to another." The Retch says that, on the eve of the fall of Tsing-Tau the Kaiser sent a message to the Mikado, in which he proposed to conclude peace with Japan by accepting all the conditions which the Mikado might be pleased to fix. But the German Emperor exacted one condition, namely, that Japan should attack Russia. The Mikado declined to accept the proposal, and added: "That day when the last foothold of German culture falls in will be one of the most glorious in Japanese history."

Doctors and Gas Fires

In an article which recently appeared in the London "Evening News," Mr. W. G. Faulkner stated: "In making my inquiries I discovered one significant fact. This was that one company—the Gas Light and Coke Company—had among their consumers 2,500 doctors who had gas fires installed in their houses, some as many as ten or a dozen; that 1,500 of these doctors had become users of gas during the past three years; and that not one had ever given them up."

Killing Women and Children.

Amsterdam, Nov. 30.—The Tidd states that the Chamber of Commerce of Armentieres has sent to the Amsterdam Consul at Dunkirk, with a request that he forward it to Washington, a protest against the bombardment by the Germans of Armentieres. The protest declares that several women and children have been killed, that houses have been set on fire, and that the city is not being used for military purposes by the Allies, not a single soldier being there.

THOUGHT SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Unionville, Mo.—"I suffered from a female trouble and I got so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without holding on to something. I had nervous spells and my fingers would cramp and my face would draw, and I could not sleep, nor sleep to do any good, had no appetite, and everyone thought I would not live."

"Some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had taken so much medicine and my doctor said he could do me no good so I told my husband he might get me a bottle and I would try it. By the time I had taken it I felt better. I continued its use, and now I am well and strong."

"I have always recommended your medicine ever since I was so wonderfully benefited by it and I hope this letter will be the means of saving some other poor woman from suffering."—Mrs. MARTHA SEAVEY, Box 1144, Unionville, Missouri.

"The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound write thousands of such letters as that above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years."

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (Confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Say German Fleet is in Atlantic Now.

Buenos Ayres, Nov. 30.—Despatches received from Montevideo insist that there is good reason to believe that the German squadron, which has been operating in the Pacific Ocean, is at present in the South Atlantic. Neither the French nor the British Legion has any information to confirm these reports; nevertheless private despatches gave them credence.

It is related among other things that several German steamers are preparing at Montevideo to provision the warships.

Reports that the German Pacific squadron had succeeded in making its way to the Atlantic have been current for two days. Under date of November 28, Montevideo reported that the German squadron had been sighted 600 miles North of Punta Pilar, Brazil, heading northeast.

Spies in British army London, Nov. 30.—Two soldiers, a Lance Corporal and a Private in the 7th regiment of Kitchener's new army, stationed at Cardiff, have been proved to be German spies and "dealt with" by the military authorities. Copies of letters relating to the movements and proposed movements of troops were found in their possession.

WITH THE ADVENTURISTS.—Elder Wm. C. Young will fill the pulpit Sunday evening at the Cookstown Road Church, having returned from an extended tour through the North and West, lecturing on the present war and its relation to prophecy.

Hohenlinden.

On Linden, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay the untrodden snow,
And dar' as winter was the flow
Of Isar, rolling rapidly.

But Linden saw another sight,
When the drums beat at dead of night
Commanding fires of death to light
The darkness of her scenery.

By torch and trumpet fast array'd
Each horseman drew his battle blade,
And furious every charger neigh'd
To join the dreadful revelry.

'Tis morn; but scarce you level sun
Can pierce the war clouds, rolling dun
When furious Frank and fiery Hun
Shout in their sulphurous canopy.

The combat deepens. On, ye Brave,
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich, all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry.
—Campbell.

Super-Dreadnought to be Called Canada

AS A MARK OF GRATITUDE.

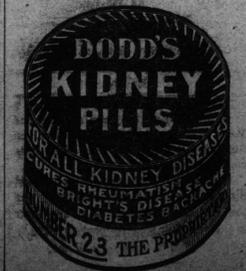

London, Nov. 30.—The Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill's announcement that one of fifteen new battleships to be built for the Royal Navy in 1915 will be named 'Canada' is intended in recognition of what Canada is doing to support the Empire.

The fighting strength of this battleship, recently acquired from Chile, and now called the Almirante Latorre, is that of a super-Dreadnought mounting ten 14-inch guns firing shells at the rate of two per minute. These guns are mounted in five turrets.

The vessel has also sixteen 6-inch and four 3-inch quick-firers, beside a number of smaller guns, also four submerged tubes for torpedoes. She displaces 25,000 tons, and has a speed of twenty-three knots.

This is the fifth ship of the British navy bearing the name 'Canada.' The first was launched the same year as Nelson's famous 'Victory'—1765—in honor of the conquest of Canada. Two frigates were launched simultaneously, being named the 'Montreal' and 'Quebec.'

Angora sweater sets are among the prettiest winter rigs for children. Coat sleeves are long and fitted and are often trimmed with bands of fur.

The News From Poland

For some days the fighting in Poland has been screened from the public. Last week Petrograd, London and Paris told us officially that fighting on a big scale was going on between the rivers Warthe and Vistula, and particularly along the banks of the Bruza, a tributary of the Vistula. Sensational accounts were also sent out from Petrograd and Warsaw of German corps captured, surrounded, routed, breaking the Russian ring, which have not been confirmed from any official source. Both from Russian and German sources we heard of German re-inforcements being rushed up, and from the Germans that they had again taken the offensive, and this appeared to be borne out by fighting taking place towards Lodz, a railway junction on the way to Warsaw and lying on the Warsaw side of a line drawn from Piotek to Lodz. Last night a press despatch from Petrograd to the Central News claimed a decisive victory for the Russians in the Lodz battles. It has been followed by another press despatch, giving similar news, with the sensational story of the escape of the Kaiser and two of his sons by aeroplane, and the destruction of two-thirds of the German forces in Poland. These stories force us to the view that these press correspondents are sending along rumors which are being noised around in the Russian capital. There is at the time of writing no official confirmation of these stories, nor is there any reference to the campaign in Poland in the official bulletin from St. Pierre, dated last midnight. That despatch declares that in general there is nothing very important to report, although it reports the capture of 991 prisoners in the northern part of the western battle field on Tuesday last. All eyes are, however, centred on the fight in Poland and about Cracow, for the result of the fighting in these places may have a material effect in the campaign in the West. If the German and Austrian forces suffer severely in these operations, Germany will not only be unable to strengthen her forces in the West, but she will have to weaken them to make up for the losses in the East. If the reports of German losses in Poland should be substantially correct, we may hear of a big advance before very long, timed to take place simultaneously east and west, to take away from Germany the advantage she enjoys at present of rushing troops from one theatre of war to the other, with a view to strike some crushing blows on the German forces.

Cardigans and Tobacco

It is very pleasing to observe the growth of these two funds, whose object is to provide comfort for our volunteers abroad. Although there are other funds which have met with a ready response from the public, such as the Patriotic Fund, the Women's Patriotic Fund, and the Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers on the arenas of war in Belgium and France, these two funds for cardigan jackets and tobacco are being well supported. For the cardigan jacket scheme about $1,000 is required, and the supply of these will be a most acceptable present for our boys whether ashore in the north of Scotland, in the trenches in Belgium or keeping watch aboard a warship in the North Sea, when a cold northeast wind is blowing. To smokers a plentiful supply of tobacco is a comfort, and surely our boys are worthy of it.

BRITAIN AIDS RUSSIAN FINANCE.

LONDON, To-Day. Britain has reached an agreement with the Russian Government. On a former consideration of a shipment of $40,000,000 from Russia, England will arrange with the Bank of England to discount under the guarantee of the British Government a further amount of $60,000,000 on Russian treasury bills. The rate of discount will be on the basis of the rate which Britain has been able to borrow for her own needs. The sum of $40,000,000 will be applied by Russia to providing for exchange for Anglo-Russian trade, and $60,000,000 will be used for the purpose of paying coupons on Russian external debts which is payable in London and for financing Russian purchases in England or where England is unable to supply the article required, or for orders which have been placed in Canada or the States.

HEAVY GERMAN LOSSES—SENSATIONAL FLIGHT OF KAISER AND TWO SONS.

LONDON, To-Day. Experts estimate that the Germans lost two-thirds of their army in Poland in recent fighting in the region between the Warta and Vistula Rivers, says a despatch from Petrograd to the Morning Post. Prince Oscar and Prince Joachim and the German Emperor are reported to have escaped only by taking flight in an aeroplane.

DEWETT PRISONER IN JOHANNESBURG FORT.

LONDON, To-Day. Telegraphing from Johannesburg, Reuter's correspondent says: Pale and haggard, but calmly smoking his pipe, General DeWett arrived here to-day guarded by soldiers with fixed bayonets. He was taken through streets which were filled with an excited populace and placed in the fort as a prisoner, pending probable court martial. Whether he will be charged as a traitor cannot yet be predicted. That some factions favor this, however, is indicated by the tone of the National Press, which urges Government action against those beyond the scenes who stimulated DeWett and other rebels to action. "Those co-traitors, it is added, should be brought to the shadow of the gallows."

RELEASED FROM DUTY.

TORONTO, To-Day. Three German professors of the University of Toronto have been released from their duties until the end of the term, as a compromise with a demand for their discharge.

GENERAL FRENCH ENDORSES CHURCHILL'S ACTION.

LONDON, To-Day. General French in a despatch covering a report of General Archibald Paris, who commanded the British Naval Brigade at Antwerp, gives further testimony to the good effect of the sending of that force to the assistance of the Belgians had on the Allies' campaign generally, and thus further supports the action of Churchill who has been criticized for sending it.

FIGHTING UNDER ADVERSE CONDITIONS.

LONDON, To-Day. The Daily News correspondent telegrams from Northeastern France: Yesterday fighting took place in a gale of wind, the fiercest gale of the winter, which brought with it heavy rain and hail. So bad were conditions that guns at times had to undergo an enforced silence. Around Ypres the French forced back several determined attacks, some actually made in torrential rain; and, I understand, a little to the south of this battered town the British too had a busy time of it.

HEAVY FIGHTING IN VICINITY OF LODZ.

PETROGRAD, To-Day. Heaviest fighting in vicinity of Lodz during the past two days has occurred in course of maneuvering for possession of Laska, fifteen miles southwest of Lodz, on Slesonow line, which is 15 to 20 miles long. East of the Warthe fighting appears to indicate that the Germans have been heavily reinforced and that they are filling the gap between their right wing and the isolated body which has been striving to turn the Russian left. The German defence on the northern front in East Prussia occupies a position along the River Angersaph, from Gumbine to Daukenem, thence to northern extremity of the Mazurian Lakes at Angerburg. Here the Russians are entrenched close to the German line. On the east front of the lakes and to the Vistula the Russian main position is slightly back of their line of advance of ten days ago, and both sides appear to be waiting outcome of struggle at Lodz.

KAISER RETURNS TO BERLIN.

On Visiting.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A friend of mine who was utterly tired out, after an unusually strenuous winter's work, was invited to spend her vacation with friends last summer.

She very gratefully, but, firmly, declined the invitation and went to a small boarding house. Her friends were decidedly miffed.

Can you understand why this very tired woman chose the "miserable little boarding house room" in preference to the big, sunny guest room?

I can. It was because in that little hall chamber she could find one thing which she knew would be lacking in the big, beautiful room, and that was freedom, absolute freedom to do what she wanted and when, or if she preferred, to do nothing at all.

And to my mind that is one of the essentials of a vacation, especially if one is completely tired. Do you like to visit, Reader Friend? I hope you do not, for I am about to confess a deep rooted aversion to extended visiting, and especially to the notion that it is to be considered in the light of a relaxation.

Visiting is just like being dressed up all the time. It is a joy to have fine clothes and a pleasure to dress up in them, but to me, at least, it is a terrible bore to stay dressed up any length of time.

Of course my objection to visiting I except near relatives and very intimate friends; they are like the familiar garments that do not irk or make one's clothes conscious.

No matter how kindly intentioned your hostess, miscellaneous visiting demands a great deal of one. One must accommodate oneself to a new routine; one must rise, eat and go to bed at the hostess's pleasure. One must be ever ready to talk or be silent, go out or stay in, listen to music, meet new people, talk society's nonsense with one acquaintance or discuss ethics with another. And hardest of all, one must like everything; one must be always appreciative and grateful.

A guest who does less than this is not a gracious guest, and who would want to visit and not do it well? As a family we were always more visited against than visiting, and even as a child I relished this state of affairs, for I am selfish enough, if visiting is to be done, to prefer to be hostess rather than guest.

Now please do not think I am unusual; on the contrary I love to gather my friends around me at the table or before the open fire. And I love to go to their homes, but I like to come back to mine. An hour or two on the veranda, or around the tea table, a congenial party at dinner, an evening before the open fire, these, to my mind, are the flower of social intercourse—these and not the strain and effort of extended visiting.

German General Outlined Plans of War in 1913.

DR. J. A. MACDONALD, OF TORONTO, SAYS VON BERNHARDI DIVULGED PLANS OF PRESENT WAR AT SECRET MEETING OF 300 GERMANS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—The retired German General, Von Bernhardt, divulged plans of Germany for the war, which is now in progress, at a secret meeting of three hundred Germans in San Francisco, May 26th, 1913, according to a statement last night by Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe. Dr. Macdonald spoke at a reunion of the Toronto University Alumni Association of Chicago.

Dr. Macdonald asserted he had it from undoubted authority that Germany long had been preparing for the present war, and that in 1913, a retired General of the Prussian army had made a secret visit to the United States and informed prominent Germans of the detailed plans of the proposed attack.

"I have it from excellent and undisputed authority," he said, "that in May, 1913, the German General Von Bernhardt, retired, made a secret visit to the United States, and divulged plans of the proposed European war, which is now on. He visited New York, Chicago and other cities. West of the Mississippi, and then went to the Pacific Coast. On May 26, 1913, he held a secret meeting of some 300 Germans in San Francisco, called by the then German Consul there.

"At this gathering he outlined the plans of the present European war, which, he proclaimed, would begin with what seemed to be an outrageous attack along the border of Alsace-Lorraine, from where a feat would be made to get into France; the real intent, however, the German General said, would be to enter France through Belgium.

"The General outlined the exact number of days it would take to get to Paris, the cost and number of men necessary together, and said that when Paris had capitulated, a levy would be made for its redemption.

"After France had been captured the German army would overcome Russia. It was pointed out by the German officer that Great Britain was expected to remain neutral, and that the time would shortly come when Great Britain would be attacked.

"This General is most reliably reported to have stated 'law is a makeshift, force is the real weapon for strong nations.'

Dr. Macdonald said he could not make public the name of his informant, but that he attended the meeting at which General Von Bernhardt is said to have revealed the general plans of the German attack.

Kaiser's Hopeless Task

Providence (R.I.) Journal:—The simple fact is that the Kaiser's military resources are not equal to the enormous task imposed upon them. On both his frontiers there is a continually increasing force in opposition. The sooner Wilhelm and his ministers realize the hopelessness of their undertaking and apply this realization to the situation, the better it will be for themselves and the Empire which needs not so much the added territory to which they are pledged, but a relief from the burdens of the abominable militarism.

Lobster Fishery.

Board of Trade Recommends a Close Season for Next Year.

The members of the Board of Trade held a special meeting at their rooms yesterday afternoon to discuss the Lobster Fisheries in all its aspects, and the unanimous decision reached was that the catching of lobster should be prohibited for twelve months.

Mr. J. S. Munn, President of the Board, occupied the chair and there was a large attendance.

Those present who gave their views on the subject including President Munn, were: Hon. J. Harvey, Hon. W. C. Job, Hon. J. Anderson, Minister of Fisheries Piccott and Messrs. Gosling, Morine, Barr, Templeton and McDougall, as well as Fisheries Inspector Deo who was called on to give information as to how the lobster fishery generally was carried on around our coast. Nearly all the speakers referred to the material decline in the fishery during recent years and it was considered to be due mainly to the catching and poaching of lobsters of a small size. This, it was stated, was notably the case in Fortune Bay. Many other reasons were advanced why prompt action should be taken for the protection of the lobster fishery. In illustrating the need of a close season illustrations were given of the small size of lobsters packed. In one case 64 claws had been found packed in a single can. Another factor in the situation was that owing to the market for our lobsters being closed in Germany on account of the war, from ten to twelve thousand cases of lobsters were left on the market.

When the various speakers had finished the following resolutions were passed unanimously to be presented to the Legislative Commission on Fisheries:—

"The Board of Trade is of opinion that it is desirable to close down the catching of Lobsters for the coming season 1915; and that "It is also the opinion of the Board of Trade that further legislation is required for the preservation of the Lobster fishery."

Wedding Bells.

FINLAY—MEAKEN.

A very pretty wedding took place at St. Shotts on the 19th of November when Miss Katie May Finlay and Mr. Stephen Meaken, of Peter's River, were joined in the holy bonds of matrimony by the Very Rev. H. T. Renouf, P.P. of Trepassay. The bride was given away by her mother, Mrs. Wm. Finlay, and was neatly attired in a suit of printed silk with hat and veil to match, she was attended by her sister, Miss Sarah Finlay, and her cousins Misses Alice and May Finlay who were attired in pretty suits of blue. The groom was waited on by his cousin, Master Gerald Flemming, Master George J. Finlay, brother of the bride, and Master George G. Finlay, cousin of the bride. Amusements of different kinds were exercised during the night such as dancing, singing and playing, etc.; dancing was kept up till late in the morning of the 20th by those attending which numbered at least one hundred. After spending a few days in the bride's home Mr. and Mrs. Meaken will leave for their future residence, Peter's River where they will be warmly welcomed by the groom's friends and relatives. Both the bride and groom are well liked in the Parish, and we extend to them our heartiest congratulations for the future.

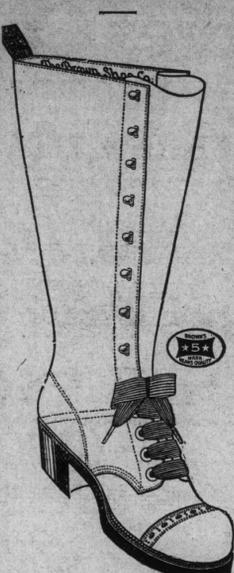

Oceans of Blood.

The war proceeds and Europe bleeds, she's reeling and exhausted; and kings, I feel, find martial zeal already badly frosted. They look around, and on the ground they see a million bodies, and war's a thing, no more, to sing, or toast in foaming toddies. The dullest prince must shrink and wince, when fairly he considers the woe and path, the heaps of slain, the fatherless, the widders. And in his dreams he must, meseems, behold the spectre gory of those who gave all for a grave on some red "field of glory." I'd hate, by jing, to be a king, a sultan, czar or kaiser, and see the ghosts of butchered hosts along the Aisne and Yser. They may exclaim, "We're not to blame, we're meek as any kitten," but they must bear the curse and wear the shame when all is written. No use for prince his words to mince, and say, "It's not my doing;" until he croaks the spectre folks his steps will be pursuing. And when he lands on Jordan's sands, the ghosts will gather round him, the men he slew, an awful crew, to startle and confound him.

F. SMALLWOOD
 The Home of Good Shoes.

A Letter With the Right Ring about It.

Dear Mother and Father,—I hope you are not worrying about us—myself and Joseph are well and we are enjoying good health. We are at Halifax now. The Niobe has been here three weeks under repairs. We will be going to sea again shortly. When I was at the age of ten years, if I heard tell of an English man-of-war coming, I was sure to see her as quick as the next person; I always longed to see one. Like most all outport boys I would sooner be looking at a British man-of-war than eating a good dinner and now I have the privilege of forming one of her company. There is a lot to be learned, mother, on board a man-of-war. The Niobe's crew are all good fellows. There are 100 Newfoundlanders on board. We are all enjoying good health. While we were in Halifax undergoing repairs we had a message saying there was a German ship outside. In about a moment's notice we were ready for action. We were just finishing coaling when the bugle sounded for action. I was washing myself at the time in the bathroom when we had orders, every man to the guns, and I can tell you mother, I wasn't the last to get there. We rushed out of Halifax in a hurry. I didn't stop to finish washing my face. Every man was ready and willing at a moment's notice. Some of my chums have gone to the front and some more of them are still at home. Duty demands them to be on active service. It is our duty to help England in this great struggle. You might ask me would I rather be home or to be on board the Niobe. I would like to see my father, mother sisters and brothers, but still I have brains enough to know I am doing my duty, and I am glad because I am one of the Niobe's crew. There are thousands in Newfoundland to-day who could be doing more than they are doing; men of my age and younger. I am not worrying mother and I hope you are not. When you write to your friends at Greenspond, tell them to tell the young men to volunteer; if they don't they have no regard for their King or Country. Say so for me to all my chums. Best wishes to my brothers and sisters. Tell them I will see them again after the war is over. My best regards to you, mother and father.

Yours,
 W. A. HUTCHINSON.

Have You an Itchy Spot?

Somewhere on your body? If so, attend to it at once. In Eczema—and itchy spots, whether dry and scurfy, or moist and inclined to "weep," are generally excruciating—delays are foolish, allowing the disease to spread and affect more of the good skin. Your best chance for a cure is to use Zylex, which will give almost instant relief, and if used in the earlier stages of the trouble will almost certainly bring a cure, and in any event will greatly ameliorate the trouble. Ask your druggist about it. Price 50c. a box. Zylex Soap, 25c. a cake.

ST. PIERRE BULLETIN.
PARIS, December 4th.—In Belgium rather sharp cannonading took place between the railroad line from Ypres to Roulers, and the road from Beclere to Passchendale, where the German infantry attempted to gain ground, but without success.

At Vermelles we continue to organize our position.
From the Somme to the Argonne there is entire quiet on the whole front.

In the Argonne several German infantry attacks were repulsed by our troops, especially northwest of Gruite Woods.

There was severe cannonading in Woerre and Lorraine.

In Alsace there is nothing to report.

THE BATTLE OF LODZ

LONDON, Dec. 4.
A despatch from Petrograd from the correspondent of the Central News, says that the battle of Lodz has ended in success for the Russian troops according to the Bourne Gazette, which adds that a great number of German prisoners, cannon and machine guns, are being brought into Lodz.

TWO HUNDRED MEMBERS OF THE FRENCH PARLIAMENT SERVING IN THE ARMY.

BORDEAUX, Dec. 4.
Two hundred members of the French Parliament, out of a total of 897, are serving with the army. The Cabinet is considering how it can best arrange for these members to leave their posts temporarily so that they may take part in the forthcoming extraordinary session of Parliament.

THE BERLIN A MINE LAYER.

LONDON, Dec. 4.
The North German Lloyd steamer Berlin, which was recently interned at Trondheim, Norway, had, according to a statement issued by the British Admiralty to-night, probably been engaged in extensive mine laying operations. When the Berlin put into Trondheim, the Admiralty says, she was almost empty of coal, and with her speed considerably reduced. One presumes, to fast steaming. Continuing the report says she has especially been fitted for mine-laying, but so far as is known she now has from Washington. Captain Tomkins, of the Kingsway, reported to the collector that his bunkers were afire, and that he had put in here in distress.

QUIET PREVAILS.

Vienna, Dec. 4.—(Official.) In the Carpathians, in West Galicia, and in South Poland, quiet prevailed. Fighting in North Poland continues.

Made Another Startling Find.

Concrete Bases for Artillery Discovered at Mouth of Thames.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—From information received, but not published here, it appears that another startling find of concrete bases for artillery has been made at the mouth of the Thames. A small island which is practically part of the County of Essex, on the north side of the Thames, is the spot where the discovery was made. It is marshy ground, and only contains a few dwellings, but being opposite Sheerness, and also not far distant from the Coast Railway, it would be an important strategical point.

The island has an interesting history, having been given under a charter of the Elizabethan period to a company of Dutchmen engaged in the trade, but this privilege lapsed long ago. The existence of the base cannot be accounted for, as there are no factories in the locality.

Wonderful "Nerviline" is the Remedy. A marvelous pain reliever.

Not an ordinary liniment — just about five times more powerful, more penetrating, more pain-subduing than any thick, oily or ammonia liniment. Nerviline fairly eats up the pain and stiffness in chronic rheumatic joints, gives quick relief to those throbbing pains, and never burns or even stains the skin.

"Rheumatism kept my joints swollen and sore for ten years. My right knee joint was often too painful to allow me to walk. In this crippled tortured condition I found Nerviline a blessing. Its warm, soothing action brought relief I had given up hoping for. I rubbed on quantities of Nerviline and improved steadily. I also took Ferrozone at mealtime in order to purify and enrich my blood. I am to-day well and can recommend my treatment most conscientiously.

(Signed) C. PARKS, Prince Albert.

Not an ache or pain in the muscles or joints that Nerviline won't cure. It's wonderful for lumbago and sciatica; for neuralgia, stiff neck, earache and toothache. Nerviline is simply a wonder. Best family liniment known and largely used for the past forty years. Sold by all dealers everywhere large family size bottle 50c., small trial size 25c. Refuse a substitute take only "Nerviline."

Lack of Decisive Battles

The big war in Europe has upset many old-fashioned notions about the course and conduct of wars. One of the traditions hopelessly shattered is that which prescribes that one side must win and the other lose through a series of decisive battles, each battle standing out as the culmination of a distinct and separate campaign. In spite of warnings from competent critics like General von Bernhardi that modern conditions would make single decisive battles rare, if not impossible, most people have gone on expecting this war to produce a Sedan, a Sadowa, a Waterloo, or an Austertiz. It is hard to kill off picturesque illusions. Although the grand scale of the operations in Europe puts single decisive combats pretty much out of the question, many critics are still trying to interpret conditions in the light of the conditions under which Moltke, Wellington and Napoleon fought.—New York Herald.

Hearts That Stop Still.

(From the New York Herald.) "One's heart stops still at the thought—what if all this misery were to befall our own people in the dear Fatherland!" This from a German soldier's letter telling of the plight of women and children of Belgium in the wake of Germany's army of invasion. Perhaps here is one German who will not wonder that the heart of the neutral world has "stopped still" at the spectacle of a great nation, a nation that lays claim to leadership in civilization and culture, wantonly inflicting such misery upon the people of a neighbouring nation whom it had given its solemn pledge to protect.

Stafford's Liniment cures Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuralgia and all Aches and Pains. "No advance in the price."—decl. 14

Heligoland.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Slwash." Heligoland, which is now appearing in print as regularly as some of the Class A countries, is an island in the North Sea about as large as some of the scareheads which it has inspired.

It is about forty miles from the mouth of the Elbe and is about four times as large as the Grand Central Station in New York. It contains about one hundred and sixty acres and consists of a flat rock two hundred feet high with a small beach beneath. On the rock forts, potato patches, wireless stations and Zeppelin sheds are located, while below are fishing villages and bathing beaches.

Heligoland has 2,500 people, which is a pretty fair population for a quarter-section farm. Some of these live by fishing, some by running summer hotels and some by raising vegetables and milking cows. It requires great skill to balance a fair-sized milk cow on a Heligoland farm during a high wind and considerable livestock falls off the island during the course of a year.

Heligoland is regarded with great interest by the geologists because of its restless disposition. It is the most unstable island in the world. Half of it is steadily rising higher above the sea, while the other half is disappearing. A man might as well buy a farm near the Missouri River as to buy a lot on the sandy shores of Heligoland below the hill and expect it to stay there.

The Germans have owned Heligoland since 1890 and with true German thrift they haven't wasted any of it. The space between the cabbage patches is occupied by huge guns and it is one of the most formidable forts in the world. It has long been an irritation to England, which doesn't enjoy its existence, and if the present war turns against Germany, Heligoland will probably be removed. Pulling islands out of the sea has never been regarded as an easy job, but the Panama Canal boys would load the whole concern on barges and tow it to England in six months.

Heligoland is so small that the careless student of Geography usually passes it over for a fly speck. But it has a history over twelve hundred years long. In the seventh century Christian missionaries converted its inhabitants and it has been an orderly and respectable community ever since. Let us hope no warring fleets get to fighting about the island. If a dreadnought should collide with it and tip it over in the haste of conflict, Geography would suffer a great loss.
