These handsome $65 fur-lined mantles received at the great Stock-Taking Sale at the Bon Marche.

Civic chairmanships. Ald. DeFos, as a matter of course, will retain his seat as head of the executive.

Ald. John Shaw will preside over the fire and gas committee.

The water works chairmanship will go to Ald. Walker, at least a knowing one said so.

Ald. Baxter is after the board of works, but his chances of getting there, to their minds, are not very good.

How the other chairmanships have been placed in a car which now being built for its reception by the Pennsylvania railroad company.

The clerical intimation case. Editor World: I desire to state through your paper that during the polling for separate school trustees for St. James' ward, action took place on last Wednesday, no intimation was used, and the rev. gentleman referred to in Mr. Heron's letter to you was not present in the polling booth.

Editor World: I desire to draw the attention of Mr. Frankland (T. S. R.) to the fact that his rules in regard to smoking in the streets cars are not properly enforced by some of his employees.

A rumor about a civic center. A rumor has been current on the street for the past few days that Inglis & Hunter intend shortly to apply to the city council for an advance on their pumping engine contract by the terms of the latter document, however, this would be impossible, as they gave bonds to build the engine complete before they were to receive a cent from the city.

BISMARCK'S VOICE OVER LAND.

How He Felt the Colonial Over Lord Granville's Issue—His Political Empire.

Berlin, Dec. 24.—It is hardly to be expected that the colonial aspirations of the great German chanceroil would be limited to the inexpensive and peaceful acquisition of the first new of the continent along the west coast of Africa.

A fortnight before the first news of the probable German protectorate over Zanzibar was published in Europe I informed you that this step was to be taken, and that the newly appointed German consul-general, Dr. Rohlf, had received orders to that purpose.

Would official denials are not wanting, but I still maintain the accuracy of my information. Soon after the German man-of-war had started for Zanzibar, the German foreign office notified the government of France and England of the proposed protectorate.

The former power offered no opposition, while the latter, judging that the new protectorate would be a serious obstacle to the possibility of availing everything herself.

But Herr von Bismarck has now directed his attention to the Pacific Ocean, where German commerce and German trade are largely represented.

As early as last August, he replied to the colonial aspirations of Germany, the great chanceroil had sent off his ships with sealed orders, and to-day he is in the Pacific Ocean.

Moreover, he proposes to establish a German colony on the Marianne Islands, lying east of the Philippines, now held by the Spaniards at considerable expense.

The most important addition to this empire of a future German colonial empire, however, is the northern half of New Guinea, an island comprising a larger area than Germany, and enormously rich in tropical products and minerals.

New Guinea, New Britain and New Ireland were so far believed to be under the dominion of the British, but the discovery of these groups of islands came somewhat unexpected.

The diplomatic arrangements of the whole affair was conducted in the most business-like manner. After despatching the German man-of-war Elizabeth to the Pacific, Prince Bismarck sent orders to the German embassy in London to ascertain whether these islands were entered at the British colonial office as belonging to the British possessions.

German representatives called unexpectedly on Lord Granville in order to make direct inquiry. Neither New Britain nor New Ireland were found on the list, and a sovereignty was claimed for certain points along the south coast of New Guinea, and that was all.

Without any preliminary explanation, the German representative informed Lord Granville personally of the intention of Germany to occupy these islands, recognizing, however, British priority of discovery.

On Oct. 23, in a friendly conversation at the London foreign office, the German and British representatives agreed upon the limits of the respective occupations of this enormous island. The western portion of the island was assigned to Germany, and the eastern portion to Great Britain.

The Admiralty followed suit. On the 24th of the respective occupations of this enormous island was assigned to Germany, and the eastern portion to Great Britain.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERRIDAN.

Something About the Great British Wit and his Comedies.

Sherridan wrote his comedies when he was 23 and 26 years of age. They were acted at the time, and are certainly marvels of precocity.

He afterwards entered parliament and was satily regarded as the wit of the house of commons for many years.

As an orator he was not chief attraction in the debates from his wit and humor and his keen sarcasm.

He brought freshness and a raciness to the humdrum debates of country squires, busy barristers and obstreperous city politicians, quite new to that business body. In manner he was an accomplished elocutionist. But he never rose to the height of a statesman.

He was a servicable party debater and an amusing wit and entertaining wag, and that was chiefly the reason of his fame in parliament.

He regarded the house as a great debating club and a theatre for wit. He was always a man-about-town and a perpetual guest at the dinner parties of the dinner table and the club.

He continued to hold a seat in parliament until his death in 1795. He was at the age of 29, and remaining continuously thirty-two years. He succeeded David Garrick as manager of Drury Lane Theatre in 1782, and died in 1816, having survived his wife for 27 years, and Burke a much longer time.

He was buried with great pomp in Westminster Abbey. He was a man of great wit and humor, and his comedies are still popular. He was a man of great wit and humor, and his comedies are still popular.
