I wonder if the thousands of dollars (and the thousands of hours of work) spent by our industry in preparing information for your committee was all in vain. Did it fall on deaf ears? Do you accuse us of lying? It is impossible for me to understand your refusal to accept documented evidence.

Of the 37½ cents of each dollar that they claim to spend on drug research, only 2½ cents is actually spent on research, with 11½ cents being spent for promotion. As a result of all the money they claim they spend on research, there has not been a breakthrough in research in Canada in the last 15 years. Research in Canada is very small, even taking into account all the drug manufacturers and all the P.M.A.C. group, including the parent companies of all the subsidiaries. What these drug companies do is combine drugs and give them a different name. This gives them a new drug status and they are protected from compulsory licences for another five years.

Another thing these companies do is what is called molecular manipulation. They make a slight change in a product, possibly an antibiotic, and give it a different name. As a result they obtain a new patent which is good for another 17 years. This is the sort of thing they claim is costing so much money. They suggest that 2½ cents per drug dollar represents millions of dollars spent on research. That being the case, imagine how much is spent on promotion if 11½ cents per dollar is used for that purpose.

The last paragraph of this letter was of great interest to me. It states:

If your actions are designed to appeal to the voter, I wish you luck. If they are designed to increase your acceptability as a physician and scientist I doubt that you have impressed your colleagues in practice or academic circles or in industry.

I do not know whether that has any political connotations, but I am glad that he wishes me luck. The articles were published in Ottawa, not in Hamilton where my voters are. Is Dr. Wigle trying to say that my medical practice is going to be jeopardized in the future because I have spoken out frankly in an attempt to convey to the people of Canada the facts about the drug manufacturing hoax which exists in this country today? With particular reference to the brand name companies operating under the protective shield of the P.M.A.C., if what I said before was an attempt to solicit votes Dr. Wigle can certainly accuse me of this again because of what I have said today with greater emphasis.

I believe the government can reduce the cost of drugs by establishing compulsory licensing, particularly in respect of the importation of drugs. That was the basis of a recommendation of the committee. This would inject competition into the industry. At this time there is no competition among members of the P.M.A.C. and there is no competition outside that organization. A monopoly is being operated and these companies are thriving. How can you rationalize a 9,700 per cent mark-up? How can you rationalize the government buying something for 27 cents which is sold at 100 times that much to private individuals?

I believe that Canadians, particularly sick people, deserve protection from this form of profiteering. The sicker a person is, the more drugs and money he needs. The more drugs he needs, the less he can afford them and the less he can afford to pay for this terrible profiteering. The drug manufacturers have perpetrated on the doctors of this country a brainwashing job to convince them to prescribe their drugs so they can continue to make for themselves and their shareholders an immense profit. The only way we can lower the price of drugs in Canada is to inject competition into the industry. I ask the government sincerely to do something to solve this serious problem. The minister spoke with all sorts of idealistic terminology, which I appreciate. However, if there is any sincerity in this regard something must be done to lower the price of drugs, and I think that this can be done by legislation.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, in rising to participate briefly in this debate I want to say through you, sir, to the minister that he has perhaps more than any other minister a great responsibility in his department and the branches assigned to his ministry in improving and maintaining the free, competitive economic system that we have in Canada. He has, as has been pointed out, under his jurisdiction the Bankruptcy Act, the Combines Investigation Act, the corporations branch and the patents branch. Taking all these together, there are probably more abusive practices in the free, competitive economic system which can be dealt with by one or other of these branches than by any other department of government. I hope the minister realizes the tremendous responsibility that he has to see that these abuses are dealt with as they arise, so that we can maintain the kind of economic system that many of us in this house as well as throughout the country value so highly.

I shall speak only very briefly on one aspect of these estimates. It is one that has been discussed quite a lot this afternoon. I refer to drugs and the monopoly that many of us believe exists in this industry. Whether it is a monopoly, a combine or whatever makes no difference; the fact is that the result, in our opinion, is a far higher price structure at the consumer level than is necessary. The main question I want to pose to the minister this afternoon is: Why do we not take some action in respect of the many recommendations that have been made, not only by members of this house but by competent firms which have been retained by the governments of many provinces to carry out studies in this area?

There is no lack of evidence before this house in the form of findings and recommendations with regard to what the government ought to do and what action it ought to take to change some of our laws and effect a lowering of drug prices. We have, as the hon. member for Hamilton South pointed out, the submission of the government of Alberta which I think was excellent, although I was at the committee for only a limited number of hearings. The hon. member for Hamilton South was a member of the committee during all its hearings.

A large number of those recommendations were accepted by the committee and included in their report. That report has been before the government for quite a long time. We appreciate that when bringing down the budget the Minister of Finance announced he was going to remove the 12 per cent sales tax on drugs. He also mentioned that some of his colleagues would be introducing legislation to take care of some of the other recommendations. So far that is all we have. I should like the minister to know that his announcement has not changed the price of drugs very much. In fact, it has not changed the price of drugs at all. The fact is, if the rumours we hear are true, that it has increased the price of drugs until September 1, and they were too high before. I should like to refer the minister to one paragraph of the report of the committee; which can be found in Votes and Proceedings at page 1641:

> Both the drug manufacturers and retail pharmacists offered the opinion before the committee that the benefits of a reduction in sales tax would be passed along to the consumer.

What a hope. However, Mr. Chairman, the committee was not quite as naïve as would appear from that statement. The report says further:

> However, the committee concludes that, without more effective operation of competitive forces than presently exists in the drug industry in Canada, the only certain result from removal of the tax would be a reduction in costs to the manufacturers.

What appears to have happened thus far is that rather than reducing the price by 12 per cent even at the manufacturers' level, the pharmacists and manufacturers have indicated that there might be an 8 per cent reduction or maybe a 5 per cent reduction in price. But they do not define on what that reduction will be based. Will it be on the basis of the prices that prevailed prior to the minister's statement in the house or will it be based on the prices in effect on September 1 when the sales tax will be removed? It certainly does not add up to very much benefit to the consumer if between June 1, when the Minister of Finance brought down his budget, and September 1—a period of three months—they raise the price by as much as they intend reducing it. There is, therefore, no reduction at all to the consumer.

I wonder whether the minister and his department are taking into account what the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association, and perhaps even the local pharmacists, are doing to the price of drugs in the intervening period. It seems to me to be most unfair that we should give the local pharmacists, and perhaps the wholesale distributors of drugs, a three months' period to protect themselves against a loss in the value of their inventory, if they are allowed to nullify the minister's intention in this way. In my opinion this is not keeping faith with the intent of the minister's announcement and it is certainly not doing what is just.

The Minister of Finance could have reduced the price of drugs by withdrawing the sales tax at once, effective June 1 when he made the statement. But he did not. The reason he gave for not doing so was to allow a period in which the drug manufacturers could protect the value of their inventories. Now they are flying right in the face of that very reasonable action and are in the meantime raising their prices. The net price after September 1 will be no lower than it is today. In my opinion this is a disgraceful attitude for the pharmaceutical manufacturers and distributors to take. It seems to me it is not in keeping with the spirit or intent of the minister's announcement.

I intended to deal at some length with the summary of recommendations of the government of the province of Alberta, which is to be found in chapter V of their brief. I also intended to deal with the recommendations of the committee which can be found at page 1664 of Votes and Proceedings. However, the hon. member for Hamilton South has dealt with that matter and pressed for action in this regard. Therefore all I wish to say is that we believe we need action, and it is within the jurisdiction of this minister to take action, in respect of such things as compulsory licences for the importation of drugs. There is also the matter of the Patent Act. Amendments should be introduced so that the burden of proof in respect of any infringement of drug prices and patents would be on the plaintiff. Action in this field is long overdue but, as I said, I will not go into the matter any further because we have just heard about it. However, we would like the minister to tell us when we can expect some action which will result in a reduction of price at the retail and consumer level. So far this has not been evident.

I also want to say that I do not believe that changing the law respecting compulsory licences, or amendments to regulations or even the Patent Act, nor for that matter changes with regard to duties and regulations respecting dumping, will completely solve the problem and reduce the prices of drugs to a fair and reasonable level. I say that because it appears to me there is such a large integrated combine involved in the manufacture and distribution of drugs that simply to change some of these laws without adding an element of competition will not solve the whole problem.

I can give the committee some examples. I have some personal knowledge of retail practices with regard to veterinary drugs. I know that not so long ago when the feed stores began to sell veterinary medicines in larger amounts there was a significant decline in the price of these drugs. For example, a few years ago, around 1958, penicillin was selling in a 10 c.c. vial for $1.00. About 18 months after the feed stores and other livestock supply stores began retail sales of penicillin in 10 c.c. vials the price went down to 25 cents a vial and they were still making a profit of 20 to 25 per cent on the cost. Penicillin and streptomycin were selling at $1.50 to $2.25 for 10 c.c. vial, but within a very few months after they were made available for distribution in local feed stores the retail price went down to 60 cents in 100 c.c. vials and 39 cents for 10 c.c.

Vaccine for cattle was selling in local pharmacies at a list price of 35 cents a dose for what is commonly referred to as a three-way vaccine, that is, vaccine for partial immunization against blackleg, malignant edema and septicemia. Within a short time after large scale distribution of this vaccine was made available through the local feed stores its price went down to 18 cents a dose. The price of two-way vaccine was reduced from around 18 cents a dose to less than 10 cents a dose. This vaccine is for the immunization against blackleg and malignant edema.

The same pattern is evident throughout the whole list of veterinary medicines, such as antibiotics. The hon. member for Hamilton South spoke about oxytetracycline. This drug is used extensively in veterinary medicine. Before it was made available to the local feed stores the price of this drug was two or three times higher than what these stores demand now. Such drugs as aureomycin and other types of antibiotics were reduced by as much as 70 to 80 per cent as soon as additional competition was developed at the retail level.

I am not suggesting that the local pharmacists were in fact able to reduce their prices but that pressures were exerted by the local feed stores in dealing with the wholesalers. We who were dealing in livestock supplies in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge were very much involved in this. As soon as the prices started to come down to somewhere around a 20 or 25 per cent mark-up these people were able to negotiate new prices with the wholesalers and thus were able to reduce their own prices which have remained at the lower level. The feed stores did not find it necessary to revert to the higher prices. This was not distress selling but simply a reduction of the price in line with a reasonable mark-up over the cost of production and distribution. We believe this is a sound, sane and just basis for setting a price on drugs rather than the way in which it is done now by monopolies through restrictive trade practices which dictate the price of drugs rather than basing them on the cost of their production and distribution.

I admit that there are some drugs even in the veterinary field which should not be handled by untrained or non-professional people. However, the reason I think there is a greater need for competition in this field can be illustrated by the following example. Another drug which was available to the local feed stores is called dyethylstilbestrol. Its use involves some danger. It is a synthetic sex hormone and there is some danger in its indiscriminate distribution. However, as long as these feed stores were selling it, its price was somewhere around 85 cents for a 10c.c. vial. The province of Alberta decided, quite properly, and I believe other provinces did also, that this is one drug which non-professional people should not handle. The sale of this drug by local feed stores was therefore prohibited. What happened then? The price of the drug in injectable form gradually doubled.

I fully appreciate that drugs for humans should be handled solely by professional people so far as their retail distribution is concerned, even those that are completely fabricated in manufacturing plants. I know there is a danger in the misuse of these drugs if they are not handled by professional people who can give advice to the customer and consumer at the time of sale. However, I believe sincerely that something more should be done than the removal of the sales tax and changes in laws respecting licences, patents and tariffs. This matter may not fall within the ambit of this minister nor may it even be within the jurisdiction of the federal government but I am convinced, having knowledge of the widespread and complex nature of the drug combine, that we need more competition.

I wonder whether it would not be proper for hospital pharmacies to enter into the business of filling prescription drugs directly for the consumer regardless of whether the patient is in the hospital. I know that even today some of the local pharmacists complain that hospital pharmacies are able to buy a large number of drugs at a lower price than they can. This is one of the reasons that they are unable to come even close to the price that is charged to the hospital pharmacies. Who is responsible for that? Is it the manufacturers or the wholesale distributors? It does not make any difference to me who is responsible for the different price structure, the disparity between wholesale prices charged to the local drug stores and the hospital pharmacies. The fact is that the price should be based on the cost of production of the drug plus the cost of distribution, and nothing else. If the combine in the drug manufacturing and marketing business is not willing to make the changes that are necessary to reduce these prices to a reasonable level, then I believe we should take some action to set up a government agency for the distribution of these drugs.

Of course many of the provinces at the present time operate the hospital pharmacies. This could be one of the first steps. There was a time in the province of Alberta many years ago when it was felt that the price of automobile and fire insurance was exorbitant. It was too high and there was no justification for it. Therefore the province of Alberta set up an insurance company. Nobody had to buy insurance from the company but at least it was made available. The day that the company opened its office all of the insurance companies in the province found it expedient to reduce their premiums by 20 per cent. I think that some such step is required so as to shake up this industry and make it act reasonably.

I should like to close, Mr. Chairman, by suggesting to the minister that he get on with the task of bringing in these changes for which his department is responsible as quickly as possible. I suggest we carry out not an intensive survey but a review of the price of drugs at the retail level. If a reduction in the enormous mark-ups to which reference has been made in the committee reports and also by the hon. member for Hamilton South and the hon. member for Bow River today is not brought about, then I suggest we take further action to make sure that we are not going to have to pay these artificial prices for an interminable period into the future. I wish the minister well in making the changes which I am sure he intends to recommend to his colleagues, and I hope that he will be prepared to co-operate with the provincial governments and all those responsible so as to make absolutely certain that when our laws and regulations are revised the result will be lower prices on drugs for the consumer.

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Chairman, I decided to say only a few words on this subject, since the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe), has already put forward very convincing arguments, summarizing somewhat the investigation of the committee on drug costs and prices in which we both took part some time ago and whose report was published just recently.

However, I should like to point out to the house that if we indicated in the report the policy to be followed, the federal government will surely not be able, even by amending certain pieces of legislation, to reduce the price of drugs before the provinces amend certain statutes, so that consumers are required to pay less for drugs.

Now, among the several recommendations of the committee, there is one especially that has perhaps been overlooked. It is recommendation 16 which reads as follows:

That the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and all Provincial Pharmaceutical Associations, Faculties of Pharmacy and the Provincial governments should meet to discuss the practice of pharmacy in Canada, bearing in mind the following matters:

I shall spare you the rest. The most important one is that there should be interprovincial conferences grouping the various pharmacist and medical associations.

I should like to point out an extremely important matter, which may have gone unnoticed until now, that of the national suicide of the pharmacist profession in Canada. Indeed, if the profession does not revise its stand immediately, or as soon as possible, I am sure it will destroy itself and, before it does, drug prices will have poared.

In its recommendation No. 16, as I have said before, the committee suggests that the pharmacist associations meet, hold a round table conference, with a view to amending their laws or revising them in such a way as to provide for the setting up of a school to train technicians to assist the pharmacists. According to the law, there must be a graduate pharmacist in a drugstore to fill out prescriptions, and this means that pharmacists have to be on the job from morning till night, six days a week.

In such circumstances, I am sure no one wants to spend a whole lifetime in such a profession. But the pharmacist who owns a drugstore faces the dilemma of having to close his drugstore from time to time, or having to hire pharmacists who are not owners of drugstores, for $400 or $500 a week. This, of course, would cause the cost of drugs to rise considerably.

We know that it is one profession without technical assistants to help it. We know the doctors can count on the nurses. Radiologists have their technicians and the architects their draftsmen. These professionals can always count on someone to help them and for whom they are responsible.

In the field of pharmacy, the druggists are the only ones to fulfil this duty and they cannot delegate their responsibilities to others, because there are no schools giving special courses that could be followed by assistants wishing to help the pharmacists.

In view of the shortage of pharmacists today, existing legislation is to be implemented in the province of Quebec starting November 1, 1967 and I repeat that this will be suicidal for the pharmacist profession throughout Canada, since it will discourage the young people who will be facing a very difficult job and who will want to get away from this profession forever, because they are not interested in taking part in a suicide marathon.

Therefore, I appeal to pharmaceutical associations throughout Canada as well as to pharmacists associations to bring pressure on their respective bodies for the purpose of amending that legislation which, I am sure, will be a national suicide for the pharmacist profession.

Although we have been the target of acid barbs, the fact remains that the recent report on drug costs is one of the best reports there is, as far as assistance to consumers is concerned, because Heaven knows that the use of pills is great in this fast-changing world, which no longer has time to stop and think and even less to eat, because use is now being made of substitutes, of the famous vitamin pills.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw attention to the fact that the report on drug costs may require certain departments to consider amending certain legislation, but I do think that its basic purpose is to make sure that provinces, the associations and everybody will co-operate in order to bring about a change, within their respective fields, in what must be changed and in what the federal government does not have the jurisdiction to change. That is the only way we can bring about a real decrease in the costs of drugs.

It is useless to make speeches, or to say that drugs cost a lot in Canada. I believe that the price may be a little higher than it should be, but I do think from our investigation that the price of drugs is high in all countries.

Since it is one of the necessities of life, I think that those organizations have a greater responsibility than the federal government since, strictly speaking, it comes under provincial jurisdiction or of their college. It is up to them to start working first, and the federal government, I am sure, will follow suit, and make changes as may be necessary in the anti-combine legislation or the patents legislation or any other federal field.

It is absolutely certain that if we do not move towards a new ideology, mainly in the field of pharmacy, in order to change a little what is a century old, in the field of pharmacy as well as medicine, we will get nowhere, and any change which the federal government might make in that field will be of no avail. There will always be profiteers along the line who will benefit from the legislation by getting around it because if any particular group, such as the pharmacist association for instance, does not attend to its own business, absolutely nothing will be achieved and the price of drugs will keep climbing.

This is the very modest contribution I wanted to make; it is a simple warning to the College of pharmacists of Canada, to assume its responsibilities. For instance, I know that in the riding of Halton represented by the cha rman of the committee on drug costs and prices (Mr. Harley), a druggist being ill, his drug-store had to be closed because there was nobody to replace him.

Therefore, part of the Canadian people have to suffer because we apply an antiquated legislation which provides that a pharmacist must be present in the drug-store throughout the day to make up prescriptions. It shows that if we must allow part of the population to suffer, our legislation is deficient. If our legislation is deficient, it means that the Ontario College of Pharmacists Act is deficient as much as that of the Quebec College and that the colleges should be subject to reform because, in my opinion, that is the true basis, the true subject matter of all the very interesting discussions heard this afternoon from my colleagues. I am sure that if those colleges are conscientious enough to adopt all the proposed regulations, the rest will follow very easily.

It is said that the price of drugs is too high; it might be true. They are an essential need, as I said earlier, but there are many other areas where consumer prices should be investigated. However, that one is important because it affects the sick. When they are without any income, in short when they are bed-ridden and no one looks after them, they do not always have the money needed to have a prescription filled at the drug-store, and I am sure that those mainly responsible for that are the associations and colleges of pharmacists throughout Canada. As I said and as I will always say, they are the ones who have the key, the power, who authorize druggists to practise pharmacy as they now do in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I had no difficulty in following with great interest the minister's speech today. As a matter of fact I was greatly impressed with the tremendous amount of verbiage, the beautiful phraseology and the descriptive words which were used in their most potent form to convey correct connotations. I wish to congratulate personally the artists who were responsible for the drafting of the speech. The minister shows, by the quiet dignity with which he delivered the speech, that he is a professional salesman. Were we not accustomed to searching deeply into the intent of such speeches we could have been lulled into a sense of security. On analysing the minister's speech of this morning one quickly realizes that the minister has become adept in his portfolio. His speech had more loopholes than one would find in the most extensive rabbit warren.

Various speakers from different parties today dealt with different aspects of the minister's portfolio. They emphasized the failure of some major financial institutions and the work of the committee that investigated drug prices in Canada. What the committee did shows, really, that various consumer groups across the country worked hard to uncover information. The government cannot take the credit for setting up the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to look into drug costs. That step was taken as a result of the publicity and pressure that was exerted by various groups of ladies across the country. I wish to commend those ladies for their efforts. What they did will serve more than one purpose. Not only did their efforts bring to the attention of members of parliament the fact that in certain consumer fields exorbitant prices were being charged, but those efforts enabled the consumer groups in the presentation of the briefs to gain a better understanding of the workings of standing committees of parliament. The ladies saw that not only was the committee interested in their problem, but also what must be the proper approach to a democratic government to attain redress for what they felt was a real grievance. They performed a real service to the country when they took time out from their busy lives to investigate, store by store and chain by chain, the differences in prices, also when they began in an earnest and direct manner to trace the basis for such differences and why there should be price increases from time to time. I am certain that Sherlock Holmes would have taken his hat off to the zeal and methods of the participants in the pursuit of their worth-while cause.

We tend to overlook the fact that though drugs and food are important, they play a part only in the consumer price index. The consumer protests were not only about food and drugs but about the prices of furniture, automobiles, new homes and the tremendously spiralling cost of land. The consumers dealt with all the goods and services our modern life demands. As I say, that is what the consumer groups were interested in. As a result of their work and as the result of the arrangements and sincere efforts of the standing committee the minister today got up and intimated that something, at last, will be done.

He said that the government is considering seriously something that is outlined in the speech from the throne, setting up a department that would deal exclusively with consumer affairs. He told us that corporations, since they are so directly affected, would be included among the responsibilities of this department.

I believe many people in Canada today are much concerned at the tendency of this government to set up a task force, or a royal commission, or to develop a new department of government whenever a problem is referred to. The net result is to increase the tax burden borne by the people of Canada. I wonder whether the people of this country who are responsible for bringing this question to the attention of the government are really desirous of seeing a separate department set up under a minister. Is this what we want; or do they only want action to be taken by the government to make sure they will not be victimized by various sections of the retail industry which charge exorbitant prices? Would they not be satisfied if the desired result could be produced by an educational program, for instance, or by the enforcement of regulations which are designed to protect the consumer against the practices about which he is complaining?

When I had the honour to be president of the fruit and vegetables growers organization of the province of Ontario we were much concerned because consumers were being induced to buy imported products to the detriment of those grown locally. One of the methods we used to combat this situation was an educational program. A radio program was set up in Ontario called, I believe, "The Market Basket". Each and every day a hired professional shopper would announce to the housewives of Ontario the availability of locally grown produce at prices which represented a real economy to housewives. It was not long before favourable comments began to come in by the hundreds. This service was provided long after I had left office as president; I am not sure how long it continued. But it was educational, and it provided a service. Why not make readily available to housewives and shoppers information telling them how and why to buy Canadian meat, how and why to buy Canadian vegetables, how to understand the various grades and qualities, how to buy furniture, whether to buy a new automobile as opposed to an old one, where the best value is to be found in new homes, and what means of financing are most advantageous? Publications in these fields are for the most part already available. I have seen some of them and they go into great detail.

The most of making this information easily accessible to the housewives of this nation might run into hundreds of thousands of dollars when allowance is made for distribution, but even so I suggest it would prove far more economic than the setting up of a brand new department under a separate minister. I believe the minister today quoted a provisional figure of $1 million. Am I wrong?

Mr. Turner: No. The expenditures of the department as it now exists are $1.2 million.

Mr. Danforth: Thank you. It is my contention that if information of this kind were made available to housewives, particularly new housewives, there might be no need for such drastic action on the part of the government as is now proposed. I was much concerned about what the minister had to say with regard to certain aspects of this new department. He spoke at length of what it could not do, and I admire him for his honesty and frankness. He also told us what the department would not do—rightly so, in my opinion. He emphasized that it was the government's desire to interfere as little as possible with the normal course of business.

On the other hand, the setting up of a new government department in this field could have no other effect than to intrude directly into the normal operations of business; and we have found, to our bitter experience, that any time government action interferes directly with the normal course of business the net result is an increase rather than a decrease in prices to the consumer.

I wonder whether the government has sufficiently explored the powers existing under present regulations in the various departments concerned. If these regulations were applied more strictly, perhaps the results outlined by the minister as being desirable could be obtained. It is possible that we already have adequate laws on our statute books to take care of the situation and it is also possible we already have the personnel capable of enforcing such regulations.

Having been closely associated with the fruit and vegetable industry, I will use my own experience as an example of what I have in mind. When I visit a supermarket or a general store I naturally find it of interest to visit the fruit and vegetable displays to note the latest methods of advertisement, display and sales approach. I think everyone will agree that tremendous advances have been made in all three of these aspects, especially in the past five years or so.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Here again lack of knowledge on the part of the housewife tends to increase the price she has to pay. I have seen examples relating to bins of cucumbers, a product with which I am familiar. As you know, they are sold singly or in two's for prices varying from 12 cents to 30 cents each when they are out of season. Then, I have seen cucumbers in bins containing not only first grade but also second and third grades, and even cooking cucumbers. Anyone familiar with the industry knows that the price varies to a tremendous degree.

It is a simple matter to bring such a thing to the attention of an inspector who will visit the store and take the necessary course of action to remedy a given situation. However, in the busy day-by-day workings of a large chain store, with the myriad of workers it employs, inevitably there will be a mixing of grades. Unless the housewife is familiar with this and can lodge a complaint, she will pay an exorbitant price for a second or third class article. I say once more that it is a matter of education, a matter of know-how, and not so much one of regulation. Stores try to provide a service but they cannot achieve perfection. In this day and age this is impossible, especially in view of the tremendous tonnage of goods that go through stores each day.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I emphasize once more that I am not taking a stand to say it is absolutely unnecessary to develop a consumer affairs department: I am not aware of enough facts at present in order to take such a position; but I would ask the government not to let itself be stampeded into hasty action. Neither should it sit and do nothing. The consumers want action that will allow them to buy more with their shrinking dollar. My sympathies are with them in this regard. This is the basis of their dissatisfaction with the economy of the nation. Their dollars are buying less. The government's immediate task is to show it is sincere in its desire to make consumers' dollars go further.

I am not certain that the setting up of a new department is the answer. It will cause delay. We who sit in parliament are well aware that if a new department is established the first thing it will do is appoint a task force to make an investigation of the problem, and to see whether the points brought out by the standing committee are factual. This will result in many months delay. Therefore I would like the government to consider seriously some of the alternate methods I have proposed, to see if they have merit and will achieve the results that we and the consumers want.

This is a difficult subject. We cannot supply all the answers, but if we could show the consumers that we are aware of their problem and are willing to do something constructive about it, they will be satisfied that we are sincere and we ourselves will feel that we are doing something for the benefit of the people of the nation.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I first want to express appreciation of the new Registrar General who this morning outlined the work of his department in a very competent manner. We all hope for great things from this department. We are certainly glad to have a person of his youth, vigour, aggressiveness, ambition and many other qualifications in charge of it. It is precisely because of all these things, and because so much is hoped for from this department, that I am going to have some very blunt things to say this afternoon.

My fear is exactly the reverse of that of the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), who has just spoken. Apparently he is worrying lest the government go all out to create a department of consumer affairs. My fear is that the department of consumer affairs will remain a small etc. tacked on to the already overfilled Department of the Registrar General.

In order to allay the fear of the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), and to show the grounds for my own fear, I would point out that when the minister spoke this morning during his initial allotted 30 minutes he dealt with the Bankruptcy Act, the Corporations Act, the securities field, patents, copyright and trademarks. He gave only a tiny bow to the idea of establishing a consumer affairs section in his department. Then he got the indulgence of the committee to extend his speaking time, but even at that he spent only a matter of ten minutes on the whole field of consumer affairs. Therefore I believe the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), is unjustifiably afraid of the likelihood of there being established a new department to protect the affairs of consumers.

I am anxious to speak about this while the matter is still reasonably flexible. Last fall it was stated that the new department would look after bankruptcy matters, the Corporations Act, the securities field, and would draft legislation for the protection of the consumer.

That was tagged on as a bit of an etc. during reorganization of the department.

I believe that what has happened in the interim should convince the government to go ahead and set up a full scale department of consumer affairs, with perhaps some other things tacked on to it. The hon. member for Kent (Ont.), has asked whether the consumers of this country want a plain department of consumer affairs, without corporations and all the rest added on to it? This morning the minister reasoned that in order to protect consumers, corporations have to be brought under the same department. I do not believe that for a minute, nor do consumers.

The prices committee had consumer organizations appear before it in Ottawa, and from Vancouver to Newfoundland. I did not hear one single consumer group that wanted anything other than a plain department of consumer affairs in order to protect the affairs of consumers. A former president of the Consumers Association of Canada, Mrs. Beryl Plumptre, put it very plainly when she said the affairs of such a department must be in the hands of consumer oriented personnel.

There is no doubt that there is a new idea which has been put forward in this country; that is, that even as there are departments for agriculture, fisheries, industry, and so on, the time has come when there should be one single department for no other purpose than to look after the interests of the whole population in its role as a consumer. I have said this before, but I should like to say again that I do not think we should drag the corporations into the consumers department, or vice versa. One might say that the corporations were there first—and they were, in respect of this department. However, to mix the consumers and the corporations in one department is simply the same as trying to have the lion and the lamb live peacefully together. This may happen in Utopia, but in our society if we were to invite the lion and the lamb to live together in one pen there would be one result: The lamb would lie securely inside the lion, and this would be a happy situation from the lion's point of view.

I do not think the consumers across this country want to see this kind of thing repeated. This afternoon we heard about the situation in respect of one field involving the consumers, that is the drug field. This is a field which is very close to the consumer. I believe this again indicates the need for a department, the sole purpose of which is to look after the well-being and the affairs of the consumers, a department which would study ways to protect the rights of the consumers and their ability to live well.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

I certainly believe in consumer education. I believe the recommendation as to prices was one of the strongest recommendations which was made by the joint committee on consumer credit. We recommended that a department of consumer affairs should set up in prime time on television, and in other forms of publicity programs, for the consumer. These programs should be designed so that they would acquaint the consumers with the facts about good buying habits, bargains, and so on.

I should like to emphasize, however, that education is not enough. We must have action. This department must have teeth, so that it will be in a position to protect the consumer. If we were to suggest that everything should be left to education, this would be the same as suggesting that in respect of highway safety we should scrap all the traffic lights, the traffic courts, the system of fines and the other methods used for the protection of traffic on the highway. The consumer, in respect of food, clothing and the other essentials, is in exactly the same position as the pedestrian.

During the hearings before the committee we found that in this world today we are not in the cracker barrel age to which many people in this house too often give allegiance. It is not a nice place, where there are a lot of little stores and businesses competing against each other; nor is it a place where the results are for the good of the little businesses and the public as a whole.

We found that in the field of food production and distribution—corn flakes, meat products, soap, and so on—what we have in Canada today in each one of these lines of food and other products is a situation where these items are divided between two, three or four great, big firms. They divide the major share of this among themselves. They use every one of the promotional arts to the extent that they can afford them in order to get a larger share of the business and make the consumers pay for the additional cost of doing.

It makes me weary to hear people talk about the free competitive society in which we are living. The net and logical result of this type of thing is a situation such as we have in respect of the Weston interests. During the committee hearings, when we heard the story of the Weston chain we realized that the logical end of this fierce, free competition, buttressed by advertising and promotion, is monopoly, a situation in which the small businesses are driven out and in which the consumer is driven away because of her own helplessness, weakness and disorganization in the face of the most tightly organized system of obtaining goods and services that could be devised.

This is the situation which faces the Registrar General. I do not envy him his task of trying to cope with it, if indeed he does try to cope with it. I know he has the energy and the ability to do it, if he will, but I wonder whether we are going to see a St. Lawrence-St. George start out to combat the dragon of high prices and monopoly which stands in the way of the consumers, or are we going to see the sort of pale shadow—younger, of course, but equally pale for all that—that we saw in the person of his political progenitor, Mr. Mackenzie King, who, although he did not say "persuasion if necessary but not necessary persuasion", did say "conscription if necessary but not necessarily conscription". In any case, he did not say clearly definitely what he meant.

I hope we do not see that again. If this minister really is interested in surviving in the annals of Canada, he will go out and take advantage of this heaven sent opportunity to be the champion of the consumers across this country in the face of something which they themselves are quite powerless to handle, no matter how well organized they may be.

There is no need for some hon. members to think this is so hopeless that they might as well laugh as cry about it. This sort of thing must be handled in Canada. In our recommendations we made certain far reaching and excellent points, to which all of us subscribe. Our major recommendation was the idea of this department of consumer affairs, uncluttered by these other things around the edges of it, which unfortunately make up the lion's share of that department. That was our main recommendation.

I was glad this morning to hear the minister say—I cannot quote him because I have not seen his speech—that there would be studies made of the lower income group with a view to seeing what could be done to help give them access to a decent standard of living. As I say, I was glad to hear that because, Mr. Minister, I was afraid that you might be hanging on to the idea that if you leave the free competitive market untrammelled it would add up to the greatest good for the greatest number.

I am glad to see that the minister has moved far enough ahead that he knows there are groups in our society who, through no fault of their own, are not in a position to earn enough money to obtain the food, clothing, and so on, which they need in order to be able to have a reasonable standard of living. I was very glad indeed to hear him say that consideration will be given to this type of thing.

In respect of the Combines Investigation Act the committee made the following recommendation:

> Your committee noted that the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act reported the discontinuance of a study of concentration in the food retailing industry in Canada on March 15, 1963 (Report of the Director of Investigation and Research, Combines Investigation Act for the year ended March 31, 1963). Your committee recommends that this study be resumed on a continuous basis and broadened to cover both food retailing and manufacturing in Canada with a particular view to examining concentration, market power and trade practices in the relations between retailers and suppliers.

I should like to ask the minister, if and when we have a continuation of this debate and set this up as another link to his department, whether that study of concentration in the food retailing industry in Canada, under the auspices of the Combines Investigation Act, is going to be resumed. This would be a step in the right direction, to deal with these monopolies or near monopolies which are sucking the life out of so many consumers today. I want to ask about some other things, and I believe this is the time to ask about the minister's policy and what he intends to do. I hope he will not adopt the habit of the Prime Minister of telling us that some board or another is looking into the situation. When some day this minister becomes prime minister, if he does, times will have changed, and he should be very careful to avoid doing those things that people are criticizing today. You know what Marshall McLuhan says about politicians: He says that far too often they give the answers of yesterday to the problems of today. If the minister is planning a long political career he should attempt to get the answers at least of today. I think he would be better advised to look for the answers that will be required tomorrow. If he shoots for those answers he will find it difficult enough to get them. It is difficult enough to get answers today from that group with which he is sitting.

Mr. Knowles: Including the one alongside him.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): What is the minister going to do to protect the consumer? I hope he does not copy the Prime Minister. Every time we ask what is going to be done to protect the consumer we are told that the Economic Council is going to make a report. The Economic Council can give advice and information, but let us not fool ourselves: Government policy is set by the cabinet. Now that the B.N.A. Act is getting a bit shabby and weak in spots I think we should look forward rather than backwards. Let us stop using the Economic Council as a new shield behind which we can nimbly jump and hide. This is what the government has been doing with the B.N.A. Act every time it finds itself in an uncomfortable position and does not want to make a decision. I do not think we should wait, as was hinted by the minister, for an Economic Council report. I want the minister to tell us what he is going to do to protect the consumer.

I have already referred to an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act regarding concentration in the food manufacturing industry. Is the minister going to see to it that this investigation is resumed, with a view to bringing out the facts about this situation? The people of Canada want to know what is being done, and they want an answer to this question. What is the minister going to do to obtain greater disclosure of the financial affairs of these large corporations? I hope he was doing something more than hinting when he indicated that he intended to see that there would be greater disclosures. I can take a hint but I would rather be told, even in a tiresome fashion, over and over again in plain English, what is to be done. I would like to see less beating around the bush.

What is the minister going to do about setting up a practices review board which will deal with all these abuses and gimmicks, such as trading stamps? Does he intend to go beyond what the committee felt was necessary? I refer to the setting up of a prices review board. One might say that the committee did not find a need in this regard, but let me suggest that there would not have been a reference in respect of the cost of food to the committee, had it not been for the tremendous agitation throughout this country about the increase in prices over the last 18 months.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.), would not agree with me regarding many things I have said, but he did make it abundantly clear that the housewives across this country initiated this study because of a great deal of agitating about the cost of living. What is the minister going to do about a practices and prices review board? Such a board could hear grievances in respect of unjustifiable price increases. It could require manufacturers and others to justify any increase in price, just as has been suggested in connection with drugs. The cost of drugs in Canada is probably higher than anywhere else in the world and something should be done about this situation.

What is the minister going to do regarding legislation in respect of the federal incorporation for co-operatives? Please do not tell me that the Economic Council or some other branch of government is going to look after this. The committee made a recommendation in this regard and I do not know whether this comes within the minister's juridiction. I see that the minister is shaking his head. Does this not come under your department?

Mr. Turner: Perhaps I might just intervene. I believe I stated in this house in answer to a question asked by the hon. lady's leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that we are contemplating a federal act for co-operatives. We are currently examining the constitutional aspects of them. Provincial consultation will be required because all the provinces are not of the same mind. Because of the close relationship between such an act and various corporate aspects, certain amendments will have to be considered at the same time. I made a similar statement to the co-operative association two weeks ago.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am glad to hear that statement, and I hope action will not be too long in coming. I know about the roadblocks that can be put in the way of legislation. This legislation was asked for 60 years ago, and since then there have been task forces, white papers, commissions, boards and committees, and perhaps even the Economic Council had a hand in this, although I am not sure of that. Practically every roadblock imaginable has been put in the way.

I am not suggesting there are not difficulties because of provincial differences, but we have a minister who is well on the sunny side of 50—and I know that because I looked it up today, to make sure I was right. I hope he will use his energies and abilities to devise some way of protecting the Canadian consumer. The present government sits peacefully on its—laurels?—and agrees to meet with the provinces any time they want a meeting. I do not think that is good enough. We should have a federal department who will come up with ideas which it will present to the provinces at a meeting here or at any other convenient location. Let us not stand on protocol. Let us get together and cut through all these difficulties. I do not believe that all the roadblocks have occurred as a result of provincial difficulties or responsibilities. What has been lacking is the will to do something for the consumer, and I believe that if there was such a will the ways and means could be found.

I do not intend to take much longer, but I should like to refer to an editorial regarding this minister which appeared in the Vancouver Sun on April 26 and which troubles me. It states in part:

> John Turner, the Liberal government's new Registrar General, has marked out a lot of work for himself and his new, expanding department. To fit its role of protecting Canadian consumers and investors, the department will have major legislation, whose main purpose, in the minister's own words, will be to see that the competitive forces of free enterprise have full sway.

That is not the main purpose so far as we in this party are concerned. We believe that the main purpose should be to see that the consumer of this country is protected. That is the first statement in this editorial that worries me. It then continues as follows:

> Outside of the government, people have been busy interpreting young Mr. Turner's role in various ways—some according to their hearts' desires.
> There are those who see his appointment as signalling a new and deeper plunge by government into business and investment.

One of those is the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) The editorial then states:

> Others have seen him as a budding price czar, holding a protective umbrella over the heads of Canadian housewives.

I do not know how anybody in his right mind could ever see the minister as a price czar holding a protective umbrella over the housewives of this country, particularly after his statement which made it abundantly clear that in his view prices do not come within the jurisdiction of this government.

Mr. Byrne: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I hope that applause is noted in Hansard because some day that hon. member may regret applauding at that particular stage.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The people of this country are anxious to see that these unconscionable prices are not allowed to run sky high with nothing being done about them. The article continues:

> If Mr. Turner has his way there'll be a tightening of bankruptcy regulations, and this will be all to the good.

I agree.

> There also will be stiff penalties for price fixing.

Again, good.

> Anti-combines legislation and staff will get a beefing.

Again, good.

> Mr. Turner's eyes are cast far afield in this connection. He would bring "service industries" under combines regulation and might take a look into the affairs of the National Hockey League and the Canadian Football League.

I think that investigating even those sports is necessary business. The article continues:

> But what has this to do with the price of eggs, the housewife may well ask. Wasn't this what the recent Senate-Commons probing was all about? The answer is that Mr. Turner believes the government has no responsibility for prices as such.

Mr. Woolliams: We want to get back to those nickel eggs.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Just listen to this, and maybe you will change your mind:

> "We can't protect the consumer," he said in a recent interview. "We can only make sure he can protect himself." This, in Mr. Turner's view, will be made possible by furnishing both investor and housewife with information on which to make sound decisions.

That, Mr. Registrar General, is only half the problem. I agree that the consumer needs information in the world's worst way. The consumer knows that she is helpless today and far from knowledgeable in these matters. I suggest to the Registrar General that if his legislation is to be worth the paper it is printed on, it must be legislation to protect the consumer, legislation with teeth in it.

Mr. Woolliams: And regulations.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, regulations where they are necessary. We had from Ontario a comment about the new legislation introduced in that legislature. It was said it was very far from what was required to protect the consumer in that province. It was called a toothless wonder. I do not want to see another toothless wonder, or a toothless blunder in this House of Commons.

It is said that hell hath no fury like a woman scorned. I suggest to the minister that should he lull the consumers into believing that he is protecting them, under the cloak of doing little things for them while doing big things for big business and protecting corporate affairs, and if he is spending his time on the corporate aspects of his department, he will consider that the saying, "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned" is a vast understatement. When the embattled and organized consumers of this country descend about his ears or on the lawns of parliament hill, as did the farmers a couple of weeks ago, they will be armed with teeth, which we hope the minister will put into the legislation; they will come armed to the teeth. They will have those weapons which only women know how to use exceedingly well.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. lady a question?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Certainly.

Mr. Prud'homme: The hon. lady spoke about Mackenzie King having said, "Conscription if necessary, but not necessarily conscription." Can she tell me what the co-leader of Quebec, Mr. Cliche, meant when he said,

"socialization if necessary, but not necessarily socialization".

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I will try to give some explanations to the hon. member. We feel that socialization is a remedial tool. But it is only a tool; it is not always and unavoidably a principle.

If necessary, we use the socialization tool or the co-operation tool, namely the co-operative. When necessary, we use other tools, as I have been saying for many years, and I believe that Mr. Cliche had the same thought in mind when he spoke as he did.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words about those estimates.

The price of drugs and the increased prices of all commodities have been discussed at length. Since the matter of the famous bankruptcies in Canada, especially in Quebec, has been briefly dealt with, I shall only discuss or set out our present bankruptcy system.

I should like to bring justice face to face with bankruptcies. I do not know whether there is injustice within justice, but something is wrong, something is amiss, and justice is not serving its purpose nor achieving its aim. Justice is not at the service of the people. Justice helps to exploit the various public bodies or various companies in Canada.

So, if some people are to organize justice so as to make it just, they will have to take their responsibilities, because there is glaring injustice in the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, and consequently in the field of fraudulent bankruptcies.

We cannot wait and let that social injustice remain any longer throughout Canada and, especially, in the province of Quebec.

The season of fat cows for the great fraudulent bankruptcy experts has come. This is the season in which business is thriving for those magnates of bankruptcies, for those great servants of finance or for those great people responsible for finance.

It is almost impossible to imagine the number of victims these crooks have been able to make for the past few years especially in the last four or five years.

By its size, by its solidarity, by the complexity of its organization, the racket of fraudulent bankruptcies has reached in our country such horrible, brutal and fantastic proportions that it may well throw all local trade into complete anarchy. The losses caused by these bankruptcies are enormous. Next to these gangsters we feel small, insignificant and lost before their atrocities.

These bandits who rub elbows with us, who thank us and crush us, have poisoned and altered trade to an incredible degree. For a lot of people, it is almost impossible to do business next to these people involved in fraudulent bankruptcies, who sell all kinds of merchandise at bargain prices, at ridiculous prices, who cut prices for years and years for those who deal honestly.

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members business, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

BAIL REFORM

MEASURE TO PRECLUDE UNNECESSARY DETENTION

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-4, concerning reform of the bail system.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to reform and improve the bail system of Canada. As is set forth in the explanatory notes of the bill, the measure aims——to asure that all persons, regardless of their financial status, shall not needlessly be detained pending their appearance to answer charges under acts of the Parliament of Canada, when detention serves neither the ends of justice nor the public interest.

This measure will permit poor people awaiting trial to be released without bond and will thus eliminate the arbitrary cruelty in the present bail system.

The no-bail release system established by this bill is limited to instances where the offence is not punishable by death or life imprisonment and in which the judge deems the defendant trustworthy.

The bill will also assure that persons convicted of crimes and infractions will receive credit for time spent in custody prior to trial against service of any sentence imposed by the court.

I intend to outline very briefly the detailed amendments proposed to the Criminal Code in line with the aim of this bill and also in line with the safeguarding of the powers of the court to compel the appearance of an accused. First however I would like to remind hon. members that the bill follows almost precisely the trail blazed last year in the United States when the President signed similar legislation into effect with these words:

It is a move to ensure that defendants are considered as individuals and not as dollar signs.

That our Canadian scales of justice are sometimes weighted not with mercy but with money has been apparent in the matter of before trial detention. A very detailed study of the situation was made in 1965 by M. L. Friedland of the faculty of law of the University of Toronto. I should like to quote briefly from the writings of Mr. Friedland. This is what he wrote:

In the setting of bail there is an undue preoccupation with its monetary aspects. The tragedy is that a large percentage of persons are unable to raise the bail that is set (two-thirds according to the Toronto study). The ability of the accused to marshal funds or property in advance determines whether he will be released and may have an effect on the outcome of his case.

The professional bondsmen and moneylenders operate more or less openly, and in my opinion their operations are open to criticism. Actually, the system does not do too much to ensure the appearance of the accused in court, and the people who lend the money reap substantial profits. Some accused, in order to raise the money, commit further offences while awaiting trial. The system tends to favour the professional criminal, who is more likely to know and be trusted by the professional bondsmen.

It seems to me that here is a field which requires reform. I would say that if money rather than character is not to determine justice, the accused should be released, if he is to be released at all, on his own recognizance, or, in appropriate cases, with recognizances by sureties in reasonable amounts recoverable if the accused fails to appear.

The bill which I am proposing as a means to meet and reform the existing bail system would make these specific changes in the Criminal Code, and I quote from the text of the bill:

...any person charged with an offence under an Act of the Parliament of Canada, other than an offence punishable by death or imprisonment for life, shall at his appearance in court, be ordered released pending trial on his personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the court, unless the judge determines, in the exercise of his discretion, that such a release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.

3. (1) When a judge makes such a determination, he shall, either in lieu of or in addition to the methods of release referred to in section 2, impose the first of the following conditions of release which will reasonably assure the appearance of the person for trial or, if no single condition gives that assurance, any of the combination of the following conditions:

(a) place the person in the custody of a designated person or organization agreeing to supervise him;

(b) place restrictions on the travel, association, or place of abode of the person during the period of release;

(c) require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and the deposit in the registry of the court, in cash or other security as directed, of a sum not to exceed 10 per centum of the amount of the bond, such deposit to be returned upon the performance of the conditions of release;

(d) require the execution of a bail bond with sufficient solvent sureties, or the deposit of cash in lieu thereof; or

(e) impose any other condition deemed reasonably necessary to assure appearance as required, including a condition requiring that the person return to custody after specified hours.

Clause 4 of the bill reads:

Any time spent in custody at the prison, penitentiary, reformatory or jail previous to the pronouncing of the sentence shall be credited to any person convicted of an offence.

I believe, and I hope that hon. members will agree, that the proposed legislation gives the magistrate of the court adequate discretionary powers and powers to compel the appearance of the accused, while at the same time providing greater authority than is now the case for the court to judge the character rather than the money of the accused, in determining justice.

In conclusion I will say that failure to raise money should not be the reason for an accused remaining in custody. Deterrents against absconding should be vigilance of search, certainty of recapture and prosecution. It is my hope that the bill may find support and that hon. members may find sufficient merit in the subject matter of this proposal to refer it for more detailed discussion to the appropriate committee of the house, which might be the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Would the hon. member answer one question at this stage. Can we take the bill to mean that there would be an absolute requirement on the magistrate or the judge to make an order for release on the conditions which the hon. member mentioned?

Mr. Mather: No, Mr. Speaker, I think it would give sufficient leeway and discretion so that no such requirement would have to be made.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the hon. member another question? I read in clause 2 of the bill the words: "Shall, at his appearance in court, be ordered". I wonder whether the hon. member gave some thought to these words.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-4 raises the question which has been in the minds of many lawyers and legislators for some time, about the justice of the bail system in this country. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) referred to this problem in some detail during the debate on the speech from the throne at the beginning of this session, and I am glad to see that the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill has taken up the challenge and has made a proposal to the house which will perhaps encourage early attention to this matter by the government.

The speech from the throne indicated that amendments to the Criminal Code would be proposed during this session. I hope that provisions relating to release pending trial will be part of these changes. The objectives sought by this bill can perhaps be accomplished largely, if not entirely, by amendment to the Criminal Code. It seems unnecessary to pass a separate bill, such as this one proposed by the hon. member. It is the practice under the Criminal Code in many areas of Canada, which is not as flexible as the hon. member would like nor as most commentators on this problem would like. The bill before the house, however, emphasises the desirability of release pending trial, and to this extent I think the bill serves a very useful purpose.

The Criminal Code is based on the principles of English law which recognize that, as a general rule, a person should retain his freedom pending a decision on any charge made against him. The author of the report to which my hon. friend referred, Professor M. L. Friedland of the University of Toronto, in a speech delivered to the John Howard Society of Kingston on February 22, 1966, pointed out that the concept of bail which he advocated is the one envisaged by the Criminal Code and the one presently in operation in England. Professor Friedland claimed that the practice in the administration of justice in the province of Ontario, or at least in Toronto where his study was undertaken, was "an undesirable and unjustified gloss on the traditional concept of bail". It may be, therefore, that little change in the Criminal Code is required and that what is required is extensive change in the practice of the local authorities in applying the terms of the Criminal Code.

I think that the hon. member who sponsored this bill did not go as far as the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) went, because as reported at page 306 of Hansard for May 16 last there is a recommendation by the hon. member for Rosedale in these terms:

> My recommendation, therefore, is that the provisions of the Criminal Code requiring that an accused person be taken into custody for a broad spectrum of offences should be sharply curtailed and that many offences should be exempted from the necessity of custody and therefore of bail.

What the sponsor of this bill does attempt to do is to put the emphasis on the release of prisoners rather than on their detention. The general effect of the present sections of the Criminal Code is that the court may release an accused on bail on his own recognizance with or without a deposit or with or without sureties. Aside from the special case of offences punishable by death or life imprisonment, the proposed bill would make it the general rule that an accused must be released without having to find sureties or deposit money. Second, the conditions under which sureties, cash deposits or other restrictions could be imposed would be limited to the case where the judge considers that release without bail will not assure attendance of the accused at trial.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there have undoubtedly been abuses under the present system. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for Rosedale and by Professor Friedland that in far too many cases, certainly in the Toronto area and I assume elsewhere in Canada, proceedings under the Criminal Code too often are commenced by arrest rather than by summons.

In a submission to the Canadian Committee on Corrections the John Howard Society had this to say:

> The practice of allowing bail is obviously to put the accused at the least inconvience until his guilt or innocence is established. However, there is a crucial problem related to the establishing of the amount of bail. A bank robber might be willing to forfeit a large amount put up through the receipts of his crime whereas a $50 bond may be an impossibility for a maried man on a low income. Thus the poor, the homeless and the friendless may be discriminated against. If unable to face the economic and social distress of incarceration while awaiting trial the accused may borrow money for bail which might leave him without funds to retain a lawyer, putting him at an immediate disadvantage in court.
> The Society recommends: a much broader use of an accused's own recognizance; bail set at a minimum amount consistent with the likelihood of his appearing in court; consideration of the accused's economic situation in determining bail; use of bailbondsmen to be discouraged as the part payment put up by the accused is probably sufficient in itself; the establishment of an investigation bureau in large metropolitan areas, where the accused is not likely to be well known, to establish quickly his economic position.

Similar recommendations were made by the John Howard Society to the McRuer royal commission inquiry into civil rights in Ontario. In the Society's brief to the McRuer commission it said it might be argued that the practice with respect to bail negates the presumption of innocence until proven guilty, or to the contrary, that it supports this presumption by placing the defendant at the least inconvenience until he is proven guilty. The considerations which determine the granting of bail and the amount of surety should be based upon the probability that the defendant will appear in court to face trial, that he will not commit other offences while at liberty, that he will not intimidate witnesses and that he will not remove or destroy evidence. I suggest that all of these purposes can be served without resort to the practice that has been so common, particularly in the Toronto area, of placing undue emphasis on money as the basis for release from custody.

Professor Friedland, in speaking to the John Howard Society of Kingston said that detention before trial had been one of the most neglected areas in the whole administration of criminal justice. He pointed out that questions concerning bail and custody arise only where the accused is arrested rather than summonsed. He reported that the overwhelming majority of accused persons in Toronto who had been charged with criminal offences were arrested rather than summonsed. The authorities in Toronto have attempted to correct this situation, but perhaps an amendment to the Criminal Code along the lines suggested by the sponsor of the bill and the hon. member for Rosedale would encourage that process of reform.

I think that the sponsor's proposal, for the committee on justice and legal affairs to study this problem, is reasonable. There should be an examination of the other side of the coin. The association of police chiefs should be given an opportunity to make representations to members of parliament so that the difficulties, as seen by the police, can be explored. Members of the legal profession and other interested groups should be given an opportunity to express their opinions. It seems to me that this problem ought to be attacked by parliament in this session if possible, and when changes are introduced in the Criminal Code I hope that bail will be one of the subjects of change.

I wish to quote briefly from an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star of April 28, 1967, which seems to put the problem as well as I have seen it put by any speaker or writer. In saying what it did the Star referred to something which affected constituents of mine. It said:

> The futility of the bail system in Canadian courts was perfectly illustrated by the case of James Royal here this week.
> Royal was charged with rape, and committed for trial in the Supreme Court. Bail was fixed at $3,000. A friend of Royal's persuaded a Scarborough couple to post it for him, although they did not know the accused.
> Royal failed to appear for trial, and has apparently left the province. His bail was accordingly forfeited. Chief Justice Gale reduced the forfeiture, but the Scarborough couple will still have to pay $2,000.
> What purpose did this whole procedure serve?

The posting of $3,000 did not prevent Royal from fleeing the jurisdiction. It will not make it any easier to track him down and arrest him.

The only effect has been to subject a couple, whose sole offence was to be too trusting, to a heavy penalty.

Yet at the same time many people who are charged with much less serious offences and who have no intention or likelihood of fleeing to escape trial, are kept in jail, sometimes for months, because they or their relatives cannot raise the required cash or property bail.

Would it not be simpler and better, when a man is committed for trial, for the magistrate to consider whether he can safely release the defendant on his own recognizance—that is, on his undertaking to appear before the court on the day set?

In the majority of cases, release on these terms would be quite safe. The average defendant, especially if he has a job and family, is not likely to take to flight and become a fugitive from justice for the rest of his life.

There are instances where, because of the extreme seriousness of the charge, or the defendant's past record, or for some other reason, there is real cause to fear that he will skip out.

In that case it may be necessary to keep him in jail until the trial. In the James Royal case, for example, it might have been wiser to keep the accused behind bars.

But, the decision to hold or release the accused should be based on the circumstances of the case and the man's position and reputation—not, as it is now, or whether he can raise a specified amount of money or persuade someone else to put it up for him.

The presence or absence of a bail bond, we suspect, has little or no effect on a defendant's decision to stay or run away.

The bail system, in fact, is one of those medieval survivals which encumber our courts, and which make no sense under modern conditions.

The time is overdue to eliminate it.

The sponsor of the bill has performed a service in bringing this matter to the floor of the house, and the hon. member for Rosedale has contributed much to the consideration of the problem. I think that the committee on justice and legal affairs should have an opportunity to consider it and I hope that the Minister of Justice will see to it that the committee has that opportunity.

I hope, too, that we shall see an amendment to the Criminal Code later in this session, and that the ideas contained in the present bill as well as those ideas that are contained in the remarks of the hon. member for Rosedale, the suggestions made by the John Howard Society and those of Professor Friedland will be considered in framing a more liberal Criminal Code which better reflects the traditions of British justice than does our present code, and the practice under it, in Canada.

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion in many, many years—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that I have spoken on a private member's resolution, or bill. I do so because of my impression, gained over years at the bar, that in the field of bail there has been a series of shortcomings that all of us should have looked into long ago.

I must say at once that the hon. member for York-Scarborough in his summation at the end of his remarks and in quoting the editorial from the Toronto Daily Star has clearly enunciated the situation.

I have frequently argued in favour of private members being able not only to present their views but to have the opportunity of seeing their resolutions passed, if parliament is to be preserved.

Hon. members spend a great deal of time—and I am speaking of private members—in preparing bills and resolutions. They have one bite at the apple for one hour, and that is the end. Too frequently, almost without exception, their bills die a natural death.

I hope that a different fate will await the bill introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather). He has presented his case with ability and humanitarianism. We know that no amount of bail will prevent those who would escape from getting away if the opportunity offers itself.

I can think of examples which readily occur. I think of Hal Banks who today sojourns in the salubrious areas of the United States. Convicted in Canada, sentenced to five years, let out on bail for $25,000, he finds it much more in tune with his sensitivities to be abroad. What is $5,000 a year to anyone receiving the salary he receives, or received in the past?

There is also John Doyle who was found guilty in the United States of a fraud against the securities laws of an American state. He came back to Canada, to Newfoundland, where he is free and beyond interference. He engages from time to time in political "fixing" about which I can go into detail if anybody wants information on the subject. But there he sits, a respected financier who owed the Canadian government literally millions of dollars in income tax according to the Department of National Revenue, back in our midst living the life of a respected gentleman because he was able to secure bail following his conviction.

Too often the possession of great riches or the ability to put up a large amount of bail places certain people in an advantageous position while the poor must remain in custody. There are various cases to which reference can be made. I can think of one in the last few weeks. The hon. member who preceded me mentioned Toronto. I do not think Toronto is in any different position because, after all, Toronto has rightly earned the description "Toronto the Good"; that is what it was called in my boyhood days in the east of the city, and no one wants to take away that description today. What the hon. member has described as taking place in Toronto takes place in other parts of the country.

I would respectfully suggest that this bill should not be talked out, and I will not contribute to that occurrence. I believe it should be passed with one qualification—that it should be examined carefully in committee in the manner proposed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury): Every discretion is left to the judge or the magistrate before whom an application for bail is made in order that the appearance of the person concerned may be assured. We should not allow poverty to be a passport to prison even for a matter of months prior to trial.

The judge has wide discretion. The safeguards are here. The trend in criminology today is not to imprison in cases where it is possible to be reasonably assured, following a first offence, that the ends of justice will be met without the imposition of imprisonment. No one should be sent to prison for any period of time if the judge before whom an application for bail is made can be given a reasonable assurance that the person concerned will turn up for trial.

I say to the hon. member who introduced this bill that strong criticism can be levelled against all of us for not having brought about years ago the implementation of the plan he presents. There may be shortcomings in certain parts of it; there may be alterations which should be made. But the principle deserves to be accepted, and that is what second reading is for. I give my unequivocal support to the purpose, the objective and the general idea which is inherent in this bill and I hope that the house once and for all will show that private members' bills shall not be subject to the guillotine, in a round about manner, by being talked out when they have in them so much to commend as has this bill before us.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough has made a perfect case for this bill and I feel sure he must have been speaking for the Liberal party in what he had to say. This matter should not be left in a state of suspended animation; it is something which deserves the support of all. It is above political considerations. Bail is granted in all types of cases. I have had bail granted in murder cases when the judge concluded that the evidence at a preliminary hearing was not of such a compelling nature that there was a full and complete case made out. The bail was quite small, as a matter of fact—$5,000. It could have been raised in the two cases to which I referred earlier, but very often bail of even $50 is too much to impose.

No matter whether an individual is acquitted thereafter or not, the fact that he was kept in jail before his trial leaves on him a stigma which remains for years. I ask for support for this bill and at the same time I add once more my appreciation to the hon. member for having brought forward a measure which deserves general support.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to add a few comments about that interesting bill introduced in the house by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather).

I am very happy that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) agreed to say a few words about that matter, in view of the fact that he said that it had been a long time since he had last taken part in a debate on private members' hour, and all the more so since his reputation as a criminal lawyer is very well known.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do not fully agree with the Leader of the Opposition when he says that since the bill is proposed on private members' hour, it should necessarily be passed by the house. I have too often heard him say that a matter should be studied very closely before being approved by the house, to agree with him that after an hour's discussion a bill proposed by an hon. member should necessarily be passed.

Even if I sincerely commend the hon. member for New Westminster for having submitted to the house this bill whose object is to correct abuses in the legal field, I have to confess that it does not come up completely to my idea of the amendments which should be made to existing legislation, and especially the Criminal Code as far as the release of the accused until the end of his trial is concerned.

In my opinion, this bill originates from natural laws for the prevention of abuses, but it leaves everything to arbitrary action, and too much has been left to discretion for too long. I take the liberty to draw from the vast experience I acquired in the practise of my profession since I had the opportunity to act as assistant attorney general for the province of Quebec, in Montreal, for some time.

Even though I performed those duties for only a short time, that is, for two years, I realized that some provisions in this act concerning the release of accused persons had to be changed.

First of all, I am willing to admit that an accused is presumed innocent until proved guilty by the court, that such person must necessarily enjoy all the advantages of his innocence and, thus, of his freedom, whenever possible.

Let me summarize briefly the present bail system. A person may be released pending the conclusion of the court proceedings either on his own recognizance or on a personal bail for a certain amount, or on bail supplied by a third party on real or personal property, or on a personal bond or a bond supplied by a third party.

Doubtless much could be added, could be said on the matter, but my time is rather limited. I should like to mention however, that bail, considering present-day progress, should be related, first, to the cost of prosecution and next, to the compensation awarded the victim or victims of the offence.

Police work and communications systems being as perfected as they are, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the accused stands a chance of getting away and evading the due processes of law. But, and this is very important, should it happen, costs incurred by the Crown or by the person suing privately should be guaranteed, up to a point, and the victim or victims should receive compensation if the accused were to disappear. Therefore, I suggest that those are the two major considerations on the basis of which bail should be set.

In view of the fact that the costs of prosecution are not very high, I fail to see clearly why bails of $10,000 or $15,000 should be granted, unless it is necessary to pay compensation to the victim. In such a case, the amount involved should be much larger.

The setting of a $20,000 bail to prevent people from getting away is, in my opinion, something which should not be taken into consideration nowadays, especially when you consider that there are several bills on the order paper to the effect that compensation should be paid to the victims of criminal attempts or offences. A solution to the problem would be that, if a person disappears, the bail money be given to the victim as compensation and to cover the costs of the crown or the fees of the private prosecutor.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of the last few days, during a meeting of the commission of inquiry into the administration of justice in Quebec, I said that the Human Rights League had submitted an interesting brief, recommending that justices of the peace be appointed for a judicial district or districts, in order to receive information, hold hearings, adjourn proceedings and grant bail. These justices of the peace could arrange their sittings in such a way that a person could be set free on bail at any time of the day and on any day of the week.

The same brief—I am speaking of the Human Rights League because this is recent—mentioned the case of a lawyer who had to make eight or ten telephone calls before he was able to reach a judge at 11 o'clock at night to have someone freed on bail.

I often had the same experience myself when, at nine or ten at night, I had to make telephone calls to find a judge with the necessary competence to grant a $50 bail to a person who, for example, had been arrested, say, for speeding.

I have always thought that it was unfair and inconsistent with the spirit of the law. Now, if the Criminal Code were amended to enable the judge to sit during the night or at any time, that would help to solve the problem, but it would still be better to determine the granting of bails in advance through an amendment to the Criminal Code. Otherwise, I do not see how this problem can be solved.

The fact of having ten statutes conflicting with the Criminal Code is inconsistent with the spirit of the law, especially from the practical point of view. It would be advisable, for any minor violation, to determine the penalty for a warrant of arrest. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that amount could be determined according to the seriousness of the violation as well as the above-mentioned considerations and proportionately to the costs of the proceedings and the compensation of the victim of an offence. In this way, it would not be necessary to disturb a judge at 11 o'clock at night or to make ten telephone calls to set up a $50 bail and release the accused. When it is impossible to reach a judge, or when the person arrested does not have the means to retain the services of counsel, he spends the night in jail, quite often even the whole week.

I have found by experience that this happens regularly. We must be practical. I quite agree with all the principles involved in the statute, but we must also be practical when it comes to methods and procedures.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, that a summons should not be delivered in all minor cases, but I think—and I do not quite agree with the mover of this bill—that bail should be required even where the offence is punishable by death or life imprisonment.

There have been cases, in my personal experience, where people were charged with a crime punishable by death or life imprisonment who obtained bail, and rightly so. Such a bail has been granted on very rare occasions and only after due reflection and serious consideration of the record of the accused and of the offence. I do not see why this type of crime should be automatically excluded. Mr. Speaker, there is still much to be said on this question. I think that, up to now, the judges have been allowed to set the standards of bail.

From my own experience again, I may mention that I have yet to meet a lawyer who, on the morning of an appearance in court, or at any other time, could determine in advance or know how or when his client would be freed, or why he should not be.

Criticism must necessarily be avoided. The arbitrary and the abuses must particularly be avoided, and only through a much greater consideration of this question and, I must admit, not only through a suggestion that everybody be freed in the future, except in rare cases, can this problem be solved.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) suggested that this bill should be submitted for consideration to the standing committee of the house. I fully agree with him. Not only that, but I am convinced that it should be submitted to the committee on justice and legal affairs. This matter has been under consideration for too long and it is too vital to the freedom of individuals to let such anachronisms subsist.

The Leader of the Opposition was right in saying that we should be ashamed for not having legislated on this matter long ago. I hope that we will have the opportunity to consider a government bill amending the Criminal Code in that respect.

More than that, we should not wait until a revision or a complete reform of the Criminal Code is made to solve that problem, because it is urgent. If, after studying that problem in committee, we can get directives, I feel that the government will have to propose amendments. If need be, the government should introduce a bill even before the committee has submitted its report. I am convinced, besides, that the government has in the Department of Justice a bill already prepared about that. It is a matter of time and of knowing when such a bill should be introduced in the house.

I think that the leaders of the various parties should come to an agreement so that a bill in that respect can be introduced by the government and even discussed by the committee of the whole House of Commons.

It is too important a matter. The Bill of Rights is flouted every day in our courts of justice, as concerns the release on bail of the accused.

And I would certainly be one of the first to approve any legislation by the government which could improve that matter of bail in our courts of justice.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it has been urged on both sides of the house that the subject matter of this bill be sent to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, I wonder whether the house would entertain such a motion. I have the appropriate motion written out, but there is no point in moving it just for the purpose of adding to the debate. However, if it expresses the will of the house I should be happy to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

That Bill No. C-4 be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I—

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Let Mr. Speaker read the motion.

Mr. Prud'homme: He may read it, but I wish to speak on the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It has been moved by Mr. Knowles, seconded by Mr. Herridge:

That Bill C-4 be not now read a second time—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have something to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. It has been moved:

That Bill No. C-4 be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I see, of course, that it is already past six o'clock, but I would have liked to say a few words on the bill. There is no doubt in my mind that hon. members on this side of the house will do anything possible under the circumstances to inform the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) of the purpose of the amendment which is the subject of this debate.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired. It being six o'clock, this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock in the afternoon of Monday next.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 19, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

PORT ABINO LIGHTHOUSE—RIGHT TO VISIT PUBLIC WORKS AND INSTITUTIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I rise on a question of privilege which affects my rights as a member of this house.

While in the neighbourhood of Fort Erie on Saturday, June 10, I was taken by members of the Association for the Preservation of the Erie East Lakefront to see the federal lighthouse at Port Abino. We took the only access road, drawing up at the home of the lighthouse keeper. A neighbouring resident backed his car from the garage squarely across the road, barring our way back. An argument ensued, following which he gave us 20 minutes to get off the road before he would call the police. As we were ready to go, we left without further ado, although I may say not without reluctance on our part.

Now, here is my point of privilege. As a federal member of parliament I believe I have every right to visit public works which are paid for by the taxpayers, yet I was ordered off the access road by a local resident. He claimed that the courts had given him and other local residents the right to bar the road to the public. Yet this road is plowed in winter by the township at public expense.

Further, I was informed that in recent times the residents have moved the gate to the private section of the road so as to include about a quarter of a mile more than the court is supposed to have awarded them. This, Mr. Speaker, is a completely unwarranted interference with the rights of a member of this house to visit public works and institutions. I ask you to take steps to correct this situation without delay.

MR. PENNELL—MINIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTION, P.E.I.—TABLING AMENDED ANSWER

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. Last Monday I tabled a reply to question 138 by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid). The hon. member had asked whether representations had been received for the establishment of a minimum security institution in Prince Edward Island from the government of that province. The tabled answer stated that no representations had been received for the establishment of a minimum security institution, but a communication had been received regarding the establishment of a maximum security institution. Subsequently my attention was drawn to a letter in which representations had been made regarding a medium or minimum security institution, by the government of Prince Edward Island.

I regret any inconvenience that may have been caused the hon. member or other persons by the earlier answer and, with leave, I propose to table an amended answer.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to table an amended answer and have it printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Editor's Note: The question and amended answer above referred to are as follows:]

Minimum Security Institution, P.E.I.

Question No. 138—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Have representations for the establishment of a minimum security institution in Prince Edward Island been received from the government of that province?

2. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to proceed with the establishment of such an institution?

3. What progress towards this end can be reported to date?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Representations have been received from the government of Prince Edward Island regarding the establishment of minimum, medium and maximum security institutions in that province.

2. It is not, at present, the intention of the government of Canada to proceed with the establishment of a federal penal institution in that province.

3. Not applicable.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE OF REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I could have the consent of the house I wonder if I might be permitted, although I know this is a bit unusual, to move item No. 25, standing on government orders, referring the annual report of the C.N.R. to the parliamentary committee. I understand the steering committee of the standing committee are desirous of having their proceedings on Thursday and Friday, and if there were no debate at this time I think it might be convenient for all hon. members if this motion could be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith):

That the annual reports for 1966 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways securities trust, tabled April 26, 1967 and the auditor's report to parliament for 1966 in respect of the Canadian National Railways tabled May 29, 1967 be referred to the standing committee on transport and communications.

Motion agreed to.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved that the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, presented to the house on Thursday, June 15, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a report of a committee asking for a reduction in the quorum from 13 to eight members. The committee consists of 24 members, as is the case with most of the committees of the house and here we are, only in the 30th day of a new session, with it asking for a reduction in the quorum. This occurred apparently at the first or second meeting of the committee. I notice that three other committees earlier asked for a reduction in quorum. There is another motion on the order paper asking for a reduction. It is obvious that something has gone wrong with the committee system.

We were treated two years ago to a great move in this house toward reform, with large numbers of committees being set up. Everything was to be done, apparently, by committee procedure. The membership of most of the committees was set at a figure of 24 members, and the quorum of each committee or of most of the committees was set at a majority of the members. At that time I recall that I pointed out the ineffectiveness of this system. I opposed the multiplicity of committees and pointed out that the quorum arrangement might be ineffective.

It is rather strange that at the opening of a new session a committee should be rushing back to this house asking for a reduction in its quorum. These committees are all miniatures of the House of Commons. The majority in the house is held by the Liberal government. The majority in each committee is held by the Liberal government. This is an obvious indication that the Liberal government is unable to man the committees.

The experience over the last year and a half, when we had the longest session in living memory, was that, with one or two exceptions the members of the opposition pretty well sustained the committees that were in operation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: I hear a chorus of disapproval from the other side, Mr. Speaker, but I know of what I am speaking. Then once again this session the Liberal party is expecting the members of the Conservative party to sustain these committees.

An hon. Member: What are you paid for?

Mr. Churchill: Somebody shouts out "What are you paid for?" It seems to me that the government of this country and the governing party should conduct the affairs of this nation in a proper manner and not be completely dependant upon being bailed out time and time again by the Conservative party. We have been doing this now for the last two years; we have been bailing out an ineffective, badly organized government.

The fact that the government members on these committees are now coming crying to the house because they cannot field a quorum, Mr. Speaker, indicates their incapacity and incompetence. I am very much opposed to this motion, sir. If we are going to have a committee system of the magnitude of that which has been imposed upon this House of Commons, then it is up to those who proposed the scheme to make it work. It was the Liberal party that proposed having all these committees that we have. It was the Liberal party that said that this is the way that parliament ought to work.

Some of us on this side, Mr. Speaker, oppose this idea. We think that this will destroy the effectiveness of the House of Commons itself, and I think this has been proven over the last year and a half. The effectiveness and importance of the House of Commons has been reduced because of the committee work that is going on. There has to be a certain amount of committee work, of course, but a multiplicity of committees is destructive of the House of Commons. Now, at a time when this is evident, the government rushes back into the house crying for assistance, saying in effect that they cannot field a quorum and that they want the quorums reduced.

This, sir, is obviously extremely bad. When the rules committee under the present government house leader was working last session, why did it not come up with some idea regarding the quorum of the committees which had already proved to be ineffective? No such suggestion to amend the rules was made. Now at this time of the year, in the month of June, after we have been sitting almost continuously for a year and a half, with a desire to rush to completion some of that work of the house, members on the government side come forward with the idea of reducing the quorum. This idea stems from the activity of the government house leader who wants this house to rush through in a few days our consideration of $9 billion in expenditures.

We can now see what the plan is. Quite a number of estimates have been referred to committees, these committees are to deal with them and send them back to the House of Commons with the statement that they have given them serious consideration. What are we going to find? We are going to find in connection with one committee that eight people may be given the authority to deal with the estimates of a department, and yet another committee may have nine; so eight or nine people will have the authority to discuss and deal with the estimates before the committee, and report back to the house that the estimates have been approved. We will then hear from the government side that there is no need to discuss these estimates here in the house because they have been settled in the committee. We will have about eight people in the committee carrying out the discussions, and then the house will be bemused by the suggestion of the government house leader that everything has been settled satisfactorily in the committee.

We have observed a spectacle during the last two years, and we are told that the committee work is superior to the work of the House of Commons. I suggest to you, sir, that the committee work has fallen down here in parliament, and proof of that fact is now right in front of us in this suggestion that quorums are too large, that committees are too large and should be reduced in size so everything can be speedily pushed through.

What is being made of this institution is a rubber stamp institution, to rubber stamp things in the committee, and then rubber stamp them in the house and then, through a propaganda campaign, it will be said that this is the way things ought to be done. I am here to object to this procedure, and I object to this proposed reduction of the committee quorum from 13 to eight.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in respect of the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I am a member of the external affairs committee which had a meeting called for 9.30 last Thursday morning. At that time we did not have the required quorum of 13 members. There were eight Liberal members present and two opposition members, namely the hon. members for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) and Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who is a member of that committee, turned up between half an hour and three quarters of an hour late.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is rising on a point or order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Churchill: I am rising on a question of privilege. I was attending at that very moment a house leaders meeting called by the government house leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, may I say that the quorum of eight as suggested is in line with the practice followed in the United Kingdom, being one third of the membership. I can also say that the justice and legal affairs committee is a very excellent one. Notwithstanding what the member for Winnipeg South Centre has said, it does not rubber stamp anything.

I could comment on the make-up of the committee. The members from the Liberal party, those from the Conservative party, from the New Democratic party and the Ralliement Créditiste have been very, very excellent in their attendance. We did have difficulty getting organized at the beginning of the session. I can look over this house and see several members who did not do very well in attendance on the committee and who I believe should really get off it. If we cannot have a quorum of eight and have to have a quorum of 13, we cannot get on with our business. I suggest that the motion is in order. It was agreed to by the Conservative members, the Liberal members and all members of the committee present, 13 in number. I think the motion should be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Cameron (High Park), seconded by Mr. Habel, moves:

That the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs presented to the house on Thursday, June 15, 1967, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried, on division.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PULP COMPANY, PRINCE ALBERT, SASK.

Question No. 132—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has any financial assistance been promised or granted under the Area Development Incentives Act to the Prince Albert Pulp Company Ltd., Prince Albert, Saskatchewan and, if so, to whom were such promises made and how much assistance has been promised or granted?

2. If any financial assistance has been granted, when were such grants authorized, and on what dates have payments been made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. and 2. On March 8, 1966, the president of Prince Albert Pulp Company Ltd., Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, received an assurance from the Minister of Industry that the proposed bleached kraft pulp mill at Prince Albert would qualify for a capital grant provided the project complied with the provisions of the Area Development Incentives Act and Regulations. The amount of the grant was estimated at $5,000,000 but the actual amount will be based upon the approved capital costs of the eligible assets and the level of equity of the company and its shareholders in the facility. Payment of the grant will not commence until after the facility is in commercial production.

ADMINISTRATIVE CENTRE, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 137—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Has the provincial government administrative centre in Charlottetown been classified as a centennial project and, if so, is it entitled to a centennial grant from the government of Canada?

2. If this classification has not already been made, how soon may it be expected?

3. If the administrative centre cannot be so classified, what is the reason?

4. If the administrative centre will not be so classified, is the federal government considering the making of a special centennial gift to the province of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Centennial commission has not provided any grant to the government administrative centre in Charlottetown and, therefore, the centre is not a centennial project within the terms of the commission's grants programs.

2.-3.-4. The federal government has made a grant of $2.8 million to the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Citizens Foundation to assist the construction of the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building in Charlottetown. No other grant for projects of a lasting nature is available from the centennial commission to Prince Edward Island except under the centennial projects program which is directed toward the construction of local or regional projects.

HARP SEALS—PETITION FOR SANCTUARY IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Question No. 144—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the Prime Minister received petitions from residents of the city of Windsor, Ontario containing approximately 1000 names requesting the government of Canada to declare the gulf of St. Lawrence a sanctuary for the harp seals?

2. Has the Prime Minister received a copy of the resolution adopted by the council of the city of Windsor urging the government to declare the gulf of St. Lawrence a sanctuary for harp seals, and also asking that alternative modes of employment be found for those men who will suffer loss of income if seal hunting is abolished?

3. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from the president of Local 200, UAW, Windsor, Ontario representing 4,400 Ford workers requesting that the gulf of St. Lawrence be declared a sanctuary for harp seals and end the baby seal hunt?

4. If so, what has been the reply given respectively to the aforesaid (a) petition, (b) resolution, and (c) letter?

Questions

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Two petitions were received from residents of the city of Windsor containing a total of 661 names.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. (a) Replies included a copy of a statement by the Minister of Fisheries outlining measures taken by his department to ensure that sealing operations are conducted in full accord with humane practices. (b) A reply was sent by the Minister of Fisheries, as follows:

Is is rather difficult for me to understand how your council could approve such a resolution without acquainting itself with the situation before reaching such a decision.

Regarding the establishment of a sanctuary for harp seals in the gulf of St. Lawrence, while this might be possible, it would only affect about 15 to 20 per cent of the seal hunt which takes place in north Atlantic waters every year. Futhermore, over 30,000 fishermen depend on the fishery resources of the gulf of St. Lawrence for a livelihood. An adult seal consumes as much as 15 pounds of fish per day, and one can judge what quantity of fish can be consumed by the seal herds when, as in 1966, 1¼ million adult seals were spotted on the ice in the gulf of St. Lawrence alone.

I have a responsibility to protect the fishery resources of the gulf of St. Lawrence and it would be unfair to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces if I would permit the seal herds to increase to such an extent that the fishery production of the gulf could be seriously affected.

With regard to finding alternative modes of employment for these fishermen during the months of March and April, here again I would have hoped that your council would have been fully aware of the conditions in that part of the country during that particular period. At this time of the year no other means of livelihood is possible for these men. It would be very costly to the taxpayers of this country to suggest that governmental assistance be provided for the inhabitants of the St. Lawrence area who depend partly on the seal hunt at a time of the year when no other fishery operation is possible. Besides the seal hunt taking place in Zone 1 of the gulf of St. Lawrence, where sealers and aircraft are allowed to operate and where a fixed quota of 50,000 whitecoats is imposed, we also have to provide for thousands of landsmen along the coast of Newfoundland and the north shore of the St. Lawrence where seals are available only when drift ice is carried along these coasts. No one can devise a formula which could take care of this particular population.

I must, therefore, advise you that is is impossible for me to accept the recommendation of your city council as outlined in the resolution referred to above.

2. Is this seed-cleaning plant being removed as a service to the farmers of Cumberland county and, if so (a) on what date will it be removed (b) what is the reason for the decision to eliminate this service?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

2. Yes; (a) due notice was given to farmers that the service will not be available in 1968. (b) The seed cleaning machinery is almost worn out. The department does not plan to replace this equipment. This decision was reached because privately owned seed cleaning plants are being established with some assistance from the provincial government.

BRUCELLOSIS—COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

Question No. 211—Mr. Godin:

1. As of what year did the government of Canada grant compensation to farmers whose cattle contracted brucellosis and were condemned to be slaughtered?

OLD AGE PENSIONS TO FOREIGN CITIZENS

Question No. 212—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Does Canada pay old age pensions to foreign citizens who have been resident in Canada?

2. Are pensions paid to foreign citizens who, after reaching retirement age, dispose of their holdings, leave Canada, return to their own country and live on this pension?

3. To which countries do they return?

4. How many pensions are awarded and what is the amount paid to these persons annually, by country?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes. In order to qualify for the Old Age Security pension, an applicant must show that he has resided in Canada for the number of years required by the legislation. Citizenship is not an eligibility factor.

2. Any pensioner, regardless of citizenship, may be paid the basic $75 pension indefinitely anywhere in the world provided he has resided in Canada for at least twenty-five years after his twenty-first birthday. If he has not so resided, the basic pension may be paid for up to six months of absence from Canada exclusive of the month of departure; payment is then suspended until the pensioner returns to Canada.

3. Since citizenship is not a factor in determining eligibility for the Old Age Security pension, it is not possible to distinguish between Canadian citizens and foreign citizens in receipt of the Old Age Security pension whilst absent from Canada nor is it possible to distinguish between those pensioners living permanently outside Canada and those who are on extended visits to other countries. Of the 1.2 million pensioners, 9,429 were being paid the pension in other countries in July, 1966, the last month for which such figures are available; of that number, 4,710 pensioners were in the United States, 2,161 in the United Kingdom and the remainder in several other countries throughout the world.

*EXPO '67—DISPOSAL OF FACILITIES

Question No. 269—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. What role will the federal government play in the assets disposal corporation set up to oversee liquidation of Expo's facilities and chattels?

2. Will the proceeds of such liquidation be returned to all the participating levels of Canadian governments' on the same proportionate basis as their investment?

3. Who is to be in charge of this body?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, no corporation has been set up but a committee has been established informally. It has representation from the federal government, the government of Quebec and the city of Montreal to advise the board of Expo and the respective governments on the disposal of assets which they jointly own. Expo is charged with the responsibility under the act for disposal of these assets, but will do so in accordance with instructions from the three governments.

[Mr. Byrne.]

In the master plan tabled in parliament on April 14, 1967, there is included under revenues a total amount of $72,777,480 which Expo estimated could be realized from salvage and disposal of assets.

The terms of reference to the representatives of the federal government on this committee, are to recommend ways and means of realizing at least this amount. Any such proceeds would accrue to Expo, in which the three governments participate on the basis of 50 per cent federal, 37½ per cent provincial and 12½ per cent city of Montreal.

The members of the committee representing the federal government are Mr. Donald Jupp, Ottawa representative of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and Mr. L. Richard, president of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Mr. Jupp acts as chairman of the federal delegation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY CANADA OF PROPOSALS ENUNCIATED BY PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the very statesmanlike and remarkably clear speech made this morning by the President of the United States, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the five points which were set out by the President are acceptable to Canada.

If so, what is Canada's attitude to be in connection with the refugees? Is the Prime Minister in a position now to give some indication as to the number of refugees that Canada is prepared to accept?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the five points in the President's statement this morning are concerned, our position with regard to at least four of them was made pretty clear in the statement I made in the house in which I put forward these points as being important in the development of a basis for the settlement. There was one additional point which I did not mention and which was very much in all our minds, that is the question of the limitation of armaments in that area. I think that is just as important as the other five points, and I am quite sure this parliament would wish to support all the points mentioned by the President.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister, in view of his answer of last week to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, make any definite statement on the number of refugees that Canada is willing to admit? How many may enter Canada and become residents. The last time the Prime Minister answered the question he said that the matter was under consideration.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, though the right hon. gentleman mentioned that subject this afternoon, I regret that I did not refer to it. It is impossible at the moment to say how many refugees would be taken, because that would depend on the international arrangements by which this problem could be liquidated. Indeed, it would depend primarily, or very importantly, on the attitude of the Arab governments toward the urgency of the problem. When this matter was mentioned the other day there were reports in Arab newspapers criticizing Canada because we were trying to take away from those countries Arab refugees whose only desire was to go back to their families in Palestine.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—SUGGESTION BY PREMIER KOSYGIN OF ISRAELI WITHDRAWAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of Premier Kosygin's statement, that it is essential that Israel shall withdraw to the armistice boundaries which it had at the time the armistice was declared years ago and the generous applause that he received at the end of his speech, will Canada take the definite stand that Israel shall not be required to go back to the former boundaries and that in addition thereto every protection and assurance must be given to Israel that its territorial areas and its integrity will be protected by measures under the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what my right hon. friend is referring to when he speaks about the applause which greeted the speech of the Soviet delegate. I am assuming he was referring to that, and I am not very much concerned or impressed by that kind of applause until I know where the applause came from—and the television did not show that.

So far as the question of withdrawal of the forces is concerned, I thought the President of the United States expressed a very sound opinion when he linked withdrawal with international commitments and obligations to ensure that when the withdrawal took place it would not be a withdrawal to the state of affairs which existed a month ago. I was not quoting him but only paraphrasing what he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have one question arising out of the reply by the Prime Minister with regard to the withdrawal of the forces to old boundaries or to other boundaries than those which have existed until this war broke out a few days ago. What is Canada's view as to the extent it is prepared to go in asking Israel to withdraw and what boundaries has it in mind?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot answer that question categorically until we see how things develop at the United Nations, what will be the position taken by the government of Israel in this matter and the position that will be taken by our friends who are having consultations on these matters, as indeed was the case in 1956. I would say that on the whole the position we should take at this time is exactly the same as the one we took in 1956 when it was pointed out very emphatically by the Canadian delegate that if Israel is asked to withdraw behind the armistice line without any effective international guarantees or any effective political settlement, once again we would be faced with the situation that Israel faced before 1956. Unfortunately that has happened, and we do not want it to happen again.

EXTERNAL AID

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN AID IN DISTRIBUTION OF SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the same area but on a different subject I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether in view of newspaper reports that his announcement last Friday of $2.5 million of food relief to the Middle East related to aid already allocated to that area before the present difficulties arose in the Middle East and that only the $20,000 for medical supplies which the right hon. gentleman announced was additional aid, would he be good enough to clarify the situation as to Canadian aid to the Middle East and also inform the house whether the government is giving serious consideration to increasing the aid both for those needing medical attention and for the hundreds of thousands of Arabs and others needing assistance urgently at the present time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the existing emergency we are very fortunate in having appropriations for aid to the Middle East area already voted by parliament to the extent of $2.5 million, $1 million for UNRWA and $1 million under the food program to the Middle East. These appropriations have been voted and they are available now for food relief to that area. What the government is anxious to do now is to expedite shipments under that program under these appropriations, but that, of course, is not enough and it may be that additional appropriations will be required or additional expenditures made, which I hope can later be approved by appropriations for emergency purposes. I mentioned one of these the other day, a $20,000 grant to the Red Cross for medical supplies. We as the government have been anxious to find out from the international Red Cross and from UNRWA what they need as emergency supplies at this moment. Over the week end we have learned that what they need now is a means of rapid distribution and communications. They have sufficient supplies in the area as a whole for short term needs but they need means of distribution. They also want to be reassured that the pipe lines will be filled as they use them up for emergency purposes.

The government has agreed to help in both these respects. We are purchasing and making available to UNRWA a de Havilland Beaver aircraft for which they specifically asked for communication purposes. We have also offered to make available to UNRWA at once an airlift for long range transport which would help them in the distribution of supplies. Indeed we could make that airlift available if they so require, for the provision of long range food supplies from Canada. However, at the moment they have emphasized they have enough supplies of food, but they want to keep the pipe lines filled. Our additional assistance of a Beaver aircraft and long range aircraft transport, if they require it, would require a special appropriation which we will be bringing forward before long if we need to do these things.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to the right hon. gentleman for his answer and for the additional assistance he has announced. Would he be good enough to inform the house whether when UNRWA says it has enough supplies for immediate needs they are referring only to those who were formerly in the refugee camps or were referring also to additional displaced persons who unfortunately and unavoidably have appeared in various areas?

Mr. Pearson: In our communications with UNRWA through our embassies abroad, both in Geneva and in Beirut, we have learned that UNRWA is taking into consideration the additional refugees' requirements, but they are not yet sure of the scope of these additional requirements and as soon as we get additional information—and other governments would be getting it also—we will know whether they will require additional food relief for the additional refugees, which we will be able to help supply. However, at the moment they have enough for their needs as they can ascertain them at the moment.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether by long range aircraft he means the Royal Canadian Air Force, and, if this is so, whether the Arab nations have agreed to their use.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do have in mind long range R.C.A.F. aircraft. How they would be used would have to be worked out. That would depend on the requirements and the requests which were made by the international agency. It may be that the R.C.A.F. would be manning these aircraft and they would be allocated to the international agency for its use.

CARTIERVILLE, P.Q.—TRAINING OF ALGERIAN STUDENT PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a related question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question related to a military matter. Does the government intend to continue, under its external aid program, to pay the whole of the cost of flying training at Laurentide Aviation in Cartierville for 19 student pilots now in training from Algeria?

Mr. Pearson: I shall look into that. Perhaps I could answer tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did they become our allies?

[Later:]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Answering the question that an hon. member asked a few moments ago, about the Algerian pilots, perhaps I could give some information, as I have a memorandum about the matter.

In response to a request received from the Algerian government in late 1965, Canada concurred in providing training in Canada, under its external aid program, for 19 student pilots from Algeria. These student pilots are undergoing civil aviation training only. At the conclusion of their training the students will return to Algeria and will be employed as pilots or co-pilots with commercial air lines operating in Algeria.

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would there not be some inherent risk in the matter, under present circumstances?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question in connection with those students from Algeria. Are any of them members of the armed services of that country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand they are civil air line pilots in training. They are proceeding with their course and I think it would be very unwise, on the information we have, to interrupt that training at this time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN NAVAL FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has Canada agreed to the establishment of a standing naval force in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization? If so, what if any of our naval units are to be assigned to that force?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet finished our investigation of this suggestion. We have from time to time participated in a pilot group of a squadron of ships which was assigned to NATO. If it were deemed in our national interest, we might do the same if a permanent group were established. That would be based I think on the recommendation for about a squadron of ships, and it would be possible for us to participate if it were felt that our contribution were the kind of contribution that we should make to the NATO alliance on a permanent basis.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When did the NATO organization agree to the establishment of this standing naval force in principle, as announced by Admiral Moorer, the supreme allied commander in the Atlantic?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts whether that question is in order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF AUSTRALIAN DEFENCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, may I draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the gallery of Hon. Allen Fairhall, the minister of national defence for Australia, who today is our guest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COUNCIL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister in a position to say when the house might have a report on the recent NATO meeting? I realize that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in New York, but of course we have the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) who would naturally be able to give a full report on the situation, if given the opportunity.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the right hon. gentleman would not mind having the report from me. I have one before me, but it is too long to be given in answer to a question. It could be given tomorrow or the next day, on motions, and I should be glad to do that.

INCOME TAX

PYRAMID MINES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LIABILITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In the interest of a large number of Canadian shareholders who have been adversely affected by the delay of a government decision for something in the vicinity of one year, can the minister indicate whether a prompt decision will be made in the case of the tax liability on shares of Pyramid Mines?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I cannot discuss the tax position of an individual company or say what our position in this matter will be. I have had consultations with officials several times about this matter and I can assure my hon. friend that the matter is moving forward as fast as is possible.

HOUSING

SUDBURY, ONT.,—LOANS FOR RENTAL UNIT CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour who reports to this house on matters pertaining to housing. Has the minister received a request from the Sudbury city council that the additional housing loans for rental unit construction, which he announced recently, should be provided on a basis that applications for these units can be considered by persons whose incomes approximate $6,000 annually. If so, can the minister say whether this request will be met?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I, in rising to answer this question, first extend my personal congratulations to the hon. member for Sudbury on his recent election as a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: May I also thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his question. The answer to the question, I am sorry to inform him, is, no. No such communication has been received by me. The only communications that I have received from Sudbury of late have been commendations and thanks for the prompt action taken by the government in response to requests for assistance with their anticipated housing problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do not give notice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PRIORITY IN TREATMENT OF PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is reported to have stated to the Canadian Medical Association meeting in Quebec city that it may be necessary, when medicare comes into effect, for doctors to see their patients on a basis of priority of illness. Does this reported statement represent government policy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if that statement is alleged to have been made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he has told me that he did not make it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We hear of an amazing number of misreports.

[Later:]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did his department send out a correct copy of his speech to the doctors in Quebec city?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TASK FORCE TO REVIEW LABOUR-MANAGEMENT LAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's reference over the week end to the urgency of overhauling our outmoded federal labour-management laws, is the minister now in a position to inform the house whether the government task force which was appointed in this regard will be able to report its findings before the end of the year?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am very glad that the hon. member asked that question, Mr. Speaker, because it only illustrates the danger of taking statements out of their context. I said that the need for some overhaul in procedures was such that the government had appointed a task force to look into the matter. It is expected that we will have an interim report from the task force later this year, though, as the Prime Minister and I both have said, it is not expected that the final report from the task force will be available until next year.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REQUEST TO HOLD CABINET MEETING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister receives an invitation from Mr. Ray Perrault, the Liberal leader in British Columbia, to hold a full cabinet meeting in that province as a centennial project, would he accept such an invitation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is acceptable at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address another question to the Prime Minister and try to bring myself within the rules of order. Has the Prime Minister given consideration to calling a cabinet meeting in British Columbia, after the fashion set by Premier Bennett?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not succeeded in his endeavours. He is still out of order.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF RETAIL PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Because of rumours that drug prices are being increased even now, has the minister's department taken steps to review the retail prices of drugs in order to ascertain, when the sales tax comes off on September 1, whether that step will in fact be to the advantage of the consumer.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the department does not have the means for making that sort of immediate check on the retail prices of drugs, but I can assure the house and the hon. member that the government is quite determined that the advantage from the removal of the sales tax will be passed on to consumers: Appropriate action will be taken in that regard.

Mr. Olson: Can the minister inform the house what appropriate steps—I think that was the phrase he used—will be taken to give effect to the determination of the government that this benefit should be passed on to the consumer?

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I might put it this way. If there were evidence that the advantage of the tax reduction were not being passed on, it would be another reason for reducing the protection for drug manufacturers which now exists.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

COMPLAINTS BY LIBRARIES ON INCREASED BOOK RATE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has the Prime Minister received complaint from the Libraries Association or from various libraries across Canada drawing attention to the detrimental effect of the intended increase in postal rates on the transfer of books between library and library or between library and borrowers, the increase being estimated at some 60 per cent? If so, would the Prime Minister look into this question, because the rates contemplated would strike a serious body blow at the smaller libraries, particularly those which operate in rural communities.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not recall having received complaints but I should like to look into it, and, if I have, I will give consideration to the matter at once.

TRANSPORTATION

MEETINGS IN WESTERN CANADA OF CONFERENCE ON ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On Thursday I asked the hon. gentleman a question regarding the conference on rail line abandonment called by the Board of Transport Commissioners, to be held in Ottawa on August 1. Has the minister received suggestions that the conference be held in western Canada instead of in Ottawa?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, sir. The deputy premier of Saskatchewan approached me about this matter over the week end, and reviewing Hansard I find that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam also raised it in a question to the Prime Minister on Friday. I am advised by the Board of Transport Commissioners that in view of the rather concentrated interest in this subject in western Canada they are considering holding the conference, or part of it at least, in the west.

[Later:]

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport relates to the one asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. Is it the minister's intention to make any representations, issue any directive or make any request to the Board of Transport Commissioners with regard to convening the conference on abandonment somewhere in western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the hon. member is asking a question which is a repetition of one asked previously today.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER MEETINGS TO DISCUSS POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Following the meeting between representatives of the government and various farm leaders last Friday, is consideration being given to holding further meetings of this nature at an early date in order to facilitate the determination of a general agricultural policy, as promised by the government?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I think the holding of further meetings is being considered, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

"OCEAN TRAVELLER"—CHARTERING OF VESSEL BY RESEARCH BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): My question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries. I should like to ask the minister whether the Fisheries Research Board has under charter a motor vessel called Ocean Traveller and, if so, whether it has put to sea despite the fact that according to the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union it has been strikebound since March 17.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the question is acceptable at this time. If the hon. member considers it to be a matter of urgency he can give notice that he will raise it at the time of the adjournment.

Mr. Barnett: Ten o'clock.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

AIRPORTS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.,—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FROM PURCHASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I address this question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a telegram from the city of Saint John requesting a meeting in connection with the last minute withdrawal of the federal government from the long arranged purchase of Saint John airfield and, if so, what was his reply?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say I have some serious doubts as to whether it is proper for hon. members to ask whether telegrams and so on have been received by cabinet ministers in connection with certain local matters. Hon. members will recognize that if this practice is allowed to develop and becomes general the Chair will have to deal with countless questions of this nature. I do not wish to make a general ruling, but hon. members might bear in mind that it is difficult for the Chair to determine whether a question asked about a telegram, which may or may not have been sent to a minister, is one of sufficient urgency and national interest as to be allowed. With this reservation, I shall allow the hon. member's question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): There is obviously a great deal of interest in this matter; it is more than local, because I received a strong telegram from the premier of New Brunswick about it, as well as one from the city of Saint John. The government has no intention whatever of withdrawing from these negotiations or from this purchase. We are very anxious, as soon as it may conveniently be done, to add the excellent airport at Saint John, which has been maintained so well by the city for many years, to the number of our national airports. It is only a matter of "la question d'argent". As soon as that can be resolved, I can assure the hon. gentleman we shall be only too happy to add this jewel to our crown.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the minister a supplementary question? Will the minister still have a rendezvous with the city of Saint John?

Mr. Pickersgill: Probably more than one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not in order.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Is the government of Canada so impoverished that it cannot spend $800,000 to add this jewel to its crown?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My question is really a question of privilege arising out of the ruling you made a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker. Does your ruling imply that the answer given by the Minister of Labour was also out of order?

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Possibly I missed some earlier announcement, but can the minister say whether he has received a report from the pilotage commission?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Not yet, sir.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MAINLAND CHINA—HAZARD FROM HYDROGEN BOMB EXPLOSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): This question is, surely, not local. It is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the hon. gentleman's department yet procured any data on the basis of which some appraisal can be made concerning the possible effects upon Canada of the explosion of the hydrogen bomb by the Peoples Republic of China?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will be glad to consult my advisers and report later.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROCLAMATION OF PROVISIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether the provisions of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code passed last December have yet been put into effect, and, in particular, whether the necessary agreements have been made with the provinces in cases where the provinces are to carry out the provisions of the act?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): If my memory serves me correctly, I stated some time ago that we were working on this program and were hopeful that the appropriate regulations would be passed before the end of this year. There are a number of details which still have to be worked out with the provinces. We are actively engaged in working out this program now and are recruiting the additional staff required. Our expectation is that the act and regulations will be proclaimed some time before the end of the year.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PARTICIPATION BY PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND IN PROVISIONS FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is directed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In the light of the establishment some months ago of a fund for rural economic development, and the considerable allocations made to Manitoba and New Brunswick from that fund, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman's department is giving the same consideration to making a similar allocation to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

NATURAL GAS

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON GREAT LAKES PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he any news from Washington regarding the Great Lakes pipe line project?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand a decision is to be given tomorrow by the federal power commission.

PUBLIC WORKS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.,—USE OF EUROPEAN STEEL IN BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether to direct this question to the Minister of Transport or to the Minister of Public Works. Has the attention of either hon. gentleman been drawn to a report that some 1,500 tons of European reinforcing steel are being incorporated in the Saint John harbour bridge at a time when there are lay-offs in both the Sydney and Amherst steel plants and, if so, are any steps being taken to rectify the situation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this question relates more to the Minister of Transport than to the Minister of Public Works. The Saint John harbour bridge is being built by a local authority, not by any agency of the federal government. It is true that there is a certain measure of underwriting by the federal government, but it would not be possible for me without making inquiries, and perhaps those inquiries would be into a realm that is beyond our jurisdiction, to be able to verify or otherwise the hon. member's report.

Mr. Lewis: As a supplementary question, would the minister be good enough to undertake to make those inquiries and decide the jurisdictional question afterwards?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RESPECTING REPRESENTATION BY COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has he an answer to the question I asked him about a week ago on whether in the study of revision of the Criminal Code consideration is being given to spelling out in the code the right of any person being questioned by the police to have counsel represent him at a very early stage?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no answer to that but it strikes me the Canadian Bill of Rights already gives certain guarantees in that direction.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG, MAN.,—REQUEST CONCERNING STAIRS AND ESCALATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding a matter upon which he has been questioned several times on orders of the day. Has the government yet reached a decision to take action to improve the situation at Winnipeg international airport with respect to the unsatisfactory condition regarding stairs and escalators?

Mr. Speaker: I would think this question should be placed on the order paper along with the others.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I indicated at the resolution stage the historical, economic and social background of this question of Cape Breton coal. I also indicated the schedule of events that led to the present legislation. I have motivated the federal intervention by showing the economic and social seriousness of the problem, concluding that it was in the national interest to such a point that it went beyond the limits of Cape Breton and the financial and economic capacity of the province of Nova Scotia.

I have also mentioned the fine co-operation received from the provincial government and my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), insisted on this point.

I have summarized the agreement reached by the Canadian government and the government of Nova Scotia. This agreement gave a pretty good idea of the contents of the bill. I will have in the course of the discussion today the opportunity to reply to various questions put last week, but I am told that I would be stretching parliamentary procedure and that I could be called to order if I were to do so now.

At the present stage, all that I can do is to introduce the legislation, that is Bill No. C-135.

The hon. members now have the bill on hand.

[English]

Hon. members will note that this bill has a preamble which is for the specific purpose of establishing that the Cape Breton coal problem is of national concern. The federal government is not now in the business of closing mines when they have come to the end of their reserves; we are taking part in this particular operation it is because the Cape Breton problem is one of national importance.

The preamble also points to a relationship which exists between the phasing in of new industry and the phasing out of the coal mines. That principle is to be found elsewhere in the bill and it is a major foundation of the legislation.

Later in the bill we have clauses concerning the establishment of the corporation itself with the two divisions, the coal division and the economic industrial development division. The purpose is to assign a particular function to each division. We thought this would be a more effective way of proceeding than by having only one division within the corporation.

Farther on there are clauses concerning the acquisition of property. Hon. members who questioned me on this last week will find answers to some of their questions in these clauses. What should be acquired is specifically indicated. How it should be acquired is also indicated; three possible methods are mentioned. One is straight negotiation, one is agreed arbitration, and one is expropriation.

Hon. members who have read the bill will have already observed that the method in respect of expropriation is explained at quite some length. The reason is that the federal government is not entitled by law to acquire more than land. Therefore the expropriation procedures for the companies assets have to be spelled out.

Last week hon. members expressed concern about the pension and retirement plans for miners. The answer to their questions is to be found in clause 18. The pension plan concerns those who are now employed, those who have been employed, and those who will be employed by the company or corporation as the case may be. Members will also observe that the corporation is instructed to establish an early retirement program.

The objectives and powers of the coal division are also clearly indicated. There is an interesting proviso covering the presentation by the coal division of an over-all plan within one year of the coming into force of the legislation. Members may think that this is demanding too much too quickly of the corporation. Consequently there are other clauses dealing with possible amendments of that plan. In a way this is the same thing as we did with the Expo '67 corporation. Hon. members will recall that that corporation presented a plan within months after the passage of the legislation establishing it and that the plan was later amended and improved upon.

There are also a number of clauses dealing with the functions and powers of the industrial development division. Those of us who have read the bill have observed that these functions and powers are very wide. We have, of course, kept maximum flexibility. The corporation will be on the spot, as it were, and able to devise what is best in the interest of the people of Cape Breton.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to avoid duplication. There will be a committee of officials to co-ordinate the actions of all departments, federal and provincial alike, in order to achieve maximum efficiency. We also have financial provisions both on the coal production side and on the economic development side. I am sure that in these provisions members have found answers to some of the questions they were asking me in connection with what the $25 million was for, and so on. However, if members are not sufficiently clear we can go back to these explanations during the clause by clause study.

To conclude the bill, Mr. Speaker, there are clauses of general interest. For example, there is a clause providing that the head office of the corporation will be at Sydney so that members of the corporation will as much as possible be au fait with developments there. There is also provision made for winding up the corporation. The corporation is being set up to achieve a certain job of work which will take a certain number of years. We hope that success on the industrial development side will make it possible for the corporation to wind up at the end of the anticipated 15 years or even less.

There is also an interesting clause at the end of the bill which establishes the constitutional basis for federal action. This clause refers to works and undertakings declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to give a bird's-eye view of the bill. So we have before us then, a bill which arises out of an agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia to establish, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to modernize and operate the coal mines, and also to effect in an enlightened manner the transfer of the economy of Cape Breton Island from coal production to other forms of industrial development and economic activity.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be as brief in what I have to say as the minister in order to facilitate the passing of this legislation. I admit that the bill is very much in line with previous policy statements and with the policy announced on October 5, 1965 by the then minister of labour at Halifax.

The answers to the questions which were asked and which no doubt will be asked when we go through the bill clause by clause will clarify many points. However, I would ask the minister to prepare himself to explain some remarks which were made in this chamber on Thursday when we were dealing with the resolution. Among those remarks I would ask him to give a complete explanation of what was meant by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) when he said as reported at page 1579 of Hansard:

> —in the meantime build up alternative industries so that there wil be a cushioning effect on displacement and so that the total economy and the total community will be protected.

The word "protected" is the key word. The purpose of the original policy statement and the intent of the legislation were to assure the miners of Cape Breton that there would be no displacements until alternative work was provided. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, you can readily understand why the minister said that we have to give consideration to the cushioning effect. I would ask the minister when he deals with this question to assure the house that alternative employment will be made available before any miner is displaced.

Let me point out once again that this will be a fairly tricky task to bring about. As I indicated on Thursday, you cannot close out a mine by displacing miners one, two, five or ten at a time. A substantial work force would have to be displaced at one time in order to bring about an orderly closing of any coal mine.

If I may now review the bill and at the same time tie in the statements made by the minister a moment ago, I am of the conviction that coal mining will continue in Cape Breton for a long time to come. The phasing-out period of 15 years that is being legislated for would not necessarily bring about the closure of any colliery; at least, I hope this will not be the case. In this regard I refer to the fact that the sum of $25 million is to be expended on the improvement of mechanization. This should go a long way toward solving the problems faced by the mines at the moment.

In this regard I would impress upon all members of the house the importance of getting this legislation through so that collieries such as No. 20 in Glace Bay and No 12 in New Waterford will be given some financial assistance in order to proceed with modernization as quickly as possible. The same comment applies to No. 26 colliery, which last year hoisted over one million tons of coal despite the fact that it was using obsolete equipment. With this capital expenditure on modernization of equipment in coal mines, it is possible that the remaining collieries will have a long life ahead of them.

May I now deal with a statement made by the minister a moment ago. He referred to the end of the resources in this area. I hope that in referring to the end of the resources he made a comparison between the estimate of coal reserves in Cape Breton by Dr. Donald and that made by Mr. Justice Rand. Apparently they are a long way apart.

As for the bill itself and the acquisition of the Dominion Coal Company interest, I am somewhat concerned about certain recent statements. I understand that very recently in London Sir Roy Dobson informed his shareholders that the assets of the Dominion Coal Company were worth $53 million. I hope the government is not going to use this figure as a yardstick because not too long ago this same company considered its assets to be nothing more nor less than worthless, at least worthless from the point of view of putting them on the market for sale. No private interest or anybody else would have touched them. I hope the government will give serious consideration to the amount to be paid to the company for these assets.

I also hope it will take into consideration the argument I put forward during the resolution stage to the effect that any exchange of funds between the government and the Dominion Coal Company should have the rider attached that this money will be left in Cape Breton to develop whatever industries the people there care to carry on. At the moment I can think of nothing but the further development of the mines, though the money could perhaps be used to better advantage in Sydney in order to diversify the operations of the steel plant. While speaking of the diversification of the operations of the Sydney steel plant, may I say that I trust that in negotiating any business deal with Dosco in the near future, the government, in order to alleviate concern in the Sydney area, will get from Dosco a firm commitment in respect of its plans for the Sydney steel operations.

I realize that this bill is tied in exclusively with the coal question, and in this regard I would ask the minister to note a few questions I should like to ask so that while we are dealing with the bill clause by clause he can provide answers thereto. I should like to ask him about clause 2 and its reference to the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company. It is my understanding that this company went out of existence when it was amalgamated with the Cumberland Railway Company. If there is something to be dealt with in respect of the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company I hope the minister will inform the house.

I should also like to ask the minister to tell us what the situation is in respect of the railway line between Broughton and Louisburg. Why does the bill not provide for taking over this line? That would be natural if the corporation is to take over the assets of the Cumberland Railway Company and the Sydney and Louisburg Railway. What is the intention in this regard if there is no rolling stock or anything else involved? What is the reason for not taking over that section?

It is also of interest to note that there is nothing mentioned about the salaries, fees and expenses of the president, the chairman and members of the board. Perhaps this is not of great importance, but the minister could possibly give an explanation in this regard.

Clause 9 (b) makes reference to the acquisition of all interests of the companies in lands and all personal property located under the waters adjacent to the county of Cape Breton, and later makes further reference to these interests of the companies. I should like the minister to explain this situation. At this time we are waiting for the decision of the supreme court in reference to the ownership of offshore mineral rights. Since this question is before the supreme court, what does this reference mean? How can this bill be interpreted in light of that situation? Does it mean that the federal government is purchasing something to which it has already laid claim in the courts of this land? Perhaps I am misconstruing the whole approach, but in reading the bill it seems that all the interests in the lands under the waters adjacent to Cape Breton are to be purchased from the Dominion Coal Company. Does the government have prior knowledge as to the decision which will be handed down by the supreme court? If not, why is such a move being made, the result of which will be that the government will buy from the Dominion Coal Company something it now claims it owns?

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I intend to be as brief as possible so that the very necessary improvements which will follow the adoption of this bill can be commenced as quickly as possible at the collieries I mentioned, namely, Nos. 12, 20 and 26 which are within my riding. Of course, the hon. members for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) and for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan), will have something to say in respect of the colleries in their areas.

As a result of the establishment of this corporation there will have to be some deviation from a policy announced earlier by the minister to which I took objection. He announced a fixed subvention policy for a five year period. I assume that this policy will have to be changed or eliminated because of the obvious intention of this bill. Perhaps the minister could also make clear to the house the financial status of the Dominion Coal Company in respect of what is owed to the federal government because of loans or other advances. There is a reference in the bill to what is owed to Her Majesty by the Dominion Coal Company.

I will defer any further questions I may have until we reach the clause by clause examination of the bill. I hope the bill will receive speedy passage by the house.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as I said last Thursday during the resolution stage, I wish it were possible to accept this very important piece of legislation without being forced to criticize some of its basic aspects. When the Donald report came down—I do not have it before me—and when the present legislation was forecast in government announcements, it was made clear that the government was not prepared to accept Dr. Donald's timetable for phasing out coal operations. I am not quoting, but I think I can paraphrase the announcement accurately. The government was determined to gear the phasing out of the coal operations to the development of new job opportunities for those persons who might be affected. I suggest that somewhere during the drafting of this legislation that basic undertaking was lost and seriously departed from. As a result a great number of questions arise in my mind and in the mind of anyone who studies this bill carefully.

First of all, I find that the corporation is required by law to provide the minister, and through him the governor in council with an over-all plan within one year from the enactment of this legislation. That over-all plan must have in it not only items relating to the conduct of coal mining and related operations by the corporation but also a blueprint for the progressive reduction of coal production by the corporation and the discontinuance of coal production by mines that are not economically viable.

Let me ask the minister how it can conceivably be possible for the corporation to present the government with a plan for phasing out coal production within one year of its establishment and take into account possible new jobs for displaced miners? How is it conceivable that the corporation can do that? Because it is not conceivable I suggest that is why the legislation contains clause 17(4) which deals with the considerations that the corporation has to keep in mind before eliminating or substantially reducing the production of coal.

One consideration it must bear in mind is that such closing down or substantially reducing the production of coal must be within the plan or the amended plan—I am paraphrasing the clause—and the other is that it should take all reasonable measures to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom. It was my understanding from reading the government pronouncement that after accepting the general principle of dealing with the problem by a crown corporation the government was determined, as it should have been, that there would not be any phasing out of the coal operation until such time as alternative jobs were in fact available.

I say to the minister and to government that they are going to compound the problems of Cape Breton Island and cause increasing hardship for the people of that island if the principles involved in the clause giving the power to reduce coal production, and in the clause requiring the corporation to reduce as far as possible any unemployment resulting therefrom, remain unchanged. I am not suggesting that it is wise for Cape Breton or for Canada to continue operating an industry if it is proven to be an industry which ought not to be operated. I am not at all convinced that this is the case with regard to the entire coal industry or that it is the case with regard to the coal industry in Cape Breton Island. But I am not going to pose as an expert. That is a decision which I am quite prepared to leave to the corporation that will be established.

But it is totally wrong in principle, and does not deal with the problems of Cape Breton Island, to give the corporation the authority to throw miners out of work before alternative jobs are available. This is precisely what this bill does. This is absolutely contrary to the undertaking which the government gave, if I understood its undertaking. This legislation ought to read as clearly as words can make it that the corporation shall not cause any unemployment among the miners until such time as it is satisfied that the other division of the corporation, the industrial development division, has progressed sufficiently to guarantee alternative employment for the miners thus displaced.

It is not sufficient for the minister to point, as he may well do, to the provision in clause 18 (2) with respect to what I suppose may be called lump sum severance pay for miners who become unemployed or are retired early as a result of the reorganization by the corporation of the coal mining industry. I hope the minister believes the statements I am making to be sincere, as I believe every statement he has made to be sincere. I did not have to make this kind of criticism, because I recognize the importance of this legislation. But I say that when the corporation is asked all through this bill to rehabilitate and organize the coal industry so that it will produce "efficiently", which in commercial terms means profitably or at least with as little loss as possible—let me put it that way as in his case it is probably more accurate—the coporation may easily throw hundreds of miners out on the streets before there is alternative employment. Paying them lump sum severance pay will not do anything for them. If they are men of 40, 45 or over, as most of them will probably be because of the age situation among coal miners, giving them a small lump sum—it would have to be small; it cannot be very large—by way of severance pay will not save their lives. They may well not be able to do the kind of thing that is necessary in order to move elsewhere where there may be jobs.

I see no reason for this provision, and I emphasize, underline and repeat this because it seems to me to go to the core of the problem. In my respectful submission the core of the problem is that no coal miner on Cape Breton Island should lose one day's work as a result of the reorganization by the corporation of the coal industry. Not a single coal miner should be laid off by the corporation until the other arm has created jobs to which those miners may go. Not until then should the closing down of mines or the reduction of coal production take place.

I am very seriously concerned about the general powers given the corporation in clause 17(1) of the bill and the obvious intention that there be unemployment among the miners for a period provided in the last part of clause 17. As I said, this seems to me to be entirely contrary to the definite commitment made by the government that unemployment would not take place and that the reduction in coal production would be geared to the provision of new and alternative jobs for those who may be displaced by such reduction.

I had hoped that the point I have just raised would not have to be made, but I was really shocked, if I may put it that way, by these provisions when I read them for the first time this morning. When we are in committee I hope amendments will be put forward to these clauses. I invite my hon. friends, and I am sure they are friends, of the official opposition who share this view to put forward amendments in this respect. I will be glad to support any amendment they propose to these clauses. If they do not introduce any, I will try to bring forward amendments that will take from the corporation the power to cause unemployment among the coal miners without the provision of alternative jobs.

The second point that concerns me, as it concerned me on Thursday last, is the provision for compensation to Dosco. I shall not belabour the point. I say again that on any basis of equity, morality and social justice the preferred shareholders of this corporation are not entitled to be paid for being relieved of a financial liability, and they are certainly not entitled to be paid out of the public treasury. I regret that the government has seen fit to make provision in the bill for such payment. But I regret something else even more, and that is the abdication by the government of its responsibility in this field.

It is not the responsibility of the corporation to be established to negotiate with the company regarding compensation. That is a direct responsibility of government. Government has to make that decision. Apparently negotiations have taken place and have got nowhere. I judge this to be so because in answer to questions asked by various hon. members we were informed that talks were proceeding with the company with regard to this program. Apparently these talks have not reached a conclusion. The result is that one of the first responsibilities which this bill puts upon the corporation is a matter of public policy which should not be for the corporation to decide but for the government to decide. I appreciate fully that the corporation, if I remember correctly, has to receive the approval of the governor in council before it can actually agree to any particular compensation, but that is not good enough. Surely the right way to do this is for the government, with all the power that the government has and with all the responsibility which it carries with regard to the people of Cape Breton, to the taxpayers of Canada and to everyone else, to negotiate the takeover. When it has completed that job, then the corporation should be given the task of running the industry, modernizing it, etc.

The third point of principle about which I am very much concerned is an omission with regard to the pension provisions. I fully appreciate that clause 18 requires the corporation to provide for the establishment of pension arrangements for those who work for the corporation or who will work for it as well as for those who work for the companies which the corporation will take over. However, I should like to ask the minister—I put this in the form of a question because I have no doubt that he has as much concern about the pensioners of Dominion Coal as anyone else in this house—whether it would not be more appropriate to provide that pensions to be paid to present employees when they retire and to be paid to future employees must also be paid to employees who have already retired so that there will be no difference in amount between the pension received by those who have already retired and the pensions to be received by those who will retire in the future. I think it is of the utmost importance that the men who are now walking the streets of Glace Bay and other communities in Cape Breton Island as the result of the failure of Dosco should not be treated differently from the men who will be working under the management of the corporation to be established under this bill.

If such a provision is already contained in the bill I have overlooked it, but I do not think I have. I do not think there is a provision that the same pension should be paid to present as well as to future employees. I will go beyond that and suggest to the minister that it would do no harm to the people of Canada if the corporation were also given the power to make a lump sum payment to miners who have been retired over a number of years to compensate them for the heartless cut in their pensions which Dosco imposed some 15 years ago, if I remember correctly.

In short, perhaps the other points I made are points of general principle with which the government and some of us may agree heartily, but I am sure there is no disagreement about the desire of everyone in the house, including every member of the government and particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), to deal fairly with the pensioners. I use the word "particularly" not because the two ministers are any better than the others but because they are concerned about the matter. Their concern about fair treatment for the pensioners equals that of anyone else in the house.

I appreciate the fact that the method used in clause 35 of the bill to bring this matter under federal jurisdiction—of course this is done with the approval and agreement of the province concerned, which makes it easier—is the method provided in the British North America Act, namely, a declaration by the federal parliament that a certain work or undertaking is for the general advantage of Canada. I presume that perhaps this is the basis on which the government deals with minerals at the bottom of the sea or elsewhere, but there is no reason why the government could not have used precisely the same approach in its agreement with the Nova Scotia government to include, as I said last Thursday, the steel industry of Dosco in Cape Breton within this legislative measure.

I and my colleagues are anxious, as is everyone else, to see the establishment of the corporation. If it were not for that we would be very much tempted to talk for a long time until we were able to persuade the government not to do only half a job. It is taking a useful step, and I cannot for the life of me understand why it is so blind as not to see that if it does not deal with the steel industry now it will be faced one, two or five years from now with a serious problem with regard to the unemployed steel workers similar to the problem of unemployed coal mine workers.

I do not want to speak very long and I do not want to repeat what I said last Thursday. The more I learn about the steel operations at Sydney, the more I am impressed by the fact that Dosco is obviously phasing out its steel operations in that plant and that, if the matter is left alone, possibly in a few years' time there will be no Dosco steel plant in Cape Breton. I urge the government to reconsider what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said in reply to a question last Thursday, namely, that he did not think it wise to load the corporation with this added responsibility. I do not know why he should think so. All it would mean would be the addition of more staff and the appointment of a third vice-president.

I hope it will not be said that I have a kind of mania about Dosco but it seems to me, from the years I have spent studying the operations and performance of that corporation in Cape Breton Island, that if the government established a corporation to take over and deal with steel it would have to go a long way to find management more incompetent and yet more desirous of doing a job than the management of Dosco in the decade during which I have been acquainted with its operations. Therefore I have no fears about this being an added responsibility for the corporation. Of course it would be, but it would be a responsibility that it could carry out just as effectively and just as competently as the responsibility to modernize and operate the coal mines. Of course it would require the establishment of a third division, a steel operating division, as well as the coal operating and industrial development divisions, but it is a great pity that such is not the case.

Frankly I would like to understand why, if I am not misreading the legislation, the industrial development division of the corporation seems to be limited and confined to investing in the shares or securities of some other company or person, unless the words in clause 23(f) are to be read as giving the corporation the powers which in my humble opinion it should have. I am sorry the drafters of the legislation did not give the corporation direct authority to build industries and arrange for their running with public funds if that should become necessary. I congratulate the minister and the government for giving the corporation authority to go into partnership with private corporations, which is one way of interpreting the words "authority to invest in the shares or securities of a company". I do not see where, unless I have misread the legislation, the corporation would have the authority to do those things I have mentioned. I do not see in the legislation direct authority for the corporation to set up an industry itself, to buy the necessary plant and equipment and to set up the necessary management for the running of an industry if in the opinion of the corporation—not in my opinion—public investment in a publicly owned industry is the most desirable way of providing and diversifying employment in Cape Breton. If that was intended it should have been spelled out.

As one who has tried, in common with other hon. members of the house, to interpret statutes I have grave doubts that the corporation would be able to do those things without the specific authority being spelled out. The general nature of subparagraph (f) would not be sufficient, in my opinion—

Mr. Churchill: What about subparagraphs (a) and (b)?

Mr. Lewis: I have read the clause carefully and if I have misread it I wish to be corrected. Clause 23(1) (a) gives the corporation authority to lend money to a company or person with or without interest, to make grants to any company or person, or to invest in the shares or securities of any such company or person. The wording does not give the corporation the authority to establish and run a company—in other words, to set up a company. There is, of course, the authority to invest in shares, etc., of a company. The corporation may acquire 100 per cent of the shares—I appreciate that—and thereby acquire title to that company and operate it as a public company. I have not lost sight of that.

I wonder whether there is language in the bill giving the corporation not merely the authority to acquire a business but the authority to establish a business from the ground up. If that was intended then I would ask the minister to consider making it clear by using language to that effect in the bill. I did not find such authority and I should like to see it in the bill.

It may well be that in the judgment of the corporation to be set up by this bill no existing private company can do the job that is necessary in a particular area and that the way to do the job is to set up a public undertaking from the ground up. That entails building the plant, buying the equipment and setting up the staff operation as well as the management and sales side that any new business normally would require. I repeat that if the minister intended that situation to come about it is desirable to spell it out, unless he can show me language in the bill which makes such spelling out unnecessary.

One could speak at greater length but I shall not because I know other hon. members desire to speak. May I summarize my two main complaints against the bill. First, it clearly contemplates throwing miners out of work before alternative jobs are provided. This is contrary to the government's undertaking and to the best interests of the people of Cape Breton and Canada generally. Second, the government has failed to deal with the other industry in that part of Canada which is in distress, an industry not employing as many people as the coal industry but one on which the community nevertheless depends to almost as great an extent as it does on the coal operation. I still hope that before this bill becomes law—perhaps it could be done through separate legislation and if so I do not care—the government will give serious consideration to entering into the steel field in Cape Breton for the same reasons and on the same basis as it is entering into the coal operation by means of this bill.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I have no desire to delay this bill, Mr. Speaker, but in committee last Thursday I raised a number of questions that the minister could not answer because he did not have the committee's unanimous consent. I felt that he dealt inadequately with these matters today. No price has been mentioned for the compensation of Dosco. The minister has laid out three ways in which the corporation will have authority to negotiate with Dosco, if I am using the right words, and it seems to me that at this stage of the bill, when the House of Commons is being asked to accept it in principle, we should have some indication of how much the cost will be to the federal treasury.

It is not sufficient for the minister to say, as he said last Thursday, "We do not know." The minister, his department and other ministers have had previous discussions with the company and they must have some idea by this time of the basis of settlement and what the price of that settlement will be. Will it be based on the value of the salvage that can be obtained from the mining operations? That would be one basis for settling the amount of compensation, and that is provided for in clause 9. Is the settlement to be based on some other, arbitrary figure? There is provision to send the matter to arbitration but that has not been spelled out. Surely at this stage, as was said a few moments ago, the House of Commons has a right to know the basis for the settlement and what the price will be. Many in this house are unwilling to approve of federal expenditures for something that in essence has no commercial or market value.

I am not against giving approval for a reasonable amount of money to deal with economic depression in any area of Canada and the consequent social problems that arise from that depression, but I am against giving what might be referred to, if I have read clause 9 correctly,—a blank cheque. It seems strange that the minister should place a limitations of $20 million on the amount that the government will be authorized to spend for new economic development and yet not fix the maximum amount that may be paid for alleged assets which have no commercial or market value in the normal sense of the word. No figure at all is given. It is clearly stated in clause 19(1)(b) that an amount not exceeding $25 million may be used for the purposes of reorganizing and rehabilitating the coal mines. In clause 19(2) it is also stated that the outstanding amount of working capital shall not at any time exceed $10 million. That is the limit of the amount which can be advanced by the Minister of Finance. Nevertheless in clause 19(1)(a)(i) no limit is placed on the amount to be made available for the acquisition of some valueless property.

I am apprehensive about this situation. Why is it that a limit has been placed on the amount which can be spent on the renovation of the industry after it has been acquired, and on the development of new industry, while no such limitation has been placed upon the amount which can be spent on the acquisition of the present equipment and installations? I am sure the minister could give us some indication of the amount if he chose to do so. There have already been negotiations. I believe he is even now in a position to tell us the approximate amount or at least a maximum amount. Surely he can tell us the basis upon which the government intends to arrive at the figure which will have to be paid by the treasury.

The minister has not yet dealt satisfactorily with this point. The sum of $25 million is available for the rehabilitation of the present coal mining industry. Another $20 million may be used to develop new industry, plus between $25 million and $30 million annually for subventions to offset the losses incurred by the operation of the coal mining industry. We do not know how long these may have to continue. Then there is the amount to be paid for the assets. At this stage when we are considering Bill No. C-135 in principle, members of the House of Commons have a right to know what the anticipated total charge against the federal treasury is likely to be before effect can be given to the provisions of this measure. I sincerely hope that the minister or his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will give us better answers to these questions than they have done already before they ask the house to pass a measure which constitutes virtually a blank cheque.

If hon. members will look at clause 9 (d) they will find that the corporation is empowered to acquire property as there set out;

> —by purchase for a consideration and on terms to be established in such manner, other than by agreement, as the Corporation and the owner thereof may agree upon;

I am not sure what is meant by that phrase "other than by agreement". Does it mean by arbitration? Presumably Dosco would have to agree to arbitration before the issue could be settled in that manner. As a result of the different ways in which the purchase can be made the corporation, with the support of the government, is certainly left with a free hand to arrive at the purchase figure and there is no maximum price tag to be considered. The members of this party have no objection to approving the spending of a reasonable amount in order to deal with a serious economic problem, but surely we also have a right to know what the bill will come to. I believe that both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have some idea right now, as a result of their discussions with Dosco, of what acquisition is likely to cost.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure once again to follow the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) as I did on Thursday last. I commend him once again for his comments. We in the east appreciate the interest he has taken in this legislation. He has spoken words of wisdom and I am sure we all agree with what he said concerning compensation to the company. This point was also dealt with on Thursday by other hon. members.

The bill before us today is a far cry from some of the statements and proposals made prior to 1962 and 1963 by hon. gentlemen who are now government spokesmen in connection with what they intended to do for the coal industry in the maritimes. We are today attending what could be called the funeral of the coal industry, and the chief pallbearers are the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: And the premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, I would add, as the minister has just suggested, the premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Knowles: A lopsided pall.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): If the hon. gentleman from Inverness-Richmond would only hold his tongue I could continue. He seems to be interrupting a lot these days and getting into all kinds of difficulty. If he had only held his tongue for a moment and waited until I had finished, it would have been better. We are attending the funeral of the coal industry, if this legislation does not do all it is supposed to do. It has been pointed out that there are weaknesses in the legislation. I am sure hon. members will agree with me when I say that in any legislation brought down by any government there is always room for improvement. And I think there is room for improvement in the legislation with which we are now dealing.

Let me go back a few years just to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare of some of the activities which have taken place in the past. I have before me a clipping from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of January 30, 1962. At that time the Liberal candidate in Inverness-Richmond, now Minister of National Health and Welfare, was successful in getting an additional resolution approved by a council set up in connection with a meeting of Liberals in Ottawa to consider proposals for the future of the coal industry in the maritimes. This resolution, the report says, ratified a proposal whereby cheap or free electrical power from coal for the use of new and existing industry would be attempted under a Liberal administration. The resolution read:

> The national council suggests the proposal made by the national leader of the Liberal party, Hon. L. B. Pearson, that a new Liberal government will attempt to work out a practical policy to provide electricity from coal at low cost or even free for a period of years to new secondary industries and expanding existing industries.

Farther on in this resolution, described as a new policy statement, we find:

> 2. Directing the Dominion Coal Board to consider with labour and managements the possibility of new mine openings in the coal areas with a view to improving the competitive position of the product in the Canadian market.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We now have this legislation which bears no similarity to those brave words uttered at the meeting held by the Liberal party in Ottawa in 1962.

Over the months and years the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan), the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and others have stated their feelings about the future of the coal industry and those employed in it—the miners and the people in supervisory positions in the coal mines run by Dosco. In our statements both inside the house and outside we have made our feelings known with regard to what should be done on behalf of those who are going to be affected.

There are many questions that could be posed with regard to this legislation. As we go along I hope the minister will see fit to reply to the various questions that have been posed and will be posed. We attempted to get answers to questions on Thursday last but despite the fact that members in all parties on this side of the house agreed that the minister should be given time to answer, objection was raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I tried to assist by suggesting that both ministers could have a rest over the week end and return today fully refreshed ready to answer all questions. I am sure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will do his utmost to provide the answers. When he began his remarks today he spoke in his mother tongue and because the translation was not too clear I did not catch what he said about whether he would be in a position to answer questions later. As we go through the bill clause by clause I hope the minister will provide a full explanation of each clause. With all due respect to my colleagues in the house, of the legal fraternity, I am sure we all agree that we have to read not only the lines but what is between the lines in the legislation.

I hope the minister will assure the house that when the corporation is set up no one in a supervisory capacity in the coal industry in Nova Scotia or in the general work force will be purged. I am sure I do not have to speak for the union, the United Mine Workers of America. They are well able to take care of themselves.

I hope that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in his remarks about incompetent management, and in many other harsh statements he made with which I fully agree, was not referring to local management.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, no, corporation management.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We have men in supervisory positions in the coal mines who have devoted their lives to working for Dosco and the Hawker-Siddeley group and have done an excellent job. I would not like anyone to think that if hon. members damn what is loosely termed the management of Dosco they are referring to men who have worked so hard for the coal industry in Nova Scotia. I think in particular of men like Harold Gordon, who has now retired, of his successor, and of others in the industry who get along well with the work force and who have good relations with the union.

As I mentioned on Thursday, the hon. member for Cape Breton South and myself have brought the pension aspect to the attention of the house on previous occasions. I have no doubt that if a satisfactory arrangement is not made now we will be doing so again on other occasions. Surely the minister will give us some information about pensions apart from what is contained in clause 18.

Clause 17 provides that the corporation shall submit "not later than one year after the coming into force of this act...an over-all plan for the conduct of coal mining." They will be miracle men if they can decide within one year what the future of coal is going to be. If they come to the minister's office within a year and say, "Look, the phase-out period should be reduced to five years or ten years, regardless of who gets hurt," what will be the reaction of the minister and the government? I hope the minister will outline in detail just what is meant by clause 17(1).

I do not see any need to prolong the debate or delay passage of this legislation provided we get answers from the government. Here we have a situation that is most unique. The taking over of an industry has never happened previously but apparently this is the only answer, or partial answer. I think the minister will agree that the task is not going to be easy. It is going to be difficult to make plans for the future. Possibly this legislation will have to be amended within a short period of time because many things could arise that were not foreseen when the legislation was drafted.

The most important items covered by the legislation are the pension problem and alternative employment for men taken out of the coal mines. It is taken for granted in Cape Breton and throughout Nova Scotia and the maritimes in general that not one man will be thrown out of employment until alternative work is found for him by the new corporation. We cannot emphasize this enough. I am sure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, our cabinet representative from Nova Scotia, fully agrees with this viewpoint.

With regard to future relations between the corporation and the operators of the mines —here I am thinking of the workers—I can see nothing but success provided the workers are dealt with fairly. There have been good industrial relations in the coal mines for many years. There have been problems, of course, because the men have had very difficult situations to face. They have been confronted with trials and tribulations over the years. However, there has been co-operation with the supervisory staff at the Dosco mines, who after all have to deal with nine different unions, and considerable success has been achieved through union co-operation.

This co-operation has been brought about through the establishment of modern techniques in industrial relations as well as by the fact that the personnel concerned, both those in a supervisory capacity and the members of the unions, have done their jobs and done them well. They are interested in the coal mining industry and in its future.

I understand that production at Dosco at the moment is in the vicinity of 2.5 to 2.9 tons per man. I am open to correction on that; I am not sure of the figure.

Mr. Pepin: It is 2.6.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I thank the minister. Under the national coal board in Britain I am informed that production is 1.5 tons per man. I should think that when the mines in Nova Scotia are taken over by the corporation and modernized, production will perhaps increase to 3.5 tons per man-day. If this is the case it will be better for everyone concerned—the men at the coal face in whatever capacity they are employed, the men in the supervisory positions and the corporation itself. Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will come about as a result of the operations of this corporation in co-operation with all those involved in the extraction of coal from far beneath the surface.

The only other thing I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that we will be watching this legislation as we go through the bill clause by clause. I trust that the minister will be in a position to give us all the answers we are seeking with regard to the terms of the bill.

Before I resume my seat may I say I regret that there has been no arrangement made for those workers engaged in the production of steel. As I said on Thursday last, although this is not a policy of mine I see no other alternative at the moment, in view of the sad and serious situation in which the steel industry in the province of Nova Scotia finds itself, to putting the industry under the same sort of control as that to be exercised over the coal mines. As I say, I find it regrettable that the government has not seen fit to do something to remedy the situation. I hope that the minister from Nova Scotia, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will have something to say about this question in a few days. I do not care whether he makes his announcement from the top of this building, in the chamber, out on the street or to the press; we will not resent it. I am sure that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and I will applaud the minister if he announces that the government has decided to stockpile steel so as to tide over the work force in the steel plant at Sydney during this difficult and trying period.

In other parts of Canada steel plants are operating at 100 per cent capacity; yet in Sydney, Nova Scotia, the workers are faced with lay-offs week after week. As the delegation that came from Sydney representing all segments of society on the island intimated to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to the other cabinet representatives at their meeting the other day, something must be done. Men with 20 to 25 years service in the steel plant at Sydney are being laid off and they do not know when they will return to work. These men do not know when they will receive their next pay cheque.

At that meeting a somewhat unusual suggestion was made, but in unusual circumstances we sometimes have to do unusual things. It was suggested that perhaps the government might consider purchasing soft steel from Dosco and stockpiling it, thus keeping the plant operating for a period of two to three months. I hope that something will be done about this suggestion or that some statement will be made about it. I observe a look of relief on the face of the minister of mines. He is saying to himself "I have enough problems without having to answer for the steel plant at the present time". But with his assistance perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other cabinet ministers will be reminded that something must be done about this most tragic situation at the Sydney steel plant. If lay-offs continue at this rate, in view of what is being forecast and predicted close to 1,100 men will have been laid off over a period of six months. This is a very bad situation. Steel is the basic industry in the city of Sydney.

I wish the minister well in the passage of his legislation. I also wish him well in his future dealings with the corporation. Although he and I have not seen eye to eye on many occasions, I have always found him to be most co-operative and congenial. Certainly the pattern he has set as minister could be adopted by others who sit on the treasury benches who are always so loaded with sarcasm. When you ask them something, Mr. Speaker, they cannot even look at themselves. If only they knew that this was the most difficult way to get co-operation from the opposition under our form of government. A cabinet minister should be co-operative and try to smile and work with members of the opposition, even though inwardly he may be saying to himself "I hate that son-of-a-gun".

Mr. Pepin: I never would even think of that.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister is a smart cabinet minister. He is getting something done by providing answers and co-operating, by doing everything he can. But several of the ministers on that side of the house are only too ready to look down their noses and give nasty, sarcastic replies to members on this side who in all sincerity are trying to assist their constituents or are dealing with something of nation-wide importance. With those few words of, shall I say, advice to the minister, though I do not think he requires any advice so far as co-operation is concerned, I will resume my seat. I reserve my opportunity to say a few words later when we deal with the clauses of the bill.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow my hon. friend the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), and compliment the minister most highly, but I will only do so on one condition. It is one I put forward when the resolution was before the house, namely, that the bill be enlarged and widened to include the Dosco-owned mine in my constituency. The minister said he could not answer some of the questions during the resolution stage but I certainly hope he will do so in the committee stage, perhaps on clause 1. Again I submit to him that the McBean mine in my constituency owned by Dosco should be included under this legislation. If I may put it this way, the adoption papers have been drawn up but the orphan, as it were, has not been included. I should like to know what the situation is so far as the natural parent, Dosco, is concerned. What is the situation in this regard?

This afternoon I received a telegram, as presumably the minister and others did, from the president of the New Glasgow and district labour council. Perhaps I should read it for the record. It is addressed to me and states:

> The New Glasgow and District Labor Council support you and other M.P.'s in your arguments for the inclusion of the McBean mine in the legislation establishing the Dosco controlled mines as a crown corporation. It is our contention that Thorburn colliery should not be phased out until such time as permanent alternative employment can be found for the McBain working force.

It is signed by Donald R. Murphy, president of the New Glasgow and district labour council. This outlines the suggestion I put forward during the resolution stage, that there should be no phasing out of this mine until one of two things or a combination of both have been done, namely, the establishment of a new mine in the area and/or a guarantee of alternative employment for the some 400 men employed at the McBean mine.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) was quite fair when he spoke on this matter, but I cannot agree with certain things he said. He is reported at the bottom of page 1579 of Hansard as having said:

> We are gratified, that among all the areas of Nova Soctia, in recent years Pictou county has made marked industrial progress.

I agree with that statement. The minister then went on to say:

> It has made marked industrial progress because of the operation of Industrial Estates and because of the funds channelled into Pictou County from the Atlantic Development Board. As my hon. friend will realize, these were very large amounts indeed.

Let me point out that the largest expenditure in Pictou Country by the Atlantic Development Board was $12 million to assist the Nova Scotia power commission in setting up a new thermal power plant at Trenton, which will increase its capacity to 150,000 kilowatts. I believe it will be the largest coal-burning thermal power plant east of Montreal.

I cannot understand why this legislation does not make reference to the future of the McBean mine in view of the fact that $12 million is being spent by the Atlantic Development Board on a power plant actually located in the backyard of this coal mine. The mine is now producing coal for the plant at Trenton, and, as I pointed out at the resolution stage, the new plant will require approximately 400,000 tons of coal per year. The only thing that can be done as an alternative is the establishment of a new mine in the area, which would look after some of the slack and provide alternative employment.

I posed some questions to the minister regarding the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Nova Scotia. I hope he will answer those questions. I take it he will not amend this bill in order to include the Dosco-owned McBean mine, but I implore him to do so at this time. Perhaps the minister will also answer the questions I asked regarding the equipment which has or will be purchased by the Dominion Coal Board for use at Dosco mines and whether any of this equipment will be allocated to the McBean mine. I understand that to keep this mine in operation until all the coal can be exploited some of this equipment is required immediately. Will some of this equipment to be leased by the Dominion Coal Board be used by Dosco at the McBean mine?

I hope the minister will answer the questions I asked regarding the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia. The importance of independent mines in Cape Breton has been pointed out. These independent mines will now become the entire responsibility of the Nova Scotia government. It has been announced that subventions are to be eliminated in respect of certain mines, and I should like to know what the situation will be regarding the McBean mine. Will subventions continue to be paid for coal going into areas beyond the Atlantic region and will the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act continue to be enforced?

All these things should be cleared up as well as the points raised by my colleagues. Certainly clause 18 regarding pension arrangements should include the McBean mine. I do not have the statistics with me, but a breakdown was made not long ago of the ages of the employees working in this mine. It could very well be that some of them could come within the terms of clause 18 and be provided with adequate pensions. I do not know whether that is a fact but along with my two colleagues, the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, I will be listening to what the minister has to say about clause 18.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) referred to compensation. All I can say in this regard is that whether or not an agreement is reached between the corporation and Dosco, or whether arbitration or expropriation takes place, something should be done without delay. We do not know whether an agreement is imminent but we have read in the newspapers that a committee was set up by Dosco to meet with the minister and various officials of the federal government. In any event, let us not waste any time. We should go ahead either by agreement, arbitration or expropriation at an early date.

I do not have anything more to say except to ask the minister again to widen the bill in order to give an assurance to the people in the mines, the officials, the clerical force, those on the surface and at the wash plant at Stellarton that when the resources of this mine have been fully exploited a new mine will be opened or alternative employment opportunities guaranteed. There is still time for the minister to amend the bill before we go into committee. I do not intend to say anything more but I will have more to say in this regard when we reach the committee stage.

I support my two colleagues and the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is also from Cape Breton. I believe that my area should also be included in this legislation. This whole matter has been of crucial interest to me throughout the years. I was associated with independent mines in the town of Westville. I was able to work there during summer vacations to help pay for my education. My father managed the mine in the town of Springhill where a great explosion occurred. Among the people who were killed were some of my school chums. Because of this I am familiar with the Dosco and independent mining operations. I again ask the minister to amend the bill and answer the various questions which have been put to him. In the committee stage we will exercise our right to deal with this very important bill clause by clause.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is the hope of hon. members that the minister will reply to the questions asked. That is why I made my remarks as brief as possible. I associate myself with what has been said by other hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the Chair correct in assuming that the hon. member has already spoken on second reading of this bill?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): That is right, Mr. Speaker. In order to get some continuity I just wanted to ask the minister to give some indication of how he intends to answer the questions posed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I think I should first try to answer some of the rather general questions asked. Perhaps I could leave the more specific questions for the clause by clause study of the bill. The hon. member for York South has already remedied some of the rather disagreeable things that were said the other night on the subject of subventions. If I referred so extensively to subventions, call them what you will, the $200 million spent in the past, the $31 million spent last-year and the $27 million that could be spent next year, there was certainly no attempt on my part to shame the miners. I was simply trying to underline the fact that all this money could be used to better avail. I was trying to convince my colleagues of the necessity to move as fast as we can in broadening the economic base of Cape Breton.

I point this out, Mr. Chairman, because the other night I had the feeling that I was being pushed on the side of the big power corporations in this country. The hon. member for Longueuil is the son of a mailman, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond is the son of a miner, and I am the son of a railroad man. I do not have the feeling of representing the big corporations of this country. This was rather implied in the debate and I did not particularly like it.

The second point with which I should like to deal concerns the inclusion of steel in the present legislation. Several hon. members have raised the point that we should add steel to coal under this legislation. Neither I nor the Liberal party are opposed to nationalization in principle or practice, because that is exactly what we are now doing. But I think one must not abuse nationalization. I believe this is the way the majority of the population feels. If we were to take over Cape Breton steel production today there are many other fields of mining in Canada, gold mines, for example, that might claim a similar advantage. Other areas of the Canadian economy which are subsidized might request similar treatment. As a general theory I believe that nationalization should be brought about very sparingly indeed.

My own opposition to the proposal that steel be included in the legislation is certainly not a theoretical one. I simply feel that this development corporation will be busy enough dealing with the subject of coal that it should not also become involved in steel. But of course everybody recognizes that indirectly the development corporation will contribute by its success in the industrial development field to the improvement of the economic situation in the island, and consequently indirectly to the situation in the steel industry. If I believe the newspapers, this is the way the premier of Nova Scotia feels; if I can believe my own ears, this is also the way the coal miners of Cape Breton feel, namely, that this corporation should be directly involved in their operations even if indirectly it can have an influence upon the whole of the economic situation in Cape Breton.

My third main point concerns the phasing in, phasing out question. The hon. member for York South seemed to be saying that there is nothing in the bill on that subject though he realizes it was in the Prime Minister's declaration of December last. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member quoting at length from clause 17 and not mentioning the end of clause 17 (1). This clause deals with the plan. It is said very specifically at the end of clause 17 (1) that the plan shall take into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry and in broadening the base of the economy of Cape Breton Island. I think the relationship between the phasing in of industry and the phasing out of coal mining is very clearly stated in that clause. You find the same idea in the preamble to the bill at the bottom of page 1:

> —and the progressive withdrawal of the corporation from such production in accordance with a plan that takes into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry and in broadening the base of the island's economy;

[Mr. Pepin.]

It seems to me that this relation is quite clearly indicated in the legislation. It certainly corresponds with previous commitments by the government and with what I and other ministers have in mind. So there is a relationship between phasing in and phasing out. It is a relationship only There is no doubt, in view of what the hon. member for Cape Breton South has been telling us, with which I entirely agree that it is very difficult or even impossible to phase out one mine because it becomes totally unproductive. So the phasing in, phasing out program will be in blocks of people. That is the way I see it.

With regard to the argument put forward by the hon. member for York South, it might not be possible to make sure that "no coal miner will lose one day's work." I think he was overenthusiastic and perhaps he was overdoing it when he said that, because it is quite possible that some miners will lose a few days work in the process. The important point is that they should not be hurt in the process. That can be taken care of by other methods, and I am quite sure my hon. friend would agree with me on that.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat, in a moment of distraction I am sure, asked me to mention specifically what the timetable for phasing out would be. Of course it is impossible to do that, and I am quite sure the hon. member for York South has agreed with me in one of his first interventions in this debate. As I have indicated before, we have certain objectives. In principle, this is a 15-year operation. We want to come down to a level of production of two million tons as soon as possible and we will ask the corporation to provide us with a plan. The rest, of course, will depend on circumstances. Unless one can see into the future, one must realize that these circumstances may either be more or less favourable than what we expect. As an optimist I think they will be more favourable than the committee may think today.

It has been said by newspapermen that I do not seem to be too enthusiastic about this legislation. On the contrary, I am extremely enthusiastic, but in view of the recent developments which have occurred in the steel industry and in view of my inbred realism with regard to the situation, I cannot boast that the passage of the present legislation marks the beginning of a very rosy future. I am not sure enough of that, but my information and instinct tell me that this is the right course to take and that there is a future for Cape Breton. There are some indications pointing that way. However, I cannot anticipate the future. Two years from now there may be five new major industries in Cape Breton. I do not know. But if there are five new industries we will be able to phase out coal more rapidly than if there are only two new industries. So it is impossible to be more specific about the rhythm of the phasing in and phasing out.

On the subject of compensation to Dosco, again I was rather surprised that the hon. member for Medicine Hat apparently ignored clause 12 of the bill now before us. Clause 12 (1) (a) specifically defines what should be taken into consideration when establishing the amount of compensation. It reads:

> (a) it shall be assumed that all subsidies, subventions and other financial assistance provided under the authority of the Parliament of Canada directly or indirectly...were terminated on June 15, 1967...

So the company cannot say "we are used to receiving subsidies from you and this is part of the assets of the company" or "subventions are a moral commitment on the part of the government which should be taken into consideration". We do not want this to happen so we exclude this specifically from the criteria to be used in establishing compensation. Another point is that the $2 million worth of machinery or equipment which has been leased to the company by the Dominion Coal Board should not be taken into account. On page 7 of the bill it is also stated very clearly:

> ...the outstanding balance of principal moneys, together with accrued interest thereon, owing to Her Majesty pursuant to an agreement...

In other words, the money owed by Dosco on the federal government loan should be taken into consideration in establishing the compensation. So it seems to me that this could have been an answer to the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

On the subject of pensions, the hon. member for York South seemed to say that nothing will be done for the former employees of the companies. He must have been tired this morning after the week end, when he read the bill.

Mr. Lewis: I did not say that. I said there was nothing to guarantee that the pension arrangements for the former employees will at least be equal to the pension arrangements for present and future employees. I did not say the government has not done anything for them. Obviously clause 18(a)(ii) provides that they are to have a pension.

Mr. Pepin: I take back what I said about the hon. member being tired this morning. I was barking up the wrong tree. Nevertheless clause 18(a)(ii) provides that arrangements will be made for persons "formerly employed by the companies in connection with the coal mining and related works." So they are covered as well as the present and future employees of the corporation. I agree there is no indication of the level at which they will be covered, but one has to use one's own good judgment and I dare say the corporation would not be less generous to past and future pensioners than it will be for present pensioners. Since I hear no reaction from anyone, I would think this is acceptable.

Mr. Lewis: The minister must not assume that at all. I will make a suggestion to him when we reach that clause.

Mr. Pepin: I think I could not live another five minutes without answering the hon. member for Pictou concerning the future of the McBean mine. I confess immediately that no final decision has been taken with regard to it. However, I should like to make a few comments.

The first point is that the mine is not located in the Sydney coal field defined by the present bill. It is not in an area described as "an area of national concern". Pictou county apparently is not by far in as bad shape as is Cape Breton or the Sydney-Glace Bay area in particular.

I am sure my hon. friend would agree with me that there would be a danger of establishing a dangerous precedent if the McBean mine were covered under this legislation because other mines in Canada as well as other mines in Nova Scotia have been, are being, or will be closed. It should be evident to everyone there is a danger that in similar situations people might be knocking at our door asking us to help them close their mines. May I repeat that the aim of this legislation is not to close mining operations in Canada but to protect communities which are in danger as a result of a rather general downward economic movement. So I think my hon. friend, who knows his area is developing economically, would not want to say that the McBean mine is in exactly the same position as are the other mines in eastern Cape Breton.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

The second factor to bear in mind is that McBean has nearly exhausted its coal reserves. The company informs us that the mine will have to closed by December, 1968. It will have to be closed at that time if it is not closed soon and, as we have been reminded by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, one cannot phase out a single mine, it has to be done in one step. This is a very important fact. The mine has only a year and a half to two years of life, economically speaking.

My third point, which I think is a very important one too, is that we have made an offer to the company to continue the subventions at the present level. The company implies that this is equivalent to asking them to close the mine because they cannot live on the present level of subsidy. They need an extra $3 a ton to keep it going. To keep the mine going for another year and a half or two years then means that we must spend $1.5 million, $2 million or $2.5 million, and I submit in all honesty that there might be better ways of using this money than simply to prolong the life of the mine. We must bear in mind that the operation must be performed in a year or two. The operation must be performed sooner or later. It is traumatic, sad —you can use any word you care to use— but it must be performed. We have no choice. It is not a matter of should we or should we not bring this mine to a close; it must be closed for lack of reserves.

As the hon. member for Pictou mentioned, a private operator may wish to take over the mine and continue operating it for a certain time. Even if the corporation does not take over the McBean mine—and I shall come back to this later—clause 16(d), in particular, gives the corporation authority to help. I shall do my very best to help in this process and I assure the hon. member for Pictou that I do not intend simply to look at the matter and let it slide by. If the closing of the mine is decided on now, or in three months or five months—I do not know exactly when it will be—we shall bring in all possible federal and provincial support to soften the blow. Perhaps the $2 million that will be saved might go toward helping the McBean mine. On the other hand, if we are to spend $2 million and then perform the operation I have spoken of in one and a half or two years, my case will be much weaker for wishing to do something special for the McBean mine. Again, we shall do everything to help that we can legally.

[Mr. Pepin.]

With respect to the distribution of the $2 million worth of equipment purchased by the Dominion Coal Board, as I have already written to my hon. friend, the decision is left to the company. I am told that in the McBean mine geogological irregularities have restricted the application of mechanical operating methods. There is no automatic coal cutting at McBean, and the equipment is mainly of that sort.

With respect to the hon. member's reference to Trenton, when he said that the power station was using McBean coal and that it would go on needing that coal he was quite correct. Trenton will need coal even after 1968 when the mine will be closed. I can understand his plea, but the fact that Trenton will sooner or later have to develop new sources of coal should also be borne in mind.

With respect to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, as has been said, the authority for the power subsidy continues to November, 1969, and we have no intention at the moment of bringing it to a premature end. I am not in a position to say what will happen to that legislation in the future.

I have tried in my remarks to bear in mind the words of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, and I hope I have smiled enough during my presentation for hon. members, who have been so willing up to now to expedite the passage of this bill through the normal processes, to continue in that spirit.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I would request the minister to consider some questions which have been posed to him. Some of his answers have been repetitious. Nevertheless I wish to ask some questions again.

During his remarks he referred to the matter of compensation to the company and said that as of June 15 the subvention payments to the company would be taken into consideration in arriving at compensation. I am afraid I do not have the exact language of the bill nor can I put my finger on the exact clause, but I recall that the bill uses the word "prior". Am I to take it that the subventions which have been paid since the policy was originated will be considered? Will this mean that the company will be taken over without consideration being given to its value of $53 million or $55 million? I have found the clause now. Clause 12 (1) (a) reads:

(a) it shall be assumed that all subsidies, subventions and other financial assistance provided under the authority of the Parliament of Canada directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of the companies or for which under such authority the companies were eligible prior to the day the property was so acquired, were terminated on June 15, 1967...

Mr. Lewis: The operative words are "eligible prior".

Mr. Pepin: That simply means that in order to assess the compensation level the corporation shall act as if the subsidies had ended June 15. That is to exclude the idea, principle and reality of subventions as having any value for the corporation in the assessment of the compensation level.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The subclause reads:

(a) it shall be assumed that all subsidies, subventions and other financial assistance provided under the authority of the Parliament of Canada directly or indirectly—

Does this mean that in arriving at the compensation level the subvention payments which have been made to the company will be deducted from the purchase price?

Mr. Pepin: No. You cannot erase the past.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wish to touch on a couple of other matters that the minister mentioned. On these the hon. member for Pictou is better qualified to speak than I am, though I have an interest in them because they involve a union of which I was a member for many years. The minister intimated that the agreement with the McBean mine has not been finalized. Does the minister realize that in this legislation the matter can be finalized? The hon. member for Pictou of course, will deal with this more fully on the appropriate clause.

The minister referred to the development corporation and to five possible new industries to be established. Considering that this legislation was drawn up to co-ordinate development and to phase out the coal industry, will the minister give an assurance that the miners will have available to them other jobs under the industrial development program?

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: Would the hon. member mind repeating his question? I did not understand it clearly.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I asked the minister whether he is prepared to write into the legislation an assurance that jobs provided as a result of the activities of the development corporation under the second part of the legislation will go first of all to miners who have been displaced.

Mr. Pepin: I do not think I should make that promise. The first intention of the bill is to rehabilitate the collieries and operate the mines. The second is to broaden the economic base in Cape Breton. It may be that the industries which will settle there are not suited to persons who have spent 20 or 25 years in the mines. We do not want to be committed to the sort of undertaking the hon. member seeks and I do not think it would be rational to give such an undertaking. But there is no doubt that the miners will be given first choice, and if miners of a certain age cannot rehabilitate themselves the pension plan will be provided. I do not think it would be realistic to proceed on a one for one basis—one miner out, one miner in industry. I do not think that is the way in which economic development can be carried out.

Mr. Lewis: I rise to make only two points. The minister in his answers to comments drew the attention of the committee, and my attention in particular, to the last lines of clause 17(1) which provide that plans being prepared by the corporation have to take into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry, and so on. I have those words underlined; I knew they were there. But with great respect to the minister, they are irrelevant to the point I made. Indeed, they are irrelevant in terms of the statement the minister himself made some minutes ago.

The minister said, if I understood him correctly, that it was impossible for him to foretell the rhythm of the phasing in or the phasing out. He pointed to the fact that if there were only two new major industries there would be much greater difficulty than if there were five. That is my point precisely. Clause 17(1) deals with the over-all plan which the corporation has to prepare within not more than a year. I suggest that it is impossible for the corporation, just as it is impossible for the minister, to foretell the precise rhythm of development and be able to take into account progress in providing alternative employment in the future in a way which will guarantee that the two operations mesh properly. This is why I did not refer to those words in 17(1). I do not think they have any bearing on the question.

What concerns me is that clause 17(4)(b) assumes there will be unemployment and economic hardship as a result of the work of the corporation in the coal mining area. I do not think this legislation should contain such an assumption. It will be bad enough if we do not assume it in the legislation. Let us not give the corporation the green light to take action which might result in such consequences. Some unemployment may be inevitable, as the minister has pointed out. If a decision is taken to close down a mine which employs 500 people or 1,000 people, there may well be some for whom alternative jobs cannot be obtained. But that is not what the clause says.

I may have something else to say about this clause when we get to it. I merely wish to say respectfully to the minister at this point, that I was not unaware of the words in subclause (1) of clause 17, and I suggest to him that those words do not attach to the subject which concerns me at all.

We on this side of the house have drawn attention to the difficulties in the steel industry and to the urgent need to take this situation into account in the legislation before us. The minister threw up his hands almost and said—I am paraphrasing his words—that he would have felt a great deal more hopeful about the situation, indeed, he would have been ready to use superlative adjectives about it, were it not for very recent experiences. One of the recent experiences to which he referred was the number of lay-offs in the steel plant at Sydney. These lay-offs have been going on progressively throughout the last couple of months with the result that 1,100 or 1,200 steel workers are unemployed and walking the streets of Sydney as of now.

What is the minister playing with? In answer to the hon. member for Pictou who was concerned about the McBean mine the hon. gentleman very characteristically—I hope he will not think I am unkind in choosing that word—said the situation in Pictou was not quite as bad as it is in Cape Breton and therefore was not of such national concern. How bad is bad, Mr. Chairman? Does an industry have to lie flat on its back before the government and the minister will take an initiative to foresee the future and do something about it?

What are these comparisons of degrees of badness? The steel industry of Cape Breton is in bad shape now. Not only is it in bad shape, but it is perfectly obvious from reading the reports that there is a deliberate company policy at least to reduce the operation of the steel plant at Sydney and, I personally suspect, to do away with it altogether in the years to come by moving basic steel production to the Contrecoeur complex now under construction. From the point of view of Dosco there may well be good economic and financial reasons for doing so, but from the point of view of the city of Sydney and the people of Cape Breton island what is taking place there is almost as disastrous as what has been taking place in the coal industry. There is an important exception. While in the coal industry there are factors which the government cannot correct—the price of coal, the quality of the coal in certain of the seams and so on—in the steel industry these considerations do not apply. I venture to say to the minister and to the government, without much fear of contradiction, that a properly organized and diversified steel plant at Sydney could be made economically feasible if there are people who want to put in the necessary capital and produce the kind of steel products which can be used in the Atlantic provinces and in export particularly to the newer nations of the world.

I, and I am sure other members of the committee, want to know what principles there are which prevent the government from adding a provision to this legislation giving the corporation or a division of the corporation or another corporation—I do not care which—the authority to take over the Dosco steel plant or to buy out a part of it—again I do not care which—as other democratic governments have done in similar situations. Possibly the government could acquire a 51 per cent interest in the plant. I do not know the capitalization arrangements of Dosco and I am not presuming to set out a price at this time. However, it should be possible to take over the plant or gain a controlling interest in it and then set out deliberately to modernize and diversify the production of steel therein. The two are directly connected, Mr. Chairman.

If the hon. member for Cape Breton South will forgive me for interpreting and taking his question one step further—he can correct me if I am wrong—I believe he had precisely this in mind when he asked a question a moment ago with regard to a guarantee that when a miner loses his job as a result of this new arrangement another job will be made available for him. The hon. member knows as well as I do, and as well as I am sure the minister does, that if new industry is created now on Cape Breton Island there are enough unemployed presently walking the streets to fill the jobs. There are now hundreds of unemployed walking the streets of Sydney and Glace Bay. It will take some years before enough industry can be established to place these unemployed people in productive work, not to mention making jobs available for miners and other employees who may be displaced by the operations of the corporation outlined in this bill.

Unless the minister and the government are manacled by doctrinaire prejudice about touching any private corporation except if such corporation is completely incapable of making any progress, when, if not now, should the government act on behalf of the steel plant at Sydney which is half, if not wholly, on its back? Based on the facts as they have unfurled in the past year or so, I urge the government to reconsider its position respecting the Sydney plant and indeed other steel operations in Nova Scotia. The steel industry ought to be included in this legislation.

While I am on my feet I want to say on behalf of my colleagues and myself that the hon. member for Pictou is entirely justified in insisting that the mine in his riding, Acadia Coal, a mine owned by a Dosco subsidiary, should also be brought within the terms of this legislation. What is this fear that members of the government have? Why is there this hesitation about doing a whole job, whether in the area of coal or in the area of including steel in this legislation? I appreciate that to deal with the steel plant in Sydney would be a different kind of proposition. It will undoubtedly deserve compensation that may run into many tens of millions of dollars because of equipment and facilities which are there. This is a problem the answer to which will have to be found. The company could either be bought for cash or securities could be given to the shareholders, whatever method may be found to be wisest.

The steel plant is still to some extent a going concern, but just because there may be greater complications in acquiring it is no reason for the government to sit back and let the situation go from bad to worse in the days ahead, which would present the danger of nullifying the positive steps outlined in this legislation. The progressive reduction in operations by the steel plant, in turn creating unemployment, will add to the problems with which the development section of the new corporation will have to deal.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the explanation given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the McBean mine, but I cannot agree with him. If the minister does not know this I will tell him now that the area of Pictou has for many years existed almost entirely on coal mining. Through provincial and federal efforts the area is now coming alive and we can see the light. The minister has said that no decision has been made on the McBean mine which employs 400 men who could be thrown out of work in short order. If I understood the minister correctly, he said that the company believes additional subventions should be paid in order to keep the mine running until 1968. He said the amount required would be about $2 million. This is money which could be well spent if the government does not amend this bill to cover that mine. But I believe the legislation should be amended to include it.

Clause 17(4) states:

> Before closing or substantially reducing the production of coal from any coal mine operated by it, the corporation shall ensure that
> (a) such closing or substantial reduction in production is in accordance with and at a time provided for in the over-all plan or any modification thereof—

And more importantly:

> (b) all reasonable measures have been adopted by the corporation, either alone or in conjunction with the government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or any agency of either of such governments, to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom.

If the bill is not to be amended, then whether it costs $2 million or more I believe this mine should be carried on long enough to ensure, so far as its 400 employees are concerned, that someone else will take it over and run it, a new mine will be developed to employ part of the work force, or guarantees of other employment will be given. If this mine came under this legislation it would fall into the over-all plan for the various mines in Cape Breton. God bless them. I hope this legislation will be the salvation of the workers of that area.

This mine in my constituency should not be phased out within a matter of months. The men should be given the opportunity of employment in another mine or guaranteed alternative employment. The mine should be carried on for more than a few months. It should be carried on at least to the end of 1968. I cannot agree with the minister in this regard and I had to put these remarks on the record. We have seen the light in Pictou county. If this mine is closed at an early date I am afraid we will be dragged back a long way economically.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock and in order for the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS TO MEMBERS

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of providing members of parliament with administrative assistants to aid members in carrying out their responsibilities effectively through helping in such areas of activity as research and communications with officials.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this centennial year is certainly a time for assessment, for taking stock of the effectiveness of our national institutions, for examining them in the light of possible need for changes and improvements to help these institutions work better in the interests of our country as we move into our second century.

While there are many differences of opinion as to the areas in which change is needed and the exact nature of changes that may be dictated by circumstances, there certainly appears to be a consensus about one extremely vital area—the need for reform and improvement of parliament. This consensus appears to exist both in parliament itself and, I think, on the part of the majority of the Canadian people.

Mr. Churchill: What is your evidence for that?

Mr. Gray: The federal government is a vast apparatus with some 300,000 employees, if we include the crown corporations, handling in this coming fiscal year a budget of close to $11 billion.

I think the public expects its elected representatives to be in a position to oversee effectively the working of this apparatus, to be aware of the directions it is taking, to decide what these directions should be in the future and to make sure this apparatus is operating fairly and reasonably in its day to day contact with the citizens of our country. In other words, the public expects that its elected representatives will be able to have something to say in a meaningful way about the policies of the government, what they should be and how they are being carried out.

I think it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the range and complexity of government today are such that we have reached the point when the members of this house must have their own staff to help them carry out their responsibilities to the Canadian public and the most effective way possible. The responsibilities of the members of this house obviously cover a very wide field, including helping to evolve new policies and legislation and considering the modification of existing policies and legislation to meet changing conditions. All this means, of course, keeping in touch with and being aware of the day to day operations of the departments of government.

Linked up with all this is ensuring that this vast government apparatus deals fairly and reasonably with individual citizens and areas of our country in its contacts with these citizens and areas. This in turn means working to solve the problems faced by individual citizens and areas of this country in their contacts with the national government and its various departments.

Under today's conditions, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a member who wants to do all of these things needs to have a staff working directly with him and directly responsible to him. In this way he can keep in touch with government officials, will be able to follow up actively correspondence and requests, and will be given the help he requires in gathering information and carrying out research in order to prepare himself in the most effective way possible for good and meaningful work both in this house and in its committee.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, when a member is in the house or in a committee he cannot at the same time be talking to officials about particular aspects of policy concerning his riding or the country at large, or be discussing with officials particular problems of concern either to his riding or to the country at large. He certainly cannot be in contact with members of the public or with particular interest groups who wish to express to him personally their views on matters of concern both to them and to the government when at the same time he is obliged to spend time in this house or in committees or in attempting to keep in contact in some way or other with ministers or officials of the government.

A new research branch has been set up in the library of the house and I think it is off to a good start. Generally speaking it has been doing a good job. But no matter how much this branch may be expanded it has by its very nature, certain inherent limitations. For example, in the United States Congress they have evolved a legislative reference service as part of the library of congress which is far beyond anything that we have yet contemplated in this House of Commons with respect to our own research branch. At the same time, even with this extensively developed legislative reference service, members of congress and senators have their own personal staffs of administrative assistants.

Even with a research branch in parliament, members need help from persons who are directly responsible to them and who can help them focus their attention on particular matters that they wish to deal with either in the house or in the standing committees of the house. Certain work cannot be done effectively by a research branch, such as gathering information through interviewing directly members of the public or officials of the government. This limitation would also include the gathering of information of a type closely related to the particular political views or policy aims of the member concerned. Also the research branch of the house is not in a position to provide immediate back-up information for members working in the house or in a standing committee who need on the spur of the moment a document or a particular fact to help them put forward in a meaningful way a particular point or argument or to bring out some particular point of view.

I hope it will be possible for this motion to be referred to the special committee on procedure so the details of the scheme contemplated by the motion can be carried out in a way that really is not possible here, not only because the time available for private members' business is limited but because of the particular configuration and approach of the House of Commons itself.

My motion merely attempts to point up the problem and sets out what I consider the necessary way of dealing with it. The details of the scheme, I suggest, can best we worked out by a standing or special committee of the house which could go into all the particular aspects concerned. However, I can say generally that my own view is that it should be left to the individual member himself to decide just exactly what the background and training should be of a potential administrative assistant. Certainly the background of a person who might be hired in this capacity should not be limited to a particular field. There is room for lawyers and people trained in political science, but there is also room for people trained in business management, people from the labour movement and people with backgrounds in economics, sociology and many other fields. Of course the working conditions, pay and so on would have to be sufficiently attractive to retain people of high calibre who would be hired as part of any scheme to provide administrative assistance to members of this house. These would be people who would be willing to make a career in this field, similar to those found in other legislative bodies such as the United States congress.

Of course, another key reason why the member should decide whom he wants to work with him as his assistant is that the member himself knows the kind of individual he wants, one who should share similar policy aims and views in respect of the particular things that should be carried out by parliament and the government.

Again let me say that while the details of the scheme should be left to the committee I think we have reached the stage when it is time for each member to have one or more administrative assistants to assist in various areas. In the initial stages I agree that it may be in order for several members to group together and share an assistant. In this way we could see how the scheme would work out and what further changes might be required. This would certainly increase the real effectiveness of members of this house who would have something more to say about government and be able to influence its direction.

Members of parliament need assistants working directly with and responsible to them. These should be people outside the regular government apparatus to help members keep aware of what is going on and to inform themselves and the public about the details of the operation of the system. We need ways of checking and testing government. These come from knowledge and information.

It has been said that we require improvement and reform of the procedures of this house and that a lot of its work could be done by standing committees. I support this idea very strongly, but a study in committee by members means little if the members themselves are not able to be fully briefed on particular questions beforehand, and of course this calls for the type of proposal included in my notice of motion.

It seems to me that the House of Commons, while certainly a key part of parliament in its broadest sense, is really only a part. Some people still seem to think that all the work of parliament is done in this chamber. That may have been the case at one time but certainy today, with the complexity of government to which I have alluded, the House of Commons as such is useful as a platform from which party leaders and members can speak to the nation and place their views on record, and it is useful for making broad formal decisions. But I suggest it is not really suited for carrying out on a day to day basis the real work of overseeing and directing the operations of modern government. This house may give that appearance, but certainly it is not really suited to carrying out and achieving meaningful legislative oversight.

It is in the public interest for the elected representatives of the Canadian people to have the facilities to carry out the work expected of them by the people who elect them. Let us not confuse appearance with reality. We may be coming to the stage when we may seem to be giving the appearance of supervising and directing the work of the government, but in reality this is not what we are achieving. Certainly we do not want to reach the stage where we appear to be going through the motions but are not really supervising the workings of government.

The lack of staff obviously limits the degree of supervision possible by members of parliament over the government apparatus. They are sent to exercise a degree of legislative oversight by the Canadian people. The public expects us to perform this task. They are surprised when they find out that we do not have the facilities enabling us to carry out the responsibilities they feel should be carried out in their behalf.

I think I should conclude by using the words I used when I had the opportunity to say something several days ago during the course of the debate on another resolution, which was sent to the standing committee on procedure, in respect of the creation of a system of internes to help train people to know more about our system of government. At that time I said:

> Though it may not seem to affect the public as directly as some of the other matters we deal with—economic development and social welfare measures, for example—in the long run it may well turn out to be as important as any of these things if we are to make sure that long after this centennial year is over we shall continue to have a government which is really responsive to the demands and needs of the people of Canada.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this important matter. This debate is an indication that members are thinking about the whole question of greater administrative assistance to them in the discharge of their duties. We had an interesting debate on the resolution of the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) and one sees upcoming on the order paper an equally interesting suggestion by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). Indeed, it might have been an efficient discharge of this matter had all three suggestions been referred at the same time because they deal generally with the same subject in similar terms.

I do not think we have to prove to ourselves, nor should we have to state to our public, the complexity of modern legislation. Nor do we have to document the sheer magnitude of the legislative output of modern parliament. Indeed there are some people who think that parliament is becoming too much of a legislative mill, that too much legislation is being processed, and there are those observers who sometimes suggest that federal parties are getting into office by making legislative promises which belong in the provincial realm. There is at least reason to look at this contention.

We know too that each and every member is burdened by the compulsive routine of this life. One does not have to be in the House of Commons very long to accumulate a large shelf of documents and legislative outpourings which are not just those of the past but contemporaneous with his own membership in the Chamber. One can think of the statutes only and the lengthy bills, some of which have been over 100 pages.

Everyone knows the difference between legal English and good English in dealing with statutes, and it is not the easiest thing in the world in terms of ready comprehension. We know too of the vast accumulation of committee reports on our shelves. I think in particular of the reports of those committees of which we are not members. A conscientious member wishes to keep somewhat abreast of what is going on in those areas which are not of his own specialization.

More important, as the mover of the resolution has mentioned, is the need to be prepared as well as possible for the committees of which a member is a part. Sometimes we run into a situation that seems to me to be marring the committee system. Committees dealing with vastly different subject matters are meeting not only on the same day but sometimes at the same hour. Tomorrow morning, for instance, at 9.30 I should have my mind on Viet Nam in one room and be in another room at the same time with my mind on the Prince Edward Island causeway. How I shall bridge that gap, if a pun will be pardoned, I do not really know.

Then, Mr. Speaker, who can say he has read every word of the mountains of royal commission reports which have fallen upon us not in any light way in the last number of years? How many members have read every word of the Carter royal commission report? Has everyone even completed the Gordon royal commission report on economic prospects, or even "Troubled Canada"? Have we all been able to find time to read every single sentence in the 12 volumes of the report on Atlantic transportation? Other most important studies have been carried out by commissions. I think of the Porter commission and the Bladen commission.

Each of us receives from the Queen's Printer important publications. These are very valuable things. We get every so often a list of books, just a few of the books that come into the parliamentary library, dealing with matters for which in general all parliamentarians have a concern. How many of us manage to read all those books, half of them or even a quarter of them? How can we?

Then there are other documents that come to our desks, reports of various departments and documents from the United Nations, of which the library in parliament is a repository. I suppose we all want to read newspapers. We must read our local newspapers because parliamentary sessions are so long that we are not home nearly as much as we would like to be. We must read the national newspapers so we will know what is going on, what we are doing and what we are supposed to be doing. We should read some international newspapers because the Canadian outlook on the world is not that of many other countries. We all want to or should want to delve into studies by specialists who are neither members of parliament nor civil servants on important matters of public policy.

There is a tremendous range of material that we all want to read and would like to read, but because of the compulsive routine of our job we find it difficult to do so. Therefore it would be most valuable if we had, to put it very simply, at least another pair of eyes and another mind which would assist us in trying to encompass some of the material which would be helpful in the discharge of our duties. This is recognized. I think this resolution deals with one of those subjects which is widely recognized as being important.

We note that in ministerial offices there is a large and continual increase in staff. Ministers have more assistants than ever before. If I could change the spelling of that word I would say that some still need more assistance. But if the executive arm of government which is involved more directly in relationship with the civil service, the bureaucracy, requires assistance, surely those of us who are solely in the legislative arm of government, who must be in a very real sense the watchdogs of the executive as well as the representatives of our people and the custodians of public expenditures, cannot but assert ourselves in our desire to be as well equipped as possible in this difficult and complex job into which our people have put us. We want to be as well informed as we can so as to have less reliance upon the officialize of the executive arm, because our legislative function is diminished and diluted if we find ourselves at a loss for technical and detailed information which is available to the executive arm and not to us.

I believe we can better our performance by improving our office function. I do not join with those who maintain that parliament is a hopeless mass of ill informed and poorly motivated people. I do not at all subscribe to that point of view. But I do believe there is a vast area for improvement, and the hon. member's suggestion is one of those which should be followed. I believe that as we increased our information we would increase our effectiveness, and conceivably we could increase our posture of independence within the legislative gamut. I believe that would be all to the good. We realize that now members of the House of Commons are not part time, gentlemanly amateurs in the old British sense. We are certainly not part time when a session lasts 14 months.

Mr. Churchill: Amateurs but not gentlemen, maybe.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, my colleague suggests that we may be amateurs but not gentlemen. I was going to express the hope that surely we are still gentlemen, and considering that we work 14 months in a session we can no longer be called part time amateurs. Considering that it requires a certain degree of stubborn persistence to continue in the job, one discards necessarily some of the amateur aspects. In any case, I believe there is no disgrace in being a professional politician. Indeed I cannot think of any more important role than that of one who devotes his time and energy, and fortune if he has one, to the pursuit of public service.

I was very pleased that such an important body as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture expressed themselves very strongly on this matter. I thought it showed great perception on their part. It showed that they are thinking beyond their own occupational and economic group, that as a responsible organization in the over-all Canadian society they fastened their attention upon the chief political institution in the land and made practical suggestions.

I do not want to cut off anyone else from expressing his views, and I will do something I very rarely do, read something into the record. I quote a comment from a very prominent Canadian. I naturally subscribe to his suggestion. I wish to quote from Professor Paul Fox's volume, "Politics," page 277, the latest edition. He says:

> Most M.P.'s have neither the time, the energy, or the money to get any serious research done for themselves.
> The result is that they lack fresh and informed thinking to inject into the political process to advance the discussion of issues and to balance the government's strength based on its close relation to the civil service. The same old arguments are bandied back and forth time and time again. The M.P.'s quote the newspapers, and the newspapers quote the M.P.'s, and no one becomes much wiser in the process.

I do not know that I subscribe totally to the last part of the sentence, although I do admit it is a good sentence. The author continues:

> In Congress in the United States, by way of contrast, the facilities for research are plentiful. The Library of Congress has on its staff more than 200 research assistants. Congressmen and Senators may also hire research assistants out of their large expense allowances. The latter amounts vary since they are set by a complicated formula but they average about $50,000 a year per member, in addition to his annual salary of $30,000. Some representatives hire as many as nine personal assistants. Some also have young postgraduate university students working for them as researchers under a plan for "internists" that the American Political Science Association has been running very successfully for more than a decade.

As hon. members know, the "internists" program is a program which has been brought to our attention, and to that of the public, by my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales).

Many of us have encountered our United States counterparts at international conferences and I think we have all been impressed by the amount of expert assistance which they have. Sometimes we may feel we are extremely well prepared at an international gathering if we have read a couple of books. But then we take our place by some congressman who has perhaps a staff of five or six alert, bright people with him and we realize that there is much to do to improve this matter of administrative assistance in our parliamentary system.

Therefore, I commend the hon. member and I support his resolution most strongly. I commend what has been done so far through the extension of the research facilities of our library. But it is not sufficient and we must follow our agreement on this by more concrete action to improve our function and performance, as the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this motion briefly, as well as its principle and purpose. I am glad that we have had this more or less quiet but instructive debate this evening. I want to say to the hon. member who introduced this resolution that I thought he made several very good points in presenting his argument.

I have been in this house for over 22 years and I have seen very great changes during that period because of the developments within government and in our society. The federal government today is becoming more involved with the operations of the provincial governments as a result of agreements with various provincial governments and developments with respect to resources, social welfare measures, and so on. This house has become more involved in the approach of organizations in the country toward legislation. Farmers', labour, business, women's and other organizations make representations to the government and to the various parties in the house with respect to legislation they would like to see adopted. This greater involvement directly with the people has greatly increased the work of parliament and the necessity for specialization with relation to that work.

The hon. member who preceded me paid a tribute to the work being done by the research staff in the library. I endorse what he said. They have been very helpful. I know that I have asked them to prepare several briefs on matters that were of interest to me. However, their work is not extensive enough to meet the requirements of members at the present time. Changes have occurred because of developments in our society which people could not have even foreseen 20 years ago, and therefore the need for these research assistants has arisen largely as the result of hon. members having to deal with complicated legislation and with more legislation than was introduced in the house years ago. They have to read reports of royal commissions. They have to read the reports of special committees or inquiries. They are also supposed to have time to read the reports of international bodies such as the United Nations, the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and other organizations. We are presumed to be able to read the reports of the committees of this house. I might say that during the 22 years that I have been here I have never been absent from the house on a Saturday or a Sunday more than 12 times because I find it necessary to come here and do what I can to read the reports that are presented to us. We also have to read the annual reports of the various departments.

It is beyond the capacity of the average member to absorb and study such a vast amount of material. That is why I have no hesitation in supporting the principle and purpose of this resolution. Personally, I like to come here on Saturdays and Sundays because the place is quiet and one can sit here without much fear of being disturbed. Other members of the house do the same, particularly those who come from constituencies a long distance from the House of Commons. They also utilize their time in this way. Naturally, members who live in Ontario and Quebec go home on week ends because their constituents expect them there. But even doing the best we can under the circumstances, we are not able to do the research and study of all these reports and problems which I have just mentioned. So, I think it is clearly indicated that members of the house do require research assistants.

This is not a problem which can be dealt with overnight. It requires a great deal of study as to how many research assistants should be provided, the types of persons that should be sought by the various members here representing different political philosophies, and the expenses involved. I am not suggesting for a moment that this house can afford the money that is expended in the Congress of the United States, but I do think we can make a modest start in this direction as the result of a study of the problem. The hon. member who preceded me mentioned the interest of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Although he hesitated to put on the record the attitude of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, I will do so because I have heard this subject discussed at agricultural meetings as well as at meetings of chambers of commerce and other organizations where the question was asked repeatedly "How in the world do you cope with all the involved questions that come before a member of parliament? Life is becoming more complicated every day." To indicate the interest of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture I will read an article which appeared in the Western Producer of Thursday, June 15, 1967. It reads as follows:

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is concerned about the growing workload of members of parliament, and would like to see more research staff available to help individual MP's and committees of the House of Commons in keeping abreast of developments.

In a submission to Prime Minister Pearson, after consultation with MP's, the CFA has urged the government to correct the research shortage.

The letter to Mr. Pearson, signed by David Kirk, CFA executive secretary, said:

"—in the observation of our organization the resources of expert and specialized personnel available to members of parliament, individually or in their committee activities, is altogether inadequate to the needs they have for such personnel, to deal adequately with their heavy and growing responsibilities."

Mr. Kirk said it was "quite clear to us that the great majority of members of all parties would welcome our support in this matter."

In a note to the MP's, the CFA said:

"It does not make any sense, in this day and age, to have parliamentarians, with very important and varied responsibilities equipped with staff assistance of their own only in the most minimal way.

"The availability of such assistance is one of the striking features of the American Congressional system, and represents a difference from the Canadian scene in respect of which we do not come out on top."

That indicates that the directors of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have given some consideration to this question because they have been in the habit of making representations to the agricultural committee and other organizations. I know that so far as the veterans affairs committee is concerned, members of legions and other veterans' organizations have asked me how we can manage to deal with all the subjects that come before parliament in this modern age.

Without doubt, this work, in view of the responsibilities of members with respect to correspondence, attendance in the house and committees and before other groups and organizations, is beyond the capacity of individual members. They cannot do the research work that is urgently required. It is on that ground that I compliment the hon. member for the introduction of his motion. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we unanimously refer this motion to the committee on procedure.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous agreement on this resolution and I will not delay the house for long. Someone once said that the contribution of the law maker is not in the exercise of professional expertness. If he merely mouths what his experts tell him, we lose the important values of representative government. It seems to me, however, that unless a member can become expert in one or two areas he must of necessity mouth, in effect, what his experts tell him. For this reason and for others that I might mention, it is my intention to support the resolution which has been prosposed by my hon. friend for Essex West (Mr. Gray). I need not repeat the resolution as the house is acquainted with it.

May I say, first of all, that in my opinion the assistance now being given to a member of parliament by the federal government is generous indeed; it is generous in many ways and in many areas. However, it will be easily realized that although the parliamentary library has established a research branch to assist us, it is very difficult for the staff—efficient, as it most certainly is and staffed, as it is, by only eight persons—to provide information for 265 members of this house, not to mention 100 Senators.

It is possible, of course, that many members of parliament and senators will not avail themselves of this help from students of political science, law or journalism. Obviously, many members of parliament do not need this assistance. There are others, however, who have the need; in many cases the need is acute.

In my four years at Ottawa I have discovered that executive assistants are very important indeed. They can be, and they are, helpful not only to the minister to whose office they are attached but also to members of parliament.

All, or most of us, can remember with gratitude the effective help given us by the gentleman now sitting at the table, the Assistant Clerk, Mr. Alistair Fraser, when he was executive assistant to the Minister of Transport. We know also of the efficient and generous help of this minister's present executive assistant, Mr. Sandy Morrison. There are others; I mention Bill Lee, with the Minister of National Defence—

Mr. Churchill: He did not help me.

Mr. O'Keefe: —and Mr. Alec Morin, with the Minister of Public Works; Bernard Dufresne, with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration; Roger Roy, with the Minister of Fisheries, Gerry Grafstein, with the Registrar General, Alec Cyr with the Postmaster General; Bill Neville with the Secretary of State, and Mike McCabe with the Minister of Finance. I could go on.

Those men and others like them are, in my opinion, more than just assistants. I feel, indeed I know, that they are an essential part of government. It seems to me that the plan envisioned by my hon. friend is, in the same way, designed not merely to help members of parliament but is to help them keep up with their work; and not just with the work, but with the reading which faces us all. Therefore, when we fail that, we fail to find the time to become experts. We could, with the kind of help that is envisioned in this resolution, become expert in at least one or two specialized fields.

Very often a member of parliament is part of five or six committees. How can any of us ever have any specialized knowledge of any particular field?

I feel that this resolution would not only help members of parliament, but it would also provide an effective training ground for the young men and women who will, at some time, take our places in this House of Commons. These young men and women may come from a variety of sources, from labour, business and journalism. An embryonic political scientist might find the environment of Ottawa fascinating, though he might not be so fascinated with the type of work that almost inevitably would fall to his lot as a kind of intern.

Rather than grappling with ideas and problems of national interest, most probably the intern would find himself involved in a member of parliament's most vital concern, the problem he must always keep before himself, that of being re-elected. However, he or she could help in research and in a wide variety of fields. He or she would have to be prepared to serve the member of parliament and a Senator simultaneously. He or she would need a good deal of tact, good judgment, and initiative. He or she would need detailed knowledge of the geography, economy and political forces of a member's riding. Certainly, the job would entail long hours of overtime. It would require stamina and vigor and, most of all, interest, enthusiasm, and education. I realize, of course, that this is quite a list of qualifications; yet I am also confident that many of a member's own constituents could easily fill the position, qualify completely, and be happy in the work.

In working for a member the young political scientist might find himself writing newsletters to the member's constituents and writing speeches for local consumption. A law graduate possibly could obtain little more benefit from working for a member than he could by becoming politically active in a local party organization of his choice. I feel, however, that there will be no lack of applicants for the position of assistant to a member of parliament from young men and young women who are interested in the work. Also, it is my opinion that young men or women who are interested in journalism would be of tremendous benefit to a member of parliament, although it has been suggested by a veteran newsman that a period of service in the Ottawa press gallery might be sufficient to turn any journalism student against politics for life. I do not agree with this, and I feel that the newsmen in the press gallery—I see that there is one here during this dog watch —are as intensely interested in the vital happenings in the House of Commons as any member of parliament. Sometimes, it seems to me, they are far more interested.

We have interns in the medical fields and juniors in the legal profession. Why should we not employ students who are interested in the political fields? I am one of those who believes that young men and women should have this opportunity of observing the legislative process at first hand and I feel that it would be helpful if outstanding young political scientists, young journalists, and even young law school faculty members were brought to Ottawa for a period of possibly six or eight months as assistants to members of parliament. That would be helpful and interesting to them.

The suggestion is that they would be paid a minimum stipend which would be advanced by the government and that they would receive an established foundation grant; also, that a competition would be held each year for these political fellowships to coincide with the opening of a parliamentary session. Certainly, direct experience on parliament hill would be enormously helpful to these young people and would be of great help to members of parliament to whose offices these young men or women are attached. Not only that, but certainly these learners would perform a considerable amount of work for the members of parliament.

With this kind of assistance the members themselves could perhaps concentrate more on the legislative processes and devote more work and study to becoming expert in certain fields of government. It seems to me absolutely impossible for a member of parliament under present conditions to become an expert in anything, except possibly in attendance in the house. This, in my opinion, is an area where there are few experts.

I am happy, Mr. Speaker, to support the resolution which has been proposed by the hon. member for Essex West.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I rise to make what will probably be the shortest speech of my parliamentary career. I go on record as supporting the intent of this resolution, believing it to be one of the most important steps that we could take in this house.

There have been arguments, speeches and public lamentations about the deficiencies of parliament today and about the parliamentary process. I think if action were taken in this regard to strengthen the individual responsibility of members of parliament, we shall have taken a major step in bringing decision making and responsibility back to this forum.

Members of this house are asking for very little in comparison with the almost unlimited resources which are available to civil servants and royal commissions. One of the reasons royal commissions have expanded almost out of hand is the fact that members of this house are no longer in a position to decide responsibly on matters which come before them. Yet, in the final analysis, there reports from royal commissions and elsewhere, some of them running to several volumes in length, are submitted to us for our decision. I hope that not only is this motion referred to the committee on procedure but that some action will be taken in the very near future.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): I, too, wish to make a short speech in support of the motion before the house. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) for having brought it before us. I believe it emphasizes the problems which those of us who sit here find in trying to perform the tasks we were elected to perform.

The first reaction of new members is, I believe, one of surprise at the problems encountered when trying to work their way through the Ottawa maze. Then, we find ourselves discouraged by the lack of facilities available to us and, finally, we tend to become frustrated by our inability to accomplish all the things we would like to accomplish. Had there been an opportunity to speak at greater length this evening I would have developed a proposal which goes somewhat beyond the motion which my hon. friend from Essex West is proposing. I should like to have seen this whole question examined with a view to improving the technical and administrative assistance available to members of parliament so as to enable them to carry out their duties more efficiently. This is the intent of an amendment which I would have proposed; it would have been seconded by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald).

In conclusion, I hope that if the house agrees that this matter should be referred to the committee, the committee will ask other Canadians, presidents of universities, presidents of trade unions and others, to inquire into the whole range of duties a member of parliament should be expected to perform in terms of his responsibilities to his constituency and to parliament. I support this motion and hope the subject will be referred to the committee.

Mr. Henri Latullipe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say a few words so as not to delay the passage of the excellent proposal contained in the notice of motion introduced by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray).

We fully endorse his suggestion, and we are all aware that members need fuller information, because they lack the means to obtain adequate information. The secretaries of members also lack information. As a matter of fact, since some secretaries of members do not even have the required competence, they are hardly of any use to them. Therefore, some members are overworked because of their great difficulty in finding a secretary.

Further to the suggestion contained in the notice of motion, we can possibly make available to each group of members some well informed people, in short, people who could give them some information. I feel it might not be possible to give an administrative assistant to every member, but someone could possibly be made available to a group of members or he could train the secretaries to make them highly competent not only in the field of research but from every point of view. These are simply suggestions I am putting forward. I am one hundred per cent in favour of the hon. member and I would like his motion to carry at the earliest possible moment.

Now, there are members who represent very large constituencies and it might be proper to discuss this. I think such members should have help, quite apart from what is available in the house, on account of the large distances that must be covered.

These are all the suggestions that we can put forward in the committees and I would now thank the hon. member for having made this motion. I support it wholeheartedly and I would like it to carry as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): I, too, would like to support this motion. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie):

That the said proposed motion be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the special committee on procedure of the house be empowered to consider and report upon the provisions thereof.

Mr. Speaker: I should bring it to the attention of hon. members that this is a very unusual motion. It is certainly in the form of a substantive motion rather than of an amendment. It does, therefore, require unanimous agreement if it is to be moved at this time. I wonder whether there is such unanimous consent on the part of the chamber as would allow the hon. member for Lincoln to propose this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation—Mr. Pepin —Mr. Tolmie in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tolmie): It being seven o'clock the committee stands suspended until 8 p.m.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-135, an act to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation, clause 2.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, just before the dinner recess the minister was indicating to the hon. member for York South the reason he could not give any assurance that the miners in Cape Breton would be assured of jobs in new industry in the event of any displacement. He said it would be rather ridiculous for him to give that assurance. In so saying, he was condemning remarks made by a member of the government not too long ago who, on the closing out of the Point Edward naval base in Cape Breton, assured those displaced at that time that alternative work would be available for them. It goes without saying that many of those men are still walking the streets.

Since the legislation before us is supposed to be an effort to combine the phasing out operation of the coal mines with the development of new industries, unless the minister can give us some assurance of alternative employment for the miners the committee would seem to be wasting a lot of time on the legislation.

I also call attention to the fact that just before the dinner recess the minister told the hon. member for Pictou that no final decision had been made in respect to the McBean colliery. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, passage of this legislation would bring a final decision in respect to that colliery because it is not covered by this legislation.

Further, I call the minister's attention to page 2 of the policy statement made by the Prime Minister, dealing with coal operations, the last paragraph of which reads:

In addition, it is the intention of the federal government to establish with the province a joint framework which will permit the concentration of all federal and provincial efforts to promote the economic development of eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island in accordance with a comprehensive plan.

The minister cannot overlook the fact that the hon. member for Pictou is making very strong representations on behalf of the miners, some 400 odd, who work in his district and who belong to the same union. I am sure the union has made representations to the government, and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has received representations from it. They should come within the terms of the policy statement issued by the government and should be covered by this legislation

Clause 2(d) states:

"companies" means all or any of Dominion Coal Company, Limited, Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited, The Dominion Rolling Stock Company Limited, Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company, The Scotia Rolling Stock Company Limited, and the Cumberland Railway Company.

Acadia Coal Company is a subsidiary of Dosco and should certainly come under this interpretation clause. Both the bill and the policy statement made by the Prime Minister support the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Pictou in respect of the McBean colliery.

I prefer to deal with the other clauses of the bill as we come to them, but I may indicate now that I am not quite satisfied that the clause referring to pensions is as clear as it might be or as concise as it should be. I trust the minister will answer the questions that have been posed to him before we come to deal with the industrial development division of the new corporation.

I repeat I am convinced coal mining operations will have to continue in Cape Breton for a long time to come. My concern to see that this legislation gets early passage is simply based on tackling as quickly as possible the dire need to upgrade and mechanize the collieries so that they may operate much more cheaply, and possibly economically in the future.

I do not want to sound technical, but the truth of the matter is that I cannot be too technical about developments in the different mines. However, I would say that the need to pass this legislation in order to make the necessary money available is great, and the sooner this is done the better. This would provide new equipment and improvements in the mines. I am informed that it is possible to commence a wall face at a thousand feet. We would be able to start two wall faces in No. 20 colliery at Glace Bay, which during the past number of months has been allowed to run down to the level where every day we wait will be costly in terms of rehabilitation and reorganization of the mine. The same may be said about No. 12 colliery at New Waterford. The maintenance of these collieries has been backsliding each and every day, and the sooner the legislation is passed the better.

We will pass this legislation, Mr. Chairman, as soon as the minister provides us with some answers which are more in line with the policy statement issued by the government. Then the members of this committee will be assured that we are passing something which will give protection to the miners and pensioners who are involved, as well as to the coal industry in general.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

In his remarks the minister covered a certain number of matters I was interested to hear about, but I repeat the need to pass this legislation as soon as possible. The quickest way to do this is to have the minister accept a few of the suggestions which have been made from this side of the house, for the express purpose of strengthening the legislation and providing the miners in Cape Breton with that which was assured them in the policy statement of the Prime Minister prior to the introduction of the resolution.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, the clauses will carry when the minister takes the opportunity to explain certain of the clauses as they come up, and as he is faced with questions. I would now ask him on clause 2 about the McBean mine, and he might also explain the Sydney-Louisburg operation.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, on the subject of the McBean mine I think I have given as full an explanation as I can. As my hon. friend says, the McBean is not included in the present legislation and I have given reasons for that this afternoon. I have also indicated what can be done and expressed our willingness in helping to reduce as much as possible any shock effects.

For example, I said that it might be better to spend differently the money that we would spend on McBean if it continued in operation. I do not want to appear to be speaking on behalf of the hon. member for Pictou but it seems to me that the hon. member, although he did not accept this decision with a smile, was nevertheless pleased that some good will had been offered by the minister on behalf of the government.

I also said this afternoon that the crown corporation could help in this regard. My hon. friend from Cape Breton South quoted the statement of the Prime Minister last December, when the Prime Minister said:

In addition, it is the intention of the federal government to establish with the province a joint framework which will permit the concentration of all federal and provincial efforts to promote the economic development of eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton island in accordance with a comprehensive plan.

It is quite true that the Prime Minister said that, but it has to be read in conjunction with part II of the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement, which proposes the formation of a committee to be charged with the responsibility of coordinating the economic development of Cape Breton island. This committee will have responsibilities over a wider geographical area than the area covered by the corporation itself.

Why is that? Because at the same time as this coal corporation is created, as hon. members from the area are certainly aware, an ARDA project is being developed. The project embraces an area larger than Cape Breton island; it embraces nine counties as opposed to four on the island. We want to tie in as well as we can the area covered by the economic committee set up under the agreement with Nova Scotia with the area of ARDA operations. I hope that this is sufficient explanation to justify the apparent discrepancy between the agreement and the legislation before us.

I want to stress again that the operations of McBean are coming to an end by December 1968. This is not an act of the government of Canada. If I want to put the blame on anyone I will put it on God. The reserves of the mine are coming to an end, and as I said clearly this afternoon this is a situation we will have to face sooner or later. I simply express the view that the sooner we face it the better, because the money we can save thereby may be used more profitably, as I said before.

With respect to the suggestion that some provision should be made for the steel workers in this bill, I have nothing to add to what I said this afternoon except to say that the hon. member for York South seemed to consider as "doctrinaire prejudice" any opinion that was not in accordance with his own. My mind is not possessed with doctrinaire prejudice. I think that by the legislation we are now debating we are showing that we are not prejudiced one way or the other.

It is obvious, to me at any rate—and I believe it should be obvious to all members of the committee—that by helping the industrial and economic development of the area the crown corporation set up by this bill will help indirectly in alleviating the troubles of the steel situation.

Mr. MacEwan: If I may reply briefly to what the minister said. I agree with him that it is not the fault of the government that resources of the McBean mine will apparently be exhausted by 1968. Actually, Dr. Donald said they would last until 1970, but the management reported 1968. I am not a mining engineer, so I cannot be sure about this. However, the point I am trying to make is this.

Even if this mine will be exhausted in 1968, which is about a year and a half, it will at least give us a little breathing time to relocate the working force at the mine. I certainly would not agree with any proposal to close the mine in the next few months. As I pointed out earlier—and I suppose, Mr. Chairman, you are getting tired of hearing me say this, but it is very important—the working force of 400 must be relocated at some other mine or found alternative employment. I think the life of this mine should be extended until at least 1968.

I was very interested in what the minister said about ARDA. I take it from what he said that he was referring to the ARDA task force which carried out an extensive study of the nine northern counties of Nova Scotia.

I asked the minister of forestry a question in March and was informed that a report had been made to the federal government, a copy of which had gone to the provincial government. Is that now being studied by the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia? If the minister does not see fit to amend the bill having regard to the agreement and the ARDA task force report, I hope something will be done to include the county of Pictou as one of the nine northern counties.

We do know that originally the agreement in respect of New Brunswick was reached between the government of Canada and the government of New Brunswick. I would hope that this mining area of the county of Pictou could be included in any joint actions taken between the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Could the minister bring us up to date on the progress he or the government is making with reference to the selection of personnel for the Cape Breton development corporation and the co-ordinating committee. The other day I stated, as I do again, that I hope it will not be a haven for defeated Liberal candidates. Can the minister give us an assurance that we are going to obtain the most capable people possible for this board. Knowing the minister, I am sure that he would want the most capable and competent people available as members of this board so that the best job possible can be done.

A few moments ago the minister said that this legislation would indirectly assist the steel industry. Can he advise us as to whether the corporation will do anything directly to assist the steel industry, even though it is not specifically mentioned in the bill? Is there some manner in which the board can assist directly, even though the steel industry is not covered by the legislation?

I should like also to ask the minister whether the corporation is going to have a free hand in negotiating compensation for the holdings of Dosco. Will the board report back to the minister or to the cabinet, or once the legislation is passed will it be its solemn duty to make a deal with Dosco to acquire their holdings in Cape Breton? I am also wondering who will be the watch dog regarding what the corporation will do. No one can suggest I am pointing any finger, because we do not know who will make up the corporation's personnel. However, in answer to a question the Prime Minister on one occasion said that the personnel of the corporation would probably be announced prior to the introduction of the legislation, yet on another occasion I believe the minister said that these people would be appointed after introduction of the legislation. Perhaps the minister could enlighten us on these three points.

Mr. Pepin: Let me say a few words in respect of the personnel selection. I have seen some names that have been mentioned which have been "apolitique", the "a" meaning excluded from. I have not seen a political name among those mentioned. This does not mean that former politicians should be necessarily excluded from important jobs because many politicians are good men. If the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria was willing to relinquish his seat he might possibly be appointed, and everybody would agree that this would be a good nomination.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On that very point, let me say that on three occasions within the last year or two different cabinet ministers have suggested that I might be interested in some position on a board set up by the government. I do not know whether this was as a result of the goodness of their hearts or the milk of human kindness, or just that they wanted me out of here.

Mr. Pepin: This board will have to work very hard and I know how hard the hon. member can work. I thought probably he would be a good prospect.

Mr. Churchill: How about the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Pepin: He is far too busy already.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Having regard to the direct contribution the corporation can make to the steel industry, I do not think this can be entirely excluded as a possibility. If the hon. member waits until we reach this particular clause, I am sure he will realize that the corporation can do almost anything. This bill does not exclude any possibility and I do not exclude any. Let me repeat however, that the main function of the corporation will be to rationalize and operate the mines, and bring in new industry. If it manages to bring in industry, and we think it will, again this will indirectly help the steel industry.

Having regard to compensation, this is also dealt with in the bill, specifically in clause 12. Perhaps the hon. member would like to wait until we deal with it.

There was a small point raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South regarding the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company. The Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company was included because it retains title to some railway lands, notwithstanding its takeover by the Cumberland Railway Company. It still has title to some lands and it was included to make sure that everything which can be useful will be acquired by the corporation as a result of the legislation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to follow up this matter which is of great interest to the United Mineworkers and the 400 men at the McBean colliery. The minister will recall that about two years ago the subventions paid on coal were placed on a fixed basis for a period of five years. Will the subventions still apply to the McBean colliery since it is not included in the legislation? Will the payments be made during the life of the McBean mine or are they to be wiped out entirely?

Mr. Pepin: The purpose of extending the subventions on a five year basis was to permit long term planning by the company. When the corporation takes over Dosco, it will do the long term planning.

So far as the subsidies to the McBean colliery are concerned, I said earlier this afternoon that they could be continued at the present level. That offer has been made to Dosco, but the company feels this is not sufficient and has asked for a $3 increase in the present level of the subventions. This changes the picture quite considerably, because this would bring the subventions to $11.50 per ton.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Appointment and tenure.

Mr. MacEwan: As the minister has said, clause 4 states that the chairman and the president shall be appointed by the governor in council, after consultation with the lieutenant governor, and will hold office for seven years. The other directors will hold office for five years. Has the minister consulted the government of Nova Scotia regarding the appointment of the president and the chairman, and does he expect to make an announcement very soon after the legislation is passed by this house and the other place?

Mr. Pepin: I have already discussed some names for the presidency with Premier Stanfield. As the legislation says, the appointments are to be made after consultation with the lieutenant governor in council of Nova Scotia, which means, of course, the government of Nova Scotia. We hope to make the announcements quite soon after the legislation is approved. I might say, en passant, that it is our intention to stagger the initial appointments so that all offices do not fall vacant at the same time.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Salaries and fees.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to put temptation in the way of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, but could the minister indicate what are the proposed salaries for the president and vice presidents who will serve in the two divisions?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, the easy answer to this question is that the salaries will be high enough to attract good people, and low enough to maintain a certain aspect of benevolence and dedication to the job.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I need not remind the minister that very good salaries are paid in the Hawker-Siddeley group, and they are not drawing the type of management personnel the minister said would be induced to join this development corporation.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Nor is that group drawing dedicated personnel.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides:

> The president shall be paid by the corporation a salary to be fixed by the governor in council and the chairman and the other directors other than the president shall be paid by the corporation such fees for attendances at meetings of the board or any committee thereof as are fixed by bylaw of the corporation.

I take it the governor in council and treasury board will have nothing to say as to what is paid to the officers of the corporation, other than the chairman and the president?

Mr. Pepin: The directors will be paid the standard per diem that is paid to directors of this kind of corporation.

Mr. MacEwan: Then they will be paid in line with what is paid to directors of other crown companies?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Power of acquisition.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee ought to hear something from the minister about the negotiations which I understand have already taken place with Dosco for the acquisition of its properties, if it has any; its assets, if it has any; and its liabilities, which it certainly has. I should like to ask the minister whether he would be good enough to tell the committee what negotiations have taken place, at what point the negotiations were ended before the legislation was brought down, what remains for the corporation to negotiate when it is established and takes form, and whether the negotiations with Dosco are continuing while the legislation is before this house and the other place. In other words, is everything now waiting for the corporation to be established in order to start negotiating for the acquisition of whatever it is the corporation has to acquire, or has some of the work already been done and is it continuing while we are discussing the bill?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the best way to answer this question is to indicate first what the ownership situation is of Dominion Coal. There are 480,000 common shares owned by Dominion Coal; that is Dosco in fact. There are also 26,521 preferred shares owned by Dosco. There are 182,238 shares owned by 1,100 individuals, most of whom live, in Nova Scotia and Quebec. That gives a total of 208,759 shares for Dominion Coal.

With respect to the other two mines, that is Princess and McBean, Dosco owns them completely. The hon. member referred to negotiations. I would not call them negotiations; they were more in the nature of enlightening conversations between my department and the company. These lasted—

Mr. Lewis: Who enlightened whom?

Mr. Pepin: Each side was trying to enlighten the other. After a while these conversations, which led to a better understanding of the situation, were broken off by the company, in part anyway because the preferred shareholders of the company wanted to maintain a strong position. It seemed to us that not much could be gained by continuing these conversations.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this matter for a moment? It was my understanding from reading newspaper reports that Dosco admitted that the common shares were valueless. I think that was the term used in the newspaper reports which I saw. I may say that is quite an admission. With regard to the preferred shares, I gather that Dosco is one preferred shareholder for a total of 26,521 preferred shares and the remaining 182,238 preferred shares are owned by—I did not write down the number—over 1,000 individuals from the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell us or can file, if he can obtain the information and if it is not supposed to be confidential, details as to who are these preferred shareholders. Can the minister tell us whether they are officers of Dosco or whether they are individuals who have no relationship with Dosco? Would the minister also inform us what the company or the so-called preferred shareholders' committee, which the company very cutely set up to do the negotiating if I read the newspaper reports rightly, claimed was due to them in respect of the preferred shares? I ask this question so that parliament may have some idea where the negotiations for the actual payment will start.

I think that before this committee and parliament passes the legislation giving the corporation the responsibility to negotiate the take-over—a responsibility which I remind you, sir, I strongly feel the government should retain and should not hand over to a corporation—we ought to know a little more about what is involved. We ought to know who the preferred shareholders are other than Dosco. We ought to know the individuals, companies or corporations concerned. I will use the legal word "person" to cover both the human and non-human person under law. We ought to know whether these people are shareholders of Dosco or have no connection at all with Dosco. If there are both categories, we ought to know the number in each category. We ought to know what the shareholders committee is asking per preferred share, in order to have some idea of the total amount involved.

We should know then whether the discussions indicated that the liabilities, which the corporation will necessarily have to take over if it is taking over Dominion Coal as a company, will be offset against the claimed assets, and if so what these liabilities are. If it is not taking over Dominion Coal totally as a concern but merely its so-called assets, then we should also know exactly what will happen to the company's liabilities.

I am not an expert in these matters and there may be other even more cogent points about which the minister should be asked questions. I will repeat, in general terms, that before we pass this clause we should know with greater precision what amounts are demanded so that parliament and the people of Canada, as well as the people in Cape Breton Island, will know more precisely what we are talking about and in what direction we are going.

Mr. Pepin: I am quite willing, even eager to give the hon. member any information I have on the subject. I am not trying to hide anything. I have already indicated the distribution of shares in the company. I think that was clear.

With respect to the identity of the preferred shareholders, I understand there is a list of these people but I do not have it with me. I am told they are not Dosco people. If the expression is not derogatory, they are quite "a mixed bag", different people from different areas, or different groups of people in society. They are not a league of some kind.

If I may add a third point, because the company has been made to appear quite inhuman, I do not want to comment on that, I will say that the Dominion Coal has never paid a dividend on common shares. They have not paid a dividend on preferred shares either since 1952.

Mr. Lewis: The press report referred to 1962.

Mr. Pepin: In my sketchy notes I have the year 1952. I will make a correction if this proves to be otherwise.

With respect to the price which Dosco is asking, the only documentation I can refer to is the correspondence between the company and the Minister of Finance. The hon. member will recall that at one time Dosco made an offer to the Minister of Finance to give up the operation, and in that offer certain prices were mentioned which I will indicate. As my hon. friend says, they asked $1 for all common shares. For its own 26,521 preferred shares Dosco asked $8 per share, a total of $212,168. Of course they could not indicate the price at which the other preferred shareholders would sell. I have said already that at one time the other preferred shareholders established a little syndicate or union of their own to defend themselves as well as possible in the circumstances.

With respect to the Princess and McBean mines, the company indicated a value of $5,193,621. They made the point that these two mines had received no grant or loan of any kind and that, at least on paper, they could be said to be making some money. This is why this important amount of money was indicated with regard to the two mines which Dosco owns directly.

With respect to assets and liabilities, some liabilities are indicated in the bill. If I remember correctly they are indicated in clause 12 (3) where it is stated:

> —the outstanding balance of principal moneys, together with accrued interest thereon, owing to Her Majesty—

That is a liability which will have to be taken into consideration.

I hope this answers the hon. member's questions to his satisfaction.

Mr. Lewis: I am sure these are all the answers which the minister has at present. I do not expect him to give answers which he does not have.

I was going to ask the minister whether he could tell us when these preferred shares were issued and how long the preferred shareholders, not necessarily the particular ones, have been on the list. I realize the minister may not have this information at hand, but could he tell us when the preferred shares were bought by the preferred shareholders.

Mr. Pepin: I am told that these shares were issued back in the 1930's, but I cannot be more specific than that.

I should like to say again that the last dividend on the preferred shares was paid out in 1952.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister know what was the issue price per share?

Mr. Pepin: I am awaiting the assistance of the "Holy Spirit".

Mr. MacEwan: Did I understand the minister correctly that the price asked by the company for the assets of the McBean mine and the Princess colliery was $5,193,621? Did I also understand him correctly that the company said these two mines were actually the only ones making money in the whole Dosco group? If so, why then did the company say to the minister that in order to continue the life of the McBean mine even until 1968 they would require, as the minister stated this afternoon, a subvention of $3 more per ton, which would run into a couple of million dollars? Would the minister care to explain that?

Mr. Pepin: I use the word "value" and phrases such as "making money" with as wide a smile as I can display.

Mr. Lewis: It does not show on Hansard.

Mr. Pepin: I should point out "the minister smiles" or "the minister cries", whatever the mood may be. The "value" of McBean and Princess is predicated on subsidies being paid. Without these subsidies the "value" might be smaller. I will say that as a result of the disagreement as to what value is about the "conversations" between the department and the company came to an end.

To return to the subject of the value of the preferred shares, they were issued in 1934 and the par value at the time was $25 per share. The "Holy Spirit" has helped me.

Mr. Lewis: I have one other point on clause 9. If I understood the clause correctly, and I think I do, the bill provides three alternative ways in which the properties and the interests are to be acquired. The first one is by purchase on the basis of an agreement between the corporation and the companies; the second one is by purchase on the basis, presumably, of arbitration when there is no agreement; and the third one is by expropriation, if expropriation is necessary.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

I should like the minister to comment on the timetable that is involved. How long are the negotiations to continue before it is decided it is not worth proceeding any farther, and that the matter should go to arbitration or that the expropriation steps under clause 10 should be taken with the decision on the value to be left to the Exchequer Court?

Obviously, the negotiations could go on for a long time. I fully share the views of the hon. members from Nova Scotia who have taken an active part in this discussion. Whatever criticisms one may have of the legislation, it is important that events get rolling as quickly as possible after the bill becomes law.

I should like some assurance from the minister that the first alternative, of negotiation and agreement, will not be permitted to drag on for many days after the bill becomes law. I said "days", though obviously negotiations could take a few weeks; but they should not be continued for many weeks after this bill becomes law. If no agreement can be reached, the corporation may quickly use the power given to it under clause 10, which still protects the company so far as compensation is concerned, although the route to the amount is a different one.

Mr. Pepin: It might same time if I were to say that I agree entirely with the approach taken by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As you know, sir, I yielded the floor to the hon. member for York South who posed some questions that I had in mind.

An hon. Member: He was thinking of you.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He was very lucky that I ceded him the floor. I remind him that all members from Nova Scotia have always taken an active part in any discussion that concerns Nova Scotia or, particularly, Cape Breton.

On page 4 of the Prime Minister's statement of December 29 I find this:

> Further work has to be done to implement this program:
> 1. Negotiations already under way for the acquisition of the mines will have to be completed with Dosco.

The Prime Minister assumed at that time, I take it, that the negotiations had to be completed before we went ahead. We find, now, that they are not complete. I wanted to ask a question along the lines of the question asked by the hon. member for York South. Suppose the corporation becomes a body corporate, and it gets down to work. How long will all this continue? The minister has not answered that question very well. How long will negotiations continue? Will they last for three months, six months, one year or two years? How long will it be before the corporation exercises the powers given to it in clause 9 under "power of acquisition"?

As has been said, there are three methods by which the corporation can exercise its power. I say that the corporation ought to go ahead. My question is, will this quibbling and bargaining go on for a long time or will the minister and the government say to the corporation: "You have gone far enough with these people; we will go in such and such a direction now."

Would the minister explain that clearly? At the same time, would he break down the value of Princess and McBean, as he has been asked to by the hon. member for Pictou. Did the figure that was given apply to both mines?

Since the corporation will control the mines, and bearing in mind the equipment that has been purchased, would the minister enlighten us—that is the correct word I think —about the future of Princess? Will it extend for the full period of 15 years, as is mentioned in the bill? Is there a good short term future for the mine? Would the minister give us information, and particularly with regard to Princess.

Mr. Pepin: In speaking on how long it will take to negotiate, I think I answered that question by reference to the hon. member for York South. He said that negotiations should not extend beyond a matter of weeks, and I agreed with his approach to the problem. Of course, it all depends on how willing the company will be to agree with the views of the corporation, and that I cannot predict.

Another big point will be the inventory of all assets of the company, and this is a colossal task.

On the subject of Princess and McBean I have already intimated that, in principle, McBean is not included in the take-over. Princess, of course, will be assessed separate from the Dominion Coal Limited mines.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I understand that McBean is not included. The minister quoted a figure which I think was given to him by Dosco. I believe it was $5,193,621. Was that the total value of the assets of McBean and Princess? Am I correct in assuming that it was? I wish to know what value is set on the Princess Colliery.

Mr. Pepin: I do not have the division between Princess and McBean. I have mentioned the cost of the two together, I do not have figures for each one of them separately. Perhaps those are in the letter that was written by Dosco; I shall find out.

May I underline that these figures were given two years ago, and that the situation has changed somewhat since then.

As to the length of time that Princess will operate, my hon. friend has asked me whether that would be 15 years and my answer is that I do not know. I know one thing: part of the equipment purchased under the $2 million authorization to the Dominion Coal Board for purchase of equipment is going to Princess. I would conclude, therefore, that Princess is one of those mines that will continue for a certain number of years. I cannot be more specific. This question is in the hands of the corporation. The corporation will introduce a plan in less than one year from now, and after that we shall have a better view of the pattern to be followed, always bearing in mind the realities of phasing in and phasing out.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister undoubtedly must have received information from the chairman of Dominion Coal Board, who has experts at his disposal. Was the minister not advised of the mine's short term future? We are talking in terms of 15 years, as laid down by this government. The government must have received assistance during the past years from experts, such as the Minister of Fisheries, about the future of coal operations at Princess.

Mr. Pepin: I do not think we should pursue the matter because I am in no position to intimate what the phasing out period will be. That is up to the corporation, and I would be prejudging the corporation's decision if I were to indicate a period.

On the subject of the Dominion Coal Board, I have received many opinions from the coal board on all these matters but I cannot recall being given specific information on exactly how long Princess could be maintained in operation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister mentioned the $5,193,621 that was involved in the Princess and McBean collieries, and he inferred that he was using figures that were two years old. Was he also using figures that were two years old when he referred to the 182,238 Dosco preferred shares that are held by 1,000 people?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Are those figures two years old?

Mr. Pepin: Just a moment, I apologize. The figures have been brought relatively up to date, up to six months ago.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): They are still out of date. I suggest that a closer look at the figures will show that some people are gathering in preferred shares of Dominion Coal with a view to making a bonanza out of them. They want to take advantage of the government's announcement that it will take over Dominion Coal. I suggest that the minister should look carefully into this situation. The minister said that approximately 1,000 shareholders hold 182,238 shares. The Dominion Coal Company at one time were asking $8 for preferred shares which emphasizes something that was said earlier this afternoon, the need for the government to negotiate this sale.

Throughout the years the other party to this business arrangement, as I suppose we can call it, has been relying upon subvention payments from the government of Canada in order to carry on its business. I suggest the government would be in a far stronger negotiating position if it carried on these discussions directly rather than through the corporation.

My own opinion as to the value of this bill may differ from the opinions of other members. However, I believe the hon. member for Pictou and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria think upon the same lines as I do. I see advantages in the first part of this legislation, but I doubt that the second part will achieve its purpose. The first part is of value because it will make money available for necessary improvements which I trust will be carried out as soon as possible.

Again, I urge the government to conduct its own negotiations with Dosco. It will then be negotiating from strength whereas in other circumstances the shareholders might be in a position to hold up this development by asking more than the shares are worth. As far as Dosco is concerned, I think it is common knowledge that the shares are worthless. Dosco has indicated a price of $1 per share for common stock and $8 for preferred stock. The other group of shareholders, those holding 182,238 shares, I believe, are setting themselves up as a separate association, more or less, for the purpose of dealing with the corporation and I would strongly suggest, as did the hon. member for York South and others, that the government ought to deal from strength in this respect. I do not really see how so few shareholders holding such bad paper can really hold out for anything worth while. I maintain there is not a single shareholder among those 1,000 or so people who could be hurt financially. Some might lose money, but if they could afford to hold on to paper such as this, whether they had just acquired it expecting to make a quick profit or whether they have held it for many years, I think the government is in a position to negotiate from strength.

Further, in connection with clause 9 I would ask the government to explain the reference in paragraph (a) which provides for an exception in the case of the railway line between Broughton Junction and Louisbourg. I ask the minister to tell us why this particular portion of the line was excluded.

Mr. Pepin: I will begin by dealing with the easiest question, first. The section of the Cumberland railway between Broughton and Louisbourg is excluded because it has no useful value or purpose in the continued operation of the coal mines. Louisbourg was formerly employed as a coal shipping port in winter when Sydney harbour was blocked by ice. It has not been used for such purposes for some years and the coal wharf at Louisburg has been removed. The rail line between Broughton and Louisbourg is in very poor condition seriously limiting train speeds for reasons of safety. If it were to be used, substantial capital would be required to rehabilitate the line. Currently only about one shipment of fish is made over the line each week. The Board of Transport Commissioners held a public hearing in Louisbourg at the end of May to consider an application for abandonment, and reserved judgment.

I have already seen the local press reports of the hearing held by the Transport Board on this matter, and, no doubt, the hon. member has also seen them. I believe he will agree with me that there is no further use for this line in connection with the coal operation, and this is why it is left out.

As to the other subject raised, gambling along with politics, is one of the oldest professions, but in this case I am told there has been only a limited amount of gambling and that most of the preferred shares are still in the hands of people who have held them for a long time. I am informed there are a considerable number of elderly people and widows among these shareholders—I do not want to bring out the sympathy of the hon. member for York South.

An hon. Member: What about the orphans?

Mr. Pepin: I am not sure how many orphans there are in this case. There are widows, though; the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made sure of that.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. McCleave: Is it because of the minister's interest in the elderly that this came about?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: No. The main reason is that some of them are from Quebec and he is practising his French. As to the negotiations, hon. members have been reminding me that the government should use all its strength to negotiate with the corporation. On reflection, they may wish to tone down that advice, because on other occasions they always caution governments against bulldozing people. I have no special sympathy for the company. At the same time, I would not like it to be said that we bulldozed the company, the preferred shareholders in particular. I think they must be given a fair chance of debating—of saying what, in their view, these assets are worth. I believe the hon. member for York South would be the last to insist that the government should use all its strength to bring a company down on its knees—especially now that he knows that among the preferred shareholders are many widows and elderly people. I think the shareholders have a right to present their case, and we are making sure of this in the legislation.

• (9:10 p.m.)

On the subject of compensatory value of the assets of the company, members should bear in mind that many of these assets have at least a sale or a scrap value. I am not saying the company might or would, but it could decide to sell the whole thing for scrap if the corporation offer is not considered fair. Then the corporation could not rationalize the mines because there would be no mines to rationalize. I think hon. members will agree that this is not as clear cut an operation as might appear in the first place. The three methods we have indicated are, in progression, three ways of undertaking the operation. They should be used as rapidly as possible so that there will not be too much delay before the corporation gets into operation.

Mr. MacEwan: The bill refers to the fact that the value of the assets shall be determined as the fair market value. If expropriation is carried out the value would be established by a judge of the exchequer court. But in the other instance who will determine the value? Will the corporation's board of directors decide what is a fair market value, or will they be assisted by the Dominion Coal Board?

I recall that we had hopes some time ago that a mine in my area would be taken over by Dosco. Perhaps now it is a good thing that it was not. However, Dosco sent in a team and made an inventory. It was quite a job. The taking over, of all Dosco mines with the exception of one is also going to be quite a job. Who will establish the fair market value of the assets of this company?

Mr. Pepin: It depends on whether acquisition of the property is made by mutual consent, by agreed arbitration or expropriation. If it is done by mutual agreement the corporation will be negotiating just as the government would have done, and will use all the services available from the government or from private advisers that it can hire. However, the corporation must follow the principles indicated, of which my hon. friend is aware.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I was touched by the minister's reference to the deep sympathy which the Minister of National Health and Welfare had for the widows and others who hold stock. I appreciate the feelings of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but by the same token I hope he has equal sympathy for elderly people and widows who are unable to qualify for the guaranteed income supplement because of what he calls not a means test but an income test, these people who are being rejected every day for that supplement.

Clause 9(a) refers to:

> all or any part of the lands and personal property located in the county of Cape Breton in the province of Nova Scotia—

Would this include properties outside the county of Cape Breton which belong to Dosco?

Mr. Pepin: I would simply say that if such property were essential for the operation of the coal mines it would stand to reason it would be purchased, but I am informed that this is probably not the case.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am thinking about holdings in Victoria county which, in the case of expropriation and so on, should be included in the actual holdings of Dosco. I am thinking about new construction that took place in recent years, but not in Cape Breton county.

Mr. Pepin: Clause 9(a) is clear in that it says it has to be property located in the county of Cape Breton.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): So, if expropriation takes place, they do not touch anything outside the county of Cape Breton?

Mr. Pepin: That is what the legislation says.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member has a point. Did the drafters of this legislation literally mean the county of Cape Breton, or did they mean the island of Cape Breton? If I remember correctly, Cape Breton has four counties. The hon. member was asking whether any holdings of the company outside the county of Cape Breton would be covered. Under the language of clause 9(a) and (b) if holdings are outside the county they are not covered by the legislation. Is that what the minister and his advisers intend?

Mr. Pepin: The Speaker would say this is a hypothetical question because to the best of our knowledge, unless the company has been hiding things, there is nothing outside Cape Breton county.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister object to a change in this clause, to cover the whole of Cape Breton island lest the corporation be hamstrung in any negotiations?

Mr. Pepin: This legislation is as flexible as the minister. Section 23(b) dealing with the industrial division states that the corporation can:

> purchase, lease or otherwise acquire any lands or interests therein on Cape Breton island and manage, improve, develop or otherwise deal with or administer the same;

Mr. Lewis: I don't think that meets the situation.

Mr. Pepin: Again, my information is that there is nothing outside Cape Breton county to acquire.

Mr. Lewis: Since the minister is so flexible, and since I am sure he has not made a thorough inventory of everything available, why shouldn't he use the same language in both clauses?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister has referred to clause 23(b) but that is in reference to the industrial development division acquiring lands for all these new industries that we hope will come there. I do not think there is anything the company is trying to hide, as the minister has sort of intimated, but if expropriation takes place there are properties in other parts of the island and construction that the people of Canada should get.

Mr. Pepin: I do not think we should pursue the point in view of the fact that our information says that there is nothing outside Cape Breton county to be acquired. However, if we find something we can introduce an amendment later. For all practical purposes, one is not necessary now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It is not a question of anybody finding something. We want to get the matter clarified. As the hon. member for Cape Breton South says, what will the corporation buy? Does the corporation know what it is going to buy and where it is located? There must be deeds to certain property. The brilliant people who are legal advisers must know what is going on. I say the company is not hiding anything, and I have no doubt about that.

If a figure for expropriation purposes has been set beforehand, then certainly the people of Canada, whose money will be used to purchase these holdings, should get anything and everything that is available.

Mr. Pepin: If the property in Cape Breton county is immovable, then that is what we want. If it is movable property, I presume that it can be moved off the island or back on to the island, depending on whether or not it is needed for coal operations. So, I really fail to see any problem there.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Perhaps the minister might care to turn round and ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether or not Dosco has any interest in leases of coal property in Inverness county. The situation here is left pretty flexible with regard to what the government is going to acquire. I should have thought the minister would have come into the committee fully prepared to answer such questions.

I remember not too long ago the Minister of National Defence trying to sell some 20 year old cable to some people who had discovered it where it was abandoned after the war. The reply of the minister at that time was: "Tell me where it is and we will sell it to them". That is the way the government operates on many occasions. We have had a government that would sell somebody something provided the purchaser told them where to find it. We now have a government that wants to sell something but they do not know where it is.

I suspect the minister is being sympathetic toward Dosco, especially to the widows to whom reference was made. This is the first information I have been given about the Minister of National Health and Welfare being a man killer. Reference was made to widows holding shares. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, if there are any widows holding shares in Dosco, they have been holding what is considered by many as bad paper, and I suggest they can well afford to hold them. After all, there are such things as rich widows.

I suggest to the minister that he should be prepared to table a list of the shareholders of Dosco showing the individual equities in Dosco stock prior to the policy statement of the Prime Minister when the shares were worth $5 apiece on the market, as well as the list of the present shareholders and the individual equities when the shares are worth $12. This is an increase of $7 as a result of the policy statement made by this government.

When paper that has been considered worthless on the market for years suddenly jumps $7 in value after a policy statement made by the government, do not think somebody has not been playing around. The minister said that he listed about a thousand stockholders six months ago. I would ask the minister to be prepared to produce a list of stockholders showing their individual equities so that we can see whether there are still a thousand of them, or whether there is a smaller group gathering in these shares in order to make a killing. Shares do not jump from $5 to $12, following a policy statement by the government, unless some people are actively collecting them in the hope of doubling their money.

When the minister does this, he might also list the number of poor widows who are holding Dosco preferred shares. I would be very much surprised if he came up with one name.

I think I will let this particular matter go until we get an answer from the minister as to whether or not he is prepared to do this.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, in respect of Dosco property in Cape Breton I am informed that a crew of experts from Burchell, Sullivan and Company, of Sydney have been conducting an inventory, which extended over two months, but they have not found anything outside Cape Breton county belonging to the corporation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I make the observation that Mr. Sullivan could not find enough votes, either, outside Cape Breton county.

Mr. Pepin: I do not know these Liberal people. With regard to the second point, I will try to get a list of preferred shareholders and I will table it later on, if I get permission.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, not only in the last few minutes but one or two rounds ago, provide the basis for some of the observations that I want to make about the terms of clauses 9 and 10, if I may take them together.

The minister is asking for expropriation powers for certain purposes. When he is asked about the intent that lies behind these expropriation powers he is not able to answer with any precision. I can understand that, because even if he were to know how long a period of time the corporation were prepared to negotiate, and negotiate in vain, before exercising its expropriation powers, he would be unwise to declare any specific time period because this would tend to detract from the genuineness of the negotiation process.

However, Mr. Chairman, more and more people are becoming concerned about the inconsistency with which different departments of this government, as well as the different levels of government in this country, exercise the basic power of expropriation of private property. The Department of National Defence has been known in the past to file plans of expropriation right off the bat without making any pretence whatsoever of negotiation with individual property holders. This was the case with regard to the acquisition of property adjacent to national defence property at Val Cartier, the defence establishment there.

The province of Manitoba has, on previous occasions, filed plans of expropriation without making any effort to negotiate first with the owners of private property.

I must admit to some confusion about why the government is asking specifically for the power of expropriation in this bill. In any case, we are given to understand by the minister that the exercise of the power of expropriation granted in the bill will be held back until the expiration of a certain period of time, a period of time which is indefinite and which of necessity must remain indefinite as far as we here are concerned. Until such time period has elapsed, the corporation will not exercise this power.

The question then arises, why should one department of the federal government have a certain fixed policy with regard to expropriation practices while another department has a quite different policy? The question begins to arise in many persons' minds that it seems to matter to a considerable extent just who is involved when it comes to governments and crown corporations exercising the power of expropriation. I feel that that observation should be made, and I hope that not only the minister in charge of the bill but all of his colleagues will bear in mind that we need greater consistency in policy on the part of the government.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, despite what the minister has said, I want to refer once again to clause 9, paragraph (a) of which refers to all or any part of the lands and personal property located in the county of Cape Breton in the province of Nova Scotia, and paragraph (b) of which refers to all interests of the companies in lands and all personal property located under waters adjacent to the said county of Cape Breton.

I stand subject to correction because I may be wrong, and that is quite an admission because I know certain members of the house would never make a statement like that, but I have a feeling that there are holdings outside of Cape Breton county. As a result, I should like to move:

That clause 9, paragraphs (a) and (b) be amended by replacing the word "county" with the word "island".

This will mean the clause will refer to all or any part of the lands and personal property located on the island of Cape Breton, and all the interests of the companies in lands and all personal property located under waters adjacent to the said island of Cape Breton.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Mr. Pepin: I do not like to hear the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria depreciating himself the way he was doing a moment ago. In order to cheer him up, we are going to accept his amendment. I should indicate that the same words are to be found in other clauses which will have to be similarly amended. Obviously, he has some information he wants to keep secret, so we will just have to accept his word and the amendment.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I asked earlier about that section of line between Broughton Junction and Louisbourg, and whether the government was prejudging a dispute now before the supreme court involving off-shore mineral rights, as was suspected in relation to a hearing before the board of transport commissioners. Will the corporation in fact be buying something to which the government now lays claim in the courts?

Mr. Pepin: Clause 9(b) in respect of the property under waters adjacent to the said island is included as a precautionary measure. There is nothing mysterious about it. Everybody is aware of the dispute between the governments of Canada and Nova Scotia, and we want to be very specific as to what is being acquired without prejudging the decision or the opinion of the court.

Clause 9 as amended agreed to.

Clauses 10 and 11 agreed to.

On Clause 12—Establishment or determination of amount of consideration or compensation.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister about the subventions referred to on page two of the agreement between Canada and the province of Nova Scotia as set out in order in council P.C. 1966-54 of May 23, 1966. I should like to be very clear that these subventions as set out, namely $10.50 for coal delivered to points in Ontario and Quebec and $8.50 for coal delivered in the Atlantic area, will still be continued so far as the McBean mine is concerned. Is the minister in a position to give a general list of the equipment which has or will be purchased by the Dominion Coal Board and leased to Dosco? Having regard to clause 12(3), can the minister give some details about the agreement dated March 14, 1950 between the Dominion Coal Company and His Majesty the King in the right of Canada? Perhaps we could have some details as to whether this refers to loans which have been obtained by Dosco under the Coal Production Assistance Act. I hope the minister will attempt to answer these questions in his reply.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Mr. Pepin: Those are three good questions. The first has to do with the order in council referred to in the agreement between Canada and Cape Breton. I might indicate that there was a mistake in the agreement. The order in council is actually P.C. 1966—541. To be more specific, we should also have said in the agreement that the provision related not only to that particular order in council but to previous ones as well. I am writing to Premier Stanfield to explain this error and obtain a de facto amendment to the agreement.

In respect of the application of subventions to the McBean mine, I already indicated that we have offered continuation of subventions to Dosco at the level at which they are now. I do not know what we will do if Dosco does not accept this offer.

As to the coal mining equipment purchased by the Dominion Coal Board for Dosco, that equipment is going to be on loan to Dosco until the corporation takes over. I have a list here and this is what I think the hon. member would like to have. I do not know whether I can pronounce all these names in English, but I shall try. The list includes scraper chain conveyors, valued at about $7,000; hydraulic hose, $3,000, a centrifugal pump and motor conveyor pans and chains, tee pressure connectors, rubber pressure hose, ramp plates and transformers, a front end loader valued at $18,000, a vibratory feed, mine cars valued at $494,000.

The list also contains a cyclone, a varitrough conveyor, conveyor belting, screens and motors, a monorail and bogies, spill plates and cover plates, and so on. I will let my hon. friend have this list.

Mr. MacEwan: May I ask the minister whether the mine cars have been ordered as yet?

Mr. Pepin: Yes. At one point I was told that it might take three or four months to get this equipment, and perhaps even longer. The chairman of the coal board wrote me a few days ago stating that some of this equipment was already being received by the company, so it is being delivered faster than anticipated. This is another reason of the fact we wish to proceed as rapidly as possible. We have already purchased some of the equipment that was necessary to keep the mines going for a longer period of time.

The third question concerned the loan made in the past to Dosco by the Dominion Coal Board. On this subject, I would refer my hon. friend to question 2504. The answer to this question will be found in Hansard. It gives complete, detailed information on this loan. The answer indicates that the balance, including interest, up to December 31, 1966, still owing to the government of Canada is in the amount of $4,993,084.42. I am quite sure that if my hon. friend would refer to question 2,504 he would obtain full information in this regard.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, we passed by clause 10 and are on clause 12. There is another matter on which I should like clarification. I assume from the statement of the minister that henceforth in this bill all the clauses referring to Cape Breton county will deal with Cape Breton Island. Is this correct?

Mr. Knowles: Do we not have to make this amendment in committee? I would suggest that since the minister intended to make this amendment, we might revert to clause 10, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, the county of Cape Breton is mentioned twice in clause 10; one is in line 28 and the other in line 33. If hon. members would like to make all the changes in one shot, this is quite agreeable to me. There is also mention of the county of Cape Breton in clause 35, line 36.

Mr. Knowles: You cannot do that.

Mr. Pepin: The expert on procedure says we cannot do that.

Mr. Knowles: I do not think the chairman would allow you to do it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I do not agree. This would be the best way to expedite the necessary amendment.

The Chairman: I suggest to the committee that we should conclude the discussion on clause 12. When clause 12 is carried the committee could revert to clause 10 in order to make the necessary amendment.

Mr. MacEwan: I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. I asked the minister whether he could tell me if the new coal cars had been ordered. If he can, has he received this information from the coal board; and if so, from what company have they been ordered?

Mr. Pepin: I have before me a list of items that have been ordered. I am informed that the coal cars have been ordered from Hawker Siddeley.

Mr. MacEwan: Trenton works?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Clause 12 agreed to.

The Chairman: We will now revert to clause 10.

On clause 10—Deposit of plan and registration of inventory.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, following the discussion of a few minutes ago, with respect to clause 10 (1) (c), line 28, and paragraph (d), line 33, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton South:

That the word "county" be substituted by the word "island".

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 as amended carry?

Clause 10 as amended agreed to.

Clauses 13 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 16—Powers.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether now is the appropriate time to raise this matter, but in the powers allocated to the crown corporation I see nothing about the resale of any property that may be taken over other than, of course, the resale of the coal itself. I wonder whether we might not include a provision in this clause covering the resale of any property taken over by the crown corporation in respect of Dominion Coal.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member be more specific with regard to what he has in mind? I am sorry, but I did not follow him too clearly.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Some of the questions I have asked have not received a very satisfactory answer, but in order to be more specific I would ask the minister why the government hired the firm of Sullivan and Burchill to find out these things, if he wants me to give him the answer?

Mr. Pepin: The corporation has as wide and as flexible powers as possible. If there is a need for reselling, it is in clause 23. I understand this is on the industrial development side. Paragraph (c) provides:

—sell or otherwise dispose of any lands or interests therein acquired by it for such consideration—

And so on.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): That is in respect of acquiring. I realize that in the clause dealing with the industrial development division there are provisions for resale. I am concerned with any authority that may be given the coal division in respect of resale. I take it that other than the selling of the coal they have no powers for selling, and any properties acquired by the coal division will be passed over to the development division for resale. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. Pepin: If it is not there, it is included in clause 16 paragraph (d), which provides as follows:

—do all such other things as the corporation deems incidental or conducive to the attainment of its objects in relation to the coal division.

That is wide enough to cover anything that anybody may have in mind.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I cannot interpret that as authority to sell.

Mr. Pepin: "Do all such other things" can be to sell. The officials sitting in front of me are intrigued about what my hon. friend has in mind. Does he mean that the corporation should have the right to sell some of the mines?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): No. I am referring to the authority given the industrial development division and the powers given it for buying and reselling the assets.

But I see nothing here giving power to the coal division to sell any property which they may acquire in the take-over, other than the coal itself.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, if I may elaborate upon what I and the hon. member for Cape Breton South have in mind, the government is in the process of putting millions of dollars into the purchase of new equipment. In the process of phasing out, some of these mines may disappear in a short period of time and we hope other employment will be found for the miners, but what will happen to the hoisting engines, haulage cables and cutting machines worth thousands and thousands of dollars? What body will handle this equipment? Will it be the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation? Will they get as much money out of this as they can by the resale of this equipment. I trust it will be advertised properly and sold on tenders.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Mr. Pepin: So far as the sale of a mine is concerned, it is not intended that the corporation should pass on its responsibility to someone else. It is there to operate the mines and to rationalize them.

So far as property is concerned, the corporation has the same powers as has any other corporation to advertise and sell to the highest bidder what is no longer useful to it.

Mr. Lewis: I think perhaps clause 34 (2) may be applicable.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Without being specific as to the properties or holdings which, as I indicated, we will be watching with interest, the minister apparently is not aware that each and every day of the operations of the coal mines some equipment becomes either obsolete or is scrapped. There is a considerable amount of money involved in this. Is this equipment to be disposed of by the coal division or by the industrial development division, and what processes will be followed? Will it be passed over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for disposal or is the coal division to be authorized to resell the equipment?

Mr. Pepin: Clause 34 specifically says:

The Surplus Crown Assets Act does not apply to the Corporation or to the property of the Corporation.

As to whether the coal or the industrial development division will be authorized to sell the equipment, I do not think this is particularly important so long as the corporation itself has this responsibility and takes the full responsibility for the way it is done.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I think some importance should be attached to the procedure in the event that the coal division is given the authority to sell obsolete equipment. Since they administer their own bonds, at least we would be sure that money from any resale would be channelled into the coal division in order to maintain and continue operations of any one line.

Mr. Pepin: I agree.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): By agreeing, does the minister mean he will give the coal division authority for resale?

Mr. Pepin: That's right. If the coal division of the crown corporation has the responsibility to operate the mines, it would also have the responsibility to dispose of equipment which is no longer necessary in the operation of the mines.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Can I quote the minister from Hansard in the future?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have just one short question, Mr. Chairman. Do I take it that when these goods are disposed of in the manner described by the minister the public of Canada will receive an itemized list of them, and the names of those who receive those goods will also be advertised as well as how much was paid for them?

Mr. Pepin: I would assume that indeed. They should be sold by public tender and the highest bidder would get whatever is on sale.

Mr. McCleave: I wonder if the minister's legal advisers would look again at clause 16 of the bill with regard to the powers of the coal division and clause 23 with regard to the powers of the industrial development division? Could the minister tell us whether he is satisfied that these two put together would give the corporation an opportunity to develop new seams of coal which so far have been untouched by Dosco. After looking at clause 16, I doubt whether that power is given, and the power in clause 23 seems to be too general to permit that. If the minister can say that his legal advisers suggest that this power does exist, then perhaps I will be satisfied.

Mr. Pepin: The answer is covered by paragraph (b) apparently, but what is even more important is the fact that we are making $25 million available for rehabilitation and modernization of the mines. It is known that the $25 million is made up of two parts, one being $15 million for the rehabilitation of some of the mines, and the other being $10 million to fulfil the commitment of the government that a mine might be opened at Lingan. However, as I said before, it is left to the corporation to decide what is in the best interest of the coal operation and of the people in the area. So, I think the best assurance that all hon. members can have that a mine might be opened at Lingan, if it is found to be in the interests of the corporation and of the people in the area, is the fact that we are making money available for that purpose.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the minister for his answer but I do not think paragraph (b) covers the point which he made with relation to the Lingan coal seam. It is not a coal mine as yet, and I think if he added the words "or seams" after "coal mines" this would make it crystal clear that the corporation had the power given to it by parliament to take over the Lingan seam.

I do not think that this power is inherent in the words of this clause.

Mr. Pepin: I am informed that the addition of these words is unnecessary. The power to operate these mines includes the power to open a new mine.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister indicated that the $25 million allotted has been broken down in accordance with the policy statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on October 5, 1965 in Halifax. However, I see no reference whatsoever to any such breakdown in the legislation. The bill does mention the 25 million, and we are thankful for that, but there is no reference to what the minister said about the $10 million for the opening of the new seam.

Mr. Pepin: But there is reference to the $25 million.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am shocked at the attitude of the minister on this point. He said several times that a new mine "might be opened". This is not what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said so many times in his policy statement on October 5. He said, prior to the federal election, that the Lingan mine will be opened. I mentioned this in the house last Thursday and I directed my remarks at both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I will quote what I said then. I was reading what the Liberal candidate had said. My statement appears at page 1572 of Hansard of June 15. I said:

> All the advertising by Liberal candidates in the election campaign of 1965 said it was a fait accompli. They said: We have a new mine at Lingan. We have told you this, and our minister has said so. Therefore we are looking forward to a new mine.

At that point the Minister of National Health and Welfare nodded his head, which was not recorded in Hansard, but I put it on the record by saying:

> The minister nods his head. I am so pleased at that indication that there will be a new mine at Lingan. I thank the minister very much for that indication, because we have been quite worried about the matter for some time. There is now no need to deal further with the question because we will have a new mine at Lingan.

So I am rather surprised that the minister uses the word "might". Does the minister agree with the Minister of National Health and Welfare that a new coal mine will be opened in Lingan in the Glace Bay area by the Cape Breton Development Corporation upon its establishment?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: I agree; there is provision in the bill for that eventuality. Clause 19(b) refers to:

> —the aggregate twenty-five million dollars, for the purposes of reorganizing and rehabilitating the coal mining and related works and undertakings refered to in section 15 and for preparatory work in connection with the conduct by the Corporation of coal mining and related operations.

The money is available and we must leave it to the expertise of the corporation to decide on how best to spend it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I do not know why that should be left to the expertise of the coal board because the expertise of the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been involved in this matter for many months. For many months, I and other members from Cape Breton have questioned the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but Mr. Speaker ruled many of our questions out of order. Nevertheless, on another occasion the Minister of Transport reaffirmed that the policy would be put into effect as stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare as of November 5, 1965, which was that a new coal mine would be opened in the Lingan area of Glace Bay.

Mr. Pepin: I can only say that politicians are supposed to fulfil their promises, and when they cannot fulfil all their promises the best they can do is to make money available for the fulfilment of those promises provided they are found to be in the best interests of the population. That is what we have in mind.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I appreciate what the minister said about keeping promises. If the government comes as close to keeping other promises as it has to keeping this promise the country would be better off. I ask the minister too desist from using the word "might". For a minister of the crown to use the word "might" leaves an implication, which the development corporation will take up, that the government is saying more or less: "This is something that can be done but we do not want to do it."

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

I ask the minister to remember the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, as well as other ministers, and to stop using the word "might" and to get down to business.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: May I suggest an amendment to clause 16(b) which would make crystal clear what the minister and others were talking about a few minutes ago? After the word "improve" could we not add the word "open" so that the paragraph would read:

> —rehabiliate, improve, open, operate and maintain any coal mines—

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: Would the minister not agree to that simple amendment?

Mr. Churchill: Think about it over night.

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member for Halifax finds this absolutely necessary, I have no objection. But the corporation will still have to decide what has to be done in rehabilitating, improving, opening, operating and maintaining any coal mines.

By the way, would hon. members be kind enough to allow us to go on and finish the bill, as apparently it would be quite difficult to bring it back into the house. Everybody agrees that it is not desirable to delay passage.

Mr. Lewis: I wish I could accommodate the minister. I do not know what difficulties there are in bringing the bill back. One or two other clauses will require considerable study and that would make this session very late. I see no reason, unless I can be shown one, for not continuing for one hour or two, say, tomorrow.

I do not know what the leader of the house has in mind for tomorrow. I am not being dogmatic, yet. I want to be shown why this committee should sit until 11.30 p.m. or twelve o'clock to complete this bill, assuming we can complete it by then, at this point in the new session. Unless somebody persuades me to the contrary I, for one, would not agree to it.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Pepin: One of the reasons is that I am hoping to go to the Canada-United States ministerial committee meetings in Montreal on Thursday, and I would like to see this completed, first.

Mr. Lewis: As far as we in this group are concerned, unless the leader of the house has other plans it can be done tomorrow.

Mr. Pepin: My estimates are on the agenda tomorrow; I was just trying to give hon. members more time in which to reprimand me in connection with those estimates.

Mr. Churchill: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: May I ask the leader of the house what the business is to be tomorrow? Will we carry on with our consideration of this bill or will we move to some other business?

Mr. MacEachen: The business for tomorrow was announced on Thursday in an effort to keep the house advised as far in advance as possible. There will be no change in the business tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: Could we not be told the business for tomorrow instead of having to look back to Thursday's Hansard?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

BIRTH CONTROL—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): On June 9 I asked whether the government would be prepared to give a definite assurance in this house that legislation would be introduced this session to legalize birth control in Canada. I am well aware, as I was when I asked that question, that government spokesmen have made speeches here and there to the effect that birth control will be legalized some time this year. But I would very much like the government to stop playing this cat and mouse game with hon. members and with the public, and let us know definitely here in the house when action is to be taken.

There should be no further need for cat and mouse tactics. Last December, after a long and careful study, the standing committee on health and welfare recommended that birth control be made legal, that it should no longer be an offence under the Criminal Code. The Committee recommended also that regulations should be introduced under the Food and Drugs Act concerning the distribution and advertising of contraceptives and that henceforth in Canada birth control should be left to the individual conscience.

In other words, individuals who believed in getting information and birth control devices should have the right to do so without it being considered a crime. Those people who, because of religion or conscience or anything of that type, did not believe in such things should not have any information or devices forced upon them. It is very significant, Mr. Speaker, that throughout the long sessions of the health and welfare committee only one organization, a smaller church body, wanted to keep the Criminal Code the way it is.

It is not my purpose at the moment to debate the pros and cons of birth control. That has already been done. My purpose is to ask assurance that legislation to give effect to our committee recommendation, and to legalize birth control, will be brought in this session. I want the assurance of the government to that effect, and I want it for two or three reasons.

I think it is very important that we lose no time in getting rid of a bad law. We were assured by delegation after delegation from different bodies who appeared before the committee that this is a bad law on the statute books, a law which cannot be enforced. It is a poor thing to keep a law of this type on the statute books because it breeds disrespect and disrepute for the law.

The Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops was one of the bodies which strongly urged that the legislation in its present form be removed from the Criminal Code.

In the second place, I would very much like to see us without fear in this centennial year move Canada at least into the twentieth century, along with a lot of other countries, in this matter of the legalization of birth control. On June 9, when I raised this question, I mentioned that France had been the most recent country to announce it was moving forward to legalize birth control. France is worried about a falling birth rate.

Our own birth rate in Canada has been falling somewhat, although I do not believe to such a degree that it is worrying anybody. However, in France they are concerned about it but they are not hoping to maintain the birth rate by keeping birth control illegal. They are taking a much wiser course. They are beginning to think that by encouraging subsidized housing for married couples and by other measures they can increase the birth rate to the level which they want.

I think it is high time in this country that we wiped out the hypocritical attitude we have had toward birth control. It is a peculiar thing when you find a great big municipality like Scarborough has been put in the position of illegally operating a birth control clinic for some time now, and that every minister, every priest and every physician who made birth control information available with respect to the handling of contraceptives has been guilty of an illegal act. I, for one, would like to make sure that the government without fail is going to introduce legislation of this type this session, and will announce so here in this house which is the proper place.

I see no reason why the minister should get up and say it is going to be announced in due course. Everybody outside has been told it is coming in this session. I would like to ask the minister, please make this announcement in the house so that we will know once and for all, and so that the Canadian people will realize this thing is going to be introduced as definite legislation this year.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. lady's observations of a philosophical, statistical and sociological nature on this very important subject. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already made references to this particular subject and the hon. lady has raised no new question that would require an addition to his comments at the present time.

Mr. Knowles: Can't you just say yes?

TRADE—REPORTED LACK OF DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL SPEAKING JAPANESE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on April 4, on the adjournment hour debate, I raised a question about lack of diplomatic representation around the Pacific rim. The parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs felt that I was a bit off base because he said the real question that I was asking had to do with trade. He obviously had not done his homework because he did not know what trade representatives we had, but later on, taking a chance anyway, he said:

> We have a farflung trade commissioner service and I do not doubt that we are represented in those posts.

At that time the hon. member for Red Deer pointed out to him that we were not even represented by trade commissioners in these posts. I was interested to read a few days ago that in the parliamentary committee on finance, trade and economic affairs a most startling answer was given in reply to some perceptive questioning by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. From this answer we learned that there is no officer of Japanese extraction in the division for trade promotion; that trade officers in Tokyo have only an imperfect command of the simpler terms in spoken Japanese; that the department had thought of offering a limited course in the Japanese language, but because it would take two years of constant study to make a person fluent this was regarded as too expensive.

The only cheerful note struck in this questioning was that the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs had done some homework since my question of April 4, and he is quoted as saying that the trade department of his own government is missing a great opportunity in not employing the mosaic nature of the Canadian community. He said that it was bizarre that Canada lacks a single Japanese speaking trade commissioner.

I can imagine his concern to learn so shortly after my question on April 4 that not only did we have no trade commissioner in that area, but our chances of sending anyone knowledgeable in the Korean or Chinese languages or the languages of Thailand would be very slender indeed if we were unable to send anyone to a trading nation so important to us as Japan, a country which has been so important to us for a long time now, who was familiar with the Japanese language.

That is why I asked the minister the other day whether there would be a recruiting campaign or any crash program of language instruction designed to fill this very important gap. I cannot accept the defeatist attitude of the department that two years of constant study is required to make a person fluent in Japanese. In other words, that the department would have to start from scratch now.

More than one university in Canada conducts courses in the Japanese language. The University of British Columbia has been offering courses in the Japanese language since 1956. This I know because I was a member of the first class to study Japanese at the University of British Columbia. There were 14 in that class, and classes have been held since then. Admittedly not everyone in the class would be fluent in the language, but they would at least have a groundwork.

If the department conducted a recruiting campaign in places such as universities or among the Japanese-Canadian community, it might not be at all necessary to initiate a special language course. But even if this were the case, Mr. Speaker, we would not have to start from scratch; we would be able to find applicants who would at least have the basics of the language.

We in British Columbia and in the west of Canada are extremely concerned, and have been for a long time, about the whole question of trade promotion and trade commissioners in the Pacific rim. We welcomed the announcement of the Prime Minister the other day that very shortly an ambassador to Korea would be appointed. This is something to which we have looked forward for a long time. We in British Columbia hope that many of the departments of the federal government will live up to the statement that is often made by various representatives of the government, namely that the federal government is vitally concerned in the Pacific rim.

It is so concerned, in fact, that the government of British Columbia is advised not to go out on its own in the Pacific rim to establish relations, but to leave this up to the central government. However, we run across the sort of evidence which was brought out in the committee the other day, and we are seriously concerned whether the government can live up to its announced expectations in this area.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the suggested answer by the Department of Trade and Commerce repeats the argument that linguists consider a two year training period to be minimal in achieving a reasonable degree of fluency in this very difficult language. Departmental assignments abroad are rotational and it has been the view that a two year training period is too costly in terms of its proportion of an officer's career to be realistic when the posting time in Japan is two and a half years. Of course, entrance to the department is open to Canadians of Japanese origin and Canadians who speak Japanese, so I would think that those who felt they would like to take up this work would have a very good chance of being accepted.

The department does, of course, have local nationals on strength to translate and interpret, and it employs two commercial officers in its Tokyo office who are fluent in Japanese. These are in addition to its clerical and stenographic staff. Because of the high proportion of Japanese businessmen who are fluent in the English language, the department has encountered no real difficulty in conducting its business in Japan.

Personally I think the suggestion made by the hon. member that a special contest or drive should take place is a good one, and I will pass it on personally to the minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 20, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CHAIRMAN, WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to draw your attention and the attention of the house to the presence in the gallery of Dr. Franklin Fry, Chairman of the World Council of Churches, and the titular head of the Lutheran Church in North America.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

UNITED NATIONS

OUTER SPACE—INDICATION OF INTENTION TO RATIFY TREATY

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to inform hon. members that it is the intention of Canada to ratify, as soon as possible, the treaty on principles governing activities of states in the exploration and use of outer space including the moon and other celestial bodies. Order in council authorization for such ratification is being sought, as the house standing committee on external affairs was informed last Thursday.

Perhaps I should first of all say a word or two about the reason why ratification by Canada of this treaty is a matter of some urgency. This is because the three depositary countries, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Soviet union are themselves in the process of ratifying the treaty in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures.

It is expected that, following the precedents which were established for the limited nuclear test ban agreement in 1963, the three governments will soon agree on the date upon which each will deposit its instrument of ratification with the other two, as prescribed in the treaty, thereby bringing it into force. Once this has happened other countries will be able to deposit their own instruments of ratification with any or all of the three depositary nations, and thus bring the treaty into effect for themselves.

Canada, as a member of the 28 state United Nations outer space committee, played an active part in the negotiations which culminated in the adoption of the text of the treaty. Since Canada was one of the first countries to sign the treaty, on January 27, 1967, it would serve to emphasize the importance which we attach to it if Canada were also to be among the first countries to ratify it.

This treaty, three copies of which I am now tabling in English and in French, is intended to ensure that outer space, the moon and other celestial bodies will be explored and used only for peaceful purposes and that there can be no national appropriation of such bodies. Of particular significance in this respect are those provisions which state that parties to the treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the earth any body carrying nuclear weapons or any other weapons of mass destruction, instal such weapons in celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space. The establishment of military bases, installations and fortifications, the testing of any type of weapons and the conduct of military manoeuvres on celestial bodies are also forbidden. These terms incorporate the main ideas expressed in the 1963 United Nations resolution on outer space and represent a significant step forward in the achievement of multilateral arms control arrangements.

The treaty emphasizes freedom of scientific investigation on celestial bodies and in outer space. It also stresses co-operation among states, both in avoiding the contamination of outer space and in the dissemination of information on conditions which might cause harm to the health or affect the safety of astronauts. In order further to promote such international co-operation, states party to the treaty are to consider, on the basis of equality, requests from other parties to build tracking facilities on their territory for observing the flight of space objects which the requesting nation has launched. The treaty stipulates that if the request is considered favourably all the necessary terms and conditions are to be arranged by negotiations. Should these terms and conditions prove unacceptable to the host nations, however, there is no obligation to grant the facilities requested.

In conclusion, I should also point out that the treaty does not, by its terms, require any legislative action on the part of those countries which become parties to it. It is, rather, a significant forward step in the codification and formalization of principles of international law, many of which were earlier set out in the 1963 United Nations resolution on outer space. It is because of this country's active role in the space field and in the international legal sphere, and because of the importance of the treaty for the development of the rule of law in outer space, that it would be particularly appropriate for Canada, by ratification, to be among the first countries that formally accept the principles which the treaty enshrines.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a forward step internationally. I recall, back in January 1958 I believe it was, speaking to the Canadian Bar Association on the subject of the need for an international control agreement in respect of outer space. The intervening years have not seen much progress in this direction. However, this forward step is beclouded by the fact that within the last few days communist China has been able to explode a nuclear bomb. Communist China is not a member of this organization, being outside the pale internationally. This underlines the necessity of controlling outer space against its potential use for war purposes; this is emphasized by what has taken place. It also underlines the need to ensure that communist China shall be in a position in which it will be subject to the control which civilized men and women everywhere desire over this powerful deterrent, having both hope and fear for mankind in the possibility of improper use, or use for warlike purposes.

Mr. Speaker, this treaty for the control of Mr. Speaker, this treaty for the control of armaments in outer space is a great forward step for the human race. I am very glad Canada is to be one of the first nations to attach its signature to it. However, the fact still remains that the republic of mainland China is not only not a signatory of the non-proliferation treaty, but also not likely to be a signatory to this treaty.

Surely this ought to point out the need for Canada along with other peace loving countries to use all the influence it can to bring mainland China into the community of nations, and to attempt to seat her in the United Nations so she can become a part of the world community and be persuaded of the necessity, first of signing the non-proliferation treaty and also the treaty in respect of the control of arms in outer space. I think the governments concerned are to be congratulated in that we have taken the first step toward reducing the possibility of a conflict in outer space, and I hope they will now apply themselves with equal diligence to get peace on earth.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, the statement the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) has just made on the ratification of an outer space treaty truly proves that men are spurred on by science. I trust the ratification of this treaty will be conducive to better results with regard to the control of nuclear arms on earth. I am proud and I think we should all be proud, of the part Canada wants to play in such control.

Although the minister smiled repeatedly during his statement, we have every reason to consider the matter as most serious, since a power on this earth—that is on the planet earth—has already started drainage works on the moon, even though it is said there is no moisture up there. The fact that the countries plan to solve space problems is a serious factor and Canada, in being one of the first to ratify the treaty, prove its interest in world affairs and its willingness to move ahead.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit party I join with those who have already expressed their commendation of the government on the fact that Canada has been one of the first to sign this international agreement for the control of nuclear armaments in outer space, including celestial bodies. We can only hope that this is the beginning of a more realistic approach to control in the over-all area of nuclear arms, and likewise to the lack of control we observed in the Middle East in recent weeks, which led to the conflagration there. We are gratified, along with other members of the house, that this small measure of progress has been made and that Canada has been able to take her share in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give leave to the hon. minister to table the documents to which he referred?

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour goes on with the next item of business perhaps the house would agree to having the treaty just referred to by the Minister of National Defence printed in Votes and Proceedings. This would be very useful to hon. members and other individuals who receive copies of Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Hellyer: That is quite agreeable, Mr. Speaker, if that is the will of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of treaty, see Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

UNITED NATIONS

SPEECH OF PREMIER KOSYGIN OF THE U.S.S.R. BEFORE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Premier Kosygin of the U.S.S.R. stated in the course of his speech before the general assembly of the United Nations that his country condemns imperialism and is opposed to anything in the nature of colonialism; he demanded the right of self-determination for nations all over the world. Will the Prime Minister consider having the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he speaks at the United Nations tomorrow call upon the U.S.S.R., in the interests of world peace, to carry out those principles and make available the right of self-determination by untrammelled vote to the peoples of Ukraine, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania and the other countries that today are under the iron heel of communism?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad indeed to discuss this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is speaking on Thursday morning in the debate that is now going on in New York. This will give him ample time to consider the matter.

Mr. Starr: If he says this, at least he will be saying something worth while.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

UNION REQUEST THAT MCBEAN MINE BE INCLUDED IN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he has received a telegram from the officers of district 26 of the United Mine Workers in Glace Bay regarding Bill C-135 which is now before the committee of the whole, in which they contend that the Prime Minister's statement of December 29, 1966, committed the federal government to acquiring and operating all the mines owned by Dominion Steel and Coal Company, and contending also that this includes the McBean mine which is operated by Acadia, a subsidiary of Dominion Steel and Coal Company. I ask the Prime Minister whether any consideration has been given to including the McBean mine in the legislation, as requested by local 26 of the United Mine Workers.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I received the telegram only at 2.15 this afternoon I have not yet had much time to consider it. But I will consider it at once.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he would be agreeable to allowing Bill C-135 to stay in committee of the whole until such time as either he or some of his colleagues in the cabinet could meet with the mine workers to discuss this question of including the McBean mine in the bill.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this bill will be in committee of the whole until I have had a chance to examine the telegram and, I hope, reply to it.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, following the question just put by the leader of the New Democratic party. My question is based on the urgency of passing this legislation. If the government considers the legislation so urgent that they cannot wait on this question, why has the Senate adjourned?

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which is further to the question that was asked of the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I wonder whether the minister, as minister responsible, and as minister who is piloting Bill No. C-135 through the house, will give consideration to this request made by officers of the United Mine Workers of America, district 26, to hold a meeting of federal and provincial government officials and officers of the union to discuss the possibility of including in the bill the McBean mine?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think if I were to quote what I said yesterday in the house on that subject, it would certainly lead one to the conclusion that we intend to take a very generous attitude and deal humanely with the McBean mine without including it in the legislation. We cannot do that because the legislation is concerned with a situation in Cape Breton which is of national interest and concern, not one outside of Cape Breton.

Mr. MacEwan: Would the minister answer the question and say whether he is agreeable to holding the meeting which has been suggested by the U.M.W. district 26 officers?

Mr. Pepin: I think the message is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. The union would like us to include McBean in the legislation. I pointed out again yesterday the difficulties of doing this. If we start making exceptions for other mines in Nova Scotia, there is no doubt that the federal government will forever and ever be in the process of closing mines in Canada, and I do not think that this is desirable.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What exception is involved in the question of the McBean mine, which was included in the policy statement which was supposed to have been embraced by this legislation?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the same statement referred very clearly to the situation in "Cape Breton".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the statement of the Prime Minister on December 29 last committed the federal government to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether this would not include the McBean mine to which reference has been made?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure that all hon. members will recognize that we are to some extent reviving in the house a debate which is currently going on in committee of the whole. Perhaps we should proceed no further with this question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A related question to the minister of mines, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether he would correct the impression left on national T.V. last night that the Dominion Coal Company collieries are up for grabs for $5½ million?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this question should be put to the minister when we return to a consideration of the bill.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

QUEBEC—ADDITIONAL SUBSIDIES FOR PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether an agreement was concluded recently between the federal government and the Quebec government concerning additional grants for the implementation of centennial projects?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

NATURAL GAS

FURTHER INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF NEW TRANS-CANADA LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that the federal power commission in the United States has approved the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines applications, could the minister advise the house whether or not Trans-Canada will proceed to the construction of this line immediately or are there some other requirements which must be met before construction can begin so that there will be additional supplies of gas in Ontario and Quebec for the coming winter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to confirm to the hon. member and to the house that the federal power commission, in a decision issued today, has approved the Great Lakes project and consequently rejected the alternative projects which were under consideration.

While we have not yet seen the text of the decision, we understand that the conditions attached to it are normal, and we are particularly gratified to know that there was a unanimous decision with respect to the beginning of the construction. I would not be surprised if Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and the Great Lakes company started their work this afternoon.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the wording of the announcement made this morning would the minister consider that this decision was made in the interests of developing Canada, or with a view to making it a pool in reserve for the United States?

Mr. Speaker: The question is argumentative.

CONDITIONAL REFUSAL BY CHARTERED BANKS TO ISSUE FARM LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance but in his absence may I direct it to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal are refusing farm improvement loans to farmers unless they can transact all their business with those particular banks?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

TELEVISION

NAPANEE, ONT.—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF CABLE FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and I have given him notice of it. Has the minister received applications from persons in the town of Napanee and recommendations from the mayor of that town requesting departmental approval of cable television facilities and services within the corporation?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that his question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ISSUE OF MEDALLIONS TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can she advise this house and the many school children throughout the nation that, if their schools were not issued a sufficient number of centennial medallions for their total enrolment, arrangements will be made to see that no school students will be deprived of one of these medallions because of an error made by those who originally placed the order?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Records show that 6.5 million of them were ordered. They have been sent to the provincial departments of education which have been responsible for the allocation of the medallions to individual schools. If any school is short they should simply advise the provincial department of education, which will supphy them immediately, and if not we will be happy to see they get a sufficient number.

REQUEST THAT KOOTENAY RUSSIAN-CANADIAN CHOIR PERFORM IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the gallant Secretary of State. This is a matter of national significance, as it provides for the infusion of Kootenay culture into our national capital.

My question is as follows: In view of the fact that arrangements have been made for the Kootenay Russian-Canadian Choir to sing at Expo, and in order that residents of and visitors to the national capital will also have an opportunity to hear this dazzling performance, would the minister consider recommending to the centennial commission that they invite the Kootenay Russian-Canadian Choir to give their centennial concert at an appropriate time on parliament hill?

Mr. Speaker: This appears to be a very constructive and valid suggestion, but I would not think it should be asked at this time.

PENSIONS

BLIND PERSONS—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF MEANS TEST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister received representations from the Canadian Council of the Blind, not only nationally but provincially, asking for the removal of the means test in respect of blind pensioners, and would he not give consideration to the removal of this unfair test which discriminates against one portion of our people to the degree that it does?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot recall receiving such representations, although I may have in the past few weeks. I will look into the matter at once.

UNITED NATIONS

CYPRUS—CONTINUATION OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the United Nations security council voted yesterday to extend the peace keeping action in Cyprus for another period of time, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would assure the house that Canada is not committing itself to paying the cost of Canada's contribution, which is the major part of the peace keeping effort on Cyprus, for an indefinite period of time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to give the assurance that we are not committing ourselves to an indefinite period of time.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Thompson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. First of all I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not any assurance has been given that there will not be a repetition of what happened in Cairo when the United Nations took unilateral action in withdrawing the Canadian peace keeping force.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have received that assurance from the secretary general. Indeed, if we had not, we would have found it very difficult, if not impossible, to vote for the resolution yesterday. We have been assured by the secretary general that if a situation arose where the government of Cyprus asked the secretary general for the withdrawal of the United Nations force, he would submit that matter to the security council.

The situation is not the same as that which existed with regard to the United Nations emergency force in Palestine, inasmuch as the force in Cyprus is there under a security council resolution, and the security council would be asked to consider whether or not that force should be withdrawn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Middle East crisis has shown that buying time is of value only if some use is made of that time, is Canada pressing the security council to promote negotiations between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots with a view to securing a settlement which will eventually make possible the withdrawal of the United Nations force?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are doing that. We have made it quite clear to our colleagues concerned that the purpose of the force in Cyprus is to help keep the peace while political negotiations are going on. If these negotiations are postponed indefinitely, then the reason for the force being there indefinitely has been eliminated.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister who is mainly responsible for conducting these negotiations? Is it the officers of the United Nations, or has some committee or sub-committee been given the responsibility of bringing the parties together and seeking to work out a settlement?

Mr. Pearson: This has been discussed by the governments who have contributed to the United Nations force on Cyprus, and it has been discussed by the United Nations officials as well.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the United Nations emergency force has been in Cyprus now for practically four years, can the prime minister say whether the reason the force is being kept in Cyprus is the same as the original reason which sent the United Nations force to the island? If not, what is the reason?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think the original reason still exists, namely that the force is maintaining stability on the island between the two conflicting parties. However, I do agree, as I have just said, that stability cannot be maintained indefinitely by these means, and that there must soon be a political settlement as a result of which the two elements on Cyprus will co-operate in governing Cyprus.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED DELAY IN REFUNDING OVERPAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the complaints that I have received—and I am sure many other hon. members have similarly received complaints—concerning the delay in the government refunding overpayments of income tax, would the minister advise the house whether everything is being done to expedite the refunding of these overpayments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform my hon. friend that we are well ahead of last year in processing income tax returns. To May 29, which is the last information I have in my mind, we had processed something like 4.7 million returns, compared with 4.2 million returns by the same time last year. I think at this point we are getting close to the end of the processing of returns, but I have not the very latest figure before me.

HOUSING

SUDBURY, ONT.—LOANS FOR RENTAL UNIT CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the answer the minister gave me yesterday, may I ask him whether he has checked his correspondence to see if he received the letter to which I referred yesterday, written to him on June 14 by the deputy city clerk of Sudbury, a copy of which I sent to his office this morning? If so, would he now answer the question I asked yesterday?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of the letter from the hon. member this morning. On inquiry I find that the letter was sent by the deputy clerk of the city of Sudbury to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office in Sudbury, and mailed on to me here, and the clerk was so advised. I received it in the second mail delivery this morning, I believe, after I had received the copy from the hon. member.

Dealing with the specific question, Mr. Speaker, on June 1 I announced that arrangements had been made for the building of 400 rental housing units in Sudbury this year in addition to the 400 already planned. These 400 additional rental units were being built in co-operation with the Ontario Housing Corporation, Falconbridge Nickel Mining and the International Nickel Company. The rental housing constructed by Ontario Housing Corporation will of course, be housing suitable for low income families; that is the purpose of that kind of housing. The funds provided by the mining companies and Central Mortgage and Housing will provide national housing loans for the construction of 300 rental units. These will be sponsored by private investors. Both the owners of the proposed rental projects and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, however, will be anxious to ensure that the rent levels achieved for family accommodation in these projects will be suitable for the additional personnel required by the mining companies.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

FURTHER REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE PAYMENT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Minister of Justice now inform the house as to whether Mr. Landreville, formerly a justice of the supreme court of Ontario, has filed with his department a certificate of ill health so as to qualify for a $18,666 pension? If he has not, will the minister now give an assurance to the house that in all the circumstances this bountiful harvest will not be reaped?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): I do not know of any application by Mr. Landreville to the department that a pension be granted on the grounds of ill health. The answer to the second part of the question is, no, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF LOBSTER FISHING SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries. In his absence, and in the absence of his parliamentary secretary perhaps I should direct it to the Prime Minister who might give notice of it to his colleague. On June 5 I asked the minister whether in view of the late start of the fishing season in district 7B he would consider authorizing an extended season—a short extension. In his reply the minister said an announcement would be made at least ten days before the normal closing of the season. The season has now ten days to go, and many fishermen on the east coast are anxious to know whether they will be given an extension of a week or so.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand the importance of this question. I will take it up with the minister later today.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SENIOR OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): My question is for the Prime Minister. Does the right hon. gentleman expect to make the appointment of senior officers of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to positions now vacant before parliament recesses—that is, around June 30?

Mr. Knowles: You hope.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As far as I know there is only one vacancy within the C.B.C. and that is the office of executive vice president.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

TRANSPORTATION

MEETINGS IN WESTERN CANADA OF CONFERENCE ON ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can he state without equivocation whether he has made representations, or a recommendation, to the Board of Transport Commissioners asking that any general conference on branch line abandonment which the board might convene should be held in western Canada? The minister did not reply to this question yesterday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I can reply without equivocation by saying that since the Board of Transport Commissioners is a court, I have made no such representations. However, the board has advised me, as I think is proper, that they are giving consideration to requests which came from the government of Saskatchewan, from several members of this house and from a number of other interested parties, that the conference be held in western Canada.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): There was to have been a conference held in Brandon on June 22—

Mr. Pickersgill: A hearing.

Mr. Dinsdale: A hearing, yes. I can assure the minister that the citizens of Brandon would be very happy to have the conference there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is giving assurances; he is not asking a question.

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): This question, too, is directed to the Minister of Transport. For the guidance of those who may wish to prepare representations, can the minister indicate on motions, some time before July 1, whether the Atlantic transportation studies are likely to be dealt with by way of legislation in the fall?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I do not think I could possibly do that, sir.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOMBING OF YUGOSLAV EMBASSIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has any information to communicate about the bombings at the Yugoslav embassy in Ottawa and in Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree that this is not a matter of urgency, and I wonder whether he should not place it on the order paper.

[English]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR INCREASED RATE ON SECOND CLASS MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether before taking steps to increase the postal rates for the mailing of books by Canadian libraries he would consider increasing the rate on second class mail, which at present accounts for a substantial deficit.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ON CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he will be in a position to indicate to the house some time prior to any recess the intention of the government with respect to the introduction of legislation concerning Indian claims.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I cannot say more than I have said to the house on numerous occasions. I told the Indians of British Columbia that I would give them a certain amount of time to sit down with me to discuss the British Columbia land question. I have told them we cannot wait forever. I will make further inquiries of their lawyer as to the present position, and we may possibly be able to make a statement soon with respect to the introduction of the other legislation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

FURTHER INQUIRY AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF 1967 COINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in his capacity as acting Minister of Finance? A week ago yesterday I brought up the question of the poor distribution of the new centennial coins throughout Canada; in the west there is a complete lack of them, whereas in the east they seem to be in evidence, even if they are not plentiful. I wonder whether the minister has had time to look into this matter. He said at the time that distribution had not been good. There are now only ten days before July 1.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Acting Minister of Finance): I will bring this matter again to the attention of the Minister of Finance and try to have him answer the question at the first opportunity.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG, MAN.—ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING IMPROVEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to thank the Minister of Transport for his courtesy in sending me a copy of his announcement of today regarding improvements at the Winnipeg international airport? This is a welcome answer to my question of yesterday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I thank the hon. gentleman for that comment.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including the administration of the Explosives Act, and Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History, $4,315,000.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1. This vote will be found on page 78 of the blue book and the details appear on page 82.

Mr. Peters: We have been watching with interest for some time the machinations of Canada's oil and gas policy as it affects Trans-Canada Pipe Lines in particular. We are certainly not very pleased with the decision which came out of Washington through the federal power commission approving without strings the application of Great Lakes Power to transmit our gas through the United States.

It is important to note in this case the development of events over which we in Canada have no control but which in the long run may have an effect contrary to Canadian interests. I have been following these developments carefully. I do not intend to beat the subject to death, since the decision has now been made, but I am surprised at the position this government has chosen to take up. The Canadian people expect their government to act in Canada's interests. They expect we should not be a bad neighbour to the United States but that along with that we should think first and foremost of ourselves. The original statement made by the Prime Minister when this matter was first discussed early in October, 1966, was a good one, but the decisions that have been taken since have vacillated from bad to good and back to bad again.

I am particularly surprised that the minister has taken this course. One reason for my surprise is that he is a young, very capable and aggressive minister. He is a French Canadian, and in my opinion French Canadians have been more nationalistic than any other Canadians. As a matter of fact many of us did not really think about being Canadians until French Canadians raised the question of their brand of Canadianism being different from ours, thereby forcing us to examine what nationalism means in other parts of Canada.

Not many years ago the minister was going around saying that everybody in the province of Quebec should be a Quebec nationalist and that everybody employed by the national government should speak French. He advocated that we be nationalistic in a narrow sense. But all of a sudden the minister has adopted another position which eventually he will rue.

At the end of October, 1966, the minister went to the United States where he addressed the Independent Petroleum Association of America. I would like to quote from his address because in years to come people who look back on the decision taken now may find the background to it in the minister's address. On that occasion he said:

[The Chairman.]

I read with great interest the objective of your association as it appears in summary form in the 1966 directory.

"The objective of the association, with full recognition of the interests of the consuming public and the general welfare and security of the nation, shall be to conduct research studies on such matters as costs, supply and demand, foreign trade, productive capacity, and secondary recovery; to provide information on economic trends and national policies affecting oil and gas production; and to advance the welfare of the domestic petroleum industry in the United States, to the end that the nation may be assured of adequate oil and gas supplies for our expanding economy and national security."

I want to draw particular attention to the next sentence in the minister's address, having in mind that this organization was established to look after the interests of the United States regarding oil. The minister went on to say:

I am tempted to suggest that with a simple addition of "and Canada" to the words "United States", we would be all set with a good bipartite institution!

Then he went on to say:

However, we do not have to await such a development in order to allow things Canadian to receive full and sympathetic consideration with the I.P.A.A.

It is interesting to note that the releases from Washington today by the federal power commission have absolutely nothing to do with whether or not the Great Lakes project is a good project but simply with whether it is in the interests of the United States, particularly the national security of the United States. One of the press releases says that the commission's decision also touched on a significant point in respect of future Canadian natural gas and crude oil exports to the United States. It did so in referring to United States national security and the importance of safe reserves of petroleum.

In other words, it does not matter about Canada. All that matters is whether the national security of the United States is protected because they got the hell scared out of them in the Middle East during the last few weeks. Now they have decided that their national interest overrides any consideration that the federal power commission previously had been discussing. In this connection it is interesting to note that last year the minister said:

I am tempted to suggest that with a simple addition of "and Canada" to the words "United States", we would be all set with a good bipartite institution!

If that is not continentalism a la Liberal party philosophy then I am surprised.

Mr. Pepin: Is the implication of what my hon. friend is saying that we will always, systematically and unavoidably, have opposition between the United States and Canada? Are there not times when the interests of both countries could run along the same lines?

Mr. Peters: I think in the main they do, and I think they can. I am not disagreeing with that statement, but I point out that in his address last October he quoted the objective of the Independent Petroleum Association which was established to protect American markets and national security in that country. To that objective the minister would add "and Canada," which carries the implication that we are not going to worry about Canadian national security and Canadian needs but are going to throw our reserves behind the United States which will then be in a much better position to protect its national interests, and I am sure the minister will agree they are not necessarily our interests.

Mr. Pepin: If I may make one comment, I promise never to try to be humorous from now on. I was speaking to the Independent Petroleum Association of America. This association is traditionally opposed to Canadian exports to the United States. I was trying to demonstrate that the purpose of their institution could also be the purpose of Canada, and the humorous implication was better received in Dallas than it seems to have been received in this chamber this afternoon.

Mr. Peters: The minister may be right. I have read the full text of his address, and he went on to say that Norman Chappell had been trying to work out an oil policy in such a way that it would be in the interests of both parties. My position is a very simple one, and this is why I am so violently critical of the decisions of the National Energy Board. Its decisions should be designed to cater to the needs of Canada and the foreseeable requirements of Canadian markets. The fact that we are in a very serious bind with respect to gas supplies this year is an indication that the National Energy Board either failed in its duty to protect our national interests by projecting far enough ahead the position that Canada should take or, worse than that, it has not had the authority or the power to influence to any extent the planning of Trans-Canada.

I have carefully read the position taken by Northern and Central in Ontario as set out by Mr. Bovey, president of that company. He has stated that we will be short 20 billion to 33 billion cubic feet of gas this year. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that no matter what we do in Canada there would be some economic advantage in exporting gas to parts of the United States and in importing gas into Canada in other areas. I am sure he is also aware that the economics of our gas industry are interrelated between the United States and Canada.

In respect of Mr. Bovey wanting to go into the Montreal market, I spoke to him the other day and indicated that in my opinion he was as bad as the National Energy Board in his estimates because at the present time there is a 16-inch line I believe, between Ottawa and Montreal to supply that market. The market in Montreal is totally untapped. It can probably be estimated for a matter of two or three years by taking into consideration the market in Toronto and applying that figure to Montreal. In three years the market in Montreal can probably be as great as that in Toronto today. Therefore, to speak of a 30-inch line in Canada, as has been suggested by Trans-Canada, is unrealistic. It is also unrealistic for the National Energy Board to allow the company to consider a 30-inch line.

It is totally unrealistic to speak in these terms particularly when we are dealing with approximately 67 million cubic feet of gas and in five years, in order to make this project economic, will be exporting to the United States up to 500 million cubic feet of gas. Really we are bringing 200 million cubic feet of gas into Canada which is insignificant in respect of the needs of today when there is an immediate shortage of 20 billion to 33 billion cubic feet this year. If we are talking about going into the market in Montreal and the demand for the foreseeable future, we should be talking probably of a 60 or 70-inch line.

I asked Mr. Bovey why this had not been considered. He said that he had just recently returned from an international conference where the representatives of most of the countries had said that this was impractical. He said that they would not be able to handle this kind of a line and that most companies could not make it. I telephoned the Algoma Steel Corporation and was advised that they make plate up to 14 feet which would give something in the order of a 57 or 58-inch line. Such a line has not been built on the North American continent to date but we in Canada can conceive of a foreseable need for it.

Mr. Bovey told me that at the international conference which he attended he was advised by the Russian representative that Russia is in the process of providing the facilities for a pipe line which will be 100 inches in diameter. A 100-inch pipe line would probably be 20 or 30 times the size of the largest pipe line we have in Canada at the present time. I would think it would be able to operate on low pressure and could be installed economically with a view to meeting the needs 20 years from now.

The minister may be unaware of some of the things which happen when a pipe line is built. There is a very great degree of disruption no matter where the pipe line goes so far as the people are concerned. I remember a farmer in my area who said that he did not care if they paid him a million dollars. He said he did not want it going anywhere near his barn because it might blow up. If the minister would like to know the facts, we stopped them building the pipe line on that particular farm. They had to move the Trans-Canada line over one mile in order to find another place to build the pipe line. This person was able to stop it because he had a D.V.A. loan and the government itself was interested in protecting him.

The government should be looking ahead five, ten or 15 years. Trans-Canada has no money. I do not think it has a very good opportunity to raise money. Its stock is not very high, its dividends are low and it is going to have difficulty raising money. If it is going to instal a major gas transmission line the government likely will have to help in the development. We did this in 1956. We put up the money for the northern section. It was very difficult country in which to build and we allowed the Trans-Canada a ten year period in which to operate line, take the profit out of it, and then buy it at its original cost. This is a fairly lucrative way of constructing a pipe line.

If the war in the Middle East had not happened I am sure the minister would have had to come to parliament and ask for assistance to construct part of this line in order to meet the needs of eastern Canada. I have no objection to his asking parliament for such assistance. I would think, however, that there are very few companies which are less deserving of receiving help than this company. They have played cat and mouse with the Canadian government and even worse with the Canadian people. But I think the Canadian government would have had to put up at least $200 million to put in the necessary loop in northwestern Ontario.

This is a company which is not respecting the monopoly we have given it. It is a monopoly which I do not believe it is the responsibility of the government to supervise but rather that of the agency we have established, the National Energy Board. The National Energy Board has totally failed in its responsibility in this and in other respects.

I do not know where the 100-inch pipeline to which Mr. Bovey referred is going to be or whether it is for gas or oil, but I presume if they are going to use 100-inch pipe it will be for a transmission line from their oil fields to the take-off point for their distribution line and that the line probably will not be utilized to capacity for some time. It seems odd that Trans-Canada is raising more money now to increase the capacity of a facility they finished less than ten years ago. It seems to me it is very poor engineering when you have long term debentures on a capital investment such as a pipe line that will not meet the supply requirements for the next 20 years to cover the period of the debentures.

I do not know whether the minister is happy about the fact that this matter now appears to have been settled. I have made inquiries of one of the interested parties and have asked whether the intention is to go through the court procedure. I understand that in the United States the court procedure has already been tested to some degree in this regard. Let me read a paragraph from the business and financial section of the Globe and Mail for May 25, 1967:

> Panhandle's application for renewed hearings of the Great Lakes scheme may well be rejected by the commission but such a ruling by the F.P.C. would almost certainly be cited by the company as one of its grounds for challenging the legality of any F.P.C. decision in favour of Great Lakes if Panhandle resolves to take it to the courts.

I understand other companies are interested in testing such a decision in the courts, and I wonder what position Trans-Canada would be in in respect of the work it might do if an injunction were obtained. I have no idea what the company intends to do in the next few weeks but if it does anything it will be in a ridiculous position should an injunction be granted. It might be in an even more ridiculous position that it would be if it waited four or five months to see what decision might be made.

This whole situation leaves Canada with very little protection. I am sure the minister is not so callous in his regard for Canadian interests as to allow a situation to continue as a result of which we must depend on the whims of the federal power commission or the United States courts. Everyone is agreed that gas is not going to be made available this year from this project, but I am interested in this line going through my area of northern Ontario in 1968 or 1969. The hon. member for Timmins said that he does not care whether the line is built along old highway number 11 or highway 17 through Sault Ste. Marie. We do not have a real preference in this regard, but the minister must consider the fact that organized townships in the farming area of northern Ontario depend on the pipe line for 50 per cent of their assessment revenue. This may not be of great concern to the department but it is of great concern to these townships and municipalities because they require this tax revenue to provide education and other necessary services. If this line is not constructed along highway 17 or highway 11 the loss in tax revenue will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, and there will be a tremendous loss so far as construction employment opportunities are concerned.

I am not worried at all about the minister's position or whether the United States and Canada should pool their resources to meet the needs of this continent in the most economical way possible, but I think I would be a very poor citizen of the United States if I was not more concerned about the national economy of that country than whether or not the people of Iran have another slice of bread on their tables. The people of the United States seem to look at Canada in the same way they look at the Near East, as a reservoir of potential resources for their personal use and economic advantage.

It is not my concern that the National Energy Board or the government should decide how much of a reserve we must have in Canada, how much gas should be delivered to Canadian markets and how much exported. I was surprised at what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, and I usually have a very high respect for his opinions. In this regard he has been playing a very narrow and restricted game. In Sudbury he said he was the only one interested in having the line go through Sudbury. He has also said that his interest is in the economics of the routes through southern Ontario. He is interested in reducing the cost to that part of the province. Various members from Alberta have been very clear in their position. They say that we have a surplus of gas and should sell it. They apparently do not care where we sell it as long as we do. I am not sure that I would not have a similar view if I came from that part of the country and knew there was a surplus of this saleable commodity. I think I would also want to sell it. Apparently the Alberta members do not care a damn who gets the commodity.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, just to clarify what has been said, let me point out that the members from Alberta have been consistent in their position so far as gas is concerned in that Alberta should be considered first, then Canada and then the export markets. They have never said they do not give a damn who gets it.

Mr. Peters: I stand corrected. Perhaps that was my interpretation of what I heard. Apparently I am not in disagreement with the hon. member for Medicine Hat who says that Alberta's needs must be considered first. All of us here have a political responsibility in representing different ridings. Leaving aside my interest in the particular area of the country which I represent and leaving aside the regional economic interests of other hon. members, it seems to me that whenever Trans-Canada says that more gas must be exported to the United States market to make the proposition feasible it is expressing a pipe line interest and not necessarily a Canadian interest. Surely this is a public commodity which is in the hands of one private operator. I have sometimes felt that there should be more than one operator in this field. However, one must remember what has happened to our transportation system as a result of the operation of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways.

I believe that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources should make an assessment of our needs for the next 25 years and adopt a policy which will ensure that they will be met. Perhaps that department should put up the money to operate such a venture. Perhaps we should have a crown corporation to operate a pipe line company. If everybody is sold on the idea of another line, let us see that the money is raised and the line built so that all areas of the country can have the advantage of this commodity.

I do not think the Canadian people are going to be satisfied with the decision that has now been made by the federal power commission. That decision was made in the interests of United States security because of the Middle East situation. I think we will eventually have to do what was suggested originally, build a line that will serve the needs of the Canadian people rather than primarily export needs. In other words, we must meet Canadian needs not only in the foreseeable future but for as long as it is feasible to project such needs. I have talked to a member of the house who probably has more experience in this regard than anybody sitting in the gallery. He says it is quite possible to project the potential of the wells and the potential of the fields. He says that this kind of projection can be made, and in my opinion it is the only kind of projection that will satisfy the Canadian public.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, there are two things I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. One is the pollution of the St. Croix river and basin. I know the minister is aware of this problem because I have received from his office copies of papers concerning the Saint John and St. Croix international river basin. The buck has been passed around for a good many years in respect of solving the pollution of this basin.

It has been possible to pass the buck around in this way because so many people are interested in the question. They include the International Joint Commission, the state of Maine, the federal government of the U.S.A., Calais, Maine, Milltown, Maine, Milltown, New Brunswick, St. Stephen, New Brunswick, the federal government of Canada, the province of New Brunswick, the fisheries department, and the Georgia Pacific Company.

Mr. Ricard: All aboard.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): This basin is so polluted and the sludge is so thick on the banks of the river that if you paint a house white it is black or grey the next morning. This actually happens. It has been going on for years. The buck has been passed around not only in Canada but in the United States. I have before me a copy of a letter written by the water improvement commission of Maine which says:

> As you know the Maine Water Improvement Commission submitted a bill to the 1963 legislature which was intended to give it the necessary power to require pollution abatement on international boundary streams such as the St. Croix river and portions of the St. John river. This was, for some reason never explained to the Water Improvement Commission, labelled unconstitutional by the attorney general and withdrawn from committee.
> All of this left enforcement of any program strictly up to the federal agency, as the hearing commitee of the 1965 legislature to whom the bill was resubmitted gave it no consideration on the grounds that it would interfere with pending federal legislation.

There was no federal legislation passed in this respect, and the pollution goes on and on. Some companies manufacturing food products in St. Stephen even claim that the fumes from the river basin are affecting their products. Somebody must take the lead in straightening out this matter. I think the minister is the man to do this. He could take the lead in this respect and see that the basin is cleaned out. I have here a copy of a letter written by John S. Bates, chairman of the New Brunswick water authority, who says:

> The New Brunswick water authority looks on the accumulation of sludge banks between St. Stephen and Calais as a large-scale result of pollution by solids and solubles from Woodland—

That is the Georgia Pacific mill. I attended a meeting with the Georgia Pacific company and others at which this problem was discussed. They have done something about it but the money for what was done was in the main supplied by the federal government of the United States of America. However, the pollution continues. This was a great salmon stream at one time. The salmon come up a short way and die, so the fisheries department should be interested in the problem. They are interested in it, but somebody must take the lead. I hope the minister will look into the problem and do something about it.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. He is minister of mines and must be interested in the gold mines of Canada. At one time gold was the metal that brought us in more money than any other metal. However, we are now paying the gold mines $15 an ounce when the price used to be $35 an ounce. We were paying the gold mines $35 an ounce in 1934 and now, because of the decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar, we are paying them $15 an ounce. The governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated that gold is not only a monetary measure but is a commodity. Can the minister point to any commodity in Canada which had such a price in 1934 and where the price is now down to less than half? I think this situation is ridiculous. Further, the taxpayers of Canada are paying subsidies to the gold mines to get the gold out of the ground. Last year we paid subsidies of something like $2,500,000 to a syndicate of Americans.

The Americans cannot buy our centennial gold pieces; they cannot buy our gold at all. But they can come up here and take over our gold mines. They do this by taking over one mine, stopping the dividends, taking the treasury, buying another mine, and so on. At the present time they own about 18 gold mines in this country. To this syndicate the government paid subsidies which last year amounted to $2,500,000. What happened to the gold? After we paid the Americans $2,500,000 to get it out of the ground, we sold the gold to the United States government for $35 an ounce. It probably cost us $45 or $50 an ounce to get the gold out of the ground. In my opinion this is an extremely silly policy and the minister should look into it. If we were getting the right price for our gold, instead of receiving $140 million we should be receiving $500 million or $600 million a year.

There is gold from coast to coast in this country. All we need to do is to dig it out of the ground in order to get international liquidity. Liquidity is required now in international monetary affairs. I understand that nine out of the "big ten" want to raise the price of gold in order to obtain liquidity.

I read a book by Sir Roy Harrod, the British economist who was adviser to Lord Keynes when we signed the Bretton Woods agreement agreeing to pay only $35 an ounce forever to our gold mines. We signed this agreement. Sir Roy Harrod said in his book that the International Monetary Fund certainly had to be revised and reorganized and the only way to do it was to double the price of gold as a preliminary and increase the drawing rights of the members. I understand the United States agreed to increase the drawing rights but refused and still refuses to increase the price of gold. In my opinion to do so would be to their benefit and it would certainly be to the benefit of Canada.

I hope the minister will look into this problem. He is minister of mines and should be interested in gold as well as other metals. It was once our most valuable metal and could still be our most valuable metal if the price was right.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to the subject of the decision announced today by the federal power commission and raised in the house by the hon. member for Timmins and the hon. member for Timiskaming. My version of what happened at eleven o'clock this morning is quite different from the version of the two N.D.P. members. I believe this decision by the federal power commission of the United States is a great day for Canada. I want to state my reasons very clearly for saying this. It is a great day for Canada, it is a great day for northern Ontario, it is a great day for Quebec and it is a great day for the west. My only complaint about the decision announced today, June 20, 1967, is that it should have been reached a year ago. If it had not been for the cowardice of the present government it would have been reached last year.

Last year the Alberta Conservation Board agreed that they had surplus gas. The National Energy Board recommended the acceptance of the Great Lakes application to the government, but for some reason which we will never know for certain the government turned down that recommendation. When some of us opposed that decision and gave our reasons for our opposition to a decision which we understood to be a purely political one brought about on the basis of the N.D.P. opposition in northern Ontario, the government changed its mind after a couple of months and agreed to the application. This gave our economic foes in the United States a new breath of life and they renewed their objections to the application under due process of law before the federal power commission. As a result there has been a long delay this year which has cost the consumers of central Canada large sums of money, has hurt the producers in western Canada, and has given a temporary additional market in Canada to the United States pipe lines.

The other day I suggested to the minister something which I thought should have been done last year. I said to him that the United States government should have been asked to request their court of record, the federal power commission, to expedite the proceedings of this hearing. There are many precedents for such a request, and I think our country should have thrown its weight behind the Canadian company which was battling for a Canadian market. I put this on the record last fall and I repeat it today. Who was opposed to this application? The United States coal companies were opposed because in the application they saw a loss of Canadian markets for United States coal. Likewise the unions of the coal companies were opposed for the same reason. The oil companies of the United States were also opposed to it because they saw a loss of markets in this area, and so were the gas pipe line companies in the United States. Several of the states in the United States were also opposed. All these groups were fighting on behalf of the United States economy. We cannot blame them for doing so, but when I listened in the house to Canadians joining the Americans to take away a Canadian market from Canadians I asked myself, who is the real Canadian?

The government does not have a leg to stand on. They wobbled, they twisted, but no one fought for Canadians. The essential fact of this proposal is that an economical looping of the pipe line will not only bring about the establishment of the shortest route in terms of capital cost but will also provide advantages because of the storage provisions in Ontario and in Michigan which would give us a high load factor and thus would reduce the wholesale price. Last fall I stated that by building the loop through the United States we would reduce the price for the industrial markets in Ontario and Quebec by approximately 15 per cent. For the first time gas prices in Ontario would be lower than they are across the border in the United States, and every person with half an ounce of brain knows what this means. It means that our cost of manufacturing would be lower than that of the United States, and when companies are planning future expansion of their business, whether it be in steel or any secondary industry, they naturally know where the costs are lower. Instead of building plants in Buffalo and Detroit they will go where the price is lower in Windsor, Hamilton or Toronto. This is the key fact.

The charge which has been made that we have lost control is nothing more than an innuedo because 50 per cent of the ownership belongs to the Canadian company and it is they who control it as long as they obey the laws laid down by the F.P.C. In the original application 90 per cent of the gas was to come from western to eastern Canada and only 10 per cent was to be dropped off in the towns along the way. So I have no choice but to say again in the house that the position of the N.D.P. has been harmful to every portion of Ontario and Quebec where natural gas is being used. It is the N.D.P. who have stood in the path of the development of the wealth of this country through the use of this great natural resource. In my eyes, and I hope in the eyes of all the people of Canada, they stand condemned for this selfish and outdated nationalistic approach.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

I am aware of their arguments and I know how much these northern townships depend on the construction of a pipe line in their area. I know from personal experience how the motel operators and the people who run hotels and restaurants depend on new construction in their area. I say now to the N.D.P. that not only will the people of Windsor, Toronto, London, Hamilton and Montreal get cheaper gas as a result of the decision announced today by the F.P.C. but so will all of northern Ontario. Furthermore, very shortly northern Ontario will get a second pipe line and all the benefits that will accrue from it. Their motels will be filled and their assessment will be raised. They will have the best of two worlds. We have saved the Canadian market for Canadian products. We have not raised artificial barriers to save that market but we have achieved our purpose in a positive and economic way.

I also said that northern Canada would benefit for another reason and that is that more gas will be available this coming winter as a result of the decision announced today. In the last couple of years several companies and mills in northern Ontario had been short of natural gas. Whether we like it or not, the premium markets are in the big cities. With permission for the looping now having been given, this coming summer we will be able to hook up our storage fields near Sarnia in Lambton county to the storage fields in Michigan to supply the Ontario market. In this way more gas can be made available to the northern towns, mills and companies this winter. This is a great day for northern Ontario which will get more gas this winter, and when the loop is completed next year the gas will be cheaper. I say this is true, modern Canadianism, not the artificial restrictive nationalism which should have died in our country 40 years ago.

I have put these thoughts on the record because I believe them to be vital to the whole concept I have, and which I hope many Canadians have, of building our nation. We want to build it on the basis of positive, non-restrictive techniques. We have the basic resources, we have the energy and we have the water with which we can process in Canada so much more cheaply than any other country in the world. We should realize that this is a heaven-sent situation and that at long last we are able to achieve what we want in an economic way. We do not want to impose any restrictions on the Americans; we just want to do things better and cheaper.

I know that the large American gas companies in Louisiana and Texas want the market in Ontario and Quebec. It is a good market for the future. But at least this once we have won a victory. Our Canadian gas is just as good as the gas from Louisiana. Without the need for any subsidy from the government or any artificial restrictions we are able to reduce the price of gas below the United States price through the use of the storage facilities in Lambton county in Ontario and in Michigan. We are able to do in a positive way what we have tried to do in the past by using restrictive techniques. This is a good day for Canada.

I agree with my hon. friend from Timiskaming that we as legislators should have been better informed about the sudden rise in the market in Ontario and Quebec two years ago. The crisis of the last 18 months should not have been allowed to develop. I hope that the words of the hon. member for Timiskaming will be listened to and that an effort will be made to make some projections. Whether they be optimistic, pessimistic or mean projections, let us make some projections so that we can assess whether the needs of the consumer will be met. It is true that we have chosen this company as the instrument of the Canadian people to move gas from western to eastern Canada. But in giving this company a charter we have a responsibility to see that they meet their commitments. I believe that they can do the job better and at cheaper cost than a crown corporation or any kind of government organization, but we do need advice from the National Energy Board in regard to future demand for gas.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that this was a great day for Quebec. Those of us who have travelled through the province of Quebec realize the desperate need in Canada's interest for a greater variety of industrial activity to improve the economic health of that province. One of the things which has been denied the areas outside Montreal is access to natural gas. With the price reduction which will arise from this loop I see the wholesale price in Montreal going down to the point where we can now consider building a line from Montreal through the southern townships to Quebec city and later perhaps along the north shore to Quebec city. This will give those 20 or 30 counties access to a clean, efficient fuel which is particularly suited to modern types of precision operated industry.

I know that a pipe line to Quebec city is going to run in the red for a few years and that under the old price structure which obtained it was impossible to build the line. But I hope that there is now a chance for the people living in the heavily populated rural areas between Montreal and Quebec city, both on the north shore and the south shore, to have the opportunity to benefit from the type of industry which will complement their agricultural activities. It will be a great day for Quebec if all of these things materialize, and I know they will.

I think I have said enough, Mr. Chairman, to make my position clear, but I still want to offer one or two words of advice to the minister. One of the important principles enshrined in the National Energy Board Act is the common carrier principle. In plain terms this means that all producers of gas have an equal right to pump their gas through a line and that all consumers have an equal right to buy their gas from the owners of that line. But it also means that price must vary with distance from the source, and this is extremely important in Canada. For example, if gas goes to the United States it is very important to realize that the common carrier principle of pricing the gas more cheaply closer to the source must be maintained.

I realize that the volume argument also comes into the picture. It is argued that if you take a large volume you should pay a lower price for it. However, I share with some of my friends in the N.D.P. this concern: If we want to build a better Canada, one of the ways we have to make certain that the national interest is protected is to see that the common carrier principle is maintained.

Second, Mr. Chairman, we have learned a lesson from the experience last year, and that is that Canada and the United States will increasingly have to work together to find a solution to our common energy needs. I think the principle should be that the consumer has the greatest right to the cheapest possible form of energy. Perhaps I should explain that first principle a little more. To make sure that the consumer is protected we should always supply gas at the most economical price. In other words, we do not just distribute it all around so as to maintain a supply in Canada or the United States. The most economic price and the shortest possible route is the end objective from the consumer point of view.

The second principle is that the Canadian interest must be protected too. I think that the Canadian interest can be maintained by realizing that under the terms of the National Energy Board Act, which lays down various criteria which must be applied when a company is going to build or operate a pipe line, the National Energy Board can be used as a sort of bargaining agent both on behalf of companies and on behalf of provinces which own the gas. This concept has been put forward very ably by a member on the government benches, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I should like to see a public statement made by the minister in the form of a directive to the National Energy Board, in cases where a company is sending gas to the United States and is perhaps fighting for the big markets of North America, saying that in the bargaining the competitive price of other fuels in the areas in which the fuel is to be sold will be taken into consideration. In other words, it is not just a question of selling the maximum amount of gas possible; it is a matter of getting the maximum return for our resources.

Many of us, Mr. Chairman, have the suspicion that much of our resources which are owned by subsidiaries of United States companies return a very small emolument per unit sold, that the main profit on natural resources in Canada goes to the parent company in the United States which finally uses the product. Once again I compliment the hon. member for Coast-Capilano for bringing out evidence of this nature. I think this is the type of matter in which the National Energy Board should take an interest.

If I may go back to my first statement about this latter subject, we have learned the lesson in the last year that if we have to deal more and more with the United States there should be a meeting between the federal power commission and the National Energy Board, both in effect being courts of record, to lay down the terms of reference with regard to future across the border applications. I accept the right of every American to due process of law in United States courts. But I also want to protect the right of every Canadian to make certain that Canadian resources do not become the tool of a foreign court. Because of the mutual interest of the United States in having access, even at a higher price, to our resources in Canada, terms of reference laying down how applications shall be heard in future will prevent the kind of long delays that have been taking place.

If as a result of this meeting, Mr. Chairman, an understanding were reached on the principle that we are entitled to the maximum price that the market will allow for our products, the United States will have to accept that because the terms of bargaining are on our side. All of the reports and forecasts indicate the need for more energy as the years go by, and the National Energy Board is the agency that can protect us. However, the terms of the act of today would have to be enlarged.

In the meantime the situation requires a statement on the part of the responsible minister, speaking on behalf of the people of Canada, in the form of a directive to the National Energy Board. This was the technique which was used in connection with our national oil policy, and even though I am not going to speak today about that policy I would point out that this precedent could be applied to a natural gas policy. In this regard, Mr. Chairman, we sorely lack direction. Let the minister take all the time he requires to work out the terms of reference, but the United States should be told that we are giving our energy board this directive. Then the two energy bodies could work together to ensure that the right of Americans to due process of their law is not taken away from them, particularly in cases of border convenience, but that we in Canada should not be asked to continue to suffer the delays which have occurred during the last year.

Mr. Reid: Before the hon. gentleman resumes his seat I wonder whether I might ask him an unloaded question. Does he know of any other example of a Canadian company participating in transmitting a Canadian natural resource and "getting a piece of the action" in the United States instead of turning the middle-man operation over exclusively to the Americans as Trans-Canada is doing in this case with the Great Lakes Transmission Company?

Mr. Hamilton: I am sure there are many types of arrangements. This point is bound to arise increasingly in the relationship between the two countries not only in connection with gas but in other fields. I know it is happening in the mining field. Because the Americans have not been quick to develop some of their mining resources, Canadian companies are moving in and getting substantial control of operations in United States areas. I hope this process will continue. When I hear Americans complaining that Canadians are taking over their country, I will know it has been successful.

I am not an authority on the legal arrangements involved in the Great Lakes application. It is a difficult legal operation under United States law. A United States corporation has been set up. Ownership is equal but management rights are in the hands of the Canadian company. I do not think there is any danger of our losing control over that fuel because the United States does not dare cut off the gas supply passing through their country while we are sending such large supplies to them for use by industry in California. If the hon. member's question was intended to indicate concern over the degree of control, I have tried to answer it. But if he merely wished to ask me whether I knew of any other example, the answer is no, I do not.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Chairman, on Wednesday last I began to make some remarks with respect to the Nelson river project and how it affects Canadian industry, particularly the Canadian General Electric Company. I spoke of the opportunities which national resource development on this scale provides for our country. I should like to complete the remarks I was making on that day.

The point I was making when I was interrupted was that major projects such as the Nelson river project provide an opportunity for Canadian industry and, indeed, for foreign industry, to develop technology, to increase employment and to explore export potentials. I suggested it is imperative, when a decision is made as to who should undertake the work, that consideration go beyond the mere question of cost. Decisions of this character must be founded on a much broader basis than an inquiry as to which bid happens to be lowest.

We have a device which is used in this country as a measure of protection to ensure that Canadian content is taken into consideration when awarding such contracts. It is known as the 10 per cent formula and it may or may not be adequate. It seems to me that when making an assessment as to its adequacy this formula has to be examined in comparison with similar devices or formulae used by other countries. It would be a useful venture for the Department of Industry or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to examine the conditions faced by the Canadian General Electric Company, for example, in bidding for contracts in Sweden, France or the United Kingdom. With such a study we could discover exactly what form of protection exists in those countries for their own industries.

If we were to undertake such an investigation we might find that our 10 per cent formula affords much less protection to Canadian industry than do comparable formulae or devices used by other countries. It is important when we are considering developments of this magnitude, the Nelson river project, for example, in which Canadian industry is likely to be competing with British or Swedish industry, that Canadian industry on its own ground should be in a no less favourable competitive position than it is when competing for contracts in these other countries. If this is not the case it should be the case, and we should take measures to make sure that Canadian industry is not exposed at home to greater competition than are indigenous industries in other countries. Since the Nelson river project can have an important bearing on the development of Canadian technology, on employment and on export sales, it is important that we give this matter urgent attention.

The federal government has decided to invest a large sum of money in the Nelson river project. This investment takes the form of building the transmission line, together with its associated terminal equipment, to make it possible for the Manitoba Hydro-Electric Board to develop the resources of the Nelson river in northern Manitoba to supply the power requirements of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and to create an opportunity to export power to the United States.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has been appointed by the federal government to design and purchase the equipment for this major transmission system. It has selected a relatively new technique, high voltage direct current, as being the most economic and efficient means to bring this power south to the area of need.

All of the high voltage direct current systems built or being built to date use mercury arc valves as the main element in the terminals. New developments, however, in semiconductor materials, and their successful displacement of mercury arc valves in industrial applicants, suggest that they would bring the same benefits to this installation as they have to industrial users.

Canada is fortunate that this semi-conductor technology has progressed to the point where it can utilize this equipment on its first major high voltage direct current installation. It gives Canada the opportunity to lead the world in this field.

A prototype equipment has been built and proven. Canadian General Electric has anticipated this development by training people in the special requirements of electric utility applications, and also in building and installing systems using this same basic technology. Through its role in the Nelson river transmission project, and by purchasing the necessary equipment in Canada, the federal government has a wonderful opportunity in my view to achieve a number of important goals. By using Canadian equipment it would help to create employment in Canada. It would support and expand Canadian manufacturing capability and, above all, establish its manufacturing industry in a strong technological leadership position. This technological ability is necessary not only to supply our future domestic requirements but also to create opportunities for export.

In the decision that has to be made, and will be made by the Atomic Energy Commission, it is important to remember that the Canadian General Electric Company's proposal will have a Canadian content many times that of any other manufacturer, whether domestic or foreign. The Canadian General Electric Company plans to build approximately 80 per cent of the equipment in Canada. It is estimated that placing the contract with this company would probably result in 700 man-years of employment in design, manufacture and installation of the equipment involved, and would in effect create a new industry of considerable size which in turn would provide a livelihood for a considerable number of people in the trades, professions and the service industries.

In a decision on this matter it is well to bear in mind that the company I have mentioned has already made a large investment in developing the necessary skills, research and development programs, and the building of prototypes to prove out the technology involved. Without a contract to supply the equipment and services required this investment would be lost. More important, the technology would not be further developed and the technical and manufacturing leadership would have to remain with foreign manufacturers who would, of course, continue to supply both Canadian and world-wide requirements for high voltage direct current transmission for years to come.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, my submission today is brief and absolutely straightforward. It seems to me in a project of this magnitude that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the government of Canada have a very important decision to make which should be based in the final analysis on a wider basis than simply the factors or criteria of cost. The ramifications of the decision will be important to many sections of our economy and many industries within our economy. This impact will be either negative or positive and I can only appeal through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister and to A.E.C.L. that a decision be made on the wider basis I have suggested, and that above all the national interest will be considered.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal briefly this afternoon with one specific project referred to by the minister in his introductory statement on Wednesday, June 14, found at page 1521 of Hansard. Part of the sentence in question reads:

> —and we are negotiating with British Columbia a joint program for flood abatement in the lower Fraser valley.

I have indicated that my remarks are going to be brief but I hope no one is going to assume that because they are brief my concern is slight. I believe this is one of the most urgent problems that require attention in the Fraser valley because it affects the entire lower mainland of the province of British Columbia.

Although we in the lower Fraser valley hope that the immediate danger has passed for this year, the area annualy faces the danger of flood and disaster. In referring to natural catastrophes the explanation is often given that they are acts of God. Since it appears that we are being spared a repetition of flood conditions such as we had in 1948, in all fairness we ought to give credit to God who has to take the blame for many of the unfortunate situations that happen.

The problems we face in the lower Fraser valley are mainly occasioned by the sudden spring run-offs in the Fraser River watershed. Each year a careful assessment is made of the varying situations, the gauges on the river are watched very closely, predictions are made and warnings are issued, but the whole situation depends on the weather conditions prevailing at the period of the year when the run-offs take place.

This year in British Columbia we had a combination of conditions which made many people believe we would have a really serious flood situation. I remember speaking to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on one occasion and he felt that everything was just ideal, if one can use that term, for a really serious flood to develop in the lower Fraser valley. As I say, it now appears that that danger has receded. Nevertheless, as the situation developed emergency plans were made and machinery was put into operation to meet the possible danger.

In the absence of an adequate agreement between the federal and provincial governments, the provincial authorities authorized emergency work on portions of the diking systems along the Fraser valley. We hope that federal assistance will be forthcoming to assist in meeting the financial outlay that was involved.

Hon. members will recall that on various occasions questions have been asked on orders of the day with respect to the situation on the Fraser River and in the Fraser River valley. Those questions were posed by myself and by members of other parties who were just as concerned and as interested as I was. We had the assurance that the federal government was prepared to render every possible assistance should an emergency arise. We appreciated that, but the point I want to make this afternoon is that even though we may appreciate the emergency plans that were in preparation and in readiness, it is going to take something more to satisfy the municipal authorities and the people of the affected areas in British Columbia.

Every year there is a great fear of what might happen, the inconvenience, the loss, even loss of life that might happen should the Fraser River overflow its banks and flood the lower Fraser valley. I was advised by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that discussions were taking place between the provincial and federal authorities with respect to a long-term plan to eliminate this flood hazard and danger. It was my understanding that a tentative agreement had been reached with respect to the strengthening of the dikes and that consideration was being given to the implementation of the recommendations of the Fraser River Board, which were tabled in September, 1963. I should like to refer briefly to those recommendations but first I should like to read a very brief paragraph from the introduction to the report. It reads as follows:

The present report, developed within the remaining restricted area of flood-control possibilities, has pointed up a number of recommendations which warrant early attention. With each year's delay in taking protective action, the next damaging flood is that much closer. Accordingly, it is emphasized that remedial measures should be undertaken as early as possible.

I wish to point out that this document is dated September, 1963. Of course, we are now approaching September of 1967. What disturbs the people of my constituency and other constituencies which are involved in this problem is that in spite of the potential dangers it seems that nothing is being done to implement the long-term recommendations of the Fraser River Board. It is true that some work is being done on the dikes in the lower Fraser valley, and we appreciate this. I have been given to understand that in this regard they have reached a relatively high degree of efficiency and effectiveness.

I am advised by those who I believe understand the situation much better than I do that the work being done in the lower Fraser valley will not meet the need. They say that the only thing which will meet the need, solve the problem and eliminate the flood danger is the construction of reservoirs in the upper reaches of the Fraser River. These reservoirs would control the flow and enable it to be released slowly in order that it could be carried away. In view of the fact that the recommendations suggest it is an urgent matter, in view of the fact that the authorities and others in the Fraser valley say it is an urgent matter and in view of the fact that we have been presenting these recommendations for some years now, I earnestly request the minister to do his utmost to get the whole proposal and program under way. I realize, of course, that it is not his responsibility alone. The provincial authorities also have a responsibility. What I say to the minister I say also to the provincial government of British Columbia, namely, I hope that action will be taken immediately to implement these recommendations which I have been given to understand offer the only means by which the flood danger in the Fraser valley can be eliminated.

The suggestion has been made that this will be an extremely expensive proposition. Let me say that the implementation of the recommendations, although costly, will not be as costly as the damage and loss which could be experienced if another serious flood should occur in the Fraser valley. Therefore, on behalf of the people of British Columbia and the lower mainland in particular I appeal to the minister again to assist in expediting this program. If he will do this, he will have the appreciation of all those who are concerned about this problem.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources only in respect of one particular facet, pollution of international waters. When the minister, whose sincerity I admire and who I beileve takes the deepest possible interest in the affairs of his department, introduced the estimates of the department on June 14, he made several references to water pollution as coming within the purview of the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have been looking at Hansard and at pages 1520 and 1521 on June 14 I find that the minister stated that Canada has been bountifully provided with water but that that does not mean that we have no problems. He said we have several of them, including pollution. Then the minister said:

> If the water level of the Great Lakes drops or if their waters become more polluted, Ontario is not the only province to suffer—

On page 1520 we find several references to water quality being within the control of his department. This is particularly true, in my opinion, when we are dealing with the Great Lakes. The minister referred to the new Canada Centre for Inland Waters at Burlington on Lake Ontario and the water pollution abatement program.

On more than one occasion, Mr. Chairman, I have spoken in this house about the illegal filling of Lake Ontario, usually I have done so on the estimates of the Department of Public Works. During the past year I have noted there have been reports in the press and on radio and television that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been issuing assurances that he is going to devote a great deal of attention to the question of pollution. Within the last several months I have seen a letter—I have no other authority than that—to the effect that the Department of Transport will be looking after the enforcement of the Navigable Waters Protection Act which has been under the Minister of Public Works for the past few years.

I know that members of the cabinet talk about wanting to have a bill passed by the house relating to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I suppose it will be a piece of legislation which will give authority to the Minister of Transport. As a private member I am told nothing and have to look to the newspapers to find out what is going on. I rather gather that the Minister of Public Works is still the minister responsible for the enforcement of this act, but yet we are told that the Minister of Transport will look after it in the future. One only wonders when the change will take effect.

To my knowledge the federal government has never at any time taken a firm stand with regard to the illegal filling which goes on along the northern shore of Lake Ontario between the Humber River and Etobicoke Creek. I should like to congratulate the minister sincerely and heartily for the contribution he is making to the Canada Centre. I know the Ontario government is also contributing to this project. This new centre will be about 22 miles from the district I am speaking of on the north shore of Lake Ontario. This should be the first problem that the Canada Centre is asked to investigate by the able minister and his department. Only yesterday afternoon I was walking on some of this illegal fill. I protest particularly in respect of two pieces of fill, one known as the Millgate fill near the mouth of Etobicoke Creek and the other lying to the south of what is known as Humber House, or hotel, or tavern on Lakeshore Boulevard west.

In the Toronto area recently some of the editorial writers for the daily newspapers have made sport of the council of the borough of Etobicoke because the council passed a bylaw in which they referred to the fact that the southern boundary of the borough is the middle line of Lake Ontario. This is an incontrovertible fact. The newspapers have been making sport of the borough council because it passed a bylaw zoning as parklands, open space or green belt all that part of Lake Ontario between the natural shore and the southern boundary which is the centre line of Lake Ontario. I say to this house, Mr. Chairman, that the borough council of Etobicoke had to pass a bylaw of that nature because the federal cabinet has taken no action to enforce the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

The Millgate development over toward the mouth of Etobicoke Creek, to which I have made reference in the past and to which I will refer and keep on referring until the cabinet either declares it national park land or orders the fill to be removed by the people who dumped it there—there is authority for such action in the Navigable Waters Protection Act—projects out into Lake Ontario something like 330 feet, which is a full 110 yards, with a width of about 220 feet. This is earth that has been dumped into Lake Ontario. The waves are beating on it and around it and are wearing it down and scattering mud east and west along the shoreline of Lake Ontario.

If the minister wants to see a fine case of pollution all he has to do is go to the point where Etobicoke Creek empties into Lake Ontario. About a quarter of a mile east he will see a prize example of illegal fill which is playing havoc with Len Ford park. It is on the shoreline and belonged originally to the village of Long Branch and now to the borough of Etobicoke which enveloped that village. He will find private owners along this shoreline who are protesting about the mud, the flotsam and the jetsam which is being washed up on the shore three-quarters of a mile east and west of this Millgate fill. Why cannot the minister responsible for pollution get either the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works to enforce that provision of the Navigable Waters Protection Act which says that those who deposit illegal fill without having their plans approved prior to such action will be forced to remove them or the government may remove them and charge the expense of removal to those people who dumpted the illegal fill?

Let us leave the Millgate aspect for a moment and go farther east to the mouth of the Humber River, where I was 24 hours ago. The muddy water extends out into Lake Ontario for half a mile to three-quarters of a mile, and with the wind being from the southeast yesterday the muddy appearance of the water was evident for possibly two to two and a half miles west of the Humber River. If you stand on Lakeshore Boulevard you can count possibly 1,000 dump loads of fill on top of the illegal fill which has been placed there over the years. I say that you can count 1,000 dump loads of fill which have not been levelled off by bulldozers or other mechanical action and are conclusive proof that fill has been brought there and is still being brought there in order that lots can be created in Lake Ontario which will sell for at least $500,000 per acre.

The area of fill south of the Humber hotel is much larger than in the case of the Millgate fill farther to the west. It is so large that the people who developed it have even had the effrontery to go before the council of the borough of Etobicoke and ask to have the property zoned for an apartment house and hotel construction. The land that they want zoned by the borough of Etobicoke is created land that did not exist there until they started putting fill in Lake Ontario. It is interesting to note that the borough of Etobicoke recognizes that the land is there and is paying attention to their demands that an unopened road allowance running from Lakeshore Boulevard down to Lake Ontario shall be closed. These people are illegally filling in Lake Ontario without any obstruction from the Minister of Public Works, or should I say the Minister of Transport, because I do not know who is responsible at the moment. I can only tell the house that neither of them is accepting responsibility. Neither of them has stopped this illegal fill being dumped into Lake Ontario. I am told that the council of the borough of Etobicoke is passing a regulation to close up that street allowance as it would separate the two pieces of fill these people would like to have as one big building lot rather than two small ones, in exchange for a promise that there will be another road allowance provided on the west side of the fill.

What I am drawing to the attention of the chairman and members of the committee is the fact that the federal cabinet simply stands by and does nothing to enforce the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stands up and talks about the great action he is going to take to stop pollution, but these people keep dumping mud, fill, broken concrete and cinder blocks into Lake Ontario. Three weeks ago there was fill dumped into the lake at the foot of Thirteenth Street in the former town of New Toronto which is now part of the borough of Etobicoke.

I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he will follow up with action his promises that he is going to stop pollution in Lake Ontario and all other waters that come under his jurisdiction. The people in the south end of the borough of Etobicoke know they cannot expect any action from the Minister of Public Works. He has had years in which to do something but he has done nothing. There may be some hope that the Minister of Transport will do something, but in view of the delay in bringing the Navigable Waters Protection Act under his jurisdiction I felt I should now ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to use his good offices to see that this illegal filling is stopped.

The property that has been created should be turned into national parks for the benefit of all the people, not just some would-be builders. The pollution should be controlled in the interests of all the people on the north shore of Lake Ontario. Anyone flying in or out of Toronto, if their plane flies along the north shore of the lake—sometimes you fly right along the north shore because of wind variation—can see that this fill has nothing to do with the natural contour of the land. It stands out like a sore thumb in two or three places where the Department of Public Works does not interfere with the dumping.

In view of the legal connections involved in this illegal fill I can only state that if some cabinet minister does not take the necessary drastic action shortly the cabinet will have more on its hands than it can handle, because all the legal niceties tied up with this illegal fill are well known to the people living in the south end of Etobicoke and to the members of the Etobicoke borough council.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take just a few minutes first of all to present my roses to the minister as a token of my admiration for the way in which he fulfils his obligations. I hope he will accept them, and to make them even more agreeable, I will make them "American Beauty".

Mr. Chairman, in his opening remarks on his estimates, the minister said that water was one of our most important resources. I think that no one questions this statement and we realize it even more when we are somewhat deprived. In fact, that is when we realize that water is of primary importance and that it must be used reasonably, since it is not an inexhaustible resource.

As the minister said, Canada is favoured, because we have a lot of fresh water for our population. If my information is correct, I think Canada owns approximately one fifth of the fresh water in the free world, and the province of Quebec has one third of the fresh water in Canada. As I said a moment ago, and as the minister himself noted, we have no assurance that it will always be this way and that our water resources will not, in time, create major troubles.

At various times, the alarm has been sounded by qualified authorities on the matter. For instance, I note in the newspaper La Voix de l'Est of November 2, 1966, that Mr. Peter White, president of the rural development of Brome county, sounded a warning that it may be proper to emphasize, and I quote:

> —the Yamaska lake and river have become "a sewage lagoon".

Mr. Chairman, when it is realized that the Yamaska river supplies water to cities such as Granby and St. Hyacinthe, it is important seriously to consider this warning by someone who is aware of the question. In the article mentioned here, the following is stated, and I quote:

> Bacteriological contamination at St. Alphonse de Grandby, a small village nearby, is very serious. Animals have died through the years after drinking in the river. The river gives off a foul odour... the fish died some eight years ago.

The situation in that area is most alarming and it is imperative that we give it our whole attention.

On the other hand, Mr. R. L. Demers, engineer with the Quebec water control board, said, in an article published in La Presse on November 25, 1966:

> It is later than we think as regards water pollution.

The premier of Quebec himself said, as reported in La Presse on February 14, 1967, and I quote:

> If we do not use our water intelligently, if we misuse it, if we waste it unsparingly, and especially without any thought for the future, our water may not always constitute an inexhaustible resource.

As I am aware of the goodwill of the minister, aware also of his eagerness to help the population, I should like to have his co-operation, so that the threat to public health may eradicated from my area. I should also like to suggest that he use his influence with his colleagues, the Ministers of Forestry and Rural Development, of National Health and Welfare, and of Public Works (Messrs. Sauvé, MacEachen, McIlraith) so that a dike might be built on Yamaska River at Rapide Plat.

In the summertime, Mr. Chairman, the Yamaska river reaches such a low level, below the dike known as "Penman", that it becomes a menace to public health. Fish die and the decay gives off a most unpleasant odour for the shore dwellers, and this smell I am sure, is also a menace to public health. I do think that it would cost very little to each of the departments concerned, to build a dike which would meet the general approval of the people of Saint-Hyacinthe and the other villages which also get their water supply from that river.

The minister will work, in a more or less distant future, in some part of my riding, where he will probably find the thorns to match the roses which I sent him earlier, from a political point of view, and I should like him to take advantage of that opportunity to start working on his reputation so that, when the time comes to ask for votes in that part of my present riding, he will already be welcome.

I think the minister could very easily initiate a study into present conditions and their continuing disadvantages, as well as the menace to public health they constitute. I am sure that the minister would not want to have a summer cottage in the vicinity of a river which, during dry spells in the summer, gives off odours which are far from pleasant.

Therefore, I leave this problem with the minister. I am sure he will want to give favourable consideration to that question of pollution not only of water but also of air which is a menace, as I said before, to public health.

[English]

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, in just a few words I should like to express my disappointment at the news we heard this morning. I believe this is a very sad day for Canada and I think time will prove me right. The only thing that is perhaps not disappointing is that this will also prove to be a very sorry day for the Liberal party.

The fact that the decision announced this morning, as was pointed out by my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming, was made purely and solely in the interests of the United States of America should also give the government and the Canadian people room for thought. In this respect we have experienced delay upon delay continuing for months and months. Suddenly, because the United States was given a real scare last week when overnight the Arab countries at least temporarily cut off their oil, the decision was made. I should like the Canadian people and the government to stop for one moment and consider whether this decision was really made in the interests of Canada.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle said a few words on this subject and put forward certain suggestions. I wonder whether he has really stopped to think about what he said. He proposed, for example, that the gas should be sold on a cost for distance transported basis. If the line was to be built completely in Canada I would agree wholeheartedly with him. But in supporting the move to build the line through the United States he was in fact saying that United States customers should in perpetuity pay a cheaper rate than Canadian customers who live farther along the line. He also reiterated—I believe the government shares his opinion—that this program will result in a much cheaper rate in eastern Canada. I am sorry that I do not share the optimism of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle any more than I share the optimism of the minister when he expresses the same view. Furthermore I defy either the minister or anyone else in the house to show one single instance where cost is a factor in our modern society. The cost factor does not enter into the picture at all. We all know or at least we should know that the only factor is what the traffic will bear, not what it costs to transport the gas.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who is attempting to build up a reputation as a great nationalist, seems to defeat his purpose whenever he happens to deal with either gas or oil. I suggest that he review his ideas in this field. I was called to the telephone during one part of the hon. member's speech but I am told that he had some rather harsh words for the members of my party and the stand we have taken throughout the whole debate. I believe the hon. member paid a recent visit to northern Ontario and attended a meeting in my constituency. He must have seen with his own eyes how much support the views of his party receive in that part of the country. In fact, if he needs any further proof all he has to do is to look at the results of the recent election in Sudbury and he will find that the Conservative party got less than 10 per cent of the votes. The same is true in my riding.

There are one or two other points I should like to make. I have found that it is practically impossible for university students to find summer employment this year all across northern Ontario. The same is true for high school students in the top grades who are looking for jobs to pay for their further education. The big surge which followed the Texas Gulf crisis has now reached a plateau. Construction work is over. The Hollinger mine has announced that it is closing down and the Preston East Dome mine is to close before the end of the year. There is no work in prospect for our young people. Perhaps the minister will say that they can go to the United States and get jobs in the construction of the pipe line through the United States. Is this what the government is planning for our young people?

The government has made that part of the country a designated area, which may or may not stimulate development and build up industry there. However, I will tell the minister once more, as I told him before, that the fastest way to stimulate the economy and build up industry in that area would have been to build the pipe line through northern Ontario. The government has dawdled, stumbled and procrastinated until the tragic situation in the Middle East has finally compelled the United States federal power commission to make up their minds for them.

In closing I warn the minister and the government that the battle may be lost but the war is not over. It is my intention to take a good cameraman on a trip with me to see the construction of the line in the United States and to take pictures of the development taking place adjacent to it. Even if I have to do it at my own expense, I will go on every television station in northern Ontario to show the people what has happened as a result of the sell-out by this government. This may not help the situation but it will prevent a similar sell-out in the future.

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few minutes to bring a couple of points to the attention of the minister, particularly in view of the political developments which have taken place in the world in the last few days. I think that the Israeli-Arab war should make it fairly clear to the minister that we must take a new look at the oil and gas industries in Canada. I point out to the committee that the Canadian oil industry is one of the largest industries in Canada. In fact, in the last 20 years it has developed from a $20 million a year industry to one worth over $1 billion in 1967. It is an industry which has greatly contributed to the balance of payments problem in Canada and to the welfare and prosperity of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and in fact British Columbia.

I do not want to go into the effects of the oil situation in Alberta so much as to try to relate to the minister the political implications of the recent world events and to quote to him a section from the Carter report which directly concerns the oil industry in Canada.

As the minister is quite well aware, oil has been discovered and is being produced in many parts of the world. New discoveries have been made in North Africa, Nigeria, the North Sea, the Middle East, Russia, and many other places. In most of these areas production is sometimes subject to political pressures. Combined with ever-increasing discoveries of oil there is an ever-increasing demand for oil in the world. There is an insatiable hunger for energy. For example, in 1966 33 million barrels per day were used, nearly double the amount used ten years previously. However, the point which must be kept in mind is that for every barrel of oil produced a new discovery must be made. In other words, use must be matched with new discoveries of oil and also account must be taken of the contemplated increase in the use of oil in the world.

In so far as Canada is concerned, and possibly the whole of North America, the security of our sources of supply of oil must be guaranteed. The importance of this has been emphasized by the political unrest in various parts of the world in recent years A few years ago the oil industry was nationalized in Iran as a result of which there was an interruption in the flow of oil to the western world for several weeks. This was followed by the Suez crisis in 1956. When Egypt took over the Suez Canal it cut off all the oil supplies that normally travelled through there. It also cut off the Arab pipe lines. As a result of the recent conflict between the Israelis and the Arabs oil supplies to Europe, North America, Japan, and in fact all parts of the western world, have been cut off.

In considering the development of Canadian oil reserves, the security of our sources of supply must stand very high on our list of priorities. This was pointed out by the Borden royal commission. As a matter of fact, the Borden royal commission made this statement.

> It is undoubtedly in the national interest that Canada should at least be in a position rapidly to make itself as independent as possible of imports which may be subject to interruption.

I do not pretend that there was an interruption in the supply of oil in Canada during the recent crisis but if the crisis had continued for a longer period of time it is quite possible that there would have been an interruption.

I would point out to the committee that Canada has relied increasingly on Middle East oil for use in the eastern Canadian market. In 1964 Venezuela, which up until recently has been our principal supplier of oil from overseas, supplied 71 per cent of the offshore supplies in eastern Canada and the Middle East supplied only 25 per cent. In 1965 Venezuela supplied 60 per cent and the Middle East 36 per cent. One can see that there is a decrease in the quantity of oil imported from Venezuela and an increase in the amount of oil imported from the Middle East. The situation becomes even more pronounced in 1966 when Venezuela supplied only 50 per cent and the Middle East supplied 47 per cent. In two years the oil supply to eastern Canada from the Middle East has increased in volume from 25 per cent to 47 per cent.

It is worth noting that the considerable increase in oil imports which took place between 1965 and 1966 was of oil which originated in Nigeria and Libya. Almost the whole of the increase was represented by oil from Nigeria. The recent political disintegration of Nigeria is now common knowledge.

I bring these points to the attention of the minister principally because there is a section of the Carter report that could have a tremendous effect on oil exploration in Canada. I should like to refer the minister to page 326 of volume 4 of that report where it is said:

> But if costs of conventional oil exploration continue to rise it is apparent that, if the tar sands are not now competitive with conventional crude, they will be competitive in the near future, and Canada's oil reserves, for all practical purposes, will be limitless. Devoting resources to the search for conventional oil is, or will become, unnecesary.

I should like the minister to look at that reference and give due consideration to it because the statement upon which the recommendations of the Carter report are predicated is an exaggeration. It does not take into consideration some of the political requirements of this country. For example, the statement falls short in at least three respects.

First of all, according to the statement the cost of conventional oil exploration continues to rise. As a matter of fact, just the opposite is the case. The cost of exploration for oil in western Canada is decreasing, and decreasing quite rapidly.

Second, it is stated that if the tar sands are not now competitive they soon will be. This is incorrect. The tar sands are not now competitive and it is difficult to see just at what time in the future they will be. It may be a very long period of time before tar sands developed oil will be able to compete with conventional oil.

Third, the statement totally disregards the fact that it takes at least five years to develop an oil project, particularly tar sands. It might also take the same length of time to develop a conventional flow of oil, build a pipe line and get the oil to the market. The statement made in the report of the Carter commission is quite premature. I do not think that the oil policy of this country should be predicated on such an assumption. I do not think that a change in taxation as it affects oil companies should be predicated on a statement of this sort.

I believe that the time has now come to take another look at the possibility of making this country self-sufficient in supplies of oil. As the minister is quite well aware, we are capable of producing more than enough oil for our own use. Yet the fact of the matter is that we still import large amounts of oil for use in eastern Canada. This is all well and good as long as political relationships in the world are harmonious. But I think an advanced country like Canada should be prepared to face all emergencies so far as the supply of energy is concerned, and the minister should look at the possibility of using Canadian oil only for all our needs.

I hope the minister will take seriously the comments I made about the Carter commission. It will probably be to the advantage of Canada to continue to develop oil reserves against the day when we do need far more oil on a daily basis than we require today.

L5. Advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in such amounts and on such terms and conditions (including the delivery to Her Majesty, in satisfaction of the advances, of obligations or shares of the company) as the governor in council may approve, to finance the construction of the Candu-BLW 250 nuclear power station in Quebec; to share in the construction of the Pickering generating station under agreement between the federal government, the province of Ontario and the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario; to finance the construction of manufacturing facilities and a laboratory for the commercial products division at South March; to finance the construction of housing and other works near the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment, $32,000,000.

Mr. Hales: One brief question. I understand that the purchasing of transmission lines and transformers in connection with the Nelson River project is being done through the Atomic Energy Board. If so, I hope the minister and the board will give due, thorough and thoughtful consideration to placing the tender with the firm which has the highest Canadian content. Can the minister give us any indication of the thinking in this regard?

Mr. Pepin: I do not want to belittle the importance of the point which the hon. member has just made, but it was already emphasized this afternoon by the hon. member for Peterborough. This is a difficult decision to make because it involves a choice between equipment which is already being used and tested in Canada and elsewhere, and equipment which is entirely new. Atomic Energy of Canada will, of course, analyse all the factors involved. If the hon. member feels the need for a guarantee, I can tell him that the Manitoba government will be there, looking over the shoulders of Atomic Energy of Canada while the decision is being made. All the factors which have been mentioned will be taken into consideration.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, June 19, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday clause 16 was under consideration, clauses 2 to 15 having been agreed to. Perhaps I should point out to the committee that last evening when the discussion ended at ten o'clock the hon. member for Halifax had suggested an amendment. I do not think he had formally proposed an amendment.

Mr. Rapp: My hon. friend from Cape Breton North and Victoria will be here in a minute or so. Perhaps we could delay the proceedings until he gets here.

Mr. Pepin: All right.

Mr. Rapp: Thank you. We will co-operate with the minister but I think we should wait a couple of minutes until my hon. friend arrives.

On clause 16—Powers.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, last Thursday evening we on this side wished to continue consideration of this legislation but apparently it was not the wish of the government to do so. Last night we did not carry on with it either. Despite the fact that we wished the bill to be presented to us again early this afternoon, rather than the estimates of the minister, the decision was made to present the estimates. We were then assured the bill would be brought up at eight o'clock tonight. The minister must have been in his usual good humour because his estimates were passed more quickly than we anticipated. If I recall correctly, last night there was an amendment to clause 16 (b). Could we not stand that clause for the moment?

• (5:40 p.m.)

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand clause 16 and proceed with the discussion on clause 17?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 17—Duty to submit over-all plan for coal.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the key clauses of the bill and it gives some of us a great deal of concern. So far as I am concerned, the basic difference between a public corporation and a private corporation in the part of Canada with which this bill deals is that a public corporation ought not to be concerned at all times with financial and economic considerations as the top priority but rather with social and community matters as the top priority in its actions.

Without suggesting that the minister is not as bothered about the problems in Cape Breton as any of the rest of us, it seems to me the wording of this clause emphasizes the same kind of priority which Dosco itself has had, the kind of priority that would be mainly concerned with the financial and commercial advisability of continuing or not continuing, reducing or not reducing the production of coal, rather than being concerned with the consequences to the communities where the mines are located.

Clause 17(1) calls upon the corporation to provide an over-all plan "as soon as practicable and in any event not later than one year after the coming into force of this act." That may be less than one year after the corporation gets under way. Further, the clause provides that the plan:

> —shall take into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry and in broadening the base of the economy of Cape Breton Island.

The same wording and the same objective are not stated when one comes to the more detailed steps with which the clause is concerned. I do not want to repeat what I said yesterday but, as the minister properly emphasized, it is impossible for a person to foresee exactly what the circumstances may be five or ten years from now when that person is preparing a plan during the first few months of the new corporation's existence. Therefore the general requirement that the corporation take into account the question of alternative employment when preparing its over-all plan is hardly the kind of safeguard that we should have.

What gives me great concern is the wording of subclause (4) (b) which states that before closing or substantially reducing the production of coal from any coal mine operated by it the corporation shall ensure, in the first place, that the reduction takes place in accordance with the over-all plan, or any modification of it made later and, in the second place, that "all reasonable measures have been adopted... to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom."

This kind of language clearly contradicts the statement which the Prime Minister made and the sort of policy which the government claimed to have laid down, that the phasing out of coal would be geared to the phasing in of industry. As I said yesterday, I can appreciate that if a coal mine employing several hundred people is closed down there may be five, 10 or 20 miners who cannot immediately be placed in available work. But I suggest that the legislation ought to be such as to place a legislative duty on the corporation not to take any steps to phase out a coal mine until there is in fact alternative employment for those who will be displaced. This does not mean alternative employment for every single person but it does mean alternative employment for the work force as a whole.

Therefore, without taking the time of the committee to make a lengthy speech, I move:

> That paragraph (b) of subclause (4) of clause 17 be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the comma in line 7, page 9, and substituting the following words therefor:
> "to provide alternative employment for employees of the corporation who may be laid off as a result thereof."

The clause would then read that the corporation would have to assure itself that:

> (b) all reasonable measures have been adopted by the corporation, either alone or in conjunction with the government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or any agency of either of such governments, to provide alternative employment for employees of the corporation who may be laid off as a result thereof.

We have safeguarded against saying that this means job for job by the words "all reasonable measures" at the beginning of the subclause, which obviously do not place on the corporation any impossible task. But instead of saying, "Before you reduce coal production you should take measures to reduce unemployment and the effects of unemployment as much as possible" the clause would say to the corporation, "Before you can reduce any coal production you should take all reasonable measures to provide alternative employment for employees displaced by your action." I suggest it is a reasonable amendment, one which would carry the declared policy into effect much better than the present draft. It is an amendment in positive terms requiring the corporation to make sure that there is alternative employment.

I am of course fully aware of the fact that in this part of the bill we are concerned mainly with the coal division of the corporation, but the action is taken by the corporation itself and this clause refers to the corporation as a whole. Therefore I suggest my amendment is completely in order.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 17 I fully subscribe to the comments which have been made by the hon. member for York South. I believe that as a legislative body it is our duty to take into consideration the statement made by the Prime Minister on December 29, 1966 and also the statement made by the then minister of labour on October 5, 1965. Here we are a year and eight months later trying to get around to doing something in respect of both the statements made by the two hon. gentlemen. As members we are only trying to improve the legislation so that we will get the best possible bargain for those who unfortunately are affected as a result of the phasing out by the government of the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia.

I am very pleased that the hon. member for York South has introduced this amendment. Actually I had one prepared which reads as follows:

To ensure that no displacement of employees would take place without alternative work being provided.

So we are not too far apart in respect of our amendments. I think it is our duty to improve the legislation, as I have already intimated, in the best way possible so that no one will be hurt any more than already has been the case because of having been employed in the coal mines of Nova Scotia.

Subclause (4) (b) of clause 17 reads:

(b) all reasonable measures have been adopted by the corporation, either alone or in conjunction with the government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or any agency of either of such governments, to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom.

To my mind, and I believe in the minds of many members on this side of the house, this wording is rather vague. We would like to have spelled out a little more clearly what the government has in mind concerning what will be done for the workers who are to be displaced as a result of the phasing out of the coal mines. As we have stated, you cannot take a half dozen persons out of a coal mine and place them somewhere, and then take another 20 or another 50 tomorrow, without having a serious disruption of the operations of that mine. Therefore I believe it is up to the government and the corporation to make sure that something will be done en masse or in a similar manner so that no one will suffer any hardship. They should not be released from the coal mine when it is closed down and eight months later still be walking the streets trying to find employment.

I should like to ask the minister whether he is in a position to give us his views in respect of this amendment or the one I would propose. I believe either would be agreeable to us, but, I endorse the amendment of the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I need repeat that this legislation is both social and humanitarian and that there is a relationship between the phasing in and phasing out. The principles are very clear. The amendments which have been suggested, in some ways are more limiting than the wording in the bill itself. If the hon. member will look at the bill again he will see that it states—and I shall not read the entire subclause:

All reasonable measures...to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom.

I should like to emphasize the word "any". So this includes those people whom the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and the hon. member for York South particularly have in mind. Not only does it include employees but also other people who might suffer as a result of the phasing out of the coal mining activities. Therefore the wording as it appears in the bill is wider than what the hon. members have in mind. I think they should agree with the present wording.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot agree because in my opinion the wording, even though it has the meaning the minister suggested, is an invitation to the corporation to go ahead with coal production reduction even though this may result in unemployment. When I am told that it means to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or acute hardship, I do not know what is meant by "as far as possible".

The point I am making is that the general proposal in subclause 1 relates to the plan and when you are saying to the corporation when it may or may not undertake a substantial reduction in the production of coal all you are saying is that it must make sure there is as little unemployment as possible. That may mean unemployment for half the people in the mine.

Since it is six o'clock and we will probably have to turn to other business, I would suggest to the minister that perhaps a combination of the two might be appropriate. I am not wedded to the particular wording I have put forward. The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria had an alternative wording. I believe there should be a requirement that the corporation should not reduce coal production until there is satisfactory alternative employment available for all the employees as a whole. This would reduce the possibility of there being unavoidable unemployment for some people.

If the minister would like to give some thought to this point, then by all means I hope he will do so. I simply am not convinced that this wording is right. I emphasize that the provision which gives the corporation instructions concerning when it may or may not reduce coal production should again repeat in specific terms the idea contained in subclause 1 that it must have authority to take steps to deal with any unavoidable hardship. Personally I am not prepared to support the wording as it now stands with its emphasis on unemployment and economic hardship rather than on the basic underlying idea of alternative employment or alternative training before any reduction takes place.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont), Agriculture—assistance required for potato producers; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), Immigration—denial of landed immigrant status to Greek shepherd; the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack), Television—Napanee, Ont. —request for approval of cable facilities.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 6, 1967, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill No. C-112, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on two previous occasions I have spoken on the motion for second reading of this bill. Anyone who tries to follow those remarks will have a rather difficult time because they are scattered throughout Hansard for various dates from May 30 of this year going back to last session. This is one of the bills that had their roots in the previous session, but were not passed. Frankly, I do not think it should be passed on this occasion either because, as I have said on a number of occasions about this and similar bills, it contains within it no provision whatever to permit the company to comply with the enunciated policy of the government of Canada or the feelings of nearly all members of parliament.

The gist of our objection to the incorporation of Aetna Casualty Company of Canada is that this company should within a reasonable period of time become Canadian owned, and it has not done so yet. During the last session we had similar discussions and felt that this point of view had been fairly well set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) and had been supported by other members of the house. It was felt that when and if this company again desired to become incorporated it would be forewarned of the attitude which might be taken, namely, that it should become a Canadian owned company within a reasonable period of time.

The intricacies of the company and its relationship to a United States company have been clearly set out by the sponsor of the bill. I might point out that even if we reach the stage of voting the sponsor would regretably not have the opportunity of making any concluding remarks about our objections because he appears to be somewhere else. In any event, he set out very clearly the relationship between this company and the parent company in Hartford, Connecticut.

The sponsor of the bill also referred to the company's premium structure, the number of policies it sold and its income, but nowhere in his remarks was there any intimation that the company or the sponsor of the bill, who is a Liberal, had given any recognition whatever to the declared policy of the government as announced very forcibly and clearly by the Prime Minister and as supported by a number of members of the cabinet.

When government policy on a matter such as this is delcared by the first minister of the cabinet, the Prime Minister, individuals and their supporters who come to parliament seeking company incorporation under the umbrella and protection of the parliament of Canada have a duty to see that their bill complies with the announced policy. This bill fails to do that and I submit that the individual who—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that many members of the house will recall that I view nearly all private incorporations of insurance companies with a jaundiced eye. I have a particularly jaundiced eye in respect of this company. I have been reading the statement the sponsor made on May 30, as recorded in Hansard at page 752, about the astonishing generality of this company. It is to be a subsidiary of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford, Connecticut. That company is a corporation carrying on a substantial general insurance business in the United States with its subsidiary, the Standard Fire Insurance Company, and writes business on all classes of insurance.

The sponsor told us that the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company was organized in 1907 and operated as a partially owned subsidiary of Aetna Life Insurance Company until late in 1964 when a reorganization was conducted under which all the shares were transferred to and are now being held by a trustee for the shareholders of the Aetna Life Insurance Company.

The Aetna Life Insurance Company has had a similarly chequered career. It was incorporated and commenced business in 1853. The Aetna Life and Casualty organization now carries on business throughout the United States of America. The sponsor then tells us that the Aetna Life Insurance Company commenced business in Canada over 100 years ago. Apparently in 1960 the Aetna Life Insurance Company made an offer to the shareholders of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company of Toronto to purchase approximately 70 per cent of its outstanding shares. I suppose this is the way this company finally came into Canada.

There has been absolutely no concealment whatever that this is a foreign-owned corporation. It is owned entirely in the United States, and there is no suggestion that there are any other shareholders than those residing in the United States. At one point the sponsor of the bill had this to say:

> All but four of the present employees are Canadians—

He was referring to the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford which has claim offices in Toronto, Montreal, Quebec city, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. It would be interesting to know just who those four employees are, because I suspect that they are not office boys or stenographers. I suspect that one might find these four employees sitting in the executive offices of this company in Canada. The rest of the employees, who may be Canadian citizens, are not holding the important positions that these four unidentified, non-Canadians are holding.

• (6:10 p.m.)

There is another point I would have liked the sponsor to develop a little further. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) said:

> A financing plan has been developed to provide the capital and surplus necessary without impairing the balance of trade position of either Canada or the United States.

I presume he means the balance of payments position, because this is a purely financial matter. I should like to know what this plan is. Does it mean that this company is not merely to collect the savings of Canadians through insurance policies but is to collect the savings of Canadians by means of loans, presumably, and debentures in order to finance its operations in this country? I imagine this is what it will do, because it is the time-honoured method by which foreign companies have been able to extend their holdings in Canadian development, Canadian industry, Canadian resources and, as we see in this bill, Canadian financial institutions. I should like to know just what this particular financing plan, about which the sponsor was rather coy, might be. The sponsor made another rather interesting statement:

> The establishment of this Canadian company will create for Canada additional employment, additional capital funds and, as previously mentioned, additional capacity for the insurance market.

Let us deal with those three great advantages in allowing this foreign-owned company to move into the Canadian economy. It is said it will create additional employment in Canada. Well, perhaps it will. But I suggest that every policy written by the Aetna Casualty Company after this bill is passed will be written at the expense of an existing insurance company. There is, after all, a very definite limit to the amount of funds that are available for investing in the policies of this type of company. Therefore I doubt that there will really be any additional employment as a result of the incorporation of this company, or if there is it will be additional employment which will increase the rates because it will increase the costs of insurance companies doing business in Canada.

The sponsor says that the establishment of this company will provide additional capital funds. I wonder how that statement can be squared with the statement about the financing plan that will provide capital without affecting the balance of payments position between Canada and the United States. Obviously, if this company is to provide additional capital it must come from somewhere outside the country, and if it comes from somewhere outside the country it is bound to have some effect on our balance of payments position.

The final praise for this company, the final argument in favour of our accepting it, is that it will provide additional capacity for the insurance market. I have yet to hear any insurance company complaining that it has not the capacity to service everybody who tries to buy a policy from it. In fact, I am sure we all know that the major expenditure of insurance companies is the commissions and wages of agents who go out and try to sell policies. I do not think any additional capacity is required in the insurance market in that regard. I am quite sure the present insurance companies can write all the policies that the people of Canada want to have written. I believe that the present insurance companies can carry all the load of insurance that Canadian business wishes to have carried. It seems to me a rather preposterous idea to suggest that this company will provide additional capacity for the insurance market. What it will do is bring about additional costs to the whole insurance industry of this country, as does every new insurance company incorporated by this parliament.

I would report for the benefit of hon. members of the house the words of the inspector of insurance when I asked him in committee whether in his opinion the incorporation of new insurance companies was calculated to create the sort of competition that would reduce costs for the insurance policyholder. I will always remember that the inspector of insurance, after carefully considering my question, said: Well, I admit that in my department they are beginning to wonder whether it is necessary to have all these new insurance company incorporations. This was, of course, as close as one could in fairness expect a civil servant to come to criticizing the policies adopted by the government and the parliament of Canada. Obviously he had very grave doubts as to the benefits to be derived from incorporating more insurance companies.

I should like to stress again the way in which this bill completely flouts the announced policy of the government of Canada and of the parliament of Canada with regard to the foreign ownership of financial institutions. I am quite sure that the committee of which I am a member, and this parliament, did not take the action it took with regard to the Mercantile Bank of Canada as an isolated instance. It was a case in point which underlined the danger, in the view of the government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), of allowing non-Canadian interests to get a grip on Canadian financial institutions. This is one of those institutions that to my mind should be firmly in Canadian hands.

Let us look at it this way, Mr. Speaker. These people are not in business for amusement or for entertainment. They are in business to make money. They are going to make money, and we have not yet been told who is to provide the capital and the surplus with which they are to make money. We have had a rather contradictory statement from the sponsor of the bill. But they are in business to make money. They are going to make money out of the Canadian economy. They are going to persuade Canadian people, Canadian businesses and Canadian groups of all sorts to gamble with them on casualty insurance.

It may be true, as the sponsor of the bill says, that it is the intention of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, the parent company, to leave any underwriting profits in the Canadian company to strengthen its financial structure. This sounds like a very noble and righteous attitude on the part of the company. It will be what I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) is fond of calling "a good corporate citizen"; it will keep its money in Canada.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that every large Canadian subsidiary of an American company has expanded its operations in precisely this way, through what are rather euphemistically called internally generated savings or retained earnings. In blunter parlance, of course, this means excess or surplus profits. This company will leave them here, of course, because it intends to expand its operations. It will expand its operations at the expense of the existing companies in this country.

While I hold no particular brief for any insurance company, domestic or foreign, if I had to make a choice I would rather see my fellow Canadian citizens have the opportunity to make money out of the rest of us than have people from another country do so. I would be very strenuously opposed to the passage of the bill at this time, particularly when the government has taken a firm position with regard to another financial institution, a position which may well be challenged in a few years time, as I warned the Minister of Finance only a few days ago. When it is challenged I can hear Mr. Rockefeller saying to the government of Canada and the Minister of Finance that they allowed the Aetna Casualty Company of Hartford to come into Canada and set up a company wholly owned by American capital and asking why we are discriminating against him. This is what he said when he came here last time. We will give him an added argument to support his contention that the Canadian parliament was guilty of gross discrimination against the Mercantile Bank of Canada.

I feel very strongly on this matter because of my attitude toward the whole insurance industry, both domestic and foreign. I think that before long we will have to move very quickly in this field because it will become part of any program in the direction of investment, if we are going to develop Canada in the way we want to develop it. If we allow companies which have the privilege of collecting the savings of Canadians to be in foreign hands, our task will be rendered more difficult. So I am very strenuously opposed to the passage of this bill and I hope the house will reject it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the comments that have been made on this bill both by the sponsor and by some of my colleagues. I hope the day will come when such statements do not have to be made, when a statement such as the one I made earlier regarding the national ownership of our resources will be taken for granted. I hope no one will consider allowing the ingress of United States businessmen into a field which affects the lives and aspirations of Canadians any more than they will allow a situation to develop similar to what took place today when the government showed no offence at the fact that an American board made a ruling which gave them an opportunity to get off the hook.

The Aetna Casualty Company is probably no worse or no better than any of the other insurance companies operating in this field. It is true of this company, as it is of car insurance and crop damage insurance companies whose agents receive a percentage of the premiums that are paid by individuals, that the administration costs exceed the normal costs of good operation. As we learned last year, Aetna Casualty Company has been doing business in Canada for a number of years in several fields. One of their subsidiaries is the Excelsior Life Insurance Company which is owned entirely by them and has been allowed to grow in Canada until it has become one of the largest life insurance companies. They have also been operating a branch office in Canada under the agency of Dale and Company of Montreal. It is interesting to note that part of Expo was insured by this company. Perhaps at the time of the incorporation of the company I should have asked the sponsor what aspect of Expo was insured by them, whether they issued insurance against inability to meet the deadline for the opening of Expo or whether it was insurance against fire losses.

It is a fact that for a number of years now this company has operated in Canada in both the life insurance and casualty fields. It is also true that for many years the Aetna Casualty Company has been operating from Hartford and has been under the control of the Department of Industry to the extent that it is covered by the foreign Insurance Companies Act.

I had the opportunity of talking to some of the officials of the company whom I found to be very astute businessmen. In my opinion they are not unlike the type of people we would want to run a Canadian company. They were of the opinion that it was going to be very difficult for them to meet the commitment which I think most people in Canada would like to see met by companies coming into Canada to do business. I think there are two types of companies. There are those that come here with risk capital, are willing to put up their money to do business in our country and are prepared to offer a large employment potential. Second, there are the companies which offer very limited employment but which accumulate large sums of money in a very short period of time. This money is advanced to the subsidiaries by the headquarters located outside of Canada at very small risk, and it is only necessary for them to have this money available.

We find in the bill that the incorporation of the company is asked for by a number of lawyers. It seems to me that the fact that a lawyer who is resident in Canada is being asked to represent a new company proves that they are not really establishing a company but are setting up a holding operation for some other group. With the exception of Melvin Kirkland Kenny, an insurance executive, and Albert Bruce Matthews who is listed as an executive, I would presume the others are only acting in trust and are in fact what are called, in fairly vulgar vernacular, "fronts" for other persons. If we are really going to carry out what has been said to be the intention of the Prime Minister and certainly of the former minister of finance, that is, put this type of operation under Canadian control to provide funds for investment in Canada, then we should seriously consider this matter.

Clause 6 of the bill lists the fields in which this company wishes to operate. It is obvious that the money which is put up in the various fields will never be collected. This may even be true of automobile insurance where the rate of payment is much higher than in other fields.

Many of us wonder how long it will take the Liberal party, or whatever party may form the government of Canada, to make up their mind to enter the field of insurance and provide what is obviously a necessary protection for Canadians through the establishment of a crown corporation so that the money invested in such companies can be used for other purposes. This field has been partly covered by the Canada Pension Plan. I believe we are developing a pension plan that meets many of the requirements which were not previously met by insurance companies. One of these was the need for sums secured by life insurance policies to bear some relationship to the need of the person insured. It is a fact that during the depression people found it difficult to keep up payments of premiums on policies, and in many cases were forced to abandon their policies. After saving and scrimping for many years to meet the premiums of an endowment policy for $10,000 or $20,000 which during the depression years was probably equivalent to $100,000 today, they lost everything.

We have attempted to remove some of the abuse from the insurance field, particularly with endowment policies and pensions, and have appointed a government agency to administer the Canada Pension Plan. We have not done the same thing to cover such risks as hail, for example, or some of the other risks that other companies are covering, such as forgery, falling aircraft, explosions, earthquakes, automobile accidents, water damage, wind storms, and so on. These are risks which involve, in my opinion, a large premium. It is almost like allowing a company to print money.

That alone would be bad enough, Mr. Speaker, but we even let these companies come into Canada and speculate against the interests of our own people, who provide the money for this speculation in the form of premiums. The corporation concerned at the same time accumulates a large profit.

It is all very well for the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill to say that this money will not be taken out of the country. Certainly, I am sure the superintendent of insurance will see to it that enough money is kept in Canada to meet the commitments that these companies make. Nevertheless, in view of the undistributed profits and the reserves that these companies accumulate, in my opinion the government should control this field in the interests of the general public.

It is interesting to note that if you want, for example, to build a house in my area Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not lend money if the house is to be serviced with a septic tank. They do not say that a septic tank is undesirable, but they do say that too many septic tanks close together are undesirable, which is probably true. However, this corporation was not set up to decide on a national housing policy for Canada. The officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation suggest that these people borrow money from insurance companies or trust companies if the house they want to build is to have a septic tank.

These corporation officials tell these people: "We are a crown agency set up to help you build a house. We will not let you build it where you want because, in our own small way, we want to restrict you or put a roadblock in the way of your building your house in this area". As a result, the insurance company enters the field and uses for mortgage purposes the money deposited with that company. The policy holders do not get any return from that investment unless, of course, they collect on their insurance.

Suppose I were to protect myself against forgery, Mr. Speaker. If someone gave me a bad cheque I doubt whether the amount would nearly equal the premiums I had paid to the company, particularly if I were a small businessman. Yet these companies are allowed to come into Canada and issue policies of insurance, collect these vast sums by way of premiums, and then plough this money back in the form of mortgages and other instruments.

I attended a committee for most of the afternoon which was sitting in camera and doing a very good job. I found almost total unanimity about most of the work the committee was doing. I can remember that during the last five years I have stood in my place during this same hour and was criticized, browbeaten, told that I was stupid, was a communist, was a fascist, and so on, yet the same people who accused me of these things were sitting on that committee agreeing to matters which we legitimately tried to persuade them to accept four or five years ago. At that time we had absolutely no support.

I should like to see some of the members who sponsor these bills have the gumption to tell these companies that we in Canada are not interested in having all these insurance companies. We do not need a proliferation of 10,000 insurance companies. We are not going to solve the unemployment problem by having policy holders all over the country starving to death. If only these members would do this these companies which abuse the needs of the Canadian public would not receive incorporation from this parliament.

Aetna is proposing to cover risks which are already covered. I am not saying they are being dishonest or that the sponsor of the bill is being dishonest. I give both of them the benefit of the doubt by saying that they do not know any better. But the sponsors of these bills are not telling the Canadian people what these companies are doing. This bill concerns the Aetna Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, which wants to set up a company in this country with a board of directors composed of four or five Canadians in order to comply with the terms which have been laid down for the incorporation of such companies. The bill says that the capitalization of this company shall be $5 million, divided into shares of $50.

Aetna Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, could set up a thousand insurance companies tomorrow on the strength of the companies they already own. They are not selling $5 million worth of stock divided in $50 shares. This stock will never be sold; it will probably never appear on the market. It does not need to be sold because the company itself could put up that sum tomorrow.

They have already done so. They came here some years ago and established the Excelsior Life Insurance Company. It grew into a very large and responsible company and it had no difficulty about raising money at any time. Surely hon. members should give some consideration to what is done with these large sums which these insurance companies accumulate. Suppose our old age pensioners were receiving $25 more than they needed, and put this amount of money away under their mattresses. I believe we should soon find ourselves in serious trouble. I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) say that the cost of raising old age pensions would amount to $800 million—a terrible sum. Well, we covered about three quarters of the amount proposed, and the cost amounted to about $200 million. As I pointed out, most of this goes back to the government in a very short time after three or four transactions. Suppose this extra money were placed in the hands of an insurance company. It would be the same as putting it into savings. It is true protection is provided, but much of the money has to be held. This money is reinvested by the companies. It is this investment which makes money, not the insurance.

The companies are not investing their own money. If the company which is making this application wished to come to Canada and invest on the stock market, it could do so. But it would have to put up its own money, and it has no intention of doing that. These companies intend to accumulate your money, and my money, and then invest it at the highest possible rate of return.

I believe the day will come when the government—and I can only look to the Liberal government—will really believe in what they have been telling us is their policy. They have stated they would like to buy Canada back but that they want to do it quickly and with as little disruption as possible. The only disruption in the banking world so far has been in connection with Mercantile. I sat on the committee, or, rather, I sat in at some of the hearings—I was not a member of the committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired. He may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the house.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): My hon. friend from High Park, who is unavoidably absent, has asked me to reply to the points raised in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: It may be that we have not yet reached the point at which the hon. member will be called upon to perform that duty.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have just listened to the eloquent speech of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). He convinces me he has a deep grasp of this subject. In addition, I have read the speech which was made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) and this, too, appears to me to be most penetrative and persuasive.

This places upon me and other members of the house a duty to explore this field much more thoroughly and therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett):

That this bill be not now read the second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Peters: I would defer to the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) if he wishes to comment. Otherwise I rise to support the amendment which has just been moved.

Before this motion was introduced I was saying that I was impressed, after listening to the proceedings of the banking committee, to find that the government had no objection to limiting Canadian banking institutions to those which were under Canadian ownership and control. This attitude is understandable when we recall that during the last election there was evidence of considerable interest on the hustings in my riding and, no doubt, elsewhere, in the development of Canadian nationalism in economic matters. This particular banking institution was given only a short period of time in which to decide whether to expand, sell, and become Canadian, or take the other alternative. The situation somewhat resembled the situation in Cuba when the government there changed and the American Fruit Company found that some of its practices were no longer allowed to go unchallenged. The government said: You have the right to get out, and we will buy you out at our price.

The remarks of Mr. Rockefeller at the committee hearing indicated he felt there was a similarity between the methods used by the two governments, one a banana republic and the other a staid, responsible country like Canada. But let us consider the position of these insurance companies. Here is a well established company asking for permission to set up a Canadian organization under Canadian ownership and control. I am not saying there is anything wrong about this; it is what we decide to do about it that matters. One of the hon. members opposite stands up here and says that the board of directors will be composed of Canadians. A small number will have voting rights and the others, presumably, will sit there and be unable to influence policy very much, if at all.

I wish I had been educated in the ways of the business world, for I have often wondered what happens in these situations when one or two people own all, or almost all, of the stock in a company. They are always on the board of directors, if they choose to be so. If they want to be presidents, they always are. And if they say "This is the way things should go", that is the way things are done.

I can think of some of the gold mines I have known where someone who was able to buy the largest block of stock called a shareholders' meeting and said, "We will close down this mine and distribute the money that is in the bank." I remember one little company which did this, Lakeshore Mining. I do not really understand this type of operation, but from my limited knowledge of the actual practices these four gentlemen from the United States will in effect be the whole company because they will make all the decisions. The hiring of Canadians to fill the rest of the spaces is just complying with our government's policy on matters of foreign ownership and controlling our own economy.

I also note that the people who introduce these bills are mostly lawyers. I have often heard it said that the legal profession—

Mr. Wahn: I rise on a point of order. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this speech is merely a continuation of the remarks which the hon. member made earlier. He exhausted his time before the amendment was moved, and I am sure in his usual straightforward manner the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would admit quite cheerfully that the amendment which has been moved by some of his colleagues was moved merely as a device to permit him to extend his time beyond that allotted by the rules, and filibuster the bill before the house. In the circumstances it seems to me this is a device that is out of order, unless the hon. member for Timiskaming indicates that that is not his intention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I might remind the hon. member that he should not suggest that the member who moved the amendment had ulterior motives. The amendment speaks for itself and I would think the speech which was being made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is quite in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, bear.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I was just pointing out that most of these bills are introduced by lawyers. It is a very closely knit little club. If I were a lawyer maybe I too would be in a position to move this kind of bill, or as many bills of this nature as I wished. I have noticed the number of lawyers listed as members of the boards of directors in the last two or three bills in which I have been interested. In this one we have Albert Bruce Matthews, an executive, Melvin Kenny, an insurance executive, John Hamilton Cameron Clarry, described as one of Her Majesty's counsel, which I presume means he is a Q.C. and lawyer, Granville Patrick Harcourt Vernon, also one of Her Majesty's counsel, Peter Greer Beattie, solicitor, and Stephen Clifford Smith, solicitor, all of the city of Toronto in the province of Ontario.

This must be a nice little game because each of these companies has four or five lawyers as directors. If I could make some use of this kind of operation and I was a lawyer, all I would need to do is to be appointed to a number of boards. I could attend their meetings if I wished, but I would not have to attend because I would not have anything to say. I would only be on the board because I was a Canadian, owning ten shares or something like that. Possibly some hon. members may be thinking that they will be defeated eventually in an election and it would be nice for them to be considered in this group.

The point I am making is that we are not interested in merely having Canadians on the board of directors. We, in this group, would like to have Canadians on the board because we believe that eventually the Canadian business community must have the overriding interest in things Canadian. When an insurance company such as this makes an application for a charter to collect money, that money should be used for the benefit of some Canadian enterprise, be it in the mortgage field or insurance protection field.

Obviously the money that is collected does not all go into protection. Any insurance company that collected $1 million and paid out $1 million in claims would not be coming to Canada or anywhere else. If it is a business operation it collects $1 million, pays out much less than that in claims, and invests the rest.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), the first in his book on economic prospects and Canadian development, and the second in speeches in this house, have said that companies must be good Canadian corporate citizens. I think the Canadians being appointed to many of these boards are not necessarily good corporate citizens. They are citizens who are being employed for a specific purpose.

The day must come soon when we strengthen our Department of Insurance and make it responsbile for recommending what insurance companies should be added to the present total. The Aetna Casualty Company will not do one thing in Canada that cannot be done by some company already established. If it were to offer one kind of insurance that nobody else offers, it would serve a need and would deserve consideration. But I think we must all agree there are hundreds if not thousands of insurance companies in Canada today supplying exactly the same kind of insurance that this company will provide. Thus we are not doing a good service by incorporating this company.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[English]

The house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Ryan in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Ryan): As it is seven o'clock the committee is suspended until eight o'clock.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation, clause 17 and the amendment thereto by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, may I say first that I am in agreement with the amendment put forward by the hon. member for York South in that it goes to the heart of the subject which I have presented to the minister on previous occasions, when the bill was before the house at the resolution stage, on second reading and in committee. The wording of the amendment is:

—to provide alternative employment for employees of the corporation who may be laid off as a result thereof.

This is the wording which is suggested should be added to clause 17 (4) (b).

If the mine in the constituency which I represent, which is one of the Dosco mines, had been included by the minister in this legislation, if the wording as suggested by the amendment of the hon. member for York South should be adopted, the employees of that mine of course would be ensured of the protection which would be provided by the amended clause.

As has been pointed out earlier in the debate—and this bears repetition—a telegram dated today was directed to the Prime Minister and undoubtedly also to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as to members from the area, from the president and other officers of the United Mine Workers of America, District 26. I think this should be put on the record. It was referred to earlier during the question period. I will read it quickly:

United Mine Workers of America District 26 shocked and dismayed over federal Bill C-135 to exclude McBean mine in the proposed crown corporation.

What follows refers to something I mentioned during the resolution stage:

This action completely contradicts Prime Minister's statement December 29, 1966—

The quotation is taken from the minister's statement.

—when he said and I quote:

Assured of the participation of the government of Nova Scotia, the government of Canada is prepared to ask parliament to establish a suitable crown corporation—the composition and powers of which will be defined by the two governments at an early date—to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interest of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation.

That is the end of that part of the quotation. The telegram continues:

[The Chairman.]

This automatically includes Acadia, which is a subsidiary of Dosco.

Then there is another quotation from the Prime Minister's statement:

The government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia believe that a rigid adherence to a fixed timetable to reduce the level of coal production might involve unnecessary hardship on the dependent communities. Consequently the rationalization of the mines will be related to the success in the introduction of new industries.

That is the end of that quotation.

So that McBean or any other colliery would have to be kept in operation until new industries were introduced to provide alternate employment as promised by Prime Minister Pearson. Further on in the Prime Minister's statement he indicated that the government of the province of Nova Scotia would be held responsible for the smaller independent operations and the federal government would be responsible for the Dosco mines which automatically again includes McBean.

Then the telegram concludes in this way:

The officers of District 26 United Mine Workers of America urgently request a meeting of representatives of the federal government, provincial government and the United Mine Workers of America District 26 to clarify this misunderstanding.

May I repeat that if this mine had been taken in along with the other Dosco mines as was promised, this clause, of course, would apply and, if the amendment of the hon. member for York South is passed—I hope it will be and I commend it to all members—the workers at this mine would be guaranteed alternative employment.

When I asked the minister a question about this mine he said at one point that it would cost approximately $2 million to continue it to the end of 1967. At another point he said that perhaps this money should be used to continue the mine and at another point he said that perhaps it should be used for another purpose.

We do not know whether he will be the minister, but he has also stated that perhaps it will take close to three months or five months to get the corporation working. As I said before, the Donald report suggested that there should be resources from this mine until 1970. We are not clear what the minister has said, but if this mine were taken in under the terms of clause 17, as was promised by the Prime Minister on December 29 of last year, then these miners, the men working on the surface and, the office staff would be protected.

Yesterday I referred to a telegram from the New Glasgow and district labour council which suggested there should be alternative employment. Today I received a telegram from the president of local 8672, which is the United Mine Workers sub-district 3 at Thorburn. This telegram is signed by James A. Murphy and it reads:

• (8:10 p.m.)

On behalf of the membership of local 8672 United Mine Workers sub-district 3 this is to protest that the McBean colliery was not included in the taking over of the mines by the federal and provincial governments according to the Chronicle-Herald.

I also received a telegram from local 510-A of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Transport and General Workers which represents some of the officials at this mine, including shotfirers and examiners. It is signed by the president who points out that 400 men are relying on myself, this house and this government to provide alternative employment and to give some clear picture of what will happen to these men.

For this reason I submit that the McBean mine should be included for coverage under this legislation and that this amendment should be carried by a strong vote.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Before the dinner hour I stated I was fully in accord with the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South. In the interval I had an opportunity to look over some documents and I should like to place one of them on the record to further enlighten the minister as to what the United Mine Workers think about this situation. Let me first of all endorse the representations put forward so ably by the hon. member for Pictou regarding the inclusion under this legislation of the McBean mine.

The hon. member for Pictou quoted from the Prime Minister's statement of December 29, and I think at least a portion of it bears repeating. He said:

Assured of the participation of the government of Nova Scotia, the government of Canada is prepared to ask parliament to establish a suitable crown corporation—the composition and powers of which will be defined by the two governments at an early date—to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal corporation—

When the minister replies I hope he will advise when the McBean mine became an orphan of the Dosco family, or when this division took place. I understood the McBean mine was operated by the Dosco corporation or the Hawker-Siddeley group. We now are receiving telegrams from representatives of the unions concerned, and for the information of the minister, in case he has not heard of this previously, I should like to read him a news item from the Cape Breton Post dated Tuesday, June 13, 1967. It is headed "Marsh is Critical" and it reads:

U.M.W. president Bill Marsh said Monday he was disappointed the union was not consulted prior to introduction of legislation establishing the Cape Breton crown corporation. The legislation is scheduled to go before the House of Commons this week. Speedy approval by all parties is anticipated.

"We are pleased of course the legislation, at long last, is ready for approval," Mr. Marsh said. "However, we also are disappointed the union was not consulted, particularly after we learned that the company's general manager was called to Ottawa on Monday."

The article then refers to the opening of a new colliery at Lingan, which of course has been assured by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on a number of occasions on political broadcasts and telecasts. This has also been repeated and reaffirmed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport. Only the other evening he nodded his head in agreement when I asked whether we were going to have a new mine opening at Lingan. Yesterday evening the minister of mines said that if the Cape Breton development corporation saw fit, it might open a new mine at Lingan. We hope that this new mine will be opened.

Is it correct that representatives of the company were called in to discuss this legislation, and is it correct that no invitation was extended to the district officers of the United Mine Workers of America, district 26? I am sure that had they been invited they would have made their point very clear in respect of the McBean mine. In that event I am sure we would not be having this discussion tonight.

When the minister rises to answer the criticisms and representations in respect of the McBean mine and the amendment that has been proposed, I hope he will advise us why representatives from the United Mine Workers were not called in for consultation regarding matters to be included in this legislation. After all the statements which have been made by the people who are supposed to be in responsible positions, I fail to see how this government can make statements such as were made prior to the federal election which took place on November 8, 1965, particularly when they are now backtracking and weaseling out of their commitments.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I should not like to appear to be scolding hon. members because that is not my intention, but if we keep on repeating the same arguments, I dare say we will be here tonight, tomorrow and the day after. Those who will suffer are not in the city of Ottawa.

I have been as explicit as I can about the McBean mine. I repeated my position at noon today, and I suggest the hon. member for Pictou now understands the situation. The economic situation in Pictou county is not the same as the situation on Cape Breton island. We are intervening in Cape Breton because there is a situation which is of national concern and importance. As I said at noon, if we are going to pick up mines all over Nova Scotia and possibly New Brunswick, why not in northern Quebec and northern Ontario where some are having some difficulties too? While we are at it, why not pick up a couple of coal mines in Newfoundland which are also in difficulty?

Mr. MacEwan: You do not know much about mining.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): What about the Dosco mine?

Mr. Pepin: The point I am making is simply that the federal government is not in the business of taking over coal mines which have come to the end of their reserves. That is not the purpose of this program. The purpose is to remedy the situation which exists on Cape Breton island. If parliament feels we should do something elsewhere in Canada, we will do so on some other occasion, but at this very moment the dramatic situation on Cape Breton island is our problem.

This afternoon the hon. member for York South was questioning the value of the words "as far as possible" in the legislation. I think he is splitting hairs. Even in old, medieval French law there is an axiom which says:

"A l'impossible nul n'est tenu."

I am quite sure the hon. member for York South does not want to hold this corporation to the impossible. I think it is quite enough to hold it to the possible. The corporation will do whatever is possible to help the people of Cape Breton. The corporation will improve on the situation and rescue what is rescuable in the coal mining operation. It will do whatever it can to develop, improve and modernize the industry.

We are going to have an industrial division which will be busy attracting industry to the area. It will have a certain amount of money for this purpose. Twenty million dollars will be given by the federal government and $10 million by the government of Nova Scotia to assist in this action. If this is not enough, the house will see to it that more money is made available. We are establishing the principle that every dollar saved on the coal mining side will be devoted to economic development.

The legislation has been drafted to provide for whatever is possible. We made it as flexible as is humanly possible so that the corporation might attract good men. I have already given the guarantee that we will obtain the best men possible in this field. We have to trust these people. We do not have to tell them tonight, item by item and comma by comma, what to do. This is not the kind of people we want to have in the development corporation. They might not even look too closely at the legislation but will use their common sense. The legislation is just to help them get the message the government has in mind.

I am quite sure it is impossible for the corporation, to quote what the hon. member for York South said, to make sure that every worker leaving the mines will find a job at the same place the very evening he is laid off. This is not possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: I believe that the amendment now proposed will have the effect of confining the industrial approach vis-à-vis the coal mining work force. The present wording of the clause fulfils the concept of the bill in that it relates employment opportunities to the entire area, including the young people coming onto the labour market. The hon. member for York South would like us to specify the coal employees who would benefit from this legislation. We are even more ambitious than that. We want this corporation to have a direct influence on the economic development of the island, which will make it possible, "as far as possible," for young people born and raised in the area to stay there and find worthwhile employment on the spot.

I really beg hon. members not to start splitting hairs and try to add a comma and a word here and there. Professors of law say that the spirit of the legislation is more important than the word. My hon. friend from York South is a good lawyer and should understand that. We are not here tonight to dissect this legislation as Benedictines used to do in medieval times with the Bible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: This is not a medieval study of the Bible; this is a piece of modern legislation. The purpose of the legislation is to do whatever is possible to help the people of Cape Breton; and the good Lord knows they are in need of help—and now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the minister has allowed his eloquence and exuberance to carry him away.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas: He is debating now like a high school student—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas: —when he tells us that the spirit of the legislation is what matters and it is not the words that matter. The minister is asking this house to approve legislation, and the words are important because the words set down the terms and conditions under which this corporation will operate. The words determine the powers the corporation shall exercise. We are not trying to obstruct the minister; we are trying to see that the powers given to the corporation carry out the spirit of the undertakings which the Prime Minister gave to the people of Cape Breton, to this house and to the country in his speech of December 29 last and the promises that were made by the member of the cabinet who represents the province of Nova Scotia.

This bill has been a long time coming. The minister need not complain about the few hours we have taken to discuss it. We have been waiting for months to get some action in this regard. It is more than a year and a half since the Minister of National Health and Welfare made very sweeping promises to the people engaged in coal mining in Cape Breton. We have been waiting ever since for the government to do something. Therefore, the minister need not complain now when after this long delay he brings before us a piece of legislation and we want to know exactly what the government has in mind. We want the legislation worded in such a way that we will not be told afterwards that because of the wording of the legislation the Cape Breton Development Corporation is not able to do the things we were given to understand it would do.

I am not going to belabour the point to the minister if he is adamant that he will not change any of the wording of the bill. But once again I make the plea in respect of the McBean coal mine. The minister says he does not want to go grabbing mines all over the country. I do not think he is grabbing any mines when he takes over the mines in Cape Breton. He is relieving Dosco of a very serious headache, presumably for the purpose of making it a little easier and lessening some of the hardship which would otherwise fall upon the people employed in the coal industry of Cape Breton.

We are not asking the minister to grab mines all over the country. What the hon. member for Pictou, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, the hon. member for York South and others have been pleading with the minister to do is recognize that the McBean mine is part of the Dosco operation. It is no secret that Dosco has been phasing out its coal operations in Cape Breton. Has the minister any reason to think that Dosco will continue to operate the McBean mine at full capacity, or is it going to be phased out too?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. member wants an answer; but I know one thing, that we have offered Dosco a continuation of subsidies at the present level. The decision is, of course, theirs.

Mr. Douglas: That the subventions will be continued?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: On the McBean mine? But the subventions, of course, have been available for the mines in Cape Breton and this has not kept them from being slowly phased out. All we are saying is that surely the government ought to look ahead, and if the McBean mine will be in a similar position to the mines in the Sydney, Glace Bay and New Waterford areas, would it not be advisable to include that mine in this program? It is not likely that Dosco will keep this one orphan operating at full capacity, when it has managed to dispose of its other coal mines to this Cape Breton Development Corporation.

• (8:30 p.m.)

For that reason I think the minister should give serious thought to the advisability of including the McBean operation under the auspices of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I do not know what discussions district 26 of the United Mine Workers had with the government, but certainly judging from the telegram from which I quoted during orders of the day they were under the impression that the McBean mine was going to be included. They seemed to be surprised and shocked at the fact that the government has not kept its commitment. Certainly, if one reads the press release which was issued from the Prime Minister's office on December 29 one gets the impression that the new Cape Breton Development Corporation was going to deal with all the mines owned by Dosco in the general area of Nova Scotia.

I hope the minister will give serious thought to this. There is nothing much one can do if the government is adamant, although I had hoped the government would have given the coal miners an opportunity to make representations before making a final decision. I hope the minister will propose, before we come out of committee of the whole, some all embracing clause in the bill which would enable the government at a later date to include the McBean mine, if it is not prepared to include it now.

May I say to the minister that what I greatly fear, if the bill passes in its present form, is that the government may well find within six months or a year men are being laid off at the McBean mine. We will then be told, when we raise the matter in the house, "the bill is passed, there is nothing we can do about it." I wish the minister would give some thought to the possibility of an all inclusive clause which would allow the Cape Breton Development Corporation to extend its operations to any other mine in the general area, by order of the governor in council, if it were thought advisable to do so.

May I say a word or two about the matter of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South. He is not suggesting for a moment that we ask any corporation to do something which it is not possible to do. I think the minister must recognize that this committee is most anxious that the guide lines laid down for this corporation shall be most explicit. Certainly, one of the guide lines that is in keeping with the promises made by the government, as contained in the statement of the Prime Minister of December 29, is that there should be a direct relationship between laying men off from the coal mines and the establishment of new industries.

On page 3 of the press release which the Prime Minister's office issued on December 29 I read:

> The government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia believe that a rigid adherence to a fixed timetable to reduce the level of coal production might involve unnecessary hardship on the dependent communities. Consequently, the rationalization of the mines will be related to the success in the introduction of new industries. The Crown Corporation will be instructed to give full consideration to the need for orderly adjustment, including the implementation of a generous early retirement plan for the miners as recommended by Dr. Donald.

I draw particular attention to the phrase "the rationalization of the mines will be related to the success in the introduction of new industries". That is all the hon. member for York South is asking, that there be a rigid adherence to the principle that mines will not be phased out until the corporation has assured that new employment opportunities have been created in that community to provide jobs for men who are laid off from the coal mining industry.

So far, apart from a considerable display of emotionalism, the minister has not given us any reason for not accepting this amendment.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Would the leader of the New Democratic party favour an increase in the price of gold in order that our gold mines may be kept open and the miners employed for better wages?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take two or three minutes to reply to the very charming and irrelevant remarks which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made with regard to the amendment which I laid before the committee. The minister attempted, and he did it very well as he has always done, to teach me something about the law. I am sure I can learn a great deal. When he made the statement that it is the spirit of the law that matters, or even when he said that it is even more important than the word, let me tell him that it is the words of the law which create the spirit. The spirit does not come out of somebody's pocket. When he tells us that it is not necessary to dot every "i" and cross every "t", let me tell him that I am not asking him to do that.

When he tells me that we have a group of men who will be good, then I say we are always faced with this. When the men and women are already appointed and we suggest that some guidance should be given to them, we are accused of lacking confidence in them. When the men and women have not even been appointed and we do not know who they are, we are asked to act on the assumption that they will have not only common sense but the wisdom of the Almighty and that this legislation need not give them the guidance that is required. In any case surely the speech which the minister made was a contradiction of his own law. If he had used his excellent mind as well as his silver tongue and if he was right, then why is there any need for subclause (4)? What is the need for this subclause if he is ready to leave it to the common sense of the board of directors of the corporation? Why does he need to tell them that they should follow the plan? I say to him that one purpose of a law is to give to the people with whom the law is concerned confidence that they are obtaining right and just treatment under the law. When the direct and specific instructions to the corporation, instructions which are to govern the reduction in the production of coal in the Cape Breton area, are understood by the mine workers and members of the community to mean that the corporation is to be concerned about the reduction so far as possible of any unemployment or economic hardship, then people in Cape Breton have a right to suspect, as I must admit frankly I suspect, that the board of directors of the corporation is instructed to follow the usual commercial criteria in deciding whether or not coal production will be reduced. I say to the minister that this is what the corporation should not do, and in his announcement the Prime Minister said that it was not to do that.

I told the minister that I am not particularly wedded to the language I placed before the committee. If his advisers can produce better or other language, I would not quarrel with them. I say that the instructions to the corporation should repeat in specific language the principle which the Prime Minister stated lies behind this and the principle which is included in subclause (1) of this clause, namely that the reduction in the production of coal must be geared to the creation of alternative job opportunities for the people affected thereby.

This is what my amendment seeks to do. The emphasis is not on ensuring that there be as little unemployment as possible but on ensuring that there will be job opportunities for the people who are affected by the reduction of coal production.

I do not need the lecture on the meaning of the law from the minister, nor does the committee. What this committee needs from the minister is acceptance of—to me—the obvious necessity for the inclusion in the bill of specific instructions to the corporation which embody the general principle that there is not to be any phasing out in the coal industry except when job opportunities have already been created. There may be a few workers in any given situation who cannot be accommodated, but this contingency is, of course, met by the opening words of the subclause—"all reasonable measures".

May I come back to the words of the minister, which are important and were sufficient to get his party stalwarts to bang their desks. If the spirit of the law is important, the spirit of the subclause that he has put into the law is, I submit, the wrong spirit. This is a spirit which emphasizes unemployment and economic hardship, instead of the right spirit which is to emphasize the importance of providing alternative employment. This, Mr. Chairman, is what we are talking about.

If the minister is as concerned as he says he is about the general conditions in Cape Breton, and if he is as determined as he says he is that this corporation is to gear new jobs to phasing out, why does he refuse to accept this amendment, not necessarily the present wording but the principle of it, which would give specific instructions to the corporation? His refusal to do so strengthens my conviction that this amendment is necessary.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, my conviction that the amendment is necessary has also been strengthened. I have listened very carefully to the debate that has been going on about this matter. I listened to the impassioned outbursts of the minister, who, waving his arms and hammering his desk to arouse his followers, expressed his sentiments of interest in the people who are going to be displaced from their work in Cape Breton. But impassioned outbursts are not what we want with legislation of this nature. What is required is a much more realistic view of things. Never mind these eloquent speeches about what the Liberal government is going to do; let us have a realistic appraisal of the very sensible amendment that has been proposed.

We must not forget, Mr. Chairman, that this bill has been produced by the Liberal government, and that anything that the Liberal government produces by way of legislation must not be altered. Fortunately, there are one or two members of the present government who do listen to reasonable suggestions from this side of the house, but just look at what the minister has done with this bill. He has written into the bill that there will be unemployment, and he has written into the bill that there will be economic hardship. This is what he is telling the people of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia, that there is going to be unemployment despite the corporation that is to be appointed to take over certain mines and attempt to rehabilitate the coal mining industry; that there is going to be economic hardship.

That is a message of despondency and surely will not be of any comfort to the people living in that area. The proposed amendment puts things in a positive fashion and, as has already been pointed out, there is the safeguard that all reasonable measures have to be taken to provide employment for people who are displaced by reason of changes that are made in the coal mining industry.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, does not alter at all the general purpose of the bill. If this amendment were adopted it would express the intention of the house as a whole to give assistance to the coal mining industry and to the employees of that industry in Cape Breton. That is what we are attempting to do through this legislation.

I, therefore, ask why the minister cannot go a step further and use positive terms, instead of proclaiming to the people of that area that they are going to face unemployment and economic hardship? They are familiar with these things, and we are hoping to lift them from their shoulders.

The minister would certainly gain much greater acclaim from this side of the house as well as from the claque behind him if he would take this further step and embody this positive affirmation, instead of stubbornly insisting on phraseology which was carelessly put into the bill in the first instance. Just why a government cannot change its mind and accept suggestions from other people in the house always amazes me. This suggestion has been made in good faith, not with the intention of embarrassing the government. This amendment has been made with the intention of improving the bill and having the bill express what is the intent of the House of Commons.

I have never been impressed with repeated statements on the government side that everything that they intend to do should be taken in good faith, that we must trust them and that those who are put in charge will surely do everything for the betterment of the people who are under their jurisdiction. Why not write this statement into the bill, Mr. Chairman?

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, despite the eloquent plea of the minister, which I dismiss as lacking argument and as being only an emotional outburst, I propose to support the amendment.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I rise at the risk of incurring the wrath of the excitable and temperamental minister, but I find it necessary to say something in reply to his remarks.

I was really touched when he burst out in his full eloquence and crocodile tears flowed because of his worry for the coal miners, their families and others on Cape Breton Island. Nevertheless, I draw his attention to what was said one year and eight months ago when the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia made the initial statement in connection with this policy. To be explicit, the original statement was made on October 5, 1965, and then on December 29 the Prime Minister issued his policy statement. In effect, this is what we are debating, and I might point out that we have only been discussing this bill for a few hours. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when the Liberal party forms the government it is a shocking thing for someone to criticize them or even suggest that a piece of legislation be changed.

This is the whole theory—we know what is good for you; we have written this and no one must question it. We are not trying to delay legislation. We have only been debating this subject for a few short hours. The minister himself has said that this legislation is unique, that it is something entirely new. For this reason I do not see why he should not at least listen to us, and listen to us with a good heart, rather than become very excited and think: "I will lecture those creeps; they do not know what it is all about." As to some of those behind him, they are like the Minister of Fisheries' seals—they flap their flippers just because the minister raises his voice and gets excited. Surely, there is nothing wrong about the hon. member for Pictou or the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam or the hon. member for York South or any other hon. member suggesting that there could possibly be some slight error in some part of this legislation.

Subclause 1(d) of the clause we are now discussing contains the words "to reduce as far as possible any unemployment or economic hardship that can be expected to result therefrom". As I understand it, the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for York South sought to substitute the words "to provide alternative employment for employees or members of the corporation who may be laid off." As I said before the dinner hour, I had an amendment prepared which would have replaced the present wording by the words "to ensure that no displacement of employees will take place without alternative work being provided."

Regardless of all the quotations the minister makes or how far back in history he wants to go, or the loud voice he uses, we are only trying to ensure that those people who will be removed from their positions as a result of this legislation shall be assured of alternative employment—not six months from the day on which they are removed, or two weeks afterwards, but as soon as possible, or immediately. Let hon. members opposite remember their slogan in recent elections—"We have the answers". All right. Let them produce the answers, now.

I appeal to the minister to give consideration to the amendment which is proposed. He must realize that the unemployment rate in the maritime provinces is double the national average. In addition there will now be further displacements. Every year on an average 1,500 people newly seeking employment come on to the labour market. This, in turn, increases the problem we face. I believe it was President Eisenhower who said that in politics everything should be taken seriously—except oneself. I would commend that advice to the minister. Up to the present the hon. gentleman has shown himself in all his dealings with us to be most reasonable and courteous. Tonight he goes off into the deep end, as if to say: Stop your talking; you are only saying what you have already said before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It must be wonderful, of course, to have the capacity that the minister thinks he has. He possesses all the brains there are in this chamber and no one else must suggest even one little change in the legislation.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I hear hon. members over there continuing to heckle. The miners of Cape Breton and their families, together with all the other people who are not directly involved but whose sympathies belong with the miners, will not be concerned about their heckling and sneering. They know we are trying to do something effective, that we are trying to do something which will assist them. They will know, from Hansard, that you are not interested in trying to help these people by making any changes. The government sets itself up as knowing what is best for the people. The Walter Gordons, and the people who write books, say "We know what is best for you; it is best for you because we say so." The minister may be a professor of political science but I am afraid he has got a hell of a lot to learn about human nature.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived: yeas, 42; nays, 54.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Shall we revert to clause 16?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 16—Powers.

Mr. McCleave: Before I make my proposal, one which I think is very modest, I should like to compliment you, sir, on your presence in the chair and I should like to thank the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, as well as the minister, for holding up this clause while I was at the joint committee on divorce this afternoon and unable to be here.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I proposed an amendment last night and I think the minister accepted it in principle. It was to make absolutely sure that the corporation could open new coal mines if necessary. Unless the minister indicates otherwise now, I do not intend to speak further, but simply propose the following amendment:

That clause 16 on page 8, line 10, be amended by adding the word "open" after the word "improve",

This clause would then read that the corporation could rehabilitate, improve, open, operate and maintain any coal mines.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, we are agreeable to the amendment. We are very ready to accept amendments that clarify and that do not try to minimize the extent of the legislation.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Shall clause 16 as amended carry?

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Mr. Churchill: Clause 16 (a) says that the corporation may:

—by agreement with any party to a contract for the sale or delivery of coal....assume all rights and obligations of Dominion Coal Company, Limited—

Does this mean that present contracts may lapse or would be subject to renegotiation when the new corporation is established?

Mr. Pepin: This part provides authority for the corporation to take over the coal sales contracts of Dominion Coal Company, of which two are long term—one with Ontario Hydro and the other with the Nova Scotia Light, Heat and Power Company. There is also a coal shipping contract with the Upper Lakes Shipping Company. There is also something in the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia which says Nova Scotia will endeavour not to disrupt the market pattern which presently exists for these coal mines in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the minister if he would be so kind as to advise how long the contract has to run that is held presently with Ontario Hydro? I am referring to the one negotiated by the late Hon. George Nowlan and the Chairman of the Dominion Coal Board some years ago. I think it was for a period of five years.

Mr. Pepin: I understand it has one more year to go, with provision for another five year extension. It is quite obvious this is one of the most assured markets that the corporation will want to protect.

Clause 16, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 18—Pension arrangements.

Mr. Lewis: Clause 18 requires the corporation to provide pension plans, first for employees and dependants, and second for former employees of these companies, or in other words, those who are now on pension. As I understand it, the intention is that there be no break in the pension of those who are now on pension.

On the basis of some experience in the field of pension negotiations, what concerns me is a tendency in many quarters to put the pension for former employees at a lower level than the pension for present and future employees. Normally, there is a tendency for an employer to say, and understandably so, "I was not the employer when these people were given the pension. I do not see why I should carry the responsibility to treat them in precisely the same way as I am prepared to treat those who now work for me and who will in the future work for me." I am not saying that the corporation will necessarily take that kind of view, but the legislation should make it impossible for it to do so.

[The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif).]

I have a very simple amendment drafted and if it were acceptable to the minister I think I would be prepared to let his advisers submit a better draft of it. I suggest that subclause (1)(a)(ii) contain a provision that the pension arrangement made for the class of employees covered by it, namely, former employees, shall be no less favourable than the pension arrangement made for present and future employees. This could be simply done by including after the word "arrangements" in the 19th line the following words, "shall be no less favourable than those provided under the immediately preceding paragraph," or "paragraph (a)(i)."

I feel certain there is no difference on principle between the minister and myself with respect to this point, and I urge him to accept this as a necessary precaution which the law should contain.

Naturally, I suppose that when the corporation is set up the minister and government will be anxious not to interfere with its work. They will tell us, and quite properly so, that it is an autonomous corporation which makes its own decisions, particularly with regard to employees' remuneration, employees' pension plans and the like. That was the basis upon which I moved an earlier amendment, and is the main reason I urge the minister to give consideration to the suggestion I have just made.

Mr. Pepin: Before I deal with this particular question I might be permitted to give a little background on the pension system. The Dominion Coal pension plan as it exists now is not funded and is non-contributory. The pension is paid out of annual operating revenues to the extent that such revenues permit.

Mr. Lewis: It is a gratuity.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, it is a gratuity. One could analyse the history of this but it would take too much time. The company says that when it offered this to the employees they did not want it, but I do not think it is useful to go too deeply into that. The company recognizes no obligation to keep on paying these pensions and therefore this is a liability that the government is accepting through the corporation.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The pension payment by Dominion Coal Corporation in 1966 amounted to $908,235. We indicated that it would cost about $1.1 million next year to cover the whole group of people now being pensioned.

Mr. Lewis: On the same level of pension?

Mr. Pepin: Yes. I should say also that under the same article there is a generous early retirement scheme. I am making these points in order to show that the legislation is not without generosity or humanitarianism. With regard to the specific question asked, once again regretfully I must say that I do not think we can accept the amendment because it would be establishing a principle that people already pensioned are entitled to increases—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: —to bring their pensions to the level of the pensions of people who are pensioned now. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as I expected, would have been delighted had I fallen into that trap, because then he would have brought up scores of other cases and would have justified them by invoking this as a precedent. Of course, it is expected that the corporation will maintain the level of the pensions at least to the level at which they are now.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, in respect of this clause, I should like to say that I was down in Cape Breton early this year where I met some of the miners. Lest hon. members should wonder why I, coming from the west coast, am interested in this, I would remind them that the minister himself said this is a matter of national concern.

Some of us have been very deeply concerned for a long time about the problems in Cape Breton, whether directly or indirectly. Shortly after I came back, having met a number of the miners down there, I received a letter from the miners in respect of this situation with which the amendment is intended to deal. They enclosed a copy of a resolution endorsed by the central council meeting of all Cape Breton pensioners assembled at the town of New Waterford. They outlined the fact that the Dominion Coal Company had reduced the voluntary non-funded pensions which had been paid for a number of years. I imagine this was the result of the increased old age supplement which was paid, because it was just about that time that the reduction was made. They also outlined the fact that the pensioners had been trying to have this reduction restored to all pensioners in this bracket, the ones who had been cut down. They requested that when the new working conditions for the miners were worked out under this new agreement—the agreement under the corporation—the pensions of the former employees be considered at the same level as the pensions for those who are going to be employed.

I know the minister has said that it is not necessary to put this sort of thing into concrete form in the legislation and that it should be left to the good sense of those who are appointed to the corporation. I should like to say that when I received that letter from the miners I wrote to the hon. Minister of Industry thinking that this would come under his jurisdiction. He kindly passed my letter on to the proper minister. In that letter I said that while I urge that everything possible be done to try to restore the pensions of these miners, non-funded as they were and the only thing they had to live on, I quite recognize that it is impossible to require that the Dominion Coal Company restore their pensions to the former amount. I went on to say that I also recognize that the federal government will not be able to intervene directly in the affairs of the new federal-provincial corporation which is to be set up in Cape Breton to take over the functions of the Dominion Coal Company. Of course, as my colleague from York South has already said, when this corporation is set up the government will not be able to intervene in the day to day operations of the new corporation, and quite properly so. This is the reason it is exceedingly important at this stage that there be embodied in the regulations a direction so that there will be no need for interference later.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his reply to me said the following, and I wish to read it because I think it is the best indication why the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South is absolutely necessary for the protection of these miners whose pensions have been cut back:

> —it is not possible to commit either Dominion Coal Company or the new crown corporation to any specific future course of action in respect to those former employees of Dominion Coal Company who are presently in receipt of pensions from Dominion Coal Company Limited. The situation is further complicated by the fact that the present Dominion Coal Company pension plan is a non-funded, non-contributory plan and is paid out of current annual operating revenues to the extent such revenues permit.

This I believe is the very best reason in the world for the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South, because the minister says it is impossible to commit the corporation to any specific course of action in respect of these former employees. It was impossible to commit the corporation when he wrote to me. I agree that at that time it was impossible, but it is not impossible to commit the corporation under this legislation.

If this legislation is drafted to include the amendment on my colleague from York South, then the new corporation will, under this legislation, be committed to see that those employees who have given good service in the past are not now placed on a lower standard of living because of having their pensions cut back. I believe this is very necessary.

One of the miners who wrote to me said this:

> But for your information, we also know this coal company pension is not paid from current annual operations. Is it not a fact that this company pension is paid out of subventions over a number of years or money granted by our government to the coal company which to my mind makes it all the more reason that we should not have been cut back in our pension.
> Since the crown corporation is going to take over the coal mines, the government should do something in regard to this matter by placing all on the same level.

You can call it what you like; call it guaranteed income or common justice. But, to me, it is not the right thing to have these miners, who were receiving a voluntary pension payments when the supplementary old age security pension was granted, cut back and having to remain at that level to the end of their days in the face of the rising living costs. To me, it is just a matter of common justice to accept this amendment which has been suggested. My colleague is not worried about the exact terms, so long as there is a guarantee that the pensions of the former employees will not be less than the pensions which are to be provided for the employees of the corporation when it takes over.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway referred to the amendment and suggested that it had been moved. It has not been moved and I rise to do that now. I intended to do it. No one could have persuaded me not to, especially after the statement by the minister to the effect that he did not want to establish the principle that the pensions of former employees should be on the same level as the pensions of present or future employees.

That is precisely the principle I want to see established in this legislation. I am not suggesting that the principle should be embodied in the act dealing with labour relations generally, although I would prefer that. I want to make clear that I would prefer that but I realize there are differences between industries. I cannot for the life of me see why we should set up a corporation with public funds to take over mining operations and be willing to let that corporation treat former miners in this way. These men have had their pensions cut and been the victims of a company which had no pension plan at all but paid a gratuity from time to time at the level it wished. These miners have suffered enough at the hands of this insatiably greedy corporation that has bled Cape Breton island for decades. I cannot for the life of me see why we should set up a public corporation with public funds without making sure that these retired miners, who have already taken enough from their former employers, are treated on a decent and equal basis with new employees of the corporation.

Therefore I move:

> That paragraph (ii) of subclause (1)(a) be amended by inserting the following words after the word "arrangements" in line 19, page 9, namely:
> "which shall be no less favourable than those provided under paragraph (i) of subclause (1)(a) of this clause"—

All this means is that the pension arrangements to be made for former employees, to be provided by the corporation, are to be no less favourable than the pension arrangements provided for present and future employees.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to support the amendment. There is nothing wrong with it and there is a lot of good in it. I regret that the minister has already stated he is not interested in accepting such an amendment. However, I was very pleased to hear the minister, along with others, refer tonight to this so-called pittance that was received by retired coal miners, some of whom have spent from 50 to 55 years working underground. I was very pleased to hear the minister confirm that this was a gratuity.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South, the hon. member for Pictou and myself have spent a great deal of time over many months both in and outside this house trying to point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of National Revenue that this small pittance received by retired coal miners was a gratuity. I do not know whether the minister is using Webster's dictionary tonight, but I should think a gratuity is a gift. A little booklet sent out by the Department of National Health and Welfare states that gifts are not classified as income in qualifying for the guaranteed income supplement. Many Cape Breton island miners have not been able to qualify for the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement, and many have only qualified for a very small portion of it because, although the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said in this house on many occasions there would not be a means or needs test but only an income test, this gratuity has been regarded as income.

Obviously the minister was making a play on words because we find that these retired miners are not getting the benefit of the so-called guaranteed income supplement. Let me give a little more background of the pension or gratuity arrangements made by Dosco. I think it was in 1952 or 1953 that the amount they were receiving was reduced from $75 to $35 when the miners became eligible for old age security. It was not a result of the guaranteed income supplement that their gratuity was cut, because most of them have not had the opportunity to qualify in his regard.

I hope that the minister will talk to his colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in an attempt to persuade them that this is in fact a gratuity and not a pension resulting from any funded pension plan. I fully endorse the amendment and I hope the minister will now get back to his old self, with the usual smile on his face and will say, I think you have a good idea and I endorse the amendment also.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is called on this amendment I should like to add my voice by way of appeal to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to reconsider his position on this matter. If he does not feel he can accept the exact wording proposed by the hon. member for York South, I suggest that he come up with some other wording. I ask him not to leave the pensioners in Cape Breton in the position they have been for many years.

I need not repeat the facts of the situation which have been set out so well by those who have spoken in the last half hour or so, but let us remember that we have here a group of pensioners who have been at the mercy of the corporation and have seen their so-called pensions or gratuities cut back at every opportunity there was for the corporation to do so. It seems to me that their position should be recognized as part of what the minister says is a matter of national concern. I submit that it is a matter of national concern to us not only that the coal mining operations in Cape Breton are in difficulty, but that the people who have worked in those operations are as well facing a very difficult situation. I appeal to the minister to make up, in part at least, for the way in which these pensioners have been victimized, by seeing to it that from now on their pension position will be better than it has been.

I am sure the minister was not surprised that I got to my feet after the remarks he made a moment ago when he objected to the principle of doing for those already retired what we are prepared to do for those who retire now or hereafter. If the minister wants to provide some kind of difference let him come up with a different wording for this clause; but let him not freeze these retired people at the pension levels on which they have to subsist at the present time.

To argue that it is not fair to increase the pensions of persons already retired just does not "go" any longer in this house or in this country. There are many jurisdictions and many employers who have found ways and means to increase the pensions of their former employees. I think of most of the provincial governments in this country, they have done it. I think of my own city of Winnipeg and other municipal bodies across the country which have found it possible to increase the pensions of their employees already retired.

A few days ago we read in the press that the Presbyterian Church in Canada had taken steps to increase the pensions of its ministers already retired. Some of the automobile companies do this. Many of these things have been won, let it be said, by collective bargaining. But nevertheless the principle that people who are already retired have a right to compensation for the increase in the cost of living, and a right to share in the increased standard of living, has been established in this country. The government itself has recognized this principle in at least two pieces of legislation. The Canada Pension Plan has in it a provision under which from the year 1968 on increases to compensate for the increased cost of living are automatic. This principle is also to apply to old age security. Starting in January, 1968, old age security pension payments will be increased in accordance with the increases that have taken place in the cost of living, subject to a certain formula that is in the act.

I hope there will be no slip with respect to the question of retired civil servants. Something was done for these people back in 1957 and 1958. This, again, is in support of the contention that it can be done and has been done. I still believe that sooner or later the government will have to implement the report of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada, which recommended on May 8 that there be an increase in the pensions of civil servants already retired. As far as I am concerned, this is already long overdue and it ought to be done without fail this month. In any case, the point I am making is that it is not breaking new ground at all; it is not a new principle to recognize the right of persons already retired to an improvement in their pension position.

I assert that if there is any group of persons in Canada that deserves to have its pension position improved, it is the pensioned miners in Cape Breton. They have been the victims of a heartless policy on the part of the corporation. They have seen their so-called pension, their so-called gratuity, cut back time and time again. We are taking this industry over now; we are bringing these miners under the umbrella of a public corporation. We are doing this because we say it is a matter of national concern. Let us show a little national concern not only for bailing Dosco out but for the retired employees in that area.

I therefore urge that the minister either find some other wording to meet this problem or that he cease his opposition to the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South. I suggest that to oppose this amendment is a heartless act. I believe the amendment ought to carry.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question for clarification. Clause 18 (1) (a) (ii) provides:

> The corporation shall by bylaw provide for the establishment, management and administration of... pension arrangements for the benefit of persons, and dependants of persons, formerly employed by the companies—

I take it that refers to companies in the Dosco group. I do not know the numbers involved; perhaps the minister has that information or could get it. Could the minister tell me what will happen with respect to employees retired from the Acadia Coal Company, one of the Dosco chain, in my area? What will happen with respect to those who worked at the McBean mine and those who received a gratuity from the Acadia Coal Company, from Dosco, who formerly worked in mines which were closed down? There are a number in our area. What happens to the gratuity of these people? Will the gratuity be continued? Many people in my area want to know the answer to this question. I do not know how many people in my area would be involved, but the answer to this question means a great deal to them. Not very much money would be involved. I am sure this is a question which was raised in the negotiations between the officials, or the minister, and Dosco.

Second, Mr. Chairman, the minister pointed out that the McBean mine in my constituency did not have very long to operate. He said the resources there were being depleted. Would the minister consider taking the employees—this has been done in the past—who are at retirement age and including them in the pension arrangements under this clause? This mine is part of the whole set-up. I think the minister is a political scientist, but if he needs a lesson in geography I would tell him that this mine is not too far from Sydney. I hope the minister will consider this problem.

In Cape Breton and Pictou county there are a great many Scots. I hope the minister is not punishing us because we are not island Scots but are mainlands Scots. Could the minister enlighten us on these very pointed questions? I think they should be answered before this commendable amendment is put to the committee.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, my ancestors also came from that area. The hon. member keeps asking me questions to which I must give him the same answers. The Acadia Coal Company's McBean mine it not covered by this legislation. Should it close, I would be almost as concerned as the hon. member to try to help.

Mr. MacEwan: Has the minister any information about past employees, those employees who are now receiving the gratuity? I refer to employees of Acadia Coal, Dosco, on Cape Breton Island. Are they washed out in respect of this program?

Mr. Pepin: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but the company says it has no legal obligation. I can only repeat what I said, that if the mine closes—it is not certain that it will because there are all sorts of other possibilities, some of which were indicated by my hon. friend the other day—I will be as concerned as he is to see that the blow is as light as possible.

Mr. MacEwan: What about the people who have already retired and are receiving this gratuity from Acadia Coal, Dosco? What is to happen as far as they are concerned?

Mr Pepin: I cannot really say what Dosco will do.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, since the minister turns a deaf ear to the arguments that have been put forward by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and others, I feel it necessary to make some further comment in connection with the amendment before us.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I think it is evident that this government is prepared to extend any degree of solicitude and concern to the preferred shareholders of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation but it is not prepared to extend it to the former employees of the company who now have to live on pensions that are inadequate in every respect. It has been argued, I think with clarity and convincingly, that over the course of the past several years there have been cut-backs in the amount of pensions paid to the former employees. It does not seem logical or fair to make an arrangement under the terms of this legislation which would have the crown corporation pay a pension which merely comes up to the pension presently payable by the corporation. My understanding of the matter is that in the course of the past year or two the market value of shares of this corporation has increased somewhat. According to my interpretation of clauses 9 and 10 of the bill, the government will negotiate with Dominion Steel and Coal to arrive at a settlement. It would hold in reserve the power of expropriation in this bill and would not exercise it before a certain specified time.

In that period of time it is not inconceivable, and in fact very likely, that an attempt will be made to manipulate the book value of assets and the market value of shares.

Mr. Pepin: May I say to the hon. member that we are not buying shares, we are buying assets.

Mr. Schreyer: I did make reference to the fact, and I do believe it to be a fact, that attempts may be made in the interval now and during the period of actual negotiations to manipulate or change the book value of assets. The negotiations will be quite prolonged, I am sure.

The point I have been making is that throughout this legislation, and in particular in clauses 9, 10 and 18, the government is showing a degree of solicitude for the preferred shareholders of this company which it is not prepared to extend to the former employees of the corporation.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I am impelled to take part in this debate after having listened to the astonishing statement of the minister a few minutes ago in reply to the hon. member for Pictou. He said that he did not know what he could do about the other employees of the Dosco corporation but he would do what he could. If ever there was proof positive that this bill should have curbed all the operations of this reprehensible corporation, it is in the minister's extraordinary statement. Why does he distinguish between the victims of Dosco in Cape Breton Island and the victims in Pictou county?

Mr. Pepin: It is exactly because it is difficult to make a distinction that I intend to do everything that is possible to help.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister was dealing with the coal properties of a certain corporation, yet Acadia coal mine is part of those coal properties. How does he distinguish between the two of them? Why does he make flesh of one and fowl of the other?

Mr. Pepin: One is in Cape Breton and the other is on the mainland.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They are both in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Pepin: Some of the mines in Newfoundland and in Manitoba are also in trouble.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But these happen to be in Cape Breton and there is a causeway which connects Cape Breton Island—

Mr. Pepin: We have not taken it over from the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The mine is a holding of Dosco in the province of Nova Scotia and not all that far from Cape Breton Island. I would like to know how the minister, having this rather limited concern for the victims of Dosco in Cape Breton Island, can give such an airy dismissal to the equal claims of the former employees of another property of that company in the province of Nova Scotia and give us the really factuous answer that he does not know what he could do but he would try to do something. What will he do? Why does he not give us some idea of what he will do? Why does he not inform some of the people now employed in those mines in Pictou county, as well as those who have been laid off in the past and who have been receiving a gratuity from this wretched company that has never established a proper pension plan, what his intentions are? The government is apparently not prepared to make adequate provision for these men. I would like to know what the minister intends to do about them, and I am quite sure the people in Pictou county would like to know also.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to say one word or two to the minister on the question of pensions. I have before me a copy of a resolution that was sent to the minister, dated April 7, 1967, from the central council meeting of all Cape Breton pensioners assembled at the town of New Waterford, signed by the chairman, William McKenzie, Glace Bay; the vice chairman, Emerson Campbell, Sydney, and secretary Wilfred L. Wilson of Dominion, Nova Scotia. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the Dominion Coal Company has reduced all old age miners pensions from year 1953 to December 31, 1965 below colliery manager to pay corporation tax and

Whereas the pensioners union has been trying to have this reduction restored back to all pensioners in this bracket to its former amount without any retroactive payments and

Whereas the United Mine Workers executive board will be entering into negociations with the Crown corporation some time in May of this year to arrange a new contract covering wages and working conditions for the miners.

Therefore be it resolved that this central council meeting assembled at New Waterford request mine workers executive to take this matter up with Crown corporation to have cut pension restored back to its regular amount and the system of reducing pensions be discontinued and all pensions be worked in under the miners agreement.

At that time we communicated with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and in reply the minister very kindly wrote to me on May 17 and also enclosed a copy of the letter that he had forwarded to Mr. Wilfred L. Wilson, the secretary. I should like to place it on the record. It reads as follows:

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Dear Mr. Wilson:

The Prime Minister has passed along to me your letter of April 7 and the accompanying resolution endorsed by the central council meeting of all Cape Breton pensioners assembled at the town of New Waterford.

Although the matter with which the resolution deals will be one which will fall within the responsibility of the new Crown corporation, I think I can assure you that the legislation setting up the Crown corporation will empower it to continue the payment of pensions to those former employees of Dominion Coal Company.

That was very enlightening, I must say. The second paragraph reads as follows:

I am certain that you are aware that the present Dominion Coal Company pension plan is non-contributory and unfunded and does not contain any legal obligation for the payment of pensions; payments are only made out of operating revenues to the extent such revenues permit. The enabling legislation which I plan on introducing into the house shortly will ensure that the Crown corporation is empowered to continue the payment of pensions to those now in receipt of pensions from Dominion Coal Company.

Here again, I presume it is on the same level. This is a big deal. The minister has pointed out that it is non-contributory and unfunded, but he is going to introduce legislation which will allow this pittance to be continued. The final paragraph reads as follows:

With respect to the specific matter raised in the resolution, i.e., the level of pension payments, I would recommend that you bring the resolution to the attention of the Crown corporation once it comes into being.

Yours sincerely,
Jean-Luc Pepin.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Along with other hon. members, I feel rather distressed that a few minutes ago the minister was able to say it was not his policy or idea that anybody who is now on pension should be brought up to the level of those who are going on pension at the present time. Surely, he must have heard something in his years in this house about the increased cost of living, the increased cost of everything that one has to consume or use. So, why should these people be enslaved and have to live on a small pension which has remained fixed for many years? Almost daily the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has talked about retired civil servants, and other hon. members have brought this to the attention of the chamber. I believe the Minister of National Revenue said that he was working on the matter. The Prime Minister is also interested in it and the matter is being given consideration. Everybody is interested in the question but no legislation is introduced.

A similar situation exists for these coal miners who were put on pension some years ago. Surely, the minister is not so hard as to refuse to consider such a suggestion as that enshrined in this amendment. As I have already said, some of these men have spent 50 to 55 years in the mines. Some of them started work in the coal mines when they were 13 or 14 years of age. They have been beaten and broken by many years of work underground for this vast corporation, working under terrible conditions. In spite of this, we in this chamber are not realistic enough to appreciate the situation.

The situation is so serious that surely the minister can bend slightly and give consideration to this amendment. I make a final appeal on behalf of the retired coal miner pensioners on the island of Cape Breton and on the mainland, for whom the hon. member for Pictou spoke so eloquently. All appeals up to the present time made by members on this side of the house have fallen on deaf ears. Again, I appeal to the minister to rise and give us a logical reason for not considering this amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived: Yeas, 31; nays, 51.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—Payments by Minister of Finance.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the only clause on which I can ask the minister this question. Clause 19 gives authority to the Minister of Finance to pay millions and millions of dollars to the corporation out of the federal treasury. What I cannot find here under the financial arrangements made or in any other clause of the bill, is provision for a watchdog over how this money is spent. In other words, I cannot find anywhere in the bill the appointment of an auditor. I am not referring to a general auditor under a business procedure; I am referring to the Auditor General of Canada who is the watchdog of the federal treasury.

There are two types of acts which make provision for auditors. In one type no specific reference is made to the Auditor General. As a result, those of us who have been members of the public accounts committee find that very often the Auditor General tells us that he does not know exactly where he stands under this type of act, and this means that his actions in watching over the spending of the government can be challenged.

In the other type of act, many of which refer to crown corporations, specific reference is made to the jurisdiction of the Auditor General, with the result that he is what you might term a supervisory authority. However, no matter under what authority he carries on his work, he has to report to parliament on any matter that he thinks should be brought to our attention.

In view of this, Mr. Chairman, and because in many acts, such as those in respect to the Polymer Corporation and other gigantic crown corporations, the Auditor General's powers are set forth, I find it strange that in this bill there is not only no mention of the watchdog of parliament, the Auditor General, but there is no mention of any other kind of auditor.

Because of my past experience on the public accounts committee, and in view of what I have just said, does the minister not think that this bill should be changed so as to give the Auditor General authority to act as the watchdog of parliament?

Mr. Pepin: I should not like my words to be considered as a lack of confidence in the Auditor General, but clause 31 (1) of the bill provides that the corporation is a proprietary corporation within the meaning and for the purposes of the Financial Administration Act. Section 76 of the Financial Administration Act defines a crown corporation to include a proprietary corporation, and section 77 of the act provides as follows:

(1) Where, in respect of a Crown corporation

(a) no provision is made in any Act for the appointment of an auditor to audit the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation, or

(b) the auditor is to be appointed pursuant to the Companies Act, the Governor in Council shall designate a person to audit the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Notwithstanding any other act, the Auditor General is eligible to be appointed auditor or joint auditor to a crown corporation. The effect of this is that the Auditor General may be appointed as the auditor or joint auditor in exactly the same way as in the case of any other proprietary corporation listed in schedule D of the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Winch: As usual, the minister proves precisely the point which has been raised, without doing anything about it. The Auditor General is eligible to be auditor or joint auditor but there is nothing here which says that he shall be appointed and that he shall examine the books and report to parliament. The only way to make sure of this is to write it into the bill. It is not in the bill, and this is the very point which has been raised by the Auditor General before the public accounts committee year after year. He is eligible, but unless something is done here he has no authority. It is this very aspect that I urge the minister to deal with. We ought to make it clear that the Auditor General has this responsibility by making the necessary provision in the bill itself.

Mr. Hales: I wish to support what has just been said by the hon. member for Vancouver East. In my opinion it should be stated expressly in the bill that the Auditor General shall be auditor to this crown corporation. I also think the province of Nova Scotia should be included. Nova Scotia has a part to play in this legislation and I believe their auditor should be included along with the Auditor General of Canada.

The minister is asking parliament to approve amounts in the neighbourhood of $75 million yet no provision is made for this money to be accounted for by the Auditor General of Canada and the Nova Scotia auditor. Possibly members might be prepared to sit a little longer in order to continue the discussion on this point. I have an amendment to clause 33 which would cover this very point. Perhaps the minister would prefer to leave it until we reach that clause.

Mr. Churchill: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether the leader of the house would exercise the same type of courtesy as was shown by former house leaders by informing the house each night whether the business for the following day is to be the same or whether there is to be a change. If the business is to be the same, why not record it in Hansard?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to revert to the former system. I changed the system at the request of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) some time ago, who asked that the house leader give information as far in advance as possible. That was done last Thursday, and the business of the house was announced last Thursday for all this week up to and including Friday. The business of the house tomorrow will be the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I will accept the suggestion of the hon. member and in the future announce the business on a day to day basis.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the house leader when he expects to call again the bill with which we have been dealing tonight?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this moment indicate when that legislation will be brought back.

Mr. Churchill: May I just say to the government house leader it is not a question of simply announcing on a day to day basis, without prior notice as to what is in store. A week's outline of the business is very helpful to us, but there are alterations. There was an alteration today, and the house was not notified officially last night that there would be a possible change in the program.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I undertook that if there were to be alterations I would notify the house. There was an alteration today as a result of consultation with other parties, and notification was given to persons participating in the debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR POTATO PRODUCERS

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): On June 12, 1967, Mr. Speaker, as recorded in Hansard on page 1397, I put the following question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene):

Since March 22, 1967, has his department negotiated with the agriculture department of Quebec on assistance to potato producers? If so, what are the results?

And here is what Mr. Speaker said as to the acceptability of my question:

It is difficult for me to determine whether the question of the hon. member for Labelle is urgent. I am inclined to think that this question should be put on the order paper, but, if the hon. member feels this is an urgent question of national importance, he could bring it up on the adjournment motion.

I raised this question, Mr. Speaker, because it is very important for thousands of potato producers in Quebec as well as in the other provinces.

I believe the 1966 potato crop in Canada was the best in 40 years. As of March 1, 1967, our warehouse stock showed a 43 per cent increase over that of the preceding year, in spite of a high volume of sales to foreign countries.

On March 22, 1967, the federal Minister of Agriculture announced the adoption of a program authorizing the Agricultural Stabilization Board to provide a support price of $1.65 per barrel of Canada No. 1 potatoes sent to starch plants.

In areas where there are no starch plants —as in the province of Quebec—and where there may be an important surplus of potatoes, the associations and groups of producers wishing to participate in the federal support program were to submit the terms of their propositions to the Agricultural Stabilization Board.

I am told that potato growers and other groups interested in that farm produce made certain proposals to the Agricultural Stabilization Board.

The hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Temiscouata (Mr. Gendron) and I accompanied such a group in April when they met representatives of the Department of Agriculture to discuss the problem.

Another program was offered the Quebec potato growers, whereby surpluses would be used in feed rations intended for cattle. This alternative did not seem to please the growers, most of whom did not own boilers or choppers and, moreover, were afraid to destroy their feed system based on balanced rations.

● (10:10 p.m.)

In a press release published in La Presse, of Montreal, the minister of agriculture of New Brunswick announced, on April 21, 1967:

> The potato starch assistance program already in existence is being supplemented by the hog feeding program.
> Mr. Lévesque indicated that he discussed the possibility of a further assistance program in Ottawa on Tuesday, and that federal authorities are now considering his proposals.

Mr. Speaker, if this program was that of assistance to disaster-stricken people, I wonder why, at this stage, and considering that the season is well advanced, potato growers in the province of Quebec could not also have such a program?

[English]

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont) for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house and to the attention of the government. It is true that in 1966 we did have a remarkable crop of potatoes and at the moment are labouring under the penalty of abundance. So, the crop of 1966 has brought about some problems and it has been necessary for the government to institute a program to bring about some relief.

The level of assistance available under the Agricultural Stabilization Board is 75 cents per hundredweight and in addition the feed value of the potatoes, which is estimated at at least 25 cents per hundredweight, would accrue to the producer. This program is in effect in five other provinces and to date in excess of one million hundredweight of potatoese have been committed under this program.

It may be true that there may be areas in which the livestock feeding program is not of immediate assistance. I understand from the minister and from his officials that consideration is still being given to alleviating this particular hardship. I know that if any relief is available in this regard, the announcement will be made by the minister at a later date.

IMMIGRATION—DENIAL OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS TO GREEK SHEPHERD

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, on June 13 I directed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I said:

> I have his letter denying landed immigrant status to a Greek shepherd, and I should like to ask the minister whether Moses, who looked after sheep for 40 years, or King David, who was also a shepherd, would have been admitted to Canada under the present regulations.

I did not receive any answer to this query of June 13 and I should like to elucidate further on the matter. This question was discussed at some length during the adjournment debate on June 12. At that time some remarks were made about this man, Mr. Sistanis, who is under order for deportation after having appeared before a special inquiry officer of the immigration branch and the appeal board.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I based my remarks which I made on June 12 entirely on the fact that on April 21 there had been a revolution in Greece and this young man, who came to Canada in 1966, did not wish to return to that dictatorship country. I have in my hand clippings from the Ottawa Journal, the Ottawa Citizen, the Toronto Star and other papers referring to the fact that since April 21 Greece has been under a martial dictatorship. An editorial in the Toronto Star of May 12 referred to a statement that Canada was going to devote $1.5 million as aid to Greece. This was severely criticized. A paragraph in the editorial reads:

> The sum of $1,500,000 is not much by modern budgetary standards. But we can think of better uses for it than pouring it down a dictator's gun barrels.

I should like to point out that this man, Mr. Sistanis, is still in the country although he has purchased a ticket back to Greece. He is waiting for a seat on an airplane because he has been told he must get out.

I want to emphasize that we are forcing upon a Greek citizen something that we did not enforce in respect of the Polish art treasures which came into Canada in 1940. This morning I spent some time looking up the historical facts in connection with these Polish art treasures. They were sent from Poland to France by way of the Black Sea and Rumania before the advance of the Germans in 1939. When it looked as though France was going to fall in 1940, these Polish art treasures worth millions and millions of dollars were sent from the south end of France to Canada and were stored for a short time at the central experimental farm in Ottawa. Following the breakdown of the established Polish government in 1940 these Polish art treasures were moved to other places in Canada, and I do not believe for a moment that their destination was unknown as intimated at the time.

When I read references in Maclean's magazine, the Canadian Forum and Hansard for 1945, 1946, 1947, 1953 and 1958 I did not find a pretty picture of Canadian diplomacy. We held on to these Polish art treasures in Canada and kept telling the Polish people who were asking for the return of their prized possessions that we could not send these back to them because the government that sent them to us was no longer in power.

[Mr. Cowan.]

We continually told them that it was impossible for us to return them to the new government of Poland because the government from which we received them was no longer in existence. We kept this up for a period of years.

One of the documents I have in my hand here is a letter dated February 13, 1948, from the under secretary of state for external affairs, one L. B. Pearson, to a Dr. Bielski who was chargé d'affaires at the Polish legation in Ottawa. In part it reads:

> As we agreed with your solicitors, we are communicating the information to you for any further action you and your solicitors may wish to take.

That was dated February 13, 1948, and the established Polish government of 1945 had been asking over and over again where the treasures were. For three years we held them back. If we were willing to send these Polish treasures to various areas in Quebec and keep them away from the new Polish government I do not see why we should have to inform a genuine, genial Greek that he has to get back to Greece and get back there as quickly as possible, despite the fact Greece has a new government, a military dictatorship.

A week from Thursday we are going to be welcoming a Greek to this country, and as far as I know he has not even got a work permit. When he is here he will be opening hospitals and laying cornerstones, and we in the house here will have to shake him by the hand and tell him how wonderful we think the Greeks are. If we are to greet him with open arms here at parliament hill I can not understand why we should order this Greek shepherd to be deported.

This is supposed to be a classless country. Are we going to kick this Greek shepherd out of this country and welcome a Greek prince and welcome the Greek King and Queen on September 4? I say to you that this country should have a reputation for political asylum. This young lad of 23 does not want to return to Greece under its new government and does not want to be forced to go back.

Only since supper time tonight, June 20, did I receive a printed form from Ministre de la Main-d'Oeuvre et de l'Immigration, which I suppose means Manpower and Immigration. It is stated that there are new selection policies for immigration. At page 5 it is stated that this is a summary of the new selection policy for immigrants, and there is a suggestion that no longer will a man have to have seven years education as set out on page 21 of the white paper on immigration, but that he may have slightly less education if he has a job to go to, if he has relatives in this country and if he is under 35 years of age. Nicholas Sistanis has all these qualifications. He has six years education and in April the minister said that apprenticeship time will count; that three years apprenticeship will be taken into consideration. This man was five years a shepherd and three years a housepainter in Greece.

This young man qualifies under the apprenticeship clause, so far as the statement is concerned, under two headings, agriculture and housepainting and because of his youth and his ability I suggest he should not be forced to go back to Greece. We are welcoming a Greek prince here next week and the Greek King and Queen on September 4, and I say we should welcome a common ordinary Greek who wants to stay here with his uncle and aunt and his cousins in the town of Weston in the riding of York-Humber. He is qualified in every way under the new immigration selection policy as set out in the statement received by members of parliament this evening. If they opened their mail boxes at supper time they will have this statement. If they have not, they will get it tomorrow.

I simply ask that the Department of Manpower and Immigration allow this man to remain in Canada. I sincerely ask that he be given the same kind of treatment that was given to the Polish art treasures. That is, that no speedy action be taken in respect of this young lad who should be allowed to stay. He is here now. He has not worked since he came here. I sincerely ask that he be given the same kind of treatment as the Polish art treasures; that is, that no speedy action be taken on him at all and he be allowed to settle in like the Polish art treasures which were in this country from 1940 to 1949 or 1950 before any action was taken to send them back to Poland.

Let us treat a genuine, genial, Greek, who is a human being, as well as we treated those painted Polish pictures. At least they stayed in Canada for years before we returned them to their home country. We should treat this Greek better by allowing him to stay in this country, where he wishes to settle, where his aunt, uncle and cousins reside, and where he has secure employment the moment he is granted landed immigrant status.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is not much to add to what we said when this question was raised on the late show about two weeks ago. The minister then informed the hon. member, through myself, that this man about whom the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) speaks did not comply with the immigration conditions and was asked to leave Canada. He was here as a visitor; he did not comply with the conditions and he was asked to go back at the end of his stay.

There is another factor to consider when we talk about fairness. Perhaps the hon. member for York-Humber would like to consider this. If all visitors, or a good proportion of them, who come to this country were allowed to remain, it would certainly be most unfair to all their compatriots in their country of origin who had gone through the procedures necessary, who had been to the immigration offices abroad, made application to remain here permanently, had their X-rays and all their medical checks and so on, if we just let them wait endlessly while we treated in a favoured way those who came here as visitors.

Mr. Cowan: What about the revolution in that country?

Mr. Knowles: There seems to be a revolution across the way.

Mr. Munro: The hon. member also knows that as far as the revolution, I am not sure what you would call it, is concerned—

Mr. Cowan: A military coup.

Mr. Munro: —the department has ascertained that there is no danger whatsoever to Greek citizens as a result of the change of régime in that country. This man will not be prejudiced in any way on that count. We are fully satisfied about that. As far as the application of the new selection criteria is concerned, it was said that it would be several months—

Mr. Cowan: Do you know that there are more than 6,000 trade unionists in jail in Greece now?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Munro: The minister stated before the immigration committee that the new selection criteria could not be applied for several months. It is impossible, therefore, to know whether this man would comply with the new selection criteria.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): All uranium mines in Canada are licenced by the Atomic Energy Control Board. Mining permits require observance of appropriate provincial regulations and of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations including Part VI

MIDDLE EAST—MEETING BETWEEN PRESIDENT JOHNSON AND PREMIER KOSYGIN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in facing the serried ranks of the cabinet, it is difficult to know to whom the question should be placed, but I assume it should be addressed to the genial Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask him two questions, the first of which is whether the government of Canada is doing everything it can in the interests of world peace to impress upon the President of the United States the imperative need of a meeting with Premier Kosygin in New York?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this first question I can assure my right hon. friend and the house that the government of Canada is doing everything it can in the interests of world peace in attempting to bring together the four great powers to discuss the problems which are facing the world at this moment. The Prime Minister has made this position very clear and has already in private discussions with the leaders of some of our allies urged upon them the importance of the great powers getting together, preferably within the confines of the United Nations, but in any event getting together, to discuss the problems of the Middle East and how they might be reconciled.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I repeat the first question. I did not ask anything about the Big Four meeting. I asked whether the Canadian government was impressing upon the President of the United States, Canada being one of the closest friends of the United States, the need of meeting with Premier Kosygin.

Mr. Hellyer: I know that the Prime Minister discussed this question with the President earlier in the context of the Big Four meeting. I cannot say specifically whether there has been conversation in the last day or two following Mr. Kosygin's statement at the United Nations; but I will be glad to refer this question to the Prime Minister and to suggest that it would be desirable to urge upon the President the desirability of a meeting if it can possibly be arranged.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is reported that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had a meeting with Premier Kosygin very recently. Perhaps the minister could advise us whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs attempted to encourage a meeting between Premier Kosygin and the President of the United States at that meeting.

Mr. Hellyer: I am afraid that I have no information in this respect, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN ATTITUDE RESPECTING INCLUSION OF JERUSALEM WITHIN ISRAELI TERRITORY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is whether the minister will advise us as to the attitude of the government of Canada regarding the question in respect of the entire city of Jerusalem being within Israel? I ask that question because of the statement made today by Foreign Secretary Brown of the United Kingdom at the United Nations, and because of the interview reported this afternoon about the statement made in Paris by General de Gaulle.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): In respect of the second question, I think my right hon. friend will realize that I would not wish to comment on that matter, beyond reaffirming the position of the government that the question of withdrawal would in our opinion have to be related to a settlement of the basic political issues of the Middle East.

I think this is the position of principle which the government has taken, and it is one which is very important if we are to reconcile the problems there in such a way that they do not result in a further conflagration in the years ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the minister deserves congratulation for the manner in which he answered both those questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON, N.S.—PERMISSION TO STOCKPILE STEEL PENDING FULL EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the ministers responsible I should like to direct my question either to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is the cabinet representative for the province of Nova Scotia. In view of the fact that reports from Cape Breton indicate that the Sydney steel plant lay-off has now passed the 1,200 mark, which for a community of this size is a crisis of major proportions, could I ask whether the government has reached any final decision with respect to the representations made by the Nova Scotia delegation last week for advances to enable the steel company to stockpile soft steel until such time as the market makes full employment possible again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity of cabinet representative for Nova Scotia. I believe it can be directed to a responsible minister or the Acting Prime Minister.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the best thing I can do is take the question as notice.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question arising out of the question just asked. I do not like that distinction of differentiating between ministers, some responsible and others irresponsible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether a communication has been received from Mr. D. A. McKay, president of the Louisbourg Board of Trade, insisting that the part of the S and L line from Broughton Junction to Louisbourg be included with the rest of the Cumberland Railway property in the Cape Breton Development Corporation bill. If such a message has been received, will it receive the attention of the government before the bill comes back for continued consideration?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have not been made aware of the receipt of the message. If it has been received I can assure my right hon. friend that it will be given consideration at once.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to my previous question. May I ask whether in view of the very serious situation at the steel mill at Sydney, Cape Breton, the Acting Prime Minister would request the Minister of Industry or the Minister of Finance to make a statement tomorrow as to what action the government intends to take to meet this critical situation?

Mr. Hellyer: I will be glad to pass along the request, but there are some difficulties. As my hon. friend knows, the ministers are now engaged in very important discussions and it may not be physically possible for them to give this matter the consideration it deserves between now and tomorrow. But I will certainly pass along the request.

Mr. Douglas: Would the acting minister give the statement tomorrow?

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is in reference to the time element that he mentioned a moment ago and is supplementary to the question asked about steel.

In view of the fact that the delegation from Sydney in connection with the steel situation met with the Prime Minister and with some members of the cabinet one week ago today, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Industry advised me on Friday last that, to use his words, "we are working on it", could the minister not assure us that there will be a statement made tomorrow about the very serious lay-offs of so many workers from the Sydney steel plant?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could give that assurance, but I cannot without knowing whether or not it is physically possible. I will certainly bring the representations that have been made and the urgency of the situation to the attention of the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGUILLA—POLITICAL AFFILIATION WITH CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he advise us whether representations have been received from authorities in Anguilla requesting political affiliation of that island with the Dominion of Canada and, if so, can he advise what consideration is being given to such a request?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I will have to take that question as notice.

EXTERNAL AID

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF FOOD FOR REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question either to the Acting Prime Minister or, if he is a little weary of answering questions, to the parliamentary assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: He is not here either.

Mr. Brewin: The question is: Has the government received from the secretary general of the United Nations a report from Mr. Michelmore, the commissioner general of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, stating that the supply of food for the refugees in Palestine and other neighbouring countries is critically low, and does the government contemplate action in respect of this emergency?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such report but I did check, just before coming into the house, about the food situation in the Middle East and I was assured that there is no shortage of the basic foodstuffs. The report is that these are in adequate supply, but that the critical problem at the moment is distribution. In so far as distribution is concerned, the Canadian government is making inquiries to see how we can assist in improving the distribution methods. I understand that, in addition, cash is required for certain items. However, the fundamental and basic rations are in adequate supply.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary question? Has it been called to the attention of the government that in this report it is stated that at the end of the next three weeks there will be a lack of food affecting a million Arab refugees in the Middle East unless immediate action is taken?

Mr. Hellyer: Not having seen the alleged report I cannot say, but the information I gave was in respect of the immediate situation. I can tell the house, however, that the officials of the Canadian government are looking into this whole question and are preparing a paper for the government, which I understand will be ready tonight or tomorrow, and which will receive the sympathetic consideration of the government, if not tomorrow then very soon in any event.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary and ask him whether, in view of the apparent shortage of travel space on Air Canada and other air lines, and the apparent inadequacy of rail accommodation, the government would not consider consulting officials of these transportation media with a view to coming up with some solution, especially in this centennial year when many visitors are travelling to Expo and other places. Could consideration be given perhaps to the use of other air lines, as was done at the time of the Air Canada strike earlier this year, so as to provide better accommodation for the travellers?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware of the very serious situation which has developed and he is doing everything possible to alleviate it. However, I will bring this very important question to his attention.

Mr. Starr: Why bring it to his attention if the hon. member is sure he is aware of it?

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary. Would he be able to inform the house when the additional service of the Canadian Pacific Airlines will be inaugurated?

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, the vice president of the Canadian Pacific Airlines was in my office yesterday—

Mr. Nielsen: Was there enough room in there for the two of you?

Mr. Byrne: —and if I recall correctly he did say he would expect to bring this service into operation some time in August or September. However, this was not confirmed as there was some difficulty about obtaining aircraft deliveries.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport. As one of those who has travelled on so many milk runs of Air Canada that the sour cream is starting to bubble out of my ears, would the parliamentary secretary again ask the Minister of Transport whether he would make possible a truly trans-Canada air line system by allowing Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate flights in the maritimes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is much too large in scope to ask at this time.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED CREATION OF NATIONAL MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It deals with education, a subject in which I know the minister has had a great interest for the last year or so.

Has the Acting Prime Minister any information to give the house with respect to the decision of Canada's education ministers at a closed meeting in Toronto yesterday to form a Canadian council of ministers of education with a secretariat of 35 permanent staff, and to recommend the creation of a national ministry of education?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no information on this subject has come to my attention.

DRUGS

SURVEY OF RETAIL PRICES TO ASCERTAIN INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Registrar General, who I understand has assumed some additional responsibilities for consumer affairs. The day before yesterday, in response to a question I had asked the Minister of Finance, the minister answered, in part, that the government is determined that the advantage from the removal of sales tax on drugs will be passed on to the consumer. I wonder whether the minister can advise the house whether or not he or his department are taking any steps to survey the retail price of drugs to ascertain if any increase in price takes place between now and September?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I made some mention of this last Friday when speaking in defence of my estimates before the committee. Officials of the Registrar General's department will be examining the competitive forces in the drug industry very closely during the coming months, as well as their effect upon prices to the consumer. I said last Friday, and I say again, that the effect of the removal of the sales tax and the lowering of the tariff, while beneficial, will necessarily be limited. Upon receipt of the final report of the special committee on drug costs and prices the matter was referred immediately to my departmental officials and other interested departments, and has since been given intensive study. We will be looking at the price range very closely during these summer months, and any further announcement about legislation in this connection will be made in the autumn.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question: Can the minister advise the house whether to date this intensive survey which has been carried on by his officials indicates whether or not there has been any increase in the price of drugs since June 1?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is the type of information that should be given by way of statement on motions, not by way of an answer to a question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TELEVISION

TORONTO, ONT.—REQUEST THAT APPLICATION FOR ADDITIONAL OUTLET BE WITHHELD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of national importance which affects especially southern Ontario, and I direct it to the Secretary of State. In view of the continued attempts by the television representatives in Barrie to sneak into the Toronto market by the back door, will the minister assure the house that no new television outlet, to serve the 2 million people of metropolitan Toronto, will be permitted without an open hearing being held at which all interested applicants may be heard and considered, and at which the interests of the 2 million viewers of the area may be protected.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been wearing a cloak of some sort of independence, and in this instance is insulting me and the Board of Broadcast Governors. I should like to let him know, if he is incapable of reading the legislation, that applications are made by interested people, as these individuals are entitled to do, to a Board of Broadcast Governors which has been duly appointed but which is not otherwise influenced in any way by the government or any member thereof.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: When the board makes its report I shall know exactly what the hon. member knows about that application.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Might I address a courteous question to the minister. As she knows, everybody in southern Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entitled only to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): In view of the fact that any such decision by the B.B.G.—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Really, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the sensitivity of some hon. members on the opposite side. I know that this is a sensitive problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask his question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Scott (Danforth): How can I, Mr. Speaker, with these rapid-fire remarks that are coming at me.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I shall return to my usual form—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should remember that we have 30 minutes only today, and the way he is going he may use most of it. If he has a question, I suggest that he ask it.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I stand subject to correction, but considering that such decision must be approved by the cabinet, before any new outlet is authorized, can we have the assurance of the minister that any cabinet minister at least will ensure that a fair hearing is given to applicants making applications before any new television outlet is opened in this important area.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend, who is not a resident of or representative of the people of southern Ontario—as indeed I am,—should be aware that the B.B.G. will make its recommendation, under law, to the cabinet. The cabinet will then, as it has in every instance except one so far, very probably affirm whatever that decision is. In the whole history of the B.B.G. there has been only one instance of a reversal, and that was in the public interest. I would ask my hon. friend to realize that members of his party are not the only individuals in Canada who are primarily motivated by the public interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the hon. member another supplementary question?

Will he kindly resume his seat.

He has asked one supplementary question, and I suggest that this exchange is developing into a debate rather than an exchange of questions and answers.

Mr. Churchill: That is because of the minister's replies.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that we go to another question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I rise on a question of privilege.

I cannot permit that kind of discourteous answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member kindly state his question of privilege.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): My question of privilege is that I have been told by the minister that apparently I do not represent anybody in southern Ontario; I cannot permit that. Nor can I permit the cavalier and discourteous attitude which has been shown to the people of southern Ontario—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —by the minister's reference.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member has said up to now does not show that his personal privileges as a member of parliament have been affected. This is the only basis on which he might raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Apparently we cannot expect honest, courteous and decent answers from the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

DOMINION DAY

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN PRESENCE OF HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State is imbued with her usual geniality, may I ask her if she would indicate the arrangements which have been made for the participation of the public in the July 1 centennial celebrations on parliament hill when Her Majesty the Queen is to be present. Can the minister state what will be the anticipated role of hon. members of the Senate and House of Commons?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I should be very happy to do this. It will be somewhat lengthy but, if I might be forgiven, speaking about the matter in this house is the best way to get the information to members of the two chambers, who I regret have not been informed by the appropriate authorities which, in turn, are not responsible to the Secretary of State's department.

Having only just received this information, I wish to say this: The information is that on the morning of July 1 there will be two events; both of these are to be held, so far as possible, on the main lawn outside the parliament buildings. The first is a service of thanksgiving and dedication which will be conducted by leading clergymen of eight representative faiths in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, and will be followed immediately by a parliamentary ceremony in which the Speakers of the House of Commons and Senate will present loyal addresses to Her Majesty, and to which Her Majesty will reply.

That morning program will commence at 10.30 a.m. and should end at about noon. All invited guests, which include the wives of members of both chambers, the judiciary, all privy councillors—not only of either chamber—will be asked to be in their seats by ten o'clock.

This is to be a parliamentary occasion and members and senators will be seated on the main platforms which will be erected on either side of the stage which has already been set up at the main steps. Their wives, the diplomatic corps and all other invited guests will be accommodated in chairs at ground level in front of the main platform. The dress for invited guests, all of whom I believe have now received their invitations, is directors' or lounge suits for men and afternoon dress and hats for ladies. I think it is particularly important for members of the Senate and the House of Commons to realize that this is an occasion on which they are playing host to the head of their state, the Queen of Canada, and they are all expected to be in attendance. Her Majesty will be in full regalia. The general public is welcome to occupy the space on the lawns themselves, and though for this particular occasion no seats have been provided, platform facilities have been designed to provide the public with as clear and unhampered a view as possible.

Should the weatherman fail to co-operate on our one hundredth birthday the entire morning ceremony will be held inside. The same guest list will apply, but unfortunately this would mean that the public cannot be accommodated. In order to overcome this, however, indoors or out of doors the morning program will be carried in its entirety by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

In the afternoon, parliament hill will be given over to what I hope will be the biggest birthday party Canada has ever seen. With the exception of special arrangements for crippled, blind and retarded children, there will be no guest list—except for the people of Canada. The only limit is the physical capacity of parliament hill grounds to receive them. This will be a real birthday party with cake, ice cream, soft drinks, bands, choirs, clowns, strolling minstrels, flags and balloons—everything we can do to make this a tremendous birthday party. It will run from 2 p.m to 4 p.m. and Her Majesty will be present briefly. She has graciously consented in our celebration to cut with a knife which her grandfather had previously used a giant birthday cake.

I should like to issue a special invitation to members and their families to join in the fun with the thousands of Canadians, who I hope will not just be from the Ottawa area, but will include those who are planning to visit our capital from other parts of the country for this very special day in our history.

The evening program on the hill itself will consist of a repeat performance of the folk arts concert given in the presence of Her Majesty the previous day, and a giant fireworks display just before midnight. Of course, the general public is welcome.

In addition, that morning the confederation train will be opening in Ottawa, and during the afternoon, at the same time as the birthday party being held on the hill, there will be at Lansdowne park something which has been characterized as a "Royal Hulabaloo." This program is especially designed for teenagers, with appropriate bands and other entertainment, and again members of the general public are welcome, up to the capacity of the stadium. With the spanking new stadium in Ottawa the Registrar General of Canada has graciously deigned to greet an audience of 15,000 Canadians, at which time Her Majesty will also attend this event.

Hon. members are also aware, as are members of the upper chamber, of the garden party which is to be held by His Excellency the Governor General at 4.30 p.m. at Government House. This will be an occasion when hon. members, senators, their wives, and other guests who will have received invitations to the function, will be presented. Dress again is lounge suit for gentlemen and afternoon dress and hats for ladies.

That evening there will be a special royal performance of Son et Lumière at Nepean Point, at which time the host will be the Leader of the Senate, Hon. John J. Connolly. Since hon. members were invited to the première of this project, and since the government is trying to give as many people as possible an opportunity to attend functions in the presence of Her Majesty, there will be a special guest list for this event to include people such as the aged and infirm, but which will not include members and senators.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: This will be no disappointment to hon. members who naturally would not expect to be included among the aged and infirm.

Every attempt is being made to provide an opportunity for the people of Canada as they come to the national capital to meet Her Majesty, or at least to see her, and every attempt is being made to provide every opportunity for the people's representatives in both chambers of the parliament of Canada, and their wives, to meet Her Majesty.

Although it is not my responsibility, I apologize to hon. members of both chambers, and to their presiding Speakers, for the fact that this information has not been widely distributed earlier, but I would ask hon. members to remember that they are in fact the hosts for this occasion. Notwithstanding the undeniable demand of their own constituents who have sent them here to represent them, they are in fact representing the people of Canada by receiving in their own name the Queen of Canada, and I ask them to be present accordingly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGAR—INCREASE IN PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Registrar General. Could the minister indicate why the price of a 10 pound bag of sugar has risen in Canada's third largest city from 95 cents at the beginning of June to $1.12 at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

1. Departmental administration including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan and $500,000 for health grants and welfare grants, under terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board, for research and demonstration activities in the field of mental retardation, $4,127,000.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 338 of the blue book. The details are on page 341. Shall vote No. 1, carry?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Chairman, the estimated expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare, which parliament is being asked to approve for the year 1967-68, amount to $2.8 billion for all programs, including payments from the statutory Old Age Security Fund.

This represents 26 per cent of the comparable federal government expenditures forecast for the same year and reflects the continued growth of the department as a result of the government's increasing concern with the health and welfare of the people of Canada. In the past five years alone, the department has been assigned responsibility for such major programs as the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, youth allowances, the health resources fund and medicare—all designed to ensure for Canadians the highest standards of health and to ensure that when through age, infirmity or some other limitation, they can no longer work they will receive a true measure of protection.

Our anticipated expenditures for 1967-68 at $2.8 billion breaks down into three basic segments:

1. $1.4 billion for forecast expenditures from the statutory Old Age Security Fund which, as hon. members will note, is stated separately at the foot of the table on page 5 of the printed estimates as a non-budgetary item;

2. $1.3 billion for budgeted statutory items; and

3. $131 million to be voted by parliament.

These represent an increase of $452.5 million, or 19 per cent over last year. The major components of this increase are as follows: a $327 million or 3 per cent increase in payments from the Old Age Security Fund; a $117.7 million or ten per cent increase in budgeted statutory items; and a $7.8 million or 6 per cent increase in voted items.

The $327 million increase in payments from the Old Age Security Fund reflects both the lowering of the eligibility age to 68 on January 1, 1967, and to 67 on January 1, 1968, as well as the introduction of the guaranteed income supplement with effect from January 1, 1967.

The $117.7 million increase in budgeted statutory items includes a $160 million increase for the new Canada Assistance Plan; a $41 million increase in hospital insurance reflecting both an increase in out-patient and in-patient costs as well as a net increase in population; a $30 million increase for the new health resources fund; a $1.5 million increase in family allowances reflecting an increase in the number of children for whom allowances are paid; a $190 million decrease in unemployment assistance reflecting the transfer of payments under this act to the Canada Assistance Plan Act; and a $5.8 million decrease in old age assistance reflecting the reduction in the eligibility age for payments from the Old Age Security fund.

The $7.8 million increase in voted items includes: a $2.8 million increase in the cost of operating the medical services program which reflects mainly an increase in the service and costs of providing service for Indian and northern health; a $2.6 million increase in the cost of operating the welfare services program which reflects the build-up of staff to administer the Canada Pension Plan, the guarantee income supplement and the Canada assistance plan.

There is a $1.3 million increase in the costs shown under vote 1, departmental administration; $500,000 represents new health and welfare grants for research and demonstration activities in the field of mental retardation; $800,000 represents some addition to central administrative services staff resulting from the growth in operating programs and some addition of staff to strengthen financial and personnel management in line with the Glassco concepts.

There is a $1.2 million increase in the cost of food and drug services which reflects the further strengthening of inspection and enforcement activities in the areas of food and drug plant inspections, examination of imported foods and drugs and more thorough evaluation of submissions for the introduction and sale of new drugs, chemical food additives and pesticides; a half million dollar increase in national welfare grants reflecting the last annual increase for these grants to a maximum of $2.5 million as authorized by cabinet; a $500,000 increase in the cost of operating the health services program which reflects mainly the acquisition of equipment to support my department's contribution to the International Joint Commission's study of water pollution in the great lakes system and to improve our capability for research in the important fields of air pollution and radiation protection; a $400,000 increase in funds available to the provinces for commitment under the general health grants program. The cash required for payment in this fiscal year is, however, forecast at $1.1 million less than last year.

This broad picture of the department's proposed expenditures for 1967-68 focuses attention on the introduction of several new programs. Each constitutes a significant step toward a comprehensive health and welfare service for the people of Canada and I would, therefore, like to report on their development.

About 700,000 Canadians or 57 per cent of the 1,240,000 old age security pensioners are now receiving the guaranteed income supplement. Some 430,000 are receiving the full $30 supplement and the average for those receiving less than the maximum is approximately $18.95 per month. From this experience my department is now forecasting expenditures of $240 million in 1967-68.

The administration of this program has been handled by the staff of the old age security directorate of the department with the addition of a corps of casual employees for the initial steps of mailing, receiving and processing applications. The local offices of the Canada Pension Plan, National Revenue and the Unemployment Insurance Commission were made available to assist pensioners in making application.

The Canada Assistance Plan, enacted by parliament on July 15, 1966, to have effect from April 1, 1966, is a comprehensive measure for sharing the cost of public assistance and welfare assistance with the provinces and municipalities, with a view to encouraging the provision of adequate assistance and the improvement of services that have a preventive and rehabilitative emphasis. The act emphasizes the need for adequate assistance to be provided to persons in need and gives special emphasis to the development of welfare services which have as their object the lessening, removal or prevention of the causes and effects of poverty, child neglect, or dependence on public assistance. It thus goes beyond the concept of assistance as such and places major emphasis on the importance of prevention and rehabilitation.

During the year a great deal of the time of the welfare branch has been devoted to the development of regulations and agreements and, after extensive consultation with the provinces, regulations under the plan were adopted on January 26, 1967. Agreements were forwarded to the provinces for signature in February and to date nine provinces have entered into agreements and it is expected that the agreement with the remaining province will be concluded in the very near future.

The Canada Pension Plan began operation on January 1, 1966, when the initial contributions became payable. The first retirement pensions were paid in January of this year and, as of April 30, there were 4,449 Canadians receiving retirement pensions. It is estimated that, by the end of 1967, 18,000 Canadians will be receiving this pension and, by the end of 1968, 40,000. This indicates the advances being made with this most important program and I should like to take a little time to outline major areas of progress to hon. members.

The organization of the Canada Pension Plan administration has progressed to the point where 37 district offices of the administration are open on a full time basis. In addition, services are provided as required in 89 local offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration. By combining the offices of these three agencies, we are able to provide a nationwide network of service to the public.

Work is proceeding within the Canada Pension Plan administration on survivors' benefits which are scheduled for payment for the first time in February, 1968. Current planning involves an intensive and detailed study of all provisions in the legislation relating to these benefits, drafting of regulations, the adaptation of certain procedures already developed for administration of retirement pensions, the development of procedures unique to survivors' benefits and a specialized training course for staff in the administration of this important aspect of the Canada Pension Plan. Further planning and organization in relation to the administration of disability pensions, effective in May, 1970 will proceed on schedule.

The Pension Appeals Board has been established, with Hon. Paul Emile Cote, Judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, as chairman and hon. Mr. Justice Alfred Monnin, Court of Appeals of Manitoba, and His Honour, Judge M. L. Tyrwitt-Drake, County Court, Victoria, British Columbia, as the other members. I would add that the Pension Appeals Board has been designated by the government of Quebec to be the review commission under the Quebec pension plan.

Contributions received throughout the calendar year 1966 totalled more than $566 million. It is interesting to note that this compared with the actuarial forecast of $425.7 million and that the major reasons for the difference were that the forecast was based on a lower level of average earnings and on a higher rate of unemployment than has actually occurred. Costs of administering the plan by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the comptroller of the treasury, the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Public Works and the Unemployment Insurance Commission are estimated at $10.7 million for the fiscal year 1966-67 and $13 million dollars for the fiscal year 1967-68.

It will be recalled that the Health Resources Fund Act was passed in July, 1966 to supplement the government's proposals for a medical care program. The health resource program has retroactive effect to January 1, 1966 and provides for payments to the provinces of up to 50 per cent of the reasonable cost of acquiring, constructing, renovating and equipping a health training or research facility. A fund of $500 million is now available for a carefully phased program extending over a 15 year period.

Preliminary programs for the development of health training facilities over the next five years have been submitted by the provinces. The newness of the health resources program has resulted in many of these programs containing very tentative information on the amount and timing of costs to be incurred with respect to individual projects. Indications are, however, that claims against the fund will approximate $30 million in 1967-68 as is shown in the estimates. Projects totalling some $16 million of contributions from the fund have been approved to date.

The start of the medical care program is scheduled for July 1, 1968 and there is, of course, no amount included in these estimates for contributions to the provinces. However, since the passage of legislation, departmental officials have continued consultation with provincial officials and a federal-provincial conference was held several weeks ago. From all indications it would appear that the provinces are proceeding with the necessary action to complement federal legislation, thereby making possible a nation wide system of prepaid medical care.

Let me now refer to the subject of mental retardation. As one of the top ranking causes for disability among all age groups, mental retardation is regarded as a major national health, social and economic problem. It is responsible for immeasurable and prolonged frustration and loss to the retarded individual's family as well as a great loss in economic output to society.

The government has recognized that mental retardation is of national concern and warrants increased financial support for programs specifically designed to prevent and alleviate this disability.

Several avenues have been explored to date. For example, under our grants to welfare and related organizations program, the annual contribution towards the administrative and general costs of the Canadian Association for Retarded Children started at $5,000 in 1959-60 and has been increased over the last few years to $40,000. This annual, unconditional support is equivalent to an income of 5 per cent on an investment of $800,000.

Through the program of the Department of Manpower in conjunction with the provinces it is expected that a large sum will be made available for the capital construction aspects of some of the crusade projects undertaken by the Canadian Association for Retarded Children. Some of the crusade projects relate to vocational training, although I believe that negotiations are still going forward and final decisions have not yet been made.

Finally, in order that a comprehensive and effective approach may be made to the solution of both health and welfare aspects of problems related to mental retardation, a health and welfare research and demonstration grant has been established under which a sum of $2,500,000, is to be made available over the next five years. The beginning of this grants program is indicated under vote 1 of my departments estimates, by the inclusion of $500,000.

In this regard, I should like to pay a tribute to the Canadian Association for Retarded Children for the leadership and imagination shown in the crusade lauched to improve the lot of those Canadians affected by mental retardation and to encourage research into this serious health and welfare problem.

In conclusion, I should like to say that the estimates for 1967-68 on which I have been commenting reflect the continuation of a vigorous pattern of growth which has made the department of National Health and Welfare increasingly important and vital in its impact on and involvement with the people of Canada. In the past 22 years expenditures of the department have increased almost tenfold from $295,600,000 in 1946-47 to the estimated $2.8 billion which is now being considered by this committee.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to compliment the minister for his lengthy remarks in respect of the various activities of his department and for indicating to us what has been done, what he thinks has been done and what he hopes to accomplish. There has been considerable legislation passed in respect of health and welfare in the last three years, although some of it has taken a long time to implement, such as the medicare plan. I realize there have been problems, for example the lack of funds, and this can be readily understood when one considers that we are faced with the second greatest deficit, perhaps the greatest before the year is over, in peacetime. This has been accompanied by the highest cost of living and the highest taxes in our history.

Perhaps some of these measures should have been delayed. For that reason, I should like to ask the minister to give us an indication about legislative priorities. The minister also referred to the Canada Assistance Plan and other social welfare legislation.

I do not believe there has been a yardstick devised in respect of the sharing of costs which has been acceptable both to the federal and provincial governments. Let me illustrate my point. In the province of Ontario, as well as in others, the minimal income groups are covered by medical insurance. The provincial government pays 50 per cent of the costs and we find the federal government does not enter the picture and pay the other 50 per cent. I have drawn it to the attention of this house on more than one occasion that another group of our citizens, representing about 30 per cent of our population require medical coverage that they cannot finance. Why does the government not help the provinces in this regard? If the minister is as sincere as he sounds, and as I think he is, it seems reasonable to expect the federal government would do something in this regard rather than continue this wasteful duplication through bureaucratic practices that does not touch those marginal people when they are ill.

I should like to ask what has happened so far as the Canada Assistance Plan is concerned. We have set up boards which act as tribunals to which people can appeal if they feel they have been badly treated. I want to put on the record a case which came to my attention of a woman who had suffered severe physical and psychological trauma a few years ago. According to the manpower branch she is unemployable and certified as such. She is too old and unsuitable for retraining, yet this woman is not eligible for benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan. She has applied and has been refused. We may have the best social legislation in the world, but if it founders in a morass of bureaucracy it is not only useless, it is expensive.

Let me give another illustration of the jungle of bureaucracy in which the government finds itself. I received a report of a man who is 64 years of age and who served in two world wars. He did not get out of Canada during the last one but he was with the Queen's Own Rifles in Newfoundland training troops there for overseas duty. This man became paralysed after a stroke. He could not talk or get out of bed. His Ontario hospital insurance ran out and he was told he would have to get out of the hospital. At that time the case was drawn to my attention and I referred it to the Ontario Hospital Commission. They felt that something could surely be done.

But all that was done was to tell this man to go home, where his wife was ill and waiting for a bed in hospital. This is an example of how well some of the programs have worked. The Ontario Hospital Commission said this man was a veteran and came under the Department of Veterans Affairs at Ottawa. They said the department should look after him since he was in the first world war. This fellow could not speak. He had lost his papers and number. Remember he was also in the second world war. When this matter was taken up with the authorities they said he had never been out of Canada. He was in Newfoundland, Mr. Chairman, and Newfoundland was not part of Canada in 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945.

I bring this case to the attention of the minister to point out the loopholes in the hodge-podge welfare legislation that has been brought before this house and passed. I do not wonder that the minister wants to have a guaranteed income established because that will be the only way out of this jungle in which he finds himself. What happened to this man? They refused to treat him as a veteran. They said he did not qualify to enter Sunnybrook because he had not been out of Canada.

Then I called the local welfare department which finally took over the case and this man is today under custodial care. I bring this case to the attention of the minister to point out that there was a failure, not only at the provincial level but at the federal level as well. There was also a failure at the local level of communication. We have not much to boast about when a man who is defenceless, cannot get out of bed and cannot even talk, is treated in this way. I would point out that this man enlisted in the first world war when he was in his teens.

I could tell the minister about dozens of other cases where the same problem has arisen. It is because of these problems that the other day the minister of welfare said we will have to set up a system or committee whereby these people can be interviewed and assisted when refused help. What is wrong with the local authorities, the provincial governments and the federal government? Is there no co-operation or co-ordination so that a man will have his case fairly appraised? This type of wasteful bureaucracy must not be permitted. We in this country may be well off, but we are not that well off. We cannot afford all this duplication and waste, and at the same time pay the high costs of administration. I have referred specifically to this government but I suppose all governments are doing the same thing in a smaller way. We added 12,000 civil servants to the bureaucracy last year. There comes a time when bureaucracy should no longer be enlarged. Very soon we will have more chiefs than Indians, more civil servants than taxpayers.

I wish to spend a few minutes dealing with the problem of mental and tuberculosis hospitals. I ask the federal government why they categorize a man as a second class citizen because he is a mental patient. Is it not about time that in this Canada of ours we regarded a mentally ill person as being in the same category as a person who is physically ill? Just as many beds are occupied in this country today by the mentally ill as the physically ill. The federal government, despite all its magnanimity and its great welfare programs, will not provide assistance for the care of the mentally ill.

There are many blind areas in our welfare programs. The attitude toward the mentally sick is one of them. Why is the stigma of a second class citizen attached to a person who unfortunately becomes mentally ill? A mentally ill person is just the same as any other ill person. The only difference is that he becomes nervous and emotionally upset, instead of requiring his appendix to be taken out or having some other medical problem. The same thing applies to our tubercular patients, who fortunately are becoming less in number. It would not cost a great deal of money to include the cost of care of the mentally sick and our tubercular patients. The cost of a bed in a mental hospital is approximately one third of the cost of a bed for the medically ill or the person requiring surgery.

In this connection, I make a plea on behalf of the provinces. In the province of Ontario expenses rose 25 per cent last year. The federal government, with all the taxing powers it has, last year had an increase in expenses of only 14 per cent. I have a great deal of sympathy with the provinces. It is sometimes said the provinces are creating problems by saying they are not being fairly treated. This is a very good illustration of the fact that they are not being fairly treated. At the provincial level, expenditures are increasing much faster than they are at the federal level.

We must also remember that administrative costs fall entirely upon the province that administers the program. The federal government says it shares these costs of welfare 50-50. This is not so, because administration is entirely an expense of the province. The federal government will not even be sharing medicare costs 50-50 with the province of Ontario. It will be contributing much less than 50 per cent.

On the subject of psychiatric care in Canada, Dr. Alex Richmond said there was the greatest need to see that these people get adequate care, not only from the standpoint of the federal government accepting its share but in helping to get these people rehabilitated as quickly as possible. The longer a person stays in a mental hospital, the less his chance of complete recovery.

Then, there is the problem of alcoholism. About 2 per cent of the population today suffer from alcoholism; the number is around 400,000. Should not the costs incurred in treating these unfortunate people be shared equally by the federal government, which obtains very large sums of money in the way of taxes from the sale of alcohol? Last year more alcohol was sold in this country than ever before. I ask, should the federal government not also assist people suffering from other forms of addiction?

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare why he does not go a little further than his predecessors and accept some responsibility in these fields. The treatment of these people should be accepted as a federal responsibility under a shared program. These people are Canadians; they are sick, and need treatment. With regard to shared programs, those provinces which have not the necessary funds with which to match the contribution of the federal government should be helped.

Then there is the crisis in the shortage of doctors. Not one medical university this year is providing a summer course. We will admit about 1,000 medical students to university this fall. The other day at Atlantic City the American Medical Association went on record as saying that the doctor shortage in the United States is very critical. They called for more schools. They accepted over 20,000 applications in this respect. You do not need to be a mathematician, Mr. Chairman, to figure out that this is 20 times the number we are accepting. You do not need to be a mathematician to know that the population of the United States is 10 times greater than that of Canada. On the same basis we should be accepting just double what we are, namely, 2,000.

What is being done to solve these problems? The lack of action on the part of the government is what alarms me. Has the minister taken cognizance of these problems, or does he stand back like Ferdinand brushing the flies off his back.

When the minister brought in the medicare legislation it was his responsibility to bring in measures to aid the provinces in producing doctors because the provinces by themselves do not have the resources to do it.

Dr. Jones stated the following in speaking about the health resources fund:

> Honesty compels me however to agree with the dean of every Canadian medical school and with practically every minister of health in this country, that the amount is grossly inadequate, and the fact that after two years only the very initial expenditures have been made gives point to my comments about difficult administration.

We hear nothing about the personnel to operate the hospitals. Are we to have a group of empty buildings with nobody in them? What is the use of putting up buildings if we do not fill them with personnel and equipment? I say to the minister that it is too bad that nothing was done to ensure that our Canadian medical schools would operate this summer. I disagree entirely with the minister's opinion that we will have a sufficient number of doctors, and I challenge his statement.

Dr. Dawson stated, after a good deal of exploration across this country and after having interviewed many medical schools, that it would be necessary to bring into this country 500 doctors per year. The Hall commission report is now some years old but its recommendations have not been carried out. I want to point out to the minister that a great responsibility lies on his shoulders because he himself admitted that the implementation of medicare will increase the workload of the doctors. I agree with him.

I should like to deal now with the question of priorities in medical care, and I thank the minister for being good enough to send me his speech in which he mentioned this subject. I want to ask him, who will allocate the priorities? Who will say in what category one is to be placed so far as medical care is concerned? Is some receptionist going to decide whether or not one's appendix is to be taken out or whether one can afford to wait, two, three or four months for a doctor's care? If the minister will suggest that the emergency departments of hospitals will do it, let me tell him that they are now overloaded and overworked. There are fewer interns in the hospitals across Canada than there have been for years.

I was very interested in another point which the minister mentioned. He said that general practitioners practising in rural areas will be quite satisfied with their lot. They will be paid for the work they do and they will like living out in the country. I will tell the minister that I have had the occasion to speak to some of these doctors who told me they were having some problems. The nearest hospital is often 20 miles away and they average three or four cases in hospital because the doctors in the town are too busy. There is an insufficient number of interns in the hospitals, and yet when these doctors put in claims for mileage on their income tax forms the Department of National Revenue refuses to acknowledge them. Is one hand working with or against the other. What is the minister doing about this situation? I agree with him that we need more doctors in rural areas.

There is another point which I should like to reiterate, that is the acute shortage of doctors in this country. In the United States there are just under 300,000 doctors practising. In Canada we have just under 20,000 practising doctors.

It was pointed out at a meeting in Atlantic City the other day that an acute shortage of doctors existed in the United States. Here we are letting things ride because if we wanted it badly enough, our medical schools could have been operating this summer. Somehow or other the minister could have used his powers of persuasion, and I do not think it would have taken much persuasion, to convince the doctors of the necessity of operating the schools this summer. They could operate at increased pace, using buildings that would be empty, and instead of graduating doctors after six years they would do so after four. Dr. Evans, the head of the medical school at McMaster University, even said they could graduate a doctor in three years. He said this was a necessity, but even at that he stated we will not be able to fill the gap. I note that the minister is quoted as saying that everything will be fine here and we will have all the doctors we need in 1971 or 1972. I wonder who is right because the United States has a dire shortage of doctors and yet they have one doctor for every 750 people while we have a doctor for roughly every 1,000 people. In view of the fact that 50 per cent of our doctors are specialists we must assume there is a doctor for every 2,000 people in Canada.

I believe that things must be made a little more attractive for the general practitioners here, and the government should work in conjunction with the provincial governments and with the universities to ensure that Canadians receive the medical care which is required. I tell the minister in all frankness that 85 per cent of all illnesses can be looked after by a general practitioner, but today 50 per cent of our doctors are specialists and 50 per cent are general practitioners. The minister should consult the provinces and the universities on these very points which are so vital to Canadians so that they can obtain the best use of medical man power.

I do not believe it is right to give the people medicare and to assure them they will get all the medical care they will require when and how they like it. This would be gross misrepresentation on the part of the minister because he himself admitted it may be necessary to establish priorities in medical care. All this is very puzzling to me because I know how long some people have to wait before they can see a doctor, and yet the minister will increase the workload of the doctors without ensuring that more of them will be available.

I hope the minister and the government will face this situation squarely because it is my guess that the flow of immigration will be reduced substantially. I do not think that the European countries will continue to graduate doctors for the purpose of sending them here. Here in Canada it costs approximately $50,000 to graduate a doctor. If Great Britain and the other European countries continue to send their doctors over here, they will be giving us a real asset. I hope they do, but I doubt it.

There is another interesting point which I would like to make. What does one do if one wants to bring a doctor from Great Britain or another European country? I put this question to a government official the other day and I was told I could go to a local immigration office and ask them about it. This is the biggest farce I ever saw. One has to go to an immigration office to get a doctor to practise in a given area or to help out in a clinic. Surely, the problem of the shortage of doctors is important enough to warrant the establishment of a liaison between the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Immigration so that it would be sufficient to deal with only one department and one would not have to wander around in a maze of bureaucracy trying to get a doctor to come over to Canada.

I believe there was much sense in what the attorney general of the province of Ontario had to say. I know he was criticized and I do not agree with all he said.

However, there was quite a lot of common sense in what he said. He noted that the provinces got together in confederation and that the federal government was the central power. But why would not the idea of bringing together the provincial ministers of health to discuss their needs, their plans and the great shortage of doctors today be appealing? Would not this advice be worth while.

I mentioned research and the necessity for more research. Dr. Thomson, who was president of the Canadian Medical Association, stated that the health resources fund provided a pittance compared with what we really need. The matter which concerned him most of all, Mr. Chairman, was how to staff the structures that the fund, spread over 15 years, builds, after it has been equalled dollar for dollar from provincial funds—that is, if the provinces can find the funds. The minister will recall that the Hall report called for a drastic increase in the supply of doctors, nurses, technicians and paramedical personnel who are required to provide adequate medical care, and this before medicare is instituted. Yet the government does nothing to bring this about. The scheme has now been put into operation and as Dr. Thomson said, the fund has provided a mere pittance.

Another aspect of the research problem is this. In order to have good teachers in the field of research you must have research-minded doctors. The medical research council is receiving just about half the amount recommended in the Gundy report. There is talk about reversing the brain drain, but I should like to see the statistics in this regard because I do not think that the drain is all that heavy. I have seen very little evidence of it. But how can we possibly bring our doctors back when we are spending a mere pittance on research.

I would call to the minister's attention that the Minister of Industry, speaking in Paris, said that 2 per cent of the gross national product should be put into research. But what do we find, Mr. Chairman? Two per cent would provide an amount of $1,200 million for research, whereas today we are spending, as the minister knows better than I, less than $26 million—about $25,800,000. As I say, this is less than half the amount that the Gundy report stated we must spend if we are to provide the doctors, personnel and trained medical students we require. This is rather pitiful in view of the situation in which we are.

Many towns across Canada have no resident doctor. As we sit here in this house more and more towns are being deserted. In the long run this is going to prove expensive because we are increasing the load on our paramedical services, ambulances and so on, who have to take care of people without their own doctor. When the doctor lives nearby most of this cost is offset. Not only that, when an ambulance is called the patient is sure to be taken to hospital which taxes the emergency department.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has elapsed.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Does the committee give unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Mr. Rynard: I appreciate the courtesy of hon. members in allowing me to go on, and I will speak for only a few minutes. I am interested in this question. I know the minister personally, and although he is a very fine fellow I am wondering whether he does have all the information that he should have. He must have been talking to a different group of fellows from those I talk to because most of the people I speak to refer to the dire shortage of medical personnel. Just the other day I heard of one man who died, I am sure, because he did not receive prompt care. There was no one available to care for him.

Another big problem in our hospitals today is this. Some people have to go to the emergency department of a hospital because they are unable to obtain the services of a doctor. People arrive in a new city and are unable to find a doctor to treat them because the doctors themselves are overworked. Therefore if they get sick they go to the emergency department of a hospital. The emergency departments of all hospitals across Canada, of which I am aware, are overloaded; the staffs are overworked and inadequate in number to do things they are supposed to do.

We can slough this off and say that the situation will correct itself and that things will be all right in a few years. But in passing through this house a medicare bill, it is not only the right of the minister but his solemn obligation to see that the people of Canada get the best medical service possible. In this vein I close. The situation is a very serious one, and I am reminded of Nero sitting fiddling while Rome burned.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is always a privilege to take part in the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. As usual, I have one or two complimentary remarks to make; however the minister will not be surprised if I say them quickly and get on with the meat of what I should like to say on this occasion.

I agree with the minister when he speaks of the tremendous importance of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I share his pleasure in noting that its progress, its growth and its development can be measured by the fact that its budgetary requirements have increased tenfold in the last two decades. This, I suggest, is not just an example of bureaucracy, of government spending gone wild; rather it is an indication of the demands that parliament, in the name of the people of Canada, has made for improvements in our social security program in this country, and we welcome the improvements that have been made.

There is something I should like to say which does not fit into any logical sequence, but I should like to fit it in anyway. The minister said something in the course of his speech that I am sure will not hit the headlines, yet I think it is significant. He referred to the fact that the pension appeals board which has been appointed under the Canada Pension Plan has been designated by the government of Quebec to be the review commission under the Quebec pension plan.

As everyone knows, whenever there are differences between Quebec and the federal government those differences hit the headlines. I think it should be noted that the relations between the administrators of the Canada Pension Plan and the administrators of the Quebec pension plan have been most cordial and that the officials have been most co-operative. I understand that they have been able to agree on most everything they are called upon to administer, and I suggest that this is something that should be noted. Even if the minister is not a model in all aspects, he might use his influence to spread this kind of co-operation between the provinces and the federal government.

I should now like to speak about some of the major programs that are administered by this department. The minister referred to them in terms of satisfaction, but I have some criticisms and complaints to offer.

The minister is already boasting about the guaranteed income supplement. He tells us how many Canadians have been able to qualify for it in full and how many have been able to qualify for a partial payment under the guaranteed income supplement program. Perhaps I might put the figures on the record as I see them. The minister has told us that 430,000 pensioners are drawing the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement of $30, and 270,000 pensioners are drawing a partial amount averaging $18.95. That adds up to a total of 700,000 pensioners who are receiving the supplement in whole or in part. But that leaves 540,000 Canadians of 68 years of age or over who are not getting any portion of the extra $30. For them the old age security pension is still only $75 a month, and I suggest that most of them really need the full $105.

I want to repeat the position that we in this party took in the last session when we were debating this matter. It has been a retrograde step for the government to take, to say to our old age pensioners: "You are now in two classes: those who get a pension as of right, but only up to a certain point; and those who, by passing the means test, get something more."

The minister likes to tell us that it is not a means test but an income test. He told us that during the debate last year and he still refers to it that way in the many speeches that he has been making about the country. May I zero in on this particular aspect of the administration of this program.

The minister will recall that when we were debating this matter in the last session he repeated time and again that there were certain kinds of income that would not be considered as income for the purposes of the guaranteed income supplement; in particular, he referred to war veterans allowances and to any pensions or allowances that people received under provincial legislation. I want to tell him, Mr. Chairman, that there is a great deal of unhappiness and misery in the experience of many war veterans of this country who are receiving a war veterans allowance and who took the minister at his word.

Those veterans were told that they could apply for the guaranteed income supplement and that they could get it because a war veterans allowance does not count as income for the purposes of the guaranteed income supplement. When those same people, who were encouraged by the minister's statement and by the red print on the application form to apply for the guaranteed income supplement, even though they were getting the war veterans allowance, made their applications they discovered that, as a result of getting the guaranteed income supplement under the old age pension, their war veterans allowances were cut back.

The minister must know, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs must know, that the war veterans of this country feel that they have been treated in a very raw fashion in this matter.

In the same vein, I remind the minister of a lengthy discussion that we had over the question of the allowances which are paid by the provinces. The minister insisted that any money received by a pensioner as a supplementary allowance from a province would not be counted against his supplementary income under the guaranteed income supplement program. When we said: "What about the provinces? Will they see it this way?" he said, "Of course, it is up to the provinces. We do not stand in the way of people in the provinces getting this extra $30 under the guaranteed income supplement and continuing to get whatever the provinces want to pay to them by way of provincial supplementary allowance." That is what the minister said.

We have had many experiences in this area and I shall base what I want to say in this connection on an experience that my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, had with one of his constituents. I bring this matter up because the correspondence between the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the minister of social welfare for the province of British Columbia makes the point very clear. This was a case where a person in British Columbia was drawing $75 a month old age security and $30 a month as an extra social allowance which was paid by the province of British Columbia. She applied for the guaranteed income supplement of $30. The minister told her, the application form told her, the instruction book told her, and the act told her that she could apply for the guaranteed income supplement although she was getting the $30 a month supplement from the province of British Columbia. But what happened?

Her case was assessed by officials in British Columbia, and in the end they cut her provincial allowance down to $1.65. As the result of this great, new piece of legislation this woman who had been getting $105 a month now gets $106.65 a month.

My leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, did what all of us have done in our own cases. He wrote to the minister of social welfare of British Columbia, hon. Mr. Campbell, suggesting that it was improper for British Columbia to take this attitude; that, after all, the Minister of National Health and Welfare had made it clear that they were under no obligation to cut down on the provincial allowance because of what was provided in the federal legislation. The minister of social welfare for British Columbia wrote back to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on May 19, 1967, and said this:

> The quotation in your letter from my department's notice dated February 20th, 1967, is exactly as quoted. The province of British Columbia has on a number of occasions made representation to the federal government to ignore the guaranteed income supplement as income when determining entitlement to the provincial government supplementary social allowance. The result of this would have been that every recipient would have continued to receive the same amount of supplementary social allowance as he did prior to receiving the guaranteed income supplement.
> It was the desire of British Columbia to continue the full amount of the supplementary social allowance paid to individuals prior to their receiving the guaranteed income supplement but the federal government refused to accept this request and stated that if the government of British Columbia ignored the guaranteed income supplement as income in determining eligibility for the provincial government supplementary social allowance that it would not share in this supplementary social allowance.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Does the minister see what he has done?

Mr. MacEachen: Perfectly.

Mr. Knowles: He has said that supplementary social allowances, as received in the provinces, do not count against the income test with respect to the guaranteed income supplement. In effect, the minister said that people could get both.

• (4:20 p.m.)

He says it is up to the provinces whether or not they continue, but then when a province like British Columbia says it wants to continue, but in the meantime has come under the Canada Assistance Plan, this minister says, "If you are going to expect us to share in this program under the Canada Assistance Plan we will not do it unless you include the guaranteed income supplement as income for the purposes of the Canada Assistance Plan."

I take the minister back to the debate on the Canada Assistance Plan. He told us time and time again that all that mattered was that people take a needs test, and the government was prepared to leave the decision on what the level would be to provincial governments. Yet here is a case where a provincial government says it wants to pay a higher amount but the minister, through his officials, says this cannot be done because of the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan.

The minister has been reasserting this principle in recent times. He made one of his many speeches recently in Winnipeg, on June 13, and when speaking about the Canada Assistance Plan and its needs test, which he claims is so much better than a means test, he said this:

> The provinces may, of course, in their discretion, impose limits on the amounts to be paid to individuals or families or for specific needs. But I emphasize again, the federal legislation leaves it to the judgment and discretion of the provinces to determine what limits, if any, should apply.

This has got to be sorted out. The minister is still saying ex post facto that the federal government imposes no limit on the amounts that may be paid under the Canada Assistance Plan. Provided people take a needs test, then the federal government will pay 50 per cent. But British Columbia comes back and says, "We were denied the right to pay these social allowances unless we included as income what is being paid under the guaranteed income supplementation program."

I suggest there are two things to note here. One is the inconsistency of the position taken by the minister, and the other is that we have here another example of the fact that this idea of imposing a means test or needs test on our old people just does not fit with the thinking of today, just does not fit with the affluence we are talking about, just does not fit with the so-called just or great society.

I call upon the minister to reconsider his whole position. I suggest that if we must maintain this needs test program on old age security supplementation for a while, then things such as those to which I have just referred should be improved. But I go further than that and say that what is necessary is to change the whole basis of this supplement and put it where we tried to get it last year, on a basis as of right, whereby the full $105 per month will be paid to all who are of pensionable age and over.

There are scores of examples like this. The minister boasts about the number of people who are getting guaranteed income supplementation. But my mail, and I am sure that of many other hon. members, is just full of letters from people who are humiliated by the tests they have to go through, who are disturbed and unhappy over the reductions that take place, and who are disturbed because they do not get any supplement at all. Then, when we get a case like this where a woman gets an increase of only $1.65 per month as a result of the $30 change, and finds she is caught in this straight contradiction between the minister of Social Welfare in British Columbia and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, then I say something ought to be done about it.

I have read hon. Mr. Campbell's letter in which he says it was Ottawa that said no, that they could not do it. That was dated May 19, 1967. Yet as recently as June 13, 1967, the minister was still saying in a public address that the federal legislation leaves it to the judgment and discretion of the provinces to determine what limit if any should apply. We will come back to this later during discussion of these estimates.

I would point out that on the order paper I have a private members' notice of motion dealing with the question of removing the means test from the $30 supplement, and I suggest to the minister that this is a piece of unfinished business with which he should be dealing without delay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about medicare, to which the minister and the hon. member for Simcoe East referred. I noted that the minister today said without any embellishment at all that medicare is to come into effect on July 1, 1968. Has he forgotten that tremendous victory he secured at the meeting of the Liberals at the Chateau Laurier some time ago, when he persuaded them that he would get something better than the Minister of Finance had proposed, that he would get written into the act a provision that medicare could come into effect on July 1, 1968, or earlier? He did not mention that today. He just knows that it is not coming into effect a day earlier than July 1, 1968.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that that particular amendment which the minister put into the act just was not worth the time it took to write it out. It had no meaning, no value at all. As a matter of fact, it is like another amendment he accepted. After much pressure from all the opposition parties in the house he accepted an amendment regarding paramedical services to make it possible for the government to agree with any one province, if a province so wished, to include other than medical services under the coverage of the medicare act.

There was no question about what that amendment meant, namely, that it could be done if only one province wanted to make the agreement. When this was discussed on a late show a few weeks ago the minister freely admitted that that is the wording of the law. However, in his answer to the question on the late show he said that the law says one thing but the policy of the government is another.

The law says it can be done if even only one province wants to make such an agreement, but the minister says the policy of the government is that it is not to be done until there is a consensus. The consensus has not been defined as to whether it means two provinces, five or six, or nine or ten. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the way for this minister, or any other minister on that side of the chamber, to treat this parliament. We took him seriously in the debate on the medicare bill when these two amendments were put through. One was his own, his own idea, and the other he accepted from this side of the chamber. One was that medicare might come into effect earlier than July

1, 1968, and the other was that paramedical services, such as optometry and chiropractic services, and the rest, could be included on the basis of an agreement between a province and the federal government. It now turns out that this was just so much window dressing, just a case of being agreeable to get the bill passed.

Mr. MacEachen: Does my hon. friend not recall that during that debate I stated to the committee that the only recommendation I proposed to make to the governor in council was the inclusion of certain services provided by dental surgeons? It was clear at the time.

Mr. Knowles: It is quite clear that the only service the minister had in mind at that moment was dental surgery, but it was also made very clear that the amendment as worded and put into the act did not require a consensus among the provinces for its terms to be carried out. It is this about which I am complaining, that the minister sells parliament a bill of goods by writing something into law and then says later, "That is the law. That is what can be done, but the policy of the government is something else. The policy of the government is not to act in this field unless we have a consensus." Mr. Chairman, we contend that this simply is not good enough. This is no way to treat parliament.

The minister has to give a lot more attention to this whole medicare proposition. I am sure he not only recalls his experiences in meetings recently with the Canadian Medical Association but he must also be reading the papers these days, and it must be pretty clear to him that the Canadian Medical Association is not exactly on the bandwagon in favour of medicare. The statements which are being made by the doctors about medicare do not auger well for the inauguration of this program. When one realizes the influence the medical people have at the local level and in the provinces, and when one realizes the efforts they are making, the minister may find that the program will not get off the ground as even he hopes it will. I think part of the reason for this is the delay which has taken place across the years. I believe part of it is because the minister is not as wholehearted in his determination about medicare as he ought to be. I believe right now he should be giving the fullest concentration he can to negotiations with the provinces and with the doctors in order to make sure that medicare will get off the ground certainly not later than July 1, 1968.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Chairman, all of us in this chamber have reason to be grateful to the medical profession. All of us have reason to be grateful to individual members of the medical profession. It seems to me, however, that they should realize that the parliament of Canada, representing the people of Canada, has spoken on this issue. The parliament of Canada has said that medical care is something which should be available to all the people of this country and that it should be paid for as provided in the act. This is no time for one group to try to sabotage this very important program.

I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to spend a little less time running around the country telling us how wonderful some of these programs are, for they are not as wonderful as he says. He should spend a little more time trying to make sure that the medicare program really gets going and really is the success we believe it ought to be. This should be his main preoccupation right now.

There are one or two individual matters which I should like to mention before my time runs out. These are things on which I hope we will have action at this session. I mention these because they come under the aegis of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I refer to the question of legislation on birth control and with respect to abortion. I realize the Prime Minister has made statements about these matters at political meetings outside the house. I realize also that he has included them in speeches he has made in the house. But still it seems so difficult to get from the government assurance that anything will be done.

The other night my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare for a very simple statement. In fact, she simply asked whether he could tell us if this would be done at this session. The minister could not seem to find it in his heart or in his vocabulary to say yes. Instead, he used words which may or may not have meant something. This is a social problem which we ought not to play around with any longer. There is legislation in the Criminal Code which causes a good many people such as priests, ministers, doctors and social workers, to do criminal acts because of the way the legislation now stands. There is a similar situation with respect to abortion.

These are subjects which a few years ago could not be talked about in the House of Commons. Surely, however, when one thinks of the danger which exists in so many cases to the health of expectant mothers we should be prepared to deal with this question. One of the points the government has made is that in this centennial session, in the fall at any rate, we will deal with some of these social problems. Another one is in the news now. There is a scoop, I suppose you would call it, about what the committee on divorce will recommend. I do not bring this within the ambit of the Department of National Health and Welfare, but I do urge the minister in his capacity as the minister of a department concerned with the physical and mental health of our people to put the prestige and pressure he has behind the demand for action in these fields.

I shall not take the time to repeat the speech I have had to make so often about the 30, 40 or 50 years it takes the Liberal party to get anywhere. I do hope that this will not be the story in respect of these social issues which the Liberals trot out at their conventions, at election time and in the speech from the throne. Let us have action on them at this session of parliament.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I can refer to just one other subject and stay within the 30 minutes allotted to me at this time. I have been quite interested in the many references the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made, when he has delivered speeches around the country, to the broad question of a guaranteed annual income. I was looking forward to hearing about this in his remarks today, but I did not hear any reference to this matter. Certainly, however, this is a favourite of his in the speeches he makes when he is receiving honorary degrees and when he is speaking to various organizations and conferences outside the house.

Mr. Lambert: Almost every day.

Mr. Knowles: Not every day, but almost. He does it very nicely. I did not bring all his speeches, because the one made at Winnipeg covered most of these things. On June 13 he spoke at Winnipeg to the Community Welfare Planning Council. I can just hear his words ringing in that Cape Breton voice when he said:

> But we are on the threshold of a new age, the cybernetic age, and its consequences may well presage more fundamental changes in our approach to social security. There are, for example, contemporary predictions, which are becoming more and more believable, that within a few years, 5 per cent of the population can produce all that society needs and work will become the privilege of the few.

I suppose that "few" will always include those of us in parliament. Then the speech continues:

> In simple, dramatic terms, the traditional, centuries-old link between work and income is being questioned. At the root of it all is the basic problem of how to make our nineteenth century distribution system cope with the productive machinery of the late twentieth century.

Then, after a couple of paragraphs in which he has a Munchausian reference he says:

> These developments, these prospects and questions are the basis of a rising interest in the guaranteed minimum income as a radical—and realistic—solution to the problem of income distribution in the cybernetic age.

Despite the flowery nature of all that, I must say I agree that this problem of finding a basis for the right to live other than an association with work is one which will be upon us before we realize it. I agree that a guaranteed annual income is something to which we will have to come.

I should like to say first, let it not be the type of guaranteed annual income he tried to sell us in respect of the old age pensioners. First of all, the levels he had in mind did not represent a guaranteed annual income at all. Second, it is not a guaranteed annual income when it is paid to people only after they pass a needs or income test. A guaranteed annual income, if it is to be worth that name, should be a generous allowance which is sufficient for people to live on and, if it is too much, let some of it be taken back afterwards in the form of income tax.

The minister must recast his whole thinking on this issue. He must not try to sell us what he foisted on us last year in respect of the old age pensioners, if the guaranteed annual income is to mean what the words say and if it is to help solve the problem. I plead with the minister not to let this be treated the way the Liberal party treated old age pensions, unemployment insurance and medicare when it proposed these things in 1919—something good for two or three generations.

The minister is right in the flowery language he uses about the problems facing us in the field of maintaining our standard of living. The time to get to moving on a real guaranteed annual income program is now. But let it be adequate, and let there be no means test on it.

I thank the minister for the attention he has given to my remarks, and I hope he realizes that just because he got two or three pieces of legislation through last year his job is not done—it has only begun.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words about the Department of National Health and Welfare.

There are great needs in the field of social welfare, because the Canadian people are not treated as they should be, in accordance with our production. As a matter of fact, our production is high in Canada, but consumption is inadequate, because we do not consume our production. If we want to consume our production, we must at all costs balance our economy, and I do not see any other means to do so than by giving the people, the consumers themselves, in short, the families, the required purchasing power to become the great consumers of our abundant production.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to mortify the government, or the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) or the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), but I cannot let this opportunity go by without pointing out once again, to the house, the urgent necessity of ensuring national economic balance between the individuals, the families and the institutions which compose Canada.

When I say "between the individuals, the families and the institutions", I want to point out that families and institutions are merely groups of individuals, and that human beings only are gifted with life, have material, intellectual and spiritual needs. Indeed, families and institutions are merely instruments to produce and manage in the service of human beings.

Families and institutions as such do not exist, do not have a real life; our intelligence has created them to designate groups of human beings who live together as families, or work together as institutions.

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, only human beings have life and make up a nation, are divided into families and private and public institutions, for their needs of production or administration.

Therefore, when shall we finally understand that the human being is the fundamental unit of the nation, that it represents the basic unit of any economic administration of the nation of Canada, of the country, which we have the official mandate to administer appropriately, we the 265 members of parliament with the 102 senators of Canada?

When, some day, we have recognized in our mind and by our actions that we are responsible for the good administration of the welfare of all the human beings who make up Canada, the 20,400,000 Canadians who constitute the Canadian people, then, and only then, we will have achieved the purpose for which we have been elected, for which our electors have sent us to parliament, namely to prepare legislation for all human beings, with no exception.

If it is up to the Minister of Finance to supply the necessary funds to the Department of National Health and Welfare, it is also up to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to produce his accounts which means all the accounts necessary to the economic balance of Canadian men and women, in short the 20,400,000 Canadian citizens living on Canadian soil, saluting our Canadian flag, singing our Canadian hymn and who are proud to say they are Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, if, once again, there are 20,400,000 Canadian citizens who make up Canada, who have the right to live decently in Canada in 1967, it must be admitted that there are only 7,400,000 who have an income from their labour or their capital. There are 13 million other Canadian citizens who have neither capital nor paid employment, who have no personal income and who consequently are dependants.

These 13 million Canadian citizens are all entitled to live in 1967 according to our Canadian standard of living. If these 7,400,000 adult citizens are strictly entitled to a vital minimum, this vital minimum is the responsibility of the Ottawa government and must be valued in dollars and cents, according to appropriate amounts and not in a ridiculous fashion or with an eye-dropper.

This vital personal right is the right of the human beings in society and must be paid or guaranteed by the state, by the national government, by the central government, in short by the government with the financial means whether money, credit or capital, whatever their definite or indefinite forms, known or unknown, visible and invisible.

The right to live thus implies a certain amount of money daily, monthly or yearly for each Canadian citizen who has no income from his labour or his capital.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a natural human right for those who believe in God. It is a right already recognized in our Canadian legislation under chapter 44 of the Statutes of Canada 1960, the Canadian Bill of Rights.

To be practical and logical, this individual right to live must be evaluated and appraised in dollars and cents as any other contract. The salary of labour is evaluated in a definite amount, not in vague terms. Interest on capital is also evaluated in exact terms clearly determined in a contract.

In the same manner, the right to live of citizens without personal income must be spelled out by the contracting parties, in the circumstances the federal government and the dependent citizens, represented by their 265 members in the parliament at Ottawa.

Such is our responsibility as members in this House of Commons, as representatives of the people, as representatives of every Canadian citizen, as representatives above all of the weakest citizens of the country, of those who do not have the ability to defend their own cause by personal means, of the unemployed, of those who have no personal capital.

It is not a matter of knowing whether the government has the means to pay or to guarantee this right to live to the 13 million dependent Canadian citizens, it is a matter of recognizing that the government has the strict obligation to do it immediately within the present context of the Canadian monetary, economic and political machinery on the basis of the present production capacity and the standard of living of Canadians in 1967.

It is as simple as that, as complete as that. And it will be the end of the war on poverty, misery, indigence, insecurity; the end of poverty. The lack of wealth will remain, but it will be more human, more decent, more social, more natural and more proper.

As soon as we have admitted our duty to pay or to guarantee that right to a personal life to those 13 million dependent children, students or adults throughout Canada, at a set rate per month according to the cost of living index, I am ready to wager with those hardest to please that it will seem easy to them and even pleasant to proclaim the law of the right to live for all the citizens of Canada who have no personal income through their capital or their work.

The return on capital, Mr. Chairman, remains; the salary remains for all of the 7,400,000 persons involved in the national production. But, there is simply added the right to life for every dependent citizen as a minimum and guaranteed purchasing power, for all persons who are unemployed or who have no capital. It is as simple as that.

Everybody admits that production is for the use of the population as a whole. Everybody admits that every living individual in Canada has a right to life. Now, in 1967, we have a population of 20,400,000, and the production of the 7,400,000 producing citizens totals more than $62 billion. So we get the following averages: $62 billion; an average of 3,000 per person. Population in 1967: 20,400,000 persons; an average of $15,000 per family of five.

This is our production, the total and effective production of Canada, Mr. Chairman. And when we are told that there is not enough money to help families or to pay adequate family allowances for Canadian children, well, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we are not equal to the task, that we are in a situation entirely different from that which exists when we say that.

It is therefore obvious that the Canadian production in 1967 can provide all dependents with a vital guaranteed minimum, in accordance with the cost of living index, as well as all families, all heads of family and all students. We could even pay a reasonable allowance to the mothers who are unemployed but who also work for the community and are not rewarded for their work.

I do not wish to complicate the present discussion, but in my opinion the 13 million citizens in Canada in 1967, whether dependents, children, students or adults, should receive a stipulated monthly payment, and I think that in order to give our society and all Canadian families their due in a country where there is an abundance of wealth, we could use $8 billion out of a national product of $62 billion, which would leave a total of $54 billion for salaries and return on capital to be paid to the 7,400,000 Canadians who contribute to the national production.

I have all sorts of tables I could quote, but that would take too long. I do not want to take up all the time of the house. I would like to give the ministers and hon. members time to think about the social welfare we could provide for Canadian families trapped in an unjust system.

It is wrong for us to tolerate such a system and to allow families to live in destitution, poverty and insecurity, as we do now while spending millions and billions of dollars for all sorts of other things. The family is the basis of the whole structure of society and of public institutions. If there were no children, no families, there would be no society, no Parliament, and we would not have to pay family allowances.

If we do not believe in the family, Mr. Chairman, the birth rate will decline. Moreover, everybody agrees that the birth rate is declining in Canada. Why? Because these families have not the security they need, because they lack the means of obtaining suitable housing, enough room, for their children.

Nobody wants to rent houses to large families; they are unable to find housing.

So, we have much to do in that area, and I say once more that we must provide families with capital and the buying power needed to purchase the production of our economy, through science, through progress, through technology. Then, Mr. Chairman, we would be doing a great service to society and also to production, because to increase production we must also increase consumption.

And statistics prove that production in Canada is plentiful since, once again, we have a production of $62 billion and a consumption of $44 billion.

Large companies in Canada have also realized profits, they have capitalized $18 billion out of $62 billion of production. We have $18 billion of capitalization; $15 billion have been capitalized by large businesses and only $3 billion by the little people.

Mr. Chairman, there might be some exaggeration in our capitalization. It is not up to me to see to it but up to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp). And the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) should submit his bills to the Minister of Finance, so that the family may live reasonably well and properly in a country which is bursting with wealth.

If the 1967 production, in the amount of $62 billion, for a population of 20,400,000, guarantees, on the average, $3,000 per person, $250 a month, that is an average of $15,000 for a family of five (father, mother and three children) or $1,250 per month, and if such wonderful averages leave so many people in misery, in poverty, in insecurity, we must find the causes for such a poor distribution of such a large affluence.

When we see that, in 1966, out of a national production of $56 billion, 32 per cent or $18 billion was capitalized, and only $8 billion or 68 per cent of the production was consumed, while in 1944, 90 per cent of the production was consumed and only 10 per cent capitalized, it is indicated, I think, in order to see the trend of our national economy, to examine the same economic sectors at two different stages far enough removed from each other: thirdly, mathematical proof of the economic trends.

The revision of the bank act in 1944 and in 1967—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order. In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF MENTAL HOSPITALS AND TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIA IN FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of including mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria in the federal hospital insurance program (Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act) so that the provinces will have available sufficient funds to provide for adequate treatment of the mentally ill, those people suffering from tuberculosis, and the care and training of mentally retarded children.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: The motion which I move today is one which I have been moving for a number of years. The principle enunciated in this motion was endorsed by, and indeed the wording could have come from, the very fine report and recommendations of the Hall commission. In dealing with the problem of mental illness the commission said:

There must be an immediate end to the distinction that some still make in attitudes towards those who are mentally ill and those who are physically ill.

The commission points out that under the present terms of the hospital act, payment for the care of the mentally ill is excluded if provided in provincial mental hospitals but it is included if provided in general hospitals.

They say further that they believe this policy of excluding the mentally ill is not in the public interest.

I want to deal with this point for a moment. The situation as it now exists has created a condition in which we have two types of treatment for the mentally ill. I am not suggesting for a moment that this was planned by any government nor that this was the intention of doctors or psychiatrists. However, if a person becomes ill and the doctor and the private psychiatrist, who are usually on the staff of a general hospital, whether it be the Winnipeg General Hospital or the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal or any of the hospitals in the larger cities in Canada, decide that the patient needs hospitalization, he can be admitted to the psychiatric ward of that general hospital. There he will get the finest of attention, the cost of which in any of our best hospitals is between $30 and $35 a day, and the entire cost for what we in Manitoba call standard care, is paid for by the government hospitalization program. I think this is as it should be.

Now, who are the people who usually see psychiatrists? They are people in the middle and upper income groups, people who are covered by non-profit medical insurance plans like the Manitoba Medical Service or P.S.I. in Ontario. If, on the other hand, a person who is in the lower income bracket, who, very often, does not have a doctor and who certainly does not frequent a private psychiatrist's office, gets sick, it is likely that he will be committed to the only place to which he can go, that is one of the provincial mental hospitals. In these hospitals the average cost of care per a day is not the $30 to $35 a day which we find in the general hospitals of the country but just under $8 a day. I suggest this is the kind of anomaly which should not be allowed to continue.

Having been in the provincial legislature of Manitoba, I have some concept of the difficulties which all the provinces have in meeting their tremendous responsibilities. The provincial governments, whether they be the "have" provinces such as Ontario and British Columbia or the "have not" provinces like Newfoundland or Nova Scotia, are having to find the money to pay for the cost of education, for a large part of the cost of welfare, and for part of the cost of hospitalization. The amounts of money which provincial governments have allocated for the treatment and care of the mentally ill in provincial institutions has risen very sharply. However, I think it is obvious to all of us that there is a limit to what the provinces can do. What I am proposing in this resolution, and what the Hall commission has recommended very strongly, is that the mental hospitals be included in the provisions of the hospital insurance act so that the federal government would in effect pay for half the cost of the treatment of the mentally ill in hospital. What I am suggesting is not that the provinces should reduce their expenditures by half. I hope the federal government will adopt this principle, in fact I am certain they will if not now then in the not too distant future. I hope that in negotiations with the provinces the federal government will make it clear to the provinces that they are only prepared to extend the coverage for mental hospitals and for T.B. sanatoria if the provinces continue to spend the same amount of money as they have been spending. So, in effect, what I am suggesting is that we double the expenditure which we make in this country for people who are mentally ill and who are required to spend time in mental hospitals.

I do not think there is any member of the house who will dispute the fact that there is a tremendous shortage of required facilities. I have brought with me today a couple of dozen, if not more, newspaper reports on this subject which I have accumulated. Here I have the Toronto Daily Star of January 19, 1967. A headline on the front page of that issue reads: "Psychiatrist charges: 40 disturbed boys without proper treatment". I will read a couple of paragraphs from the article:

> Forty emotionally disturbed youngsters have been kept in an Uxbridge training school in the past year without proper psychiatric treatment, a Toronto psychiatrist said last night.
> Dr. John Rich, who Friday committed a 12-year-old boy from the St. John's Training School to the Ontario Hospital at Hamilton, said both institutions were "completely unsuitable".

Then, there is a story which appeared almost three years ago in the Winnipeg Tribune of September 11, 1964. The heading reads: "Nothing but jail for the sex offenders". I will read a short part of the article which reads as follows:

> In Manitoba today, there are many men serving jail terms for crimes they couldn't help committing.
> Wilbert X is an example: he's a sexual offender. He was convicted of gross indecency....

In sentencing him to the jail in Brandon, the magistrate said that he knew nothing would be done for this man in the jail in Brandon since they did not have the facilities.

There simply was no institution in the province of Manitoba which could handle the problems which this man had.

The statistics, of which there are many, give a graphic picture of the total situation in Canada. The Hall commission pointed out that 10 per cent of the population, about 1.9 million people, may be suffering from psychiatric and emotional disorders; that every day in Canada there are 69,000 people in mental institutions and that if you total the number in the year, there are 25 million days a year used in mental hospitals. The Hall commission estimates that mental illness accounts for almost 40 per cent of all hospital days, and in 1960 more than a third of all hospital beds in Canada were used for mentally ill patients. The figure has not changed much since that date.

As I have already pointed out, the cost of keeping and caring for a patient in a mental hospital is about a quarter of the cost of keeping a person in a general hospital. We get what we pay for. We get the kind of treatment, the kind of niggardly, miserable treatment, for which we pay. In the two provincial mental hospitals in Manitoba, the Brandon hospital and the Selkirk hospital, as of a year or two ago—I have not seen the most recent figures—there were more than 1,000 patients, and in each of these hospitals there were less than a dozen trained psychiatrists I remember when I was in the provincial legislature, and that was only five years ago, in one of the hospitals with 1,200 patients there were only three trained psychiatrists. If you keep in mind that one of them was the superintendent, who I am sure had a great deal of administrative work to do in the hospital, you can see, Mr. Speaker, that there was very little time for a psychiatrist to spend with individual patients. The result has been just what one might expect: people stay in hospitals for months, even years, when they could be at home if only they could receive individual attention.

The Hall commission laid down certain principles with respect to mental hospitals which I think we ought to keep in mind. They pointed out that there are severe shortages of psychiatrists, psychologists, psychiatric nurses and social workers in all our mental institutions. The commission recommended a crash program for training personnel in this field. There is no place where these people can be trained better, more easily and more cheaply than in our mental hospitals, but this cannot be done unless we are prepared to spend the amount of money required.

The Hall commission also called for increased funds for an expanded, co-ordinated program of research into the causes of mental illness and mental retardation. Mental illness is costing the people of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars a year in direct cost for the operation of our hospitals. There is also an indirect cost as a result of the thousands of people who are unable to work because of mental illness.

We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars on research, Mr. Speaker. We are doing research into how best to use our forests. We are doing research into how best to use our minerals. We are doing research into space exploration and into almost every field. The amount we spend on research in the field of mental illness is so small that one can hardly find the amount listed in the estimates for scientific research.

I am suggesting that if the federal government would participate in the hospital program in respect of the mentally ill, we could fairly easily commence the work on mental health research which is required.

Again, the Hall commission recommended that the hospital construction grant regulations under the health facilities development fund be amended to provide one half of the cost of construction of psychiatric wards in all general hospitals. It also recommended that henceforth all discrimination in the distinction between the mentally and physically ill in the organization and provision of services for their treatment, and the attitudes upon which these discriminations are based, be disavowed for all time as unworthy and unscientific.

In retrospect, Mr. Speaker, we can be critical of the federal government of the day, when it implemented the original hospitalization program and assumed 50 per cent of the cost of the program, for making the decision to exclude mental hospitals and T.B. sanataria from the provisions of the act. However, I suppose I can understand this; the federal government knew that it was going to get into a program which would be very expensive.

Almost 20 years have past, and to a large extent the hospital building program has been met. I know that in some of the large cities such as Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and Winnipeg there is still a shortage of hospital beds, but the bulk of the program has been implemented. I suggest that the time has long since passed when the federal government should decide to include mental hospitals in the general program.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by putting on the record the views of Dr. Charles Roberts, who is now director of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry in Toronto and who was for years head of the Verdun Protestant Hospital in Montreal. His views are reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail for January 11, 1966, and he had this to say:

> A major frustration for psychiatric patients and workers is the conflict between statements that mental illness should be treated like any other disease and the refusal to make provisions to do so....
> Dr. Roberts said mental treatment should be included in hospital insurance programs. It has often been claimed since the program was introduced in 1957 that it was impossible to find the money at the federal level to include mental care, but since then there has been one of the greatest airport construction programs any country has ever undertaken; the trans-Canada highway has been financed and the St. Lawrence seaway has been completed. Hundreds of millions more dollars are being made available for universal old age pensions and the Canada Pension Plan.

I agree with Dr. Roberts. All of these things are needed. But so is an improvement in the facilities which are provided for the hundreds of thousands of people in Canada who are mentally ill and need assistance.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which has been debated in this house on numerous occasions since the time when the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was placed on the statute books in 1957. It is a subject on which there is substantial agreement on all sides of the house in so far as the principle is concerned.

Speaking on the subject in July 1964, the former minister of national health and welfare pointed out during a federal-provincial meeting of ministers of health which had been held at that time that there had been general acceptance of the principle of integration of mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria into the general hospital system. She pointed out, however, that because of the financial implications, the matter would have to be reviewed within the framework of the tax structure committee which was planned at that time. In fact, the following year the federal government agreed to consider this question along with other financial matters.

It seems to me that it might be helpful at this time to outline the circumstances in which the mental hospitals were not originally included within the federal legislation; and, at the same time, to assess the extent to which psychiatric units in general hospitals are in fact providing insured services in connection with the treatment of mental illness. I will have a word to say later on the subject of tuberculosis sanatoria.

When the hospital legislation was introduced a decade ago, my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who was at that time the minister of national health and welfare, explained to the house the underlying consideration for the exclusion of mental hospitals. He pointed out that in the provinces there was virtually no financial barrier to care in mental hospitals by virtue of the fact that, for the most part, these institutions were provincially financed. At the same time, a very substantial proportion of the care provided in these hospitals was of a type which was custodial. The hospital program, on the other hand, was designed to remove financial obstacles to the acquisition of hospital care generally and to set up a hospital care program providing non-custodial services.

In initiating such a large program, therefore, it was considered at that time to be preferable to deal with general hospitals including the chronic, convalescent and rehabilitation institutions as a matter of urgency. The costs of hospital care were becoming unbearably burdensome both to individuals and to the hospitals themselves; and it was of utmost importance to take immediate measures to alleviate this situation. In excluding certain types of hospitals, the government had regard to the fact that a certain amount of federal support was already being provided through the national health grants program to mental hospitals.

I would remind hon. members that the hospital insurance program was, and still is, a very costly one and it was considered to be necessary, therefore, to set certain priorities with regard to the types of institutions initially to be included. There were precedents for exclusions which had already been established at that time by a number of provinces which preceded the federal government in setting up hospital plans. I should like to remind the house that the provincial hospital plans in Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta which were in operation prior to the joint program all excluded mental hospitals. I do not mention this fact in order to be critical of these fine pioneer programs; nor as an apology for the federal government's action in excluding them from the hospital insurance legislation. I am merely pointing out that the view held by the federal government ten years ago was a view which had been shared by other governments which were already in the field.

In the decade since the hospital insurance plan came into operation, great changes have taken place and medical science has brought about a veritable revolution in the treatment of mental illness. More and more psychiatric beds are being built in general hospitals. More and more care, particularly for acute cases, is provided in psychiatric units of general hospitals. There has been an upsurge of admissions in these units resulting from changing methods of treatment and in changing types of facilities being used to handle psychiatric patients. The number of admissions to psychiatric units in general hospitals is now almost equal to the rate of admissions to mental hospitals. This, of course, is due to the early discharge of patients from psychiatric units which provide short-term intensive treatment for the patient with a favourable prognosis.

The recent growth of psychiatric units in general hospitals is best illustrated by the fact that only 15 years ago the numbers of such facilities were negligible; by 1965 there were 64 such units including nine in federal hospitals. Within public general hospitals there has been an increase from 10 units in 1951 to 55 units at the end of 1965.

I have spoken particularly of the psychiatric units in general hospitals because, as hon. members are aware, this type of care is made available through hospitals participating in the hospital insurance program. Patients admitted to these units, therefore, receive normal hospital insurance benefits.

I do not wish to imply that because hospital insurance benefits are available to patients in psychiatric units of general hospitals that they should not be also extended to patients in mental hospitals. I merely wish to emphasize the fact that although mental hospitals as mental institutions are excluded from the definition of "hospital" under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, this does not in any way exclude the treatment of mental illness when carried out in a participating hospital under the hospital insurance program.

[Mrs. Rideout.]

The exclusion of mental hospitals from the federal act is, of course, merely an exclusion from the shareable costs of hospitals toward which the federal government contributes; in no way need it affect provincial plans. In fact, from the outset, at least one of the provinces has included mental hospitals in provincial hospital insurance legislation and provides insured services in these institutions. It is true that the operating costs of these mental hospitals are not shareable with the federal government in the same way as the operating costs of other hospitals are shareable. But funds provided by the federal government through the mental health grant are, of course, provided with respect to these hospitals. Other provinces might very well provide similar programs if they wished to do so. Hospitals come within provincial jurisdiction and provinces may provide programs as they see fit.

A number of provinces have been realigning their mental hospital programs in such a way as to separate the element of custodial care from the element of treatment care, thus facilitating the identification of treatment services provided in these institutions. Such measures undoubtedly will facilitate the eventual integration of mental hospital services into the general hospital services plan. There is no reason at the present time why provinces should not extend provincial hospital insurance legislation so as to include these portions of mental hospitals in the general program.

In so far as tuberculosis sanatoria are concerned, the problem differs from that of mental hospitals. Changes in medical treatment of tuberculosis have effected a dramatic change in the types of facilities which formerly were used for patients suffering from tuberculosis. The tuberculosis sanatorium is, in fact, a disappearing institution. More and more of these hospitals are being closed or are being converted for use as chronic hospitals. In the course of time it is anticipated that there may no longer be maintained the now virtually outmoded institution known as the tuberculosis sanatorium.

The question of extending federal contributions so as to include mental and tuberculosis hospitals is a financial question and is precisely the type of question which is now being studied in depth, along with other federal-provincial financial arrangements, by the tax structure committee. It is because of this, and pending a decision as to the future of federal-provincial programs such as hospital insurance, that the government does not propose to make any move at this time to include mental hospitals in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

As you are well aware, when the present government took office a new policy was announced with regard to established federal-provincial programs. In conformity with this policy, the federal-provincial tax structure committee was created by the federal-provincial conference early in 1964. The committee was charged with the task of conducting a joint review of the nature and extent of federal and provincial taxes in relation to the financial responsibilities which nowadays have to be carried out by federal and provincial governments. The following year we in this house passed the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act concerning the operation of certain established federal-provincial programs. It set out necessary procedures to permit provincial governments to withdraw from certain shared cost programs. This "opting out", as hon. members are aware, was intended to enable provinces to assume sole responsibility for the operation of former joint plans. Among the programs directly affected by this legislation was that provided through the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

In September, 1966, the Minister of Finance outlined further details of the federal government's policy effecting federal-provincial shared cost programs, outlining the principles and objectives of the government's approach to new fiscal arrangements. He pointed out that the shared cost programs, including hospital insurance, had contributed greatly toward social advances across Canada. But the provinces wanted more and more to assume full responsibility for operating their own programs. It was for this reason that legislation had been introduced to permit provinces to contract out, pending the development of more permanent fiscal arrangements.

At the same time the Minister of Finance made specific proposals to the tax structure committee for the withdrawal of federal participation in certain social measures, including the hospital insurance program.

I remind members of these measures because they bear so directly on the financial implications of any changes which might be made in existing shared cost programs. At a time when the future of the hospital insurance program is under review, having regard to revised federal-provincial financial arrangements, members must understand why the government considers that no major change should be made in the basic program.

I wish once more to reassure the house that the government does not disagree with those who contend that the treatment aspects of mental hospital care should not be set apart from the treatment aspects of the care of any other type of illness or disability. The reluctance of the federal government to accept the proposal that an amendment should be made in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act so as to implement such a policy, is due solely to the financial implications of such a move at this time.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, it affords me great pleasure to take part in this interesting discussion on the notice of motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), whom I admire very much because he is a druggist by profession. As a matter of fact, after hearing him discussing and reasoning at the meetings of the special committee on drug costs and prices, I must say that he has retained all the sympathy and compassion he had when he served in his chemist's shop the patients who trusted him with their medical prescriptions.

The purpose of this motion is to determine whether the federal government should consider the advisability of including mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria in the hospital insurance program, so that the provinces will have available sufficient funds to provide for adequate treatment of the mentally ill, those people suffering from tuberculosis, and the care and training of mentally retarded children.

That was an important question—and it still is—when the hospital insurance system was initiated around 1957, and, as circumstances have changed, I do think that it is now necessary that those two important services to the mentally ill and persons suffering from tuberculosis be included in the hospital insurance legislation.

It was still important, even at that time, as I have just mentioned, for in January 1957, during the debate on the hospital insurance legislation, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the federal government had made provision for the fact that it could consider the case of mental hospitals and sanatoria.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare answered and I feel that he summarized the philosophy of the government—that this proposition was generous and complete and that the government did not intend to include mental hospital and sanatoria cases being treated in other hospitals for the simple reason that the provinces already assumed such responsibilities. But the T.B. and mental patients would be cared for in general hospitals which would come under the provisions of the hospital insurance legislation.

And as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said earlier, I do not think that someone has suffered as a result of such conditions, because even patients are taken care of in the mental wing of general hospitals and the legislation to which he referred did not necessarily make any distinction for that type of patients.

And, as I said, if this had been done at the time, the government could have, through its hospital insurance plan, subsidized the provinces and as we know, the main purpose of an hospital insurance plan is to reimburse the individual for part of his hospital expenses. However, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North that this principle must be abandoned now in view of the inquiry carried out by the Hall Commission on health services and I am sure that all agree on the recommendation of this report which states:

> The estimates of the cost of hospital care have been developed; the first, based on the continuation of existing trends and programs, the second based upon our recommendation that mental and tuberculosis hospital care should be integrated as quickly as possible into the general hospital program and brought within the scope of the Hospital Insurance Act.
> But since 1950, and particularly since 1955, let us say in the past ten years, it may be said that the provision of physical facilities, rehabilitation programs, specialist personnel, the practice of medicine in general, the administrative knowledge, all have played a part in making the general hospital the center for diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation for illnesses of all kinds.
> The consequence of these developments—

I am still quoting from the Hall report:

> —has been that patients are treated in multipurpose general hospital rather than in special hospitals and that the chronically ill are cared for in public hospitals rather than in proprietary nursing homes or municipal homes as in other countries.

As I said at the outset, medicine has evolved considerably in the past ten or fifteen years to the point where psychiatric hospitals have changed their administration and treatment methods—several psychiatric hospitals have been converted to other types of hospitals and the patients have received intensive rahabilitation; this has freed a number of beds in these hospitals. Furthermore, clinics have been established to follow up patients who no longer need to spend part of their lives between the four blank walls of a miserable institution such as psychiatric hospitals used to be. You have to know them to talk about them.

Through such clinics, patients may see a ray of sunshine and have some hope in life.

We also have, to our great surprise, through the improvement of the concept of treatment for tuberculosis patients, noted that several sanatoria were forced to close because they were completely empty. We have also noticed that the number of T.B. patients in Canada has decreased. We know also that, as a result, the construction of sanatoria has nearly decreased to zero.

We can also say that the change in hospital care for mental diseases—I am referring to nursing care which required an extensive stay in those institutions—into active care with a much shorter stay, has resulted, according to projections, in a decrease of over half a million days of care in relation to the number projected in this plan. That reduction cannot be obtained without more costly diagnostic, treatment and rehabilitation services, provided by public general hospitals.

If we stop briefly now to see what will be the projection of our economic development between 1961 and 1991, or let us say over a period of 30 years, even if we are in 1967, with regard to general population, we notice that in 1991, it will reach the fantastic figure of 35 million, that is an increase of 93 per cent. On the other hand, the active population will go from 6.5 million to 13 million people, which means an increase of 101 per cent. As to employment, the number of workers will go from 6 to 12 million, that is an increase of 108 per cent. The actual gross national product, according to the figures in terms of 1966 dollars, amounted to $57 billion and, in about 20 years from now, it will soar to $113 or $133 billion.

On the other hand—and that is rather interesting—the average number of hours of work per week per person will fall from 41.5 to 33.9, that is an 18 per cent reduction, and the number of unemployed, with regard to the active population, will decrease from 7.2 per cent to between 4 and 5 per cent. As we can notice, we will have an extraordinary development, provided the Canadian economy is directed in a sound way and is well administered, in the private as well as the public sector.

Confronted with this vital problem which private and public industry will have to face, we will need all the necessary skills to achieve this economic expansion of Canada. It is also important to conclude that this economic growth will require more extensive medical care than what we are in a position to provide today, and this in the best interest of the people.

The projected expenditures I mentioned will increase. There is no doubt that expenditures will increase because new and better equipment will be purchased, and more of it, and particularly because hospital care and every hospital bed will be put to better use. Those expenditures are always made on a projection of thirty years or so, as I have just said.

The increase—and this is very important—or the decrease of expenditures for health services in all countries is directly related to the health of the people. Either the health services are poor or they are excellent and available to all. In the first case, there would be an increase in unemployment, the national output would slow down or decrease and expenditures for health services would increase sharply. There is no need to explain why. On the contrary, in the second case, the cost of health services will be such that it will either prevent or necessitate a decrease in some of those services.

Always according to this projection, we must realize that the cost of the services provided in Canada under the present hospital insurance plans, excluding medical and dental care, will rise to $67 per capita at the end of 1971. This cost was $31.97 per capita in 1961, $54 in 1966 and, as I just said, it will rise to $67 in 1971, in view of the progressive increase. Taking into account the new health services which will be in operation in 1971, an increase of only $17 per capita is projected, which represents a normal increase of some hundreds of one per cent, for our experience since the 1930's shows that the cost of such services is increasing at the rate of a fraction of one per cent per year over a period of 20 or 30 years.

Canadians, let us say now spend a little less than 5 per cent on medical care. Our present services, together with the new services proposed, in other words the extension of the present hospital insurance plans and the medical care program advocated by the government which we hope will be implemented by all the provinces on July 1, 1968, will produce an increase of barely 2 per cent around 1971. This increase will probably diminish shortly after 1981, because health services will reduce unemployment—according to the principle I stated earlier—and raise the level of national productivity, which will lead to a reduction of these health services.

In conclusion, allow me to quote the last paragraph of the chapter on the projection of health expenditures in the Hall report:

> —a comprehensive health care program would involve, by 1971, an additional sum of $466 million as compared with the $4,015 million Canadians are likely to spend in any event in that year, or a further 11 per cent.

Even though that figure may seem fantastic, I sincerely believe that such an additional expenditure of $466 million would enable us to make more effective use of the health resources of the country to the benefit of all Canadians and would be the most worthwhile investment in the productivity and well-being of the Canadian people.

This is an outline of the projections for the health and economic schemes that the government of Canada will offer to its population before 1981.

We have demonstrated that if the services provided by general hospitals have increased normally and that if the days spent by patients in hospitals, nursing homes and psychiatric hospitals have decreased considerably, although the per capita cost has risen regularly, but acutely, it would still be normal to follow the recommendation of the Hall report, which states that psychiatric and T.B. hospitals should come under the Hospital Insurance Act of Canada. But we had to wait many years to allow for the re-adjustment of science and, especially, we had to wait and see whether the operation would withstand the test of time. Now that the tests are over, now that we know where we are going in the field of psychiatry, tuberculosis, and health, it is normal to proceed with integration, in order to ensure a good management of public funds.

This is what I wanted to say on the motion brought forward by my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

[English]

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): Mr. Speaker, on rising to take part in this debate this afternoon, I should like first to congratulate the mover of the private members' notice of motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). As he mentioned, he has presented this motion previously, although I think in somewhat different form. I took part in the debate on several occasions and I am pleased to do so again today.

When I say that his motion is in a slightly different form, I should point out that I believe when it was first presented he restricted his motion to the consideration of people suffering from tuberculosis and mental illness. Since that time I think he has added the care and training of mentally retarded children. I have no complaint to make with his addition, because certainly we are all aware that today there are many children in Canada who need such care and attention. There is a great shortage of hospital beds and care facilities for these people. I would have thought that the hon. member might have left off the word "children" and just said "people suffering from tuberculosis and mental illness and the care and training of the mentally retarded".

Before I pass on to discuss the other subjects with which I should like to deal more fully, I might say that I believe all of us are aware of the various workshops which have been set up for mentally retarded adults. I believe there are two in my riding. These workshops provide shelter and training for these retarded adults until they can be trained to the point where they can take their place in society, usually under the guidance of families or friends. These workshops, however, do train these people to do various jobs according to their ability.

We have heard from the parliamentary secretary why, originally, the two diseases, tuberculosis and mental illness, were excluded when the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was passed.

We listened to the reasons given and I wondered why these were excluded. I think one of the considerations that must have been weighed at the time was that in 1957 these diseases were considered chronic. I include the mentally retarded. to which the hon. member has made reference. These were diseases that required a great deal of treatment over a long period of time, and, generally speaking, a long period of hospitalization in a tuberculosis sanitorium or mental institution.

Fortunately, with the progress being made in medical science at the present time this situation is rapidly changing. Both of these diseases are treated a great deal differently than they were in the past. The patients are being more adequately and efficiently treated as outpatients in the hospital setting rather than inpatients.

[Mr. Harley.]

We are all aware that the incidence of tuberculosis is the same as it always has been. I noticed that the Canadian Medical Association, at its meeting a year ago, spent some time expressing the opinion that the incidence of tuberculosis was as high as it always has been. Certainly, the time of treatment is much less, and much less in hospitals because a great deal more time is being spent treating patients as outpatients, often with weekly injections of streptomycin, or putting the patients on various kinds of oral medicines. As has been mentioned, the beds in sanatoria are emptying. As an example, in 1953 there were 18,977 beds devoted to the care of tuberculosis. In 1962 this number had decreased to 10,673, and in 1963 to 8,500. The latest year for which we have any figures is 1964, and there were less than 8,000 beds devoted to tuberculosis patients. In something over ten years there has been a decrease of just less than 10,000 beds devoted to the treatment of tuberculosis.

As the parliamentary secretary mentioned, generally speaking this does not mean there has been a reduction in the number of beds devoted to medical care, because many of these have been devoted to the care of chronic and incurable patients. In keeping with the reduction in the number of beds and the length of time for the treatment of tuberculosis, the federal tuberculosis control grant, which in 1962 was $3,500,000, has fallen in 1966 and 1967 to approximately $2 million. One of the reasons tuberculosis cannot be treated in general hospitals openly like any other disease, including mental disease, is that a certain percentage of these cases are highly infectious, and to do so might give rise to the spread of tuberculosis through the general hospitals. We are pleased that although the incidence of tuberculosis remains the same, the death rate has actually declined by 83 per cent since 1951.

I should like to say a few words about mental disease. It is apparent from the figures available that mental disease is either increasing or is being treated at an increasing rate. Certainly, we have far better diagnosis of mental disease than we ever had in the past, and the diagnosis is much easier to carry out now because the treatment available either to the general practitioner or the psychiatrist is a great deal more effective than it ever has been.

In 1962 we had 83 mental hospitals with something like 67,000 beds devoted to the care of the mentally ill. In 1963 there were 87 mental hospitals with something over 68,000 hospital beds devoted to the mentally ill. This does not represent the true number of patients who are suffering from mental illness as many psychiatric patients are under general hospital care. At one time I believe there were many mentally ill patients admitted to general hospitals under a different diagnosis, where these patients could be rapidly treated. Now, as a result of changes in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, we are actually admitting them for mental hospital care as psychiatric patients.

Today in Canada more than 60 general hospitals have organized psychiatric units with 2,000 more beds than were devoted ever before to the care of the mentally ill. This gives us well over 72,000 beds in Canadian hospitals devoted to the care of the mentally sick. As the hon. member said, I think this represents almost half of the hospital beds in Canada devoted to this illness.

For some years now the mental health grant has been stationary at approximately $9 million. I hope the government will see fit to increase this amount so that a greater amount of money can be spent on research in respect of mental illness. We are all aware that one of the first breakthroughs, if you wish to call it that, in the treatment of mental diseases was the discovery of the drug L.S.D., about which we hear a great deal in the press and elsewhere at this time. L.S.D. is able to reproduce the symptoms of the mental disease schizophrenia. It is obvious that when we can reproduce symptoms of a mental disease by the use of a drug, we have come a long way toward finding a treatment for that particular disease.

I have every sympathy for the private member's notice of motion now before the house. Certainly if we are to expect the general public to treat tuberculosis, mental disease and mental retardation like any other disease, we must expect the federal government to do the same thing.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the wish of the house that I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Knowles: No; put the question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will consider the estimates of the Department of National Defence. If we should complete those tomorrow we will call the estimates of the Department of Labour and continue with those estimates on Friday. If those estimates should be completed we would then call the Cape Breton Development Corporation bill.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Paul Tardif, Esq., the member for the electoral district of Russell, be appointed as Assistant Deputy Chairman of the committee of the whole house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, normally I do not rise on occasions like this, but I am sure all of us are happy at this appointment. May I also say that in this afternoon's Ottawa Journal the hon. member is shown being sunned in appreciation. I am very glad to see the hon. member here.

Mr. Paul Tardif (Russell): Mr. Speaker, actually the picture in the Ottawa Journal today—and I am rising on a question of privilege—does not mainly depict me as being sunned; it depicts me accustomed to being completely impartial.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR RENDERING DECISIONS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-138, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is not to compel justices of the supreme court to make two rulings one in French and one in English, but to enact that French shall be recognized as equal to English in all judgments delivered by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (2:40 p.m.)

CANADA DAY ACT

PROVISION OF LEGAL HOLIDAY HONOURING FRENCH SPEAKING CANADIANS

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-139, an act respecting French speaking Canada day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees that Canadianism cannot be defined other than on the basis of the two great linguistic communities, one English speaking, the other French speaking. Since the French fact is not the perquisite of Quebec, it must be considered as part and parcel of the Canadian reality.

Our centennial year could be the most appropriate time to assure the statutory recognition of a day designed to celebrate the French fact in the whole Canadian territory.

If Victoria day, in the celebration of which French speaking Canadians like to participate, may be considered in some respects, as the English speaking Canada day, June 24 could be known as the French speaking Canada day. That is the purpose of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPO '67

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC HAVE OPPORTUNITY TO SEE HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DURING VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister why it is that Her Majesty, in her visit to Expo, Montreal, is to be denied seeing her Canadian subjects. A check with the state visit section reveals that no one will be allowed in the areas in which the Queen is during her stay there. I think this is a serious reflection on her good citizens of the province of Quebec. The arrangements should be altered so that these people, too, will have the opportunity of seeing their Queen.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the situation is exactly as described by my right hon. friend. Expo will open on July 3 at the normal time. However, Ile Notre Dame will not be accessible to the general public while Her Majesty makes her initial motor tour of the island, completing that at about 10 a.m. Thereafter the whole island, with the exception of the area containing the U.K. and the various Canadian pavilions, will be opened to the public. The small remaining section will be progressively opened to the public as the Queen leaves the various pavilions she is visiting. By 12.45 p.m. the entire Expo site, with the exception of the Canada pavilion and the adjoining lake area, will be accessible to the public. This final pavilion will be open to the public following the Queen's departure at approximately 3.45 p.m. There will of course be substantial numbers of invited guests at each pavilion being visited by Her Majesty, while Her Majesty is visiting it. These arrangements were made after a good deal of consideration by all those concerned with the matter and it is felt they are the most appropriate in the circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there no possibility of these arrangements being reconsidered? This morning and yesterday afternoon I received three calls in connection with the matter. These people object very much to Her Majesty being sent to Coventry.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING WITHDRAWAL OF ISRAELI FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the very strong statements that are being made at the United Nations by the representatives of various countries regarding the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the territory which has been acquired during the recent conflict, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government's position will be that any withdrawal of Israeli forces must be preceded by a political settlement which would contain ironclad guarantees as to Israel's right to exist, the security of its subjects, and the right of access to the Suez canal and the gulf of Aqaba?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian position linking withdrawal with a political settlement and political guarantees has been made clear in this house, and it will be made clear tomorrow when the Secretary of State for External Affairs makes his statement to the assembly.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There can be no doubt about the linking of the political settlement with any withdrawal. The importance, it seems to me, would be whether or not the political settlement is to precede the withdrawal in order to obtain the co-operation of Israel, which must have some justifiable doubts about the guarantees they were given in 1956 and 1957. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian position is that a political settlement must precede any withdrawal?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a political settlement requires the co-operation of the Arab neighbouring states as well as Israel. I prefer at the moment not to go beyond what I have said.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which has to do with the aide mémoire of August 5, 1957 prepared by the late Dag Hammarskjold regarding the terms upon which the emergency force would occupy the areas adjacent to or within Egypt. Because of the controversy which has now arisen as to whether the secretary general should not under all the circumstances have submitted this matter to the assembly of the United Nations, would the Prime Minister table that aide mémoire so that Canadians will have full knowledge of the contents thereof?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot of course table the aide mémoire as an official document either of the Canadian government or indeed as an official document of the United Nations or even one that is part of the UN records, because the secretary general has stated that it is not a UN document in any sense but a personal memorandum of the secretary general outlining his understanding of what had occurred. That document, whatever may be its official significance, has been made public by a United States citizen who has possession of it. I have no objection of any kind, if it is appropriate, to tabling the document as it was produced by that particular gentleman.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question stems from a statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I direct it to the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

With regard to the creation of a task force composed of three specialists to be entrusted with making a thorough survey of the agricultural problem in Canada, does the minister feel he will have to resign from his post to join the new group, in view of the shortage of competent people to deal with the tragic plight of the farmers?

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—MEETING BETWEEN PRESIDENT JOHNSON AND PREMIER KOSYGIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister related to the meeting which was held yesterday between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Premier Kosygin. It has been reported that the Secretary of State for External Affairs urged Premier Kosygin to consider a meeting with President Johnson. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us whether or not the Secretary of State for External Affairs was successful in his representations to the premier?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that question because, so far as I know, no meeting has yet been arranged. However, it is hoped there will be a meeting before Mr. Kosygin leaves for Moscow as he has put off his departure from today until Saturday. It is to be hoped that these leaders of the two greatest powers in the world will be able to meet while Mr. Kosygin is in New York.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AID

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN MINISTER AND PREMIER KOSYGIN RESPECTING ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister advise the house whether or not the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the question of assistance, particularly to refugees in the area, by the Soviet union, along with the other countries in the world, and was there any response to this kind of representation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not sure that I got the purport of my hon. friend's question. Was he referring to a four-power meeting?

Mr. Olson: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. All I wanted to ask the Prime Minister was whether or not the Secretary of State for External Affairs discussed with the leader of the Soviet union if that country was prepared to provide some assistance, particularly to refugees in that part of the world? The minister stated in this house that he thought all powers should do this.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs discussed that particular question, but I am sure all hon. members will agree that at this time the Soviet union would perhaps be better occupied in participating in the relief of Arab refugees than in sending arms to the United Arab Republic.

REQUEST THAT MCBEAN COLLIERY BE INCLUDED IN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the absence of the right hon. gentleman I asked whether a communication had been received from the Louisbourg Board of Trade signed by the president of the board, who insisted that the S and L line from Broughton Junction be included in the Cape Breton development plan.

At the same time, as this is part and parcel of the question I asked yesterday, would the Prime Minister say whether he has received a telegram from local union No. 4527, United Mine Workers, of New Waterford, Nova Scotia, requesting reconsideration of the omission to include in the bill the McBean colliery, particularly in view of the fact that various locals of the union allege that it was understood in conversations or discussions with the Prime Minister that this particular mine would be included? Would the Prime Minister look over the matter again, now that the bill has been held in suspension, as it were, for a few days and make a further effort to agree to the two suggestions that I have brought to his attention?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have received five telegrams on this matter. I sent them to the minister concerned as soon as I received them. The minister has been attending the Canadian-American ministerial meeting in Montreal and will be back this afternoon. He will be dealing with the telegrams this evening and will be in a position I hope to make a statement on the matter tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is not now prepared to meet with the delegation, as requested by the UMWA?

Mr. Pearson: I think that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has the matter in hand.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question. The matter is in hand, as the Prime Minister has said, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare is also aware of the situation. Can he provide the answer? Are they or are they not to be met?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the minister, as soon as he gets back this afternoon, what arrangements he has made.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—STOCKPILING OF STEEL TO PERMIT RE-EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a related question. Has the cabinet reached any decision with respect to the request of the Nova Scotia delegation for advances to stockpile soft steel in order to enable the steel mill at Sydney to re-employ some of the 1,000 men who were laid off recently?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of stockpiling the production of an industry but the production of a particular company in an industry. The matter is under consideration. I hope I will be able to make a statement on the question at the beginning of next week, either Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware that stockpiling has taken place in the past, with the assistance of the government?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, stockpiling has taken place within the last year or two in the uranium industry. This was stockpiling of all the production of the industry throughout the country, wherever the product was produced. This is not quite the same situation as stockpiling the production of a particular company in an industry.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid the right hon. gentleman misunderstood the intent of my question. I was thinking not of uranium but of steel. I am not quite clear about the situation.

Mr. Pearson: I am not quite clear about that, but I shall look into that aspect of the matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TOBACCO—PAYMENTS BY SEASONAL WORKERS TO FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence may I direct it to the Minister of Labour whose department is also involved in this matter. My question is this: Is the government giving immediate consideration to alteration of the regulations concerning seasonal farm labour in the tobacco and cash crop industries with respect to the regulations affecting payments to the unemployment insurance fund and the Canada Pension Plan? This matter is of great urgency, Your Honour, to this industry, and it is becoming increasingly urgent as farm labour must be acquired shortly.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under study for some weeks. It is not as simple as one might like it to be. Legislative changes might be necessary to accomplish the objectives in mind. No final decision has been reached, but within the next week or two there will be a decision about whether we should do anything in the unemployment insurance field.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACTION TO MEET SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the repeated warnings this week by members of the Canadian Medical Association in Montreal that Canada, right now, is facing a serious shortage of medical manpower, can the Minister of National Health and Welfare say whether he is seriously considering announcing in the near future further government measures to deal with the situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the problem of medical manpower in Canada is complicated, as is evident from the discussions that are taking place in Montreal. It relates to actions and attitudes that are even beyond the scope of the federal government.

We have taken steps to increase the training facilities for medical personnel and we expect that within the next few years, as a result of this action, there will be a 20 per cent or 25 per cent increase in the output of medical graduates in Canada. That output, combined with the annual emigration to Canada of doctors, will have an important effect in meeting what will be an increased demand upon the profession as a result of medicare and expanded health services.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government not considering a system of scholarships for medical, dental and eye specialist training?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have not under consideration a special program of student aid for this group.

OLD AGE SECURITY

POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF MEDICAL AID CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since the implementation of the $105 monthly pension for older people, that is, since the $30 increase has been granted, is there a federal-provincial agreement to the effect that the province of Quebec may withdraw the medical cards already issued to the aged in that province? In other words, is there a federal-provincial agreement providing that as soon as an aged person receives a $105 monthly pension from Ottawa, the province of Quebec can withdraw the medical assistance cards issued to that person? Is there an agreement to that effect?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that this is a very important and complicated question that should be put on the order paper.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO AVOID ACCIDENTS ON ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport.

Since two ocean liners are stranded at present in the St. Lawrence in front of Trois-Rivières, and since accidents of that kind, with occasional loss of life, seem to have increased for the last few weeks, could the hon. minister tell us whether he has received any representations to the effect that an inquiry into the causes of such accidents should be held and that the most effective steps should be taken to rectify this as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Though I have not made a check with regard to these two cases in particular, I believe it is the practice of the department to conduct an investigation urgently into every case of this kind. I certainly feel it is very important that this should be done.

[Later:]

Mr. Mongrain: I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Since I just realized I was a victim of his magnetism a while ago, as he answered only the first part of my question, I should like to repeat the second part: Are steps being taken to reduce or eliminate such accidents, such running aground, which seem to be increasing in the Trois-Rivières area?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker; a number of measures have been taken with a view to reducing the possibility of accidents. One or two very eloquent speeches on this subject have been made by my colleague the Registrar General, and I shall be glad to send them to the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to address this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the many representations I have received from across Canada, would the right hon. gentleman consider, on July 1, naming the South Saskatchewan dam the John G. Diefenbaker dam?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand a decision has been taken in this matter. But I also understand there is a very large lake adjoining the dam, and much wider than the dam, which has yet to be named.

AIR CANADA

AIRCRAFT TO AUGMENT ACCOMMODATION—DEPOSITS WITH RESERVATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I would direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the house whether Air Canada, in the interests of overcoming the current acute shortage of passenger space on Canadian air lines, plans to accept an offer of five new, fully manned passenger jets which has reportedly been made to Air Canada by Trans-Air Limited?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I have no knowledge on that subject, but the hon. member for Mackenzie asked a question of my parliamentary secretary yesterday with the same purpose in mind, and, if I am permitted to answer now, I would say I have suggested to my department and, through my officials, to the main air lines, that they consider very carefully adopting a system whereby deposits would be required in connection with reservations. If this practice were followed there might be a lot more seats available.

Mr. Sherman: Would the minister investigate the existence of this offer which is reported to have been made to Air Canada during the last three weeks?

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Would the Minister of Transport also have his officials look into the alternative to the suggestion he has made, that is, doing away completely with reservations?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to look into any possible means of making better use of the existing facilities. I think there is more hope in that direction than there is in trying to find additional aircraft at a time when there is a world wide shortage of passenger aircraft.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Does not the minister think that there are already enough impediments to air travel, without requiring any more?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am seeking to remove impediments to travel, such as the practice which some people in this country follow of making four or five different reservations and then not turning up at the airport.

An hon. Member: Names.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Has any consideration been given to the suggestion that Eastern Airlines be given the privilege on a temporary basis, during the Expo period, of carrying passengers between Montreal and Ottawa? At present there are several dozen seats going back and forth empty every day.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member was good enough to make a similar suggestion to me privately, and the matter is under urgent consideration. I believe there is one serious difficulty under the law: If this were allowed, Eastern Airlines would probably have to pay customs duty or tax on the aircraft. But it might be possible to overcome this obstacle without the necessity for legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR GREECE AND TURKEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question which I would have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs or one of his parliamentary secretaries, had they been in the house. Instead I will address it to the Prime Minister and he can take it as notice if he wishes. In the light of recent events in Greece—the takeover of government by a military dictatorship—and in the light of the failure of Turkey and Greece to get together to reach a political settlement in Cyprus, will the government reconsider a new item which appears in the estimates of the Department of External Affairs setting aside $1 million in defence support assistance for Greece and Turkey?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad, as invited by the hon. gentleman, to take that question as notice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CALUMET, P.Q.—CLOSING OF C.I.P. PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry and Defence Production but, in his absence, I shall address it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the C.I.P. company which employs 130 people at Calumet has announced it intention of closing its doors as of May 1968 and since it is the only industry in this locality, does the Minister of Industry intend to take steps to try to replace this only source of employment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is referring to a situation which will not occur until May 1968 and, in the circumstances, I think this question could be put on the order paper.

Mr. Régimbal: With your kind permission, even though the event may be ten or twelve months removed, the problem is immediate and, for that reason, I should like to bring it up at ten o'clock.

[English]

FINANCE

EXTENSION OF SALES TAX REMOVAL TO ALL PUBLIC HOUSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Labour although I realize it is related to the Department of Finance. In view of the critical housing situation which exists in Canada, and in view of the fact that the government has removed the building tax on university residences, would the minister not consider extending freedom from this tax to all public housing whether for senior citizens or for family occupation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): As one might expect, this matter has been discussed by me with the Minister of Finance and others of my colleagues. We are not disposed to recommend any change at this time, however, though the matter is under constant study.

Mr. Hales: In order to overcome the discriminatory feature involved, does the minister not think the concession should be broader in scope?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking an argumentative question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to rephrase a question I asked the Prime Minister on Tuesday; I hope the right hon. gentleman will rephrase his answer. Will the new president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation be appointed by June 30 and, if not, can the Prime Minister say by what date, approximately, this appointment will be made?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): June 30 is I think only four or five days from now. This appointment will be made as soon as possible.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—EXTENSION OF LOBSTER FISHING SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries. Two days ago, in the hon. gentleman's absence, I asked the Prime Minister whether we might expect an extension of the lobster fishing season in district 7B. Is the minister now in a position to make an announcement in this regard?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The question as put by the hon. member was brought to my attention immediately on my return to Ottawa, and in keeping with the promise I made earlier I wish to inform the house that in districts 6B,7A,7B and 7C the lobster season will be extended for periods varying from five days to two weeks, depending on existing conditions in those districts. A detailed announcement to this effect was issued earlier today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NOVA SCOTIA—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERY ALONG SOUTHERN AND EASTERN SHORES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): May I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has now received from the province of Nova Scotia any recommendation with regard to aid to the industry along our southern and eastern shores?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The matter has been under discussion between the minister of fisheries for Nova Scotia and myself and, in addition, I discussed it last week with the premier of that province when he was here in Ottawa. It is now under consideration. I might add that in attempting to find a solution to this problem we are hoping to establish a more permanent solution which will be acceptable to the fishermen concerned.

SPRING TROLLING ON PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): While the minister is talking about the closing of seasons can he inform the house whether he has reached any agreement with the United States on an earlier opening date for spring trolling on the Pacific coast?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker; not yet.

TRANSPORT

ABANDONMENT OF GUARANTEED RAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the Department of Transport given any approval to the elimination, or reduction of any rail service on any line, despite the fact that the operations of such lines may have been guaranteed by a statement from the government—and incidentally by a deposit being paid—and are not subject to abandonment.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker; no such instruction has been given by the Department of Transport. If it had been given it would have no legal validity whatsoever.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

WATER RESOURCES

OTTAWA, ONT.—MEASURES TO CORRECT POLLUTION IN CAPITAL AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but since he is not here perhaps I might address it to the Prime Minister. Having in mind the recent reports that the parliament buildings face one of the worst examples of water pollution in Canada, what steps does the government intend to take to ensure co-operation between the municipalities of Ottawa, Hull and other interested communities in an effort to eliminate this water pollution problem in the national capital area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question of very wide scope should be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

CONDITIONAL REFUSAL BY CHARTERED BANKS TO ISSUE FARM LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, the other day I had a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Is he ready to answer it now?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this was a question addressed to the Minister of Finance with regard to two banks. The suggestion was that these two banks were refusing farm improvement loans to farmers, unless they transact all their business with their particular banks. The information we have is that this is not the policy of the two banks referred to by the hon. member. I should point out, however, that the Farm Improvement Loans Act authorizes the government to guarantee loans made by banks to farmers for a wide range of farm improvement projects. These loans are made from the banks' own funds and the guarantee is an incentive for the banks to commit some of these funds to farm improvement loans on a term basis. There is nothing in the legislation which requires a bank to make such loans.

TRANSPORT

PORT ABINO LIGHTHOUSE—RIGHT TO VISIT INSTALLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the denial of access to the Port Abino lighthouse to which I referred on Monday may I ask the minister what steps he has taken to protect the rights of federal members to visit installations which are paid for out of the federal treasury.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION OF DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence the parliamentary secretary might be able to answer it. Can we expect an announcement giving details of the application of the national dairy policy to the dairy industry of British Columbia.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any announcement being imminent, but I will bring this to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL CONSULAR SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to one of the most scholarly minds in this house, the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. And I immediately give notice that I will raise the said question at ten o'clock.

In view of the fact that thousands of Canadians citizens visit Florida at every period of the year and in view of the fact that the closest consulate in the south of the United States is in Louisiana, can the parliamentary secretary tell me whether it is the intention of the government to open a new consulate nearer to the state of Florida? Ten o'clock, unless you accept the question.

Mr. Speaker: Ten o'clock.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question either to the Prime Minister or to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the legislation to increase the pensions of retired civil servants, as recommended on May 8 by the special joint committee on the public service of Canada, now ready to be presented to parliament?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under active consideration by the government.

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will it be presented this month or must we sit into July in order that we may attend to this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

CASTLEGAR, B.C.—ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF EXPECTED IMPROVEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the precedent established by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre two days ago, have I the opportunity to use this period to thank the Minister of Transport for the expected improvements at the Castlegar airport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN ATTITUDE RESPECTING INCLUSION OF JERUSALEM WITHIN ISRAELI TERRITORY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has an answer to the question I asked yesterday in connection with the right of Israel to retain the whole of the city of Jerusalem.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, this is one important aspect of the whole question of withdrawal, along with a political settlement. I would prefer not to single it out, except to repeat what has been said in the past by Canadian delegates to the United Nations; that is, it is desirable to bring into effect some international protection of the holy places in Jerusalem. I hope this can be worked out. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may have a word or two to say about this tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it the Prime Minister's view that the internationalization would cover the Israeli side of Jerusalem, the whole of Jerusalem and Jordan? That would be very hard on the Israelis, would it not?

Mr. Pearson: I was referring to international supervision of holy places, and not of the area.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question along the same line. Would sovereignty of this actual area be retained within the United Nations?

Mr. Pearson: The suggestion was made many years ago that Jerusalem become an international city under a régime, to be supervised by the United Nations. I doubt whether that would be feasible at the present time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, following the statement made yesterday by the Secretary of State, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his position as house leader whether he is now in a position to give an indication of the business of the house for the next six days?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the house business for the next six days to some extent depends upon consultations which are presently under way. I hope that later in the day I will be in a position to indicate what the business is for the house next week.

Perhaps I should take this occasion to advise the house that it is unlikely that we will be able to adjourn the house at the end of next week, as I had indicated earlier. We will likely be sitting during the following week.

• (3:20 p.m.)

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,850,056,375 for the purposes of votes 1, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,221,323,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year, subject to the direction of the treasury board, in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, any member of the British Commonwealth or any provincial or municipal government and in respect of charges made pursuant to regulations under the National Defence Act for:

(a) clothing and kit items sold to members of the Canadian forces;

(b) living accommodation;

(c) food supplied to members of the Canadian forces and to messes and institutes catering thereto; and

(d) medical and dental care provided to dependants of members of the Canadian forces, $6,593,375.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, in presenting the departmental estimates for 1967-68 I would first like to pay tribute to my able associate minister who has, since he assumed his portfolio, worked in an untiring, conscientious and extremely capable manner in carrying a large share of the burden in this department. The success we have had in streamlining the organization of the armed forces unquestionably would not have been possible without his very strong contribution.

I would also like to express my thanks to the staffs of the chief of defence staff and the deputy minister. Their drive and enthusiasm in meeting the problems associated with the reorganization has been remarkable and the associate minister and I are extremely grateful for their imaginative and capable approach to their tasks. It is particularly significant that, during the period of the reorganization, there has been no falling off of our operational capability. On the contrary, in practically every field our operational capability has been enhanced.

I would also like to thank the men and women of the forces of all ranks for continuing to give unsurpassed professional service to Canada. I may be accused of bias but, unblushingly, I say that man for man, woman for woman, there are no better military people anywhere in the world and we as a nation should be proud of them.

No statement in support of defence estimates would be complete without a review of our foreign policy commitments, upon which defence planning and, therefore, expenditures must be based.

Because of its prominence at the present time, I would first like to discuss our participation in the United Nations. The policy of successive Canadian governments in support of UN peace keeping is, of course, well known. Canada has provided forces for every peace keeping action since the organization was formed. Since 1949 Canada has supplied a component to the UN military observer group in India and Pakistan. Since 1954 we have been providing observers to the UN truce supervisory organization in Palestine, which has been playing an important role in the current Middle East crisis. It is possible that the United Nations may have to build on this organization to supply a UN presence in the Middle East as a result of recent developments. We are also providing the second largest contingent in the UN force in Cyprus, which continues to make an invaluable contribution to the maintenance of peace and stability, not only on the island but in that particular area of the eastern Mediterranean.

Outside the United Nations, Canadian military personnel continue to participate in the international control commission in Indochina.

While the government regrets the withdrawal of the United Nations emergency force from the Middle East, and the tragic events which have followed that withdrawal, it would be a mistake to jump to the conclusion that peace keeping will never be required in the future.

Demands on the UN to undertake peace keeping operations will, the government believes, continue to be made despite the difficulties which have surrounded the withdrawal of UNEF. While the United Nations will not be able to deal with all the troubled situations which arise in the future, it will remain the only international organization which, in most instances, is acceptable as an impartial outside presence.

It is the government's position that Canada should continue to be prepared to help the UN to carry out its primary task under the charter, namely the maintenance of peace and security, provided we are satisfied that the terms and conditions of peace keeping operations are such as to make this task feasible and are compatible with our foreign policy interests. It is still the government's view that the United Nations still offers the best hope of peaceful intervention in certain situations.

Chapter VII of the UN charter provides that the security council may authorize an enforcement action to maintain or restore international peace as it did in Korea in 1950. It is important, therefore, that Canada be in a position to fulfil its commitments under the charter by having a capability to participate in such an enforcement action, should the government decide to respond to a request for Canadian participation.

I am sure members of the committee would wish to join in paying tribute to the members of the Canadian armed forces who, for so long, as members of UNEF in Egypt, played such an important role in the service of the United Nations and of peace. It was typical of the efficiency of this force and our air transport command that, when word came to leave the area, the force was removed in a remarkably effective manner.

In this regard I would like to emphasize the success—not failure—of our Canadian soldiers and airmen of our force in Gaza. To keep the peace in such an area for more than 10 years was a remarkable achievement for the force which included more than 10,000 Canadian soldiers and airmen who served there since the inception of the operation. They should all be proud of their accomplishment.

The fault is not with the peace keeping force—not at all—it is with the failure to come to grips with the social, economic and political problems that made the peace keeping force necessary in the first place.

In the government's view, a military force is only an umbrella under which men of good will may work to correct the problems that beset mankind. Military force—from peace keeping to nuclear deterrence—is not an end in itself, only a means to an end. If we fail to take advantage of the time and opportunity provided by the military umbrella to build a permanent structure for peace, let us not blame the umbrella if after a decade it begins to spring a few leaks.

The lessons learned from our experience in UN peace keeping operations are many and varied. I would like to list a few of the most important.

First, there is no typical peace keeping operation; no two have been alike. Thus, the ad hoc method of establishing each operation will likely continue.

Second, peace keeping is only the beginning, albeit a vital beginning, to the solution to any international conflict. We must come to grips with the root causes of the hostility or the so-called peace will turn out to be a mirage.

Third, and very important from a practical standpoint, is that the rules governing the peace keeping force must be clearly established at the outset, or soon thereafter.

This latter point was brought vividly to light by the Middle East crisis. It is of vital importance that agreed arrangements be worked out in advance of or soon after the establishment of future UN peace keeping operations.

The Canadian government believes in the need for a world body such as the United Nations. It believes that such an organization should participate in keeping the peace; it believes the UN should eventually have permanent peace keeping machinery. We Canadians of all political parties have consistently expressed these convictions and worked ceaselessly toward this goal before and since the UN charter was signed.

But, being practical people as well, we have not closed our eyes to the limitations of UN authority to act. We have not ignored the fact that the superpowers do not always share the same approach to economic and political matters. We have not been oblivious to the fact that injustice and a woeful imbalance in the sharing of the necessities of life breed strife. We are only too much aware that, as yet, most nations of the world are not prepared to allow a world superbody to decide what they feel are their interests.

It was considerations such as these that led the government, in the white paper on defence of 1964, to reject the then popular concept of devoting our forces to UN peace keeping only. Instead we set out to evolve a force with a wide range of capabilities to participate in military activity from contributing to the deterrence of all-out thermonuclear war down through the scale of hostilities to peace keeping.

The purpose of our defence policy is not and never was to create simply a giant peace keeping force. Certainly, some of the wide range of new equipment we are obtaining, such as jeeps, reconnaissance vehicles, helicopters, and communications gear will enhance our ability in peace keeping assignments. Of course, the huge increase in mobility provided by our acquisition of air trucks and support ships will mean that we can get peace keeping forces and their equipment to trouble spots faster. But this gear also increases the effectiveness of our alliance contributions and, clearly, the procurement of fighter-bombers, self-propelled howitzers, armoured personnel carriers, helicopter-destroyers and other such items are not those associated with peace keeping forces alone.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

The basis of our approach was then, and remains today, one of practical idealism. It was practical idealism in the face of communist expansion that prompted Canada to take a leading role in the founding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Canadian government continues to believe in the concept of a regional alliance of North Atlantic nations. NATO has succeeded in meeting its objectives of halting the loss of territory to the communist world and creating stability in the European theatre. These have been no mean achievements and the Canadian government believes the maintenance of European stability in an unstable world is as important today as it was when the alliance was formed. Consequently we are continuing to provide military support to the collective strength of the alliance, although we are gradually altering the nature of that support in recognition of the changing character of the threat, the advancing technology of military weaponry and an analysis of the total capability of the alliance.

This year the members of NATO will introduce a new system of planning and reviewing their national military contributions for the alliance. The review will take place in the autumn, when the members will submit plans for the next five years. The results of the autumn review will be submitted to the December ministerial meeting for approval. This new system, the establishment of which Canada has strongly supported, will mesh with our own revised method of planning in five year segments with an annual review.

Thus Canada this fall will be required to inform the alliance of the forces we propose to make available for collective defence. Careful consideration is being given now to this matter, but I can assure the committee that if any changes are made in the nature of our contributions they will be of a slowly evolving, rather than precipitous, nature. That is the responsible course for a member of a group. I should say, however, that there has been no discussion of any changes which would have a bearing on the estimates now before the committee.

Another area of NATO with which Canada is quite obviously concerned is the Canada-United States zone. Quite clearly Canada's security very much depends upon the continuing capability of the United States to deter attack on this continent. Although we may be sure that in her own self-interests the United States would have to repel any attack, however unlikely, upon Canada, it has been the conviction of successive governments in Canada that co-operation in the defence of this continent is warranted not only for reasons of pride and self-respect but also for practical considerations of sovereignty. For these reasons Canadian forces have worked closely with those of the United States in planning for the defence of North America. This co-operation is illustrated but by no means restricted to the NORAD agreement, which encompasses the responsibility for defence against a bomber attack and warning of one from missiles.

The semi-automatic ground environment, with its cobweb of communications systems covering this continent, together with its manual back-up and associated interceptors, remains of value as long as a potential aggressor is able to attack with bombers. Unquestionably, the main burden of the Soviet union's strategic capability now rests on intercontinental ballistic missiles. But the arbitrary dissolution of anti-bomber defences, already installed at considerable expense, would serve only to upgrade the strategic potential of the U.S.S.R.'s long-range bomber force, now generally accepted to be approximately 150 manned bombers capable of reaching the North American heartland on a two-way mission.

In regard to an anti-ballistic missile—known as A.B.M.—defence, I am sure members of the committee are aware of the current debate in the United States about the wisdom of deploying such a system. The costs involved are considerable: approximately $10 billion for a light defence and upward of twice that for a more extensive damage-limiting system. To these initial installation costs would be added sizeable annual maintenance and improvement costs, plus probable additional expenditures for improved manned interceptors, and a shelters program. It is clear that a decision by the United States to deploy an A.B.M. system would involve heavy additional defence expenditures. So far no such decision has been reached although development work continues.

The implications for Canada if the United States does proceed with an A.B.M. system are worthy of serious consideration in this country. As I indicated during the discussion of the Canadian Armed Forces Reorganization Act, I would welcome a debate on this subject in this house.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes.

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister welcome an opportunity being given to the house to go into the technical aspects of this very important problem by referring it to the standing committee on national defence, presumably after the recess?

Mr. Hellyer: I think this would be a very good suggestion, at an appropriate time. I think the timing would depend to a considerable extent on the amount of information available, the timing of the decision-making process and when a decision is required. What I am really trying to say is that we might not have by early fall all the information the committee would want in order to provide background for an intelligent discussion.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the minister a sort of supplementary question? Does the minister not think it would be very valuable for Canada, in stimulating the debate about Canadian involvement in this system—as the minister said debate has taken place extensively in the United States—to proceed with this discussion in the defence committee, elaborating knowledge of the implications for Canada, as early as possible so that when a decision has to be made by Canada it can be made in an atmosphere of wide diffusion of public knowledge and knowledge in this house on the subject?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I agree with my hon. friend, and just as soon as the range of information that is necessary for a really thorough discussion is available I would be quite prepared to refer the subject matter to the committee for their consideration. I think this is a good idea.

In the discussion it should be clearly understood that membership in NORAD does not commit either partner to participating in aspects of the defensive system. For instance, Canada has never adopted the NIKE-Hercules system for close-in anti-bomber defence, and other than communications, Canada is not involved in the ballistic missile early warning system or B.M.E.W.S.

Similarly, re-signing of the NORAD agreement would not automatically commit Canada to participate in the A.B.M. program if the United States should decide to proceed. That is a question for each country to decide on the basis of its own national interest. Should the United States decide at a later date to deploy an A.B.M. system I have no doubt, in view of the close co-operation between our two countries, that the United States would make it possible for Canada to opt in if at any time we felt it was in the interest of our country to do so.

To augment the information made available to us by the United States, the Department of National Defence has undertaken an independent study of the A.B.M. question, including the possible effects on Canada of a decision by the United States to deploy a system exclusively in that country.

I would now like to discuss the general manpower situation in the forces and some of the changes being made in service conditions for the benefit of our servicemen and women. There has been an upswing in recruiting during the first five months of 1967. By the end of May, a total of 6,443 recruits had enrolled in the three services, an increase of 2,727 over the corresponding period in 1966. For those who prefer percentages, that is an increase of 73 per cent over the intake for the same five month period last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: That figure is meaningless.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: The month of May, 1967, was the highest recruiting month since 1962. This improvement in recruiting, coupled with an upward trend in the number of re-engagements, has resulted in an increase in the strength of the forces since the beginning of the year. The total regular forces strength on May 31 was 105,972, an increase of 1,015 over the strength at the end of December, 1966. In addition, there are at all times a number of reserves on full-time duty with the regular force, and if the 271 men and women in this category are included the total number of personnel serving in the regular forces on May 31 this year was 106,243.

Steady progress is being made in our program to amend and revise the rules and regulations governing the employment of the men and women in the armed forces. This program has a twofold purpose. It is greatly improving service conditions by eliminating inequities in promotion and employment opportunities and inconsistencies in personnel policies generally, thereby improving morale and increasing efficiency. At the same time it is streamlining procedures which will gradually reduce the costs of personnel administration.

Let me give the committee a few examples of the steps that have already been taken or will be taken shortly:

[Mr. Hellyer.]

1. Administration of all men in the forces is now centralized. In the past there were three different systems with disadvantages in each, such as the decentralization of the selection process to command headquarters level, which limited career and employment opportunities.

2. A common enrolment policy for officers has been established and a common enrolment policy for men will become effective this summer.

3. A common policy on commissioning from the ranks has been drawn up which eliminates the inequities in the three existing service policies. The new policy will become effective this summer.

4. The provision by the forces of matriculation level education to those who wish it, previously only available to navy men, has been expanded to all men in the forces.

5. A common promotion policy for officers has been drawn up and will be introduced in July. A common promotion policy for men was announced on October 1, 1966, which will standardize promotion opportunities in the forces. However, because the previous single service policies were so vastly divergent, the new policy will be introduced in stages.

Steps are also being taken in the fields of welfare and pay and allowances, all of which make service life more attractive.

1. A new system for the allocation of married quarters on forces' bases has been introduced which eliminates many of the inconsistencies in the former individual service systems.

2. Moving allowances granted to personnel moving on transfer from one location to another have been substantially increased to a realistic amount.

3. The Canadian forces social welfare services have been integrated and their services extended to all formations and units in the forces.

4. A common leave policy has been introduced for all members of the forces.

I would like to discuss briefly what we are doing in the field of management engineering. From time to time we have been taken to task for what might appear to be an overriding interest in the techniques of good management and efficiency.

For some reason some people appear to feel that there seems to be something slightly inconsistent in the suggestion that military affairs can come under the influence of modern management practices. The fact is, and this has been adequately demonstrated time and time again, the application of formalized management practices in the conduct of military operations is an absolute necessity at any time, but particularly so when operating under strict budgetary limitations.

The development of a small, well trained group of management engineers at Canadian forces headquarters has resulted in substantial savings in existing military organizations, particularly in the field of manpower, and has provided us with a scientific measure on which to base future organizations or new manpower needs. Specifically this group conducts organization analyses, systems and procedures analyses, method studies, and work measurement studies. It is impossible to accurately gauge all the benefits derived from this work but some idea will be gained from the estimate made by the group for the period from January to May of this year when 25 completed studies involving a direct cost to the forces of approximately $56,000 are forecast to return savings of over $900,000. Another example is found in the study of the maintenance manpower requirements for the Tutor and T-33 aircraft which resulted in a recommended reduction to manpower establishments of approximately 16 per cent. The average manpower savings as a result of our management engineering studies are 12 per cent and we will continue to employ these techniques of good management in the months and years ahead.

On April 1, 1965, the Canadian forces communications system was formed to manage the fixed strategic communications services formerly operated by the three separate services, using separate but parallel staffs.

Under C.F.C.S., the operation and management of the composite system has been completely unified, while the actual physical facilities have been integrated electronically and consolidated physically to the greatest extent possible. Coincident with the formation of the C.F.C.S., a program was undertaken to develop a master plan for the modernization and automation of all D.N.D. strategic communications systems. Because of the magnitude of the task, a team of consultants was hired to undertake the actual detailed studies and to develop a master plan for the new system. The study began in September, 1965, and is scheduled for completion this fall. New facilities to implement the plan will follow.

In the area of leased communications, C.F.C.S. has been able to reduce expenditures from $28 million in the fiscal year 1964-65 to an estimated $21 million for the fiscal year 1967-68, saving of approximately $7 million. The reduction may be partially attributed to the closing of certain bases; however, the greatest portion of this reduction is the result of the elimination of unnecessary facilities and the closer control of contract arrangements which has become possible by vesting this activity in a single specialized staff.

While working toward the automated system, C.F.C.S. has been able to undertake a number of short term consolidations which have yielded improvements in operations together with many worth-while economies. For example, C.F.C.S. inherited personnel totalling 3,307 military and civilian. By organization adjustments, an outright personnel saving of close to 10 per cent has already been realized. The major savings in personnel which automation of the system will provide must await the implementation of the consultant study, but they promise to be sizeable indeed.

Perhaps more important than the economies to be realized is the fact the new automated communications system will give the men and women of our forces the modern communication they need and deserve to carry out their widespread duties.

Last August the chief of defence staff ordered a review of the organization and administration of the reserves, including their tasking, command and control, training and equipment. The recommendations stemming from this review were approved last January, after consultation with the conference of defence associations, and the new plan will become fully effective January 1, 1968. A major feature of the plan is the provision of realistic tasks for the reserves within the framework of their existing organization. Units of the reserves will be linked to those elements of the regular force which they must directly support.

To provide more efficient and centralized command of all reserves, the commanding officer naval divisions, the naval reserves headquarters at Hamilton, will be relocated in Ottawa in September and command and control of naval divisions will be exercised by the director general reserves. Changes will also be made in the command structure for militia and army cadets which is now vested in the deputy chief of reserves at Canadian forces headquarters and exercised through 12 district headquarters. The new structure will divide the country into five regions commanded by regular officers with seven small district headquarters commanded by a militia officer to be known as the district commander, militia. This officer will command all militia personnel in his distrct.

It became apparent during the review conducted last fall that the role, organzation and re-equipment of the R.C.A.F. auxiliary required a complete re-examination and this re-examination is now being conducted on a priority basis. Members of the reserves are enthusiastic about the opportunities the new plan provides for realistic and meaningful training. For example, arrangements are being made to fly approximately 300 members of the reserves to Europe between late August and mid-October so that they can train alongside the members of the regular force on major field exercises.

While small groups of naval, land and air reserves have trained annually with the regular force in Canada, our increased air transport capability, coupled with the closer relationship being fostered between the reserves and regular force, now allows us to carry out this important training on a larger scale.

The cadet movement, comprising the sea, army and air cadet organizations, has increased in strength by 7 per cent during the year ended April 30 when we had a total of 93,135 cadets, made up of 10,190 sea cadets, 56,894 army cadets and 26,051 air cadets.

The continuing success and popularity of the cadet movement, reflected by this strength increase, is due in large part to the valuable assistance provided by our three civilian partners in this work—the Navy League of Canada, the Cadet Services of Canada Association, and the Air Cadet League of Canada.

An example of this co-operation is the recent agreement by these civilian partners to a common aim for the cadet movement which will permit increased regular force assistance to the cadets. Training will be broadened to give the cadets general familiarization with all environments: land, sea and air.

This summer approximately 17,000 cadets from all parts of Canada will attend various camps, courses and take part in exchange training with cadets of other countries. These will include the sea, army and air centennial camps at Kingston, Ontario and Farnham and St. Jean in Quebec, and a corps d'élite of some 200 sea, army and air cadets which will take part in activities at Expo and the national capital. We consider the department's contribution to the development of citizenship, leadership and physical fitness of Canadian youth in the cadet movement to be one of our most rewarding commitments.

Development activities for the services, now operating under a single development vote, will continue to be an important item. The management of these activities, as mentioned last year, by the development and associated research policy group under the chairmanship of the chief of technical services is proving to be an effective system. Periodic review of progress and a thorough examination of all aspects of new projects before they are initiated is providing a more efficient and less time consuming means of controlling the development program. It is planned to support a continuing development activity at an annual level of approximately $20 million.

This will include improvements to existing service equipments, studies leading to new concepts and systems, and participation in development projects with our allies.

In my presentation of the 1965-66 estimates I mentioned specifically the development of the ocean-going hydrofoil vessel and noted that, like most development projects, the cost had increased substantially over the original estimates. This project has been plagued with its share of problems, the most noteworthy of which was a fire on board the partially completed vessel in November of last year. A more recent problem was a failure in the power transmission system while under test at a subcontractor's plant. Despite these difficulties it is still intended to proceed with this development as the knowledge to be gained is important in a number of areas.

We are also continuing to study means of developing improved detection techniques in the field of anti-submarine warfare. The roles of Canada's forces stress a need for a variety of aircraft, particularly those with short take-off and landing characteristics. Support for the tilt-wing CL84 aircraft, being developed by Canadair Limited, is being provided by the Department of Industry. A new concept of a thrust augmentor wing is being studied, under Department of National Defence support, by De Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. This concept will allow high performance aircraft to achieve a short take-off and landing capability. Participation in this project by the United States has been agreed to and it is expected that other allied countries may also take part. The field of communications is an area of major interest for all elements of our armed forces. There has always been a considerable level of development activity in communication systems in Canada and we have now agreed to participate with our allies in two major projects in this field.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Has the minister unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: I should like to thank the committee for its courtesy in allowing me to continue with my remarks.

Project "Mallard" is the development of a highly advanced communications system for ground forces in the field. It is being undertaken jointly by the United States, Canada and Australia. Under NATO auspices, Canada will participate in the development of a tactical satellite communications system.

It has been our objective to channel as much as possible of the development program to Canadian industry. The examples I have used indicate that we are having considerable success in meeting this objective. Many of the projects are emanating from industrial proposals and most of the current development program will be assigned to Canadian industrial contracts.

To be effective, armed forces must not only have well trained and highly motivated men and women but they must be equipped with modern equipment. The men and women in our Canadian armed forces are well trained and highly motivated, and they are getting modern equipment.

For the naval forces we completed late last year the mid-life conversion of the St. Laurent class ships to the helicopter-destroyer configuration. Restigouche class destroyers will begin conversion later this year. Tenders have been called for DDH 280 class helicopter-destroyers. The second Oberon class submarine, Onondaga, is being commissioned this week in England and a third will be commissioned in 1968.

The Bonaventure, our aircraft carrier, is completing mid-life refit and modernization at Lauzon, Quebec. She is expected to sail for Halifax in August and following work-ups will rejoin the fleet. The two operational support ships, now being built in Saint John, New Brunswick, will be delivered in 1969.

For the ground forces we have completely equipped our two mechanized brigades with armoured personnel carriers and we are expecting the first deliveries of 175 Lynx armoured command and reconnaissance vehicles early next year. The Lynx will be issued to fighting units in our four brigade groups.

The self-propelled 155 mm. howitzers now on order for our mechanized brigades are expected to come into service next year. The first shipments of a new 81 mm. medium mortar are due shortly and this weapon will come into service this year. A surveillance drone system for the artillery is being developed. This system is a joint British, German and Canadian development in Canada by Canadair Limited.

There is also a requirement for less sophisticated equipment such as trucks and jeeps, and these are being provided. An order for 800 jeeps was placed with Kaiser of Canada earlier this month.

The program of modernization must continue and we are considering the acquisition of a new heavy anti-tank weapon, a low altitude air defence weapon for the ground forces, oversnow vehicles and a general purpose wheeled armoured vehicle.

The aircraft re-equipment program includes the delivery next year of the last four C130 Hercules transport aircraft for our heavy air transport fleet, bringing the total to 23. The CF-5 tactical ground support aircraft will begin coming off the production line at Canadair this fall and we took delivery of the first of 15 Buffalo short take-off and landing —STOL—transport aircraft from De Havilland Aircraft of Canada last week.

To provide our field commanders and their staffs with the capability of travelling quickly to all parts of their commands, we are getting seven Falcon light jet transports and the first of these aircraft is now at North West Industries in Edmonton for instrumentation and interior fitment. There is a requirement for a light utility helicopter which will be used for transporting personnel and as a light logistic vehicle. We expect the first aircraft of this type to be in service by the end of this year.

To further increase our air transport capability we are also considering the future purchase of long-range jet transport aircraft to enhance further our mobility. In addition, we are continuing to monitor improvements in anti-submarine aircraft in case it becomes necessary to replace our current excellent aircraft in this role. In general, our forces are obtaining a wide range of new modern equipment to enable them to carry out their assigned roles in as effective a manner as possible.

As forecast in the white paper there has been a consistent but modest increase in research funds. The Defence Research Board which is responsible for providing scientific advice to the minister and to the chief of defence staff also undertakes pure and applied research on behalf of the armed forces. The board has recently completed a comprehensive study of its organization structure and programs. As a result, changes are being made which will further strengthen its links with the armed forces in both defence research and development.

An example of this is a recent series of technical conferences between the Defence Research Board and the staff of mobile command which identified new problem areas where research and development are needed.

The launching of the highly successful Alouette I in September, 1962, marked Canada's entry into the field of space science and space technology. This remarkable achievement was followed in November, 1965, by the launching of the equally successful Alouette II. Both brought well deserved praise to the scientists of the Defence Research Board.

ISIS "A", the board's third satellite, is scheduled for launching next year.

In addition to this program of space research by means of these satellites, the board is engaged in joint studies with the United States on satellite communications for military purposes. Both the university grants program and the defence industrial research program continue as valuable adjuncts to the in-house research carried out in the establishments of the board.

There will be a modest increase in the funds for university grants. Co-operation with the research agencies of our NATO allies continues and it is proving an excellent medium for the exchange of defence scientific information in areas of mutual concern.

The defence estimates for 1967-68 are given in the traditional manner, by objectives and expenditures. In order to provide more meaningful information in the details, however, and to meet a long-standing request we are now grouping expenditures by function. For each of the major commands the expenses for personnel, operations and maintenance, as well as capital expenditures, are shown. This new breakdown of the estimates by commands is a significant step towards the goal of providing estimates information on a mission-oriented basis.

This system will permit a better assessment of expenditures in terms of the main roles or missions performed by the Canadian Armed Forces and it will at the same time facilitate the introduction of financial management procedures recommended in the Glassco commission report.

In accordance with the government's program based on the Glassco commission recommendations for improved financial management in the public service, we have been developing a modern system of financial management and responsibility accounting. A pilot study is beginning in transport command this year. We expect to introduce similar systems throughout the department over the next three or four years. One of the by-products of this will be the capacity to present to this committee estimates, expenditure and performance data which will considerably assist this committee in effectively discharging its responsibilities for the examination of defence estimates.

I trust that members of the committee will find the analysis this year beneficial, although it is necessarily limited as the new financial systems are still in the course of development.

When the white paper was produced in 1964, I established as a financial objective estimates, commencing with the fiscal year 1965-66, of $1,550 million escalating at not more than 2 per cent a year. This was exclusive of credits that might be necessary from time to time to provide for actuarial adjustments to the pension account.

In actual performance, defence expenditures were 98.7 per cent in 1965-66 and 99.3 per cent in 1966-67 of these targets. The estimates for 1967-68 which you have before you are precisely on this target.

It has been possible in the first two years of the program to meet the over-all financial targets and in the third year, 1967-68, to present the estimates within this limitation.

I am also confident that the equipment programs that are now under way will result in expenditures in the full amount of the provision contained in the 1967-68 estimates for this purpose.

Capital expenditures, such as expenditures on construction of buildings and works, development and procurement of equipment, etc., were 17.3 per cent of actual expenditures in 1965-66, 15.9 per cent in 1966-67 and are estimated at 20.5 per cent in the 1967-68 estimates, excluding the statutory item for actuarial adjustments.

I do not propose to go over the detail at this time but I will, of course, be pleased later in this debate to provide detailed information in respect of any items in which hon. members are particularly interested.

This year, the net total estimates expenditure for the Department of National Defence is $1.688 billion. You will note, Mr. Chairman, that when these estimates are expressed in terms of percentage of gross national product, defence expenditure has dropped from 3.9 per cent in 1963-64 to an estimated 2.7 per cent this year.

To put these estimates into better financial perspective, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to table a chart showing what it would have cost to maintain the 1963-64 organization and activities at today's prices. This chart also shows what it would have cost to maintain the defence department as it is today if we still enjoyed 1963-64 price levels. May I be permitted to table the chart?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I understand it is not customary to table such data in committee. Would it not be a good idea to add the figures as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Hellyer: It is a very short document. Perhaps I might read it into the record.

Mr. Churchill: Read it.

Mr. Hellyer: If I might have the indulgence of the committee, the chart I have before me is as follows:

Chart Comparing Relative Costs of Maintaining Department of National Defence in Fiscal Years
Shown below in millions of dollars

	1963/64	1964/65	1965/66	1966/67	1967/68
1963/64 expenditures inflated to current prices in each year	1683.5	1735.7	1809.8	1932.7	2016.8
Actual expenditures in each year	1683.5	1535.6	1548.4	1645.4	1688.0 (Estimate)
Expenditures in each year at 1963/64 prices	1683.5	1489.4	1440.4	1433.3	1409.0

To summarize briefly this chart, Mr. Chairman, if the department had continued as it was in 1963-64 without reorganization and without reducing marginal activities, the estimated requirement for 1967-68 would have been $328.8 million higher than is now being sought.

In terms of current purchasing power, the 1967-68 estimates, when compared with the actual expenditures in 1963-64, show a reduction of $279 million or 16.3 per cent. We expect to receive a dollar of value for every dollar we spend on defence.

Every request for expenditures is being carefully scrutinized to determine its validity and usefulness. In this regard, the associate minister and I are very grateful to the deputy minister, the chief of defence staff and their subordinates for the co-operation and understanding they have displayed in keeping defence estimates to a minimum.

I cannot conclude these remarks without making some mention of the contributions being made by the Canadian Armed Forces to the celebration of Canada's one hundredth anniversary. All components of the forces, both regular and reserve, are contributing to the centennial celebrations. Our major activity is, of course, the Canadian Armed Forces tattoo now playing to the record crowds at Expo '67.

Mr. Churchill: That deals with tradition. I thought you had wiped it out.

Mr. Hellyer: This exciting two-hour panorama of Canadian military history has toured the country from coast to coast playing to packed houses virtually everywhere.

Mr. Churchill: There is a lot in history and tradition, is there not?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, of course. I am glad that the show was as well received in Winnipeg as in the rest of the country.

Standing ovations have become the rule rather than the exception when the show's finale is completed. The significant thing here is that the tattoo was completely written, produced and directed by Canadian servicemen and the entire cast is made up of serving officers and men.

Among other major centennial activities conducted by the department is the Canadian Armed Forces motorcycle display team, which will give performances in 112 communities across Canada. Like the tattoo, this team demonstrates the professional discipline inherent in our forces.

Another major contributor is the Golden Centennaires aerobatic display team. This group of aviators are giving performances in 100 different Canadian locations. One measure of their success has been the numerous requests that have come from communities that for valid reasons regretfully could not be included in the tour schedule for the Centennaires.

• (4:10 p.m.)

A fourth centennial activity conducted by the Department of National Defence is the naval assemblies at Halifax this month and at Victoria and Vancouver next month. Approximately 28 foreign ships from at least 15 countries will take part in these naval assemblies on both coasts.

In addition to the specific activities I have mentioned, Canadian servicemen at home and abroad are playing important parts in local centennial projects. Particular mention should be made of the part being played by reserve formations in supporting their district celebrations.

All these activities, of course, put an additional strain on the department's resources, but it is important to note that during this period the Canadian Armed Forces are still able to perform their primary tasks and at the same time make a remarkable contribution to the centennial activities which, incidentally, they seem to be thoroughly enjoying. In my opinion all credit should be given to the officers and men of the forces who are participating in these programs, as well as to those who have planned them.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, before I deal with the content, or lack of content, in the minister's statement I want to say I thoroughly agree with what he said in the latter portion of his remarks when he paid tribute to various armed forces activities in connection with the centennial celebrations—the Centennaires, the motorcycle display team, the military tattoo and other events which our armed forces are putting on. I have seen some of these displays and I agree with the minister that they are worthy of the highest commendation. With regard to the tattoo, my only comment is that I did not see one green uniform in it and that its excellence was therefore unimpaired.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Ha, ha, ha.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for Chicoutimi may not have seen it yet. I trust that at some time he will do so and see what it is like.

With regard to the content of the minister's statement, let me say that it was the type of statement which would in normal circumstances be made before the defence committee where one would have the opportunity of studying the great amount of detail it involves. There is no doubt the minister has covered extensively, if somewhat lightly, a great many aspects of defence, including both defence policy and some of the programming he has in mind this year. There are, of course, issues with which he has not dealt or with which he has dealt only superficially. This may be brought out in the course of questions later, although I must say the program of business we have before us does not give us much chance of going into these estimates as deeply as the committee would wish.

Notwithstanding the fact that we had an extended debate in February, March and April involving the affairs of the department, these estimates are very important inasmuch as they continue the program of the integration of command. Even though Bill No. C-243 has not yet been proclaimed, with the result that none of its provisions is operative at this time, there are some consequences which flow from the passage of that bill. It is not my intention this afternoon to revive the so-called unification debate but there are several questions which naturally flow from the desion made at that time.

In the early part of his presentation the minister, somewhat self-consciously, I thought, identified with a particular aspect of our defence role, namely, that of peace keeping. His attitude was, I believe, a defensive one. It was said during the unification debate—this is a view which is shared by many who are completely sincere in their belief—that there has been too much emphasis placed on the future peace keeping role of the Canadian Armed Forces. I will not repeat the remarks I made on December 7 following the minister's introduction of the bill. I thought at that time we were going too far for the good of our forces in committing ourselves to a peace keeping role. Peace keeping is not dependent on a decision by Canada alone. It involves a decision which is taken not even by the United Nations as such but by the members of the United Nations. I said in December, and I think I was right, that peace keeping did not have a high priority in the thinking of far too many members of the United Nations. Today I would say they think even less of it in practical terms.

I doubt that the countries of the Middle East care a fig about peace keeping when it comes to practical matters. The Soviet union certainly does not, and it is one of the jokes of the century so far as France is concerned. They may pay some lip service to it, but that is all. We must regret the fact that the concept of a peace keeping role has suffered in reputation. I do not think India cares very much for it. As we know, India was warned in advance by Nasser that the U.A.R. would request a withdrawal of the United Nations peace keeping force, as was Yugoslavia. And they were very glad to get out. This is why Canada was placed in the invidious position in which she found herself. I realize this is not a United Nations debate, but I must say I think the decision to withdraw the force was highly precipitate and wrong in principle notwithstanding the fact that Israel's continued refusal to accept a peace keeping force on its side of the border had not contributed to improving the situation. But that is history now.

The question is: Is there a role for peace keeping forces? I hesitate to think there is in the foreseeable future. And I believe Canada holds the same opinion. I say this in the light of the reservations our spokesman made in the debate the other day with regard to the decision to continue the existence of the Cyprus force for another six months. Indeed, the Canadian representative finally said there must be an end to this situation because almost three years had gone by since we got ourselves into the Cyprus adventure. In that period there has been no fighting, it is true, but neither has there been any solution of the social and economic problems involved.

I agree with the minister when he says that the conflict in the Middle East did not come about as a result of the failure of the peace keeping force. That is true. It came about as a result of the failure of the countries concerned to solve the social and political problems which exist in the region.

I think one can say further that the presence of peace keeping forces in the Middle East and Cyprus is a soporific. It rather lets people forget the basic problem. There is sort of a feeling that if we keep quiet maybe the problem will go away. This seems to allow the nations concerned to dilly-dally or procrastinate and as a result fail to get down to the hard business of settling the problems. It may be that the pressure of fighting will perhaps force people to get down to the matter of really settling the problems. This, however, is one of the negative aspects of a very successful peace keeping force in that it allows the principals in the quarrel to be lulled into a frame of mind that the settlement of the basic problems need not be undertaken now because of the attitude that no one is fighting. I would not agree with the suggestion which might be made by some that I am arguing that we should let them fight to exhaustion and that this would settle their problems. I do not think so. This, however, is one of the negative aspects we have seen in respect of peace keeping and it is something we should keep in mind in respect of peace keeping in the future. I believe some of my colleagues will be speaking on this matter.

With regard to NATO the minister did give the indication that there would be a five-year program disclosed to the member nations in the fall. We would be interested in knowing what the changes by Canada will be which were hinted at in the minister's remarks. Will these changes be in the field of ships? I rather think so. It is conceivable there may be some change in the manpower content of the brigade in Europe. I am speculating because the minister merely hinted. If it is to be in the field of the brigade as a cohesive unit, one finds difficulty in understanding how one could reduce it as an effective fighting team.

The change could have something to do with the ultimate withdrawal of the air division. I rather expect, however, that it has more to do with ships because we are in trouble with our ships. Nothing the minister said this afternoon can gloss over the problems which exist in respect of manpower in the navy and the fact that some ships are and more may be, undermanned. For instance, where is the crew for the Bonaventure to come from? If the other ships are undermanned, where are these men to come from? Obviously they have been allocated to other duties in the interval. They are not merely standing by. I do not believe it can be done by the simple matter of resorting to mere recruits. We have not been getting too many recruits in the past year. The figures may have gone up temporarily. The minister mentioned increases in recruitment but a recruit is not an experienced serviceman. He is a long way from it.

We should like to know far more about the figures in respect of retirements. We should like to know how many men have given notice that they intend to retire. I should like to have an explanation of what is happening in respect of subclauses 3 and 4 of clause 6 of Bill No. C-243. Although the act has not been proclaimed, I should like to know whether the provision for six months' notice is general throughout the services for every man who wishes to retire ahead of time. Is this being applied as a general rule? What will be the conditions of retirement when the act is proclaimed? What will be the conditions of retirement under clause 6(3)? Has this been settled?

I can assure the minister that there are many servicemen who are now anxious to find out what will happen under clause 6(3), because administratively means can be devised quite readily to stultify or negate the spirit of the statement made by the minister at the end of the unification debate when he modified his statement with regard to clause 6 and allowed the amendment to subclause 3.

We should like to have some figures with regard to the total present strength in the three branches inasmuch as they still exist since the act has not been proclaimed. What is the present strength as at June 1 in each of the three branches, the army, the navy and the air force, since they do exist? What is the rate of recruitment in each of those services? What is the rate of actual retirement in each of the services and how many notices of retirement are on file at the present time in each of the services?

In dealing with the details disclosed in the estimates I note aircraft acquisition. Has anything been decided with regard to replacement of the CF-104? How does this tie in with the forces' goal which the minister is going to announce to our NATO allies this autumn? What is to happen in respect of the CF-104? Is its role to be abandoned? If it is to be abandoned within the scope of the five-year period, now is the time to consider the replacement of this airplane because we know how long it took for the CF-5 to be decided upon, put into production, delivered and brought forward for squadron operation.

In view of the increase in cost of this aircraft, can the minister tell us how many aircraft we will have under the CF-5 program? We should also like to know how many tankers will have to be provided for refuelling purposes, because these aircraft have an extremely short range and are incapable of flying from this continent without some refuelling system. Will some of the Hercules aircraft have to be converted into tankers and, if so, how many? Otherwise the CF-5 force will be confined to Canada? Perhaps it is the intention to locate them all in Europe. We should have some indication at this time, not two or three years from now, in respect of the CF-5, when presumably it will be in squadron operation. The minister indicated to us that this year we are going to get four more 130-E's and that they are looking at follow-up aircraft of a long-range jet transport type. We should have more information in respect of that particular aspect.

Having regard to the transport squadron and the reconnaissance squadron, where are the personnel to be found? We are short of personnel, particularly pilots, and we were short of aircraft. We are now purchasing more aircraft and I should like the minister to indicate where he expects to find the necessary air crews. Are new people to be trained or is some conversion to take place?

I thought the minister's remarks about the reserves were rather touching. I was pleased to note that he did not use terms like "bone lean", "sharp" and "efficient" as he did in the past. We remember when the reserves were reorganized two years ago following the Suttyie report and the emasculation or disappearance of so many of our proud militia units. We were supposed to have 30,000 men in the militia ready to move into our secondary brigades and fulfil other commitments by filling out the flesh of our forces in case of an emergency. The truth of the matter is that there are not 30,000 effective men in the militia. Some of our militia units are run down and their morale is apathetic because of the uncertainty that exists in respect of the future of these wonderful units and of our armed forces. They are wondering now whether there is going to be another clean-out or cutback of militia units.

I trust that the director general of reserves will be successful with his latest plan. He is a fine soldier and merits something better than a task which might turn out to be hopeless. We have now observed a return to the former military districts which existed in the past. I suppose one might say that the more change we see on paper the more things remain the same.

The cadets were all enrolled prior to unification, but I have been talking to some naval cadets and Navy League cadets and I am wondering how many of them are going to remain under unification. These are all intangible things, but let me say to the minister that one of the best things we have in this country for our young people is the cadet movement. These cadets are polite and they are a great source of recruitment for our forces. If as a result of actions to be taken, or actions that have been taken, the cadet movement falls to the ground, I think Canada as a whole will be the greatest loser.

In the few moments that remain at my disposal I should like to refer to another aspect of national defence policy which was discussed during the unification debate and during the debate on a supply motion. Hon. members will recall that I raised a question of privilege on the basis that the form of the estimates was not in accordance with the law. This is still the case because there are no specific estimates in respect of the army, the navy or the air force as such. The information given on a functional basis is interesting and informative but it is not in accordance with the law. While I do not intend to precipitate a lengthy row about the improper form of these estimates, I must say that they fail to disclose any specific information.

Let me point out that in the estimates there is no amount shown specifically for procurement of aircraft for the navy. There is an amount shown in respect of aircraft and engines for the whole force. That is all very well, but we have no specific information in this regard. These things are all lumped together. For example, the maritime command will cost us this year a total of $281,647,000, but lumped together are personnel, operations and maintenance. We do not know what the air component of the maritime command is going to cost. We have no idea how much it will cost for aircraft or other things for the mobile command. The way the estimates are before us there is no way of identifying specific costs such as the cost of training a sailor, an airman or a soldier. Sailors, airmen and soldiers are going to remain soldiers, airmen and sailors notwithstanding the fact they are going to be lumped together as servicemen. That is all I intend to say about the form of the estimates, although I admit the information provided is of interest and informative even though it does not meet the requirements of the law.

I trust that when the time comes the minister will provide us with a breakdown of vote number 15. This item includes $61 million for ships and I should like to know what ships are involved. It also provides $95 million for aircraft and engines and I should like to know what aircraft and what engines are involved. We also find an amount listed for electronic and communication equipment. Surely we should have a breakdown in respect of all of these items. We want to know what company will build the $95 million worth of aircraft and what will be the contribution to the defence forces. This is the kind of information we would like to obtain.

Because of the shortness of time and the fact that a number of my colleagues wish to speak on these estimates, I shall limit my remarks on the first item to what I have said up to now. I will have further questions on other items. On the whole this will be a very imperfect study of these estimates because the study of the estimates last year left many questions unresolved. We should have the opportunity to question the minister and the officers of the department on the estimates. The spending of the Department of National Defence, amounting to $1,688 million, forms such a large proportion of the total expenditures of the government that at all times these estimates should be subject to examination by committee.

I do not agree that the estimates of all departments should be examined by committee every year but certainly those of the Department of National Defence should be. There is far too much detail in these estimates to deal with them hurriedly. We will merely skim the surface. In fact, we will not even skim the surface this afternoon and tonight. The government will ask the house to approve these estimates on the basis of today's study. I do not think this is at all good enough.

I should like to remind the minister of one other matter before resuming my seat. I refer to his undertaking at the committee hearings that any rules and regulations made in connection with Bill No. C-243 would be referred to the committee on defence for examination. The minister will recall that undertaking. I trust he will be able to tell us this afternoon that his undertaking will be carried out and when this matter will be referred to the committee. I hope he will act a little faster than his colleague the Minister of Finance, who notwithstanding a number of promises made to me has failed to introduce a resolution dealing with regulations passed in connection with certain acts under his jurisdiction. These regulations should have been placed before us before now so that there might be an appropriate public examination in respect of them and comment by hon. members.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, in the past week we have heard two very important announcements by the Minister of National Defence.

Only last Tuesday we heard the earth-shaking pronouncement on the treaty governing the exploration and use of celestial bodies, and today we had the introduction of the estimates of the Department of National Defence. I feel I must put the two pronouncements together. Last Tuesday, as reported at page 1709 of Hansard, the minister had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to inform hon. members that it is the intention of Canada to ratify, as soon as possible, the treaty on principles governing activities of states in the exploration and use of outer space including the moon and other celestial bodies.

A little later the minister informed members of this house, and through the house he informed Canada, as follows:

> This treaty, three copies of which I am now tabling in English and in French, is intended to ensure that outer space, the moon and other celestial bodies will be explored and used only for peaceful purposes and that there can be no national appropriation of such bodies. Of particular significance in this respect are those provisions which state that parties to the treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the earth any body carrying nuclear weapons or any other weapons of mass destruction, instal such weapons in celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space. The establishment of military bases, installations and fortifications, the testing of any type of weapons and the conduct of military manoeuvres on celestial bodies are also forbidden.

The minister then concluded this great statement which he made with such profundity and pontification, particularly in respect of the concluding sentence, with these words:

> It is because of this country's active role in the space field and in the international legal sphere, and because of the importance of the treaty for the development of the rule of law in outer space, that it would be particularly appropriate for Canada, by ratification, to be among the first countries that formally accept the principles which the treaty enshrines.

Is it not amazing, Mr. Chairman, that in this wonderful world in which we live man, the thinking creature, this week decided by agreement among most countries of the world that we will not allow the moon, Venus, Mars or any other planets or stars in outer space to be used for anything but peaceful purposes? There is to be no installation of armaments, nuclear weapons or even military bases on celestial bodies.

Today we heard the lengthy and interesting statement on military policy by the Minister of National Defence and a request that Canada increase its military expenditures. We have also had this profound pronouncement on peace in outer space. Why can we not have some indication from the minister, speaking on behalf of the government, in the very month when we have protected outer space about what we are doing to secure peace in the world? What is the situation on this little planet of ours called earth so far as peace is concerned, so far as weapons, military establishments and atomic weapons in our own country are concerned? War alliances are being strengthened and not weakened. What is the position in this world of ours, having solved the problem of outer space?

I wrote down very quickly eight areas of tension and unrest which have developed this month. They are: 1. Continued tension on the India-Pakistan borders. 2. Six months further maintenance of a peace keeping force in Cyprus. 3. The verging on civil war in Nigeria. 4. The acceleration of the war in Viet Nam. 5. A diplomatic war in the United Nations following Israeli victories in the hot war in the Middle East. 6. Indications that the U.S.S.R. will re-equip Arab forces with armaments and Israel will be denied armaments or replacements, particularly by France which sold Israel its military planes in the first place. 7. Israel, having been established by the United Nations and having won a military war brought about by the threat to its right to live as a nation, faces a threat of future war because of indecision and major power politics at the United Nations. 8. The Republic of China this week exploded a hydrogen bomb and is anticipated to be capable of a major missile system by 1970.

I just could not help but point out the situation that exists in our wonderful, beautiful little world, this planet called earth, where the great thinkers of the world have agreed to a treaty on outer space. When are we going to start thinking about peace on our own planet? When are we going to have treaties for peace among the nations of this world? When are we going to have disarmament, not new armament? When is this country, as well as others, going to reach the conclusion that it would be far better to spend a few billion dollars for peace and for aid to underdeveloped countries than to spend money to land a spacecraft on the moon? It seems to me that something is wrong in our thinking when the two major powers of the world spend $120 billion a year for arms while two thirds of the people of the world go to bed hungry. This is the principle that Canada has also followed.

In introducing his estimates the minister has presented us with a chart—I do not blame him for doing so—in which past expenditures are related to inflation. By relating them to the increase in the gross national product it would appear that we are doing fine and spending less and less. Admittedly our defence expenditures for the next 12 months are down a fifth of 1 per cent compared with the expenditures of last year. However, that does not get us away from the fact that the Canadian taxpayers are being asked to pay for the increased military expenditures which have risen from $1,572,690,000 last year to $1,688,000,000 this year. We in this group at least were, if not anticipating, at least hoping there might be a reduction in the money required for military purposes in the next 12 months.

Personally I feel that this could have been brought about, but it has not come into being because the minister has not yet answered the question which was uppermost in the minds of the members of the committee on defence and, I think, in the minds of many other members of the house, this is, what is to be the future role of the Canadian Armed Forces? For what purpose are they being integrated, unified and trained? I gather from what the minister said a little while ago that no change whatsoever is being contemplated because he continues to emphasize the peace keeping role of the forces, with which I completely agree, but he also gave an indication that Canada is going to stay within NATO and NORAD although perhaps with a change in role. However, I think there was a definite indication that we are going to maintain our peace keeping role and perhaps extend it and we are going to continue our participation in NATO and NORAD.

It seems to me we are not looking ahead or paying attention to the circumstances that exist today. It might have been understandable that Canada should enter NATO when it was first formed because of the situation and the climate which existed at that time as well as the danger of a cold war escalating into a hot war. But surely 22 years later the situation, the climate and the attitudes in Europe have changed to a great extent. I have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that Canada, now that it has the opportunity, should not be negotiating for a new role in NATO but should be pulling out of NATO. I cannot for the life of me see why 22 years after the end of the last world war our Canadian forces must continue to remain on European soil. I cannot see what useful purpose is served or can be served in maintaining in Europe, at great cost to the Canadian taxpayers a brigade and four air divisions. Moreover, I keep in mind, if others do not, that in the two world wars during this century Canadian men and women have given of life and limb and the taxpayers of their money to play a part in opposing aggression and maintaining the principles of democracy.

But then we find that some 22 years later one of the main countries where our life's blood was shed to protect it from aggression and to restore and maintain democracy, tells Canada "Take your forces out of our country, we do not want them". That is what France told the Canadians who not only went to its assistance in two world wars but who stayed there for 22 years to protect it from possible aggression. Later I will want to know just what it cost Canada to be kicked out, what it cost to move our forces to another country. Taking into consideration the attitude of France with regard to NATO I wonder what we, some 22 years later and over 3,000 miles away, are doing maintaining our air force divisions and our brigade in NATO? I believe that negotiations should be started for a gradual withdrawal from European soil.

I want to say, as I have said before, that I believe Canada has a continuing and perhaps expanding role to play in anti-submarine warfare. The anti-submarine role is one phase of this operation with which I personally agree. However, when the minister answers questions put to him by the previous speaker I should like him to answer one or two questions for me. The minister is proud of the anti-submarine role of our navy whose highly equipped ships with their highly trained crews are stationed in Halifax. However, in the event of war I do not think the aggressor will give notice. I think he will simply move, if he dares to move, although I do not think any nuclear power would move today because its action might escalate eventually into a nuclear war and that would be the end of civilization in this world as we know it. Undoubtedly the aggressor would know the location of our installations and our ships. We carry out anti-submarine surveillance on a 24-hour basis, but if a submarine got through and planted mines in Halifax harbour, how many minesweepers would be there to protect us? I understand we do not have any. I cannot understand military thinking whereby plans are made for anti-submarine vessels to operate in the main away from home port without provision being made for minesweepers to ensure that our ships can get out. I hope the minister will be able to clarify this matter.

What I said about NATO I believe to be also true about NORAD. I do not understand Canada's position with regard to NORAD. I do not see any reason for the maintenance of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, nor do I see any reason for the heavy expenditure which we have to make year by year for the maintenance of two Bomarc stations for the defence of Canada. I think it is time that these Bomarcs were shipped back and our men put to more useful pursuits. It is my belief that in view of integration and the emphasis on a mobile command whereby men will be moved anywhere they are required wherever hell may break out, be it in Europe or in a peace keeping operation, it is time we pulled out of NATO and NORAD.

• (5:00 p.m.)

If this is not to be, then I certainly hope we will not have to be satisfied with the statement of the minister this afternoon. He said that a lot of thinking is now being done about the new role that Canada should play in NATO, that there is going to be a meeting of NATO members this autumn to discuss a changing role or new approach, and that as a result of this meeting some decisions will be reached in December. The way the minister put it, Mr. Chairman, it would appear that once again the Canadian people in general and members of the House of Commons in particular are going to be confronted with a fait accompli in relation to the decision reached by the government on our role in NATO and also in respect of NORAD inasmuch as I understand that agreement is coming up for possible renewal next year.

In view of this situation I have no hesitation in saying that the defence committee should be called together and taken into the confidence of the minister. The advice of the members of the committee should be sought and the committee should discuss, having been given the fullest possible information by the minister, our future role in Europe for the next five years if we are going to remain a member of NATO. I think that any fait accompli in the matter of decisions on NATO, NORAD or the purchase of equipment is undemocratic and places not only the members of the committee but all members of parliament in a false position. I hope that a great deal of thought will be given to this matter by the Minister of National Defence The purpose of the defence committee is not just to receive a report from the minister or from General Allard or the deputy chief of staff. Its purpose is also to consult and advise, and consultation cannot take place and advice cannot be given if the committee is confronted with a fait accompli as has been the experience in the past.

I am very sorry that these estimates were not referred to the committee for detailed study because it is only in committee that staff and experts can be called to give evidence, to be questioned, to argue back and forth and reason things out. This certainly cannot be done in the space of one day's discussion of the estimates in committee of supply.

Canada is a nation large in area but small in population. Yet it is a country of great influence. I had hoped that the Minister of National Defence would take the opportunity this year to give an indication that it is felt there is a need for the breaking up of alliances, for if one side does not do it the other never will. I had hoped the minister would indicate that it is felt there is a need for Canada to show that it believes in disarmament, that Canada is one country that believes it should not have atomic warheads on its soil, that Canada is one country that believes it should be reducing military expenditure, not increasing it, that Canada wants to give some leadership, small as it may be, in world affairs, that Canada believes in peace on earth as well as in celestial bodies and outer space, that Canada is one country which believes that it is wrong to supply military weapons and nuclear warheads.

I believe that the minister would have received world acclaim, or at least world attention, had be taken a different approach and made such a statement during the presentation of his estimates this afternoon.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I repeat: Let the minister take this committee and the standing committee on defence into his and the government's confidence. I should like to tell the minister that we on this side of the house are just as good Canadians, just as loyal and interested in matters of defence and foreign policy as are those who sit to the right of Mr. Speaker. I say to the minister, cease to be an autocrat and become a democrat. If he does I can assure him that we will give him every consideration and co-operation.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, in the last few weeks since the book of estimates was presented there have been a number of references to the very large increase in the estimates for this year. I have received letters on this subject from my constituents, as I think have other members of the house. In the last day or two 20 members of the Vancouver board of trade visited Ottawa. In talking to them I found that one of the questions foremost in their minds was just why the federal government is spending about $750 million more this year than last year.

I turned to the estimates to find out where the main increase in the estimates was, and one of the departments which has a very major increase in its estimates is the Department of National Defence. When you examine the estimates of this department to find out where the increases have taken place, you find they are in the pay and allowances of the members of the armed forces in the amount of approximately $71 million, that civil salaries have increased by approximately $11 million, and that the pension and superannuation fund is up by about $61 million. If you add these amounts together, Mr. Chairman, assuming my arithmetic is correct you get a figure of $143 million. This figure exceeds by $28 million the actual increase in the spending of the Department of National Defence. This is an indication that had it not been for increases in civil and military pay and in pensions and superannuation—though these items have not held firm in other areas in Canada either—the expenditure of the Department of National Defence this year would indeed be down slightly from the amount of the estimates presented to us last year.

This fact should be taken into account when we look at what the defence department is spending because I think that one immediately leaps to the conclusion, when one sees an increase of $115 million in one item, that this represents a vast increase in Canada's military effort, in the purchase of equipment and in the extension of our armed forces. In fact, it largely represents adjustments in pay, civil allowances and superannuation.

I want to comment briefly on the rearrangement of the defence estimates which precipitated a storm a little while ago, particularly in the presentation under vote 15 which I will not discuss in detail. I shall merely refer hon. members to the form in which we now find the figures set out under maritime command, mobile command, the Canadian infantry brigade and so on. Hon. members will get some idea of the amounts of money which are being spent in these operational areas. I believe that to be able to look at the estimates in this way is a considerable improvement in their presentation. I think we should have more information before us in these estimates than we now have. I should like to see the form of breakdown that we have in these estimates extended until we have a good idea of the amounts involved, item by item, in the various operational components of national defence or of other branches of government.

For too long have we been presented with what is known as a list of standard objects in which we are told how much the whole department has spent on postage. While these curious figures may interest archaeologists at some future date when they are digging into our past they are of no relevance to us when we are examining the departments before us. Here we see a favourable trend. There is a movement toward the examination of functional components and the cost of those functional components. I recommend to the minister and to government that in future they give us more details so we may take a more comprehensible look at the estimates. If that were done perhaps not so many questions would be asked on the floor of the house. We should not have to extract from the minister information on the small items in which we have an interest. The hon. member for Edmonton West spoke of this in his remarks. He asked for specific details on various items which appear as lump sums in the estimates. I join with him in hoping that the book of estimates will in the future give in more detail information which would be of value to backbenchers so that they might obtain a broader comprehension of the operations of departments.

Any backbencher who sits and listens to discussion of estimates of a department finds himself removed, so to speak, from knowing about what is really going on. That feeling of being removed had in part been added to by the increase in the effective capacity of the committees to examine the estimates of departments. After having had one year of that we see that it is very exhausting for members of the House of Commons to examine in great detail the estimates of all departments. In fact, it is too exhausting for us to accomplish much very effectively. As a result we must constantly search in parliament for other ways in which backbenchers can exercise some oversight in regard to what government services do. Perhaps this is the most important function of any member of parliament. Members who sit on the back benches ought to have a good idea of what the departments of government are doing. They should understand what is being done and tell the people they represent about it. We must constantly search for ways to improve the presentation of estimates. As back bench members, we must improve our capability to examine those estimates and to examine departmental officers and ministers when estimates are brought before us.

One of the most interesting matters that has arisen during this afternoon's debate has been the disclosure of figures in regard to recruiting in the armed forces. The figures show that all the apprehensions that hon. members had during the debate on unification about the concept of unification, that unification would entirely destroy the morale of the armed forces, were based or a wholly wrong or completely fallacious assumption. Nothing demonstrates this more clearly than the figures on recruiting which have been presented to the house. The figures tend to demonstrate that the debate on unification and the fact of unification tended, if anything, to increase the national interest in our armed forces and what they are doing. The public's attention was focused on our armed forces and our young men were induced to join them. We can really find no other explanation for the increase. It seems that the very opposite has happened to what hon. gentlemen on the opposition side said in the house and in the defence committee would happen with regard to recruiting and morale in the armed forces.

One way of looking at the matter somewhat differently is found in a column in the Chronicle-Herald of June 14, 1967, written by Mr. Ron MacDonald and headed, "Inside Province House." The column deals with certain figures in the recent provincial election of Nova Scotia. He says:

> Previous to the election there were many Tories who would take you aside and offer advice such as, "unification has all the navy wild. They're not going to support the Grits this time"; or "running Stanfield is a far different matter than having the federal fellas. The servicemen aren't mad at him."

Then he goes on to say:

> "Why," ask Conservatives, "should Stanfield be unpopular with servicemen coming here from Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan or British Columbia? And, those from the rest of the maritimes are bound to be with him."

Then he says:

> Tallying up returns for seven constituencies where there was a concentration of service personnel—Kings West, Dartmouth North, Halifax Chebucto, Annapolis West; Halifax Eastern Shore, Dartmouth South and Shelburne—there was hardly a poll which did not give a substantial majority to the Liberal candidate, regardless of whether that Liberal was supporting a cabinet minister or not.

[Mr. Deachman.]

Actually, the polls which produced the biggest proportionate Liberal majority was in Dartmouth North, where Gordon Hart won over Conservative Charles Clarke. Dartmouth North is a navy stronghold and, supposedly, the hotbed of reaction against a unified force idea.

Mr. Hart took the predominantly navy polls at Shannon Park and along Princess Margaret by a whopping 634 votes to 252. And in along Princess Margaret live a group of senior naval NCOs, who must be regarded as the effective leaders of the ordinary seamen.

In neighboring Dartmouth South, in polls with the majority of voters in the Lakefront apartments, many of whose tenants are junior naval officers, the vote for Liberal Eileen Stubbs was a healthy 114 votes, compared to Agriculture Minister Akerley's 56.

In Halifax Chebucto's Windsor Park, army barracks in the city's north end, Conservative James Vaughan, a winner in most polls, lost heavily to Liberal Peter Richards, who won 155 to 75 there. Mr. Vaughan said ruefully afterwards, though holding out some hope, "at least it was only two to one."

• (5:20 p.m.)

Dr. Duncan MacMillan took a 804 to 608 advantage in the Shearwater and Eastern Passage polls in Halifax Eastern Shore over Conservative Nelson Gaetz.

And in Welfare Minister James Harding's Shelburne seat, the Baccaro and Barrington polls voted for Liberal Harold Huskilson, 389 to 225. These polls are largely naval and votes which Mr. Harding wooed over the years.

Peter Nicholson won handily in Annapolis West and his increased majority was due, at least in part, to the fine showing he made in the polls where CFB Cornwallis personnel and the civilian base employees voted, despite Ottawa's sword of Damocles hanging over the base. Mr. Nicholson won the Cornwallis and Deep Brook polls 330 to 194.

In Kings West, with the sprawling vote of CFB Greenwood always the major concern of any candidate running there, Conservative Gordon Tidman won the seat by a scant 98 votes over Liberal Frank Bezanson.

How did Mr. Tidman fare in and around Greenwood?

Actually, the poll which produced the biggest proportionate Liberal majority was in Dartmouth North, where Gordon Hart won over Conservative Charles Clarke. Dartmouth North is a navy stronghold and, supposedly, the hotbed of reaction against a unified force idea.

The article goes on:

> All in all, the services—or at least that part of them easily pigeonholed—voted 3,870 to 2,322—Liberal.

The writer concludes:

> Whether or not the forces favoured integration, or if they voted according to party affiliation regardless of establishing who was running and for what, are questions for other analysis experts to figure out. I can't.

This is another indicator, and a strong one, that what hon. gentlemen opposite feared with regard to unification was wholly wrong even with regard to the navy itself. Indeed, the navy went out at the first opportunity following the debate on unification and voted against the Conservative party and in favour of the Liberal party in sizeable proportions in the recent election in Nova Scotia.

There can be no other way to explain this than by saying that hon. gentlemen opposite were as wrong in relation to the navy specifically as they were about the total effect of unification upon military personnel in all the services. We can only judge, from what we have seen, that in cheering off Admiral Landymore naval personnel were cheering off the old system and cheering in unification. However astonishing this may seem, the facts and figures are clear. One can only suspect from what we have seen and from the correspondence we received during the unification debate that this, indeed, is the fact and that young Canadians were very proud of what was being done to update the Canadian armed services and make it one of the most modern and forward looking services in the world.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deachman: Young men were happy to join that service at the very peak of the debate on unification and young people in the navy on the Atlantic coast, which hon. members opposite said was the trouble centre, were ready to support the imminent act of unification. The figures demonstrate that unification has been as successful as Expo, even if that success was unexpected.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, while considering the estimates of the Department of National Defence, I should like to make a few observations, meanwhile giving the minister the assurance that I have no intention of subjecting him again to the third degree he had to suffer when we were considering the unification of the armed forces.

I even think that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) is doing his job well, explaining fully his position, ensuring the department for which he is responsible, particularly the army, the most modern methods and demonstrating this in the unification which is already in process of being carried out.

I believe the savings he has announced, even though they may represent an increase in the over-all budget of national defence, nevertheless constitute a saving on what all this would have cost without the modern reforms he has brought about in his department.

I think that his army general staff is competent. I realized this myself when I was given the opportunity to visit a rather large number of military installations.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in a spirit of co-operation and without the least intention of criticizing the minister's position, I should like to make a few remarks which force themselves on the conscience of all human beings who consider current world events and which must also at times have disturbed even the sleep of the minister. As a matter of fact, I am sure that even if he is the Minister of National Defence who must deal with war matters, peace matters must also concern him from time to time, especially when he is able to examine at leisure the arms race situation and what is called in certain circles, that escalation, and prompt him to ask himself whether those concerned with the future of humanity should not reconsider a little our policy regarding those expenditures.

This strikes me very much, however—and this strikes many more—in view of the comments we hear in all sorts of environments. In fact, we hear leaders of important segments of humanity tell us that at least just as much thought should be given to disarmament as to armaments, at least just as much to peace as to war.

So I am impressed by this budget of $1,688 million earmarked for war—which, of course, we call defence because it sounds better —whereas for health and welfare, we earmark —I know I said $1,688 million but I made a mistake, it was a slip of the tongue—$1,273,906,400 which represents an increase of $88,417,000 in round figures, whereas for defence, the increase is $115 million.

Mr. Chairman, there are many Canadians who wonder—and once again I say it in the most constructive frame of mind, without necessarily blaming the minister whose role it is to secure whatever is most up to date for the Department of National Defence, as long as the government of the country shall decide that we must have the best organization with the most modern equipment and techniques—whether it would not perhaps be appropriate to reconsider our policy somewhat and whether we would not be well advised to earmark for works of peace larger sums of money than we are earmarking for works of war.

I understand that Canada has sacred commitments through agreements with its allies, and I also understand that in troubled times such as we are living through, we can always claim that it is urgent to show our national solidarity to our allies. I understand that all these amounts we earmark for defence are a stimulus that may appear valuable for our economy, and I also understand that, to a certain extent, it is useful to our foreign trade, to the balance of our purchases from foreign countries. I understand that all kinds of good reasons can be brought forward to show that these amounts are not necessarily bad investments.

But, once again, there are so many Canadians who are wondering why we spend more billions of dollars to help kill, slaughter, destroy, spread hate in the world, because finally what is the meaning of all that, even if we claim that it is to bring about peace.

I wonder if there is not some urgency to sit down and revise our judgment.

And that would not surprise me at all, because the cabinet understands that point of view. In fact, I had the opportunity, as well as some of my colleagues here, to see the qualms of conscience of some of our ministers when the death penalty was maintained. As Christians their conscience was troubled to see that offenders were executed, in fact murdered. But not much is heard about their being troubled to hear that there are millions of people being killed, slaughtered, who will remain crippled all their lives, whose villages and houses are burned down, destroyed. And, once again, I repeat that there are all kinds of good reasons to excuse that. But nevertheless, I think it is a good thing to ask ourselves whether we could not play a better role in the world, by keeping this function of arbitrator which we had earned, by helping these people to have a better life, to be better fed, better educated, and to love one another instead of killing one another.

However, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding our good will and our eagerness to live up to our commitments to our allies, we are compromising the image of Canada in the world. For instance, we are now held in suspicion in Viet Nam for all sorts of reasons. Why? Because these people noticed that while we purport to be working for peace, we are selling arms to those who wage war in Viet Nam. Thus we neutralize the influence we could have on those people who are at war at the present time and who would like nothing better than to have an arbitrator who might help them find a solution to that conflict.

We have noticed recently also that during the troubles in the Middle East, Canada at one time incurred the ill-will of the Egyptians and perhaps, but indirectly, of Israel. It may be that those interventions we are making here and there, even if we go about it quietly, are destroying the role that Canada could play in the world, a peaceful role, that of an arbitrator, a negotiator, to bring about peace. I do not think that we can wage war vigorously while claiming that we want to act as an arbitrator.

One might object that we must prepare to defend ourselves, that our territory could be attacked. I quite agree that a minimum should probably be kept here in case, naturally, we should some day have similar problems. But I wonder, as many other Canadians do, if any country in the world will or would attack us here if we concentrate on playing a peaceful role rather than an aggressive role in the world.

Mr. Chairman, we still have so many unemployed in Canada, so many poor, so many old people, disabled, who receive unrealistic pensions in view of the cost of living, and the cost of education is still so high that too many Canadians cannot afford it, that I wonder if we could not considerably reduce the amounts provided for the defence of Canada or that of distant countries and spend them instead on works of peace which would enrich Canada. Why could they not, for instance, be spent even more to feed the two thirds of humanity which are now dying from hunger and have no ears for words of peace.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if Canadians, aware that our deficit this year will range between $740 and $750 million, do not think that we should try to slow down somewhat this upward trend in defence expenditures and reduce the burden which Canadians must bear at a time when the cost of living is higher than ever before.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that many people who want peace are surprised to see that our defence budget amounts to $1,688 million, while our peace effort, that is the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare represents only $1,273 million.

I wonder whether that is in accordance with the appeals made by the great leaders of the world today, His Holiness the Pope, U Thant and others, who warn us that we are on the brink of a nuclear war which threatens to destroy the human race. I wonder also whether Canada is not the very country that should take the lead in disarmament because it is the one least threatened by war and, in view of its history, orientation and national philosophy, the one best suited to act as arbitrator, negotiator and agent of peace rather than of war.

Again, I ask the question in a constructive spirit. The minister should not take it as criticism of his administration, which I think is excellent so long as he wants to have a modern army and prepare us for defence or war as intensively as he is doing now.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat this intentionally, whether it would be preferable for us to direct our international policy towards a specialization in arbitration, and in order to obtain or to deserve this role, it would be much better for us to reduce our efforts of our expenditures and mind our business a little more closely. Some may say: Am I my brother's keeper? Well, our business would certainly be served more adequately if we had deserved to be acknowledged, by all belligerent countries, as an absolutely free arbitrator, able to propose peace formulas acceptable to all.

I think that this would probably start among other nations a kind of emulation for peace, at a time when we are threatened by a dreadful war of escalation. I believe that this could help to bar this militarist complex which is so hard to eliminate in the world because the old axiom has been credited too often: If you want peace, prepare for war. And, we are getting ready for war so well that it may burst out at any moment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to repeat to the minister in the most constructive fashion that the purpose of my comments is not to criticize his administration. I believe that he is doing a good job, so long as he is convinced that the general policy of Canada must follow this pattern, but I submit that he should point out to his colleagues that it might be advisable to answer the call of the great leaders I mentioned before, and to prove to all countries in the world, in a very concrete and radical manner, that Canada wants to play a role of peace, and not war, in the world.

I also believe, Mr. Chairman, that when we are faced by the threat of nuclear war, which brings confirmed Apocalyptic visions to our minds, because television shows us once in a while pictures of crowds being burned by napalm bombs or villages being destroyed by high accuracy weapons, with power of destruction unimagined until now, I say that we must cry out in pressing warning and heed it, but not with the mentality of the partisan, set on defending his own administration or condemning his neighbour's. I say that we have to consider this, Mr. Chairman, in the light of our duty towards mankind, as dictated to us by our conscience as men and as Christians.

It is true that we are our brothers' keepers, but not in the sense that we must help to kill them. We know that if two thirds of mankind are now in the throes of such upheavals and conflicts, it is mainly because they are underfed and under-gifted countries, which are denied that reasonable minimum of affluence that we, ourselves, enjoy. We would probably be much more welcome if we helped them still more generously to acquire that reasonable minimum of affluence. At least, they would learn to like us, to trust us, to place their confidence in us, when they have troubles with their neighbours.

I see few countries, Mr. Chairman, in a better position than Canada to assume that role for peace in the world.

I make those remarks to the hon. minister in the spirit in which I presented them to him. I would not be surprised if the minister—it must happen to him at times—were sometime to examine his conscience, calmly, at home, the Holy Ghost might prompt him to discuss the matter with his colleagues. In a few years, the cabinet might lead us toward the role of pacifier, mediator, negotiator, rather than that of the aggressor which we play indirectly at the cost of losing the trust of one third of the peoples of the world.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just a few days ago during private members' hour the hon. member for St. John's East praised executive assistants and said how important they were to the operations of the House of Commons. He said they could be and are helpful not only to the ministers to whose offices they are attached but also to members of parliament. The idea of executive assistants being helpful to members of parliament generally took me by surprise. As a result I got in touch with an executive assistant attached to the Department of National Defence. His name is well known in some circles. I asked him to give me some ideas for the debate today on these estimates. He very promptly replied and provided me with a one-page speech which would not take two minutes to deliver. I did not think that by using that speech I would really be doing justice to the Minister of National Defence who I am sure expects members of the opposition to pay more attention to the estimates of his department. I tried reading it out loud to see how it would sound, but the effusive complimentary adjectives choked in my throat. So I had to lay it aside and it is with regret that I cannot make use of the help of that executive assistant who is perhaps of greater help to the minister, or perhaps the minister may think he is, but I sometimes wonder.

On this occasion I will have to rely on my own thoughts and phraseology, which are of course at a lower level, in an attempt to deal with the subject matter before us. I always welcome the opportunity of dealing with the estimates of the Department of National Defence. The minister has told me many times that my knowledge of military matters is primitive, but I am trying to learn as the years go by. Consequently I pay very close attention to what the minister says and to the policies he enunciates.

Today the minister proved a point we have been making over the last two or three years. We have been saying that the policy of national defence has been altered and changed to a very considerable degree and that the main emphasis in the reorganization the minister has undertaken has been on the provision of a force for peace keeping operations. The minister made a statement outside the house denying this and said it is not Canada's policy to produce a giant peace keeping force. The minister asks why we are buying heavy equipment if our whole purpose is to build a peace keeping force. We have never said that is the sole purpose but that the main intent of the government has been to provide a peace keeping force.

The minister proved our point today by starting off immediately to deal with our peace keeping role in the United Nations rather than with our military forces in anti-submarine activities or our activities under NATO or NORAD. That is exactly what we have been suggesting, that what is uppermost in the minister's mind is peace keeping for the United Nations. The construction of his new force is designed for that purpose.

The minister told us that things have changed. Sometimes I like to look back and read some of his speeches, although I am getting a little tired of them. His major document is the white paper and he mentioned it two or three times today somewhat casually during his speech. I knew he would, but that white paper was produced in 1964 and it is high time it was brought up to date and modernized. Nevertheless, it is his basic document. The second document to which he most often refers is the speech he made on December 7 which was widely circulated at the expense of the taxpayer.

In that speech of December 7 the minister said, as reported in Hansard at page 10831:

> The pattern of warfare in which armies fought armies, navies fought navies, and air forces fought air forces is not likely to be repeated.

Only within the last few days we have been reading and listening to accounts of armies fighting armies in Egypt, in Jordan and on the border between Syria and Israel. It is only within the last few days that we read and heard about air forces fighting. It was in April of this year that the Israeli air force claimed to have downed five Syrian planes in combat. It is only recently that we heard about the destruction of Egyptian aircraft in the air and on the ground by the Israeli air force. So the pattern of warfare does not seem to have changed to fit the minister's idea of what modern warfare should be.

The conflict in Viet Nam has been going on now for several years and there has been some activity in the air. The ground forces seem to me to be fighting as ground forces have always fought since the beginning of time. There have been no recent naval engagements. Only two days ago there was a conflict in Aden with infantrymen fighting infantrymen, and rather heavy casualties were suffered.

The minister tells us that the pattern of warfare has changed and therefore he has carried out this great reorganization. I have wondered for a number of years what was behind all this, why it was undertaken. I refer to our foreign policy and to the Prime Minister's idea of what should be done with Canada's defence forces. As the minister in his opening remarks dealt with foreign policy it is quite competent for me to discuss foreign policy in a debate on defence matters. The white paper on defence clearly states on page 5.

> The objectives of Canadian defence policy, which cannot be dissociated from foreign policy, are to preserve the peace by supporting collective defence measures to deter military aggression; to support Canadian foreign policy including that arising out of our participation in international organizations, and to provide for the protection and surveillance of our territory, our air space and our coastal waters.

One sees there where the minister places the defence of Canada. It is at the bottom of the list. On page 6 of the white paper the minister says:

—there have developed four parallel methods by which the objectives of Canadian defence policy have been pursued. They are:

(a) Collective measures for maintenance of peace and security as embodied in the charter of the United Nations, including the search for balanced and controlled disarmament—

Method (b) has to do with NATO, (c) has to do with NORAD, and (d) with the security and protection of Canada. So it is not unusual that we on this side of the house and the public generally have reached the conclusion that Canada's foreign policy and her defence policy are designed jointly to provide peace keeping forces for the United Nations and the reorganization of our forces has been carried out with that purpose in mind.

It so happens that the collapse of the United Nations emergency force in Egypt has brought down this policy just like a house of cards. It now has to be re-examined. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be here shortly to examine this matter co-operatively with us in the House of Commons. Perhaps the Prime Minister will revise his opinion with regard to the activities of peace keeping forces. Then the Minister of National Defence will carry out the orders that will be given to him by his superiors.

In my opinion the whole trouble stems from a misconception of what should be Canada's defence policy. I believe Canada's defence policy should be primarily the defence of Canadian territory and Canadian waters. Second, it should be linked to the alliances that we have with the major powers such as we have in NATO, and with the alliance we have with the United States to protect the North American continent. I believe these activities take precedence over our far-flung efforts under the United Nations.

I am not decrying the value of United Nations efforts to promote peace, to maintain peace, to restrict the operations of nations which are about to engage in war and to restrain them when they have engaged in conflict. I am not objecting to that at all. But to my mind this is a subsidiary effort in so far as Canada is concerned. We should not make this the prime objective of our defence efforts.

I propose to indicate the evidence that has been produced and is being developed to show that it is now generally accepted that the major reorganization and alteration of Canada's defence forces was designed for the purpose of promoting United Nations peace keeping efforts. The disaster that has overfallen that peace keeping effort on the borders between Egypt and Israel should now bring about a reappraisal of Canada's defence policy and foreign policy.

The minister cannot effectively deny that public opinion generally considers that this has been the purpose of the efforts of the present government. It goes beyond that. It reaches into the field of establishing neutrality for Canada. I will give the evidence of that shortly. Foreign observers in Canada have reached the conclusion that Canada's foreign and defence policy is now aimed at (1) emphasizing peace keeping operations, and (2) a position of neutrality for Canada. It is high time parliament had a second look at this policy and passed an opinion on what the government is doing. It is high time the Canadian people were fully informed as to what this government is aiming at. It is high time that in our relations with our closest neighbour and strongest ally, the United States, we made it abundantly clear that we are not adopting a policy of neutrality, that there will be no danger to the United States from an aggressor coming in by the back door through an unprotected Canada.

With those opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, I now call it six o'clock. I will present to the committee at eight o'clock some further thoughts on this matter.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be considered at the time of adjournment this evening are the following:

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière—Canadian National Railways—Elimination of stops at certain points in Quebec.

[English]

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack), Television—Napanee, Ont.;

the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Agriculture—consideration by dominion-provincial conference of expropriation principles.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

TRANSPORTATION

CONTRACT FOR TAXI SERVICE, OTTAWA STATION

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any contract entered into concerning taxi service to and from the Ottawa railway station, since January 1, 1966.

• (6:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak on the motion for the production of a copy of the contract entered into between the Ottawa railway station and the monopoly taxi concession which has been granted from that point to the city of Ottawa. I moved this motion in the House of Commons in the ordinary way some time ago and on June 7, as reported in Hansard, page 1253, secured this answer from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill):

There is no such contract in the possession of the government. Therefore I would hope the hon. member would be willing to drop the motion.

Such an answer begs the question. I simply ask for a copy of any contract entered into concerning taxi service to and from the Ottawa railway station, since January 1, 1966. I did not expect that the government would have the contract in its possession, but a copy of the contract could surely be secured from the Canadian National Railways, which is a crown corporation, if they do not want to call themselves a branch of the government. We were told the following, as recorded on page 532 of the 1964 report of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, by Mr. MacDougall, the solicitor general of the C.N.R., when he was speaking about the Ottawa terminal railway bill:

The Canadian National Railway will be half owner of the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company, and it will be open to parliament to inquire through the Canadian National Railway about anything respecting the terminal.

I inquired about the possibility of securing a copy of the contract and I directed my inquiry to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I have already spoken on the question of the monopoly contracts which are granted from time to time either by the government or by some department of the government or crown corporation, and this is done by a political party which makes a great show of being in favour of free competition and of letting the best man secure the best possible price in open competition. We say we are against monopolies, we are against restraint of trade and against combines. We make the finest speeches along that line of any political party in Canada. Unfortunately I cannot hear the speeches because of the noise made by the actions that are carried out by various departments of the government or by crown corporations.

As I mentioned before, on March 27 the Minister of Transport issued a press release in which it was stated that the Department of Transport was giving Canadian Pacific Airlines authority to fly more aircraft in Canada during Expo. In that press release, issued under the authority of the Minister of Transport, there is a reference I should like to quote. It reads as follows:

A well known British aviation consultant, Mr. Stephen Wheatcroft, who had been employed by the previous government to report on this matter, was asked to make a further report. His report received last year, indicated that the service by C.P.A. on the domestic-transcontinental route Vancouver-Winnipeg-Montreal-Toronto, limited to a once daily round trip, while it had not shown any indication of producing either major improvements in efficiency or new traffic, had led to a wider public satisfaction as a result of the availability of choice between two carriers.

If we are going to praise the fact that there was wide public satisfaction as a result of the availability of choice between two air carriers, why do we allow any branch of the government or crown corporation to grant a monopoly which automatically stops any choice between two or more services? In the Ottawa Journal of March 28, the day after the press release of the Department of Transport was issued, there appeared an editorial headed "Freer Enterprise Flight". I will quote the final paragraph of this editorial:

Mr. Pickersgill put it well when he said the main advantage of two air lines was that competition made them both more responsive to a public which felt that a monopoly always was unresponsive. There's nothing so helpful to good service as a choice in air lines, railways or bootblacks and nothing so depressing to free enterprise as a government attitude that monopolies are simplest and best.

I draw this to the attention of the house for the simple reason that I do not believe these monopolies should be allowed to exist. When speaking on the estimates of the Department of Transport on May 26 I referred to this situation and described the conditions as I found them at the Ottawa station.

I believe sincerely that the Minister of Transport is inclined to agree with my contention because I was present in this house on May 29 when he was speaking on his estimates. As reported on pages 708 and 709 of Hansard, he listed the great problems which face the Department of Transport, and there are great problems facing that department. I think it must be the heaviest portfolio in the entire cabinet. I cannot think of any other department that ranks with it for the magnitude and number of problems which the minister must be considering 24 hours a day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not work 24 hours a day. I am no Donald Fleming.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I would not be supporting the hon. gentleman if he were a second Donald Fleming, and he knows it. In listing the problems before him the minister stated:

...as well as the question of better ground transportation arrangements to and from major metropolitan airports—

It is quite evident that this problem is on his mind. I do believe it should be solved immediately. We should not have to wait for some report from the Economic Council of Canada to tell us what is self-evident to anyone.

I ask this question about the Ottawa railway station in particular because in 1964 and 1965 the Ottawa railway terminal bill was referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. In that bill there was a clause which was going to give the new owners of the Ottawa terminal the right to create taxi companies of their own and to have a monopoly. I protested against that and so did several members of the New Democratic Party, among them, if I remember correctly, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and Mr. Fisher, the former member for Port Arthur.

On December 3, 1964, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin), who was the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport at that time, came to the meeting of the committee and what he said was reported in the Ottawa Journal of December 3 as follows:

Quebec South Liberal Jean-Charles Cantin earlier proposed striking out a clause that would have permitted the railways to operate bus and cab passenger service from the terminal.

Taxi Service at Ottawa Railway Station

I should like to read from pages 561 and 562 of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. Cantin: ...I move that all this paragraph be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:

Establish and operate for hire in and about the city of Ottawa a service for the conveyance and transfer of goods by means of trucks, or other highway vehicles, or other means of conveyance and acquire, hold, guarantee, pledge and dispose of shares in any company having for one of its objects the establishment or operation of such a service.

Mr. Cowan: I will second it.

Mr. Rock: You are taking the passengers out; is that it?

Mr. Cantin: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Cantin, seconded by Mr. Cowan, moves, that subsection "G" be replaced by the following:—

Exactly what I have read to the house. I wish to point out that the cabinet admitted its fault in introducing a bill which provided an opportunity for the establishment of an exclusive taxi service from the Ottawa terminal railway station. It may be interesting for those who were not in the house in 1964 to learn that this bill was never brought to a vote. The cabinet dropped it and it died in the mists of time largely because of the activities of the hon. member for Hull, the late Alexis Caron who was a friend of mine, a man whose death last August I greatly regretted. I am happy that his son is a member of the house now as I believe he will contribute as much as his father did, and his father contributed a great deal for the good of the country as a whole and for the riding of Hull in particular.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: When the hon. member for Quebec South introduced his amendment the following question was put to him:

Mr. Peters: Could I ask why the governmment is recommending this?

Mr. Cantin: We have had representations from the city of Ottawa.

Mr. Peters: Can you explain what it means?

• (6:10 p.m.)

Then there is a reply from Mr. Macdougall, who was representing Canadian National Railways on the Ottawa Terminal Company bill. Mr. Macdougall said:

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could say a word on Mr. Cantin's amendment. The bill as drafted before you is in the same general form that has been used in bills of this kind before, notably the Toronto Terminal Company bill, to provide the power, but the Ottawa Transportation Commission made representations to the companies and to the government, because they have an exclusive franchise for handling passengers in and about the city of Ottawa which was given to them by parliament. These powers would transgress upon the exclusive franchise of the Ottawa Transportation Commission. We have no desire to do that, or to get in any conflict of that kind. We quite gladly agree that the reference to passengers should be removed so that there could not be any idea that there was a conflict. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. Macdougall referred to the exclusive right of the Ottawa Transportation Commission to carry passengers to and from the Ottawa station. The bill died in the mists of time in the halls of this building, and certainly did not come back to the floor of the House of Commons.

What do we find today, Mr. Speaker? The new Ottawa station is evidently being administered jointly by the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. We have an exclusive taxi franchise granted to one company in the city of Ottawa. We have had numerous reports from members of the house about having to wait for taxi service from the station whenever there is a big holiday crowd or week end crowd returning to the city.

The Ottawa Journal for March 16 of this year referred to the situation in an editorial entitled "Taxis At The Station". The editorial went on to say:

The Ottawa Police Commission...is aware of a taxi shortage, particularly at the new Union Station.

But 50—or even 100—extra cabs spread over the taxi companies of the city will not be the answer to the problem at the station where the taxi franchise is held by one company...

There have been good reasons for complaints...

But some new arrangements are called for to end the frustrating experience so many have had of waiting 30 minutes before a taxi was available.

I can quote to you, Mr. Speaker, fine-sounding statements made by members of the Liberal party to the effect that they believe in free competition, that they are against restraint of trade, that they are against monopolies. I have in my hand Hansard for December 27, 1951. As reported at page 2400 hon. Mr. Croll, the then hon. member for Spadina, now a distinguished member of the other house, speaking about the legislation regarding resale price maintenance, said:

I welcome this legislation because it is in the best Liberal tradition. Historically and traditionally we have been opposed to trusts, cartels and combines.

You could not make a better speech, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal party declaring how it supports free enterprise than that made by Hon. David Croll. As I said before, I can hardly hear the words for the actions of departments of government or crown corporations.

[Mr. Cowan.]

The other day I had occasion to refer to the comments of Hon. Lionel Chevrier as they are reported at page 2441 of Hansard for December 28, 1951, when he was a member of the cabinet and was fulsome in praise of competition and the benefits that it would bring to the people of Canada as a whole. Hon. Lionel Chevrier had this to say in pointing out how the Liberal government was going to smash the maintenance of prices:

Hon. members will recall first of all that the royal commission on prices under the chairmanship of Professor Clifford Curtis of Queen's University was —and I quote his remarks—"impressed by the degree to which individual manufacturers fix the sale prices of their products, and so narrow the area in which price competition amongst wholesalers and retailers is operative."

I can only make the comment, Mr. Speaker, that there can be very little competition among taxi companies when only one company is granted the right to run a taxi service to and from a station or airport. Then Mr. Chevrier went on to point out that there had been some criticism of the report on the ground that the committee did not obtain sufficient factual evidence. He was referring to the report of the committee which conducted the resale price maintenance investigation. However, Mr. Chevrier said that he did not pay much attention to that because he felt that the committee had secured all the factual evidence that it required.

Last Friday in this house the Registrar General Mr. Turner also made quite a few statements about the benefits of competition and how his new department was going to smash monopolies. One of his more interesting comments is to be found at page 1608 of Hansard and reads as follows:

If I were to suggest something which perhaps is un-Canadian, I might say I think we should have facts before we have policy.

This, of course, is in contradiction of Mr. Chevrier's statement in 1951 that they did not need to have any more facts at that time; they decided they had all the information they required. I congratulate the Registrar General on being un-Canadian, as he says he might be in getting facts before policy is set down by his department.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I enjoyed listening to the remarks of the Registrar General last Friday because he speaks well. I only wish that the cabinet meant what he says as much as the Registrar General says it does. I should like to put on record some extracts from his speech of last Friday. He went on to say:

On the supply side the whole field of competition must be looked into...It relates also, on the supply side, to the methods which would enhance the validity of the consumer's choice.

What choice is there, Mr. Speaker, when you have a monopoly situation? He went on:

—so that there are competitive forces at play—

That is a good phrase too.

Prices depend on competitive forces. We hope to ensure that the forces are truly competitive.

What competition is there in view of these airport franchises at Dorval, Malton, Halifax, Vancouver and Winnipeg?

Then, really getting down to the facts of the matter, the Registrar General had this to say, and in this respect I do not believe he was speaking for the cabinet because their actions contradict this statement:

We do not intend to tell the worker where to work—

Yet we passed the railway operations act last September which told the strikers where they had to work.

—and we do not intend to tell the consumer what to buy. We believe in a free market economy. I feel that we should release the competitive forces. This means we must attack monopolies.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that anybody has ever heard finer and louder words, certainly more fulsome words, than those uttered by speakers for the Liberal party on this subject. Yet what goes on? We grant monopolies here and we grant monopolies there. I only ask that the taxi companies of Ottawa, who would like to get in on the lucrative trade out of the Ottawa station, be allowed to see a copy of the contract which exists between the company—I do not know how to refer to it now because the company was not incorporated as a separate company as the bill died. This station must now be run cooperatively by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. In any event, I contend they should be allowed to see the contract that exists in connection with exclusive taxi service from the Ottawa railway station to the city of Ottawa.

I believe that if this contract were produced it would open up the entire field of monopolistic practise in all airports in Canada. As a Liberal I am very sorry to see the cabinet indulging in monopolistic practice and, what is worse, being prepared to defend their action while placing value on competition to keep down prices and on the free play of the market to make it possible for people to get 100 cents on the dollar.

Taxi Service at Ottawa Railway Station

Again, Mr. Speaker, I ask that we be given a copy of the contract with the single taxi service company that is now operating into and out of the Ottawa station to the city of Ottawa.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) has been riding what I think might be called one of his two or three favourite hobbyhorses. Once or twice he dealt with the motion incidentally during his remarks. It would be unwise for me to emulate him. I should stick to the point at issue in the motion, though perhaps I have been a little infected by the spirit of his speech and by that enthusiasm with which no one in the house can compete, no matter how hard he tries.

I have only two words to say about the service itself. I do not think I have ever taken a taxi from the new Ottawa station so I cannot speak from personal experience. Perhaps, though, I might quote my hon. and learned friend—he is not learned in the technical sense but in the proper sense—from Lincoln. The service, I am told by those who use it or try to use it, is lousy. If that is a parliamentary word, I apply it to the service.

The difficulty, as I understand it, is that so many people want to take taxis to and from other places in Ottawa that it is easier for the taxi companies to operate between those places rather than working out of the station. It has been argued—I do not know whether this is true—that if somebody were not paid to have a few taxis at the station there might be no taxis at the station at all. That is the only possible defence, and I'm not making it.

It is not my business to tell the railway companies how to run the railways. This is not a responsibility of the government. If the hon. gentleman were asking for a contract between the Department of Transport and any of these various companies that have contracts with a certain exclusivity to them —that is a better word; it will give the hon. member a chance to make another speech.

Mr. Cowan: It is still lousy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Had the hon. gentleman asked for any such contracts, I should have complied at once without any hesitation. From the days when Canadian National Railways was first established to the present, and in this context I refer to the late Mr. Meighen, we have taken the view that to enable the national railway to compete—and

I emphasize the two words of the infinitive "to compete"—we have never—and this has never been breached as the hon. and learned member for Carleton who is now listening to me and who had to make this speech when he was on this side of the house on at least one occasion will bear out—attempted to assert that parliament had the right to compel the Canadian National to produce any document that we had not the right to compel the Canadian Pacific to produce. That is the simplest way of putting it.

It is in the public interest that any statutory provision or any other provision that requires the Canadian Pacific Railway to produce any details of its operation shall also require the Canadian National to produce such details. But we should not impair the capacity of the Canadian National Railways to compete with the Canadian Pacific by exposing their method of doing business beyond the degree to which we are prepared to expose the Canadian Pacific. I hope that is clear. I think this is a very sound principle. The hon. gentleman is right in thinking that we should have some kind of competition for the public interest to be better served.

I know it could be argued in this particular instance, since the two railways are jointly operating the station and since there is an agreement about that, that producing the agreement would not impair the competitive capacity of the Canadian National in this particular instance. To make my point a little more clear, perhaps I should say that in June, 1966, an agreement was reached between the two railways which jointly operate the terminal to operate the new passenger facilities on behalf of both railways, with costs to be shared on a user basis. Under this agreement the Canadian National was given the duty by the two railways of making these contracts. I know it could be argued that in this particular instance it probably would have no effect on competition were the matter disclosed. I am sure that if the hon. gentleman wrote a letter to the president of the Canadian National in his usually persuasive and seductive way—

Mr. Cowan: It is not seductive.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that the president, on his own action, might say: "It makes no difference; I shall be glad to let the hon. gentleman see the particular contract." But a principle is involved here. I do not think we should breach the principle just because this child, though it might be illegitimate, is a very small child indeed. I think hon. members will realize, Mr. Speaker, that it was argued by a certain young woman on one occasion that it was a very small baby—

Mr. Cowan: May I protest about the minister's using the word "seductive" and his talking about a small child thereafter. There is no connection.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assure the hon. gentleman that I was using the term in a purely figurative sense that had no reference whatsoever to potency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I said the other day, it is true that this contract and any other contract that the Canadian National may have made is not the property of the government. It is not in the possession of the government. It is a nice question—I do not intend to answer it but only to pose it—even if the house passed this order whether I, any other member of the house or of the administration could compel the Canadian National to turn the contract over to us. I have not explored the possibility of asking them, as an act of grace, to let the hon. gentleman see it. Quite frankly, I do not think that anything great in the public interest would be destroyed if he saw it.

I think it would be safe for me to go as far as to say that Canadian National are not satisfied with the service any more than anyone else is. They feel about the station as I feel about our airports. If there is to be really effective competition, and if we really desire to straighten out this business of two o'clock in the morning at the airports and twelve o'clock midnight at the Ottawa station, it would be stupid to get a service without insisting that a certain number of taxis be there.

In fact—and this is not just a Canadian experience—some of these operations are not really very lucrative. Like a lot of other services which are being provided, they are being provided in this way because in reality there is no competition at all, and no chance of it. Of course, at the slack hours all the taxi companies would just love to go out and pick up business but it seems to me that when they can pick up business here, or from the Chateau Laurier, they would leave passengers stranded and would feel no compulsion upon them to be there.

I have a responsibility as far as the airports are concerned and I accept that responsibility.

I am willing to take the criticism of hon. members as agreeably as I can and try whenever I can to make improvements. I think the Canadian National is trying to do what it can to make improvements, also. There is no one who likes to give lousy service or to have lousy service given. But the plain fact is that this does not appear to be a very attractive or lucrative way for taxi drivers or anyone else to make a living.

The purpose of making these contracts at all is to have some taxis there sometimes, instead of none at all. Contrary to my announced and sound resolution I keep being drawn into explaining, though not defending, the practice itself. I return to the ground upon which, with the greatest reluctance, I must resist the hon. member's motion. It would, I think, infringe a principle which ever since 1920 has been accepted by this house and which has enabled the C.N.R. to operate with what I believe to be increasing efficiency. It is that we have always respected their right, in order that they may have the fullest capacity to compete with private companies, to regard as their own property any information which we do not require to be supplied by a private company. I attach great importance to this principle and it is purely on this narrow, technical ground that, with great reluctance, I cannot support the motion moved by the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. Peters: Before the minister sits down, may I ask him whether a request of this type would have been acceptable if the operation were under the control of a terminal authority, a joint operation, as previously proposed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a good question and I should like to answer it. If the Ottawa terminal were run by an agency of the government, there is no question that the contract would be producible. The bill which the hon. member had in mind was never passed, as my hon. friend from York-Humber pointed out. One amendment was made to it and others might have been made had it progressed, so I am not sure what the status would finally have been. My recollection is that the station was to have been owned by the two companies and not by the government. So it would not have been a government organization and this information would not therefore have been information which the government could produce. But if the station were owned and run by the government, there is no question that the contract would be produced.

Taxi Service at Ottawa Railway Station

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not often find myself in agreement with the hon. member for York-Humber, but on this occasion I support the motion he has made. I do so in part because I am naturally enthusiastic about the enthusiastic way in which he calls upon the government which he supports to live up to the true principles of Liberalism. I would urge that we should not tolerate monopoly except in very unusual and special circumstances, particularly when it is admitted by the minister that in this case it operates in a manner which I believed he described as lousy—and I am happy to adopt that word in this connection.

If a monopoly is operating in a lousy manner, I think it is up to the government to do everything in its power to open up the concession in question to free competition. I am happy to support the hon. member's motion because the situation in Ottawa is, as the house knows, not unique; similar monopolies operate directly under the control of the government at various airports. I know that at Malton airport a monopoly has been authorized there by the terminal authority, I forget the name of the organization. When taxi drivers bring fares to the airport they are not allowed to pick up return fares. As a result, the trip is expensive. And as always happens when there are monopolies, prices are excessive and service is lousy.

I was not impressed by the statement the minister made, though he made it with his usual charm.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. gentleman will not represent me as defending this arrangement. I was trying to explain it, but I was not defending it. Perhaps he would permit me to ask him a question. Does he not think it is better to have a lousy carriage in which to get somewhere than to have no carriage at all?

Mr. Brewin: I think that is a point well taken, but it is beside the point I am making. I am satisfied that the free competition of which he and his party speaks so often, would result in taxis being available. I do not think this monopoly system produces results which are satisfactory and I do not believe if it were removed taxi cab operators would not be delighted to pick up new business and provide an adequate competitive service.

I do not support this motion only because I have great sympathy for taxi cab operators, or because I have great sympathy for travellers who have to pay too much for a lousy and inadequate service, or because of my belief that there should be competition in the right place—

Mr. Deachman: May I ask the hon. member a question? I wonder whether this desire for healthy competition is a new addition to the N.D.P platform?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Brewin: I cannot blame the hon. member for not being fully acquainted with the platform of the party I represent but for many years it has been a strong believer in the value of competition, in the right place.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: If he is interested in the program of my party, I will be delighted to give him a little private explanation and show him the exact text to justify my remarks.

An hon. Member: Let us have the example in Saskatchewan when the C.C.F. were in power.

Mr. Brewin: I can assure my hon. friend that there was a lot of good, healthy competition in Saskatchewan when the C.C.F. party was in power. My friend has been blinded by some partisan misrepresentation which may have come to his attention. I am sure he has been misinformed of the situation in Saskatchewan as it used to be under the C.C.F. government.

It was not my intention to talk on this matter, although it seems to deal with what appears to be the core of the argument. Mr. Speaker, I seem to be having a little competition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members appear to be enjoying themselves. I should not like to bring them back to reality too rudely, but I think I must mention to the hon. member, and I realize I should have intervened when the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) was speaking to remind all hon. members taking part in the debate that there is a very limited point before the house. It is, the advisability of the production of these documents. This is the only point which is now before us.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I assumed that the same rule of relevancy applied to all members of the house. I was dealing with something which was irrelevant, but because it had been permitted I presumed it had become relevant in some manner.

I now propose to deal with the key issue in the remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill); that is, that as much as he might like to do it this order could not be made because it would breach some ancient principle which he said always had been adopted here. He said that a nationally owned railway, and I presume any other nationally owned institution which manages its own affairs and was given some powers of management, could not and should not be asked to produce any documents whatsoever. I should like to say that I think the time has come for us to look very carefully at this sort of doctrine.

I had not anticipated participating in this debate so I have not brought with me the authorities which deal with this particular matter, but I understand that in the modern and efficient country of Sweden this sort of secrecy is totally unknown in respect of documents which affect either the government or corporations which are publicly owned. They have virtually removed all secrecy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. Does he think there should be one rule for private corporations and a different rule for publicly owned corporations which would require a greater degree of disclosure on the part of publicly owned corporations than on the part of privately owned corporations?

Mr. Brewin: In answer to the minister's question, I should like to say that I believe one of the advantages in respect of publicly owned corporations is that in the right sort of cases the government quite properly can intervene for the very purpose of securing publicity. I do appreciate the point the Minister of Transport made in respect of a situation where it might reasonably be shown that this would give the privately owned companies some advantage over the publicly owned companies. If in fact it would result in unfair competition against the publicly owned companies if they should be asked to disclose something which would be detrimental to the operation of their business, then I think the minister would be perfectly right in coming to the house and asking us to not pass the particular order. However, I believe his argument lacks substance in this case, especially when he himself admits, as he did, that this particular contract is one in which both the privately owned and publicly owned bodies have an interest.

I suggest that in modern days it is no good to say to parliament, whether or not competition is affected, that we will not ask the publicly owned corporation to produce a document for a perfectly legitimate purpose, especially if it involves a monopoly which is detrimental to the consuming public and others who are legitimately in the same business. When there is clearly no reason to believe that the publicly owned corporation would be put to any disadvantage, there is a sound general rule that the publicly owned corporation should be asked to make available to this house any document it has.

The minister threw in this very interesting question. He asked whether or not such a request could be made without legislative authority to do so. Obviously, we have the sovereign power to act as a legislature. I wonder how practical the minister's suggestion is. If this order were made, obviously the railway company, the terminal company, or whatever it is—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Brewin: If the Canadian National Railways said that they would not make it available so that it could be produced in the house, the minister might have to come before the house and say that he could not obtain the document because they refused to give it to him. That is a most improbable situation. I suggest that the order should be passed, and if the minister finds himself in the position of not being able to carry out the order, then he could return to the house and in that case I believe the members would be sympathetic to him.

I suggest that the production of this document would not be detrimental to the corporation. I believe that the hon. member for York-Humber should be assisted in his battle for free enterprise, and I hope that the house will pass the motion.

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: Competition altogether.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested to see the people who are not in favour of competition and who certainly are not even in favour of having a very simple document tabled. I think the points which have been made by my colleague have been excellent points in a legal sense. I believe there probably is an even stronger case to be made in the practical sense. The free enterprisers I hear on the other side really are not free enterprisers at all. They are restrictive monopolists who do not believe there should be competition; they believe monopolies should be made in heaven for those who can make the greatest profit and pay the greatest amount for the concession. This reminds me of people—perhaps the type of people we have on the other side of the house—who go after a job, even though they do not expect they will make any money on the job, because they want the tips. This might be true in respect of the taxi company.

I might give you an interesting example. I was at the station on one occasion with a number of other people. There were no taxis and I said that we had better call a taxi. The person despatching the taxis said, "Call this number". I said, "Why should I call that number; that is the company which has the concession here. I will call any number but that one because if they had taxis available obviously they would be here."

He said they had a concession. Certainly, they had a concession, but they did not have any taxis. I did not see any point in making a telephone call to the company for which he was the despatcher because he had been frantically trying to get taxis, but none were available.

I think the request in this particular motion is reasonable. I have entered this discussion because I am one of those who did not believe we should build a railway station way out in the country where taxis are necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether the hon. member is not straying from the point now before the house. In my opinion he is digressing a little too much.

Mr. Peters: I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, but I think this whole matter will have to be resolved, and perhaps it could be resolved easier if the minister had paid attention to the original objections made about granting this type of concession. Possibly a solution could be found in another way, but perhaps I should adhere strictly to the request made by the hon. member in his motion.

I am sorry the hon. member did not also mention in his motion the other facilities at the station, including the catering services.

Taxi Service at Ottawa Railway Station

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member would permit a question which I think is closely related to the matter before the house. Does the hon. member think there would be a better catering service if there were competition at the station?

Mr. Peters: Frankly, I think there would be better service if there were any catering at all at the restaurant after ten o'clock at night, and if there were more than two people working in an operation which probably requires eight or ten employees. In any event, I do not think we could have competition in this field. A decision has to be made somewhere in this regard.

Surely, the general public has the right to find out why services are not available at this railway station. The minister may not be entirely right in suggesting that the Canadian National is solely responsible. I understand that the National Capital Commission has a great deal of money tied up in this operation. I have discussed this matter with the commission and was informed that no one knows exactly what the situation will be until the end of the year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I can clear up this matter for the hon. gentleman. Regardless of the ownership, there is no question about the contract to which the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) has referred. This is a contract between the Canadian National Railways and the Blue Line taxi.

Mr. Peters: I accept that statement, but the point I was making was that had the contract been between the Canadian Pacific and the Blue Line taxi, on the basis of the evidence elicited by the hon. member from senior officials of the Canadian Pacific, the service would be better. Those officials were willing to disclose almost everything except the facts in respect of the competitive position.

It is my opinion that it would be wise, and to the benefit of the people operating the service, to disclose the facts because in this way they might obtain some public sympathy. Perhaps the company has not provided the minister with a copy of this contract but I am sure he could obtain one. I see no reason why it should not be made public because the contract does not involve inter-departmental relations which would not be in the interests of the company or the department to disclose. the fact that this contract has not been disclosed creates more difficulty for the Canadian National Railways, the minister and his department than if it were disclosed. I believe that suggestions could be made, if the contract were disclosed, which would assist the department in finding a solution to this problem.

I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in that similar objections and difficulties have arisen in respect of other contracts of this type entered into between the Department of Transport and various companies. I recall the difficulties which occurred in respect of similar transportation between the airport and the city of Montreal. In that case, the minister became so annoyed he finally changed the situation. I also remember the situation in respect of transportation between Malton and Toronto. In this case the contract was not disclosed, but in the case of the Montreal situation the contract was disclosed and the situation was thoroughly discussed in this house. Hon. members made certain suggestions about the difficulties which had occurred as a result of the contract, and the contract originally negotiated by the Department of Transport was not renewed in the same terms as the original contract.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: May I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has called it seven o'clock. The hour appointed for the consideration of hon. members' business has now expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Ryan in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Ryan): Order, please. The house again in committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of National Defence, vote No. 1. It being seven o'clock the committee stands suspended until 8 p.m., pursuant to standing order.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations, as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,850,056,375 for the purposes of votes 1, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,221,323,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year, subject to the direction of the treasury board, in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, any member of the British Commonwealth or any provincial or municipal government and in respect of charges made pursuant to regulations under the National Defence Act for:

(a) clothing and kit items sold to members of the Canadian forces;

(b) living accommodation;

(c) food supplied to members of the Canadian forces and to messes and institutes catering thereto; and

(d) medical and dental care provided to dependants of members of the Canadian forces, $6,593,375.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just before the supper interval I was indicating that the minister's and the government's policy has been to place increasing and greater emphasis on peace keeping activities for the Canadian forces and that the minister's reorganization of the forces was designed to that end. I said I would produce further evidence, and I will. The minister, despite his agonized protestations, will have to admit that the general opinion is that this has become the main function in the defence policy of Canada.

I refer now to the defence committee hearings of February 28, 1967, page 1760, when the chief of defence staff, General Allard, was giving evidence. He was speaking about Canada's role and I quote his words:

It is its duty to participate to the best of its ability in peace keeping by supporting the organization which has made itself the champion of the smaller nations—the United Nations organization.

In short, that is the transformation proposed by the white paper.

If hon. members are not satisfied with that, at St. Catharines on April 1 General Allard spoke to a gathering. His speech is reported in the Globe and Mail of April 24. The heading is, "Mobile Peace Force Is Goal, Allard Says." I quote these words from the news report:

The creation of a mobile world peace keeping force as well as elimination of waste are the goals of Canada's proposed reorganization of the armed forces, General Jean V. Allard, chief of defence staff, said Saturday.

I quote further from this news report:

Canada's forces were being made into a highly mobile force, in keeping with their role as peace keepers in the world, he said.

Some time in March there was a meeting, described in the Globe and Mail of March 6 as a meeting of experienced Canadian diplomats and military officers, to discuss peace keeping. This conference was held at Queen's university. The Globe and Mail sums it up by saying:

In the wake of the defence white paper, it is clear that Canada is committed—diplomatically and militarily—to an expanding peace keeping role.

In the Globe and Mail of April 5 there is a report of activities at the United Nations. According to the report Canada was apparently leading in proposing special training for UN troops. I quote briefly from this report:

Canada proposed yesterday that the United Nations set up uniform standards of special training for military units to be earmarked for United Nations peace keeping work, with special emphasis on police training.

• (8:10 p.m.)

This is an indication that at the United Nations, Canada is taking the lead in emphasizing a peace keeping role. Another person who has been convinced that Canada's role has been transformed, or that the main emphasis is on peace keeping, is the secretary general of the United Nations. The secretary general is not an unfamiliar figure in diplomatic and military circles so far as Canada is concerned. I expect that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been meeting him in New York recently, unless the press reports have failed to give us their customary detailed itinerary of the activities of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Apparently he has met the ministers of external affairs from other countries, or at least Mr. Kosygin. I do not know whether he has seen the President of the United States as yet but we are getting a detailed step by step description of his activities, and it all sounds very interesting indeed. It makes him appear to be very ineffectual. However, the secretary general of the United Nations must be very familiar with Canada's activities, and the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, June 6, reported as follows:

Canada's role in United Nations peace keeping operations has come in for much praise, ever since the large Canadian contingent was pulled out of the Gaza strip. All of it is deserved.

Secretary General U Thant was among those who praised the Canadian role in this field. But he inadvertently hit a tender point when he said in Montreal last week:

"Canada with its enlightened view of international relations, has even taken the revolutionary step of reorganizing its armed forces with the peace keeping function primarily in mind."

As recently as January 20 Mr. Arthur Blakely of the Montreal Gazette, who is a senior, experienced and competent news reporter, was in Washington obviously conferring with various influential people in the United States. I will quote one or two sentences from his article:

The United States, strange to relate, harbours a dark suspicion at the official level that Canada is wobbling towards a perilous neutralism.

Farther on, the article reads:

Even Canada's military and foreign policy preoccupation with peace keeping operations, under UN auspices, serves to feed the suspicion that all is not well north of the border. And the armed forces unification program is looked upon coldly as a military device which may render Canadian forces as virtually unemployable for anything but a United Nations peace keeping operation.

That is evidence which cannot be lightly brushed aside. How did it all come about? I have stated on other occasions that the origin of this transformation, to use the word of the chief of defence staff, rests with the Prime Minister of this country.

If, sir, you would refer to Maclean's magazine of May 2, 1964, you would find stated therein the policy as the Prime Minister envisaged it for the future. You would then understand how it has happened that, from the time when the white paper was published and throughout 1964 and the subsequent years, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have supported the Minister of National Defence in the reorganization of the armed forces which we have criticized. Obviously, the Prime Minister, having given the Minister of National Defence instructions, has had to support him throughout despite all the evidence which was produced last summer, last fall and in the spring, that it was an error of judgment. In the article in Maclean's magazine, which was written by the Prime Minister himself, you will find some important statements such as the following one:

I believe that arrangements to prevent the spread of "brushfire wars" can be and must be made; we must have a force that can do this brushfire job, and do it well.

[Mr. Churchill.]

I believe, however, that the initiative for advance planning should come—as it has come in the past—from a country like Canada, not from a great power.

Then he goes on, in this very informative article, to state as follows:

What is needed, in fact, is an entirely new arrangement by which these nations—

He is speaking of nations favourable to the idea.

—would establish an international peace force, its contingents trained and equipped for the purpose, and operating under principles agreed on in advance.

farther on, he states in this article:

With a group of middle powers working together this way, a respectable and effective stand-by peace force could soon be brought into being ready for instant use.

He also states:

In this way, if a crisis arose and there were no UN force to deal with it, the world organization would know that some members had available their own international force for preserving the peace; for carrying out and supervising UN recommendations when called on; for pacifying disturbed areas; and for putting international police force behind international decisions.

Finally, he states:

There must be leadership to bring this about. Interested governments must be prepared to give it. As a leading middle power, with a well known record of support for United Nations peace keeping operations in widely spread theatres, Canada is in a unique position to take the initiative. It is prepared to do so.

That, sir, is clear evidence that the policy of this government throughout 1964, and from then on, has been to put the main emphasis on a peace keeping force for the United Nations. I suggest to you, as I did earlier before the supper recess, that it should not take precedence over Canada's own defence, over Canada's commitments to NATO and to our allies in that area, nor over our commitments to NORAD. What I object to is the transformation which has occurred and the emphasis which has been put on the United Nations peace keeping force while other factors have been relegated to an inferior position. I think we do not thoroughly understand the nature of peace keeping. I reject entirely the minister's statement about the use of our forces, and I quote from page 14431 of Hansard:

...to participate in any action anywhere in the world which might be in the interests of Canada in so far as putting out, containing or controlling incidents which under other circumstances might escalate into something more serious.

You engage in war when you try to prevent an armed conflict from escalating into something more serious. Had we had heavily armed forces on the Egyptian and Israeli border and had they remained there, they would have engaged in fighting. Why do we not go to the support of the British in Aden to prevent that conflict from escalating into a major war? What about the situation developing in Nigeria where, we are told by newspaper reports, civil war may break out? What about the situation in Mozambique which the Toronto Star of Thursday, June 22, calls "a forgotten war" where the Portuguese are fighting against rebel forces in that country supplied, as reported, with money and arms from Tanzania and Zambia. This morning we discovered in the external affairs committee that Canada is providing military guidance to Tanzania. Is this the way our foreign aid is used? This is an interesting question which we might ask officials in the external affairs department. Do we really understand the nature of peace keeping operations?

I think everyone should read the book called, "Soldiering for Peace" by General Carl von Horn, published in England in 1966, and in the United States in 1967. This man spent six years as head of the truce or observer forces in Israel on the border between Israel, Jordan and Syria. He also spent some time in the Congo, then returned again to Israel and was posted to Yemen where there has been an abortive exercise by the United Nations. This book by an experienced military commander of United Nations forces will give people an idea of the difficulties involved in peace keeping, which it seems to me we rather lightly talk about. There is one sentence in the book in which he says that peace in our times is a bloody business, and it should be so recognized. We are being bemused and confused by talking about peace keeping and peace restoring; we are organizing our forces in an incorrect way, I think, and placing the emphasis in the wrong place.

Even in the observer corps that has been working for years on the border between Israel and Lebanon and Syria a valuable Canadian life was sacrificed, the life of Colonel Flint of the Princess Patricia's, who in 1958 was examining an incident which had occured between the Israelis and the Syrians.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue? Has the hon. member unanimous consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee with a certain element of surprise, and I am very grateful. I was saying that one valuable Canadian life was lost. We must ask ourselves whether this is the type of work that Canadian soldiers should be asked to do under present circumstances. General von Horn points out the difficulties of the various missions on which he served in those countries in the Middle East. He tells an extraordinary story of courage and endurance and of coping with untold difficulties. He has praise for various Canadians who served with him in those areas, but he clearly shows how those observer corps forces and the other armed forces that he commanded in the Congo, in Yemen and so on, were handicapped by the ineptness of the administrative services of the United Nations.

I think that our government is thoroughly familiar with the need for a better type or organization in the United Nations in order to put these groups or armed forces in the field. Surely this is partly what the Prime Minister was writing about in Maclean's magazine on May 2, 1964, the necessity for some type of superior military and administrative organization in order to assist in these operations abroad.

However, Mr. Chairman, I very much question whether we in this house have sufficient information about some of these activities. We have been taking it a little for granted, and a book such as the one I have mentioned sets out very starkly and clearly that it is not a simple matter to post observer corps along the borders of countries who adopt a belligerent attitude to one another. It is not an easy matter to post these forces in extremely difficult terrain. It is a very difficult matter indeed to operate and command forces gathered together from various countries around the world, each with its own ideology. There is nothing easy about that at all.

Before we commit ourselves to any more adventures, Mr. Chairman, I think we should re-examine and reappraise the nature of our obligations. We want the United Nations of course to survive as a useful force in the world, but let us not bemuse ourselves by talking about peace keeping missions and pretending that these are going to be successful or will be the answer to the problem. Recent events have clearly shown that the United Nations emergency force in the Gaza strip and elsewhere was ineffective in preventing the outbreak of war. I think it is a careless use of language to say that this force preserved the peace for ten years. Peace was preserved for ten years only because the antagonists were not ready to fight. Had they been ready earlier, that peace force would have been sent home, as it was.

The observer corps activities on the border of Jordan and Syria have been relatively ineffective over all these years. This book by General von Horn is replete with examples of incidents caused by both sides, and war was not prevented. Accusations were made, reports were sent to the United Nations. He states that in the United Nations, either in the security council or in the assembly, on 400 occasions there appeared on the agenda a resolution or a reference to the trouble between Israel and the Arab states. So, the political solution has escaped the nations of the world all these years, despite the observer corps on the border and despite the emergency force in the Gaza strip.

What I dislike is the unintentional pretence that these forces really are effective. I think we should reach the conclusion that they are not and that something better has to be devised. Even when war broke out just two weeks ago, sir, immediately the cry was that it was up to the four major powers, or certainly up to the United States and Russia, to prevent the war escalating.

This is what happened in 1956 at the time of the Suez crisis. It was not the interposition of the hastily assembled emergency force that prevented that war from spreading or continuing: it was the pressure brought to bear upon the combatants by the major powers in the world.

Canada played an important part in setting up that original emergency force. The Prime Minister has never claimed that the idea originated with him. His sycophants have repeatedly written and told us that this was his idea, though he has never claimed it for himself. The idea was not new to the world. There was a peace force established under the League of Nations when the plebiscite was held in the Saar Valley. Many people suggested some sort of force be made available to the United Nations to restrict belligerence, and even at the time of the Suez crisis the hint or suggestion that there should be an international force established there was first made by Sir Anthony Eden in the British House of Commons. The message was relayed to Canada. It was considered by the cabinet in Canada several hours later, and subsequently Canada was able to propose, and have carried, at the United Nations a resolution to establish such a force. Canada was also very active in getting the force set up.

This is a good record but it did not solve the problem. I suggest, therefore, that a reassessment of our defence policy is required. It is quite wrong, under present circumstances, to put our main emphasis on the so-called mobile force which is to be available for service anywhere in the world, and to pretend to our people that this force will be able to contain or prevent escalation when trouble has broken out. It can do no such thing. If this force becomes involved, it will have to fight; and if it fights Canadian officers and men will be killed, just as British officers and men are now being killed in Aden. We must be realistic about this. That is why I maintain that until the nations of the world in the United Nations can devise a more effective method of solving some of these problems on the political level, and until they can devise a more effective method to provide for the command and administration of forces that are used under United Nations' auspices, we should pause and consider where our interests really lie. That is why I said before the supper adjournment that the defence of Canada comes first, our NATO alliance second, our NORAD alliance third, and the United Nations' efforts fourth.

We alone cannot be the peacekeeper of the world; we are not equipped for that. We have not the population nor the forces, and we are fooling our people when we pretend that we are ready to take on these jobs when we are not ready to take them on. No government will commit Canadian servicemen to these difficult operations and dangerous missions unless there is some hope of achieving the objective in mind.

Our interests of course are for world peace; but we have no specific interest in some of the areas where trouble is occurring. In conjunction with our allies, we should be prepared to assist, naturally. But what are we doing? We are not assisting Britain in Aden; we are not interested in Portuguese East Africa, we are not much interested in what is going on in Nigeria, and if we were we should not take part in anything in that region. We were not able to take part in the trouble between Israel and the Arab states despite all the talk about our mobile forces being ready to go anywhere, at any time, on sudden notice. We are not participating in the war in South Viet Nam, yet we are talking about providing peacekeeping and peace restoring forces. This, sir, is wrong.

With the prevailing world situation we should be closely allied with the two countries beside which we fought and stood in two world wars. If there is a third world war those are the countries we ought to associate with—Britain and the United States. The organization of our defence forces should be so drawn that we can co-operate with those great countries. That is where our main interest lies.

Our obligation is to the people of Canada, to the protection of their lives and to the defence of this country. Those obligations can best be fulfilled through our close association with the United States and the United Kingdom. I deplore this transformation of Canada's defence policy, as the chief of the general staff has called it. I deplore this confusing and nebulous emphasis on peace keeping and peace restoring. Those are meaningless terms when one examines some of the difficulties which are involved. General von Horn, in his book which is based on practical experience, shows what is to be done. To commit Canadian servicemen to these expeditions under an ineffective administration and control system in the United Nations would be very foolish indeed.

For that reason, I conclude by saying that I am very dissatisfied with the shift of emphasis in Canada's defence policy. In the light of recent experience in the Middle East I say that that policy should be revised.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will forgive me if I do not continue the debate, which I have had with him before, about the value of peace keeping. I must say that I read the events of the last few weeks differently from the way he reads them.

Mr. Churchill: That shows the value of debate.

Mr. Brewin: I believe that the fact that war broke out as soon as peace keeping forces were withdrawn does not show that those forces were useless. It shows, rather, that the force is needed permanently, and that it should not have been withdrawn hurriedly. It shows also the necessity of having a better organization to keep the peace. That is the lesson I would draw from the past weeks.

I suspect that in the world of the future peace keeping forces and the sort of mobile conventional forces that we are now developing will still be needed. If the government's plan is what the hon. member says it is, it will have our support. The future security of Canada and of the world demands that we should continue to play this sort of role. We should play it, not simply in so-called peace keeping operations under the United Nations—of course, we should include those—but we should adopt that role as a major aim of our defence policy.

This evening I wish to deal with a subject which has already been mentioned by the hon. Minister of National Defence. The issue that is facing us in this country—indeed, it faces the whole western alliance in the realm of defence—is of the utmost importance. I refer to the deployment or proposed deployment of antiballistic missile systems commonly known as A.B.M. systems or sometimes as B.M.D. systems.

It is well known to those who have studied this question that crucial decisions face our allies in the United States about future plans in this connection. Before becoming involved, Canada must take the crucial decision whether it intends to follow what is being done in the United States. The decision about the employment of antiballistic missile systems is crucial for the future security of the world and for the maintenance of the type of society and life in which we believe.

In my view it is necessary that these matters be discussed publicly in parliament and elsewhere so that the decisions, when we come to make them, will be independent Canadian decisions, arrived at in full knowledge of the implications and uninfluenced by pressure. The minister has on a number of occasions given his word in the house and in the defence committee that Canada will not become involved in the deployment of A.B.M. systems until there has been discussion in parliament. I suggested in a question to him earlier in this debate that these matters should be referred to the committee on defence as soon as we reconvene after the recess in order that expert evidence may be called, and the arguments both for and against carefully reviewed before decisions are taken. We have seen in the committee that once a policy decision has been made and the government is committed to it, positions tend to crystallize and the discussion becomes not only partisan but often sterile. When information on these questions is made available before rigid policy decisions are taken I believe we are far more likely to arrive at wise decisions. Moreover we would then have the ability to say to the people of Canada that we have arrived at those decisions in the full knowledge of the facts.

Though this is a technical subject, I will endeavour to describe the position of A.B.M. deployment as it is at the present time. As is well known, there are two great powers—the United States and the U.S.S.R. For some time they have been locked in what is called a nuclear stalemate, and this has given to some parts of the world at any rate, a fragile stability. This stalemate has been based on the fact that each of these super powers has so-called strategic or hydrogen bombs in its possession capable of almost unthinkable destruction. These bombs, as is known, can be delivered anywhere in the world by intercontinental ballistic missiles a few minutes after being launched. In addition, this tremendous destructive power has been rendered virtually invulnerable by a variety of means such as "hardening" the missile launching sites or by placing these weapons in submarines which can roam the oceans and pop up anywhere to launch bombs capable of destroying whole cities.

As a result of this invulnerability, even after a surprise attack has been launched the other side would still retain the power to inflict upon its attacker what is called unacceptable damage—a phrase used to describe the power to completely destroy the society in the country which launched the attack and to kill tens of millions of people who would lose their lives almost immediately after such a retaliatory blow.

Because of the invulnerability of this fantastic power, we have experienced what is known as the nuclear stalemate. It is in this context that the deployment of anti-ballistic missile systems is being considered. They are designed, as we know, to destroy incoming rockets, and the proposal to make such installations is under active consideration by both the United States and the U.S.S.R. Three recent developments have forced the United States government, which has hitherto been extremely cool toward the proposal, to reconsider its position. I attended a conference last week at which I acquired a new expression which I should like to reveal to the committee. It is said the situation has now been reached in which the United States has to make a "go—no go" decision. I take it this jargon means that in a short time they must either proceed or abandon this development.

[Mr. Brewin.]

First of the new factors involved is a technological development which has made it easier to detect decoys in the stratosphere and made it possible, or feasible, at a relatively small cost to detect a great many, if not all, of the incoming missiles and destroy them before they reach their targets. A second factor which has caused this matter to become one of crucial importance to decision makers in the United States is the detonation by the Chinese of various nuclear devices including the hydrogen bomb, as has become known in the last few days. The third is the fact that there has been at least some limited development of an A.B.M. system in the U.S.S.R. for the protection, I gather, of Leningrad and Moscow.

In these circumstances the United States has been forced to consider whether they in turn should deploy these weapons, and since they are reluctant to do so, for reasons I will mention in a few moments, they are now in the process of seeking to make an arrangement or agreement with the U.S.S.R. to forgo or to limit, in any event, these new A.B.M. deployments.

A decision in this respect may be made very shortly but I think the U.S.S.R. has said, quite naturally, to the United States government that if it is to discuss the limitation of A.B.M. deployment it also wishes to discuss the reduction of the immense superiority in strategic weapons now possessed by the United States in the ratio of approximately four to one. The Soviet union argues that it might be interested in restricting the deployment of anti-ballistic missiles systems if the United States would agree to limiting its means of delivery or take serious steps to cut down the immense over-kill capacity of its strategic weapons.

I wish to say something about the financial cost which would be incurred if a development of this type were approved. That of course depends on the type of development. In the language used by those who deal with these matters there could be either a hard point area or urban deployment, designed to defend strategic locations against ballistic missiles or defend cities and larger areas. There are, of course, differences as to the extent to which protection would be made available—posture A and posture B in the terms used by the more technically expert. Whatever system is proceeded with the cost is estimated as between $10 billion and $40 billion in the United States.

I doubt that there are very many observers who do not believe that if this process is embarked on that the higher figure will prove to have been far too low. So, there is a colossal expense of wealth and of human resources and energy which necessarily would be poured into this. This is the first part of the cost which has to be considered. It is not just a dollar cost because it means the transfer of resources which might, for example, be used to deal with the poverty which threatens the world. It might be used to improve the societies in which we live and which certainly need improving.

I have not come to the matter of the Canadian involvement in this matter, but I shall do so in a few minutes. Suppose, however, that the Canadian involvement were to be proportionate. I suppose that would mean the expenditures we would have to envisage would be perhaps a tenth of the United States which would be $1 billion or $4 billion, although I think the higher figure is much more probable and, as the minister pointed out, this involves a continuing expense as well.

The real cost, however, is not just the cost in money or materials which might be involved in this. I should like to read from an article which was originally published in Foreign Affairs by Mr. J. I. Coffey who served in the state and defence departments and on the White House staff, an expert in these matters. He says:

> Chief among the costs is likely to be an erosion of the already slim possibility of reaching agreement on further arms-control measures which could promote a more secure world.

I think of that as a very mild way of saying that once you have become involved in this new level of escalation what you are doing is saying goodbye to the very bright prospects of getting an effective non-proliferation agreement. There is an expectation that within a short period a draft non-proliferation agreement will be tabled by the great powers at the Geneva conference on disarmament. But what hope would remain that the great powers would be able to persuade the non-nuclear powers not to acquire nuclear weapons if the nuclear super powers themselves proceed to new heights of nuclear development and exhibit complete lack of control? The hopes of limiting this fantastic nuclear power to the five nations who now have it is likely to go up in smoke.

Those are some of the costs. But if billions and billions of dollars constitute a high cost, and if the loss of the prospect for arms control and relaxation of tension is a high cost, is it a cost which ought to be paid for our security or is it a cost which the United States should pay for the security of the United States? I believe the answer is very clear. The answer is that you do not buy security in this way. All you do is provoke an equal response by the other side which means that the degree of security you have is certainly no greater than it was before.

I should like to quote the words of secretary of defence McNamara when speaking to the armed services committee on the 1968 defence budget of the United States. This is what he said:

> It is the virtual certainty that the Soviets will act to maintain their deterrent which casts such grave doubts on the advisability of our deploying the Nike-X system for the protection of our cities against the heavy, sophisticated missile attack they could launch in the 1970's. In all probability, all we would accomplish would be to increase greatly both their defence expenditures and ours without any gain in real security to either side.

Mr. Chairman, I ask, if you do not obtain security at this fantastic price which you are called on to pay, why pay the price? I suggest the answer is very obvious. We must not be deceived. The pressure to proceed with this will be extremely strong. Simple arguments are made that if you can knock down incoming bombs or avoid the threat of bombs you save lives. This is far too simple. You do not save lives if the other side at the same time increases its power so that the total ability for destruction remains precisely the same. But this is a good, simple sort of argument to make.

I have no doubt that the group which former president Eisenhower described as the industrial military complex in the United States would not be unhappy about the developments which would involve the expenditure of billions of dollars on new equipment of this sort. So, the pressures will be great. If the Russians should be unwise enough, and I think they would be unwise to proceed to an all-out deployment of a ballistic missile system, then the pressures on the United States to do the same thing no doubt would be very great.

The first point I should like to make is that I wish to urge the minister and this government to employ all the persuasive power they have in putting their weight in the scales against this fateful new development by the United States of America. It may be that they have already done that, but as an ally and neighbour of the United States which cannot help being involved in the developments which affect the people of the whole world, I would urge the government to make the strongest possible representation it has in its power to make on this matter before the decision is made. We certainly have no right to veto the decision if it is an unhappy one from our point of view. However, I believe we can claim the right to give advice, or to be heard at any rate on this issue, before the decision is made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to turn for a few moments to the Canadian situation. Before I do that I should like to say that one of the proposals which now is being bandied about in the United States is that there should be some sort of a compromise measure which would be a light ballistic missile system costing about $10 billion. This light system would not be effective against any all-out strike from the U.S.S.R. with its sophisticated means of delivery. But the suggestion is made that this light system might be able to meet the supposed threat of a nuclear attack from the People's Republic of China. I want to suggest that if that is the type of system that is to be deployed, this country should have no part in it whatsoever. We do not believe that the Chinese deployment involved any threat to this country or to North America. If it should, then I think the answer was well given by the hon. member for Rosedale, who is the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in a speech he gave at Scarborough last Saturday. He said that so far as that was concerned, the time that would be taken to deploy an anti-ballistic missile system is far shorter than the time it would take the Chinese to develop an effective striking power and therefore to go ahead with a system before you know you even have to meet the threat would be a foolish thing to do.

As the hon. member for Rosedale put it, a "wait-and-see" approach would scarcely endanger western security. In talking to some of our friends in the United States, I sometimes think that when they see their security in some way related to a future confrontation with the People's Republic of China—as some of them seem to see it—they are making a very grave error in judgment.

I think their security and the security of the world depends far more on their ability to seek and obtain some reconciliation with the People's Republic of China which is no real threat to the United States and unlikely at any time to become one. In any event, I urge upon the government, when and if the deployment of anti-ballistic missiles is undertaken in the United States, which are competent only to meet a threat from China, that they say we are not concerned with meeting this particular threat and stay completely out of this.

However, it will be said, and quite rightly so, that this country is linked closely in the defence of the North American air space through NORAD and through other arrangements with the United States. This will lead to pressure upon us, if the United States decides to deploy this system, to acquire installations from them and to buy city defences. This will become evident, and if the city of Buffalo, for example, were to have what purported to be a protection then one could understand how those who come from the city of Toronto, like the minister and myself, might be under some pressure to obtain for Toronto the same sort of defence the United States had seen fit to provide for Buffalo.

There is no reason to believe that this particular form of defence will provide security. As Mr. McNamara and others have pointed out from time to time, once you move ahead to provide a defence against a threat that exists today then a new development of offensive power takes place almost immediately. There is no one that I know of who seriously suggests that this system of deployment would be really efficient. It might, if ever called into play, conceivably have the result of minimizing the loss of life. Again, let me ask what would be the expense and how effective would it be in minimizing the loss of life if the enemy increased his offensive power to correspond.

I suggest this creates a further involvement of Canada in an unnecessary nuclear role. I suggest we cannot possibly afford it, and attached to it is a very unpleasant rider. An A.B.M. system implies the installation of a system of shelters against fallout which in turn involves not only large sums of money out of the taxpayer's pocket or the individual property owner's purse, but a degree of regimentation if it were to be taken seriously at all and not merely as a bluff.

I think the time has come for this country, looking at this independently and from its own point of view, to say that if the people in the United States believe they can afford the billions of dollars that would necessarily be involved in a system of defence that certainly would be provocative and would very likely be ineffective, we do not command that type of resources.

We should say that the resources we have will be directed toward something we think is more important and more useful. I do not know that this committee is the right place to quote from hymns, but a line of a hymn comes to my mind which I think is appropriate. It is "Turn back, O man, forsake thy foolish ways."

The adoption of anti-ballistic missile deployment is just another new turning or step on the ladder in the unending process toward a situation where the whole energies of man will be devoted to mutual terror, mutual threats of destruction and mutual futility. I believe that Canadian people will be in a position, quite apart from what the United States may decide to do, to say we must put a stop to this particular process. I do not mean to imply by that, however, that we cannot or should not discuss with the United States mutual defence arrangements, radar screens and other arrangements in respect to which we could be of assistance both to strengthen their security and strengthen the deterrent power of their own strategic forces. I do urge, however, that the government and the minister afford to this house, through the defence committee, at the first opportunity, such information as is available on this vital and urgent subject. There may not be complete information but there is undoubtedly information that will create an atmosphere of understanding of these very grave issues, so that when a decision must be made the government can make the decision, not based upon pressure but based upon Canadian understanding of the issues at stake. If they do that, I believe this will be one of the greatest contributions they could possibly make through defence measures to arms control and to a peaceful world in the future.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I only want to take a few minutes to make some brief remarks. I for one do not believe in long speeches, because one finally realizes, after analysing them individually, that what took half an hour or three quarters of an hour to say could easily have been said in four or five minutes.

At the beginning of the study of his departmental estimates today, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) congratulated his associate minister (Mr. Cadieux) and I should like to join in his congratulations.

I also wish to congratulate the minister on his fine work, something that my good friend for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) failed to do, when I was expecting him to do so.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: I will do that in my second speech.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): I thought you were going to do it.

[Translation]

In his introductory remarks the minister revealed that Canadian forces now had 105,000 men, an increase of more than 1,000 soldiers, airmen or sailors in the past few months, that is since the unification bill is in force. I should like to bring this to the attention of some members of the opposition, particularly my good friend from Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Régimbal) who claimed, during consideration of this bill, that men could not be kept in the Canadian forces without conscription. My congratulations then to the minister for having achieved an increase without resorting to conscription.

The main purpose of my short address is to defend our officers and men of the Canadian armed forces based at Bagotville, further to a question raised at 10 o'clock on May 18, 1967, by the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

I will not read the complete question of the member for Roberval, because it would be rather long and perhaps, when reading Hansard, people might think that I put the question.

Anyway, the question was about the purported problems caused by the airplanes leaving Bagotville and flying over the constituency of Roberval.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, as member for Chicoutimi where the Bagotville base is located, I know what noise a jet can make, especially on takeoff. I have not received any complaints about noises, thunder, etc., which can occur when those planes fly.

The member for Roberval brought up all kinds of things in his speech. I think it might be very interesting for the members to read it as reported on pages 408 and 409 of Hansard, for the second session of the 27th parliament.

I do not intend to review what he said point by point; instead, I shall leave it to the hon. members and the people of his riding to deal with our friend for Roberval.

Furthermore, what prompts me to take the floor tonight, Mr. Chairman, is that following the statement of the hon. member and press reports, I received, here in Ottawa, several copies of resolutions passed by town councils in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, congratulating the department for the way the Bagotville base is conducted, congratulating the base personnel for its courtesy, etc., while I received not one letter that might suggest the hon. member for Roberval could have been right. I sincerely believe that the dealings of the officers and the people on the Bagotville base, especially with the population especially of Chicoutimi—for the base is located in Chicoutimi—as well as with the whole Saguenay-Lake St. John population, are excellent. In addition, the morale is at a very high level on the base.

And to prove that the people do not in any way stand aloof from the air base staff, 62,000 visitors attended the air force show at Bagotville in this centennial year.

Everyone enjoyed the show very much, and I congratulate the famous group which performs these acrobatic feats throughout Canada this year during the air force day.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the house, to those who are somewhat sceptical about bilingualism and Canadian unity that 38 per cent of the servicemen stationed at Bagotville, in the riding of Chicoutimi, are bilingual. I think that this is certainly a fine effort on the part of our two founding races to ensure a better co-operation, a better understanding and to further Canadian unity.

I would like to thank and congratulate the department, especially the minister, for agreeing to send helicopters to the Bagotville base—two have been there for a few months—which are used to search for military personnel as well as civilians. The fact that they are used to search for civilians is looked upon very kindly by the population. Our territory covers a wide area. In the Saguenay-Lake St. John area there are immense forests and numerous streams and often fishermen, hunters, trappers and people engaged in bush operations are in trouble, far from the large centres, and each time we have asked help from the officers stationed at the air force base, we were received very cordially and when possible—and I can tell you that it is 99 times out of 100—we got the help needed.

To conclude, I would like to say that I had the pleasure of seeing the famous show put on for the centennial by the Canadian forces. It is called the Military Tattoo, and it is known in French as the "carrousel des forces armées du Canada".

I wish to congratulate the minister and the associate minister, who were certainly very closely connected with this show, as well as the whole production team and all the participants. It is remarkable that these members of the armed forces, trained not to put on shows but to serve their country, should be able to get together—and they number 1,000 or perhaps 2,000—and produce such entertainment. Some of them have varied and rather extraordinary talents.

I wish to congratulate them all. These are the remarks I wanted to make tonight, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it this will be the only day upon which we will be able to discuss the defence estimates this session. In view of the hour, which leaves only 40 minutes of the parliamentary day, I shall forgo any general remarks that I might otherwise have made and deal briefly with only a few specific matters. The first is the size of the defence budget. This afternoon the minister put on the record a chart or charts which were designed to show that, in terms of the defence dollar, when compared with 1963 to 1964 the cost of defence had gone down, or alternately that if the establishment of 1963 to 1964 had been maintained, the cost would have been very greatly in excess of what it is at the present time.

This was a perhaps ingenious, but I think very blatant, attempt by the minister to try to continue fooling the Canadian people with regard to the cost of defence. During the past three years the minister has consistently tried to persuade the people of this country and the members of the house that he was saving or was going to save enormous sums of money by the unification scheme he was putting into effect, and prior to that the integration scheme he was putting into effect. But the bald fact is, if you look at the estimates you will find that the cost of defence this year has increased by $115,309,000. That is the bald and actual fact. All the squirming, excusing and fiddling around that the minister does will not disguise that fact from the members of this house in particular and the people of Canada as a whole. In other words, all of the minister's much vaunted program for saving money for the Canadian taxpayer resulted in an increase in the cost of defence last year, and this year in a further increase of more than $115 million.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the minister did not point out that in 1963, when he became Minister of National Defence, we had in this country an establishment of military personnel in the neighbourhood of 122,000 officers and men. We now have between 105,000 and 106,000 officers and men. This is a very serious decline in the number of personnel, and at a considerably increased cost. In other words, we are now getting less for our defence dollar than we were in the past. No ingenious attempt to explain away these figures will be accepted.

The next matter on which I should like to speak briefly is that to which the hon. member for Greenwood seemed to devote most of his attention. I refer to the anti-ballistic missile system which is at the moment being considered in the United States and which we may have to consider doing something about in Canada. I believe it is completely unrealistic at the present time to take a hard position against this system without knowing what the facts are and what the necessities of the situation may be. Similarly, I believe it would be very foolish to take a hard position in favour of it. At the present time we are not in a position to assess what risk is involved. An anti-ballistic missile system would be instituted as a survival measure; in other words, a measure to try and ensure the survival of as many people as possible in this country or the United States. Whether the United States goes ahead with an anti-ballistic missile system will depend, in my opinion, on the assessment they make of the risk involved and whether or not the risk involved makes it necessary to put in a system of that kind. Exactly the same considerations must be investigated by us. At the present time to take the position which was taken by the hon. member for Greenwood, that it is completely bad and wrong, is wishful thinking in my view. In other words, we cannot say that there is no risk and therefore we do not need to do anything about it.

The next point concerns the satellite communication system which is being developed in conjunction with the United States. Can the minister confirm that this is what he said in fact?

Mr. Hellyer: There are two systems, one is a trilateral one being developed by Australia, the United States and Canada for the ground forces, and then there is the NATO system.

Mr. Harkness: I think the minister should give us more information in connection with this matter because, as I understand the situation with regard to communication satellites, there is only room for a very limited number of communication satellites if they are to work effectively. If this is to be a purely military communication satellite, it means in effect that it will not be possible to put a civil communication satellite into effective operational use. Therefore, I hope the minister will tell us whether this is to be a combined military-civil communication satellite system or a purely military one, how it will fit in space and what is the number of civil communication satellites.

The minister told us that the Bonaventure our only carrier, would be back in operation this fall. The question that immediately occurred to me is how is it to be manned? I would like the minister to answer this question. Only a few months ago we were informed in the defence committee that of the 20 odd vessels which we still have in commission in Canada there were only 16 actually in operation. In fact, that is what the minister himself told us in giving evidence before the committee. The Bonaventure and some others were being refitted, but a considerable number were tied up at the docks because sufficient crews could not be found to man them. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the increase in the forces has been very small—I will speak about this subject later—how will the Bonaventure be manned? Does this mean that several other destroyers will be taken out of operation in order to provide the crew for her?

The next point which the minister mentioned was the change in the form of the estimates. He spoke with great pride in this connection, and assured the house it would put us in a much better position to deal with these estimates and to understand them. I agree that a breakdown of the expenditures so far as each of the commands is concerned would be of advantage, but the minister has not given us the actual cost of equipment and administration so far as the navy, the army and the air force are concerned. Thus we are unable to compare what the cost will be in this coming year, as shown in the estimates, with what the costs were in previous years. In other words, we are in a much worse position to understand what the actual situation is with regard to defence expenditures than we have been in the past.

This leads me to the next point. I think the minister owes it to the house to give us this breakdown. If we look in the estimates book we will find on page 318 the details with regard to construction or acquisition of buildings and works and major equipment. We are given no breakdown so far as the army, the navy and the air force are concerned. Thus, we are left in the dark concerning equipment matters. I hope that in this year the amount provided for equipment will be spent. In the past three to four years the amount which was provided in the estimates for equipment was never spent. The money which was voted for defence was spent, but a considerable amount which was actually voted for the acquisition of equipment, aircraft, ships, armoured fighting vehicles, guns, ammunition and so on, instead of being spent on these items was spent on general administration, personnel costs and things of that nature. This is what happened, in spite of the fact that the minister said he was going to make great savings in administration costs and was going to devote the money thus saved to the acquisition of new equipment. In actual fact, as I put on the record in the defence committee and I will not put it on the record here but will merely refer to it, the amount spent on equipment by this government in the past four years has been smaller than has been spent by the government of which I was defence minister in any of the years that we were in office. It was also a smaller percentage of the total amount than the money which we devoted to equipment.

In other words, the minister in effect has done the exact opposite of what he has been saying during the past four years he was going to do, namely to save money in administration in personnel and put it into equipment and forces. The amount of money spent on equipment, therefore the amount of new equipment supplied, has been reduced both quantitatively and as a percentage of the total defence budget, and the cost for administration and personnel has constantly gone up.

There are two or three specific matters on which I should like to get some answers. The minister mentioned with great pride that recruiting had improved. He said that we now have in the forces 105,792 people as of May 31. He did not tell us, and this has been the case every time that recruiting and the size of the services has been under discussion, how many people had left the services during that same period. In particular, he did not tell us how many of the 105,000-odd are actually people on terminal leave. The figure at that time was 104,000 to 105,000 people in the armed forces, but 1,500 or more of those were actually out of the services on terminal leave. They were still drawing pay because one of the provisions is that when a man leaves he draws pay for up to six months, depending on how long he has been serving. However, these people were counted as part of the total figure. I have no doubt that around 1,500 or 2,000 would be included in the 105,000-odd. Until we are given the figures for the discharges during the same period for which the minister gave the recruiting figures, in other words the number of people on terminal leave, we will not know what the correct situation is.

I should like to ask next what the situation is with regard to the four new destroyer escorts which are supposed to be provided for the navy. The minister has spoken in the last year and a half to two years about the building program. Whenever he speaks about the equipment which will be supplied to the services he always mentions this subject to try and create the impression that a great deal of equipment is being secured. However, in spite of the length of time that he has been talking about these four new destroyer escorts, up to date nothing definite has been done about them so far as we have been able to determine. I think an order was placed for some of the propulsion equipment, but we would like to know when the first keel is to be laid. When will a start be made on these destroyer escorts? It would probably take in the neighbourhood of three years from the time the keel is laid before one of these vessels can become operational. The minister having scrapped the general purpose frigate program which I introduced in 1963, it means that we are already at least four years behind. From the look of things we will be at least five years late in even starting a ship replacement program, and it will be eight years before any of these naval vessels are delivered.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The minister mentioned the hydrofoil this afternoon and said that in spite of a fire that had taken place as well as other difficulties that had developed we would still proceed with the project. I should like the minister to give us the cost of this hydrofoil project over the past four years, and what the estimated total cost of the program will be. I also ask the minister when it is expected that the hydrofoil will be able to go into the water and actually undergo trials. I think it would be prophecy of the worst kind to try and prophesy when any of these craft will be in operation. However, I think we should at least be given the details of what the cost has been and what the future of the hydrofoil project is expected to be.

One other matter I should like to ask the minister about, I do not know whether any of my colleagues have raised it or not, is this. There is a considerable amount of wonderment and disquiet in the services, I am led to believe, over the provision in the new defence act that for 60 days after that act is proclaimed members of the forces will be given the chance to retire from the armed services. I think the minister owes it to the members of the armed services, as well as to the members of this committee, to state in exact terms what the situation is in this connection.

I know that there are several other members who wish to say something, Mr. Chairman, and as it is now 25 minutes to ten I will conclude my remarks at this point. However, I hope that before the debate is completed the minister will answer some of the questions that have been asked.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, the remarks that I want to make tonight will also be brief. I ask the indulgence of the members of the committee if I touch on a number of matters rather than stay with one specific subject as others have done.

My first remarks are phrased in the form of a question to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. I simply ask the hon. member, since what he said earlier this evening was so exciting to him and the members of the government, why it was that they sent the navy to sea a few days prior to the provincial election in the province from which I come.

I suggest that if he is guilty of the charge that I level against him, all he has done by what he has said during this discussion of the estimates has been to give further emphasis to the point that has been made, not only by myself and other members in the chamber but by people outside the House of Commons. I refer to the necessity for serious and drastic changes in the armed services voting regulations, changes which would bring about for the armed services of Canada some degree of secrecy for their franchise. What the hon. member is doing when he stands up and recites the voting habits of the members of the armed services is simply indicating to the people of Canada their political affiliations, and I submit this is immoral and is wrong.

Another question I want to raise was touched on by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, though they referred to it in different ways. It centres around the question of Canada's neutrality in the eyes of the world today. I had hoped that by the time the defence estimates came before this committee the evidence given to the external affairs committee at their third meeting would have been available to us, because during that meeting there was a rather interesting exchange between the members of the committee and one Mr. Charles Taylor, a very distinguished correspondent of the Toronto Globe and Mail.

I should like to paraphrase what he said in part in response to specific questions about the attitude of countries like mainland China to Canada because he was quite positive in his reply. He indicated to the members of the committee that if the government of mainland China thinks about Canada at all it is either in the context of agriculture or in the context of our being merely spokesmen for and representatives of the western point of view as expressed by the United States.

I suggest that in this world today we are not neutral. I do not see how we can be. I do not think it is going too far to suggest that it is a little immoral to declare that we are. It is wrong to suggest that we can try and impose on the world the idea that we are neutral, because we are not. We adhere to the principles of democracy as espoused and practised by western countries. We believe in peace. In what way are we neutral, Mr. Chairman?

I think it has been suggested that Canada can adopt some quasineutral role which can be expressed to the world in the form of some energetic contribution to peace keeping. If I may paraphrase what the minister said earlier this afternoon in his opening remarks, he said that Canada believes in and works consistently toward permanent peace keeping machinery for the United Nations.

This may be a desirable role, but I think that the vehicle the minister has chosen—that is, the preparation in Canada of that peace keeping machinery which would be used as the lead instrument and for the primary disposal of the United Nations—is perhaps a little grandiose in conception at this particular stage of our history.

I should now like to pass to other matters of concern and develop a little further some of the questions asked of the minister about the Bonaventure.

I am curious to know where we are to get a crew for the ship. I am more seriously concerned at the moment about other aspects, particularly about some of the details of the cost of the half-life overhaul. If there is any misunderstanding, the minister should clarify who made the basic error in the half-life refit. Was the error made as a result of a fault in the specifications? What brought about the doubling of the contract figure? There is an indication that the figure may yet be tripled. Was the department at fault in writing the specifications? Was the fault in the tendering? Are the companies that tendered not qualified to tender for the half-life overhaul of the ship?

The minister has been asked where the crew for the ship will come from. It is interesting to note that in January the Royal Canadian Navy lost 220 members and gained 137; in February it lost 161 and gained 419—that is significant; in March it lost 160 odd and gained 290, and in April it lost 200 and gained 180. The over-all picture, so far as the R.C.N. is concerned, is not an encouraging one for the task of manning the vessel I have mentioned.

I am curious to know what government decision has been reached with respect to the four new destroyer escorts. I have been told on orders of the day that no decision has been given about the lead yard. My information is contrary to that, but the government will make its announcement in due course. I am curious about the savings to be effected under the systems that are contemplated by the government for the construction of two of these ships. It has come to my attention that the second class of yard in this race—and there are only three or four in Canada—will be asked to tender on both ships and not just on one. This is a serious matter and perhaps the government could say whether what is proposed is government policy. The government must always keep in mind that it is necessary for a commercial yard to maintain a balance of trades and skills. No commercial yard must be put into the position of having to abandon lucrative commercial work in order to raise the necessary force to tackle the vessels that the government wants. The minister should also take a moment or two to answer questions along these lines.

We have been told that since the unification bill passed through the mechanics of both houses and their committees, the efficiency of the armed forces has been operationally enhanced. How does one arrive at that conclusion in view of the fact we have lost 4,500 men and gained only 4,900. How efficiency has been enhanced is a miracle, and the minister has some explaining to do there.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

During his remarks he read into the record a chart that covered expenditures for the years 1963-64 up to the current estimates for the fiscal year 1967-68. He dealt with the expenditures that were made in the past, inflated those to current prices, and followed his concept through each of the years mentioned. He dealt with the actual expenses for each year and with the expenses for each year at the 1963-64 level.

This was an interesting academic exercise. But the hon. member for Calgary South dealt in committee with an earlier chart that had been prepared by the Department of National Defence. I do not think the people of Canada are particularly interested in academic exercises. Somebody, obviously, spent much time going down a long, straight road; unfortunately, he wound up in the water.

I will not prolong this point, but it is important for the people of Canada to understand what emphasis the department is placing on different expenditures for the current fiscal year 1967-68. As has been mentioned earlier by the co-chairman of the standing committee on national defence, we cannot do that at present. This matter, too, was referred to by the former minister of national defence. The truth of his remarks strikes me as obvious.

From looking at page 319 of the estimates and glancing down at the headings, mobile command, maritime command, and so on we cannot tell what the actual expenditures have been for naval operations, ground military operations or for tactical air operations. There is no way of sorting out the figures; nor can we determine what the Canadian taxpayer is contributing to our forces in Europe.

This morning, in the standing committee on external affairs, we found that items were dealt with that should properly have come under the estimates of the Department of National Defence. I refer to those items which come under section 1, subsection (d), under the heading "Miscellaneous Grants and Payments". During this morning's committeee hearing I found that two items of special interest were noted, namely, defence support assistance to non-NATO countries, $3.5 million, and defence support assistance to Greece and Turkey, $1 million. In section 2, subsection (a) of the same document under the heading "United Nations and its Agencies", we find that the UN emergency force is listed under an assessment of 3.17 per cent, plus a surcharge of 25 per cent; the actual dollar figure is $729,000, and the total is in the order of $5 million.

We have no way of knowing how many similar sums are spread around in these estimates. It is almost impossible to tell on the basis of the present form. It may be convenient for the department, and it may be that in time hon. members will become familiar with the system and know which items deserve concentrated attention. On page 318 we find a simple item of $61,196,000 opposite the word "Ships". Does this represent an allocation for the two lead ships in the new destroyer escort program? There is no way of knowing unless the minister can find a few minutes in which to enlighten us. The matter is of great importance to the area from which I come. The reference to armoured fighting vehicles is identifiable. Here is an item, "Aircraft and Engines". How much of this money will be spent on Trackers? How are we to identify the amounts spent on routine maintenance, minor overhauls, major overhauls of engines and airframes? How much will be spent in the maritime command? How can we find out from these estimates whether or not the government intends to replace any of these aircraft? What will happen to maritime air command when the Neptune is phased out in two years. The Argus is already well through its life. What about the Tracker, half of whose life is spent?

We have the estimates for 1967-68 before us but there is no way of determining whether the government has decided on replacements for these aircraft. Maybe this is not important to the people of Canada as a whole. But it is very important to the city of Dartmouth which through the general policy of this government has lost something in excess of a million dollars worth of payroll in the last three months. The mayor and the people of Dartmouth would be interested in knowing whether there is a future for Shearwater. What about the base consolidation program? It is difficult in these estimates to detect savings from the base consolidation program, yet we continue to hear rumours that further consolidations and movements are to be made. The question of Cornwallis has not yet been settled. The question of Shearwater has yet to be settled.

If the government is certain of its position it should make unequivocal statements of its intentions in these matters. These passing remarks must be true of mobile command, infantry brigade, air division, air defence command, air transport command, training command, materiel command and Canadian forces headquarters. It is not possible to tell from these estimates exactly where one stands, and in the absence of some explanation it is easy to see why some of us are concerned. It would have been better if these estimates had gone before the committee where they could have been dealt with in detail. This may not be possible for some time. Failure to bring these estimates before the committee may, as the co-chairman of the standing committee on defence suggested, constitute a disservice to the house. Moreover, as the hon. member also suggested, the way in which the estimates are presently set out may not be in accordance with the legal method. Whether this is the case or not, I am not sure it is really relevant. What is relevant is that no one in the opposition can draw any conclusions from these estimates except that a certain amount of money is to be spent in certain general areas. No explanation is given of what appears under the various headings.

There is one final point I should like to deal with, again not in any great depth. I do so in order to place on record the fact that there is continuing concern about it. Again it relates to the remarks the minister made when presenting his estimates. He announced that several new arrangements were to be introduced. The one which primarily concerns me has to do with the allocation of housing. It is all very well to make a broad statement, as he did. Certainly, the time has now come for a reassessment of the system used. But the minister surely has a responsibility to spell out proposals of this kind so that members of the armed forces may not be left in doubt as to what is meant. If this has already been done, I commend the minister for having done so. I suspect, however, that nothing has been done along these lines because recent communications I have had from service personnel indicate a continuing concern about what the government might do.

I see it is ten o'clock and I will so call it, if I may.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we shall call the estimates of the Department of Labour, and if we finish them we shall carry on with the committee stage of the Cape Breton Development Corporation bill. On Monday it is proposed to call a supply motion—at least that is the present plan.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN STOPS IN LOTBINIÈRE COUNTY, QUE.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply moved in speaking before such a vast crowd as honours me tonight by listening to the particularly important words I intend to say.

This problem concerns mostly the rural areas and is becoming an even greater concern in the wake of certain decisions taken by the C.N.R., which I consider arbitrary.

Far from me the thought of minimizing the immense services this company has rendered to the people of Canada, but it may happen that in some instances administrative decisions are unfortunate. This is the kind of case I should like to bring to the attention of this house tonight and to the attention of the parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Transport, the distinguished member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) who, to my mind, often shows a marked superiority over his colleague for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

Mr. Speaker, the C.N.R. has decided rather suddenly that passenger trains would no longer stop in the picturesque and lively municipality of Manseau, in the constituency of Lotbinière. One characteristic of Manseau is a very hard-working population.

When speaking of Manseau, I feel I should stress the importance of the achievements of the Savoie family, one of the wonderful French-Canadian famliies, which is a real honour for the people of the Lotbinière county and which has rendered this whole county, but particularly Manseau, services about which we will never hear enough.

I received recently a copy of a resolution passed by the municipal council of the village of Manseau, whose mayor is Mr. Télesphore Soucy. I also received a copy of a resolution passed by the municipal council of Saint-Joseph de Blandford and the parish of Manseau. The secretary-treasurer of these two municipalities, notary Normand Provencher, wrote to me in somewhat alarming terms precisely to call my attention to this very deplorable situation created by the elimination of the Canadian National stopover at Manseau.

After having consulted the stationmaster, Mr. Marquis—another prominent citizen who works devotedly for the good of his community—he told me this: "At Manseau, at least $500 worth of tickets are sold each month."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is understandable in some respects that the C.N.R. would like to eliminate some stops for passenger trains in communities where it sells practically no tickets. But when, on the average, up to $500 worth of tickets are sold each month, I think that the C.N.R. has nothing to lose by stopping for a few moments to let passengers come aboard.

Whenever there are no passengers, the train could go right through. But, today, means of communications are sufficiently developed for the conductor of the train to be advised, some distance away, that a few passengers wish to board the train. Therefore, it would be quite fitting to reverse the decision, which I deplore this evening in this brief debate.

What burns me up most, Mr. Speaker, is the affront to rural areas. I quite understand that urban centres are numerically more important, but I feel that legitimate consideration would be shown our rural areas by keeping the stop system for passenger trains, in order to pick up passengers who live not necessarily in the town I am referring to, namely Manseau, but in neighboring villages. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the parishes of Sainte-Sophie-de-Lévrard, Sainte-Cécile-de-Lévrard, and Saint-Pierre-les-Becquets are beautiful municipalities which do us honour and which we are happy to have as components of the beautiful territory of the Lotbinière county.

The people who live in those municipalities, located a few miles away from Manseau, come to Manseau to take the train and go to Drummondville or Montreal. Therefore, this is useful not only for the people of Manseau but also for the surrounding communities.

In view of the somewhat arbitrary and quite sudden decision of the C.N.R., I think that I must share the sad feelings expressed by the mayors of Manseau and Saint-Jean-de-Blandford, by notary Provencher, by the secretary-treasurer of both municipalities, and by the station master, Mr. Marquis, by the Savoie family, in short, by all the others who are interested in the economic development of their area.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I request that steps be taken to rectify the situation.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) that if I am superior to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), it is not by way of seniority.

Mr. Herridge: Are you suggesting it is on account of brains?

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member for Lotbinière has brought a very important question before the house and the Minister of Transport, and it appears at least to me that a constituency with such a distinguished member deserves something more than whistle stop communities. Some hon. member said to me, why does the hon. member for Lotbinière not go home. Another suggested that he did not think the hon. member had a home but lived in a bedroom on a Canadian National Railways train.

• (10:10 p.m.)

This matter has been brought to the attention of Canadian National Railways by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). I am sure the hon. member will understand that it is a matter for determination by the railway company itself, which after all has the responsibility for administering the railway and for the efficient operation of that undertaking. I am sure, also that the words uttered here this evening will be brought to the attention of the Canadian National Railways officials, and undoubtedly some action will be considered.

TELEVISION—NAPANEE, ONT.—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF CABLE FACILITIES

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I bring a matter before the house this evening as a result of a question that I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), on Tuesday, June 20, regarding a request for approval of cable television facilites in the town of Napanee. My question appears at page 1713 of Hansard. It arises as a result of the application of Mr. Reginald C. Dawson of Napanee who made application to the Department of Transport on February 23 last for authority to establish and operate a commercial T.V. receiving service at Napanee, Ontario. According to a letter dated May 2 written to Mr. Dawson, his application has been rejected. I quote a letter received by Mr. Dawson from Mr. W. A. Caton, controller, radio regulations division of the Department of Transport. This letter, Mr. Speaker, exemplifies nothing but a complete bureaucratic run-around that has been given to my constituent and townsman. The letter reads:

> Your application dated February 23, 1967 for authority to establish and operate a land station performing a commercial broadcasting receiving service at Napanee, Ontario, has been considered in accordance with the announcement made by the Minister of Transport in the House of Commons on July 22, 1964.
> The Board of Broadcast Governors believes that the establishment and operation of a C.A.T.V. system at Napanee, Ontario, such as you propose, would inhibit the provision of alternative television service to the area.
> Policy problems relating to C.A.T.V. are receiving the attention of the government and it is expected that parliament will have an opportunity to consider this matter in due course possibly on the basis of amending legislation. In the circumstances, the minister does not propose to approve your application at the present time. This decision on your application at this time is without prejudice to your right to re-apply once this matter has been dealt with by parliament.
> Arrangements are being made to refund the deposit in the amount of $25 which was submitted in support of this application.
> Yours truly,
> W. A. Caton,
> Controller,
> Radio Regulations Division.

Mr. Speaker, it is readily apparent that this is an example of bureaucracy at its very worst. What inhibitions are they referring to in that letter? To what alternative television service are they referring? The town of Napanee has about 5,000 people and consists of approximately 2,000 homes. One C.A.T.V. system at Napanee could serve the municipality, and any enterprise that goes to the trouble of obtaining a franchise to instal cable along the streets would no doubt obtain most of the business from the householders who could be served.

Mr. Caton's letter also refers to an announcement made in the house by the Minister of Transport on July 22, 1964. Mr. Caton's rejection of this application simply hides behind the announcement made by the minister long ago, and uses it as a shallow and ill-founded excuse for not granting the application. I am sure the minister does not agree with this, but when we look back to what the minister said on July 22, 1964, we find that his announcement does not apply to this application at all. At that time the minister announced that they simply wanted to make sure that an effective degree of Canadian ownership and control of C.A.T.V. installations was ensured. In the case at Napanee the applicant and his whole enterprise is 100 per cent Canadian. In fact, the announcement of the Minister of Transport on that day almost three years ago proclaims the lifting of the so-called freeze on the granting of C.A.T.V. applications. I quote some of the minister's words which can be found at the bottom of page 5799 of Hansard for that day:

> In announcing the lifting of the so-called freeze the government wishes to emphasize that it has no desire to regulate C.A.T.V. for the sake of regulation, but merely to the minimum extent deemed necessary to maintain the Canadian identity and character of broadcasting—

I contend, and I am sure the minister agrees, that a responsible applicaton, such as this one, from a resident of the municipality, especially an urban municipality, where cable facilities are economically and physically feasible, should be quite in order and that the federal Department of Transport has no right to withhold a franchise for these services providing the applicant and user of the services agrees to comply fully with the lighting and marking of his tower or mast so that it does not become a hazard to the rest of the nation by endangering the flight of aircraft.

The mayor of Napanee points out in this letter to the minister that other franchises have been granted in other towns in Ontario, and yet the Napanee franchise is refused for no good reason at all by one of our bureaucrats who uses a speech made by the minister three years ago as an irrelevant excuse for withholding this much needed service from the people of Napanee. I wish to quote the mayor's letter. It reads as follows:

> It has come to my attention that one of my citizens Mr. Reginald Dawson has presented an application to your board by which he is seeking to secure a licence or franchise to instal cable T.V. in our town of Napanee.
> During the last three years we have had several outside groups make contact with our council and public utilities with the idea of supplying us with this type of T.V. service, however nothing has been finalized, and we now have a local group headed by Mr. Dawson who are endeavouring to bring cable T.V. to Napanee. I might add that due to our town being located in a valley, regular T.V. reception is very, very poor and like all other growing municipalities we are anxious to have the best for our citizens.
> I note with interest that Smiths Falls, also Belleville in eastern Ontario and Fergus and Elora in western Ontario have been granted a licence to instal cable T.V.
> [Mr. Alkenbrack.]
>
> Therefore I sincererly hope that you will give your support to the application that has been presented to your department from citizens of the town of Napanee.
> Thank you, I remain,
>
> Yours very truly,
> Lorne A. Smart,
> Mayor of Napanee.

As has been pointed out by the mayor, much of Napanee lies in a hollow between the Roblin Hill escarpment on the east and south and Piety Hill which rises at the west end of the town. The highest land is south of the Napanee River and it precludes good television reception by way of the conventional household aerials.

Many of our townsmen would subscribe to C.A.T.V. when it is available and then many would probably abandon their unsightly aerials. This application should be granted with no further delay.

I am sure the minister agrees that now this franchise should be favourably considered and granted, and I respectfully request him to do so.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in representing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) I must take issue with the hon. member in his condemnation of one of our very capable civil servants, Mr. Caton. I feel quite sure that he believes the decision he has made was in conformity with the regulations. I am in no way taking issue with the right to contest the decision itself, but I do feel that our civil servants are of a high calibre and that they make every effort to base their decisions on the regulations promulgated by parliament or by order in council.

However, I understand the hon. member has raised this question with the minister privately and the minister is looking into the matter. I understand there may be an amicable decision in respect of this application.

AGRICULTURE—CONSIDERATION BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF EXPROPRIATION PRINCIPLES

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I trust I will behave rather differently from the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) and will stop at the right whistle.

The question of the expropriation by governments or their agencies, both federal and provincial, is of increasing concern to farmers across Canada. So far as I am concerned, I can speak for many farmers in my constituency who have suffered from the present law and present procedures with regard to the expropriation of land for highways, for power lines, for gas pipe lines and for other purposes required by the government in question, whether it be federal, provincial or municipal. They have also suffered to a great extent during the last couple of years from expropriations necessary under the terms of the Columbia River treaty.

This matter is of increasing concern to farmers across Canada, and on that account a special meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was held in May to consider all aspects and to study the question carefully. I might say that in no place in Canada, either under federal or under provincial authority, do procedures and principles which are followed in connection with the expropriation of lands and of rights to the use of land give farmers an entirely fair break. It all depends on the government or the agency that is expropriating the property. In some cases there has been little cause for dissatisfaction, but in the majority of cases, in my experience, injustice has been done to many people.

This meeting was called because the overall bargaining position of the farmer is weak compared to the bargaining power of the authority that wishes to take over his property. As a result of this meeting, the following memorandum regarding a solution to the problem was passed which reads as follows:

> Experience of those at the meeting, it was noted, indicates that the expropriated property-owner in the city similarly receives less than justice, as often as not.
> The solution to the problem, the meeting concluded, must be found in:
>
> Effective united action by affected property-owners in cases of expropriation. Without the strength that comes by uniting together the small property-owner is in a well-nigh hopeless position of weakness.
>
> Improved legislation that will spell out the rights of the property-owner in detail, and provide fair and economical means for ensuring that these rights are realized through adjudication and legal processes.
> Improved service to property-owners by their farm organizations and, especially, stepped up programs of information to farmers about their rights under the law.

Then the meeting went on to recommend:

> —that in the near future the Canadian Federation of Agriculture follow up its oft-repeated demand for improved federal legislation with detailed legislative proposals to government for consolidation and amendment of present federal legislation dealing with expropriation.

The meeting also discussed some other questions. It was on this account that I asked my question of the Minister of Agriculture on June 12 which Your Honour ruled out of order.

It is very interesting to note that the parliamentary secretary who is going to reply to my appeal is, I think, sympathetic to my proposals. He graduated from the Ontario Agricultural College some 30 years or more after I entered the institution, so I feel I should get a very sympathetic response to my appeal. I have been informed by a former graduate of the college that the parliamentary secretary has voiced very strong opinions on this question to local farmers organizations at a time when he was a county representative in the province of Ontario. I feel therefore I really have an ally this evening, and I trust that when he replies he will demonstrate this by his proposals and suggestions.

On June 12, I asked the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the concern of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with the procedures and principles followed in connection with the expropriation of land, would the minister inform the house if the views of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on the question of expropriation will be referred to the next dominion-provincial conference on agriculture?

I asked that question because I think that a dominion-provincial conference would be an excellent medium in which to thrash out questions between federal and provincial governments and get, shall I say, some order in dealing with this situation which is of great concern to the farmers all across Canada.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish at the outset to express my appreciation to my fellow alumnus for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house. By way of introduction, I may say that the hon. member for Kootenay West really has no idea what an important role he has played in shaping my career. He has made reference to the fact that we are graduates of the same institution. As a matter of fact, when I was thinking of attending a university or college I looked round to decide which one I should attend, and one of the measures by which we appraise a university is by the calibre of its graduates. So I thought of the Ontario Agricultural College, noted that Hon. John Bracken was a graduate of that college, a man who has performed very outstanding service to this country and in this parliament. I also noted that His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta was a graduate and that the noted writer and economist Mr. Galbraith had been a graduate as well as the hon. member for Kootenay West.

So that it was very easy for me to decide to go to the Ontario Agricultural College and to follow in the footsteps of my learned and distinguished colleague from Kootenay West.

The hon. member asked a very important question, important not only to him and me but also to the farmers and other residents across this land. I may say that the short answer to his question is that I do not know whether this matter is going to be referred to the federal-provincial conference or not.

I am able to tell him, however, that this matter of expropriation is of very deep concern to the government of Canada, as well as to hon. members of this house. The government and the Minister of Agriculture know of the great concern that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has in this matter.

I am also permitted to say that this subject is being given careful consideration in the hope that a reasonable approach and a logical conclusion may be brought about.

It being 10.30 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SPEAKERS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to bring to the attent on of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a distinguished group of Speakers of the provincial legislatures. They are in Ottawa to attend the Canadian area council meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

DOMINION DAY

FURTHER DETAILS CONCERNING CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN PRESENCE OF HER MAJESTY

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed briefly to provide hon. members with further details concerning the ceremonies to be held on the morning of July 1 on parliament hill. To deal first with the matter of seating accommodation members may have observed the construction work go ng on at the foot of the main steps of the buildings. The section of stands being erected on the east side of the central platform will provide reserved seating for members of this house. A similar structure on the west side will accommodate the Senate. Because of the parliamentary character of this occasion, the wives of members will not be seated with their husbands, but in a reserved area immediately in front of the central platform on which the ceremony will take place.

I have been asked to suggest that it is of particular importance that members, and indeed all those in attendance, be in their seats by ten o'clock in the morning. The Prime Minister, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the cabinet will proceed from the centre block in a body at 10 a.m. to take the places reserved for them. At 10.05 a.m. the Speaker's procession will leave this building, followed some minutes later by the Speaker and officials of the other place. Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh will arrive a few minutes before 10.30 a.m.

At 10.30 a.m. an interdenominational service of thanksgiving and dedication will begin. Following the service Her Majesty will proceed to the dais which is to be erected on the central platform. Addresses will then be read on behalf of the two houses by their respective Speakers and presented to the Queen, who will reply. At the end of the ceremony the Queen and her entourage will descend the steps at the south end of the central platform and move in procession down the broad walk to the centennial flame.

After the royal party has left the grounds of parliament hill the speakers, accompanied by the officials of the two houses, will return in procession to the centre block followed by the Prime Minister, the former prime minister and the cabinet. Members of the two chambers will then leave informally.

Reserved seat tickets will be sent to members and their wives on Tuesday, June 27.

TRADE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER FOLLOWING CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, with the co-operation of the house, it was possible for a number of my colleagues and me to attend in Montreal this week the eleventh Canadian-United States ministerial committee on trade, and economic affairs.

The members of the United States delegation were: the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fowler; the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Freeman; the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Trowbridge; and Under Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Luce; the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Solomon; the Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Affairs, Mr. Ackley; and Ambassador Butterworth.

The Canadian delegation was comprised, in addition to myself, of the Ministers of Finance (Mr. Sharp), Industry (Mr. Drury), Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin), Agriculture (Mr. Greene), the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, and Ambassador Ritchie. The parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Macdonald) was also present at the meetings.

It was a matter of regret that due to the emergency session of the United Nations general assembly in New York, it was not possible for Mr. Paul Martin and the Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, to attend and to preside over these meetings. The United States delegation was most ably led by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fowler. In Mr. Martin's absence, I was privileged to lead the very good Canadian delegation.

At this point I beg leave to table in English and French a copy of the communiqué, and if it is the wish of hon. members I suggest that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard, as has been the practice in previous years.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents? Is it the wish of the house that the documents be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For communiqué above referred to, see Appendix.]

Mr. Winters: The most impressive and significant aspect of this meeting was without doubt the forward looking nature of the discussions and the spirit of cordiality and of genuine good will which prevailed. These discussions have proven fruitful and will be of benefit in our day-to-day continuing contacts with the United States government over the weeks and months ahead. This I personally believe is their great merit.

As will be apparent from the communiqué, the committee considered a wide range of important topics of interest to Canada and the United States in the trade, economic and financial fields. These included broad policy issues of a multilateral character in which both our countries have a vital stake and important responsibilities. In addition, a major portion of our discussions was concerned with subjects of special interest in our bilateral relations.

In the forward looking context of the meeting, emphasis was placed on the opportunities for trade which will be presented by the results of the Kennedy round and we agreed to work closely together in studying further trade liberalization opportunities.

In a number of important areas, including co-operation in wheat marketing policies and food aid, the committee decided to strengthen the consultative arrangements between the two countries. On other issues where there are outstanding problems between Canada and the United States, each side had an opportunity to explain its case fully and frankly and to explore the possibilities of early accommodation.

I need not review at this time the many issues that were jointly examined, and which are outlined in the communiqué. I would, however, refer to one or two particular topics.

As will be seen from the communiqué, a very close identity of interest was recorded in the matter of the approach of the two countries to the problem of international liquidity and the need for general agreement on a contingency plan for reserve expansion.

We had a most useful exchange of views on the important question of foreign investment in Canada. This meeting provided a further opportunity for Canadian ministers to reemphasize the government's intention to maintain a favourable climate for foreign investment in Canada, while encouraging increased Canadian participation in the control and ownership of our economy.

Special attention was also devoted to the important question of energy resources between the two countries. The United States cabinet members gave us a welcome re-affirmation of United States recognition of the important role of oil in our over-all trade and economic relationship, and of their continued interest in enabling Canada to share in the growth of the United States market.

Canadian ministers again took the opportunity to mention the concern felt in Canada about the extra-territorial application of the laws of other countries. At the same time we noted the readiness of United States secretaries to use their best endeavours to resolve particular problems in this area if and when they arise.

This meeting of the ministerial committee will, I am sure, contribute significantly to the atmosphere of co-operation and mutual understanding within which we can best hope to resolve the complex and difficult problems which from time to time arise between the world's two largest trading partners.

May I say that it was a particular pleasure to welcome United States cabinet members and their wives to the great city of Montreal and to have them visit Expo '67 in this centennial year. I wish in conclusion to thank my colleagues and the large number of Canadian officials who participated both in the preparatory work and in the meeting itself for their splendid co-operation.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) who led the Canadian delegation is relieved to know that this meeting is over. It is difficult to make any particular comments about the details because the minister has given us an over-all report on the various subjects the two delegations discussed.

I should just like to make an observation to the effect that I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce is modest in some respects when he says that the United States delegation was ably led, and then also reported that he led the Canadian delegation. I think he must have led the Canadian delegation as ably as the United States representative led the delegation from that country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: I was struck by the words the minister used when he said that the meeting was held with cordiality and good will. From reading the press reports I notice that the Americans were really put out, and said so in no uncertain terms to the Canadian delegation, about Canada's action in respect of the Mercantile Bank. I can only hope that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the other members of the delegation did not allow themselves to be browbeaten by the United States delegation.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that at some point the minister will enlighten the House of Commons and the Canadian people concerning just exactly what was accomplished at this meeting in Montreal, because he certainly has not told us this morning. He told us it was a very cordial meeting and that a number of matters were discussed. We were not even given a hint as to the result of the discussion.

Mr. Knowles: He spoke like Paul Martin.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I may say that the minister is an able pupil of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), and manages to do the same thing in fewer words.

I am interested in the comment he made about the energy resources of our two countries. Is one to take from that that the United States has some energy resources which they are prepared to contribute to a common pool? If so, I should be interested to know what they are. I stress this, Mr. Speaker, because of some disturbing reports and statements which have come from the United States of America, and which show that many people in that country regard the natural resources of Canada as much theirs as they are those of the Canadian people. I do not think the people of Canada would be prepared to accept that.

• (11:20 a.m.)

I gather that the two countries are still concerned about the problem of international liquidity. Perhaps the minister may be able to help his colleague, the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Sharp), in persuading some recalcitrant members of the Big Ten that there is a necessity for action.

I wish to conclude with this: I am concerned about the indication in the minister's statement that the principal concern of this government is in the export of raw materials from the Canadian economy. My concern was not lessened by an answer the minister gave me in committee a few days ago. I asked him if it was not the primary responsibility of the Canadian government to ensure the development of the Canadian economy, and the minister replied that that was one of their concerns, but not their primary concern. This gave me cause for grave misgivings.

I hope that at some time we shall be told specifically what was agreed on between the Canadian government members and their United States counterparts.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE BY CANADA OF ARAB REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is there any authenticity to the report which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning that Canada has agreed to accept 40,000 Arab refugees? If this report is correct can the Prime Minister enlarge on the matter. Can he tell us whether Canada will bear the full cost of this humanitarian action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows, he cannot ask about the accuracy of a press statement. He can ask a question directly. I am sure we can assume that the question has been asked directly.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I may be permitted to assume that the question was asked of me directly. I must answer it by saying that there is no foundation to the report on which this question was based.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Should the government feel motivated to take action such as this will the Prime Minister assure us that first, before any decision is made, the matter will be brought before the House of Commons for its deliberation?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the house will have an opportunity to discuss an important matter of this kind. I do not wish to give the impression that any decision on this matter of taking refugees is imminent. For one thing, the Arab states take a very unfavourable view toward other countries receiving refugees from that area, at this time. The matter must be arranged not only in co-operation with the government of Israel, where the refugees—or where a lot of them at least—are at the present time, but with the governments of the Arab states themselves.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The response of Arab refugees outside that area can only be one factor in dealing with the refugee problem. But there is no likelihood of a decision being made immediately with regard to this matter; it will require a great deal of negotiation on an international basis.

Mr. Starr: Would the government give an assurance that no decision will be made before the subject has been debated in the House of Commons?

Mr. Pearson: If the House of Commons were not sitting, and agreement was reached between all concerned that this would be an important step in dealing with the refugee problem, I am sure the hon. member would wish us to play our part. But I can assure him that if the house is sitting no decision would be reached until hon. members had been consulted.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Did I hear the Prime Minister correctly as saying that the governments of the Arab states will be consulted before any Arab refugees who are at present under the jurisdiction of Israel could come to Canada? Do not the people themselves have some say in the matter?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, but if refugees are in Arab territory, surely it is normal for the Arab states to be consulted and many of these refugees are there at the present time.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the government give consideration to means of making sure that any refugees of this nature who might come to Canada would be given adequate training immediately after their arrival, so that they would not face unemployment?

Mr. Pearson: Of course, if as part of an international plan we agreed to accept a quota of refugees of this kind we would have to take the responsibility for making it possible for them to take their places in Canadian society. This would require training in a great many cases.

EXTERNAL AID

MIDDLE EAST—FURTHER CONTRIBUTION TO UNRWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a related question for the Prime Minister. In view of the serious plight of refugees in the middle east and the announcement in the United Nations general assembly a couple of days ago that the United Kingdom has made an additional contribution of, if I remember correctly, £500,000 or $1.5 million to UNRWA, is the government giving consideration to making an additional Canadian contribution either in money or in kind to help deal with the immediate emergency in the Middle East?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, it was discussed yesterday by the cabinet and we have agreed to make an additional contribution in the light of the report which has just been received from the United Nations director-general of UNRWA outlining the immediate needs and perhaps the longer range requirements. I would prefer it if this matter were taken up on Monday when details of what the contribution is to be will be available.

GRAIN

WHEAT—FURTHER MEETINGS TO IMPLEMENT KENNEDY ROUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It relates to the meeting of the international wheat council held in London on June 19 and 20. Can the minister inform the house what arrangements were made for future meetings to implement the decisions of the Kennedy round?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask me this question. It was agreed that all members of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, whether or not they are members of the international wheat council, will be invited to participate in the negotiation of a new agreement. The new agreement will incorporate the provisions of the memorandum of agreement included in the Kennedy round. The international wheat council will convene the conference in co-operation with UNCTAD. The conference will be held in Rome at FAO headquarters and commence on July 12.

TRADE

FISHERIES—REDUCTION OF TARIFF TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a question and I am not sure whether it should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Minister of Fisheries, but perhaps the proper minister will endeavour to answer it. In view of the marketing problems presently faced by the Canadian fishing industry, brought about by the flooding of the American market by other countries in search of hard currency, have any representations been made to the United States government to reduce the tariff wall on Canadian processed fish, which would thereby help the Canadian fishing industry?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe I could answer that question. Yes, there have been representations made. This was one of the subjects discussed in the Kennedy round of negotiations, and I think the hon. member will find that some action will result.

INCLUSION OF MCBEAN COLLIERY IN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he in a position today to make the statement that the right hon. Prime Minister yesterday suggested he might make today, with reference to the representations he has been receiving from members of the house and the numerous telegrams he has been receiving from the locals of the United Mine Workers of America union with regard to the inclusion of the McBean colliery in the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can very rapidly repeat a few of the things I have already said and add a few more. The nationalization of the Dosco coal mines on Cape Breton Island is justified by the economic and social situation on the island, a situation which is of national concern. Pictou county, where the McBean colliery is located, is not in a similar situation. The economic and social situation there is not one of national concern. As a matter of fact in the last two or three years the Atlantic Development Board has made grants worth $14 million to that area, $12 million for a power plant at Trenton, $1.2 million for industrial development in the Stellarton area, $300,000 for water supply at the industr al park, $400,000 for general industrial building—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pepin: The area development agency—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I realize the minister got carried away with the sound of his own voice, but as a supplementary question may I ask him if he is aware that the unemployment rate in all the Atlantic provinces is twice the national average, despite any statement he may make?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is argumentative.

AIRPORTS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH CITY OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Further to the still controversial matter of the sale of the Saint John airport has the minister been able to arrange a meeting with the city of Saint John officials and, if so, when and where?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I have not yet been able to make these arrangements, but I am hoping to do so at a very early date. Perhaps I might be permitted to say that the government wants to take over this airport and, as I indicated the other day, there is no thought of any change in basic plans.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that this matter has been approved in principle and, if it is delayed, will work a tremendous hardship on the city of Saint John and even on the whole province of New Brunswick, will the minister recommend that this small amount be included in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would think, sir, I would be transgressing the rules of the house if I attempted to answer that question in any way.

WATER RESOURCES

SUGGESTED STUDY BY ENGINEERING BODY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question is based on a decision by an important group of Canadians who are concerned about Canada's natural resources. Has the minister received a brief from the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada urging a 15 year study of Canada's water resources, estimated to cost about $200 million? If so, would the minister inform the house of his response to these interesting proposals?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fail to see the immediate urgency of the question. I suggest to the hon. member that it ought to be placed on the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTED SHORTAGE OF BILINGUAL OFFICERS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General as minister responsible for the R.C.M.P.

In view of the numerous complaints from Quebec citizens visiting parliament hill that members of the R.C.M.P. on the hill cannot speak a word of French nor give information in French, could the minister investigate and insist that the R.C.M.P. commissioner station bilingual officers on the hill?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made representations which will undoubtedly be noted by the minister, but I do not think the question in its present form is in order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question so that it will be in order?

Mr. Speaker: Hardly.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATING WITH FOREIGN POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Lapointe has not yet swallowed his parking ticket.

I wish to put a question to the Minister of Justice. I would like to ask him, as a result of the speech delivered yesterday by a member of the provincial cabinet, Mr. Marcel Masse, of Quebec, stating that he would ensure through constitutional provisions the power of Quebec to negotiate in the field of external affairs, if he can tell the house whether there have been some negotiations with the provincial government to that effect and how the government intends to react following such a statement?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the text of the speech referred to by the hon. member for Lotbinière. If his report is correct—and I have no reason to doubt it—I am happy to note, on behalf of the government the admission that if the province of Quebec were to operate on the international level, this would require an amendment to the constitution, that is to say the present constitution does not allow such activities.

I have not received any representations asking for such an amendment, Mr. Speaker. If I do, I shall look carefully into them and I shall be glad, at the same time, to suggest to the provincial governments that the federal government would readily take over several matters coming under provincial jurisdiction as the central government is in a better position to deal with them.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING—LIQUIDITY IN RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement on the joint United States-Canada ministerial meeting and on liquidity in reserves. I am wondering if this is a special reserve set up as to the balance of payments between Canada and the United States. Is it something to bolster the International Monetary Fund, and is it in accordance with the principles set forth under that fund?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt if this question is in order at this time.

CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING—RELAXATION OF IMPORT QUOTAS ON CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on the report he gave this morning. Was there any indication given by the representatives from the United States that increased imports from Canada would be possible by eliminating or relaxing their import quotas, especially as they affect agricultural products?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we did, for example, have quite a lot to say about the import restrictions on cheddar cheese. The Minister of Agriculture made quite a case of that, and our counterparts in the United States have agreed to give that item favourable consideration. We discussed the broad sweep of agricultural products and the desire on both sides to have free trade. We also discussed closer consultations in order to prevent disturbing each other's market unduly, for example, by the early marketing of products that come on to the Canadian market before the appropriate season in Canada. There were other problems of that character, all of which were reviewed on a very friendly and constructive basis.

EDUCATION

WILLINGNESS OF GOVERNMENT TO SUPPORT NATIONAL COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. It concerns the proposed national council of education. Could the hon. lady advise the house whether she and her government are ready and willing in every way to support this proposed national council of education?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Well, Mr. Speaker, the proposal to set up a national office has been by the provincial governments only, and up to this date no approach has been made to the federal government. We believe, however, there is much to be gained from such an office, and will be very happy and eager to assist in any way we can.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can assure the house that the medicare program will carry on as planned in spite of statements made by doctors at the annual meeting of the C.M.A., and the fact that Dr. Dalgleish, who became famous at the time of the advent of medicare in Saskatchewan, is to take office as president on July 1, 1968?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question as asked is much too general in scope and should be placed on the order paper.

FINANCE

CARTER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In view of the rejection by the three prairie province premiers of the Carter commission recommendations, will the government undertake to place those recommendations before a joint parliamentary committee before any action is taken by the Minister of Finance on any part of that report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that these three premiers have rejected all the recommendations of the Carter commission. I listened to their spokesman, the premier of Manitoba, on television last night, and I received a telegram this morning from him on behalf of the three to the effect that they view with concern the apparent haste with which the federal government proposes to implement the recommendations. I do not know where they got any indication that there was going to be any undue haste.

An hon. Member: Just imagine that.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps they assumed, and this would be a normal assumption, that there might be haste because this government always acts quickly on these matters.

Mr. Starr: That was during the 60 days.

Mr. Pearson: If they have any view that we are going to act with undue haste on this matter, there is no ground for such fears.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN FORMULA TO DETERMINE MORTGAGE RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, who is responsible for housing. In view of the probable increase in N.H.A. mortgage rates from 7 to 7½ per cent, and in view of the serious decline in housing starts so far this year, does the government intend to change the formula of determining N.H.A. rates to encourage an increase in housing starts to meet the housing crisis today.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the first place the premise on which the question is based is completely wrong. There has been an appreciable increase in housing starts this year, notwithstanding the fact that housing starts were at a low level during the first quarter. We are already well ahead of last year and the increase in starts is continuing. So far as the interest rate level on N.H.A. or guaranteed loans is concerned, this in my opinion, represents one of the factors that has contributed to the substantial increase in starts during recent weeks.

Mr. Gilbert: Will the Minister of Labour agree to refer the estimates of C.M.H.C. to the standing committee on housing, urban development and public works?

Mr. Nicholson: No, Mr. Speaker.

FORESTRY

LIABILITY RESULTING FROM FATAL ACCIDENT AT LABORATORY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, I should like to address my question to the acting minister. Has the minister caused an investigation to be made into the recent fatal accident at the forestry department research laboratory to determine government liability, if any?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that investigation is going on. I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the minister and he may have something to say about this on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED SURVEY OF ELEVATOR SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should direct this question to Your Honour or to the Minister of Public Works, but I hope you will not consider it to be a theoretical one. When this house takes recess will Your Honour or the Minister of Public Works, whoever has jurisdiction, have an investigation and survey made in respect of the elevator system in this house? I think most hon. members and the staff of the house would agree that during the week many hours of valuable time are lost because of this system, and that something should be done to determine how to improve it.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the hon. member's question.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or, in his absence, which I regret sincerely, to his parliamentary secretary. Since that hon. gentleman does not appear to be in the house perhaps I should address it to anyone who is acting on his behalf. Twice during the past week I have been assured by the parliamentary assistant that everything is wonderful in Greece, so wonderful in fact that a Greek shepherd does not want to return to that country because everything is so beautiful there. May I ask whether that is the same Greece which on Wednesday of this week published an act which gives the army-backed government the power to sack university professors at will, and is it the same Greece which has not to date restored the freedom of the press?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my opinion this is not a question, it is a speech. The hon. member knows that the rules do not permit members to make speeches at this time, however short they may be.

[Later:]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this question is of some urgency. I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether the Greek shepherd is being deported this evening in order to make room for a Greek flying in here next Thursday evening?

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION THAT MEETINGS OF JOINT COMMITTEE BE RESUMED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the house leader and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will speak to one or other of his colleagues, asking them to promote an organization meeting of the joint committee on immigration, so that the committee can make plans to report on the various suggestions as to changes in immigration laws which were made by the committee last session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CENTENNIAL TELEVISION SERIES ON PROCESS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he can tell us what progress if any has been made on the C.B.C.'s intention as a centennial series to film the working of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I speak subject to correction, but I think this matter at the moment is in the hands of the house leaders for discussion with Your Honour.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF C.L.R.B.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister tell us whether he received recently the report of the Canada Labour Relations Board concerning the natural bargaining units and does he intend to release that report soon?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have received no such report.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY, N.S.—GOVERNMENT ACTION FOLLOWING LAY-OFFS AT STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. I should like to ask that hon. gentleman what encouraging news he may have this morning for the 1,100 men, and their families, who have been laid off at the Sydney steel plant in the last few months. What action does the government contemplate to assist these people who have problems only the unemployed can appreciate?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister undertook that the government would make a statement on this matter early next week.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR SOLUTION OF STRIKE OF PACIFIC COAST FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to what definitely is an urgent matter. It is based on three phone calls I have had recently from Vancouver. Is the Minister of Fisheries still willing to use his good offices to bring the fishermen's strike on the Pacific coast to a satisfactory conclusion as soon as possible?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, my position in this regard has not changed. The latest word I received just this morning would indicate that there is still hope of a settlement. I hope this settlement will take place before Monday of next week.

WATER RESOURCES

OTTAWA, ONT.—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEASURES TO CORRECT POLLUTION IN CAPITAL AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines, Energy and Resources whether he is prepared to make an interim report on the negotiations that are taking place between the cities of Ottawa, Hull and his department concerning water pollution?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I failed to understand the question.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion this question is repetitious of questions asked yesterday. At that time I suggested they might be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

MARKERS TO COMMEMORATE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the government undertake as an immediate federal government centennial project the placing of appropriate markers at either the birth places or the grave sites of all the fathers of our confederation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to look into that matter.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture, and it has to do with the highly vaunted task force that we have been told about. Can the minister say whether he has a target date for the establishment of this group, and whether it will be before the middle of this year?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have seen many people concerned with the task force and are hoping to make an appointment very shortly.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Labour for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, vote No. 1. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 256 of the bluebook. The details are listed on page 258.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $1,972,000.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, in presenting the estimates of the Department of Labour for consideration by the committee today, I am very pleased to be able to do so in a climate that is much more tranquil, much less volatile than that which permeated my introductory remarks when my estimates came before the committee about this time last year. Though the present condition may prove to be merely a lull before a new escalation of activity in the federal industrial relations field, I must say that this lull has proven most valuable both to me and to my department. It has provided us with a badly needed breathing spell, because the first major strike broke out within a matter of days of my taking office and that atmosphere continued right up until midnight December 31, 1966. However, I think we have been able to use this breathing spell to advantage and put it to good use in realigning our thinking and our program directions.

I believe that my department's ability to cope with problems has increased and that we are now in a position to make a much more positive contribution to improving the environment of the ever-changing Canadian work world than we were a year or so ago. I think it is quite safe to say that all, who are wise enough to learn, did learn a great deal from our industrial relations experiences of 1966, which the record will show was the most difficult year in the history of Canadian labour relations, starting off with 35 work stoppages on January 1, either strikes or lay-offs then in progress, and 594 additional stoppages occurring during the remainder of the year. The stoppages, I might say, which occurred in industries under federal jurisdiction drew most attention and, perhaps naturally, made a very wide impact on the country.

Even though these particular stoppages represented only 7 per cent of the total number, they accounted for 20 per cent of the time loss during the year. It is not my intention today to go into a detailed accounting of the myriad complex and interrelated factors which underlined the difficult year 1966. This I have done on several occasions both in and out of the house. But there are a few major aspects of the 1966 industrial climate that in my opinion bear restating.

When you have a period of great general industrial prosperity reaching its peak, coincident with a number of two and three year old major collective bargaining agreements coming up for re-negotiation, it should not be surprising to anyone to find vigorous industrial relations activity. When you add to this an almost non-existent unemployment situation, and that was the situation in 1966—indeed, we had a great shortage of skilled workers in many essential fields—the industrial barometer would certainly tend to rise even more rapidly.

Is it in any way peculiar, therefore, that with all these signs of continuing prosperity around them, the unions, who as they saw it had fallen two or three years behind during their collective bargaining negotiations, demanded what they said was a more equitable share of this new prosperity? I might ask this question: Is there not more or less general agreement in Canada and in the democratic countries of the world today that the employee should benefit in relation to the economic success of the venture in which he has invested his skills, in the same way as other types of investors benefit, the owners and the managers? Certainly the managers benefit when they do a good job, and expect substantial increases for their efforts. I feel the same way about employees. It is a question of degree, I suggest, in each case. But rather than go further into the climate of 1966 I would like to deal briefly with some of the lessons that have been learned and some of the misconceptions that have become evident out of that period of severe testing.

After many immediate outcries—and for a period of several months last year we were getting them several times a week, sometimes several times a day—proposals and counter-proposals throughout the whole year, and after a calm re-examination in the interim, it is still evident that the basic concepts underlying free collective bargaining in Canada and other true democratic countries remain beyond serious challenge. Any system devised for the sharing of economic benefits between the employer and the employee must be compatible with the basic social and economic tenets of the society in which it is to work. Freedom to choose, freedom to accept or reject, indeed even freedom to be wrong, is a basic value in Canadian life. Thus any system for sharing the munificence of that life which does not contain those freedoms is both incompatible and unworkable.

Yet such group freedom can never be total within an active, organized society. Its scope must be limited, as we saw on one or two occasions in this house last year. This group freedom must be limited to an extent acceptable to society. In Canada this society is a self-disciplining one, a democratic one retaining the ultimate right, if necessary, to limit group freedoms by its judgment in applying a comprehensive and final totality of all factors. This in turn places the clear responsibility for self-discipline on the individual and on particular groups within the society.

• (12 noon)

From the experiences of 1966 it has become shatteringly clear that those in positions of influence, not only in labour and industry but also in government, must make every possible effort to contribute to and build a new environment within which a free and responsible collective bargaining system can flourish. If suitable conditions are not prepared for the encouragement of these new attitudes, how can the industrial relations community expect to deal with other crucial matters concerning the future which were borne upon us by some of the experiences of last year?

Mr. Chairman, I must say that there is ample evidence that the labour force in Canada, now over 7.5 million strong, is rapidly beginning to change its basic composition. It is already beginning to alter materially its industrial occupational and geographic structure. There is a steady and great shifting from the traditional goods producing industries to the rapidly expanding service industries which are characteristic of today's bountiful society.

There is also an influx of youth with more education and with a new and different set of values, with no fears of unemployment, no history of any industrial depression and with a highly developed sense of mobility. It is evident that the provisions of collective bargaining will continue to be extended to an ever-increasing number and diversity of citizens including white collar and professional persons. There is every indication that the growth of union membership in Canada will most likely maintain its recent level of between 6 per cent and 7 per cent per annum and indeed might well escalate more rapidly over the next few years. In this connection the house will recall that by its own action this parliament has added 200,000 members to the collective bargaining and union community in the form of the federal civil service. The impact of technological change will continue to be a growing concern to both management and labour in the resolution of the problems caused by its impacts on employees and efficiency.

Another factor that must be taken into consideration for labour relations is that during the first quarter of 1967 immigration rose by 50 per cent compared with the same period last year, which in itself was the second highest immigration year in Canada's history. It is reasonable to assume, based on our past experience, that these welcome new citizens who have entered the labour force will bring with them attitudes and concepts from their own native lands. An increasing number of the men who are active in the labour field come from other lands and bring with them the benefit of their experience.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Another interesting factor is that during the fiscal year 1966-67 the number of people working as employees in the non-farm sector of the economy increased by nearly 5.5 per cent. This was the fourth successive year of increases in excess of 5 per cent, a remarkable record considering that population growth rates have averaged less than 3 per cent annually. In the process of making these large increases in their work forces, employers have absorbed the more readily available labour. The surplus situation which existed a few years ago in 1958, 1959, 1961, has virtually disappeared in most areas in Canada, although, regrettably, there are one or two areas where the situation today is not good.

Another method of attempting to comprehend the Canadian labour situation lies through examination of the more general statistical measures, that is, of the developments in the labour field. These general figures show clearly that in the last year there were very large increases in employment and in the size of the labour force, with relative stability of the unemployment rate throughout the whole period. That rate is now just under 4 per cent, but for some time it was approximately 3.3 per cent.

The weekly pay of most workers in Canada also substantially increased during 1966. It seems probable that the industrial composite figure of average weekly wages and salaries, the most general measure we have of average weekly earnings in Canada, will in the future consistently exceed $100 weekly. Labour income has gained very substantially because gains in this figure are determined by the sizes of increases in employment and in average weekly earnings.

As I have said, the important job for the immediate future is to learn from the happenings of last year in an attempt to determine the extent to which change could be made to advantage. Thus, it is in this environment of spectacular movement and changes, in the industrial theatre to some of which I have referred, that our new and reorganized Department of Labour has set its course for the future.

Hon. members will recall that some concern was expressed in the house last year that as a result of the redistribution of certain functions between the Department of Labour and the Department of Manpower and Immigration the former might have a tendency to fade away. I can assure the house that nothing is farther from the truth and that one minister could not have handled the two jobs last year.

The Department of Labour is now re-examining its position vis-à-vis the pressing realities of today's world of work and is setting about its clearly defined objectives with enthusiasm and with all the resources at its disposal. The ongoing objective of this new Department of Labour is to improve continuously the environment in which Canadians work in such vital areas as their remuneration, their employment standards, their safety, their employee-employer relationships and their individual human rights.

The major structural reorganization of the department to meet these new goals has, for the most part, been completed over the past year. Under the deputy minister its three main programs, labour relations, labour standards and benefits and research and development, are headed by two assistant deputy ministers and a director general of high calibre and great experience, all of them with both labour and industrial backgrounds. I might say that I think we have also been fortunate in having attracted to the department other senior program officers who bring with them not only great skill in their specialties but also the benefits of new and different viewpoint from the outside. Recruitment of more such men and women of experience will continue and will in fact be stepped up.

Last year at estimate time I pointed out that one of the most significant new developments in the whole labour relations field was the passage by this house of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. In the administration of this new code, along with the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, much has been accomplished, although much still remains to be done. We are making encouraging progress.

As I said in December last, the enactment of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code by parliament at that time was also an important achievement. Up until December 1966, there had not been a statute of general application to industries and undertakings under federal jurisdiction having as its primary purpose the ensuring of safe working conditions for all employees. No reference could be made to the effective date of the new legislation until the legislation had been passed, although a great deal of planning and thinking had been done. I might say, however, that my department has undertaken an entirely new and vital role, that of safeguarding the health and well-being of a large segment of the Canadian working force. Considerable planning and other preparatory work is already under way with the provinces and industry with a view, I might say, to having the legislation proclaimed and in full force and effect before the end of this year.

My department also administers both the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act and the Female Employees Equal Pay Act. These two acts, which are similar to legislation in the provinces, cover all businesses and undertakings within federal jurisdiction and the department is in the process of implementing a broad-based educational program to provide a leadership role for all jurisdictions.

In the international field Canada currently is studying three important international instruments adopted some five months ago by the general assembly of the United Nations. These include the covenant on economic, social and cultural rights, the covenant on civil and political rights, and an optional protocol to the covenant on civil and political rights.

Next year has been designated international year for human rights and officials of my department have attended the planning conference for Canadian participation and subsequent meetings.

I should like to say a word about the conciliation and arbitration branch of the department which was of prime importance during the year 1966 and is likely to be in the months ahead. This branch administers the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. The principles involved in the act, I might say, are designed to develop maximum initiative by labour and management in the regulation of their own affairs, that is, without government intervention, consistent, of course, with government intervention if and when this becomes necessary in the interests of the public. In the reorganization of the industrial relations branch which took place in 1966, the department established the employee representation branch to serve as the administrative agency of the Canada Labour Relations Board.

Directly related to our responsibility to assist in the improvement of the labour relations environment is the department's labour-management consultation program. This program seeks to encourage joint consultation with a view to lessening crises and conflicts which sometimes lead to unnecessary work stoppages. Our work has been rewarded by a noticeable upturn of interest on the part of the progressive industries and unions. I believe it would interest hon. members to know that currently 2,158 labour-management committees are in active operation across Canada, covering a total of more than 631,000 employees.

It was the clear realization that the issues to be resolved in the future will be of increasing complexity which led to the government's decision to establish the task force to which reference has been made of late more than once in this chamber. However, I think we were wise—and I am sure hon. members will agree that it was far better to do this than to take serious steps during a period of continuing crises like we had in 1966—to establish a task force of very able men with a competent group of advisers to study the problems and major issues patiently, capably and comprehensively until satisfactory proposals are arrived at. My department is assisting and will of course continue to assist and co-operate with the task force.

I should now like to refer briefly to what has come out of the Freedman inquiry. The recognition in the Freedman report of the fact that essentially no plan can be accepted which would slow down the rate of technological advancement or the freedom of discovery, of course, is the immediate problem to be solved by the railways and the brotherhoods. In this specific area of direct federal interest I should like to say quite frankly that in my opinion, and certainly in the opinion of the officials of my department who have been following the matter very carefully, both the railway union involved and the C.N.R. management are entitled to very great credit for their recent demonstration of responsibility in coping with the dislocations as a result of technological advancement. In essence it has now been mutually agreed by the railway and the unions—and this is incorporated in an agreement—that in those cases where technological advancement would require the relocation of employees, the company will give the unions not less than 90 days' notice thereof and not less than 60 days' notice where relocation is not expected. In so notifying, the company will also include all pertinent details for the information of the union. Here is a concrete example of how the two industrial partners are honestly trying to work out an improved mechanism to meet the new conditions of today.

I think this underlines a very important point. Most changes, technological and otherwise, are of a manageable proportion, but each has its own particular characteristics and requirements. Technological changes often involve a relatively small number of people. This sort of problem does not lend itself to imposed governmental solutions which, by their very nature, must be comprehensive and general. Wherever and whenever possible the government role should be restricted, in my opinion, to assisting the private sector to make its own adjustments. That is exactly what the unions and the railways have done in the matter of run-throughs.

In line with the pressing need to take progressive steps to improve generally the efficiency of the collective bargaining process, the department is energetically studying the feasibility of setting up facilities for the training of more potential conciliators and mediators. That in my opinion, also is a forward-looking step. It is obvious in the industrial relations area that when you have highly trained and experienced negotiators to represent the union and highly trained and experienced negotiators to represent the company, each having very strong views, in order to be effective the mediators and conciliators assigned by the government ought to have some professional and training background so that they can bring the highest level of skill to bear objectively and realistically on the complex problems involved.

Hon. members will recall that the Department of Labour was host to—in a large measure its meetings took place in this chamber—the regional I.L.O. conference in September 1966, which was attended by over 250 representatives of unions, employer organizations and governments. This regional I.L.O. conference, the first ever to have been held in Canada, provided an excellent opportunity for the exchange of views of important matters which confront various countries in the labour field.

I might say that in addition to what it is doing in the field of inquiry and in the field of the training program for mediators and conciliators, the department is also expanding its labour councellor service abroad in order to improve the flow of labour information from overseas.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I should like to deal briefly now, Mr. Chairman, with the specific votes. The committee is being asked to approve $12,811,000 for the Department of Labour, of which $3,426,000 is for statutory items. Attention is directed to the new vote structure which is being used this year. This form of presentation is an endeavour to meet the Glassco commission recommendation that the estimates be prepared in such a form that the votes will more clearly describe the purposes of the expenditures. I hope that we have achieved this by dividing the activities of the Department of Labour into the three rather distinct programs of activity to which I have referred—labour relations, labour standards and benefits, research and development, with a fourth for departmental administration to encompass general over-all support services.

As was pointed out by your predecessor in the chair, sir, the various activities which are covered under each vote appear on pages 258 to 273 of the blue book. It will be noted that there is an over-all increase over last year of roughly $1,539,000, of which $1,024,700 or roughly two thirds is under vote 10, labour standards and benefits. This increase is concerned primarily with the administrative costs associated with the new Canada Labour (Safety) Code passed by parliament in December, 1966. A further substantial increase is associated with the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. The enforcement of this legislation involves more staff resources and an increase in the salary allocation. This becomes necessary if we are to make certain that the provisions of the act are lived up to.

In conclusion may I say that I hope the proclamation of the new labour safety code before the end of this year and the application of the principles of the code to government services will result not only in a saving of dollars but in a saving of human suffering also.

The man-year establishment for the department for 1967 will be 850 persons compared with 669 in 1966-67. The total payroll cost will be under $5 million for the fiscal year.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister a question? Does he intend to deal with his responsibilities under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation separately?

Mr. Nicholson: I think it would be more convenient, if the committee is agreeable, to deal first with the Department of Labour estimates, then with the Unemployment Insurance Commission estimates and then with the estimates of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Grégoire: May I also ask a question?

[Translation]

May I also put a question to the minister? I should like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) whether he also intends to state his views concerning the dispute between the Canada Labour Relations Board and the C.N.T.U., with regard to natural bargaining units. Does the minister intend to state his views on that subject?

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: I think the hon. member knows, as do other hon. members, that parliament by an act has delegated certain judicial responsibilities to a tribunal, the Canada Labour Relations Board. That board is carrying on its functions. The government should not and does not dictate to this board which carries on its own work. Unless and until parliament changes the act, that board must discharge its responsibilities as it thinks proper.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton West—I beg your pardon, the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps that little slip may be permitted as we have an expanded football league, with Hamilton and Ottawa. Perhaps the schedule is a little off.

Mr. Knowles: The chairman has had too much sun.

Mr. Lambert: That may be so. I apologize to the committee for the absence of my colleagues, the hon. members for Ontario and Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes. They would normally be taking an active part in this debate. As you know, sir, we have a leadership convention looming. The hon. member for Ontario is a candidate and he had pre-existing engagements. The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes is a convention co-chairman, and the convention committee is now in Vancouver. Perhaps the hon. lady who is now Secretary of State will recall that her party went through this necessary procedure. The representatives of her party made remarks similar to mine when they were holding a leadership convention. Undoubtedly it will happen again that her party will hold another convention. This is one of the facts of political life and of party organization, and it is part and parcel of government. Anybody who wishes to ignore it is merely putting his head in the sand.

The year 1967, so far as labour relations that come under federal jurisdiction are concerned, has been more peaceful than the year 1966. I do not know that Canada can stand too many years such as 1966 following too closely. We have reached the month of June, of course, but it may be that the latter part of the year will not be as peaceful as the first half has been. Whether the first half of the year has been peaceful because those coming under federal jurisdiction have been imbued with the sentiments of the centennial year I do not know. Their colleagues who operate under provincial jurisdiction do not share those sentiments in some provinces where, unfortunately, we are experiencing a continual turmoil in labour relations. My simple comment on that score is that this continuing striking at the slightest pretence, this wildcat striking, boils down essentially to holding up the public to ransom. We saw last year that people were becoming more than fed up with being held up to ransom. I am not addressing these remarks specifically to management or labour but rather to both, and I say to governments in certain jurisdictions that the public patience is being sorely tried by this continuing disruption. The public pays for it.

There will be ever-increasing demands for compulsory arbitration. Settlements will be imposed. In saying this I admit that compulsory arbitration is not the end that should be sought because imposed settlements are not necessarily the best to deal with the situation. Whether from the point of view of the employees or the employers, an imposed settlement is always fraught with difficulties. The public of Canada, as in the United States, has come to the point of losing patience with those who in many instances are selfishly motivated and whose motives are not directly connected with the just demands of employees.

We have seen some nonsenses perpetrated in this country in this connection, nonsenses which occur because certain persons are power hungry. Because of the tie between the general membership of the unions and those who direct those unions, the men have no choice but to follow the instructions of their officers, and out they go. Still, it is the public which suffers. I think it is time wise persons in management, in labour and in the government recognized the storm signals that are appearing. At present the general public is quite prepared to allow for complete freedom of negotiation and for assisted negotiation in cases where government mediators are at hand. All this would be wiped away and compulsory arbitration, with all its rigidity, would be imposed if public sympathy were lost.

We see protests against injunctions. There may be some abuse of this process but on the other hand there are abuses on the union side, mass picketing, for example, by persons who are not really connected with the labour dispute. This is using a massive club against persons who also have rights. Management has rights as well as labour. If there is abuse by either side this will, of course, bring restrictions.

I personally cannot condone criticism of the courts or the personal criticism directed against judges, who understand the law, just because some people feel they are being restrained by the law from following their natural inclinations and that the law therefore is bad and they should be able to break it with impunity. This is nonsense. The law applies in this field as it does in criminal matters and no man can decide whether the law is good or bad on the basis of whether he is being constrained from doing something he would like to do. The robber or the murderer may not consider that the Criminal Code is right, but then he does not assert that the law is bad because it prevents him from committing a hold-up or a murder. The example I use may be extreme. Someone may suggest it is wrong to use the comparison between the Criminal Code and an injunction in a labour dispute, but I believe a parallel does exist in the argument. I do not think the action taken by certain individuals and groups with regard to injunctions is to be praised or even condoned. They dislike them. They are free to object to the principle, but they are not free to break the law as part of their objection.

The hon. member for Lapointe raised a question in connection with the Canada Labour Relations Board and the C.N.T.U. There is a difference of opinion. I cannot accept all the arguments that are advanced by the C.N.T.U. I come from a province where people have just as much right as anybody else in this country. But the result of what is proposed would be the utmost fragmentation of labour negotiations. We might as well set up ten Canada labour relations boards under the act if certain arguments were to be accepted. Admittedly some adjustments could be made, and I think they should be made. There is the question of language to be considered when it comes to representations made before the board. I would certainly ask the minister to direct his attention to this aspect.

In his reply the minister used the argument: there is an act, there is a board, and the government will not interfere. But if there are grievances, and I think there are legitimate grievances, it is incumbent on the government to propose the necessary amendments to the legislation which would modify the constitution of the board and its procedures, not merely adopt the attitude of Pontius Pilate and wash its hands of the problem. That will not dispel it.

Mr. Nicholson: On a question of privilege, with all due respect to the hon. gentleman I do not think he could have heard the question which was put to me. I was replying to a specific question put to me by an hon. member. I certainly do not disagree with the hon. gentleman's expression of opinion right now.

Mr. Lambert: I would like the minister to have advanced that statement as an argument, not as a question of privilege. I did not suggest that the minister was seeking to emulate Pontius Pilate at all in his reply. What I had in mind was a general attitude. Not all hon. members who are present here are fully conscious of the details and the background of the quarrel and they will continue to be uninformed unless they are given some explanation of the problems which have arisen and the difficulties which are encountered in connection with this issue. I am not asking the minister to make a pronouncement as to who is right or who is wrong. But certainly he should bring us up to date by telling us what difficulties have arisen in connection with the Canada Labour Relations Board.

I wish to turn now to consideration of another matter, the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. I recall that during the passage of that bill I and many of my hon. friends, as well as some hon. members on the government side, raised certain very valid objections to what seemed to be a dogmatic and stubborn approach by the then minister to the application on a general basis of the 40-hour week and the question of whether permits for overtime could be obtained in the case of emergency. I indicated to the minister that there were some industries to which this rigid limitation of hours of work within a week could not possibly be applied unless they were to be loaded with most fantastic costs and most difficult situations.

There was some recognition of this difficulty by provision in the act for deferments, but the axe was intended to fall some day. The minister never replied with respect to the problems of the oil and gas industry and related supply industries, where for example at the present time, in the Rainbow lake and Zama lake areas of northwestern Alberta, development is taking place very close to the boundaries of British Columbia and the Northwest Territories. As long as these firms operate in the province of Alberta they do not come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, but immediately their operations cross provincial boundaries, whether in the trucking of pipe or conveyance of goods or even in the case of workers moving across boundaries from their camps to drilling sites, then the code does apply.

I defy the minister or any of his officials to indicate how the code will apply to a firm moving in crews to drill sites or to exploration sites say in wintertime when the crews may have to travel for seven to ten hours from their camps. These men work a long stint when they get to the sites and then come out for relief. The same thing applies when moving in loads of drill pipe. The truckloads go in, are delivered, and then trucks must be brought out. It is often impossible to accomplish all this in a 40-hour or 48-hour stint.

Besides, many men will not undertake these jobs unless they are guaranteed 60 to 70 hours work. It is isolated work; otherwise these men work under good conditions. In addition, their lives are predicated on a certain higher standard of living earned during a part of the year, and they refuse to work unless they can be guaranteed long hours and consequently higher pay.

The minister knows as well as I do the conditions that applied to the Peace river dam construction and the high wages that were being paid. Throughout western Canada representatives of the contracting firms and of the British Columbia government went around guaranteeing hours of work far in excess of those specified in the act simply because of the isolated nature of the work and the fact that the men could not move their families to live near them. The oil development in Alberta, in northeastern British Columbia and in the Northwest Territories is becoming farther and farther removed from the centres of population. It is ludicrous to say that families will follow these developments in all circumstances because of the absence of schools, hospitals and other reasons. The men who go out to do this work in wintertime—the drilling must take place during the winter months because of muskeg conditions—are going to insist upon these long hours of work at high wage rates and no legislation is going to force them to work less. Therefore I think there must be a degree of flexibility which is not now apparent.

I want to hear from the minister in this regard. Remember, once a firm starts working in an interprovincial area and is caught by the labour standards act it cannot allocate its crews so far as scales of pay and working hours are concerned in that particular work and then have different standards for the rest of its employees who may be doing work strictly within one province. In this context I am thinking of some of the more extensive operations of heavy trucking firms in Alberta who haul drill rigs, pipe, bunkhouses and other kinds of equipment. Are they going to have certain of their personnel covered by Alberta legislation and the remainder who cross provincial boundaries covered by other regulations under the federal act? How could a firm maintain equitable management-employee relations in such circumstances?

Many operators in the oil industry have approached me with respect to the difficult conditions under which they are being asked to operate. These are impossible conditions. As I said, it seems to me that the labour standards act was designed for nice cozy factory operations in central Canada but so far as our development industries farther afield are concerned, which may be caught by this act, somebody was out to lunch, so to speak, and it should not apply.

We must also remember that the products of these industries go into a very competitive market. The cost of production of commodities has become a very serious problem to Canada. Not only have we got higher transportation costs. Higher costs have been imposed on the trucking industry as a result of this act, but there are higher costs elsewhere. For what benefit? The men involved want to work longer but they are not permitted to do so. Thus we are driving up costs to the point where some people are saying it is not worth the candle. Judgment must be exercised in regard to some of the standards that we may set. If the product will not be sold at the end of the line then it is useless to say that our people will be employed. Canadian business is not in existence merely for the purpose of stockpiling.

I want to ask some questions with regard to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but since the minister indicated, and I agree with what he said, that we should defer questions on it until a later point today, I will content myself by indicating one area to which I hope he will address his remarks. I refer to the provision under the National Housing Act whereby the corporation may make loans to companies or individuals who hold blocks of C.M.H.C. mortgages. I ask, on what terms? It would appear as though the costs of these loans may be as high as those of loan factors. Certain difficulties have arisen as a result of this type of financing. I would like to have some elaboration on that point.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Labour gave the committee an interesting sermon a few minutes ago. He spelled out his belief that both labour and management have the fullest freedom to pursue their legitimate interests in a free society. It is a belief with which we all agree. I only wish that the speeches the minister made across the country throughout the last year had contained the same argument. I am going to deal with that point in a few moments, but I think I would be remiss if I did not comment on the interesting remarks of the first speaker for the official opposition, the hon. member for Edmonton West.

The hon. member for Edmonton West made a speech in which on every issue with which he dealt and which divides labour and management he wound up on the side of management. He came out for compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Lambert: I did not.

Mr. Orlikow: He is shaking his head that he did not but if one reads his speech in Hansard one will see that the context in which it was given would so indicate.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, it is fair that I should rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is absolutely misquoting me. I did not say I was in favour of compulsory arbitration. I said there was a danger that we were heading toward it and that there were some very grave inequities in respect of compulsory arbitration. I certainly did not advocate it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I could hardly misquote the hon. member because I did not quote him at all. The hon. member who talks, as he has just done again, about the fact that we are moving toward compulsory arbitration did not say that he disapproves of it. I think the record will speak for itself, and I drew the inference that he was not opposed to compulsory arbitration.

Similarly, the hon. member spoke about the need for respect for our laws. I got the impression that only labour people on occasion ignore the laws. We did not hear about the cases of large companies and others in this country which have been guilty of firing people because they have participated in union activities or in organizing unions. This is a practice which is contrary to the law.

We did not hear the hon. member express any opinion about the use of ex parte injunctions which are granted against labour unions without representatives of those unions being present. We did hear an argument from the hon. member regarding the difficulties in enforcing the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and the 40-hour week provision. In my opinion, where there is a division between management and labour in respect of these matters the hon. member has taken the side of management. I think the record will show that to be so.

I do want to talk about what I think has been an unfortunate practice of the minister in the last few months, if not in the last year. The minister has been making a series of speeches across the country and I will deal with two examples in which he indicated, as did the hon. member for Edmonton West, that because of labour difficulties and strikes we may be moving toward some form of compulsory arbitration. The minister made a speech on June 17, 1967 in Vancouver to the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and I should like to read one sentence from that speech. He said:

> There is abundant evidence—and not only in the Freedman report—that our present laws and procedures are not adequate to deal with all of today's industrial relations problems.

If they are not adequate I should like to ask what the implication is if not that we may be moving toward a form of compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. There are any number of alternatives that arise from that part of my remarks. There is no reference there to compulsory arbitration. If the hon. member will only be fair enough to read the whole speech it will be seen that there is no such reference.

Mr. Orlikow: There may be a number of alternatives, but I think it is the responsibility of the minister, if he is not in favour of compulsory arbitration or any form of it, to spell that out at some point.

In May the minister made a speech in Ottawa to the Ontario Mechanical Contractors Association. In anticipation of the minister getting up again to say that I am inferring things which he did not mean, I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in Canadian Transport, the official publication of one of the large Canadian unions, the C.B. of R.T. I will read a couple of paragraphs to indicate how that union assessed the minister's speech. They refer to it in this way:

> It took the form of strong criticism of strikes, and a veiled warning, that unless a better method of settling industrial disputes was found, government intervention and the imposition of compulsory arbitration on a much broader scale were inevitable.

That is how the editor of this union publication assessed the minister's speech. The editorial goes on to quote from the minister's speech and states:

> He argued that, when unions resort to strikes, they "emphasize their own inadequacies...their inability to persuade."
> He added that "there must be a better way—there has to be a better way!"

A strike is a difficult thing for everybody but it is more difficult for the worker who, for every day he is on strike, does not get paid. Despite what some members may think, workers do not easily decide to go on strike and they are not coerced to go on strike. If there have been more strikes in the last year or two than in earlier years we have to ask ourselves why. Why do workers take the ultimate step of going on strike? I think the reasons are very obvious to anyone who reads the financial sections of daily newspapers or the Financial Post. They will realize that the workers who go on strike can read the annual financial reports and know that for the last two or three years the profits of companies large and small, but particularly large corporations, have been increasing at a tremendous rate. The workers take the very simple view that when there is an increase in productivity and profits they are entitled to their fair share.

Workers also take the view that when there are technological changes and automation they have a right not to featherbed or to be paid for doing nothing but to be consulted and to sit down with management to ensure that the effects of automation and technological change will be implemented in a fair way. A few years ago there was a stoppage in the operations of our railways which led to the government appointing Mr. Justice Freedman to look into the matter and make recommendations. We received an excellent report but where is that report now? It is gathering dust in the files of the labour department.

Numerous requests have been made by labour organizations for government action through legislation. They have been met with the very bland answer that these questions are being studied. If the workers get tired of that answer and resort to strike action on occasion we ought not to be surprised. What surprises me is that the minister and his department do not seem to understand the situation and in my opinion are becoming, unduly alarmed about strikes, which I believe are an integral part of the democratic right of workers in a democratic society. May I call it one o'clock.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Isabelle): Order. It being one o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Labour, vote No. 1.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, in my remarks just before the lunch break I expressed the opinion that the number of strikes we had in Canada last year was not, if one considers the reasons for them, in my opinion very serious. I said that the government and others who are implying the possibility of changes in labour legislation and the possibility of compulsory arbitration are misreading the signs and misunderstanding the reasons for the strikes. They are really not getting at the root of the problem.

One of the reactions of the government has been the appointment of a task force to study labour-management relations. The Minister of Labour on December 2, 1966, as can be found at page 10646 of Hansard, referred to this task force and its purposes in the following terms:

> —the Prime Minister has set up a task force to study the problems and to make recommendations on what, if any, changes should be made in the existing procedures.

I want to put on the record now, so there will be no misunderstanding now or in the future, that I personally—and I know I speak for a rather substantial number of people who are much more intimately involved with labour-management relationships than I am and who are concerned with leadership in the labour movement—am disturbed about the task force, its personnel, the tremendous scope of the work it proposes to do, the length of time the task force will inevitably take, the expense that will be entailed, and the lack of what I consider to be any practical results.

Let me give my reasons for saying this and outline what I see as the difficulties. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I want to make this statement publicly so there will be no misunderstanding. I am speaking for myself but I know others feel as I do. I am very sceptical about the chairman of the task force, Dean Woods. Dean Woods has been heading a joint labour-management committee studying the problems of labour and management in the province of Manitoba. This study has been carried on for some three years. For three years or more the labour movement in Manitoba has been concerned about the problem of injunctions. It has been concerned about the problem of its legal status as a result of legislation that made labour unions legal entities which could be sued. It has been concerned about the fact that workers are still being fired for helping to organize unions in the province. It has been concerned about the existing legislation and the administration of the act in Manitoba, because the labour movement has no recourse under the law to prevent these practices. This is the fact in the province of Manitoba, although the labour relations act obviously makes these unfair labour practices.

When the labour movement has complained to the provincial government over the last three years the answer of Premier Roblin or the provincial minister of labour has been: We cannot do anything about this matter because the Woods committee is studying it. The fact is that in three years there has been no report from this committee.

In case members of the committee think I am alone in my view I want to quote one paragraph from a speech made by the president of the Manitoba Federation of Labour, Mr. R. J. Henderson, at the annual meeting of the federation on June 3 this year. I quote from his speech as reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of June 3:

> In my opinion the Woods Committee (Manitoba's survey of labour relations and labour standards legislation under Dean Harry D. Woods of McGill University) is simply being used as a smokescreen by the government as an excuse for failing to introduce amendments we require in the labour laws.

I believe, and I know it has already been said privately if not publicly, that this task force will not report for 18 months. There may be some preliminary reports in the fall but these certainly will not be based on detailed studies. It seems obvious to me that if we are in trouble, as the government seems to think we are, we should not have to wait 18 months before we get down to work. I suggest to the Minister of Labour that there are difficulties in the railway industry which may lead to a work stoppage long before 18 months have gone by. This is one of the complaints I have.

My second complaint is that the task force has undertaken to study almost any and every subject which might be of interest not just to the labour movement or to management but to every professor in Canada who wants to do a study and get paid for it. I have seen a preliminary list of these studies. The task force is proposing to do close to 100 studies, most of which have nothing at all to do with labour-management relationships in the federal jurisdiction. I want the members of the committee to realize that the bilingual and bicultural commission only did 130 studies. So I am suggesting that we are undertaking a study which will come close in magnitude to the size of that undertaken by the B and B commission, in my opinion will cost close to $2 million before we are through and will not be completed in time to be of practical use.

Another matter about which I should like to complain very strenuously is the inability to get information as to what the task force is going to do. I know they have not completed all their plans but a large number of the contracts with the people who are doing the studies have already been made. What is the reason for the secrecy? I have been told by some of the people connected with the task force that it is not thought necessary to make the plans of the task force public. I wish to tell the minister so he can tell the members of the task force that in my view this is a public force and that when they are doing a study as important as this one is supposed to be and are spending the amount of money I have mentioned, it is the public's right to know what studies are being undertaken, who is doing them and so forth.

Let us consider some of these studies. A number of qualified people have undertaken to do studies but I question the validity of some of them. I wonder what they have to do with labour-management relationships and I question the reason for making them. Let me go over a few of them. Apparently there is a study on the relationship between trade unions in Canada and trade unions in the United States. This is a very interesting subject inasmuch as Canadian trade unions are closely and intimately connected with United States trade unions. I have no objection to that study but I suggest that at the same time there should be a study on the relationship between management and ownership in Canada and the United States. If we are going to study the relationship between the United Auto Workers Union in Canada and the United Auto Workers Union in the United States, then surely we should also have a study of the relationship between the Ford Motor Company in the United States and the Ford Motor Company in Canada, a wholly owned subsidiary. Yet to my knowledge such a study is not being done.

It is proposed that there be a study of the use of violence in labour disputes. Have we had a great deal of violence in labour disputes in Canada? I do not think so. However, if such has been the case, what were the causes and how often are management representatives involved in violence? In cases where picket lines have been formed, how often does the manager of a plant drive his car through the picket line so that strikers on picket duty are injured? I am not saying we should not undertake such a study but I question the reasons for it and I suspect there may be an element of bias in it.

Among the list of studies proposed, until I and I suppose several other people made private representations, there was one called "unions and political action". I have no objection to that sort of study but I question what this subject has to do with union-management relationships. I suggest that if it does have anything to do with union-management relationships it would be just as useful and perhaps more interesting to have a study on management and political action. How involved is management in politics in Canada? Unions give money to political parties and to candidates. We make no bones about it. A large number of unions give money to the New Democratic party, and the records are open. How much money is given by management to political parties, which companies do it and to what parties do they give it?

A great deal of information on this subject has been gathered by the committee which studied election expenses. I know that the title of this study has disappeared from the list but that has not convinced me that such a study will not be undertaken under a different title. When I see that kind of study proposed I cannot help coming to that conclusion, and I want to tell the Minister of Labour that a good deal of the information I have received came from people who are much more directly concerned in the day to day operations of the labour movement than I am.

There is to be a study on federal conciliation procedures in the railway industry to be undertaken by the Department of Labour itself. I do not want to be critical of the Department of Labour because I know it has some very excellent people, but one can hardly expect them to do a very objective study of the work of conciliation under their jurisdiction. We have found 75 or 80 academics to do other studies and surely we could have found an academic to do that study.

Then there is to be a study of the wage criteria in the public service. Why do a study on that subject when for the first time we have passed legislation which allows the salaries of public servants to be negotiated through collective bargaining? This study is to be undertaken by the Department of Finance. I suggest that the Department of Finance cannot be very objective. Its job is to try to reduce the financial burden of the federal government. How can we get an objective study from that department?

Here is a task force which was characterized by someone today as "a proxy royal commission", which it is said will take 18 months to complete its work but which I suggest will need much closer to 28 months, which is going to spend a couple of million dollars, and whose work in my opinion will be largely useless. I suggest to the minister and the government that they should take a look at such problems as the one on which Mr. Justice Freedman reported and then bring in legislation which can be discussed and enacted here without waiting for the task force to do a job which I do not think it will be able to do.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I want to deal with one more matter which the minister mentioned, namely, the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. The minister said many nice things about it today. It seems to me that if ever a political snow job was done in this country, if ever a cynical piece of legislation was proposed and enacted by any government, it is this piece of legislation. Let us look at it. If we exclude federal civil servants, 80 per cent of the employees in Canada who come under the jurisdiction of the federal government work on the railways. Through collective bargaining they were able long ago to have their wages brought up above the $1.25 minimum which this code established. I will give the government this much credit. The passage of this code activated some of the provinces to the point where they increased the miserably low minimum wage rate under the provincial laws. To that extent there has been an improvement, but the minimum wage per hour provision certainly did not have much effect on the employees who come under federal jurisdiction. I do not intend to quote from the act but the act spells out that workers should not work more than five days a week and eight hours a day for a work week of 40 hours.

Let us look at some of the things the former minister of labour had to say in the speech he made on October 13, 1964. When speaking of that bill he said:

> It is a notable event in the history of the labour department and in the evolution of labour legislation in Canada. In so far as the federal government is concerned, it breaks new ground because for the first time the federal parliament is being asked to enact standards in several important fields hitherto unoccupied—

Then at page 8999 he continued:

> The standards we proposed for the code are a minimum wage rate of $1.25 an hour, a standard eight hour day and 40-hour week, overtime hours—

And so on. I believe that bill was passed on March 31, 1965 and was proclaimed on July 1, 1965. Next week it will be two years since the bill was proclaimed. What do we find? We find that there is a provision in the act which seemed to most people, and I take to the government, to be very reasonable and understandable. We had spoken in terms of there being a transitional period and therefore the government was given the right to defer for 18 months the enforcement of the 40-hour week provision. Well, the deferment has not been for 18 months. The deferment has affected thousands of companies which employ tens of thousands of workers. That provision in the act, which I maintain is its only important provision, is a dead issue because the government is still studying the applications for deferment by the companies which are involved. They have been studying them for more than two years. Repeatedly we have asked the minister when the studies will be completed. I do not know whether it will be this year, next year or five or ten years from now. When the minister and the department finally make a decision, if they ever do, then the companies will get 18 months.

In respect of the applications for deferment I should like to quote from a table which the minister provided to us. It covers applications up to February 15, 1967. There may have been some changes since that time and they may have settled some cases, but I suggest that the number has been pretty small. Under the heading "air transport" we find there are 184 companies which have applied for deferment and that 177 deferment orders have been issued. Under the heading "flour mills" we find there were 784 applications for deferment and 716 applications for suspension. The table shows 1,500 deferment orders and the date August 1, 1967. I do not know whether they are deferred until August 1, 1967 or whether they will be settled on August 1, 1967. The government certainly is not living up to the 40-hour week provision. We find that 374 grain elevators applied for deferment. The table shows that 348 were given deferment orders until August 1, 1967. It also shows that 2,634 highway transport companies applied for deferment, that 35 applied for suspension and that there are 2,645 in respect of which the applications are under review.

It is time the minister told us how long these applications will be under review. Under the heading "radio and T.V. broadcasting" we find that 40 companies asked for deferment, that two asked for suspension and that there were 34 deferment orders. Under the heading "shipping companies" we find that 129 companies asked for deferment, that 31 asked for suspension and that in 157 cases discussions are being held between employers and the unions. How can the unions succeed in getting the companies to live up to the act when the minister will not enforce it? This table shows that there are similar situations in respect of the stevedoring and longshoring companies and in respect of the telephone, telegraph and cable systems.

What I am endeavouring to point out is that literally thousands of companies have asked for deferment in respect of which the deferment has not been processed. The government spent money to publish full page advertisement. It did not contain a picture of the former minister but it did contain a drawing which looked remarkably like the former minister of labour. This advertisement extolled the virtues of the act and told the people of Canada how much they would get as a result of this act which this wonderful government had passed.

In respect of the one provision of the act which meant anything to them, tens of thousands of workers have not received anything and will not unless the minister and the department get down to the job they are supposed to do. This is a sad situation for the tens of thousands of workers who are concerned. These are the people who are entitled to the 40-hour week because of the law which has been passed by this parliament but they are not receiving the benefit of this because the law is being ignored and its application deferred. Whatever the reasons may have been for the deferments, such as the transitional period and so on, I suggest that the minister and his department should get on with the job now after two years have gone by and clean up these applications. A final date should be set so that these workers who were given such rosy promises by the government will be able to get the benefits of the law which this government proposed and to which this parliament agreed.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak very long on the estimates of the Department of Labour.

However, I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that there is, now, in the Department of Labour a problem which I think should be corrected. Earlier in this sitting I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to set out the views of his department concerning the C.N.T.U. applications to the Canada Labour Relations Board regarding natural units and the splitting of national units into natural units. The minister answered that the Canada Labour Relations Board was created by an act of parliament and that it must not be interfered with.

Mr. Chairman, to this I will answer that it is very well to create a board such as the Canada Labour Relations Board by an act of parliament, but if, as time goes by, after a few years, shortcomings or weaknesses are found in the operation of the said board, well, then it behoves parliament to amend the act and the minister to introduce the necessary amending legislation.

The minister says that the Canada Labour Relations Board is governed by an act of parliament. I agree. The minister also says that if something is wrong with the Canada Labour Relations Board, an act of parliament is required to right this wrong. But it should be said also that it is the minister who must bring in the necessary amendments to that act which has now proved highly deficient and requires many changes.

Everybody knows that the C.L.R.B. is made up of nine members, namely four delegates from management, four from labour and the chairman appointed by the cabinet. Of the four labour delegates, three are appointed by international unions or by the C.C.L. and one by the C.N.T.U. It can readily be seen that there is some disproportion when a dispute must be settled between the two bodies, namely the C.C.L. and the C.N.T.U. The number of votes is unevenly distributed.

This prompts us to suggest a first change to the minister and I feel he should take the matter into consideration. As a matter of fact, when a dispute arises between unions, the decision should not be left to a body made up of three members on one side and one on the other, because, unavoidably, or in most cases at least, the chairman and the four delegates from management form a majority on the C.L.R.B. and carry the vote. Now, as the C.N.T.U. has only one member and the C.C.L. have three, whenever there is a dispute between the two labour unions, the Canadian Congress of Labour necessarily has an advantage over the C.N.T.U.

In the end, those who have to decide on affiliation to a union are not the three delegates of the C.C.L. nor the delegate of the C.N.T.U. but the workers involved in this union dispute and the workers must have the right to choose freely the union to which they will belong.

In the present case, that is the case of national negotiation units, it is not the worker who can pick the union with which he wants to affiliate, it is the Canada Labour Relations Board that dictates his choice of a union. In this case, the choice is dictated by the C.C.L., because the C.C.L. has three delegates whereas the C.N.T.U. has only one representative on the Canada Labour Relations Board.

A second change required in view of these observations, Mr. Chairman, is that when a strictly internal dispute within the labour movement is involved, the employers are also asked to vote on this dispute, because within the Canada Labour Relations Board there are four delegates from the employers and four from the employees, or union members, and the chairman. In such a case, the employers delegates are asked to vote or to help the board to reach a decision when strictly a union dispute is involved, a dispute concerning two labour unions. Obviously, there is a second weakness there and the Minister of Labour could improve this or make a change.

A third amendment which, to my mind, should be made in the present legislation on the Canada Labour Relations Board—the C.N.T.U. brought it up recently—is that the chairman—the one who listens to both sides of the discussion—is not always in a position to understand the arguments introduced by certain groups when these arguments are presented in a language he cannot understand. Obviously, there is simultaneous interpretation of these discussions, at least in the majority of cases, but this does not enable the chairman, who is more or less the judge on these matters, to understand fully the scope of all the arguments that may be brought forward.

That is why I suggest to the Minister of Labour that he amend the act on the Canada Labour Relations Board so that its chairman may be perfectly bilingual, and therefore able to converse in English or in French with those who come before the board.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, there is also the fact, which I want to point out to the minister, that the Canada Labour Relations Board is now studying the case of C.B.C. employees in connection with the splitting up of national units into natural units.

All C.B.C. employees are now members of the same union. Regardless of whether they work in British Columbia, Newfoundland, Quebec or Ontario, or whether they speak English or French, they belong to the same union.

The C.B.C. employees in Montreal want their own union because they no longer wish to belong to an international union that never looked after their interests in the past. They want their own union for the employees of the French network of the C.B.C.

That request is absolutely justified, because the C.B.C. saw fit to divide its radio and television network into the French and the English networks. And yet, today, the employees of both networks are compelled to belong to the same union, while the employees of the French network would like to have their own union.

Well, I wonder why they should be refused that since it then becomes a natural unit of negotiation.

And the refusal of that right is the more serious that it would constitute a grave precedent in labour relations for the future.

We will soon have unions of bank employees. Those employees will not come under provincial labour relations boards, but under the Canada Labour Relations Board. Then, if the same policy is adopted, Quebec bank employees, either from the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank of Canada or the Toronto-Dominion Bank, will not be entitled to their own union, because of the precedent and the rules established by the Canada Labour Relations Board. They will have to be members of the same union—they will inevitably be in minority—as bank employees of other provinces, even though they do not want this. But they want their own union all this will inevitably go against the freedom of union because this freedom also means that every worker will be free to choose his union within a unit of negotiation.

I speak of precedents that this might create in the case of bank employees, but the same precedent could be created—in fact, it exists—for railway employees. There is a refusal to divide two units of negotiation. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) that a great number of railway employees in the various brotherhoods want to change unions so as to have their own union here, in Quebec.

• (3:10 p.m.)

We are receiving scores of letters of protest from railroad employees. As a matter of fact, I mentioned it to the C.N.R. management when their report was studied two or three years ago and they told me that they did not want to split the national negotiation units.

The freedom to choose their own labour union is refused only to a group of C.N.R. and C.P.R. employees in Quebec.

Many other sectors in the labour field find themselves in the same situation, where the employees are not really free to choose but are obliged to abide by the decision of the majority from other provinces.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Labour should take those remarks into consideration and should make the necessary amendments to the Canada Labour Relations Board Act in order to give satisfaction to those who are denied freedom to choose their own unions.

Of course, there is no question of splitting the negotiation units endlessly. When the employees of a natural negotiation unit, those of the French network for instance, are concerned, it does not affect the whole matter adversely or prevent the signing of labour agreements with the C.B.C. There is no duplication because the French network is separate from the English network.

It could be the same in banks operations, where employees, in accordance with labour legislation, come under federal jurisdiction. It is the same for railway employees, national transport employees, etc.

Therefore, I believe that the minister should amend a law which, after having been tried, now tends to impose and has even imposed on a rather large group of employees a union they did not want, denying them membership in the union of their choice.

Inevitably, when there is a vote between an international union and a union which, until now, remains almost exclusively within the province of Quebec, of course, the employees of nine other provinces are more numerous—whether they work for the C.B.C., the railways or the bank—than those of Quebec alone.

Then, the nine other provinces are compelling or forcing the Quebec workers to accept the union they have chosen, thus denying Quebec employees the right to choose their own union.

Then I believe that amendments must be made to the act. I think the minister should ask the advice of the interested parties about these amendments and then present them to parliament, so that they can be passed as soon as possible.

So far as this particular case is concerned, for several weeks now, I have been asking the minister whether he has received the report of the Canada Labour Relations Board concerning the C.N.T.U. request to represent the employees of the French-speaking network of the C.B.C. The minister told me today, on the orders of the day, that he has not yet received this report. However, I think that certain details—it may only be a rumour—have come out about this report. It was also mentioned that the Canada Labour Relations Board produced an equality of voices on a vote—four against four. This may seem strange, since the board is made up of nine members, the ninth being the C.N.T.U. which, some time earlier, decided not to attend the meetings of the board.

If that is the case, the best advice I can give the C.N.T.U. leaders is to register their vote at least on this occasion, which would give a majority of five against four in favour of their request to be allowed to represent the employees of the French network of the C.B.C.

According to certain newspapers, the vote now stands at four in favour and four against. The C.N.T.U. would merely have to attend another meeting and ask for a new vote to obtain satisfaction in this respect. And even if the C.N.T.U. acts in that way, it does not mean that the protest it has registered for some time now against the operation and the regulations of the C.L.R.B. would not be valid. Those protests would still be valid and it will be up to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to bring about the necessary amendments to rectify the situation.

Therefore, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether or not he intends, since he states that parliament alone can change the legislation in that respect, to bring forward soon the necessary amendments to rectify the situation I have just referred to.

[English]

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to ask the minister for some information. My first question is: How much does the minister estimate the average capital per worker invested in industry today to be? In other words, how much capital does it take to put a labourer into productivity? My second question relates to training and retraining. Has the department any figures which would indicate the additional cost of making a man's work effective through technical and vocational training, in which I include training within the plant in various industries?

I notice that this year the earnings of Canadian corporations are down. There are no doubt many reasons for this, including higher labour costs. There is no indication of a decline in the amount of goods produced. Indeed, most plants show an increase. Has the minister any suggestions for increasing productivity in Canada. I mention this because today, both with regard to our sales abroad and our sales at home, we are faced with greatly increased competition from other countries.

Finally, I should like to ask the minister if he is yet in a position to tell us how the changes brought about as a result of the GATT arrangements are likely to affect the Canadian production picture.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to hold up the minister's estimates for long. I listened carefully to the hon. gentleman's remarks this morning and there are a few comments I should like to place on record.

Despite his optimistic predictions I am of the opinion that all is not well in the labour field across Canada. The present uncertainty is due in no small measure to the actions taken by this government, or perhaps I should say to the lack of action on the part of this government. I would qualify this statement by adding that the Minister of Labour is one of my favourite ministers and I do not attach too much of the blame to him. I blame the government as a whole.

• (3:20 p.m.)

When the Minister of Finance introduced his budget recently we heard him predict a $740 million deficit for Canada in the next 12 months. This can only lead to one thing —inflation and higher and higher prices to the Canadian consumer. In the months ahead the Canadian housewife will find her bag of groceries containing less and less while she pays more and more. In consequence the demands made by labour for higher wages are bound to increase.

It is true we have had a high level of employment. But at the same time we have had increasing unemployment in certain areas. Here I specifically refer to the Atlantic provinces where, despite all the efforts being made by our provincial leaders, we find ourselves still unable to raise our level of employment up to the national level so it will be in proper ratio with the rest of Canada.

In addition, we have had rising inflation and a trade deficit. It seems to me that the new economics practised by this government have fallen short of their objective. The devaluation of the dollar during the Conservative administration, which I was proud and pleased to serve, and tax and credit policies designed to keep the economy moving ahead on an even keel produced the longest business expansion in Canada's peacetime history. But these policies of carefully based restraint have evidently not solved our fundamental problems and ills.

For instance, why have wage rates continued to rise while unemployment is still increasing? Why is it that labour costs per unit of production are going up when industry has just completed a three-year period of heavy capital investment? Why is it that so many products used in household operations have been marked up in price when, theoretically, competitive pressures should promote efficiency and serve as a leveling factor in our pricing structure? These developments suggest that the work force is not sufficiently mobile and does not yet have sufficient skills to make productivity rise faster than wages.

There is a rather peculiar fact about the present situation. Corporate profits have held up well, which indicates that price increases can be passed on to consumers with some ease. This fact encourages management to agree more or less readily to labour demands for higher wages. Thus the whole inflationary spiral continues. Coupled with this is the almost relentless rise in government spending at all levels, which I believe is a major force behind recent price increases and is an open admission that today politics take priority over economic common sense.

At the present time management and labour in many industries are living in a state of fear or, conversely, in anticipation, depending on their knowledge of the outcome of the Kennedy round talks. We were informed this morning by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the agreements reached in the Kennedy round discussions will be helpful to the fishing industry as there will be some reduction in the tariff on the fish we process and ship to the United States. But while this will be helpful to the fishing industry—and I can assure the minister that industry is desperately in need of help—I cannot help but wonder what concession was given to secure this reduction in the fish tariff.

It seems to me that individual leaders in unions and management will have to get their operations into fighting trim to withstand the competition that will be unleashed by the tearing down of tariffs resulting from the Kennedy round negotiations. Canadians in the labour and management fields will have to compete with the growing output of other industrial nations. I would like to hear from the minister whether his department has made any special plans to help Canadian labour and management cope with the new problems we will have to face as a result of the Kennedy round agreements.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be brief, first, because I would not like to repeat everything which has been said up to now, and also because I will have to leave the house in the next few minutes.

I have noticed, like many others, ever since I have been in this house, that the Department of Labour is not always a bed of roses. In fact, it is perhaps one of the departments which might be the greatest source of problems for its incumbent. I heard the hon. member for Queens-Lunenberg (Mr. Crouse) say earlier that the Minister of Labour was his favourite minister, and I understand that several hon. members feel extremely sympathetic toward the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) precisely because of the multiplicity and the seriousness of the problems he has to settle and which are, most of the time, human problems which affect closely the members of our Canadian labour force. Obviously, those problems are not always easy.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the remarks made earlier by my colleague for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) with regard to the dispute still prevailing between the C.N.T.U. and the international unions with regard to natural bargaining units. I shall not repeat all his arguments. For once, I have nothing to say against the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe, since his comments were intelligent, objective and quite to the point, uttered on a tone which will have impressed everyone—since it was the tone of moderation—and the facts he stated speak for themselves.

The minister should take under special consideration this problem which will have even more serious repercussions than we can anticipate at the present time, in the labour world. Because it has—how would I put it—some separatist connotations, efforts should be made to remove the causes of discord.

Besides, after I heard that next year will be celebrated as the human rights year—if I understood correctly what the minister said—it does not seem natural to me that we should, on that occasion, deny some members of the labour force their freedom of representation within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to repeat everything that was said, but I think the hon. member for Lapointe summarized what many of us think, and I should like to join him in urging the Minister of Labour to consider this matter as one of somewhat special urgency.

When the minister says that if agencies are set up by the government to handle certain responsibilities, it is not conceivable that the government should intervene, I think that his argumentation is unsound, because just the same the government and parliament are the supreme authorities here and they would not delegate their powers to organizations which would become superior to the government.

• (3:30 p.m.)

When such an important policy is involved, I think that the government should intervene; moreover, I understand that a cabinet committee has been set up to consider that question, but we have not yet heard about the results.

Mr. Chairman, I said earlier that I wanted to be brief. I simply wish to point out to the minister a matter which I find unthinkable in Canada. I was unaware of it and I would never have imagined that a public company would tolerate such a state of affairs. I learned a few weeks ago that segregation exists in the Canadian Pacific Company. Among all those labour unions, it has been deemed advisable to tolerate a union of coloured workers comprising all non-white workers. Well, I never would have thought that, in our times, such segregation could now be tolerated in our country. I call the minister's attention to that matter and tell him that, if necessary, a piece of legislation should be passed so as to prevent such petty segregation in Canada. We are all shocked to see what is going on at present in the United States with regard to segregation and the utterly inhuman treatment to which coloured people are subjected. I would not want some foreigners to tell me one day, to my shame, that such things are also tolerated in Canada. I am sure the minister is well aware of all this. Perhaps it has not been properly impressed upon him that the situation is intolerable.

That is why I wish to draw his attention to the matter. In my opinion, and I think the great majority of hon. members in this house will agree with me, this is a blot on the escutcheon of Canada and the situation should not be tolerated, even if, as some might reply, the labour leaders themselves decided that all coloured people should belong to a single union in which there would be no whites. That is intolerable. That is another instance of the sort of segregation which was denounced in his house by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and others in the case of the C.N.T.U. and the international unions, only I think this is even worse and more apt to discredit Canada in the eyes of the rest of the country.

This being said, Mr. Chairman, I know that, contrary to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) stated a while ago, I believe in the task force established by the hon. minister. The situation is at least under study. It is being studied by people who are well informed on this matter. There may be some quibbling over the choice of the members, but should other people be chosen, I believe there would still be someone to find fault with them or to detect some tendencies that do not meet everybody's approval.

What counted here, I believe, was to do something. It is most urgent to do something, for this labour problem has become serious. Many causes have already been explained by my colleagues and I shall not refer to them here. There are numerous causes, but the problem has become exceedingly serious and it must be settled most urgently, because the whole economy of this country has been disrupted thereby, especially when we allow strikes in public services and try to solve our problem by putting it on the shoulders of the community, without any regard to the consequences they may have on the general economy.

Everyone realizes today, that in the end, those who pay the costs of strikes are still the workers. They are always the ones who get hurt.

Perhaps we might add that there are still too many labour leaders who are not aware of their responsibilities towards society and who launch strikes without first considering what they will mean to society or to the members of their unions, these workers whose interests they should protect.

I now wish to return to my main remark, and I emphasize my request to the minister to do everything in his power to take measures or to have a piece of legislation passed as quickly as possible in order to eliminate the segregation of coloured railway workers, because it is a stigma on the face of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, a good deal of the discussion so far on the estimates of the Department of Labour seems to have had a rather philosophical slant. As I listened to the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, I thought that perhaps his remarks had caught the tone set by the minister in his introductory remarks when he referred to a lull after the more tumultuous events of a year ago. If I understood his words correctly, he said something about us now having time to catch our breath. Whether that is going to have anything to do with his approach to the estimates this year, I do not know. There is nothing wrong in attempting to philosophize in relation to our position, but I suggest that this is not a substitute for coming to grips with some of the real problems still before us. Nevertheless, I am going to be a bit philosophical myself inasmuch as the minister seems in the mood to indulge in this approach. When the minister refers to us having time to catch our breath I am somewhat concerned because perhaps what he is really saying is that parliament is going to lapse into that rather somnolent state which pervades the atmosphere of this house so often when we are dealing with problems of the working people of Canada.

The minister is perhaps mistaken when he says he feels there is a general recognition of the right and need of free collective bargaining in a free society. Let me suggest to the committee that this is a right which has been far from recognized. Most of the tumult and turmoil that engaged the attention of parliament within the last year or so had its origin in the fact that the right of collective bargaining and the rights of the working people as individuals have not been recognized by industries in the country which are opposed to such rights. All the evidence arising from those disputes and the kind of action that parliament took in those emergencies bears out the fact that there is a basic desire on the part of employers in this country to deny if possible the full and free rights of collective bargaining.

Reference has been made to a number of reports we have received. Perhaps I might make reference to the report made by Hon. C. Rhodes Smith in respect of the dispute on the west coast in the longshoring industry. As I read the evidence and arguments advanced before Mr. Justice Smith against the position which was being taken by the foremen involved, it seemed that the tenor of the employer's presentation was to deny the rights of those people to have free collective bargaining in the manner in which they sought to have it.

When one moves into this area one immediately becomes involved quite legitimately in philosophical questions. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, made reference to the task force. The minister and others have already made reference to the Freedman report. The question arises as to why we need all these studies, particularly the so-called task force study. I suggest that the only real reason the minister and his colleagues need this task force at the present time, after the experience of last year, is that they really do not know where they are going or they are deliberately indulging in stalling with a desire in fact to delay the recognition of the rights of free individuals in a free society and what the minister has described as the group right of collective bargaining.

This brings us right back to what I feel is a basic question in our society, namely, which has priority, the right of property or the right of person? This is a basic battle that has been going on at least since the industrial revolution which came about in a world where certain concepts of property rights were already well established and ingrained in the outlook and philosophy of the people who were at the top of society.

In my opinion we do not need a task force at this time. We have the knowledge and experience necessary so that parliament can come to grips with any changes in labour legislation that are required. This is particularly so if we have a clear concept of where we are going and if parliament is clearly prepared, as I am, to put the right of person before the right of property and to recognize what is perhaps axiomatic, that all wealth arises from the application of the mind and muscle of man through ability, training and experience. Without that application of human effort there is no wealth and there is no sustenance.

This is the crux of the question and this is why I was disturbed when the minister commenced his discussion of his estimates by saying that we now have time to catch our breath. In making that comment I can appreciate the minister's personal feeling about having a little time to catch his breath after the experience he had during the earlier months of his tenure in this portfolio. But what concerns me is that the Minister of Labour and his department are once again being shoved off to the periphery, as it were of the main operations of parliament. We are moving back to what seems to be our normal position where pronouncements like the one made today by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are much closer to the centre of attention.

If I may say so without any desire to give personal offence, I believe my contention in this connection is borne out by the tenor of the remarks I have listened to so far from speakers representing the official opposition. Their remarks have shown quite clearly a recognition on their part that property still is and still should have prior right over the rights of people.

Mr. Pugh: Oh, fiddle.

Mr. Barnett: That is the only conclusion I can draw from the tenor of the remarks made. The minister really has not made his own position clear. I believe him when he says he recognizes the idea of free collective bargaining in a free society. But he does not really come to grips with definitions of what is free collective bargaining, what is a free society and who is to have freedom for what.

I believe that this artificial equation, as it were, of the balance between the rights of management, as they are so often erroneously referred to, and labour is at the root of much of the misunderstanding and indecision with which we approach labour questions. I argue that if we were clearly prepared to give prior right to the needs and rights of people, some of these peripheral arguments about the balance of power in labour legislation and so on would fade into the background and we could view these questions in much better perspective.

The same indecision to which I have referred pervades not only this parliament but the actions taken by the governments of the provinces generally. I believe the fact that we are a federal state compounds the confusion and results in delay in effective action being taken.

Let me again make reference to another of the almost innumerable reports we have received in this field in recent years. I have in my hand a summary review of information related to the problems of wage and price disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry. This review was prepared by a federal-provincial committee. Its publication date is November, 1964. It was heralded at the time as being a far reaching document which would bring about a real change in the whole relationship of people in the fishing industry on the west coast of Canada. To use the well worn phrase used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North about the Freedman report, this review has been gathering dust ever since it was published. I have never heard one word, as far as I can remember, from the Minister of Fisheries about it, let alone from the Minister of Labour. So far as the British Columbia department of labour is concerned, they seem to have been very carefully sitting on their hands in respect of it ever since.

I do not need to go into detail with the Minister of Labour, coming as he does from a British Columbia constituency, to remind him that at the present time there is a rather unholy mess in the whole question of the rationale of action in the fishing industry on the British Columbia coast. We are still in the position where federal jurisdiction in this matter rests, as it has rested for many years, with the combines investigation branch of the federal government. Year after year we pass renewing legislation in this regard. I believe we renewed the legislation for a year and a half the last time, and it must be reaching the point of expiry.

Mr. Nicholson: I think there is legislation in perpetuity now.

Mr. Barnett: The minister says it is in perpetuity now. Perhaps the minister's philosophic approach gives us an opportunity of expressing our views as to the real questions we should be facing when we discuss the estimates of his department.

My reference to the report on the matter of wage and price disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry, and my awareness of the fact that there are in this situation overlapping areas of federal and provincial jurisdiction, led me to take a fresh look at the British North America Act and in particular sections 91 and 92 where the division is made between federal and provincial authority, that is, as between the parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces. Reading those sections of the British North America Act again from the point of view of a consideration of the estimates of the Minister of Labour caused me to realize in a way I had never realized before that nowhere in either the federal or provincial powers as set out in the British North America act is reference made to the question of labour jurisdiction. This re-emphasizes the fact that uppermost in the minds of the people who framed the section and in the minds of those who were in positions of political leadership and power in that day was the idea that such questions were relatively unimportant, not important enough to be clearly defined in any sense of the word. That is my view.

I think one might develop an argument that section 91 (2), which assigns to the federal authority the regulation of trade and commerce, might be construed as meaning that the federal parliament has complete authority over all matters affecting labour relations, if one were to accept the thesis still accepted in the house of the balance of rights as between labour and management as if they were two equal and separate entities which should be dealt with in our laws in that way. I suggest that this theory categorizes working people as commodities in the field of trade and commerce. I also suggest this is to too great an extent the manner in which we approach labour legislation. In other words, we tend to look upon labour as a commodity, something to be dealt with in the field of trade and commerce. If one were to follow that principle through, of course, one might argue that constitutionally this parliament could regulate all matters relating to labour relations so far as employers in this country are concerned.

On the other hand, if you look at section 92 and read paragraph 13, to which reference is made so often, regarding provincial jurisdiction over property and civil rights, the other side of the argument is revealed, namely that the provinces have a prior right in the labour field. Here again, I would remind the house that in paragraph 13 of section 92 the emphasis is on property, and civil rights is tacked on as an incidental item. I am inclined to agree with those who suggest that we need constitutional amendments, but I feel that the constitutional change which is perhaps of paramount importance will involve the rewriting of the constitution so as to put emphasis on such matters as labour relations.

In his statement, the minister made some reference to the work being done by his department in the field of human rights through such agencies as the I.L.O. I certainly agree with the minister that we have some very competent and, if I may say so without sounding condescending, well meaning people working in these fields in his department and in other branches of the government. I am not trying to downgrade the approach that is being taken by such bodies as the I.L.O. to raising the living standards and carrying on the process of education of people around the world, particularly with respect to the rights of individuals. However, this is a long and slow process. I suggest that it should not only be undertaken under the auspices of the I.L.O. but that the Canadian government or the Canadian parliament should come to grips with it much more directly through some immediate action rather than by perpetuating the process of setting up commissions and task forces ad nauseam.

The remarks which the minister made with regard to the reorganization of his department and the mobilization of competent people in the three divisions which he enumerated were very interesting, but the administrative machinery and its improvement is not of such great importance. What we need in this parliament now are proposals which would give a real sense of direction to the people he has in his department and to those he said he will mobilize. It is not enough to have people making studies about studies about studies. It is not enough to have an administrative force at work administrating acts with regard to the protection of the labour force, which have not yet been applied to the full extent.

What some of us would like to hear from the minister before the estimates are passed is a clearcut statement on the legislative proposals which he intends to place before parliament before this session is concluded. We want to know whether the minister and the government intend to bring forward legislation in the field of industrial relations and unemployment insurance, and an implementation of the principles enunciated in the Freedman report. In our view, these matters have been under study for quite long enough to permit the minister to make up his mind. We would like to know on which side of the fence the government proposes to sit, whether on the side of human rights or on the side of property, or will it try to straddle the fence as has been done so often by previous Liberal governments? These are the kinds of questions to which we want answers when dealing with these estimates. We do not expect the minister to say that starting on Monday morning he will bring forward these measures, but we would like to know what proposals the government intends to put forward when parliament reassembles in the fall. I do not know whether or not the Minister of Labour can answer all the questions concerning priorities. However, we had hoped that before the minister was asked to come before the house with his estimates he would have had some clearcut indication and direction from the Prime Minister or the house leader with regard to their intentions concerning this legislation.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I understand I have the floor at this time but I am prepared to yield to the hon. member for Oxford as I believe he is catching an earlier plane than I am. If it is agreeable to the house, I will yield to the hon. member for Oxford and speak after he has completed his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to thank my friend, the hon. member for York-Humber, for his courtesy in this regard, although I do not think it was necessary. I do not believe either of us will speak at any great length, but I thank him very much and I appreciate his courtesy.

It was my understanding earlier today that the minister intended to deal first with the estimates of the Department of Labour, then with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, followed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think we would all agree with the logic of this approach. I had hoped this afternoon to make some observations which relate indirectly, and sometimes perhaps directly, to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The reason I feel that I should do so at this time is that since the debate on the spending estimates of the government is now restricted to 30 days the minister's estimates may not be before the house again. So, I feel I should make these brief observations at this time.

We have been promised by successive governments for years that the Unemployment Insurance Act would be revised. I think every member of the house understands why a long time is needed to prepare a revision of this act. I do not think there is any federal act that has been the cause of more individual hardship, contention and problems than has this particular one. If anyone has doubts as to my observations, I think any member in this house would support my views. I do not suppose there has been a member in the house who has not had constant problems relating to the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I do not think there is any federal act that is more in need of revision. The whole concept of the act seems to be misunderstood by a vast majority of the public. Many persons seem to think that unemployment insurance is some sort of pension fund, and if they have never drawn on it they are entitled to do so. This is something like fire insurance in respect of which you pay in and may never have to use it. Undoubtedly when the present act was established a situation existed in Canada where there was anything but full employment. Even during the last few years when we had almost total employment in many parts of the country, many strange things have come about and people have been obliged to make the contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. Under the strict interpretation of the act these people were never intended to pay into the fund. Certainly many professional people who come under the act will never collect the insurance. Nevertheless they are obliged to pay. I know I had to pay it myself on one occasion when I was a law student. This sort of anomaly must be corrected. The minister has told us that there will be a new act soon. I hope it will be very soon.

Despite the difficulties I believe the act has worked out very well, but there certainly is much need for improvement. I suppose if one wished to do so, one could spend many hours in the house reciting inequities, iniquities and anomalies which appear in the present act. People have received unemployment insurance who should never have received it. On the other hand, there are many cases where people should have been paid unemployment insurance and were not. I am sure those who administer the act are aware of these problems. When administering a law one has to carry out the law and the regulations as they read; there is not much room for discretion. There is, however, one plea which I should like to make to the minister at this time. In view of the fact we are advised that the new act will be ready, we hope before long, and in view of the fact that the present act is enforced strictly, I would suggest that in some cases the enforcement of the new act might be a little less strict. At one time I acted as a crown attorney and I know, as I believe most of us know, that if every small bylaw or other law were enforced by the police officers there is not one person in this chamber or in the country who would not have had a conviction for some petty offence. For example, I might mention the speeding laws under the highway traffic act.

There are situations such as these in respect of which I believe discretion and common sense must be used in the enforcement of the law. Those persons who presently are charged with the responsibility of administering the Unemployment Insurance Act certainly are very enthusiastic. They are doing a wonderful job so far as enforcement of the act is concerned. They are providing a good deal of money for the fund which will be available for a rainy day. This is fine; but I think a great many inequities have resulted. I should like to ask the minister to use his good offices in this regard. I know that enforcement does not come directly under the responsibility of the minister, but I would hope that he would try to alleviate some of the difficulties.

There are two problems in particular which I should like to mention. One is the reign of terror which has been carried out in respect of the barbers of this country. I know that in some instances, in places such as Toronto and Montreal, there are hairdressers who employ people and pay them a salary. In these cases they pay into the unemployment insurance fund, and this is quite proper. However, in some cases the barber rents the premises and then sublets a chair to another barber. They each buy their own supplies. I know of a case—and this is quite general—where the officers arrived at the barber shop and said, "You have to pay unemployment insurance". On occasion I have advised barbers not to pay it because they could not possibly come under the act. If they file a declaration of partnership, take the matter to court and have it settled, that is fine; but there are many people who do not want to go to court. They assume that it will cost a good deal of money to fight the government which has so much legal talent at its disposal. A lot of people pay unemployment insurance rather than fight; they are afraid to oppose the government. These people should never have to pay it at all. I know of some cases where they have refused to pay and did not hear anything further.

There is another situation in which many people in this country have been involved, including parliamentarians. This is a situation where a cattle auctioneer holds a sale and obtains help from other cattle dealers or farmers who come in for a few hours a week. In many cases they have been doing this for years. Now, it has been decided that these people should pay unemployment insurance. In cases where the money has not been collected, these people are being soaked—if I may use that expression—for arrears for a number of years. One such case is presently under appeal before the commission. It is quite clear that this is not a master and servant relationship. It was never intended that such people should pay into the unemployment insurance fund; they are not on the labour market and possibly never will be. These people in many instances are farm operators. There are many situations like this which are pure nonsense. I know there may be those who will say, "We have some colour of right to try to collect unemployment insurance". This should not be done and is not the intention.

In view of the fact that the act is to be revised, and in view of the fact that some of these anomalies are to be removed, I hope the minister will use his good offices to see that the enforcement of the act is a little less enthusiastic than it has been in the past. It has been said that ignorance of the law is no excuse. That maxim may have applied in the early days in England when there were not many laws and regulations. It was quite sensible in those days to assume that the public ought to be cognizant of the laws which existed. Nowadays, however, with the growth of the government in every field of life and with the many regulations which exist in respect of every department of government, how could the general public be expected to know about every obscure regulation which is published in the Canada Gazette. Who reads the Canada Gazette? Why should people be dragged in by the officers and told that even though they did not know about a certain regulation they are going to be investigated and made to pay, even if it means bankruptcy. In this day and age, when the government is extending its influence into every walk of life, I hope that the minister, his colleagues, and others who are responsible will see that regulations which affect large numbers of citizens are posted up and advertised in all the newspapers and periodicals. Then, the members of the public will know what they are up against.

I believe we should adjust to the times. It is not good enough to say that ignorance of the law is no excuse. That might have been all right 100 years ago but it is not good enough today. All levels of government which pass regulations should ensure that the average person has a reasonable opportunity of being made aware of these regulations before they are enforced so that unnecessary hardship will not be imposed. I hope the minister and his colleagues will consider all these things which affect every one of us today.

Mr. Cowan: The few remarks I wish to make this afternoon I had intended to express on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. But as the hon. member for Oxford who preceded me remarked, you can never tell when estimates are to come before the house and when an opportunity will be given to you to express yourself. I have taken the opportunity under the heading of the Department of Labour to speak of working conditions in the veterans' hospitals of the Dominion of Canada which are directly under the jurisdiction of the federal government and not under any provincial departments of labour.

For some years past, I have been advocating that working conditions for nurses in the hospitals of the nation are lamentable and deplorable. I believe that the small number of girls coming forward as students of nursing shows the girls realize that nursing is not one of the great professions of this country so far as material gain is concerned. They are shunning nursing.

In the newspapers of yesterday and today there are long reports of statements about the nurse shortage in the country. One report, of yesterday is based on a statement made by the Ontario Hospitals Association before the Ontario committee on the healing arts which is sitting throughout the province at the present time. Today we have many reports in the newspapers and on the radio because of an address given to the Canadian Medical Association manpower conference, which is being held in Montreal, by Doctor Helen K. Mussallem, executive director of the Canadian Nurses Association. Doctor Mussallem, in her comments before the Canadian Medical Association, emphasized that unless substandard salaries and working conditions in nursing are corrected there will be a much greater shortage of nurses in the immediate future than we have at the present time. Just now the shortage of nurses is such that hospital wards are being closed because no one can be found to staff them. I am thinking, in particular, of a large ward at the General and Marine Hospital in Owen Sound, Ontario. The announcement has been made that it will be closed completely because the Board of Governors cannot staff the institution to the point that all the beds in the institution can be handled.

This is not an isolated instance. There are many other centres where a lack of nurses has forced hospitals to close wings. Sometimes they have been unable to open new additions because of lack of nursing staff.

I maintain that if the pay being offered to the nurses was satisfactory, girls would come forward to take up nursing, as their mothers and grandmothers did before them.

Doctor Mussallem, in her remarks before the Canadian Medical Association yesterday, produced some figures that could do nothing but disturb anyone who turns them over in his mind. She pointed out, for instance, that recruitment to nursing schools has dropped steadily:

> In 1940 about a quarter of all female high school graduates entered nursing. In 1966 this had declined from 25 per cent to 8 per cent. Unless drastic changes are made Canada can look forward to fewer than 5 per cent of high school girls entering nursing, Dr. Mussallem said—
> Poor salaries and working conditions were tolerated when professional opportunities for women were limited but that era is past, she said. Teachers, for example, have jumped far ahead of nurses and in many areas where nursing recruitment has dropped teaching has gone up.

Anyone must realize that young girls in secondary school are intelligent; they survey the possibilities of a profitable career in the various avenues open to them in their teens. Certainly, anyone can witness the situation in nursing.

[Mr. Cowan.]

I have an instance in mind of a young girl I know well. She is a married woman, a member of the church I attend, a graduate in nursing of a hospital in Alberta. She nursed in Alberta for many years, married an R.C.A.F. man when they were both at Cold Lake, Alberta, and came east. For several years she nursed in Toronto; today she is working in a factory—working in a factory because of the regular hours of employment, eight to twelve, and one to five, with no work on Saturdays, Sundays or holidays, and no night work whatsoever. That girl is a professional; she is a graduate of a well qualified hospital school in Alberta.

I can think of another young girl who right now is working in the parliament buildings in the stenographer's pool for the Senate. Her people were born in Ottawa, moved to Vancouver and have been there for ten years. The girl thought she would like to be a nursing student here, in Ottawa, where her grandparents live. She came east to Ottawa and applied to enter a hospital training school for nurses. She was advised that she lacked one subject in her grade 13 paper and considered, for a while, taking one year's study to pick up that one subject in order to satisfy the demands of the hospital school. Friends of hers said: "You can make more money as a stenographer working for the government, in the parliament buildings, and you do not have to work Saturdays, Sundays, nights or holidays; you will work as a regular human being works and you will make as much money as a nurse makes as soon as you have taken a six months business training course."

The girl took the six months business training course in the city of Ottawa and she is now working in the secretaries' pool of the Senate—a would-be nurse lost to the profession because of the attractions that other occupations open to a girl had for her, and because she was told that she lacked one of her grade 13 subjects.

I know of another girl, but this one used to work in the florist business. Because weddings are numerous on Saturdays, florist shops are open on Saturdays. That is the busiest day of their week. No employee of a florist shop may have Saturday off because of the heavy volume of business that day. Girls who are qualified to work in florist shops are hard to find. Most girls want to work a five day week, from Monday to Friday; they want regular working hours from eight to twelve and one to five. The young girl to whom I refer now works for the Ontario government. She has no Saturday work. I merely cite the instance of the florist shop to show that girls will work in an industry which gives them the most attractive working conditions which covers both pay and hours.

Now, we come to nursing in veterans hospitals. Two years ago the federal cabinet approved a shift differential for nurses in veterans hospitals. I was overjoyed at the progressive step which was taken by the cabinet and the Department of Veterans Affairs and on two occasions in this house I congratulated the present Minister of Veterans Affairs for his foresight in introducing shift differential rates of pay for nurses in veterans hospitals. I am sorry to say it took me about one year to learn what kind of treatment the federal cabinet was handing the nurses in veterans hospitals on shift differentials. I protested about this in the past and I protest now.

Shift differentials are an established method of payment for labour throughout the Dominion of Canada. Why it took so long to introduce shift differentials into the Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals I do not know—but it took years.

Now that we have the shift differentials it is ridiculous that the federal government pays only 8 cents an hour on the evening shift and 12 cents an hour on the night shift. These differentials are miserly, low and inadequate. They would never attract any nurses to a veterans hospital.

They have shift differentials in the province of Quebec and shift differentials in the province of Saskatchewan, and they are much higher than the Canadian government's. But the federal government pays only an 8 cents an hour shift differential for the evening shift and a 12 cents an hour differential on the night shift.

I wish to draw to the minister's attention the ridiculous situation which exists, because the Department of Veterans Affairs does not pay the evening shift differential on the eight hours work for the evening nor the night shift differential for the eight hours spent on the night shift. The federal government pays an additional eight cents an hour on the evening shift only from 6 p.m. to midnight, arguing that the time from four in the afternoon to 6 p.m. is part of day working hours and that the employee is therefore only entitled to day rates during that period. Then with regard to the night shift, the federal government says the nurses are working night hours only until 6 a.m.—the two hours after that are day hours and the differential should be paid only in respect of the hours from midnight to 6 a.m.

I have been in business, Mr. Chairman, for more than 40 years. At one time we had as many as 17 unions in the organization with which I was connected. I had never heard of any employer who split the hours of a shift into day hours or evening hours, or night hours and day hours until the Department of Veterans Affairs came out with this pitiful scheme when it introduced shift differentials into nurses pay for the first time.

I made many inquiries of unions and labour leaders and none could tell me of any case where shift differentials were being paid by the hour rather than by whole shifts. I am sorry to say that in Britain, when I was there this past July with the veterans affairs committee, I ascertained that the British government pays the nurses employed in the hospitals of Britain on the same basis. I was disturbed to find a labour government in Britain approving a system whereby the hours of a shift are divided into day or evening hours, or night and day hours so that the differential rate would not apply to the complete eight hours of labour. I call upon the Minister of Labour of Canada, now that we are considering his estimates, to see that the shift differential is paid for the full eight hours of employment on each shift as is done in all other industries. It is a low enough shift differential to start with, but I maintain it should be paid for the full eight hours.

In Britain, though, I came up with one discovery which pleased me immensely. I ascertained that for about two years they have been paying a day premium rate of pay on Sundays in the hospitals of Britain. They pay one pound more on Sundays than on other days of the week. By paying this premium rate, they are able to attract for weekend employment persons who do not work in the nursing profession during the other days of the week but who are prepared to go back on Sundays for this extra pound which is known in labour circles as a day premium rate.

We shall never overcome the shortage of nurses until we offer rates of pay in the nursing profession which are sufficient to attract girls from other professions. Why would any girl choose to work at nursing on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays if she is to receive no more than she would earn as a stenographer working from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., five days a week? We all admit that man's work is from sun to sun and it is not right to expect people to work at other hours than the hours of daylight for the same rates of pay as those who work day shift hours. It is not natural.

So, having established differential rates of pay in hospitals under federal jurisdiction to compensate for services which are provided during what are known in labour circles as unnatural hours, we should also establish day premium rates of pay whereby girls who work on Saturday, Sundays and holidays would be well compensated for working on those days when the great bulk of the labour force is not employed.

Consider the case of an employee in the printing trade in Toronto who under day premium rates of pay may be receiving three times the ordinary rate because he is working on a holiday. He receives this rate under the terms of the union agreement, and I do not quarrel with triple pay on a public holiday in certain circumstances. But it has always struck me as ridiculous that if this man is injured while at work on a public holiday he is rushed to a hospital where one hears complaints about a shortage of nurses because there are not enough nurses willing to work at a single rate of pay to provide the man with the care he needs. If the injured are working at triple rates of pay, why should not the nurses who are on duty to look after them on Sundays and holidays be paid on the same basis?

I believe every right thinking Canadian will be disturbed to read the figures presented yesterday by Dr. Mussallem before the Canadian Medical Association. She told the manpower conference in Montreal:

> Recruitment to nursing schools has dropped steadily. In 1940 about a quarter of all female high school graduates entered nursing. In 1966 this had declined from 25 per cent to 8 per cent.

We have to change the substandard working conditions and pay of nurses before we can hope to attract young people into a profession which is steadily losing staff at the present time. I call on the Minister of Labour, who should be the leader in establishing suitable working conditions which could serve as a model to the rest of Canada, to see that in the veterans' hospitals of the dominion, for which the federal government is responsible, we establish rates of pay which will be attractive to young women and which will induce them to enter the nursing profession so that their services will be available in times of need, accident and injury.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak at length but I should like, on this occasion, to second the member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) who dealt with a topic in which we are greatly interested, namely unemployment insurance.

I too wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to that point, since he intends to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. May I point out two or three specific aspects which are peculiar to our area and which probably cause all the present uneasiness in the administration of unemployment insurance.

I believe the first concern, when the act was passed, was to help the unemployed. However, the door was also opened to certain injustices and this, to the extent where one wonders today if the act, in its present form, is not more a system of penalties than one of assistance to the unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, the first point to which I should like to draw the attention of the minister is the reduction in the number of unemployment insurance offices which was probably undertaken by senior officials who looked at the whole of Canada but did not visit each region to find out the conditions there and, in particular, did not measure the distances involved.

Several offices were closed in my region as a result of this reform and the workers now have to travel 150 miles to see the office chief. That is good and even wonderful for these officials, for they do not have callers very often, but I assure you it does not at all suit the worker who is unemployed, without money, and told that, for this reason, he will not get any benefits for 4, 5 and even 6 weeks. That is the way it is usually put; he is told that, under the terms of a certain clause, he is penalized for 4 or 5 weeks. In most cases, I believe, the penalty is decided upon according to what I would call the verdict of the employer.

Most of the workers in my region are lumberjacks. This is a rather unusual job, but let us take for example the case of a lumberjack who agrees to work for a contractor. If the contractor has 200 or 300 lumberjacks working for him, he cannot treat them all equally. One lumberjack will make a normal salary, because he works on a good piece of land, while another will find inferior working conditions. If the second lumberjack works for a month or a month and a half making a small salary, because he is not assigned to a good part of the bush or because the foreman does not happen to like him, he will get discouraged and finally leave his job. So he leaves his job which does not pay him enough to keep his family alive, and I have proof of this. So he is forced to leave his job to take a chance elsewhere. But, then, the contractor simply gives the reason for departure: job not terminated—work not terminated. I would like to call the attention of the minister particularly to these words: work not terminated. Then, when the man goes to the unemployment insurance office and has this report on his file, he is punished for a month or two, because he left a non-paying job which did not bring in sufficient wages to keep his family alive. He is punished for not having stayed on this ridiculous job.

I think that calling the minister's attention to this point will prompt him to review the Unemployment Insurance Act and to consider this paragraph which, in fact, gives complete authority and domination to the employer over his employee.

Most employers are fair and honest, but to avoid such injustice occurring too often because some employers want revenge on the worker, well, the next legislation will have to give more protection to the employee.

There is also the case of the farmer who goes in the bush during winter months. He works in the bush for two, three, four months and he is told that an amount is being deducted from his salary for his unemployment insurance. He is not even consulted about it. When spring comes, he cannot get any benefits. Why? Because that farmer has two, three, five or ten milch cows; he has an income, and that prevents him from getting benefits.

Mr. Chairman, I again call the attention of the hon. minister to this point. I think it is the inspectors who do not understand the meaning of the law. They do not know how to enforce it in the case of workers such as those. I suggest that in the case of that man, who had to work six months, perhaps seven in the bush, his main work is not that of taking care of his animals in the barn—since his sons and his wife are doing that—his main work is that of a lumberjack and he should therefore qualify.

For years already, since the coming into force of the Unemployment Insurance Act, we have been trying to do justice to those workers and the answer we get is: The law is the law. Well, the law is made to be interpreted. In my opinion, some investigators stick too close to the law. It will have to be made clearer to ensure fairness to farmers on the part of those investigators. Farmers must be able to benefit by unemployment insurance when they cease lumber operations in the spring. If they cannot be covered by it, let them not be charged the unemployment insurance premium. I believe that the one who pays—no matter what interpretation you give to the act—has a right to draw benefits when misfortune strikes.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is somewhat like fire insurance or any other type of insurance. If it were a private fire insurance company which did not want too honour claims when the premium had been paid, well the policy-holder would go to court and win his case. But since the government is involved, any excuse is contrived, any investigation is conducted and the investigator always has the last word. You will say perhaps: of course, but there is arbitration. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have suggested arbitration to several of them, but now when the subject of arbitration is brought up, I tell them: Do not go, it is useless. Following the investigation, the investigator's ruling is upheld and that is that.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that those few remarks about lumbermen and farmers will be well received by the minister and that the new amended legislation will do justice to those two groups of workers.

There is also the case of a son employed by his father. I had the opportunity to make inquiries and plead the case of some of them, for instance, a son who worked as a cheesemaker for three years for his father. The son did not own the cheese dairy at all, and he was denied the unemployment insurance precisely because his father was the owner. Well now, I think that there is still something to be done here. When a pater familias employs his son, or any other relative, these employees should be considered as mere workers and should be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Once again, since they were allowed to pay the dues, they must benefit from the protection of unemployment insurance.

These are the few observations I wanted to make. I do not want to extend the discussion. I am sure that the hon. minister will make a note of these few comments.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Chairman, I will only take a few minutes to refer to the question raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr.

Grégoire) a few moments ago and a little later, by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain).

This concerns the problems of the Confederation of National Trade Unions with the Canada Labour Relations Board. And, for once, I fully agree with the hon. member for Lapointe. I am even surprised that he should have spoken as he did, in view of the separatist views which dominate the political action of the hon. member for Lapointe.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, if I shared his convictions, I would endeavour to prevent any change in the procedures followed by the C.L.R.B. for I am quite convinced that the present state of affairs within that federal agency, already stirs up great dissatisfaction with federal institutions, and will continue to do so, in an increasing number of Quebec workers. Now, it so happens that workers, as a group, have until now been the least influenced in Quebec by the separatist movement and the fever of constitutional change now disturbing our province.

However, if the C.L.R.B. procedures are not changed, Mr. Chairman, I greatly fear, and I am not the only one, that dissatisfaction will overcome our workers and that, because of readily corrected anomalies, we may witness the development in the working people of an atmosphere prone to degenerate later into political strikes and other demonstrations of all kinds, of no benefit to anyone.

I do not propose now to repeat the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). They are already well known by the parties concerned.

There is another one, however, which I would like to place on record. It deals with the disparity of representation between the C.N.T.U. and the C.L.C. and with the effects of such disparity on C.L.R.B. decisions regarding union certification.

The C.L.C. has three representatives and the C.N.T.U. only one. So when it comes to certifying a union for which the two groups are competing, this disproportion becomes odious, notwithstanding the fact that four other representatives, those of the employers, also have their say.

In such a case, Mr. Chairman, the C.L.R.B. has duties which are nearly judicial and because it carries out responsibilities of that nature, it must guarantee the party seeking justice the same impartiality guaranteed by ordinary courts. Now the ordinary citizen has the right to obtain justice before the courts and also every right to believe that he is getting it.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the C.N.T.U. workers have, on the contrary, serious reasons to distrust the C.L.R.B. in its present condition, not because of its members, but because of its very constitution, since the representatives of a rival union or those of employers do not appear suitable to judge impartially, and it seems to me extremely important that the chairman of the board should be called upon to decide alone when the C.N.T.U. and the C.L.C. are competing for certification.

Finally, if the rumour is true, if the C.L.R.B. has actually postponed for several months its decision concerning the C.B.C. employees in Montreal, I cannot exaggerate the danger of such action.

For months already, the board has been considering that problem. Another delay of several months might wear out the patience of those workers, which has proved very resilient until now but which seems on the point of giving out.

Of course, there is no question of urging the government to influence the decisions of the C.L.R.B. On the contrary, it is important to respect the independence of that body. But it is necessary also to realize the danger, and if an amendment to the act itself is needed to solve the problem, the minister must not hesitate to introduce in the house the amendments called for.

[English]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of having a few moments to say a word or two about the estimates of the Department of Labour. First of all, let me say I will not be making a philosophical dissertation. I think my remarks could more readily be associated with a bread and butter speech. Someone this afternoon said a lot of philosophical discussion was taking place. It is not my intention to partake in such a discussion. I will leave that to the professorial types.

Regrettably, I was not in the chamber, because of other duties, when the minister made his introductory statement. However, I presume it was an optimistic statement and that the minister referred to the unemployment rate and the situation throughout Canada. Unfortunately, we have a bad situation in the maritimes where the unemployment rate is twice the national average, according to the latest statistics. I hope today I will have the sympathetic ear of the minister, and somehow I feel I will.

I must commend the minister for his activity. Since coming into this house he has served in several portfolios, and I am sure everyone will agree that he has done a very good job in any portfolio which he has held, and that he has been most co-operative at all times. He has been frank, fair and straightforward in all his dealings with members, and I speak from experience. That is why I expect to have a sympathetic ear today.

We have been discussing for several days in this house the problems confronting the maritime provinces, particularly Cape Breton Island on the eastern tip of Canada. Great problems exist there in respect of layoffs in the steel industry. During our discussion of these estimates I should think it appropriate to devote some time to this subject, because the greater the number of individuals laid off the more the government is going to have to pay out in unemployment insurance benefits, and this comes within the responsibility of the minister's department.

For several months we have observed a difficult situation at the steel plant in Sydney. This organization comes under the jurisdiction of Dosco, which comes under the jurisdiction of some other corporation, which again comes under the jurisdiction of the Hawker-Siddeley group which has its headquarters in London, England. It would appear that since this absentee management moved into the area ten years ago there has been nothing but a deterioration, not only of the steel industry there but of the coal industry in Nova Scotia. It is an unfortunate, sad and sorry thing that the employees of this corporation, their wives and children, and all those involved in the service trades who depend on this industry, should be at the mercy and whim of this corporation. The climate of fear and uncertainty in the steel industry has not only created hardship to the men and their families who are directly involved, it has been positively damaging to our over-all economic prospects.

Where there is doubt as to the future of such an industry as basic as steel is to the economy of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and indeed to the maritimes in general, those who operate existing small businesses or industries are apt to be hesitant to expand. The psychological effect on prospective new industries can be very damaging. I hope that when the Cape Breton Development Corporation is set up, and when it is considering bringing new industry into the area, it will realize that the present basic industries are in trouble.

Recently, the government of Canada approved grants totalling $3.7 million and the provincial government approved grants of $2 million for the modernization of dock and bulk handling facilities at the plant. At the time, government spokesmen said this financial assistance would make it possible for the company to invest additional capital in the modernization of the plant itself.

I should like at this point to place on the record a statement by the cabinet representative for Nova Scotia, or a portion of it because I see that I do not have time to read it all into the record. I quote from the Cape Breton Post of May 27, 1967. This article is headed, "MacEachen! Confidence In Steel Industry," and reads:

A vote of confidence in the city's steel industry was recorded here Friday when federal health minister Allan MacEachen released details of provincial-federal financing of the multi-million dollar pier project at the Sydney steel plant—

He said the grants were approved on the understanding that the company will make a similar expenditure.

Mr. MacEachen said the government grants are part of a government industry program to update Dosco's shipping facilities in Cape Breton and put the plant on a competitive footing with other steel production complexes.

He said the modernization program will provide security of employment for a large number of workers in the Sydney area. He also said that if long range forecasts are borne out, the improvements could substantially strengthen employment opportunities in the area.

Mr. MacEachen said the modernization program is an encouraging example of what can be done when government and private industry work together in a spirit of co-operation and mutual understanding.

He said the federal government's grant demonstrates that Ottawa has faith in the future of the area and that it is determined to do all that it can to ensure that it participates equitably in the general prosperity which the country is now experiencing.

I regret to say that we in the Atlantic provinces are not experiencing this so-called prosperity. The article quotes the minister as follows:

"The new and improved facilities should significantly reduce handling costs and improve the competitive position of the Sydney steel industry," he said.

"And with this government assistance, it is expected that additional company capital will be freed to completely modernize the Sydney steel plant itself and bring its operating costs closer to those of other Canadian steel companies."

Mr. MacEachen said that in terms of employment, he is "extremely optimistic" that these developments will be beneficial over the long term—

Mr. MacEachen said the announcement of federal government grants to the multi-million dollar project will not solve all the economic problems of the industrial area but "I am hopeful that it will help stabilize operations in the steel segment of the Cape Breton economy."

I am sure the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia made that statement in good faith. I am sure, also, that some weeks ago the premier of Nova Scotia made his statement in good faith regarding the future of steel. In spite of all that these two hon. gentlemen have said, many, many people in the area have been laid off work. They have been laid off at the plant since these statements were made and prior to their having been made. Over a period of some months between 1,100 and 1,200 workers have been laid off, and the situation is most serious and grave.

I believe we are entitled to know from the company what the amount of this additional investment will be, what its purpose is and when the program can get under way. If governments are prepared to apply over $5 million to the modernization of this plant as an indication of their confidence in the steel industry, it should be possible to give a projection in more specific terms on the long term future of the Sydney plant. I have already in this house and outside called for a study, investigation or inquiry, sponsored by the federal government, of this subject. The government already has sufficient information available to enable it to conclude such a study in a reasonably short period of time. The terms of reference should be very clear. Those appointed to carry out the study should be instructed that their job is to investigate the steel industry, specifically with a view to recommending ways in which the long term stability of the industry may be assured. This would encompass not only what marketing policies might be undertaken in co-operation with the federal government, but also what new industries related to steel might be established in Cape Breton Island. Also, we should know what the employment situation, in respect of year-round jobs, is going to be over a five or ten-year period.

I suggest, and I trust the minister is listening very carefully, that we should have a royal commission to investigate the steel industry in Nova Scotia. We had a royal commission studying the coal industry. We have had the Duncan commission. Since I am very young, I cannot recall whether that commission was concerned with coal or the economic prospects of the maritimes, but I think it dealt with coal or both. We have had the Rand commission on coal, the Carroll commission on coal, and the Donald commission on coal. We are dealing with the report of the Donald commission in respect of the legislation to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

The long term objective of this industry is to widen and strengthen our economic base. An almost exclusive dependence on the ups and downs of one or two industries has been the historic weakness of the Cape Breton economy. It would appear that this government cannot get any information from the corporation as to what their present or future plans are, if any. It would appear that the government of Nova Scotia cannot get any information from this corporation as to what their plans are, present or future. It would appear that local municipal leaders and union leaders are unable to ascertain what this corporation will do in the future.

My time is limited, so therefore I urge the minister, who is a member of the cabinet and a maritimer, who met the delegation from Sydney and heard their briefs and representations in respect of the steel industry, to consider the suggestion I have made that a royal commission be appointed to study the steel industry of Nova Scotia. The minister should talk with his cabinet colleagues and give my suggestion every consideration, so that the people in Nova Scotia will know that perhaps something will be done in the future by this government.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I suppose all I can do in less than a minute is to say that I have been waiting all day to make my speech but it looks as though I will have to save it for another day.

Mr. Pugh: There are 27 seconds to go.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I have no idea whether other hon. members wish to speak on these estimates, but if the hon. gentleman is not going to be long perhaps we could hear him. I am not suggesting that we proceed with the other two items on the agenda, but perhaps we might conclude the discussion on the estimates of the Department of Labour this afternoon if there are no others who wish to speak.

Mr. Knowles: My speech was not going to be very long, but I know other hon. members wish to speak on these estimates and there are questions hon. members would like the minister to answer. Also, the hon. member for Brantford has a bill he would like to bring forward at five o'clock. I am sure the Minister of Labour would not want to stand in his way. Perhaps I had better call it five o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the acting house leader whether he could give us a forecast of the business for the next few days.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, last evening the house leader indicated that a supply motion would probably be called for Monday. But with the concurrence of the house leader, I have been having conversations with hon. gentlemen opposite and there is some prospect that arrangements can be worked out which would expedite the completion of this section of the session.

• (5:00 p.m.)

These arrangements might make it unnecessary to have that debate on those two days. If these arrangements can be completed when my hon. friend, the house leader, is back here on Monday morning, and I think I can be modestly optimistic about the prospects, then we would go right on with the estimates of the Solicitor General followed by the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. If both should be completed, I am sure we could find some other estimates with which to deal.

In view of what I said, it would be preferable if I did not indicate any specific business for any day beyond Monday. However, I should like to express appreciation to hon. gentlemen opposite who, on this birthday of mine, have been most co-operative and to express restrained optimism that we may all achieve what I think all of us here and the country desire.

Mr. Pugh: You are mellowing with age, Jack.

Mr. Churchill: The minister is 39 years old today.

Mr. Knowles: Like Jack Benny.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE VOTING AGE

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a good measure of personal satisfaction to move second reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act in so far as it regulates the age of voters.

As we all know, the act at present requires voters in federal elections to be of the full age of 21 years, with the exception of those serving in the armed forces. This bill permits all those of the age of 18 years and over to vote.

I cannot but look back to when I myself was 18 years of age. I happened to be intensely interested in politics, more so than most of the young people of my age, and I am glad to say that I took part and helped in election campaigns at that age. The year before, when I was only 17 years of age, I worked very hard for the Liberal party in the riding where I lived. This was during the election of 1930 when our party was defeated pretty badly by the Conservative party under that redoubtable chieftain who became prime minister of Canada, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett.

Today, the situation is different in my opinion. Never before has such a large proportion of young people been so keenly interested in the government of this country. Never before has such a large proportion of Canada's young people been so well educated and informed in matters of public concern. Never before has such a large cross-section of young people been mentally equipped and actually ready to render a vote to help choose a suitable government for Canada.

There is one fine thing about our young people who are at present under the age of 21 years. They do not seem to be committed to any one particular political party. As a general rule, they are not partisans to any political organizations, in my opinion. One and all, they are interested only in voting intelligently after weighing the situation and the consequences of marking their ballot.

Some people have told me that if we give the franchise to this large body of minors —call them minors if you will—it will have only one major effect in the result of the next federal election, that is it will greatly increase the N.D.P. vote. That point of view is incorrect in my opinion. The N.D.P. will have to work awfully hard to win the votes of these young people. But this goes likewise for the Liberal party, and most certainly for the Conservative party.

Each political party, and this includes all parties, will have to earn the votes of the young people of Canada the hard way. They will each be judged on the actual merits of their platforms and policies, as well as their behaviour in parliament.

No nonsense will be tolerated from any of our youth. The result is that, in my opinion, the passage of this bill of mine by this house, or its referral to a committee for study and then its subsequent passage, will have a salutary effect on the political affairs of this country, to the edification of the public, of parliament and our great institutions.

For the information of the house I should like to point out that the following provinces have lowered the voting age: Alberta to the age of 19; British Columbia, 19; Newfoundland, 19; Saskatchewan, 18; Quebec, 18. The provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are also planning similar legislation. The voting age in the Saskatchewan municipalities is 18. In Canada today, therefore, five provinces, representing more than half of the population of this country, have lowered the voting age.

In the last ten years the House of Commons has once defeated and twice talked out private members' bills which would give the franchise to Canadians over 18. In 1963, the Commons committee on privileges and elections gave unanimous approval to amendments to the elections act which would lower the age to 18.

Recent opinion polls have shown a considerable increase of people in favour of lowering the age. The September 1966 Gallup poll reported an increase in 1958 from 33 per cent to 48 per cent in favour of lowering the age.

It is widely felt that the services the youth of this age group contribute to society entitle them to assume the responsibility of the ballot. In times of peace these young people, to a considerable extent, attain responsible places in society. In times of war their service in our armed forces has been absolutely essential. They have faced the utmost privations and hardships and have rendered even the supreme sacrifice on behalf of our country. These young people pay income tax; they are responsible in criminal law for their acts. If they are able to do these things, then they are responsible enough to have their own ballots. Young people over the age of 18 play a large role in the economic field. Therefore, they should have a vote in respect of the economic policies of this country.

The extension of the ballot to the youth of this country would be in keeping with the best principles of responsible government. A fundamental principle of our form of government is government by consent of the governed. Because the ballot in such a country essentially is a democratic right, it should be as widely available as it can properly be exercised. A large electorate promotes the realization of effective government; it better registers the popular will and provides a safeguard against disaffected elements which might otherwise work outside the law.

I am really rather proud to be the sponsor of this bill. I believe in our youth and its mighty potential. In taking the position I am taking I am being neither visionary nor idealistic; I am in no way detracting from the importance of any single age group among those who already are qualified to vote, nor am I detracting from their attitudes or opinions. I myself have appealed for the votes of the wage earners, the heads of families in my constituency who have my respect in an undiminished way, and I would have no hesitation in appealing for their votes again if I so wished. I need not add that the great body of our more senior citizens have my love and respect. They all helped to build this country and we owe them our affectionate regard. We salute them in all their future endeavours. Under this bill, however, to this great body of voters will be added the youth of our nation. These people, it is true, are young in years and experience, but they are fresh in outlook and are not tied down to traditional attitudes or points of view.

A balanced, highly rational and serious contribution by youth in the affairs of this country is, Mr. Speaker, something which is much needed in Canada. Here, when we are celebrating the 100th anniversary of confederation, I say, with all the force I can muster, let us add to the great electorate of this country the youth of Canada who are awaiting to take their part in public affairs and to lend their weight and youthful strength to the operation of government in Canada.

The bill which I sponsor today simply reduces the age requirement for all voters to 18 and over from the present requirement. The other sections, which have been examined by the law officers of the crown, substitute the words "18 years of age" for the words "21 years of age" where they appear in the act.

Actually, this bill which I am sponsoring is Liberal party policy and has been for a number of years. I am simply making an attempt to bring this much proclaimed policy into effect.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, first may I congratulate the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) for having introduced this bill. I must say that I am entirely in agreement with everything he has said with the exception of his last little addition in which he said that this was Liberal policy. My only comment in that regard is, of course, that if it has been Liberal policy it must have been Liberal policy for some time, so why has it not been brought forward by the government or by the previous government when they had a very good opportunity to do so. The very fact that they have not introduced such a measure indicates that probably they are not prepared to do anything about it at this time. In other words, they are giving lip service to a private member's bill knowing full well that it will likely be talked out, even if they have to provide Liberal speakers prior to six o'clock tonight in order to talk it out.

As I have said, I am in complete agreement with the hon. member's bill. He cited authorities for this bill. I am completely aware of those authorities and I am in agreement with them. I should like to add that one of the greatest lifts I get comes from talking to these young people. This has been my experience for the past number of years. During my experience in the schools I found that even before they were 18 years of age they had a very good working knowledge of parliament. It has been my experience that during the question period they are able to carry on asking questions for at least an hour. These are very searching questions; they have to do with the "whys and wherefores" of parliament. They are very constructive questions. The type of questions these young people ask demonstrates that the thinking they are doing is very searching and that they are looking into the future. They know only too well that it is only a question of time before they will be doing all the things which must be done in order to run a country. They realize that they will be taking over just as youth during the past number of years of our existence always has taken over.

I should like to mention an experience I had in respect of a mock parliament which was held in a high school in the city of Penticton. It was an excellent parliament. I acted as Mr. Speaker. I enjoyed the whole thing tremendously. Of course, I was an excellent speaker. The point is that these boys and girls set up their parties; they set up a parliament. Each and every member had a seat and a desk. There were 265 members including the speaker.

• (5:20 p.m.)

They prepared good questions for orders of the day and received good answers from the government of the day. They were courteously treated. Much time was spent on this and a good job done from start to finish. The debates were short because of the time limit which had to be imposed. Orders of the day went well, as did the three short debates, after each of which there was a vote.

I was struck by the amount of work done by the participants from each party in each debate. The speeches were excellent.

Those taking part in the debates did not know how long they would last, but I know that there were at least four or five other debates on current affairs—incidentally, they were well prepared and thought out. The only disappointment in the whole day was the disappointment of those who were prepared to go on with a further debate. I was told that afterwards.

I tell this little story because it shows that the young people of today—though one has only to look at the young people of previous years who were active in each party to realize that my remarks apply also to the past—are preparing themselves for the future. They do not take the slap-happy attitude that because they were born on this earth somebody else must look after them from the cradle to the grave. They want to participate actively in the affairs of the nation, in whatever cause they may be called.

The hon. member who introduced this bill has said that our young people pay income tax. That is a mundane, monetary subject. Of course they do if they earn money; and they are glad to do so. But there is a much more telling argument in favour of the hon. member's bill. In the last two world wars those of 18—some were even younger—went overseas. I believe they were given the vote when they were overseas. Whether they had the vote or not makes no difference; what matters is that they volunteered in the highest service of this country.

They took on all jobs which their leaders took on, and they performed them without looking for any reward or kudos. Some of them were only 18 years old when they went overseas. That will add to the arguments of the sponsor of the bill.

Before sitting down, may I say that no matter at what age we give the vote to our young people, the vote will give them a responsibility. Since this bill talks of 18 year olds I will confine my remarks to that age group. If our young people are given the responsibility of the vote, they will discharge that responsibility.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) will be happy to know that he has considerable support in this house for his bill. As one looks at the order paper one can see five, perhaps more, similar bills. It was the intention of the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald), the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) as well as my intention to try to sponsor in common a bill along the lines of this bill. That may be unnecessary should the present bill pass, and I hope that it will. I hope it will not be talked out in a deliberate way.

All members who are present I am sure have had occasion to think a good deal about the merits and possible demerits of extending the franchise to those below 21 years of age, to those who are 18 years old. I do not intend to reassert some of the compelling arguments about why the voting age should be reduced by three years. Other hon. members have spoken about the subject today and in previous years.

One or two arguments for reducing the voting age may be novel, but I wish to advance them. One is that as more and more young people have greater opportunities to further their education and more time for leisure activities, they are more and more being prevailed on by mass media because they represent a commercial market. As a result, a subculture, if I might call it that, is growing up and hardening which affects our young people. There is a growing tendency for the young people of the present day to hive into a subculture of their own.

There may be some positive features from such a development, yet I believe that responsible people do not wish such a tendency to develop unduly and wish to counteract it. One way to counteract such a tendency is to involve our young people more in the running and administering of our political society. Since I cannot put my ideas as eloquently as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) put his ideas when he spoke in the throne speech debate, perhaps I might be permitted to quote some sentences from his address, to be found at page 24 of Hansard for May 9, 1967. He said:

> More and more Canadians are becoming aware of this potential. Not many are clear yet as to how it can be achieved. But our young people in particular are convinced that the standard, routine methods are not the answer, nor do our present values bear any great relevance to the conception they have of national objectives. This, I suggest, is why many institutions, including this house, are held in something less than awe by the younger generation which now makes up such a large part of our population.

And here is the nub of this eloquent statement:

> We ought not to ignore or dismiss as inconsequential the ideas of these young people, most of whom are committed to the future of their country. They believe in it. Our task is to involve them—

I repeat:

> Our task is to involve them constructively in the nation-building process.

Hon. members who applauded that statement and sentiment ought to find it difficult to oppose the implementation of this bill. This bill would give concrete application to the sentiments that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo expressed a few weeks ago. His remarks were applauded in all parts of the house.

• (5:30 p.m.)

We must as far as we are able involve young people in the ordering of the affairs of their political society. This is one way of doing it. We all believe, I am sure, in the desirability of doing these things gradually, step by step. We allow young people to hold elective office at the age of 21, so it seems to me they should be allowed to vote to help decide who shall hold office at least a few years earlier.

It has been said that one good reason for accepting this bill is that in some of the provinces the electoral law has been changed to allow voting from the age of 18. References were made to Saskatchewan and Quebec which provide for voting from the age of 18. In Alberta and British Columbia, provisions for voting from the age of 19 have already been made. In Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick amendments to the act were passed last session. I know for a fact that one reason a resolution to similar effect failed to pass the Manitoba legislature was that it was thought desirable, in the interest of uniformity across the country before lowering the voting age to wait until the federal government decided to take action.

This is a logical position to take. The difficulty is that if the federal government is inclined to procrastinate unduly, the action which the province felt to be desirable would have to be delayed interminably. The majority sentiment in the Manitoba legislature, according to a vote which was held on this question of the voting age a few months ago, was that there should indeed be a reduction in the minimum voting age from 21 to 18. But the members still felt that the federal government should be prevailed upon to act first.

It is to be hoped, then, that before the passing of another year, certainly before the next election, this change will be made. We have an opportunity to act here and now in the form of the bill presented by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown). The remaining provinces will without doubt follow suit and we would then have in this country a uniform election law with regard to minimum voting age, the effect of which would be to give an opportunity for involvement for the young people today who in so many instances feel frustrated because they are unable to take part in any meaningful way in the nation-building process or in the political processes of our society.

I know that some elements in our society will be of the opinion, as they have been for a long time past, that to extend the franchise downward to the age of 18 would be to run the risk of political parties catering to the supposedly less stable elements —that the temptation would grow to buy or curry favour with less stable groups. While there are no doubt certain aspects of the behaviour of youth which may cause some adults to feel concerned, I and many others are getting the decided impression that by far the greater number of the young people of today are showing an impressive degree of maturity and good judgment. I believe they are giving evidence of a degree of seriousness and of a sense of commitment to ideals; they are showing they would like to become involved in helping to solve many of the human problems which exist in this country and in the world today. Since they have this desire for involvement and this sense of commitment, we should not withhold any longer the chance to have a say in the choosing of the government of our country, which is just as much their country.

I would be very disappointed if with deliberate intent, or some murky or cloudy purpose, this bill does not receive endorsement.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) for having introduced this bill in the house. As the previous speaker mentioned, several members have given thought to this matter.

I feel that most young people are serious enough to judge political matters. I say, most of them, because I do not mean that 50 per cent of our young people have attained maturity. I took pleasure in conducting a small survey in my riding on this subject, and I think that hardly 50 per cent of the young people are really interested in politics or for that matter, are actually informed on political matters.

In fact, the replies I received were rather vague. Now, a percentage of 50 per cent is reasonable enough. At any rate, we notice the same situation with older people. Several elderly persons know absolutely nothing about politics, especially those who live in large cities. I have worked in rural municipalities and especially in larger centres and one notices that the greater majority of the people, even in cities, who are middle-aged, or are considered as such, know nothing about politics, do not even know who their member is. I can assure you that they know very little. I feel that we have here a group of young people who are reasonably conversant with public affairs and certainly deserve the attention of governments.

To my mind, the federal government would be acting fairly in enfranchising 18-year old youth. In fact, are they not taxed from age 18? When one is paying and forced to pay, one is entitled to get something in return.

Furthermore, the provinces show the lead in this matter. In fact, several provinces have already reduced the voting age. Why? For political reasons no doubt, because I think there might be a little bit of politics in this. In the province of Quebec, if the government did it for political reasons, it certainly was not lucky because it was defeated. But quite apart from the political point of view, it would be undoubtedly fair to 18-year old youth to give them the right to vote. I would even say that it is a matter of justice to enfranchise everyone who is taxed and to refuse the right to vote to those who are not taxable. And I mean taxable—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Oh.

Mr. Gauthier: —subject to taxation.

I must say what I mean by the words "subject to taxation", because I just heard the Postmaster General says: "Oh." It would be sheer logic that anybody be entitled to vote as long as he is subject to taxation by our governments.

I have another point to make on consideration of this bill to lower the voting age to 18 years. If our youth are to be given responsibilities, let them be given logical ones. If one can vote at 18, enter the armed forces at 18, and be liable, to taxation at 18, one attains one's majority at 18.

Mr. Habel: This is a purely provincial matter.

Mr. Gauthier: I do not see why a young man should not reach his majority at 18, in all provinces.

The voting age is a provincial as well as federal matter. I do not know whether the question of minors is a matter for the provinces only, or whether it also falls under federal jurisdiction—I am not very well aware of the situation in other provinces—but if this has any influence on the question of minors, I think it is an interesting question which, of course, has nothing to do with the bill under consideration today.

Incidentally, I think that if you want to hire young people, you must lower to 18 the age when they can vote or attain their majority.

I regret that this bill was presented as a public bill, because we know what usually happens to a private members' public bills, that is a first class funeral due to the clock, but I hope—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You are participating therein.

Mr. Gauthier: No, because I want to be brief. I am only expressing my point of view, but usually every public bill receives the same treatment. That is provided for in the standing orders.

However, I wish that this bill had been introduced by an hon. minister so that it would be discussed and put into effect as soon as possible in view of the coming election.

Mr. L. P. Neveu (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, it is with much pleasure that I avail myself of the privilege bestowed upon me to address myself to the members of this assembly in order to deal with a matter of the utmost importance.

Indeed, in any democracy, the free expression of citizens, through the voting process, constitutes the cornerstone of our democratic system. By our throughts, our words and our actions we express our grievances to those who are elected to administer the affairs of the country our legislators.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-5 before us this afternoon, has to do with an important question: is it advisable to give the right to vote to our fellow-citizens, male and female, at the age of 18 years. Evidently, there are pros and cons to this issue which no doubt deserve due consideration.

I hope that my humble contribution will promote the surge of ideas in order that we may be enlightened to take the necessary measures for the benefit of the common good. With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state objectively my point of view concerning that very important question of enfranchising 18-year old youth.

I am one of those who feel that the sharing of responsibilities will prove more satisfactory in this modern world.

Needless to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that youth has always played a leading part in wartime, in difficult periods. There are unfortunately too many young people among the bravest on the battlefields, who have not been emancipated by being given full rights. As far as Canada is concerned their contribution proved to be of prime importance during the 1914-18 and 1939-45 world wars.

Every year, on remembrance day, we deem it our duty to lay wreaths on the graves of our young soldiers who died between the age of 18 and 21, as a tribute to their courage, their ability and their valour. We must consider objectively that if citizens shed their blood, they have the right to share in peacetime and in every circumstances, the sacred rights belonging to fully emancipated citizens.

In the industrial sector, and in war production, a great number of those young people, of both sexes, made a very important and very useful contribution.

In peacetime, our young people really join in the march towards the common good. Through education, they prepare themselves to play a constructive role to ensure our economic and social development. Several of them assume important responsibilities and even become heads of families. To a large extent, they contribute to the administration of the government by paying taxes; they also render very valuable services to various companies.

Mr. Speaker, several qualities may be attributed to those young people. Allow me to mention a few:

1. They have intuition and ideals;

2. They have energy and a creative mind;

3. They have untold resources of inborn qualities.

Our country, which is also one of the newer countries on the map of the world, needs all men of good will. I think we can prove to the world that we are broad-minded and that we mean to devote all our energies and talents to our economic and social emancipation.

Young people, because of their nature and idealism, have a definite talent for science and research. Research concerning the promotion of talent will play a major role in the second century of our country.

Competent authorities in the field of education are giving a greater importance than ever to a number of great qualities of youth. Responsibilities are being increasingly delegated to young leaders, young professors, in other words to dynamic people who dare to look ahead and think big.

Our young people can be very important, because they can bring people to collaborate and find advanced formulas.

It must also be recognized that those young people should have the right to speak up and be represented on the labour market. They have often been denied because their voice was not powerful enough in those sectors which appeal to them most. They want to valorize themselves by contributing to them.

The principle of majority is now recognized at 21 years of age only. You will grant me that maturity is more a matter of behaviour than of age. Another aspect must be considered. Indeed, many of our young people are allowed by civil and religious authorities to marry before they are 21 years old. That situation involves many inconveniences when the legal age of majority is 21. Let me give you a few examples to illustrate what I mean.

For instance: (1) the consent of parents or tutors must be obtained; (2) one is unable to make a will as citizens of age do, and (3) one is legally irresponsible yet assumes responsibilities.

Many think it desirable that the greatest possible number of active people of a country should make the decisions and that the responsibilities should be shared by all classes of citizens. The adults and particularly the young are anxious for a dialogue in our present world. But, for the dialogue to be practical, it is necessary that equal rights and responsibilities be shared by all parties concerned.

The best way to practice a well-ordered policy is to delegate responsibilities in an atmosphere of confidence.

I think that our youths should be trained not only to profit from a healthy body but to adopt a positive attitude, so that they may be psychologically prepared at the earliest possible time to take over from their elders. Because of our information and culture media, our youths are more advanced and better informed. Our youths are ready to produce and it is better to let them work with what they have within the framework of responsibilities instead of isolating them in their frustration. The desire to have an ideal is natural with them.

I have no doubt that if our youths were to share the right to vote, this would eventually improve the quality of the popular vote. Besides, our schools are starting to include in their training, important factors concerning citizenship, public affairs and subjects of interest to our citizens.

Young people nowadays take an increasing interest in politics and public affairs. They read more, participate in forums and meetings and seek really positive ways of communicating with their fellowmen.

It may be said that juvenile delinquency proves more frequent among the young until they reach 18 years of age, but, if one goes to the source, one finds that in most cases the young people were made prone to delinquency by adult delinquents. It must also be admitted that we must be objective and not place too much emphasis on the mistakes of young people, because they, in turn, will not fail to point out the mistakes of their elders.

Certain arguments are used by those who doubt that 18-year-olds are capable of voting. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the house, I do not have the time required to go over all those arguments, but there are some, and, if you will, I shall refer to only one of them which I think it is important to emphasize in order to understand the positive factors involved.

Some will say that our young people are often unstable, impulsive and that therefore they cannot naturally and psychologically express a really significant opinion on matters of some importance. But we must recognize that we have, of course, throughout our life, the qualities of our faults and the faults of our qualities.

However, before concluding my remarks I should like to say that I fully support that reduction by which our young people may be able to play a leading role and contribute to the common weal. I might undoubtedly take inspiration from that thought of Jean-Charles Harvey, and I should have liked to be able to emphasize a little the problems facing our young people in Quebec today as well as the part they want to play.

I think that we must take as a pattern a constructive dialogue so that the Quebec young people may associate themselves to those of other provinces, on a federal level, so that we may work closely with all the classes of our society.

We must hope for this, and young people today should meditate on this question. A great man once said that political genius, like any other, really consists in making rational use of the genius of others.

I believe in the intelligence of our youth. I am sure that, together with Canadians of every social class, our young people will find inspiration in Man and his World and build a future in which liberty, unity and fraternity will reign, in a new world, in a strong and better Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in the moment before six o'clock I wonder whether I may have the unanimous consent of the house to send the subject matter of this bill to the committee on privileges and elections where it can receive further study. If I have that consent I should like to move:

That the motion for second reading of Bill C-5, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Age of Voters) be deemed to have been withdrawn, and that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

MONTREAL, June 22, 1967—The eleventh meeting of the Joint Canada-United States Ministerial Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs was held in Montreal, June 20-22.

The Committee exchanged views on current economic developments. They reviewed the success achieved in both countries in moderating excessive demand pressures during the past year and noted that a more dynamic pace of extension of real output was expected in coming months. Recovery of the residential construction industry, an end to the inventory correction, modest expansion of private investment expenditures, higher Federal, State and local government purchases, and renewed vigor in consumer spending were cited as the major anticipated sources of strength in the United States out-look for the coming year. Similar forces were also expected to lead to stronger growth in Canada. The Committee emphasized the need for flexible and responsible fiscal policy in both countries during the coming months. They recognized the need for dealing with the problem of achieving greater stability in costs and prices, especially as the two economies resume rates of advance more in line with their potentials.

In a world of growing trade and development assistance, Committee members affirmed the intention of their governments to press for general agreement at the 1967 annual meeting of the Governors of the International Monetary Funds on the structure and major provisions of a contingency plan for the creation of a new international reserve asset. They stressed the need for an asset which monetary authorities could include in their reserves.

The Committee also reviewed the balance of payments prospects of the two countries. United States members reiterated the continued determination of the United States to make as much progress toward equilibrium in its worldwide balance of payments as the costs of Vietnam permit. The Committee discussed capital movements between the two countries and took note of the benefits to both countries of existing arrangements relating to access by Canadian borrowers to the United States capital market.

The Committee welcomed the successful conclusion of the Kennedy Round of Trade negotiations which will provide an important stimulus to world trade as well as to trade between the United States and Canada. They discussed prospects for the future trade liberalization, noted that both countries are conducting studies on this matter and agreed to continue close consultations.

The Committee devoted special attention to the trade problems of the developing countries recognizing the importance of positive and constructive measures in support of efforts by the developing countries to accelerate their own economic development. This will be the main theme of the second United Nations conference on trade and development early next year.

The Committee was concerned about the failure of development aid to expand in line with the growing requirements of the developing countries. In this context early and substantially enlarged replenishment of International Development Association resources must have a high priority. The Committee welcomed the new multilateral food aid program agreed upon in the Kennedy Round which will help expand food aid and will result in a more equitable sharing of the cost. The amount and character of food assistance must be improved as well as the degree of self-help by the recipient nations.

The Committee recognized the importance of close and effective cooperation between the two countries in respect of wheat marketing policies, including wheat flour, particularly in the context of the new cereals agreement concluded in the Kennedy Round. They agreed to strengthen consultative arrangements concerning wheat marketing and food aid.

United States members reiterated their concern over those aspects of the Canadian Bank

Act which in their view have the effect of discriminating retroactively against a bank in Canada owned in the United States. Canadian Ministers took a different view of the effect of the Bank Act, and stressed the importance of effective Canadian ownership of major financial institutions. They reiterated Canada's intention to encourage increased participation by Canadians in the ownership and control of Canadian industry while continuing to maintain hospitable climate for foreign investment.

Canadian members, also drew attention to the problem arising from the effect which certain United States laws and regulations may have upon Canadian companies, especially as regards securities regulations and foreign assets control but noted that good progress had been made in dealing with particular aspect of the problem. The Committee agreed on the desirability of an exchange of information in the securities field that would benefit investors in both countries.

The Committee examined results achieved under the Automotive Agreement of 1965. Despite fluctuations in demand and the continuing process of adjustment the industry is making progress in rationalization and efficiency, and trade in automotive products between the two countries has expanded substantially to the benefit of both producers and consumers. They noted that a comprehensive review of the Agreement was to begin later this year.

The Committee discussed energy relations between the two countries. They recognized the common interest in the orderly expansion of trade in energy resources and discussed the kinds of facilities which might be needed to serve efficiently the development of this trade. The Committee noted the recent decision of the Federal Power Commission which, in approving the transmission of natural gas to Eastern Canadian and border states customers, referred to the community of interest in this project and to its security advantages.

The Committee discussed a number of bilateral questions of current interest to the two countries. United States members urged that Canadian tourists returning to Canada from the United States be given duty-free allowances equivalent to those given Canadian tourists returning from overseas areas. They also requested that Canada accord official recognition to Bourbon whisky as a distinctive product of the United States.

Canadian Ministers referred to the desirability of expanding the area of free trade in agricultural machinery, tractors and equipment and it was agreed that this matter should be examined jointly with a view to working out mutually satisfactory arrangements. They also urged the elimination of the manufacturing clause in United States copyright legislation and the relaxation of restrictions on United States imports of aged Canadian Cheddar cheese. Canadian members drew attention to the problem created from time to time because of the cross border movement of relatively small quantities of agricultural products at depressed prices usually at or near the end of the marketing season. The Committee agreed that continued efforts would be made to work out acceptable solutions to these problems. Other topics discussed included trade in lead and zinc, and the St. John River Development.

The Committee expressed pleasure that agreement had been reached regarding winter maintenance for the Haines Cutoff portion of the Alaska highway and discussed possible improvement in the Alaska highway system.

The Committee took note of the studies at present being undertaken by the International Joint Commission, which, at the request of the two governments, is investigating a number of questions of economic and general public interest relating to boundary waters and pollution of air and water.

Meetings of the Joint Ministerial Committee have in the past been held alternately in Ottawa and Washington. On the occasion of the centennial of Canada's Confederation, this meeting was held in Montreal which provided an opportunity for members of the Committee to visit Expo 67.

The United States Secretary of State, the Honourable Dean Rusk and the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs the Honourable Paul Martin were unable to participate in the meeting as planned because of the emergency session of the United Nations General Assembly. The United States was represented by Secretary of the Treasury the Honourable Henry H. Fowler (Chairman of the Delegation) United States Ambassador to Canada, the Honourable W. Walton Butterworth; Secretary of Agriculture, the Honourable Orville L. Freeman; Secretary of Commerce, the Honourable Alexander B. Trobridge; Under Secretary of the Interior, Honourable Charles F. Luce; Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, the Honourable Gardner Ackley; Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, the Honourable Anthony M. Solomon.

The Canadian delegation was headed by the Honourable Robert H. Winters, Minister of Trade and Commerce; and included the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Minister of Finance; the Honourable Charles M. Drury, Minister of Industry; the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; the Honourable J. J. Greene, Minister of Agriculture; Mr. Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada; and Mr. A. E. Ritchie, Canadian Ambassador to the United States.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 26, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONCLUSION OF FIRST PART OF SESSION—NO SITTING ON JULY 3

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the house I would like to make a statement and, if agreeable, propose a subsequent order which would have the effect of bringing the work of this part of the session to an orderly close and imbed the understandings that have been reached into such an order of the house.

On Friday last the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the hon. members for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) had some discussions which formed the basis of the agreement which I am proposing to the house today. Earlier the opposition house leader and I had discussions along similar lines.

The proposal is as follows: Today we would like to enter all remaining departments, three in number, into the committee of supply without debate. We would provide in the order that the three remaining supply motions be utilized in the resumed part of the session in the fall. In addition, on Thursday of next week we would like to ask for interim supply for a period of four months, and to pass at that time ten departments and the supply bill resulting from the passing of these departments.

With that program in mind we would hope to adjourn the house on Friday, July 7, unless it were necessary to remain for the following day to secure royal assent. If it is not, we will conclude this part of the session on that Friday.

In addition I would also propose that the house not sit on Monday, July 3. As it stands now there is no provision for a house holiday on that day, and in order to alter that fact we need a special order of the house. There have been discussions with the representatives of all parties and agreement has been reached. I should like, with the consent of the house, to move a motion that would carry these understandings into effect and become an order of the house. I move:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of any standing or provisional order of this house, it is ordered:

(1) That the order for "House again in committee of supply" shall stand as the first item of government business in this sitting for the purpose of moving "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair" and, when it be proposed, the said motion shall be decided forthwith without debate or amendment; and

(2) That when the house resolves itself into committee of supply pursuant to the adoption of the said motion, the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, of all departments now outstanding shall be forthwith first taken up and entered for consideration in the committee of supply; and

(3) That following the proposed summer adjournment there shall be three occasions on which an order for house in committee of supply shall be called for the purpose of moving "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair"; provided that the first of the said three orders shall be called not later than the fifteenth sitting day, the second not later than the thirtieth sitting day, and the third not later than the forty fifth sitting day following the resumption of the sittings of the house next autumn; and

(4) That the operation of paragraph 3 of this order shall not in any way preclude the adoption of all items in the committee of supply and the enactment of supply bills based thereon within the thirty day period prescribed therefor in subparagraph 5 (c) of the resolution adopted April 26, 1967; and

(5) That on Thursday, July 6, 1967, at 9:30 o'clock p.m., the proceedings of the house or the committee of supply or ways and means, as the case may be, shall be interrupted, and every question shall successively be put forthwith that may be necessary to dispose of the estimates of ten departments and any resolution or bill based thereon, and also such resolutions and bills as are necessary to provide for a four month interim supply; and

(6) That debate on any of the said three motions referred to in paragraph 3 shall not exceed two sitting days, and that in each case the main motion and any amendments proposed thereto shall be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of sections 2 and 4 of standing order 56.

(7) That any time or days used in the fulfilment of the terms of this order shall be part of the over-all limitation of time allotted to the consideration of the business of supply in this session.

(8) That when the house rises on Friday, June 30, 1967, it shall stand adjourned until 2:30 p.m. Tuesday, July 4, 1967.

This motion I am moving, Mr. Speaker, is seconded by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). In making this proposal to the house I wish to express my appreciation to the Minister of Transport and the representatives of all parties in the house for reaching an agreement which provides for what I regard as an orderly and responsible way of concluding this part of the session.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): May I ask why the arrangement could not be made in such a manner that the session would end on June 30 and the extra week we are sitting in July be provided by returning a week earlier? There would be no difference in the time allotted for a holiday or for the business of the house. It would seem there would be as much advantage to all hon. members to have the opportunity to be home in July and return a week earlier in the fall.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this was a possibility that was considered. We felt that the provision of the Monday holiday at the week end would provide hon. members with an opportunity, if they so wished, to go to their ridings. We are also conscious of the fact that Her Majesty will be in Canada and in Ottawa that week and it would be desirable at that time to have the House of Commons of Canada in session.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING METHOD OF APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-140, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (appointment of judges).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, this bill is a revival of one I introduced in the last session but which was not reached for discussion. It would not interfere with the crown prerogative, but it would require the government before making judicial appointments to obtain the opinion of a committee of the Canadian Bar Association as to the suitability and qualifications of persons under consideration. Such a procedure, I believe, would tend not only to preserve the generally high calibre of our judiciary but would also bolster public confidence in this vital branch of our democratic system. I hope there will be an opportunity for the justice committee to consider this bill in the fall.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD, REMUNERATION, ETC.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

CANADIAN METROPOLITAN AREAS

Question No. 266—Mr. Lambert:

1. What criteria are used in establishing the size and density of population of any area in Canada to qualify it as a census metropolitan area (reference catalogue 92-263 bulletin A-3 census of Canada)?

2. How many such areas are there in Canada, which are they, and what is their respective surface area?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. For census purposes, a census metropolitan area is defined as an urban agglomeration of at least 100,000 persons, of which 50,000 or more live in the central city. Fringe communities to be considered part of the metropolitan agglomeration must be in close geographic, social and economic relationship to the central city.

To determine these relations, such criteria as distance from the central city, the extent of build up areas with a population density of 1,000 persons or more per square mile and the proportion of the labour force in non-agricultural activities are used.

In a few exceptional cases, where the adjoining municipalities are of an extreme size and contain large tracts of agricultural land, only the urbanized fringes of these municipalities are included.

2. Nineteen census metropolitan areas were defined for the 1966 census of Canada. These and their land areas are as follows:

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): At this point I rise on a question of privilege. In view of the desire of hon. members to bring about a termination of this portion of the session without in any way reducing our responsibilities, the matter of answers to questions becomes of great importance. Starred questions in the British tradition are to be answered within three days. The answers to starred questions today are being delayed unnecessarily in certain instances. I point out that starred question No. 81 that I placed on the order paper on May 17 regarding the position of the international control commission in Asia has not yet been answered. There can be no excuse for that delay.

Furthermore, another starred question which the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) put on the order paper on May 8, having to do with the Steven Truscott case, has not been answered. In that instance too there has been an unjustifiable delay. I ask the government to give attention to these matters and to have replies made at the first opportunity. There can be no reason for having starred questions if they are starred only in the record but not in the minds of the ministers to whom they are directed.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—INQUIRIES AND STATEMENTS ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister concerning the excellent speech the Secretary of State for External Affairs delivered at the United Nations during the course of the debate. He set out four definite points; I will not outline them, but they are in his speech.

I would ask this. Was it a matter of government decision that two of the six points enunciated by the Prime Minister in his speech in the house of June 8, 1967, were omitted? I particularly refer to that part on page 1294 of Hansard for June 8, 1967, where the Prime Minister said that one of the six points was the establishment once again of a United Nations presence in force between the armies that have been fighting, and a presence which will operate on both sides of the border.

Why was that important point omitted? Will the Prime Minister also say, in connection with the Middle East problem, whether his attention has been drawn to the views expressed today by His Holiness the Pope to the effect that Jerusalem should be internationalized? What is the attitude of the government in that regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the omission of any points made in this house from the speech by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned, if the right hon. gentleman will take another look at the speech he will find the point that he mentioned as having been omitted has been included, but not in the four points that were referred to seriatim. It was referred to as an indication in general of the importance of the United Nations presence in the area. That was referred to in the speech, but not as one of the four points.

So far as the suggestion of His Holiness the Pope is concerned, we have taken the position—and I think I referred to this the other day in the house—that there should be international supervision of the holy places of Jerusalem. That was one of the points the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned in his statement.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all welcome the Secretary of State for External Affairs back to the house after his arduous labours. I wish to ask him if any pattern seems to be emerging from the discussions which have taken place, particularly the private discussions at the United Nations and those which have been held between the President of the United States and the premier of the Soviet union.

I should also like the minister to tell us whether there is any particular program for which the Canadian government is pressing, for example a political settlement precedent to any withdrawal of troops, or any long term plan for the placement of refugees and the economic rehabilitation of the middle east.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. gentleman and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition for their generous words. At the present time there are two propositions before the general assembly, one put forward by the United States and one put forward by the Soviet union. It may be that neither of those resolutions in its present form will, in its entirety, command wide support. It may be that the best course would be to work for a compromise arrangement. In any event we shall have to see what is the outcome of the present debate, and whether a compromise resolution which might set in motion some encouragement for negotiation directly between the parties or through the intervention of a third party, either under the auspices of the United Nations or otherwise, might be acceptable.

The position we took with regard to the main issue, namely the call for the withdrawal of the forces of Israel, was that such a withdrawal must be related to the other basic issues involved including, of course, the rights of Israel and the other parties, such rights as freedom of navigation, the solution of the refugee problem and issues of that sort. We would certainly hope there would be a relation between the request for a withdrawal and a recognition of these issues. It is too early at this time to say whether there will be this relationship between the request for withdrawal and a recognition of the issue I have mentioned.

In any event this is the objective the Canadian delegation has in mind, and I cannot see that as a result of the talks between the chairman of the council of ministers of the Soviet union, Mr. Kosygin, and the President of the United States any real progress in this regard has been made. Certainly nothing which was said by the President, nothing which was said by Mr. Kosygin in his press conference last night, indicates that either of these two countries has changed the position which it formally stated before the general assembly. Nevertheless I am sure I express the views of everyone in this house when I say we were gratified that the heads of the governments of the two most powerful countries in the world did have ten hours of discussion.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the Soviet union and some other nations have made vehement demands for the withdrawal of Israeli forces, will the Canadian government oppose any move on the part of the United Nations to order a withdrawal of Israeli forces unless it is accompanied by the kind of ironclad guarantees to which the minister himself has just referred?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Canadian position is that while we cannot support the seizure of territory by force, withdrawal by the forces of Israel must be linked with the negotiation of arrangements which take into account the basic rights and interests of the parties concerned; and in this instance, of course, Israel is very much included.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government was contemplating any special or additional contribution to UNRWA to deal with the immediate needs of the refugees, and the right hon. gentleman said he would rather leave the matter until today when the details would be known. Could the house be informed of them now?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows an announcement was made in the house last week that deliveries under the $2½ million which had been made available in earlier appropriations for food and relief to the Middle East area would be speeded up, and that in addition there would be a special contribution for emergency medical supplies through the Red Cross.

It was difficult last week and before that to obtain from the International Red Cross and the United Nations authorities the exact nature of their requirements to meet the immediate emergency but we did finally get, and I think I indicated this last Friday, a good deal of information. As a result of an examination of this information concerning the needs and the emergency requirements, the government has decided to make available an additional $1 million worth of food aid to the United Nations relief and works agency. That doubles the food aid to UNRWA, which was $1 million in the earlier appropriation. It was also decided to meet the cost of the transportation of this additional food aid to the area concerned, a cost which had previously been borne by other United Nations members of the organization.

These transport costs will come to between $125,000 and $225,000. It was also decided to make available an extra $80,000 to the Canadian Red Cross for emergency supplies, largely medical supplies. This represents an additional $1,200,000 or $1,300,000 worth of aid to meet the requirements of relief and rehabilitation with which we now find ourselves faced in the Middle East as a result of the conflict.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a further question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government considering the advisability of making continuing contributions to relief and the assistance of refugees conditional upon sincere efforts being made to rehabilitate the refugees so they will not be a continuing problem throughout the years?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important point. Before the outbreak of the conflict a few weeks ago, we associated with our contributions not a condition but a statement that some effective effort must be made to deal with this problem if we were not to continue making contributions merely to keep people on relief. We did not make that a condition because we did not feel we could do it in that way and then have the refugees themselves suffer because of the absence of relief. If all member countries had made such a condition there would be no relief at all. We have done our best, however, to create the impression that we cannot go on indefinitely meeting these emergency situations by monetary relief. We have made that clear and we will make it clear in connection with our additional contribution.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I asked the reason for the omission of the United Nations force operating between the two areas, the Arab and Israeli areas, from the four points given by the minister at the UN, and the Prime Minister replied that he felt this had been dealt with in the speech by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why he did not press for the establishment of a United Nations presence in force between the armies, to use the words of the Prime Minister, and that that presence should operate on both sides of the boundary. The Prime Minister mentioned that this was dealt with in the speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why he was so delightfully uncertain in this regard, because the reference to it in his speech was as follows:

> Canada supplied the first commander, General Burns, and a sizeable contingent to the force. UNEF was the first peace keeping force to be established by the United Nations. I am convinced that its record of accomplishment and service will be a legacy upon which the United Nations will be able to draw in future. This record will be far more important in the verdict of history than the current differences of opinion over the circumstances of its withdrawal.

If the minister still believes in the force, why didn't Canada come out for direct operation rather than pay encomiums to the record of history and the legacy of the future, and say we want a United Nations force strong enough to preserve the peace in the Middle East?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think we did both those very things. First of all I took occasion to pay tribute to the contribution made by the United Nations emergency force, and I underlined that I thought that contribution was more important than the controversy over the circumstances of its withdrawal. But I did say with regard to the United Nations truce supervision organization, which is an existing presence of the United Nations, that Canada envisaged it as having a continuing responsibility not only with regard to the withdrawal of forces but also for the function of observation. We hope that this organization, already established by the security council, will have not only its present but also an expanded role. However, that is something that remains to be decided once the substantive issues now before the general assembly have been dealt with.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to the refugee problem. A couple of days ago the Prime Minister stated that Canada would be willing to take a certain number of Arab refugees. If we do take some of these refugees I want an assurance that it will not interfere with our present immigration policy which we have established, to bring in some 200,000-odd immigrants this year.

Mr. Pearson: I think, Mr. Speaker, any contribution, as part of a United Nations effort, that we could make to this problem by taking in certain refugees, would have to be considered apart from and beyond our ordinary immigration pattern, that is to say, the flow of immigrants coming in in the ordinary way.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a related question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the military commander of the United Nations emergency force made a report to the secretary general of the United Nations concerning the steps that were taken for the withdrawal of the force, the attacks that were made on that force and the casualties that were suffered? And if there is such a report, will it be made available to the House of Commons?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I made inquiries when I was at the general assembly on Thursday last as to whether such a report would be made available. One will be made available as a result of the report the secretary general himself will be making to the security council, but the report of the force commander is not as yet a public document.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, may I just take one moment to supplement an answer I gave a few minutes ago to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. In addition to the United Nations truce supervisory organization which continues to function, and which I mentioned in my statement, I also referred to the Palestine conciliation commission, which many people seem to have forgotten, but which is still in existence.—

Mr. Diefenbaker: And inoperative.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, it is operative. The significance of that commission is that in its membership are to be found, in addition to Turkey, two of the great powers, the United States and France. I believe my right hon. friend may find that considerable attention will be given to a possible further role for that commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister table the speech he made so that those who run may read; because I have examined it very carefully and I find there was such an omission to deal with an emergency force, and that surprises me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall be very glad to table the speech. I would simply point out that in one portion of the speech there is this sentence:

> I would expect them to exercise a continuous responsibility as the withdrawal of Israeli forces takes place, particularly if arrangements can be made for this withdrawal which will result in demilitarized zones on both sides of the borders.

This sentence follows a statement which reads: "The UN military observers—the United Nations truce supervisory organization—to whom I wish to pay special tribute, have already played a valuable role in observing the cease fire".

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the United Nations emergency force.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend points out that it is not the United Nations emergency force. Regrettably that force has been withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to table the speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it still United Nations policy that the belligerents should agree on the nationals who form the peace keeping force?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Pugh: Is it United Nations policy that the belligerent nations should agree on the nationals who form the United Nations peace keeping force?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it must be clear that before any United Nations force can be established it must have the consent of the country in whose territory the force will operate. If it involves more than one country, then the consent of these countries for the establishment of the force is an essential condition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then this is the end of the force.

Mr. Pugh: Has Canada been approached by the United Nations to keep such a force ready?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The United Nations has not dealt with the nature of the United Nations presence that may be required. As I said a moment ago, the United Nations truce supervisory organization is carrying on its function of observation. Canada has some 22 officers who are part of that United Nations truce supervisory organization, a body which continues to perform, as it did during the cease fire, a very great service to the cause of peace.

WATER RESOURCES

OTTAWA RIVER—REQUEST FOR POLLUTION CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, if I could move from world problems to the local scene I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as the minister responsible for the national capital area. My question has to do with the very serious water pollution situation in the Ottawa river. The question is one which is being asked by many people. Can we do nothing to stop the pollution of this river before it becomes a proper sewer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is of a very general nature and cannot be asked at this time.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FERRY RATES, NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I have given him notice. Were hearings held by the Canadian Maritime Commission into the rates charged on the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service, as was indicated would be the case, before authorization was given for the discontinuance of the sale of reduced round trip tickets which I understand is to come into effect on July 1?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, because of the date on which the proposed change is to become effective, I think the question is urgent. I am very grateful to the hon. member for Queens for his courtesy in letting me know that he intended to ask this question.

The hearings, which at that time it was thought might be held, were not held because in the interval we had come to the conclusion that there should be no general over-all increase at all. It was thought that the scheme which had been worked out of selling books of ten tickets so that regular users would not have any increased charge would meet most of the problems that might have come up at a hearing.

Perhaps I might be permitted to add just one word. In the statement I issued on Friday I added the following:

> But if experience shows there are other users, such as farmers carrying their produce in their own trucks, who are not able to benefit from the commuter rates the maritime commission is prepared to give consideration to some means of meeting such problems.

It was thought that really the serious problem would be met by the commuter ticket system, but that if there were some cases of hardship it would be better to see what they were before we have hearings in relation to them.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): May I be permitted a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before the announcement was made was the Prince Edward Island government advised of the proposal and did they acquiesce to it in advance?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not felt that it would be proper to ask the Prince Edward Island government to take any share of what is a purely federal responsibility. However, the government was informed of the intention, and the government of Prince Edward Island as well as others in Prince Edward Island who are interested had emphasized to us the urgency of improving the service. I am sure the hon. member knows that these improvements in the service were urgently needed for the summer traffic.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether, since the announcement of this very steep increase, he has received a protest from the government of Prince Edward Island and, if so, what action he is taking in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: To the best of my knowledge I have received no protest from anyone.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this action as announced by the Minister of Transport on Friday is to take place on the anniversary of confederation, on Dominion day or Confederation day, July 1, will the Prime Minister give very serious consideration to delaying such action against one of our provinces until full consideration can be given to the matter and time allowed for the various interested bodies to put forward their own views, since this is something which will affect transportation to one of the finest provinces of this country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that next Saturday, as my hon. friend says, is Confederation day I will be pleased to discuss the matter with the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You can argue that out between yourselves.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT PROCEEDINGS BE TELEVISED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister on a matter of urgency. It has to do with a viewing of parliament by the C.B.C. while parliament is in session. It becomes emergent now because of the early adjournment of this session. Various members have spoken on the need for youngsters of Canada attending school to know about the operation of parliament. This need not be done at great length, but it should be done in such a way as to give them an idea of how parliament operates. So far as we are concerned, we are for it. There are a few Liberal members who are opposed to it. I ask the Prime Minister would not he, as leader of the house, take this matter in hand and give the C.B.C. the opportunity to go ahead with something which will be beneficial not only this year but for future generations, and particularly in this our centennial year.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into this matter. I know my hon. friend the house leader has been discussing it with members of the other parties. Perhaps he will be in a position to make a statement later this week in the hope, which I share, that we might be able to do something along these lines next week. However, I would rather put it off until September or October and do it in the right way than do it next week without adequate preparation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there have been many opportunities. The cameras were here. If we wait until the fall it will be too late for the schools of Canada to have the information. This may not be the view of the hon. member who constantly abolishes the Queen, but I think it is the view of everybody else.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to look into it.

TRADE

REPORTED DISCREPANCY IN COMMODITY ACCOUNT FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When the minister authorized publication of the figures on the balance of trade in commodity account—he also used the figures in his report in discussing his estimates before the committee—was he aware of the omission from the report of the returns from a major port, with the result that there was a discrepancy of over $100 million in the figures?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that this is a question that can be asked at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—STOCKPILING OF STEEL TO PERMIT RE-EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Thursday the right hon. gentleman, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, said he might be able to make a statement today or tomorrow regarding a government decision concerning the stockpiling of steel at the Dosco plant at Sydney to alleviate the unemployment situation there. Is the right hon. gentleman in a position to make this statement today?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assure my hon. friend that the statement on that very important matter will be made tomorrow. We will be discussing the matter again in cabinet tomorrow morning and will make the statement in the afternoon.

AGRICULTURE

ARDA—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS AND ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Further to a recent and urgent report from the CRAN group of northeastern New Brunswick, does the minister responsible for the implementation of ARDA intend to proceed soon with the appointment of directors and co-ordinators of this first pilot area to be established in the country?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the Civil Service Commission will announce this week the appointment of Mr. Henri Têtu, former manager of the Eastern Quebec Development Board, as the first federal co-ordinator in this northeastern area of New Brunswick.

It will be recalled that, in September 1966, two agreements were signed between the government—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising to make a statement at this time? If he is, I suggest that he should ask leave to revert to motions.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make a long statement, but I know there have been comments in the newspapers and on the radio with regard to certain administrative delays, and I should like to reassure the members of the house concerning what has happened since September. If the Chair would rather I wait till tomorrow, I shall willingly wait till then, on motions. Is there any objection to—

Mr. Speaker: Is there any objection to having the minister now give the house the information he has just alluded to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, on September 20, 1966, the federal government and the government of New Brunswick signed two agreements on area development. On September 27—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There seems to be some objection to having the minister pursue his statement. Therefore, I suggest that he either wait until motions are called tomorrow or ask the house to revert to motions immediately.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF JAPANESE CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Wheat Board falls. Will the minister inform the house the exact amount and volume of the wheat contract with Japan, which according to press reports has been cancelled; and will he give the reasons for the failure to reach agreement?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there has been no cancellation of a contract with Japan. Discussions have been going on for the last few days in Japan between Japan and the Canadian Wheat Board, and it has been agreed that for the time being Japan will purchase her requirements on a month to month basis. But there is nothing by way of withdrawal of a contract.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the press report correct to the effect that Japan and Canada have failed to agree on Japanese imports of Canadian wheat, because the Japanese felt prices were too high, while Canada thinks the prices will be maintained; is it a fact that as a result of the breakdown of negotiations Canadian wheat will increase by 2 cents a bushel for Manitoba No. 2 and 9 cents for Nos. 3 and 4? It is also reported that there will be no acceptance at the present time of the general price level of the international wheat agreement. Is this accurate?

Mr. Winters: Japan agreed at Geneva to the general structure of the agreement negotiated under the terms of the Kennedy round, but they have decided, in the light of the uncertainties at this stage of the growing season, that they would prefer to wait and take their wheat on a month to month basis. This was all done in a most amicable and friendly way between Japan and the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not speaking about the amicable nature of the discussions, but would it be amicable if the Japanese government gave notice that if the price continues at the present level, low priced wheat will be imported from other sources such as the United States and Australia? Is that so?

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO FREIGHT RATES FROM INTERIOR B.C. TO COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. I apologize for not sending him notice but I was unfortunately detained by a couple of pressmen who wanted to know where my centennial bust was going to be erected in Kootenay West.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister inform the house of any late developments with respect to the negotiations for the hauling of coal from the interior of British Columbia to the Pacific coast?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the hon. gentleman was having a centennial bust, and I congratulate him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the nature of it?

Mr. Pickersgill: It may be that later this week I will have something to communicate, but at the present time I have nothing that would add to the encyclopaedic knowledge the hon. gentleman already has.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO PROTECTION AT LEVEL CROSSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the following question to the brilliant Minister of Transport. Since turbotrains will be put into operation in the near future, will the transport commission and the railway companies conclude an agreement soon concerning regulations which would provide maximum safety at grade crossings?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Choquette: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FORESTRY

OTTAWA—STATEMENT ON FATAL ACCIDENT AT LABORATORY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) asked a question in the house concerning the accident which occurred on property belonging to the department of forestry in the Ottawa area.

An investigation is being made by the provincial, federal and municipal authorities to determine the cause of this accident, which did not take place in the laboratory but in a household garbage truck. Unfortunately, one of the men working on the truck died last Thursday.

We will give out more detailed information when we have it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wanted to put to the Prime Minister, but in view of the fact that he has had to leave the house I wonder if I may put it to the government house leader. In view of the fact that the arrangements we have now made for bringing to a close this part of the current session include time for legislation other than supply, notably Friday, July 7, after we have passed the supply bill, will the government do its best to bring before the house before we break for the summer recess the legislation respecting pension increases for retired civil servants?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Revenue I shall be glad to take this question as notice and bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister for an answer at a later date.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, will the minister, as government house leader, also take notice of it himself?

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR FERRY SERVICE RATE INCREASE, NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would ask the minister whether Northumberland Ferries Limited, the private company which operates the ferry service between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, made a request of the government for an increase in rates on that particular service.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, of course, Northumberland Ferries are subsidized quite substantially out of the federal treasury. There was a very great deal of pressure for additional service that would have added substantially to the cost. It was felt that the additional service was needed because of the desire of people to visit Prince Edward Island. Because of the additional cost it did not seem unreasonable that some part of it should be recouped.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In his press release on Friday afternoon he contended that the additional service will be paid for out of the additional cost. Is there a direct relationship or is this just a hit or miss affair?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

TRANSPORTATION

MEETING IN WESTERN CANADA RESPECTING RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: I seem to be popular today.

Mr. Pascoe: Has the minister any more definite information regarding a meeting in western Canada of the Board of Transport Commissioners with parties wishing to present their views on possible rail line abandonments?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this is a repetition of a question which was asked last Friday.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter. A meeting has been called for August 1, and we are trying to have one in western Canada before that date. I gave the minister notice of the question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would let me answer the question briefly. An announcement has been made today that a meeting will be held in Winnipeg on August 8.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN DEPENDANTS' ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the house leader. While he is transmitting information concerning pensions of public servants, could he also clarify the situation with regard to veterans dependants who were left out in the last increase?

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED ADDITIONAL SERVICE, OTTAWA-WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and I have given him notice of it. Did the Air Transport Board receive an offer from Pacific Western Airlines to provide additional service from Ottawa to western Canada between July 2 and 16 and, if so, what has been the response of the board to this offer?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, and the answer to the second part is that the offer is under very active consideration at the present moment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED ATROCITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the persistent and mounting allegations of atrocities committed during the course of fighting in the Middle East, can the minister say whether any effort is being made under international auspices to make a determination of these allegations as well as of the reports recently emanating from the Middle East that Israel is attempting to forcibly expatriate Arab residents from the area recently conquered?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ORGANIZATION OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the house leader a question which he has been asked on several occasions by the hon. member for Skeena. Is he giving consideration to the calling before the recess of the standing committee which deals with Indian affairs so that it can organize and arrange for the tours of Indian reservations which have been considered by the committee in the last few years?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to discuss this question with the minister and the committee chairman to see whether an appropriate reference could be evolved for launching the work of the committee.

TELEVISION

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION FOR PROGRAM "OUR WORLD"

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I wonder whether her parliamentary secretary could pass on our congratulations to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the other broadcasting companies involved for the program "Our World" which was broadcast yesterday and which I think was a success, even though the eastern European countries withdrew.

SUPPLY

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Pursuant to the special order made this day the estimates of the following departments for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 are now being first taken up and entered for consideration in committee of supply: Legislation, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the Privy Council. Shall I report when the committee rises later this day that the estimates of these three departments for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 have been first taken up and entered for consideration?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration.
Legislation.
Department of Manpower and Immigration.
Privy Council.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Solicitor General, vote No. 1. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 478 of the blue book and the details are listed on page 480.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

1. Departmental administration including administrative expenses of the committee on corrections plus such fees, salaries and expenses as may be approved by Treasury Board for members and the panel of consultants and staff named by the minister to advise and assist the committee, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $1,015,400.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful for the constructive criticism by hon. members during the course of the debate and I should like to express my appreciation of the non-partisan spirit in which hon. members entered into the debate.

First of all I propose to deal with some of the salient points raised in the attractive speech made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I wish to assure the hon. member that I am in full sympathy with what he said with regard to minimum security institutions. I can assure him that the Beaver Creek minimum security institution will not be closing. On the contrary, it will be expanded to a 150-man minimum security training institution over the next two years, and preliminary discussions have been entered into with officials of the Ontario department of forestry. There will be no cut-backs in the program for minimum security institutions. The program is directed toward making them more permanent and more effective in all regions of the country.

The hon. member also made some interesting observations relating to the National Parole Board. I hope he will permit me to say that this debate pointed up the difficulties confronting the parole board. On the one hand we heard hon. members expressing the opinion—I say this with great respect—that perhaps the parole board is being overly generous in granting paroles and is not scrutinizing applications closely enough. At the same time criticism was raised that the board was not generous enough. So it is caught between two fires. I should again like to put on the record my view that non-institutional treatment such as probation and parole offers the best hope for human renewal.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka suggested that the parole board should give reasons for refusing to grant paroles. I concede at once that quite a valid argument can be made on this point, but I would also point out that perhaps there are overriding arguments on the other side of the question. At the present time I understand the parole board receives very valuable information on a confidential basis from respectable citizens, and it seems to me that if reasons for refusing parole were made public the sources of information coming to the board would be materially reduced. This might adversely affect the number of paroles granted.

The hon. member went on to raise the question of the erasing of criminal records. He mentioned the difficulties confronting the department in this regard. I concur wholeheartedly in his view that any action taken in parliament will really not get to the core of the problem facing ex-inmates. However, I believe we should make every effort to reduce areas of injustice, and although the advance may be small this should not be an excuse for not giving this matter very serious consideration.

The hon. member for Vancouver East asked me to give him an assurance that we would not proceed with any more maximum security institutions of the present design following the completion of the institution at Millhaven. I am pleased to give that undertaking. The ten-year plan is subject to review. We have now reached the half way point, so it seems to me that this is a reasonable place to stop and take a look at our designs and our program in the light of our experience and anticipated needs in the next five years.

I do not quarrel with the hon. member's suggestion that we have not yet provided the answer to the problem of recidivism. However, I feel we have made some progress. It is no comfort to me or to the officials in my department to point out that the United States and Great Britain are facing increased rates of crime greater than that being experienced in Canada. In his 1966 message to congress, President Johnson expressed concern by calling for an increased effort to end the self-defeating cycle of imprisonment, release and re-imprisonment.

Recently I visited the maximum state security institution at Atica, New York, and I was surprised to learn that the institution houses 2,100 inmates and that plans are being formulated to build an addition for 400 more inmates. I am sure the committee will be pleased to learn that under our ten-year plan accommodation in our new institutions will not exceed 450. The three new medium security institutions will be opening this year and this will permit us to transfer a large number of inmates from our present maximum security institutions to medium security institutions.

The hon. member for Kings, in a very sincere speech, made a plea for more adequate provision for the short-term offender in the county jails. He will be interested to learn, I am sure, that we have recently had discussions with the attorneys general of two of the maritime provinces with a view to transferring some of the so-called long term offenders in county jails to our new minimum and medium institutions where we feel we can provide better training for them.

The hon. members for Lafontaine and Lotbinière raised a matter that has exercised my mind for some time, the question of capital punishment. I do not propose to say anything further on that subject at this time except to assure them that I listened with a great deal of interest to their very thoughtful suggestions.

The hon. member for Skeena touched on some very important problems that face the penitentiary service. He cited the difficulties surrounding the introduction of trade and technical training into our penal institutions. He mentioned the nub of the problem when he said it is compounded by the age of the offenders and by their lack of education. It seems to me that we can perhaps perform a most useful service by putting more emphasis on academic training of our inmates while they are in these institutions rather than trying to concentrate entirely on technical and trade training.

The hon. member for Skeena pointed out also that we might have some difficulty in moving forward with industrial training and that we would have to have consultations with the various trade unions. This is a fair and reasonable suggestion. It was brought home to me most forcibly last week when I received a letter from a merchant in my own constituency complaining that the products resulting from our trade training program were competing with his products for woodworking in schools. I recognize the force of his argument, and it should cause us to review all our trade and technical training programs in institutions.

I believe I have dealt with the salient points that were raised during the course of the debate. Perhaps at this time I may point out to the committee that a reference to the blue book of estimates would appear to indicate there is a reduction in the appropriation for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is only fair to alert members of the committee that the apparent reduction of some $11,210,071 is brought about by the fact the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have, at the request of Treasury Board, introduced what is known as net voting. In other words, the appropriation being requested now is an amount less the revenues received from contracts. This is a new system which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are pioneering this year. Actually there will be an increase this year of $12,111,929 sought by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I thought I should bring this fact to the attention of the committee because members may wish to expand upon this point when we are dealing with the various items.

Mr. Aiken: The minister raised one matter, Mr. Chairman, with which I should like him to deal further. It relates in general to trade training within the institutions. His last remark caused me some concern because it indicated that the penitentiaries branch may be reviewing the trade training program in institutions with regard to work that may become competitive with private business. I cannot help but agree that in some cases unfair competition with private industry does result. However, I would urge very strongly that the minister should not review the trade training program with a view to cutting it back but perhaps with a view to directing it into channels which would not create undue competition with the private sector.

In that regard I should like to refer to such work as can be done for other departments of the government. I know that the penitentiaries branch provides gymnasium equipment and so forth for schools. I would hope that the production of these items would not interfere with private industry. Nevertheless, I think it is a general weakness of the program, particularly in the minimum security institutions, that the inmates are not provided with productive work to do. I would be very sorry to see any cut-back in the trade training program or in the actual production programs these institutions are undertaking. I believe there are many areas in which work can be done by the inmates of a penitentiary and the resultant product put on the market without any interference with private business. I think studies could very easily be undertaken to that end. I hope that in any review we will not allow ourselves to be frightened away from institutional production.

I should like to refer also to the expansion that is being proposed at Beaver Creek camp, which the minister mentioned today. Changes are contemplated in inmate employment, but I believe this work must be effective. In the Beaver Creek camp there has been some move to produce equipment and I understand there is a good deal of work available that could be done. I hope that the expansion is based on some sort of increased production and that the question of accommodation will be a secondary consideration. The minister mentioned there had been some discussion with the provincial department of lands and forests about this camp. I expect there are plenty of jobs which can be performed on behalf of that department.

Along the same line, Mr. Chairman, I think that the penitentiaries branch should make more adequate use of inmate labour for local projects. Here again I realize that the department has to be careful not to place itself in competition with local labour. I know that in some cases there has been hesitancy about sending out inmates to perform very healthy outdoor jobs which would benefit the community. These are the sort of jobs in respect of which nobody else can either provide the funds or the personnel, jobs such as clearing park areas for the department of lands and forests or local communities. The inmates would not compete with local industry for labour in the performance of such tasks because in most cases no money is available.

Up to this point I think the policy in this regard has been reasonably good. However, I have noticed that several projects at Beaver Creek camp were turned down and there appeared to be no logical reason for refusing them. These were projects on which no local labour would have been employed. They were community projects for which no other money would have been available. These inmates could have been put to work to improve the community's landscape and appearance. As I stated before, they would have been provided with good, healthy outdoor work and their physical and mental health would have benefited.

From what I have seen of these requests, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the policy of the department is not very clear. Decisions are not left to the local camp superintendent at all but are referred to some other quarter, probably to Kingston. Apparently there is no way of knowing in advance whether or not a project will be approved. I know that two or three projects which were requested had to be sent on for decision, even though they appeared to me to involve the perfectly logical use of inmate labour. I can see no reason whatever why the superintendent at Beaver Creek camp should be required to get consent from somebody else.

I go back to what I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, that there is not enough control within the local institutions. I refer not only to Beaver Creek camp but to others as well. I suggest that surely to goodness the person in charge of the camp should be able to make minor decisions as to where his men will work without referring the matter elsewhere.

With these few additional remarks, which were prompted by the minister's comments and concern about the performance of work in competition with private industry, I will conclude. If I may repeat, I do hope that the minister will not cut back the policy he has been developing of giving inmates good, healthy occupations both inside and outside the institution as well some pride in production, and if there is to be a review I hope it will focus upon an increase in training rather than a decrease.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, may I briefly answer one of the questions raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I should like to bring to his attention the fact that an organizational study has commenced or is about to commence within the department, and I hope that as a result of that study we will have some answers on the regional set-up which may satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question about the prospective timetable for realizing one of the objectives of the penal reform program. I am sure the minister will be familiar with the fact that at the conference of provincial attorneys general and reform institution ministers in 1958, at which conference there was unanimous agreement in principle on a penal reform program, it was agreed that the federal institutions would receive and be responsible for all persons sentenced to terms of six months or more. As a matter of sentencing practice it was decided that ultimately an amendment would be introduced to the Criminal Code to do away with sentences of between six months and two years. The agreement in principle that federal institutions would be enlarged and the federal program revised so as ultimately to lead to the housing of all persons sentenced to six months or more in a federal institution was a matter of great interest to most of the provinces, though a matter of considerably greater urgency to some than to others. It was of particular interest to the maritime provinces.

In subsequent years, Mr. Chairman, while I had responsibility for the department we were not able to complete the reform of our institutions and the implementation of the federal program to the point where it was possible to give effect to the understanding or agreement in principle reached with the provinces. But more than four years have now passed since that time, and although I am aware of the difficulties that remain—construction is involved; the fact that the inmate population is increasing is also a factor: —nevertheless, I would ask the minister whether he can say if he has yet been able to set a target date when he thinks he might commence to take over this additional responsibility for inmates in provincial institutions? If he cannot give me an over-all target date, is there any indication he can give that the transfer of responsibility can be made in phases? It would be of great assistance to the maritime provinces if an early start could be made in the transfer of responsibility.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising this point, which perhaps I should have raised in my opening statement on the estimates. I recognize not only the interest of the hon. gentleman but also the action he took in the field of penal reform. As I have said on other occasions, we are building on the foundation that was laid when the hon. gentleman was the responsible minister. In our defence, if I may put it that way, the department is now asking for perhaps the largest appropriation ever made to construct buildings since the ten-year plan was proposed, and the ten-year plan evolved out of the conference that was arranged by the hon. gentleman. I do not foresee the full implementation of the 1958 recommendation, but I have had discussions with the attorneys general of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland with a view to implementing the suggestion of the hon. member for Kamloops. There is a strong possibility that later this year, when we open the new medium security institution at Springhill, we may begin to absorb some of the long-term county jail inmates in the maritimes. That is as far as I am able to go at this time.

Mr. Orlikow: I read with considerable interest, Mr. Chairman, the opening remarks of the minister on June 6. I was struck by the pedestrian and circumscribed report the minister made compared with that which the former minister of justice, who has just resigned, made two or three years ago on the future activities and plans of the government. It seems to me that in a pedestrian fashion we are continuing to replace buildings. They are among the worst correctional buildings in the western world. In fact, it would be an insult to the principle of correction to grace our institutions with the name "correctional institutions". In my opinion, and possibly in the opinion of the minister, they are not correctional institutions. They are now, as they have been for 100 years, punitive institutions. We are proposing to replace buildings which are 100 years old or more with new buildings which are not much better.

Though we may replace the buildings, unless we change the principle under which we have operated we shall continue to have, if not the worst, one of the worst penal and correctional systems in the western world. It is a system which gives Canada the dubious honour of having the highest recidivism rate in the western world. It has been estimated that 85 per cent of those entering our penal institutions will return for a second or third time. As far as I can see, nothing that the government is doing or that the minister is proposing will change this situation.

As found on page 1217 of Hansard for June 6, 1947, the minister said:

> The penitentiary service, like many other agencies in similar fields, has experienced considerable difficulty in recruiting adequate staff, especially professionals in the psychiatric, psychological and sociological disciplines, to bring about changing treatment and training programs being introduced into its existing institutions and those planned for its new treatment centres.

It is not surprising that we are experiencing difficulties. As the minister said, every institution that needs professionals of the disciplines he enumerated is experiencing difficulties. But other institutions or organizations needing them have established some system of grants for training. The understanding is that those who accept grants will come back to the institution which provides them. If we want psychiatrists we must do that. We must go to the medical schools and say to those who are to graduate: If you want to be psychiatrists, particularly psychiatrists who will work in correctional institutions, we will give you a grant to train with the condition that you work for us. We have nothing like that, and the results are obvious. They have been shown to us in answers to questions that I and other hon. members have asked.

Though the psychiatrist at Kingston is classified as a full-time psychiatrist I do not think that we have in fact a single, full-time psychiatrist in our correctional institutions.

Mr. Pennell: As of this year we have two full-time psychiatrists.

Mr. Orlikow: Where?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Pennell: There are two full-time psychiatrists at Kingston. We added another full-time psychiatrist at Kingston this year.

Mr. Orlikow: I presume that the minister means that another psychiatrist has been added in addition to Dr. Scott. However, I understand that Dr. Scott conducts a private clinic and a private practice as well. I would not consider him full-time.

I wish to repeat publicly so as to have it on the record something I said to the minister privately, because I am prepared to stand publicly behind what I say in private. The views which Dr. Scott expressed in newspaper interviews during the discussion of the Steven Truscott case were completely unprofessional and unwarranted. One who works in a correctional institution and who interviews inmates as Dr. Scott interviewed Steven Truscott has, in all common decency, no right to make the kind of comments which Dr. Scott was reported to have made. I know that in subsequent statements reported in the newspapers he maintained that he had not made the original statement, but if he did it was wrong of him to do so.

If we are to break down the circle whereby people commit crimes, are apprehended, charged, tried, sentenced, sent to prison, serve their sentences and are released only to commit another crime, we must make a major breakthrough. Surely there has been enough experience in other jurisdictions to show how we can break out of this circle. One way is to have a professional staff to deal with those who get into trouble. We are not attracting professionals to our penal service simply because we do not really believe in having them. I know that the minister can say all the right things and the commissioner can speak of how they want such professionals but the fact is, as I have said before, that we do not back up our words with money. We do not provide grants with which to attract psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers to our institutions.

I have already said that one way of attracting these professionals is to give them training grants with the proviso that on completing their training they shall work in the institution which has given the grant. Though we may have had some professionals in the women's institution at Kingston, for example, the authorities make it clear that they do not really believe in the kind of work these people do. I will not repeat ad nauseam the testimony that some of these professionals gave before the parliamentary committee, but the former director, a psychologist and a social worker said they could not stay because the kind of work they wanted to do, the kind of approach they took toward the women inmates and their thinking on the problems of correction were being undermined by the person who had newly been put in charge. If they were right, and I believe they were, then certainly there needs to be a complete change in the organization of the correctional system. But we have heard not a word of this from the minister. I presume he is satisfied with what happened.

Mr. Pennell: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member because he was very courteous in allowing me to make my remarks without interruption. But the hon. member will recollect that six months after the previous superintendent had left—and I make no reflection at all on the previous superintendent—the hon. member for Vancouver East asked me to give an undertaking in the house that I would not remove any of the 21 inmates convicted of offences arising from drug addiction at Kingston penitentiary without their consent. I gave that undertaking. This was six months after the change in the administration. Eighteen of them asked that they should be allowed to remain at Kingston. We fulfilled that undertaking. I would merely point out that we have not abandoned many of the procedures which had been carried on there prior to the appointment of the present superintendent.

Mr. Orlikow: I am not certain what that decision by the inmates themselves had to do with the treatment they were receiving. It may well be that the inmates find themselves happier and more at ease in an authoritarian institution where they know precisely what is expected from them, become accustomed to the discipline which is maintained and so on. It may be easier for inmates to accept orders without question while they are confined in an institution. But it does not follow that after they get out there will be any basic change in their outlook on life or that they will be less likely to get into trouble than they were when they committed the offence for which they were sent to the institution.

This is precisely the point which qualified people have been trying to make. I am not an expert in this field and I have never pretended to be. I wish, however, I could feel that the minister and his department were listening to and reading the submissions made to them by organizations which are staffed by the few professionals we have in this country and whose boards comprise the people who are most interested in having the correctional system operate in a way as different as possible from the present system which has proved to be such a dismal failure.

I have in mind submissions made by organizations such as the Canadian Corrections Association, the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society. I appreciate that this is not the first day upon which we are dealing with these estimates and that there is an agreement, to which I subscribe, that we should finish the business of the house, including consideration of these estimates, with reasonable dispatch. But surely the minister is aware of the representations which have been made to him by the Elizabeth Fry Society in connection with the women's institution at Kingston. I submit that the criticisms and the suggestions which were made have not been answered or followed by the minister or by anybody else in his department. Nothing in the situation has changed.

I shall not go into detail again because this ground has been covered many times not only by myself but by other hon. members including, I suppose, the minister himself before he became minister. I refer to those matters dealt with in the reports of the Archambault commission and the Fauteux commission. We must also be prepared to consider the recommendations which I hope will be made by the committee headed by Mr. Justice Ouimet.

I am disturbed at the speed with which the government is proceeding in its program of putting up buildings which will be with us, I suppose, if we go by past experience, for the next 100 years. The minister told us on June 6 that during this fiscal year three more medium security institutions for young offenders and selected male adults will be opened at Springhill, Nova Scotia, Warkworth, Ontario, and Drumheller, Alberta. He also said that provision has been made to establish five community release centres in various cities across Canada. Later he talked about the construction of four reception centres, one each in the Atlantic region, Quebec, Ontario and western Canada, and the purchase of a site for a new modern institution for the treatment of female offenders in eastern Canada.

Can the minister tell the committee how this building program squares with the memorandum presented to the Solicitor General on March 18, 1966 by a host of organizations interested in the question of correction? I will not read the whole of this impressive list but simply mention a few of the organizations involved: the Anglican Church of Canada; a number of the dioceses of the Roman Catholic Church; the Canadian Association of Social Workers; the Canadian Corrections Association; the Canadian Lutheran Council; the Elizabeth Fry Societies; the John Howard Societies, and so on. I could go on and on.

All these organizations have strong objections to the isolated location of many of the penitentiaries recently completed or now in course of construction. Has consideration been given to these representations which arise in part from the fact that it is difficult to obtain the services of properly qualified staff in locations so far removed from the main population centres? If there is a shortage of psychiatrists, as there is in this country, if there is a shortage of psychologists, as there is in this country, if there is a shortage of social workers, as there is in this country, and if these people have a choice as to employment, is the minister or his department surprised that these specialists should want to live where others in their field are living, in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton or Vancouver? They do not want to live in the rural, small town areas where we have traditionally built our correctional institutions. If the minister really means business and would like to obtain the services of professional staff, is he giving consideration to this criticism which has been levelled at the building program and to these representations that we should build our institutions near the cities? If he has, I should like to hear from him.

This group of organizations also talked about priority in building. The minister listened to their submission more than a year ago and he knows as well as I do that there is no connection between the priorities they suggested and the building program which the minister spoke of on June 6. Their first priority concerned reception and classification units. There is not a single reception and classification unit on the list which the minister gave.

I shall not go into detail again on the many objections to the horrible, terrible, mediaeval building which has been erected at St. Vincent de Paul, a building which is the shame of the government and the people of Canada. It was too late to stop its construction when this group made their submission but they did suggest that it be turned into a reception and classification unit. I would like to hear what the minister thinks about that.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Their second priority was medical and psychiatric units where people with special problems could receive treatment. I could cite case after case reported in newspapers in my own city of Winnipeg, in Montreal and Toronto, where people who committed crimes and appeared before magistrates and judges were sentenced to six months or a year in prison. In each case the magistrate in effect told the individual, "I know you are not going to get any help in the jail or penitentiary to which I am sending you. You will be just as bad or worse when you come out of it but I simply do not have any other place to send you." Sex offenders and other types of offenders who need special treatment are sent to regular correctional units where they tend to corrupt the other inmates.

Their third priority concerned maximum security units. I would like the minister to tell us what decision the government has made about the Millhaven unit. I have before me a letter dated May 18, 1967, copies of which were sent to all members of parliament by the president of the John Howard Society of Canada, Mr. A. B. Whitelaw. It includes a resolution which I want to put on the record:

> Resolved that the John Howard Society of Canada go on record as approving the conclusions of the parliamentary committee condemning the design of the maximum security institutions and that we urge the government not to act on the recommendation of the penitentiary committee to proceed with the maximum security institution at Millhaven on the present design; but that we urge the government to find alternative methods of dealing with present population problems in the federal prisons, if such do exist, until a more acceptable design can be developed.

I would like to know from the minister whether that resolution is being considered by the government or whether, like all the other recommendations of this and other organizations, it is being ignored and is gathering dust in the files. If it is being ignored I wonder how long the minister expects the people interested in these organizations to continue their work.

This group of organizations also recommended that we get on with the job of special detention units. I have already mentioned what they think about the one we have built at Montreal. These are voluntary organizations and these are their recommendations with respect to a proper correctional program. Before we pass these estimates I would like to know what the minister proposes to do about them.

If we are to make any basic change in the situation it seems to me we have to look at the problem before people actually enter prisons, correctional institutions, or whatever you want to call them. Some years ago I said that the federal government should consider co-operating with the provinces on basic steps that can be taken before a person goes to prison. The chief basic step revolves around the question of probation. I am not going to say I told you so, or quote the exact words, but I did suggest that the federal government should appropriate a fairly substantial amount of money to be offered to the provinces so that they could expand their probation facilities for those people who are brought before a court on a first offence, found guilty and, whenever possible, are given probation under proper supervision. The minister knows that in Great Britain, which has three times our population, the number of people in correctional institutions is only slightly larger than the number in such institutions in Canada. The reason is simple. For many years Great Britain has had a probation system under which first offenders usually do not go to prison.

In February of this year the Canadian Welfare Council submitted a brief to the minister headed, "Proposals For Development Of Probation in Canada." It contained 25 recommendations. The most important was the last and I want to put it on the record. It reads as follows:

> That a national probation act be designed to develop uniform standards of probation practice throughout Canada; the said act to deal with—
> (a) The appointment of a probation consultant and such staff as shall be deemed necessary.
> (b) Grants to provinces for the operation of probation within any province.
>
> (c) The qualifications, duties and powers of probation officers.
>
> (d) The training of probation officers.
> (e) Any matter necessary or advisable to effectively carry out the intent and purpose of the act.

To me this recommendation makes a great deal of sense. It strikes at the root of the problem. Indeed, this whole brief comes up with solutions much more fundamental than any which have been considered to date by the government. I would like to know whether the minister is giving serious consideration to this brief.

Without a national probation system the kind of treatment a person who breaks the law gets depends not on the kind of crime he commits, something which would make sense, but to a large extent on where he commits the crime. Dr. Stuart Jaffrey, who was a professor at the University of Toronto until his death, wrote a book giving graphic examples of this problem. The most common offence in Canada for which people are tried and convicted is theft. Professor Jaffrey had this to say:

> An offender (who commits a theft) is three times as likely to receive suspended sentence in Manitoba as in Quebec; he is twice as likely to receive a fine rather than imprisonment. He is nearly twice as likely to go to jail for a short term in Quebec as in Canada generally, and more than three times as likely to go to jail as in Manitoba.

> More seriously, he is twice as likely to go to penitentiary in Quebec than in Canada generally, and three times as likely (to go to federal prison) as in Ontario or Alberta, and five times as likely as in British Columbia.

We on this side of the house are accused of doing a disservice to Canada when we suggest that Quebec is not a province like the other provinces. When we say that, the present Minister of Justice thinks we are doing a disservice to the country as a whole. I suggest that when it comes to crime and how it is dealt with in this country Quebec is a special province. It is different from all the other provinces because until very recently, it has had virtually no probation services. In addition, its judges are more likely not only to sentence people to penitentiary terms but also to longer terms in penitentiary. I have dealt with this matter before and it is not my intention to go into it in any detail today.

It seems obvious that if people in this country who break the law and commit offences are to be treated as Canadians the best thing the government can do is to adopt the recommendation of the Canadian Welfare Council that a national probation act be passed and and that the federal government share the cost of establishing nationally a modern, up to date probation system such as only the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia have at the present time. It seems to me that if the minister will address himself to this proposal and get to work on it he will do much to solve the problem in respect of correction and to reduce the number of people who are being sent to our institutions in greater and greater numbers from year to year. He would also be doing more to bring Canada up to the level of other countries than any minister has done up to the present time. I would hope that the minister would give me some answers to the questions I have raised.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to congratulate the minister and say that he is the right man in the right place. He brings a sympathetic understanding which is so sadly needed in dealing with the people in our prisons who come under his department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rynard: I should like, however, to draw to his attention some things which to me appear to be anomalies. I will be as brief as I can. Let us consider the case of a person 18 or 19 years of age who has been stealing. I have a case in mind. This person stole something worth under $10. About a year later he stole something else valued at over $25. He was fined. After that he went straight. Later he was married. He now has a family and quite a responsible position. Approximately 25 years after his offence he ran up against the fact that he had been finger-printed and that his record was on file. This to me seems to be a very disturbing thing. I believe it runs counter to the fact that there is salvation; it is contrary to our Christian principles. It seems that it should be defined as to how long a person should have to suffer and bear the mark of a wrong he has committed.

The second case with which I should like to deal concerns a person who had been in Stony Mountain penitentiary for armed robbery. One day about noon he came into my office in this building. This was about ten days after he had been released from Stony Mountain penitentiary where he had been serving time for armed robbery. When he came into my office I noticed he had been drinking. He wanted some money. He had already tapped one of the gentlemen on the other side for a small amount, I believe. Perhaps he had tapped more than one, although I just heard of the one. The fact remains that he came to my office because he wanted someone to help tide him over for a week. I asked him whether he had been in touch with the John Howard Society, the employment service offices or the manpower offices. Apparently he had been released from Stony Mountain penitentiary without having received any guidance or help. He said to me: "There is only one thing facing me; either I get help or go out and hold up something". I do not know whether he had a gun. He said, "If I go out and hold up a bank or somebody, then I am back again in crime and in the penitentiary."

It seems to me there is something radically wrong with our system when we have situations like this where a person is not guided and helped to obtain a job. After all, he was in the penitentiary for over two years. It seems unfortunate that someone could not have watched over him, given him guidance, and helped him rehabilitate himself. The longer a person is away from crime and following the straight road the easier it should be for him to remain on the straight road. This young man was only 28 years old. I do not know what eventually became of him, but I understand that that afternoon the police were looking for him. I bought him his dinner. I also called the employment service office and arranged for him to go down there. Surely there should be some agency to watch over such people when they leave the penitentiary. Surely more should be done in guidance in cases like these.

I am also concerned about the person who kills somebody, appears for trial, is found incompetent to stand trial on the ground that he is mentally unfit and is then sent to an institution for the criminally insane. He serves a certain length of time in the institution and then all at once the psychiatrists say that he is mentally sound. I believe he must then stand trial for his crime. I have in mind the case of a person who had been in an institution for a period of a few years and was then pronounced fit to stand trial. What concerns me is whether the time such a person spends in an institution for the criminally insane is included in his sentence if he receives one. I am concerned about what happens to these people. Are they followed up by a psychiatrist? I should like to know where justice enters the picture. Some of these people are brought before the courts and then sent to institutions for the criminally insane where they are treated. I should like to know what happens to them. Are they returned for trial and sentenced? It seems to me there is a great grey area in this respect. These are points which have been bothering me and which I felt I should bring to the attention of the minister because the follow-ups may be inadequate.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, at this time I might deal with some of the points which have been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Simcoe East. The hon. member for Winnipeg North always bores in strongly upon the minister, but I do not take exception because I know he has a genuine interest in the field of reformation and penal reform.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow a few more representations before he speaks?

Mr. Pennell: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would save time going over these matters again. The minister is going to cover the entire picture and there are a number of matters I wish to bring to his attention briefly.

Mr. Pennell: I would be pleased to yield the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not wish to delay the minister's reply, but possibly some of the questions I shall raise will enable the minister to answer at one and the same time. I shall deal with matters that are of immediate importance. The first has to do with the granting of the Queen's mercy on her visit to Canada. It has been the regular course over the years that a visit of Her Majesty the Queen or her predecessor the King has been accompanied by a general reduction in prison sentences or an amnesty.

This matter has been referred to on previous occasions and the answer given by the government has been that a parole system is in effect and therefore there is no reason for a general amnesty. I have been communicated with by several prisoners serving long sentences. In each of the four cases to which I wish to refer particularly they are model prisoners. The reduction of sentence by a matter of months would not be of particular interest to them in so far as their servitude is concerned, but it would amount to a recognition of the exercise of the authority of Her Majesty the Queen in a prerogative way and it would give new hope to these prisoners and thousands of others who are today incarcerated in our penitentiaries.

Few Canadians realize the degree to which crime has been expanding. I do not have the statistics before me but I recall that a year ago one and a half million offences of various kinds outside the field of traffic offences were committed. In respect of those offences there were some 500,000 convictions. Crime is mounting on every hand in the western world, in the United Kingdom and the United States. It is not crime in those fields where ordinarily one might expect an increase but rather it is across the board.

Everything that can possibly be done should be done to give hope to those who make a false step. I hope that even now, in so far as those prisoners are concerned who are not recidivists there will be the exercise of the Queen's mercy on the occasion of her visit. This course has been followed through the years. The failure to follow it this time will leave a feeling of resentment among the prisoners in the penal institutions. I would have asked that across the board consideration be given to this matter but because of the decision already made I am restricting it to those who have not been repeaters.

I ask for this consideration because some hope must be held out to those who have not repeated. This would be of advantage. It would carry on the general tradition of the amnesty that is granted on the occasion of such visitations. It would penalize none of those who have continued their life of crime by repetition, but those who have committed their first offence would be placed in an advantageous position in that there would be particular consideration given to them for not being repeaters.

I urge the minister to give consideration to my suggestion. He does not know the feeling in the penitentiaries of our country if he does not realize that, taken all in all, there is being engendered a feeling of remonstrance that is not conducive to that order and equanimity which should prevail in our penal institutions. I therefore ask for a reconsideration of this matter. We made parole regulations and changes during our administration. We advanced the whole field of correctional punishment and correctional institutions. But the adoption of parole in no way, except as a dialectic argument, can relieve the feelings of those in our institutions.

I have mentioned the question of crime. There has been an amazing increase in this field. I believe the United Kingdom is the only nation in the western world in which any diminution in crime has been shown, and the diminution last year compared with the previous year was insignificant. Crime is expanding everywhere. We have in Canada reports of the close connection with the underworld of leaders of the Mafia and other disreputable organizations from across the line. This brings me to my second suggestion.

The time is overdue for the appointment of a royal commission on the subject of crime, its incidence and a full public revelation of the degree to which master criminals find themselves allied with one another internationally. Such an investigation has been asked for by provincial attorneys general. The previous attorney general of the Lesage administration was strongly in favour of such a royal commission. There is support for my suggestion. The responsibility for investigation into the facets of crime rests on the federal parliament.

Royal commissions are appointed for everything under the sun. A royal commission on the subject of crime would pay dividends.

Oftentimes the reports of royal commissions are treated in the same way as the report of the Carter commission. Royal commissions sit, recommend, and then there is deep discussion and consideration by governments for such a length of time that ultimately the report of the royal commission finds itself resting in the dust of some alcove used for storage purposes. A royal commission on crime could have the effect of mobilizing the thinking of people with regard to remedies and it would also bring to the attention of Canadians as a whole the serious nature of the expansion of crime. This expansion is disturbing. The parliament of the United Kingdom has gone into this matter very fully.

One of the results of that action brings me to the third point I wish to make. I think we should give serious consideration to including in the Criminal Code a provision that first offenders, except in a very few and limited line of crimes, should not be imprisoned. That is the course of modern criminology. When I was first called to the bar many years ago punishment was regarded as a necessity and as the only means to meet the problem. With the passing years we have become more civilized in our attitudes toward criminology and toward the criminal. Although only 5 per cent of my time was taken up in defence, I followed certain rules that some lawyers do not follow. If a man has a just case, poverty should not be his passport to prison and he is entitled to what is characteristic of the British bar, namely, that the poorest can pick the best counsel provided the counsel is available at the time in question. I have never known a repeater among those for whom I have acted or those whom I have prosecuted. We are in a different position in the western provinces, apart from the great cities, from any other part of Canada in that regard. There are no criminal underground organizations in the smaller places in the country.

Are we to carry on the principles of the middle ages that have come down to the 1900's and are still considered by some the appropriate courses to follow to punish criminals? No. There has been a vast change. It has been found in the United Kingdom that with the exception, as I said a moment ago, of a limited series of crimes, first offenders should not be imprisoned and as a result recidivism has been greatly reduced. That is one of my reasons for asking for a royal commission and indeed pressing for it, because we are just doodling with this problem and while we doodle there is a mounting increase in crime.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

This brings me to a fourth suggestion which I have pressed and which I hope will receive acceptance. After a man or woman has served a term in a penitentiary and has then lived a life free of crime for a period of five to ten years his or her record should be washed clear. When I was prime minister I received an application for a pardon. I have to be pretty general in referring to it because this man occupies a high position in our country. When he was 19 or 20 he committed an offence for which he was sent to the penitentiary. The years went by and he now occupies a position in which he does good not only for the people of our country but for humanity. Yet every time he wanted to cross the border into the United States to attend a convention he was asked whether he had ever committed a criminal offence. Honest straightforward and truthful as he was, he would say "yes" and was refused admission into the United States. I believe that men in that position deserve to have their records cleared.

I know this does not apply to any member of the house but all of us have had things happen to us in our lives as a result of which, if it had not been for good fortune or providential protection, we might have found ourselves before the courts. I know there is nobody in that position within sound of my voice but these things happen. Many people have been in the penitentiaries who have not committed any worse offences but they live to regret what they did. Punishment has been not only reformative but has been an eye-opener to them. They are doing everything they can to have their past forgotten by changing their mode of life. To hand this matter over for consideration by the committee on justice will not meet this problem. We know this is so.

The Department of Justice and the Solicitor General's department are full of experts, all of whom know this should be done. What would be finer than for the government between now and July 1—there is time for it because there would be general acceptance of such a measure—to bring in legislation to clear a person's record after a reasonable period and to do so as a centennial project for Canada? Have we none of the principles of forgiveness? Why attach a stigma forever to a person who has lived an honest life after having made one mistake?

We will have to start this on an experimental basis. I mentioned a period of from five to ten years. Some say ten years is too long, but let us try it out. We would be doing something in this parliament to elevate the hopes of those Canadians who today walk about fearful that some time somewhere their past will be discovered. I followed that principle at the bar. On occasion I lost clients because I refused to cross-examine a witness who at one time had been convicted of a crime followed by a period of years of decent living. I was told to bring it out because it would be devastating. It may be devastating but it destroys the souls of men for no purpose. I urge the minister to bring in such legislation. Let him not follow the course of saying "we are looking into it" or "the matter is receiving consideration". This would be a very worth-while measure and has been proven to be such.

Finally, the R.C.M.P. needs no words of commendation from this house. I have known that body of men since the earliest days. I have been out in the west lately and saw the old homestead where we lived and where many mounted policemen, when they were called the Northwest Mounted Police, stayed with us as they went back and forth across the country. There are some of these oldtimers still around. I should like to see something done to assure them a reasonable retirement allowance, one not based on time spent in the force or on the lower pension rates of the past but one which would indicate to them our appreciation for what they did.

I am not going to reminisce on this occasion. Many of these men were scions of aristocratic English families who came out here to serve. When the first world war broke out they returned to serve there. There were very few adventurers, very few soldiers of fortune, but there was an identification by the members of the old Northwest Mounted Police with the hopes and aspirations of those who left their country to establish a new way of life here. I should like to see something done for them now.

I am going to say something now with which you are not going to agree, but I say it in all sincerity. Today the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are losing some of the greatness and grandeur of their past because to a growing extent they are being used as traffic officers. I do not know what it is but there is something that grates about seeing mounted policemen on duty as traffic officers. The officers and men today are just as fine, but I believe the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is losing some of that aura, that attraction that came through years of service, when we see these officers on motorcycles trying to find traffic violators. Something is taken from the record of that force.

I knew members of the force who were in the original mounted police. I think of Sam Steele and Sergeant Dorion. I think he came from the hon. gentleman's constituency just outside Quebec. This was one time when the constituency really produced something worth while. I think of Pennefather and old Sam Donaldson, one of the originals.

Mr. Herridge: And assistant commissioner Caulkin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I could go on. There was something about these men. The spirit is there today as well. Turning them into city or town policemen to do traffic duty is not beneficial to the tradition of that force. I am wondering whether it would be possible to have another force within that force for traffic duties. I am going to deal with that on a later occasion.

When I think of what the mounted police have done in Canada I am reminded of the fact that we had no lawless west. When the Fort Bentonese came over to Her Majesty's dominion to whoop it up they came but once and then went back. I am reminded too of the mounted police corporal who met the Sioux who had massacred Custer. There were two or three colonels and a couple of hundred United States soldiers who brought the Sioux to the border where they were met by a Canadian corporal. The colonel said to the corporal, "Where are your men?" He said "I am here—I will take them." Some of them came to Prince Albert where they have lived ever since. There was an authority, a greatness about that force.

I am going to appeal to the minister because one thing he can do more than anything else is to remove these barnacles. This will give the force an opportunity to restore the greatness of the past. It will give the people of Canada an appreciation of the greatness of this force which was exemplified within the last few days by the death of a constable in Alberta.

Mr. Matheson: I do not intend to speak at length, Mr. Chairman, but I noticed that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka suggested the parole board should give reasons for refusing to grant a parole. Of course, I appreciate the difficulties that have been alluded to by the minister, but I should like to state that this is a point I have heard raised on a variety of occasions, not only by people who have something to gain but by inmates or persons who have been discharged from institutions. They have indicated to me quite earnestly that it would have helped them at a certain stage if they had received some word of guidance rather than a categorical no, something which might have indicated in what fashion they could have redirected their own energies toward rehabilitation.

This point was made very forcefully by a group of some 16 inmates I visited recently in Joyceville with their chaplain, Mr. McDowell. I am satisfied that there are many occasions when reasons cannot be given. On the other hand, I should like to urge the minister again, as I have within the last few weeks, that this matter be re-examined to ascertain whether it might not be possible in a good many cases for the parole board to furnish a man with some kind of helpful communication when refusing parole. This communication could be studied by the inmate, by one or two of his friends, members of his family or his chaplain or his warden. There always seems to be some person interested in the genuine welfare of each inmate. This communication might well be the basis for some reorientation which would make an early re-application for parole possible.

In some instances you just cannot tell a man about circumstances in his own home which perhaps militate against the wisdom of granting parole. Perhaps the reason may be that he should not return to Hamilton or Windsor, but if he could become re-established elsewhere in Halifax or Regina serious consideration could be given to parole. I know the minister has been thinking about these matters. I dare say he is not very easy in his own mind about this situation.

I do not believe we have ever had a minister who has more earnestly informed himself about a wide variety of the personal problems of the inmates than the present minister. I think he is disturbed about the fact only one out of three prisoners applies for parole. I have asked inmates the reason for this, and I have been told that of the two thirds of inmates who apply for parole approximately only one third are granted parole. Prisoners are pretty clever people and after a while learn what is taking place in the system as a whole.

I have been told—I do not know whether the minister can substantiate this—that of the one third who are granted parole, that is to say, after only one third of the inmates have applied for parole, two thirds of the applicants are granted parole for the very minimum period, the other one third being granted parole for the maximum period.

[Mr. Matheson.]

I happen to know a number of the members of the parole board. They are personal friends of mine and some have been so for many years longer than I have been in the house. Some friendships go back to prewar years. They are good and wise Canadians, much more informed on these matters than those of us who sit in the House of Commons. Yet I believe that once a member of the parole board accepts an appointment to the board he does not feel able any longer to take the same chances, the same risks, as he did before. It appears to me that something happens to a person who becomes a member of the parole board.

This is our centennial year, a year when new emphasis and direction have been given to penitentiary work, parole work generally and to the study of crime and punishment. I therefore think it appropriate to ask the minister to give very positive leadership in the months ahead in the sense of himself taking the risk. I am wondering what would happen if the minister asked the parole board to double the rate of parole failure. That is to say, in view of what has been said here today by eminent people from all parties, would the minister go to the parole board and ask them to increase the risk of failure to double what it is at the present time because the 80 per cent rate of recidivism is not nearly good enough and we should contrive to do better?

I would agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North that the number of Canadians who are incarcerated is way out of line with the pattern of social behaviour in Canada compared with other democratic countries such as the United Kingdom, the United States and countries in northwestern Europe. Therefore I think it would be interesting to study the effect of parole cases being sharply increased.

I think the leadership in taking this step must come from the minister, and I know that this minister is capable of giving this leadership. I was pleased to hear the minister give a categorical undertaking when he was asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East for an assurance that the government would not proceed with the building of any more maximum security institutions of the present design following the completion of the institution at Millhaven. The minister said he was pleased to give that undertaking. He said that the ten-year plan which has been referred to us is subject to review. We now have reached the half way mark, which seems to be a reasonable time to review the program in light of experience and our anticipated needs for the next five years.

I think we in Canada can rejoice in the fact that our crime rate is immensely better than that which prevails in either the United States or the United Kingdom. Great things are being done in this field. Personally I am more heartened by the level of interest and co-operation shown among the penitentiary service, the parole board and the manpower service. Indeed, if the minister were to get to his feet and recite some of the extraordinary successes known to him and in which he has played a personal part, all of us would have something to rejoice about as we approach our confederation day.

I have the feeling, Mr. Chairman, that this minister listens to suggestions and does not consider he knows everything. He entered the portfolio with a background of proven success in his own profession in the practice of law. Among members of the bar he was respected and loved. He could easily have taken over leadership in bar circles at different stages of his career but his natural modesty is such that he prefers to listen to others—and thank God he does. Having listened to advice from members of his own party, members of the opposition parties as well as from people outside the house who have given many years of their lives to this interesting and fascinating area of prisoner rehabilitation and reform, it seems to me that the minister is actually putting that advice into application. In the months ahead I think we will hear more exciting things than he is able to tell us about today. Perhaps that is enough said for the moment.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the speeches made this afternoon, particularly in the remarks about parole. I may have misunderstood the previous speaker but I understood him to say that he hoped the minister would double the percentage of paroles. It is my honest opinion that this is not possible.

I have been impressed by the fact that in Canada our parole system is such that the recidivism rate is about 10 or 11 per cent. If this rate were doubled to 20 or 22 per cent we would probably have to parole every person within the penitentiary system. If, however, the hon. member meant we should double the number of persons paroled each year, then I am completely in agreement with him. If we dispensed with parole boards and after a certain period of time automatically granted parole, I would suggest that not more than 20 to 22 per cent of those released would return.

I am not pleased with the functioning of the parole board. I believe the board totally fails to do what I should like to see it do. It is true that the parole board has been in existence for about ten years and that a number of very influential people have been members of it and have done some very good work. However, it appears to me that the board has recently been influenced by two bad cases.

I often receive letters which express the opinion that because of the nature of the offence committed and the newspaper coverage given to the case it is not in the interest of the general public to grant the prisoner parole. What are these people running for, parliament or municipal office? What do they believe their role to be? Are they engaging in a popularity contest? It is true that a mistake was made in the case of Dion; there is no question of that. But I think that the very opposite of what the hon. member for Leeds suggested is required. Paroles would have to be reduced by half regardless of the percentage which would return.

It is true that the nature of crime is changing. Sex offenders are turning their interest from little girls to little boys. But these are isolated cases, certainly not ones that can be handled by the normal penitentiary reform system. Most of our penitentiaries are not doing anything to reform prisoners.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I have visited Collin's Bay and I was impressed with the machine shop and the school set-up. But what are we training the prisoners for? For jobs that do not exist, I suggest, for jobs such as tinsmithing. Our manpower service, which was training men for this occupation, has discontinued doing so as there are no longer jobs in tinsmithing.

We are scared to train our prisoners in the electronics field. They could be employed in that field. Here may I recount something of interest. I learned from talking to the warden at St. Vincent de Paul, that the inmates are not allowed transistor radios. The inmates once had such radios and it did not take them long to transform them into a communications system that covered the whole penitentiary. The public address system of the penitentiary was able to pick up transmissions from cell to cell and corridor to corridor. The ability of the prisoners was well demonstrated; they did what they did without experience. Yet we are not training them in this field.

I understood the minister to say that more people were paroled this year than ever before. That is true, but there are also more prisoners than ever before. The figures I have before me are for 1964. I am not an expert in the field and do not follow it closely. One finds that in 1960 2,505 prisoners were released. In 1962, after the unfortunate incident which brought about a total change in the penitentiary system, a change in ways of classifying prisoners and particularly in district board hearings and parole board hearings, that figure dropped to 1,800. By 1964 it was still only 1,852, almost 1,000 prisoners less than in 1960. Every year, however, we are probably adding 500 prisoners to the total. The percentage of those being released is much lower than previously. In some areas where these percentages have dropped action could be taken.

The National Parole Board report for 1965 shows two categories, one being those under 20 years old. In my opinion prisoners in that age group can be trained. At present they are delinquents, but the age of delinquency is increasing all the time. Ultimately anyone 35 or under will be regarded as a delinquent. The age of deliquency at one time was either 15 or 16 and under but it has now risen to 20 years.

I notice that only 15 per cent of paroles applied for were granted and that 14 per cent of those became parole violators. The parole board points out, of course, that paroles denied constituted 17 per cent and those deferred another 7 per cent. In all 24 per cent of those applying were not paroled. As I said, of those who automatically came up for parole only 15 per cent were released.

Another category of prisoner that the parole board deals with is those convicted of sex offences. In this instance the board has denied a total of 302 paroles, deferred 73 and granted 156. It is interesting to note that only 9 per cent of those applying for parole were successful. Of those, only 6 per cent became violators.

Under the category of forgery and false pretences one finds that 25 per cent of those paroled became violators. It is interesting to see that without help, except an occasional visit by the psychiatrist who works part time and sees more patients than he should, the sex offenders constitute a group in which only 6 per cent have violated their parole. Nevertheless, only 9 per cent of the applicants in that category received parole. Those interested in this field must see that steps are taken to correct what is wrong. We must not merely impose penalties.

[Mr. Peters.]

The board, in refusing paroles because certain newspapers reported a brutal case, is being silly. To illustrate what I mean, may I cite the case of Gaston Nicholas which has been discussed in this house on previous occasions. Perhaps some hon. members cannot remember him so I shall repeat some of the facts. He was a young chap of 19 who went with his wife in a canoe on the Ottawa river not far from parliament hill. Like young fellows he was very much a smart-alec. He kept jumping in and out of the canoe until finally it upset. He was a poor swimmer and his wife could not swim at all. She did not make it to shore. The police investigated the case and termed the accident an accidental drowning. I looked into that case. In common with many other accused persons, this accused had a poor lawyer who has been promoted and is now a poor judge. In fact, he must be a lousy judge because he was a lousy lawyer.

Let me go into some details that were not drawn out in court. This young fellow had a couple of trucks. He worked in the steel plant where his father had worked in Hull, went to work every day, was highly respected and seemed well off. On having one child he decided to build a house and when he went to borrow money he found that the easiest way to do so would be by taking out a life insurance policy. He went to the insurance agent to take out the policy but found that he could not borrow money on it because he was under 21. He was 19 at that time. But his wife who was 18 could borrow money on a policy and the insurance was taken out on her life.

After the authorities had made a decision about the accident the insurance company decided that mischief was involved and the young chap was eventually charged with public mischief. He was sentenced to seven years and the lousy lawyer who later became a lousy judge did not even appeal the case. The young man went to prison and served most of the seven-year sentence. Around the time he was eligible for release a riot took place at St. Vincent de Paul in which he became involved. There is a difference of opinion about this matter, but I have read the evidence while others have not. It is my opinion that he was involved on the periphery of that riot and was not the leader. The leader of the riot has talked to me on many occasions and has indicated this was so.

The young man was again charged with public mischief and this time was sentenced to 14 years. The previous minister of justice reviewed that sentence and reduced it by seven years. The point is that that young man was transferred from St. Vincent de Paul, where he had got into further difficulty, to Kingston where he got along fairly well. In my opinion, once he had been transferred to Kingston and had got along fairly well for a period of time he should have been released. But the parole board did not think so—good heavens, no. That would not satisfy the public.

This young man is not too smart. There are many things he will never accomplish. On the other hand, the psychiatrists have indicated there are many things he will not do on the other side of the ledger. I have talked to the warden and to the classification officers. They say he is a person who becomes belligerent now and again. If the neighbour's dog were to come on his property he might kick the dog. I think this would describe some members of parliament too, but we get along fairly well.

The parole board cannot see this. They have to wait. What has happened to this man? After a while he went to work in a shop upholstering chairs. With the scraps that were left over he made himself a briefcase. Don't ask me why he did so. I could not find out. He was not going anywhere and he had nothing to put in it. But he made one out of scraps and the material he used was, of course, not his. So he was punished. The next time I heard about him he had been involved on the periphery of a sit-down strike which took place some time ago. Later I was informed he had decided to go back voluntarily into segregation and stay there until his sentence had been served when he would walk out.

If the parole board is content to allow this sort of thing it might as well jump into the lake. It did nothing to help this young lad at the time he was obviously worth helping. I remember offering to help supervise his parole and act as an adviser. My hon. friend from Skeena made a similar offer. I know he had a job waiting for him. We arranged a job with Dominion Steel who also believed he was worth helping. His mother and father were both good citizens. His mother scrubbed floors to keep the family going. But did the parole board consider these things? Good heavens, no.

If it is our intention to build more and more prisons we shall no doubt fill those prisons. But if the minister wants to do something constructive with regard to the parole board he will ensure that they pay attention to the recommendations of the classification officers and grant parole when these officers think parole has a good chance of succeeding. Six months later the chances might be far less favourable.

Gaston Nicholas is not as good a risk for parole today as he was three years ago. I think even the stupidest member of the parole board would agree with that. Eventually, of course, they will let him out. I remember talking to a man serving his sentence at St. Vincent de Paul who told me: "I am due out in three months and you may be sure I shall do nothing to jeopardize my chance of getting out because when I do I am going to kill three people." If we are supposed to be protecting society, how can such things be allowed to happen? the parole board would say, of course, "We had nothing to do with it; the man's sentence ran out."

I know the Solicitor General fairly well. I have dealt with him on a number of occasions and found him to be an exceedingly competent person as well as most humane. I plead with him to make sure that the chance of parole is given to those who meet the requirements. Consider what it costs to build jails and staff them with custodians to look after people who are shut up with little opportunity of improving their situation. Then compare this with what it costs to provide parole officers and others in sufficient numbers to supervise parole properly. There is no doubt where the advantage lies.

I realize some people will take a different attitude. A number of chiefs of police told me some time ago that I was being soft on prisoners. What they want to do is collect their pound of flesh. They would like to see the stocks reintroduced. They would like to turn back the calendar for a century despite the fact that conditions today are not in the least comparable, in my opinion, because of the greater opportunities which are now available. I know the minister agrees personally with the view expressed by the hon. member for Leeds that there is need for an increase in the use made of the parole procedure.

Gaston Nicholas will eventually get out. He may serve every day of his seven-year sentence which in my opinion he did not deserve. The man who led that riot got one day. He is now free and to the best of my knowledge he is living a most respectable life. He has got married, and the last time I saw him he told me that after spending 27 years trying to beat society he had decided to join it. This man received a sentence of one day from Judge Wagner who as attorney general of Quebec was as tough as they come.

If the parole board is to have any value at all its job must surely be to ease prisoners back into society and help them. If the chairman of the board wants to run a popularity contest, let him go to Hollywood or run for parliament or do something in a field where popularity counts. The people I am concerned about now will never vote for anyone in great numbers. There is need for a great service to be provided here and it is the responsibility of the board to give that service by helping in every way they can. If the board waits until a sentence has been served it does nothing except consent to a man's detention for a certain period of time.

As I say, Gaston Nicholas will get out eventually but had he been let out two years ago I am sure there would have been no trouble. He would have been assisted by a number of us who are interested in his case as well as by parole officers and others who are in a position to help. Now he is bitter. In my opinion he has been punished for things for which he was never really responsible and over which he did not have much control. He has returned to a place where he has separated himself voluntarily from society and as a result he appears to be a much poorer risk in terms of a return to civilian life. This is only one case which I could cite. I have referred to it a number of times on previous occasions.

I expect in the course of the coming year to make a point, if necessary, of destroying, if possible, the individuals who composed the parole board. I think I can find sufficient information in some of the instances which have come to my notice to provide the one thing they do not want, namely, publicity for the cases where they have failed. I am prepared to do this if it will bring about a complete change in the thinking of the parole board. I know some members of the board. There is one in particular for whom I have a great deal of respect. I do not know the other members of the parole board. I only know the decisions they have made.

I agree entirely with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that if an inmate automatically comes forward for parole and is refused without reason, this does him no good. In fact it does him considerable harm. He will sit and wonder about the situation and it will not help his chances of establishing himself again in society. Not all such prisoners will be violently resentful of the board's decision but you can imagine their feelings when, after learning from their classification officers and padres that they are making good progress, they are refused parole without reason.

The percentage of those released on parole has fallen substantially since 1960. The figure is probably 20 per cent less now than in that year. This is the criterion we must consider. If we devised an automatic method of parole it would be like the procedure in the air force where, after a man has done certain things and spent a certain time in the service, he becomes an A.C.1 without trying, then an A.C. 2 without trying and after a further period of time an L.A.C. without trying. In the services this has worked fairly well. Some people became corporals under that system and one such corporal even tried to run the world.

Let us not say we have a modern parole system. We do not. The people on the parole board are terrified of making a mistake but the kind of mistakes they make could happen anywhere. Today I got a telephone call from my son telling me of an accident in Alberta over the week end in which a mounted policeman was shot. A man was causing a disturbance. The policeman got out of his car at the spot and immediately was shot in the head with a 22 rifle. Did he have any way of knowing that the man was going to shoot him? Have we any way of telling that a man would commit that kind of crime?

Improvements have been made. Let us not sell short the former minister of justice who upgraded classification officers and other officials in the penitentiary service. Let us not sell short the commissioner of the penitentiary service who is trying to achieve an ideal situation, leaving aside for a minute the question of buildings and physical facilities. His qualification officers are able to evaluate prisoners much more efficiently than the average Joe on the street is evaluated in normal, everyday life.

I do not think the person who shot the policeman had a record or a history of insanity. But I point out that in our prisons the wardens very often can tell which prisoners will return to jail and how soon they will return. They have a fairly good record of evaluation, but above them is the parole board with greater powers. In my opinion this board is not carrying out the provisions of the Parole Act as I know them. It is not providing the proper supervision for people released into society. In effect it tells the worst offenders: We are not going to help you at all; when your time comes up you will be thrown out on the street without any kind of supervision or help.

A few minutes ago the Leader of the Opposition spoke about the Queen's prerogative, whatever that may be. I plead ignorance but I do say that if all the prisoners in our penitentiaries were let out a third of them would ask to be readmitted immediately because they have become so used to institutional care that they do not want to take a chance on life outside prison. They are the type who throw rocks through windows the first time they get into difficulty and are happy to return to prison. One of the films recently shown under the auspices of the minister dealt with this type of individual.

The parole board should provide as much supervision as possible for parolees. When it refuses supervision, as it did in the case I have cited, it fails in its job and is negligent in its duty.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with a matter about which I spoke a year ago, on February 9, 1966, to be exact, when I introduced a notice of motion dealing with recompense for innocent people wrongly accused. As is the fate with most notices of motion it was talked out. However, at the time I said that as long as I remained a member of parliament I would do my utmost to have injustice rectified in respect of this matter. I believe this must be done and I am speaking again today in an endeavour to correct what is a dreadful injustice.

It is absolutely unbelievable, and indeed deplorable, that our laws permit innocent people to be convicted who are later proven innocent and then released with no compensation of any kind. It is very hard to believe that innocent people can be kept in jail for weeks, months and, yes, even years, and then at the duration of their term, or at some period during their sentence, when they are proved to be completely innocent of the crime with which they were charged, be told by the courts of Canada: We are sorry for our mistake; you are now free to return to your old job if it is there or if your former employer will have you. You will have to work that much harder to try to make up your lost finances, your lost prestige, and your lost health, mental and otherwise, all because of our mistake—the mistake of the courts of Canada.

I ask, Mr. Chairman: Do laws which permit this type of thing to happen seem to belong to Canada? I am sure we all realize, despite the precautions taken by the public authorities, that it is unavoidable that some innocent individual may unjustly become the object of criminal prosecution and thereby suffer loss. We realize that these things are bound to happen. However, the very existence of this risk implies that the public treasury should bear the responsibility for any such loss imposed by the machinery of the law.

Today, when our country is attempting to safeguard its citizens against losses caused by disease, disability, unemployment and many other misfortunes, it certainly goes without saying that the state should be liable for damages consequent upon wrongful accusation of a crime. It certainly would be manifestly inconsistent with the system of law if the state, which guarantees the individual against so many circumstances, should be excused from repairing the damage done by its own servants in the prosecution of wrongly accused persons. It is most unfair that a wrongly accused person should have to bear this loss. The prosecution should be brought at public risk and not at the risk of an innocent party.

It seems more reasonable that the loss should be borne by society than by the innocent person who has been accused. Apart from the matter of financial recompense, an award of compensation might do much toward rehabilitating the accused and freeing him from any suspicion which otherwise might rest upon him despite the acquittal or the dropping of the charges. It might also help in preventing the prosecution of innocent persons, because it is argued that provision for such liability compensation should lead to increased caution and in the long run to a decrease in the total damage.

There are many cases to which I might refer in order to illustrate my point. I shall mention, however, only one, the famous Canadian case of the kidnapping of John Labatt III some 30 years ago. The accused was sentenced to a term of 15 years. He was not the kidnapper. At the end of two years the man who actually did the kidnapping gave himself up. The kidnapper received a 12-year sentence. The original accused was given his freedom and went on his way to attempt to gain back what he had lost in society without having received any compensation from the government.

Many countries in the world award compensation to wrongly accused persons. In the period from 1886 to 1889 legislation of this kind was introduced in Norway, Sweden and Denmark. It was introduced in the United States of America in 1938. In addition, many states within the union also have their own legislation to deal with such cases. These states include California, North and South Dakota, Illinois, New York and so on. Great Britain has paid compensation as far back as 1896.

I spoke on this subject a year ago and therefore I know the arguments which are made by the department. I fully realize that the officials of the Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of Justice will say that although the federal government has full jurisdiction over the Criminal Code the administration of criminal law is, nevertheless, in the hands of the provinces. So they will say: Why should the federal government pay for mistakes made by servants of the provinces? This, like the laws governing air and water pollution, highways and so on, is just another illustration of the great diversity in respect of jurisdiction under a federal system. The time has come, however, when this business of passing the responsibility from the federal authority to the provincial authority and from the provincial authority to the federal authority must stop, especially when we are dealing with the matter of compensation to innocent people.

The federal government can at least show its interest, sympathy and understanding by taking the lead in compensating innocent people who have been convicted in cases where the federal government has the sole right of jurisdiction, for example, in cases of counterfeiting, excise tax and income tax evasion, narcotics, and so on. This at least would be a start. Although the administration of the criminal laws comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, I suggest that the federal government could give leadership by enacting legislation to make it possible for the federal government to pay say 50 per cent of the cost of compensation to innocent persons who have been convicted, provided the provinces do likewise. I feel very sure that if such a step should be taken no province which has a feeling for justice could refuse to take part in such a program.

I have a motion which has just been placed on the order paper, reading as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to pay 50 per cent of the expenditures incurred by a province carrying out a system of indemnification which provides that where an accused person is eventually found not guilty, he may be paid his costs and expenses, and such compensation as a judge, in his discretion, may decide to be fit and proper in the circumstances.

[Mr. Roxburgh.]

I certainly hope that this motion will receive the support not only of the government but of every party in this house. I hope also that the government will see that this motion receives the priority it deserves. In this our centennial year we are doing a great deal. We are confronted with the Far East situation and the world situation, but here we have something which is right at home. If ever there was an injustice, it is right here in our own country where innocent people are not being properly dealt with. If the federal government were to take action in this regard it would be another of their "do good" jobs in this year of our centennial. It would be a good step to take.

In respect of the provision of compensation with regard to cases which come under the jurisdiction of the federal government and for which, therefore, the federal government is fully responsible, I would suggest that perhaps a fund could be established which would be administered by a board. I therefore ask the federal government, which is fully responsible in this matter, to set up a fund with a board to administer claims. This is only a suggestion. It may not be what some people believe should be done but something should be done in this regard. Canada just cannot allow this injustice to continue. I believe it is up to the federal government to take the initial step, not a faltering step but a strong one, so that working with the provinces we may do something to alleviate this terrible injustice.

I ask the minister to tell us when he sums up at the end of this debate whether he supports the idea of doing something for innocent persons convicted under federal jurisdiction. I should like a yes or no answer to that question. I ask the minister to work with the Minister of Justice in giving a lead to the provincial governments in order to bring about a better understanding of this matter and so the two levels of government may work together to alleviate this injustice.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that it is six o'clock. In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be considered at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), Les États Généraux du Canada français—attendance at; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Canada Labour (Safety) Code—proclamation of provisions; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Water Resources—suggested study by engineering body.

DRUGS

MEASURE RESPECTING OBSERVATION AND TREATMENT OF DRUG ADDICTS

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, the motion I am about to put has been discussed with the house leaders of all parties. By unanimous consent I move, seconded by the hon member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon):

That the order for the second reading of Bill C-96, an act respecting observation and treatment of drug addicts, being order No. 90 under the heading "Public Bills" on today's order paper, be discharged and that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY SYSTEM

SUGGESTED HOUSE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE DEBT STRUCTURE, ADEQUACY OF TOLLS CHARGED, ETC.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert) moved:

That the government should direct immediately that a committee of this house investigate generally the whole St. Lawrence waterway system, covering the area from the gulf of St. Lawrence to the head of the great lakes, and in particular to examine (a) the present debt structure of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the adequacy of the tolls charged under the terms of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act including the question whether there have been breaches of the said act in the method of fixing such tolls (b) the water levels of the entire system, including the effect of shipping in the port of Montreal (c) the serious navigational accidents in the St. Lawrence river and the changes in insurance rates (d) the danger of flooding in the St. Lawrence region and the relation of ice-breaking thereto (e) the effects, economic and otherwise, of the present or any projected development of the St. Lawrence waterway system as tending to destroy the transportation contribution role of the Atlantic provinces to the unity of confederation; and to make recommendations thereon and to report from time to time.

He said: Sir, addressing you in your capacity as Mr. Deputy Speaker, my first words would be to thank you very much for reading my motion in those careful, well modulated tones that signify you come from the Atlantic provinces. I know that in so doing you and I will have invoked the sympathy of all members of the house for this resolution. Before beginning my brief introductory remarks I wish to say I regret to some extent that this motion concerning the St. Lawrence waterway system is coming before the house at this time. It has moved very quickly on the order paper. I notice that the hon. members from Halifax, for example, are not here. I am sure they would wish to associate themselves with this motion and it is regrettable that they are absent today.

One should place on the record the reason for their unfortunate absence. They are attending the naval review. As everyone knows, this will probably be our last naval review because the government has wiped out the navy; therefore we would all want these hon. members to be present on that occasion. However, I am fortified by the knowledge that I am to be joined in my motion by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Kennedy) who, while he does not speak very often in this house, speaks with great authority and responsibility. I think the hon. member for seconding this motion and indicating that he might back me up with a few words.

Having said that the timing of the introduction of this motion is unfortunate in that some hon. members are away from the house, I also regret that the time of the year is not conducive to the best press relations that might flow from my motion. We in the maritimes like this type of motion to be debated in the fall when we are looking for port business and when efforts are made by upper Canadians to keep the St. Lawrence open during the winter.

Having given the reasons for my regret at the timing of the debate on the motion, I add that one or two matters do make the motion topical at this time. I read in the Montreal Star of Saturday, June 17, just over a week ago, the announcement in flaming headlines that a $50 million program is to be introduced to improve the St. Lawrence. I do not know where this came from. It contains many items, and I suppose if I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) he would have some way of explaining the different items. This gives me a chance to ask where we are going. I will remind the house that only a few months ago the Canadian press uncovered a secret plan which would ensure winter access to Montreal through the St. Lawrence. To be fair, the minister brushed off in the house questions concerning it. However, all this make us in the maritimes wonder just where we are going with respect to the whole St. Lawrence waterway system in view of the fact that, according to my calculations, the expenditures now total $1 billion.

I have referred to this matter many times before. It has been brought up in the house in private members' resolutions such as this. I prepared a brief for the Atlantic Development Board and, along with other hon. members, have asked questions about this matter from time to time. This motion is an effort to be positive. In it we recognize a certain amount of progress. The situation in the port of Saint John and in the port of Halifax is desperate. It is true that we are now in the summer season. Our unemployment figures are higher than before. There is no construction work. I hope the house will take this as a serious plea for attention. I do not see how anyone can stand up and speak against what I am asking for in this motion. I am only requesting that the matter be referred to a committee.

I have dealt with five points. The first is to examine in committee the present debt structure of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the adequacy of the tolls. We have been over this matter before. The minister indicated that it might have been considered in committee during the past year. New toll arrangements were worked out with the United States government and were announced in the house in the proper way, but the whole matter of the inadequacy of tolls deserves some attention. The minister himself has admitted many times that there is authority under the act and even an obligation to recover from shippers as far as possible all the costs of operation of the seaway, as in other forms of transport. We all know that Mr. Henderson, the Auditor General, has commented many times on the inadequacy of our method of collecting tolls and discharging the responsibility which parliament has under the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act. I quote the Auditor General's words in his 1966 report at page 175:

> The extent by which revenues again fell short of meeting operating expenses, interest charges and provision for replacement of machinery and equipment in the Montreal-Lake Ontario section of the seaway is shown in the following summary—

I do not think the summary need be put on the record.

> —of the operating results for the year compared with the preceding year together with the cumulative operating results from the opening of the seaway in 1950. It should be noted that the figures include no provision for repayment of the capital indebtedness of $326,700,000 in respect of the Montreal-Lake Ontario section which the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act requires to be paid out of earnings by December 31, 2009. If this obligation is to be met, revenues over the 44 years from 1966 to 2009 must average over $22 million annually on the basis of 1965 costs. The revenues for 1965 were $6 million short of meeting this requirement.

Then he went on to say:

> Revenues on the Montreal-Lake Ontario section for the seven full navigation seasons the section has been open have amounted to $74 million compared to the $95 million which the tolls committees in 1958 anticipated would be earned during that period.

I want a full investigation by the committee of the ridiculous method of financing which we are using with respect to the St. Lawrence seaway tolls. If changes are necessary, let us make them in the proper way as intended by parliament.

Second, I want to know about the water levels of the entire system including the effect of shipping in the port of Montreal. Water is low and this is a hazard to navigation. What is the sense of continuing to spend money without knowing for sure what the water levels are going to be in the port of Montreal? They are down drastically which means that the big cargo ships cannot enter the port and we may be spending a lot of money for nothing.

The third point concerns the serious navigational accidents on the St. Lawrence. The minister keeps saying the matter is under consideration and the former acting minister of transport, who is now the Registrar General (Mr. Turner), has held meetings once or twice to try to deal with this problem. We have had our share of accidents. What is the reason for them? Perhaps the pilots are not as capable as they should be. If these problems are insurmountable, let us use the ports of Halifax and Saint John which have the proper facilities and good, experienced pilots who can do the job.

The fourth point deals with flooding in the St. Lawrence region. Every year that ice is broken the excuse is used that it is done to prevent flooding. If water levels are so low, how can flooding occur? When the ships break the ice in the fall we are told that it is done because of flooding, but the flooding does not start until the spring. It is all a mystery to me and I should like it to be cleared up in a plain and simple fashion in the committee.

Lastly I would like to know the effects, economic and otherwise, of the present or any projected development of the St. Lawrence waterway system with relation to the promises that were made to the maritimes at the time of confederation. I have spoken about this before and I will not go over it now. All hon. members know that when the maritimes entered confederation—perhaps this is an appropriate year in which to consider this matter—promises were made that the ports of Halifax and Saint John would be used as the access ports to Canada.

A review was prepared by the Atlantic Development Board which suggested that $3 million should be paid in compensation. We have heard no more about it. The consultants' report on transportation in the maritimes has just been released but very little mention of the ports of Halifax and Saint John is made in it. The reason given for the fact that nothing is being done to help the ports of Halifax and Saint John is that it would be detrimental to the business which has been built up on the St. Lawrence. The whole purpose of the report has been lost. Consideration is being given now to the St. Lawrence instead of to the ports of Halifax and Saint John.

We want these problems recognized and we think a committee should be set up the same as is done every year in the United States. There have been no hearings on the St. Lawrence waterway system. I think this is owing to parliament and we have a duty to see that it is done. I ask that these willy-nilly $50 million expenditures be stopped. Legislation for the establishment of the seaway system was unanimously passed by parliament but so far as I am concerned it has been a $1 billion financial failure. Surely all hon. members will support me in this request.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I appreciate that there will be others who will want to participate in this debate, and I will listen to them. But, Mr. Speaker, being as fair-minded as possible, I do not understand how anybody can stand up in this house and oppose the very reasonable request for this committee which will give us the answers to these problems and help to justify this great undertaking to the Canadian people which, so far as I am concerned, is a billion dollar fiasco.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, we readily understand the reasons which prompted the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) to introduce this notice of motion to the house, and I believe that we should congratulate him, because the problem is very important and serious for the Atlantic region as well as for navigation on the whole St. Lawrence river, in the seaway and on the great lakes.

However, it must not be felt, as might be deducted from the observations of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert that, for this reason, the waterway system should be neglected, the requirements of progress be ignored or the use of shipping on the great St. Lawrence waterway be reduced, only to look after the Atlantic ports, for instance those of Saint John and Halifax. These are two specific problems requiring different solutions and, in the light of the figures and the studies that have been made, I think, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason to neglect one in favour of the other.

I have studied carefully the motion introduced by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. He deals particularly with the financial structure of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, its debts and the adequacy or inadequacy of its tolls. He raises the question of water levels of the entire system, including the effect of shipping in the port of Montreal in particular. Furthermore, he suggests that an investigation be made on accidents and changes in insurance rates. In his opinion, the danger of flooding in the St. Lawrence region—he should have added also the danger of flooding in the port of Montreal—and its relation to ice-breaking should also be studied, as well as the economic effects of the development of the St. Lawrence seaway as tending to destroy the transportation role of the Atlantic provinces in the unity of confederation.

At the end, the hon. member adds a constitutional and political element to some very technical problems. As I said at the beginning, there is no reason why one of the problems should be neglected. These are two absolutely essential problems, neither of which should be neglected or overshadowed by the other. In my opinion the trend is irreversible and since the St. Lawrence seaway is becoming increasingly important, I do not see why steps could not be taken to help the ports of Halifax and Saint John and other ports in this region of the Atlantic provinces and to compensate for whatever losses may be incurred. There are undoubtedly losses in money and working hours, but unfortunately we can only take note thereof.

Not later than today, I read a press release dated May 15, 1964 on the effects of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river and in the gulf of St. Lawrence on the Atlantic ports. Mr. MacKeigan, chairman of the Atlantic Development Board, said:

> The Atlantic Development Board has been entrusted with investigating the impact of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river and in the gulf of St. Lawrence on Atlantic ports. That study was made by J. Kates and Associates and Gibbs, Underwood and McLellan; it was completed, as far as certain aspects are concerned, by the board's staff.

This report tells us in black and white that the ports of Saint John and Halifax have suffered, as a result of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river, significant financial losses estimated, in 1963, I think, at 200,000 tons of freight corresponding to approximately $3 million in direct revenues for the ports and a loss of seasonal employment of about 3,600 men-months.

It is a very great loss. It is—as stated by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) who spoke before me—a catastrophic situation. And, unless I am mistaken, that loss is increasing and would be due mainly to the fact that winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river is increasing. I do not believe, however, that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert can find statistics which enable us to believe that winter navigation has increased in the St. Lawrence seaway. As a matter of fact, everyone knows that during that period the seaway is closed for an average of two months. That is why I feel it would be advisable to put aside that matter of the repercussions of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river and in the gulf of St. Lawrence, as far as the St. Lawrence seaway is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I shall return to the seaway problem later on. With regard to winter navigation, up to now, ice-breakers, according to my information, have only protected the water level, especially by preventing ice jams and floods and not facilitated navigation directly. Of course, breaking up ice-jams and making a channel to let the ice flow more freely indirectly facilitates navigation on the St. Lawrence up to Montreal, although that navigation is rather limited in winter, specially in January and February.

As I have said before, the movement is irreversible. I cannot see very well how a gate at the entrance of the gulf of St. Lawrence could be put up to prevent ships from going up the river to Montreal.

It seems to me that the two questions should be taken up separately, first, to see whether or not navigation facilities should be increased on the St. Lawrence and how this could be done depending on circumstances, and secondly what steps could be taken to make up for the losses in income incurred by the Atlantic provinces because of this state of affairs, that cannot be altered.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, a thorough survey has been made of the effects of river navigation on the Atlantic ports. I do not know whether a house committee would find other solutions or reach other conclusions, but perhaps recommendations could be made to the house. The government should certainly consider such recommendations seriously in order to take the necessary steps to solve those problems.

Now if we take the various items mentioned by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert in his notice of motion, we note that the first item deals with:

> —the present debt structure of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the adequacy of the tolls charged under the terms of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act including the question whether there have been breaches of the said act in the method of fixing such tolls.

Mr. Speaker, I think that hon. members are perfectly aware that some public hearings were held in Ottawa in 1966, I believe, concerning the review of the tolls on the seaway. The United States seaway authority also held similar meetings in Chicago around the same date.

On June 30, the seaway authority submitted to the government its report on tolls. We know that the government did not see fit to increase them, which is questionable perhaps, Mr. Speaker, since it is a field related to economics or the financial structure. Unfortunately, I am no expert in either field, but I must say that I have never felt that those great waterways, those great works were designed to yield a profit to the country. In my opinion, those are public services that should be self-supporting as far as possible, at least as far as their administration is concerned. And I suggest that a serious study should be carried out in this field.

As for the amortization of the cost of developing the seaway, I have still greater doubts about the possibility that we may derive from tolls, which are the main source of income of the seaway, enough money to pay the cost of that development.

There are members of the House of Commons who had the opportunity to take an active part in the development of that gigantic joint undertaking, although it was mainly Canadian, and as far as I could ascertain from these people, it was never envisaged that this undertaking should rapidly pay the cost of construction thereof out of its income.

However, I think that we should try to get, as much as possible, an adequate revenue to meet the normal administration expenses of that agency. Government agencies which cannot make ends meet are not an exception, and considering the scope of the project, which cost almost $1 billion, I would not say that the annual deficits shown by that undertaking seem disgraceful. I do not want to mention any agency in particular but I do not know of any which shows a profit or which even makes ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not labour the subject of navigation accidents and insurance rates. It is a fact that if aids to navigation are not adequate for winter navigation, on the St. Lawrence river, risks of accident are greater.

A decision will have to be made some day whether or not to mark out the channel with buoys, to take security measures on the river so as to make year around navigation possible. Obviously, without buoys, without beacons in winter time, in fact without the whole regular security system, accidents will multiply as navigation increases and insurance rates will go up too.

Now, I should like to come back to the flood hazard in the St. Lawrence area and its connection with icebreakers.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that, in Montreal, the water level problem is of immediate interest. On the other hand, we must admit that nature has provided all kinds of ways to lower the water level: temperature, precipitation, evaporation. Those are the natural factors which affect the water level. Human factors are also involved, such as consumption and deviation for the normal needs of the population, the economy and business firms.

• (6:40 p.m.)

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, scientific methods should be used to forecast atmospheric conditions more accurately, so that we might take the necessary steps to conserve water.

The government should give particular consideration to these problems, because of the increasing traffic on our waterways. Traffic on the St. Lawrence is creating many problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am motivated to enter this debate by the excellent and reasonable wording of the notice of motion which has been put forward by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). The hon. member made a reasonable appeal to the house for the government to give consideration to setting up a committee to study the matter outlined in the resolution.

Basically the resolution covers something that has plagued us in the Atlantic provinces for 100 years, since confederation, the matter of transportation. We recall vividly, particularly during this year, that one inducement held out to our people to join with other parts of the country was the undertaking that coast to coast rail transport facilities would be completed. Those facilities were completed, and that part of the obligation was fulfilled.

Over the years much has been done to eliminate the disadvantages of distance. Confederation perhaps eliminated our trading with other portions of the world, such as the West Indies, which we could reach with water transport. Modern technology has made transportation more efficient, though nothing has shortened distances. Travel time has been shortened, but cost, which is another element of transportation, has not been reduced. We are still in an awkward position in trading with the rest of Canada.

Since confederation many small factories in the Atlantic provinces have been bought by larger interests in central Canada, and our problem is that we have had to import manufactured goods from central Canada over long distances of rail lines. The products which we harvested from the sea and the forest, the raw products or semi-manufactured goods, also had to be transported vast distances to our favoured market of central Canada.

Goods manufactured in central Canada are sold all over the country. Cameras, for example, carry the same retail tag in all parts of the country. Yet when one buys an automobile in the Atlantic provinces he has to pay between $150 to $200 extra for freight charges. If cameras can be marketed at common retail prices in all parts of the country, automobiles also ought to be so marketed. Such marketing policy would help greatly our people in the far flung parts of the country. The cost would not amount to much and could be charged to those in central Canada.

I do not think anyone in the Atlantic provinces regrets the building of the St. Lawrence seaway complex of transportation, and recognizes it as a forward step to open up all the country. Without doubt it has been of great benefit to all parts of Canada, and it has been of some help to the Atlantic region. However, we in the Atlantic provinces have always been afraid of unemployment, and of losing during the winter months part of our transport business. Whether modern technology can open the seaway without additional cost to the country, I do not know. I doubt it. If that can be done, the costs involved should be borne by the carriers themselves. If they wish to pay the additional cost of breaking through the St. Lawrence ice, rather than tying up at a deep sea port and paying for the additional rail freight, that would be all right with us. We have developed the maxim that we live and that we will let the rest of the country live; and we expect the rest of the country to feel that way about us. We do not wish to impede general progress. When the rivers are closed for navigation any ships that wish to run the risk of entering closed waters should be prepared to pay for the costs of any assistance they might request if they become trapped during the winter. Even where flood control programs are inaugurated, with resultant benefits to ships, the ships using the waters in question should be obligated to pay toward the program, where it is felt that it is more beneficial to bring cargoes toward central Canada than to unload them at a deep sea port.

I do not come from a deep sea port city, but I know something of the railway system which serves such ports. The economy of our area has a great lift in the winter when heavy goods move from central Canada to our ports. Of course the stockpiling at those ports all the year round of goods to be shipped by sea also is good for us.

I will not labour my remarks. This notice of motion has merit. The economic structure of the seaway development should be carefully reviewed; we must make certain that it is amortized in such a way that those who use it will pay for it. It must not become a burden on the whole country. It must not be a charge on those who, through further development of the seaway, would be deprived of their traditional rights to employment and a decent livelihood.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Like the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), I commend this notice of motion to the house and hope that someone on the government side in the few minutes remaining to us will rise and accept our suggestion that this matter be placed before a committee, where experts can be called and all reasonable people could give their views and discuss the matter in the way in which maritimers discuss all their problems.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, as the member representing the Welland riding, and as one residing in Welland on the Welland canal, which is part of the seaway, I am naturally keenly interested in this motion.

I have a certain special knowledge concerning the St. Lawrence seaway authority. Let me say first that I am opposed to the idea that a parliamentary committee be formed to investigate the seaway authority, its policies and its operations. I am very much opposed to this for various reasons. In principle, I believe it would be wrong to do so; we would be setting a highly dangerous precedent if we were to set up special committees to investigate and probe into properly constituted independent bodies set up by the government so as to be free from political influence and able to conduct the nation's business with complete objectivity, divorced from both the direct and the indirect pressures of partisan politics.

This does not mean of course that the seaway authority, or any crown corporation, is a law unto itself, responsible to no higher authority. However, there are built in safeguards against irresponsible behaviour. The government knows full well that the courses of action followed by any such agencies will reflect on the image and reputation of the government itself. In consequence, any government is going to take exceptional care to ensure that those appointed to these boards are people of the highest calibre in terms of ability, integrity and common sense.

It must be remembered, too, that public opinion is still a strong factor in this country. It is very salutary for public bodies to realize that their actions are not beyond reproach, and that they are still answerable to the most powerful authority of all—an aroused, articulate and critical chorus of well directed public opinion. An added factor with regard to the supervision of this particular authority is of course the existence of machinery by which the type of investigation envisaged in this motion could, if necessary, be carried out. I refer to the transport committee. There is no need to strike another committee; it would be completely redundant. I would remind hon. members also that in addition we have the undoubted right to delve into the structure, conduct and general policies of the authority in question during our consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport.

There is a further point which should be taken into consideration. Even if the proposal to set up a special committee were acceptable, there are so many standing committees and special committees already in existence that the striking of any more would tax the resources of members, staff and facilities beyond our ability to cope with the situation. Moreover, our committees do not have available to them the trained personnel and research facilities they need in order to carry out a task such as the mover of this motion envisages.

As I indicated in my initial remarks, the concept of conducting parliamentary investigation into the operations of government-appointed boards, in the course of a general fishing expedition and in the absence of specific allegations of misconduct or inefficiency, is most dangerous. It would destroy the entire principle of setting up boards to conduct national business objectively in the interests of the entire nation without fear of regional pressure groups exerting veiled influence on the members of the boards concerned.

If we were to begin an investigation into the St. Lawrence seaway authority in the absence of any specific allegation or terms of reference, where would we stop? Would it not be logical, whenever a member felt strongly enough about a subject, to set up a parliamentary committee on the basis of an impression that a particular region was suffering—to investigate for example the Canadian National Railways, the Polymer Corporation, the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, Air Canada or any other independently functioning government body?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would the hon. member not agree that when revenues are nearly $100 million short of expectations some sort of examination by somebody in parliament is warranted?

Mr. Tolmie: I would preface my answer by saying I can understand the concern of the hon. member in relation to his own interest in the Atlantic region. My point is that if the question of the debt structure is sufficiently important it can very well be investigated by means already at our disposal. There is no need to set up a new committee.

Assuming for a moment that there is no objection in principle to the formation of such a committee as is proposed by the hon. member, what justification is there for investigating the operations of the seaway and the entire concept of this international waterway? Is there any reason to believe that the authority is not conducting its business with efficiency and imagination? As to the members of the authority themselves, may I say that through my dealings with them in connection with the Welland canal by-pass I state without hesitation that they are men of the highest integrity, that they have discharged their heavy responsibilities well and that they work well in the community. As far as I am concerned, the composition of the board is excellent.

In my area, it seems that the authority is confronted with a conflict of interest. Its prime concern is to ensure that ships get through the canal as safely and as fast as possible. But communities such as Port Colborne and Welland, which straddle the canal, are plagued by traffic congestion brought about by the raising of bridges across the waterway. Bridges are continually being raised, resulting in tremendous traffic repercussions. Naturally the authority is under constant pressure to regulate its traffic so as to prevent, or at least minimize, the impact on the area. They have done so to the best of their ability, without failing to achieve their ultimate goal, that is, to get ships through the canal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired, and the house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

1. Departmental administration including administrative expenses of the committee on corrections plus such fees, salaries and expenses as may be approved by Treasury Board for members and the panel of consultants and staff named by the minister to advise and assist the committee, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $1,015,400.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Since it is seven o'clock the committee is suspended until eight o'clock and I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I asked the minister if he would support the idea of doing something for innocent persons convicted under federal jurisdiction, and also whether he would give his support, along with that of the Minister of Justice, toward working out something with the provinces that would do away with the present injustice.

When I spoke on my notice of motion last year a number of my colleagues in the house were in sympathy with my suggestion, but they were worried about the possibility of compensation being paid to persons through miscarriages of justice, or in certain cases to persons freed because of reasonable doubt, or someone acquitted on a new trial where a witness may have passed out of the picture. I just want to say as strongly as I can that under no circumstances whatever am I interested in such doubtful cases receiving recognition of any kind. All that I am requesting is that innocent persons—and I emphasize innocent persons; not doubtfully innocent but honestly innocent persons—who have been jailed and then found to be innocent be given some form of compensation.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is not asking too much in a country like ours that has advanced so far in helping people in every walk of life. Surely we can take a solid step forward in seeing to it that people who are convicted, and later proven innocent, receive some compensation to help them better themselves when they come out of prison.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters I would like to bring to the attention of the Solicitor General. The first is the problem of juvenile delinquency in Canada, and the second is the expungement or destruction of criminal records.

Back in 1961 the then minister of justice appointed a committee to study the problem of juvenile delinquency. The reason he did so was the rapid increase in juvenile delinquency, and also the rapid growth in our population. Figures for 1961 show that 41 per cent of our population were 19 years of age or under, and the projection is that by 1970 this group will form at least 50 per cent of our population.

The committee worked hard for a period of four years, made an exhaustive study, and held consultations with provincial authorities on constitutional problems in order to prepare its report. That report was tabled in the house last year. Since that time no legislation has been introduced by the government. In fact there has been no action whatever.

Last April I had the opportunity to attend a conference on juvenile delinquency at lake Couchiching where 100 experts from the province of Ontario, mainly social workers, probation officers and interested laymen, studied four phases of the problem of juvenile delinquency. They studied the pre-court problem with regard to juvenile delinquency, the treatment subsequent to the judicial determination of delinquency, after care, the prevention. If there was anything I learned from that conference it was the determination of these people that action be taken in this field, and this is why I am bringing the matter to the attention of the Solicitor General.

It may be said by the Solicitor General that the legislation is not ready, but I urge on him favourable consideration of the recommendations in the committee's report which did not require any legislation. The first recommendation, as set forth at page 279 of the report is that there should be a youth and delinquency research and advisory centre set up. This type of centre would embody some of the things which are contained in this report. The recommendation is as follows:

• (8:10 p.m.)

We think that, in the beginning, a major federal government contribution could be made by the establishment, in the Department of Justice, of a youth and delinquency research and advisory centre. It should have representation from—or, at the least, liaison with—other federal departments concerned, notably the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Labour. Initially the staff need not be a large one—possibly three or four informed persons. Ultimately it might expect to have a staff of ten or twelve, especially if it were to perform any useful consultative function.

The functions of the youth and delinquency research and advisory centre, as we see them, would be as follows:

(1) Research and co-ordination

(a) to serve as a clearing house on research on delinquency and the many related areas which bear upon it;

(b) to maintain liaison with provincial governments, and also to keep up with developments in other countries in the field;

(c) to serve as a "secretariat" in relation to subsequent, more detailed studies that should follow—

And so on.

(d) to provide for a biometrics function, collecting and analysing the data for a continuing epidemiological analysis of delinquency rates, types, distribution, and the like;

(e) to assist, in conjunction with provincial, municipal and perhaps private agencies, in the organizing of workshops, institutes and seminars for the purpose of improving the channels of communication—

And so on.

(f) to serve as a review committee for the processing of applications for research grants, or as a resource body for any such review committee.

The second heading is consultative and advisory functions:

(a) to develop standards, guides and instructional materials on various types of activities or services for delinquent young persons—

(b) to provide a consultation service, consisting of a small staff of experts, in relation to the various areas outlined.

This is the first recommendation of the committee. It would require no legislation.

Second, they say that demonstration projects should be set up. On this subject the report states as follows:

The federal government can make another significant contribution by discussing with provincial authorities the possibility of federal funds being allocated for a number of demonstration projects relating to various aspects of delinquency prevention and control.

The third recommendation is the staff training requirement. The report reads as follows:

Finally, the federal government can assist greatly in the establishment of a staff training program. A modest beginning would require no more than an appropriation of funds to establish workshops, institutes, and seminars.

These are the three main items in the conclusions contained in that report. These are recommendations which would require no legislation.

The conference studied the 100 recommendations with regard to the four areas which apply to juvenile delinquents. I should like to ask the Solicitor General to give his full attention to this matter so that social workers, probation officers and the other people who are concerned across the dominion can expect some action from the government with regard to this very important item.

The second matter which I should like to refer to the Solicitor General is that of the expungement of criminal records. The committee on justice and legal affairs studied the bill that was presented by the hon. member for Welland. Members of this committee heard different witnesses concerning that bill and some of its shortcomings. The hon. member for Welland should be commended for his initiative in bringing forward this bill. I heard two witnesses in particular, one of whom was Mr. Kirkpatrick, the executive secretary of the John Howard Society, and the other, Mr. George Street, chairman of the National Parole Board. If there was anything in particular I gained from their evidence it was the fact that the pardon as we know it is of little assistance in wiping out a criminal conviction. Therefore we should see that any conditional pardon that is given contains words which in effect wipe out the previous convictions. At the moment the pardon does not contain such words. It has been suggested that words indicating that the person shall be deemed not to have committed the offence should be included in any conditional pardon.

The convictions which apply today really hurt a convicted person in three areas, those of employment, bonding jobs and travel. This afternoon we heard the Leader of the Opposition set forth some of his experiences concerning this problem. I should like to ask the Solicitor General to give full consideration to the use of the pardon in wiping out criminal convictions. There appears to be a little disagreement with regard to the period of time in which this should be permitted. Some persons say the period should be five years and others say that it should be ten. I think possibly the shorter period would give more encouragement to many of the persons concerned.

Along with any change which might take place concerning expungement of records, I think the Solicitor General should consult with the provincial authorities particularly in respect of the fair employment practices act. It is very easy to have a record expunged and then have a person faced with an employment application which contains the words, "Have you ever been convicted of a previous criminal offence?" Therefore it is very necessary that the Solicitor General consult with the provincial authorities in an effort to make sure that this provision is not contained in any application form.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition mentioned the problem of travel to the United States. One can appreciate the problem which arises when a person travelling from Canada to the United States is confronted with the question, "Have you ever been convicted of a criminal offence?" There is nothing we can do in respect of having the pardon contain words which would permit the person concerned to go to the United States. However, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice could speak to United States authorities about reciprocal legislation permitting these people to travel without any restriction. One of the things I should like the Solicitor General to do would be to take the initiative with regard to consulting with the United States authorities, to see whether it would be possible to have reciprocal legislation which would overcome this problem.

Another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the Solicitor General is that which has to do with recidivism. Mr. Kirkpatrick stated that 44 per cent of recidivism is committed within the first six months of the release of a prisoner, that from 44 to 75 per cent is committed within the first year, and that from 75 per cent to 97 per cent is committed within the first two years. After a two year period recidivism almost passes out of the picture. This is the reason it is so important for us to grapple with and solve the problem within the first two years of the release of the prisoner.

I should like to ask the Solicitor General to comment first on the problem of juvenile delinquency and, second, to tell us what his attitude is concerning the expungement of criminal records and what recommendations he has in mind in this regard.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, there is only one matter I should like to raise this evening one that was discussed at length this afternoon. I am speaking of the matter of parole and the activities of the National Parole Board. I am sure we all realize the task that is faced by the National Parole Board in making decisions with respect to the cases brought before them. Some of these cases are probably more difficult than others, but I suppose that even the easiest case is not too easy to deal with. They all have their own particular problems and situations, and we can sympathize with the National Parole Board in the work it is attempting to do. There is considerable talk these days about "going soft" on criminals. Other people think society is hard on criminals. However, Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss that particular aspect of the matter at this time.

[Mr. Roxburgh.]

I wish to bring just one matter to the attention of the minister. I believe this case emphasizes the importance of considering the human element in these problems and perhaps giving the benefit of the doubt in certain cases. I have here a brief that has been built up through correspondence. It concerns the work of the Mennonite central committee, an organization that is doing very fine work in various fields of activity. This organization is working in my own constituency and has established what is called a halfway house project. The objective of the project is to rehabilitate those who have broken the law; to provide means whereby they can be rehabilitated and assist in their own rehabilitation.

The case to which I refer concerns one of the Sons of Freedom who was incarcerated in Mountain Prison at Agassiz, British Columbia. I understand that about five brothers were sentenced. The youngest of them was paroled some time ago. The Mennonite central committee, in an endeavour to assist, contacted the family of one of these men and persuaded them to leave the camp which had been established just outside Mountain Prison. The committee persuaded the family to live in the community of Yarrow, British Columbia, in a home that had been provided by them. The family was looked after by the Mennonite central committee.

Representations were then made to try to effect the parole of the husband and father of this family. For some reason or other the parole board decided against the application. This took place back in August of last year, and I understand this man is still incarcerated. I believe this is a case that should receive very careful and special consideration. Here is an organization that on its own initiative went ahead and provided facilities for this family. They felt it would help to get the family away from the main body of this particular group, the Sons of Freedom, so they persuaded them to live elsewhere and endeavoured to reunite the family and provide the man with a job and proper supervision. They were prepared to assist in his rehabilitation. As I have pointed out, the National Parole Board ruled against the application and apparently it will not be renewed until 1968.

I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because I believe organizations such as this ought to be encouraged in this type of work. I believe also that if we can bring these families together, away from the ordinary environment in which they find themselves, it will assist tremendously in rehabilitation. I will present the minister with the name of this person and family and will outline the brief to him. I trust he will give this matter careful consideration and see whether anything can be done to assist them.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask a question rather than to make anything in the nature of a speech. I should like to ask the minister to consider, if he would, the reform of the bail system of Canada as proposed in my own bill, No. C-4, as well as several other places.

This bill is quite in line with legislation established last year in the United States. In brief, to quote from the explanatory notes of the proposed legislation, it would reform the present bail system in Canada as our American friends did about 12 months ago. It would effect this reform in the following way. The bill would assure that all persons, regardless of their financial status, should not needlessly be detained pending their appearance to answer charges under acts of the parliament of Canada, when detention served neither the ends of justice nor the public interest.

The measure I propose, and which I would ask the minister to consider, would permit poor people awaiting trial to be released without bond and would thus eliminate the arbitrary cruelty in the present bail system. It would permit them to be released without bond, in the absence of cash, having in mind certain other precautionary and amending steps. The present bail system requires that there shall be cash in all cases before bail can be granted.

The system of release without bail which would be established by the bill I propose would be limited to instances where the offence is not punishable by death or life imprisonment and in which the judge deems the defendent trustworthy. I would ask the minister to take into consideration the reform of the bail system in line with the general terms and principles of my proposal.

Mr. More: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister on the presentation of his estimates. I have found him to be deeply interested in the problems that he faces in his department, and I have also found him most co-operative in dealing with questions that are raised by constituents and presented to him. I believe the evidence presented by hon. members today in the representations that have been made to the minister indicates the feeling amongst all members of the house, that they have a sympathetic ear to which to present vigorously the problems of people who come under the jurisdiction of the legal system. Hon. members know that the minister will give his best consideration to analysing their suggestions and incorporating those which seem to offer better hope in the future.

The ministers' co-operation in regard to settling the feelings of despair, perhaps, in regard to the changing picture of the R.C.M.P. establishment, especially in my constituency, was deeply appreciated. I know that the visit he undertook during the course of a busy schedule, and on rather short notice at the time, was well worth while and he made a good contribution to better understanding. For that we owe the minister our deepest thanks.

I have listened to all the representations made today about those who run afoul of the law and are incarcerated. I shall not repeat the representations that have been made but I should like to bring to the attention of the minister one matter that bothers me. I confess that I am no expert in this field and perhaps do not know all the details I should know when bringing the matter to the minister's attention. I know it costs a great deal of money to keep a person in an institution, and sometimes when I see the small budgets of the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies as well as those of other agencies engaged in the work of fulfilling what seems to me to be a very pertinent and desirable service I wonder whether we should not look more deeply into the objective of rehabilitation and treatment of the inmates. It seems to me that the people who come out of prisons are virtually put out on the street and not a great deal is done to help them. Prisoners on parole often fall back into crime again. There is no doubt that often there is a great deal of co-operation being given by the families concerned to assist the parole board and other authorities. Paroles are being granted to prisoners so as to give them a fair chance to remain out of trouble and to fit them into society. There are also prisoners who serve their sentences without being paroled. It seems to me that very little is provided for them.

We all know the prejudice against anybody who has been in trouble with the law and who has served time. It is difficult for him to obtain employment and to rehabilitate himself. It costs us $3,000 or $4,000 a year to keep them in security and to try to instil in them a desire to fit into sociéty. It seems to me ridiculous that after having expended so much money on these people no further help is provided them.

Perhaps the minister could tell me where in the estimates grants to the John Howard or Elizabeth Fry societies are provided and on what basis these grants are established. Are they established on the basis of the previous year's case load and the contributions that have been made? We all know that these societies are continually upgrading their staff. They are obtaining professional staff and, as is emphasized in their reports, their caseloads demand an increased number of professional staff. Yet sufficient funds are not provided for them. I noticed in some reports that municipalities provide amounts ranging from $25 to $100 for that purpose, but on what basis is this done? I wonder if the minister could indicate to the house what part in his view these societies are expected to play. I should like him to explain to us on what basis they are provided with part of their budget to enable them to play their part efficiently and well.

That is the only point I wish to bring up, in addition to the various representations that have been made to the minister. I am quite impressed by the recommendation that first offenders in a great many cases should not be incarcerated. I agree that Parkinson's law seems to work in all stratas of society and if we build institutions we will fill them. However, if we develop a more enlightened attitude and help former prisoners to play their part in the community, and help them to stay out of trouble, we will not need to worry about building so many institutions and thus will achieve a net gain both in money saved and in a decrease in crime.

I know that the changing times have brought about an increase in the R.C.M.P. establishment. I do not need to relate again the historic significance of the force in my area and what it means to the community. I believe it is in fact a very desirable and suitable location for the work that is done there and for the courses that are being followed. I notice the minister in his opening statement on June 6 referred to an increase in the establishment from 9,500 to 11,000. This of course means that more trainees are being admitted and more work is being done in this regard.

He also referred to a new Canadian police college, and I wonder whether he has in mind a new building or a whole new establishment. If so, will this establishment be operated as a primary training centre at Regina? I know that police courses have been held there for many years. I have been in contact with these people and I know that police forces from many countries have been drawn to that institution. I am acquainted with their methods of training, and if it is the minister's intention to enlarge the establishment, I am wholly in favour of it. In view of the mounting expenditures I do not expect a great deal of money to be provided in addition to the amounts already outlined, but I do hope priorities will be established so as to allow the opening of this college at Regina, and the continued training of the police force in its new sophisticated form so as to meet the necessary requirements.

The other matter to which I wish to refer concerns the museum at the Regina establishment. I think the minister has seen it and must realize that the quarters are not adequate. It has been a great tourist attraction. I believe the time has come when a permanent curator should be appointed and new quarters provided for the museum. This would provide considerable space for other activities of the force. I hope this matter will be given the necessary priority, and that the minister will be able to tell us that provision will be made for the museum and its exhibits in Regina city, and that priority is given for the establishment of new quarters and perhaps the appointment of a permanent curator so that this very desirable operation can be continued in the future.

Once again I want to thank the minister for his co-operation. I will listen with interest to the answers he will give to the numerous questions and representations which have been made during this debate.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I also would like first of all to express appreciation to the Solicitor General not only for the sympathetic way in which he has listened to the many representations which were made to him, but also for the interest he has shown for the new developments in Canadian penology and his desire to make still further improvements in this regard. This is why I should like to make this evening a special plea on behalf of an institution which is located in my riding and which is doing work for the entire province. I am referring to the Vancouver Halfway House, about which both the hon. member for Vancouver East and I have spoken. A little time ago we went to see the minister with regard to this project, and were very sympathetically received. The people at Halfway House were hoping at that time that the minister would pay them a visit. My purpose tonight is to refresh the minister's memory a little bit and add some new facts to the story. I have been speaking with some of the people out there—in fact I just returned about an hour or so ago—and they are most anxious to have the minister look into this matter without delay.

This is one of those experimental projects, of which we have had quite a few in Vancouver and some of which have worked out exceedingly well. I am thinking of one which was started under the aegis of the father of the hon. member for Vancouver East, when he was a member of the legislature. At that time he conceived the idea that a good many women who were being released from mental institutions needed a place to go in order to get re-established in ordinary life. A co-operative boarding house was established where they could stay until they found jobs for themselves and became acclimatized to the outside world. This project was frowned upon by a number of people in its initial stages, but eventually became such a success that the provincial government took it over.

This Halfway House in Vancouver is in somewhat the same category. It was started in 1965 by a number of people who were convinced that there was a need for a place for people who wanted to get rid of the drug habit, a place where they could be surrounded by a home atmosphere and where they could deal with this habit under carefully controlled conditions until they were rehabilitated. These people were encouraged to get a job as soon as they were able, preferably outside Vancouver since drugs were more easily available there. Vancouver of course is one of the worst drug centres in Canada.

Since the Vancouver Halfway House was begun in 1965, almost two years ago, over 400 persons have been in residence. A large percentage of these people have at some time been charged with an offence connected with drugs. Some of them of course have come straight from Oakalla, or the penitentiary, but no one is turned away, provided they indicate a desire to attempt withdrawal from the drug habit. In addition, some of these people are parolees. It is significant that the parole board, recognizing the value of the house, has taken a favourable view of it in relation to parolees.

I visited Halfway House at Christmastime. It is located just two blocks from where I live, and I shall be going back regularly during the time the house is in recess this summer, if we get sufficient time off. I was most interested in what I saw there that afternoon. The people who are doing the work at the house are themselves in a more advanced stage of withdrawal from the drug. The directors are citizens of Vancouver from different walks of life. I believe there is a United Church minister on the board, as well as a former member of the legislature. A number of the directors have been in business, and it is rather significant that there are four registered physicians on the board of directors. This fact is of importance with regard to the prescribed doses of methadon, which is a withdrawal drug.

The directors have written a letter to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in which they state they are aware that the police forces, provincial and mounted police, have had many reservations about Halfway House. However, the attitude of these forces is changing for the better at the present time, and the directors are seeking an interview with the top officers of both police departments.

This work has been conducted, as well as it is possible to do, in one of the old houses in Vancouver. It is a very old, ramshackle house of the shingle type. These people are doing well, considering the limitations placed upon them by the place in which they work. It is very interesting to note that within the last two weeks seven people from Halfway House have found employment in various parts of the province, two of them in Vancouver and the other five outside the city. When I was there at Christmas I found they kept a very careful record of two things. They keep a careful record of the people who come in, the jobs they get and where they are located. They also keep a record of where every single tablet of that methadon drug goes. There is nothing to the objection raised by some people that this house is a place where methadon can be passed on to other people. They keep track of every single tablet, and I am assured it is used right in the house under the supervision of the prescribing doctors.

As proof of the fact this place is doing good work, I can cite the fact it is now the recipient of a grant of $1,000 per month from the city of Vancouver and the provincial government. The officials of Halfway House have to supply to the city of Vancouver and the provincial government a monthly medical statement and a monthly financial statement. Both the provincial government and the city therefore are satisfied this is a responsible organization which is doing a commendable job. Of course this organization is saving the city and provincial government a great deal of money by getting jobs for people who are in quite hopeless condition upon arrival there.

The point is that the board of directors need another establishment. They do not want to do away with the one they have now, because it is essential, but they want another place where they can put people who have partly withdrawn from the habit, in order to keep them for a longer time and keep them away from those in the early withdrawal stage. I can well understand the reason for this because the afternoon I was there at Christmastime someone who had been there for less than 24 hours had a complete seizure and was taken out to be dealt with by the people in the house. This crisis resulted from the beginning of withdrawal from drugs. I also saw the effect of this disaster on the inmates of the house. As a matter of fact, I felt it was having a very bad effect on the others who were a bit farther along with the withdrawal treatment. What a thing to witness, the terrible agonies of this man as he started withdrawing from the drug.

What the organization needs is help from the federal government. The people are prepared to do their share of work, but they need financial help. I understand they have approached both the Solicitor General and the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to obtaining new premises. There may be no hope that help in that particular form will be forthcoming. However, the directors do not care whether the help is in that form or in the form of cash.

In addition, I am quite sure they want the Solicitor General to visit the place. They are most anxious to have this piece of pioneer work succeed.

• (8:50 p.m.)

With regard to their relation to the Narcotic Foundation, there is some pull there. A great many people believe that all government efforts should go into the Narcotic Foundation, but I do not agree with that. That is a useful foundation and is doing excellent work. However, there is also a place for this much smaller, more intimate, homelike atmosphere where a great many people carrying on the work of treating addicts are themselves sufferers from the drug habit. They are curing themselves and carrying on the duties of the house, as well as carrying forward the co-operative efforts of the house.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

At this stage I wish to make an appeal to both ministers—that is, if both of them are responsible for the awarding of grants. I suppose there is not much likelihood or danger of there being any overlapping, but I think that this is a good experimental move which should be carried on under the best possible control conditions. It is something which will be valuable and which, in the long run, I believe will save the taxpayers a great deal of money. In the short run it will save these people and their families from having lives which would hardly be worth living at all. Many of these people will once again be made self-sustaining and will become of real value to our community.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief; I have just a few points I want to bring to the attention of the minister.

My first point is with respect to preliminary inquiries. I should like to recommend to the minister that he give serious consideration to amending the Criminal Code to provide that all preliminary inquiries be held in camera. The purpose of the proposal is to protect the reputations of innocent people against whom charges are brought, but are dismissed at the preliminary inquiry.

There have been many cases of this in Montreal during recent years. I can think of several, but I am not going to mention the names of the people involved because they have had enough bad publicity as it is. These people have had charges brought against them, and the judge at the preliminary inquiry has dismissed the charges as being without any foundation whatever. However, as a result of the charges that were brought and the widespread publicity which accompanied them, the reputations of these people have been ruined to the extent that many of them cannot obtain jobs or cannot even continue to live in the districts in the city in which they have lived for years.

If at the preliminary inquiry there is found to be sufficient evidence to proceed to trial, then it is understandable that the trial should be held in public. However, I think that some serious consideration should be given to holding preliminary inquiries in camera. I believe that the bar association has endorsed this proposal, so it is not a proposal that has been put forward without due consideration being given to it.

I have two other brief points. I am not too sure whether they come under the jurisdiction of the minister but I shall mention them anyway. One is with respect to compensation for the victims of crime. There is before the house a private member's motion on this subject. When it came before the house recently I spoke in favour of it. The matter was also brought up during the debate on capital punishment. Compensation boards of this sort have already been introduced in New Zealand and Great Britain, and I think they are very necessary.

Take for example crimes of violence, where the accused are convicted and sentenced to prison. There is no recourse to compensation for the persons who are the victims of such crimes. Since it is the duty of the state to protect the public against crime, if the state fails in its duty and a crime is committed then there should be some compensation to the victim. Often persons suffer from assault, rape or different types of injury, either to their persons or to their property, but there is no way to repair this damage. I think we should closely follow the experience in Great Britain and New Zealand and look into this question.

My last point relates to costs incurred by persons accused of crime. Again I think that if a person is accused of a crime but after preliminary inquiry the charge against him is dismissed, some reimbursement should be made of the costs incurred by the defendent, who must engage a lawyer and go to a lot of trouble to defend himself against a criminal suit. I cannot see why the costs should not be reimbursed, in the same way as when a person successfully wins a suit in a civil case.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I put these three points to the minister. The first is that we should consider holding preliminary inquiries in camera; the second is that there should be some means to compensate the victims of crime, especially victims of crimes of violence; and third, we should consider some method by which the costs of an accused person who is found not guilty at preliminary inquiry should be reimbursed to him.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I shall be quite brief because I know the committee wants to conclude these estimates as soon as possible. First of all I wish to thank the minister for his promptness in attending to any matter that I have brought to his notice. I join with the other members of the opposition who have expressed their appreciation for his courtesy and have recognized his competence. I also wish to express my appreciation for his staff in general and, in particular, for the work of the parole board.

During my 22 years in this house I have had numerous occasions to refer matters to the parole board and to ask them to consider parole in given cases, under certain circumstances and so on. I must say that from my personal experience I have found that the board treated each case I brought to its attention in a very humane way, with an understanding of the circumstances surrounding it.

In that connection I am reminded of one occasion when I received a letter from a man who said that he was an ardent C.C.F. member and supporter, and who asked me whether I could get him paroled. He mentioned that he was all in favour of the Regina manifesto and the socialization of the banks. I went to see Mr. Ilsley and presented his case. I did not know the man in question or anything about him, but Mr. Ilsley said that he would look into it. About two weeks later he called me into his office and said: "Bert, there's no question that that chap is a really good C.C.F. supporter". So I replied: "What makes you say that?" "Well," he said, "he is in for his third bank robbery". I said: "Well, we will let it go at that".

I have had occasion to engage in voluminous correspondence with various people, particularly young people, in penitentiary for unfortunate offences. They like to feel that there is someone outside who thinks something of them, and this is particularly so if I know them. I know of two or three very unfortunate cases which arose as a result of association with persons who had no standards of decency whatever. I send them Hansard, having first marked it. They read it and write back to tell me what they think of the speeches that are made here, and so on.

I do not want to repeat what has been said so well previously today, but I do want to emphasize my support for all that has been said regarding the problems of the mentally ill who come within the clutches of the law and also with respect to the rehabilitation of those who are at present in penitentiary, particularly young people. As I have said before, I have had placed before me several cases of young people who committed very serious crimes just because they were with undesirable associates at the time, and were also perhaps intoxicated. I join with others for a more humane and understanding approach to personal problems created by a society that in certain instances is lacking, a standard of values. To that extent we are all partly responsible.

Supply—Solicitor General

I wish to say a few words about the officers and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am informed that the commissioner is to retire at an early date to accept a position as parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman for the province of Alberta. This is pioneer legislation for Canada. I am sure the administration of this legislation will be followed closely by members of parliament and of provincial legislatures and by all who are interested in protecting the rights of the citizen in our increasingly complicated society. I am sure that his lengthy experience in the R.C.M.P. and his understanding of, shall I say, both sides of the coin so far as the administration of the law is concerned will stand him in good stead. This is a new position and presents the commissioner with a great opportunity for service to the public advantage. I am sure that everybody will watch the administration of this legislation with interest. I, with many others I am sure, join in wishing him continued good health and every success in all he undertakes to protect the rights of the Canadian people.

I wish to say a word or two about law enforcement officers. Unquestionably our law enforcement officers today have an increasingly difficult role. We live in an entirely different world from the one that many of us were brought up in. Many of the complications in our society today we were unaware of in our youth, or we thought that they did not exist. I must say at this point that I agree with the remarks of the leader of the official opposition when he referred to the histories of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. To some extent, I also agree with his contentions, that the public's image of the force and its appreciation of the force has declined owing to the requirement that the force spend a good deal of time in dealing with traffic violations. I think there is some validity to that contention. Those duties have affected the image of the force —particularly its image with younger people, though other persons have also expressed that view.

On a number of occasions in recent years I have noticed the growing inhumanity of man to man. Not long ago I was crossing an intersection in this city when a bus driver was driving through on the light. He had the right of way. No passenger was in the bus. Four men under the influence of liquor drove in front of this bus, and the bus driver dented their car in and pushed it along the tracks.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Possibly a dozen people who were on the corners at the time of the accident all disappeared. I then heard the men getting out of the car and saying that they were going to charge the bus driver with crossing against the light. I heard this going on, went over to the group and listened to the conversation for a minute or so. The men said they would lay a charge as soon as they could find a policeman. I then said to the bus driver: "If you want a defence, here is my card. I am willing to go into court and say what actually happened, because I saw it." As soon as I said that, the men got back into their car and drove off.

Members of the R.C.M.P., as all of us are, are human—Mr. Chairman, I am not actually a saint, although many people think I am—and therefore they make mistakes. From my experience, any complaints that I made to a senior officer or detachment head were immediately investigated, and where action was required to remedy the complaint, action was taken.

Less than six weeks ago a man dropped dead outside the entrance to the east block. Everybody hurried by. The man who was with him when he dropped appealed to those around him for help to carry the afflicted man. It was not known then that the man was dead. An appeal was made to help carry the man to the Chateau Laurier. In the end the friend had to leave the afflicted man lying on the sidewalk, go down to the Chateau and get some employees to help carry the man down to the Chateau. A situation of this kind is incredible; yet that sort of thing happens in the society in which we live. It would never have happened a few years ago. These incidents show the influences that are brought to bear on our young people. To some extent we are all guilty of the circumstances under which we live today.

In that connection may I conclude by reading a paragraph or two from an article headed "Let's Face It". It is a commentary by Barbara W. Tuchman, and has a further heading "The Missing Element—Moral Courage":

> Of all the ills that our poor criticized, analysed, sociologized society is heir to, the focal one, it seems to me, from which so much of our uneasiness and confusion derive, is the absence of standards. We are too unsure of ourselves to assert them, to stick by them, if necessary in the case of persons who occupy positions of authority, to impose them. We seem to be afflicted by a widespread and eroding reluctance to take any stand on any values, moral, behavioral or esthetic.
> Everyone is afraid to call anything wrong, or vulgar, or fraudulent, or just bad taste or bad manners.

Then the article goes on:

> Since then, the human species has been busy overbreeding, polluting the air, destroying the balance of nature and bungling in a variety of directions so it is no wonder that we have begun to doubt man's capacity for good judgment. It is hardly surprising that the self-confidence of the nineteenth century and its belief in human progress have been dissipated. "Every great civilization," said Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare John Gardner last year, "has been characterized by confidence in itself." At mid-twentieth century, the supply is low. As a result we tend to shy away from all judgments. We hesitate to label anything wrong and therefore hesitate to require the individual to bear moral responsibility for his acts . . .
> What it requires is courage—just a little, not very much—the courage to be independent and stand up for the standard of values one believes in. That kind of courage is the quality most conspicuously missing, I think, in current life.

I agree with many of the opinions held by the writer of the article.

In conclusion I wish to say this: Every one of us, in my opinion, has some personal responsibility for the maintenance of value standards, if democracy is to be maintained and improved.

Mr. Pugh: I will not take a minute, Mr. Chairman. May I ask the minister a question about the museum on the federal site at Battleford? It is connected with the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. It is a fine place and attracts many tourists. However, one part of the area could be improved. A graveyard is there, dating back to the revolution. I saw that some new stones had been erected, but there were also graves where it was impossible to read the names. Obviously the graves are of constables who served at that time. May I suggest that the graveyard be brought up to date and made truly presentable? It is a wonderful site. This matter I suggest ought to be looked into right away.

Mr. Pennell: My first and manifest duty is to express my appreciation of the very kind remarks which have been directed toward myself. I can only hope that I may be worthy of them in the months ahead.

It would be extremely difficult for me to deal with every detail which has been raised during this instructive and interesting debate, and if I should overlook any point I am sure hon. members will understand that it is through inadvertance, not by design. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary raised an interesting point concerning the museum at Battleford. I am grateful to him for doing so, because I think Canadians suffer from an underdeveloped sense of history. If the centennial year has done nothing more it has awakened us to the fact that we do have a history and a tradition which we ought to preserve. I undertake to look into this question of the museum and graveyard at Battleford.

The hon. member for Kootenay West put his finger on a very pertinent point. I endorse his statement that there is a real danger in Canada today that we may come to regard crime with apathy and indifference, looking upon it as a natural phenomenon.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce raised three points. May I say to him, with respect, that I feel these fall more properly within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, or under provincial jurisdiction. This does not of course detract from the importance of the points he raised.

The honourable and charming member for Vancouver-Kingsway is always difficult to resist when she is pleading a case. I acknowledge I have received a communication from Mr. Dixon, the secretary of the Vancouver Halfway House and confirm that I gave an undertaking to the hon. member and her friend from Vancouver East that I would visit Halfway House in Vancouver. I reaffirm that I will fulfil that commitment and I hope the hon. lady will be available to accompany me on my visit.

An hon. Member: Go half way.

Mr. Pennell: I feel that these voluntary agencies are playing an important part in the war against recidivism. The hon. member for Fraser Valley raised a point concerning parole. He will forgive me if I deal with it later when I have occasion to deal with the remarks made by the hon. member for Regina City and the hon. member for Simcoe East on the subject of parole, generally.

The hon. member for Regina City expressed concern as to the amount of assistance the government is giving to after-care agencies. Perhaps I might put on record the yardstick we use in this respect. The voluntary agencies are playing an important part in assisting the penitentiary service. Grants this year to recognized after care agencies will amount to $455,850, which represents an increase of approximately $70,000 over last year. These grants are awarded on the following basis. There are grants to cover expenses incurred by after care agencies in the supervision of inmates released on parole. These are at the rate of $9.50 per man month. Then there is a grant to cover expenses incurred by agencies in providing rehabilitation services to inmates released at the end of their sentences; the cost of such services averages $25 per inmate. In addition, we make grants to cover expenditures by such agencies in providing services to inmates during their incarceration. The agencies agreed to provide these services at a conference held on October 1, 1964, and the estimated cost is $20 per inmate.

Finally, sums are being made available to assist the development of certain after care agencies, foundations and halfway houses concerned with helping inmates of penitentiaries find their way back to society. Included in the 1967-68 estimates is a special grant of $10,000 to St. Leonard's House at Windsor, Ontario, for capital purposes.

The hon. member for Regina City also asked some questions regarding the museum in Regina. I agree that this museum is an authentic piece of Canadiana worthy both of the city of Regina and of the R.C.M.P. I have had some discussions with the attorney-general of Saskatchewan concerning a new building for the museum, and while I am not in a position to give a definite commitment at this moment, I can say that I am very much interested. I am pursuing this matter, and as far as I am concerned I feel that this museum ought to be housed in new quarters.

As far as the new police college is concerned, I would point out that this college is intended for senior officers. We are committed to maintaining Regina as the centre of our basic training, and our long range plans include substantial expansion of the present facilities there for the training of recruits. But the police college is intended for senior officers in the force. Its location has not yet been announced; I hope I shall be in a position to make an announcement on this point in the very near future. This would be a supplement to the basic training centre in Regina.

Mr. More: I wish to ask the minister one question in connection with the courses for police officers which have gone on in Regina over the years. I know that members of city police and members of other police forces have attended them. Will these courses be continued in their present form at Regina or will the new college take them over? If it is intended to take them over, I urge that the new college be placed in Regina.

Mr. Pennell: I apologize to the hon. member. I did not understand the full import of his question. Perhaps I might explain the purpose of the new police college. It will be the centre of advanced courses for senior officers of the R.C.M.P. We shall continue to provide training for municipal police and other police forces in Regina. When they require a higher standard of training these officers will be invited to come to Ottawa.

The hon. member for New Westminster touched on a point that is close to my heart when he spoke of the need for a reform of the bail system. I have not yet forgotten an experience that I had when I was practising. I was called upon to defend a young man who had been arrested on a very serious charge. He had been held in prison for six months for the simple reason that he was unable to raise bail. When his trial was finally held he was found not guilty; it was clearly a case of mistaken identity. Due to the present system of bail arrangements this man, in my humble opinion, was kept unnecessarily in jail during a very hot summer. I know that the Minister of Justice is very much concerned with this important matter and at the present time the Ouimet committee, otherwise known as the Canadian Committee on Corrections, is studying this matter. On that committee is Mr. Arthur Martin, one of the foremost defence lawyers in Canada and I am satisfied, looking at the calibre of the members on that committee, that this matter of bail reform will be carefully scrutinized.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The hon. member for Broadview speaking, if I may say so, with his usual moderation and good sense raised the very important problem of juvenile delinquency. The report, as I understand it, falls broadly into three parts. The first part is concerned with revision of the act. I can assure the hon. member that we now have two officials in the Department of the Solicitor General devoting full time to the revision of the act and I am hopeful that early in the fall we will have a draft amending bill ready, and be in a position to discuss it with the authorities in the provinces, who of course have a large stake in the problem of juvenile delinquency.

The second part of the report deals with the setting up of a youth and delinquency research centre. I am now at liberty to say that my colleagues in the cabinet have approved a memorandum I placed before them and we are now proceeding to set up this research and advisory centre. However, I must confess I am encountering some difficulty in securing the services of people we feel are qualified to organize this new centre in the department.

The third part of the report falls into the field of co-operative federalism. This is a matter of providing financial assistance in fields which are primarily of provincial concern and provincial responsibility. However, we have set up an interdepartmental committee and this aspect of the report is also receiving attention.

The hon. member for Timiskaming made a strong plea for the granting of paroles, as did the hon. member for Leeds, and I am in full accord with the representations made by both hon. members so far as parole is concerned. I might add that I have made a similar plea on almost every occasion I have spoken in public since I assumed my present responsibilities.

I must point out that I respect the integrity and the independence of the parole board. We all realize that the parole board is not granted the luxury of hindsight, so every parole is an act of faith and vision. Members of the board spend many anxious hours considering every application. I think it only fair to put on the record on their behalf that in 1965 they reviewed 10,868 cases and 2,297 paroles were granted. In 1966 they considered 10,431 cases and granted 2,496 paroles. Therefore in 1965 and 1966 there was an increase not only in absolute terms in the number of paroles granted but also percentagewise in relation to the number of cases considered and the number of paroles granted.

I know the hon. member for Timiskaming will be much heartened by the fact that this year up to May 31 the parole board has granted 1,151 paroles as compared with 818 for the same period last year, an increase of 333. If the number of paroles granted continues at the present pace for the remainder of the year, the parole board will grant 3,000 paroles this year, a new high in the board's history. I am sure the hon. member will certainly approve this course of granting an increased number of paroles.

Mr. Peters: Does not the minister agree that this is considerably below the percentage level of 1960? In other words, the board has not caught up to the level it had reached in 1960 when almost 3,000 paroles were granted and we had fewer inmates in prison. We are not going ahead. We are not reaching the 1960 percentage level. Does the minister not think we should be moving much faster than we are in this respect? I appreciate that we are moving pretty fast, but could he not advise the parole board to step up the number until the percentage is increased?

Mr. Pennell: The hon. member for Timiskaming is quite right, Mr. Chairman. The number of paroles granted in 1960 was 2,525. However, I believe his wish is being granted this year because, as I pointed out a moment ago, if the board continues at the present pace the number of paroles will reach 3,000. However, the hon. member and I are on common ground so far as paroles are concerned, and I am glad to have his support and the support of other hon. members in bringing to the attention of the parole board the need to grant more paroles.

As I have pointed out, the board is an independent body, as it should be, but I am satisfied that the appeals made in this chamber tonight will not fall on deaf ears. I should also like to put on record that in the estimates now before the committee we are seeking an additional $466,000 for the purpose of increasing the number of parole service officers. The board proposes to add 31 parole service officers in 1967-68 over the number employed in the previous year.

Turning now to the representations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, he quite properly asked what was happening to the submissions and briefs of the various voluntary agencies regarding the design of the maximum security institutions. I know the hon. member is aware of the fact that we set up an all party joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons and that these briefs were submitted to it. The committee examined, cross-examined and re-examined witnesses who appeared before it, and I have now decided to accept the report of the joint committee. It aired the matter throughly and I feel that it would be only reasonable and proper for me to accept its report, which I understand was unanimously approved.

The hon. member also put in a plea for an increase in probation. Again I welcome his support, for I have stated time and time again that it is my firm conviction that it is through non-institutionalized treatment that we are going to win this fight. I believe the war against crime must be joined before the inmate reaches the federal system. The majority of inmates in our federal institutions have been convicted at least once, and most of them at least twice, before they get into the federal correctional system, and it is late in the day then to begin to win the war against recidivism.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the question of granting suspended sentences and the implementing of a probation system rests with the sentencing magistrates and judges, and is outside the jurisdiction and control of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice. However, I think that the plea being put forth by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and other hon. members is bearing fruit, because there are now approximately 500 fewer inmates in our federal institutions than there were at the same time two years ago. Although I am tempted to claim the credit for the penitentiary service, I feel in all honesty that the decline in the number of inmates in our institutions is due in part to the fact that the judges and magistrates are using probation more generously than they did a few years ago.

Mr. Orlikow: Does the minister not agree with the submission made by the Canadian Corrections Association, from which I quoted, that judges and magistrates would use probation more frequently if there were more adequate probation services? Is the minister giving consideration to implementing the recommendation of that association that there be a national probation act and a national probation service financed jointly by the federal and provincial governments?

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North raised a valid point when he stated he thought magistrates and judges would use probation more generously if there were more probation officers. I believe that to be correct, and I speak from experience in my own city of Brantford. As soon as a probation officer was brought in there the presiding magistrate began to place prisoners on probation more frequently.

We are providing more funds for parole officers. The amount this year is $460,000. The parole officers and the probation officers are working together; they assist each other. After all, I have to fight at the treasury table for moneys for the department, but the government has been very generous in this regard. I believe more money has been approved by the present government for the penitentiary service in this past year than in any other year in the history of the service. However, I agree with the hon. member that if we had more probation officers perhaps we could do a more effective job.

A short time ago, together with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I had the privilege of meeting a delegation representing the Canadian Mental Health Association. At that time, as I understood their brief, they advised me that we could expect that the demand for psychiatrists would continue to outrun the supply. The mental health association, however, was kind enough to suggest that they would send a member to meet with the officials of my department for the purpose of setting up a course of training for the correctional officers and chaplains. We are now planning a meeting for the purpose of setting up a new program.

The penitentiary service has also entered into agreements with several Canadian universities whereby internships are being set up which recognize penitentiary employment in respect of forensic psychiatry and psychology. Provision is being made this year to enlarge the correctional staff colleges in Ontario and to commence the construction of another staff college in British Columbia.

Perhaps now I might deal with the points raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. He always makes a most interesting speech and he never is more eloquent or moving than when he is dealing with the case of those who, unfortunately, have lost their way for a little while in our society. He supported the recommendation of the highly respected member from Simcoe East with regard to the wiping out of records. This matter has exercised my mind for some months now. In my days at the bar I was very close to the subject. I think the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka put his finger on the real difficulty. Perhaps I might quote the hon. member:

> I should like to conclude with a word about this proposed legislation concerning the wiping out of criminal records. The committee hearings were most useful, but the real problem was this: What would happen in the case of a person who was asked, in connection with an application for employment, for example, whether he had ever been convicted of a criminal offence? Even if the record of the offence had been wiped out, an answer is required—yes, or no.

This is the great difficulty. However, as I stated earlier in the course of this debate, this difficulty ought not to deter us from doing what we can to assist those who have made a conscientious effort to go straight. We should make every effort to reduce the area of injustice, no matter how small. My officials are still considering this problem and we intend to push forward and to do our very utmost.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I assume the minister read all my remarks. I should like to ask him if the suggestion that a person could only be asked a certain question has any validity. I should like to know whether there is anything wrong with this from a constitutional point of view. What I have in mind under the proposed legislation is that a person could only be asked, "Have you been convicted of an offence for which there has been no certificate granted under this act?" If such a course were adopted, would there by any objection to it of which the minister is aware? This in effect would limit the type of question which could be asked on a questionnaire in the same manner that a question concerning race is eliminated from a questionnaire under the Ontario human rights law.

Mr. Pennell: I am sorry if I misinterpreted the remarks of the hon. member earlier. I believe the point raised by the hon. member is one which perhaps would come within provincial jurisdiction relating to civil rights. Perhaps it is one which should be raised at the next conference of the attorneys general.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, the reason I raised the question is that while I did make the remarks the minister has read, I also thought I had provided the answer.

Mr. Pennell: This is so unusual in the house that it caught me by surprise and I apologize to the hon. member.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition also suggested that consideration should be given to calling a royal commission on crime. I should like to point out that I have devoted a major part of my opening statement to the subject of crime in Canada at the present time. I have read very carefully the proceedings of the hearings of the commission on crime that are going on now in Quebec. I wish to put on record that I have scarcely read a name that had not been raised during the discussions at the last attorneys general conference. I make this point to show the house that the attorneys general are alert to the grave challenge that crime poses to the quality of the Canadian society.

The hon. member for Simcoe East also raised a question about the unfortunates who leave the penitentiaries without parole and without help. I am sure he will be interested to know that in this year's estimates we are asking for approval to open five community control release centres. These centres will accept men who are in the late stages of their sentence. We will provide them with board, lodging, and counselling. They will go out into the community and try to gain employment. They will have a place to stay while they are getting adjusted again to society. We have been successful in obtaining a residence in Montreal and are seeking residences in Hamilton, Toronto and some of the other major centres. This is on an experimental basis, but we feel it is a step in the right direction. I am sure the hon. member for Simcoe East will give his approval.

The hon. member also brought to my attention the problem which arises when a person is charged, found unfit to stand trial, and subsequently found to be fit to stand trial. The question then arises what about the time such person has spent in the institution. Speaking from experience, I know that trial judges generally take into consideration when passing sentence the time spent in these institutions. I can also advise the hon. member that the parole board has power under the regulations, in respect of granting parole, to take into consideration the time spent in an institution pending sentence and trial. Therefore the board can deal with it not only in keeping with the letter of the law but also in the spirit of the law.

Mr. Chairman, I have dealt with as many points as have caught my eye. If I have overlooked any points, I apologize to the house.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. When I spoke on the question of compensation being paid to innocent persons I asked whether the minister would give his support in working with the provinces to arrive at some agreement between the provinces and the federal government to make sure that innocent people would receive compensation. I believe I also asked the minister whether he would support my suggestion in respect of cases which came under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I may have missed it, but I do not think the minister mentioned that point in his very fine résumé of questions asked by hon. members.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I believe that this problem is, generally speaking, the responsibility of the provincial authorities. I know that the hon. member raised this point in the course of his speech. I would advise the committee that on the single occasion when it was brought to my attention that a person was held illegally in a federal institution, full restitution was made to that individual, to his satisfaction. I believe our actions on that occasion speak for the feelings of the minister and the department in this matter.

Mr. Roxburgh: The minister has referred to one case. I can give, not one case but a dozen in which restitution has not been made. There is no provision at the present time whereby these people can be compensated. Responsibility in this connection has been passed back and forth between the federal government and the provincial governments. I agree that the provincial government is responsible for the administration of justice, but it is up to the federal government, under whose jurisdiction the criminal law falls, at least to take a step forward, not just in one case but in the many cases that have developed ever since there has been government in Canada.

I could quote a number of cases where this has happened. I gave the example of one case, that of John Labatt III, where this happened. I mentioned this one case only because I felt that was all that was necessary. Somebody has to accept the responsibility in taking the lead as between the provincial and federal government. The lead must be taken in getting these two levels of government to work together. The responsibility must not be passed from one to the other. All I am asking as a member of parliament and a member of the party governing this country is that the minister and the Minister of Justice take some action to work with the provinces and say: We will pay 50 per cent if you will pay 50 per cent. We must get something going in this respect and not leave the responsibility with the provinces. I am only asking that the minister give his support to such an idea. All he has to do is say yes or no.

Mr. Pennell: Naturally, Mr. Chairman, I would support any move that would bring relief to people who have suffered an injustice but I cannot—and I am sure the hon. member, who is a very good friend of mine, would on reflection not expect me to do so—stand here today and on a matter which I believe is primarily the responsibility of those who administer justice, namely the provincial authorities, commit my department or the government to granting relief. I have already put on record the fact that in every case in which we have a responsibility, we have discharged our responsibility.

Mr. Roxburgh: I am not asking the minister about that. All I am asking is that he take a step forward to get the provinces to do something in this regard. Someone has to make a start. The criminal law comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government. As the minister has said, the administration of justice falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Would it not be nice if the federal government were to say: We will pass legislation which provides that if a man in the province of Ontario, the province of Quebec, the province of Prince Edward Island, or whatever the case may be, is wrongly accused and has been in jail for two years and then released, we the federal government will pay compensation to the extent of 50 per cent if the province will do likewise? There is not a province in the Dominion of Canada that could refuse such an offer. All I am asking the minister to do is take a step forward to see if legislation in this regard cannot be worked out. If anyone were to suggest that it would not be practical to work out legislation along these lines, I would point out that the provinces and the federal government work out all sorts of legislation at the present time. This is all I am asking in this instance. The minister is right in what he has just said, but all I ask is that the minister, his department and the Minister of Justice give their support in seeing whether something cannot be done to correct this injustice.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, just before vote No. 1 passes I should like to ask the minister a question. I am a layman in this field, not being of the legal profession, but one thing has disturbed me. In his reply of a few moments ago the minister mentioned the case of an individual who was found not fit to stand trial and was subsequently found fit to do so. A legal interpretation may be involved in this question. I do not know whether I am asking for a legal opinion. I really do not know what I am asking for; but it has disturbed me to learn that this case concerned an individual who had committed murder. I refer specifically to a charge of murder. I know of a case where the individual had committed murder, was found unfit to stand trial, remained unfit for a period of some months, and subsequently was found fit to stand trial and was eventually convicted and hanged. I am not sure whether it is a matter of legal interpretation as to whether he was sane when he committed the crime, but there seems to me to be a hiatus here somewhere which I as a layman fail to understand.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I believe I recollect the case to which the hon. member has referred. Speaking from memory, immediately after the offence the accused was arraigned and at that time was found to be mentally unfit to stand trial. Apparently the shock of realizing what he had done deranged his mind. He was committed to an institution. Later, under treatment he recovered. He was brought back to court and charged. I believe the issue of his insanity at the time of the offence was put in issue before the judge and jury. Argument was submitted, expert witnesses were called, and the jury found he was fit to stand trial and that he was sane at the time of the commission of the offence. All the circumstances surrounding the case were thoroughly aired. I must, however, add this caveat, that I am speaking from memory and am not absolutely positive that we are speaking about the same case. But the facts seem very similar to those of a case in western Ontario possibly 10 years ago, or a little longer.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I have a very short question. There is in Quebec an inquiry being conducted into the administration of justice. Could the minister tell the committee whether a federal observer is attending the sittings of this inquiry. I am sure many amendments to the Criminal Code will be recommended after the inquiry is concluded, and I wondered whether there was a federal observer to follow the inquiry.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware whether there is an officially appointed observer attending the hearings of this commission. I do know, however, that there have been conversations between counsel conducting the proceedings on behalf of the commission and my department. We have been co-operating with them in so far as inquiries have been made to the Department of the Solicitor General. I have no doubt that the findings of the commission will form part of the agenda at the next attorneys general conference.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question for the Solicitor General. I wonder whether we can expect any legislation in this session with regard to the abolition of capital punishment. We all know how concerned the Solicitor General is with this topic.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position at this moment to give an answer to that question. I believe the Prime Minister will make the announcement at the appropriate time.

5. Administration, operation and maintenance including compensation to discharged inmates permanently disabled while in penitentiaries, $42,472,300.

Item agreed to.

Correctional services—

10. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $28,310,000.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, under this vote on page 485 there is a breakdown of appropriations for construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment. I notice there is an item of $2,023,790 for the Pacific region. I wonder whether the minister could give us an indication of what this is for.

Mr. Pennell: The appropriation calls for $2.6 million for the initial construction costs of reception centres which will be located in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario and the western regions. There is also an appropriation of $1 million for the initial construction costs of medical centres in Quebec, Ontario and the western region. I believe the figure indicated by the hon. member is included in the total which I just mentioned.

Mr. Patterson: Is part of this amount to cover the expenses in connection with a proposed institution at Mission? Over $2 million is to be spent in the Pacific region. I do not want to hold things up, but I am wondering if the minister has the answers.

Mr. Pennell: I see by a nod from one of the officials in the gallery that the answer is "yes".

Mr. Patterson: I appreciate that very much. I am glad the minister and the department recognize the new healing influence of the Fraser Valley environment in physical, mental, moral and spiritual matters. Recently the drug addiction centre was opened. Unfortunately the minister was not able to be there but the Postmaster General officiated. That was in my constituency. Now we appreciate the fact that an institution is to be erected at Mission, which also will provide services to those who need assistance. As I said, I do not wish to hold up the estimates now but I would like to have the information as to what type of building is being contemplated, its size and all the matters connected with it. If the minister could secure this information for me, not tonight but at any time in the near future, I would be very grateful to him.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question on vote 10 which also applies to vote 15. Under vote 10 are included pensions to dependants of penitentiary personnel who lost their lives in the performance of duty. Under vote 15 the same item appears, namely pensions to families of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who have lost their lives while on duty. Could the minister indicate how they lost their lives? Was it in attacks by prison inmates and, in the case of the R.C.M.P., in the course of an arrest?

Mr. Pennell: I do not have the details relating to all the cases. One case which comes to my mind involved a young constable killed in the course of duty. The offender is now standing trial charged with capital murder. In the penitentiary services I believe four guards were killed over the last six or seven years, and of course their pensions would be included in the vote referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. Pascoe: I thank the minister. I wanted that information on a vote that is coming up a little later.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise for only a moment to ask the Solicitor General, for whom we in this house have a great deal of respect, to be a friend in court. As he knows, some of us are anxious that the recommendations of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada regarding the pensions of retired civil servants might be implemented very soon. I will remind him that the report, which was tabled on May 8, says clearly that the expression "civil servants" in the context of that report includes retired armed forces personnel and retired personnel of the R.C.M.P. The case of retired R.C.M.P. personnel was ably represented to us when we met in the committee, and our recommendation is that whatever is done be done for all three of these groups. I hope the minister will use his good offices in the cabinet to see that action is taken with respect to all of these groups within the next few days.

Mr. Pennell: I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this to my attention. I should add that the ex R.C.M.P. members also made a very strong submission to the minister.

Item agreed to.

15. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year, $62,438,000.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Patterson.]

20. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $9,860,000.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General.

Resolution considered in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

• (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the government house leader, Mr. Speaker, if he could give us some indication of the program for the balance of the week?

Mr. MacEachen: We would like to deal tomorrow with some legislation beginning with the committee stage of the measure to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, followed by the committee stage of the Cape Breton Development Corporation measure and third reading of the measure to revise the Interpretation Act. If those are completed tomorrow, we would then go on with the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Wednesday, we would continue with the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Thursday we would call the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Trade and Commerce, and on Friday the Department of Public Works. This is a tentative program, Mr. Speaker, and if there is any reason to alter it, I will inform the house at the first opportunity.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

ESTATES GENERAL OF FRENCH CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the original concept of that movement which is called the Estates General of French Canada is quite commendable. It is a very pleasant idea to take stock of the French fact in the country, to make an analysis, as comprehensive as possible, of the position of the French speaking Canadians in the North American context, and to explore all the avenues likely to insure a maximum spread to that large and great community which gets from the French language an essential dynamism.

The word therapy, many a time, proved to be the most detrimental pitfall for the interests of French-speaking Canadians. Excessive verbalism, useless logomachy have too many times held back worthwhile energies which could have been much more useful somewhere else. An all new Quebec lexicon, during the last few years, displayed the following words: Associated States, independentism, particular status, co-operative federalism, and so on—a new terminology which does not fail to kindle constitutional discussions which keep Quebec in a ferment.

The Estates General have taken upon themselves the mission of preventing a sterile self-satisfaction in flatulent speeches so as to promote a deeper awareness of our national reality. They want to establish a common denominator. The protagonists of this initiative surely deserve the most respectful regard, and I would like to know to what extent the government is ready to give favourable consideration to this initiative.

Evidently, Mr. Speaker, I am conscious, for having taken part personally in its work, of that fact that the Estates General have run the risk of infiltration, but I think that since the elections of last April, a measure of success has been achieved in getting members whose objectivity has been proven.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government—and I am talking about the federal government as a whole, not on a partisan basis—has failed far too long to act like the government of all Canadians, and that explains to some extent the feeling of frustration which the provincial authorities express quite frequently.

I think that the federal authorities should show themselves as open-minded as possible to the aspirations of French Canada while, at the same time, seeing to it that a social order which benefits the Canadian community as a whole is respected.

Under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), a new climate has been created, our people are allowed to participate more actively in the administration of the country and the bicultural character of Canada is stressed more.

Federal authorities have a moral responsibility to clear up the political atmosphere and to stop this ideological trend that tends more and more to convince the younger generation of Quebeckers that to be in Ottawa is to render a disservice to French-speaking Canada.

There is no more obvious error than that, and I am happy to note to what extent the present Prime Minister has co-operated to remedy this situation. In fact, the more the federal authorities are open to French-Canadian aspirations, the more this will help to uproot this ideological trend which, to some extent, is apt to give an inferiority complex to those who have the heart and the courage to serve their country in the House of Commons.

That is why I ask the minister who was kind enough to remain, what will be the reaction of the federal authorities toward the initiative called the Estates General.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Lotbinière said, the Quebec caucus had the opportunity to look into the advisability of taking part in the meetings of the States General of Quebec by sending some delegates.

We have considered the problem at some length and we have finally concluded that political parties as such should not be representated within organizations such as the States General of French Canada.

Inasmuch as that organization, as pointed out by the hon. member for Lotbinière, tends to replace word therapy by an awareness in depth, we can only congratulate those who take part in such activities.

But we were struck, Mr. Speaker, by the aspect mentioned by the member, namely that the States General are looking for a common denominator. And it occurred to us that those who are appointed by the people, on the federal as well as the provincial level, are the ones who constitute that common denominator. As you know, the historic origin of the States General dates back to a period, before the French revolution, when in that country universal suffrage was unknown and efforts were being made to find a formula whereby the population could express itself.

Well, we, as federal members, do not want to go back almost two hundred years.

We believe that universal franchise is a considerable advance of the human mind, that it is a political institution of very high value, because under it, representation is based on citizens as such and not as a member of one group or another.

And, for that reason, Mr. Speaker, we can wish godspeed to those participating in those meetings. But, as the Quebec caucus of the government side, we believe that, having been elected by universal franchise, we represent at the highest degree the wishes of the population in federal matters, in the same way as those elected at the provincial level represent the wishes of the population at the provincial level.

CANADA LABOUR (SAFETY) CODE—
PROCLAMATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, one week ago today, on Monday, June 19, as reported in Hansard at page 1657, I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) when we might expect the regulations under the Canada Labour (Safety) Code to be proclaimed and the provisions of that act to be put into effect. I found it shocking to hear the minister reply that it would be the end of the year before we could count on these steps being taken. As a result I posted this question for a late show.

I notice that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour is here to give the reply. I know that my hon. friend, the parliamentary secretary, is a man of many words, especially when his case is weak; but I want him to realize tonight that there is only one satisfactory answer to this question and that is that the timetable with respect to this matter will be stepped up.

The Canada Labour (Safety) Code, which is now on the statute books, was read for the first time in this house in July, 1966. It had been put through all stages, passed by both houses and given royal assent by December 21, 1966. The parliament secretary will recall that when we dealt with this matter in the House of Commons committee on labour and employment we were urged by the government to expedite the passage of this legislation. Members of the committee felt that two or three minor amendments should be made but we were persuaded by the minister and those associated with him not to press for these amendments because it would mean that the bill would have to return to the Senate, and that would cause delay. We were told that there was great desire and anxiety to put this legislation into effect, and that this would be done as soon as we passed it.

I remind the parliamentary secretary that this matter has been kicking around for a long time; it was around before this government came to power; it was around during the régime of the previous government which had a bill not unlike the one which was finally passed. In other words, the Department of Labour has been working on this matter for a long time.

To be told therefore six months after the legislation has been passed that it will take another six months to bring it into effect is simply not good enough—especially when one realizes that the department's record with regard to the companion piece of legislation, the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, leaves much to be desired in terms of the many instances where the provisions of that act are not being enforced. It is not encouraging now to be told that the legislation being considered in this question will not be in effect for another six months.

The result is that those in railway shops and other places coming under federal labour jurisdiction, where there is no inspection on health or safety matters, because the provinces cannot come in and because the federal government has not entered the field, are wondering what is to happen and when something is to be done.

I said that this matter has been around for several years and dates back to the régime of the previous government. As the parliamentary secretary knows, the whole problem has been of concern to the Department of Labour and other departments for many years, indeed for several decades. I plead with the government to cease giving excuses about federal-provincial arrangements, and to cease telling us that the legislation will be implemented one year after it has been passed. From experience I know that when the government says it will take one year from the time legislation is passed to put it into effect, it will probably take two years, but there is no excuse for that kind of delay.

The government has been aware of this problem for a long time. I urge that action be taken in order that the provisions of this desirable legislation may be put into effect, so that employees in shops and factories under federal labour jurisdiction can have the benefit of this health and safety legislation without further delay.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The hon. gentleman who has just sat down said I had better make a long speech because my case was weak. I think I had better resume my seat immediately, because I do not think I have a weak case.

I have read the minister's words. He did not say "within some six months", but "some time before the end of the year" which according to my interpretation can be at any time between now and the end of the year. I will not attempt to mislead the hon. member by trying to forecast precisely when the regulations will be completed. He did point out in a kindly way that it was the intention of the department to utilize as far as possible the facilities available in the provinces as part of a co-operative effort in order to provide proper safety standards and a minimum of jurisdictional problems.

I must remind the hon. member that, as he well knows, in the case of the shops there are at the present time available to employees and to unions the facilities of other departments of government. Eventually these will be transferred to the appropriate department, the Department of Labour, but it is not true that in the interval there are no regulations applicable to shops.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) would be the first to move in connection with any flagrant case which smacked of unsafe practices. I can only say that the hon. gentleman has made a strong and eloquent case, one which I am sure the members of the Department of Labour will note tomorrow, and I will add my voice to his in urging that full effect be given to this desirable legislation as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member's speeches are more effective when they are short.

WATER RESOURCES—SUGGESTED STUDY BY ENGINEERING BODY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Strange as it may seem, our abundant water is the only natural resource we still control in Canada. Since the unfortunate signing of the Columbia river treaty there has been a great awakening of interest right across Canada in the question of our water reserves on the part of professional persons, conservation groups, trade unions, municipal councils and groups of various types, including the provincial governments and, finally, the federal government.

This is the one advantage we have gained from the signing of the Columbia river treaty—it has alerted Canadians to the situation which exists with respect to our water resources. There is a growing concern about the supply of our water resources and their ability to meet the needs of future generations.

On this account there has been a growing demand for a national water policy. We cannot have a national water policy until we have a national inventory of our water resources, and this is why the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada recently dealt at some length with this question and made a proposal to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in this connection.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that on June 23 I asked the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question is based on a decision by an important group of Canadians who are concerned about Canada's natural resources. Has the minister received a brief from the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada urging a 15 year study of Canada's water resources, estimated to cost about $200 million? If so, would the minister inform the house of his response to these interesting proposals?

Unfortunately at the time the question was not considered one of immediate urgency. So I have taken advantage of the late show to ask this question because I know a number of persons are interested to get the government's response to these proposals. I must compliment the association of consulting engineers, and say that I look forward with great interes to the minister's reply.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to spend the late evening hour with my good friend from Kootenay West. First I want to say that I appear on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) to reply to the hon. member's question.

Having sat with the hon. member for Kootenay West on the external affairs committee dealing with the Columbia river treaty some years ago, I know how vivid his interest is in water. I share with him the feeling that this is our most vital resource in this country. Of course I also want to say that I disagree fundamentally with him on his view of the Columbia river treaty, which I still interpret to be a good contractual arrangement between the United States and Canada—

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Bennett now agrees with me.

Mr. Turner: —with benefits to both sides, and of course concessions made by both sides as is necessitated by any contract.

The short answer to the hon. member's question is yes, the minister did receive a brief from the Association of Consulting Engineeers of Canada and he arranged for a meeting with them. I am advised by my colleague that in substance he was in substantial agreement with that brief. The main proposal contained in the brief was that a major inventory of water should be made in Canada. My colleague informed the engineers that such an inventory was already under way and that he would consider some of the means they proposed in their methodology.

As the hon. member undoubtedly knows, the association also proposed a Canadian water commission. My colleague replied that there was certain constitutional difficulty standing in the way, but he would also consider that. I think my own views are well known to the hon. member. I believe that we must have an inventory of our water supplies. We must find out what we need. I once said, at the risk of sounding un-Canadian, that for a change it would be useful to have facts before we had policy. I reiterate that here.

Mr. Herridge: I agree.

Mr. Turner: I think we should also make a survey of what our growth will be in order that we can assess what our use for water will be in the foreseeable future. This of course would be essential before we would be in a position to undertake any negotiations —if we agreed to undertake negotiations with the United States—because we would have to know what we have and what we would need. I would also put on record that in my view continentalism should not be part of the Canadian vocabulary.

I think the hon. member will agree with me. We are not only dealing with water quantity, the amount of water we have, but with water quality and water management. Of course the hon. member's views about pollution are well known and I applaud him for that interest, as I have done previously in the past. I think that despite the lack of clarity in the B.N.A. Act as to the respective jurisdictions of the federal government and of the provinces over water we should continue, as I think my colleague has done, to show leadership and initiative in this very strong national priority.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 27, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PARLIAMENT HILL

FAILURE OF BAGPIPE BAND TO PARTICIPATE IN CHANGING OF GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, instead of putting a question of international importance I am asking the Minister of National Defence why it is that the highland pipe band is not appearing in the changing of the guard ceremony. Are they going to appear shortly or is that music, the finest this side of heaven, to be denied those attending this ceremony?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Well, I will have to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. I must agree with my right hon. friend that the bagpipes make very fine music, particularly since last Robbie Burns day when the pipers were put on a basis of equality with musicians in the Canadian Armed Forces. I also suggest to him that if he has not had a chance to hear the wonderful display of the bagpipes in the Canadian Armed Forces tattoo, he should do so because it would thrill Scotsmen of any national origin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see the note of reform in the minister indicated by this recognition, but I am asking about the changing of the guard on parliament hill. I am wondering whether the unification policy that the minister brought into effect has eliminated the highland band from the ceremony.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, first of all I can reassure the right hon. gentleman that the kilts and pipers are not affected by the unification policy in any respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why are they not here, then?

Mr. Hellyer: So far as the reason no pipe band is on the hill at the moment is concerned, I will have to take that question as notice. I cannot answer it without finding out the facts.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question to the minister. Now that the pipers are on an equal basis with other musicians, when is the minister going to allow them to play?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR CANADIAN ACTION TO EFFECT CEASE FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask them whether they have received the statement which has just been released by three distinguished gentelmen who were formerly associated with the Department of External Affairs, Mr. D. V. LePan, former assistant under secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. A. F. W. Plumptre, who was assistant deputy minister of finance for international affairs, and Mr. Escott Reid, who has long been associated with the Department of External Affairs and was formerly high commissioner to India and Canadian ambassador to Germany.

The statement they have issued, Mr. Speaker, points out that although the primary objective of the government of the United States may have been the maintenance of freedom and self determination, they are convinced that this objective cannot now be reached by the means that are being employed. They ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. gentleman kindly ask his question.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to remind the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs of the nature of the request that has been made. May I sum it up by saying they are asking that the Canadian government take a lead in soliciting other countries to make an appeal for a cease fire in Viet Nam in the hope that this will be the first step—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman should ask his question.

Mr. Douglas: I want to ask the Prime Minister or Secretary of State for External Affairs what reply is being made to this request, and whether the Canadian government is prepared seriously to undertake a solicitation of other governments who may be interested in an attempt to bring an end to the war in Viet Nam.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may even take as long to answer this question as the hon. gentleman took to ask it. I have received the communication, Mr. Speaker; as a matter of fact I received it this morning. Indeed, I have already talked to Mr. Escott Reid about it, as he happened to be in Ottawa today.

As my hon. friend knows, the communication welcomes the government's efforts to promote a peaceful settlement in Viet Nam and is intended to reinforce these efforts. As I understand the proposals Mr. Speaker, they take for their starting point the need for negotiations on a cease fire and a peaceful settlement. To bring this about they look to a cessation of the bombing of North Viet Nam coupled, if that were possible, with the cessation of infiltration by North Viet Nam and a cessation of the build-up of the forces of South Viet Nam's allies.

These proposals do not in any way conflict with government thinking. We have always made it clear that we wanted to see the bombing stopped, but that we also wanted to see the infiltration stopped and negotiations started. I should remind the house, however, that proposals very much like these were made by President Johnson in his message of February 7 to President Ho Chi Minh. They were turned down by President Ho Chi Minh on February 15, on the familiar ground that an unconditional cessation of the bombing and all other acts of war against North Viet Nam would have to precede any talks between the two sides.

I want to assure the hon. member and the house that the government is not losing sight of the need to set in train the process of negotiation in Viet Nam. Nor will the house need to be reminded of the key importance which the government attaches to a halt in the bombing in paving the way for such negotiation. This will be clear from the proposal we advanced on April 11 and which we still see as offering a valid approach to a reversal of the course of events in Viet Nam.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the statement of the three gentlemen in question differs from President Johnson's proposal in that it suggests an unconditional cessation of the bombing, and that the United States should express the hope that the North Vietnamese will stop its military build up in return for the assurance that the United States and its allies will act similarly, is the government of Canada prepared to give the lead to other countries which are also interested in trying to get a group of countries in the world to support a declaration asking for an unconditional cessation of the bombing in the hope that negotiations and a peaceful settlement will follow?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have already, I think, indicated our position in this matter, most recently at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization council meeting a few weeks ago. I would, however, point out to my hon. friend that even an unconditional cessation of bombing has now been linked by the authorities of North Viet Nam, in certain of their more recent statements, with the withdrawal of United States forces as well, before negotiations can begin. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall not continue to have this escalation in demands on the side of the north.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a related question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has relied heavily on the international control commission for information from South Viet Nam. Can the minister tell us whether that commission is likely to produce a report in the near future, as it has not made a formal report for two years?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not expect that in the foreseeable future there will be a report by the commission that will be unanimously concurred in.

Mr. Starr: Will there be any kind of report?

MIDDLE EAST—POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH KING OF JORDAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As King Hussein of Jordan has spoken not only before the general assembly but has also consulted with the President of the United States, are there plans for the Canadian government or the right hon. Prime Minister to discuss with him the refugee problem and the general Middle East situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to ascertain the plans of the King of Jordan. If it were possible to have an exchange of views with him I should welcome that on behalf of the government. We are trying to ascertain what his plans are and how long he expects to remain on this side.

TRADE

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which arises from the report in today's Globe and Mail of the speech he made at Jasper. Can the minister confirm that he indicated that certain industries might have difficulty as a result of the recent Kennedy round tariff negotiations, but that the government was prepared to give assistance to those industries? Can the minister say what categories of industries he has in mind and what sort of measures will be introduced to take care of the position of their workers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask questions about speeches made by a minister outside the house unless he asks the Prime Minister whether the alleged or reported statements are government policy.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I might be permitted to put the question accordingly, Mr. Speaker. Was the minister reflecting government policy when he made the statement to which I referred? If so, could he indicate the categories of industries which would be affected and the kinds of assistance the government has in mind?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is still out of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could confine my remarks to the first half of the question as I put it the second time.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I have distributed copies of my address. While the words the hon. member has used seem to me to be reasonably accurate, I should not like to be responsible for them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I mean I do not want to be responsible for the interpretation the hon. gentleman places on my words; I prefer my own. However, there will undoubtedly be some difficulties arising out of the Kennedy round, and the government has already stated its intention to introduce legislation to facilitate the adjustment.

Mr. Fulton: Since the minister has confirmed the general accuracy of my version of his remarks, would he now indicate the kind of thing he has in mind, the type of difficulty he thinks may be encountered and particularly the type of measure the government has in mind to deal with the situation, because this matter is of increasing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question is too general in nature to be asked at this time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROCEDURE FOR DEALING WITH PERSONNEL EXCLUDED FROM BARGAINING UNITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that Bill No. C-170, an act respecting employer and employee relations in the public service of Canada, was proclaimed on March 13, three and a half months ago, would the minister inform the house what steps the government has taken to establish special mechanisms and procedures to deal with salaries and other terms and conditions of employment of personnel excluded from bargaining units, as recommended by the special joint committee on the public service?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question asked by the hon. member for York South is of the same nature as the one asked by the hon. member for Kamloops which was ruled out of order. I do not think it can be asked at this time.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, perhaps I did not put my question in such a way that it was clear to Your Honour. There was a recommendation by the special joint committee on the public service that a committee such as I described, or machinery of the kind I mentioned, be set up by the government within a certain limited period—six months, if my memory serves me correctly. My question was directed to finding out from the minister whether any steps have been taken to fulfil the recommendation made by the joint committee. It was not based on a newspaper report; it was based on a recommendation to parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the point made by the hon. member, but it still appears to the Chair that this is not a matter of urgency to the extent that the question should be allowed at this time. In addition, the question appears to be of a general nature. The hon. member has himself referred to the fact that there is a period of six months within which certain action has to commence; and unless that period has expired or is about to expire it is difficult to see how there is such urgency that the question should be allowed now.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a different question, one which I tried to avoid for reasons which will become obvious. Is the minister aware that officials of his department are alleged to have stated that nothing will be done about the setting up of such machinery. If so, can he inform the house whether those statements are correct?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The statements are not correct. We made an undertaking to form a committee similar to the Frank committee, and we are proceeding to fulfil this undertaking. I can assure the hon. member it will be done well before the six months limit referred to.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

INQUIRY AS TO CABINET REPRESENTATION AT EXPO CELEBRATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Canada will entertain the Queen in Ottawa on July 1, will the minister advise us whether there is to be any special celebration at Expo to commemorate the 100th anniversary of confederation and, if so, will any representatives of the cabinet be attending?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there will be some special events at Expo in Montreal on July 1. During the morning celebrations there my colleagues and I will be detained in Ottawa because of the visit of Her Majesty, and the government will be represented by Hon. Lionel Chevrier. At the evening celebrations the government will be represented by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which is supplementary to that put by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce a few moments ago.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In view of the fact that the government has decided to be represented by one of Canada's most worthy citizens, the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, in Montreal on July 1 would it be possible to know whether the government is making every effort to ensure that its representative will be identified as such, in the different ceremonies?

[English]

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED INVITATION TO VISIT SOUTH-WEST AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In a recent report on world affairs published by the general council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association it was stated that in February the South African government invited all the diplomatic missions at Pretoria to visit South-West Africa in order to see for themselves the situation in that area. Was such an invitation received by the Canadian representative, and was it declined?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INCLUSION OF MCBEAN COLLIERY IN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a telegram from the officers and membership of the Canadian Brotherhood of Rail, Transport and General Workers in New Waterford, Nova Scotia, representing the salaried shot firers and deputy mine examiners employed at Dominion Coal Company Limited and Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, regarding the closure of the McBean colliery. Is consideration being given to the inclusion of that colliery under the provisions of the Cape Breton Development Corporation bill, and will the Prime Minister say whether the request of these representatives for a meeting with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Premier Stanfield and the officers of the United Mine Workers, district 26, is acceptable to the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that telegram was received and I think it has been answered. I shall check as soon as I get back to my office. Meanwhile the position of the government is as put forward the other day by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That remains our position.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister's answer mean that regardless of objections the McBean colliery will not be included under the Cape Breton development corporation?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. All relevant matters were taken into consideration before that decision was made.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he has received a telegram from another branch of the same union, local 510A of Thorburn; and if he will not include this mine under the terms of the legislation, will he give some kind of commitment as to the future of the mine in order to clarify the situation for these people?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made such a statement during the debate on the bill. As a matter of fact in answering these telegrams I also forwarded copies of Hansard. I have said we regretted it but that because of other circumstances we could not include that mine under the bill; however, we will do everything in our power to help if it is to be closed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the right hon. Prime Minister whether they have received a request from the board of trade of Louisbourg asking that the railroad from Broughton Junction to Louisbourg be included in the legislation covering the Cape Breton development corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair to say that this third question, or second supplementary, cannot be asked. I wonder whether it would be in order to have too many members rising at this time to ask whether certain specific telegrams have been received. I would doubt whether this is in order.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised last week. The government took it as notice, and it was stated that a statement would be made some time this week as to whether this part of the railroad was going to be included or whether it was going to be abandoned.

Mr. Speaker: I might suggest to the hon. member that in view of the fact that the bill will be before the house for consideration later this afternoon, the question might be asked and answered at that time.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I would now ask him would he agree to meet with a delegation from the U.M.W. so as to clarify the statement which he says is recorded in Hansard?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is awfully clear in Hansard, and I could not add anything to it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister meet with the union representatives?

Mr. Pepin: I have already said I would, but the bill must be approved first, and we cannot change the principle that the McBean colliery cannot be included in the legislation; because if we were to do so the federal government would be in the business of closing mines all over Canada when they have come to their natural end.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would ask the minister one further supplementary. What is the difference between changing the principle of what is in the bill and changing the principle of the policy announcement already made?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question might also be asked when we resume consideration of the bill.

AIR CANADA

REPORTED OPPORTUNITY TO OBTAIN FIVE NEW JET AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last Thursday I asked the minister whether he would investigate a reported offer by TransAir Limited to Air Canada and the Air Transport Board of five new fully manned passenger jets. Can the minister now tell the house what will be done about this offer?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As a result of such investigations as I have been able to make it appears there is no such offer. Therefore there is not much I can do about it.

Mr. Sherman: I have a supplementary question. Is the minister not aware that TransAir has made application to purchase five new fully manned passenger jets and is backed in this undertaking by R. W. Pressprich and Company of New York, and that the jets are on order?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED OVER-SELLING OF SEATS BETWEEN TORONTO AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister make inquiries of the president of Canadian National Railways with respect to complaints concerning the over-selling of seats on trains between Toronto and Montreal, also the sale of seats which are non-existent. This situation is causing a serious danger to the health of the elderly people and children who are involved in these complaints.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation, but I doubt that it is a matter which should be raised in the form of a question at this time.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR HOLIDAY FOR OPERATING STAFF ON JULY 3

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has proclaimed July 3 as a legal holiday, and in view of the fact that parliament itself is going to take that day off, will the Prime Minister look into the request of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers that the operating staff of the post office also have a holiday on that day?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My impression, Mr. Speaker, is that they do have that day as a holiday.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR CANADIAN FILM PROCESSORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the discriminatory directive which permits Canadian film to be processed in the United States and admitted to Canada duty free while Canadian film processors must pay duty on processing equipment, chemicals and supplies entering Canada, thus making it impossible for Canadian film processors to compete with United States prices, is the Canadian government considering changing the regulations to correct this discriminatory practice so that in this centennial year Canadians will be able to compete in respect of the large photographic business resulting from Expo and the centennial?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Brand: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that Canadian film processors are having difficulty now because of the centennial year business. July 1 is only a few days away and they are faced with this type of thing from the United States, which even contains an Expo symbol on the United States document.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that if I am in error on the question of urgency, the matter can be taken up within a few hours.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN DEPENDANTS' ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, but in his absence perhaps I may be permitted to direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the many representations which have been made in respect of help for dependants of veterans who were not included in the last pension increase, would the Prime Minister now tell the house that something will be done? This is a matter which has been the subject of many complaints over the last three months.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to take up this matter with the minister right away.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SUGGESTED CREATION OF COMMONWEALTH CITIZENSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker I should like to address a question to the right hon. the Prime Minister. Her Majesty the Queen will be here very soon, and I think she deserves a warm welcome. The only regret I have is that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) wants to abolish the royal prerogative of dissolution.

My question is as follows. Does the Prime Minister intend to propose to Her Majesty the creation of a commonwealth citizenship from which all inhabitants in that organization would benefit, and which would mean the end of the subject status?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much that this question is in order at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that the Queen does not come to Canada very often. Second, I think that if there is some uneasiness in Canada it is due to a rather widespread failure to give a Canadian look to Canada, and that is why I think that it is a very timely and very urgent question, because the Queen will not stay long in Canada.

[Later:]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the intervention this afternoon by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), whose views on the monarchy seem to have undergone a complete change, does the Prime Minister intend to have the hon. member for Lotbinière accompany Her Majesty the Queen during her trip to Expo in Montreal?

[Later:]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which is most justified.

I have not changed my mind in the least; on the contrary, I am merely asking whether Her Majesty will be asked, on the occasion of the centennial confederation, to abolish the status of British subject, because we are proud to be Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that can be considered as a question of privilege.

[English]

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say, in the light of his own statement of May 10 that constitutional studies are being undertaken by the government as a basis for consultation with parliament, whether the Minister of Justice was speaking for the government when, as I am informed, this morning he told the committee on justice and legal affairs that the constitutional studies which are being prepared for the government would not be submitted to that committee or to any other committee of the house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not try to create a difficulty like that between myself and the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You should read some of his speeches.

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary question. Has the government changed the policy which has been stated from time to time by the Prime Minister, that in due course the question of constitutional change will be referred to a committee of the house.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; in due course that will be done.

IMMIGRATION

PREPARATION OF REGULATIONS COVERING PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could the minister inform the house whether the principles he outlined before the parliamentary committee are now being applied in respect of the processing of immigration cases, or will such application depend upon the passage of special legislation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker; we are working on those regulations, and I hope that in a short while they will be applied. However, we are still following the old policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that he could deal with some of the discriminatory aspects by order in council without a change in the regulations?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—STOCKPILING OF STEEL TO PERMIT RE-EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the right hon. the Prime Minister. Is he going to ask leave of the house to revert to motions to allow him to make a statement on the question of the stockpiling of steel at the Dosco steel plant at Sydney?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not think it will be necessary to revert to motions, because shortly we will be discussing the bill. I believe that during the discussion in respect of clause 22 it would be a very good time to make a statement on this matter, which could be a little longer than any statement which might be made on motions.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated that when we are discussing that bill we can discuss steel, but I fail to find anything in the bill which concerns itself directly with the steel question or the policy statement which was promised to the delegation which came here from Cape Breton. This statement was promised for today, and in Cape Breton the people are patiently waiting for the result of that promise.

Mr. Pearson: It will be made today. However, I think during the discussion of the bill would be the proper time to make a statement, because the bill is very much related to the direct question.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON GENEVA TARIFF AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since it has been intimated to the house that we will be sitting during the second week of July, I wonder whether the government will be able to bring to this house a report on the recent agreements at Geneva.

[Mr. Marchand.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLAINTS RESPECTING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has received any complaints about the occupational training plan for adults from the manpower centres or individuals, particularly having regard to the inadequacy of this program?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not personally received any complaints but I have heard of some which have been referred to in the department. I cannot be more precise than that.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask whether the minister has signed the agreement with the province of Ontario in relation to this act.

Mr. Marchand: No, Mr. Speaker. We are still discussing the regulations, and I hope this agreement will be signed soon.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the same subject. Will the minister check with Mr. Stewart, his regional director for the maritimes at Halifax? I am sure he will find he has received numerous complaints.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FERRY RATES, NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday we asked a number of questions of both the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister in an attempt to gain some satisfaction on this question of an increase in transportation rates in respect of the province of Prince Edward Island. At that time the Prime Minister agreed to consult with the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that this increase is scheduled to come into effect on July 1, a significant date, I wonder whether the minister can now give us some satisfactory information.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether our consultations have reached the point that the minister is ready to report. If he is not ready now I hope he will be ready tomorrow.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the learned and reasonable Minister of Transport. Will he before this consultation has concluded give consideration to delaying this increase until those organizations and individuals which indicated their intention to appear before the commission of inquiry, which has now been abandoned, have a chance to give him their views?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consider very carefully the question of the honourable and, in the proper sense of the word, learned gentleman. I will, of course, give his question all the consideration it merits.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING BREATHALIZER TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, having in mind the recommendation of the Canadian Automobile Association, an organization with close to a million members, calling for the establishment of mandatory breath tests for all drinking drivers. Will the minister indicate whether we may expect a decision on this matter before the end of the present year?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The question has been processed by my department, and this matter is scheduled to come up for legislation after the summer recess.

WATER RESOURCES

STUDY OF ELIMINATION OF POLLUTION IN NAVIGABLE STREAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the serious pollution of our rivers, has the government any active plans for studying methods of eliminating pollution from our navigable streams which come under federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lisgar is reiterating a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for New Westminster. At the time the suggestion was made that it be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may rephrase my question. Has the federal government any plan to co-operate with the provinces in the elimination of pollution from our streams?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must reach the same conclusion in spite of the hon. member's rephrasing of the question.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, APPEAL COURT, ETC.

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 31, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-4, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee arose on May 31, clause 1 was under discussion.

On clause 1.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that neither the minister nor I had an opportunity the other day to make any statement about this bill, and in view of the complaints of some members in this regard, I should like the permission of the committee to make a short statement.

My remarks on the introduction of this bill need not be very long because the amendments proposed to the Citizenship Act are of a kind with which I am confident we can all agree, and which in our centennial year seem to me, at any rate, to be especially appropriate. Basically they are designed to remove grounds of discrimination which exist between natural born and other Canadians; to relax the language requirements for applicants who because of their age have difficulty in learning a new language; to provide flexibility in the requirements concerning residence in Canada before a person applies for citizenship, and to provide for a citizenship appeal court. In addition there are a number of amendments of a technical nature relating to persons of Newfoundland origin and with regard to procedures, the regulation-making power and the penalty provisions.

With regard to the matter of discrimination, I am recommending that the provision in the act whereby other than natural born Canadians lose their citizenship on residence for ten years or more outside of Canada be eliminated.

Several members, I am sure, have come across cases of people who have been granted citizenship, who live outside of Canada for good and sufficient reasons, and who suddenly find they have lost their citizenship. While it has been possible to allow them to resume their status, the confusion, the problems and even hardship which this provision has created seem to me quite unnecessary, and the provision has been discriminatory. Also on the point of discrimination, natural born citizens are not liable to loss of citizenship by reason of failure to return to Canada to face charges of treason under the Criminal Code or offences under the Official Secrets Act. This amendment will place other than natural born Canadians on the same footing in this connection as their fellow citizens who have natural born status.

Having regard to residence, under the act as it now stands an applicant must have "acquired Canadian domicile" and have resided in Canada for one year immediately preceding the date of his application. Canadian domicile is defined by reference to the Immigration Act, and means that a person acquires Canadian domicile when he has his place of domicile in Canada for at least five years after having landed in Canada.

The amendments the bill is suggesting will do away with this concept as a requirement for becoming a citizen. In its place there will be a requirement that a person must be a landed immigrant and have resided in Canada for five out of the eight years prior to his application. Generally speaking, this means immigrants will be eligible for citizenship five years after landing. However, we are proposing an important additional change by providing that a person who has resided in Canada before becoming a landed immigrant may count half that period toward the residence required after being landed. There will also be provided an additional element of flexibility in that the requirement of residence for one year immediately prior to application will be changed to a period of 12 months in the 18 months before application.

Amongst the requirements on which an applicant for citizenship must satisfy a court is that of language. He must have an adequate knowledge of either of our official languages or, if not, have resided continuously in Canada for more than 20 years. The courts have been reasonable in the interpretation of this provision and generally speaking they consider persons qualified in this respect if their knowledge of one of our languages is adequate to their particular circumstances whatever they may be. Nevertheless there are cases particularly of older people, who find it quite difficult to learn one of our languages and they cannot therefore satisfy a court on this point. They do not have to if they have resided in Canada for 20 years. This bill recommends that the period be reduced to ten years in the case of a person who immigrated to Canada at the age of 40 or over. We are also proposing that the language requirement be waived if an applicant is the spouse, widow or widower of a Canadian citizen.

Suggestions have been made from time to time that when a person's application for citizenship has been refused by a court there should be an opportunity for him to appeal to a higher court to prove that he does possess the required qualifications and is a fit and proper person to be granted citizenship. While there have been only a few such cases in recent years, the government nevertheless agrees with this view. Accordingly, we are proposing the establishment of a citizenship appeal court consisting of a judge of the exchequer court to hear appeals from negative decisions of citizenship courts. The citizenship appeal court will be a court of record and will, as I have indicated, be empowered to hear and determine all appeals from final decisions of courts that an applicant is not a fit and proper person to be granted citizenship. It will also be empowered to hear appeals at any place in the country.

I should note at this point that the discretion to grant citizenship will still remain with the minister. Citizenship has always been a privilege bestowed by a country, and not a right of the person who seeks it. Let me say at once, however, that we are very glad to have persons become citizens of this country, to do what we can to facilitate in every possible way the granting of citizenship to those who apply and are qualified for it, and particularly to ensure that those who apply are heard fairly and their cases considered carefully.

The remaining provisions of the bill are of a technical nature and relate largely to procedures on which explanation, if members wish it, will be dealt with in committee where we now are. I should perhaps mention one matter of special interest to Newfoundlanders. After Newfoundland came into confederation the Canadian Citizenship Act was changed with the intention that the full terms of the act be extended to Newfoundland in accordance with the terms of union. However, despite the fact that the authorities at the time thought they were extending the complete terms of the act to cover people of Newfoundland origin, doubt was raised that this intention was in fact carried out. We are therefore including amendments in this bill which we are assured by the lawyers will indeed make certain that the complete provisions of the citizenship act cover people of Newfoundland origin.

The minister has not long had the responsibility for the administration of the citizenship act, but one thing she has discovered since she has had this responsibility is that it is an extremely complex law of a rather esoteric nature. The amendments we are recommending will result in considerable improvements, but we must remember it is 20 years since the law was first put on the statute books and it has been amended from time to time to fill gaps. Therefore, if the house approves this measure the minister will ask her officials to stand back and take a searching look at our citizenship concepts as embodied in the act and regulations, and as they have come down from previous naturalization laws, with a view to seeing whether the whole scheme should be revised to meet modern circumstances and conditions. Because this is a comlex subject and because the status and rights of individuals are involved, we doubt that this can be done quickly, but the minister intends to spur the project on.

Mr. Chairman, I wish at this moment to try to reply to questions asked by hon. members the last time we studied this bill in committee. The hon. member for Royal dealt with the registration of births abroad; he was concerned about that matter. I dealt with this problem when a private member's bill introduced by the hon. member for Carleton was studied by the house. I wish only to emphasize at this point that registration not only serves a useful administrative purpose but it is also very much in the interest of the person himself. Such registration provides clear evidence to that person that he is a Canadian. It assists him to enter Canada easily and it enables him to identify himself in the future to Canadian authorities abroad should he ever need to do so. From the administrative point of view, it quickly enables a Canadian official to identify a person who is a Canadian and thus perform any services which are requested of him.

This is not to say that the present system is perfect and might not be improved. However, there are implications for other departments as well as this one and these would have to be taken into account in proposing any changes. I can assure the hon. member that this matter will be reviewed promptly.

The hon. member for Royal also dealt with the matter of the revision and consolidation of regulations. The minister and the department recognize the validity of the point made that the regulations need revision and tidying up. We are giving priority to this task and hope to have results in the relatively near future.

With regard to the humanitarian interpretation of the act, which matter was also raised by the hon. member for Royal, I agree with him in this respect and the minister proposes to bring to the attention of the courts the remarks made on the matter in this debate.

Several hon. members referred to booklets which have been published for the instruction of new citizens. These booklets are not produced, by the way, in the citizenship registration branch but in the citizenship branch of the department. A number of them are made available to prospective citizens when they call at the court offices. We are glad to have hon. members' views on them. Perhaps I should say that the booklets seem to appeal to a significant portion of the public, because aside from the free distribution to newcomers they are offered for sale at a nominal cost of from 35 cents to 50 cents by the Queen's printer and have consistently rated high on the Queen's printer's best seller list.

• (3:30 p.m.)

With regard to the guide to Canadian citizenship which was specifically mentioned, I should emphasize that a judge may ask any questions he likes when examining an applicant. This booklet is, as it says, only a guide. It was produced several years ago and I believe the time has arrived when consideration should be given to whether any booklet at all is required or if the text of the existing one should be substantially revised. In any event, I want to assure hon. members that we will be glad to reconsider and review the whole matter and undertake to do so.

The hon. member for Norfolk referred specifically to the new booklet for the use of immigrants. This is to be a presentation booklet to people who have recently become Canadians. I am glad to say this booklet has been completed and has been distributed either yesterday or today.

The suggestion was made by the hon. member for Oxford that a booklet should be prepared on the operations of parliament, which seems to me to be a good suggestion. It may be that some work in this area has already been done in the Speaker's office. In any event, I intend to ask the officials of the department to study this possibility.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, our centennial of confederation is but five days away. How fitting and appropriate, therefore, it is that this afternoon we should be discussing Canadian citizenship. I had hoped that the proposals of the government in the citizenship bill would have been imaginative and vigorous, a genuine call to arms for the Canadian nation. Instead, this afternoon what we have before us rather than a full revision of the Canadian Citizenship Act is a patchwork bill, a most pedestrian measure. It is an ad hoc bill, an improvisation in every particular. I suggest that by this timorous and uncertain legislation the Secretary of State has lost a tremendous opportunity to speak out for Canada on the eve of the centennial. Missed opportunities are seldom recaptured. I regret especially the failure of the government to seize this special opportunity to express our pride in Canadian citizenship.

The parliamentary secretary has laboured hard this afternoon to clothe this bill with a distinction it assuredly does not possess. Today it is hardly fashionable to talk of citizenship or nationality. Allegedly sophisticated people do not believe in it. I am sufficiently old fashioned, sir, to have great pride in nationality and in citizenship. I like the words which the Minister of Transport used in his address at Memorial University on May 19, 1967. I put them aside for just such an occasion, and although I would rarely quote the Minister of Transport I want to do so on this occasion:

> In many quarters today, pride of nationality is no longer fashionable. Nationalism is called an evil thing. There are many who say, and perhaps more who think, we should cast aside all local or national ties and become "citizens of the world". I agree with those who say that the only hope for humanity is that all or most of the inhabitants of the globe should learn to be citizens of the world, with a sense of responsibility to all their fellow human beings. But I do not believe that to become a good citizen of the world, one has to give up narrower loyalties. No one seriously argues that the world would be a better place if all men and women lost their distinctive individual personalities and became indistinguishable one from another. Nationality is nothing more than the collective personality of a group of people. I am convinced that collective personalities, both national and local, are just as essential to human happiness and a good life as individual personalities. In my view, nationalism, which is the sense of common nationality, is harmful only when it is directed to harmful ends like the promotion of racial hatred and aggression against other nations.

I believe these are wise words from the Minister of Transport. They reflect completely my view of citizenship and nationality. I believe they are totally in character with the first speech from the throne delivered in this parliament by Lord Monck on November 7, 1867. I want to take a moment to read the second paragraph of that speech from the throne:

> I congratulate you on the legislative sanction which has been given by the Imperial Parliament to the Act of Union, under the provisions of which we are now assembled and which has laid the foundation of a new nationality, that I trust and believe will, ere long, extend its bounds from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean.

Who wrote those words, "a new nationality"? Those were the words of Thomas D'Arcy McGee. They were adopted by Sir John A. Macdonald and they were put in the first speech from the throne. Those words were approved by the first cabinet, a cabinet which consisted of many of the fathers of confederation, the architects of this nation. They were men of French heritage, of Scotch, Irish and English heritage. What they said, and what they sought for this nation, was a new nationality, a nationality not French, not Anglo-Saxon, not Scotch, not Irish, not Welsh and not of any other old land, but one which bore proudly and u n i q u e l y the name "Canadian".

This is the approach I take to this bill and that is where I think the deficiency of this bill lies, that on the eve of confederation there is not the inspiration in the bill that is needed in these particular circumstances. I confess to some of my friends who are of other national backgrounds than mine that what irritates me most is that French speaking Canadians lump me in as Anglo-Saxon when my heritage is Irish and my people were Irish rebels long before the French ever stirred from the sleep of medievalism.

If I may use the words of Frank Underhill, the new nationality was to "include and transcend the two groups of English speaking and French speaking Canadians." I believe a reiteration of some of the words Underhill used in the Massey Lectures of 1963 on "The Image of Confederation" would be useful at this time:

> The experiment of the new nationality that they thus proclaimed was of a nationality that should link together a variety of rather isolated, little colonial communities scattered across the northern half of the continent, and that, in particular, should include and transcend the two groups of English speaking and French speaking Canadians, divided though they were in race, language, and religion.

I underline the words "include and transcend".

> That is, it was a complex nationality; and they were well aware of their own boldness in the initiation of this experiment.

This, sir, is the type of boldness I wish we had demonstrated in this bill this afternoon. I wish it really represented a leap forward into that new nationality contemplated and forecast in the first speech from the throne.

I should like to congratulate the officials of the department upon the new booklet which was distributed yesterday to members of parliament and which is to be distributed to new citizens hereafter. I believe it is an excellent production. I think it is exceedingly worth while. I believe it will give that feeling of unity which all new citizens should have, that feeling of belonging which is so important to someone who has just taken the oath of allegiance.

I hope that when these presentations are made, judges of the citizenship court will fully appreciate the responsibilities which are theirs. I have spoken of this before in the house, and the hon. member for Royal spoke of it the other day. I do not think there are any officials in our country who have a heavier responsibility to display human, warm understanding of the problems of the people who are before them than the citizenship court judges. They can and ought to convey a real welcome to those who have done our country the honour of accepting our citizenship, we having given them the privilege of being citizens of this nation.

I have heard many complaints about a very few of the judges of the citizenship court. There is one citizenship court the judge of which I should have fired when I was minister of citizenship and immigration, and I still say he should be fired. In this locality this man is doing damage to the whole image of Canadian citizenship, and I hope he can either be properly disciplined or else his services properly dispensed with by the governor in council.

The parliamentary secretary said that this bill had four purposes. I think it is more noteworthy for its omissions than for what it does. I think the most significant omission is with respect to the lack of provisions relating to the citizenship of children of Canadian citizens born outside Canada. Again I venture to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary Bill No. C-2 which I introduced and which has been commented upon favourably by literally hundreds of persons in the armed forces and the diplomatic service. This bill deals with the question of children born outside Canada.

As the committee knows, at the present time a child born outside of Canada of a member of Canada's armed forces or a member of the diplomatic or other public service or the representative or employee of a Canadian firm or organization serving or engaged outside Canada will lose his citizenship unless two things are done. The first is that the birth has to be registered at a Canadian office abroad within two years. Second, between the ages of 21 and 24 that person must file a declaration of retention of Canadian citizenship.

There are today many thousands of Canadians serving or engaged outside of Canada, and I believe there are many children born out of this country who are likely to lose their Canadian citizenship unwittingly. I think that to place the children of Canadian citizens who are serving their country abroad either in the armed forces or diplomatic service in a different category from children of Canadians serving or engaged at home is discriminatory and a genuine hardship both to parents and children. I have had many descriptions of such hardship from members of the diplomatic service and armed forces who have told me that child No. 1 was born in Canada, that child No. 2 was born outside of Canada, that child No. 3 was born in Canada, that child No. 4 was born outside of Canada, and so on. Some of these children have one type of status as Canadian citizens and others a different status. I just do not believe that this is good enough.

When we come to the question of the repeal of section 18, Mr. Chairman, I may have something further to say about the grounds of discrimination because I do not think that in this particular the government has gone far enough.

I should like to speak for a moment or two about the citizenship appeal court. The provision for appeal is, of course, an advance, but I wish that the Secretary of State had gone the full distance as did the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with respect to the immigration appeal board. What you will note here in respect to the citizenship appeal court, sir, is that there is no interference whatever with the discretion vested in the minister. Therefore the principal problem, which is that of security, is not touched on by this bill.

The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane has spent agonizing hours, as I have, in dealing with these very difficult security cases which come before the minister. Personally I do not think the bill in its present form is adequate; it provides simply for an appeal from the court, leaving the final discretion to the minister. This is exactly the opposite of what was done with the immigration appeal board, and I venture to suggest that the model of the immigration appeal board should be incorporated in this bill.

I wish only to reiterate that I am sorry there is not in this bill that clarion call to pride in Canadianism that I think there ought to have been today, five days before our confederation celebration. What I do not understand is why Canadian history and tradition are so badly taught in this country. Why are they not taught with that sense of drama and colour that I believe is so important in creating a genuine nation? Why do we as Canadians undersell our own history? I venture to suggest that it is as exciting, as dramatic, as full of courage as is to be found anywhere in the world. The story of our explorers is far more noteworthy and inspirational than the similar story in the United States, Australia or other countries of the world.

What we are not doing in this country is getting this story across to our younger generation. We are not teaching our youngsters to take a real, genuine pride in citizenship. I do not speak of chauvinism; I have no use for that. But I do believe in love for the soil of the nation, and this is what I think we should get across.

Recently I had a conversation with one of the senior ambassadors to Canada, and perhaps I am identifying him when I say that he knows Canada better than most Canadians. After all his travels around the world and across Canada he came to this conclusion. He said that if the full, exciting, dramatic story of Canada were told in all its colour, it would go further than anything to explain the French to the English, each to the other, and Canada to the world. That, sir, is the type of clarion call that I think should be contained within the bill. That is the type of pride in our nationhood that I hope we can express on the first of July, one hundred years after our confederation.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I want to take advantage of clause 1 for a moment to pose a question which the parliamentary secretary will have a chance to think about and perhaps discuss with his officials before we reach the clause that I have in mind. My question has to do with the clause setting up the citizenship court of appeal. When we get to that clause I would appreciate some explanation of how this court of appeal is to operate. I am very anxious to know whether persons appearing before the citizenship court of appeal will be given the reason if their applications for citizenship have been refused. I take it for granted that these persons can be represented by counsel, but it would seem to me that counsel would be completely in the dark if he were not given the reason for refusal of citizenship in the first instance.

I notice that in the clause setting up the citizenship court of appeal there is a subclause which provides that, subject to the approval of the governor in council, the court can establish its own rules and procedure. I am not going to say that the court of appeal will be useless unless the point I have just made is accepted, but in many cases, particularly those involving security, unless the lawyer or person appealing knows the reason for refusing the citizenship application there will be little point in appealing. I agree with the point made by the hon. member for Carleton about the minister's discretion. That is another matter. But when we come to the appropriate clause I should like to hear some explanation from the parliamentary secretary of how the citizenship court of appeal is to operate and whether the appellant will have the right to know why his citizenship application was refused in the first instance.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on this bill, particularly in response to the admonition of the hon. member for Carleton that Canadians are not proud of Canada and have no justifiable pride in Canadian history and traditions. I say to him that in western Canada we have a deep sense of pride in our Canadian history and traditions and in the contribution that western Canadian pioneers have made to this great country of ours. I am somewhat disturbed by the suggestion of the hon. member for Carleton that there is a deficiency in the pride of Canadians in Canada as a nation. I do not accept his admonition or the premise on which it is based.

The people of southern Alberta whom I represent have a deep sense of pride in Canada. We regard our history, albeit short, as being as significant and thrilling, as colourful and exciting, as the history of any part of the world. The traditions we have developed in our short history are important to our young and to those who first settled the area. The people of Alberta, particularly those of southern Alberta, feel gratitude toward and are proud of the pioneers who came to southern Alberta 70, 80 or 90 years ago to work the land and create the communities, cities, towns, in fact, the province, that we have today.

Alberta is an important part of Canada. I listened to the hon. member and tried to determine why he spoke as he did. Perhaps one reason is that we in western Canada recognized Canada as a nation a long time ago while other parts of Canada still considered this country a colony. Perhaps these other parts of the country are finally realizing that Canada is a great nation with a proud history and proud traditions and with a pride in its pioneers equalled by no country in the world.

I will not go into the details of the bill but I should be remiss in my duty if I did not answer the charge, if one wishes to call it such, that Canadians are less than full citizens with something less than the full pride that goes with being Canadians. In that part of Canada from which I come there is no deficiency of pride in this country nor in its history, traditions and the achievements of its pioneers.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Obviously the hon. gentleman has totally misunderstood the tenor and purpose of my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Not at all.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Olson: Look in Hansard and read what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, when this bill was last before the house I had the privilege of speaking generally in support of its provisions to strengthen the concept of Canadian citizenship as a major effort of the government during this, our centennial year. I wish to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary, however, that in his remarks he did not deal with the point I raised concerning what I consider to be a possible omission in the bill. I pointed out that the bill did not make clear that a person whose conscience called upon him to do so could affirm rather than take an oath. I must say that personally I would have no objection to swearing an oath, but there are people in this country whose religious beliefs are such that they prefer to affirm rather than to swear a solemn oath.

This matter was dealt with in the courts of this country after an embarrassing incident involving some people of Dutch origin, I believe, in the Hamilton area. In spite of the possible reassurance provided by the court decision in this question, I would think that for greater clarity and greater certainty it would be consistent with our Canadian traditions of human rights that this be spelled out very clearly in the bill so that people whose religious beliefs do not permit them to take an oath in the form acceptable to most of us may be permitted solemnly to affirm rather than to take an oath. There is provision for affirmation, I believe, in the Interpretation Act. I hope we will have some answer on this point from the parliamentary secretary.

I would also like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary and the committee the fact that in spite of his comments about the importance of the booklets produced by the government to inform prospective Canadian citizens and Canadian citizens generally about our system and form of government, several booklets are presently being sold—in fact they are sold right here in the parliament buildings—that have certain rather serious defects. These booklets, I would gather, are being made available not only to tourists who pass through these buildings and to people who purchase them from the Queen's printer's book stores but obviously to people who are preparing themselves to take the examination for Canadian citizenship.

Just as this debate began I went to the foyer where there is a small counter selling a number of booklets about Canada—an excellent idea—and I purchased two of them. One is entitled: "How Parliament Works. An Examination of the Functioning of the Parliament of Canada." It is written by Mr. Hopkins, law clerk and parliamentary counsel of the Senate of Canada.

I say at the outset, that this booklet, in spite of the comments I am going to make about it, is in my opinion generally the best short treatment of the technique or form in which parliament conducts its business. My complaint is that in spite of the very important changes which have taken place in our rules over the past several years we have not seen fit to make it possible for this book to be revised since 1957. It has been reprinted a number of times, the latest reprinting having been in 1966. But according to what is printed right at the beginning it was last revised in 1957. It is rather interesting to note the words in the foreword indicating that the original brochure was first published in 1953:

> The original brochure is not only out of print, but since the first printing two factors have combined to render it somewhat out of date. In the first place, Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, is now the reigning monarch of Canada. Secondly, in 1955 the House of Commons adopted by unanimous vote the most important set of procedural reforms since confederation.

Since there has been no revision of this book of any kind since that time in 1957 there is, of course, no reference to the changes which have taken place since 1957. The book, for example, speaks of private members' days rather than private members' hours. It refers to the standing committees under their old names before the rules were revised about two years ago.

I want to make it clear that I am not criticizing the efforts of the learned counsel and law clerk of the Senate of Canada. I say that this is perhaps the best short treatment I have seen about the technique or operation of parliament. But criticism has to be advanced to some extent based on the fact that permission has been given for thousands of copies of this book to be sold across Canada through the Queen's printer and in this very House of Commons to visitors and to people from other countries, the result being that they obtain an impression of the technique of parliament which is not consistent with what is really happening.

I recognize that this booklet published by the Queen's printer may not come strictly within the jurisdiction of the citizenship branch, but I would be very surprised if it were not used in helping people prepare for their Canadian citizenship test. We are certainly justified in complaining about the way in which the history of this country and our system of government are taught in schools across Canada. For obvious constitutional reasons we may not have the control over this situation that we might like to have. But this is something we ourselves can deal with. I hope my words here will be brought to the attention of the proper quarters so that this book may be revised immediately and those purchasing it may be able to get an idea of the actual rules under which the house operates at the present time. Again let me mention that generally speaking the discussion in Mr. Hopkins' booklet of the flow of legislation through the house, the three readings and so on, is accurate and up to date and it is a very clear, short statement of this procedure.

I wish to conclude my remarks by bringing to the attention of the committee something even more closely related to the working of the citizenship branch. I also purchased at the bookstore in the foyer a booklet entitled "Our System Of Government". It is part of the Canadian citizenship series and this edition, first published in 1948, has been revised to October, 1966. My comment with respect to this booklet is that while what I am about to quote may be correct in a narrow technical sense, these extracts could give a misleading impression to someone relying on this book, which I think is obviously designed for the training or I should say for the preparation of those about to take their citizenship tests, from looking at the questions and answers at the back.

Briefly, I wish to direct the attention of the committee to these comments in the booklet, first with reference to the cabinet. It says:

> The cabinet is, in fact, a committee of the Privy Council which is provided for in the British North America Act. Privy Councillors are chosen and summoned by the Governor General, on the advice of the Prime Minister. Cabinet ministers are selected from among the members of the Privy Council and they head the various departments of government. It is the normal practice for ministers to have a seat in the House of Commons in order that they may report directly to the members of the House.

I suppose this is technically correct but it would seem to me that it should be rewritten to make more clear the fact that it is only on very rare occasions that cabinet ministers are not either members to this house to start with or are obliged to become so in very short order. As far as I am aware, and I obviously have not had the opportunity to examine this point closely, the swearing in of these individuals as members of the Privy Council is almost contemporaneous with their assumption of duties as members of the government.

I might point out that on page 22 in relation to provincial cabinets there is no indication at all that the members of those cabinets are almost invariably elected members of the provincial legislatures. On page 17 of this booklet there is a brief discussion of the way in which legislation goes through this house, and it says:

> The main discussion or debate takes place during the second reading at which time all members are given an opportunity to voice their opinions on the content of a bill.

There is no reference of any kind in this portion of the booklet to committees of the house, not even to the committee of the whole in which consideration of the bill before us is now going on. Yet this is obviously a book designed to inform new Canadians about the methods and operations of our government.

Finally I wish to draw the attention of the committee to an interesting paragraph also on page 17 under the heading "The Civil Service". It reads:

> As is apparent from the above outline, members of the House of Commons are holding office as representatives of the people on a temporary basis. At every election the voters have an opportunity of changing their representatives. It is possible, therefore, that after an election there may be a new Prime Minister, new cabinet ministers, and a large number of new members in the house.

We cannot quarrel with that. We have all experienced that situation.

> To provide for a continuous handling of public business, an organization known as the "Civil Service" has developed. The members of the Civil Service are professional public servants who are paid to carry out the routine business of government in the respective departments as directed by the ministers. The operations of the various departments may be questioned and examined by members in the House of Commons and the minister of a department called upon to report on any matter concerning his department.

Then there is some discussion of the important individual known as a deputy minister. The text continues:

> It thus becomes apparent that through the civil service the work of government is dealt with on a continuous basis, although there may be changes of cabinet and membership in the House of Commons from time to time as a result of elections.

There is no reference whatsoever to the role of parliament and those composing it in creating policy and in overseeing its implementation and administration. It may well be that in the eyes of the civil service generally this is the actual position we hold. If in fact we have seen ourselves reduced to this position I think it is time we took action not only to correct this booklet but, more important, to correct this situation.

I therefore suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he undertake at the very least to have this booklet revised forthwith so as to give a better idea of the operation of our system of government. While the words used here may be technically correct in a narrow sense, since our system is based on constitutional convention and understanding they should be modified in a way which brings a more realistic and accurate concept to those who would use this booklet about the operation of the system.

[Translation]

Before closing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the parliamentary secretary for his efforts on introducing this most important bill.

To my mind, it is symbolic that this bill should be introduced to the House of Commons by someone who speaks French. It shows that the concept of Canadian citizenship is not something narrow, that it does not tie in with a certain group in our country, but rather that the concept of Canadian citizenship is very broad, very important, indeed as important as our great country which is celebrating its centennial this year.

[English]

I think, as I said earlier, that the symbolism linked in having the parliamentary secretary to the minister present this bill to us exists in the fact that it demonstrates how today the concept of Canadian citizenship is not a narrow one linked with a particular group of a particular origin but has come to involve people of every origin who are willing to assume and share the burdens, the responsibilities and the privileges of Canadian citizenship.

I commend the parliamentary secretary for his efforts and I think, as I said the first time I spoke, that this legislation is a most fitting project for the parliament of Canada during our centenary year.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

• (4:10 p.m.)

On clause 5—Revocation of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I confess to some concern about the phrase in section (1)(a) of new section 19 "by concealment of material circumstances." This is a very broad phrase and I wonder whether the net result of this clause is really to put naturalized Canadians on the same basis as natural born Canadians. Are we not still leaving the door wide open for the cancellation of certificates of Canadian citizenship for some comparatively minor matter like concealment of age? This is the type of thing that occurs to me. It would also cover unintentional error by a person filling out an immigration form when he arrives in Canada.

I go further and say there ought to be a time limit in relation to this provision. So far as I know, the provisions of the Criminal Code would not apply to this new section. Therefore there is an unlimited period of time during which there might be cancellation for the reasons given here. Is that good enough? Personally I think the chances of offence under new subsection (1) (a) are really so remote that I would prefer that it be done away with.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the remarks just made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) about the present section 19, subparagraph (a) again undoubtedly concern the matter of security.

But any newcomer who wants to become a Canadian citizen has the right to be heard by the citizenship court and if, because of this "concealment of material circumstances", his application is refused, he will have the right to be heard once again by the appeal court which will be established by passing this bill. He will be able then to be represented by a counsel who will plead his case before a judge of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary did not understand what was said by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

[English]

The proposed new section does not deal with the rejection of an application. It deals with one who is already a citizen and who is having his citizenship revoked.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The parliamentary secretary put my point in reverse.

Mr. Béchard: Revocation of citizenship can only take place on order of the governor in council after the person involved has been given an opportunity to have his case referred for judicial inquiry.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The parliamentary secretary still has not grasped my point in this connection, namely, the breadth of the term "concealment of material circumstances." Let us take the situation where a man does not disclose the fact that he is married at the time he makes his application for citizenship and 40 years later somebody comes along and says, "Oh, you concealed a material circumstance. Therefore your citizenship should be revoked." If there is no limitation period and no definition of what we mean by material circumstance, the legislation will continue to be defective. Despite the fact that this is the existing legislation I really think we are not updating it in the manner in which we should. When he sat on this side of the chamber the Minister of Transport made most eloquent speeches about what was going to be done to put those who were not natural born and those who were natural born in precisely the same situation. This clause does not fulfil the commitments which were made by that minister when he sat on this side.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the benefit of the advice of the officials which the parliamentary secretary is getting, but may I make a suggestion to the hon. member for Carleton. It could well be argued, if this clause ever came to be tested in the courts, that since the phrase "concealment of material circumstances" follows the words "obtained Canadian citizenship by false representation or fraud" the so-called ejusdem generis rule would apply and this would limit the breadth of the term "material circumstances."

It seems to me that a clause of this type should remain in the new section because otherwise, possibly through some inadvertence by our immigration officials in the initial security screening, someone could come to this country who was a second world war criminal and would be in a position to continue to claim Canadian citizenship after it was granted to him simply because he was able to conceal his earlier history. I am sure the hon. member for Carleton would not want to see such an extreme situation permitted, even though he shares the views of the majority of members that so far as possible people who are not born here should be put on the same footing as those who are.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I suggest to the hon. member for Essex West that this is not a matter which could ever be tested in the courts because it involves the discretion of the governor in council. The hon. gentleman has sufficient legal experience to know he would not take action in the courts to test a discretion so completely vested in the governor in council as is provided by this new section. It is just because it is at the discretion of the governor in council and because the language is so broad that I am raising the point. The provision is not in complaince with or in fulfilment of what hon. gentlemen opposite have said under other circumstances. I think the provision could only be justified if a time limit were placed on it, say three years from the date of the concealment. We should not leave a person for the rest of time under the possibility that some comparatively minor concealment might lead to an unenlightened governor in council using this discretion to revoke his citizenship.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in the debate and am not very conversant with all the provisions of the bill, but may I suggest that the remarks of the hon. member for Carleton seem to be valid so far as the wording of this new section is concerned. Would the parliamentary secretary and his officials consider adding something to the new clause such as, "by concealment of material circumstances affecting the safety or security of Canada"? I would even be suspicious of that kind of provision but the new section would be less objectionable if there were some clarification of that sort.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I will try to clarify that problem, if possible. Of course, if a fact, as pointed out earlier to the committee by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), is known and was not disclosed by the applicant when he appeared before the citizenship court, fifteen or twenty years later the governor in council will not revoke ipso facto that person's certificate of citizenship.

The governor in council will act only after the applicant or the person implicated has been heard by a judicial commission. It is only in such a case that the governor in council will be able to revoke the certificate of citizenship granted to a new citizen.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to

On clause 7—Copy of decision transmitted to minister.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, during my remarks earlier in the afternoon I mentioned that there is a problem here in that this clause is not in accordance with the precedent which was set by the government itself during the last session in respect of the immigration appeal board. This simply provides for an appeal from the judge. There is no technique here whereby the minister's discretion is in any sense reviewed. There is no provision whatever to deal with the troublesome and agonizing security cases.

I appreciate that this latter is a matter which is under consideration by the royal commission on security and personally I intend to make some representations before that commission concerning the techniques of handling the particular citizenship applications which are turned down on the ground of security. I venture to suggest to the parliamentary secretary that even at this late stage the government should turn back and adopt the principle it has in respect of the immigration appeal board which would make the ministerial discretion subject to appeal.

Mr. Prittie: Now that we are on clause 7, Mr. Chairman, is the parliamentary secretary prepared to make any comment on the question I raised earlier about whether an appellant who appears before the citizenship appeal board will know the reasons for the refusal of his application in the first instance or whether his counsel will have the opportunity to have that information? It seems to me it would be very difficult for an appeal to be conducted by counsel if the reasons were not given.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I will answer the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), that anyone whose application has been rejected by the citizenship court will also be advised by the minister of the reasons for refusal of his request at the time of his appearance before the citizenship court.

Moreover, he may appeal this ruling and avail himself of the services of a counsel.

[English]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I was practising my French and not using the simultaneous translation system, but if I understood the parliamentary secretary correctly he said that the person appealing would receive from the minister the reasons for the refusal. If this is so, it will be a change from the procedure of the past. As it stands now, if a person is refused for some security or alleged security reason he is not told the reason.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): He will not be under this bill either.

Mr. Prittie: Then the information just given by the parliamentary secretary is incorrect. At the present time he is simply told that he is refused citizenship and is not given the reason.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: To clarify things further, let us say that the applicant will be advised of the rejection of his application by the citizenship court and that he will have a right to appeal.

[English]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer, but if I were appearing for such a person before a court of appeal I would not know what to do other than perhaps present character references on the person's behalf, because I would not know the reason the person was being denied Canadian citizenship.

I should like to raise some other points on this general subject. Earlier the parliamentary secretary said that citizenship is a privilege and not a right. I agree with that point. I said some of these same things when the estimates of the Secretary of State were before the house about two weeks ago. I referred particularly to people who have been in Canada for a long time, who were admitted as immigrants and who have lived here for 20, 30 or 40 years. There has been no reason to deport these people but at present they are being denied Canadian citizenship. It would seem to me that a person who has lived in Canada for such a period of time should have built up some rights and should be given citizenship if there is no reason that it should not be granted.

At that time I mentioned the very peculiar case of a young man in my constituency who came from another Commonwealth country. He would be one of the British subjects whom the hon. member for Lotbinière was speaking about earlier today. He can vote and can be elected to parliament but he can be refused Canadian citizenship. This would seem to be a very strange situation. I will be interested to hear any remarks the hon. member for Carleton may make in respect of how counsel could effectively present the case for a person who has been refused Canadian citizenship when he does not know the reason.

[Mr. Prittie.]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, there is another aspect of this matter which I think is included within the general point raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. The parliamentary secretary has pointed out already that the citizenship judge can ask any questions he likes. Apparently there is nothing in the act which provides for any limitation in respect of this right or privilege which the citizenship court judge has.

This problem does not exist in respect of the court for the London district which includes Windsor. I believe the last time this matter was before the house a number of very laudatory statements were made by members on both sides of the house about the present incumbent of the position of citizenship court judge there. But there are other areas in which complaints are being raised and have been raised concerning the totally unreasonable questions which have been directed to applicants for citizenship by various citizenship court judges. Some of these questions could not be answered either by members of this house or by any Canadian no matter what his education or length of stay in this country might be.

I think some format should be laid down which a citizenship court judge would have to follow when asking questions. This could be set out in the regulations or in the administrative procedures of the department. I believe that when the broadest latitude is allowed in respect of questions there is some opportunity for abuse, especially when the judge is not required to give reasons for refusal of the application.

I recognize the problems which might be created in cases where the refusal is based on security reasons. However, refusals are also sometimes based on the fact that an applicant has not correctly guessed the name of the longest river in Canada or perhaps did not answer to the satisfaction of the judge, for example, a question concerning the name of the grandfather of the present Queen. By the way, this question could be answered incorrectly no matter what answer might be given, because it would depend on whether the judge considered that the person should give the name of the grandfather on the mother's side or on the father's side of the family, and so on. While I think there should be some direction in this regard, if wide latitude is to be given to the judge in respect of these questions, then certainly there should be a requirement that the reasons for refusal be given to unsuccessful applicants so that these people will know what to put forward at the appeal court. With a great deal of respect to the parliamentary secretary, this is the reason that I say this matter has not been dealt with in as complete a way as I think it should have been.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I believe there are two distinct issues involved here. The first is whether the citizenship court judge and subsequently the citizenship appeal court should be required to give reasons for refusal. Personally I think they ought to be. I believe an appeal is meaningless if the reasons for the refusal of citizenship are not given, whether or not an appeal is launched. I believe there should be a provision in this bill which would require the citizenship court judge to give his reasons for refusal so that the person will know precisely where he stands and so he will know what he is appealing against.

The issue of security does not come up at that stage. The issue of security is not an issue before the citizenship court judge and will not be an issue before the citizenship appeal court. This is a matter which is in issue when the minister exercises discretion later. We are going to have a situation under this bill where an individual is refused citizenship by the citizenship court judge on some ground, shall we say, such as not knowing who the Queen's grandfather was. It may be that the citizenship appeal court then would recommend that citizenship be granted. When the matter comes before the minister there may be a report indicating that the individual subscribes to some foreign newspaper which happens to be the only one of its kind in Canada through which the individual can get news of his home land. The minister may reach the conclusion on the basis of that fact that this individual is a security risk although he belongs to a party which is legal in Canada. The individual will be deprived of Canadian citizenship.

I confess this is one thing I could not understand and would have changed had I remained in the portfolio for any length of time. How is it that a person can belong to a party which is legal in Canada and yet be deprived of citizenship on that account? That is beyond my comprehension.

There are two distinct issues which ought to be reconsidered. There should be different provisions in relation to security. This bill is totally silent on that subject and we are going to have the same back-door methods we have used all along which I deplored when I was a minister and deplore even more now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to support what has been said by the hon. members for Burnaby-Richmond, Essex West and Carleton. Let me urge the parliamentary secretary to have the minister's advisers look into this situation. I rise at this time merely to support what has already been said.

Some time ago I became aware of a problem facing a Canadian resident from a part of Canada which I do not represent in parliament whose application for citizenship had been rejected on a number of occasions. That person had tried over a period of years without success to obtain citizenship status. When I went into the matter I learned that the individual was and had been a high school teacher for many years. She was prevented from becoming a citizen for security reasons. If there was anything in the security risk reason at all it was entirely based on alleged subversion in respect of the young people whom that person was teaching in school.

It is this kind of silly inconsistency that arises time and time again which should be corrected. All that person would have obtained as a result of receiving citizenship, in addition to the pride of being a Canadian citizen to which I will refer in a moment, would have been the ability to obtain a passport and the protection which goes with it if that person went to a foreign country. That person could carry on any activity in Canada without being a citizen, including the activity of teaching Canadian youngsters in high school over a number of years. She was anxious to become a citizen for no other reason than because of her pride in the country. When she first brought this matter to my attention she was in tears every minute of the time that she spoke to me about it. Having been here practically all her life she wanted to be a Canadian citizen. I have never been able to learn what the reasons were, and the department finally was persuaded to give her citizenship, but there must have been some reason somewhere in the files for suspicion about that person's security.

It seems to me that there may be some other comments about clause 7. This subject is of such importance it deserves further consideration by the department, the minister and his advisers so that we can get away from the silly idea that a person can teach in high schools in Canada for 20 years and be judged fit to bring up our young in the democratic processes and a democratic understanding of our country but unfit to get a certificate which would entitle him or her to very few practical things in addition to the satisfaction of being recognized as a citizen. I have personally felt as a result of my limited experience in this field that if a person is admitted to residence and given immigrant status the withholding of citizenship ought not to take place except on very clear grounds affecting the security of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) made some comments on the grounds for denial of Canadian citizenship to an applicant, invoked by the citizenship courts.

The hon. member said that the judges should give the reasons for their refusal and he is right in saying that, at this stage of the proceedings, the question of security is not raised.

On the other hand, I believe that these reasons should not be disclosed in the very interest of the applicant himself. Since it is said that it is so ridiculous to ask such questions as: what is the largest river in Canada? What is the name of the deputy minister of National Revenue in Canada? If that is so ridiculous, and if a new citizen is unable to answer these questions and if he is refused on that account, it is in his interest, I think, not to make any publicity on these questions. As for the questions in the booklet given every new citizen to help him prepare for the examination, I believe, after what we have been told, that in several citizenship courts, the judges use their judgment.

At this stage, I should like to pay homage to several of these judges. I realize that there may be grievances against these people in certain areas, but during the winter, I visited at least three of these citizenship courts, and I was very impressed not only by the ceremony of presentation of citizenship certificates to new Canadians but also by the procedure and by the manner in which the judges of such courts pay homage to these new Canadian citizens and tell them of the grandeur of our country and how their taking the oath of allegiance is something significant not only for them, but for all Canada because as Canadian citizens they will henceforth share in the greatness of our country.

I think it is unflattering not only for the minister now responsible for the citizenship division but for all his predecessors to say that the minister will refuse citizenship to a newcomer because he has learned something of the reputation of some John Doe through the newspapers.

I think the hon. member for Carleton, who is experienced in this field, cannot make this claim which is not to his great advantage, because I am sure he has considered the reasons for the rejection of certain applications for security reasons.

I admit with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that this security question is rather intriguing and that the case he has mentioned is even more so. He knows that a royal commission has been appointed to inquire into these security cases and that the officials of the citizenship department have been approached and have even offered their services to this commission. I presume that when the report of the commission is presented to parliament, the government will see to it that, if necessary, the legislation is amended in the light of this definite information.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, clause 7 of the bill, which amends section 31 of the act, provides as follows:

> When a court decides that an applicant for a certificate of citizenship is a fit and proper person to be granted such a certificate, or the citizenship appeal court reverses the decision of a court in respect of an application, a certificate of citizenship may, in the discretion of the minister, be granted to the applicant—

We in this party believe there should be no discretion in the minister once the citizenship appeal court has decided that an applicant is a fit and proper person to be granted such a certificate. Therefore I move:

> That section 31 of the act as amended by clause 7 of Bill S-4 be further amended by striking out in the fifth line thereof the word "may" and substituting the word "shall" and striking out the following words "in the discretion of the minister," so that section 31 would read:
> "31. When a court decides that an applicant for a certificate of citizenship is a fit and proper person to be granted such a certificate, or the citizenship appeal court reverses the decision of a court in respect of an application, a certificate of citizenship shall be granted to the applicant and the certificate shall be delivered to the applicant and the oath of allegiance taken by him as prescribed by regulation."

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, a number of times during the course of the discussion on this bill hon. members have raised questions regarding security. It should be noted that the effect of the amendment proposed by my hon.

friend would be that there would, of course, be no discretion at all. I do not know whether my hon. friend realizes that in many cases where an investigation has disclosed that there is a security reason for barring citizenship the investigation and the evidence, is in the public interest, cannot be made public because it may lead to an exposure of certain police contacts and things of that kind. It is for this type of case in particular that discretion is retained in the amendment now before the committee.

Security matters, as my parliamentary secretary has said, are being discussed at the present time, but in the few months since last fall in which I have been responsible for exercising ministerial discretion in citizenship matters the whole question of security and the exercise of discretion has been one to which I have particularly addressed myself. I have here a statement with respect to the whole field of security which hon. members would perhaps like to hear at this time.

I should like to say as a preliminary that I heard the last few remarks of the hon. member for York South and I must point out that there is a different responsibility upon those who accept an individual as a landed immigrant, which in effect gives the individual a chance to begin to prove himself in this country, from the responsibility that lies upon school boards and trustees who select teachers for our youth. There is a different responsibility resting on these people from that which lies upon a minister of citizenship.

Discretion is only as good, of course, as the person who exercises it. I think all hon. members, no matter where they sit in the house, would agree that the preservation of Canada and its security must necessarily be of overriding interest to any minister who is called upon to review a case. I think that too often hon. members are of the opinion that there is a sort of routine turn-down in some cases. But that certainly has not been the experience I have had nor, as is obvious from the files, has it been the practice of ministers in the past.

Each case is reviewed by the minister. I cannot find any record of any minister who blithely accepted representations without satisfying himself or herself about the validity of the representations made. No minister that I know of has ever out of hand rejected anyone unless there appeared to be a valid reason for that minister to exercise discretion.

The other day the hon. member for Winnipeg North indicated that he was aware of the difficulties that were apparent in dealing with questions of security. I am sure that any member of the house who ever comes close to the question is aware that it is a precarious one. After all, it is basic to the way in which we live and in which we structure our society that there be wherever possible the utmost publicity cast upon any process through which a person may be deprived of either a right or a special privilege which is ordinarily available.

I agree with the suggestion which has frequently been put forward that normally the most open kind of procedure is the best. One would reasonably suppose this might be achieved through the courts, but for the reason I expressed earlier all of the matters are not always placed before the courts. Hon. members will remember the case of Spencer where, notwithstanding the fact that considerable suspicion was aroused in the beginning because the process did not appear to be completely open, the circumstances when laid bare indicated that there was a very good reason for this, that it was a matter of security and that any apparent deprivation of right without recourse to the courts did not in fact exist.

I do not know that there is a way that the courts or parliament, the highest court in the land, or any group of people beyond one or two at the most that can deal with rights of this kind except in the way in which they are dealt with. As a matter of fact, if government were easily able to structure some new process, past governments would have done so or this government would have done so. That is exactly why there is a commission looking into the matter at the moment. Because the matter is so potentially fraught with peril for the state, great care is being taken.

It has often been said that the granting of citizenship is not a right but a privilege. I think that very often this extremely basic tenet is forgotten or disregarded. I do not know of any modern state which treats it otherwise, notwithstanding the fact that we in Canada, whatever our function may be, are anxious to receive good citizens and welcome them among us.

In order that we can have an inflow of potentially good citizens we keep a relatively short list of qualifications which one has to meet. Notwithstanding this fact, there are individuals from time to time who, having obtained landed immigrant status, do not appear to be ones who in the future should become Canadian citizens. Hon. members are aware that the applicant has to satisfy the citizenship court with respect to these qualifications. Most courts, as has been admitted, are rather humane and understanding when interrogating persons who come before them to become Canadians. It is after the court has been satisfied, and only in that case, that the minister is called upon to exercise her judgment and decide whether citizenship should be granted.

If I am to exercise my discretion I have to be satisfied that the individual is apt to be a good, loyal citizen. I have to decide whether that person, having careful regard to his behaviour and his activities, is apt to be loyal to Canada. If you want to put it another way, I have to decide whether he is likely to comply with the terms of the oath of allegiance which he is to take. Perhaps I should remind hon. members that the oath reads as follows:

I, John Doe, swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the second, her heirs and successors, according to law, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen. So help me God.

Those who wish to affirm may do so.

Mr. Gray: May I ask the minister a question? Can she give me the statutory authority for a person to affirm? I have raised this question on a number of occasions and, with all due respect, I do not feel that I have the answer. This bill does not seem to change the existing situation and does not permit affirmation.

Miss LaMarsh: It is my understanding, by virtue of information from the Department of Justice, that where general legislation refers to the taking of an oath that reference is read to include the making of an affirmation.

Now, it has been said that citizenship courts being satisfied should be good enough. As I said, sometimes there is information which is available only to the minister or the department and only on a confidential basis which has to be considered in connection with these applications. I have indicated already that I have never found a case where such a confidential memorandum or confidential representations were accepted without investigation as to their verity so far as possible.

One hon. member suggested that there are very few tangible rights to citizenship and there are many good reasons for becoming a citizen. One of the advantages is that we allow people to enter Canada without any question once they are citizens. There are some advantages, therefore, in connection with immigration. There are some advantages in the matter of employment in various places.

Probably the most practical, tangible result from obtaining citizenship is the securing of a Canadian passport. Under present law, once an individual becomes a citizen it is not easy, and surely not desirable either, to take away that status or to revoke the passport. Hon. members do not need to have had very much experience in public affairs in the last few years to have some awareness of the benefits which an unscrupulous individual may gain from carrying a valid Canadian passport. We do not like the idea of revoking citizenship once granted. As will be seen from the provisions of this bill, citizenship will not be able to be revoked except in cases of fraud. There will still be other cases in which revocation will be possible, just as there are at present, such as a person who acquires citizenship of another country while in Canada. The last time we discussed this matter reference was made in this connection to Lord Thomson of Fleet and what he appeared to have done. Revocation is possible also when a citizen declares allegiance to a foreign country or when a person renounces his Canadian nationality.

It should be remembered that it is not the minister but the governor in council who can order that a person lose his citizenship. However, this can only be done after the person involved, has requested a judicial inquiry. Most important, after this bill is passed, one will not be able to lose citizenship by reason of residence outside of Canada.

If information comes to me which is based on security or criminal intelligence in respect of a particular case, I have to consider it carefully. At this point the minister is the only person who stands on guard, as it were, for the country. This responsibility is there by statute. The minister must decide whether this individual shall have that magic weapon put into his or her hands, a valid Canadian passport, which is granted along with Canadian citizenship. In every such case the eligibility of the person for citizenship is examined minutely on its own merits in the light of that intelligence.

The inference of some of the comments which I have heard was that decisions were taken without any regard to the current situation. In other words, one might have had a report about the early years before coming to Canada or even the quite early years after coming and that one neither took cognizance of the changes in the life of the individual up to the time of the application or indeed of the changes in society. I said before that I can only assure the committee that is not the case with this minister, nor have I seen any evidence that it has been the case with any prior minister.

Perhaps this is the point where it would be desirable to clear up some misunderstanding about the role of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the whole matter, since more than one reference has been made to the force in this debate. In obtaining an adequate basis for exercising his judgment the minister may be supplied with information from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Such information is sent to his department in the form of a factual report, evaluated only as to the reliability of the sources of information. This information, together with other information which may be provided to the department and can be satisfactorily evaluated, is assessed at a senior level and advice is provided to the minister with regard to the exercise of discretion in granting or denying citizenship.

I should like to stress the fact that the mounted police do not judge applications or make recommendations to the department or to the minister about citizenship cases.

In the first discussion on the bill the hon. member for Royal drew attention to what he considered to be contradictions in policy between the provisions in the new measure to establish an immigration appeal board and this measure. He drew attention to the fact that the courts would be sitting prior to the final grant of discretion by the minister. He is right, but these are two different procedures. The immigration appeal board is not empowered to exercise its discretion, if I remember correctly, if the minister and the Solicitor General certify to the board that in their opinion, based upon security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, it would be contrary to the national interest for the board to take certain actions which they are empowered to do.

The court mentioned in section 31, that is, the citizenship appeal court, is one which hears appeals from negative decisions of the lower citizenship court or judge sitting as a citizenship court. With respect to some of the cases which hon. members have mentioned and which I in the last analysis have to decide, this court is not going to be available. But I will examine any and all cases which come before me, and I have already had many cases referred to me by hon. members. In some instances I have reversed what prior ministers have said; in other cases I have followed their decisions.

I find it rather hard to believe, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned, that it would be possible to have an appeal court composed of distinguished citizens who could be given a statement of reasons for refusal of citizenship in a particular case. The hon. member also says that there is nothing in the bill which gives the right to a person whose application is turned down to receive a bill of particulars or even general knowledge concerning the particulars in order that he can answer or explain any charges that are made to clear his name. Certainly in the cases I have dealt with the applicant knows why he is being turned down. He knows what the record is. In some cases he has done his best to hide it; in other cases the applicant makes clear what his record is. I have seen nothing in the files that I have looked at which indicates that there was ever any question in the mind either of the hon. member who brought forward the application or of the applicant himself as to why the minister turned down the case in question.

There is, of course, no question of a charge being made against any person whose application for citizenship has been refused. It is perfectly true that we do not say in the letter to the applicant or to the member, why the application for citizenship is being refused. These reasons are not made public; they are not put in written form precisely because we do not want to identify publicly an individual whose application has been refused and thus perhaps damage his reputation.

There are many individuals who should not be carrying Canadian passports around the world which identify them as Canadian citizens, with the entrée that this gives them, but who otherwise conduct themselves in a very proper and reasonable way most of the time within Canada. I do not think anyone wants to see a minister publicly brand an individual by giving reasons for refusing citizenship, nor indeed give any publicity to the fact that the citizenship application of a particular individual has been refused.

The security problems which affect the operation of one particular department cannot be considered in isolation from those which apply to other departments. I should not like to change the arrangements in one department without taking into account other arrangements in the government as a whole. We have but one force which does some investigation work and channels information and that is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. They operate through their own sources, not in a vacuum or in a particular niche for the department. So any exposure which is made of what has been said, or why, is quite likely to harm the whole structure of the security of the state.

I devoutly hope that the royal commission on security will be able to make some recommendations in the citizenship area in relation to the totality of all the recommendations that it is making with regard to security. However, I should like to say that I have refused, and it appears that my predecessors also have refused, citizenship only for the most serious reasons in cases where the minister genuinely believes there is a basis upon which an individual applicant does not appear to be a good candidate for citizenship, does not appear to be prepared to be loyal to the state, does not appear to be the kind of person who should be carrying a Canadian passport and appearing before the rest of the world as a Canadian.

Each case, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, has to be painstakingly reviewed before it is put to the minister. This review is carried out by senior public officials who are not simply working with a barrel of red tape beside them, nor trying to cause difficulties for individuals. These people have long experience in these matters and they give the best advice they can in the interest of the public.

I am very willing, Mr. Chairman, to look at all cases at which a member asks me to look. Sometimes I feel I should like to say publicly why in a particular case I am not granting citizenship. I look at hon. members opposite and think of particular files that I have. One in particular I find extremely difficult because it relates to a young man who has lived most of his life in this country and appears to be a very bright young man.

A responsibility is laid upon a minister who accepts the portfolio of citizenship which cannot simply be laid aside. It may be tough to take decisions, and the decisions which are made may in the last analysis be wrong. But while there is placed before the minister the goal of the security of the state, I suggest to the members of the committee that at least until we receive the report of the royal commission on security such cases should be left to the discretion of the minister. Perhaps the most useful thing that the members of this house could do is to utter a silent prayer from time to time that the minister will exercise her discretion in the true interest of the state.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a brief comment having heard the minister's remarks. I do not know whether she was in the house when the hon. member for Carleton spoke but the hon. member is a former minister of citizenship and immigration.

The minister said that she goes into all of these cases most carefully and that no one has his citizenship application rejected on flimsy grounds. I should like to paraphrase what the hon. member for Carleton said; he can correct me if I am wrong. He said that he was most uncomfortable in some cases in accepting the advice of officials to turn down an application for citizenship on the ground, for example, of the kind of ethnic newspaper to which the applicant has subscribed in the past. Perhaps it was of the wrong political persuasion. The hon. member referred to matters of that sort. It seems to me that this is not a very substantial reason for turning down an application. From what the hon. member said it appears to me that officials have given ministers advice with that kind of reason in the background. As I say, I do not think that is a very substantial reason for refusing citizenship.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any misunderstanding of the situation but I used that only as an illustration of purported evidence of membership in an allegedly subversive organization. I went on to say that I was never able to see why membership in a party which is totally within the law of this country should be a ground for refusal of citizenship.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I think that this amendment places us in a situation where there are two currents of opinions. The first, that has prompted this amendment, I think, is that Canada should not be deprived, of course, of those immigrants who could be an asset to our country. It is not wished therefore, to treat unfairly an immigrant who could be qualified and to make quite sure that no injustice is done, it is intended to make known all the facts that concern him.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that another concern should come before that, which even transcends that one, and it is to protect our country from every threat of subversion. I agree with the minister that the security measures should be applied. I believe this represents the common good and that it is superior, or in a word, that it transcends the private good.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that even if injustice should be done an immigrant, because there is a doubt—it is only a doubt, there is no certainty, but a doubt—that he could be a security risk for the country, the government or the minister concerned must have discretion to protect the country against such dangerous influence. In fact, the benefit of the doubt must be in favour of the country, not in favour of the immigrant.

It is, indeed, worthy of praise to be concerned about not committing any injustice, so that every human being desirous of becoming a Canadian citizen might be able to do so. Nevertheless, there will always be border-line cases. I say that, even in those border-line cases, the minister should be fully authorized to act without having to publish his reasons, which, in many cases, should be confidential. Indeed, in doubtful cases, he should exercise his authority in such a way as to protect the commonweal.

Mr. Chairman, that is why it seems obvious to me that we should not vote for this amendment. The good of all takes precedence of the good of the individual.

I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that no minister of immigration, under this government or any other, would be so irresponsible as to exercise lightly the authority entrusted to them. They will surely exercise it only in cases of reasonable doubt. They will do so conscientiously, telling themselves that their first concern must be to protect the state, to protect the country.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Gilbert) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 36.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary or the minister can give a further explanation on how the reasons of citizenship courts for refusal of applications in areas such as the one that precipitated this amendment will be presented to people who want to appeal to the new appeal court so they will know what type of case will be made and what type of argument will be put forward.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the introduction of Bill No. S-4 which, when approved, will enable the minister to appoint an appeal board in cases where discrimination appears to be evident. I wish to congratulate the minister for bringing this measure forward at this time. However, I want to bring one aspect of the Canadian Citizenship Act which is closely allied to the Immigration Act to the attention of the minister. As a matter of fact, both acts are related to each other.

There is no question about the need for a change in the Immigration Act which would remove the section that authorizes the minister to issue a deportation order against a legally entered immigrant if the said immigrant should have the misfortune to enter a mental institution. Under the act, upon admission to a mental hospital an immigrant is immediately placed under a deportation order which is not removed even after the patient is discharged from the hospital and enjoys good health. He cannot enjoy the status of landed immigrant and though he may live an honourable life until old age he cannot qualify for citizenship because the act does not give the minister power to remove the deportation order.

This is a situation where the minister has the power to issue a deportation order which, though usually never acted upon, he does not have the power to remove. There are cases of unfortunate individuals with families, individuals directing their own businesses, employers of labour, who because of a nervous breakdown have been admitted to a mental hospital for a period of months, were then discharged as cured and have never had a recurrence of the disease but because of this monstrous section of the act they are unable to qualify for Canadian citizenship. This bill is designed, partially, to correct this situation through an appeal board.

May I take the liberty of reading one letter which is addressed to me. It was written by an individual who has been affected by the particular section of the act to which I refer and it reads as follows:

> I wish to thank you for your letters of February 10th and February 12th, and for the interest you have shown in my case.
> In regard to the misunderstanding of my name, I am glad you have already clarified that. I would like to add that in 1956, when I filed the application for citizenship, I used Agostino Salvatore Caccamo, omitting the name Mario, by which I have always been called and generally known. Considering unnecessary, never taught to include it in the application.

As far as the order of deportation, this has been issued in 1954, two and a half years after my arrival in Canada and the reason was because late in 1953, I personally mentioned it to you, I was confined in the Ontario Hospital for a period of about two months, following a nervous breakdown.

• (5:20 p.m.)

At this point I would like to clarify that this type of nervous breakdown in Italy is called "esaurimento nervoso" and does not constitute a mental case, and it is very common among students and professional people who attempt to work too hard.

At the time I had this nervous breakdown I was working for the Canada Car Company and returned to work immediately after my discharge from the hospital. Since then I worked with the company until 1957, and from 1957 to 1961 I have been with the Marathon Corporation of Canada, Marine Division, in Marathon, except for short periods: in 1959 while I was with Canada Life Assurance Company as sales representative, and in 1960 with the Lakehead Motors, as a car salesman.

In 1961 I started my own business, the America Travel Agency, holding now I.A.T.A. and steamship appointments. I am also an authorized agent for the French National Railroads, Canadian National and Pacific railroads; the Travelers Insurance Company, Hartford, Connecticut, U.S.A., and sales representative for the Dominion Automobile Association. At the present time I am operating my business successfully, in the good consideration of the population of both cities.

I am a member of the St. Dominic Catholic Church and the Society Principe di Piemonte.

From the CFPA radio station I broadcast a weekly program and take active part in social and sport associations such as the Y.M.C.A. and soccer club.

I have never been charged or convicted of any offence, except for a couple of parking tickets.

I am married with a child and live in the respect of the people obeying in full the Canadian law.

The only crime, if crime it can be called, was when in 1953 following a period of long working hours and study of the English language, I consulted a doctor who advised me to be recovered in the Ontario Hospital.

I understand mine has been considered a mental case. In my opinion it was only a little "esaurimento nervoso" if you forgive my use of this Italian expression. What I needed was some rest and as soon as I had it I got well.

My activities in these last ten years can speak for themselves and my employers can corroborate it.

Mr. Badanai, the reason I am detailing all this is to draw a picture of myself so that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration would see in the daylight the man against whom an order of deportation was issued.

Did I do anything wrong which is considered against the law in Canada? Are people allowed to get sick wherever they are? Now I admit I got sick, and without any arguing in regard to the diagnosis of my sickness, under any law of any country I suppose it has been a natural thing which could have happened to anyone, Canadian or not Canadian.

Did I ever before and after my confinement in the hospital show any sign of insanity by acting as a mental case? My life's record does not show any of that.

I have been living in Canada for the past 13 years and have always tried to be a good citizen, governing myself according to the Canadian law. I like this country, the way of living, the people, the law; I enjoy every bit of the Canadian freedom and I feel and consider myself a new Canadian.

What I am asking is to be officially recognized as such, so I do not have to feel as being one man too many in Canada, waiting to be sent away without, pardon me, any good reason.

Shall I just wait to be deported or continue my activities as a good Canadian citizen? I have a family, I own property and feel ashamed not being able to be considered a man with a right to vote and take an active part as a Canadian citizen in political life.

If the department considers that I am not a good man, an insane man, I would ask the minister to act accordingly in my regard. But if you, Mr. Badanai, and the minister of citizenship and immigration would consider a review of my case, cancel the order of deportation and grant me the citizenship of this country, I am willing and ready to assume officially the full responsibility of a good Canadian citizen.

It is a long letter and I am grateful to hon. members for allowing me to read it all and for listening to it. But I think it was worth while reading because this is not the only case of its kind. There are others. Many forms of mental illness appear now to be as curable as are certain types of physical ailments. The present Immigration Act was formulated before these important advances in medical knowledge were achieved and it is widely considered that the provisions of section 5 in relation to previous insanity are altogether unrealistic.

It seems to me that the scope of this bill should be increased so as to include a clause which would take care of specific cases such as the one I have just cited. Epilepsy is another affiiction which has responded favourably to new treatments and medical techniques. Indeed, modern drugs may so control the disease that afflicted persons may suffer few, if any, symptoms, and live quite normal lives. I would like to have dealt with both these afflictions, insanity and epilepsy, at greater length but I do not wish to take advantage unduly of the indulgence of the committee. It is true that in many cases sufferers are allowed to remain in this country, but there is no way in which they can acquire Canadian citizenship.

Notwithstanding the shortcomings of this bill I am very happy to support it. I do feel, however, that the minister should seek to change the legislation so as to deal with the particular aspect I have drawn to his attention and bring its provisions into conformity with the capacity of mental patients for rehabilitation.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I listened as carefully as I could to the statement made by the Secretary of State in connection with the amendment recently disposed of by the committee. She gave me at least the impression that the only occasion on which the minister would exercise the power of discretion would be when either the security of the state or criminal activity was involved. If this is indeed the case, and if its the hon. lady's view that this is the ground upon which previous ministers have acted, then it seems to me we are reaching the point at which, for practical purposes at least, the grounds for the rejection of applications for citizenship are being clarified and defined. But this is not what the legislation says. As it stands, the law gives unlimited power of discretion to the minister to reject an application on any ground as may appear to be desirable or necessary from time to time.

I must say I have had no occasion to approach the present minister in connection with any case in which an application for citizenship has been refused. But I think most hon. members over a period of years have had cases brought to their attention in which applications have been rejected for unknown reasons. These were cases in which by no stretch of the imagination, since the applicants were well known in the communities where they lived, was it possible to see how either the security of the state or criminal activity could enter into the picture. It occurs to me that the minister, by virtue of the position she is now taking, is herself suggesting in effect that the procedure which was established in connection with the immigration appeal board is one that could be considered in these circumstances. In other words, it should be clearly understood that one or other of these grounds applies. The minister has virtually said so. She has said that these are the only grounds which she will consider for rejection. This means that as long as she remains in her present portfolio an application will not be rejected except for one or other of these reasons. If this is going to be the basis of administration then it seems to me desirable that it should be the basis of the law so that people will know why they are being rejected.

This may be the case so far as the applications with which the minister has dealt are concerned, but I have a vivid recollection of a case which happened quite a number of years ago. It involved a young married woman from what is now Yugoslavia before that country became Yugoslavia. Her husband preceded her to Canada. Later she found herself in the position that her husband was a naturalized citizen, all but one of her children were born in Canada, she herself was the grandmother of Canadians, but for some reason she was the only member of her family who could not become a citizen. That case puzzled hon. members and unless my judgment was wrong it puzzled the woman in question. This kind of situation should not be repeated and perpetuated.

The minister's statement, apart from some minor variations, was the same as statements I have listened to ad nauseam from ministers holding that portfolio since I first entered the house quite a number of years ago. It is a portfolio that has had many ministers in charge of it. Some former ministers have admitted to me that it is a thankless task in some aspects, and that may be one of the reasons why there have been so many ministers over the years.

A former minister, the hon. member for Carleton, indicated that he hoped to implement some changes. In view of the fact that the present minister was not prepared to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Broadview, I ask her to consider redefining this discretionary power so that it will be understood it will only be exercised in respect of the reasons which she has said this afternoon would justify withholding citizenship from a legally landed immigrant who has met the residence qualifications.

We have heard it repeated time and time again that citizenship is a privilege and not a right. But those of us who are natural born citizens are increasingly coming to question whether this concept is one that should be perpetuated forever. We are coming to believe that a legally admitted landed immigrant who has been in this country a reasonable period of time should acquire the right to become a citizen.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barnett: I hear the hon. member for Edmonton West oh-ohing.

Mr. Lambert: Where does he get the right?

Mr. Barnett: I am suggesting that this artificial distinction of a right which exists by virtue of birth in Canada as against birth somewhere else on this small planet is one that should be examined. I am not saying the person should be entitled to become a Canadian citizen the day after he arrives in this country as a landed immigrant, but I am saying that the concept that certain things are a matter of right and certain things are a matter of privilege is one which we are increasingly questioning in this country. I am applying this to the discretionary power in the hands of the minister to reject an application for citizenship on one or two grounds.

If the minister means what she says about the grounds on which she would act, then consideration might well be given to defining that concept within the law itself. To that extent it would give people an assurance that they were not being subjected merely to ministerial or bureaucratic whimsy if their citizenship applications were rejected.

Miss LaMarsh: I do not find that a bad suggestion at all. So far as I can recall those are the only two bases upon which I have seen any cases rejected. However, the most senior representatives are not here today from the department. I have not had a chance to talk to them, or even to some of my colleagues, and the principle of starting to cut ministerial discretion to a narrow basis is one they would be interested in because of the threat there may be to discretion which resides in their various departments.

I was very hopeful that we would have a new citizenship act this year. For several years when I was in opposition I heard the hon. member for Carleton talking about the new bill that his government was going to introduce, but it never materialized. It has not materialized yet under this government even though we hoped to have it for centennial year. The legislative program was such that it was hopeless to expect we could introduce it earlier this year. But these other problems are becoming a little hoary. They have been mentioned a number of times in throne speeches. Action to deal with them was promised a number of times but was always held up. Accordingly we decided to proceed with this solution.

The whole question of security covered by ministerial discretion is one of the things that is going to be looked into in the new act. I have made many sweeping recommendations to my colleagues with respect to the new act. I am not normally a cautious conservative but, although the hon. member's suggestion appeals to me, while I am still a novice in this matter of having ministerial discretion I will have to reserve my opinion and wait until the new act is produced. I think no one will suffer as a result of that.

Mr. Lambert: The remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni have prompted me to participate in this debate. From the minister's concluding remarks it is clear that having assumed ministerial responsibility she recognizes this is a very difficult area. It is very easy to talk airily about it until one actually has to accept the responsibility. This has been recognized by a goodly number of members. The minister is joining a number of other ministers who have all had the same aspirations but who have all had to come up against this problem. I have never been connected with the department but I have come in contact with situations involving some very tough cases. I think we recognize that this is an area which is fraught with peril.

I should like to come back to the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I do not feel that any person who comes to this country has the inalienable right to claim citizenship. If a person coming to this country has that right, then I as a Canadian have the right to go to another country and claim the right of citizenship there. There must be reciprocity; there must be the right of the individual. What the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is doing is asserting the right of an individual to citizenship in the country of his choice. If this is valid in the case of some person who is a native of another land, that is, that he can come to Canada and assert his right to citizenship in Canada, then it is my inalienable right as an individual in the same way to move to another country and claim the right of citizenship in that country.

Mr. Barnett: You would go as a landed immigrant.

Mr. Lambert: This is so; I would go there as an immigrant. However, the fact that I am accepted as an immigrant does not, ipso facto, say that I have an inalienable right to be a citizen. I suggest that the hon. member should think about this situation a little more deeply. He is asserting the right of the individual to citizenship on behalf of the stranger who is admitted to this country as a landed immigrant. I have a great deal of sympathy for the right of the individual, but it is the right of Canada and the right of Canadians to say to strangers: "We will admit you; we will admit you to the society of citizenship in this country, but it has privileges and it has responsibilities. We are the judges." I would not say to the government of the home land of any individual that I have the absolute right to determine whether I shall be admitted as an immigrant to that land and whether I shall be admitted to the rights of citizenship. It is not for me to say. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

If we should go further, however, I would say that once we have granted the right of citizenship it cannot be removed except in the most exceptional cases. I can conceive of the case of an individual who seeks the haven of Canadian citizenship and then goes off to another land. For all practical purposes he has abandoned Canadian citizenship, or perhaps he has returned to his original land and has abandoned it. I believe this is part of the responsibility of citizenship. After all, it is not only up to the state to protect the status of citizenship. It is up to the individual to protect his own citizenship and that includes compliance with the reasonable requirements of citizenship in Canada or in any other land.

We are dealing with Canadian citizenship. It is within the rights of the Canadian nation to say, "We are accepting you as Canadian citizens but there are certain responsibilities therewith and one of them is that it is your duty to protect the right of citizenship." I would limit revocation to the most exceptional cases. If there were to be revocation, it would have to be on the basis of clearcut evidence of overt acts on the part of the individual concerned. There must be something which flows from it.

One might say to a person if he becomes a Canadian citizen, having been born a citizen of another land, that if he should leave Canada for ten years, fail to report back, fail to reside again in Canada, or fail to register he will lose his Canadian citizenship. This, I believe, is what the act now provides. There would be, however, certain involuntary conditions which might be involved. One would be incarceration in another country for political offences where there really is no guilt. Another would be the question of poverty or illness and therefore the inability to return. True enough, one might say that a person could register at a Canadian consulate abroad. However, human nature being what it is I would say that it must involve much more than mere neglect. It would require an overt act on the part of the individual if he were to be deprived of his Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Why in such circumstances should there be any difference between the citizen who was by law made a citizen because he was born here and the citizen who by law was made a citizen through naturalization? Both became citizens one way or another by law. Why should there be any difference between the two?

Mr. Lambert: I think this is one of the responsibilities of acquisition of citizenship. A distinction is made the world over between a person who was born and brought up as a United States citizen and a person who was born and brought up as a Canadian citizen. I use those merely as examples. I still feel there is a distinction. There must be a distinction between a natural born citizen and a person who has acquired citizenship. The person who has acquired citizenship can, by an overt act, be deemed to have renounced his citizenship. It must be because of an overt act. After all, the Canadian citizen has to carry out an overt act before he can be deprived of his citizenship. Therefore the person who has acquired Canadian citizenship is in no different position from another Canadian who can divest himself of his citizenship by an overt act. This is all I am saying.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member now seems to be agreeing with me.

Mr. Lambert: No, there still is a distinction.

Mr. Knowles: If citizenship is a valuable thing, an important thing, and if it is to be respected, why should its rights and responsibilities not be equal for the person who receives it because he was born here and the person who chooses it and receives it by law?

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: I still insist upon the fact that a Canadian citizen can live for 50 years in Timbuktu and never divest himself of Canadian citizenship but a person who has acquired Canadian citizenship cannot go and live for 50 years in Timbuktu without divesting himself of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not the case under this legislation and that is exactly what we are trying to remedy.

Mr. Lambert: I suggest to my colleague, the hon. member for Carleton, that he may be right in his view, but I still have the right to dissent in this regard and therefore I am expressing my opinion just like anyone else. That is as far as I will go with the matter.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been prompted to take part in this interesting discussion because I heartily support the hon. member for Carleton's view that citizenship should be granted in many cases to those persons who have been denied citizenship because of their political beliefs. These persons would be entitled by our laws to sit in this house if they could get elected. I know of numerous cases of this type, although the number has been decreasing as the years go by. I know of persons with long residence in Canada who belong to certain groups, but because of gossip and certain information which has been spread they have been denied Canadian citizenship. In some cases they have even served in the defence of this country. I give the government credit because these matters are being reviewed from time to time and there has been improvement as the years have gone by.

I have listened carefully to the very interesting discussion that has been taking place and I should like to refer to something that happened in 1954 regarding my opposition to the granting of unlimited powers to the minister not only to keep people out but to bring people in against the advice of the immigration board. Let me quote a few lines in this respect, and this is a little difficult because I must quote myself from Hansard of June 26, 1954. At that time I was dealing with the case of five individuals who had been residents of Canada for six years. At that time they applied for citizenship and I had been informed that the board had ruled against their applications. As recorded at page 6808 of Hansard for June 26 of that year I said:

> Earlier in the session the hon. member for Winnipeg North asked certain questions in the house—

The then hon. member for Winnipeg North wanted to know about certain French nationals who had arrived in Canada as landed immigrants and had been in this country for six years. The questions were answered and the answers indicated that some of them had been guilty of murder and had been sentenced by French courts. In this regard I had this to say:

> In view of the law we cannot understand how these people were permitted to stay in Canada and how they were granted Canadian citizenship. We have in our possession copies of the judgments of the French courts, which were sent to us from Paris. I am not reading the judgments, but I am going to read a couple of lines with respect to the sentences in each case.

Mr. Harris, the minister of citizenship and immigration at that time asked which case it was. I went on to state:

> In fairness, Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned before, I do not want to give the names. I will send the minister my slip when I am through.

This is what I read, and I will give one or two examples. In one case the individual was sentenced to death in absentia while he was in Canada, for dealing in time of war with a foreign power with a view to encourage that power against France. That was Inspector Waffen of the S.S., a branch of the Gestapo. In another case the individual was sentenced to death and the forfeiture of all his property for treason.

At that time the French ambassador was very disturbed about the matter and went to visit the minister and other members of the cabinet. He also came to see some members of this group and presented these documents from the French courts which clearly proved that these men, having committed murder and assisted the German state against the state of France during time of war, entered Canada under false names with false passports and were provided with false visas. As recorded on the same page I had this to say:

> I might say that a high French government official stated they belonged to an organization who murdered the French minister, Georges Mandel, in the forest of Fontainebleau, massacred resisters, and betrayed allied parachutists who were hidden by brave Frenchmen who were shot. Some of these parachutists may have been some of our own men.

Regardless of this evidence these men were granted citizenship. This is another danger in giving unlimited responsibility to the minister in relation to granting citizenship under certain circumstances. Can anyone say why these men, who had been landed immigrants for six years, were entitled to Canadian citizenship? Certainly they were not because they had entered Canada with false documents and were proven by evidence and French court documents to have been guilty of various crimes and sentenced to death or life imprisonment. This is one objection I have to putting unlimited responsibility in the hands of the minister, not only in respect of keeping people out but also under certain circumstances of letting them in against the advice provided by responsible authorities. I have a great deal of correspondence regarding these cases in my office, but I do not intend to deal with it further at this time. This information came from the French ambassador who was highly indignant about the situation.

We must be very careful in these matters, and I am more inclined to delve into the character of these people than the skills they may possess. I know of a chap who came here in 1956. He was a criminal in the country from which he came. He moved to the interior of British Columbia and it was not long before he committed another offence and was jailed. I went into this matter very carefully with other persons who had been associated with him and it turned out he was a very poor character indeed. Could anyone say that this man, after having been sentenced to jail in this country, should be entitled to Canadian citizenship? I was told not long ago that he was back in jail again. Would he have any right to Canadian citizenship? That man is a Canadian citizen today.

I took this matter up with the minister at the time and he said there was an agreement not to send persons back behind the Iron Curtain. I should like to know with whom that agreement was made because if I had anything to do with that type of man he would have been sent back long ago.

We are very fortunate in our part of the country in having an excellent county court judge who goes through these applications and records very carefully. I know of another individual who came here as an immigrant with a criminal record. Less than a year ago he applied to the county court judge for citizenship but was rejected on the basis of evidence provided by the chief of the Nelson city police. That man had been in quite a bit of trouble and it was very fortunate that his application was rejected. At the present time he is in penitentiary.

I know of another chap who arrived here six months ago on an assisted passage from a country in Europe. He had only been in the Kootenays for five months when he visited a doctor friend of mine, pulled out a long knife and stabbed him five times. It was only because of the courage of the doctor's female secretary that he escaped when she jumped on top of this assailant. This man was sent to a mental hospital from which he escaped quite recently. The police have had to place a guard on the doctor because the man is mentally deranged. The latest information I have is that he left Vancouver on a Spanish ship and I suppose has gone back to where he came from. We are "out" the amount of the assisted passage.

I am sure that all of us want all persons of good character who will make good Canadian citizens to come to this country. Personally, I value more highly a person being of good character than his lacking a few skills. I believe we must be more careful in some cases than we have been in the past. I am one of those who believe that Canadian citizenship, under the circumstances I have mentioned, is not a right. It is a right when a person has landed in this country as an immigrant and has proved the right to citizenship by good character and good behaviour.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to quote the words of a former secretary of state. I shall read a portion of his speech as recorded in Hansard of April 2, 1946, at page 505. The then secretary of state said:

> But there is no finer club in the world so far as we are concerned than the club that I would characterize as the Canadian family. We should want, therefore, to impress on new Canadians whom we shall welcome and want to share in our national endeavours that they are joining no mean society but a society that will give them freedom and an opportunity perhaps that they have not had in other lands, and at the same time to point out to them the nature of the obligation undertaken—

They accept obligations and responsibilities.

> —and tell them something of the kind of country and the kind of general political basis of the Canadian society itself.

I wholeheartedly support the words of the former secretary of state on that occasion. Before resuming my seat, Mr. Chairman, I simply say, let us welcome to this country all people of good character but let us make certain we do not in a few cases take into this country unwelcome landed immigrants.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Gray: Just one second. I think all members of this house, whatever side they may be on, have a right to speak. In fact those members of the party forming the government have a particular responsibility in this regard because they may be judged more severely than other members by the public in respect of what happens in this house.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think we should proceed with the other business, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if it is the wish of the government we would be prepared to give consent to continuing with the legislation before us.

Mr. MacEachen: It is quite agreeable on this side of the house to continue with government business, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Lincoln wishes to move two motions.

MEASURE RESPECTING BIRTH CONTROL

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon):

That the orders for the second reading of Bill C-122, an act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion) and Bill C-123, an act to amend the Criminal Code (birth control), being orders Nos. 108 and 109 respectively under the heading "Public Bills" on today's order paper, be discharged and that the subject matters of the said bills be referred to the standing committee on health and welfare.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, APPEAL COURT, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. S-4, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 7—Copy of decision transmitted to minister.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I did not raise this point when I spoke earlier in the debate because I feel this clause is almost an omnibus one covering a number of different areas. I want to draw the attention of the committee to what appears to me to be a conflict in drafting between the amended section 31, which is the last portion of clause 7 of the bill before us, and amended section 12 which is referred to in clause 3 of the bill.

When you look at the citizenship act itself, part II, you see that section 10 (1) provides that if a person satisfies the citizenship court of certain matters, his knowledge of English, that he is of good character, is a fit and proper person to be a Canadian citizen, and so on, the minister may grant a certificate of ciizenship. Section 12, which is referred to in clause 3 of the bill and is found in part II of the act, provides:

A certificate of citizenship granted to any person under this part, other than to a minor under the age of 14 years, shall not take effect unless that person has taken the oath of allegiance set forth in the second schedule, and that person shall become a Canadian citizen upon the granting to him of the certificate of citizenship or on his taking the oath of allegiance, whichever later occurs.

If you look at part VI of the act, under the heading "Procedure and Evidence" it gives the procedure to be followed by the court in considering the application of a person for Canadian citizenship under section 10 (1).

However, section 31, which is one of the concluding portions of part VI headed "Procedure and Evidence" and is amended by the bill before us, provides in the last part:

—a certificate of citizenship may, in the discretion of the minister, be granted to the applicant and the certificate shall be delivered to the applicant and the oath of allegiance taken by him as prescribed by regulation.

It would seem to me there is some kind of conflict here. Section 12, to which I have referred, seems to call rather specifically for the person granted the certificate to take a specific oath in a specific form referred to in a schedule to the act before he can become a citizen. Section 31, in the last portion of clause 7 which we are about to dispose of, would appear to say that an oath of allegiance is to be taken under exactly the same circumstances but it can be prescribed by regulation.

This may be only an apparent conflict which can be explained by the parliamentary secretary or the minister after receiving appropriate advice. However, I feel it should be dealt with, particularly since the minister in answer to a question of mine said that in spite of the seemingly specific requirement that a person becoming a citizen must swear allegiance through an oath to the crown and the country he can affirm if the taking of the oath is against his religious beliefs. The basis of that answer was an opinion given by the Department of Justice.

I realize there are various procedural inhibitions with respect to references in this house to the exact terms of an opinion by the Department of Justice. However, I am rather doubtful that a specific reference in legislation calling for the taking of an oath in exact words can be overridden by an opinion by the Department of Justice. To help expedite the completion of consideration of this bill I would be willing, at least on an interim basis, to accept the minister's assurance on this point. However, since the citizenship act, as amended by the proposals before us today, will form the basis for the granting of Canadian citizenship for some time to come because of the delays to which the minister has referred in preparing a completely new act, I believe we should have some reassurance, first, as to what is involved in this apparent conflict between the wording of the sections which mention the form of oath and, second, what appears to me to be the clear wording in the act that oath of allegiance must be taken by persons who wish to become citizens of this country and the minister's statement that they can do this either by oath or affirmation.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) seems to think there is a certain conflict between Section 12 of the Canadian Citizenship Act and Clause 31 of the bill now under consideration. Section 12 of the act stipulates that:

[English]

A certificate of citizenship granted to any person under this part, other than to a minor under the age of fourteen years, shall not take effect unless that person has taken the oath of allegiance set forth in the second schedule—

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: But the oath—

Mr. Béchard: Pardon me?

Mr. Lambert: But the oath involved is required by the act.

Mr. Béchard: Yes, and the hon. member for Essex West says there seems to be conflict between the two—

Mr. Lambert: Yes, I agree.

Mr. Béchard: —and the clause in the bill which is substituted to section 13 of the act stipulates:

—unless the person is under oath—

And, here, it says, "until the applicant"—

[English]

—until the applicant has taken the oath.

[Translation]

And section 12 says: unless that person has taken the oath with regard to an application. An oath had to be sworn by the applicants, and that is in order not to confuse the oath sworn when the person was making an application, either for himself or for someone else, with the oath of citizenship which is sworn when the person is granted the certificate of citizenship.

Mr. Lambert: But would not the parliamentary secretary share the views of the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray), as well as mine, to the effect that there might be a difference between the oath of allegiance set forth in the second schedule of the act and that which is prescribed by regulation as indicated in section 31? We are told: The oath of allegiance is required by the act, in the second schedule, according to section 12, but it is said in section 31 that an oath of allegiance is prescribed by regulation. That does not make sense.

Mr. Béchard: Section 31 refers to the oath of allegiance to be taken by any citizen granted the Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Lambert: Are you satisfied that there is no doubt that the oath of allegiance referred to in section 31 is exactly the same as the one set forth in the second schedule, as prescribed by section 12.

Mr. Béchard: I am informed that the department and the minister are satisfied as far as the meaning of the bill is concerned.

Mr. Lambert: Yes. It might well be that the person who drafted the act, or some unskilful person, has created a doubt here because when one refers to the English version—

[English]

—and the oath of allegiance taken by him as prescribed by regulation. Do the words "as prescribed by regulation" apply to the form of the oath of allegiance or to the form of taking the oath? I know the hon. member for Essex West has some doubt, as I have. If it is clearly indicated in the proposed section 31 that there is no difference in the form of the oath of allegiance, then I am satisfied, but at the present time there is that doubt in my mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: There is no change in the form. The oath of allegiance is in the same form as in the act which we are amending. The bill is not amending the manner of taking an oath; it simply refers to the oath which new Canadians who have just been granted a certificate of citizenship must normally take.

[English]

Mr. Gray: Perhaps we may have to wait until we get a new citizenship act to have this point resolved. I certainly accept the good will of the parliamentary secretary in trying to give an explanation. It may well be that the conflict is more apparent than real. Before we leave this clause I wonder whether he might give some explanation as to why the department is relying on the opinion of the Department of Justice with respect to the right of a person to affirm rather than take an oath, rather than have a specific provision in the citizenship act in this regard, thereby having an even greater impedance to something which is fundamental to all of us in this country, something that is linked to freedom of conscience, freedom of religion.

• (6:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, as the minister mentioned, and as I mentioned myself at the beginning of this study this afternoon, consideration is being given to making an over-all revision of the citizenship act, which will be a wonderful opportunity to satisfy the requests of the hon. member and of other members of the house in this field.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have but one rather short comment to make on the exchange which took place a few moments ago between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I found it fantastic that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should ask the hon. member for Edmonton West: Why is there a difference between a native-born Canadian citizen and a Canadian naturalized under the Immigration Act?

That is self-evident. Such a question is so naive that it is almost incomprehensible, for after all, Mr. Chairman, there are natural laws against which nothing can be done. Take for example the case of a son or daughter of a family, born in that family, a natural child—in the non-pejorative sense of the word—who has ties of blood with his parents and natural rights which do not need to be conferred upon him. Suppose that, in the same family, the father and mother decide to adopt a child. The adopted child may enjoy the same privileges as the other children, because they have been granted him, because he benefits from the privileges of the sons born to that family. Nonetheless, there will be no ties of blood in the second case, and the adopted child will only become a member of the family through the generosity of the parents who decided to adopt him.

It is the same thing, I think, for an immigrant who wants to become a Canadian citizen. If the country decides to grant him the favour of adopting him then, I think, he will be given the same privileges as others, but until the title of Canadian citizen has been granted to him, until he has taken the oath required in the circumstances, he is not entitled to demand it. It is a gift. But those who were born in this country have a natural right, they are natural members of the family, they are kith and kin, and nothing holds against that. That is natural law, Mr. Chairman.

That is why I find fantastic the claim of those who say that immigrants coming here should have the right to demand Canadian citizenship, to be treated like the others. I do not think it is reasonable to ask this. They are already given much by being accepted and adopted here in the country, so let them meet the conditions.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

On the title—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Before the title carries, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Secretary of State would indicate if she would consider some further amendment which would deal with the question of children born abroad of Canadian citizens. This is, as she knows, a matter which was debated on Bill No. C-2 during private members' hour. Would she be ready to consider that bill or would she give some commitment that she would give urgent and early study to it?

Mr. Béchard: In answer to that question, Mr. Chairman, at the request of the minister may I assure the hon. member that a few days or weeks ago the Secretary of State agreed with the point raised by the hon. member for Carleton when he presented his bill to the house. Actually the trouble is the battle that the minister has with the department.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary the reason for that clause 13. I apologize if I sound a little simple-minded, but I simply cannot see why we have changed the text of the legislation which said:

"vingt années avant"

to say now

"vingt années immédiatement avant".

There must be a reason for that, and that is what I should like to know.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, it is simply to correct a deficiency of the French text which does not agree with the English text. In English, it is mentioned:

"immediately before"

and, in French:

"vingt années avant."

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, instead of changing the French text, why not change the English text? What I want to know is the reason for saying:

"vingt années immédiatement avant".

apart from making the texts agree? We could make them agree the other way also by changing the English text. There must be a reason which requires that it be:

"vingt années immédiatement avant".

and there is no intermittence.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is speaking of two completely different things. The act says:

—vingt années immédiatement avant—

And the hon. member would like to have this expression replaced by the following:

vingt années avant.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I do not suggest that these words should be replaced, but I wonder why it must be:

—immédiatement avant—

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, why does the hon. member want the word:

avant

to replace the words:

immédiatement avant.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Miss LaMarsh moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty as to what the house wishes to do at this time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion to make to the house. If the house wishes we can continue with government business and call the Cape Breton Development Corporation bill which is the next item. If hon. members are willing we can carry on with government business until seven.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 20, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, June 20, clause 19 was under consideration, clauses 2 to 18 having been agreed to.

On clause 19—Payments by Minister of Finance.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, when we were discussing clause 19 I brought to the attention of the committee the appointment of an auditor for the corporation. I would be prepared to hold my amendment until we reach clause 33 on page 16 of the bill as I think it would fit in there better than under clause 19.

Mr. Pepin: It also concerns clause 31.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 20 and 21 agreed to.

On clause 22—Objects.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that members from the east are looking forward to the statement which the Prime Minister promised this afternoon would be made by the minister of mines in connection with whether the government had made a decision on the stockpiling of steel at the Dosco plant at Sydney to alleviate the very serious unemployment situation there.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, we are facing the same situation that my hon. friend faced the other night when we resumed study of the bill rather prematurely. The Minister of Industry is not available at this moment and he was going to make a statement on this subject. Could we stand clause 22 and continue?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I understand the situation that the minister is in. There are times when things move a little faster than might be expected and then you find yourself involved in committee meetings, as perhaps the minister is. Undoubtedly he is busy at the moment.

Mr. Pepin: He is on his way down.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I had hoped to say a few words on clause 22, Mr. Chairman, and to deal with a number of matters with particular reference to Dosco. I wanted to point out to the government and particularly to the minister that there have been difficulties with this company previously at a time when he was not a member of this house. However, before going into this matter, which is rather involved, I had hoped there would be an opportunity to hear the statement. I could reserve my rather extended comments until the statement is made.

• (6:30 p.m.)

I see the minister entering the chamber. We welcome him. I understand that the Minister of Industry is to make a statement about stockpiling. We see his smiling face as he walks through the house and I trust that we shall continue smiling after he has made a statement.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, may I commend the committee on the rapid progress it has made. May I thank the hon. member for his words of welcome. I hope that the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria will be equally commendatory when I have finished my statement.

On June 22 the Prime Minister undertook that a statement would be made this week on steel producing operations in the Sydney area of Cape Breton. We have been giving this matter consideration for some time because we realize the importance of this industry to the local economy.

It would appear that the problem in Sydney arises from a number of factors, including some softening in the market not only in Canada but in most countries for some of the kinds of steel which Dosco Steel Limited produces. Because the Sydney plant is at a considerable distance from the main Canadian markets for steel, the company faces keen competition from most other domestic producers who are closer to these markets. The company reports that it has been rationalizing its operations in order to improve its ability to meet increased competition from Canadian and other producers, and this also has affected the situation.

Furthermore, faced with increasing competition and declining prices in its main marketing areas the company says it has taken steps to improve the productivity of its operations at Sydney which have resulted in some curtailment of the numbers employed.

In addition, there is a world-wide overcapacity of steelmaking facilities, and imports of certain steel products into the areas of Canada which are readily accessible by sea have been increasing. These areas are also the main markets in which products made from Sydney steel are sold. It has been said by Dosco that some of the imports may involve dumping and the Department of National Revenue has been asked to undertake an appropriate investigation as quickly as possible.

It is evident from these facts that the problem in Sydney relates not only to general market factors, but equally it relates to special problems for this company. In these circumstances, the government has come to the view that stockpiling of Sydney steel does not provide a solution to either of these problems. Moreover it would not be an appropriate measure for the federal government to initiate in these circumstances.

We do not believe, however, that there is a long term general problem in Canada affecting the steel industry as a whole. Rather, the problems affecting the steel operations in Sydney, although aggravated by the current market situation, appear to be of a special nature.

Because of the complexity of the problem it would seem to me that if a thorough study of the steel industry in Cape Breton were available, this would make it easier for the responsible authorities to examine the problem in a more informed way.

It is of course recognized that the government of Nova Scotia has the prime responsibility for the special problems of industry within that province, but if it were the wish of the government of Nova Scotia to undertake a study with respect to the steel industry the Department of Industry would be ready to co-operate. In fact the government of Nova Scotia, working in co-operation with various federal departments and agencies and the company, has already done some work in this field.

I should report, Mr. Chairman, that a number of federal activities have already helped to bring new industries to Cape Breton. Under the federal area development program, applications have been approved involving new investment in manufacturing industry of some $132 million. These facilities will create new jobs in Cape Breton. Among the new plants is a new heavy water installation, plus an expansion of the existing heavy water plant even before it went into production.

A motorcar assembly plant is nearing completion and is scheduled to have the first cars come off the assembly line in September.

There have been a series of discussions between federal representatives and British American Oil Limited which have resulted in the company announcing that it plans to establish a refinery in Cape Breton. Also a large chemical producer has stated that it intends to establish a $7 million chemical plant in the area.

The bill we are now debating will have, as one of its main objectives, the establishment in Cape Breton of efficient and viable industries to provide new jobs in that community. I hope the house will pass this bill as quickly as possible so that the corporation may get on with the important task of developing in that region industries capable of competing in Canada and abroad.

I need not remind hon. members that, in the meantime, the activities of the corporation will be assisted by the very extensive programs for training and retraining and other activities to stimulate employment.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, after hearing the minister's statement I cannot say that we shall continue smiling, but I realize that the government has had, and still has, a difficult situation to face. There was a hard decision to be made. The minister realizes, I think, that the presentations of those of us from Sydney, in the opposition, were with a view to seeing what we could do to alleviate the situation in the short term.

I noted the minister's comments. He spoke of the reasons for slackness at this moment in that industry. He referred to the softening in the market, to the keen competition, to the fact that the company is rationalizing its operations. He said that there has been curtailment in the numbers of those who are employed.

As will be evident if one reads statements and replies to questions of the Minister of Industry, on different occasions he has tried, to minimize the numbers who have been laid off and have become unemployed. The unemployed are numerous.

He said that stockpiling will not bring about a solution to the area's difficulties, and we understand that. It will not bring about a solution; yet we thought it would provide some short term solution which was necessary to get the men who have been laid off back to work. I am encouraged by the minister's statement that the federal government, in conjunction with the province, is willing to undertake a study of the steel industry in Nova Scotia. For some weeks, inside the house and outside, I have been urging the government to do that, to inquire into the steel industry, to look into the whole situation with which we are now confronted and which has confronted us for some years. Only last Friday in the house I called on the government to appoint a royal commission to look into the steel industry in Nova Scotia.

Someone has said that royal commissions take a long time to bring in recommendations. I felt that something had to be done. The government will agree, as will the minister I hope, that something does need to be done. Certainly, we should take the initiative and take steps to find out what may be done with regard to the steel industry in Nova Scotia.

We are pleased that certain corporations have seen fit to come into the area. I have no doubt arrangements for this were worked out through co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. I would point out, however, that the incentives which have been provided by the federal government are no greater in the Atlantic provinces than they are in other parts of Canada, and I suggest this means that in fact it was because of the encouragement given by Industrial Estates of Nova Scotia that these firms decided to locate in Nova Scotia rather than in Ontario and other places where there are designated areas.

With reference to the passage of this bill through the house, the minister will find, if he checks Hansard, that at least on one or two occasions, if not on several occasions, we suggested that debate should be continued after ten o'clock. There have been other matters which have prevented our getting ahead with this legislation. At any rate we are honoured this evening, and I hope that before ten o'clock comes it will have been possible to pass the bill.

The minister mentioned training. This again is an important item. We in Nova Scotia are confronted with difficulties in this connection because there has been so great an influx of unemployed people on to the labour market, people looking for training, that the facilities now available are apparently taxed to capacity. I must say that since April 1 when the Department of Manpower and Immigration became responsible for the federal side of this operation we have not had the same degree of co-operation with regard to getting people into training as I believe we should receive. This was mentioned only today during the question period, and only recently I had occasion to write a letter to the regional director in the maritimes drawing attention to the number of people who are waiting for training and were unable to find out just what had happened to their applications for training. It is true the department has not been set up for very long, and there may be a need for better liaison between Ottawa and the regional and local offices. I would urge the minister to expedite action in connection with applications for training wherever possible in co-operation with the provincial authorities; I think the term used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration is "buying training" for those concerned.

That is all I have to say with regard to the minister's statement. We are of course disappointed that the government has not seen fit to stockpile steel as was recommended. At the same time, I can understand that the government had a difficult decision to make in this connection. I am pleased the minister has agreed to a study being made. I hope contact will be made between his department and the provincial authorities, including the premier of Nova Scotia, and that we may go ahead post haste with this study of the steel industry.

With reference to clause 22 itself, perhaps I might put the wording on record at this point.

> The objects of the corporation in relation to the Industrial Development Division are to promote and assist, either alone or in conjunction with any person or the government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or any agency of either of such governments, the financing and development of industry on the Island of Cape Breton, to provide employment outside the coal producing industry and to broaden the base of the economy of the island.

The term "industry" would, I presume, mean any industry, and of course the steel industry would be involved. Quite apart from the study which is to be made I hope that when the corporation is set up there will be no need to await the complete results of such an inquiry, but that efforts will be made by the corporation to go ahead with the provision of any assistance they can possibly give

We have tried to improve the legislation by the inclusion of the McBean mine, which was mentioned again in the house today. These efforts have been spearheaded in a very capable manner by the hon. member for Pictou. We have not been successful. In dealing with other clauses we have referred to the question of pensions for retired coal miners who are now living on mere pittances from the Dosco Corporation. I hope the minister is listening very carefully to the pleas.

We have discussed the question of alternative employment with the object of ensuring that it would be provided much earlier than is foreseen in the bill. The minister has assured us that everything possible will be done in this direction. With regard to the McBean mine he has told us that a comprehensive and generous attitude will be adopted. In this connection, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald says:

> Mines Minister Pepin told the Commons yesterday the federal government intended to "take a comprehensive and generous attitude" concerning McBean colliery in Thorburn without including it in Ottawa's take-over of the Dosco pits in Nova Scotia.

In the course of this debate we sought to emphasize the importance of the steel industry and the reasons we felt it should be included among the undertakings for which the Cape Breton Development Corporation will be responsible. But the minister and the government felt otherwise. The impression which some of us on this side have gathered, namely that steel might be included, had its origin in a statement which was made in January last by the Prime Minister himself. This statement was reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of January 13 under the headline "Ottawa Prepared to Consider Total Dosco Take-over—P.M.". I should like to read this report into the record for the information of the committee and of the country in general. Under the subheading "Inclusion of Steel Possible", it states:

> Prime Minister Pearson indicated to the Commons yesterday that the federal government is prepared to consider bringing the whole or part of the Dominion Steel Coal Corporation Ltd., rather than merely its coal operations, under public ownership.
> Answering a question from Donald MacInnis (PC—Cape Breton South) on whether the present plans for taking over the company's collieries could be extended to include its steel production assets as well, Mr. Pearson told the House: "This will be one of the aspects of the question that will be considered" when the entire matter is brought before the House soon for a special debate.
> The prime minister did not make it clear he was referring to Dosco's Cape Breton assets only, or whether the government was also prepared to consider pubic acquisition of the company's mainland operations, which include the Halifax Shipyards, the Trenton steel fabrication plants, and a steel rolling mill at Contrecoeur, Que.
>
> Later, when pressed by N.D.P. Leader Douglas and Robert Muir (PC—Cape Breton North and Victoria) for a more specific statement, the Prime Minister added:
> "Any program of industrial development will include the whole area and all industry, and any discussion of this matter would naturally include discussion of economic and industrial development generally ... the program that I have been talking about deals primarily with the coal industry and industrial and economic development in the area, and all factors that concern economic and industrial development will be under consideration."

From this, Mr. Chairman, you will see that if we, as members, got a wrong impression we were not alone in this respect; it was shared by writers in newspapers who obtained the same impression. It may be a matter of semantics, or otherwise. We now realize that the government has not seen fit to include steel in the legislation, and we hope other steps will be taken, as already mentioned by the minister.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Because the minister was not in the house when the events I am about to relate took place, I should like to place on the record, for his information and that of the members of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, an account of the attitude of the Hawker-Siddeley group when they acquired control of Dosco interests in 1957. I have here a photostat copy of the Cape Breton Post of Wednesday, October 30, 1957, which has a report headed "Expansion Planned—Roe Out to Make Dosco No. One Steel Producer". The report reads in part as follows:

> Sir Roy Dobson, board chairman of A. V. Roe Canada Ltd., said Tuesday his firm would do its best to make the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation the top producer in Canada.
> "We are determined to do whatever we can to raise the status of Dosco which has slipped to third position in Canada," Sir Roy said.
>
> "We want to see this company in first place and I see no reason why it should not be in that position. You have a good plant here, a good working force and yet something is holding things back. If it's money you need, show us that the money is necessary and it will be forthcoming."
>
> Sir Roy spoke at an informal noon luncheon at the Isle Royale Hotel at which Roy Duchemin, publisher of the Cape Breton Post, was host. In attendance were community, civic, union and government leaders ...
>
> Sir Roy, who speaks in the salty manner of the working man from Lancashire, promised his company would strive for immediate expansion of Dosco's facilities.
> "Expansion can be achieved with the united support of the workers in the steel industry and the officials in charge of operations. The 'men in the grease' will have as much to do as management."

President Crawford Gordon said that as far as expanding Dosco is concerned "everything will be done that can be done." "Dosco presented a challenge and we accepted it," he said. "We came here in a spirit of co-operation to help your great enterprise."

The Roe group, whose decisions now will affect one out of every five persons in the Atlantic provinces, made no elaborate promises. No concrete policy details were released but it was learned that the basic policy will be laid down at a meeting of the Dosco board of directors in Montreal Friday.

The meeting has been called to elect a new board. It was learned that R. A. Jodrey, the Hantsport industrialist who led a fight against Roe's acquisition of Dosco, will be removed from the board.

I can only say, Mr. Chairman, it is most regrettable that Mr. Jodrey was not successful in preventing the Roe group from getting hold of Dosco.

I quote further from the report:

The Dosco management tendered the visitors a reception at the Isle Royale in the evening. It was at this gathering that Sir Roy Dobson laid it on the line.

"We are not financiers," he said. "We are just ordinary engineers who started by pushing a file on a bench. We are not here as part of any financial racket. If we can't do some good for Dosco or the community we don't want to be here."

He said he was convinced Roe could help Dosco in all its operations.

"We will extend markets and facilities and give Dosco the equipment it needs."

In the ten years of operation by Sir Roy apparently the facilities have not been given and the equipment has not been provided. The equipment has been allowed to deteriorate. Everything has been allowed to run down.

I continue the quotation:

"We will ask the heads of departments for their opinions. We need your guidance and loyal support. If this is coming you won't be sorry you joined our company."

Regrettably many who joined the company have been worried, and many excellent men have left the corporation to find employment elsewhere, where they felt they had a future.

I continue quoting from the report:

He emphasized this point:

"You are dealing with practical people. We expect a day's work for a day's pay.

It is interesting that in ten short years the enthusiasm which these people had has disappeared. They have not lived up to their commitments. They have not by any means lived up to their grandiose promises. Therefore, as I said the other day, I feel there should be a study or an inquiry made by a royal commission, or at least some action taken by both the federal and provincial governments to find out what these people are going to do. Are they going to use the inhabitants of Cape Breton as pawns and suit themselves in whatever they want to do? Are they interested in taking the best out of the industry, not putting anything back into it, and then getting out?

These people have a social responsibility. They have a moral responsibility to the people of the area, and to governments. To my mind the former federal government and the present one have on occasion been more than generous in trying to assist this corporation. All the people of the area are asking for is a fair deal. As I said the other day, they cannot get information from the company. We have the president of Dosco making one statement, and the Minister of Industry making another, contradicting it. Apparently there is not good communication between the government and the corporation. Therefore some good would come out of the study I have suggested.

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. Pursuant to standing order 6(2) the committee is suspended until eight o'clock.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-135, an act to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation. When the committee rose at seven o'clock clause 22 was being considered.

Shall clause 22 carry?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, prior to the dinner adjournment we were dealing with clause 22 and I felt, since the word "industry" appeared in this clause, that this would be a good time to deal with the steel industry and to place on the record statements which had been made by Sir Roy Dobson of the Hawker Siddeley group, and others, because when they came into the province of Nova Scotia in 1957 they had such wonderful statements to make concerning the steel industry in the maritime provinces and particularly in Sydney, Nova Scotia, where Dosco has its operations.

In the past ten years there has been no similarity between the statements they made, and their actions. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I felt that these statements should be placed on the record for the benefit of the committee, the government and the people of the country in general so that they would have a little understanding of the reason we feel rather resentful with regard to the actions of this corporation.

Instead of Sydney being made the Pittsburgh of Canada, as was suggested on one occasion the working force in Sydney has been continually declining, and some of the operations have been removed from the steel plant at Sydney to other parts of Canada. There has been a steady deterioration in the operations. At one time this steel plant employed slightly over 5,000 people. Within the past year, or less, we have seen the work force reduced from over 3,000 to now a little over 2,000, with the most recent lay-offs.

Before the dinner hour we had the announcement from the Minister of Industry with reference to the question of stock-piling. We had been pressing for action in this regard, and in addition representations had been made by a delegation from the steel industry in the city of Sydney and surrounding district. The government has refused to take the action we requested. However, they have decided to initiate a study of the steel industry in conjunction with the provincial government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to continue to give a little more of the background of this corporation, I should like at this time to place on the record a quotation from Hansard of January 23, 1959. Of course I will find it necessary to quote myself and, like the hon. member for Kootenay West who apologized when speaking this afternoon on another subject, I should like to apologize to the committee. I feel that the speech which I made at that time, eight years ago when the party which I support was in government, is as apropos the situation today as it was at that time. The part I wish to quote begins at page 284 of Hansard of January 23, 1959. I had been dealing with difficulties in the transportation field in moving goods from the Atlantic provinces to central Canada, and I said this:

> We need government action to help to alleviate these problems but by the same token I feel that we should have the utmost co-operation from those who are involved in our industrial life. I repeat that we should have the utmost co-operation from those who are involved in our industrial life.
> I stated on Tuesday last that to my mind the actions of the A. V. Roe company since acquiring control of Dosco last year were questionable, and at this time I should like to elaborate on why I made a statement of that nature and why I should have these convictions. I feel that there are many thousands like me in Nova Scotia who hold the same convictions because of the action, or should I say lack of action, on the part of the new controllers of our destiny. There are 150,000 people in Nova Scotia—

This says in Nova Scotia, but it should say in Cape Breton. It continues:

> —dependant on this great corporation even for their very livelihood. It came to Nova Scotia with the deed of ownership to Dosco securely tucked in its pocket, with promises and assurances of better days. There were fears expressed in many quarters that the coal, steel, shipbuilding and railway car manufacturing industries would be carted off to the central provinces as has happened before under new ownership in the case of our industries. But Avro spokesmen said that this was an unwarranted fear. In one of his official press releases Avro president Crawford Gordon said:
> "We have but one aim, to expand this Canadian enterprise so that it will be stronger, more enduring and more profitable to its shareholders and employees and, at the same time, contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people."
>
> These are very fine words. This statement prompted Nova Scotia premier Robert L. Stanfield, after Avro's campaign for Dosco control had succeeded, to state:
>
> "You have stated your confidence in this area and your intention to develop Dosco as a maritime enterprise. We accept your assurances and we look forward to a happy association which will be beneficial to us and profitable to you. You realize, I am sure, that Dosco is not just an industry in the ordinary sense; it is the staff of life for many communities in Nova Scotia. It is something much more than just a matter of dollars and cents. I am sure that in assuming control of Dosco you have accepted in full the major responsibilities that go with that control."

I am very sorry to say that this corporation has not accepted the major responsibilities that went with its acquisition of the control of Dosco. I then stated:

> But what have we found since that time? Despite its avowed policy of getting out and selling coal, enforced holidays were imposed on our miners last year. This came after a series of denials by company officials that any cut-backs would be necessary. The miners were asked to boost their production. This they did. What did they get in reward? Lay-offs. Is it not a strange coincidence that these lay-offs should occur right in the midst of the wage negotiations now going on?
> At this point I should like to refer to the co-operation that has come from the coal miners of Nova Scotia. There has not been one strike in the coal mining fields of Nova Scotia since 1947.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent to the hon. gentleman continuing.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Who is continuing, Muir or Stanfield?

An hon. Member: It does not matter, it has the same effect.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I wish to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee, for allowing me extra time. Of course no one ever listens to the hon. member for Rosedale, not even members of his own party, so I will ignore what he has said.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Even fewer listen to you.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister had better put the run on you if he wants any co-operation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I had better not heckle the young man, he is so sensitive.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for putting the juvenile member for Rosedale in his place. I appreciate that and thank you very much.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member is very sensitive, Mr. Chairman, so I will leave him alone.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You had better put your foot on him, Pepin. Put your foot on him now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, let me continue the quotation from Hansard of January 23. I was referring to the co-operation that had come from the coal miners, and had referred to the fact that there had not been a strike since 1947. I then said:

> As I have said, the coal miners have co-operated in every way possible. They have maintained a hold-the-line policy as far as wages are concerned. They have certainly done their part.
> To return to the corporation, despite its fervent pledge to contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people, Avro took a decision to erect a $20 million steel plant outside Montreal.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

> What about its Sydney steel plant? We are told that it will benefit in that it will be asked to supply the raw steel for the finishing plant in Montreal. But will the Sydney plant be called upon to supply that raw steel or will it be acquired from other steel mills closer to the plant at Montreal? I have reason to believe it will be some time after the Montreal mill is opened, a long time at that, before Sydney's plant will supply the new gigantic mill in Montreal.
>
> Now we are faced with another lay-off in our coal industry. This seems to Nova Scotians to be out of keeping with the professed determination of Avro to contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people.
> Mr. Speaker, Avros spokesmen have been dealing Nova Scotians a continuous hand of conflicting statements.

Mr. Chairman, I may say they are still dealing a hand of conflicting statements at this time, ten years after those words were spoken. The quotation then reads:

> "We want to progress", they say, and then they lay off our workers. "We will not do anything to hurt the maritime economy", they say, and then they shift the heart of their steel-making industry from Sydney to Montreal. Nova Scotians have begun to hold new fears and doubts about the intentions of the Avro organization. The only expansion proposed by this company is a cold rolling mill near Montreal.
> In addition to this, a series of company statements issued in recent months make it apparent that the company entertains long range plans for a basic steel plant on adjacent property. If this comes to pass, then the future of Sydney as a major steel production centre will not be bright. When blast furnaces join the Montreal units to provide fully integrated operations in central Canada, what will happen to Sydney?

That is the question we are asking today everywhere in Nova Scotia and other parts of the maritimes. What is going to happen to Sydney? Let me continue with the quotation:

> The Avro organization was born and has been nurtured on government contracts. The company has grown as a result of these government orders to become one of the giants of Canadian industry. Is it reasonable, then, to expect that such a company should be among the first to gear its productive power to the wishes of the government and the public? Is it unreasonable to ask Avro to develop maritime economy and contribute towards the decentralization of industry?
> It is my view, and one that is shared by many Nova Scotians, that the government has a right to expect co-operation from Avro and other companies that have thrived on government work. Since this government took office in 1957 it has offered material assistance to Avro and its subsidiary, Dosco.

I made this statement when we were in office, but I have no doubt that the present government has offered and continues to offer some type of assistance to the corporation. I hope that as a result of a study of this matter we can get to the bottom of the problems, and find out what is to happen at Sydney. Let me finish the quotation in this way:

In conclusion, I should like to refer to the statement of Sir Thomas Sopwith, chairman of the Hawker Siddeley group which controls Avro, made at the annual meeting. I quote:

"One final word on Canada. Your interests there are in good hands, with the company being well and efficiently managed by a team of energetic young and capable Canadians. The future of Canada is bright and glowing with promise. Because of the spread and the diversification of our holdings in Canada, it is our belief that your company is well placed to grow and to prosper with Canada itself."

• (8:20 p.m.)

If you read that statement, Mr. Chairman, it looks so wonderful. It sets out all the things they were going to do with reference to steel and their holdings when they acquired control of Dosco. But I regret that these things have not happened. We have seen lay-off after lay-off and the removal of equipment from their plants to central Canada. I continue quoting from my speech:

Does this mean that we in the maritimes will share in this growth and prosperity to which he refers, or does it mean more closed mines and possibly a closed steel plant?

These words were spoken ten years ago. I continue:

Does this mean a new series of conflicting statements which are damaging to the morale of the people who live in the maritimes? Does this mean that their boasting in a recent issue of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald about their assets really indicates that Dosco is going bankrupt? Does this mean that the company will encourage its salesmen to get out and try to sell more coal, or does it mean we will be importing American coal into the maritimes to the very back door of our own coal mines? Does it mean perhaps that the proposed march on Ottawa by the coal miners of Nova Scotia should be diverted to the company's head office in Montreal or even to London—although I thought we were no longer colonials? Does this mean that despite the utmost government co-operation which has been forthcoming Avro will continue to mislead many breadwinners who are dependant on the company for a livelihood? Does it mean that, at long last, the people of Nova Scotia can rely on the word of this gigantic corporation and place their faith in it? We must remember that faith without works is dead. We have not seen much evidence of the work, so it is rather difficult for the people of the maritimes to have faith.

This gigantic corporation has the future destiny of Nova Scotians in the palm of its hand. It is gigantic. It appears that the more gigantic a corporation becomes, the more ruthless it can be. I am sure that all members in this house and all Canadians who contribute through taxation to the development of industry are awaiting the answers to these and many other questions.

Those words were spoken in this house ten years ago. They are as apropos today as they were at that time. We still have not been able to find out what this gigantic corporation is going to do with reference to its workers and the economy of the Atlantic region. I sincerely believe the corporation has a moral and social obligation in this regard. After making that speech in the house I received a letter from the then public relations officer of the corporation, now, by the way, a member of the Atlantic Development Board. At that time he said he was greatly shocked, and that the corporation was hurt and injured that I should say such things about them in the House of Commons.

But what can one do in these circumstances, Mr. Chairman? You have to make statements that set out the facts. What I have said is the truth. Over the past few months we have again found it necessary to resort to making the type of statements that we are making, which are in accordance with the facts. Some time later I received a letter from the office of the president of A. V. Roe Canada Limited, 170 University Avenue, Toronto, dated March 16, 1962. The letter is addressed to Mr. R. Muir, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario. Before reading it I should inform the committee that members of parliament and senators from the maritimes, of all parties, received an invitation to go to the Chateau Laurier to attend a dinner and have a general discussion on problems. Following that dinner and discussion I received this letter:

Dear Mr. Muir:

It was most kind of you to take a few hours out of your busy life to join me at dinner on Wednesday evening in Ottawa.

I thoroughly enjoyed the opportunity to exchange views on activities in the Atlantic provinces. We all have a common aim—the progress and development of that worthy part of Canada. You have my assurance I will be "pulling my weight" at all times.

We must arrange to meet again in the near future. In the meantime I want you to know how much I appreciated the occasion.

Sincerely yours,
T. J. Emmert

As I said, he is president of the corporation. I have not seen Mr. Emmert from that day to this. I have not seen him pulling his weight or the corporation indicating that they are even attempting to pull their weight, as far as the progress of the Atlantic provinces is concerned. I put these statements on the record, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who was not in the house on that occasion. I put them on the record for the benefit of the yet to be named members of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, so they will know something of the past history of this matter and what has taken place since this corporation took hold of Dosco. During the dinner hour I picked up the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for today, Tuesday, June 27, 1967. This article is headed "Gloom in Provincial Circles" and says:

> The crisis regarding the future of the Sydney steel plant has caused gloom in provincial government circles. There is no easy answer apparent, and though top officials hope optimistically, their faces show pessimism.
> There has been no single measure which has brought on the current crisis. It started several years back with the announcement Dosco was about to construct a rod and bar mill, with rolled steel facilities, at Contrecoeur, Quebec.
>
> This was the handwriting on the wall for many operations at the Sydney plant. The Quebec plant, with a capital cost of $70 million, was to be built close to the major market area of the country, ostensibly so transportation costs of finished materials would be on a competitive footing with those from such areas as Hamilton.
>
> In a last ditch effort in 1963, the Nova Scotia government asked Dosco to reconsider its decision to establish in Quebec and expand its Sydney operations. To make the proposal attractive the Nova Scotia government held out a strong hint that if these wishes were acceded to, it would build the new rod and bar mill with its own money.
> Dosco refused flatly. The reason chairman T. J. Emmert gave last year was the company could not afford to have its hands tied by politics, as a new government might alter the whole situation.

The article continues, but I shall not read the rest of it. I suggest that Mr. Emmert refused because the Hawker-Siddeley group wants to get out of steel in Sydney. Therefore we welcome the study, announced this afternoon by the Minister of Industry, of the steel industry in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing more I can say at the moment other than to express the wish that the minister and the government will be quite careful in all their dealings with Dosco, and more particularly the head of Dosco, the Hawker Siddeley group, because we have found we cannot rely on their statements. We have found they are quite prepared to accept assistance from governments without showing any indication that they are prepared to try and do what they can for their workers and for the economy of the maritime provinces.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that I was not here between six and seven o'clock to hear the announcement of the Minister of Industry on the question of the unemployment in the steel plant at Sydney. I left the chamber at about a minute or two minutes to six o'clock with the impression that we would go into private members hour. Apparently that was not the case. However I have received a very full report of what the minister said. If I in any way misrepresent what he said, I am sure there are members in the house, particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who will correct me, and I shall be glad to be corrected.

In order to make sure that I am speaking with relevance to what was said, it is my understanding that the Minister of Industry announced that the government had decided not to stockpile any steel, and he gave various reasons for the difficulties in the Sydney plant relating to the drop in the general requirements for steel, and similar reasons.

I heard the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria say that the minister announced a study of the steel industry in Nova Scotia. The information I was given was that the minister said a study should be made and that if the Nova Scotia government was prepared to undertake one, the federal government would be glad to co-operate with it. I understand that is a more accurate summary of what was said. I take the liberty of saying to the government that it has miserably failed the people of Sydney, and particularly the steel workers of that city, that it has ignored a problem which daily has got worse, and that it is making it impossible for some years to come for the corporation, whose establishment we are now studying, to make real progress in dealing with the situation of employment in Cape Breton.

• (8:30 p.m.)

If I remember the date correctly it was on May 30 that there was a provincial election in Nova Scotia. On May 27 the Cape Breton Post reported the Minister of National Health and Welfare as having said this:

> "The new and improved facilities should significantly reduce handling costs and improve the competitive position of the Sydney steel industry," he said.
>
> "And with this government assistance, it is expected that additional company capital will be freed to completely modernize the Sydney steel plant itself and bring its operating costs closer to those of other Canadian steel companies."
> Mr. MacEachen said that in terms of employment he is "extremely optimistic" that these developments will be beneficial over the long term.

That was on May 27, and since then in the month of June alone there have been further lay-offs totalling almost 1,000 from the steel plant at Sydney. The situation, instead of even improving slightly, has actually deteriorated. When I say there have been lay-offs of almost 1,000 you must remember, Mr. Chairman, that around the beginning of June there were only about 3,500 in the work force at the Sydney plant, including office workers; so that a lay-off of 1,000 since June, or 900 to be more accurate, is equivalent to a lay-off of 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the work force in a period of four weeks

Then the government solemnly considers the representations about stockpiling steel, and after weeks of questioning by members of the official opposition and members of our party, and weeks of promise of consideration, the Minister of Industry comes in and says, "We cannot stockpile steel. That is unrealistic. The general steel market does not permit it. Anyway, it is a particular problem of Cape Breton. We do not have very much responsibility. If the provincial government will undertake a study we will be glad to take part in it."

I have not been a member of this house long, Mr. Chairman, but I have been in political activities for a long time, and since the 1930's I do not recall such callous disregard of a problem that kicks the government in the teeth, and it refuses to do anything about it. If stockpiling steel is not reasonable or practicable, then come up with some other solution, make some other suggestion that will solve the problem. But instead of that there is a long string of excuses for the situation, ending up in the suggestion that a study be made.

The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria said he welcomed this study, and of course I welcome it too. Studies are always useful if one learns more; but I say there is no need for any further study now. The area of Cape Breton has been studied to distraction. There have been studies upon studies upon studies in the last three decades, and if the government does not yet know what the problem is in Cape Breton, no new study will enlighten it.

The problem of the Sydney steel plant is not terribly difficult even for the layman to understand. The simple proposition is that Dosco and the Hawker Siddeley group have decided that from the point of view of the profitability of the corporation it is more profitable to build a steel complex in Contrecoeur, 40 miles from Montreal, than to modernize the plant at Sydney. It is just as simple as that. So they have gradually taken away parts of the operation in the Sydney plant to Contrecoeur, and threaten to take away even the basic steel production from Sydney to Contrecoeur within a few years.

Obviously if they are going to have all the secondary and processing plants at Contrecoeur, it will be a great deal cheaper and more economical for the corporation to have the production of basic steel located where the manufacturing and processing operations are carried on. This is what faces this government, the government of Nova Scotia and the people of Cape Breton.

Over the past decade there has been, not a gradual but a precipitous reduction in the operations of the steel plant at Sydney. Despite the promises made by the heads of Dosco and A. V. Roe, to which the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria referred, the fact is that they have ignored the needs of Cape Breton. They are like all corporations. I am not blaming the corporation. They are not in Cape Breton for philanthropic purposes. They went there in order to build an industry that was going to pay them dividends and profits, and when the industry could not do so they moved elsewhere.

I am not blaming the corporation at all; but I am blaming the government in the strongest possible language for its lack of courage, lack of vision and of a simple sense of public responsibility in replying to this dire, serious situation by saying, "There will be no stockpiling. There will be another study so that we can have another volume to put on some shelf or under some desk."

There was the statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare just one month ago today, on May 27, that because of certain things done the outlook for employment was going to improve. But now his government sits here, with a thousand more people off work than there were a month ago, and there is not a single suggestion of what should be done. This brings me back to what I have said on two or three occasions, and what other hon. gentlemen have supported.

The situation in Cape Breton steel means that the government should have taken over the steel plant as well as the coal mining operations on that island, because there is no other way in which the economic problem of that island can be solved, or can even be attacked intelligently. Why is the government ready to take over the coal operation? It is because over a long number of years Dosco has been reducing coal production, threatening to stop it completely and get out because of the uneconomic character of those operations. For years the federal government has paid subventions—and I am not being critical of that at all—in order to maintain the industry at some level. But despite those subventions the industry kept going down and so, following the Dr. Donald report, the government has decided to take over the coal operations.

Exactly how long do the people of Cape Breton have to suffer before this self-righteous, absolutely callous government realizes that action has to be taken because precisely the same thing has happened with steel as has happened with coal? The operations are reducing week by week, month by month, year by year; men are being thrown out in the street, and women too from the offices of the company. There is no hope whatever that this company will do anything to modernize, rationalize and diversify its steel operation in Sydney. These are the only solutions—to modernize, to rationalize and to diversify, or to introduce the production of construction steel, as advocated by experts, particularly the standard sizes, designs and forms of construction steel for use in the Atlantic provinces and for export, particularly to the new nations of the world which have a great demand for that kind of product.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Diversification.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, diversification is the major thing. But what is happening? Instead of diversification at Sydney there is diversification at Contrecoeur. I have no objection to there being a plant at Contrecoeur, because Canadians are working there, and God bless them. But I do have objection, as should every member of this house no matter on which side he sits, to a corporation which has lived off the people and the island of Cape Breton for all these years leaving the community on Cape Breton as drearily and as callously as this corporation did in the matter of coal, and is now proceeding to do in the matter of steel.

I do not usually make personal remarks, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps the Minister of National Revenue will also pay attention to what I have to say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If this solution of nationalization, of taking over the steel plant at Sydney, is not to the liking of the government, then for heaven's sakes let them come up with another solution. But do not let hon. members opposite sit there in self-righteous satisfaction, telling us on this side that what we suggest—nationalization—is no solution; that what some people suggest—stockpiling of steel—is no solution. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no solution except to let the steel plant go downhill.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, not only does this situation pose a problem for the unemployed steel workers at Sydney; it poses a serious problem for the corporation in relation to the purposes for which it was set up. The intention of the bill is that there shall be new industry developed to take care of unemployment, of displacement and dislocation, which will necessarily arise on the phasing out of coal production. If at the same time, Mr. Chairman, the other industry on which the island depends also slides downwards, and 800 to 900 people become unemployed in four weeks, as has been the case this month, and another 100 become unemployed in July, and the situation continues in this way, then the new corporation will not be able to meet the continuing unemployment in the steel plant, let alone deal wih a new area of unemployment which will be created upon the phasing out of the coal industry. That is surely simple common sense.

As anybody who has studied the Canadian or North American economy knows, it takes a tremendous amount of investment to provide 100 jobs in a modern automated plant. Modern industry today does not offer the number of jobs that industry offered even a quarter of a century ago when everything was manufactured by what are now out of date machines. Everyone knows a great deal more is produced in a modern automated plant with fewer people. Therefore the investment required to take care of the 1,200 to 1,500 unemployed steel workers who are now walking the streets of Sydney will probably amount to the greater part of the money that the government now has in mind for the Cape Breton Development Corporation, money which is intended to be spent on coal miners who may be displaced by the phasing out of the coal.

It is sheer stupidity and surely moronic to permit the second major industry on Cape Breton to keep going downhill, adding to unemployment on the island, at the same time making it impossible for the corporation that is to be set up to achieve in anything less than half a century the purposes set out for it in the bill.

If I sound angry, Mr. Chairman, it is because I am. I think there are certain matters that come before parliament on which one has the right to feel angry and bitter. As one Canadian I feel angry and bitter about a government which lets this sort of thing happen in Cape Breton. The government refuses to nationalize the steel plant for one reason or another—I think for purely doctrinaire considerations, or sheer timidity. Or, to use a word the Leader of the Opposition is so fond of, the government refuses for reasons of sheer pusillanimity. It is either that, or they have no imagination at all. The government refuses to stockpile steel presumably because it is uneconomic to do so. It also refuses to find a solution, either alone or in conjunction with the government of Nova Scotia, to deal with the question.

I met the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources some years ago, before he came to parliament, and I have had the greatest respect for him ever since. But I would ask him to try to convince anybody who looks at this situation objectively that there is sense in setting up a corporation to take over one of the basic industries on Cape Breton island in order to deal with the dislocations that will occur, while ignoring completely another basic industry in the same area in which unemployment is occurring at a very fast and discouraging rate.

As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, this bill does a half job. It does an unimaginative job. It is something done out of sheer desperation. The government has finally realized owing to the amount of subventions they have paid out that something has to be done about the coal industry. However, the government do not pay subventions to the steel industry, as far as I know; therefore there is not the same pressure or feeling of desperation, and they ignore the problem as though it did not exist. But a problem which is ignored in economic and social terms constantly compounds itself and grows bigger, not in arithmetical terms but in geometrical terms, day by day and week by week.

I would have liked on a number of occasions to move an amendment to the bill to include a provision to take over the steel industry, but even I who am not a great expert on the rules, realize that that would be going outside the terms of the resolution which preceded the bill. Therefore there would be no sense in moving an amendment which would be so clearly out of order. I suppose it is impossible to persuade the government to reconsider the situation. If they do not want to accept the proposal to include the steel industry under this legislation, perhaps they would undertake to introduce other legislation to deal with the steel plant of Dosco.

There is another matter that I had almost forgotten, but I still have a minute or two at my disposal. It deals with a point that members from Nova Scotia know about better than I. The steel plant at Sydney does not affect the economy of Sydney alone, as I am sure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of National Health and Welfare know better than I. The steel works in Pictou county depend on the steel plant at Sydney. If the steel plant at Sydney reduces production, then the forging and rod operations that are now performed, I believe, at Trenton will also be discontinued. This will create a new unemployment problem in mainland Nova Scotia which would be attributable to the neglect of the steel plant on Cape Breton island itself.

You do not have to be a genius or an engineering expert to see how these situations are connected, Mr. Chairman. If we are going to deal with the problems of Cape Breton island, then for heaven's sake let us deal with them as a whole. Why do only a half job? As a matter of fact, some hon. members thought that the steel industry would be included within the terms of this bill. In this regard I could have looked up the reference in Hansard, but perhaps you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, to read from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for January 13, 1967, a report by Mr. Eric Dennis which reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Pearson indicated to the Commons yesterday that the federal government is prepared to consider bringing the whole or part of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Ltd., rather than merely its coal operations, under public ownership.
>
> Answering a question from Donald MacInnis (PC—Cape Breton South) on whether the present plans for taking over the company's collieries could be extended to include its steel production assets as well, Mr. Pearson told the House: "This will be one of the aspects of the question that will be considered" when the entire matter is brought before the House soon for a special debate.

I now skip a paragraph:

> Later, when pressed by N.D.P. Leader Douglas and Robert Muir (PC—Cape Breton North and Victoria) for a more specific statement, the prime minister added:
>
> "Any program of industrial development will include the whole area and all industry, and any discussion of this matter would naturally include discussion of economic and industrial development generally.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

I had the distinct impression from the Prime Minister's answers of last January that the government was considering the problems of the steel industry in Sydney as well as the problems of the coal industry in Glace Bay and other communities of Cape Breton Island. The answer I suppose is that the government has considered this and that it has decided, with great solemnity, after consideration I am sure, to leave the steel industry alone.

On that I say fie, Mr. Chairman. This is absolutely shameful; it is shameful behaviour by the government; it is shameful neglect of an obvious problem, shameful disregard of the wishes of the people of Cape Breton Island. This is shameful treatment in a critical situation that requires much more consideration and sense than has been shown in the steel situation of Sydney.

Mr. MacEwan: I wish to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, in his reply to the statement of the Minister of Industry regarding the steel industry and what the government would not do to assist. I agree that if a study is to be carried out, it must be carried out quickly.

The words of the hon. member for York South apply equally to the steel industry of the Trenton area. We have one of the biggest heavy forging plants in Canada; the Sydney works send ingots to us, and this legislation could have a great effect on the area I represent. Many in this house have shown the effect that this legislation will have on workers on the mainland. I join the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria in urging the government, if there is to be a study, to conduct that study as quickly as possible. In that regard I was disappointed by the announcement by the Minister of Industry this afternoon.

Clause 22 of the second part of the bill reads in part:

> The objects of the corporation ... are to promote and assist ... the financing and development of industry on the Island of Cape Breton to provide employment outside the coal producing industry—

Since the resolution came before the house I pressed that the mine in my constituency be included in the legislation. I gather, from some statements the minister has made, that it is not intended to do this. On January 19 in this house as recorded on page 1674 of Hansard, the minister said:

> As the hon. member for Pictou mentioned, a private operator may wish to take over the mine and continue operating it for a certain time. Even if the corporation does not take over the McBean mine—and I shall come back to this later—clause 16(d), in particular, gives the corporation authority to help.

The following is the important part:

> I shall do my very best to help in this process and I assure the hon. member for Pictou that I do not intend simply to look at the matter and let it slide by. If the closing of the mine is decided on now, or in three months or five months—I do not know exactly when it will be—we shall bring in all possible federal and provincial support to soften the blow.

Then the minister went on to say that the $2 million that will be saved might go toward helping the McBean mine but that should the $2 million be spent, he would have a much weaker case to present to the cabinet.

After that there were some statements, and on June 20, in answering a question as reported on page 1712 of Hansard that I had put to him the minister said this:

> Mr. Speaker, I think if I were to quote what I said yesterday in the house on that subject, it would certainly lead one to the conclusion that we intend to take a very generous attitude and deal humanely with the McBean mine without including it in the legislation.

He goes on to say why the mine was not included.

Finally, answering the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, as reported on page 1871 of Hansard, dated June 23, the minister said this:

> Mr. Speaker, I can very rapidly repeat a few of the things I have already said, and add a few more. The nationalization of the Dosco coal mines on Cape Breton Island is justified by the economic and social situation on the island, a situation which is of national concern. Pictou county, where the McBean colliery is located, is not in a similar situation.

Then he said:

> The economic and social situation there is not one of national concern.

I wondered about that, when I heard the minister's words. Perhaps I might remind hon. members that the minister at one time had said that the government intended to take a generous attitude and to deal with the matter humanely. The minister has not clarified the meanings of his statements.

Today, following the Leader of the Opposition, I asked a supplementary question. I asked the minister whether he had received a telegram dated June 24, 1967, from the President of Local 510A C.B.R.T.G.W. of Thorburn. This local represents the shot firers and mine examiners at McBean. In the old days they were referred to as part of the official staff of the colliery; they are no longer that. The telegram says:

> Membership of local 510A CBRT and GW representing shot firers and mine examiners at McBean pit alarmed and concerned at your statement June 23 denying McBean the right to be included in crown government corporation because of supposedly favourable economic climate in Pictou county—

And here comes the important part; this is what I have been trying to get across this evening:

> —we request a statement of government intention as to the future of 500 men most of whom are at a difficult age for retraining and rehabilitation what is to replace the 30,000 dollars weekly payroll coming from McBean these questions must be answered now trusting you will give the immediate attention and make a favourable recommendation.

I wanted to draw that to the minister's attention. At some time, even after this bill has completed all stages, which I hope will not now be long, the minister should make a statement to say whether he will meet the Nova Scotia officials and the mine workers. We should have a clear statement about what is intended.

In the press today it is reported that the president of the local, Mr. McLean, has said that there are rumours in the area that the McBean mine is to close. He did not say that there had been an official announcement. The district representative of the mine workers, Mr. Roll, is reported to have said that the government will not close the mine, but by their hands off policy they would cause the company to close the mine.

After the bill has been disposed of the minister should make a statement to clarify the entire situation. The payroll in the area comes to $30,000 a week—a lot of money. The taxes which are paid to various municipal levels of government amount to $40,000 per year. Some of that money is collected in Pictou county, and some is being paid directly to the town.

The minister has spoken of a generous attitude, of softening the blow, and so on. But this union which has sent the latest telegram, and other leaders in the area who would probably get in touch with the minister, want to know in which way the blow is to be softened. What is the generous attitude to be? Let us have some clarification of this matter. I think a meeting should be held attended by representatives of the federal and provincial governments, the mine workers and the company. Dosco should be represented at this meeting so that the company can announce what it intends to do. I certainly see the minister's point when he says the company has something to do with this situation, but this mine has been excluded; as I pointed out during the resolution stage, it is an orphan. Let us find out who the foster parents are to be and clarify the situation immediately for the benefit of the workers in this area and of the communities affected.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My remarks this evening are prompted by answers given in the house this afternoon by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Before continuing, I wish to associate myself with what has been said by the hon. member for York South, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and the hon. member for Pictou.

In dealing with this legislation we are confronted by a dilemma. On one hand we realise that the $25 million allocated to assist the mines is very much needed, and that it is needed as quickly as we can get it. On the other hand we are faced with deviations from policy statements and promises made by the government. I recall that some time ago, I think it was last September, the Minister of Transport dealing with another matter found it necessary to turn to the Prime Minister and say in this house: "The Prime Minister, as usual, will have to backtrack." Backtracking has become a habit with this government. I have any number of references here with regard to promises made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Industry and other members of the government associated with this particular piece of legislation.

I believe the Minister of Industry cannot consider this question in a fair and equitable manner. I say this because of his known association with certain persons in Dosco. I am not saying this because I feel he would be unfair to the miners and steelworkers concerned, but I do not think he can look at these things as fairly as other members who are not so closely associated.

Last September the Minister of Transport told the Prime Minister he would have to backtrack. We saw some backtracking again this afternoon. A question was put to the Prime Minister with respect to the promised policy statement on stockpiling steel and the representations made by the committee from Cape Breton in this connection. He said this would be more appropriately dealt with during the debate on this legislation. Yet throughout the debate on this legislation hon. gentlemen opposite have emphasized that the bill deals with coal only and has nothing to do with steel. Why then did the Prime Minister suggest this afternoon that we should deal with this stockpiling question tonight?

What about the statement itself? What about the study? What is there in fact to study? All the figures with respect to the steel industry are at the government's disposal any time it wishes to call for them; the minister need only get in touch with the research department of the steel union and the figures will be provided—all the facts which would have to be dug up by any study group. I for one go along with the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Cape Breton North and Victoria, that if any study is to be made it should be a study of Dosco, and Dosco's policy since taking over this industry in 1957.

The government continues to backtrack on this question of steel. They say, now, it is not to be included. I could refer to many answers to questions which have been given in this house. The hon. member for York South has already referred to one. The Prime Minister was questioned on steel and his answer to me at that time was: "This will be one of the aspects of the question that will be considered." Those are the Prime Minister's words as recorded in Hansard. This would be one of the aspects to be considered. What is happening, now?

The minister tells us he does not want to get away from the principle of the bill. What about the principle of the policy statement which was made? And touching on the point raised by the hon. member for Pictou, what about the 400 or 500 men who will be thrown out of work at the McBean colliery? Principle? What principle? There has been none shown. We have been waiting for the fulfilment of promises made on the eve of the 1965 election. Part of it is here. It is a part I am interested in getting right now. But the government is placing every member of the house on the spot by saying: You will get what we promised in 1965, provided you adopt the callous approach of throwing 500 men out of work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I hear some interjections from the other side. The support for this legislation seems to be coming only from this side of the house. All we get from the other side is broken promises and interjections. I think members on that side should get up and review the policy statements made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport. They are all involved. They are all tied to these promises.

Before the provincial election in Nova Scotia on May 30 the Minister of National Health and Welfare had some encouraging things to say about steel. Since then he has backtracked. The Minister of Industry has expressed concern about the employment situation in Cape Breton. I have a desk full of such references if they should be needed. Here is what the hon. gentleman said back in February:

> Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman will recognize that the government is concerned about this problem of continuing job opportunities in the Cape Breton area. He will recall the recent announcement of the intention of the government to establish through legislation a corporation, the specific task of which would be to endeavour to find new job opportunities in Cape Breton to replace those that seem to be in the course of disappearing.

• (9:10 p.m.)

May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that that was an answer given by the Minister of Industry to a question asked specifically about the steel problem. Yet, what do we have? I keep harping back to this word, backtracking, because it is one that a minister of the crown applied to the Prime Minister. We have this continual backtracking. There will be 1100 men laid off at the Sydney steel plant, yet the Minister of Labour had the audacity last week, when referring to the unemployment figures in this house, to say that there are 14 year olds registered. Then, with protection from the Chair, he was able to tell us something like that, when it is a lot of nonsense.

I asked for an interpretation at that time. If they do not register 14 year olds, if there is no statutory provision for it, how can the Minister of Labour stand up and say unemployment figures are growing because 14 year olds are being registered? If the unemployment figures are growing, it is because of the callous approach of this government to labour in Cape Breton and other parts of the country. This government's approach is callous in many ways when dealing with the labour situation.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The member sitting behind the hon. member for Westmorland is interjecting.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Perhaps we had better let him cool off. We do not even know who he is, we see him so seldom. Perhaps there is a stranger in the house. If that is the only contribution he can make to a serious problem it is not worth mentioning.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Perhaps we should identify him.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): He is sitting in the last row behind the hon. member for Westmorland.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I could talk here for the next three hours referring to date after date upon which answers were given to particular problems with which we were faced in Cape Breton. I could refer also to answers and assurance given by this government in respect of unemployment, coal and steel. I repeat that part of the promises made in Halifax by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he was minister of labour are being fulfilled. I am most anxious to see the money provided to mechanize the mines and set up new mines. I am convinced also that once this is done mining will be with us for a long time.

I am sure that the minister of mines, the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are well aware of the representations coming from Nova Scotia these days. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is aware of the objections to the government's approach, by which in order to keep part of the promises he made prior to the 1965 election he is now asking the members of this house to vote for this measure which will put 400 or 500 men out of their jobs. The argument used in this respect is ridiculous. They say that economic conditions around Pictou are improving, and they have been greatly improved in recent years through the efforts of the government of Nova Scotia. This government has not been doing a great deal. In fact, they are not doing half the amount they are claiming in respect of development in that area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I can play the waiting game with the Liberals, Mr. Chairman, if that is what they want. If there are any of them who wish to put their remarks on the record I would be glad to yield the floor. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully ask that they keep quiet. If they wish to interfere with the representations being made from this side of the house, they would do themselves and the house a favour by going out behind the curtain and having a smoke, unless this is something else the Minister of National Health and Welfare has stopped. They are saying, vote the 400 or 500 men out of work and we will give you what we promised in 1965.

Mr. Gordon: Is he against liquor, too?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): There is the writer of the Gordon report intervening.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Is he still here?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): He is still around. He does not have the decency to get up and make a statement in the house. He will run behind the Prime Minister's back and the party's back and make all the statements in the world. Now he comes into this house and starts interjecting. I recall when this same gentleman considered that if he gave wrong advice or did something wrong he should get out of the cabinet. He did get out once, so why does he not do us all a favour and get out again. This man was the author of a lot of the problems of the maritimes, yet he dares to interject in this house at this time, and especially in the light of the way the people in the maritimes think of him, after the report he wrote. I feel the minister ought to be ashamed to take his seat in the house, after the uproar he caused in his own cabinet. He should not come in here and interject when hon. members are considering a matter which is so vital to their area. It is vital to Cape Breton, and if it is good for Cape Breton it is good for the rest of the country. The minister who wrote the Gordon report is the last person in the world who should open his mouth in this house at the moment. At least, we stand up and say what we have to say. We will say it in front of the members in the house and say it for the written record. We do not go out behind the back of the Prime Minister and say things, as the minister has done. I suggest that he keep quiet until this particular piece of legislation is passed.

Mr. Fairweather: Next question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is nice to see that the Grits can laugh at broken promises. I said once before that only the Liberals can make a success of breaking promises. They have been breaking promises since the day they took office. Week in and week out there has been backtracking and the breaking of promises. It has become a habit with this government, a habit they cannot break.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

I am going to be very interested in hearing what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has to say because he must have been receiving the same telegrams we have been receiving in respect of the steel and coal problem, and in respect of the promises he made in 1965 and on the eve of the provincial election in Nova Scotia just a month ago. What does the minister know that the members of this house do not know? How can he make statements in respect of what Dosco is going to do once they get this capital, and once they receive certain aid from the government? Will the minister let us know now what Dosco's policy is, or has the government taken enough interest in this matter to find out the intentions of Dosco?

How many remarks have been made about the transfer of part of that industry from Sydney to Contreoeur? I do not know if any mention has been made of the fact that key personnel have been pulled out of Sydney. They are being pulled out of Sydney because the Dosco people cannot compete with Algoma for professional help. What are they doing? They are raiding the Sydney plant and taking out these key personnel because they do not have the know-how at Contrecoeur. Not only are they removing parts of the industry, piecemeal, but they are also removing the key personnel in the hope that their establishment in Montreal will get off the ground.

This is probably why we are getting interjections from that side of the house. Members over there have always been dependent upon representation from Quebec. Why should they not be glad to see something else developed in Quebec? As Canadians and members of parliament, they should not have something develop in their province at the expense of another province. This is another reason I believe the Minister of Industry should disqualify himself from even sitting in judgment on anything in which Dosco is involved.

In addition, the minister comes from the province of Quebec so, in all justice, he should disqualify himself. He will be facing the same dilemma that faces other hon. members, that in order to vote $28 million for the mechanization of the coal mines we have to vote 500 men out of their jobs. What about the policy which this government announced about two years ago in respect of subvention payments. At that time the minister was very proud that he could get up and announce a five year set price on the subventions. We can understand where it is all going down the drain in respect of the Dominion Coal Company colliery, but when the McBean colliery is being forced out of existence, the government at least should maintain the subvention rate for that colliery for the period they announced. But no; they are even breaking that undertaking. This is what goes on from day to day, and yet the minister wonders why his legislation is not approved as quickly as it might be. I myself would like to see it go through in respect of the $25 million which is to be made available for the mechanization of the collieries, and in respect of the other things which were promised in the 1965 policy statement.

The then minister of labour, now Minister of National Health and Welfare, can go throughout Nova Scotia making political statements and policy statements, but we are denied the opportunity to ask him any questions with reference to them. At the same time we are denied the opportunity to follow up on the statements he has made, a Liberal member in this house is permitted to ask questions about a fugitive from justice who was picked up in New York on his way to Europe, another Liberal backbencher can ask about road conditions around Ottawa, and another Liberal backbencher can ask about a visiting American dope pedlar in the Don jail. We should be allowed to follow up the statements made by the minister at the time they are made, so that we will be in a position to enlighten the people on whose behalf the minister is supposed to be making these statements and the people to whom he is addressing them. Nevertheless we are denied the opportunity to follow up on the statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Not too long ago there was another example in respect of the U.S.-Canada auto pact. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was given a freewheeling opportunity to discuss the auto pact. His explanation to me at that time was that, after all, he represents an auto town. He said that he comes from an area which is very much involved with the auto industry. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is supposed to be vitally interested in the coal areas.

Mr. Chairman, you would do the house a service if you would identify the member. None of us seem to know him. I would call him to order if I knew who he is. I realize it is getting awfully close to pay day. I believe I also heard from the British Columbia member over there, the fellow who lied to the house during the time of the defence committee hearings. He is starting to interject now. This member deliberately lied to the house—the member for Vancouver Quadra. I cannot understand how he can have the nerve to interject in a situation like this, after having been caught in the act of lying to this house. Then there is the Minister of Finance. He, too, should be ashamed to show his face and interject here, when someone is dealing with a matter as vital as this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, before I get swinging away too hard at some of the interjections made on the other side of the house, probably I should defer some of my remarks, because it is my hope that this legislation will get speedy passage. However, it is difficult to defer my remarks after some of the answers we received this afternoon from the minister concerned, and from the Prime Minister who, for some devious reason, said that we could deal with the steel question tonight. I say to you, examine the legislation and tell me where it deals with steel. This afternoon the Prime Minister invited us to get up this evening and tie in with this legislation what was supposed to be an announcement in respect of steel. Why did he run away from this question this afternoon; why did he backtrack? Mr. Chairman, the best way to sum up the actions of this government in their deviations from statements made in the house is to quote the statement the Minister of Transport made last September in respect of the Prime Minister. He said that the Prime Minister as usual will have to backtrack. With a backtracking Prime Minister we have a backtracking cabinet which does nothing about the lay-offs in Sydney and the impending problem in the coal mines. All they do is break policy statements and promises made prior to an election.

The Chairman: Shall clause 22 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 23—Powers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have read and reread clause 23, particularly subclause (1)(a). It seems to me that it lacks one important power that the corporation ought to have. As I read it, in subclause (1)(a) the corporation is given the power to lend money with or without interest. It is given the power to make grants to any company or person carrying on or proposing to carry on a business or enterprise. I am not reading this word for word. Then it is given the power to invest in the shares or securities of any such company or person and to hold or sell or otherwise dispose of such shares or securities.

Unless I am mistaken—and if I am I shall be grateful to the minister if he will correct me—what this clause does is give the corporation power to invest in the shares or securities of some other corporation or person. I appreciate—as I believe I said during an earlier discussion of this bill—that they could invest in 100 per cent of the shares or securities of such a company. However, what this clause does not give this corporation the power to do is to initiate and establish a business or enterprise from the bottom up, even if there is no other company in the field or no other person or company interested in starting a business or enterprise in Cape Breton Island.

I do not know whether that omission was deliberate or, if I am right in my interpretation, merely an oversight; but in my estimation it is a very serious omission. Before I indicate why I think it is so serious, let me say to anyone who might suggest that paragraph (f) does the job—and I refer to the part which says that the corporation has the right to do all other things as it deems incidental or conducive to the attainment of its objective—that I respectfully disagree that this gives the specific power the corporation would need. I am quite certain in my mind that (f) would not have enough scope to give the corporation the specific power it would need to start a business on its own with the funds of the corporation. Aside and apart from the legal considerations there seems to be the common sense fact that this parliament ought to give the corporation the kind of guidance which would make clear to the corporation what we wanted it to do.

It is clear that this omission is important enough to take a very few minutes of the committee's time to deal with it, and to move an amendment. There are obviously three ways that the corporation could function in Cape Breton Island in so far as ownership of a business is concerned. It could, as it no doubt will, use the various powers in clause 23 to seek to attract private enterprise by providing grants of money, lands and business incentives. That is one way. It could also seek to operate as a partner in a private enterprise. That is, it could enter into a partnership arrangement between the public corporation which this bill sets up and private companies or persons interested in coming to establish or carry on the right kind of business or enterprise. The corporation ought to have the authority, as well, to initiate a publicly owned business, not for the purpose of operating it itself, but for the purpose of establishing an industry which in its opinion and the opinion of its advisors, or advisors of other agencies, is necessary but cannot be established by attracting private enterprise. This public corporation ought to have the authority to do this itself.

I think if I took any longer in explaining my point I would merely be repeating myself. I ought not do that when we are anxious to get on with the legislation. I therefore move:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (1) of clause 23 be amended by deleting the semicolon at the end thereof and substituting a comma therefor, and by adding the following thereto:

"or itself establish a business or enterprise owned wholly or partly by the corporation."

It could do so in partnership or otherwise. I have not an extra copy of this. May I conclude by saying that if I have read the proposed clause wrongly I will be glad to be corrected, and if the minister and his advisors think what I have in mind can be done in a better way I will be glad to have my amendment put aside and give preference to any improved language which the minister may suggest.

What I am interested in is that this legislation should make it clear that parliament is giving the corporation the power to initiate and establish a business or enterprise which might be found useful and necessary for the development of Cape Breton.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, we have not received copies of the proposed amendment, but on the basis of what I have heard I should like to argue its irregularity.

The Chairman: The Chair would be happy now to listen to arguments for or against the validity of the amendment.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in essence my argument is that the amendment proposed by the hon. member would confer powers upon the corporation which are far beyond the powers conferred by the terms of the resolution which was introduced prior to the introduction of the bill. That resolution was strict in the sense that it gave the corporation authority to own and operate the coal mines. That was specific and explicit in the resolution. As I recall the resolution it also gave the corporation the authority to develop and promote other industry.

What the hon. member seeks to do is empower the corporation to own and operate industries other than coal mining undertakings in Cape Breton. I suggest that this amendment is irregular and out of order. The committee would require a royal recommendation and a new resolution before it could entertain the objective of this amendment, which is beyond the scope and terms of the original resolution.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, with great respect I cannot follow the minister's argument. I am looking at the text of the resolution which appears at page 1550 of Hansard, so there is no need to rely on one's memory. In the opening part it deals with the acquisition and reorganization of coal mining works and undertakings, and to conduct coal mining operations in the Sydney coal field. Then it goes on to state:

—and to promote and assist the development of industry on Cape Breton Island to provide employment outside the coal producing industry and to broaden the base of the islands' economy;—

If those words are not wide enough to enable the legislation to specify that the corporation may promote and assist the development of industry on the island by setting up a business or enterprise itself, then I respectfully submit that the clause of the legislation now before us is equally beyond the terms of the resolution. That is why I press this point and invite you to see whether what I am saying is logical. This clause in paragraph (a) gives the corporation the power to own industry. It gives the corporation the power to invest in the shares or securities of a company or person. This obviously means it has the power to own industry in part or wholly. It does not say it can invest in only a part of the shares of a company or person. Obviously it can invest to the extent of 100 per cent of the shares. It is therefore given the authority to take over in total a company which already exists.

• (9:40 p.m.)

If the resolution is sufficiently wide to support the powers which the government proposes in the bill before us, the power to own a company which was formerly owned by someone else, why is not the resolution wide enough to enable the corporation to own a company that was not formerly owned by somebody else? I should like someone to tell me what the logic is in that proposal.

Mr. MacEachen: It is in the resolution.

Mr. Lewis: The resolution does not give that power. Outside the acquisition of coal mines, the resolution makes no mention of the corporation having the right to have ownership in a company other than the general reference to "promote and assist the development of industry" and "to broaden the base of the island's economy." The only specific reference to acquisition is with reference to coal mines.

I repeat that if the resolution is held to be wide enough to enable the corporation to own a company which was formerly owned by someone else, surely it is wide enough to enable the corporation to own a company that was not formerly owned by somebody else. The same language that supports the present clause supports the amendment which I moved. I simply cannot follow at all the logic of the minister's argument.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the terms of the resolution, for which a royal recommendation is necessary, are clear. The first part of the resolution empowers the corporation to acquire, own and operate coal mines, and nothing else. In no other part of the resolution is there a clause of a permissive character to own outright and operate outright other industries. That power is confined exclusively to the coal industry. The role of the corporation is to assist and promote. The effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member is to empower the corporation to own outright and operate outright, from the ground up, any industry.

Surely that is beyond the scope of the resolution that was adopted by the house. If the house adopted the kind of resolution suggested by the hon. member, it is a surprise to us. The hon. gentleman refers to the clause in the bill which empowers the corporation to invest. That is of course there, and it presupposes the operation and existence of a corporation that is not the direct and the sole instrument of the crown corporation. It is a developing and promoting aspect of a corporation that is not wholly, and is not intended to be wholly owned or wholly operated by the crown corporation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? Will he inform the committee, and of course you, Mr. Chairman, where in this clause there is anything in the language that would prevent the corporation from buying up 100 per cent of the shares or securities of any company or person. Where is there here anything to justify the minister's statement that there is nothing in the language that would enable the corporation itself to own the whole of a company?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, if what the hon. gentleman says is correct, his amendment can only bear one interpretation, that it is his intention to empower the corporation to establish industries from the ground up.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not the intention of the bill or of the clause, which implies the investment in a pre-existing corporation or organization. I am at a great disadvantage, as the committee must be, in dealing with an amendment which I have not seen and have only heard read. I find it very difficult to carry on the argument or indeed to understand how the committee can vote when we have not copies of this important amendment. From what has been said I think it is obvious that if the hon. member's amendment is declared to be in order, it clearly indicates that the power of the corporation is not only to acquire and operate coal mines but to build, from the ground up, a whole variety of industries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: That certainly is not the intention of the bill. It may be a desirable objective from the point of view of some hon. members opposite, but the house in adopting this resolution did not intend to turn Cape Breton into a socialist island.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: It is a very good example of a capitalist island right now.

An hon. Member: It is not like Saskatchewan was when you were there.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the last part of the argument put forward by the Minister of National Health and Welfare is very interesting. In fact perhaps it is an admission on his part that the bill does not go far enough. But you, sir, have to be concerned with the proposed amendment in relation to the point the Minister of National Health and Welfare has raised, namely whether it comes within the scope of the resolution that was passed before the bill was introduced?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that the resolution is quite clear. I am not so sure that it is as clear as he thinks it is. If one reads it through carefully, one sees that it goes back and forth. The fact is that it refers first to the coal operation, then to the development of other industry, back again to coal, back again to other industry, back again to coal and back again to other industry. So I submit that the prior resolution does authorize a bill that in the main enters into two fields; on the one hand, taking over the coal industry and on the other promoting and assisting in the development of industry on the island of Cape Breton.

The hon. member for York South drew your attention, sir, to the words "and to promote and assist the development of industry on Cape Breton Island" early in the resolution. I draw your attention to a reference to "initial financial and operating capital requirements" in the middle of the resolution, and then I draw your attention, sir, to the last few words of the resolution which refer to the provision of the sum of $20 million "for the purpose of promoting and assisting the development of industry on the island".

It may well be that the amount of money is not enough for a project such as my colleague might have in mind, but the principle is there in the resolution, namely that the bill to be introduced may deal with two things; it may deal with the taking over of the existing coal industry, and it may deal with the promotion of and assistance to other industry as referred to at least three times in the resolution. I submit therefore that it is quite in order for an amendment to be moved which clarifies or spells out a right that is contained in the resolution itself. I submit that the bill has not gone as far as the resolution permitted, and that my colleague's amendment is one that simply seeks to do what was suggested as a possibility in the resolution, and therefore is in order.

To recapitulate, the resolution says that there can be the promotion of other industry. It says money is being made available for the promotion, assistance and development of other industry, and my colleague's amendment is in line with that.

Mr. MacEachen: Can the hon. member find in the resolution authority for the conducting of any operation other than the operation of a coal mine? There is authority to promote and develop as an investor or shareholder, but the only authority as a proprietor and an operator is confined exclusively to coal mining operations.

Mr. Knowles: If the minister is going to be that narrow in his interpretation of words, then the government's own proposal contained in this clause is wrong because it goes beyond the resolution. However, I suggest that the word promote does not merely mean to encourage somebody else to do something, but that a promotor can promote his own operation. We are suggesting that the authority of the corporation to promote and develop other industry implies that the corporation can promote that industry itself. My hon. friends seem terribly worried about the socialist implications of this. As a matter of fact the legislation would be a lot better if we were facing the problem as one of the whole area and had a T.V.A. type project for the whole island.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, my colleague is right about promoting and assisting. With the exception of what it will do in the coal mining field, the corporation will simply "promote and assist." This is the spirit of the legislation. It will not be doing other things all by itself like building industrial plants from first floor to last floor roof. Why? The answer is from common sense. The people appointed to the corporation will be essentially people with a coal and a general industrial background. They will specialize in operating the mines and in attracting other industries to Cape Breton Island to help in the broadening of the local economic base. If the other industry, for example, were to be a silk stocking factory, obviously there will not be the expertise in the new corporation to undertake such a venture. If the other industry were a peanut butter factory, the corporation would not have the necessary expertise in the peanut butter making industry.

The purpose of the corporation is simply to promote, to take shares, to lend the capital necessary to attract other industry. It is like the Canadian Development Corporation will be when it is created. That corporation will not be expected to take over all Canadian industries. It will simply be promoting and assisting in the development of Canadian industry. The Cape Breton Development Corporation is the Canada Development Corporation for Cape Breton Island, and it will operate in the same way.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would not want to be rude, but is it possible the minister is not familiar with the connotation of the English word promoter in connection with business promotion? Is he unfamiliar with that?

Mr. Pepin: I presume there are some subtleties in this case, as in the case of subsidies and subventions, but so far as I am concerned promoting means an endeavour to attract people to establish industry. In common English the expression "a promotional job" is often used. It does not refer to the building of an industry from bottom to top.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In English the word promoter in connection with business enterprise means someone who develops an industry and runs it, as well as promotes other things. If the minister does not know that, he had better study his English.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Several remarks have been made to which I take exception. One was the reference by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to silk stockings as something that could not be associated with the corporation. Is the minister not aware that stockings have been manufactured from coal? If he does a little research he will find that this is done in Germany. So his reference there was not a very bright one.

I would also ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who saw fit to enter the debate to discourage what we are trying to do to improve the legislation, what he meant by referring to the word explicit with reference to coal, in the terms of the resolution? Does this include the McBean mine, from which the government has backed away? According to the minister's interpretation of promoting and assisting, there is absolutely no need to have the word promoting in the resolution. To promote means to originate, or to assist somebody else who originated something, and to develop it. The idea of promoting an industry can mean the taking over of it or the complete undertaking of it. The minister's interpretation of the word promote is not in line with my acceptance of the meaning of that word.

Mr. Pepin: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I quote from the Oxford dictionary? I know it is not recognized all over Canada. I pride myself on knowing a little bit of English, although I confess it is not as good as the French of the hon. member for York South. According to the Oxford dictionary "promote" means to "help forward, encourage...support actively of passing of ...take necessary steps for passing of ...publicize and sell" and so on. This is exactly the meaning given to it in the present bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I have the same dictionary, and the minister left out some of the things that were in parenthesis. One of those phrases that he left out was "support actively the passing of (law), take necessary steps for passing of (local or private act of parliament)". In other words, there is nothing in the definition of the word promote as given there which relates to the promotion of business. But if the minister will look at the next word, promoter, he will see "one who promotes formation of joint stock company".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest that if all that was meant by the resolution was to assist, then assist was the only word that was necessary; but the resolution says there shall be authority to promote and assist. I submit that assisting is helping someone else to do it, but promoting can mean encouraging someone else to do it and it can also mean the promoting by the entity itself of other industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It was not my intention to get into this part of the debate, which has attracted some very learned gentlemen, including the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the hon. member for York South who originated it. However, I find it rather unusual and disturbing, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South says, that here we are trying to improve this legislation to the point where it will be of great assistance, and the minister from Cape Breton Island is the first to jump to his feet and object and reject, and find all kinds of excuses why we should not—

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order. I do not object to the hon. member arguing the point of order which is before the committee now, namely whether the amendment meets the requirements of the royal recommendation and is within the confines of the resolution. I am arguing that it is not, and that is all. If the hon. member wants to argue the other side of that proposition he is quite free to do so, but I object very strongly to this kind of unpleasant and unnecessary insinuation. What is necessary at this moment is to get this bill passed. That is the quickest way to help the miners and the steelworkers on the island of Cape Breton. Let us pass the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon.

gentleman can raise his voice as loudly as he likes and show his displeasure as much as he likes. But, much as he shouts, the displeasure will not be as great as that which will be shown on Cape Breton Island at the rejection of the minister of an improvement of the legislation.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am shocked that he of all people would do such a thing.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the question before the committee now is not the bill itself but the validity of an amendment. If the committee is going to continue and the hon. member wishes to speak, I will only be able to accept remarks relating to the point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to qualify something he said. He stated that when the amendment was introduced he did not have a written copy before him and therefore could not argue it properly. If he recalls what he said, one interpretation that can be placed on his remarks is that the crown corporation would not be able, as the minister put it, in any way, shape or form to build from the ground up a new mine at Lingan.

Mr. MacEachen: The resolution empowers the corporation to operate and open a new mine in Cape Breton if it so desires. I take the stand of the premier of Nova Scotia, that nationalization of the steel industry is not an appropriate function of the government of Canada.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister has brought up the question of nationalization, but I think the members of this committee are labouring under an illusion. This is not nationalization as nationalization is generally understood. This bill is to set up a corporation to take over the coal industry, with the express purpose of doing away with it. The minister makes it sound very enticing when he says that the quickest way to help the miners and steelworkers of Cape Breton is to rush this legislation through. We want to see it go through, but we want it to go through in an improved form.

May I hark back to what the Prime Minister said this afternoon—

The Chairman: Order.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): What has this legislation got to do with steel?

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South will agree with me that the problem we now have to decide is not the effect of the legislation, but whether or not the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South is in order. That is the only argument that the Chair will permit at this particular time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would just ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to indicate to me and to other members of the committee where there is any help for the steelworkers in this legislation. We are trying to inject some help for them into the bill, and this is what the minister is refusing, at the same time telling us to pass the legislation because it will help the steelworkers. Will the minister indicate where this legislation helps the steelworkers?

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of National Health and Welfare has tried to argue the point of order by throwing in words which he thinks are pejorative, such as socialism, or nationalization, asking everybody else to deal merely with the point of order and taking unto himself the liberty to make statements about merits and philosophy. This is not unusual, Mr. Chairman, and it does not surprise me, but I do want to repeat in all earnestness what I said before.

If it is within the resolution for the legislation to give this corporation the power to invest in the shares or securities of any existing company without limit, so that it may buy up, as far as the language of the clause before the committee is concerned, 100 per cent of the shares or securities of a company or person carrying on a business or enterprise which the corporation thinks is necessary and desirable—if legislation saying that is within the confines of the resolution, then I submit that the minister is, in logic, absolutely wrong in suggesting that the corporation cannot invest in an enterprise which it itself establishes, promotes, or whatever word one may wish to use in that connection.

The argument of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the corporation, as it will be set up initially, will not have the personnel to run this or that business—whether it is engaged in making socks from steel or peanut butter from coal—is irrelevant to the point of order and to the general situation before us.

The minister, I am sure, knows at least as much about business as I know; he knows that there are many holding corporations that do not, themselves, have the expertise to carry on a particular business, but which own that business that is being carried on by experts whom the corporation hires for that purpose.

If my amendment is out of order, then the provision in the clause before us for the corporation to have authority to invest in the shares or securities of a company is equally out of order. If one is in order, then logically the other is in order.

The Chairman: Does the committee wish me to make a ruling now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The Chair paid great attention to this resolution when it was before the committee on June 15, as it was necessary, I think, for the Chair to do, to be able to relate the bill which would follow to the resolution being discussed at that time.

The amendment of the hon. member for York South does not deal with the first part of the resolution but deals particularly with the matter of setting up businesses outside the coal industry. The Chair, here, is being asked to decide the meaning of words. We have had considerable argument about the meaning of "promoting". The last part of the resolution uses the phrase, "for the purpose of promoting and assisting the development of industry".

I recognize the validity of the argument which has been advanced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare but I recognize, too, that deciding a question like this is drawing a fine line between the meaning of words. That is difficult for the Chair to do.

I shall accept the amendment and ask the committee to decide. Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived: yeas, 27; nays, 61.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I presume we are now continuing our discussion on clause 23. Now that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has won the day by destroying an amendment which we thought might be of benefit in establishing new industries, let me put a question to the minister of mines. A few moments ago, his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare said there was great urgency attached to the passage of this bill. Well, we tried to get the house to sit after ten o'clock one night some time ago but the house did not see fit to do so. But the minister did say he wanted to get this legislation through in order to assist coal and steel. Would the minister of mines advise the house what clause 23 will do to assist the steel industry. Let him spell it out to us in a few words.

Mr. Pepin: I have said on a number of occasions that it is only indirectly that the corporation would be helping the steel industry. By promoting industrial development in the area it would be doing so.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I thank the minister for that reply. May I ask him whether it is provided that the Industrial Development Corporation may lend money either with or without security at such rates of interest as the corporation considers proper, or without interest. If so, would this include the lending of money, with or without interest, to the Dosco corporation to assist steel?

Mr. Pepin: The language is certainly broad enough to allow that. It would become a matter of policy for the corporation to decide whether this is the kind of venture they feel they should indulge in.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the lending of money under this clause fulfil the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on May 27 in connection with the modernization of the Sydney enterprise?

Mr. MacEachen: Reference has been made already to that statement. It was an announcement with respect to a joint project supported by the provincial government on one side, and the Atlantic Development Board on the other, having to do with the provision of capital for bulk handling facilities in connection with the steel operations in Sydney. It is not related in any way to the main operation. The work and the research in connection with this particular grant were under way long before this bill came into the house.

Mr. Fairweather: What would be the point of the Atlantic Development Board and the provincial government lending money for the modernization of steel handling facilities if the future of Dosco in Cape Breton were uncertain?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to that question is, of course, that if Dosco as a steel operator is to become more efficient, to become more competitive, or even to maintain its position at all, these bulk handling facilities are required. These arrangements were worked out with Dosco long before the current lay-offs took place. It is true that this announcement was made in May. I understand that the hon. member for York South has referred to a press statement. There was a press announcement and I made a statement, both of which related to the impact that this would have on helping to stabilize the steel industry. Neither at that point in time nor at this point in time, do I look to the total elimination of the industry, which seems to be the implication of the question. Just a day or so before the provincial election, the premier of Nova Scotia stated that there would be no lay-offs in the foreseeable future in the steel industry. He has since explained that at the time he made this statement in good faith. I do not dispute that. But I do object to having aspersions cast on the announcement which I made, quite unrelated to lay-offs, but simply for the effect of making a contribution to the steel industry through the Atlantic Development Board.

Mr. Fairweather: I cast no aspersions.

Mr. MacEachen: I was not referring to my hon. friend.

Mr. Fairweather: I do not really care anyway, because that does not matter. Then we are back to where we started, that under section 23(1)(a), the infusion of capital that Dosco receives will undoubtedly improve the efficiency of its operations. If it would, then this corporation would be prepared to make it, is that correct?

Mr. MacEachen: At the resolution stage of this bill, I referred to the potential relationship between the steel industry and the operations of this future corporation. If parliament passes this bill, it will vest within the corporation very wide powers to promote and assist industrial development on the island of Cape Breton. I am not, nor is any member of the government, dictating to the corporation. However, there is nothing within the terms of this bill to prevent the corporation, if it so desires, from assisting any industry on the island of Cape Breton, including the steel industry. This was clear and has been clear from the very beginning. All that has been asked in the debate so far that is not contained in this bill, is a request that the corporation own outright the steel mill in Sydney. This is what we are objecting to because we do not believe it is a proper function for this corporation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise to say a few words on this clause and also to ask the minister a question with regard to the last part of subclause 2. When I moved the amendment which the committee defeated a few minutes ago, I thought I was merely pointing out an omission which I hoped was not deliberate. Obviously it was, and I am grateful, as a member of this house, although I am very unhappy at the same time, to have that clarification as to what the government intends to do with this legislation. I have this clarification from the mouths of the two ministers who spoke. All we have in this legislation, so far as the industrial development division is concerned, is not an industrial development organization at all but another agency to get other people to do the job that needs to be done.

I can see no difference, except for the difference in the structure and financial arrangement, between this corporation and the Atlantic Development Board. So we have two agencies with exactly the same power and exactly the same purposes. We have the Atlantic Development Board which is to promote—to use the word in the sense in which the ministers opposite used it—industrial development in the Atlantic region, including of course Cape Breton Island. Then we have the Cape Breton Development Corporation to do exactly the same thing within Cape Breton. Then there is the provincial Industrial Estates organization under the provincial government which is doing exactly the same thing for the province of Nova Scotia including, of course, the island of Cape Breton. How absurd can we become?

There was value in this corporation and in this set-up on the assumption that the corporation would have additional powers and would itself be capable of taking steps to develop industry in Cape Breton Island, and not merely invite private corporations to do it when the corporation itself decides not to do it.

This was not merely an adjunct to the Atlantic Development Board, but when the corporation is limited merely to provide for somebody else to do the job, when the corporation itself cannot undertake anything, then no progress is made at all over and above the agencies you already have both in the federal and provincial field. If this is what this government intended—to get half a job done in desperation—then the desperation in a situation like this is emphasized and re-emphasized ten thousand times. If I am proven to be wrong, then I and my colleagues will be the first to delight if this corporation does succeed in making of Cape Breton Island the kind of lively and hopeful community that the people there have a right to expect.

I must say, however, with the interpretation the government has given to the powers of this corporation and the limitations it has placed around it, as well as the fact that the question of steel is not included, that I would be the most surprised man in Canada if this corporation accomplishes the purpose we all hoped in less than half a century—and I will not be here to know the results of that accomplishment. I say that not in any spirit other than frustration about a government which looks at a crucial situation and acts in respect of every step it takes with conservatism and lack of imagination. When I said "conservatism" I meant conservatism with a small "c". Let no hon. member on my right feel at all hurt. Compared to the hon. gentlemen opposite, even the party which is the official opposition is by comparison a group of roaring bolsheviks.

The last words in subclause 2 of clause 23 ask the corporation to consult and co-operate with the various agencies. The end of that clause says that the corporation shall not undertake any action in relation to such objects if that action can be more appropriately carried out under any other assistance program. I do not know what programs the drafters of the legislation may have had in mind, but I think one might be the ARDA program. I suppose the designated area program may come in somewhere, and obviously the manpower training program would come in. The corporation is asked not to undertake such programs. Of course I see the sense in this. Then it goes on to say:

> —or can reasonably be carried out without the assistance of the corporation.

I do not know what that means. What concerns me is, who is to decide this, and how will the decision be made? I should like to know what machinery the minister and his advisers have in mind for ascertaining and determining whether a certain action can be undertaken by some other agency without the assistance of the corporation. Is it the corporation which will make the decision, or who will make that decision?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): This point can be found at the bottom of page 23 where it is said "if a committee to co-ordinate economic development," is set up.

Mr. Lewis: Would it be the committee or the corporation who will make that kind of decision?

Mr. Pepin: It would be made by the committee, which is defined in clause 2 of the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia. I am quite aware of the problems to which the hon. member has referred. It is not easy to make the distinction between the Atlantic Development Board, ARDA and this Cape Breton corporation. Obviously they might at some times tend to do the same things, but generally speaking the Atlantic Development Board will work mainly at setting up what is needed to attract industry. I have a list in my hand of things they have done in the Cape Breton area. Let me give you an example or two. This board has established bulk handling facilities at Point Edward, provided additional water supply for Point Edward and established a sewage treatment plant for Point Edward.

As opposed to this, the Cape Breton corporation will do some industrial promotion. I will admit that at times the Atlantic Development Board has done some of the things the corporation will now be doing. There is another advantage in having both the A.D.B. and the corporation in that the corporation will concentrate more on Cape Breton than any other existing organization of the federal or provincial government. The answer to the question raised is that the committee will be the body to bring together all these agencies in an attempt to avoid duplication.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I only pointed out the reference to the committee to show that it does not say there is to be a committee, but refers only conditionally to a committee being established. There is nothing here that sets up the committee or gives authority for setting up a committee. The reference is, if there is a committee to co-ordinate economic development, but nothing is said about its being set up.

Mr. Pepin: The agreement was prepared at a certain time, as was the bill, so we were not in a position to know during preparation which would come first.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): That is nonsense.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, but that is the way it was. The hon. member may disagree with some things other people do, but they are not necessarily nonsensical because of that. Some of them make good sense.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Am I to understand that the minister is saying that the bill and the agreement were set up at the same time but that it was not known what was in each? Could efforts not be co-ordinated a little better than that, rather than putting in the legislation the word "if"?

Mr. Pepin: We tried to do as well as humanly possible. An agreement between Nova Scotia and Canada is a two-sided affair, and we could not presume an agreement existed before it was signed. In any event the agreement was made and the "if" in the bill is now in fact a "when".

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Let me draw the minister's attention to the fact that the agreement was signed on June 13 and the bill was printed and available for first reading on June 15, two days later. There were two days available for co-ordination of efforts.

Mr. Pepin: We apologize for not bringing into this matter the kind of efficiency the hon. member would have, had he been on this side.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I just want to refer briefly to the exchange that took place between the Minister of National Health of Welfare and the member for Royal. A few days ago in this house I did read into Hansard a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare prior to the last provincial election. I also referred to a statement made by Premier Stanfield prior to the last election. If the minister will check Hansard he will note that I said I had no doubt whatsoever that both statements were made in good faith. I still have no doubt that both statements were made in good faith.

The point I want to make is that since Mr. Stanfield made his statement and the minister made his statement, the president of Dosco, Mr. C. H. Drury, issued a statement that he had provided the premier of the province with information to the effect that there were no lay-offs expected in the foreseeable future.

• (10:30 p.m.)

This is why I was very pleased to hear the Minister of Industry say in the house tonight that he was quite willing to instigate a study of the operations of Dosco. I make this point because I ask: Who can believe what is said to either federal or provincial officials by this corporation? This has been the case down through the years.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 24 to 29 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 30—Officers and employees not servants of Her Majesty.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could explain the reference to the Aeronautics Act in subclause 2 of clause 30.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, this is apparently a clause that is found in all federal government legislation dealing with agencies. It deals with the application of a flying accidents compensation order. I understand it is a precautionary measure more than anything else.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one short question? Will the president and all those holding senior positions be covered by insurance, and to what extent?

Mr. Pepin: What kind of insurance does the hon. member have in mind?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Life, accident, sickness.

Mr. Pepin: I have no idea, Mr. Chairman. I do not know whether there is a policy at the moment. I will try to find out and inform my hon. friend privately.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 31—Corporation a proprietary corporation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, in respect of developments the corporation may bring about—I refer here to payments in lieu of taxes—will the corporation in any way be told, instructed or advised that in view of the fact that the mining towns will be vitally affected under this program, any development they can promote shall be carried out within the mining towns that will suffer as a result of phasing-out?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the clause is to ensure that municipalities now receiving land taxes from the company shall not suffer through the loss of tax revenues. But I do not think I can give the assurance that the municipalities which receive taxes from the company now will go on receiving them at the same level under the corporation if the taxes are related to coal mining.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Do I correctly interpret what the minister has said as meaning that the corporation will pay to the town of Glace Bay, the town of New Waterford, the municipality of Pictou, Sydney Mines, or wherever a mine is phased out, a sum of money to compensate for the loss of industrial taxes?

Mr. Pepin: I think that is the popular understanding. When the corporation ceases to produce coal I do not think it will go on paying taxes on coal. This would not apply to the company as it exists now, and I do not think it would apply to the new corporation, except with respect to real estate taxes.

The Chairman: Shall clause 31 carry?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the anxiety of the Chair in trying to rush this through when we are not getting full answers from the minister to the questions we ask. I have asked the minister whether this will be interpreted as meaning that the corporation, in setting up and assisting industries, will do so in the towns where mines are being phased out, or is it the intention of the government to centralize new developments in an industrial park?

Mr. Pepin: The simple answer is to say that clause 31 makes the crown corporation the same as a private company when it comes to paying taxes to municipalities.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I understand that, but apparently the minister does not understand the question I put to him. Because of the phasing out operations, the towns where coal mines are located stand to lose quite a lot of industrial assessment. Will any developments that the crown corporation assists be located in these towns so as to alleviate their loss? In other words, will the corporation direct that new plants be built in towns which are losing mines.

Mr. Pepin: I do not think we can give this assurance.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Then does the minister realize that not only will the individual miners lose, but also the towns? For instance the town of New Waterford depends greatly on the assessment of Dominion Coal Company property. If the mine is phased out in that town, and the corporation makes no effort to replace it with some industrial development, the town as a whole is going to suffer.

Mr. Pepin: This is exactly why we are providing millions of dollars to help develop the industrial bases of these towns.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 32—General expenditures.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I did not get into the chamber soon enough to ask this question when clause 24 was under discussion. I imagine that clause 32 as well as the bottom part of clause 24 contemplate parliament making appropriations to meet the policy which the Prime Minister set out in his statement on December 29, 1966, and which has been repeated a number of times during this debate, namely that the government expects there will be progressive savings in the subsidies which heretofore have been paid to the coal producing companies, and that the money thus saved will be made available to the funds of the development division of the new corporation.

In his statement the Prime Minister put it this way:

> Although it is anticipated that the operating losses in the first year alone will be in the order of $25 million—

And presumably that too is contemplated to be appropriated by parliament.

> —the mining program will progressively reduce these annual losses, and, hence, the federal funds required. From these annual savings in subsidies, money will become available to augment the economic development fund.

Later on in his statement the Prime Minister said:

> To further this objective—

That is the objective of developing industry on the island.

> —the government of Canada will augment its initial $20 million economic development contribution to the crown corporation from expected savings in federal subsidies.

We want to know from the government, through the minister, whether the government has given any thought to the way in which it will calculate the savings from the subsidies, and whether the amount of money to be voted will be exactly what its calculation of the savings comes to, or whether the calculation of subsidy savings will merely be a guide as to the amounts the government may ask parliament to appropriate for the purpose of augmenting the funds of the crown corporation.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

• (10:40 p.m.)

I think we ought to know in more precise terms what the Prime Minister means. A spokesman for the government and articles in the press, if I remember correctly, talked of $400 million eventually being appropriated for development purposes. If this is so, over what period of years does the government foresee this expenditure?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, on this subject I can be very clear on general policies but not too clear on specifics. The quotation of the Prime Minister already given by the hon. member for York South is the statement of policy. There is a relationship between the amount of money saved and the amount of money to be invested by way of economic development. It might be less; it might be more. That is why the legislation could not tie the government to any specific calculation, such as saying that every $2 saved means there will be $1.79 spent. If I am any judge of the past the house will always be willing to do its utmost to help the people of Cape Breton, and especially to help the promotion of industrial development in that area. I do not think it could do better than that.

Mr. Lewis: May I follow that up for the moment. I could not expect the minister to give me figures, and I appreciate that it would not be an exact dollar for dollar relationship, but a guide, as I suggested in putting my question. However, one of the matters I have tried to understand is an obvious one. When the subsidies or subventions are related, as they have been, to the volume of production of coal, if there is an intention to phase out coal the volume will naturally decrease. Therefore the subventions that might have been paid will decrease.

I am sure that other members and the people of Cape Breton are equally as interested as I am in the magnitude of the expenditures that we are talking about. We know there is $20 million to start with. What order of magnitude of expenditure are we talking about over the next decade, for example, in connection with the fund to attract the development of industry on Cape Breton Island?

Mr. Pepin: If I recall correctly, in his report Dr. Donald talks about $150 million for industrial development over the whole period. It is very difficult to be more specific because it all depends on the rhythm of phasing out of the coal industry. The government will probably have to advance money, as we are in this case. The $20 million we are putting in will help planning, and two or three years from now another infusion say, of the same amount may be needed before there is a saving of, say, $10 million on the coal side. I hope this is not the case but it is possible. That is why it is difficult to tie the government to a rhythm of money saved-money allocated.

Mr. Lewis: The minister should know that you cannot be an economics accountant on the rhythm method.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 33 agreed to.

On clause 34—Surplus Crown Assets Act does not apply.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On clause 34 I would again draw to the minister's attention that portion of the railway between Broughton Junction and Louisbourg which is causing considerable concern in the town of Louisbourg. Representations have been made to a number of members of the house including the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the N.D.P. and others. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should be interested in this matter because most of the line is in his constituency.

Can the minister not tell the house what the board of trade of Louisbourg was told about why the line would be cancelled? Possibly the Minister of National Health and Welfare could tell the committee about that.

Mr. Pepin: I gave a lengthy answer to this question at page 1696 of Hansard, last week. The short answer is that this railway is not useful or valuable for the continuing operation of the coal mine. The business activity on the railway is extremely low. Last year it took in about $18,000 in revenue and expended about $50,000, if my memory serves me well. There is no interest, so far as the coal mining operation is concerned, in this railway.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The railway may not be of interest to the coal operation, but my question involved the municipalities of Louisbourg and Broughton. I want to know what was said to the board of trade of Louisbourg about the cancellation of this portion of line. I realize that the rolling stock on this line belongs to Dominion Coal and that the corporation will take it over. The line itself is useless without the rolling stock. Could not the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in whose constituency Louisburg is situated, answer my question? What has been said so far is not a reasonable explanation.

Mr. Lewis: May I follow the hon. member's remarks with another question. If I remember correctly, as I visited the area some time ago, there is a fish plant there. Is it the intention that the line between Broughton Junction and Louisbourg be torn up completely? I understand that the entire line is not to be taken up. The line is to be dug up between Broughton and Glenville. What will happen to the line between Broughton and Louisbourg? What alternate transportation for the fish plant in Louisbourg will there be? I know that the business on the line is very small, but cannot one of the ministers concerned say what is to happen to the fish plant?

Mr. Pepin: An application to abandon the line is before the Board of Transport Commissioners. Also, as the fishing operation requires only one carload per week, or something like that, I presume that a couple of trucks would do the same job.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister is confusing matters when he says that the Board of Transport Commissioners is involved. We know that there have been hearings in Cape Breton on this matter, but is the minister prejudging the board's decision? What is the use of a railway without rolling stock—rolling stock which the corporation will take over. The Board of Transport Commissioners may rule that the line must remain in service. That ruling would be absolutely useless if no rolling stock is available. The corporation will have to service the line between Broughton Junction and Louisbourg.

Here we have a bill, then an agreement, and now the transport board is involved with a decision which has not been handed down. The corporation which removes the rolling stock will have to serve that line.

• (10:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: I apologize for the first part of the answer which was straight information. The second part is the real answer.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 35—Works and undertakings declared to be for general advantage of Canada.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The committee will remember that previously we did change the wording in different portions to read "island" and I wonder whether the committee would entertain a similar amendment at this time.

I move:

That in clause 35, line 3, the word "county" be changed to "island" and that in line 5 the word "county" be also changed to read 'island".

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 36—Commencement.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I was about to remark that despite what may have appeared to be some delay, the minister did get this legislation through rather quickly having regard to the complex nature of the bill and what he is asking of members of parliament.

I would only ask in connection with clause 36 when it is the intention of the government to have this bill proclaimed.

Mr. Pepin: As soon as possible.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to have a more definite answer than that. "As soon as possible" is a phrase which has been used by the government for three years. It was used three years ago in connection with something which has still not come about. Can the minister tell us whether this bill will be proclaimed in time to permit some activity by the crown corporation this summer?

Mr. Pepin: Immediately after it has been approved by the Senate and given royal assent.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. MacEwan: I wonder whether the minister in a few well chosen words can advise me when he may issue a statement clarifying the position with regard to the McBean mine and the workers and communities in that area. Now that this bill is just about through the committee stage, can he give us some idea when he might look into this and issue a statement?

Mr. Pepin: I will try to move as quickly as I can. I have already dealt with the subject at some length, as reported at page 1673 of Hansard. In the course of that statement I made five main points. First, I explained why we could not include the mine in the legislation. I think this is now understood. Second, I pointed out that the mines were reaching a state of natural exhaustion. Third, I explained that we had made an offer to Dosco to continue subsidies at the present level. We have not received any official response to this offer. The fourth point I made was that a private operator might want to take over the mine. I agreed this might happen, but I do not know if it will.

The fifth point was the most important. We shall bring in all possible federal and provincial support to soften the blow if the mine has to be closed. I cannot say yet whether it will have to be closed. I concluded by saying that the money saved, if the mine is closed more rapidly than is anticipated, will be a consideration to be borne in mind by the cabinet in deciding what most favourable terms shall be given to McBean. I do not think I can be more specific at this point. As soon as I can I will go down there to discuss the matter with the people in the area and learn what their views are. I hope they will not simply tell me to ask the corporation to take it over. I hope they will have some progressive ideas to offer.

I can only say what I attempted to say the other day when the Speaker stopped me, that is what has been done in Pictou county. The Atlantic Development Board has invested $14 million in the area in the last two years. The area development agency has provided $7 million in the form of grants to 11 projects in Pictou, bringing in a total investment of $58 million in this area, again in the last two years. About 1,400 new jobs have been created. This is probably still not enough, and I can only say we will try, as a government, to do more of the same.

Mr. MacEwan: I thank the minister for this statement. Earlier in the debate I stated that the $12 million for a new thermo power plant should be considered in the light of the fact that you have a mine within ten miles which could provide 400,000 tons of coal for the expansion of this plant to 150 killowatts. This does not seem to make too much sense. I intend to put a question on the order paper forthwith with regard to the 11 projects the minister mentioned. Probably the Minister of Industry will say the information is confidential.

I think we should know about these projects. Perhaps the minister could provide answers in written form at some time. However, I intend to find out about them. I welcome the fact the minister said he would be willing to meet with the people from the area, the mine workers, civic officials and representatives of the provincial government, at an early date. Certainly what he has said has not been clear. I am glad that he finds it quite funny that there are 400 people in the county of Pictou who have sent telegrams, and who do not find this situation funny.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Pepin: I apologize at having to correct the hon. member. I do not find it funny at all. I just mentioned to some of my neighbours that they will be coming with me, and they were pleased to know that.

Mr. MacEwan: We will welcome any members of the cabinet, if they care to be enlightened and leave their ivory towers in Ottawa. We will give them a Scottish welcome, and perhaps open their eyes. I am glad to hear the minister say that he will come down to that area, and I hope it will not be next year.

Mr. Fairweather: Since we are members here representing not only particular areas but the whole country, I want to include an invitation to the minister to make a detour during his visit to Nova Scotia into the constituency of Royal and the Minto-Chipman area. There are some 1,500 people in that area either directly or indirectly involved in coal mining, who are extremely apprehensive about the future of the industry there. I cannot promise the minister a Scottish welcome but I can promise him a straightforward welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: Today the Minister of National Defence became involved in Scottish origin, and it is getting very late for that. Seriously, the people in our area are apprehensive about the future. They would like to be assured that if the technique involved in this new crown corporation is a viable one, the government would consider the same sort of thing for that area where the miners face, to say the least, an uncertain future.

I am sorry to have to make these remarks at eleven o'clock, but I have been waiting some time for clause 1 so I could be in order.

Mr. Pepin: I thank the hon. member for making this point. It illustrates how difficult it is to do something for one area without all the other areas of Canada, some of which have difficulties too, trying to get the same advantage. I point out this particular aspect of the problem to the hon. member for Pictou, and I am sure he understands it.

Mr. MacEwan: The answer is no.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have just one final word before the minister says his prayers and goes to bed. I am wondering if he is aware of this fact? If drastic changes do not take place in the steel industry in Nova Scotia, then mark my words this 27th day of June, the next bill that will be introduced in this house will be one to take over the steel industry, because this is the course which will have to be followed if changes do not take place so far as the corporation is concerned.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Mr. Pepin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, even at this late hour I should like to ask the indulgence of members so that I may be permitted to revert to motions to present the report of the special joint committee on divorce.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): How long will it take?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have permission to revert to motions at this time?

Mr. Churchill: We have gone on for an extra hour now. I should like to know what urgency there is about this matter tonight. Could it not be dealt with on motions tomorrow?

Mr. Cameron (High Park): The understanding I had with the joint chairman of the committee was that it would be presented tonight at eight o'clock. Since the Speaker was not in the chair until now, I waited until this time, because I had told the joint chairman that it would be presented tonight. That is the urgency so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Churchill: Is there anything wrong with it being presented tomorrow; is there anything which might happen to the report in the interval?

Mr. Cameron (High Park): I thought that my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) would agree. It will only take about 30 seconds.

Mr. Churchill: That was my original question. I asked how long it would take and it has taken you about three minutes to tell me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave of the house to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DIVORCE

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): presented the second report of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on divorce.

He said: Mr. Speaker, by leave I move:

—that the second report of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on divorce tabled this day be appended to today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: While the motion presented by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) is not in the usual form, I will allow it to be presented to the house. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the house at this time to proceed with the adjournment proceedings or to suspend them on this particular occasion?

Mr. Churchill: Suspend them.

Mr. Drury: Proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we suspend them on this particular occasion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Régimbal: Proceed.

Mr. Churchill: Let us suspend the questions, for the sake of the staff.

Mr. Régimbal: I cannot agree, sir. There are people here who have come from Calumet to back up this representation, and it would be unfair to suspend the questions at their expense. We have been patient and we have not said a word.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—CALUMET, QUE.—CLOSING OF C.I.P. PLANT

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 last, the 130 C.I.P. employees in Calumet were given notice by the company that the local mill would be closed within a year. In all fairness to the company, the notice gave them the assurance that it would assist in every way possible to facilitate training and transfer of employees to other operations of the company in other parts of the province.

We know that such decisions are very difficult to make, but that they are made and will be made again many times and in many places. Seldom does a decision, even though it had been expected, create as much fear, despair and havoc as it did in this particular case. Calumet is a small town of approximately 800 people, where some 85 families have been earning their living for some 80 years in the local sawmill.

The whole economy has been built up around that operation, so that when it closes the whole town and the whole population is not only affected, but completely disrupted. The corner store, the gas station, the bakery, the town employees and the teachers, in fact absolutely every institution and every person will have no alternative. Calumet will become virtually a ghost town. Through the years the citizens of Calumet have diligently and modestly built up their security, have established their families, built their schools, organized their services in every way and have proceeded as resolute, reasonable citizens to administer their own affairs in a sensible way. The best example of that is that, in spite of the fact the company pays about 30 per cent of the total tax bill, this is not in any way a company town. Calumet is absolutely free of indebtedness. We all appreciate that this is not an easy accomplishment when one considers how long it takes to develop an industrial operation with its ups and downs, recessions and depressions which are encountered through the years.

Then, overnight, the fruits of their labours are washed away, almost literally, down the river. Every dream, project or plan for the future will be shattered. As happens in such events, people have rallied together to face their problems. They hold no grievance against anyone but are naturally deeply concerned about their families, their possessions and their future, which will disappear with their town.

In the gallery tonight are the mayor, and representatives of the council, the union, the company and local business. They are not here as a pressure group; they are not here as marchers, nor are they here as demonstrators. They are not looking for handouts: They are looking for a helping hand, and hope to find it with the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury). They believe the minister can help; and I believe he can help by a special effort which is not beyond his reach, his capacity or his jurisdiction, although it does call for his close personal attention.

We hope the minister will not tell us that this is a problem for the department of manpower, because it is not. The officers of that department have already been on the spot, and the company is giving full co-operation in retraining. This, however, solves only a very small part of the problem. We all know the shortcomings of the manpower retraining regulations in that they only help to buy one way tickets out of town to unknown places, where the mill employees do not necessarily want to go. It does not provide for the rest of the population, and in this particular case offers no solution to the employees themselves, a vast percentage of whom—I would say over 65 per cent—have attained a certain age, because they have already accumulated over 15 years service, where retraining is either difficult or impossible.

• (11:10 p.m.)

These people are not asking the minister to intercede to keep the plant open. They know this is unrealistic. They are asking, first, that the minister use his good offices to help them find a new industry. I am sure he will find that the company will co-operate in every possible way through its public relations department, its publicity department and its research department We would like the minister to spearhead a joint effort by government, the company, the town council and the union to find an industry.

Calumet is part of a designated area, so the minister knows better than anyone the facilities, services and incentives available to entice new industry. We want to entice new industry to the area before it all goes to Cape Breton. No one has more information than the minister on which to take the initiative in this regard.

Second, an area where the minister can also help is in facilitating, again with the co-operation of the company, the acquisition or transfer of the company land to the town for further development through the years to come, in order to diversify the town economy so that an event such as the present one will not recur. It is worth while noting, Mr. Speaker, that Calumet is the only town on the Ottawa river between Montreal and Ottawa that has no access to its river front, so that this request assumes a particular significance.

I brought this question to the attention of the minister in the adjournment debate—we should call it the late, late show tonight —because I wanted to put this point before him with as much force as possible. Even though the vast majority of the population involved are French speaking, I chose to address the house—and the delegation insisted that I do so—in English, to be sure that the minister would be able to listen to me directly without having to refer to his earpiece, although I know the minister handles himself quite well in the French language.

Therefore my question, Mr. Speaker, is: Does the minister contemplate any action and assistance to the people of Calumet, to help them help themselves out of a disastrous situation?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Régimbal), I am quite sorry to learn that the Canadian International Paper Co. is going to close down the sawmill at Calumet.

I am prepared—although I cannot offer industries, since I do not have them in my pockets—to make an effort and provide the co-operation of my department in looking for contractors who might be interested to go and settle in Calumet. I know that the Calumet area has lately been recognized as a designated area, and that may attract or influence some contractors to go and settle there.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I can offer my help and my sympathy to the townspeople and as I said before, like everyone of us, including the hon. members here in this house, we regret the closing down of that sawmill.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

[English]

INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR CANADIAN FILM PROCESSORS

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for keeping the minister a little later on this late, late show, but my remarks will take only a few moments. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister something about which he may not be aware, and which I think is very important.

There is currently being distributed throughout Canada a promotional envelope soliciting photo-finishing at American mail order prices. The address to which the films are to be mailed for processing is the capital of the film world, Hollywood, California, U.S.A. The prices advertised are considerably lower than Canadian prices for similar processing. This in itself is all right. There is nothing wrong with competition in business as long as it is fair competition. But the question here is whether this is fair competition.

If we look at the facts we see first that the processing procedures for film are fairly well standardized in the United States and Canada. The equipment is identical in most instances. However, Canadian film processors in the photographic industry obtain most of their equipment from the United States. This is also true of photographic chemicals and other supplies of that nature entering this country. And here we have the first snag: Present government policy dictates that Canadian film processors must pay duty on all equipment, chemicals and supplies entering this country. Thus the cost of all photographic supplies in Canada is much higher than in the United States largely due to our Canadian duties and taxes.

In addition, still looking at the facts, Canadian processors add to the general economy of the country, as the minister knows, by paying income taxes and other taxes incidental to their Canadian citizenship. About this they do not complain unduly, since they are as willing as any other Canadians to undertake their obligations of citizenship. However, when they see competition from the United States threatening their livelihood because of arbitrary decision by government, or government directive, they are understandably disturbed.

What is this arbitrary, bureaucratic directive? It is that although Canadian processors must pay taxes and duty, instead of helping them by lowering these taxes and duties the government has seen fit to try the hands across the border routine, and has permitted Canadian photo processing to be done in the United States and returned to this country duty free. I would submit to the minister that this is discrimination. Perhaps the minister is not aware that this sort of thing is going on. Certainly our American friends are aware of the situation and have been quick to seize on the excellent business afforded by our centennial year and by Expo, and have not hesitated to exploit the Canadian photo processing business for their own monetary advantage.

The industry is not asking for any special favour, but only for fair treatment. Either duty should be charged on the incoming processed film, or the photographic equipment, chemicals and other supplies used by our photographic industry should be duty free on entering this country. After all, our labour costs are somewhat lower here than they are in Hollywood and our industry could compete favourably with the United States industry if some of these arbitrary barriers to such competition were removed.

I would ask the minister to consider doing something about this. As he knows, this is a seasonal business, mainly conducted in the summer months. It is very important to our photo processors that something be done to help them in what is certainly their time of need. It does not help when they see envelopes like the one I now hold in my hand coming from Hollywood with the Canadian centennial emblem on them, giving a quasi-official stamp of Canadian approval to this method of soliciting business. I am sure the minister does not approve of this. Perhaps he will have some way to relieve this undue or unfair competition to the Canadian photo processing industry.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue has asked me to answer this question for him tonight, and so I regret the disappointment occasioned the hon. member for Saskatoon. However, I hope the information I have for him will be acceptable.

In answering the question I should first point out that the importations of which he speaks are not commercial importations, but are importations made by individual amateur photographers which consist of film exposed by them while abroad or at home in Canada. Much of this film was purchased by them at "process included" prices and returned for processing to the film manufacturer's processing plant.

[Mr. Brand.]

An exposed or processed film has for years been considered as being of no commercial value when imported for personal use and not for resale. Over the last year or so film processors in Canada have expressed views similar to those expressed by the hon. member. As a result, investigations were made to establish the validity of their claims. At that time little or no evidentiary support was available to uphold these claims or warrant a change in the non-commercial classification given to processed film imported by individuals for personal use and not for resale.

• (11:20 p.m.)

Recently the department entered into consultation with the Department of the Registrar General, who had requested that consideration be given in this matter to the consumer interests involved. At present the two departments are studying the price structure and other characteristics of the industry, taking into consideration the representations of the industry as well as those of the consumers.

I am advised that the results of these joint discussions may be expected in the near future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—APPLICATION TO STAFF OF BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, on April 6, 1966, the Prime Minister announced in the house his policy on bilingualism.

It will be recalled that these new methods of encouraging bilingualism will touch, in the first place, the positions requiring university training, second, executive and administrative positions and, finally, clerical and secretarial positions.

In the case of clerks and secretaries, a bonus will be paid in respect of clerical and secretarial positions in which there is a requirement for a knowledge of both official languages, provided the incumbents of such positions shall meet standards of competence established by the Public Service Commission.

In addition, the government was to take a certain number of general measures that would solidly establish bilingualism in the public service and in the federal capital.
