EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF CULTURAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND BELGIUM

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the house to table, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the French and English texts of the cultural agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the kingdom of Belgium.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CEASE FIRE NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Israeli army having established for Israel the right to live, if today's press reports are correct, I would now ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to make a statement to the house as to what progress, if any, is being made to bring about a cease fire. I realize that the United Nations security council will not meet until this afternoon, but I wonder if the Prime Minister is in a position to give some information to the people of Canada. I have found out that they are most anxious to know what is going on. While secrecy is important, at the same time as far as possible they should be able to secure information in this house rather than indirectly through the press.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the security council has been meeting, but more importantly the members of the security council have been discussing among themselves a resolution calling for an immediate cease fire. Those discussions have not resulted in an agreement among all the members of the security council on the terms of such a cease fire resolution. I believe the discussions are continuing at this moment with a view to a meeting of the security council later this afternoon.

We can hope there will be agreement among all the members, including the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, France and the United States of America on the terms of such a resolution. We can hope for that, but it is premature to say that it has been achieved. It is being considered at the moment, and as soon as there is any more definite information I would of course be very glad to give it to the house. But while these discussions are going on, and our own ambassador is participating in them, it is difficult for me to say more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I realize the limitations and I have a suggestion to make for consideration by the government; namely, that a secret session of the house should take place so that members may be given some idea as to what is the general situation, provided that a cease fire is not determined on in the meantime by the United Nations security council. In any event, regardless of whether it is or is not, I suggest that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs should be presented, if possible tomorrow, so that discussion may take place on this matter that exercises the hearts of free men everywhere.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it would be possible and perhaps desirable to arrange for a discussion in connection with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. I believe they would have to be brought back from the standing committee for that purpose; however, that could be easily done. It might be desirable to do that on Thursday, which is a longer day, but it could be done tomorrow if the situation required it.

So far as a secret session is concerned, this naturally would be held only in conditions of emergency. I am not suggesting that it might not be desirable to have a secret session, but at the moment I do not think it would be as useful as a public discussion. I shall keep in touch with my right hon. friend and the leaders of the other parties before we introduce the external affairs estimates tomorrow or Thursday, and if the situation requires some unusual procedure of the kind suggested perhaps we could agree on that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask him if it is a fact that the U.A.R. has severed diplomatic relations with the United States and, second, that Iraq, Kuwait and Algeria have decided to cut off oil deliveries to the United States and Britain because of their alleged support of Israel, and that there is speculation that Saudi Arabia and Libya may join such a boycott.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the report that I have seen. It has not been received officially from any of our embassies, but I believe this happens to be the case.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. While we all hope that a cease fire can be effected, and the terms of such an agreement are extremely important for the future peace and stability of the Middle East and indeed of the whole world, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if we can have assurance that the Canadian representative on the security council will urge that the terms of any cease fire include some provision for guaranteed access to the gulf of Aqaba by Israel, and a program for dealing with the problem of the Arab refugees.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, of course the question of most immediate importance is to stop the fighting. The resolution in question should do that. Discussions have been going on during most of the night, as a matter of fact, concerning the terms of what would appear to be such a simple resolution. While I do agree that this is the immediate objective, there should also be an arrangement made, if possible, in connection with this crisis so that a cease fire would not mean merely a return to the situation which existed before the cease fire. Whether it is possible to do that in a resolution which concerns also a cease fire or in a separate and subsequent resolution is one of the questions now being considered. In any event a cease fire will not be effective, except as a cease fire, if it means further action will be necessary through diplomatic or other channels to fight out the problem of access to the gulf of Aqaba. So this is a most complicated question. There is the necessity of stopping the fighting at once, and at the same time of doing more than stopping the fighting, to ensure that it will not recur.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand from the Prime Minister's remarks that the Canadian representative will be taking the position that any resolution calling for a cessation of hostilities will not require that Israel, for instance, withdraw from Sharm el Sheik in the event that Israel holds a position which guarantees access to the strait of Tiran?

Mr. Pearson: The terms of the resolution are being discussed not only by our representative but at this very moment I believe by the representatives of the U.S.S.R., the U.K., France and the United States of America. If it is possible for all members of the security council to agree on a resolution, including the four permanent members I have mentioned, I think it would be a happy result.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think it is desirable to be realistic as well as idealistic? Does he not believe that start lines are equally important in the question of a cease fire? In other words is it meant what was the position at that time of what took place last Sunday or a fortnight ago? Surely it is quite unrealistic merely to ask the belligerents to put down arms where they stand in the event that there are actually Arab incursions into Israel or Israeli incursions into Egypt.

Mr. Pearson: I think the representatives of the governments I mentioned, the U.S.S.R., the U.K., the United States of America, France and Canada, as well as others who are discussing this matter, are trying to do it in very realistic terms.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is practically a supplementary one to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Supposing the security council adopts, later on today, a resolution on the ceasefire in Israel and the United Arab Republic, what guarantee do we have that the belligerent countries will in fact cease fire, if the security council does adopt such a resolution?

Is the situation not so complicated that one does not know exactly what is going on, and what will be the attitude of the government in that eventuality, that is if the adopted resolution is not respected by the belligerents?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; this is a hypothetical situation in respect of which I hope I will not be asked to give a final opinion. I would point out, however, that if a resolution should be adopted which is agreeable to both the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. on a matter of this kind, that in itself would be quite a guarantee.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the truce supervisory organization headquarters was overrun, what provision has been made for re-establishment of the headquarters to either receive or issue directives, and what provision has been made for the safety of the personnel of this supervisory commission which I think has 20 Canadians on it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have no information at the moment that would suggest Canadian personnel with the United Nations truce and supervisory organization have been personnally affected in terms of their personal security by the situation in the Middle East. UNTSO has now taken up new headquarters, but I cannot give my hon. friend information as to exactly where because I do not have it.

I may say that General Rikhye, Commander of the United Nations emergency force, has been cut off from the main body of this force and I believe some 20 members of UNEF are with him, as well as two representatives of the United Nations truce supervisory organization.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us whether communications have been re-established between the organization and UN headquarters in New York?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As of twelve o'clock, no.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As far as is possible and appropriate, can we be informed as to the approximate positions of the Arab and Egyptian armies? Has Egyptian territory been invaded and, if so, to what extent? Has the Egyptian army invaded Israel and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it has not been possible for our officials on the spot to obtain any information from the governments in question as to where their forces are at the present time.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Following a United Nations security council resolution calling for a cease fire, would it automatically be backed up by UN troops?

Mr. Pearson: Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker. The resolutions being considered now during these informal discussions are resolutions which do not include implementation by the use of force.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Will he indicate to the house how a cease fire could be arranged if there is no general knowledge as to the approximate positions of the troops?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, that also was my question, one that was rather obvious.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. According to an air force protocol officer much valuable equipment was left by the Canadians in the Gaza strip, and according to him this has been lost. Will the minister inform the house as to the value of this equipment?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): That is not my information, Mr. Speaker. The only Canadian equipment left behind of which I have knowledge are two generators and two mule forklift trucks. They were a number of years old and had served their usefulness to the extent that the commander felt they were not worth retrieving. Therefore, to the best of my information, all national property was retrieved. Any other equipment that was left in Egypt belongs to the United Nations.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could send the minister this statement in order that he may check into it.

Mr. Hellyer: I would be glad to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the inability or reluctance of the Prime Minister to tell the house what is the relative position of the respective forces in the belligerent area in the Middle East, I wonder whether perhaps the Department of External Affairs could consult the correspondents of the C.B.C. who have been sent from Ottawa to the battle scene to report back to us by radio, to see whether they could advise us as to the exact location of the forces.

Mr. Pearson: The positions of the forces may have changed since my hon. friend asked the question fifteen minutes ago.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING RIGHT OF PRIVACY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the widespread interest in the right of privacy, as the most valuable right of civilized man, has the government given consideration to the introduction of legislation after the fashion of the bill introduced by the member for Kootenay West, to provide that wire tapping and eavesdropping be prohibited except for the administration of justice and the security of the nation?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will be pleased to learn that I have not changed the views I expressed some time ago in relation to a private member's bill; but I believe I ought to await the report of the royal commission on security before making a final decision.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Mention was made of the royal commission on security. Would the minister say whether that commission is now sitting, where it has its location so that representations may be made to it, and whether it intends to sit in various parts of the country?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I have not been in close touch with the commission. I expect to appear before them as a witness very shortly here in Ottawa. To the best of my knowledge and subject to confirmation, they have restricted their hearings to date to this city.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Solicitor General whether the terms of reference of the commission include the area of wire tapping and bugging, or were the terms of reference restricted to security provisions within the public service?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Pennell: The terms of reference, of course, are a matter to be determined by the members of the commission, but I recall that the terms include investigation into security matters keeping in mind both the interests of the state and the rights of the individual.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ATTITUDE OF BOARD RESPECTING UNION REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Does the minister intend to make a statement in the house in connection with the meetings held between the Quebec ministers and the C.N.T.U. leaders with regard to the intentions of the C.L.R.B. concerning labour representation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the question was out of order. The hon. member is asking the minister to report on discussions which may have taken place outside the house and which obviously do not come under the administrative responsibility of the federal government.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to ask a question that is in order, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell the house whether the cabinet will ask the Canada Labour Relations Board to announce its intentions with regard to union representation?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member could, with profit, place this question on the order paper.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

WHOOPING CRANES—EXPERIMENT IN INCUBATING EGGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is based on a report that Canadian wildlife authorities have co-operated with the Americans in obtaining some whooping crane eggs, which have been taken to an American naturalist to incubate and try to raise the young birds. Would the minister give immediate consideration to securing the services for this purpose of Mr. Al Oeming, head of the Alberta game farm and Canada's leading zoologist and naturalist, who is the best qualified of all people in North America in raising cranes, so we may have a successful experiment along these lines? Mr. Speaker, the minister nodded his head, and I was not sure whether he agreed with my suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was making a suggestion rather than asking a question, and I did not think that was in order at this time.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

HALIFAX—PRACTICE FOLLOWED IN MAKING PROMOTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, and I ask it in order that the labour problems in Halifax may be alleviated. Is the practice being followed by the National Harbours Board in Halifax with regard to promotions consistent with the practice being followed in other N.H.B. ports?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Forrestall: With respect, Mr. Speaker, we have in Halifax a very difficult labour situation affecting the raisers of chickens and other livestock, and this practice has been followed for some time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member thinks I am wrong and this is a matter which requires immediate attention, it can be discussed later today.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It arises out of reports of the visit of Prime Minister Holt of Australia. Can the Prime Minister tell us what was the Canadian response to the suggestion of Prime Minister Holt that it was unlikely there would be a meeting this year of commonwealth prime ministers? Was there agreement on that thought?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think it is generally understood—Mr. Wilson also brought up the matter when he was here—that it is not likely there will be a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers this year. But of course that will depend on developments during the rest of the year.

OIL

POSSIBLE INCREASED EXPORTS DUE TO EVENTS IN MIDDLE EAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question with reference to the petroleum industry. Has there been any discussion between the Canadian government and the governments of Great Britain and the United States concerning greater exports of petroleum from Canada in view of the dislocation of the industry in the Middle East?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there have been no discussions directly concerned with the present political situation, but the Prime Minister may have had conversations on that subject of which I am not aware.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can say there was at least one recent discussion in which I pointed out how secure Canadian sources of petroleum products are.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether measures are being contemplated to facilitate shipping western oil to the eastern ports for export in case the Middle East oil wells are closed?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Not in recent days or weeks, Mr. Speaker.

EXPO '67

POSSIBLE PRESENTATION TO CANADA OF PAVILIONS ON SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with regard to the recent visit of the Prime Minister of Australia. It relates to his very kind offer yesterday to present the Australian pavilion on the Expo site to Canada as a permanent institution. I wonder whether action is being taken by the government to encourage other exhibitors to take similar action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

POLLUTION

MONTREAL—REPORTED DUMPING OF INSECTICIDES INTO ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has his attention been drawn to complaints about the dumping of insecticides into the St. Lawrence river near the Expo site? If so, is his department conducting an investigation into this complaint?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but my department took part in the exercises previous to present events.

[Later:]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, arising from the fact that I have been sitting here trying to figure out what was the minister's answer to my first question. Would he advise us whether his department has some responsibility in connection with the pollution of the St. Lawrence river and complaints concerning the dumping of insecticides into the St. Lawrence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, the minister certainly gave me a vague answer. He is entitled to do this, but I think he intended to give me a real answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this might be done at some other time. I suggest to the hon. member that the supplementary question is not in order.

TRANSPORTATION

REPORT ON MARITIME STUDY—OPPORTUNITY FOR REPRESENTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the lack of any favourable comment on the consultants' report of transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces, can the minister say whether he has devised a method to receive such comments and briefs, and if not, in what way will complaints about the said report be received?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think, sir, the hon. gentleman has been reading the wrong newspapers.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a supplementary question, will the minister state whether the government is in a position to receive any comments, favourable or otherwise, on this report?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very glad to receive representations from any interested person or organization. I indicated that during the discussion of my estimates, and the offer still stands.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have another supplementary question. Is there any danger that the minister and the government might act quickly on this report?

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF ABANDONMENT HEARINGS UNTIL LEGISLATION PROCLAIMED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask him whether he is prepared to accede to the request of the Manitoba Branch Line Association to postpone any abandonment hearings until such time as part I of Bill C-231 is proclaimed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think, sir, I answered that question quite some time ago.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether any remedial order in council has been passed to reconcile the guaranteed prairie rail network with the assurances he gave last fall. The minister did say there was an error and that a remedial order in council might be pending.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the order has been passed and published in the Canada Gazette, but I confess I have been away from Ottawa for a week and I have not checked the Gazette myself. However, I will do so.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

SELECTION OF BUILDERS FOR NEW DESTROYER ESCORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether he would be kind enough to advise the house whether it has now been confirmed that the Davie shipbuilding yard has been selected as the lead yard for two of the four new destroyer escorts.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): There has not yet been a final decision in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

U.S. CITIZENS IN CANADA TO ESCAPE ARMY DRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he give us any estimate as to how many United States citizens may be visiting Canada at the present time in order to avoid the army draft?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question which asks for information of a statistical nature and therefore cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Cowan: May I put it at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN STOPS IN LOTBINIÈRE COUNTY, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): I should like to join my Conservative friend for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) to discuss the following question at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

My question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask whether he intends to suggest reconsideration of the decision taken by the C.N.R. to eliminate the stop-overs of its trains at Manseau, Ville Leroy, Laurier Station, important centres in the constituency of Lotbinière?

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACLEAN, QUEENS—TWENTY THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege and in the absence of the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Kennedy), who I believe is attending memorial services in Normandy, may I take this opportunity in spite of the very grave world crisis at the present time, to point out to the house that this is the twenty third anniversary of D-day, which was the commencement of the liberation of Europe and the securing at very considerable sacrifice of freedoms which we seem sometimes to take for granted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 1, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, when I concluded my remarks last Thursday evening I indicated that I would reserve any further comments on the budget until I more closely could examine the minister's remarks and their implications. My immediate impulse was to say simply that as there was nothing in the budget, there was probably not much more to say. My belief was that it was a do nothing budget.

Further study has caused me to conclude that the minister has been very remiss in his duty to Canadians as a whole. He reminds me of somebody who has more or less washed his hands of the whole sorry business. His attitude and remarks the other evening were those of an auditor, not a minister of finance. He appeared to be simply reporting to parliament that it really was not his fault if expenditures were up 20 per cent in the current fiscal period. Nor, he implied, should he be held responsible in any way if we face the highest cost of living in our history, a cost of living which he admits is going to increase. It would seem he has no control over cabinet expenditures. He appeared to bow to the inevitable and simply accept his colleagues' demands for higher and higher government expenditures. I said then that we have the largest spending, the highest taxing, the highest cost of living and almost the greatest deficit in our history. I repeat that accusation now.

The minister has done nothing to control the spending habits of his cabinet colleagues. This approach, Mr. Speaker is having and will have very serious results for Canadians and Canada. It not only endangers our economic situation in the world at large but could cause the decline of our whole federal system of government. I did not wish to heap too much criticism on the minister's budget the other evening beyond noting that it was a "ho-hum" budget doing little for this country. While it does result in a great deficit, I cannot make myself use some of the phrases heaped on the Conservative government of earlier years when it ran a deficit to help bring Canada out of a recession.

Perhaps there is merit, however, in quoting some of the views of members of the Liberal party on deficits. On June 22, 1961, for instance, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) said, as reported on page 6887 of Hansard:

> What a farce. This government has the integrity of an alley cat. After its whinings and howlings it refuses to take responsibility for its financial misdemeanours.

Then this gentleman went on to say:

> The minister has said that this is not an ordinary budget. That is a mouthful even for the minister. He called it an economic budget. In truth it will turn out to be an economic bungle.

The present defence minister went on to attack the then minister of finance by calling him a blushing bride, one who puts woollen stockings in a washtub of boiling water and finds on removing them that they have shrunk to a considerably smaller size. I quote his words:

> We wonder to what extent the Canadian dollar will be shrunk as a result of the monetary expansion which the minister of finance may have to prescribe in the existing circumetances.

Then, along came the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). His major contribution to the debate began with these words:

> I thought someone on the other side would have been able to find something to say in favour of the budget, but in fact I am not in the least surprised that they have not been able to do so.

With these descriptive phrases, he declared our budget of that time to be the greatest anticlimax in history.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Then the present Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) had her turn. She said:

Then she went on:

> We wonder why the Canadian people are restless and afraid. Why do they have no confidence? Why will they not invest their money in Canada?

I am not one of those, Mr. Speaker, who can use such telling phrases in regard to the Liberal budget or really cast such reflections on the work of any man. However, I cite these remarks as examples of what the present government members think of budgets which produce deficits. These quotations from these ministers go back to 1961. They were castigating the deficit of a Conservative government, but the deficit of that day was not like this Liberal deficit. The economic requirements of the day made the Conservative deficit good, common sense, something that helped the country, something which created jobs. The deficit of that day did not bring more inflation as this Liberal deficit is bound to do.

The other evening the minister casually brushed over the effect on the money markets, interest rates, international affairs and domestic prices of his tremendous call for cash to finance this government's operations. He noted that this year he will require $1,520 million, double last year's figure of $719 million, to meet requirements over and above those which taxes can provide. Where will the money come from? It can only come from printing more money, creating bank credit, raising taxes later in the year or raising large sums of money from the public by selling government bonds and other securities.

I should like to say a word here about the projected deficit. Let us not fool ourselves. If the government predicts a deficit of $741 million the government probably expects a deficit of $1 billion, the largest by far in Canada's history. There will be supplementary estimates, price increases, and a great desire to go on spending to try to make everyone happy in anticipation of a Liberal leadership race and a general election. All the signs point to the government having to move into the money market in a very big way.

The minister said that we face a major task in borrowing cash this year. As I said before, when the Conservative government used deficit financing the economy was far below its capacity. We used deficit financing to create jobs. Today, however, the Canadian economy is almost at capacity. Prices are rising.

Government spending alone is sending hundreds of millions of dollars more chasing after goods and services.

The other night the minister sort of glossed over the fact that unemployment throughout Canada stands at 3.5 per cent, 2.5 per cent in Ontario and 2.1 per cent in the prairies. There was no mention made of the figure for the Atlantic region. Actually it is 6.5 per cent for 1966 and 10.6 per cent for the month of March compared with 3.9 per cent for Ontario for March. The unemployment figure for Quebec is nearly twice as high as that of Ontario and in the Atlantic provinces it is nearly three times as high.

As the minister noted, prices are now 7.3 per cent above what they were two years ago. It is obvious, sir, that the grocery dollar is getting smaller and smaller. At the same time that prices are rising the government must attempt to raise funds of its own in competition with private business and with individuals, so in effect the price of borrowing money rises too. Recently we have seen interest rates flatten out slightly, with a small increase in lendable funds. We can also expect, now that the chartered banks have been allowed to charge higher interest rates, that there may be some increase in bank credit or the supply of money. This latter trend, which helps encourage business expansion by providing productive capacity, suddenly must come up against government competition for the same funds.

What does it mean? It means interest rates will tend to stay high. It means that bond prices tend to go soft and the corporation bond markets go soft. Here is what the Montreal Gazette reported on June 3, the day after the budget. The Gazette quotes a Montrealer as saying:

• (3:20 p.m.)

"We're bound to see the government do a fair amount of new financing this summer and fall."

Then there is this comment:

...and the feeling was that until the money market finds out what the government plans to do "we're walking on egg shells."

The federal government is competing with every businessman, with every manufacturer who wants to borrow money to modernize his plant and to expand and create new jobs, with every retailer who wants to borrow money to improve his store and expand his inventory and with every citizen who wants to borrow money to buy a new home or to send his children to college. This, I think, would be acceptable if it were necessary but the huge government spending is not necessary.

I have more respect for the minister than to think that he has casually brushed off any concern about where the money is coming from, although at times he seems to have given up hope in the wave of his colleagues' spend, spend, spend philosophy. For instance, at one point in his speech the minister warned that too many Canadians are trying to take whatever they can get. He goes on to say that some might say that government spending and taxation should be less but then tries to absolve himself by saying that the level of spending is in accordance with the views of this parliament and adds, I think a bit sadly, that "in any event this alternative is not open to us."

We just cannot spend like this without knowing where the money is coming from. I wonder whether the minister is aware of information about trends that he has not passed on to this house? Is the minister counting on a bonanza from Expo that might provide hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign exchange, which in turn could ease this country's need for United States funds? If this is so, we should be told. Does the minister expect, for example, some radical change in trends resulting from the United States auto pact which may greatly enhance this country's position? If he does, we should be told. Does the minister expect some bounty from a new wheat sale or some other transaction? If so, we should be told. Does the minister contemplate another budget in the fall in which he can raise taxes? If he does, we should be told. We have a right to know if the minister has a rabbit in his hat or a pigeon up his sleeve. If he has we want him to pull them out now.

Sir, my concern with the financial gyrations of this government is that it has a total disregard for the expenditure of the peoples' money. One would think it had gone out of style, and certainly the government's lack of concern is borne out by figures. True, the various ministers responsible for departments, including the Prime Minister, are responsible for having put forward their demands, but cannot the brake be applied? Can there be no slowing up along this line?

I would mention three examples that show a gross disregard for the peoples' dollar. First of all, I claim that the government has gone wild with building up new departments and as a consequence of that, with building up the civil service. Though certain new departments have taken over parts of the staff of former departments, the original departments have grown to exceed their previous establishments. I have not hunted out all the instances where Parkinson's law has operated to a point where I am convinced that the citizens of Canada are being "had", but I would mention the Department of Trade and Commerce, which was to lose part of its staff to the Department of Industry, and the Department of Labour which was to lose part of its establishment to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Both trade and commerce and labour are now larger than ever.

To show how this all mounts up to an ever-increasing charge on the Canadian taxpayer I wish to mention a few figures. Total civil salaries and wages for 1966-67 were estimated to be $1,087 million odd and the actual amount turned out to be $1,165 million odd. The actual figure was larger than the estimated figure by about $78 million. In 1966-67 the actual figure was $1,165 million odd, and in 1965-66 the actual figure was $1,018 million odd. In one year, therefore, the actual increase was $146 million. The 1967-68 estimated civil salaries and wages are $1,307 million. The 1966-67 actual figure, as I mentioned earlier, was $1,165 million odd, the estimated increase so far being over $142 million. I would imagine that when the final figures are available the increase over last year will be in the neighbourhood of $200 million.

In these two years the total payroll will have increased in the neighbourhood of $350 million and there will be some 25,000 additional employees. Many devoted civil servants, of course, are grossly underpaid but surely there comes a time to give some consideration to the people who are being taxed to pay these salaries and to pay for this tremendous escalation in the number of public servants.

I wish to mention also the estimates for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The actual expenditure for 1966-67 was $114 million plus. The actual expenditure for 1965-66 was $99 million plus, the increase being $15 million plus. The estimated figure for 1967-68 is approximately $144 million. As I say, the actual 1966-67 figure was $114 million plus. The estimated increase for this current fiscal period is, therefore, $29,476,000 for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The total increase for two years is roughly $44,500,000 or 44.5 per cent.

Over the years I have not been one of those members of parliament who have continuously belaboured the C.B.C. In fact, I was acting minister reporting to the house for some six months during the illness of the late Hon. George Nowlan. But I do ask, Mr. Speaker, where are we going? There just has to be a change of attitude on the part of the government toward this reckless spending.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. member permit a short question?

Mr. Monteith: Yes.

Mr. Sharp: I should be the last one to object to any lecture on the virtues of economy from the other side, but I should like to ask the hon. gentleman, for the sake of the record, to explain the basis of his suggestion that our expenditures will rise by 20 per cent this year. I can find nothing to justify that statement, either in the record or in what I have said.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Monteith: I arrived at that figure the other evening by comparing the estimates of the relevant years. I do not have my estimates book with me at this moment, but when I do I shall be pleased to prove the correctness of what I have said and place it on record subsequently. The estimates for this year are 20 per cent greater than the estimates for last year.

The third area about which I complain, among many others I might mention if time permitted, is the allotment for the Company of Young Canadians. This venture is the responsibility of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and I have heard rumours to the effect he now wishes he had never been gullible enough to fall for the gimmick. In its first year, 1965-66, expenditure on this project was approximately $45,000. In 1966-67 the actual expenditure was $1,208,000. It is proposed that in 1967-68 $2,445,000 should be spent. I realize that hon. gentlemen opposite will not consider $2.5 million worth worrying about in comparison with the over-all expenditures of this government. But, after all, this is the taxpayers' money, and an expenditure of this size should be weighed just as carefully as the increase of $115 million in the Department of National Defence.

What value are Canadian citizens getting for their money? The executive director indicates there are some 46 employees on the staff, of whom 26 are stationed in Ottawa and the remainder in five regional offices. The whimsical guess of the Prime Minister that there would be some 2,500 volunteers certainly never materialized. My understanding is that as of the last report there were 66 volunteers. If this is so, the budget works out to over $37,000 per volunteer. I will not go into details about the discreditable conduct of some of these volunteers, which I understand went beyond mere peccadillos. Some of these people are undoubtedly well-meaning young Canadians. However, the facts are well known to all of us; they have been well publicized.

I simply say to the Prime Minister: Get rid of this monster of which in the past you have been so proud. Save the Canadian taxpayers' money or, better still, apply this $2.5 million to the cost of the 10,000 scholarships you promised to deserving students, an undertaking which has never been fulfilled.

I cannot but become exasperated with the government when they allow such unnecessary expenditures as those I have mentioned to continue unchecked until they become a burden on the taxpayer. I have given three examples. The minister has the effrontery to suggest that Canadians as a whole have been overspending. I call on him to practice what he preaches, to act as a minister of finance, not as a corporation president reporting a bad year to his shareholders. This budget not only accomplished nothing but it compounds the errors of the past.

I am not alone when I suggest there is something wrong about the minister's approach to the budget and to the financial and fiscal prospects before us. I wish to quote from several articles which will bear out what I have said and underline the serious consequences of this government's policies. First I should like to refer to an editorial in the Ottawa Journal of May 26 in which it was stated:

> What the country wants is an assurance that the government has devoted itself to economic planning. Specifically, a promise is wanted that the cost of living will not continue its monotonous march upwards. The government can no longer pretend that inflation is not hurting persons with fixed incomes. Further inflation will increase the price of exports in a world market where competition grows ever keener.

The writer of this editorial adds: "Surely, the minister can promise to put a rein on rising costs." What did the same newspaper say on Friday, June 2?

> Mr. Sharp's budget is anti-climax
> None has been more diligent than the minister in warning about the perils of inflation. These warnings are repeated with the utmost force in the budget speech delivered last night. But nothing is done to reduce the perils.

I should like to draw attention also to what Mr. Fraser Robertson had to say in the Globe and Mail on June 5. It is quite revealing.

> In the past several years, the public has acquired a good deal of experience in the methods of frenzied financiers and it therefore should have no great difficulty in recognizing the glibness of Finance Minister Sharp for what it is. In his budget speech, which is the equivalent of the annual report to shareholders from the president of a financial institution, the finance minister put up a bold front, yet he was unable to conceal the one important fact, that the nation's financial operations are out of control.
> The finance minister's efforts to explain away the frenzied state of the operations he is supposed to control also had a close resemblance to the excuses put forward by several of our more notorious recent bankrupts.

Later the article says:

> Even if a nation does not formally go into bankruptcy, mismanagement of its finances can ruin its citizens—
> The budget presented to parliament by the finance minister is undoubtedly the most inflationary budget ever brought down in Canada. The present government has achieved insolvency on both national and current account at a time when money is tight and is rapidly getting tighter and costlier.

Again:

> The assumption of the finance minister appears to be that since the government has been able to raise money as needed in the past, it will not encounter any difficulty in the future. Any such assumption must stem either from arrogance or from foolishness, neither of which is becoming a responsible minister.

And to conclude this series of quotations from Mr. Fraser Robertson's article:

> For an organization as confused as is the government, on the minister's own admission, it may be, indeed, that the best method of planing is to assume that nothing will work out as forecast. But for business and even for most individuals such uncertainty is the kiss of death.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The following article by Mr. Claude Ryan in Le Devoir is extremely interesting. This is an English translation.

> While Mr. Sharp preaches moderation to everyone, it is revealing to study the actions of the federal government....
> These proposals indicate that the federal government should itself take a serious cure of foresight and discipline. Without putting into jeopardy any of the basic programs urgently needed, one cannot help but worry about a certain free spending which continues to rule in several sectors of the federal administration.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce wrote the Prime Minister under date of May 19 as follows, having compared our expenditures with United States averages:

> In the light of the foregoing developments, the executive council is most concerned that insufficient consideration is being given to the effects of high government expenditures and its concomitant high taxation on Canada's economic advance and its competitive position. The labelling of various government programs as "free" should be avoided and the cost to the taxpayer should be clearly spelled out at the time they are proposed.

We wish to express our deep concern to you and would welcome your assurance that the dangerous trend towards ever higher government expenditures will be fully recognized and arrested and that only essential government expenditures will be undertaken.

I wish to quote one paragraph from a report presented to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association ninety-sixth annual general meeting. This is the report of the vice-president and general manager, J. C. Whitelaw, Q.C. Referring to the growth of Canada's gross national product he stated:

As it turned out, almost half of the 10.9 per cent growth in Canada's gross national product last year was due to higher prices rather than to increased output. Excluding the effect of price changes, the real growth rate of the economy dropped to 5.9 per cent from 6.9 per cent in 1965.

I quote the following from the Gazette of Wednesday, May 31:

Representatives of industry attending the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association here are obviously disgruntled, even seriously disturbed, by the fiscal performance of governments in Canada. Their thinking on this issue has permeated most of the sessions....

The brunt of the manufacturers' arguments rested on the dwindling competitive advantages of businessmen in this country vis-à-vis foreign powers. In most cases, they found their rallying points in the escalating expenditures by the public sector, which leave no hope for tax relief in the finance minister's budget tomorrow night.

We all realize how true that was. The figures I am going to quote could be obtained from the public accounts but I take them from an article by Peter Newman in the Ottawa Journal of June 2. Referring to the present government he wrote:

Since it came into office, federal expenditures have risen by $3,115 million—from $6,585 million for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963 to the $9,700 million for the next fiscal year in the current budget.

That is an increase of over 47 per cent in gross expenditures during a period of five years. Where are we going, Mr. Speaker?

An editorial in the Gazette of June 3 contained the following:

Though another contribution to inflation has been the massive increases in government spending, apparently little will be done to check this trend. The estimates for 1967-68 forecast the biggest spending program in Canada's history. Federal expenditures are growing this year almost twice as fast as the federal-provincial tax committee expected them to do. The very fact that the government, in a buoyant year, should find itself with a sizeable deficit should in itself be sufficient warning that spending is running ahead too fast.

I was most interested in a report that appeared in the Toronto Star of June 2 which referred to the minister's budget as a rejection of two extremes. However, it also contained the following paragraph:

Trade Minister Robert Winters, for example, told a Toronto Rotary club recently: "I'm a businessman at heart. I like balanced budgets."

This is another indication of some kind of division within the cabinet. Did the Minister of Trade and Commerce agree with the Minister of Finance on the budget he presented, or just what is the situation? I have here a press summary of a speech which the Minister of Trade and Commerce delivered at Saint John on June 1. It reads as follows:

Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters today expressed concern that while Canada's foreign sales were booming, Canadian-made products were losing ground at home.

I could not agree more with that statement and would add that textiles are probably losing the most. Textile manufacturers have just reason to fear the future. I have here a copy of the letter which they sent to the Minister of Finance. It is addressed to the Hon. Michael Sharpe, Ottawa; I presume that was an error. Anyway it sets out their predicament in detail. I wish I had time to read it all, but surely the minister realizes the seriousness of the situation with regard to the textile industry as a whole. However, he has done nothing about it.

A report in the Toronto Star of Friday, June 2 told how builders received the budget. It stated:

Metro builders are disappointed.

"Three cheers for nothing," said one spokesman, Harry Sadler, on hearing last night's federal budget did not include removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Such a move might have helped trim the cost of the average new home in metro by about $1,000.

Need I go further, Mr. Speaker? I think it is obvious what a disappointing budget this has been to all concerned in all walks of life. What then do we have? We have a monstrous budget deficit because of careless overspending with all of its evil effects upon the economy—higher prices, higher interest rates, tapering capital investment—because the minister has given up, bowing to the spending whims of his colleagues. We have a budget which means higher consumer prices, and offers no incentives for business and individuals to increase productivity. We have a budget which reveals that the minister has given up trying to control or project the finances of the Canadian economy.

The minister admits that he does not know where the money is going to come from, and that he does not know the effects of the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations on the Canadian economy except that he expects they could be adverse toward certain Canadian industries. He admits that he does not know what will be the position of the government in respect of the Carter report. He admits that he does not know what will be the final result of the study by the federal-provincial committee on the fiscal structure. In his budget he admits that this government does not know how to give this country sound economic leadership. The finances of this country are out of hand. All this, of course, exists in the face of ever-increasing taxes imposed by this government.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this house should be given an opportunity to express its disapproval of the gross mismanagement by the government of the financial and fiscal affairs of this Canada of ours. Consequently I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard):

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This government has failed miserably to set an example of responsibility by its refusal to reduce taxation, by its reckless increase in governmental expenditures, thus contributing to the steadily rising cost of production to the great detriment of the Canadian economy and to the sharp increase in the cost of living, already over-burdensome to the Canadian people.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am rather at a loss to know how one can discuss a budget of this sort. In fact one is almost obliged to write a budget in order to afford an opportunity for criticism because this one has so little material content. We are told by the press, and we always believe the press, that there were 12,000 words in the speech given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to this house on Thursday night. It appeared to me that it was more in the nature of a sermon than an economic report. In fact I could almost see the minister in his Geneva gown standing in the pulpit, wagging his finger to the house and preaching the virtues of thrift and hard work.

I suppose one could say that the minister has shown his ability to care in a very efficient manner for the status quo, leaving it as it is. This is rather interesting at a time when the latest figures indicate there has been virtually no economic growth in the last 12 months. In fact what the minister really is telling us is that he is going to hold us steadily at dead centre.

In order to criticize this budget one really would have to write a new one. There are, however, one or two suggestions I might make to the minister of things he could have done. Unfortunately he prevented himself from doing one of them when he gave an undertaking that the recommendations of the Carter commission report regarding depletion allowances and tax exemption privileges for oil and mining companies would not be imposed, I believe he said, for five years. So he tied his hands on that score.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to create a wrong impression. What I talked about was a three year exemption. I gave no indication of my attitude in respect of depletion allowances.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You are perfectly right. I am lifted up, but my optimism fades when I read the 12,000 words and find there is no mention of following Mr. Carter's recommendations in respect of depletion allowances despite the fact that many economists have been commenting on them with approval and have suggested that they should be implemented, even though the government quite rightly is not prepared to deal with the report in extenso until it has had an opportunity to analyse it and present the white paper which the minister promised the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

There is another point which it seems to me the minister could have covered without waiting for a comprehensive tax review in accordance or otherwise with the Carter Commission report. He could have reduced the sales tax in a selective way to encourage investment in those sectors of the economy which I believe most of us consider should be stimulated. I see no reason for the minister not having considered reducing it in a selective way with regard to materials for housing because I am sure he, like all of us, is only too well aware of the housing crisis which exists in Canada. A simple way to at least break this crisis would have been to have instituted a system of rebates on materials used in the construction of housing. One might split it up still further and suggest this should have been done in respect of housing for those people who are at a certain economic level. These would be minor, if you like, but nevertheless quite important alterations in our fiscal structure which might well have helped some of the people in our society who at the present time are suffering from the minister's rather careful and cautious approach.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am planning to trespass perhaps on the indulgence of the house. I know I shall be in order but perhaps not quite proper when I suggest I do not intend to spend any more time on a 12,000-word sermon which really contained nothing but pious exhortation. Also at this time I am not prepared to write a budget for the minister, although obviously he needs someone to do it.

I should like to deal with a matter which may seem to be far removed from the budget but which I am sure is in the minds of all of us. If the government of Canada should follow the suggestions I will make—and I am convinced it will have to—it will have a very distinct effect on future budgets. I am referring, of course, to the tragic situation in the Middle East. I do not propose to discuss the outbreak of hostilities as such. There is nothing useful to be said in that regard; it is too tragic for any words I might have. Still less am I planning to assess blame to the two antagonists in this struggle. Even if it were possible to do so it would serve no useful purpose to enter into a debate concerning who struck first or second. The point is that they have reached this position at the present time.

I think it is time, however, that we began to assign the ultimate responsibility for this appalling situation. The tragic irony of the situation in the Middle East today is that the two peoples of the world who of all people have been persecuted, exploited, oppressed, victims of discrimination and of imperialism by the so-called Christian world of today are at each other's throats largely as a result of the machinations and broken pledges of the western civilization. On the one hand we have the Jews, dispersed and persecuted, discriminated against by virtually every country of the so-called Christian world, many of whom finally were consigned to the horrors of Belsen and Buchenwald. On the other hand, we have the Arabs, victims of the imperial colonial designs of half of Europe who were forced to dance to the degrading tune of their masters. Both are living indictments of the immorality, bigotry, greed and cynicism of our boasted western civilization. It is neither the Arabs nor the Jews who today stand in the dock but rather Christendom itself.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Memory tends to fade quite easily, and there will be many even in this house who are too young to remember those dark days when news began to seep out of nazi Germany revealing horrors that were almost unbelievable. At that time we did not believe the reports. We found it impossible to believe that man could sink so low as to inflict these horrors, these bestial atrocities on fellow human beings, but finally we had to believe it. There was no escape. We felt at that time that evil incarnate was abroad in the world threatening to destroy everything decent in human relations, threatening to destroy the frail citadel of humanity that mankind had been able to build with great difficulty in the long struggle from his brutish beginnings.

The nazis taught the world a sharp lesson with sickening clarity. They taught us the lesson of the depths of the abyss that lies under the thin veneer of civilization, the depths of evil to which man can sink. Sadly, the world did not learn that lesson, did not learn that the pathway of evil which led to Belsen, Buchenwald and Dachau started in the minds and hearts of otherwise decent men and women who tolerated and permitted injustices, indignities and humiliations, however seemingly trivial these injustices and humiliations appeared to be.

All across this country there are institutions with invisible but clearly legible signs which say, no Jews need apply.

Mr. Cowan: I like your sermon better.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I did not hear what the sapient member for York-Humber said.

An hon. Member: It was not complimentary.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not imagine it was. All across this country we have institutions and organizations which, as I say, not having the courage to print the words clearly, have these invisible signs which are all too legible to our citizens and say, no Jews need apply. Most of our decent citizens, and most Canadians are decent, are ashamed of this situation. We should be more than ashamed, we should be terrified, because this is the path that led to the horrors which overwhelmed the world 30 years ago.

I do not propose to recite the history of the beginnings of Israel. It is being rehashed today in all the papers and magazines by all the political commentators. I may say I had some grave misgivings as to the wisdom of the establishment of the state of Israel, and in the light of events since perhaps those misgivings were not ill-founded. Nevertheless, I knew deep down in my heart that had I been a Jew 20 years ago I would have been in their ranks. I would have said to myself, after all these years, after all these centuries during which my people have been persecuted, humiliated and degraded, by God, the time has come when I am going to develop some place on this globe where I and my children can stand on our feet with dignity as befits human beings. Yes, I am quite sure that is the way I would have thought and acted.

Now we come to the ultimate tragedy of the Jewish people and the Jewish situation, and that is the price which had to be paid for the establishment of the state of Israel. There is always a price to be paid for anything achieved in this world, and all too often the bill is presented to the wrong people. When Israel was established as a direct result of endless years of persecution, humiliation and discrimination, at which all too many in the so-called Christian world blinked their eyes, the bill was presented not to the persecutors, not to the people who tolerated these unseemly and violent conditions, but to the other people, also Semitic, who also have been persecuted by our so-called western civilization.

An hon. Member: Turkey.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member suggests it was Turkey, and he is quite right. We did very little about Turkey, and after that every European nation almost without fail moved in on the Arab peoples. Then, just after they had struggled out of the suffocating and degrading clutch of European colonialism we said to the Arabs, move over and make room for the victims of our bigotry, our cruelty, our colonialism and our cynicism.

While undoubtedly there were many Arabs who left voluntarily and while undoubtedly many of them may have been urged to do so, others nevertheless—this is an undeniable fact—were driven out of the country under conditions of savage brutality. Today they remain rotting away in full sight of the lands from which they were expelled or fled.

We are now told that it is part of Arab strategy to keep them there, and this may be so. Certainly as long as they are there they tend to keep the flames of Arab resentment burning high. I have to ask myself this question: What else could the Arab peoples do with them? These are poverty-stricken countries in the main, ill developed and with problems of their own. Can they be asked to absorb a million refugees? What would Canada do if we were suddenly asked tomorrow morning to admit a million Negro refugees from the southern states or a million people from the slums of London, Manchester or Liverpool? You and I know what we would do. We would say we could not do it, that it was impossible. Yet Canada is a fairly wealthy country and fairly well developed. We would do almost nothing. I might say that when we did have an opportunity to offer asylum to Jewish people fleeing from persecution we turned them from our doors.

Part of the tragedy of the human condition is that we can never go back and undo the crimes and follies of yesterday. We have to go on from where we are. I think in this regard, at a time when President Nasser's name is anathema in the ears of many people of the western world, a time when many papers have insulting cartoons of him appearing almost daily, I should put on record some references to correspondence I had with President Nasser of the U.A.R. after I had returned from Egypt and Israel.

I wrote President Nasser to tell him of my profound depression at the conditions I found in the Middle East, and about two peoples who so badly need each other wasting their resources on military solutions to their problems. I wrote very frankly to him. I told him that as an old man I knew the time comes in life when you have to accept facts, however unpalatable, and that the state of Israel is now a fact. I asked him whether he would not be better advised to move on from that point and seek an accommodation with the people of Israel.

It was probably an impertinence on the part of an insignificant member of parliament to write to the head of a state, a man moreover, no matter what some hon. members may think of him, who is a world figure today. I would not have been surprised, nor would I have blamed President Nasser, if he had ignored my letter. To my surprise, in about a month or six weeks I received a letter from President Nasser. It was a very simple letter written from one man to another with no suggestion of condescension or pretentiousness, in which he thanked me for having written so frankly to him.

Then he proceeded to discuss the problems that lay in the way of a Middle Eastern settlement. First among those problems he placed the situation of the Arab refugees about which, as he said, the world has refused to concern itself. He suggested that until the world was prepared to concern itself about the fate of these people, a settlement would be impossible.

A cease fire is well enough but, as the Prime Minister said today, it is not enough. We have to go on from there. True enough, we must strive for it and bend every effort to get a cease fire because one thing is sure: no matter who may be the victor in the hostilities that have now broken out, the vanquished will be the workers of Israel and the fellahin of the Arab states.

Over ten years ago we did achieve a cease fire, and much of the credit for that must go to our present Prime Minister. We bought time ten and a half years ago, and we did nothing with it; we let it go down the drain. The problems that were there when we sought and gained that cease fire are there today. Those problems are the age-old ones of poverty, disease and ignorance and the bigotry and hatreds that these old enemies of mankind always bring in their train. No matter what the outcome of the present hostilities may be, the problems will remain to be coped with when the fighting ends.

The two peoples who have suffered so cruelly at the hands of so-called western civilization must be brought together, however difficult the process may be, in a program of massive economic development for the whole Middle Eastern area, which program the world as a whole must underwrite. It is not only a debt of restitution to these peoples, both Semitic, who have been the victims of our so-called superior western civilization, but it must also be in the form of an acknowledgement of the debt we owe to these two peoples.

The whole world is aware of the debt which western civilization owes to the Jewish people. Their contributions in the fields of science and the arts are known to us all. But all too often the debt we owe to the other victims of western civilization is forgotten. Seeing them now, struggling as they are out of the suffocating and stifling embrace of European colonialism, we tend to forget that when our ancestors in the Dark ages were sunk in the depts of superstition, ignorance and disease, the ancestors of these Arabs were pioneering in the fields of science, mathematics and medicine and it is on much of their work that western civilization has built the structure of which we are proud today.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

So, Mr. Speaker, back again to the budget. Canada must take a lead in pressing this sort of program on the whole of the world. Once we can achieve a cease fire we must impress on every nation of the world, big and small, its responsibility to contribute to this type of program. In order that our position and demands may be credible, we in Canada must be prepared to make a substantial contribution ourselves. When that time comes, and I am sure all of us hope it comes soon, there will be no time for the sort of cautious, penny-pinching budgets we have been having of late. There will be no time for the careful balancing of accounts. We must be prepared to take some risks. We must be prepared to put it on the line and remember that the situation that causes us so much fear and trepidation today is the direct result of the callousness, bigotry, stupidity and ignorance which are still all too prevalent in our societies in the western world.

We have inherited a debt and now we must be prepared to pay. I would suggest that there are four or five concrete items which should be in any program that we may establish to pay this debt. The first one, of course, is the achievement of a cease fire. That is a must. But a cease fire alone will not be of much value to the world, any more than was the cease fire of 10 or 11 years ago, unless it leads to a genuine peace treaty between Israel and her Arab neighbours.

There must be a guarantee of the borders of all the nations of the Middle East, Israeli and Arab. There must be an agreement that the gulf of Aqaba is an international waterway and that access to it through the strait of Tiran must be available to all innocent shipping. There must be an immediate and generous settlement of the Arab refugee problem, without balancing accounts, without asking, "Why are they there?" They are there. It does not matter if they went there of their own accord or whether they were driven out—and there are those in both categories. The thing is, they are there, men, women and children, living in appalling conditions of utter degradation and misery.

Today when I read in the newspapers that the Israeli forces had captured Khan Yunis I remembered my visit to Khan Yunis. There I saw one of the most substantial contributions of Canadians to welfare which is to be found in the medical rehabilitation centre of Khan Yunis. They had just opened a rehydration centre for refugee infants who come down with dysentry, of course, because of the appalling conditions of these camps. Their bodies become so dehydrated that they cannot absorb fluid in the normal way and have to be brought to the centre to have it fed to them through their noses, drop by drop. I thought of that today when I saw that Khan Yunis had been captured by the Israelis.

So to my mind the first thing we must have is a just and generous solution of the Arab refugee problem, without totting up accounts as to whose fault it is and whose fault it is not. They are there—men, women and children. If any member of this house thinks they have not been living in utter misery that is a disgrace to the world, I suggest that he go to the Gaza strip, if we can ever get there again.

Finally, we must seriously take a lead in a vast and massive economic program of development in the Middle East so that once and for all we can perhaps find some salvation, some solution for our guilt in the past in our treatment of these two peoples who today so tragically and in such desperation are flying at each other's throats in an attempt to solve the problems that we created for them.

We have had an amendment from the official opposition which speaks of the sharp increases in government expenditures. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom all the words between the word "taxation" and the words "the sharp increase" and by substituting therefor the following words:

"particularly its failure to revise the income tax structure so that a married couple with an annual income of $4,000 or less would not be subject to tax; its failure to remove the sales tax from building materials and supplies used in housing construction; and its failure to take any steps to deal with"

Mr. Knowles: Those are the words.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, I see now that they are the words. They did not seem to make sense to me but I see now that they do. It makes as much sense as the Conservative amendment allowed us to make.

Mr. Knowles: A lot more.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A lot more, perhaps.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the centennial budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has not had the good fortune of pleasing too many people.

As usual, it was a disappointing budget, a budget through which so much was expected of the government and which, on the whole, has produced nothing concrete.

The night of the budget speech, we heard on television the comments of representatives of the various parties in this house and they were unanimous in their disappointment, except of course the member of the Administration (Mr. Chrétien) who lauded the benefits accruing from the budget to the Canadian people, when the minister announced the elimination of the 12 per cent tax on pills—I do not know if these are birth control pills—and of the 12 per cent tax on pills and drugs sold in Canada.

The only tax which the government dared to touch is one affecting the smallest number of Canadian citizens. When building materials are involved, an important area, the government is powerless. When additional amounts would have to be found, for instance, to meet the requests of the farmers, the government is unable to act. If an increase in family allowances is requested, the government cannot meet the request because there is an accumulated deficit; in fact, at the end of the present fiscal year, there will be an accumulated deficit of about $740 million.

That is why it is important for the minister not to reduce taxes, not to increase services and to remain at a standstill, except to remove the 12 per cent tax on drugs.

Mr. Speaker, the budget does not reduce either the servicing of the debt which will reach $1,234 million this year. We can afford to pay those interests on the national debt: $1,234 million. The defence budget will require $1,800 million. We can afford to pay that much for national defence, but to increase pensions, family allowances and to help Canada's poor, no funds are available.

And keep one thing in mind, Mr. Speaker. There is now a serious threat that the war between Israel and the Arab countries will develop into a world war. If both belligerents pay no attention to a resolution for a cease fire which the security council of the United Nations would pass, that will mean that Canada may be involved in a third world war. Then, the minister and the government will find the necessary money to take part in the war.

Mr. Speaker, before that takes place, I firmly state that we do not have the financial means to take part in a third world war. We do not have the money now to face a war. If the financial system is unable to fight poverty and insecurity in Canada, it is certainly unable to finance our participation in a third world war. We will object to it very strongly, precisely for the reasons I just stated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Why did not the Minister of Finance and Receiver General advocate in his speech the creation of a bank for municipal affairs, for instance? Today, all our municipalities, whether in Quebec or in the other Canadian provinces, are burdened with debts they will never be able to repay. As a matter of fact, 50, 60 per cent of their budget are earmarked for the interest on their debt alone. Why not provide for the creation of a bank for municipal affairs to provide the municipalities with interest-free financing, as is done for some countries?

I am not saying that we must stop helping foreign countries which need help, no, but let us start by helping those who need help right here. But that is forgotten, there is no time for that. The minister does not say a word about that in his budget speech. He removes the 12 per cent tax on pills. War on poverty? The minister no longer mentions it. What will the minister do in a few months when he will meet the representatives of Canadian provinces at a new federal-provincial conference, where all the provinces will be asking Ottawa for more sources of income? What will the Minister of Finance and Receiver General answer to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario which are now receiving equalization payments.

The minister has no solution. There is nothing in his budget speech to take care of that. The minister merely states that to maintain the present prosperity, income tax should not be increased but that the tax on drugs should be removed or decreased because we will register a deficit of $740 million.

What is the solution? There is none. The Conservatives move and amendment to say that the government has failed. It is true. When the Conservatives were in power, the present government members were sitting in the opposition and saying: "The government has failed." It is true. My friends in the New Democratic Party say the same thing: "The government is a failure".

But what have the governments been doing since confederation, in the last 100 years, in the monetary field? Nothing. That is the whole problem. The whole problem is one of administration of the financial system, and yet, the government does not take that into account. Or rather, it takes it into account. Certainly. It removes the tax on pills.

Mr. Speaker, the creditistes have a solution which differs from that of the government. It is completely different, because the government's is not really a solution. The government flounders in a system which, instead of offering solutions, creates problems. So, we have this fine example where problems are created. And when the time comes to solve a given problem, another one is created.

To get rid of one debt, they run into more debt. What an intelligent system. It is a very intelligent system and, mainly, quite adapted to the needs of the Canadian people.

In the light of the recent budget of the Minister of Finance, we realize, once more, that the financial situation in Canada becomes increasingly complex and gloomy for Canadians as a whole.

That budget speech seems to me like a skating mini-performance in the present financial system which, in fact, does not solve anything—that is the reason why the Minister of Finance leaves the house—but creates problems. Besides, the response of the people to that budget has been one of apathy and some relief. Of apathy, because there is nothing in the budget to cause any enthusiasm. Even the Liberals are disappointed with that budget; my friend the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) is one of those. It is also a reaction of relief, because all Canadians feared new tax increases.

The minister announced that new taxes will come later, in the fall. According to the minister's statements, we notice that it is a mere postponement. In fact, a new mini-budget is forecast for the fall, when we will be told that the treasury inevitably has to be replenished. Then, it will be the other side of the financial picture which the minister dares not show us now.

Where is the Canadian economy going? Nobody knows. That is why the government, in my opinion, makes short-term plans, that is for a short space of time, a few months, two months, three months, six months perhaps, at most. Is this the way to govern a country?

I should like to say to the Minister of Finance, on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste and my fellow citizens, that the Canadian people have the right to know where the economy of their country is going.

That hide-and-seek game and that error and trial approach advocated by the government does not forecast anything good, particularly in view of the very tense international situation which we experience at the present time. As a result of federal-provincial conferences which have been held for a few years, it seems that, according to the minister, provinces and municipalities will have to face yearly increases of expenditures of about 8½ per cent for the next five years. On the other hand, federal expenses would increase by 6½ per cent.

The minister said in this respect:

Confronted with our common need for increased revenues, it is natural that we and the provinces will find it hard to agree on the use of different tax fields.

Obviously, the fight will start all over as soon as the Minister of Finance meets the representatives of the Canadian provinces.

We must therefore expect new tax increases for the next five years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to say that it is normal, natural and in order that each government, federal, provincial and municipal should struggle to be the most exacting on Canadian taxpayers.

I find it amazing that, under the present system, a false system, no one should compete to be the most useful, the most helpful, to Canadian citizens and the greatest promoter of their freedom and security. But no, it is better to fight to overburden citizens throughout Canada with taxation.

I, with the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, am simply indignant to see how the public property, the Canadian money, is administered. The picture of peace in our North American economy is sad indeed. In peacetime, you find misery in the midst of plenty; in other words, we are living in an era of false affluence; it is a fleeting prosperity torn by strikes, price increases, a deceptive production stagnation in agriculture, with greater and greater budget deficits at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. At present, Canada is at peace, or to be more realistic, in a state of cold war. This is due to what is going on in Viet Nam, and now in Israel or the Middle East.

Now, the minister himself sees the disappointing productivity, increasing prices, more unemployment, a growing national debt burdening every Canadian citizen. The national deficit will reach $740 million, thereby increasing the interest we will have to pay next year. The interest will no longer be $1,234,000,000 then, but over one billion and a half, that is almost as much as the national defence budget which constitutes the biggest portion of our national budget. What a sad state of affairs we have in times of peace.

But come war, the whole picture changes. Productivity increases, strikes disappear, there is no more talk of unemployment, except as a thing of the past, and we are promised that things past will not repeat themselves.

The same happened during the 1939-45 war. When, during 10 years of crisis, our young people were unemployed, had no security, could not make an honest and honourable living in Canada, for the duration of the war, some went to lecture them in Europe by saying to them—it was hon. Mr. Ralston, then Minister of National Defence and our envoy to Europe: "Fight bravely, shed your blood for your country and when the time comes for you to return to Canda, if you ever come back, then you will no longer experience a depression, hardship or insecurity." That was the promise being made to our young people and, twenty years later, that is in the last three years, the government brings in budgets, saying that we must make war against poverty and hardship, in the midst of affluence in Canada.

What is the logic of our Canadian politicians? Are they anything but a gang of liars before the people and future generations. It is not surprising that our young people are rebels, separatists, independentists, members of the bulldog party in Toronto or elsewhere. Our young people have lost faith in our government institutions, and with good reason. Why? Because the government itself does not respect itself.

Mr. Latulippe: It respects only finance.

Mr. Caouette: Of course, that is the only thing which is respected. Everyone crawls before the financial system.

In wartime, productivity increases, there are no more strikes, mention is never made of unemployment. With the return of peace, the picture darkens again. As soon as peace has come back, we have misery in the midst of abundance. Does that mean that true prosperity must be attained by bloodshed of our fellow-citizens and our children?

The following question has remained without an answer from the minister of Finances: How is it that we are able to finance ourselves in wartime and not in peacetime?

How is it that we cannot help farmers more than we do in peacetime? But we can help them in wartime as long as we have gifts to make, either to England or to other European countries. We give them farm products.

Right now, the world is full of people who live in misery and for whom we could do something. Why cannot our farmers have the assurance that they will sell their production?

Mr. Choquette: Will you allow me to say one thing: wartime is an emergency.

Mr. Caouette: When the farmer is starving, is that not an emergency in Canada?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Choquette: Oh yes. This is an emergency situation. That is why they have $30 million more this year.

Here is the question I want to put to the hon. member: In wartime, we are facing a crisis, an emergency. Everybody is ready to make special efforts. Governments are not the only ones to blame. Individuals themselves are ready to work harder in wartime, because they are facing a crisis, whereas in peacetime—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I like the intervention of the hon. member for Lotbinière. His words are objective and he is right. In wartime, we unite our efforts to meet an emergency. If we were to do the same thing in peacetime, if the member for Lotbinière, for instance, joined the Ralliement Créditiste, to settle the problem of the Quebec farmers, I can assure you that the member for Lotbinière would have the admiration of his constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I realize an emergency exists, as the governments recognize the existence of poverty in Canada, one of the richest countries in the world. Mr. Speaker, this is an emergency, and I believe that the life of our citizens is an issue as urgent as the war issue which is leading them to a massacre on a world scale. I have greater trust in the life of people than in their death.

In wartime, productivity increases. Mr. Speaker, every province is now forescasting increased expenditures over last year—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) will have to face this problem—except the province of Quebec of course, which prefers tightening its belt for the time being.

But even if Quebec reduces its expenditures, it is clear that the government must face a deficit which cannot be met from the tax yield. The Quebec Hydro is now negotiating on the New York market for a new $50 million loan.

Is that not a sign that available funds on the home market are already getting rare, as usual? On the national scale, the same thing is happening.

If our industry were to find itself in the same position as last year, it is most likely that development would not proceed at the necessary pace. In that case, greater public expenditures and slower production of goods could only lead to inflation, at a time when everything should be done to contain it. If we want to maintain our position in international trade and allow each individual in Canada to live decently, in security and in freedom, we must urgently reform our financial system.

Every year, Canadian municipalities show a greater deficit and mounting interests. The school boards are all in a very bad way financially: every year they have a greater deficit and must pay more interest.

Who pays for all those deficits? The Canadian citizen. The taxpayers are the ones who pay for the inflation brought about by the government. The government creates inflation and the Canadian people pay for it.

There have been hundreds of strikes in Canada. But, although it is only normal that workers should try to improve their lot, the situation has in no way improved. No strike in Canada has ever provided a solution to the labour problem. The workers are urged to rebel by their leaders, but this produces no solution to their problem. In fact, nothing is changed, except that the cost of living continues to rise. Therefore, we do not have more money in our pocket after a strike, but even less. We should all realize this, and I should like to see someone prove me wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I put this question to the Minister of Finance. Is the present banking system not a debt creating system—as he well knows—under which the total debt will never be paid, not even in part, if we are to keep on developing our natural resources at all? It is not by creating further debts through loans that we will be able to repay our present debts. Yet, that is the solution offered by the government: in order to repay bonds issued fifty years ago, let us borrow in 1967 to repay the debt and interests. Normally, we pay the interests and the debt is transferred to the national accumulated debt of Canada.

The main deficiency of the present system is that having been created during a period of scarcity, it is inadequate in times of prosperity. That is why Canadians are living in poverty amidst riches.

Mr. Speaker, as everybody knows, the production problem in Canada is not for the farmer nor the factory nor the manufacturer. The only problem is that of distribution of goods and services for human needs, that is for the Canadian consumer. This is the only solution to the problem which, as members of parliament, we must strive to solve without party considerations.

Mr. Speaker, is the present system the solution to a problem of its own creation? Certainly not. It creates problems instead of solving them. It is up to the minister to answer or deny this. The federal government has no funds to help the farmers. The other day, 20,000 farmers came to parliament hill, hoping to go back home with something. But they went home empty-handed, with a mere promise that their case would be studied again by June 10, those people who still had high hopes where there was no hope left. It was in this very house that we heard the member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Coté) say this: the Quebec farmers are coming here to congratulate the government, not to ask for something, just to congratulate the government. We have seen the kind of congratulations the members of the cabinet got in front of the centre block. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) could not even finish his speech to the 20,000 farmers jammed on parliament hill.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) was not too vocal either on that day, before the 20,000 farmers who assembled on parliament hill.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I doubt that the hon. member for Villeneuve interpreted correctly the words of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Côté). In all fairness for the latter, one should say that he did not interpret the farmers' march on parliament as a message of congratulations, but that he simply stated the people should not play politics with the farmers' march, which is what our hon. friend for Villeneuve has been doing, that is he has interpreted the farmers' march from a Créditiste point of view, which is not correct.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I had before me the text of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, but I do not have it any more. However, his statement amounted to this: The farmers are not coming here to blame the government; they are coming to thank the government for what it has done for them.

If the hon. member wishes to find the speech of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, I am ready to let him know where the speech is recorded. He said, what the hon. member for Lotbinière has just mentioned, but be added that the farmers came to thank the government. This remark is contained in the speech that he made to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the situation can be summed up as follows: the government does not have money for the labour of peace. But it has always plenty for the labour of war, for blood and destruction. The present system is unfair and illogical, and those who promote such a system by voting in its favour or by abstaining from voting are accomplices.

We have just witnessed four by-elections in Quebec and one in Ontario. Thousands of people are so disappointed with politics that they do not even care to vote any more.

Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member for Lotbinière, I just found the statement made by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska where he said, as can be seen on page 28 of the May 9 Hansard:

> The producers of manufacturing milk will perhaps be coming here, in the national capital, to voice their needs and not do as many may think, that is to criticize the government. On the contrary, farmers are more intelligent than that. They will support this government in its efforts to help them in the face of all other classes of society.

This is the word-for-word statement made by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska. Now, the hon. member for Lotbinière must have realized, in front of the parliament buildings, that the farmers did not necessarily come in order to support the government. On the contrary, they came to claim something from the government, which is not exactly the same thing.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, there is a group of farmers that really came to support the government, namely to guide the policy of this government.

Mr. Caouette: Those who came from my constituency.

Mr. Choquette: Now, there were many Créditiste organizers, and I saw many of them.

Mr. Caouette: They wanted $5.10 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I point out to the hon. member that the hon. member for Villeneuve has the floor. He may not be interrupted except to be asked a question.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to dot the i's and prove to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) that what I said was true, that it really happened that way.

Now, I was speaking of the by-elections we have just had in the province of Quebec. In the riding of Hull, out of 44,000 voters, only 22,000 took advantage of their right to vote. Half the people stayed home in that riding. In Montreal, barely 20 to 22 per cent voted; 80 per cent stayed home. Is it that the people are pleased with the government? No. The people have had enough of politics, they will not have anything more to do with it. And, in the riding of Hull—

Mr. Matte: They should have voted Créditiste.

Mr. Caouette: I understand. The hon. member for Champlain says they should have voted Créditiste.

In the riding of Hull, we had as candidate René Villeneuve, a school principal; and the member for Champlain knows full well that Villeneuve was the best candidate in that riding, regardless of the fact that he was the candidate for the Social Credit party. He got almost 9,000 votes, that is more than in 1965, while the Liberals lost ground in all four ridings, and were beaten in Sudbury. The hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) said the other night on television, "The people are in favour of the Liberals." "The people voted liberal". Ah, come on. The people stayed home, they did not vote. In Hull, a Liberal riding for 75 years, the candidate elected got only three thousand some hundred votes majority while the Liberal majority in 1965 was over 9,000 votes. The electors who did not vote thought they were doing well, but they lost a wonderful opportunity of giving themselves a representative who would fight against the system, instead of the men.

I have nothing personal against Pierre Caron, who was elected in the Hull riding. He is one who deserves respect. He is a young man; he has qualities and I will never belittle him as a citizen. But, as far as the system is concerned, I assure you that I will not go for that easily.

The same applies in the case of the Liberal candidate elected in Richelieu-Verchères—people did not take the trouble of going out to vote. At any rate, those people certainly did not approve of the present situation, for it can lead nowhere but an increased national debt and ever-increasing difficulties to live decently in a country which, after all, is bursting with natural resources.

Mr. Lachance: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Lachance: What does the hon. member have to say about the 25 per cent only of the population who voted in the last municipal election in Montreal? Does it mean that the people were not satisfied with Mayor Drapeau of Montreal?

Mr. Caouette: No, no. But there you say: "People were not satisfied". Well it is the irresponsible people that remained at home, those who are not conscious of their responsibilities, those who are too lazy to get up and go. And there are thousands of them in the city of Montreal. I am going to arrange for a meeting and I shall tell them so at their own face, too. That is the city of Montreal! You wanted to know what I think of it, that is it. They are too callous, they lack the courage to stand up and vote for someone or against someone. If they were satisfied with Mayor Drapeau, they should have gone to tell him: "We are pleased with you, Mr. Drapeau."

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Villeneuve that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: I only need about two minutes. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank very sincerely my hon. friends in the house for allowing me to continue my remarks, I shall not take very long.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Villeneuve wish to continue?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you Mr. Speaker.

We can hold different views and yet remain sociable, as the hon. members are proving now. I will do the same thing in return.

Mr. Speaker, what the Canadian people have been expecting for more than a hundred years, is an efficient, up-to-date government, a government that is adaptable and does not fear to go out and get the tools required to give economic, political and social security to every citizen.

It is my distinct and clear impression that every member holds the view that we should have an aggressive government, a government which is not afraid to take decisions or to face the current evolution. Instead of maintaining the status quo, of holding back, of marking time, let us go ahead when it is time to do so. Let us take the means and build the tools to do the job. It would not be honest for me to say that I reject everything in the present system. Far from it, but I submit that the present administration is not dealing with the real problem. I have said it several times, the government is not dealing with the major problem that now impairs every measure it is recommending or thinking of initiating.

In his budget speech, the minister said:

> The past 18 months have been eventful ones in our fiscal affairs—a budget and a mini-budget, three bills to amend the Income Tax Act, one to amend the tax provisions of the Old Age Security Act, two to amend the sales tax, two temporary restraints on business capital investment, the commencement of the Canada pension plan which had major fiscal effects, several reviews of government expenditure policy, a major debate on inflation last September and a long series of hearings by a joint committee into the increases in consumer prices.

It is clear, is it not? Without underrating those initiatives, it is obvious that those solutions to the present problem are simply patchwork measures in an effort to remedy the worse. Nevertheless, they remain only poultices on wooden legs and do not solve the problem.

But of all those pieces of legislation, not one is intended to make our national economy a modern, efficient, flourishing and balanced economy. Is the problem of cyclical crises such as inflation cured and avoided? Absolutely not. Everyone knows that.

All those measures which the government introduced in the house have not solved the problem, since the minister, in his present budget, warns the Canadian people against the dangers threatening them. That is not new. It is the repetition of what we were told five, ten, even fifteen years ago. I remember that twenty years ago, the hon. Mr. Abbott, who was then minister of finance and who is now puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, made the same speech or a similar one to that which we heard the other day. Now, that proves that the measures passed by this house were simply temporary, incomplete and inefficient.

Therefore, I ask the minister to explain, for the benefit of all Canadians who are deeply concerned at the present time, how he intends in peace time, to make our economy flourishing, productive, fair, balanced, free of disastrous cyclical crises such as inflation or hardship within affluence.

The creditistes are not not the only ones to contend that and I take the liberty, before concluding my remarks, to quote the comments made by Marcel Pépin, a newspaperman of Le Droit of Ottawa, in the issue of June 2 last:

> If the Minister of Finance advocates, for all practical purposes, a policy of moderate wage increases, he still refuses to set up a policy for the maintenance of prices and the control of profits, so that his budget speech is nothing but a speech, an exhortation.
> Well equipped with documents and data supplied by the officials of the Department of Finance, Mr. Sharp was able to utter his fears concerning an economic distortion in 1967, but fettered as he is by the capitalist character of the government of which he is a member, he merely submitted an exhortation on present conditions.

I understand that Mr. Pepin would like to see a policy of price and salary control, in short, the control of the entire Canadian economy, but the creditistes do not advocate such a controlled economy. On the contrary, they advocate that the way to restore the balance between production and the consumers' purchasing power in Canada, is to distribute to every Canadian citizen a sum called a national dividend based on the difference between Canadian production and the national income, at the present level, thus creating neither inflation nor deflation but restoring the balance between the purchasing power of consumers and Canadian production. Such is the solution of creditistes.

The Budget—Mr. Caouette

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, on page 38 of his budget speech, the minister says in his distinctive evasive style:

> The economy is in a state of approximate balance—

Approximate balance! There is but a small gap of $740 million.

> —during a period of readjustment, cooling off somewhat from the overheated condition of last year.

He goes on in that marvelous phraseology by saying:

> The modest prospective deficit in the federal budget in terms of our national economic accounts will be a moderate sustaining force this year.

There you have all that is needed to stage the nicest parody of the century. Approximate balance, does that mean real imbalance? When one speaks of an approximate balance, it is because one is not sure. Then imbalance exists and that is what we are now experiencing. The Canadian people would certainly like to hear about it, but from the minister himself. A small deficit! On the traditional basis of public accounts, the deficit stood at $428 million last year, and this year, having increased, it will reach $740 million by next fall.

The least that can be said is that it is not a mini-deficit but rather a very sizeable one that weighs heavily on the shoulders of every Canadian taxpayer, not to mention the fact that the national debt carries interest.

In 1965-66, this interest was $1,077 million. It rose to $1,159 milion in 1966-67, and to $1,237 million—not $234 million—in 1967-68. That is just the interest on the national debt.

All this, Mr. Speaker, leads me to the conclusion that we could have 25 years of budget speeches such as the one made by the present Minister of Finance without a solution to the problem being found.

Canadians want positive action. They want to live decently in a country which they are ready to build, and I am sure that hon. members and the ministers all want Canada to develop and grow.

Today, it is the financial system which impedes development and stumps growth because it always forces us to pay two or three times for what we get.

To build a school, we borrow. When the time comes to pay for it, two of them have been paid for, one for finance, one for us.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Whenever a road is built, one is paid to finance, and one is for us. The same thing goes for hospitals; one is paid for finance and one is for us.

If we have to pay back twice, how can we develop a country like ours? Mr. Speaker, I call on the Minister of Finance, on the Member of the Administration who is still his financial advisor, and on all the ministers to think about the situation and to start giving serious consideration to the possibility of amending our financial system so that it would serve Canada, our institutions.

When the financial system really reflects what we are truly doing in Canada, what our population is paying in Canada, then, Mr. Speaker, I am sure we will not have to fight poverty but that we will be able to guarantee to each and every Canadian, economic security and personal freedom.

(English)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is a subamendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). Possibly the hon. member for Medicine Hat would permit me to read it now and then he could proceed with his remarks. It is moved by Mr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. Knowles:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom all the words between the word 'taxation" and the words "the sharp increase" and by substituting therefor the following words:
> "particularly its failure to revise the income tax structure so that a married couple with an annual income of $4,000 or less would not be subject to tax; its failure to remove the sales tax from building materials and supplies used in housing construction; and its failure to take any steps to deal with"

The Chair considers that the subamendment is in order.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) speaking on behalf of the official opposition, called the budget a bad budget and used a number of other adjectives to describe it. He was followed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), speaking on behalf of the New Democratic party, who called it no budget at all. Then we had the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) pointing out some failures, in his opinion, with respect to financial matters.

If it is no budget at all there is very little left for me to say and perhaps I will have to do what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands suggested, produce a budget in my speech. I am going to do that, Mr. Speaker, or at least partially deal with some matters, but not until I have said a word or two about the amendment and the subamendment that have been moved. I wonder whether the hon. member for Perth and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) who moved and seconded the amendment did so with tongue in cheek because the amendment says:

> This government has failed miserably to set an example of responsibility by its refusal to reduce taxation, by its reckless increase in governmental expenditures—

I also wonder whether the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who moved and seconded the subamendment, did so with tongue in cheek when they subscribed to most of the amendment and injected some specific ways in which taxes ought to be reduced.

Mr. Knowles: We cut out a lot.

Mr. Olson: I know what you cut out and I know what is left. You cut out the reference to "an example of responsibility by its refusal to reduce taxation," etc. and added something else. The reason I mention this at this time is that I cannot take the amendment and subamendment seriously because every time last session that there was a proposal before the house to increase federal expeditures the spokesmen for both those parties not only endorsed those expenditures but almost invariably said, "It is not enough; there should be more." To be kind, I think their attitude is just a little hypocritical and I do not think we can take amendments of this kind seriously after the performances we have seen.

Turning now to the minister's speech I would like to ask him to give us some good reasons why he brought in the budget at this time because amendments to income and corporation taxes apparently must await further study of the report of the Carter royal commission. That study has been going on for almost six years. Surely the minister is not prepared to admit that he, his advisers and his party are so bankrupt of ideas for overhauling the tax structure of Canada that they could not at least have brought in something in the budget to make a start on overhauling the tax structure.

The minister also said that all tariff changes will await further study and consideration of the Kennedy round of trade negotiations. I can agree with him that some additional time may be required to consider the results of that round of negotiations which concluded recently. But I return to the original question. Why bring in a budget which in essence says we are going to postpone tax amendments and tariff changes? Even one of the two tax changes that the budget did introduce, the removal of the sales tax on drugs, will not take effect until September 1, three months from now.

In presenting this budget I think the minister has left the Canadian economy and Canadian business in an even more uncertain position than before it was introduced. The minister has told the country that there is a future possibility of a large number of income tax changes. However, he did not say when they would be introduced. Will certain kinds of business enterprises be postponed waiting for these changes? These changes may deal with capital costs and may deal with income tax rates, both personal and corporate. As a result there is much more uncertainty than prevailed before the budget speech was made. Other than the tradition of introducing a budget once a year I cannot see any reason why the minister introduced this kind of budget.

Mr. Knowles: It wasn't a budget; it was a sermon.

Mr. Olson: I agree it was a sermon or lecture, whichever you like to call it, but along with that the minister should have made specific proposals or should have waited until he was ready to make such proposals. I should now like to turn to another subject for a moment.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to ask the hon. member whether he liked my sermon or the sermon of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I was about to deal with that. As a matter of fact I liked both sermons, but I am also in some disagreement with both. Concerning the sermon delivered by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands respecting the persecution, discrimination and other inhuman treatment meted out to the Jews and Arabs over the generations, I should like to say that I was to a large measure in agreement with what he said in so far as the history of the matter is concerned. I must say, however, that I was also a little disturbed by his conclusion and where he laid the blame for the perpetuation of this problem, because I heard him say several times that the whole responsibility for the present dispute in the Middle East and for the hatred and so on which have been built up can be and should be laid at the door of Christendom and the western civilization.

I am not attempting to exonerate Christendom and the western civilization from their fair share of the responsibility, in whatever context one wishes to put it, but I should like to say this and give an example. I sat in the United Nations general assembly last fall when voluntary contributions were being received for the United Nations refugee commissioner. There was, I believe, a request for $30 million for the refugee fund, most of which is used for the Palestine refugees in the Gaza strip and other camps in the Middle East. There are other places where it is used but a very large percentage is used for the relief of the refugees there. Out of the $30 million, $22 million was volunteered by the United States of America. I am not sure of the exact amount but somewhere between $1.3 million and $1.5 million was volunteered by Canada. The balance of the $30 million was volunteered by such countries as the United Kingdom, Scandinavia, and so on. Not one cent was volunteered by any socialist country in eastern Europe.

I do not wish to pour salt on sore wounds, but the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands repeatedly stated that the whole problem of the refugees and the difficulties which arise from that problem should be laid at the door of western civilization and Christendom. I think it is well for us to be reminded once in a while of the facts before we swallow this kind of conclusion, notwithstanding the fact that we can recognize the problem as he pointed it out.

We are faced with a prospective of some $740 million in this fiscal year. I am not opposed to the government increasing expenditures when authorized by a vote or there is agreement in the house that this is what we should do. But I believe the Canadian public and the Canadian taxpayers, who ultimately must pay for all these expenditures, should be presented with the bill for these so-called acceptable expenditures as soon as possible after they are made.

All that a deficit does in any fiscal year is to postpone, sometimes briefly and sometimes a little longer, the day of reckoning, the day when the taxpayer must face up to the fact that these expenditures have been made by parliament. Therefore I suggest to the minister, although it may not have been politically wise at that point and may have been an unpleasant task, that consequent upon the request for legislation and the expenditures which were passed by the house he should have brought in a budget as soon as possible after the legislation was passed so that the taxpayers would have been presented with the bill. I say that because the relationship between the so-called expenditures and the obligation to pay the price is lost if it is postponed.

Further, we disagree that there should be a large deficit at this time. If there is any time in Canadian economic history when we ought to be at least balancing the budget, if not budgeting for a surplus to pay off some of the past indebtedness, surely it is in a time when economic conditions are reasonably buoyant. I do not believe that conditions will get a great deal better than they are in this fiscal year 1967-68. If we cannot meet our expenses in this kind of a situation, when in heaven's name will we be able to?

I should like to turn now to another subject, the matter of how the minister will raise these cash requirements. The Minister of Finance has suggested that his net additional cash requirement for this fiscal year will be $1,520 million, some of which will be used for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, some of which will be used for the Farm Credit Corporation, and some of which will be used for loans to governments and to pay the deficit.

If we are to be faced with this kind of deficit or national debt in Canada, I would certainly hope that the minister will expand a practice which has been started. I hope he will obtain a larger share of that money from the Bank of Canada. In a discussion earlier this year we heard the minister say in the house that the Bank of Canada over the last five years has been expanding the amount of the money supply on an average of about $200 million per year. I commend him and the other persons responsible for this. However, in a year when we are faced with a requirement for $1,520 million in additional net cash, I suggest that an amount of $200 million coming from the Bank of Canada is an insufficient proportion.

We could become involved in a long argument about how much the money supply will increase during this fiscal year. I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree with me when I say it is not unusual to see a greater increase in the money supply in those years when the government budgets for a deficit than there is in other years. It seems to me that this is an opportune time for the minister and the governor of the Bank of Canada to assume the attitude that a much larger proportion of the money to be supplied should be supplied by the Bank of Canada in this fiscal year.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member whether he does not agree that one of the main considerations which must weigh with the monetary authorities is the relationship in respect of the interest rate as between Canada and the United States, particularly with regard to long-term bonds.

Mr. Olson: I do not disagree with that at all. I know there are many other considerations which must be taken into account with regard to the amount of the increase in the money supply and where it comes from. I am not disagreeing with that. I am just suggesting that if $200 million per year as an average over the last five years, as I believe the minister stated in the house in February, was an appropriate amount when the deficit of the federal government was much smaller than is budgeted for now, a larger share of the fiscal requirements of the federal government could be and should be supplied by the Bank of Canada.

I do not want to go over a lot of the history of the fiscal dealings of the Bank of Canada because I did so in February when the revisions to the Bank of Canada were before the house. However, I should like to put on record one of the examples I have in mind, and I have many of them in front of me. On November 28, 1966, the government of Canada announced a $500 million bond issue. The Bank of Canada picked up $250 million of that $500 million. Some of that money was raised to redeem an issue that was maturing part of which the Bank of Canada held, so in effect they were partially replacing a maturing issue with a new issue. However, it seems to me that this is a good example.

For a great number of years the policy of this party has been that the total requirements of the federal government in certain areas of expenditure should be met by the Bank of Canada to the extent that it is in keeping with sound monetary policy, bearing in mind inflation and that sort of thing. Let me appeal to the minister to take this fact into consideration, because the results are that the greater the amount the Bank of Canada holds of federal government indebtedness, the greater the amount the Bank of Canada turns over to the federal treasury at the end of their fiscal year.

This amount has been increasing substantially in the past few years. I have before me the report of the Bank of Canada for 1966 which shows that for that year it turned over net income to the Receiver General of Canada in the amount of $150,585,000, which was substantially more than the year before. The more Canadian government bonds that are purchased and held by the Bank of Canada, the more interest accumulates and the higher will be the return to the minister and to the treasury of Canada. I hope that the minister and the governor of the Bank of Canada will give serious consideration to the bank picking up a larger portion of whatever is the amount of a prudent increase in the money supply for this fiscal year.

Let me now turn to another matter, the old age security fund. The minister stated that the surplus in this fund would be increased by $109 million and that this will be added to the $430 million now in the account. Thus at the end of this fiscal year, if all projections are accurate, there will be a surplus of some $530 million to $540 million in the old age security fund.

When the mini-budget was brought forward last fall there was not that kind of explanation given which I think we require at this time. The situation now requires a great deal more explanation. When the mini-budget was presented we were told that the revenue resulting from the increase in income and other taxes to be apportioned to the old age security fund was only sufficient to meet the increased payments as a result of the guaranteed income supplement. It now appears that the fund is increasing rather rapidly. I suppose there is the possibility that following each year during which the age is dropped from 67 to 66 and eventually to 65, there will be a greater number of citizens receiving old age security and this will no doubt increase the expenditures from the fund. If that is the complete explanation, it was not made clear to the house.

If I recall clearly the minister's responses to questions, he suggested that the additional taxes resulting from the mini-budget would only be sufficient to cover expenditures for old age security purposes. This fund went up some $200 million this year and we now have a projection of $109 million more. When will we reach the stage when the revenue is balanced with the expenditures from this fund?

I hope the minister will keep this question in mind because it does seem to me to be a bit of a disservice to the senior citizen recipients of old age security to blame them for the total amount of the increase in taxes at a time when there is and continues to be a surplus building up in this fund.

I should now like to talk for a few minutes about the proposals in the budget regarding the price of drugs. The minister has said that effective September 1 the sales tax on all drugs, both for human and animal use, will be withdrawn. I noted with interest and appreciation that the Minister of Finance also said that he believed some of the other regulations which the government was now prepared to change respecting duties on importations would probably have at least as great or perhaps a greater effect on the retail price of drugs than the withdrawal of the sales tax.

We need an additional explanation, because I searched the budget speech in vain to find out what the Minister of Finance or the government intends to do about such things as the licences respecting the patent rights and importing of medicines or drugs. This has a very important effect on the price of drugs today. He did say something would be done with regard to the tariff schedules on drugs. The first recommendation made by the province of Alberta to the standing committee on drug costs and prices was:

> Compulsory licences to import should be granted, subject to the payment of reasonable royalities. These licences should provide for the importation of semi-finished and finished dosage forms as well as bulk drugs.

We know there has been a sustaining feature in the price of drugs as a result of these acclaimed patent rights. We look forward to hearing not only from the Minister of Finance but his colleagues as well about what they intend to do regarding the regulations and the duty which must be paid on these drugs as they come across the border. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) in the house. Perhaps he already knows what the government's intentions in this respect are. I certainly hope he will not keep the house and the people of Canada waiting too long for these proposals.

The last matter I want to deal with is one which could properly be brought before the house during the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport. I realize that they have already been before the house for three or four days and it is highly unlikely, if the estimates of other departments are to be considered for a reasonable length of time, that the estimates of the Department of Transport will come before the committee of supply again. That is why it is necessary that I raise the matter at this time.

I refer to the subvention that will be paid by the federal government for the transportation of coal from the Crowsnest pass area of Alberta and British Columbia to the west coast. I raise the matter at this time, and I think quite properly so, because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) said in the house on January 23 last, when the new transportation bill was being discussed, in response to a question I asked him:

> I would think that in any case where there was a possibility of a subsidy any government would be guilty of negligence in not being represented in order to see that as far as possible all the costs that were alleged by a carrier, whoever he might be, were properly checked and audited.

I do not have time to read all the quotations where the Minister of Transport outlined time and again that the first duty of the new transportation commission would be to establish the variable costs of moving any commodity. He repeated time and again that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport and others would be remiss in their duty if they did not firmly establish what the variable costs of moving coal or any other commodity would be if there was any possibility of a subsidy being paid out of the federal treasury. We have not had an inquiry. We have not had a public hearing to establish the variable costs that the railways will be allowed for moving any commodity.

The reason this question is so important in my view is that I believe the Canadian Pacific Railway is doing a great injustice to the coal mining operations in the Crowsnest, as well as to the Canadian treasury, by demanding $5.28 a ton to move the coal. The Great Northern Railway in the northern United States has offered to carry it for $4 a ton. A group representing the coal mining interests in the Crowsnest pass went to the trouble of having a competent firm of cost accountants look into the matter and try to establish, on the information they had, what would be the variable costs of moving this coal. As appears at page 2162 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the standing committee on transport and communications, October 31, 1966, Mr. Dutton who was speaking on their behalf said:

> Our organization, R. L. Banks and Associates, made a cost study for the Coal Operators Association of Western Canada in which we estimated as closely as we could the variable cost of the transportation of coal from the three member mines to Port Moody for export. In the case of Coleman, which is one of the mines, our calculation worked out the variable cost at $2.80 per ton, which is the figure on the first line on page 8.

Then he said—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Mr. Olson: I wonder whether I could just finish this point, Mr. Speaker. It is the last point with which I wish to deal. I would ask the indulgence of the house to allow me to finish.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: I should like to thank the house for giving me the opportunity to finish my remarks. Mr. Dutton continued:

Now, the $5.28 a ton rate is arithmetically 84 per cent greater than this $2.86 a ton variable cost which we had calculated.

In the same Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee this firm, R. L. Banks and Associates, which is highly qualified, said:

For low value, heavy loading, bulk commodities, any such mark-up is unbearable and unprecedented. In the United States in 1961, the average excess of revenue over variable cost was 27 per cent. Of course, for many commodities the excess was much greater, in a few cases even exceeding 150 per cent. For coal it was 7 per cent.

If it can be established that the variable cost of moving this coal from southwestern Alberta to the west coast is $2.86 per ton and that 84 per cent over that figure is an unreasonable mark-up, there is no justification, first of all, for the C.P.R. demanding that rate and, second, for the government acquiescing to that demand without a thorough investigation.

I close by saying that there are dozens of instances in Hansard where the Minister of Transport stated time and again that there would be a full inquiry into, first of all, the techniques of establishing costs and then establishing the costs in regard to specific commodities. This has not been done. I am just as much concerned about the coal mines in southwestern Alberta and their operations as I am about the public treasury, because if this coal was accepted by the Canadian Pacific Railway at the same rate that was offered by the Great Northern the coal operators would not need a subsidy. Furthermore, the coal industry has a great future but not at $5.28 a ton, which appears to be 84 per cent over the proper variable costs.

I hope that the Minister of Finance, who is responsible to the Canadian people for the public treasury, will have a conference with the Minister of Transport and perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) to see that a very high priority is placed on establishing the variable costs of moving this coal. There is an enormous market for our coal in Japan and perhaps other countries as soon as we can get the Canadian Pacific Railway to haul it to the west coast at a reasonable price.

I want to thank the house for its indulgence in allowing me a few extra minutes to complete my remarks. I hope that when the Minister of Finance replies he will not overlook the fact that we want the coal mining industry in southwestern Alberta and southeastern British Columbia to be able to operate on a sound basis. These people do not need a government subsidy if they can get a reasonable rate from the one and only railroad which can serve them. I hope the techniques for establishing these costs and so on will be one of the matters the government will deal with as quickly as it is physically possible to do so.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to make sure that the hon. member is aware of the agreement reached recently by the government through the Dominion Coal Board with Coleman and I should like to ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that the hon. member's time expired a while ago and I doubt that we should extend it further.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with discussions that have already taken place I should like to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Supply—Solicitor General

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, vote No. 1. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 478 of the blue book and the details thereof are listed on page 480.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I believe the house would have cause to complain if I neglected to make some reference in my opening statement to the problem of crime. It is useful to remind ourselves of the presence of this problem which poses a threat to the quality of our society. Crime, and particularly the varieties of sophisticated crime which confront the police today, flourishes best where publicity is at a minimum and where the community is not alert to the wide range of devious methods which the 1967 model criminal sometimes uses to achieve his goals. We must turn the spotlight of publicity on both the crime and the master criminal in order to focus national attention upon the problem.

It is an unpleasant fact that there has been an increase in reported general crime. By "general crime" I mean the usual types of criminal activity: robbery, theft, breaking and entering, and so on. The available statistics indicate that crimes of this kind are increasing in number each year. In 1966 there were 737,900 Criminal Code and federal statute offences, excluding traffic offences, reported. This mean 1.4 serious offences occur every minute in Canada.

There are apparently three causes for the increase of reported general crime. First, part of the increase can be found in the word "reported". Until recently, a number of police forces either were not alert to the importance of reporting their activities to a central agency or lacked the staff that would have enabled them to report on a regular basis. These handicaps are being overcome and the results, in part, are reflected in an increase in reported crime.

Second, the increase in our population has also brought an increase in the number of offences. Assuming an unchanged rate of crime, there would of course be an increase in the total number of offences in proportion to the increase in the total population.

Finally, I believe there has been, in fact, an increase in the per capita rate of crime in this country. It is no comfort to learn that in the United States and Great Britain the increase in reported crime is higher than in Canada. There is an increase in reported crime in Canada, however it may be explained, and it must of necessity cause us some concern.

A significant fact in recent years has been that the nature of the task facing police forces is changing. The police are being called upon to deal with a silent enemy within our borders known as organized crime.

The phrase "organized crime" is of course in common usage, but it is not always easy to pinpoint what that expression means. Basically, of course, it means that criminals cease to operate as individuals and begin to work in teams, co-operating wherever it suits their interests. Criminal organizations grow up in which some men are virtually the employees of higher-ranked criminals who direct activities. An additional characteristic of organized crime is that the criminal group remains in existence over long periods of time, constantly turning its hand to new fields; in a sense, this makes a permanent business of crime. These illegal activities have arisen for the chief purpose of catering to our vices —gambling, drinking, narcotics—with illegitimate financial profit as the objective.

Then, we sometimes speak of crime syndicates which the R.C.M.P. describes in these words:

> "Syndicated crime" denotes a subsisting association of persons engaged in criminal activities, and so highly organized and successful that it has acquired exclusive control or a monopoly over certain types of crime, or all crime, in a given area.

To know the nature of organized crime is to know the dimensions of the problem the police face. There has been an occasional critical reference to the government's response to the problem of crime. Generally, I take no exception to criticism for I interpret it as a genuine concern about a serious problem. But as hon. members will realize, the investigation and prosecution of crime in Canada is, generally speaking, a matter within the responsibility of the provincial authorities. Normal criminal investigation comes within the provisions of section 92 of the B.N.A. Act which leave the administration of justice to the several provinces.

The R.C.M.P. is primarily a federal police force, of course, although it functions on a contract basis in eight provinces as a provincial force. Even in those provinces, however, it has no direct policing authority or responsibility in the major cities which have their own forces reporting to the provincial attorney general. Therefore, the activities of the federal police are restricted in so far as organized crime is concerned. The R.C.M.P. enforce certain federal statutes such as the Narcotics Control Act and on this basis encounter large-scale crime. They also maintain a criminal intelligence network in the country, and on this basis gain an awareness of criminal activities everywhere. They co-operate on request with local authorities and are the channel of communication with law enforcement agencies in other countries, such as the F.B.I. or Interpol.

I believe there is no police force in the country which is better informed than the R.C.M.P. on the dimensions of the criminal problem. Nevertheless it should not be forgotten in this house that under our constitutional arrangements the R.C.M.P. have no direct involvement with many of the activities which criminals are pursuing.

In the two largest provinces, of course, the R.C.M.P. do not function as provincial police forces, and so their constitutional responsibility is still further limited.

The nature of police work is such that it involves two main problems. First, the criminal must be detected and, second, the evidence must be assembled for a conviction. With the growth in sophisticated crime it becomes harder to collect the evidence necessary to convict. Guilt by association is something which our criminal law has always frowned upon. It is well known that the higher-ranked criminals protect their anonymity and that strong security measures are enforced within the criminal hierarchy. The leaders apparently insulate themselves from their henchmen, and the arrest of a henchman usually does not produce the evidence to sustain a conviction of someone higher up the line.

Breaking through this screen of insulation to get at the real leaders is not simple and requires primarily more intensive investigation and the utmost co-ordination and sharing of police information among the various forces.

Some indication of the threat posed by organized crime may be gleaned from the fact that during the past three years the R.C.M.P. have made seizures of heroin which can be valued at a street price to the addict of about $240,000,000. The R.C.M.P. have reason to believe that in Canada the distribution of so-called "hard" narcotics, by which I mean primarily heroin, is reasonably under control. In Toronto and Montreal particularly, the efforts of the police have been rewarded by considerable success while in Vancouver they have not been quite as successful.

Traffic in "soft" narcotics, primarily marijuana, is not so well contained. I should like to put on the record some factors relating to the number of narcotic arrests. For trafficking in or possession of heroin 406 arrests were made in 1964, 395 in 1965, and 461 in 1966. For trafficking in or possession of marijuana 78 arrests were made in 1964, 162 in 1965, and 398 in 1966. Our biggest problem with respect to organized crime relates to narcotics. There are other areas in which criminal activities are also organized, though generally on a local scale.

Counterfeiting is an offence against the Criminal Code but in practice the investigation of counterfeiters is carried out in large measure by the R.C.M.P. The value of counterfeit notes passed to the public in recent years has been: in 1964, 8,148 notes having a value of about $157,000; in 1965, 15,637 notes having a value of about $303,000; in 1966, 14,618 notes were passed to the public having a value of about $250,000.

On the other side of the ledger I should like to point out that the value of the counterfeit notes seized before their manufacturers had a chance to pass them off to the public has been: in 1964, 17,291 notes having a value of $228,400; in 1965, 26,291 notes having a value of $400,000; and in 1966, 18,361 notes having a value of $580,000.

If we are to combat crime successfully we must not only increase the number of trained policemen but we must increase the efficiency of the members of the force. This efficiency can be improved by increased specialization and improved professional training of the police, by giving the police the resources of technology and by greater application of some of the methods used in business, particularly in the area of information handling and communications.

In few other occupations is rapid access to records so crucial to success. Canadian law enforcement agencies are segmented into 710 municipal, township, provincial and federal organizations that neverthless are highly interdependent for information and assistance.

All recommendations for action decided upon at the dominion-provincial conference of attorneys general have already been implemented or are well along the way toward implementation. For example, the strength of the various national crime intelligence units attached to the R.C.M.P. has been increased. A national wire photo service is now in operation and the R.C.M.P. telecommunications system has been greatly extended and now has 65 stations across Canada. A national automobile theft bureau has been established at R.C.M.P. headquarters and has been operating since April 1, 1967.

The increases during the past three years in the strength of the force and in its expenditures on modern equipment have been greater than in any comparable period in our history. Increasing use will be made of technology in the immediate future, including introduction of the most modern data processing equipment which will be integrated with the data systems in use by the F.B.I.

The modern war on crime calls for a critical review of our commercial laws to close up any loopholes that might be exploited by the organized criminal. The house is well aware that the Bankruptcy Act was recently amended to strengthen the hand of the superintendent of bankruptcy in dealing with fraudulent bankruptcies, and I understand that a further revision is being attended to in the Department of the Registrar General. Special bankruptcy investigation squads have been established by the R.C.M.P. in Toronto and Montreal, and in other centres bankruptcy investigations are carried out by the general crime investigation squads.

Perhaps the house will be interested to learn that the R.C.M.P. are now taking steps to implement the proposal to establish a security fraud squad and a central repository of securities regulation information.

Perhaps the greatest difficulty to overcome in the fight against crime is public apathy or indifference. The law enforcement agencies cannot win the struggle against crime alone. Too many Canadians are prepared to accept crime as a natural phenomenon of our society. I can hardly think of a more dangerous development. With this lax attitude organized crime prospers and may spread its tentacles into wide varieties of business which are now free of it. We should not forget that organized crime makes its huge profits by selling its products, whether they be narcotics, liquor or bookmaking services, to members of what we usually describe as the law-abiding public.

The establishment of the R.C.M.P. has been increased from 9,500 in 1965 to nearly 11,000 in 1967. The R.C.M.P. budget has been increased at the same time. In 1965 it was about $80 million, this year it will be about $110 million. A new Canadian police college is on the drawing boards and a curriculum is being prepared.

Crime and corrections are non-partisan matters, but I believe it can fairly be said that the government has not been lax in its approach to the problem of crime. The division of the jurisdiction poses a constant problem, of course, but better liaison work is solving the problem.

I now turn to examine the other arm of the department which is concerned in the war against crime. I mean the national parole board and the Canadian penitentiary service. Any meaningful war against crime must also concentrate on ways of getting at the sources of crime and on methods of reforming potential criminals. This is perhaps a more difficult job than even police work is. What we must keep in mind at all times though is that most of those engaging the attention of police from day to day are persons who have already been inmates of penitentiaries. Our criminal repeater problem is very disconcerting. In fact, about 45 per cent of the newcomers to a federal prison in any year have previously been in the same or some other federal prison serving a sentence of two years or more. It is obvious that if we could do something to reform these persons while we have them in custody we would be depriving the police forces of a large body of men who in fact are their best customers. I do not suggest this will be easy.

The year 1967 marks the halfway point in the Canadian penitentiary service's program of institutional development—1963-1973—commonly known as the ten year plan. It is in order at this midway point to announce the accomplishments that have been made in the implementation of this program. During the last fiscal year a new medium security institution was opened at Cowansville, Quebec, together with a specialized institution for the treatment of male and female drug offenders at Matsqui, B.C. Further, during this current fiscal year three more medium security institutions for young offenders and selected male adults will be opened at Springhill, Nova Scotia, Warkworth, Ontario and Drumheller, Alberta. Also a special correctional unit for the most difficult of maximum security inmates will come into operation shortly and afford an opportuity for the penitentiary service to provide a concentrated treatment program for this type of inmate.

The estimates currently being studied provide for the establishing of five community release centres in various cities across Canada, a step which is most significant in filling the void in that transitional period between custody and release and readjustment to the community. I understand the service has completed an agreement to purchase suitable accommodation in Montreal. In addition, funds are being requested for the continuing construction of a maximum security institution at Ste. Anne des Plaines to eventually replace the archaic St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, as well as the initial construction of another institution in Ontario to replace Kingston penitentiary, the start of construction on four reception centres, one each in the Atlantic region, Quebec, Ontario and Western Canada, and the purchase of a site for a new modern institution for the treatment of female offenders in eastern Canada.

All of the above represents a very large building program. Much has been accomplished even in the face of numerous unforeseen and regrettable delays. However, it is hoped that with the completion of the projects planned for this and the next fiscal year, the whole spectrum of institutions included in the plan will be a reality and that the treatment program envisaged therein can be fully implemented.

Although much effort has been concentrated over the last few years in attaining the physical facilities necessary for any modern correctional program, the treatment program itself has not been left unattended nor has that element so necessary in carrying out any program—the staff of the penitentiary service. The penitentiary service, like many other agencies in similar fields, has experienced considerable difficulty in recruiting adequate staff, especially professionals in the psychiatric, psychological and sociological disciplines, to bring about changing treatment and training programs being introduced into its existing institutions and those planned for its new treatment centres. In addition, a concentrated program of both in-service and out-service training for staff is being stepped up.

In order to provide for the increase in staff, from 2,500 to 7,000 during this ten year period, provision is being made this year to enlarge the correctional staff college in Ontario, for the completion of a new staff college in Quebec and the initial construction of another staff college in British Columbia. In this way it is hoped to upgrade the knowledge of all penitentiary staff in the areas of penology and the handling and treatment of inmates and to replace the traditional notion of penitentiaries as a place of custody with one of treatment and resocialization.

I should now like to comment briefly on the activities of the national parole board. I have about one more page of notes, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to complete my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pennell: It is encouraging to note that in 1966 there was an increase of 200 in the number of paroles granted bringing the total to 2,496 for the year. During the first quarter of this year the number of paroles granted increased by 271 over the same period last year. If the present trend continues it is expected that approximately 3,000 inmates will obtain paroles this year. If this comes to pass it will be the highest number of paroles granted in the history of the board.

A significant point I should like to mention is that despite the increased number of paroles granted the failure rate still remains constant at roughly 10 to 11 per cent, which is very modest indeed. This indicates that the board's dual concern for the rehabilitation of the offender and the protection of society still remains in balance.

Speaking for myself I remain firmly committed to the belief that increased probation and parole are our best instruments in the great task of human renewal. I want to express the hope that those in authority will continue to exercise their discretion in these matters generously.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PRIVATE BILLS

UNITED INVESTMENT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Grant Deachman (for Mr. Wahn) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-114, to incorporate United Investment Life Assurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to present Bill No. C-114 on behalf of the sponsor, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn). The bill is to incorporate United Investment Life Assurance Company. The company is to be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on the business of a life insurance company throughout Canada.

United Funds Management Ltd. will subscribe for $500,000 of the capital stock of the company and will make a further contribution to surplus of $500,000. Within two years of commencement of business, United Funds Management Ltd. will sell to officers, directors and employees of the company and, if necessary, others who are Canadian residents 25 per cent of the capital stock of the insurance company for the same price.

United Funds Management Ltd. is an investment management company which is the investment adviser with respect to the portfolio of United Accumulative Fund Ltd., a Canadian mutual fund with assets in excess of $300 million. Over 99 per cent of the 130,000 shareholders of United Accumulative Fund Ltd. are Canadians, as are 13 of the 15 members of its board of directors. Approximately 19 per cent of United Funds Management Ltd. shares are owned by Canadian residents.

Waddell and Reed Incorporated will, within two years of commencement of business of the insurance company, make a public offering to Canadian residents of a sufficient number of the shares of United Funds Management Ltd. to bring its share ownership to below 75 per cent. Accordingly, within two years of the insurance company commencing business the indirect ownership of Waddell and Reed Incorporated, in the insurance company will be reduced to a maximum of 56.25 per cent with practically all of the balance owned by residents of Canada.

United Funds Management Ltd. will undertake to sell to Canadian residents within ten years of the commencement of business of the insurance company sufficient shares of the insurance company then owned by them to bring the indirect ownership of Waddell and Reed Incorporated in the Insurance Company to below 50 per cent.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

The insurance company will initially offer for sale term insurance and ordinary life insurance, stressing forms of such insurance which complement the investment requirements of the shareholders of the mutual fund, United Accumulative Fund Ltd. The fund has over 130,000 shareholders. Other policies of insurance will be studied and introduced if found to be appropriate.

The insurance sales force will operate out of the existing branch offices of United Investment Services Ltd., the selling organization, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of United Funds Management Ltd. There are presently 62 such branch offices serving almost all of the major cities across Canada and ready to provide facilities and service to the insurance sales force.

Management and administrative personnel and facilities of the parent company and its subsidiaries are available to provide efficient low-cost service in the establishment and administration of the insurance company, including computer facilities and experience in servicing 130,000 customer accounts, many of which remit investments on a monthly, quarterly or annual basis, one form of which includes the handling of insurance applications and claims. Experienced management personnel will be readily available for consultation and an estate settlement department is already in operation.

Initially, the insurance company's funds would be invested largely in federal, provincial and municipal bonds. However, with growth the investment advisors of United Funds Management Ltd. would be called upon to guide the company in its investment activity to allow for diversification to include investment in corporate bonds, mortgages and other securities allowed under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Extensive feasibility studies and projections have been carried out by Eckler Brown and Company Ltd., a firm of consulting actuaries in Toronto, projecting that there should be an operating gain in the third year and subsequent years and that the cumulative operating gain should exceed the surplus strain some time in the fifth year and that by the tenth year there should be a net surplus gain of $1,400,000.

The actuary made his findings after several consultations had taken place between the department of insurance, the actuary and company officers and an examination of United Investors Life Insurance Company experience had been conducted. United Investors Life Insurance Company, a subsidiary of Waddell and Reed Incorporated, is an insurance company engaged in the sale, primarily, of term life insurance to complement the mutual fund sales of Waddell and Reed Incorporated in the United States.

The insurance company would enter into reinsurance contracts to reduce the single case risk element in policies sold.

The insurance company will be headed by Mr. Gordon E. Eddolls, who is president of United Investment Services Ltd. and who has had former experience in the insurance industry. Other management personnel will include Mr. Rodney S. C. Donald, who is president of United Funds Management Ltd. and who has been chief executive of investment management for seven years; Mr. John William Galbraith, C.P.A., vice president in charge of administration of United Investment Services Ltd., Mr. William R. Miller, treasurer of United Funds Management Ltd. and United Investment Services Ltd. The company will employ a senior underwriter and such other specialists as may become necessary. Eckler, Brown and Company Limited will provide continuing actuarial service in connection with the establishment of the company's books, policies and manuals, and the annual actuarial review. Legal counsel will be Messrs. Campbell, Godfrey and Lewtas. The Ottawa agents are Messrs. Gowling, MacTavish, Osborne and Henderson. The auditors are Clarkson, Gordon and Company.

That is the story in respect of Bill C-114 which is before us this afternoon. Perhaps I might say a few words now on a different though related subject.

From time to time I have introduced bills of this nature in the house and have assisted other members in the introduction of such bills when they happened to be absent. I must say I often feel there must be other methods by which companies can be brought into being as incorporated companies in Canada. I often wonder whether this is one of the more profitable ways in which members of the House of Commons can spend this particular hour and I commend to the government the possibility of bringing into being, either this session or as soon as possible, an act which would remove these bills from the House of Commons and enable these companies to be incorporated in some other way. As long as this is the way in which companies have to be incorporated I do not mind going through the present procedure. Nevertheless I wish to place this comment on record as I bring Bill No. C-114 before the house this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Edmonton West speaks, may I say that I was listening to what the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra told us about the desirability of spending this hour profitably. It is obvious that most hon. members are spending it more profitably than we are because I can only count 12 of them in their places. I do not think we can do any business in that way. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether you could ascertain if that figure is correct.

Mr. Lambert: Never mind this pious attitude. Let us get on with our business.

Mr. Howard: It is not a pious atiitude. It is a fact of life, if the hon. member is interested.

Mr. Lambert: In another context I notice people do not insist on this. They do not show a pious, sanctimonious attitude by counting people or insisting that others should count them.

Mr. Howard: Let us follow the rules. One would not expect a statement like that from a former Speaker. Stick to the rules.

Mr. Lambert: We will get on with the business. I find that other people have an acute disregard of the rules as far as attendance in the house is concerned.

Mr. Howard: I see only 12 people here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I deal with the point which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) raised in connection with the present method of incorporating companies. I do not feel it is necessary that one hour be spent on every bill of this kind that comes before the house. The place to deal with these measures in detail is in the committee. But it is necessary to bring them before the house because of the system under which they are read the second time, studied in the committee and then returned to this chamber. The hon. member may quarrel with the machinery, but I believe that in matters concerning insurance, matters concerning pipe lines, for example, it serves its purpose very well. I am sure the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) welcomes the opportunity to discuss pipe lines on the floor of the house.

On balance I believe it is best we should discuss these applications or have them available for discussion. I do not think we can abdicate our responsibility when it comes to the principle of the incorporation of insurance companies or banks. This house does not exist merely to say "Amen" to government legislation. It has wider responsibilities. I know there are certain members opposite who feel that its only duty is to praise with high hosannas the wisdom of government legislation. That is not the purpose of parliament.

Bills of the type now before us are, of course, sponsored privately since the government itself cannot accept responsibility for promoting the incorporation of private companies. There are no doubt some imperfections attached to the present way of doing things but I cannot agree with the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra that we should farm out this responsibility to yet another board, yet another group of officials. The tendency within the Liberal party has been to farm these things out to a bureaucracy outside parliament, and I cannot agree with it.

To return to the bill itself, we know it will go before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs where the sponsors and their counsel, as well as the superintendent of insurance, will be available for examination in detail by members of that committee before the adoption or otherwise of this bill is recommended.

I appreciate what the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra has done in placing on record a detailed memorandum as to the purposes of this company and the identity of its owners. I shall have some serious questions to ask in this regard when the bill goes before the committee. This is a bill for the incorporation of a Canadian insurance company to be owned and controlled by outside interests. I have some reservations about that.

I have reservations about insurance companies being closely tied to investment companies or investment fund interests. Unfortunately, during the past few years there has been a proliferation of these related interests incorporated under provincial jurisdiction. Some of these operations could bear much closer scrutiny, particularly when portfolios are dangerously exposed to the influence of sudden deflation or perhaps unwise investment. I raise these points as an indication of the type of questions I shall wish to ask in the committee.

So far as the principle of the incorporation of such companies is concerned I would say that provided the applications meet the legal requirements, provided the policyholders are protected, and provided the proposed operation meets the strict requirements of the superintendent of insurance, I do not think anyone should adopt a paternalistic attitude toward the sponsors or investors or try to hold their hands. It should be borne in mind that those who seek the right to incorporate companies and invest their own money are men of business judgment. They make their investment on their own responsibility. If they wish to risk their own money, and so long as no one else gets hurt, that is fine. I am quite prepared to see they get the right to incorporate and to try to make a success of their company. If they do not make a success of it, it is their own money that they lose. All I am concerned about in a matter of this kind is that the policy holders do not get hurt. So far as the shareholders are concerned, as the saying goes they are big boys; they are over 21 and should be able to take care of themselves. I do not think we have to be paternalistic to the point where we guarantee that they will not suffer a loss. With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to recommend to the house that the bill be accepted on second reading but that in committee we look into the questions I have raised.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago we had an interesting byplay about attendance in the house and I would like to welcome to the chamber those Liberal members who are more in number than the four who were here a little while ago. At least the interruption I made has prompted a greater attendance than was the case previously.

One of the most interesting aspects of that byplay was the proposition made by the hon. gentleman who a few years ago held the most honoured position in this house and who perhaps was as heavy-handed and hard-headed a self-appointed lecturer on the rules as this parliament has ever seen. To listen to that hon. gentleman say in effect, "To heck with the rules, they don't mean anything any longer," is a preposterous proposition, and indicates how shallow an approach is taken to the rules depending on what point one wants to—

Mr. Lambert: I certainly did not take a sanctimonious, holier-than-thou attitude.

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman has now interjected a remark while sitting. He would have ridden people out of the house on a rail if anybody while seated had interrupted when he was presiding. He has just interjected that he did not take a holier-than-thou attitude. That is just what he did when he was in the chair. He was above the call—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has the floor for one purpose which I understand is to discuss Bill C-114.

Mr. Howard: That is my sole purpose, Mr. Speaker, but I was enticed by the hon. member for Edmonton West to depart from the rules again and I could not resist it. If he will be silent I will proceed.

Mr. Speaker: May I entice the hon. member back to Bill No. C-114.

Mr. Howard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid my speech will be almost identical to that given by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) because I am sure we have both been supplied with the same notes from the same source.

With respect to the bill before us one of the aspects we must consider is the question of Canadian ownership versus foreign ownership. This is something which has been considered in general terms on many other occasions, but we must examine it again in relation to this particular company, United Investment Life Assurance Company.

Some months ago on national television the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) made a firm statement to the effect that government policy was designed to move toward the repatriation—I think that is as good as a word as any other—of ownership of the Canadian economy. He said this was the philosophy of the Liberal party and of the government. Many who saw that television broadcast applauded the right hon. gentleman for taking this course. Many people were pleased to see that publicly he fully endorsed the position taken by the former minister of finance, whose present position in the cabinet escapes my memory for the moment. I think he is now President of the Privy Council. In any event I am talking about Mr. Gordon, if I may transgress the rules somewhat to indicate the gentleman.

There is a provision in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act which says that life insurance companies must come under Canadian ownership except those that were in existence prior to the coming into force of that provision. The Prime Minister's broadcast and that provision in the act demand of us in parliament that we inquire into the degree of Canadian or foreign ownership that exists with respect to this company.

Quite frankly, I do not see how the United Investment Life Assurance Company can get around the provision in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act which requires life insurance companies to be Canadian owned, unless there is some loophole in the act which permits this. That may well be the case, because the insurance companies act which will apply to this company when it is incorporated is a very intricate and involved document, not easily understood except by those who have spent a lifetime dealing with insurance companies and their corporate structure.

While, as I say, I do not fully understand whether the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act require this company to be Canadian owned, nevertheless it appears that such is the case. The statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra contained a couple of references to the effect that the holding company, which owns 81 per cent of another company, that owns in turn 100 per cent of the company seeking to be incorporated, will dispose of some of its holdings to Canadians. This would not be done unless the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act apply to the company seeking incorporation. In fact, checking earlier in the year with the superintendent of insurance we were told over the telephone that the company was indirectly American owned.

Some emphasis was placed on the proposals about Canadian participation and ownership. This is a good feature in the attitude of this company, one which other companies would be well advised to follow because, as I said, parliament is duty bound to try to put into effect the policy contained in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and in the Prime Minister's television broadcast. That policy was also enunciated by the former minister of finance and was supported by some members of the cabinet just as fervently as other members of the cabinet opposed the idea of Canadian ownership. However, as I say, I think parliament is duty bound to follow the lead which the Prime Minister gave in his television broadcast and to make sure that companies seeking incorporation become Canadian owned. There is an element of Canadian ownership in the present case which reflects public policy on these matters.

At the moment I must say that it is difficult to follow all the intricacies of these various companies. I have had the situation explained to me on three or four occasions. I have read the documents and have listened to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) explain it, but still it escapes my grasp unless I look at a chart which shows me the interconnection between some of these companies. United Funds Management Ltd. owns 100 per cent of United Investment Life Assurance Company, which is the company to be incorporated here. United Funds Management Ltd. is owned to a degree of approximately 19 per cent by Canadian residents and approximately 81 per cent by Waddell and Reed Inc. which is the parent company in the United States. When the bill which seeks to incorporate this company was before the house during the last session, it was one of those which did not pass at the end of the session because of the concern expressed about the simple question of Canadian ownership. As a result of a declaration on the part of some hon. members that they were concerned about Canadian ownership, the sponsors and promoters of the company made a proposal to Waddell and Reed, Inc. in the United States, the parent company of United Investment Life Assurance Company, about the question of Canadian ownership, following the pattern established in respect of the Mercantile Bank.

The pattern established in respect of the Mercantile Bank was that there would be a period of time in which the degree of foreign ownership which now exists would be dispensed with; in other words, over a period of time this company would cease to become a foreign owned company and would become a Canadian owned company by the offering of share capital to Canadians. It was as a result of this expression of desire by some hon. members that the provision relating to Canadian participation in ownership which was made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra came into being.

I believe it is worth while to read this memorandum again in order to underline the approach of this company in this regard. Waddell and Reed, Inc. is the parent company in the United States which owns United Funds Management Ltd. to the extent of 81 per cent and thereby, through it, owns United Investment Life Assurance Company to the extent of 100 per cent. One of the first things that will occur is that within two years of the commencement of business United Funds Management Ltd., which is the company which owns United Investment Life Assurance Company to the extent of 100 per cent, will offer to sell to officers, directors and employees of the company and, if necessary, others who are Canadian residents 25 per cent of the capital stock of the insurance company for the same price. This means that within a period of time this 100 per cent ownership by United Funds Management Ltd. will become 75 per cent.

If I keep reading this document and continue to refer to the graphs, I will come to understand at least one aspect of the operation of the company by repetition, if through no other means. Waddell and Reed, Inc., the parent United States company, will within two years of commencement of business of the Insurance Company—and I wonder here whether I am speaking about the same thing because the statement refers to the insurance company with the "i" in "Insurance" a capital letter yet the company which is sought to be incorporated is not to be called an insurance company but rather an assurance company. It may be that the reference to "insurance company" merely relates to United Investment Life Assurance Company, although the writing here is sufficient to make us pause to see whether this is what we are talking about. The statement says that Waddell and Reed, Inc., will, within two years of the commencement of business of the Insurance Company make a public offering to Canadian residents of a sufficient number of the shares of United Funds Management Ltd. to bring its share ownership to below 75 per cent. Accordingly, within two years of the insurance company commencing business, the indirect ownership of Waddell and Reed, Inc., in the insurance company will be reduced to a maximum of 56.25 per cent, with practically all the balance owned by residents of Canada.

That is to say, instead of Waddell & Reed Inc. owning 81 per cent of the company which owns United Investment Life Assurance Company to the extent of 100 per cent, within two years, through the distribution of the share ownership, the indirect ownership by Waddell & Reed Inc. of United Investment Life Assurance Company will be reduced to a maximum of 56.25 per cent, which is getting close to the margin required for full Canadian ownership.

United Funds Management Ltd., according to this statement, will undertake to sell to Canadian residents within ten years of the commencement of business of the insurance company, sufficient shares of the insurance company then owned by them to bring the indirect ownership of Waddell & Reed Inc. in the insurance company to below 50 per cent.

This is a statement of policy and of intention on the part of the company. This statement meets the objections raised in this house by some members on an earlier occasion during another session. So far it is only a statement of policy. With all respect to those who enunciated this statement and with all respect to those who developed the idea and accepted it, in common parlance and without being unkind I should like to suggest that it still has only the value of the paper on which it is written. There is nothing in the bill before us to indicate that United Investment Life Assurance Company will, within a period of time set out in the statement of intention of the company itself, comply with the statement of policy. I think this is something which should be cleared away in the committee. It is the law of Canada that this will take place. It certainly is the law of Canada that it will take place with regard to the Mercantile Bank. In that case it is not simply a matter of the acceptance by the Canadian government of a statement of policy on the part of the Mercantile interests; it is a matter which is nailed down.

When this bill reaches the committee stage, I think it will be the responsibility of the members of that committee to take the policy enunciation of the company and ask the appropriate officers of the Department of Insurance, which I believe is the appropriate body, to have it drafted in the proper legal form so that it can be incorporated into the particular bill. In this way the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra which, as I understand it, reflects very clearly and exactly the position of the promoters of the United Investment Life Assurance Company, would by law be related to this particular company and this Bill C-114.

Some may say that by spelling this out in the bill it constitutes a departure from the norm and therefore we should not do it. Let me point out that there are precedents for this. One pipe line company, the name of which escapes me now, some six or seven years ago sought incorporation through sponsorship of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). That bill contained a provision, because this point was crucial at that time, which required that all the directors of the company at all times would be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. The argument that this is a departure from the norm may be true to the extent that it is not ordinarily done, but there is precedent for it, and that precedent arises from a rather peculiar situation.

I submit that the situation now before us is likewise peculiar, in that a company which is owned indirectly in the United States, partly because this was done so easily, with such a direct approach and without hesitation, and partly involuntarily because certain views had been expressed to the company that the passage of this bill would be made much easier, is seeking to be incorporated by parliament at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am going to be a great disappointment this afternoon to my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The other day when we were discussing a bill in respect of the incorporation of another insurance company, the hon. member had some kind remarks to make about me. If I may just make some reference to them, he said as reported at page 755 of Hansard for May 30:

> He has just given me cause to admire his perceptiveness and his ability to follow the highly detailed, technical and complex remarks made by the bill's sponsor. My colleague grasped the significance of the document introduced in the introductory remarks by the sponsor of the bill. When my colleague referred to that document and said that he appreciated the straightforward manner in which the bill's sponsor had outlined its purposes, I was amazed. I had not thought it possible to follow the labyrinthian course that the bill's sponsor outlined when he explained the intricacies, complexities and involvements of this company with other companies.

I have a confession to make to my colleague. Notwithstanding the explanation given by the sponsor with respect to Bill C-114, and having listened to the hon. member's detailed elucidation of what is behind this proposal, I cannot in this instance follow the complexities of the proposal we now have before us. I have some general idea that there is a proposal that if this bill should be approved by parliament, some steps are to be taken in the general direction of divesting the original sponsors of the company of some of their stock holdings. Perhaps my difficulty in this regard is due to the fact that I have not had the opportunity of perusing the document to which both the sponsor of the bill and the hon. member for Skeena referred. It may be that my remarks will not have that similarity the hon. member for Skeena said his remarks would have to those of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman).

I have looked at the terms of this bill, however, and the question has arisen in my mind, as indeed it has on quite a number of occasions during this and recent sessions, as to just what direction we are moving in dealing with an almost endless series of bills which seek to incorporate new insurance companies.

Once again I think one should examine the preamble to this bill, which seems to be in a rather stock form, indicating that the persons named in the bill have by their petition prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, in other words in the details of the bill, and make the bland statement that it is expedient to grant the prayer of the petition; that therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, enacts as follows, and then goes on to set out the detailed clauses. Let me suggest again today, as I have done on some previous occasions when discussing bills to incorporate insurance companies, that this embodies the basic question we are being asked to consider when we come to the second reading stage of a private bill to incorporate a company. This is something which ought to give us cause at least to look seriously at the proposal put before us.

The hon. member acting for the sponsors in introducing the bill, and the hon. member for Skeena, have apparently made some examination of the terms of the proposal in so far as they relate to the shareholdings of the company, and whether it is to be a Canadian owned company or a company owned by the nationals of other countries. This is a very important aspect of the consideration which should be given to the incorporation of a particular company at this stage of our history, be it an insurance company, or indeed any corporation.

There is another question which warrants our attention, and once again I should like to suggest in connection with this bill, as I have suggested on previous occasion in reference to other bills, that we should consider the economic advisability of incorporating an almost endless proliferation of insurance companies. An insurance company in my view is a company which is not a wealth producing organization. It is indeed a wealth diverting organization in that it diverts the savings of individuals who pay premiums for insurance companies into the channels which fit the desires of the directors or the management of the company. This indeed is a very important aspect of the advisability of granting petitions for the incorporation of a great number of insurance companies.

This is a question which in my view deserves very careful attention. Indeed I think the time has come when members of this house, if they have not already done so, should ask the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to prepare a much more detailed and careful analysis of the situation with particular reference to the number of insurance companies in different areas of the country, and the incidence or relationship of the number of companies to the number of Canadians living in Canada. We do have such figures of interest and concern relating to the number of doctors per capita in a given area of the country, or to the total population of the country.

In view of the almost endless series of incorporations we have been asked to consider, one might begin to raise the question as to whether we will soon have more insurance companies in the country than we have inhabitants. We will find ourselves in the position that is often referred to in many connections as simply taking in one another's washing. In other words, I will be insuring the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra will be insuring me, and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) will probably be looking after the insurance requirements of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury). And so, on it will go, right around the piece amongst the members of this house and across the country. I am not suggesting that the passage of this particular bill will create a situation that will literally be as I have been suggesting, but nevertheless it is one of the important matters which should be of concern to us as we consider any and all applications for the incorporation of new insurance companies.

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill No. C-112, an act to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this bill could stand, and may I call it seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Normally, Mr. Speaker, I would not object to the minister doing this, but this particular insurance company, Aetna Casualty Company of Canada, as was mentioned earlier, is one to which we raise very strong objection. I hope, by design, to have the floor when it becomes seven o'clock so that the bill will end up at the bottom of the list, where it belongs. Perhaps the minister would give me just a few moments and then he can call it seven o'clock. I would be quite happy if that could be done. I had the floor on May 30 at seven o'clock and had some further remarks to make when I was interrupted by the clock.

As I have said, it was very difficult to follow the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) in his introductory remarks, partly because I did not have a program, as was the case today. Since that time I have had the opportunity to read some of the remarks of the sponsor of the bill when he moved second reading. As will be found at page 752 of Hansard for May 30, the hon. member for High Park said with respect to the company before us:

The proposed company would be a subsidiary of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford, Connecticut. The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company is a corporation carrying on a substantial general insurance business in the United States of America with its head office at Hartford, Connecticut.

The hon. member then pointed out that the 1965 premium income of Aetna Casualty increased 17 per cent to $665 million. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) could somehow have found that extra income, we could have looked for a balanced budget this year instead of having a deficit of $750 million. The hon. member for High Park then said:

The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford has conducted business in Canada for some years and has held a certificate of registry under the Foreign Insurance Companies Act for the past 48 years.

He said that this company has never had any offices in Canada and a substantial part of the business conducted by the company has been with United States corporations which have subsidiaries operating in Canada. So not only is Aetna Casualty Company of Canada owned by a United States company in Hartford, Connecticut, but most of its business in Canada, which is conducted without its even having an office in this country, has been carried out with companies that are also subsidiaries of United States corporations.

I think there are two strikes against the company which deserve our consideration. The first is that it has been a sort of fly-by-night venture for 48 years, and has now finally got around to the point where it thinks it would be worth while and desirable to become incorporated as a company in Canada, and be legitimate, as the saying goes.

We have a fine example in this respect for those who believe in good Canadian corporate citizenship. This principle was enunciated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) in a letter to all subsidiary companies in Canada telling them what they should do to be good Canadian corporate citizens. It would seem to me that the example set by the promoters and sponsors of United Investment Life Insurance Company was a good one, where they said: Yes, we are an American company but within a period of 10 years we intend to phase out American ownership to the point that at the end of that period the company will be Canadian owned.

I think this is the principle which should be followed by Aetna Casualty Company of Canada. I submit that this company should follow the lead and example set by United Investment Life Insurance Company and should take at face value the declarations of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), the declarations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and the feeling of the parliament of Canada. Perhaps I am being overly generous in this respect, but I think relatively few members of parliament would object to the idea of a company seeking to become Canadian owned over a reasonable period of time.

We have the example, not set by the Mercantile Bank, but enforced by the government in respect of that bank and followed by United Investment Life Assurance Company. I hope this company will do the same.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

Supply—Solicitor General

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The house in committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General, item No. 1, departmental administration.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity tonight to make some comments on the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General. In his opening remarks this afternoon the minister made a very nice, general and non-controversial speech, and there is nothing in it with which I can find fault. However, I do propose to mention some matters he did not include in his speech, and perhaps before the estimates are completed he can round them out by answering some of these questions.

The first matter I wish to mention regards the question of the reorganization of the department itself. I am vaguely dissatisfied with the name of the department in view of the additional responsibilities that have been given to it. Over the years in this country the office of the Solicitor General did not carry the duties or prestige which it now does, since its reorganization. At one time the Solicitor General was not even a cabinet minister. So that the name of the Department of the Solicitor General does not bring to mind for many people the very important duties which the minister now has to carry out. I am sure that if anybody in this government can give some strength and status to the department, the present minister can, and I wish him success along those lines.

The minister introduced his remarks this afternoon by saying that his department was concerned with crime, and then he proceeded to give us some statistics. I wondered then whether we might revise the minister's title and make it "the minister of crime" or perhaps "the crime minister".

Mr. Knowles: But not "the criminal minister".

Mr. Aiken: I think some change in the name would be justified. However, the minister has his duties and I know that he will perform them well.

The first subject I should like to cover is the penitentiaries branch. I am very disappointed that the joint Senate and House of Commons committee on penitentiaries which was set up a year ago never got around to the subject of the penitentiary service in general. The meetings which we had were held on an emergency basis to try to give the department some direction in connection with the maximum security institutions, one of them already nearing completion and another one about to start. The committee therefore did not get around to what many people had hoped it would, that is the general concept of penitentiaries in government service.

However, out of these committee hearings there emerged one obvious fact, namely that there has been some extensive empire building in regional headquarters at Kingston, which is not in the best interest of the penitentiary service. This regional set-up was originally authorized for the administration of supply services in the region. However, I do not believe it was ever the intention that the internal management of individual units should be run from the regional headquarters.

There are two places in which this policy runs afoul of reality. The first one is the women's prison, and the other is the minimum security institutions. In the standing committee, we did not come to grips with the cause of this breakdown in the regional concept. It obviously exists in the service, and there exists also a hard core of institutionalized and custodial oriented people who want to run things from the centre. I am not going to name this group, even if I could. They are there and always have been. I presume they always will be. This core of people in the penitentiary service is unsympathetic to the minimum security program and resists progress in the social sciences.

This core does not involve the whole penitentiary branch in any way. I am quite satisfied that the minister and the commissioner have the very best of intentions in the matter. I know also that there are many excellent people in the penitentiary service who are anxious to see progress. At the same time there is obviously a constant struggle in that service over the direction of rehabilitative measures. I suggest that the minister and the commissioner must bring to bear their whole weight to remove or transfer those who are not willing to comply with policy directions.

These people are not easy to find and are not easy to transfer. However, the hearings the committee had indicate what everybody knows, that this core does exist and has to be dealt with. Now, I do not say by any means that the attitude of some of these people I am calling the "hard core" is entirely wrong. They have been in the service for many years. They have been disappointed many times. If they are on the lower or custodial level they have perhaps seen efforts on many occasions to improve the situation of prisoners only to find within a short time that a riot of some sort has broken out or individual prisoners upon whom they have been relying have let them down. Eventually there is a return, full cycle, to the position that this is all a waste of time.

Mr. Olson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but in view of the fact that the Security Council of the United Nations has, within the past hour, unanimously passed a resolution calling for a ceasefire in the Middle East, I wonder if the committee would be disposed to rise, report progress, and provide an opportunity for the government to revert to motions so a statement could be made on this matter.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, the information I have received on this situation is very meager indeed. I have in mind now the statement which I believe the Prime Minister made earlier today indicating that it might be acceptable to the house, if circumstances warranted, that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs be called tomorrow. Having regard to both of these points I would, with great respect, request we continue with the business presently before the committee.

Mr. Olson: I believe the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs also said earlier today that if the security council came to a decision and there was something to report, a report would be made to the house. I am not sure whether they said immediately, but certainly with all possible dispatch.

Mr. Pennell: I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member transcends in importance the business now before the committee, but at this time I do not believe I could be very helpful to the committee. Perhaps I could make inquiries and later on this evening, if the information brought to my attention indicates it would be helpful to make a report to the house, I could give consideration to the proposal put forward by the hon. member.

Mr. Aiken: I should like now to turn to the question of minimum security institutions, Mr. Chairman. This is the one group of institutions that the minister passed over in his otherwise comprehensive review this afternoon. In outlining the program for this year, he mentioned the medium security institution at Cowansville, three more medium institutions for young people, the two maximum security institutions which the committee was considering and the institution for females in eastern Canada. I hope that the oversight was merely that, and not an indication that the minimum security program is not going forward with maximum speed. This is one of the fears of the people in the minimum security field, that gradually the program which was begun some years ago will not be carried to its completion.

The problem of immediate concern is the same as that which related to the women's prison, in that there is a regional headquarters which intervenes and, in many cases, sets up the program and internal management of the minimum security institution from outside. I say that this is absolutely wrong. I think there is too much programming, that there are too many regulations and too many rules; prisoners have to be cleared through the penitentiary service at Kingston or some other regional area. There are too many returns of prisoners to be discharged, and so forth. This is one of the weaknesses that became very clear in our study of the prison for women.

I feel that minimum security institutions suffer from the same problem. I think it is absolute nonsense for several institutions, set up presumably on a different approach, to be operated internally from beyond the institution. I think there is no harm whatever in these institutions being provided centrally with food and supply services, but to set up regulations which are applicable to all institutions—and this appears to have happened—is not good policy, and it is not working out. I feel this is something that ought to be thoroughly investigated.

We had a very clear insight into these problems when Miss Macneill, who was formerly superintendent of the prison for women, came before the committee. She and two other ladies who had been on her staff, but who are no longer connected with the penitentiary service, unburdened themselves to the committee because they were under no pressure, under no danger of action which might be punitive. I do not say that there is, within the service, any fear of this sort of punishment, but naturally a person is not going to throw away his or her job by making unkind comments about the administrative set-up. It was quite clear to us that the prison for women has suffered because of the effort that was made to apply to the women's prison the rules of the maximum security prison for men. They just do not work out.

I say that the same thing applies to the minimum security institutions, which are surely set up on a different basis and with a somewhat different objective. Mr. J. D. Clark, the acting superintendent made a sincere effort to convince the committee that he was not too unhappy with interference from his superiors, but I do not think anybody on the committee really felt that he had made his case. Most on the committee felt that it would have been much better if the penitentiary with which he was connected were self-sustaining and operating. This is the first problem.

I wish to return to my first comment. The minister did not give details about what was planned for minimum security institutions. Granted, we have a bad situation in connection with maximum security prisons, but real progress has been made with minimum security institutions. The concept and organization of minimum security institutions is well accepted, and they are operating satisfactorily. The institutions are constantly afraid that the department's penitentiary service will veer from the good work that is being done and that there will not be support from those higher in the service or from the minister. That is without basis, I know.

The minister believes strongly in the rehabilitation that springs from minimum security institutions. I have a particular interest in Beaver Creek camp, which is near my home town, and have watched it operate since it was set up. It is well accepted in the community and well run, and the local people had absolutely no fear or uneasiness about its being there. Few inmates walked away, and the camp has produced few recidivists; but I assume that other, similar institutions have had the same experience. Talking about Beaver Creek camp, as an example, I heard rumours that there were plans to expand it into a much larger camp, and that the authorities wanted to take advantage of the excellent land and facilities up there. Yet not many months later I heard the opposite rumour: the camp would be closed and that this was to happen in three or four years from now. When such rumours go around the institution they do not make for good esprit de corps, which is most necessary in this type of penitentiary.

Before we conclude these estimates I wish the minister would fill in the little gap he left in his introductory statement and tell us clearly that minimum security institutions are well accepted and that they will be expanded and enlarged as quickly as possible.

I have another remark to make about the penitentiaries branch of the department. Recently I had occasion to get in touch with the industrial branch of the department. I found that they are doing excellent work in preparing jobs within the institutions with which to keep inmates occupied, and from which they could learn a trade or profession while they are in the institutions. I hope that this branch of the department will be given close attention and much encouragement.

I wish to turn for a moment to the parole board. In common with the penitentiaries branch, they are performing their duties in a most sensitive area of public service. Perhaps their area of service is even more sensitive than that of the penitentiaries branch. If the board makes one error, if there is one accident, its objectives may be set back for many years. We know that this has happened in one or two instances, and that has been a tragedy. Doctor McCaldon, the psychiatrist who gives part time penitentiary service, illustrated the problem when he gave evidence before the joint committee. He stated that in one instance the parole board had been negligent in not accepting the recommendations of a psychiatrist, and a few minutes later, when speaking of another instance, he condemned the parole board for too readily accepting the opinion of a psychiatrist and social worker. When he was asked to explain the differences in his viewpoint he said, "It is just one of those things. We must press the parole board to make up its own mind."

Purely as a result of observation and from what I have heard, I wish to mention three ways in which the parole board can make its work more effective. First, it may be that the board is operating too much by rule of thumb; sometimes this can lead to inconsistent results and bring about resentment. It is undoubtedly true that every individual must be dealt with separately. There are instances, though in which it is most difficult to make consistent decisions. There has been criticism on this score. Perhaps those applying for parole ought to be made aware of what is being done and what is involved.

Second, the parole board should give reasons for its decisions more readily, especially to those directly involved. There has been much criticism about this and I do not know why in most instances the board's reasons cannot be given. The argument advanced here is similar to that which has been advanced in connection with immigration cases, and others. It has been said that it would not be in the best interests of the public or the applicant to give reasons. On the other hand there is a strong feeling that sometimes the reasons for refusing are not valid, or that the board has been misinformed, as has happened in some instances.

Finally, I think the parole board should try to be less susceptible to public opinion in cases of accident; I am referring, of course, to the Dion case. It was suggested from time to time that, in certain aspects of its work the board had been making good progress until the Dion case came up. We all recognize that what happened was a tragedy. All the same I believe the parole board should not permit itself to be too much affected by such an accident. Perhaps it should be a little more cautious and make somewhat better inquiries, but it should proceed with the plan of parole that it had.

I realize that the board was criticised in this house by members who are no longer here; it was publicly criticized for its decision in the Dion case, which was a tragedy, and in other, similar cases. Yet if there is a case where the board is convinced that it is right and where it is convinced that it is following the right course, so far as I am concerned it would have support.

A final word about the R.C.M.P. In the course of his introductory remarks the minister gave us a very useful picture of the work the police forces are doing in Canada at every level of government. He told us that the use of parole had increased and that the failure rate had not risen. The R.C.M.P. has had some troubles during the last two or three years. The Canadian people are proud of this force—proud of its quiet efficiency and its excellent public image. They are proud of the musical ride and of the mounted police uniforms. However, the security branch of the force has had large holes torn in its image during the last couple of years because of investigations which have led to the revelation of some of its methods and decisions. I do not think this is necessarily bad. In this type of work it is very easy to take decisions based on rumour, on previous cases or on unproven connections with other persons. There have been many instances in which apparently, the wrong person, was identified to the force.

I do not think too much stress should be laid on individual happenings in the past but I do believe the R.C.M.P., particularly the security investigation branch, must reconsider its position from time to time in connection with such cases. At this very moment we as members of parliament are considering the possibility of passing legislation which would wipe out a criminal record after a certain period of time had elapsed, perhaps ten or 12 years. The committee on justice and legal affairs has considered this question, a report has been made and the Solicitor General is, I understand, contemplating legislation. If this legislation is passed, with the result that after ten years a record of conviction is wiped out, why should the R.C.M.P. keep on its files information about unproven connections 25 or 30 years ago—the activities at that time of people who were connected in their youth with communist organizations?

I do not speak from definite knowledge, but there certainly seems to be a general opinion that this is what happens. I believe reconsideration should be given to these security procedures, and especially to the retention of records relating to incidents of ancient vintage. I am sure both the public and the police would benefit if such an examination were made.

I should like to conclude with a word about this proposed legislation concerning the wiping out of criminal records. The committee hearings were most useful, but the real problem was this: What would happen in the case of a person who was asked, in connection with an application for employment, for example, whether he had ever been convicted of a criminal offence? Even if the record of the offence had been wiped out, an answer is required—yes, or no. It was suggested that the way to meet this situation would be for a person whose record had been erased to answer the question in the negative. It was argued he would have legal grounds for doing so.

I feel strongly that this is a wrong approach. I do not think there is any legislative way in which a lie can be made into the truth or the truth made into a lie. Regardless of what has been done in the meantime, if a man is asked whether he has ever been convicted of a criminal offence, and he has been so convicted, he must answer, yes.

I suggest to the Solicitor General, who I understand will be bringing in this legislation, that the only question which ought to be allowed should be one like this "Have you ever been convicted of a criminal offence for which no certificate of rehabilitation has been granted?" In such a situation the person concerned can properly answer that question in the negative without committing perjury, either with legal justification or without.

I trust the minister, when he replies, will answer some of the questions I have raised, particularly those concerning minimum security.

Mr. Winch: I welcome the opportunity of making a few comments on some of the matters which fall within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General.

May I say, first of all, how much I regret the fact that the special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on penitentiaries was not reappointed immediately this new session began. I fully realize that there is no hope of its being appointed now, and that even if it were it would have little opportunity to get down to work before the summer recess, if there is to be one. The matters which were in the minds of the members of that committee will therefore have to wait until the fall.

As the previous speaker pointed out, the committee was never able to get down to a real study of many of the problems of our penitentiary service. This work is important and it still remains to be done.

I particularly regret the failure to reappoint this committee because it has denied us the opportunity to look more closely into the situation at the women's prison. Had the committee been able to meet some two or three weeks ago I feel it would have been in a position to make a report expressing its views on this situation before the summer recess. I for one, as a member of the committee, was absolutely amazed at the position taken and the statements made by the acting superintendent. Mr. Clark. I could hardly believe my ears when he told the committee that at the time he took over the place was filthy, the inmates were disrespectful, the program was poor, the discipline lax, and so on. I was not the only one who was amazed. Other members of this house, and Senators who have visited the institution time after time, could not believe what was being said about it. It was of course an indictment of Miss Macneill, the former superintendent. I am sure that the penitentiary service itself must have been amazed at these statements. I only wish they, as the penitentiary service, had come out and refuted the indictment of Miss Macneill, and refuted the allegations. It was within their power and knowledge to do so.

I would like to place on the record the views and remarks of the deputy commissioner of penitentiaries following his visit to the women's prison. I find that he reported in November, 1965, when Miss Macneill was there, and this is what he said:

> The most notable feature in the prison for women was that all inmates, except three who are dissociated, were fully employed.
> The institution generally was clean and tidy and, particularly, the rooms in the new part of the institution were beautifully kept.
> The school program is outstanding and I was most pleased to see the Indian women improving their educational standards.
> A visit to the home economics building, where I was entertained at tea with the inmates, was most enlightening. This type of program is excellent for female inmates and certainly should be continued.

He went on to say:

> Regardless of the administrative problems that may have arisen in the past in relation to the operation of the prison for women, I must say that the superintendent has an excellent program in operation and, from what I could see from my half-day visit, the inmates were being given every opportunity and encouragement to make the best use of their time in prison.

This is the report of the deputy commissioner, yet we have these statements made by the new acting superintendent. Because of the conflict, because of the situation, I am most sorry that the committee has not been given an opportunity of meeting now, so as to bring in its views and recommendations as to the policies that should appertain in a women's penitentiary.

The Solicitor General pointed out that crime in Canada is on the upswing and that we are facing a critical situation. He also pointed to the high percentage of repeaters. Undoubtedly all he said is correct, but I would like to express the view that the increase in crime, and in particular the high degree of recidivism, must point to the fact that somewhere we have failed and are failing in our rehabilitative policies. I know the main emphasis must be on the individual who commits the crime, but surely according to modern penology we send men into prisons and penitentiaries not for punishment, not for revenge, but for rehabilitation. Yet somewhere along the line we have failed.

It is my belief that one reason we have failed and are still failing is that we think first of construction and second of policy. We have heard from the minister about the ten year program. We are about half way through it now. It has cost and will cost millions and millions of dollars. We are building prisons that are going to stand for 75 or 100 years because they are being built as fortresses, and yet it is quite evident that their construction has no relation to modern policies of penology.

Moreover, we are doing things in construction which other countries say they would never do. In some respects we are including features which authorities in the United States told us that they had wiped out in 1906. I repeat that we are incorporating features in our new prisons that were wiped out over 60 years ago in the United States.

It is quite apparent that in the penitentiary service there is too strong a tendency to base policy on custodial features. It is rather remarkable that in present plans for maximum security here in Canada there are more custodial points, or control points in our newly designed prisons than there are in the super maximum security plans of the United States. Surely you cannot tell me, or try to tell me, that our criminals in Canada are more rabid and more vicious than those in the United States, because I just will not and just cannot believe it. I think we have to get away from this custodial approach. By that I do not mean that there do not have to be control points and discipline. These are bad boys; they are criminals and they have to be treated as such. But hide the custodial features as much as possible, so as to change their minds and, if we can, give them a social consciousness, instead of the anti-social attitude that landed them in the penitentiaries.

I cannot quite understand why it is that we are proceeding with this type of maximum security institution, at the rate and in the numbers we are contemplating, without knowing what future policies are going to be, what our plans for rehabilitation, probation and parole are going to be. We want to know these things. Because we want to know them we have, first, the joint committee on penitentiaries; but perhaps even more important we have a special royal commission which is studying every facet and phase of our penal system, right from the time people arrive in court, through probation, judgment, penitentiary and parole. Yet here we are proceeding with a type of construction that is going to last 50, 75 or 100 years the way it is planned, even before we get the report and the recommendations with respect to policies from the royal commission.

Before we know how to proceed we are going to have the construction. To me that is putting the cart before the horse. I certainly hope the Solicitor General is going to accept the recommendation of the joint committee, that after he proceeds with the construction of the second maximum security institution just outside Kingston he will not proceed with any more until it can be seen how the first new ones work, and until we get the report of the royal commission and know exactly what the policies and plans on penology are going to be.

I also hope that even with the ones that are constructed and are under construction, changes will be made. I do not mean just the changes that were recommended by the joint committee; I mean other matters as well. You are never going to rehabilitate a man, especially a bad one, if you put him in a state of dissociation, where there are no windows, where there are just the three walls, a ceiling, a floor and a blank door. In other words, he can neither see nor hear. If anyone has even a touch of claustrophobia, God help him.

I fully realize you have to have dissociation. There are occasions with a type of individual when he must be put into dissociation; but no matter how bad a man is, at least let him see out into the corridor and, if possible, let him look outside and see the sunlight during the day and the sky at night. I think every member should go through that so-called correction unit in Montreal. Correction unit?—there is only one thing missing from that place and that is a sign over the front door, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here", because it is concrete with iron bars, and overhead is the catwalk for the armed guards. This is revenge; it is punishment; it is not rehabilitation. A criminal will never be rehabilitated in this kind of atmosphere. I say that it is this type of attitude which has cost the taxpayers a lot of money. We should be directing some real thinking toward our plans in respect of penology.

I was startled when the information was given to the members of the committee, and corroborated by the commissioner of penitentiaries, that if we were to consider the cost of our police forces and our courts, and compare such costs with those of maintaining a person in the penitentiary, including the maintenance of his wife and children, in all probability we would find that if such person were married and possibly on welfare, the cost to the taxpayers of Canada would be over $50,000 a year per inmate in our penitentiaries. When you consider the money which is spent in an effort to bring about rehabilitation, it becomes obvious that the money is well spent if the result is less institutionalism.

I also think those responsible for the penitentiary service are not thinking far enough ahead, or if they are they are doing the wrong kind of thinking. I suggest, through you Mr. Chairman to the Solicitor General, that something must be done at the federal level when we have the kind of thinking which believes that we must have the number of maximum security prisons which we have. It is maintained that 32 per cent of the criminals in Canada require maximum security. Why is the figure 32 per cent, when the manual on correctional standards published by a number of the great penologists of Canada and the United States says that 15 per cent is the figure. Why should it be 32 per cent in Canada and 15 per cent in the United States? Why is there all this hurry to have maximum security when, at the same time that we insist on maintaining that we must have this maximum security, space is available in the minimum security and medium security institutions? Why are these institutions not occupied to capacity? Why should we not take those prisoners who the warden says are coming along fine and move them into minimum security, especially when, according to the information we were given a few weeks ago, there are vacancies.

It does not make sense to me that in Canada we consider the percentage to be 32 while in the United States it is considered to be 15. We scream to death that our maximum security institutions are overloaded, while we have vacancies in the minimum and medium security institutions. I believe we should take a really good look at our policies and plans in respect of penology. I sincerely hope that the government will look into such things as the policy of work release which has been followed in the last 20 months in the federal institutions in the United States. They are convinced that if a man has become rehabilitated he is fit for society. They asked the question: If this man still has some time to serve what can he do? They began an experiment on a trial basis with 2,100 inmates. These inmates left the penitentiary in the morning, went to work, and came back at night and on week ends. They were charged a nominal price for lodging and had to maintain their families. This has proven to be such a success that we were told in Washington that not only is this program to be continued but it will be added to, because it has worked. This is work release, and I believe it is real rehabilitation.

These are matters which I believe we should be thinking about instead of spending so much money building perhaps too many maximum security fortresses. I also hope that a real look will be taken at the parole board and parole policies. We should be releasing many more inmates on parole, under supervision. For the life of me, however, I cannot understand some of the thinking of the members of the parole board. I could mention the case of one bad boy who was in the British Columbia penitentiary for the second time. He could not take it, so they had to send him to the insane asylum. In three or four months his health improved and he was sent back to the penitentiary. In another four months he went back again to the insane asylum. Then it became a matter of back to the penitentiary, back to the insane asylum, back to the penitentiary, into the narcotic institution, back into the insane asylum, and so on. I do not know where he is now. The doctors, the chaplain, the warden and the classification officer say that he should be out on parole and that he should have been out a long time ago. This is the only way in which there would be any hope that he would be able to save himself physically and mentally. That is, he should be sent out on parole in the custody of his father. When the father sees what is happening to his son, then I would become worried about the father and the effect it would have on him. Parole?—no; I believe the chairman of the parole board is in favour of it, but undoubtedly he is not able to convince the members of the board. So it is a case of back into the penitentiary, back into the insane asylum, and back into the penitentiary. One day he will remain in the insane asylum—I hope not —because it could happen unless there is more warm and humanitarian thinking on the part of at least some of the members of the parole board, instead of the ice water which seems to circulate on many occasions.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that all these questions, which are vital because we are dealing with human lives, will be considered in a modern and reasonable manner. There is just one other point I should like to mention and, that is the guards. As I have said, these are bad boys who are in the penitentiary. Some of them are very cute, very brilliant and very vicious. I wish hon. members could see the weapons they make—the stilettos, the daggers and the imitation guns. They should see, as I have, some of the guards when they have been slashed, or the guard who had his hand blown off at Christmas time, and his son who lost an eye.

I believe a new policy is required in respect of our penitentiary system. We should not wait until somebody is caught with a weapon before arresting him. It must be made known as a definite policy to every inmate that there are severe penalties which they will receive if they are caught with a weapon. I am certain that if the penalties are made more severe—and I agree with this—and are made known, then many of the criminals would think twice before they would go ahead and forge these most vicious and dangerous weapons and attack the guards. I believe also there should be a government policy that whenever a guard is injured either on or off the job, because of his position and responsibility the department should accept the idea that he should be on full salary for life, because of the danger to which he is exposed in his employment.

I sincerely hope that these matters will be taken into consideration. Like the previous speaker I have the highest degree of confidence in the minister. I am certain that eventually he will get around to doing these things and I hope that then we will be able to have better legislation.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, before starting my short remarks, it is possible and easy, I think, to obtain leave of the house to offer to the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) well deserved and quite appropriate congratulations for the excellent work he is doing in the discharge of his difficult duties. The Solicitor General performs with an unusual dash the difficult task which has been entrusted to him.

Mr. Chairman, before coming to the heart of the matter, may I be allowed to refer to a rather exceptional incident which occurred just a few days ago in this house, when an hon. member read to the house a certain message he had received, a quite mysterious message, the content of which it was hard to know. If, during consideration of the estimates of the Solicitor General, we have the right to talk about matters dealing with the implementation of the Criminal Code, I will say that I am quite in order when I mention that incident.

As evidenced by page 819 of the official report of June 1, 1967, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) rose on a question of privilege and stated:

> On the envelope and in the letter—

Which was addressed to him.

> —abusive, slanderous and defamatory remarks had been written.

Mr. Chairman, section 249 of the Criminal Code says this:

> A person publishes a libel when he
> (a) exhibits it in public,
> (b) causes it to be read or seen, or
> (c) shows or delivers it, or causes it to be shown or delivered, with intent that it should be read or seen by the person whom it defames or by any other person.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member without having listened to him a little, but I think that, at the present time, we are studying the estimates of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Pennell). Furthermore, the case he refers to has been the subject of a question of privilege in the house and I fail to see how it could be connected with the estimates of the Solicitor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I am quite pleased with your remarks to which subscribe several members who have shown their approval by clapping. In fact, I think that you are perfectly right to wonder about the appropriateness of my remarks and their possible connection with the estimates of the Solicitor General.

However, Mr. Chairman, I conclude by saying that if someone is a victim of slander, especially a member of the House of Commons, I do not see why there should be any reluctance to ask the R.C.M.P. at a given time to investigate in order to clear up the matter and determine, if necessary, who might have committed an offence under section 249 of the Criminal Code. It is in that sense that this matter is related to the estimates of the Solicitor General, because the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) is known to have made three blunders. First, he wrongfully attacked the hon. member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Lessard) and he had to withdraw. Secondly, he involved the sergeant-at-arms who was not there to defend himself. Thirdly, he actually repudiated a former Conservative minister by saying that the note he received was abusive, since it referred to an association between the hon. member for Sainte-Marie and that former Conservative minister.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to observe the ruling I gave him. He has been demonstrating for some time that the issue he is dealing with is within the jurisdiction of the house and that it should have been discussed at the time it was debated in this house a few days ago. I cannot see how it can possibly be related to the estimates of the Solicitor General and I would ask the hon. member to submit to my ruling.

Mr. Choquette: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for having, shall we say, redirected the discussion.

Such being the case, I shall proceed with other remarks while maintaining that the implementation of the Criminal Code has nevertheless some relation with the R.C.M.P., especially when a member is involved. Now, since the R.C.M.P. is under the Solicitor General, it is quite normal that on the discussion of his estimates, the Solicitor General should be asked whether there is a possibility to call on the R.C.M.P. to clarify a situation involving a member who claims to have been slandered in such a way as to cause irreparable blunders and create uncertainty involving the whole house, which makes us the actual victims thereof.

Mr. Chairman, here are the comments I would like to make.

First, would it be possible to ask the hon. Solicitor General to find out how far the federal government could go in trying to have the provinces—notwithstanding the possibility of an initiative on the part of the federal government—pass legislation to provide a compensation for the victims, for the families which are victims of criminals?

[Mr. Choquette.]

Mr. Chairman, when we hear most interesting speeches on both sides, we find that, in our modern society, we tend to stress the sadness of the fate of criminals. Needless to say, criminals are human beings and society has the right and the duty to be concerned about them and see how it can rehabilitate them; however, there are victims of criminals, families are grieved because one of their members has been attacked by criminals, and it seems that nobody cares about those people. One even gets the impression that publicity, movies, television programs and newspaper articles are so devised as to secure pity for the criminals. Consideration must always be given to the criminal, but the victims are forgotten. Often, we see films revealing the odious of the murderer being taken to the electric chair or to the gallows but leaving aside the pitiful situation in which are left, for instance, the wife and children of the policeman who was shot down by a criminal.

To create a new climate, let us say, I feel it is imperative that the government take the initiative of introducing a measure to grant an indemnity to the victims and the family of the victims of criminals.

The second remark I would like to make is the following. The Quebec government has set up a royal commission on the administration of justice. That commission, of course, deals with the recrudescence and the repression of crime and it will, of necessity, come to conclusions that will be worded in such a way as to suggest amendments to the Criminal Code.

So, I believe that if the federal government were to send an observer to follow the proceedings of that commission, it would be of great benefit for, if I may repeat myself, the report of that commission will surely contain urgent suggestions that the Criminal Code be amended in various regards.

My third point, Mr. Chairman, has to do the parole system. The director of the Quebec provincial police, Mr. Robert, who appeared a few weeks ago before the commission investigating the administration of justice in that province, expressed deep concern about the application of the parole policy and stated very strongly that in too many cases, too much haste is shown and decisions are taken without the cases being studied carefully, in other words, without enough thought being given to them. Moreover, barely a few days ago, a new judge of the Court of Sessions, who will sit in Quebec City, was appointed by the provincial government. He is Judge Jean Grenier, who has a great deal of experience since he was for quite a long time crown attorney in Quebec city. At his swearing in ceremony, when he was called upon to deliver a short speech, Judge Grenier expressed serious apprehensions concerning the methods followed by the National Parole Board, and he also made an appeal for a more prudent course of action.

Mr. Chairman, I have another remark dealing this time with the commutation of the death penalty. The government clearly stated its intention to introduce legislation to abolish the death penalty. That legislation will obviously have to be quite different from the bill considered last year by the House of Commons, as it will have, if the debate is to be fruitful, to gain the support of the majority of the house and try to convince those who proved to be out-and-out retentionists durant last year's debate. Consequently, the new bill, whose exact terms are not known, will necessarily have to make certain concessions if it is to be adopted.

On the other hand, I wonder how the Senate will welcome the bill which the government proposes to introduce. If the Senate were to decide to reject the bill passed by the House of Commons, the cabinet would surely find itself in a difficult position, for the attitude of the majority of cabinet members in this respect is well known, and that is why it has been so very difficult for the cabinet to follow any other policy than that of successive commutations, which we have witnessed since the debate took place on the floor of the house.

For all practical purposes, Mr. Chairman, if the legislation were not passed by the House of Commons, I wonder if the government would not have to consider the possibility of creating a commutation court to free itself of that burden which is often a source of unpopularity. In fact, a Gallup poll conducted last year showed that most Canadian people were in favour of the maintenance of the death penalty. Then, each time it commutes a sentence, especially in such a horrible case as that of Dion, the government obviously assumes heavy responsibilities, even at the risk of becoming unpopular, because the majority of the people has approved the maintenance of the death penalty.

Now, if the legislation were not passed, I wonder why the creation of a commutation court could not be considered. I must add that it would in no way interfere with the royal prerogatives—because I would not want to fall into the same trap as my friend the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and favour the abolition of all royal prerogatives—but it remains that section 658 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act in any manner limits or affects Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

It would be quite possible to establish a commutation court and still leave to Her Majesty the Queen the power to commute death penalties; that would perhaps give a more definite meaning to the intention of the legislator who, in short, wanted to make this commutation system an exception rather than the general rule.

One last remark, Mr. Chairman. The Canadian Bill of Rights clearly provides that any prisoner has the right to know why he is being detained and also the right to get in touch with his lawyer. It has been proved, on several occasions, that some prisoners have been deprived of their right to get in touch with their lawyer because officials of the jail where they were kept, wanted to question them first before allowing them to communicate with anyone on the outside.

In my opinion, since that procedure, which is often followed, is incompatible with the Canadian Bill of Rights, it might be advisable to provide for a further offence in the Criminal Code in order to subject to a fine any police or peace officer who would infringe the clear and specific provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights and to find them guilty of an offence on summary conviction for preventing a prisoner from communicating without delay with his lawyer.

These cases occur not only in Canada but elsewhere. One of my clients, Mr. Chairman, was kept in jail for three weeks for having stolen a shirt in Miami. He was denied the right to get in touch with the members of his family. Finally, after three weeks of detention, he was allowed to communicate with someone in the family, and advise his wife, who had been expecting him for three weeks, that he was in prison and was accused merely of having stolen a shirt. Thoses cases may occur elsewhere also, not only in Miami. I am convinced it happens often in our Canadian prisons.

Mr. Chairman, a serious study of the American system might also be indicated. I am not saying it could be applied in Canada, but it might be well to study that system under which no confession is valid unless it has been made in the presence of the attorney of the accused, of the prisoner.

These measures, I think, were adopted in the United States in order to prevent police brutality, for the police were ready to resort to any form of physical violence to extort a confession from a prisoner. I believe there were also some very bad cases in the province of Quebec. Therefore, I wonder whether, in that context, it might not be worthwhile to make a thorough study of the American system which declares invalid all confessions made by the accused in the absence of his attorney.

These are the few remarks I wished to make, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if, in closing, I might be allowed to reiterate my great admiration for the minister and to congratulate him again on his excellent performance of his duties.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, my comments this evening on the estimates of the minister will not be lengthy and will be confined to a plea to him and to the government to devise some way of giving financial assistance to the establishment within the provinces of adequate correctional facilities for short term offenders. I appreciate the fact that the responsibility for the establishment and continuation of local and county jails is purely that of the provinces, but I am afraid my experience in my own province convinces me that, at least in that province, these responsibilities are not being properly carried out. I believe the reason for this is mainly the lack of finances.

I do not think we should forget the fact that many more men pass through the doors of our county jails than ever come to our penitentiaries or other adult reform institutions. In fact almost all of those who do enventually come to our penitentiaries have first spent some time in the county jails. They have spent this time at a period during their sentence when influences are most deeply felt. For many of them it is their first offence and they are perhaps more emotionally disturbed then than at any other time. Perhaps they are passing through a time when they are more conscious of the treatment being afforded to them in the institution in which they are confined.

We must bear in mind that very few of the offenders whom we have in our county jails are what we might call hardened criminals. Many are there simply because of drinking problems, some minor offences such as common assault, impaired driving, causing disturbances and other offences in the same category. Very few of them can properly be described as criminal type offenders. We must not forget that within a very short time, because they are only short term offenders, these same people are going to be back on the streets after they have completed their term of imprisonment, and their conduct is going to affect you, me and every other citizen of this country. A great many of them are young offenders who, after their release, will be associating with teenagers on whom they are bound to have some influence. If they come out of these county jails embittered, as they probably will, against society and against the type of treatment they have received in the jails, then it is very doubtful if we are going to be able to rehabilitate them successfully.

In my view therefore this is the time when we should make sure that our correctional process is at work, that is when the young offenders are admitted to the county jails. It has been said, and I think quite correctly, that the county jail is the front door of our correctional system. But I am afraid that it is a very forbidding entrance. Let us not forget that prisons today are not hell holes. All inmates of prisons, particularly of county jails, are not vicious. All of them do not carry knives, and all of them live, breathe and die just the same as we do. They are entitled to a certain amount of kindness and proper treatment when they are confined for the first time.

I suggest that society should be most interested in the problems of the local jails because far too many people do not realize what is actually happening there. Not so long ago I was astounded to read some criticisms of the overcrowded conditions of our county jails right here in the province of Ontario. Absolutely no chance of correctional training and no opportunity to rehabilitate is given these inmates. They are simply places of incarceration. This is not as it should be. As I say, I realize this is a provincial responsibility, but I would urge the minister to do something to provide financial assistance to the provinces so they can set up what I would like to see set up in every province, that is jail farms.

Far too many of these short term offenders go to jail for a period of anywhere from a week to a year or two, loll around and have a good time. They are not expected to do anything. I am convinced that a jail farm for men who are sentenced for periods of at least seven days will be the answer to this problem.

This will be of benefit to them. I do not think there is a more serious morale breaker than to have men lying around with nothing to do. How in the world can we hope to rehabilitate somebody who has gone off the straight and narrow path by throwing him into a jail, letting him lie around in his cell playing cards, smoking cigarettes, telling stories all day and not being asked or required to do any work? I suggest that this is not as it should be. Unfortunately the provinces by themselves—and here I speak of my province in particular—cannot afford to set up a jail farm within the confines of the province. Instead of that, they have small county jails which are far from adequate and which are certainly not doing a good job so far as the rehabilitation of the offender is concerned.

I therefore urge the minister and the government to give some consideration to the granting of financial assistance to the provinces so that institutions of the type I have mentioned can be set up and properly staffed, not by men who perhaps have sufficient political influence to have themselves appointed as guards or guardians in these institutions but by properly trained men who know how to handle prisoners even though they are only short term offenders. The prisoners should be put to work and given a real chance to rehabilitate themselves. If that is done, the rate of recidivism among the offenders in county jails will not be so high and this will eventually reduce the number of offenders who go into our penitentiaries, and cut down the cost of the maintenance and upkeep of the penitentiaries all across the country.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I also have some short remarks to make to the Solicitor General.

I have already dealt with the matter during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, namely the matter of rehabilitation of prisoners.

It seems that this subject is in order tonight. Indeed, most members raised this question and I appreciated particularly the remarks on maximum security penitentiaries.

But there is also the matter of the abolition of capital punishment. I have dealt with this matter in the past. I know, like the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) just said, and like other members of this house, that there will be introduced government legislation in this regard, and I can already see the ardent supporters of abolition trying to bow and scrape in every way and to make all sorts of compromises to push it through.

Personally, I have already made it clear and it is duly reported in the official report that I voted last year in favour of maintaining the death penalty. Mr. Chairman, for the government bill to have any chance of carrying—and the hon. member for Lotbinière noted it quite rightly a while ago—the government, I feel, must make concessions and seek a compromise, possibly as follows: "the condemned will have to spend, say, 20 years in jail, in the penitentiary;" or again: "they shall never be liberated except under an order in council". Those are compromises, ramshackle solutions.

I think that if the government brings down excellent legislation on prisoner rehabilitation in our penitentiaries, it might catch the ear of the members of the House of Commons. To my mind, the most important legislation is one that will enable the prisoner to be restored to society. I am thinking mostly of the prisoners, not of those condemned for capital murder, because I do not see how it could be agreed to liberate these people before, say, ten years.

I think that, after ten years behind the bars of a penitentiary, it is difficult for a man to find a place in society, at a time when this society is moving and progressing very rapidly.

However, I think of those who are sent to the penitentiary for two, three, four or five years. Those people are likely to relapse if they are not provided with all the means necessary for their rehabilitation. Moreover, it is a loss for the Canadian manpower and economy. It is even a nightmare for society, because they become a burden for their families and also, obviously, for society, from an economic point of view. Indeed, we must take care of these people who, very often, relapse and return to the penitentiary. We must also provide for their families through all kinds of social security measures.

I think that the government should propose legislation that would enable those people to educate themselves while they are detained as prisoners. There is evidence that the majority of people who are sentenced to penitentiary have a rather low I.Q., which leads us to believe that they were not free to make up their mind about their future. They are at about the same level as 13 or 14 year old students who have to make up their minds about their profession or their trade.

Therefore, we should have the necessary personnel and equipment in our penitentiaries to help them find a profession or trade which, apart from providing them with the necessary training, would bring them a hope that they might be useful to society upon their release.

In fact, those people have no hope of rehabilitation, and this brings me to the point I want to stress tonight. Since the government is introducing a bill to abolish the death penalty, I consider that it should not leave it to the humble members of this house to propose a measure to do away with judicial records, whether after two or after five years. Personally, I think that they should never be kept more than five years although, shall we say, no less than two. If the government proposed a progressive measure in this field, those who thought last year that they were voting for the maintenance of the capital punishment could very well, this year, in view of a new penitentiary policy, change their mind and support the government project.

I humbly submit that it would be offensive for the intelligence of the members to introduce a bill to abolish capital punishment without bringing forward complete and comprehensive legislation to rehabilitate prisoners in penitentiaries.

These are the few observations I wished to make, Mr. Chairman. I know that the hon. Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Pennell) is dedicated to the abolition of capital punishment. I would like him to become converted, to come around my way of thinking in this connection—shared indeed by many hon. members—so as to introduce adequate legislation that would truly rehabilitate the prisoners in our penitentiaries.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, about eight or nine years ago I believe there was a correctional planning committee appointed which made a rather detailed report to the then minister of justice. I think perhaps the change in the attitude toward the operation of penitentiaries came at about that time and also at the time, or perhaps a little bit later, when Mr. Macleod became commissioner of penitentiaries. I think a fair amount of credit is due to the foresight of Mr. MacLeod and his staff and to the correctional planning committee for having charted a general and progressive course—when one takes that course in its historical perspective—for changes in the penitentiary system, the concept of that system and its administration.

This does not mean that everything is rosy and sweet and that we do not need further progress or alterations. As the commissioner would be the first to say, changes in this field take place more slowly, perhaps, and for a variety of reasons, than changes in most other fields in which the government is involved. That is so partly because government—not this government, but any government—moves to a great extent through public pressure. The penitentiary service I am sure is subject to the least amount of pressure, probably because the public is not much concerned about the operation of penitentiaries, except at times of riots or similar circumstances when the penitentiaries are brought to the public's attention. I shall say more about that later.

I listened with great interest to the statement of the minister about criminality and the increase of it. Increased criminal activity is not confined to Canada but is taking place in other countries of the world also. This is an extremely serious matter which cannot be coped with by an evening's discussion in parliament. It involves the attitude of society and an extensive examination of it. It involves the morals and ethics of society rather than law enforcement or the like. Not long ago we were presented with a report on juvenile delinquency, which is only one aspect of the serious problem of criminality in the country, and though the report had taken a long time to prepare, and though we had examined the question in depth and made proposals, nothing stemming from the report is yet before the house in any legislative form. I suppose that this pattern must be followed in dealing with the general question the Solicitor General raised. Only so long as there is a public consciousness and desire to deal with the matter, and only so long as we can develop sufficient public concern about it, so that the Solicitor General's position in cabinet is buttressed as much as possible, have we any hope for success.

I contend what I have contended on other occasions. For a variety of reasons which I will not repeat at the moment but which I am sure the Solicitor General understands and appreciates, as do so many others, a great deal of our effort in this field must be directed to the younger people, to those in their teens. There are problems connected with the matter too, one of them running contrary perhaps to any doctrine that might be taught in any school dealing with law, penology or sociology. The basic approach to infraction of the law is one of punishment. That is the underlying principle in our criminal law. Punishment is for the crime, and it is set within the bounds of the discretion of a court. Relatively little concern is shown to the individual who may have committed a crime. Most often the punishment takes the form of a jail sentence. Despite the changes which have taken place in the last seven or eight years, the basis of our penitentiary system has been one of custody. We keep the individual locked up for the period determined by the court. With the exception of parole and amnesty, the purpose of the penitentiary system is to keep the individual in custody for the period determined by the court.

Though rehabilitation has been mentioned on a number of occasions this evening, within the penitentiary service to a great extent it is given lip service only. It is a nice word; it sounds good, but the efforts that are being directed toward accomplishing it are not as great as we should like to see. That is partly because we are stuck with the concept of custody, of keeping a person locked up for the period the court has decided, and partly because it will take time to overcome a concept that is ingrained in the whole penitentiary staff structure. The mental attitude of the personnel in penitentiaries must be reoriented to the concept of rehabilitation. Any such attempts are hampered because the penitentiaries themselves are of archaic construction. I understand that we inherited part of Kingston penitentiary at confederation, 100 years ago. Institutions such as this and institutions such as the maximum security prison of St. Vincent de Paul defy attempts at rehabilitation, except in unusual instances, where the greatest effort for rehabilitation comes from the individual inmate himself and not from the staff personnel or those connected with the penitentiary service.

Any prison that is built purely for custody, the staff of which is oriented around that concept and which has been operated in past years on the principle that inmates are to be incarcerated, denies the opportunity for rehabilitation to have full sway. Yet it is on rehabilitation that our efforts should be concentrated.

We think of people in penitentiaries learning something that will fit them for some activity after their release; but such activity is relatively minor and what is taught I submit is outdated. It is possible in the penitentiary to learn how to wash socks and launder sheets, to sew up mail bags—if they still do that—to make chairs, sweep floors, cook, and so on. A great deal of the work done by inmates is to make the penitentiary function. Even those trades that are taught and that are geared to the traditional crafts in the construction industry, such as bricklaying, machinists trades, and so on, are needed in lesser degree, and blacksmithing, which is also taught, is not needed at all. In teaching such trades inmates are learning trades which by their very nature are becoming less and less valuable in our economy. I think that only in one penitentiary in British Columbia which I visited, as I recall, within the last few years, did I see a piece of electronic equipment. This was designed to give a few people an understanding of the working of a television system, or a television set.

The whole force of our economy at this moment lies in the field of technological advance and change. Coupled with this there is the factor of age itself. We know we are asking a great deal when we ask a person aged 45 or 50 to change his course and follow an occupation altogether different from the one in which he has been trained; and even if he does this he might find it difficult to find employers ready to employ a man in his middle years. We have geared our "learn a trade" approach in the penitentiaries to occupations which do not really provide the individuals concerned with much of a chance when they do get out.

The purpose of penitentiaries should primarily be to prepare the individual for the day when he is released. This is not being done at present, and with all respect to the desires of the individuals who are running the service, and with all respect to the intensity and sincerity of the Solicitor General I must say there are too many factors built into the system as it exists today which militate against giving this idea a fair chance.

There are hopeful signs, though, and we must take advantage of every one of them. One of the problems which confronts an inmate when he gets out is the simple question of money, or the lack of it—enough in his pocket to give him some freedom of movement so that he may locate himself in employment. I am not sure what amount of money is placed in the hands of an inmate released after a two year sentence; I think it is a minimum of $25 or $30. If this is so, the amount he receives is not enough in today's society to give him any real mobility. As a solution to this problem we might turn to the institutions themselves—gear the activities of some of the inmates and some of the facilities in a constructive way so as to produce some commodities or items which could be sold on the open market. This could not be done across the board, of course, because the services of many of the inmates are required in the administration of the penitentiaries themselves—without them, inmates would not be fed, clothed, and so on.

I realize that this suggestion will raise the question of convict labour, low cost labour and all the rest of it. It is supposed to represent a threat to free enterprise. But that is a lot of malarkey, considering we have about 7,000 people in the penitentiaries at the moment and that half of these could not be involved in the production side of what I have in mind. In any event, if the items were sold at the going price how could this interfere with the economic system? Of course, it would give rise to cries of protest—and these might come from the trade unions, too. But I do not think the criticism is valid. It would do a great deal of good if we were to produce something worth while in the penitentiaries and sell it on the open market, thus creating another source of income which could be used to the benefit of inmates as they were released. A portion of this income could be credited to the bank balances of inmates those who are required to work in administrative functions within the penitentiaries themselves, as well as those who take part directly in production.

We may have to subsidize this system as we do the present one. We now subsidize the whole structure of inmate work by paying inmates two bits or four bits a day depending on a man's stature within the system—how good or how bad he has been. The extra sum obtainable on release will help these men, and the individual may feel he is accomplishing something more worth while than he is at the moment.

The key factor is employment. We must concern ourselves with public enlightenment and especially with employer enlightenment. There are some employers who will go overboard to employ a person who has been an inmate of a penitentiary, or to employ a person who is on parole. But they are few in number. Many employers will refuse any employment to such persons on the grounds that they may steal something, presumably from the company, or give the company a bad name, or create difficulties among the other employees and so on. The reason varies with each company and with each individual.

None the less we must try to develop public enlightenment and secure acceptance by employers and trade unions of the idea that assistance must be given to these individuals whenever possible. One of the difficulties an inmate encounters on release is the impossibility of being bonded, as a result of which he loses the opportunity of taking up some kinds of employment. The bonding companies will not put up a bond. Here perhaps is a field for a government venture. Either the Solicitor General's department or the Department of Finance might set up a system of bonding which would take care of this situation and at least remove this obstacle.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for York-Humber rose to speak earlier, and since I have a few more remarks to make I wonder whether I might now call it ten o'clock? I see this debate is scheduled to be resumed tomorrow.

Mr. Pennell: Would the hon. member care to finish his remarks now, before the committee rises?

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman is very generous but I doubt that I should take advantage of his generosity. If anybody else wishes to speak that will be all right, but the hon. member has placed me in an embarrassing position.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue with these estimates tomorrow, as was indicated some time ago, but in order to meet the convenience of I think two members of the house it may be that I will want to call the third reading of the bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act before we start discussing estimates tomorrow.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, could the house leader indicate the business for Thursday?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope tomorrow to be able to announce the business of the house for the remainder of this week and next week, but I think the plan is to take legislative items on Thursday.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

LABOUR RELATIONS—PERMISSION TO C.B.C. EMPLOYEES TO JOIN UNION OF CHOICE

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to quote to the hon. Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), the question I directed to her on May 31 last:

> Could the minister tell the house whether the C.L.R.B. has decided to make it easier for the C.B.C. employees to exercise their right to belong to a union of their choice?

Why did I ask such a question of the hon. minister? Simply because Canada compels our labourers to join American unions which they do not want.

In fact, what is the C.L.R.B.? Would it not be about time to know the meaning of those mysterious letters which seem to have a right of life or death over the unions governing the C.B.C. employees? Why was that board granted such an authority that no higher authority can reverse its decisions? The Canadian Labour Relations Board is relatively young, since it dates back only to 1948; its ancestor was the Wartime Labour Relations Board, created in 1944, under the War Measures Act. In 1948, the War Measures Act went into oblivion and the government introduced a permanent legislation, namely the federal act on industrial relations under which the C.L.R.B. was established. The board is made up of nine persons: one chairman, four management representatives and four labour representatives.

Whatever the authority given to the C.L.R.B. by the government, the workers and the employees of the C.B.C. do not want a union which was imposed upon them by the C.L.R.B. an official agency completely dedicated to government interests; the employees of the national broadcasting and television network want and ask for free unionism but they reject any idea or any attempt to impose unionism. The Canadian Bill of Rights grants them that precise, unquestionable and inalienable right.

The thousands of workers scattered throughout the country will no longer accept not to be able to choose their unions or to be members of unions which they do not want. Needless to add that these same workers in the civil service do not want to be dictated to by unions that they do not know at all or well enough. We cannot remain much longer indifferent about the fate of thousands of workers who want freedom of association; nobody, not even the present government or all the future governments can issue this challenge to the face of our trade unions. Not one organization in Canada, be it the most authorized, has the right to dictate to our workers the type of union to which they must subscribe, be it coast to coast.

On behalf of trade unions and all public bodies concerned, I wish, Mr. Speaker, to take position openly and denounce, in this house, the omnipotence acquired by certain government organizations, as has so well been written by the hon. member for Montreal-Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) in an editorial published on April 15, 1967.

That is a striking example of the way our bureaucracy goes about getting from governments more and more money and powers to control the administration almost completely.

Those statements illustrate very well how a great number of senior officials operate to build for themselves small empires within the public service, how the bureaucrats gradually take over, how it is that, at times, ministers are paralysed and must follow the policies laid down by the technocrats.

That situation prevails unfortunately at the federal and provincial levels and, in some cases, at the municipal level. Such a state of affairs can only lower the status of the ministers and members of parliament and alter completely the role of democracy, which is that those elected by the people should govern. That is where the danger lies. It is high time to react against that increasing administrative dictatorship.

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has referred to the authority and function of the Canada Labour Relations Board. In doing so he has entered into a very wide field which affects the determination of bargaining units and the certification of the bargaining agent by the Canada Labour Relations Board.

The authority which is being exercised by that board is one granted to it by the parliament of Canada. This is a technique which I feel is used in all the provinces of Canada and the United States in order to arrive at decisions with regard to bargaining units and the certification of bargaining units.

I understand from his previous question that the hon. gentleman is concerned about the application of the employees of the French network for certification as a bargaining agent. As my hon. friend knows, that is a matter which now is under consideration by the Canada Labour Relations Board. I understand that hearings have been held before the board through the system of simultaneous translation which is employed by the board and that all interested parties have had an opportunity to be heard. The Canada Labour Relations Board I understand will be handing down its decision in respect of this particular case in the very near future.

NATURAL GAS—SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—DAMAGE CAUSED BY PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources an order MO-11-67 by the National Energy Board on May 30 last, which gave Interprovincial Pipe Line Company the right to loop certain portions of their pipe line in southwestern Ontario, namely where it affects the lands and rights of farmers in Middlesex county.

The company has given an undertaking to the National Energy Board that the company will take the necessary steps to ensure that its pipe line does not interfere with any existing future or unplanned municipal drainage systems. They have also given an undertaking that they will not interfere with any future private drainage systems. If this pipe line should interfere with any of these systems, they would, at their own expense, lower their pipe line at the request of the municipality or the farmer, so that the pipe line would not interfere with the drainage system.

As you must realize, the machines engaged in laying this pipe line do a great deal of damage to the surface of the land over which they operate. I should like the minister's assurance that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company will preserve the top soil, by removing it first and, after the pipe line is laid, replace it so that the farmer will be able to reseed the area traversed by the pipe line and obtain satisfactory production from this land. After land has been compacted by the traversing over it of heavy equipment, bulldozers, trucks, and heavy industrial equipment which are necessary to lay this pipe line, the farmer must be assurred that the surface soil and general conditions of the rights-of-way will be such that these crossings will in no way interfere with the crop production on the property.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The farmer must also be assured that the pipe line companies, if their lines should traverse other than on their rights-of-way, are prepared to settle, giving full compensation for all damages to existing crops. The reason I am raising this point is because the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, when the last pipe line was constructed across the farms in southwestern Ontario, did so with little regard for the rights of these farmers. The company failed in the past to make complete and adequate compensation to the farmers for damage to crops and existing drainage systems and have refused to compensate the individual farmers for their losses. These losses were due to surface damage to existing crops, compaction of the soil and leaving the right-of-way in a condition that caused the farmer additional expense to return the surface to normal production. Then, the pipe line interfered with existing farm drains. The damage to farm drains does not always appear immediately, but might develop after a year or two.

I maintain it is the Interprovincial Pipe Line's responsibility to repair these farm drains immediately when trouble develops and for five years after the laying of the pipe line along this right-of-way. You may say that the company has given an undertaking to do all these things, but our farmers want the assurance that all past damage and future damage due to the crossing of their farms by this pipe line, will be settled without loss to the individual farmer.

It was my understanding that the right-of-way which crosses the farmer's fields would be distinctly marked, but that it is not fenced. The farmer still has the right to crop this land. As the pipe line crosses from field to field, often the construction companies damage the existing fence lines. The farmer has every right to expect, and the National Energy Board has a right to insist, that these fences be replaced in as good condition as they were when the construction was begun by the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

I should also like to point out to the minister that farmers, having to provide pasture for their herds in other locations during the construction, should be given consideration. As you realize, farm fences are erected to keep livestock within confined areas, and any interference with these confined areas costs the farmer time and money. Therefore I should like the assurance of the minister that he will bring these points to the attention of the National Energy Board so that the farmers of Middlesex county and southwestern Ontario will be fully compensated for their losses due to the crossing of their lands by the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

Further, Mr. Minister, all crossings of township or county roads should be carried out to the satisfaction of the township road superintendent or the county engineer. Where a pumping station is located near existing dwellings, I would urge the minister to request the board to insist that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company take all necessary precautions to reduce the noise factor so that our residents will be assured that they will not be disturbed by the continual thumping of their pumps.

I would appreciate it if the minister would give the farmers of Middlesex county his assurance that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company will be fair, and not take advantage of them. These people are the backbone of our society and they have every right to demand fair and equitable treatment from the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company when the lines cross their properties. Mr. Minister, all I am asking is that you insist that the National Energy Board see to it that these farmers are justly and honestly compensated for the inconvenience caused by the laying of the pipe line.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is often said that ministers should not be technicians. Tonight I wish I knew more about law, about farming and about pipe lines in order adequately to answer my friend the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. Lind).

I could of course answer simply by saying that I will bring his representations to the attention of the National Energy Board, but I presume this would not be entirely satisfactory to him. Legally, the farmers, in this instance are protected by section 64 of the National Energy Board Act, which provides as follows:

> A company shall, in the exercise of the powers granted by this act or a special act, do as little damage as possible, and shall make full compensation in the manner provided in this act and in a special act, to all persons interested, for all damage sustained by them by reason of the exercise of such powers.

So when damage occurs, there is recourse to the courts of this land. I understand, however, that the legal procedure may be time consuming and expensive, and consequently I think my hon. friend is right in attaching a great deal of importance to the conduct of the pipe line company. The hon. member has said that the company has accepted recently more responsibility than perhaps it had in the past in this respect. In the National Energy Board's recent decision some of these assumed responsibilities are clearly stated by the company, and I think this will be quite advantageous to the farmers concerned because they can now refer to these undertakings as coming from the company itself. It seems that the company is very eager to maintain good relations with the farming communities.

With respect to past damages in particular, the National Energy Board has no jurisdiction to re-open cases, but it considers that it can act as an intermediary between the farmers concerned and the company. The board has been doing this in the past and is doing it now in cases such as my hon. friend has in mind.

I will bring the representations of the hon. member to the attention of the board. There is no doubt that the hearing which took place in London at the beginning of May has been enlightening to everybody; and at the proper time, if minor amendments are needed to the National Energy Board Act we will give it our full attention.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—HALIFAX—PRACTICE FOLLOWED IN MAKING PROMOTIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I am here at this hour of the evening to try to bring about some correction of a situation that exists in the port of Halifax. I will start by reading this telegram because I think it at least sets the tone of urgency; then I will state the background of the matter. This telegram says:

> The national harbours board hourly paid employees off work protesting national harbours board decision to promote a junior man ignoring a provision in the existing agreement that the senior man be given a thirty day trial period and also that salaried men now being used to do hourly paid work.

> This the men feel strongly about. Request every effort be made by you to help correct this situation.
> John J. Campbell
> ILA Vice President

The I.L.A. referred to is the International Longshoremen's Association.

There is little if any need for me to remind anyone in this house or in the minister's office of the very serious and grievous situation that has come to pass in the port of Halifax in the past shipping season. If it has not been the worst on record, it is indeed so close to it that records fail to distinguish it. That this is so I think is a matter of record. The government continues to appear unconcerned. A special study on maritime transportation problems is now at long last before us, having been completed, as we understand, some time in February. We received it in June. Perhaps that is because it says nothing and offers no hope. Indeed it contains no solutions to problems in the port of Halifax, but what is much worse than that, it suggests there are no solutions.

Because many of us are not prepared to accept this as the final edict on the future of the port of Halifax, some of us think it is desirable that the public relations aspect of the port of Halifax be enhanced as much is humanly possible, and to this end the government must see, as the rest of us do, the desirability of clearing up the present situation.

Briefly, the dispute can be summed up in a few points. First, the dispute is over the interpretation of section F, article 3 of the working agreement between the government, the National Harbours Board and Local 1843 of the International Longshoremen's Association.

Second, the dispute deals with the right of the National Harbours Board to promote a junior man over a senior one.

Third, the work stoppage at the grain elevators in Halifax is now in its twelfth day.

Fourth, an agreement has been reached, because there is a certain degree of responsibility on the part of the working men, between the local and the National Harbours Board to permit the Nova Scotia poultry industry to secure the required feed for its livestock until the supply of other sources of feed can be arranged.

Fifth, the members of local 1843 agreed two days ago to stay off work and continue their picketing until such time as the matter is settled to their satisfaction.

Many events have occurred in the intervening time and I think some questions should be posed to the government, which I think the longshoremen involved and indeed all those concerned with the port of Halifax would like to hear answerd. The first one is: What is the position of the National Harbours Board in this matter? Second, are other feed sources being sought and secured to assist the Nova Scotia poultry industry? Third, why was there a departure from the normal procedure in this specific case? Fourth, what is the promotion policy in other N.H.B. ports and indeed all other ports in Canada over which the board has jurisdiction? Fifth, is it the intention of N.H.B. to continue to use so-called white collar workers or office workers in the loading operations of the grain elevators, and if so how long is the government prepared to go along with this?

Finally there are one or two observations which I should like to make. The members of local 1843 of I.L.A., and indeed all men on the waterfront and connected with the waterfront in Halifax, have always displayed a remarkable degree of responsibility. These people are aware of their role with regard to the government, and their responsibilities. I can see no departure from this position during the dispute which is presently occurring in Halifax. If the working agreement between the local and the National Harbours Board calls for a 30 day trial period of any promotion, it strikes me as very curious why this procedure was not followed. At stake is a $2 million poultry industry. Over the week end both the minister of agriculture for Nova Scotia and spokesmen for the industry expressed the grave fear that if some immediate action were not taken this poultry industry would be lost to the province of Nova Scotia. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this industry cannot be impaired. We cannot afford to lose it. I urge the government to take some remedial action and at least clarify the position of the National Harbours Board of Halifax.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I should like to express through you, Mr. Speaker, the regret of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) at the fact he is unable to be here tonight. I should like to stress the fact he is very much concerned about the situation as it is developing in the port of Halifax. I am very glad, in the few minutes available to me, to try to outline the position as it is seen by the National Harbours Board.

The Minister of Transport has been advised by the management of the National Harbours Board that the existing collective agreement with the international longshoremen's union is being respected. In other words, the board has offered to proceed with the grievance procedures provided by that agreement. In all the collective agreements with the National Harbours Board at all the ports of this country there is a provision for the promotion of qualified men. The procedure to be followed if a union has a grievance about any promotion by the National Harbours Board is that, as a final step, a three-man appeal board is established. This board includes a representative of management, the National Harbours Board; of the union, in this case the international longshoremen's union; and a third member to be agreed upon jointly by management and the union.

The union exercised its right to use this final grievance procedure in December of last year. In that case, the appeal board ruled in favour of management and against the union objection. Probably this has some effect on the situation at the present time. In this particular case, the one under consideration at the moment, the union has not exercised its right to have a board of appeal appointed to deal with this case. This is the situation, despite the fact the National Harbours Board has offered to follow this same procedure of setting up a final board of appeal. This is the situation, as I am informed by the minister and by the National Harbours Board.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CHIEF OF MACNAB CLAN

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, might I take the liberty of pointing out to Your Honour that we have the privilege of having with us in the house today the chief of the clan Macnab, who has come here from his home in Scotland to help Canadians celebrate their centennial and in particular to help the people of the township of McNab in the great and sovereign county of Renfrew celebrate the centennial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AGRICULTURE, FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Herman Laverdière (Bellechasse) (for Mr. Whelan) moved that the first report of the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development presented to the house on June 1, 1967 be concurred in.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, once again the first reports of the various committees being tabled include the request that their quorum be reduced. The same request has been made for several years and every time the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or the government leader promise us that the committee procedure will be carefully reviewed, but it is never done.

The committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development is made up of 44 members and its quorum is 23. The chairman is now asking that it be reduced to 15, while some members of this house who do not sit on any committee could be appointed. However, the government prefers to have the quorum reduced.

Well, if we cannot find at least 23 members in this house who are interested in agricultural problems, then, what is the use of having that committee? Its quorum, according to standing orders, is 23 members, and we are asked to reduce it to 15. Why? Is it because we cannot find enough members who are interested in agriculture? Is it that not enough of them attend the meetings?

I maintain that attendance at committee meetings is far from satisfactory and that hon. members who are appointed to those committees, especially on the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, which is most important, are shirking their duty when they do not attend the meetings. Asking to reduce the quorum is no solution. Instead, committee members should be required to attend the meetings and show an interest in agricultural problems. If they cannot be present, they should ask for a change and make room for those who are interested. Many members of this house should be interested in agricultural problems, but not even 23 could be found to attend the meetings, and that is what I am protesting against. I object to this motion, I am voting against it, because I figure that if we are unable to gather 23 members to attend to committee meetings, it means that most hon. members do not take their role seriously, and that they are not really interested in agricultural matters.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one in this house who is not a member of any committee. My hon. colleague the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) does not belong to any committee either. We take interest in the work of the house, we are willing to be on those committees, particularly on the agriculture, forestry and rural development committee, where very important problems are to be discussed, such as the problems involving eastern Quebec farmers and milk producers. The hon. member for Sherbrooke and I are not members of this committee. I say to the government leader in the house that if we cannot find 23 members among those who are left to attend the sittings of the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, the hon. member for Sherbrooke and I shall go to maintain the quorum at 23 members and then I believe my colleague and myself will set an example and other members of the house will be cozened to attend the serious discussions and we will not be required to reduce the quorum to 15.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, that is my suggestion. I repeat, I am not a member of any committee at the present time nor is my colleague, the hon. member for Sherbrooke. There are many others who should be interested in the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development. I know there are some who attend regularly, but I object to a reduction of the quorum to 15.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, having heard the hon. member for Lapointe, I must say that if we had counted on the hon. member for Lapointe last week to reach a quorum, we would have had to go to Expo.

We must act more seriously, Mr. Speaker, and look at things as sincere and responsible men. We insist upon a quorum of 20 members out of 265 in the house, but we do not always have it, and for understandable reasons: it is because the house is in committee and we are discussing matters which do not interest all members.

That is the case precisely in the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development which is necessarily the most important committee. If the committee, for instance, is considering a matter interesting the western provinces or a province in particular during two or three sittings, members from Quebec, Ontario or Nova Scotia cannot necessarily be blamed for not attending these sittings.

As a matter of fact, when the matter before the committee is of a general nature, when it concerns the whole of Canada, there is no trouble having a quorum; but when the matter is of interest to only one part of Canada, when it deals with agriculture for instance, then having a quorum is difficult.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that we tried on three occasions to get a quorum at last and only after serious discussions was it agreed—I agreed to it myself—to reduce the quorum to 15. I submit that out of 45 members a quorum of 15 is still quite sufficient to discuss agriculture seriously. I insist on this especially when a specific matter of interest to only one part of Canada, if not to only one province, is considered. Then, should hon. members, who know nothing about the matter under consideration or have no interest in it, be obliged to attend two, three or four consecutive sittings?

Mr. Speaker, I think it is logical to ask the house—we have asked this several times —permission to reduce the quorum to 15, especially if we want to act as serious people and if one compares the required quorum to that of the house.

Why, I ask myself, do the members objecting to the reduction of this quorum not object to the quorum of the house, which is only 20 members and which I have always found ridiculous. Mr. Speaker, I think a quorum of 15 for the committee on agriculture forestry and rural development—and I know what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker—is reasonable and that we can still do serious work.

This does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that we shall always be 15 on the committee, no. If we look at the report of the committee we see that there are always between 25 and 30 members, but let the house give us at least permission to reduce this quorum to 15, so that we can work efficiently and stop canceling one meeting after the other.

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, in all fairness to hon. members, I think that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), who has been absent quite regularly from the house in recent months, is not aware that there are many other committees sitting at this time and that many other hon. members are busy attending those committee sittings.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we reduce the quorum from 23 to 15, we must take into account the views of the members concerned who are in a position, more than I am, to decide whether it is advisable to reduce the quorum or leave it as it is. But I want to take this opportunity to say that as an Independent in this house, where I must enjoy the same privileges—on a par with all other hon. members—I asked during the first session to be appointed to the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. My application was accepted and then, without any reason and without consulting me, the government simply struck out my name.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the main problem is the question of setting the quorum at 23 or 15 members for the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development. I believe that the government or the house leader should consult the hon. members at the beginning of a session in order to know who is interested in sitting on a given committee. Now, if the government proceeded in this way, some members would express their interest in a certain field and committees would then be able to count on a good attendance at meetings.

Personally, I take this opportunity to repeat publicly and officially my request to the government to be appointed to the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, which I find most interesting.

And I do believe, Mr. Speaker, you can testify that since January 18, 1966, I have been among the most assiduous members in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Allard: I hear the laughter of some Liberal members from Quebec who are often conspicuous by their absence.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Allard: So, it is all very well to laugh, but I maintain that each week I have been one of the most assiduous members, and this for one year and a half.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I will remind the hon. member that he should restrict himself to the present motion.

Mr. Allard: I am only too willing, Mr. Speaker, if only some Liberal members from Quebec will just keep quiet and allow me to go on.

Over one year and a half, I have proved that I am very interested in the business of the house. I submitted official applications to you, Mr. Speaker, to the house leader, to the whip of the Liberal party (Mr. Pilon), to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and my requests for appointment to the committee in which I am highly interested were not considered.

If the government agreed to heed the wishes of hon. members to sit on such and such a committee, we would not have all those requests to reduce the quorum from 25 to 15, as we have had in the last few months.

We would have on these committees members interested in sitting on them and they would share in the work on such committees.

I hope the government will heed my request during this second session. I am here to work. I want to do my share in the work of parliament, not only in this house but in committee. It is my right and the people of Sherbrooke constituency expect the government to give me the opportunity to work in the parliamentary committees.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the committee asked for a reduction in its quorum at its organization meeting is in my opinion an indication that the standing orders, which were approved only two years ago, are improperly formulated and therefore should be changed to reduce the quorum of the committee to whatever the members agree is a fair and reasonable number. It is quite true that a committee should be able occasionally to reduce its quorum for a specific purpose when events make it necessary, but the fact that the members of the committee asked for a reduction in the quorum at the very first meeting of the committee indicates that our standing orders are not in keeping with the wishes of the members.

Therefore I am opposed to the motion which proposes to reduce the quorum of the committee, because I believe that our standing orders and the practice of the house are not synonymous. I believe the standing orders should be changed to designate whatever quorum the members consider to be reasonable. This is what we should do, rather than decide on the quorum of a committee on an ad hoc basis every time the committee meets.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, three short reasons why the motion should carry.

First, the agriculture committee met two days ago and we had a quorum of 23. It was unanimously decided to reduce the quorum to 15.

Second, the quorum of 23 members represents a higher quorum than that of the House of Commons, which is not quite normal.

Third, by bringing down the quorum to 15 members, the agriculture committee would still have the largest number, the highest quorum. That is why I feel we should pass the motion. In closing, I say that if every member owned a luxurious yacht, to spend four days at Expo, we could probably reduce the quorum even more.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from some of the comments that have been made that the motion before us is only a symptom and that something far more serious is behind it, namely the concern of members about the size of committees and of this one in particular, which has 45 members. In view of the fact that the committee admits that its members do not have sufficient interest to attend its meetings, since it had to meet three times before a quorum was assembled, I believe we should consider the advisability of reducing the quorum of the committee to a reasonable number such as 10 or 12, which would enable it to work more efficiently and would obviate the need of members having to ask each time for a reduction in the quorum.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*REQUEST FOR WINTER WORKS POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT

Question No. 48—Mr. Irvine:

1. Will the Minister of Manpower and Immigration give some priority to the announcing of his department's policy on the winter works incentive program in order that municipalities may plan and budget in advance?

2. If so, when may such an announcement be expected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The timing of decisions about the Municipal Winter Works Incentive Program must be related to the purpose of the program, which is to help to stabilize construction employment through the year.

2. The government of Canada will make known its intentions for the 1967-68 winter at the earliest date that is possible, in relation to the purpose of the program.

COLOUR TELEVISION SYSTEMS

Question No. 57—Mr. McCleave:

1. What colour television systems were considered for use in Canada?

2. What were the comparative cost factors of each system and of colour television sets, which receive each?

3. Which of the systems is more readily recordable on video tape?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The following colour television systems were considered: N.T.S.C., (U.S.A.); SECAM III, (France); PAL, (Federal Republic of Germany).

2. (a) The system cost factors considered for the three systems were: Network transmissions and distribution; Station transmitters; Video tape recording.

The N.T.S.C. system, due to its more stringent technical requirements, is the most costly in terms of the three factors above. The SECAM III system is the most tolerant of deficiencies in the performance of systems and equipment and can, therefore, utilize less costly facilities for recording and distribution. PAL is intermediate in the above respects between N.T.S.C. and SECAM III.

(b) The cost factors of colour television sets for the three systems relate solely to the techniques of recovering colour information from the composite colour television signal. N.T.S.C. receivers are the least costly to manufacture, SECAM III costs slightly more, with PAL being the most costly.

Signals of one colour system can be transcoded into another system. Due to the costs involved, transcoding can be achieved only at the studio, along the transmission network, or at station transmitters. Receivers designed specifically for one colour system cannot successfully receive colour TV signals from another system.

3. SECAM III colour signals are most readily recordable on video tape, utilizing standard black and white recording machines. N.T.S.C. and PAL colour signals require auxiliary colour equipment for recording. A video tape recorded from one system can be used with another system by the use of transcoding techniques.

DISPOSAL OF HARBOURS BOARD LAND, VANCOUVER

Question No. 65—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has any land been leased or sold by the National Harbours Board in Vancouver to Harbour Park Developments Ltd. and, if so, how much land is involved in any such lease or sale?

2. If leased, what is the annual lease rental per square foot?

3. Is this rental rate subject to review and, if so, what is the basis upon which any rate adjustment is negotiated?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1. Yes. Lease of water lot comprising 808,024 square feet for term of 63 years.

2. 1st year, 3.62365 cents per square foot. Next 20 years at 6 cents per square foot. Next 14 years at 14 cents per square foot.

Balance of term at rate to be determined by formula as follows: For years 1999 to 2006 at such rates reflecting such increase or decrease in the above 14 cent rate as represented by the relationship of the average shelter index factor for the year commencing October 1, 1998 to the average of the shelter index factors for the period October 1, 1981 to September 30, 1988.

For each of the remaining three seven-year periods at such annual rentals as fixed by the board.

3. See answer to part 2.

DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR TROIS-RIVIÈRES PORT

Question No. 87—Mr. Mongrain:

Did the Department of Transport by itself or through the National Harbours Board prepare a definite project for the development of the port of Trois-Rivières covering the next ten or fifteen years or any other period of time?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: apart from its normal studies of future requirements at all its harbours, the National Harbours Board has taken steps to secure engineering data necessary for the full development of plans for the expansion of port facilities at Trois-Rivières to meet any anticipated demands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS EMPLOYMENT OF UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Question No. 92—Mr. McKinley:

How many university students and university graduates have been employed during 1966 and 1967 by the Department of External Affairs, and (a) how many of those employed were bilingual (b) how many were not bilingual?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Please refer to starred question No. 2,762, asked by Mr. McKinley on March 14, 1967, answered in the Hansard of May 8, 1967.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE APPLICATIONS FOR INDIAN CHILDREN

Question No. 103—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Are applications for family allowances on behalf of Indian children made directly by the parents to the appropriate officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, or are they made by or through the staff of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. If they are made through the staff of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, what is the reason for this procedure, and by what law or regulation is this policy followed?

3. Are family allowances forms for Indians different than the regular forms used for all other Canadians, and, if so, in what way are they different, and what are the reasons for these differences?

Questions

4. Can Indians obtain these forms for family allowances anywhere else than from the Indian agent and, if not, what act or regulation authorizes this restriction?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In the large majority of cases applications for family allowances are made directly to the Department of National Health and Welfare. In the remainder, they are made through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

2. The Indian bands whose members apply directly for family allowances to the Department of National Health and Welfare are those where this procedure has been recommended to the Department of National Health and Welfare by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is expected that all Indian bands will eventually be included in these arrangements. The other method has been retained for certain bands as a means of assistance to their members. Either method is permitted under the family allowances regulations.

3. The forms used by those Indians who apply for family allowances through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are different from those used by Indians who apply directly and by non-Indians. The colour is different so that they may be readily distinguished for administrative purposes. There are other minor differences to allow for the provision of certain identifying information such as the band name and number.

4. The forms described in 3 are available to Indians through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development only. The reason is for the convenience of the Indians. The relevant authority is contained in the family allowances regulations.

3. Will any such renovations be carried out in 1967?

4. If so, what is the anticipated expenditure?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Long range planning calls for the renovation or modernization of all the facilities along the Trent canal.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

2. Work is progressing or planned for all sections of the Trent canal system.

3. Yes.

4. $2,501,000.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, notices of motion for the production of papers numbers 9, 10 and 11 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and the agreement of the provincial government authorities concerned.

Would Your Honour kindly call notices of motions Nos. 2, 3, 7 and 12? I ask that the others be allowed to stand.

CONTRACT FOR TAXI SERVICE, OTTAWA STATION

Motion No. 2—Mr. Cowan:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any contract entered into concerning taxi service to and from the Ottawa railway station, since January 1, 1966.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no such contract in the possession of the government. Therefore I would hope the hon. member would be willing to drop the motion.

Mr. Cowan: This matter is too important to be dropped upon such a request.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

LOWER FRASER RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

Motion No. 3—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Mather):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence between the federal government, provincial governments, municipal governments and federal, provincial and municipal organizations or agencies concerning lower Fraser river flood control proposals and their financing, and copies of all correspondence between the federal government and organizations and individuals concerning the lower Fraser river 1967 flood potential.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This motion is acceptable upon three conditions. The first is the usual reservation as to privileged documents and provincial consent; the second condition would be an understanding that the motion applies only to documents within the last two years; and the third condition would be that it applies only to federal-provincial and federal-municipal communications, not to provincial-municipal communications. I had a conversation with the hon. member on that subject and I believe he will agree.

Mr. Knowles: I can confirm that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation just expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON INDIAN TREATIES

Motion No. 7—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report of the interdepartmental committee which was announced by Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) in the House of Commons on March 29, 1965 and was established to conduct a comparative study of the promises contained in the various Indian treaties and surrenders as related to the laws respecting game and fish.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the request by the hon. member deals with a report which was made to myself and other ministers concerned. Since it is a privileged document I cannot agree to the motion, but I think the hon. member might be satisfied if I told him that these are very important matters dealing with Indian rights so we intend to make a synopsis of the findings and distribute it to all members of the house.

Mr. Howard: Following that statement, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to withdraw the motion subject to my opportunity to compare the synopsis with the original document, and my right to return the motion to the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPLIANCE WITH UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL CEASE FIRE ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I give thanks to the C.T.V., which last night gave three hours of prime time to the proceedings and vote of the security council, with the remarks afterward of President Johnson also being made available to Canadians served by the C.T.V. network. As a result of yesterday's meeting and the cease fire that was ordered and directed by the security council, is the government in a position to say whether any action has been taken in this connection by either Israel or the U.A.R. and those associated with the U.A.R.?

At the same time would the minister give us his observations on the serious situation created by the attitude of the Soviet union which, in demanding a cease fire, threatened to break off diplomatic relations with Israel unless the cease fire were immediately accepted?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last portion of my right hon. friend's question, while one may regret such consequences I think my hon. friend will agree that this is a matter beyond the control of the government of Canada. It is a matter that can be determined only by the Soviet union itself.

With regard to the council meeting last night, as both my right hon. friend and the house know the government of Canada gave instructions to our ambassador at the United Nations to support the cease fire resolution which the security council unanimously adopted. The hope was expressed by him on behalf of the government that the parties concerned would comply with this cease fire appeal.

[Mr. Ormiston.]

The resolution calls upon the parties, as a first step, to take forthwith all measures for an immediate cease fire, and for a cessation of all military activities in the area. I should, of course, like to pay tribute to those who in conjunction with their governments negotiated this resolution. We hope that all members of the United Nations will now exercise their influence to bring the fighting to a halt.

The security council was called into session at noon today, when a proposal was made for a further decision by the council calling for implementation of the cease fire by 8 p.m. Greenwich mean time June 7. This resolution was also passed unanimously.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That would be what time here?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think four o'clock. After the passage of this resolution, on instructions from the Canadian government the Canadian ambassador tabled the following resolution:

The security council, noting resolutions S/7933 of June 6 and S/7940 of June 7, requests the president of the security council, with the assistance of the Secretary General, to take the necessary measures to bring about full and effective compliance with these resolutions.

As of the latest information I have, Mr. Speaker, that resolution is on the table but has not yet been discussed. A point of order has been raised asking that measures be taken with regard to the confirmatory resolution of today which was adopted, as I said a moment ago, by the members of the council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say what is the meaning of that latter resolution to which he refers? What are the measures that would be taken, or what are the measures in contemplation by the proposers of that motion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government had in mind that it might be desirable, as has been observed in other similar situations, for someone representing the president and/or the Secretary General to go to the area to assist in making arrangements to give effect to the terms of the Security Council resolution. I have the impression that the Secretary General himself has certain plans in mind, but I think at this stage it would be wrong for me to speak about these until he himself has made some statement.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While we are all pleased that the security council has issued an order for a cease fire and we all hope all the antagonists will comply, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs where we go from here. If the cease fire is not merely to be a breathing spell for the antagonists to regroup their forces and procure reinforcements, some peace negotiations will be necessary. Is it the thought of the Canadian government that the security council will begin to promulgate such peace negotiations in the hope of bringing about a stable situation in the Middle East?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is our hope, of course, and this is partly what the government had in mind when it instructed our ambassador today to table the resolution he did.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have any of the combatant countries as yet complied with the order? There is the rumour that Jordan has done so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Secretary General made a report on that at this afternoon's meeting, and said he had heard from General Bull, commander of the United Nations truce and supervisory organization, that he had had an approach from Jordan.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I put a further supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did I understand him to say that the Canadian representative had tabled a motion? If so could the minister read the motion to the house so we will be aware of the recommendation the Canadian representative is making?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did read the resolution, Mr. Speaker; it is now a matter of record. I read it a few moments ago. I am not trying to take advantage of my hon. friend; I did read it, but I will read it again:

> The security council, noting resolutions S/7933 of June 6 and S/7940 of June 7, requests the president of the security council, with the assistance of the Secretary General, to take the necessary measures to bring about full and effective compliance with these resolutions.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, what I was asking the minister about was this. I followed the motion with reference to compliance, but I understood the minister to say in answer to my question that the Canadian government was taking some initiative in the matter of peace negotiations which would be proceeded with as soon as the cease fire had been brought into effect. Is any such motion being tabled by the Canadian delegate and, if so, what is the nature of that resolution?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand that these resolutions are tabled in the light of the consultations which take place with certain countries and also with the president and members of the secretariat. Beyond that I do not want to go now. But in addition—

Mr. Starr: You have not gone anywhere.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think I can be expected at this stage to do so, in view of the fact there is discussion taking place now on whether this resolution will be considered today. I have just been advised that notwithstanding what he said about half an hour ago, the delegate for Bulgaria agrees in principle with the Canadian resolution but asks for further time to study it. In addition, this morning the Prime Minister was in touch with certain other governments about matters not unrelated to the kind of question my hon. friend put to me a few moments ago.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I refer to the report given out yesterday or the day before that as a protective measure the U.A.R. had closed the Suez canal. Is the canal still closed, or has it been reopened in recent hours?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question under advisement before giving a reply.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether it is the view of the government of Canada that the strait of Tiran and the gulf of Aqaba should be open for passage by ships of all nations, and will the government press at the United Nations to have this position accepted and agreed upon by that body?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When the Prime Minister spoke to this house, I think it was last Wednesday, he stated the view of the Canadian government with regard to the right of innocent passage in the strait of Tiran and I, in answer to questions on May 23 and May 24, called the attention of the house to the government's view with regard to this matter, reaffirming the statement made by the Prime Minister in March 1957 with regard to this aspect of international law.

Mr. Fulton: Is it the intention of the government to give instructions to the Canadian ambassador at the United Nations to press for the recognition and guarantee by the United Nations of safe passage through these waters?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the Prime Minister said the other day, the first thing is to end the fighting. That is the purpose of the resolutions passed last night and today. Today's resolution was in simple terms. It does not involve the question raised by the hon. member in one way or the other, that is as to the rights and claims of the parties. Both resolutions were passed, of course, without prejudice to the rights and claims of the parties.

Mr. Fulton: Is it the intention of the government of Canada now to press in the United Nations for the acceptance of the right of free passage, and its guarantee by the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have pressed this view in the United Nations, and we shall continue to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question with further reference to earlier questions directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Once a cease fire has taken place, if it is acceptable to the various nations involved, there will be a number of political questions requiring attention. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to support the convening of the four great powers in the security council to bring about agreement in respect to those matters which will become of paramount importance once a cease fire has been agreed on?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman will recall that last week the Prime Minister urged four permanent members of the security council to use their powerful influence and position as members of the security council to try to bring about arrangements which would avoid the outbreak of hostilities.

Later he urged the same four great powers to use their influence to help bring about a cease fire. I can say to my right hon. friend, and I would ask him not to press me further, that the Prime Minister today has been in touch with persons in one of the great power countries urging action along this line.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that it will be perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said as reported at page 1124 of Hansard for June 5 that he hoped the four great powers, the United Kingdom, the United States, France and the U.S.S.R. would realize they have a special responsibility, and added "I feel they perhaps should meet on a high political level." Is that the significance of the statement the minister has now made?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I prefer at this time not to go into details, but I can say to my right hon. friend that the Prime Minister has been discussing a phase of this matter that is not inconsistent with what my right hon. friend has read out. I may say I am sure the country will join with me in the view that there is great significance in the fact that there has been consultation, in particular between the Soviet union and the United States, consultation that undoubtedly had much influence on the decision of the security council last night.

While I am on my feet I would like, I am sure on behalf of all of us in this house, as I said to the Indian high commissioner this morning and as I intimated to the Brazilian ambassador, to say that the sympathy of Canada goes out to India for the loss of ten men in the United Nations emergency force, and to Brazil for the loss of one Brazilian soldier. Canada, as one of the component members of the United Nations emergency force, fully appreciates the contribution that all members of that force have made to the preservation of peace over a period of ten and a half years. Our sympathy goes out very sincerely to these two countries.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the security council has ordered the cease fire, could we be assured that the Canadian government's position will be that that body, having ordered a cease fire, has some responsibility for sponsoring peace negotiations and placing its guarantees and prestige behind any agreed settlement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I certainly can give that assurance, and this was the tenor of the concluding remarks of our ambassador last night at the security council, when he quoted words uttered in this house by the Prime Minister to the effect that measures must now be taken to meet the causes of friction and hostility in the Middle East, so that we would not be called on again in another decade to deal with the regrettable situation that has confronted the world in the past three weeks.

[Later:]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, supplementary to a question asked earlier of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, can the minister advise the house whether, in the event of failure, we do have contingency plans to return our forces to the troubled area in the Middle East?

FLOODS

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the honourable and gallant Minister of Industry. What co-operation from the federal government can the city of Trail and other communities on the Columbia river expect in combating the rapidly rising waters of the Columbia river?

An hon. Member: The High Arrow dam.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I thank the hon. member for having given me preliminary notice of this question. In reply to his very courteous inquiry may I say he is probably aware that the federal emergency measures organization is in constant touch with the flood situation in British Columbia, as well as with the provincial authorities. Under our present constitutional arrangements, requests for federal government assistance must originate with the provincial government.

I can assure the hon. member, however, that the federal government is fully aware of the danger of this situation and has mobilized the resources which it has available in order to meet any emergency which might arise, should a request be forthcoming from the provincial government.

Mr. Deachman: Is it not the case that the High Arrow dam constructed on the Columbia river will minimize—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Is the federal-provincial agreement on technical and vocational training in force at the present time, so that adults may avail themselves of the training they need?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing under the old agreement until such time as the workers who are attending a course have finished their training and others actually start to come into operation.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us when training courses to further permanent education will be established, as he promised not so very long ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the supplementary question should be placed on the order paper.

SHIPPING

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY AS TO GRAIN SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to inform the house concerning anticipated grain shipments through the port of Churchill this year in comparison with last year's exports through the northern Manitoba seaport?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can only say that the wheat board has been doing very good work in encouraging shipments through the port of Churchill. I believe this year's movement is now assured at about the same level as last year's and, of course, we will continue to strive to improve the position.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO RATIFICATION OF NEW INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I too have a question to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It concerns the international wheat agreement. I should like to know whether formal ratification will be necessary by all the signatories to that agreement, and whether such ratification will be forthcoming before the new agreement is due to come into effect.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Canada together with several other interested countries did ask the chairman of the international wheat council to convene a meeting, and he has now called a special session of the council to open in London on June 19. The purpose is to make arrangements for the revision or renegotiation of the present international wheat agreement. This will provide an opportunity for elaborating and extending the grain agreement concluded in the Kennedy round, for associating other countries with this agreement, and for bringing it into effective operation as soon as possible.

OIL

POSSIBLE INCREASED EXPORTS DUE TO EVENTS IN MIDDLE EAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether, in view of the declaration made by several countries in the Middle East—Kuwait, Libya, Saudi Arabia and others—that shipments of oil to the United States and the United Kingdom are to be stopped, he can advise the house what action if any has been taken to accelerate deliveries of Canadian oil into positions where it could satisfy emergency requirements.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I can only say that all necessary measures are being taken by the National Energy Board and by the interdepartmental committee on energy to do that.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Has there been any discussion with the governments of Great Britain and the United States with reference to exports of petroleum, and has the Canadian government taken an initiative in this regard?

Mr. Pepin: I am aware of conversations in this regard at least with the United States.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to report anything in connection with the question I asked some days ago about a possible oil pipe line to tap the Chicago market.

Mr. Pepin: I answered that question last week, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

CHARGES AGAINST CHINESE ACCUSED OF ILLEGAL ENTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General and ask whether he would mind looking into the situation whereby Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers are laying charges against people of Chinese origin for entering this country illegally or under improper names. If he finds that this is so, will he take steps to see that this practice ceases?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a submission. That is not a question.

INCOME TAX

EXCESSIVE PAPER WORK IN MAKING DEDUCTIONS FOR PART TIME HELP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister advise the house what progress has been made toward relieving farmers, particularly fruit, vegetable and tobacco farmers, from the excessive amount of paper work that is required in making all the deductions when paying part time help?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a statement which should not be given by way of answer to a question at this time.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could beg your indulgence in this matter. It is a timely question because of the season that is at hand, and I think the minister was about to make an announcement either in the house or outside it.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should make the announcement in the house. One of the things that has been done is that the former limitations for reporting income on T4's by farmers and all businessmen in Canada have been reverted to. Unless income tax and pension plan deductions are made, T4's do not have to be made out for persons earning under $250.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest this type of statement could be made on motions rather than by way of an answer to a question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PETER TRUEMAN—COMPLIMENTS ON COMMENTARY ON "VIEWPOINT"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I wonder if the Prime Minister would be good enough to deliver two bouquets, one to the C.B.C. for putting Peter Trueman on "Viewpoint" last night, the other to Peter Trueman for his very refreshing comments.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to transmit my hon. friend's words to the C.B.C.

Mr. Knowles: With a carbon copy to Christopher Young.

AGRICULTURE

PERMISSION TO SPRAY FOR BOTH WEED AND PEST CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, if the matter does not come under his jurisdiction, to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister assure the house that the applications for exemptions of flying farmers, now being made to the Air Transport Board, will allow farmers with aircraft to spray for weed control this current spraying season as in previous years, and not only for pest control as outlined on the applications?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not too certain that this comes under my jurisdiction. I will certainly support any applications that farmers, flying or otherwise, make, but I think this comes under the authority of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—POSSIBLE CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS OR COMBINES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister which affects the individual freedom of a former member of this house. Has the Prime Minister or the government received any representation from or on behalf of Leonard "Red" Kelly, regarding the archaic and serfdom-like rules of the National Hockey League which permit Canadian citizens to be sold and traded like chattels despite their personal wishes? If so, can the Prime Minister assure the house that the government has plans to commission a study to ascertain whether such regulations contravene the Canadian Bill of Rights, and thus demand legal action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even though the right hon. Prime Minister seems anxious to reply to the question I feel it is not the type of question that should be asked at this time.

The hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe.

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask the same type of question of the Solicitor General.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is consideration being given by his department to amending the anti-combines legislation to include service industries such as hockey, in order to prevent the kind of situation to which my colleague from Danforth referred?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question should properly be addressed to the Registrar General.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY OF CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he any information he could give the house regarding the safety of Canadians in Nigeria?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the situation in Nigeria I can say there are military movements but there is no evidence of military conflict. Canada has made arrangements with the British high commission in eastern Nigeria for the evacuation of Canadian citizens along with citizens of the United Kingdom.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—POSSIBLE MEETINGS WITH OFFICIALS OF DOSCO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, and ask him if he is in a position today to reply to the question I posed on Monday, which in his unavoidable absence was taken as notice by the Minister of Public Works, with reference to whether any representations had been made by Mr. Drury, the president of DOSCO, for a hearing with the minister's department or any of his officials, regarding the situation at the Sydney steel plant and the large scale lay-offs there?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, no representations were made to me, by Mr. Drury, the president of DOSCO, but early in May, about the 8th or 9th, I did have a meeting with two senior officials of DOSCO, Mr. Stephens and Mr. Moloughney, to discuss the circumstance in which DOSCO is finding itself as a consequence of the prevailing low prices for spot steel on the world market. We did examine the possibility of further initiative which might be taken in respect of the export market. I also undertook to have inquiries made to see whether there was any question of dumping of their particular products. As the hon. member has noted, since then the Export Credit Insurance Corporation has provided assistance in securing export contracts for rails to Mexico and an inquiry is under way in respect of the possibility of dumping.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member might ask his supplementary question tomorrow because we have already exceeded the time allotted to questions this afternoon.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The members from Cape Breton Island have continually been cut off when making representations about the economic situation in Cape Breton. I think when questions about hockey players have been permitted, it is time we were permitted to ask questions concerning the workers of Cape Breton.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will note that those questions were permitted but that the answers were not permitted.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have to rise on another point of order, because the hon. member for Cape Breton South has failed to establish that he had a valid point of order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which is not connected with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. Certainly there would not be any continuity to the question if it were let go for another period of time. That is the point of order, and the only reason I rise at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Of course if members of the house are in agreement I will allow the hon. member to pursue the matter and ask his supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and also members of the house. In view of the fact that just prior to the provincial election the federal cabinet representative from Nova Scotia intimated that there was a good future for steel at Sydney, does the minister agree with this impression?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Orders of the day.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DESIGNATION OF MINISTER, POWERS OF BOARD, ETC.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-106, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the house for long. I thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) for his courtesy and consideration in making possible the adjournment in order that I might speak. I should like to say to the minister that he is one who has endeavoured at all times to uphold and preserve the amenities of the house. The manner in which he does so is a model for some of those who sit close to him.

The bill before the house is a comparatively simple one. In general the provisions are first, that "minister" means such member of the Queen's Privy Council as is designated to act as the minister for the purposes of this act. Second, and more important, the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board which otherwise would terminate on August 1 will be continued indefinitely and become a permanent part of the law of this land. I would not have spoken had the minister not permitted himself the luxury of endeavouring to rewrite history in certain particulars. Conversion is always a matter for commendation. Prior to the minister's occupying that position views were expressed by other members of the Liberal government not in keeping with those spoken by him. It is well to recognize that for the first time through the years there is widespread commendation for the Canadian Wheat Board, which in the past was unable to mobilize the approval or support of succeeding Liberal administrations.

One could go back to 1917 when the first board was brought into effect under a Conservative government. In 1921, when Right Hon. Mackenzie King assumed the position of prime minister, the wheat board died a natural death. I do not intend to read from Hansard unless I am asked to do so, but in 1935 Right Hon. R. B. Bennett introduced wheat board legislation. It is interesting to read the debates of those early days, beginning on July 1 that year, when the late Hon. J. L. Ralston, while leading the Liberal party in words of condemnation, refused to vote against the legislation and gave approval to the wheat board act.

Today the wheat board is receiving widespread commendation and properly so. It has been the greatest single stabilizing factor in the economy of western Canada and of Canada as a whole. When the Liberal party came into power in 1935 it promptly in effect ditched the board. History cannot be rewritten because the government feels these things should be forgotten. The board was dead as soon as the Liberal party came into power in 1935. It was only a question of allowing it the privilege of dying by inches. These things are not to be forgotten.

I accept the minister's sincere adherence to the wheat board, but as he spoke I felt he should be reminded of other days. His arrival in the present government has brought hope to those who believe in the wheat board.

When we were in office we took measures to benefit the western farmer, but not at the expense of other parts of Canada. For years under Liberalism the west was the forgotten part of Canada. If anyone on the government side, including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), would contradict that, I call as my witness the premier of Saskatchewan. Over and over again he has reiterated that during the Conservative administration western Canada was raised economically to a level reasonably equal with that of other parts of Canada.

We remember over and over again asking the Liberal governments of Mr. King and Mr. St. Laurent to provide loans on farm stored grain. They said it could not be done. The farmers had piles of wheat.

Mr. Rapp: Nine hundred million bushels.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The attitude of Right Hon. C. D. Howe was that, after all, if other countries wanted wheat, they could come for it.

We provided immediate loans on farm stored wheat, and that turned the piles of wheat into money for the farmer. We brought in acreage payments. Today on every hand, as I found when I was out west a few days ago, the farmers are saying, regardless of political considerations, that those payments which have been stopped since this government came in, benefited the western farmer and Canada as a whole. Our policies when we were in office, changed wheat from a glut to an asset.

I should not have mentioned these things at all had the minister not made certain statements which, though they are entirely correct so far as details are concerned, had the effect of leaving a wrong impression, unintentionally. It was simply rewriting history. I point this out to the minister: You cannot sell the idea to the western farmer that any other government but the Conservative government I had the honour to head, would have sold the same amount of wheat. You cannot sell the farmer an idea simply by naming a dam in the province of Saskatchewan after one who did not bring the wheat sales about.

Mr. McIntosh: They did not give a dam.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the Minister of Agriculture must have had something to do with naming of the dam. He was in western Canada. He knows the west. I say this to him: He ought not to go back and tell them his reasons for what he did in that connection, unless he expects a warmer reception than he had the last time.

An hon. Member: The west knows you, Joe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I remember the days when the Liberal party did not think that Saskatchewan was worth a dam. We brought about the payments for farm stored wheat, and we opened a new hope for agriculture in western Canada.

Now, when speaking of the sale of wheat, the minister says that nearly half of Canada's wheat and flour exports are shipped to Sino-Soviet countries, to most of which it is necessary to extend credit in order to do business. The policy of selling wheat with government assistance was implemented 15 years ago when 5.5 million bushels were sold to Yugoslavia. That was 5.5 million bushels. I remember so well, when we said that arrangements were being made to guarantee the sale of wheat to China, that members of the Liberal party—and those members do not sit opposite any more, they are gone—got up and said that it was ridiculous. At that time the President of the United States said, "You are not going to sell wheat to communist China." That is what he told me.

An hon. Member: He said it was treason.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I pointed out that Canada's policies would be determined here and not in Massachusetts, or even in Boston. But the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite ridiculed the idea.

I have before me the Searle weekly report No. 13 dated Monday, December 12, 1966. The letter observes:

—"important as it may ultimately prove to be, it would be a mistake at this stage to regard Canada's sale of a single cargo of No. 3 Northern wheat to communist China as anything more than an interesting development".

Had the government of which I had the honour to be the head not decided that one could trust the communist Chinese to repay their debts, there never would have been any wheat sales to communist China. Someone suggested that we had taken a tremendous chance. My experience over the years in the ordinary affairs of business and law convinced me that when a Chinese gave his word, he kept it. That view affected the sale by the wheat board. Had a Liberal government been in office there never would have been that sale. The Liberals opposed it; they ridiculed it; they condemned it. I heard them saying not only in the house but over the radio how ridiculous the sale was. Heresy has now become orthodoxy. As the minister said, half of our wheat and flour goes to Sino-Soviet countries.

The minister also mentioned other countries such as Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Hungary, East Germany, and mainland China. These countries represent a market for over 20 per cent of our total exports. Mainland China, under long term agreements, is the second largest purchaser in the world of Canadian wheat. I am glad that this government has followed the course that it has followed. What it condemned it now accepts. The illegitimate child—that is how they regarded the wheat sales to communist China—in the intervening years has had established for it by the minister the paternity of the Liberal party. I thought that I ought to set the record clear in this regard.

I should like the Minister of Agriculture in particular to bear in mind when he visits the western prairies that he should not try telling the farmers the fiction that he or his government had anything to do with the sale of western wheat. If he does, all I can say is that his pastures will not be "greene". I have reviewed the redemption of the Liberal party in this regard. The wheat board was condemned in 1935. The Liberal party, through Mr. Mackenzie King, a western representative from Prince Albert, took the stand that the wheat board should not operate more than one year in advance. They succeeded in securing an amendment to that effect because the legislation had to be carried out. They had in mind, when giving it support in July, 1935, that they would torpedo it at the first opportunity—and they did.

The sales of wheat that have been made and the contribution by the wheat board in securing markets have given hope to the western farmers. They have not forgotten, though, that while 21 cents is the maximum increase in the price of wheat under the new international agreement, two years ago 17 cents was cut off their price. The result is that the wheat farmers of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba received an income in those two years of about $190 million less than they would have received because of the action of this government.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today the price goes up 4 cents over and above the 17 cents that was cut off. What has happened in the intervening period? There are high prices for agricultural implements and for the things the farmer has to buy. Agricultural prosperity has been eroded by inflation. Farm machinery prices have gone up in the last three years to an extent that beggars description in adequate terms. Action is necessary.

Mention was made today by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) of the facilities at that port. The minister said we will ship as much this year as was shipped last year, according to present forecasts. That is not enough. Churchill is not being utilized as it should be. The great interests in Montreal and Vancouver are opposed to the adequate use of Churchill. Adequate use of the facilities there would give the western farmer several cents a bushel more than he is receiving today, because of the reduced cost of transportation. The hon. member for Churchill has fought this battle, as yet unsuccessfully. I hope the minister will give the assurance, not that we will ship through Churchill as much as was shipped last year but that we will ship at least 20 million bushels more than have ever been shipped through that port.

The wheat situation is just part of the larger picture. I mentioned the increased prices of farm implements. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) has asked for action in this connection, but the minister, looking Lincolnesque, I am told, has not taken action.

Mr. Winters: Are you referring to me?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I am referring to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) wins the prize for pulchritude. The minister misunderstood me; he looks like Errol Flynn.

Mr. Winters: I hope not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was directing my remarks to the Minister of Agriculture and suggesting that action should be taken. Recently we saw the farmers visiting parliament, kept outside of parliament. I suggest to the minister that he had better get, not a report on farm implement prices, but action.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He had better get cracking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The farmers of Canada are being bled by the unjust prices charged today by the farm implement corporations. That is clear and definite. If the minister has any doubts about that and would contradict it, I give him the opportunity to do so. He cannot deny the fact that regardless of the increased cost of production, farm machinery prices today bear no direct relationship in equity to those costs.

Now I come to one or two other suggestions, and I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. This is a segment of the plan for improving agriculture and ensuring a fair deal for the farmer. I should like to see the establishment of a federal marketing board, or boards, in conjunction with the departments of agriculture of the provinces. Many who opposed the wheat board as being a dangerous intrusion into private business have today become worshippers of the wheat board.

I should like to see the establishment across this country of boards similar to the wheat board. I should like to see action in that regard to provide a sensible marketing system for the eastern dairy farmer. We have proven through the wheat board what can be done. I remember the beginnings of the board in western Canada. As a boy I attended a small school where for the first time the idea was put forward by certain farmers that something could be done, and they formed what they called a farmers institute. That was in 1907. One of the things they asked for was that the farmers have some control over the marketing of their wheat, and also some protection, which they did not then have, against the inequities perpetrated against them. This has now been achieved through the medium of the wheat board.

I realize that there will be some disagreement with regard to what I am about to say. The minister has the power to include flax and rye under the wheat board without any action of parliament. These two cereals should be treated under the wheat board. At the same time I would suggest that farmers should be able to sell by private sale those products which are under the wheat board. Two weeks ago I raised with the minister the question of the shortage of oats and barley in Manitoba. He produced statistics which indicated that there was no particular shortage. However, I find that the oats and barley which were in shortage were mainly those not available for feed. Therefore the argument that I was making at that time for a release from the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act so that farmers may dispose privately of a certain portion of their oats and barley for feed purposes would indeed be generally welcomed by the western farmers.

Finally I wish to say that this is all part of the picture. One cannot say the wheat board is an entity by itself, and everything is well. When we were in office we brought about a system of technical schools of which the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) was the proponent. This has now been phased out. Under that plan 75 per cent of the cost of construction was paid by the federal authorities. I would like to see assistance given in all parts of Canada for the establishment of agricultural colleges so that the training will be available to more and more Canadians who want to stay on the farms, and a similar plan established whereby the federal government would contribute 75 per cent of the costs. This would not only make avaliable increased knowledge to those who otherwise would be denied it, but would also encourage research which would be of tremendous benefit to the farmers in all parts of Canada.

There are many other matters with which I would have dealt but I will not do so because I said I would not take long. I will conclude by saying to the minister that I am very happy the Liberal party has now embraced the principle which we advanced in sales of wheat to communist countries. I belong to those who are not impressed by the argument that the sale of wheat is the sale of a strategic material. We must use our tremendous potentialities in agriculture in Canada to help feed the world. We cannot do that by accepting the suggestion, which was advanced by the Liberal party between 1958 and 1963, that sales of wheat to communist countries should not take place.

Mr. Speaker, making the legislation permanent does not of course mean that it is permanent; it can be changed any time. But it will not be changed so long as there are farmers and wheat producers who are aware of the benefits which flow from the wheat board act.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to listen to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), particularly when he is dealing with a subject matter which is as close to him and to the constituents he represents as is the Canadian Wheat Board. I may say that it is my own opinion that much of what has been related to us here this afternoon is accepted as a general consensus by most grain and wheat producers in western Canada, and I have no intention at this time of entering into any polemic with any hon. members to my right as to who deserves prime credit for the increased sales of wheat by the Canadian Wheat Board. However, I just want to say that much of the controversy which blew up about three years ago, at the time of the change of governments, regarding who merited special praise for the increased volume of sales by the wheat board, is due to a misunderstanding. I feel that even if the Canadian Wheat Board, acting on its own, had succeeded in negotiating a large and special sale, this would have come to nought had the government of the day not been prepared to make special credits available. My understanding is that the former administration was prepared to extend special credits by means of which the wheat board was then able to make large scale sale commitments to communist China.

Whether or not the then minister of agriculture had a very personal and individual role in that connection is still not clear to me and I do not think it is the prime point to be considered. The important point is whether the government at that time was prepared to make special credits or guarantees available. It did, and the sale was consummated. I believe that most people in the farming areas of western Canada understand this to be so. Certainly there can be no dispute about the fact to which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition made reference, that for years the preceding Liberal government refused to consider and implement any legislation to make available cash advances for farm stored grain. The 1950's were extraordinary years for many grain producers in western Canada. There was the problem of surpluses coupled with low prices, and certainly it was very necessary, because of the extraordinary problem facing these people, to bring in a program which would make cash advances available for farm stored grain. A special effort was required to cope with a special problem, and this was done. Governments cannot afford to act timidly and they do not have the right to evade unusual responsibilities when the times are unusually difficult, and certainly this criticism directed at members of the Liberal party is justified.

I do not want to say that there is nothing objectionable in Bill C-106. For the most part it deals with administrative changes in the organization and administration of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I do not regard anything in it as being a change of substance. It is all procedural. Yet, if the minister and his advisers had read with care the report of the parliamentary committee on agriculture, they would have found therein specific recommendations as to desirable changes that could be brought about within the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. One has to do with the matter of bringing rye and flax under the purview of the board.

Mr. Winters: May I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I should like your ruling on this. It is my understanding that on third reading of a bill it is not possible, or at least it is not the custom, to introduce new matters of principle. These have been disposed of during the debate on second reading. If I interpret correctly what the hon. member is saying, he is asking us to broaden the principle of the bill in order to include items that were discussed and disposed of during the debate on second reading.

Mr. Schreyer: Speaking to the point of order, I just say that I am not suggesting the bill be amended in order to accommodate my proposals. I am merely expressing my regret that this has not been done. I believe this is in order, since the bill refers to grains coming under the jurisdiction of the wheat board. Unless your honour wishes to be very strict in the application of the rules, I feel I should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Douglas: One of the procedures allowed on third reading is the moving of an amendment to refer a bill back to the committee of the whole with the instruction that a certain section be changed in certain particulars. My colleague is not proposing to move such an amendment, but the fact is anyone can move such an amendment. One could not move such an amendment without pointing out the discrepancies or deficiencies in the bill, and this is what the hon. member is doing. If one can move an amendment to send the bill back to correct certain deficiencies, then one is quite in order in discussing the deficiencies or discrepancies in the bill.

What my colleague is seeking to do is simply point out that, while he agrees with the provisions in the bill, he regrets that certain other provisions are not in it. I suggest to your honour that this type of discussion is within the provisions for debate on third reading.

Mr. Olson: In speaking to the point of order I should like to say that to attempt now to confine the debate on third reading to a strict interpretation of the rules, after the speech we just heard from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) on subjects which have been raised at least 50 times, would not be proper. Surely at this stage anything goes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should point out to the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) that the debate on third reading of the bill can be similar to the debate on second reading. However, having once decided the principle of the bill, the debate on third reading is just a little more restricted than that on second reading.

Mr. Schreyer: I am aware of this. I was not sure of the rules respecting debate on third reading. I just took for granted that we would be allowed to make reference to almost any subject matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I have some further references to make to the subject matter of this bill.

I was saying that the effect of this bill really is to make certain procedural changes, but not any substantive changes, in the organization or administration by this board. I do feel that flax and rye, as I say, should have been put under the administration of the wheat board by legislation, since we have had repeated representations to that effect by various organizations and also had the opinion of the parliamentary committee on agriculture to the same effect.

Another matter which relates to the operation of the board has to do with the quota system presently in operation in the west and the ways in which it may be modified. It seems to me that the quota system really works to the disadvantage of the small and medium grain producers. If a means could be found somehow to make an adjustment in favour of the small and medium sized operators, it would sit well with a large number of producers in western Canada. I do not believe such a change would militate to any appreciable extent against the larger producers. Obviously, a change of this nature would affect them to some extent but not to the degree where they would find it painful or particularly disadvantageous. In this connection, I hope that the minister, his officials and the officials of the board will give consideration to the short run effect of such a change. I certainly hope that within the course of the next 12 months the board might find it possible to recommend such a change in operation, thereby making it easier for many small and medium sized grain producers on the prairies to conduct their operations.

I have one final question in connection with the bill and I believe it is in order to put it to the minister. It has to do with the schedule appended to the bill. I note that the explanatory note states that the schedule, containing a list of seed cleaning mills, feed mills and warehouses is a list of such facilities in existence as of March 1. Was this schedule reprinted since the debate on second reading? I gather from reading the reports of the debate on second reading of the bill that the schedule setting out a list of flour mills, seed cleaning mills and so on was considerably out of date.

Since the date of March 1, 1967 has been left in the bill, I must presume, unless the minister tells me otherwise, that the list has been reprinted. I do not know whether the bill was reprinted, but I assume it has been. I did not take advantage of the opportunity to speak on second reading of this Bill No. C-106, and that is the reason I am making these remarks now.

There is one other matter I should like to raise with the minister. I do not apologize for doing so, even though he may suspect I am infringing on the rules somewhat. I am referring to the responsibility of the board, perhaps more particularly of this government, concerning the need for supporting some research, some testing and some improvement of our transportation facilities as they relate to the handling and transport of grain to domestic markets outside the prairies and to export positions. All of the evidence which the committee was able to gather during its deliberations and its trip to Vancouver and the prairies last winter seemed to indicate that some of our grain moving methods and some of our facilities were getting out of date. Specific suggestions were made with regard to the feasibility of appointing a transport expeditor who would function under the supervision of the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe this suggestion was forwarded by the committee to this government. I hope the minister and his colleagues will see fit to give the suggestion careful analysis. In addition, it was pointed out rather clearly to this government that it really must assume responsibility for improving port facilities on the west coast. All the data and the indices projected would seem to indicate that the trend will be toward increased exports of Canadian grain to Asian markets. All these port areas, therefore, will really have to be enlarged and improved upon. I refer to the unloading facilities at the port and the slipways for docking boats. All of this can be held in abeyance. One year could pass, or two, three, four, five or six years, and before we knew it we could be involved in a grain movement crisis, a grain blockade or bottleneck.

The hope was expressed that since the recommendations have been made the government will now set to work forthwith. I hope the minister, together with his colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and others, will take some real, tangible action to see that the program to improve these facilities is commenced and that a certain amount of research and investigation into new methods of grain handling is conducted. The concept of the unit train, which I understand is something the United States railways are experimenting with in the movement of grain in the United States, was brought to our attention when we were in western Canada just a few months ago.

I conclude on this note, Mr. Speaker, that the changes that are being provided for through this legislation are of a nature that cannot really be objected to. Indeed the idea of making the board a permanent body with authority to act is nothing more than realistic. The board is entering more and more into long term, long range commitments and agreements, and I think that many purchasing groups and countries would find it better to deal with a body that has the kind of permanent authority which is commensurate with the agreement or contractual obligation that is being entered into at the time. If a master agreement with a term of five years is being entered into, it does not make sense to give the board entering into that agreement a legal life span of less than that term. Therefore, setting up the board with an extension of authority timewise is realistic.

However, Mr. Speaker, in the meantime there are many other substantive matters coming under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board that the government must give cognizance to and deal with in a tangible way in the course of the next year or two.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important functions of the Canadian Wheat Board is to provide a fair allocation of the available market to all the wheat producers in the area covered by the wheat board. I just want to speak very briefly on this quota system. I should like Your Honour to know that no member of this party participated in the second reading debate, but I do intend to be very brief at this stage.

I could not help but listen with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) as he went back over the history of the Canadian Wheat Board in the 1930's and attempted time after time to rejuvenate—if you want to call it that—the credit given to his party and his government for having increased sales of Canadian wheat.

Mr. Rapp: There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Olson: But what is so amusing about this, Mr. Speaker, is that the Leader of the Opposition has just returned from the west. I do not know whether he was in my constituency, but he was awfully close. He now comes back to the house, and the first major contribution he makes to the debates in this chamber is to repeat a speech that we in this house have heard at least 50 times. The thought that occurred to me was this. I was wondering whether the attempt to perpetuate this illusion that hon. gentlemen try to give the farmers of western Canada is becoming more difficult and the right hon. gentleman is trying to revitalize it a little bit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The recently self-appointed minister of agriculture has spoken again for Liberalism.

Mr. Olson: It seems to me that this must have bothered the right hon. gentleman after visiting some of the major grain and wheat producing areas of the prairies, because he comes back to this house and gives the same old speech we have all heard about the great things which were done some nine or ten years ago by his government. We have heard that speech made by the hon. members for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), I think by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), indeed by all of them.

This speech, Mr. Speaker, is the standard speech that is made by every one of them, not only in this House of Commons but in every election campaign during the last ten years. They do not tell us, however, some of the other details that should be told if they want to tell the whole story—and I understood that the Leader of the Opposition was trying to give all of the details. The right hon. gentleman complained about the detail that the minister left out of his speech when he was talking about the Canadian Wheat Board. For example, the fact that the original contract with mainland China was signed three days before the minister of agriculture got over there to make the announcement; that is one of the details he left out. He also left out the point that while there was an expansion of credit facilities, for which I give the right hon. gentleman and his party full credit, the fact remains that all the mechanism to provide export credits, and so on, had already been set up before his government took office.

Mr. Rapp: But they never used it.

Mr. Olson: It is not quite fair to say they did not use it, because they did. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) was very careful to mention that they had made some kind of deal with Yugoslavia. Actually, I think he could just as well have left out any reference to that five and a half million bushels because the amount is so insignificant. However, these are some of the details that are left out, depending upon whether the speech is being made by someone on this side of the house or on the other side of the house. I think members on both sides should fill in the details for each other, so that we do not go through this performance over and over again.

I hope the right hon. gentleman is now satisfied that he has been able to revive these past glories and can live with them for a while yet; but as I say, Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that his trip to the west must have left him feeling that the picture had slipped a little.

Mr. Rapp: You were not in favour of sales to communist countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right; the hon. gentleman opposed sales to communist countries.

Mr. Olson: The hon. gentleman did not oppose sales to communist countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, you did.

Mr. Olson: There may be some validity to the statement that some members of this party did, but do not say that I did, because I did not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman opposed that.

Mr. Olson: The right hon. gentleman had better dig up some proof about that because I take exception to that statement.

Getting back to the subject matter of the bill, Mr. Speaker, on the matter of quotas, as I said at the outset, a fair allocation of the available market to all the wheat producers of western Canada is the primary function of the Canadian Wheat Board. Because unless there is a proper and fair allocation of the market that is available, the full purpose of the wheat board falls by the way.

I suggest that it is not enough simply to set quotas for specific points and just to leave it at that. The reason I say this is because a quota has no validity whatever until there is space in the elevators at the delivery points to which the producer can haul his wheat, and there have been some shortcomings on the part of transportation services in the provision of this space.

The minister who was formerly responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), stated in this house that he and his officials along with members of the Canadian Wheat Board were giving serious consideration to bringing in a new quota system. He went on to say he would shortly be outlining these new ideas for the benefit of hon. members, the intention being to change the quota system in such a way as to make it more effective in accomplishing the purpose for which it was designed.

We have heard nothing further about this. We have heard nothing on the subject from the minister who now has responsibility for the wheat board. We do not know what came out of those discussions or even whether they are continuing. This is a matter of great importance. I know that some places on the prairies wait three or four months to have their quotas brought up to the same level as others during the crop year.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. During this last crop year there has been a large market and the kind of weather which is conducive to the movement of huge crops by rail. So no serious disparities have arisen. Indeed, I do not know of any areas which are complaining that their quotas are substantially below those of other areas. This is not a problem which arises this year.

I suspect, however, that if wheat exports were to decrease, or if difficulties arose in connection with transportation, the problem would immediately arise again. I hope the minister will tell us either today or at an early date what the wheat board has in mind by way of a revision of the quota system so that these wide discrepancies as between shipping points may not arise in the future.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I shall speak on this bill for only a few moments. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) referred to quotas but as usual, of course, he made no suggestions as to how they might be changed.

I wish to draw once again to the attention of the minister the very favourable location of the elevator at Moose Jaw. Situated as it is on the main line of the C.P.R. and accessible to the C.N.R. routes, this elevator should be put to greater use than has been the case in the last few years. In my opinion this would improve the working of the quota system in some of the country districts in the region; I say this because the elevator at Moose Jaw has a capacity of some 5.5 million bushels of wheat.

I am glad to see it is being used to near full capacity now, and that its utility is thus being demonstrated. At the risk of worrying the minister with repetition I wish to emphasize once again the importance of this elevator because, among other things, of its strategic location.

During the sittings of the standing committee on transport and communications many references were made by witnesses and others to modernizing the arrangements for handling and moving grain, particularly wheat. I suggest to the minister that the Moose Jaw elevator has the necessary cleaning and drying facilities to enable it to fit into the pattern of grain transportation envisaged in the next few years. It has been envisaged—and this came from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) himself—that pipe lines might be used to move some of our grain. I believe that the Moose Jaw elevator, because of its location and other advantages, could fit into this technique, if it ever comes about.

I hope the minister will draw the attention of the Canadian Wheat Board to my remarks. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) is not here but perhaps the hon. gentleman will ask his colleague to draw the attention of the Board of Grain Commissioners to what I have said, inasmuch as that minister has responsibility for the work of the commissioners.

Mr. Ed. Nasserden (Rosthern): I shall try to limit my comments on this bill to about one minute. Since second reading took place, at which time I mentioned the possibility of rye and flax being placed under the jurisdiction of the board—a suggestion which has been reinforced today by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker)—I have had occasion to read the reports of the agriculture committee for the past year. As hon. members know, the committee travelled through western Canada.

One of the recommendations made by the committee read as follows:

> Your committee therefore recommends that legislation be introduced, after the usual procedures have been completed, which would extend the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board so that it would be the sole Canadian marketing agency for rye, flax and rapeseed.

I wish to bring this recommendation to the attention of the minister and commend it to him.

When I spoke in the debate the other day and referred to rye and flax I suggested that some people were not as anxious to see rapeseed brought under the board's jurisdiction. I have to amend that statement today and say they are just as anxious to see rapeseed included. In fact, no farm organization in western Canada has indicated it is at variance with the recommendations of the agriculture committee in this connection. That is all I wish to say at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that under our rules he is not permitted to speak at this time unless he has the unanimous consent of the house. If he wishes me to do so I will ask the house for consent.

Does the house give consent to the minister speaking, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am bound to say I was not aware of that rule and thought I would have an opportunity to reply as of right. I am grateful to hon. members for giving unanimous consent, although I intend to speak only briefly.

Little has been added that was not said on second reading, so nothing is required from me by way of rebuttal. The hon. member for Medicine Hat referred to speeches which were made on other occasions by the Leader of the Opposition, but I am relatively new in my responsibility for the wheat board and I have not heard those speeches.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Neither had he, except in his imagination.

Mr. Winters: I was pleased to hear the hon. member's references and enjoyed them very much. The Leader of the Opposition referred to interpretations placed on my presentation during second reading. I tried to be factual. I have always gone on the basis that one cannot alter facts. You can alter the interpretation of facts but not the facts themselves. I did not think there was anything in the factual content of my presentation with which the right hon. gentleman would disagree. I referred to the fact that it was under his administration that the first contract with communist China was negotiated by the wheat board, and China has proven a good market for Canada ever since. Reference was made to the fact that the sale of 5½ million bushels of wheat to Yugoslavia was inconsequential. However, sometimes it is these small things that establish precedents which lead to greater business later on, and we are hopeful that will be the case.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) also referred to the port of Churchill and urged us to greater efforts. I have replied occasionally to questions put by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and told him we are working very hard. It is not always easy to persuade the shipping lines to take wheat out of Churchill. The season is short, and the shipping season itself happens to coincide with the season during which wheat is coming on to the major markets of Europe. Therefore there is not a great incentive for the shipping lines to take wheat out of Churchill.

By dint of hard work the wheat board has been able to succeed to the point where we can contemplate a shipping season from Churchill which we think will be at least as good as last year. We are still working and hopeful for better things; but of course I cannot guarantee that at this stage, because so much is beyond our control.

I will be very glad to review the quota system. I have not had an opportunity to talk recently to the wheat board about it but I will do so, and hope I will be able to say something about that at an early date. The elevator at Moose Jaw did get a considerable amount of business after the matter came up at an earlier date and it will be used to the fullest extent consistent with the primary functions of the wheat board, which are to sell and move wheat.

With respect to the matter of rye, flax and rapeseed, I was aware of the recommendation of the agricultural committee. I alluded to that in the debate on second reading. I told hon. members that I was impressed by that recommendation but wished more time to study it, since my association with the wheat board has been of such a short duration so far.

Naturally I would like to see more wheat shipped out of the ports of Halifax and Saint John, which traditionally had a greater play than they have been receiving recently, but trends change and we must strive to keep the wheat flowing through all the ports of Canada to the greatest extent possible.

I have nothing more to say, except that I have enjoyed the historic treatment today. However, I think the Leader of the Opposition, and all other hon. members, would agree with me that while history is interesting to the western farmers they are more interested in performance, and if I could be permitted the opportunity to quote one more fact which I think will be as unassailable as the other facts I have quoted, it is that the prices for wheat are now at the highest level in history under the international wheat agreement, and are only fractionally below the maximum under the international wheat agreement at Vancouver.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the house agree to calling it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. When Your Honour was on your feet and the suggestion that it be called five o'clock was made, I was in conference with the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) who had hoped to complete his estimates before five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the point of order raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), but it being only a few minutes before five o'clock I requested the opinion of the house as to whether it would rather have private members business begin now, or just spend two or three minutes on estimates.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I would be imposing on the house by making a request. However, I am prepared to do so, but I certainly can take no offence if the house feels otherwise. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had not quite completed his remarks when we adjourned the debate the other evening. If it met with the will of the house and it decided to continue, I feel the hon. member for Skeena should at least be permitted to complete his remarks.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I am in the same position as I was last evening. I think I should not accept the offer of the hon. gentleman, which of course does not mean that I do not consider it to be an important subject, but I have ascertained that there are a few other hon. members who desire to say something about the estimates. Further, the minister himself has not had an opportunity to reply to the comments that have been made up to now. I think it would be going a bit far to expect to get his estimates through this evening.

Mr. Pennell: I can take no exception to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena and respectfully suggest that we revert to private members hour.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE NEGOTIATION OF TECHNICAL CHANGES—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act to provide that an employer shall not introduce or implement any technological innovation, development, or change which would materially and adversely affect the working conditions of his employees until after he has negotiated the matter with the bargaining agent of his employees, and that if no agreement is reached, the matter shall be refererd to a conciliation board as provided by section 22 (2) of the act, and that if the employer introduces or implements the proposed changes without such negotiation and conciliation, his employees shall have the right to strike immediately as if the collective agreement had expired and all other statutory requirements had been met.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is just about 15 months ago since I presented a notice of motion that was identical to this one, and the reasons I am presenting this one today are because I feel the issues which inspired me to present the first one are just as crucial today as they were then. My main reasons are based on the recommendations contained in the Freedman commission report. As most hon. members will recall, the Freedman commission was set up at a time when labour relations between employees of the C.N.R. and the C.N.R. executive reached such a point that a wildcat strike occurred, as a result of which transportation facilities on the C.N.R. were tied up for a short period of time.

Because of the wildcat strike hon. Mr. Justice Freedman was given the job of inquiring into the reasons for the dispute between the employees and employer, and of coming up with recommendations to resolve the situation in order that it might not happen again. At that particular time the C.N.R. had arbitrarily served notice on the railway running trades that it was introducing drastic changes in working conditions without first negotiating the conditions with the unions and employees involved. The employees took exception to this and insisted that any changes of this nature should be negotiated.

The company, for a considerable length of time, had been hiding under an umbrella of an understanding that was archaic. I am referring to the residual rights theory, the theory that there are certain fundamental rights which did not have to be negotiated and in respect of which the company would have the right and authority to make changes without becoming involved in negotiations with the union. As I said before, Mr. Justice Freedman's job was to explore the events leading up to the wildcat strike and to submit recommendations concerning how a similar work stoppage could be avoided in the future. The last time I spoke on this matter and presented my notice of motion I dealt extensively with the recommendations which Mr. Justice Freedman made. Today I shall deal with them only very briefly. I intend to quote from one or two passages. The first has to do with Mr. Justice Freedman's summation concerning what is involved so far as residual rights are concerned, and whether or not this is something which should happen today. I should like to quote from pages 91 and 92 of the Freedman Commission report:

> The commission must accordingly conclude that on the basis of the law as it exists today the company does have the right, as it contends, to institute run-throughs. That conclusion at once poses a question: Should it continue to have that right? The commission is satisfied that it must be answered only in one way. The institution of run-throughs should be a matter for negotiation. To treat it as an unfettered management prerogative will only promote unrest, undermine morale, and drive the parties farther and farther apart. In that direction lies disorder and danger. By placing run-throughs, on the other hand, within the realm of negotiation a long step will be taken toward the goal of industrial peace. More than that. Such a course will help to provide safeguards against the undue dislocation and hardship that often result from technological change.

Mr. Justice Freedman spent months travelling from place to place hearing witnesses provided by the company and the labour unions. I think he investigated the whole matter very thoroughly. For this reason I believe a great deal of credence should be put on the recommendations of the Freedman Commission.

It is nearly two years since the recommendations of the Freedman Commission were made and published. I submit that not a single thing has been done by the government in respect of these, even though this commission has cost the country a great deal of money. It also has cost both the unions and the company involved a great deal of money, and still we have a situation where up to this date these recommendations have been ignored. I submit that the issue is as crucial today as it was two or three years ago. I believe the attitude of the railways is exemplified by the recent announcement of curtailment of passenger service in Newfoundland. Possibly this could not be considered as being relevant, but I think it gives a pretty fair idea of the way in which the railway companies operate today, and the callous disregard they appear to have for the employees when they make changes.

The few comments I should like to quote from the Canadian Trainmen's News for the month of May have to do with the passenger runs in Newfoundland. I shall read only a portion of this. One paragraph reads as follows:

> The announcement by C.N. that it would abandon rail passenger service on the island altogether and substitute bus service along the trans-Canada highway came right on the heels of the report of the Royal Commission on Transportation which recommended a substantial increase in rail passenger service.

Here is an example, when a recommendation had been made that there should be an increase in the service, where the Canadian National Railways decided to abandon these facilities. Further on the article says:

> While C.N. has not yet applied to the Board of Transport Commissioners to abandon the island services, more than 200 employees (by C.N. figures) will lose their jobs. The greatest proportion being B.R.T. members.

These are the men who operate the trains.

> As well as train crews, the brotherhood represents express messengers in Newfoundland.

I believe this is a serious matter and, even though it is not entirely relevant to the Freedman commission recommendations, because those recommendations deal with changes of a different kind, I believe it does point out very definitely that the railways are perhaps more to blame than most industries when making changes and dealing with innovations which seriously affect the employment of their employees, without prior consultation or without negotiation of any kind with the employees.

I am quite sure that when I sit down I will be reminded by someone on the government side that a task force has been set up to look into the whole matter of labour-management relations. According to the information I have—and I believe it is quite authentic—this force is headed by four professors who have engaged already dozens of professors of law, sociology, economics, and so on. I have no quarrel with these people, but I believe a force of this kind should not be overloaded with that type of personnel. I think more people from the labour movement should be involved in this task force. Already they have over 90 projects on which they plan to do research. I think this points up another thing; apparently they are more interested in research and study than they are in getting down to business and actually doing something about this whole matter. I should like to ask whether this is just to be another exercise in research and study. Is it to be a replay of the B and B patter, or will there be some positive action? I think not. In my opinion the whole exercise is a series of delaying tactics which indicate cowardice on the government side in facing up to a crucial issue.

My information is that not one of these 90 projects is designed to deal specifically with the issues raised by the Freedman report in respect of technological change, management's rights and the social responsibilities of governments and corporations. Further we have the two great labour problems of last year. The first is the railway strike of which we are well aware and in respect of which there was a breakdown of negotiations, lack of trust and an example of the futility of the conciliation procedure. These were very important factors in the railway strike of last year, which I believe everyone will admit was a very serious situation and one which called for very positive action on the part of the government.

Another matter which apparently they are not going to go into is the problem represented by the C.N.T.U. and the Canadian Labour Relations Board. How is the French fact to be recognized or accommodated in federal labour legislation and administration? I think this is a very crucial matter today. It is my information that the majority of the studies deal with industries and matters falling under provincial jurisdiction.

[Mr. Fawcett.]

One would gather that this academic task force are out to employ any academic egghead who has been sitting on any pet project which possibly could be related in some way to management and labour relations. The worst is, however, that the task force have deliberately ignored the points which were raised by Mr. Justice Freedman. The problems implicit in the rejection of the Canadian Labour Relations Board by the CNTU and the troubles with longshoremen in Montreal and Vancouver would suggest to me, Mr. Speaker, that all the crucial issues have been ignored entirely and that this task force is, in effect, a delaying exercise which is being engaged in order to get away from facing the important issues that prevail at this time. I am of the very strong opinion that the railways are just sitting tight; they are waiting for an opportune moment and it will be a short time only before we shall be faced with the problem that faced us before, particularly with respect to run-throughs.

I realize that federal labour laws do not affect too many of our major industries, so that I need not, I think, speak for them. I do think that the majority of industries that do not come under federal jurisdiction do not apply the archaic residual rights rule, yet this is something that the railways apparently do not intend to move away from. This matter was one of the crucial issues in the railway negotiations of last summer, and on no occasion was there any indication that the railways have any intention of negotiating with the employees on anything that involved the recommendations of the Freedman Commission report.

I had not intended to take up much time with this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to now. I would conclude by saying what I said at the outset, that this notice of motion is just as crucial today as it was 15 months ago, that nothing has been done to implement the recommendations of an eminent jurist who went to a great deal of trouble to explore the labour situation in the federal field. Another such labour dispute in this field could bring about the same results that were previously seen. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I would request that hon. members of the house will support my notice of motion.

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, in common with other hon. members I was looking forward very much to the remarks of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett) on a subject about which, I think it is fair to assume, he is probably more expert than most of us, having had long experience in the railways industry. In his notice of motion he presents a problem which is very severe and real and is encountered not only in the railway industry but in all industries. I hope I shall be forgiven if I express considerable disappointment in his remarks, particularly with his suggestion that since the Freedman report came out, nothing has been done. Later in my remarks I hope to demonstrate adequately that something has been done by the parties themselves.

Most particularly, I take exception to his suggestion—and I am disappointed in this allegation—that the task force which was set up with the very best of intentions by this house is, according to his interpretation nothing more than a delaying device. In my view he has done a grave disservice to the men who are working on that task force.

Not only has he done that, but his allegation at this stage of the game, when the members of the task force are working and in which he proceeds to dismiss the task force as a delaying device is premature and precipitate. In the process he has cast doubts upon the integrity of the men who are working for it. If his intention is to advance the cause of the railroader, and I am sure it is, then the hon. member has not adopted the best approach.

As to the sum and substance of the hon. member's notice of motion, I do not think anyone in this house would take exception.

Mr. Winch: Will you vote for it?

Mr. Faulkner: It is important, in considering the notice of motion, to consider not only its substance but also to some degree the timing, and the methods through which we may achieve the legitimate and desirable objectives which the hon. member for Nickel Belt has set forth. I think it is possible to argue that at some stage legislation may indeed be required to accomplish the goal set out in the hon. member's notice of motion. I should like, though, to discuss some of the developments which have taken place within the private sector between management and labour through collective agreements which have in recent years accomplished those goals in some measure.

I think it is important to take this notice of motion in its total perspective, and to judge whether right now it is particularly urgent that we proceed to do that which it seeks. There is a provision in the notice of motion regarding technological change and its effect on job security which I think is important and which the hon. member did not mention. It seems to me there is an area where eventually we shall be required to bring in an amendment to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, and this has to do with the unorganized sector of labour. It is in the area where collective agreements do not exist that, possibly, protection will be sought through the medium of legislation.

As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is the opinion of most if not all hon. members, that the objectives set forth in this notice of motion are commendable. I think we all share an equal concern about the effects of technological change on workers. The history of the labour movement, the history of free enterprise in this area, is characterized by a series of developments, all of which point to one thing, that technological change, improvements in technology, improvements in machinery and improvements in methods of production have almost invariably been purchased at the expense of the livelihood and best interests of the workers. That was so if we look back to the nineteenth century. That was the raison d'être behind the movement of the Luddites. That was the condition which governed the attitude of the Tolpuddle martyrs and others, right up to fairly recently.

I think it is true to say that in most instances technological change has been purchased at the expense of the interests of the working men and working women. I think therefore that it is perfectly natural that within the labour force there should be this resistance. But, I think it is imperative to recognize that the resistance to technological change is not resistance to technological change per se, but a resistance to the ramifications of technological change on the lives of working men.

That is why in the past within organized labour, and indeed outside the ambit of organized labour, there has been fear, misgiving, and indeed opposition to technological change which is applied arbitrarily by a decision of management and which affects the working conditions of men and women within factories.

I wish to demonstrate briefly that in recent years, within the private sector as between labour and management, there has been I would say a significant and important development which shows that on both sides a sincere attempt at accommodation on the point that is raised in the hon. member's notice of motion.

No responsible labour leader argues in principle against technological change. Not only is it an inevitable feature of our society, but if reports that one reads are true it is likely to become more severe in the future than it has been in the past. It is an indispensable condition. It is a condition that ensures workers their jobs, because it provides competitiveness for industry itself to survive not only domestically, but particularly internationally. But it is important, as I said earlier, that this accommodation to technological change be undertaken with both parties involved, so that in fact we do not upset the general move toward improved efficiency within our industry and we do not sacrifice the workers involved.

Recently a study was made of collective agreements prior to January, 1962. The title of the study is "Results of a Study of Collective Agreements". It appears in the Laval Industrial Relations Journal of January, 1964, and the author was Monsieur Quinet. In the course of the study the people involved observed that in collective agreements pre-1962 there were virtually no provisions for technological change. I should like to read an excerpt from the study which points up this fact:

> When we started preparing the study, we firmly intended to analyze provisions dealing specifically with what is commonly called "technological changes". In fact, some such provisions were spotted by the analysts. But it was soon discovered that very few collective agreements contained such provisions, i.e. provisions that would make an open and obvious reference to the problems resulting from technological changes. If our analysis had been limited to this type of provision (for instance clauses dealing with the establishment of labour-management committees which would undertake to study the possible effects of technological changes in a given plant or company), our study would have indicated a very low percentage of establishments covered by such technological change provisions.

This was the condition the study found existed at that time. I am afraid I cannot give the exact number of collective agreements studied, but it was substantial. It was found that in collective agreements prior to 1962 there was very little reference to technological change and very little provision for such change. Recently studies have been undertaken by the Department of Labour. Again I apologize to the house for the fact that my statistics are not complete, but they do indicate the trend, which I think is important and merits consideration by members of the house. One hundred and twenty collective agreements post-1962 in the iron and steel products, printing and publishing industries —these are major industries—made direct reference to technological change, new machinery or new processes. There were within these collective agreements 140 provisions—this would also include the trucking industry —which did not make direct reference to technological change, but there were in the collective agreements provisions which obviously influenced adjustments on the part of both sides to technological change.

I admit that this information is not particularly detailed, but the point I am trying to make is that it indicates to me that within the private sector since 1962 there has been a fairly substantial effort on the part of management and labour to themselves deal with the problem posed by technological change. I think this is a very significant and healthy development and one which should be considered when discussing this notice of motion.

I should like to deal specifically with the issue which obviously is uppermost in the mind of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett), which is of course the railroad industry and the Freedman report. This has been the most spectacular, if you like, most recent pointing up of the problem. The hon. member for Nickel Belt read from the Freedman report a section which I had intended to read, so I shall not reread it. However I should like to go a little further in quoting from Mr. Justice Freedman's report because I believe it not only states the problem so well, but the principles which should guide us in a solution of the problem.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt quoted from the report—I have it as pages 135 and 136, but we may have different editions—on the matter of run-throughs, which the report said should be a matter for negotiation. The report in part reads as follows:

> The institution of run-throughs should be a matter for negotiation. To treat it as an unfettered management prerogative will only promote unrest, undermine morale, and drive the parties farther apart.

I think that is absolutely true and is a point that should be recognized by all. The report continues:

The commission—

Mr. Justice Freedman was the chairman of the commission.

—believes that its answer is rooted in fundamental fairness. A run-through program cannot be developed overnight. Much prior planning for it is required. Management is the one to initiate such planning—

I should like to interject here a notion to which I have always subscribed, and I would be interested to know whether the hon. member for Nickel Belt subscribes to it. I believe that in the matter of industrial relations the initiative must come from management. I have always believed that the attitude of management is what in turn determines the attitude of labour. If you get an attitude on the part of management that is co-operative and shows a willingness to negotiate in good faith, you engender the same attitude in labour almost without exception. The Freedman report continues:

Management is the one to initiate such planning and it alone knows where the plan is to take effect and what is its proposed nature and scope. But it does not bring its plan to the bargaining table. In that state of affairs bargaining proceeds and a collective agreement is in due course signed. Thereafter management for the first time introduces its plan. By now the parties are in the closed period. The plan may have the effect of causing very material changes in working conditions, as was undoubtedly the case at Nakina and to a lesser extent, at Biggar. But such a manoeuvre is not forbidden by the law, provided that the collective agreement itself is not violated. The result for the men is that they must suffer such a change in their working conditions; and this without recourse, for in the closed period strike action is forbidden. Their contract was made on the basis of one set of circumstances. Now it must be performed on the basis of another set of circumstances, devised by management alone and to which they have given no consent. There is a manifest inequity here which clamours for attention and correction.

I agree with that. I think all members of the house would agree with it. The point made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt is that nothing has been done, and since the Freedman report the issue has been ignored. The brotherhood of railroad trainmen, numbering 18,000 men, concluded an agreement and I should like to read an excerpt of the memorandum of agreement:

No new crew run-throughs shall be effected until an understanding is reached in current negotiations being conducted by vice president W. C. Bowra and the brotherhood concerning the establishment of guide lines and rules to govern the implementation of crew run-throughs. Any such understanding shall be incorporated in the main agreement and become a part thereof.

Both sides agreed to that provision. In the case of the residual non-operating group, numbering 55,000 men, and the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers, numbering 20,000 men, the following is an extract from the agreement they reached with management.

I would like to quote briefly from article VII which is entitled "Technological, Operational and Organizational Changes":

1. It is agreed between the parties that on the introduction by the company of technological, operational and/or organizational changes the following provisions will apply:

(a) the company will not put into effect any such change which is likely to be of a permanent nature and which may effect a material change in working conditions with adverse effects on employees covered by this agreement without giving as much advance notice as possible of any such proposed change to the unions concerned and, in any event, not less than 90 days if a relocation of employees is involved and 60 days' notice in other cases, with a full description thereof and with appropriate details as to the consequent changes in working conditions and the number of employees who would be adversely affected;

(b) that it will negotiate with the unions measures to minimize the adverse effects of the proposed change on employees, which measures may, for example, be with respect to severance, loss of wages, expenses of moving and travelling of employees required to relocate, retraining and the merging of seniority lists within organizations and/or such other measures as may be appropriate in the circumstances.

2. If the negotiations do not result in mutual agreement within thirty calendar days of the commencement of such negotiations, or such other period as may be agreed upon between the parties, the matter shall be referred immediately for mediation to a board of review, on which each of the parties will be equally represented by senior officers.

3. The board of review shall, within a fixed period to be determined by it, make its findings and recommendations. If such recommendations are not acceptable to either party, the matters remaining in dispute shall be referred immediately for decision to a referee selected by the parties, or, failing that, appointed by the Minister of Labour.

The matters to be decided by the referee shall not include any question as to the right of the company to make the change, which right the unions acknowledge, but shall be confined to measures for minimizing the adverse effects of the change; and if there is also a dispute with respect thereto, to the question as to whether such change would materially or permanently affect working conditions.

4. The decision of the referee shall be final and binding.

These are agreements reached by both parties in the dispute. It seems to me that one of the principal virtues of these agreements is that they have been arrived at by the parties involved in the dispute and that the government did not enter into it. I think the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett) has done a disservice to the men involved when he claimed that since the Freedman report nothing has been done, and in a second breath castigated the task force which is attempting to go beyond this particular problem and come up with long term solutions.

I will not speak about the task force although I intended to do so. However, I do feel that in assessing whether or not we should move ahead with the very laudable and commendable objectives implicit in this notice of motion it is reasonable for some of us to question whether it is good timing to do so now, while the task force is still deliberating. I think most of us share the conviction that the task force is a responsible effort.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt raised the point whether or not there should be more labour representation on this task force. This may be a valid point and I am not prepared to dispute it, but I do feel we should wait until we hear what they have to say before dealing with this problem on a much broader front, as it affects both the railroad and other industries.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) I was very disturbed to hear the hon. member who introduced this motion say that nothing has been done with respect to the recommendations of the Freedman report since it was first published. This was a particularly surprising statement from a man who was in the railway unions and whom we would expect to be familiar with the collective agreement to which the hon. member for Peterborough referred. The fact is that this agreement in which technological changes are taken into account was put into the collective agreement between the railway workers and the railway companies and was signed on December 17, 1966, a few months ago, but after the hon. member first introduced his resolution in this house last year. I was also surprised that he should attack the formation and establishment of the labour task force. It so happens that today I met one of the members of this task force, and I do not think there is any doubt as to the sincerity and good intentions of these people.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

The hon. member said that the establishment of this task force was nothing but a delaying tactic on the part of the government. By making this allegation he questioned the integrity and sincerity of the people who accepted to serve on the task force. He must remember that the Freedman report, which I agree is an excellent report, dealt specifically with technological change on the railways, and if we are going to make changes in our labour laws we should look at all industries, because our labour regulations apply not only to railways but to other industries as well.

When this resolution was put to the house last year I had the opportunity to speak on it. I supported it generally, although I disagreed with certain details. Since the debate in the house last year on this resolution there have been many significant additions in this field. In addition to the collective agreements which have been signed, two very important publications of studies have been put out by the Economic Council of Canada. One of these, which was put out in November, 1966, entitled "A Declaration on Manpower Adjustments to Technological and Other Change", deals in more detail with the subject matter of this resolution.

The other study of the Economic Council of Canada was put out in February, 1967, and is entitled "Towards Better Communications Between Labour and Management". In the study on technological change several very important points are put forward. First of all, and I do not think this can be stressed often enough, we must emphasize the importance of technological change and automation in our economy by introducing methods which will allow us to produce more in our country. We do a lot to help the workers because we are increasing our production. We will eventually give our Canadian people more products and a better opportunity to compete in the international markets where Canadian industry must compete. I will quote from the report of the Economic Council of Canada, in which we read the following:

> It is now universally recognized that technological change is essential for the achievement of the basic economic and social goals of full employment, a high rate of economic growth, and rising standards of living. Canada, with its open economy, must be ever conscious of the need to ensure that no impediments stand in the way of change. To prevent change from taking place would be not only to deny ourselves the benefits which result from the process of change but would undermine our competitive position in the international economy and eventually result in our slipping behind the rest of the industrialized world.

This has been said many times before, Mr. Speaker, but I think it ought to be repeated because there are some people in this country who feel that technological change or automation is necessarily an evil thing. Although it has temporary evil side effects, I think we must all agree that in the long run it is extremely important and valuable. We should not do anything to retard its progress in any way.

This report on technological change by the Economic Council of Canada makes some very important recommendations to deal with technological change. First of all it points out the necessity for continual bargaining, especially in connection with matters concerning technological change. The report states that if we are to merely discuss technological changes at the end of contracts during the short period which is usually allowed for collective bargaining, we are then bargaining under pressure of meeting a deadline, and often the many draft contracts which are presented to companies by unions cannot be adequately dealt with. So, first of all, this report recommends some procedure for continuous bargaining from the date of arriving at a contract. Second, it recommends that employers try to introduce technological change during periods of full employment. The purpose of this of course is that if some employees have to be phased out of a particular company they will have opportunities to work for other companies.

If technological change is made in a period of unemployment, there will not be the same opportunity for these employees. I should like to refer to another study which was made by Mr. Everett M. Kassalow, who is research director for the C.I.O.-A.F.L. In discussing this problem, Mr. Kassalow states:

> American union leaders and economists have repeatedly emphasized that the precondition for satisfactory adjustment to the spread and development of automation is a strong full employment economy. This necessity has been underscored by the experience of the past few years.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this is something that employers will have to respect. They will have to try to introduce their technological changes during periods of full employment.

The third recommendation put forward by the Economic Council of Canada in their report concerns the matter of advance notice and time lag with respect to technological changes. It is obvious that most of these technological changes do not happen overnight. Management starts to plan them long in advance of their introduction and knows many months, perhaps years, before they are actually put into effect. The Economic Council recommends that advance notice of at least three months be given. It is interesting to note that the collective agreement concluded between the railway companies and the railway employees provides for 90 days notice if re-location of employees is involved, and 60 days notice in other cases. I do not know if that provision is a consequence of that recommendation by the Economic Council.

The council in its report also suggests that when technological change is introduced and men have to be released, the companies should try to accomplish this purpose through natural attrition, that is through voluntary separation such as men going on pensions or men leaving the company. One hon. member suggests entering politics. In general, the companies should try to let these men go through the process of natural separation rather than through forced separation.

The council suggests, too, that if some men are near retirement age they could be granted early retirement on full pension in order to try to keep the men who are still able and willing to work. If this procedure were followed,—and it has been followed—when these men leave the company, you do not merely hire men to take their place, but you keep the group of men you have and re-train them in the new work that is required.

This leads to a further recommendation in the report concerning retraining programs. We have a national manpower policy under which there is a retraining program. However, the Economic Council suggests that the companies also should have retraining programs for men who are phased out of jobs as a result of technological changes. It is also suggested that they have relocation policies, especially if the company has more than one plant and jobs may be available at another plant.

Another recommendation in the Economic Council report refers to pension portability. It points out how many men who have worked for a company for a number of years and have built up certain pension rights often have a fear of moving to other companies or other places of employment. They fear they will lose all their pension benefits. The Economic Council report suggests that there be a vesting of pension rights. I should like to quote paragraph 32 of the report:

> Vesting of pension rights, which is a guarantee to the worker of an equity in his pension plan based on all or part of his accrued pension credits should he leave his job prior to the time that he becomes eligible for retirement, tends to make the pension structure more flexible, thus increasing the potential mobility of the worker.

There are some further recommendations which are listed under "financial measures". One of these is severance pay, another is unemployment benefits and mobility allowance. The Economic Council report recommends that employers set up funds for phased out workers in these three areas. On the subject of severance pay, the report says:

> The purpose of severance pay is to provide a lump sum cash benefit to workers who become permanently separated from their firms due to technological or other changes.

Supplementary unemployment benefits would be supplementary benefits to those provided by the government unemployment insurance scheme. Mobility allowances would be mobility allowances in addition to the government program of mobility allowances and these would be provided by the company. Benefits of this type have already been won in many instances by workers through collective bargaining. I refer particularly to the steel industry, to the meat-packing industry and the rubber industry in the United States.

Again, I should like to refer to the paper prepared by Mr. Kassalow, the research director of the C.I.O-A.F.L. in which he refers to benefits of this type:

> For the successful handling of automation and related problems there must be increasing acceptance in collective bargaining of the concept that workers have a property right in their jobs. With this in mind: "the cost of obsolete workers should be viewed as a charge on industry just as rational as the cost of machinery."

I think that is a very important principle that we must accept, Mr. Speaker, because if they can accept the principle that they provide for obsolescence of machinery, they can as well provide for the obsolescence of the job performed by employees, the employees themselves being much more important.

Before I leave this particular report dealing with manpower adjustments to technological change, I should remind the house that the Economic Council is a group which has very good representation from labour, management and nearly all provinces in Canada, and therefore the recommendations made in this report carry a lot of weight.

[Mr. Allmand.]

The other report of the Economic Council to which I referred, entitled "Towards Better Communications Between Labour and Management" deals mainly with labour-management consultation. I suggest that if on both sides we are to have the exchange of knowledge and information with respect to technological change as recommended in the report I have just referred to, we must have the institution of procedures for consultation.

In the report the Economic Council states this:

> The main instrument to bring about a system of effective communication and consultation at the plant level is through joint consultation committees, operating on a continuous basis. These committees would consider all matters that are not usually reserved for collective bargaining, or fall within the procedures for settling grievances arising out of the interpretation, administration or alleged violation of the collective agreement. In other words, these committees—

This point is important, Mr. Speaker.

> —would assist and supplement but not interfere with the collective bargaining process and established grievance procedures for dealing with the administration of the collective agreement.

For many years now the federal government has been encouraging the formation of labour-management consultation committees. This has been successful in some respects, but it must be recognized that there is still some suspicion of this process. I think if these committees were understood in their proper context they would be acceptable and would do a lot to relieve the employees from the shock they experience at the introduction of technological change.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that in the United States tripartite committees consisting of labour, management and government have been set up to deal with technological change. Although it is important that labour and management consult on a continuous basis, I think it is also important that government keeps in very close touch with both labour and management so that it can plan its legislation and departmental programs to work together with management and labour, as well as enable the government to formulate its other programs which are not directly under the labour department but which do a lot to help workers who have been phased out by technological change. Here I think of the war on poverty program, and programs to revitalize potential abandoned towns, the establishment of new industries, better transportation policies in areas newly affected by technological change, the building of technical schools, and so forth.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to accept that technological change at a very rapid pace is with us to stay that it is essential that we work with it and not against it. There should be no delay or suggestion of delay in the implementation of technological change. There should be no featherbedding. On the other hand, everything must be done to protect the workers and to lighten the blow to those workers who are phased out by technological change.

Although I welcome the introduction of this particular resolution, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning I am surprised that a man so close to the railway unions was not aware of the fact that there were collective agreements signed during this past winter which implemented many of the recommendations which the hon. member is making in his resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to express my appreciation to the hon. members for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and Peterborough (Messrs. Allmand and Faulkner) who made quite elaborate speeches which will not fail to clarify every angle of the situation.

I have read with considerable interest the resolution put on the order paper by the hon. member who introduced it in the house, and I think he also deserves appreciation for the generous intention that leads him to pursue his efforts to improve the fate of the workers.

Mr. Speaker, a closer consideration of the resolution, however, inspires certain reservations. First of all, the resolution as introduced should be analysed.

It will be noted first that this resolution talks of "technological innovations" which would "materially" affect... The word "materially" causes some concern, because the idea of the mover of this proposition is not truly understood. It is difficult to realize his purpose when he speaks of technological innovations which would "materially affect" the working conditions. To my mind, the expression is too vague to command full support of the wording of this resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader could give us an outline of the proposed business for tomorrow, and preferably for the next few days.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier in the week that we would be dealing with legislation tomorrow, but since then it has been decided that tomorrow we will deal with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. On Friday we propose to take the estimates of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

On Monday we will take the estimates of Finance; on Tuesday Defence Production; on Wednesday Energy, Mines and Resources. On Thursday we propose to take the resolution—if it is on the order paper—dealing with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. On Friday we will take the estimates of the Registrar General.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I presume that that sequence will be followed, even if perchance the estimates of the department are finished in less than one day.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, that is the proposal. If for example northern development were finished before the end of the day on Friday, we would then take finance.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

First report of standing committee on industry, research and energy development, in English and French—Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe).

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVLLE

RESIGNATION AS JUDGE OF SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that I have received a letter of resignation from Mr. L. A. Landreville, and that the government has decided to accept his resignation as a justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario. Since the house has shown some interest in this matter I thought it might want to give me permission to table a copy of this letter.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to the minister's suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, would this be an appropriate time to ask the Minister of Justice a question regarding the matter to which he has just referred?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think so. The question might be asked when we reach that item in today's order of business.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, instead of asking questions regarding international affairs, because an opportunity will be presented later today to do so, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he received a telegram from the priests of Antigonish diocese per Reverend James McMullin, pointing out the need for the immediate establishment of a crown corporation for industrial development in Cape Breton to check the serious and, as described in the telegram, rapidly worsening unemployment situation in the Cape Breton industrial area. In view of the fact that 200 men were laid off at the Sydney steel plant last week and 90 are being released today, I should like to ask whether the act that was promised six months ago, which is still in the embryonic stage, will be brought forward—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say to the hon. members who have interrupted that a statement was made yesterday to the effect that the resolution was on the order paper, therefore it must be still in the embryonic stage. Will the government bring this matter forward tomorrow in view of the serious and appalling situation in Cape Breton?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received the telegram and it will be dealt with immediately. The legislation in question will be brought forward next week.

SYDNEY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry perhaps I may direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding the steel industry in Cape Breton. Has it been drawn to his attention that a notice has now been posted to the effect that unless conditions improve, in addition to the 300 men laid off in the last few days another 400 men will be laid off on June 18? Is it true that some orders for the manufacture of steel rails for export have to be cleared by the government, and will the Prime Minister take this matter in hand to see that these orders are cleared as quickly as possible so the anticipated lay off on June 18 may not materialize?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I might answer about the steel rails, the government approved the credit for a contract on Tuesday of this week, and it was announced forthwith, in the amount of some $9 million covering a sufficient quantity of rails to provide work for some 24 to 28 weeks.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government taking any other action to prevent the rapid deterioration of the employment situation in the steel industry of Cape Breton?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are taking the most far reaching action that has been taken by any government in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is far reaching inaction.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Regardless of what the Prime Minister said, would he ask the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his cabinet to carry out a complete investigation into the operations of this company, before we end up with no steel industry at all in Sydney?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps that should be done in conjunction with the premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Starr: Passing the buck again.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Perhaps the hon. member who said "Sit down" would rise and identify himself. It would be interesting to see who it was.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has now changed his opinion that this is a responsibility of the federal government, as has been stated and intimated by the cabinet member from Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It depends on the situation, doesn't it?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister but I would also direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask whether he would care to amend the statement he made about the 28 weeks' employment. My main question, however, is to the Prime Minister and I would ask, in connection with the Cape Breton development corporation, whether it is the intention of the government, as indicated previously by the Prime Minister, that steel will play a prominent part in this development corporation and will be the basis upon which new industry would be founded within the province.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied on this score when he sees the legislation next week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The resolution is not yet ready.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As usual, no answer.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VAL D'OR, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER OF OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The minister has just announced the transfer of the Indian Affairs office from Amos to Val d'Or, in Abitibi. Could he tell us whether the Indians of the territory have been consulted and how?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will readily agree, I am sure, to put his question on the order paper.

[English]

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—POSSIBLE USE OF TRUCE SUPERVISORY ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement yesterday by Ambassador Ignatieff to the effect that the UN truce supervisory organization, rather than the emergency force, would or may be the best way of re-establishing a UN presence in the Middle East along the cease fire lines, has this organization been regrouped and coordinated, and has Canada made any preparations to provide additional personnel when they are required, which we hope will be immediately?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, would my hon. friend agree that this question might be answered when we come to the estimates, which will be right after the orders of the day?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to hon. members that they might refrain from asking questions of the same nature as the one asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, inasmuch as in a few minutes we will go into committee to consider the external affairs estimates.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the supervisory truce commission personnel are taking any part in the cease fire between Israel and Jordan.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning the truce supervisory commission or the United Nations observer corps on the borders of Israel and Syria and the borders of Israel and Jordan. Is the report accurate that one of these men was killed yesterday, and what steps are being taken to provide for the safety of Canadian members of this commission under the present situation of war that prevails?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot confirm officially that one member of the United Nations truce supervisory organization has lost his life. There has been a story to that effect. So far as I know, no Canadian officer is in that locality.

Mr. Churchill: Are the members of this commission obliged now to make observations with regard to military attacks that are occurring?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are carrying out their duties to the extent that is possible.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

INQUIRY AS TO PENSION ELIGIBILITY FOLLOWING RESIGNATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Justice is waiting for a question in regard to the resignation of Mr. Justice Landreville. As a result of having resigned voluntarily, will the judge be eligible to receive the bounty of a pension for a retired judge?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that is hardly a question; it is a commentary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I can only say that as far as I know there is no question of bounty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then let us get a comment from the minister: Will Justice Landreville receive a pension? Is that a commentary?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand this question. I think it is very much the type of matter to which the government might well give some consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Brewin: If the Minister of Justice would direct his attention to me for a minute I will put my question. Is there anything in the correspondence leading up to the resignation and the acceptance of the resignation of Mr. Justice Landreville which mentions or deals with the question of a pension?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have had no correspondence with Mr. Justice Landreville, and I do not think any member of the government has since I have assumed office as Minister of Justice. There has been some correspondence over the past months—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): When did the minister get the letter of resignation?

Mr. Trudeau: I must say I have seen no correspondence wherein the question of pension is raised by any member of the government.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SITUATION RESPECTING ISRAEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Was the head of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation speaking on behalf of the government when he issued a statement to the effect that Israel will be unable to pay its debts to Canada?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, sir, no such statement was authorized. Mr. Aitken, president of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, did make a reply in response to a question, but I do not think it was in that vein.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister look into exactly what was said and, if what was alleged is true, have Mr. Aitken either retract or correct his statement, which is very damaging to Israel?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the same subject but put in a different way, and ask him whether in view of some misunderstanding which has arisen because of a statement made by Mr. Aitken, to which the hon. member for Oxford has referred, the minister would clarify Canada's policy regarding trade with Israel.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask the question. I will be very glad to reply. For some years the Canadian government, in view of the unsettled situation in the Middle East, has exercised caution in authorizing exports of military equipment to countries in that area. Some exports of parts for non-combat piston aircraft and non-combat vehicles received authorization after careful consideration.

On receiving word of the outbreak of hostilities on June 5, the government acted promptly to stop any shipments of military equipment from Canada to the countries reportedly involved. No action has been taken to impose new export controls on ordinary commercial transactions in non-military goods. The shipment of non-military goods is presently at the discretion of shippers and is subject to the availability of transportation. No change has been made in Canada's trade relations with countries in the area.

Some steamship lines that serve the Middle East are rerouting their ships to avoid the Suez canal. Some are not presently accepting cargo for eastern Mediterranean and Arabian ports. The services of the trade commissioner posts in the area remain available to Canadian exporters. There may, however, be some delays, which I think is understandable, in servicing business inquiries, resulting from the present situation.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister clarify the situation further with regard to one point? Will exports to Israel or any other Middle East country remain eligible for insurance under the Export Credits Insurance Corporation?

Mr. Winters: Yes, on the question of eligibility. But they will have to be examined in the light of existing risks, as are all other applications for credit.

TRANSPORTATION

PROCLAMATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING RAIL LINE ABANDONMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Acting Minister of Transport, who indicated that the minister would be replying upon his return. I wonder if the minister can now inform the house when part I of the new transportation act will be proclaimed, so that western communities might be provided with protection under its terms in connection with railway line abandonment procedures.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I cannot say. I indicated quite recently that I was not in a position to say when part I would be proclaimed. I did indicate quite some time ago, and I am happy to be allowed to repeat it now because the question has some urgency, that the procedures laid down in the amendments approved by parliament with respect to rail line abondonment will be followed whether the Board of Transport Commission hears the cases or the new commission hears them.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say when the new Canadian transport commission will be appointed?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, it cannot be appointed in full until part I is proclaimed. I am advised, however, that it would be possible to appoint one or two officers, if that was deemed advisable, in order to do the work preparatory to the establishment of the commission. One difficulty, of course, is that once the commission is established, it must start to operate at once because the existing boards go out of existence the same day.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I ask a further supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that no railway line abandonment hearings will be heard until such time as the commission is in operation?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, I do not think that would be a reasonable thing for me to do, nor would it be in accordance with the law as passed by parliament. It is highly improbable that any new applications will be heard, but it should be remembered that some of these applications were made more than four years ago. They were stayed for a very long period; and since a transitional period was provided for under the act, it does not seem to me it would be fair to disregard the law enacted by parliament last session.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question for clarification. Is it possible to have abandonment hearings under the old procedures, or does the minister now consider that abandonment hearings will be held under the new procedures?

Mr. Pickersgill: I gave the assurance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the hon. member is now asking for an interpretation of the law, and the question as such is not acceptable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I may be permitted to clear up this point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is asking for the indulgence of the house to clear up a statement. Does the house agree?

Mr. Pickersgill: I beileve there is a great deal of public interest in this matter, sir, so I should like to make it as clear as possible that the new procedures will be followed in the hearing of any applications by the Board of Transport Commissioners in the interval before the new commission is established.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister not say during the transportation bill debate that no applications would be heard until the new board was set up? The new board, we were told, would establish a costing system under which the same principles would apply both to lines to be abandoned and lines to be retained. I am sure the minister will remember stating in the debate that the new commission would handle these applications.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have heard enough clarifications now.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the minister stated in this house that he had been authorized by both railways to announce that all applications would be withdrawn on the day the bill went through parliament. So if all the old applications were withdrawn, these other applications must be new. This is in direct contradiction to what was said in this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may be right, but that is not a question of privilege.

[Later:]

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the absent minded Minister of Transport. May I ask the minister whether he regards the proceedings to be held later this month, in which the Board of Transport Commissioners will hear the Canadian Pacific Railway application for abandonment under the old section 168 rather than the new section 134 to be a violation of his solemn assurance given to this house last fall.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is not acceptable.

Mr. Schreyer: Ten o'clock.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REPRESENTATION OF UNIONS BEFORE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

Did the Minister of Labour provide that in case of an inter-union conflict involving an affiliate of the C.L.C. and an affiliate of the C.N.T.U., these two movements must be equally represented, namely by two representatives each.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that the question is in order at this time.

PUBLIC WORKS

AMHERST, N.S.—USE OF CANADIAN MATERIALS IN WHARF EXTENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, one week ago today I asked a question of the Minister of Transport which was taken as notice by the acting minister. As reported at page 825 of Hansard for June 1 I asked whether the minister had received a telegram from local 2231 of the United Steel Workers of America at Amherst, Nova Scotia, and if steps could be taken in calling for tenders for the extension to the Pugsley terminal wharf requiring the use of domestic materials in order to provide some 15,000 to 20,000 man hours of employment in the steel industry, where unemployment is quite prevalent.

Has the minister had time during the last week to look into this matter, and can he give a reply today?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did have some information about this matter, but I apologize to the hon. gentleman because I have not got it with me, and I would not like to trust my memory, particularly since my recollections have so recently been called into question.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgency of the matter about which I asked the minister, and in view of the fact that tenders are to be called this week, could the minister undertake to give me an answer tomorrow to the question I submitted a week ago?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will do my utmost, sir.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

AIR CANADA

COMPLAINT RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION TO WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. Similarly I directed a question to the acting minister in the minister's absence, but nothing came of it at all despite my compliments to the acting minister. Can the minister himself now answer my question, which had to do with increased accommodation for passengers of Air Canada to and from western Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have very grave doubts whether increased accommodation could be provided without increasing the number of planes, and I do not think any planes would be available unless they were taken off some other routes. I know that the hon. gentleman, with his broad national viewpoint, would not want to suggest that, but if he can tell me where any additional planes can be had or can be brought into Canada by any air line, I would be glad to have that information.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The members of the house are here to find out from the minister whether he has any knowledge at all of these matters. I am not the one to provide him with knowledge as to what should be done with regard to the provision of transport, though I would be very glad to do so because things might thereby be improved.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman would be very welcome to.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION OF FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN SAINT JOHN, N.B. AND DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is directed to the Prime Minister, of which I have given him notice. Has the Prime Minister received a request to meet a delegation from western Nova Scotia to discuss the woefully inadequate ferry service between Digby and Saint John? If so, what has been his reply?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the association in question has not been in touch with me directly but it has exchanged correspondence with my colleague the minister of health and welfare. The request they made in their correspondence is now receiving consideration.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister of the same mind regarding this Digby-Saint John ferry service in view of the recently published Atlantic provinces transportation study and the remarks made therein? If so, can the minister give us an up to date progress report on how the study of the particular service—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member is asking for information which should be conveyed to the house at the time of ministerial statements on motions, rather than by way of reply to a question.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any information on this study as it relates to the Digby-Saint John ferry service and, if so, when will it be made available?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, we are conducting very active negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway with a view to finding the best method of improving this service at the earliest possible date.

NATURAL GAS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF NEW TRANS-CANADA LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement made yesterday by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines that they would be forced to ration gas to the utility companies in eastern Ontario unless construction of additional facilities was started almost immediately, can the minister advise what action he or the government has taken to speed up a decision and to get this construction under way almost immediately?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the alternative proposal of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is presently before the National Energy Board. I presume that a decision will be taken in time to permit the looping of the present Northern Ontario line if the Great Lakes project is not approved by the federal power commission. As my hon. friend knows, this has been a very difficult situation. On our recommendation Trans-Canada presented an alternative project, which was attacked by the distributing companies at first. The distributing companies have now abandoned their own alternative projects. The whole matter is before the National Energy Board, and I cannot prejudge their decision.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give any indication when he expects the federal power commission of the United States to hand down its decision on the Great Lakes project?

Mr. Pepin: That is still a military secret, Mr. Speaker.

HARBOURS

KITIMAT, B.C.—POSSIBLE USE FOR EXPORT OF OIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the interest being shown in the harbour facilities at Kitimat, B.C. for the export of oil from the Athabasca tar sands, will the minister either now or in the near future make a statement on the government's position relative to the use of this port for large tonnage ocean vessels?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is acceptable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the use of this port will increase rapidly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he tell us whether he has recently met the officials of the organization known as the Estates General of French Canada, and whether this organization has asked a subsidy from the government?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member should place his question on the order paper.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

• (3:10 p.m.)

1. Administration, operation and maintenance, including payment of remuneration, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council and notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, in connection with the assignment by the Canadian government of Canadians to the staffs of the international organizations detailed in the estimates and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amounts of the shares of those organizations of such expenses, and authority, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, for the appointment and fixing of salaries of commissioners (international commissions for supervision and control in Indo-China), secretaries and staff by the Governor in Council; and authority, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, for the appointment and fixing of salaries of high commissioners, ambassadors, ministers plenipotentiary, consuls, secretaries and staff by the Governor in Council; assistance and repatriation of distressed Canadian citizens and persons of Canadian domicile abroad, including their dependents; cultural relations and academic exchance programs with other countries (Details, page 118), $42,260,000.

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of External Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 is to be found on page 116 of the blue book of estimates, with the details thereof listed on page 118. Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were referred to the external affairs committee. How is it that they have come back to the house?

Mr. MacEachen: If I might speak to the point of order, prior to the adoption of the most recent rule change the point raised by my hon. friend would have been correct. The change recommended by the committee on procedure and adopted by the house provided that estimates can be dealt with concurrently in a standing committee and in the committee of supply. We considered yesterday whether it would be necessary to move a special motion to withdraw the estimates from the standing committee, but I believe a reading of the rule changes makes it clear that we have the flexibility to deal with estimates concurrently in a standing committee and the committee of supply.

Mr. Churchill: Which rule is that?

[Mr. Speaker.]

The Chairman: May I read to the committee provisional order No. 5(g) to be found on page 51 of the book of provisional orders:

(g) When estimates are referred to standing committees they shall be referred without prejudice to the right of the commitee of supply to consider those same estimates, whether or not the standing committees have reported on them.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, in rising to take advantage of this procedure to initiate a discussion on external affairs and, more particularly, on developments in the Middle East, I hope I will not be considered discourteous if I am not able to remain in the house after my own contribution because of engagements which are very difficult indeed for me to change.

Mr. Chairman, since we last discussed external affairs on May 24 there have been tragic and dangerous developments in the Middle East, developments resulting in armed conflict, in bitter fighting, much loss of life and great destruction in that holy land. It is sad—it is more than sad—to read in the press reports of fighting in Jerusalem, of an armoured column moving against Nazareth, of firing in Bethlehem; but that is what has happened.

The United Nations security council, which has been exercising the responsibility given to it under the charter as the principal agency of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security in avoiding the scourge of war has, as hon. members know, been successful in passing a resolution calling for a cease fire. That was the night before last. It is regrettable indeed that a resolution was not passed some days ago which might have put the support of the security council and all its members behind the Secretary General in a way which might have made the cease fire resolution unnecessary.

Hon. members will recall that the Canadian delegate on the security council did his best to introduce a resolution of this kind at the very beginning of the crisis. Indeed, it was on his initiative and that of the member of the council from Denmark that the council was called together at once. But nothing was achieved by that earlier initiative. Some members of council who at that time objected to this initiative have recently become the most articulate in demanding that action in regard to a cease fire be taken at once—now.

There is no quarrel with that position which is being taken, but it is unfortunate that a position along these lines was not taken by them some days ago. Perhaps this is an example of the interrelationship, the interaction of military developments and diplomatic activity. In any event, so far as the United Nations is concerned the cease fire resolution was adopted unanimously. I think we can all take satisfaction from the fact that the resolution was concurred in by all permanent members of the council as well as the non-permanent members.

That cease fire resolution, according to the information I had received up to the time I came into the house, has been accepted by only one country involved in the fighting—Jordan. It has been accepted by Israel, with the not unreasonable qualification that their acceptance depends on the acceptance by the other governments and peoples engaged in the fighting. It has not been accepted by any Arab state except Jordan.

The Canadian member of the security council, Mr. Ignatieff, who is acting with great effectiveness and distinction as a member of the security council, as you would expect—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —yesterday introduced a resolution, not to delay the cease fire resolution but to give the president of the council and the Secretary General of the United Nations the authority of the council in doing all they can to see that the cease fire is carried out. That resolution is now before the security council. I think the council is meeting at this moment. It is to be hoped that that resolution, or a better one if it can be evolved by any amendment, or another resolution, may be adopted by all members and especially by the permanent members, so the authority of the United Nations can be brought to bear on any efforts the Secretary General or the president of the council can make to ensure that this cease fire is not only adopted but made effective after adoption.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister allow a question? What has the government in mind as to means whereby the cease fire will be made effective? Is it the suggestion that troops will be sent to the area in question to preserve and enforce the peace, or is this merely a generality?

Mr. Pearson: I am coming to that later, Mr. Chairman. At the moment I can only say it would be premature to speculate on what kind of action may be required and may be possible until the representatives of the United Nations, the Secretary General and the president of the council, or anybody else agreed on by the security council, can get to the spot and then report as to what may be required. Later I will have something to say about the machinery that is already there.

Although it may take a certain amount of time, I think it is important to examine the background of the present situation. That is almost essential if we are to understand what has happened recently, and the difficulties that are now facing and will continue to face the United Nations even if the fighting stops under the resolution calling for a cease fire. The origin of the recent tragedy, the recent conflict, goes far back, years back, into earlier failures of the United Nations to deal with what used to be called the Palestine question, in a way that not only provided for a state of Israel but provided for that state living in peaceful co-operation with its neighbours.

Mr. Chairman, I am informed by a note just sent to me, if I may revert to what I said a few moments ago, that the Secretary General has just read to the security council a message from the representative of the United Arab Republic to the security council, that the U.A.R. accepts the cease fire provided that Israel stops fighting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: At least these two governments presumably are in agreement on that point, that they both should stop fighting.

The earlier failures have a direct bearing on what has happened in recent weeks and months and years. The prelude to the immediate struggle has been certain moves by the U.A.R. in recent weeks to meet a situation which they claimed was threatening their security and threatening the peace. They were thinking especially of incidents and counter incidents on the Israeli-Syrian border.

There are two elements of the situation which are before us now and that also go back a good many years, elements which I think should be mentioned before we can deal with what can be done to improve the situation at the moment. One which has been very much in our minds is the situation regarding innocent passage through the straits of Tiran into the gulf of Aqaba which, when it was considered ten years ago in the United Nations, in 1956-57, was felt to be a very important matter both in terms of international law and in terms of Israeli development and survival. But it is a much more important matter now because of the developments that have taken place on the coast of the gulf of Aqaba, occupied by and now part of the state of Israel, with a port that has been established there which is the main port for importing Israel's oil requirements.

The Canadian position in regard to this matter was made perfectly clear in the assembly of the United Nations on February 26, 1957, more than ten years ago. What was said then was reprinted in two white papers called "The Crisis in the Middle East" which, if hon. members have not read them recently, I think they would find very interesting in the light of the developments that have occurred in the last few weeks. What I said in 1957 in the general assembly on this particular point about the question of the gulf of Aqaba and the straits of Tiran, was:

In our view—

That was the Canadian delegation's view.

—it should be agreed and affirmed by us—

I meant the assembly.

—that there should be no interference with innocent passage through or any assertion of belligerent rights in the straits of Tiran.

We have not altered that position, Mr. Chairman. I repeated this in the House of Commons on March 15, 1957, as recorded at page 2355 of Hansard for that date, and I tried then to emphasize the danger that would be incurred in dealing with this matter in New York if some agreed action could not be taken that would be effective in dealing with this situation in the gulf of Aqaba. That position taken then is certainly relevant to the position that governments—including ours—have taken in the last few weeks on this question.

We take the position, in regard to the legal situation, that these are international waters and that the gulf of Aqaba is an international gulf. But if there is doubt about that legal question, and there is doubt about it, I would hope the matter can be settled by the International Court of Justice. Irrespective of the legal position, however, no action should be taken by the riparian states which would interfere with the right of access to the gulf.

As hon. members know, in 1957 a contingent of the United Nations emergency force occupied a strategic point called Sharm el Sheikh which commanded the navigation channel through the strait of Tiran. As was stated at that time in New York, that force was there to preserve the right of access to the gulf of Aqaba. Of course it has been my view, and I think the view of the house, that one of the measures leading to the difficulties that culminated in this conflict—it was a tragedy—was when the United Nations force was withdrawn from that point as well as from the border between Israel and the U.A.R.

All this does not mean that the United Nations emergency force was a failure. On the contrary, it was successful in maintaining the peace in that area for ten and a half years. Surely the conclusion to be drawn from this experience is that it is a time not for banishing United Nations forces but for stronger United Nations forces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Another conclusion that should be drawn is that when these forces are set up, in the way the force was set up ten and a half years ago by the United Nations, we should be as careful as it is possible to be that the basic authority of the forces is laid down, as I think for instance we have it laid down in regard to the United Nations force in Cyprus. It may be that the legal positions we took in 1956 and 1957, along with many other states, about the withdrawal of the United Nations emergency force may seem very academic now, but it won't be academic if the United Nations is asked to move in there again.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be pardoned if I go into that matter in some detail with a view to avoiding in future the difficulties we have encountered in recent weeks in regard to United Nations peace keeping.

• (3:30 p.m.)

On March 15, 1957, as reported at page 2357 of Hansard, I said:

But in the arrangements made and in the agreement which I have referred to—

That is the establishment of the United Nations emergency force on Egyptian soil.

—the United Nations, which established this force to do certain tasks, clearly has a right to be consulted as to whether and when these tasks have been discharged, as it would if they were to be extended. From this, it follows in our view, and this is the view of the secretary general also, that if Egypt should at any time make a request for UNEF's withdrawal, the appropriate procedure would be for that request to go first to the advisory committee on UNEF through the secretary general. There it would be discussed by the committee which was set up for that purpose by the assembly, and if necessary and desirable the whole matter could then be referred to the full assembly for decision. And therefore any question of whether UNEF should be withdrawn would become a matter for discussion with and decision by the United Nations.

As I said at that time, this was our government's understanding of the procedure which should be followed. It was not done on this occasion. I do not intend to be critical of the secretary general, because anyone who knows the circumstances under which he was operating at that time and the attitude taken by certain governments which had large contingents in the United Nations emergency force will appreciate the difficulties he was facing.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? Did the secretary general consult at least with the advisory committee? I understand he did at one meeting.

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: But only at one meeting.

Mr. Pearson: Yes. He had one meeting of a committee of contributors. There was a second meeting, but that meeting of the advisory committee took place after the decision had been made by the secretary general to recall the emergency force.

Again, I should like to refer back to 1957 in the hope that this kind of situation will not be repeated in the future. I shall quote from a memorandum I made about a conversation I had with Mr. Hammarskjold on March 12, 1957. The secretary general's position—Mr. Hammarskjold—was that Egypt could not order UNEF to withdraw without renouncing the consent given to the original entry of the force. This could not be done unilaterally because that agreement was conditional on the functions which the force was performing in Egypt in accordance with assembly resolutions. Undoubtedly—and I am referring to the secretary general's conversation with me—in considering the question of withdrawal the assembly would be primarily concerned with whether UNEF had completed the functions which the assembly had given it. If the assembly decided that these functions had been fulfilled, it would recommend that UNEF be withdrawn. However, if the assembly decided that UNEF's functions were not fulfilled it would probably recommend that the force should not be withdrawn. Either way, however, the assembly could do no more than recommend. It could not give orders to Egypt.

That, of course, is the situation now in respect of the operation of any United Nations force on any foreign territory. It can only give orders when it acts under chapter VII of the United Nations charter which deals with action as a result of a security council resolution. We know what has happened in this particular situation. UNEF was recalled. I think it is unfortunate that this happened. The Canadian contingent was recalled from UNEF in circumstances which were very unfortunate and unhappy indeed. They were recalled for reasons given to us by the United Nations secretary general who asked that we take such action in 48 hours. The reasons for this which he passed on and which had been sent to him by the government of the United Arab Republic were reasons which we did not accept. We let the government in Cairo know quite clearly that we did not accept them as valid in any way, shape or form.

A few weeks ago, when this crisis began, we were faced in the very beginning with the same old problem of ten years ago. We were faced with a statement of policy by the government of the United Arab Republic that passage through the gulf of Aqaba to Elath, the Israeli port, was to be denied and that, as well, UNEF was to be withdrawn. Well, we knew or should have known the significance of this. We had been warned ten years before in no uncertain terms as to the course Israel would take if that demand were made. They had said, and repeated a few weeks ago, that denial of free access through the gulf to their port would be considered by them as an act of aggression. They said that ten years ago, they repeated it a few weeks ago, and war broke out. The United Nations ordered a cease fire as they did in 1956. But, as in 1956, the problem remains, that is, the problem of dealing with the situations on the frontier and in the gulf and the ultimate problem of dealing with the relations between the state of Israel and its neighbours.

It is not enough to deal with these immediate situations. It is not enough to bring about a cease fire, important as that is. It is not enough even to stop the fighting, vital as that is. There are other problems which must be settled if the cease fire is to be effective in producing a peace settlement and peace. So we have the other problems which faced us in 1957 facing us again today. What about withdrawal of the forces from occupied territories, with or without guarantees? What about withdrawal of Israeli forces from Sharm el Sheik where they are now? They withdrew once before. They withdrew before on the very definite understanding and indeed, in so far as their bilateral relations with the United States are concerned, on the commitment that if they withdrew from Sharm el Sheik and other parts of the Sinai peninsula this would be done as part of a pledge which would include a United States commitment to see that the gulf was kept open. I have documents here which confirm that. I am sure some of my hon. friends have read these documents. There is an aide-mémoire handed to the ambassador of Israel by the secretary of state of the United States on February 11, 1957. I venture to suggest that if that document had not been in the hands of the government of Israel it might have been most difficult if not impossible at that moment to get the Israeli forces back behind their original frontiers.

This particular document reads as follows:

> With respect to the Gulf of Aqaba and access thereto, the United States believes that the gulf comprehends international waters and that no nation has the right to prevent free and innocent passage in the gulf and through the straits giving access thereto.

Then it continues and the last paragraph reads as follows:

> In the absence of some overriding decision to the contrary, as by the International Court of Justice—

That decision might be taken in the future; we do not know.

> —the United States, on behalf of vessels of United States registry, is prepared to exercise the right of free and innocent passage and to join with others to secure general recognition of this right.

• (3:40 p.m.)

In speaking to that in the House of Commons at that time, on March 15, I associated myself with that principle and that point of view and emphasized that the withdrawal of Israel's civil and military forces from Sharm el Sheik was made not on an assurance contained in any general assembly resolution except that of February 2, which had been passed a few weeks before and was rather ambiguous in its terms, but on certain assumptions and expectations which the government of Israel had at that time and which they announced to the general assembly.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether any other members of the assembly expressed agreement with those assumptions stated by the government of Israel?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there were members of the assembly who questioned these assumptions and the stand taken by other delegates that there was or should be any package deal. The position taken by them was that Israel had been the aggressor at that time and that her forces should withdraw behind the line from which they commenced the aggression without any commitments, conditions or qualifications of any kind.

The government of Israel had a different point of view. Their forces did withdraw, but they withdrew on certain understandings which the government had received primarily from the United States. Mrs. Meir was their foreign secretary then and she made it perfectly clear for her government that this was the reason they were withdrawing at that time. That, of course, was not accepted by the assembly as such because the assembly insisted technically that the withdrawal should be unconditional.

Mr. Douglas: Was there some guarantee or any agreement signed by the United States, the Soviet union and France with reference to access to the gulf of Aqaba?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, there was a tripartite guarantee, which I think went back to 1950, guaranteeing the territorial integrity of Israel. The Soviet union did not take part in it, but since that time, in the latter 1950's, some doubt was thrown on the validity of that guarantee by certain statements of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. So far as I know, I do not think the government of Israel is relying very heavily at the present time or in recent months on that particular tripartite guarantee. There was a very real and genuine understanding on the part of the government of Israel that they should be guaranteed the right of access to the gulf, and it was on that understanding, they claim, that they withdrew their forces behind the lines from which they had begun to fight.

I mention all this because we are facing or may be facing very shortly a similar situation. This time I hope that during the very difficult diplomatic negotiations which will take place it is made quite clear just what is going to be the situation in these waters and on the U.A.R.-Israel boundaries before the necessary steps which should be taken are taken. I repeat that this can be done and I hope it will be done in agreement with the riparian states on the gulf of Aqaba and with the United Arab Republic. Every effort certainly should be made to bring about that agreement. This can be done if the will is there and without prejudice to the legal position, in order to maintain inviolate the Israeli point of view, the practical point of view, concerning the right of Israeli ships or ships going to Israeli ports—there is only one—to use the gulf of Aqaba.

I have mentioned these two points, though they do go back into history, because we will be facing them both very shortly and it is well to know about the experience of the past in order to avoid the same mistakes in the future, if that can be done.

Perhaps I should say a word or two about the more general issue we face, I am not going to attempt to establish responsibility for today's tragedy. Undoubtedly that will be done in due course. However, I think in looking at the question of responsibility we must make a distinction between the occasion of the war and the causes of the war. I have already said that the causes of the conflict go very deep indeed. That is why, as I said a few moments ago, a cease fire and an armistice, if that follows, can only be considered as a means to an end. Nothing was done about this after 1956. Some of us gave warning at the United Nations at that time that if nothing was done to bring about peace and a lasting settlement there would be trouble. This has happened. Are we to repeat these failures as we again approach this problem, diplomatically, through the United Nations, this time through the security council? I think I am misquoting a famous quotation when I say, those who ignore the lessons of history are doomed to repeat its tragedies.

That is why our ambassador at the security council made a very short intervention after the cease fire resolution, although a very impressive one, in which he said:

> We note that the resolution is only a first step. We believe that the council must take advantage of the opportunity which this unanimously agreed resolution represents, to deal effectively and in an equitable manner, with fundamental problems which underlie maintenance of peace and security in the area. We cannot and we must not wait for another ten years with another crisis which will result again in fighting and bloodletting and bring us all once more to the edge of catastrophe.

It is perfectly clear from the experience of 20 years, since the state of Israel was founded, that only a fair and enduring peace, and it will not endure if it is not fair, and a political settlement can avoid another round in this dangerous game of brinkmanship on the edge of the abyss, indulged in not only by the states of that area but by the great powers as well.

As we have said in this house, on both sides, the frightening danger of this situation is not merely that Israel is in conflict with the Arab states, which is dangerous enough, but that behind the Arab states stands the U.S.S.R. and behind the state of Israel stands the United States and other countries. The two great superpowers are on different sides of an issue which could convulse the Middle East and in convulsing the Middle East could convulse the world.

I was talking about this the other night on a television program. I ventured to say this:

> It is a wonderful thing to have a peace preservation corps sent to an area of disturbance where there has been military conflict. It can patrol and police an armistice and a cease fire, but unless there is a political settlement it cannot stay there indefinitely. This applies not only to the Middle East, it applies also to Cyprus. So the United Nations operations in the field of peace preservation have to be related to United Nations operations in this field of political settlement.

I said the same thing ten years ago in New York when I was addressing a Jewish audience there. I said that the work of establishing the state of Israel remains unfinished as long as Israel's Arab neighbours resent and reject her. There is no peace on her boundaries, despite the healing presence of UN forces, and hence there is not that security for the future to which her gallant and hard-working people are entitled.

That must be the next objective to be achieved, a creative peace and security for Israel based on freedom and justice, something which I believe is as much in the interests of Israel's neighbours as it is of Israel herself. This must be a peace which is not only fair to Israel but fair to her neighbours. We accept the Israeli point of view in respect of some matters, when we believe they are in the right. But we are not unfair to the neighbouring Arab states. There have been times in the past when we have fought their case at the United Nations when we thought Israel was wrong. In any event a political settlement must be one that is acceptable to all the countries in the area, and that is not going to be a very easy thing to achieve.

What is the basis for such a political settlement and a more enduring peace than an armistice along with a state of war? We must not forget that in the almost 20 years since 1948 there has been an armistice but there has also been a state of war. I think I can only outline what I think is a possible basis, and there is nothing original in it.

There will have to be certain military withdrawals, after a cease fire, by negotiation and agreement. If the military status quo, or something approaching it, is to be restored there must be certain political guarantees which will produce stability. This will require understanding on both sides and some firm and agreed decisions by the United Nations security council to back them up. That cannot be done unless the four permanent members of the security council can get together. I leave hon. members to form their own opinions about the ease with which this can be accomplished, notwithstanding the encouraging sign the other night when at least they agreed on a cease fire resolution. But to bring the Israeli forces back behind the borders of last week, without doing anything about the situation in the gulf of Aqaba, would not provide for peace but merely a temporary absence of hostilities.

So, I suggest, secondly, that regardless of the legal controversy, which can be sent to the International Court for decision, there should be no exercise by those who claim the right of sovereignty, whether that claim is valid or not—and I am not attaching any judgment to that—to interfere with any innocent passage through the strait of Tiran and the gulf of Aqaba to Elath, which should be recognized by all as an Israeli port.

The third point is that something should be done about the right of Israeli ships, which right was exercised by all other ships until a day or so ago, to navigate the Suez canal. There have been decisions by the security council of the United Nations affirming that right, but in practice the affirmation has not meant very much to Israel.

Back in March, 1957 again, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me whether I agreed with "the statement made yesterday" by Mr. Dulles that the denial to Israel of the right of freedom of shipping in the Suez canal was an unlawful act on the part of Egypt. I said in answer to that question:

> Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first question the policy of this government—

And I am sure it is the policy of this parliament.

> —has already been stated, that in its view navigation of the Suez canal should be free to the ships of all nations, and that would include Israel.

The fourth point is the establishment once again, in spite of our somewhat disillusioning experiences in the last few weeks, of a United Nations presence in force between the armies that have been fighting, and a presence which will operate on both sides of the border. There has been a great reluctance on the part of Israel to allow United Nations truce observation groups to operate on her territory.

[Mr. Pearson.]

This is one respect in which I think she should change her policy and on which agreement should be reached.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was it reluctance or refusal?

Mr. Pearson: She turned down the request that they should operate on Israeli soil, just as the United Arab Republic could have turned down the request that UNEF operate on her soil. This UN supervision could be done by enlarged observer groups, as we have already discussed in the house, under UNTSO, constituted and operating in accordance with effective and agreed arrangements to be worked out by the United Nations. That must be done.

I had an interesting exchange with the Secretary General of the United Nations about the withdrawal of the Canadian contingent from UNEF on such short notice. The Secretary General wrote me—and this letter has been made public—and paid great tribute to the work of the Canadians in this force and to the work of Canada in the interests of peace keeping. He said:

> Canada has thus given unstinting and vital support to UNEF both at the headquarters of the United Nations and in the field. Irrespective of the circumstances of the withdrawal of UNEF and the consequences of that withdrawal, ten and a half years of succesful service to peace is a historic achievement.

U Thant went on:

> Canada's large role in that achievement and your government's unfailing understanding of the requirements of UN peace keeping operations are widely recognized and appreciated here.

I replied to that letter the other day. I think this communication has also been made public. I thanked the Secretary General for his generous references to the men of our force and said this, which I hope will commend itself to members of the House of Commons:

> Despite current difficulties faced by the United Nations in the peace keeping field, I am hopeful that it will be possible to profit from the experience gained in UNEF and to use the lessons learned, to develop, in due course, within the framework of the United Nations, more effective machinery "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war", in the words of the charter.

Then I went on:

> In the continuing effort that must be carried on to plan for United Nations peace keeping forces, organized and established in a way which will avoid the disturbing experience we have just gone through in the disbanding of UNEF, the United Nations can count on our full support. Recent events show that the work of the United Nations in the field of peace keeping is not less, but more important than ever and that this work must include advance planning, so that United Nations peace keeping forces in the future will have a clear and strong basis on which to operate.

I think the house will confirm the support which I ventured to give in that letter for United Nations peace keeping. There is another basis for a settlement which has to be looked into.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, before the Prime Minister continues I should like to ask him this question. Do I understand him to say that it would be sufficient to have an extension of the supervisory commission to keep the peace, and that another peace keeping force like UNEF would not be necessary or would be impossible of achievement?

Mr. Pearson: I think that if a presence of some kind is required, and I expect it will be, it will be easier and simpler to build on the foundation of what we have, which was established not by the general assembly, as was UNEF, but by the security council. This gives it a firmer basis of authority and operation, I think, than if it came about through a resolution of the United Nations general assembly.

The next point, Mr. Chairman, relates to what I have been saying about a United Nations presence. I would also hope that there could be a demilitarized zone on both sides of the border and that effective steps—I know they have been attempted, and the men of these observer groups have served with great courage and devotion—will be taken to prevent infiltration, terroristic acts and provocation on both sides.

There is one other element of a settlement which has to be dealt with and in some ways is the most difficult and complex of all. It is the refugee question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Pearson: Not at all.

Mr. Lewis: —because I seem to be interrupting him. How can one give a guarantee about raiding and marauding without a United Nations force present?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pearson: I do not know how one can give a guarantee about anything of this nature, but I am sure my hon. friend will agree it is a little more difficult to see that peace is kept on a border if there is activity on both sides going right up to the borderline which could conceivably be considered as provocative by the other side. If there could be a zone in between, it might be easier to continue that. That is all I have in mind.

Mr. Lewis: A demilitarized zone.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, a demilitarized zone.

Mr. Churchill: That is what they are fighting for in Viet Nam.

Mr. Pearson: I hope it will be a more effective demilitarized zone than in Viet Nam.

The other element in the situation is refugees. When the fighting ended in 1948 there were about 750,000 Palestinian Arabs who left their homes. I will not go into the pressures which were on them to leave but they left their homes and became refugees. There are one and a quarter million of them now, after nearly 20 years. They are maintained by the United Nations.

A real opportunity has never been given to these refugees to decide whether they could or would be willing to locate in other countries, and perhaps a sufficient effort has never been made to get at least some of them back to their homes in Israel. Of course the two things would go together. They have been tragically used as pawns in the game of Middle East politics, and unless a much more effective effort is made to deal with this situation than has been possible in the past it will not be too easy to be optimistic about the other elements of the settlement.

Those are the five or six elements of a political solution that I venture to put before the committee. Whether they could be successfully worked out in a political settlement I do not know because there is an issue which goes even deeper than any of the ones I have mentioned, the issue of deep fear and hostility on both sides, the Arab side and the Jewish side. Until that fear is removed somehow I do not think there will be peace in that area. Yet if it could be removed and at least a mutual acceptance on both sides could be built up, there is no doubt in my mind that the Arab states would be among the first and most important beneficiaries of that change through the help and co-operation that they could get from Israel.

I spoke about this once before at the United Nations and I hope the committee will forgive me, because I do not think I can improve on the words I used then, if I read the statement which I made at that time. It sums up my own feeling about the whole problem. This was in February, 1957. It reads as follows:

As I see it, the problem is basically one of fear, fear which breeds distrust and animosity and conflict. There has been fear on the one side of extermination by neighbours whose hostility to the creation and continued existence of the state of Israel has been strong and unremitting. It is difficult for people to act with the moderation and restraint through which wisdom expresses itself if they believe that they themselves live in the shadow of destruction and are uncertain about their very survival as a nation.

The fear from which the people of Israel suffer, the fear which explains the violence of reprisals which they have taken against their neighbours, will be on the way to elimination when the Arab states are willing to recognize Israel as a sovereign state and its right to national existence within accepted boundaries and under conditions of life tolerable to its people. It must now be one of our major aims here to help set again in motion the forces which will lead to the early recognition of Israel in normal terms by its neighbours, and thus to the removal of fear.

On the other side, however, there is also fear which has led to extreme views, to extreme policies and to violence. Among the Arab states there is that deep and understandable apprehension that the displacement of population and the political tension already associated with the new state, most of whose citizens have come from abroad, a new state established in the midst of the Arab people, may be followed by still further dislocations owing to the pressure of immigration into Irael, backed as that state is by strong international pressures and international resources. There is a fear that Israel will yield to expansionist ambitions, which is the counterpart of Israel's own fear of Arab intentions. That has bred in the Arab world animosity and violence towards Israel. When that fear is dissipated we may count on moderation in the attitude of Israel's neighbours towards that state. As I see it, we cannot but agree that if Israel has a right to live and prosper, free from the fear of strangulation by its neighbours, the Arab states also have a right to feel confident that Israel will not attempt to expand its territory at their expense, the right to be assured that if Israel, however, should at any time develop such ambitions, it will receive no encouragement but meet only opposition on both the official and the non-official level from the outside world, an opposition which would result in the isolation of the state itself from any international assistance or support.

It is in this shadow of the past and present, the shadow of fear on both sides, that we have to consider the problem which is immediately before us.

That was the problem immediately before us in 1957 and it is the problem immediately before us in June, 1967. This time it is the security council of the United Nations, not the general assembly of the United Nations as it was ten years ago, which has the main responsibility to deal with it effectively.

Mr. MacIntosh: May I ask the Prime Minister a question? What were the factors which existed in the United Nations prohibiting or preventing a settlement with regard to international waters and a settlement with regard to the refugees?

Mr. Pearson: I do not want to go into the subject of international waters too deeply. Perhaps my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be speaking on this later in the day, will explain it in more detail. However, I will say that one of the main difficulties with regard to the waters of the gulf of Aqaba has been that the United Arab Republic has certainly never recognized those shores, which extend for five miles at the end of the gulf, and the port of Elath as Israeli territory. That was the territory which Israel occupied after the armistice of 1948. The Arab states claimed that it never should be part of Israel. This complicated the position and gave them a case which they have used.

In so far as the refugees are concerned, I think the feeling among many of the refugees and many of the Arab governments was that they would want to keep these refugees and send them back to form a Palestinian Arab state if Israel were to disappear. They felt that if these refugees were scattered all over the world they might be happier individually but they would not be available for the day when Israel disappears and they move in. This has frustrated, in part at least, the efforts to deal with the refugee problem. There have been other causes also.

However, to return to the work of the security council—and these are my last observations—it was only because the security council was frustrated that the question went to the general assembly in 1956. We hope the security council will now discharge its responsibility in a way which will be fair to both sides, and this will depend largely on the attitude of the four permanent members, all of whom have a veto. I hope that as permanent members of the security council, with the responsibilities that go with the privilege of being given the right of veto, they will be able to meet and discharge that responsibility. It may be that a meeting should take place on the highest political level. Anyway, whatever machinery is adopted does not make any difference. It is the results that count. Even if the security council consisted of third secretaries of governments who spoke for their governments and passed the right kind of resolution, it would have the United Nations behind it. However it is done, I can only hope that the security council will not only be able to enforce a cease fire, to bring about a cessation of fighting and movement of troops after the fighting, but it will also be able at least to begin the process which we have failed miserably to do in 20 years, the process of bringing peace and political settlement to the area.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the Prime Minister review the historical past I asked myself one question—what of 1956? The other day in the United Kingdom this matter came before the House of Lords and Lord Avon, the former Anthony Eden, without actually saying so was able to leave the impression that the mistakes of 1956 have proven to be the nursery of the troubles of 1967. I am reminded by the Prime Minister's quotations of the debates that took place in this house in 1956. At the conclusion of his remarks the Prime Minister dealt with the need for action in the United Nations or by the four major powers.

It is interesting to recall the words of 1956 that caused difficulties within this nation. At that time the right hon. gentleman was secretary of state for external affairs. The then prime minister, right hon. Mr. St. Laurent, dealt with superpowers, supermen, and had this to say:

> I have been scandalized more than once by the attitude of the larger powers, the big powers as we call them, who have all too frequently treated the charter of the United Nations as an instrument with which to regiment smaller nations and as an instrument which did not have to be considered when their own so-called vital interests were at stake.

These words brought solace to Nasser and others connected with him. I said at that time:

> The only reference in the preceding paragraph is to Britain and to France. I am scandalized, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister saw fit to condemn Britain and France to the same bag in which the U.S.S.R. was placed.

I say today that the views members of the opposition expressed in 1956 could be read and reread and they would reflect to an unusual degree events that have happened since.

I want to say at once that I asked for this debate. I also asked, in the event that there was information that should be available to members of the house, for a secret session of parliament. I can understand a difference of opinion on that. However, I am going to refer to one newspaper, the Toronto Globe and Mail which, ever since the cancellation of the Avro Arrow and since they failed to secure a television licence in Toronto, has adopted an attitude of bitter criticism of the Conservative party. Yesterday, in an editorial, vicious as it was vacuous, they denied the right of a member of parliament to advance in this chamber views that are not acceptable to that newspaper. I am going to say more about that licence later. I am going to say more about the television licence that was awarded in Toronto because from that day there have been regularly in that newspaper, more so since it has been under F.P. Publications, attacks not in keeping with the responsibility of the press to place the true facts before the country.

I asked for a secret session. I think it may still be necessary to continue to press for one because what we secured today from the Prime Minister, with the exception of certain general views that were expressed in the last 20 minutes of his address, were historical quotations and apologias, in the tradition of Right Hon. Mackenzie King who at all times found solace and satisfaction in being able to quote what he himself had said.

There are certain general principles that we must affirm. One is that Israel has a right to live. Mention was made of the attitude taken by the U.A.R. and other Arab nations to Israel. I visited Israel on two occasions and at length. I was also, for a period of time, the guest of Colonel Abdel Nasser. I was asked subsequently what he had said about Israel. He never mentioned Israel. He discussed Yemen. He discussed the oil situation in the Middle East. He never made a reference to Israel in our conversation. I concluded it was because so far as the Arab nations are concerned Israel does not exist. It has never been accepted. It has never received any consideration as a national entity.

In recent days Israel's right to live has been hammered out anew in blood and arms. Today in old Jerusalem, for the first time in many years, that portion of the city occupied by Jordan, is under Jewish control once more. The Garden of Gethsemane, scene of warfare in the last few days, the Wailing Wall, embodiment of Jewish resistance through all generations, King Solomon's Temple, today a Moslem mosque—these areas are now in possession of the Israelis. They should never have been outside of Israel in my opinion.

So far as the Arab nations are concerned, we believe that their attitude during the last 20 years has been dangerous and detrimental not only to the peace of the Middle East but also to world peace. Nasser made the statement that never again would there be recognition of Israel's right to use the gulf of Aqaba. His threat to destroy the people of Israel was reinforced in the last few days by a statement made by King Faisal of Saudi Arabia. He said the aim was to exterminate Israel.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The United Arab Republic is a member of the United Nations. Yet Nasser pledged himself in these words: "It will be total war and the objective will be to destroy Israel". Canada cannot afford to allow those words to go unchallenged, Mr. Chairman, because they embody the principle of genocide which has been specifically rejected under a resolution of the United Nations.

The wording of article I of that resolution reads as follows:

> The Contracting Parties confirm that genocide, when committed in time of peace or in time of war, is a crime under international law which they undertake to prevent and to punish.

Then genocide is defined in these terms:

> Killing members of the group;—
> Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction—

It also includes imposing measures intended to destroy.

We owe much to the Arab nations, but there can be no neutrality by Canada with regard to those who have the specific objective and purpose of destroying the Hebrew race.

I was surprised on May 30 when I listened to the Prime Minister being interviewed on the C.B.C. by Charles Lynch, Claude Ryan and Joseph Kraft. The Prime Minister was asked whether he was in favour of one side or the other, Israel or the Arab nations. One of the questions asked by Mr. Lynch was as follows:

> You mentioned earlier the strength of world Zionist opinion as one of the things that Israel has going for in this situation.

There is obviously a mistake there in the reprint of this C.B.C. interview. The question goes on:

> The Arabs, of course, suspect I think that your policy—Canada—and the U.S. policy is influenced by the political strength of the Jewish people inside our own countries, which has no counterpart on the Arab side. Now, is this valid or not?

The Prime Minister replied as follows:

> The proof that it does not apply to this country, surely is in our action in 1956 when we were very active at the United Nations in interposing a UN force between the Israelis and their friends, and the fighting—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Then Mr. Lynch asked:

> Are we acting in the same way this time?

The Prime Minister replied:

> Absolutely. So far as I am concerned I have no feeling of any kind in favour of one side or the other. We have a strong Jewish Zionist movement in Canada, of course. We also have not so many Arabs here. I would not like to admit that this influences me in the slightest. It does not.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, in view of the words of Nasser, not only in the book he published prior to 1956 but in the statements he made recently, I cannot be neutral on the position he has taken. Then the interview dealt with the gulf of Aqaba, to which I may make reference later.

We have all been encouraged by the events of the last few days. I agree with the Prime Minister when he says that if only the United Nations security council had acted a week or ten days ago it would have been better for all concerned. It was good tidings today to learn that the U.A.R. is prepared to accept the direction to cease fire. That they could do anything else is, of course, quite impossible to contemplate because their forces have been swept away on every part of the front on which they have taken a stand.

In the event, Mr. Chairman, that the cease fire is accepter and is established by all the nations, we come to the serious question of what we are going to do next. No longer can we allow ourselves the luxury of permitting the problems to which the Prime Minister made reference to remain unsolved. Political settlements must now be achieved. Up to the present the objective has been to bring the fighting to an end. We now have to deal with those matters which in 1956 were unfinished business and have remained so.

What course shall we take? I listened to the observations of the Prime Minister and in general I agreed with the views that he placed before the committee. However, I would ask that there be more definiteness and clarity than has been the case in the past with regard to Canada's stand.

I recall speaking in this house on November 29, 1956 and saying that the government of Canada was not taking a definite stand, that its attitude had been one of "Oh, let things calm down and all will be well". The Prime Minister quoted some words of mine which I uttered in 1956, and I should like to put on the record some words of mine, which are to be found at page 141 of Hansard for November 29, 1956. These words are as true today as they were then. I had just referred to the general situation in the Middle East, and I went on:

> What has Canada done since then? Well, I read the records of the United Nations where Canada is forever speaking on resolutions but lacking resolution and displaying no definiteness.

That is true today, Mr. Chairman. There is an attitude of empirical uncertainty, an aura of fear of responsibility in facing issues. I went on to say:

> I say to my hon. friend that last Saturday was an example when the vote took place in the United Nations, a repetitious vote, on the motion to order Britain and France out of the Middle East. I read with pride in the press that my hon. friend—

That was the present Prime Minister.

> —had made such a strong and bitter castigation of the U.S.S.R. that Shepilov shook, that the members of the assembly were silent, and finally they applauded. Magnificent! But then Canada abstained. Speaking on resolutions, lacking resolution!

That has been so throughout. On the question of Israel and the Arab states Canada's attitude has been uncertain. It has been trying diplomatically to be in agreement with both sides. In the last couple of weeks Canada, because of the uncertainty inherent in some of the words expressed by the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, has lost any claim to being able to bring together the warring elements in the Middle East. The Arabs no longer trust us. The Israelis wonder about us. In the current issue of the Canadian Jewish News the following words appear under the heading: "No, Mr. Pearson: This Time Peace, No Armistice":

> No, Mr. Pearson, this time there will be no armistice. There will be peace or else. We, the Jews of this generation who have trusted the world while our nearest of kin were burned alive with their womenfolk and offspring in the Auschwitzes and Maidaneks, will not exchange security neither for a Nasserite scrap of paper nor for new "assurances" from the debating club at East River.

That is the beginning of the article. It goes on in the same spirit. Because of uncertainty about where this government stands, this nation finds itself in the position of having lost face in the last two or three weeks. The resort is to ancient quotations about meetings of past years. Sir, historical analogies and quotations cannot take the place of needed international action in 1967.

So far as the city of Jerusalem is concerned I think consideration must be given to Israel retaining the entire city.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it cannot be done directly now, then old Jerusalem which is confined within the territorial limits of Jordan should be internationalized.

I agree with the Prime Minister with regard to the gulf of Aqaba. It must be immunized against interference by the Arabs or any other nation. Regardless of arguments advanced by the Arab nations the gulf of Aqaba is an international body of water. If the U.A.R. had the right, as it thinks it has the right, to close the gulf to freedom of navigation it would mean that Denmark or Sweden could close the Baltic or that other Baltic nations could close the Baltic, or that the U.S.S.R. could be closed out of the Mediterranean. There can be no equivocation on this question whatsoever. Sir, I hoped for more assured declarations by the government of this country than we have had today.

Next, can anyone believe that Canada, in view of the stand that it has taken in the last couple of weeks, will find ready acceptance in contributing troops to enforce international rights on the gulf of Aqaba or the boundary determinations that must be made? We were put out, driven out by Nasser. Unless there is a vast change of mind and opinion by the Arab states there is no possibility of Canada being given the right to contribute any forces to an international force.

What of the international force? I was in San Francisco in April and May of 1945 and I believed that we had arrived at an agreement whereby mankind would set up an effective international force. That has been the dream of international lawyers since Grotius and Pufendorf. Only through the instrumentality of an international force strong enough to enforce the edicts of the United Nations can peace be attained.

There is no possibility of that international force being set up now. The great powers are against it. It is far beyond the realm of probability that any force could be set up which would be effective in maintaining peace. Much is said about the UNEF force and that it maintained the peace in the Middle East. It maintained nothing of the kind. It never maintained the peace at any time. It was simply an international body with a supervisory capacity but without the ability to direct, order, or enforce. Indeed, both leaders of that international force told me on more than one occasion that the UNEF force was never expected to be or ever was a force to compel law, international or otherwise.

Though we have made great contributions to the United Nations' force, because of our attitude in the last few weeks—I reiterate this—we have lost international status. No longer are we regarded as a nation without a national axe to grind and impartially unbiased toward one side or another while standing on principle. It will take a long time for Canada to have restored to it the respect and regard of the African and Asian races. As I see it, unless there is a great change on the part of those nations, it will not be possible for Canada to make any considerable contribution to peace keeping.

Where are we? Our army, navy and air force are in a state of uncertain unification. Traditions are gone. The purpose has been the assurance of an international force. U Thant knew that when he spoke in Montreal the other day and said that Canada's unification plan was designed to provide additional assistance primarily in peace keeping. That was something we could not get confirmed in parliament. The Secretary General knew exactly the purpose which we suspected was in fact the reason for unification.

Internationally there can be no question of the acceptance of anything less than freedom of access by all nations to the gulf of Aqaba. Second, with regard to the problem of refugees I have heard various proposals. The one given by the Prime Minister today I think is one that is in accordance with the facts.

I visited those camps 10 or 11 years ago. I visited them again four years ago. The horror of conditions in those refugee camps is a blot on civilization. I talked to some of the refugees. There was no desire to improve their condition. They were suffering as martyrs for a cause. They were expecting that it would not be too long before once more Israel would be wiped off the face of the earth and they would return in triumph to that country.

This problem has got to be solved. It cannot be solved by force. Mass evacuation, such as the Acadian removals two centuries ago, will not do today. How can the problem be solved? Something must transpire that will bring home to those people, and to the Arab nations as a whole, the recognition that there is no hope of these people returning to their former homes.

As to the mobilization of a peace force, I have already said that I can see no general acceptance by these nations of forces comprised in large measure of Canadians. I think possibly there might be acceptance of Canadian representation on inspection organizations but not in armed forces. As I listened to the Prime Minister I concluded that the government of Canada has the idea that it will be accepted and that Canadian forces will be sent to the Middle East. I say that in 1926 the late Right Hon. Arthur Meighen enunciated the principle that troops should not be sent abroad from Canada for war purposes, which is the danger they will face if they are in any international force today, unless approval is secured in advance from the parliament of Canada. If there is any decision to send troops as a peace keeping force or as part of a peace keeping force, that means that the force must be prepared to undertake actual war in the event that it becomes necessary so to do. I contend therefore that any force of that type to be sent abroad shall not be sent unless there is prior approval of the parliament of Canada.

A moment ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs nodded his head in a way to indicate that my reference to U Thant was not well based. So that the record will be clear let me read from a Southam News Service report of June 3:

> —Mr. Thant praised Canada's revolutionary bid to re-organize its armed forces "with the peace keeping function primarily in mind."

That is what we said. The Minister of National Defence denied it. That is what General Allard has said since the debate ended. Now we know it. Internationally we receive the fullest information. That was denied us in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hellyer: You should read General Allard's speech and then you would have some idea about what he actually said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What's that?

Mr. Hellyer: I said you should do General Allard the courtesy of reading his speech because what he said is quite contrary to what was reported in the press and repeated by you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just sit down unless you are asking questions.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, what was reported of the general's speech was not in the context of what he had actually said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that is not—

Mr. Hellyer: I would recommend to my right hon. friend—

The Chairman: Will both hon. gentlemen sit down, please? There is no point of privilege. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This minister is very touchy. He is rising on a question of privilege to let the House of Commons know what the chief of the general staff meant when he said what he said, but the minister wants to interpret the way in which he said it and delude parliament.

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I resent, on behalf of General Allard and the officers of the armed forces, this insinuation which reflects on them in the House of Commons where they are not able to defend themselves. The right hon. gentleman should do the general the courtesy of reading what he said and not what the newspaper reports said.

The Chairman: Order, please. I bring to the attention of the committee citation 105 at page 96 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

A dispute arising between two honourable members as to allegations of facts hardly fulfils the conditions of a privilege question—

I recognize the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that rule is known to all members of the house, even to the hon. gentleman, but he is very touchy on this matter. He deceived parliament and now he is trying to find an alibi. But U Thant told the truth and said that the principal objective was a peace keeping force. I would like to hear the minister make a speech on this subject—

Mr. Hellyer: I will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —written by himself, and have his explanation of what took place. He is going to have every opportunity today. The chief of the general staff let the cat out of the bag, and U Thant made sure the bag would never be closed again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can understand why the minister is so touchy. You can just see the new uniform. The three armed forces of Canada are going to have jolly little green jumpers. The minister feels a sense of paternity and when any question is raised about this he feels hurt. I want to say to him that I can understand his sensibilities. This is part of the discussion of foreign affairs because foreign affairs are only effective with a defence policy that is effective.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What we have done, if U Thant is right and General Allard is right, is that we have provided for a force for international use as the principal objective and we have left the defence of Canada in the hands of the United States of America.

Mr. Hellyer: Nonsense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, sir, I would like to hear what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has to say regarding the international force. The Minister of National Defence built his policy on sand and Nasser brushed it away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: This is one of the worst speeches I have ever heard in this house.

Mr. Starr: Do you not listen to your own speeches?

The Chairman: Order. I understand there was some understanding that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would participate in the debate next.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think we should wait a moment. All of us realize there are responsibilities resting on the minister which have taken him out of the house in the same way the Prime Minister was taken out of the house. Every consideration must be given in view of the necessity of both these gentlemen being able to carry out their responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is present, willing and anxious to speak at this stage in the debate. I would gladly yield to him, if that is the situation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I thank my hon. friend but the Prime Minister opened the debate. He has been followed by the Leader of the Opposition, and in all fairness I think my hon. friend ought to have a chance.

Supply—External Affairs

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I was relaxing in anticipation of hearing the Secretary of State for External Affairs before participating in the debate. We are discussing the estimates of the Department of External Affairs at a dramatic moment in a dramatic age. In my view it is a dramatic age because this generation is faced with startling alternatives, the alternative of building a world community based on the acceptance of world law or the alternative of the destruction of civilization through the use of weapons of mass destruction. This is a particularly dramatic moment because history is being made before our eyes. The crisis which has taken place in the last few days will have results which may very well be decisive for good or evil for many years to come. For that reason our attention in this debate, although it is generally on the full estimates of the Department of External Affairs, necessarily is centred around the crisis in the Near East.

The rapid military development and the security council's unanimous request for a cease fire, which we understand has now been accepted at least conditionally by the combatants, removes some of the very worst forebodings which people throughout the world have had in respect of this crisis. Nevertheless it is of the utmost importance that the crisis should be used constructively to work out necessary political settlements, to strengthen the foundations of the United Nations and to strenghten the function of the United Nations in maintaining peace and security.

The Prime Minister himself, I believe, has often said, and we have observed it to be true, that it is upon situations of crisis that sometimes we are able to build new structures of peace. The Cuban crisis, of course, is one illustration. Out of the Cuban crisis emerged the test ban treaty and the détente in the cold war. I urge that following this crisis we not sink back into complacency. Such complacency could, and undoubtedly will if indulged in, produce in the present unstable world new crises. The outcome of each new crisis may be far worse than even the tragic results of the present hostilities.

I do not intend to comment at length on the situation immediately facing the security council. We in this party should like to express our full support for the initiative of the Canadian government in introducing the resolution which sought a means of securing compliance with the cease fire resolution of the council. I should like to congratulate our ambassador, Mr. Ignatieff, for his part in the presentation of this resolution.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

At the moment I wish to speak more generally upon the future of the United Nations arising out of this crisis. There are some cynics, both in public life and among the representatives of the press, who, when difficulties arise and when defects appear in the embryonic international institutions which exist today, hasten to proclaim, sometimes with ill-concealed glee, that these institutions have failed. There have been a number of headlines and comments which have appeared in the last few days proclaiming that the United Nations is dead, that it is through, that it is ineffective.

It has been asserted by some people that the peace keeping operations of the United Nations have been shown to be futile. It is my submission that precisely the opposite is the lesson of the last few weeks. It was the inadequacy of the original arrangements in respect of UNEF which produced the hurried withdrawal. I do not think we would gain anything by laying the blame for the withdrawal at any door. The withdrawal, however, was the almost immediate prelude to the outbreak of hostilities. Indeed, the withdrawal constituted, perhaps inevitably in the circumstances, a clear and present threat to the existence of the state of Israel.

I ask, could there be a clearer demonstration of the importance of an international presence than the fact that when it is removed there is an outbreak of hostilities? The obvious answer in this situation is not to abandon UN peace keeping operations but rather to establish them on a firmer basis. That basis, I venture to suggest without enlarging at length on the topic, involves the willingness of the great powers to work together in the security council in a different way than they have in the past, with a willingness perhaps to give effect to article 43 of the charter under which the great powers are supposed to work together to maintain peace and security throughout the world on behalf of the nations of the world. Until the great powers assume that responsibility it cannot be said it is the fault of the United Nations itself if that organization is ineffective. It is the fault of the governments of the nations which fail in accepting their responsibility.

The outbreak of war in the Middle East was not due to too much international concern or to too great a willingness to accept international responsibility. The opposite is the truth. Some at least of the great powers have been willing to frustrate the effectiveness of the United Nations. There has been a growing anarchy throughout the world. The great powers have intervened or have threatened to intervene in various parts of the world. They have bypassed the United Nations and have undermined its prestige. We can only express the hope here that the events of the past week have indicated the necessity of a global settlement before it is too late. We cannot continue playing with dynamite and avoid disaster.

There is one aspect of the present crisis which I think has perhaps been overlooked. This war has taken place in the Middle East at a time when the possession of nuclear weapons has been limited to the major powers. I shudder to contemplate what would have happened had some of the powers involved directly in this conflict been in possession of nuclear weapons. If the hatreds, resentments, and injustices which created the present crisis are not dealt with, and if the proliferation of nuclear weapons is not halted, the next outbreak of war in this or perhaps in other sections of the world will lead to even more tragic consequences. Therefore we must consider what are the essentials of a lasting settlement.

An outline of what we believe in this connection has already been expressed in this house by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, during the debate on the budget a day or two ago. It does not vary substantially in essence from what was said by the Prime Minister.

First of all there must be a clear guarantee by the security council in respect of the boundaries of all nations of the Middle East, including both Israel and Arab nations. There must be a clear understanding through the United Nations security council in this regard so that no one of the great powers can say this is not their responsibility and they will not ensure that the understanding is carried out. There must be, as I think everybody in this house will agree, a settlement and an agreement that the gulf of Aqaba is an international waterway and that access to it through the strait of Tiran must be available to all innocent shipping. This is a matter that is vital to the state of Israel whose existence has been recognized and guaranteed by the international community, but it is a principle of great practical concern to many nations, including the U.S.S.R. which has a very great interest in the establishment of the principle of free access to international waterways.

There must also be an early and a generous settlement of the Arab refugee problem, to which the Prime Minister referred today. I intend to say a little more about it later. There must be vast and massive economic programs of development in the Middle East and for the people who live in that part of the world.

These proposals relate to the Middle East and impose a great burden upon the nations immediately concerned, a burden which is particularly heavy because it involves that most difficult of all things, a change in attitudes. We must ask them to accept this burden both for their own sake and for the sake of the world as a whole. However, these proposals also impose a burden on the whole world which must contribute by international action to guarantee the security of this part of the world and also a settlement of the underlying economic problems.

I would have been happy with the eloquent words of the Prime Minister in this debate had they been accompanied by a statement of a willingness of this country to contribute financially, and perhaps by a policy of encouraging immigration of Arabs to Canada, to the settlement of some of the Palestinian Arabs. I do not think it is good enough to talk about a problem without indicating a willingness to take action to meet it. Our eyes have been opened in the last few days by what has happened as a result of the failure on the part of the international community to deal with the festering sore of the Palestinian Arab refugees. Certainly we have contributed something like $500,000 a year, if my recollection is right, to the relief of the Palestinian Arabs refugees and also through food distribution, but we have not nor has the state of Israel or other nations of the world accepted seriously the responsibility and the expense necessary if this cancer is to be removed. If it is not, peace in this area will be very unstable.

The crisis is not just a crisis of the Middle East; it is a crisis of the world as a whole and the eventual solution involves a global settlement. I do not want to engage in a prolonged discussion of a situation in another part of the world, but the continuation of the war in Viet Nam and the continued isolation of the people of China are closely connected with the difficulties of making the United Nations function effectively. While the war in Viet Nam continues the likelihood of effective co-operation between the so-called superpowers is remote. Yet without this co-operation, and if we are to have a continued atmosphere of cold war, the United Nations cannot function effectively as an instrument for peace and security. There is in my view a very close connection between what has happened in the Far East and what has happened in the Near East. I do not think it is too much to deduce if the United States had not been heavily involved and preoccupied in the Far East there would have been no encouragement to create a crisis in the Middle East. I doubt if that would have happened.

I do not propose to repeat the views of this party on Viet Nam as they are well known, but in any debate or discussion of external affairs I think we have to make, and I do so now, reference to what I believe is a vital problem, to the primary responsibility which rests on one of the great powers to seek to bring the war in Viet Nam to a close through an unconditional cessation of bombing of North Viet Nam. There has been talk of a lull in fighting but it has been denied that it has any connection whatever with the Near East crisis. Perhaps it has no connection, but if we are to move ahead so we will not have a recurring crisis then what is happening in Viet Nam must end. It is certainly impossible to anticipate that there will not be further crises throughout the world if the war in the Far East continues as it is today.

Let me emphasize what I think is very closely connected to the crisis in the Near East. That is the tragic failure of the well-to-do nations of the world, including Canada, to deal adequately with the problems of world poverty. Some people have said that the Near East crisis is an aspect of the east-west conflict and the cold war. I think it would be more to the point to say that the Near East crisis is a tragic reminder of the unsolved north-south problem and the growing gap between the rich and the poor nations.

Mr. Escott Reid, the principal of Glendon College, formerly our ambassador to India and formerly an official of the World Bank, has recently contribtued an article to the International Journal which is published by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. He speaks of two fields in which Canada could make a creative contribution to world affairs, and this is something I believe all members of this house and all Canadians wish to do.

In this article Mr. Reid says that the most serious gap in the defences of civilization is the gap between what the rich nations of the world should be doing to help the poor countries speed up their economic development and what they are in fact doing. He points out that Canada, for example, has during the last three or four years raised the level of foreign aid by $50 million yearly. This is less than 2 per cent of the annual increase in our national income. So we are applying to this crucial problem of world poverty less than one-fiftieth of our annual increase in wealth.

In this regard we are not doing any worse than most of the other rich countries of the world. In the past six years the rich countries of the non-communist world have got a great deal richer. They have reached a level of income about $300 billion higher than the level six years ago. They have not shared any of this vast new wealth with the poor countries. The level of their contribution to dealing with the problem of world poverty, which I suggest constitutes a continuing threat to the peace and stability of the world, has remained constant as far as the world as a whole is concerned, although the wealth of the western world has increased by $300 billion a year. As I say, they have not shared any of this vast new wealth with the poor countries.

I want to adopt this comment by Mr. Reid:

> If we of the western world persist in our present policy of aid to poor countries, we will have earned the contempt of our children and of our grandchildren.

He points out that if Canada alone were to give another $700 million of aid to the underdeveloped countries to help them speed up their economic development, this would increase the net flow of long term economic aid of NATO countries to poor countries by about 12 per cent. Some people say this might be throwing money away, that there is no assurance that an increase in economic aid will in fact make any substantial difference or will enable the underdeveloped countries to break through to a position of self-generating growth. But we were told in the committee on external affairs this morning by Mr. Maurice Strong—incidentally, we warmly welcome him to his position as director general of our external aid office—that a conservative estimate of practical and immediately available projects which could be approved by the World Bank would cost between $3 billion and $4 billion a year, but this $3 billion or $4 billion a year is not made available and the projects are not proceeded with for lack of available funds.

This would represent a contribution by Canada of an additional $200 million a year approximately. It would only bring Canada's contribution up to approximately $500 million a year, with export credits, loans and everything else thrown in, which would be about the 1 per cent target of national income or gross national product, the standard adopted internationally many years ago. The present government—I am glad the Secretary of State for External Affairs is here—proceed to do good but they do it at their usual snail-like pace. They propose to reach this target of 1 per cent some time in the 1970's. Why not now? The need is now. A relatively small contribution from the anticipated increase in Canada's wealth would enable this to be done without any serious sacrifice on the part of the Canadian people. Indeed, a good case for this increase could be made out on purely material grounds. The moneys are largely spent in Canada. The development of countries with which Canada has close ties, such as the Caribbean, creates a market for Canadian goods which is essential to our long-term prosperity.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs: Who is stopping us? We are sometimes told it is public opinion. I do not believe this is true. What is stopping us is the timidity and half-heartedness of the Canadian government. I must say, in all fairness, that this attitude is shared with other western governments. This timidity and half-heartedness is responsible for the failure to deal adequately with this problem. It has produced what Mr. Reid, in the article I mentioned, described as "short-sighted and ignoble policies of foreign aid." Dr. Gunnar Myrdal, the noted Swedish economist, when speaking at Expo the other day said:

> Wars and war preparations represent the most important elements of clear and dangerous insanity in international relations. The rich western and European communist countries taken together, are probably spending as much on wars and war preparations as the sum total of national incomes in all of the much more populous underdeveloped countries.

The description by Dr. Myrdal, who is a pretty sober observer of the world, of "insane" would not be justified if someone could indicate that these competitive war expenditures produce security. They produce precisely the opposite. I wonder how much of the present conflict in the Near East and how many of the casualties in that conflict have been caused by the fact that all the nations of the world, including Canada, have seen fit to export weapons of destruction, armanents, on a substantial scale to these countries. I do not think it is an exaggeration for Dr. Myrdal to refer to this situation as one that shows we are not really sane.

In the light of the crisis through which we have gone in the last few days and through which we are still going, I ask: Can we not make progress toward a global settlement? This global settlement, I suggest, would do the following things:

(a) achieve a lasting settlement in the Near East. I have tried to say what I think is necessary for this.

(b) strengthen the United Nations, and particularly its peace keeping activities.

(c) achieve a non-proliferation treaty which would help to prevent instability turning into nuclear disaster; and

(d) divert the vast sums spent on war expenditures to the constructive task of ending poverty throughout the world.

We know that Canada is not a very powerful nation, but it is not an insignificant nation either. Its contribution and leadership in the fields I have mentioned would do much to strengthen the defences of world civilization and provide a secure future for our children and grandchildren.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, this discussion today was opened, appropriately by the Prime Minister because of his historic association with the problems of the Middle East and particularly because of the contributions he made to the establishment of the United Nations emergency force. There are a number of important foreign policy considerations which I wish to discuss at this time. I hope to do so objectively and in a non-partisan way, in spite of the provocation which I found in the speech of my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition.

The involvement of the United Nations in the situation in the Middle East and the implications of this crisis for the world are such that we must all recognize how vital is a solution to the problems of that disturbed area. The tragic developments in the Middle East of the past three weeks have engrossed us all. They have dominated the international scene and they have been of concern to peoples everywhere. The interlude of violence is now, I believe, hopefully, coming to an end with the announcement by the Secretary General this afternoon of the acceptance by the U.A.R. of the cease fire resolution of the security council. The cease fire appeals issued by the security council on June 6 and 7 have begun to take effect even though there is, according to reports just handed to me, considerable fighting going on in certain sections of the area.

I think the Canadian government owes it to this house and to the Canadian people to indicate not only its concern with this problem but also how it has dealt with it from the time the problem first arose. It will be recalled that an indication of a possible withdrawal of the United Nations emergency force caused me to go to New York and to confer with the secretary general. I do not want to go over ground already covered. I will simply state again that I believe it was regrettable that the force was withdrawn. I have not questioned the sovereignty of the host country that asked for its withdrawal, but I am firmly of the view that there was no clear legal basis for the way in which it was withdrawn. In any event one should take every step to preserve an institution which for ten and a half years has been such a responsible and constructive factor in keeping the peace in the Middle East.

I understand now, as I understood when I talked with him, the problems of the Secretary General, particularly when it had been intimated by India and Yugoslavia that for reasons best known to them they did not propose to continue in the force once one of the host countries had asked that it be withdrawn. I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman that this was a humiliation for Canada. I do not agree with the newspaper which had a big headline reading "Canada Humiliated". The humiliation is not on our side. We have nothing to be humiliated about. For ten and a half years, along with the other countries in that force, we used our defence forces for the purpose of keeping the peace, and I was surprised when my right hon. friend said that the force had not kept the peace in the Middle East. That is not in accordance with the facts. There is no doubt, as was attested by the public declarations of the governments of Israel and the U.A.R. a year and a half ago when there were suggestions for a reduction of the force, that this would mean removing a factor of stability in the area.

When I went to the United Nations that Saturday morning I took the occasion to discuss also the desirability of giving consideration at once to a successor to the United Nations emergency force, if this were acceptable to the host countries, of course, and if it were possible to get additional powers accorded to it by the security council. I was referring of course to the United Nations truce supervisory organization already in existence and working with the four mixed armistice commissions already established by the security council. It has a capacity to add to its numbers as it has done from time to time. It is now a force of about 120. At one time it had 700 men. True, it would have to acquire further powers from the security council for additional relocation.

I think it may be said that the Canadian suggestion about the possibility of a use of UNTSO at the appropriate time was a useful one, as has been recognized by the Secretary General of the United Nations. Later in my speech I propose to deal with the suggestions of the right hon. gentleman, which I do not believe were the kind of suggestions that one would have expected in a situation like this in relation to one of the notable foreign policy contributions of our country. We do not seek to participate in United Nations peace keeping operations unless we are wanted. I will deal with that later as I do not want to anticipate my argument. However, I cannot understand for the life of me why there should have been a suggestion in this house that Canada, because she was forcefully removed out of Egypt, would no longer be acceptable in any peace keeping operation in that area of the world or in any other.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not say "any other". I said "in that area".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are not seeking additional responsibilities in this area. Canada need not be ashamed of her record in peace keeping all over the world.

On that recent occasion in New York I talked with the ambassadors of Israel, the United Arab Republic, Great Britain, the United States, Syria and France, with the idea of trying to do what my right hon. friend had said in the house only two days before we should do, to see to it that the United Nations was put to work. Imagine the security council not being in session in this situation. It was as the result of action taken by Canada and Denmark that the first meeting of the security council was held in this matter. So let no one say we have not been viligant and tireless in our efforts in this matter both in the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa and through our ambassadors in Lebanon, Israel and the United Arab Republic. Few countries have a finer foreign service than our country and I want to pay tribute to it. It is in a situation like this that one realizes what we owe to the men and women who have dedicated their lives to the Canadian foreign service. We are not dealing with an ordinary matter. In my judgment this has certainly been potentially the most dangerous situation, possibly excluding Cuba, since the end of the second world war. I say that, fully aware of the potential danger which could arise out of an expansion of the war in Indo-China.

There are certain basic issues in this situation and I must state them at once so it will not be suggested, as has been suggested, that the government, notwithstanding what the Prime Minister said today, is not appreciative of the position of all the parties, of their claims and of their rights. The other day the President of the United States was very anxious to affirm to the world, as were the prime minister of Great Britain, the president of France, and several other heads of government, that their policies with regard to the Middle East were balanced ones. Ours is one that is designed to take into account the need for the most friendly possible relations with all countries. This can be done without doing violence to or taking issue with the particular claims or rights of any one of the parties. Certainly when we took exception to the way in which UNEF was withdrawn we were not taking a hostile attitude with regard to the United Arab Republic. When we sent three cruisers to supplement our evacuation plans they were not part of a design for action by this country outside of the United Nations context. Our view about international law as it applies to the strait of Tiran does not in any way involve an act of hostility against countries which may have an interest there and a different view.

There must be an acceptance, of course, of Israel's right to live in peace and security. The denial of this right has been a source of danger for a long time in the Middle East. Israel, of course, has the basic obligation itself to live without provocation to her neighbours. I am sure she will accept this.

There is a need for the elimination of terrorist incidents on the Syria-Israel border. Our position on the right of innocent passage in the gulf of Aqaba has already been mentioned. As the foreign minister I stated our position on May 23 and May 24 of this year. The Prime Minister on several occasions has reaffirmed what he had said in 1957 in confirmation of international law. In case there is any doubt about this I simply ask hon. gentlemen to read Hansard, pages 602, 520, 535, 822, 1096 and 1076 where the position of the government on this vital, key issue in the present conflict may be found. I need only add that we are a signatory to the convention on territorial waters along with some 32 other countries. This convention is designed to confirm the state of international law on this matter.

Then, of course, there is the refugee problem. I propose to say something later in some detail about that because it is also one of the key issues in this matter.

Because the Middle East has such religious significance for people all over the world,—I think the foreign minister of Canada should observe that there is widespread concern about the effects of events on the holy city of Jerusalem. Hon. members know that this ancient city is a shrine to many people of different faiths. Moslems, Christians and Jews are all undoubtedly apprehensive about the safety and protection of holy sites. Because of the special importance of a city like Jerusalem to many peoples this concern will have to be taken into account in any settlement which emerges from the present conflict.

News reports, Mr. Chairman, have indicated that Iraq, Kuwait and Algeria have cut off the export of oil to Britain and the United States on the grounds of alleged British and United States military intervention on the side of Israel. The denials of the British and United States governments were clear yesterday and the fact that there has been little reference to these allegations in the press of the Soviet union clearly indicates, I believe, how specious this argument was. The cutting off of the export of oil to Britain and the United States would appear to be pursuant to a decision taken on June 5 at the Arab oil conference in Baghdad that the flow of oil would be suspended and prevented from directly or indirectly reaching countries which promote or participate in aggression against Arab countries.

Syria, for her part, has stopped the pumping of oil through pipe lines which cross her territory as well as the loading of oil in her ports. Oil continues to reach France from Algeria but the Algerian government has taken over the installations of certain British and United States companies operating from that country. So far as I know Saudi Arabia has taken no steps similar to those I have mentioned.

It is encouraging to note that so far there has been no report of the sabotage of pipe lines or installations. There has not been any interference with the availability of oil for Canada. However, the cutting off of the flow of oil by ship to Britain and the United States may have disruptive effects, especially in view of the closing of the Suez canal. I imagine these difficulties can be surmounted perhaps after a period of adjustment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say something about the closing of the Suez canal? He mentioned it just now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I propose to say something about that, and perhaps I could do so right now. Several days ago the U.A.R. authorities announced they were closing the Suez canal to all ships on the grounds that Britain and the United States had intervened in the conflict on the side of Israel. These accusations, as I said a moment ago, were indignantly denied by the two governments concerned.

The closing of this principal maritime route, if continued for a long period, would seriously disrupt commercial exchanges between Asia, Europe and the Far East. The transit of oil makes up a large part of the canal traffic, although large-size tankers have since 1956 been transporting oil to Europe around the Cape of Good Hope. Some volume of Canada's oil imports passes through the Suez canal. However, Canada is not to any serious extent dependent on the use of the canal nor do we have an extensive merchant fleet. I would hope, if it is officially confirmed that the Suez canal has been closed, this stoppage of traffic will be temporary only. The U.A.R. itself relies to a large extent on the foreign exchange revenues that come from the canal.

We have been told now that Iraq, the republic of Yemen and Syria have broken off relations with Britain and the United States. Algeria, Sudan and the United Arab Republic have broken off with the United States. The significance of this action must, of course, be obvious to every hon. member. Diplomatic relations of these last three countries with Britain were severed over the question of Rhodesia. I understand a number of other Arab countries, including Lebanon, have also broken relations with the United States and Britain.

Charges have been made in connection with this action that United States aircraft have been engaged in the fight. I want to say that the Canadian government is unreservedly satisfied there is no foundation whatever for these charges. British and United States embassies, consulates and information offices in a number of Arab countries have been burned or ransacked by mobs. This destruction of property and harassment of diplomatic officials is, of course, regrettable. Canadian missions in Arab countries, that is, in Cairo, Beirut and Tunis, have happily not been the objects of demonstrations or attacks. In those countries where we are not represented and where Canadian consular interests have been handled by British missions, alternate arrangements will be made for the protection of Canadians. I may say that Canada will do all it can to try to impress upon those Arab countries where we have embassies the importance of trying to improve the relationships of all countries with the countries of the Middle East so that the job of reconstruction and rehabilitation can go ahead.

I am wondering whether the United States, in the light of all these developments, will be prepared to repeat the offer made by President Eisenhower in 1958. After the dispatch of some 12,000 marines to Lebanon and the British dispatch of forces into Amman, the United Nations intervened to establish a peace force between Syria and Lebanon. This served to cause the withdrawal of these forces and encouraged the United States to offer vast sums of money to assist in improving the standard of living of the peoples in the Middle East, particularly in the Arab countries. This, of course, is something we have to look to as a must if we are going to remove one of the sources of friction and one of the causes of hostility in that area.

Several times during the course of questions in the past three weeks we have talked about the responsibilities of the great powers. This is a good opportunity, I think, to underline the importance of these responsibilities. In the security council of the United Nations the great powers have been given special status, and their right of veto must be weighed against the undeniable responsibility which these powers share in the solution of international problems.

When the recent trouble in the Middle East arose the dangers were generally recognized by the great powers. We were all concerned about the implications of this situation because of our concern about the possibility of nuclear war in this interdependent world of ours. The Soviet union, the United States, Britain and France do not, of course, take the same positions with regard to the problems of the Middle East. Any situation that involved any one of these powers in a conflict with another world power in the Middle East directly or indirect would be a matter of great consequence to the peace of the world.

It was undoubtedly because of this, Mr. Chairman, that early in the disturbance General de Gaulle suggested that the great powers should hold a meeting at the highest level. His suggestion did not seem to call for a meeting within the context of the United Nations. The view of the Soviet union and I believe the view of the United States was that such a meeting might be useful but that it ought to be within the context of the United Nations, and this was the view stated by the Prime Minister of Canada.

In fairness to the French government they acceded to this at once. I can say that it is not without significance that the four great powers were able to engage in a form of collaboration particularly in the consultations that took place between the United States and the Soviet union in New York, which I believe has not really been much in evidence since the end of the second world war.

Mr. Lewis: Is that not rather an exaggeration?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Lewis: Is that not a bit of an exaggeration? The collaboration occurred after the whole situation had blown up in their faces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I do not mean the collaboration, I meant to use the word "consultation".

Mr. Lewis: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The consultations took place before war broke out and very much during the course of it. I am sure that the action taken in the security council would not have been possible had it not been for the action of the great powers.

It seems to me that the consultations in this regard between the United States and the Soviet union were particularly significant in spite of the background of their differences on the problems of the Middle East. I hope that this consultation, this recognition of a common danger, may, slowly perhaps, establish a pattern that will be very useful in other international situations now facing us and in situations not yet before us.

As the hon. member for Greenwood said, when the war broke out people at once began to say that the United Nations was once again proving its weakness and that the security council was an ineffective body, as though the security council or the United Nations were some abstract entity, as though it were an organism independent of the member states that compose it. There is nothing wrong with the charter of the United Nations. There is nothing wrong with the structure of the United Nations that cannot be corrected. What is wrong is the intransigence of some countries, the unwillingness of some countries to accept their responsibilities. In this situation I think that instead of criticising the United Nations we should recognize how fortunate we are that it exists.

The security council has provided a forum for vigorous discussion. Its meetings have provided an occasion where verbal, not armed, confrontation could take place and where discussion of matters affecting the peace of the world could be conducted. As a result decisions with great importance for world peace were taken. War was held off for about ten days, and that in itself was something. When war did take place the security council took action. In face of the greatest difficulty, having in mind the divisions of ideological opinion in the communist world, the western world and among the unaligned, the unanimity reached on the two recent occasions is something that should cause us not to depreciate but to appreciate the significance of the United Nations.

In these grave circumstances we can take some satisfaction from the fact that the efforts of the permanent members of the security council and the resolutions that flowed from their efforts have helped to hasten an end to the fighting. We may relate the fighting in the Middle East to certain issues, to differences between the parties on particular questions, but once a firm and certain cease fire has been secured we must address ourselves, as our ambassador to the United Nations has said, to the underlying problems in the Middle East.

Much has been said about these problems. It has always been the view of the Canadian government that one key element in achieving a satisfactory permanent settlement of the Middle East problem is the recognition by all parties of the sovereignty and the right to exist in peace and security of all countries in that area. This surely is elementary foreign policy. How can we have peace in the world and how can we arrive at satisfactory relationships unless it is admitted that every national entity in the Middle East is entitled to be treated as any other is treated? All such sovereign bodies must enjoy the status and protection which most states in a peaceful world should enjoy. Until general acceptance of this vital principle is attained, the Middle East area, or any other area of the world, will be confronted with the danger of a repetition of the tragic events of 1946, 1949, 1956 and the events of the last few weeks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a settlement based on this important principle will require a considerable measure of co-operation on the part of all countries concerned in dealing with those issues which have been at the root of Middle East disputes and contentions. These issues include, for example, such important matters as the right of all countries to free and unimpeded commerce and the free use of international waterways vital to the maintenance of the economies of those countries.

From previous statements I have made and from those the Prime Minister made this afternoon it is clear that the government considers that the maintenance of the right of access to and innocent passage through the gulf of Aqaba is one of the key issues in the situation which has developed. Everything possible should be done through the United Nations to find arrangements which will settle this issue. Disputes over the implementation of the armistice agreement will again require close attention. This examination should include a review of the nature and scope of United Nations responsibilities for a new settlement in the area.

It is the belief of the government that among other problems requiring close attention is that of the future of the Palestine refugees, now numbering 1.5 million people. The United Nations relief and works agency for Palestinian refugees, known as UNRWA, was set up to assist the refugees, and Canada has played an important part in its maintenance. Since the inception of UNRWA Canada has been one of the main contributors to the agency. The Canadian government's total contribution in money and in kind during these years has been in the neighbourhood of $21 million. For 1967 the Canadian government contribution in money and wheat flour to assist refugees is $1.5 million and not $500,000 as my hon. friend unintentionally, I know, mentioned a few moments ago. These amounts do not include the significant private contributions of Canadian organizations and individuals. Canadian assistance to UNRWA is motivated primarily by humanitarian considerations.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I finish? Contributions have been applied to relief and health services as well as to education and vocational training of the refugees.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the minister whether the amount set aside for the Palestinian refugees in the estimates is not $500,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): For 1967 we have pledged $1.5 million.

Mr. Brewin: A lot of figures must be stuck together, because we saw the estimates this morning.

The Chairman: Order, please. I understand that a messenger is to come to the chamber from the other place and I do therefore leave the chair. Before doing so I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired. Perhaps the committee would extend his time when we resume debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

RAINBOW PIPE LINE CORPORATION

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-105, to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation.

• (6:10 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing this private bill before the House of Commons I hope to bring out one very significant point; that, northern Canada is starting to show that the faith the rest of Canada has placed in the north will bring about the rewards many of us have hoped for and have anticipated in the past. The area in which Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation intends to build is an area in which there has been intensive seismographic and geographic work in the past two or three years. The Rainbow field, which has now proven to be a major oil field in northern Alberta, extends into the southern part of the Northwest Territories and it is believed that possibly 15 to 20 per cent of the field is located there. I had the privilege to fly over the area very briefly last Saturday and from a height of 5,000 to 6,000 feet, with all the exploration which has taken place in this area, it reminded me of flying over a city because of the seismic lines running in all directions.

The effect of the bill before us is that the applicants request through parliament incorporation of Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation to operate in the Northwest Territories. However, the bill would not give the company any special rights to build a new pipe line or any priority or special status before the National Energy Board. It would merely give the applicants an opportunity to present their case before the National Energy Board which they, as producers and developers in the area, are legitimately entitled to do.

This company has already built almost 500 miles of pipe line to connect the far northern Alberta fields with the main pipe line systems of the country. By the passage of the National Energy Board Act parliament has already established an independent tribunal to determine, first, whether the building of a pipe line is justified and, second, which company should build it. When the time comes for the company to make its proposal to the National Energy Board, other applicants will have an opportunity to state their case and if there are objections these may be stated at that time.

The experience of the past few years has demonstrated that the inquiries and hearings of the National Energy Board are most carefully conducted. All the applicants in this case wish is the opportunity to apply to the board at the earliest possible time for permission to build a pipe line. The applicants see the necessity for considerable urgency in getting the bill through. They wish to make clear the construction can only commence in the winter months.

It is the hope of those of us who live in the north and who watch economic developments with great anticipation that significant oil deposits will be determined in the area and that construction can get under way as quickly as possible. When one considers the terrain of northern Canada one realizes that construction work can be undertaken only in the winter months when the ground is frozen. The application before the National Energy Board, the hearings which the board will conduct if there should be a contest, and the preparation of the decision of the board will take many months. If oil should be found it would appear to be in the public interest that all pipe line companies which have a legitimate interest in the area should be in a position to act promptly in respect of applications to the National Energy Board.

There are two questions which some hon. members may have in mind in respect of the line itself and the need to move at this time. The first is: Is there oil in the area in sufficient quantity to justify the building of the line? The information presently available from the oil industry and from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicates that if oil has not been found it may be found very soon. Once significant discoveries occur, it is in the public interest to provide the means to transport the oil to market so that this important resource will not lie dormant. I believe that the international events of the last two weeks point out the importance of increasing the development of the resources of our own country, especially those resources which sometimes are held in a rather tenuous position in other parts of the world. Of course, this is of special importance to the territories where resource development is fundamental to human and economic development. Discoveries followed by the construction of a pipe line will stimulate further exploration and development.

The people who wish to incorporate have already spent millions of dollars in the Rainbow and Zama fields and in the construction of pipe lines from these fields to connect them to the main pipe line systems. The applicants have a very legitimate and obvious interest in the further development of this pipe line system. It is one which they have been and are prepared to back with the expenditure of many millions of dollars. At the present time their existing line terminates 55 miles from the border of the Northwest Territories and Alberta. Further extensions are planned.

Another question which could arise is whether this company would serve as a common carrier. The National Energy Board Act itself answers this question pretty thoroughly. Section 59 states:

1. Subject to such exceptions, conditions or regulations as the board may prescribe or approve, a company operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil shall, according to its powers, without delay and with due care and diligence, receive, transport and deliver all oil offered for transmission by means of its pipe line.

2. The board may, if it considers it necessary or desirable to do so in the public interest, require a company operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil to provide adequate and suitable facilities for the receiving, transmission and delivering of all oil offered for transmission by means of its pipe line and adequate and suitable facilities for the storage of oil and the junction of its line with other facilities for the transmission of oil, if the board finds that no undue burden will be placed upon the company thereby.

3. For the purposes of this section, "oil" includes any liquefied gas that is or may be transported through a pipe line for the transmission of oil.

[Mr. Orange.]

According to my information all the major pipe lines of Canada have acted in the past as if they were common carriers. This means that they have taken the oil of all producers without discrimination as to tariffs and other conditions of carriage.

On the question of ownership and participation by the Canadian public, I should point out that clause 2(2) of the bill provides that not less than two-thirds of the directors shall at all times be persons resident in Canada and Canadian citizens.

The cost of building this line in the Northwest Territories would be much greater and the task would be more difficult than if it existed in some of the more settled parts of our nation. It is believed that it would be impossible to finance this line by public participation because of initial expenditure, but the company intends to allow the public to participate when it is economically feasible to do so and provide an adequate return. The importance of this line through northern Canada cannot be overemphasized. As I have said, this is another means of using the resources of the north for the benefit of Canada as a whole. Subject to agreement today it is my hope that we will refer this bill to the committee on transportation and communications for study at an early date.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member to clarify—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Calgary South. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question before the hon. member for the Northwest Territories resumes his seat. I did not quite understand his reference to the fact that a company had already constructed some 500 miles of pipe line to within 55 miles of the Northwest Territories boundary and had spent several million dollars. Was the hon. member referring to a company with provincial incorporation in this regard?

Mr. Orange: I was referring to construction which has taken place in northern Alberta by a company with the same name, Rainbow Pipe Line Company. This company wishes federal incorporation in order to continue construction, when the time comes, across the boundary into the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Barnett: Is there an existing company of the same name which is provincially incorporated?

Mr. Orange: That is so, yes.

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-105 replaces Bill S-52 introduced in the other place. That bill subsequently received second reading in this house on April 25 of this year. It was referred to the standing committee on transport and communications where it remained to the end of last session.

When Bill S-52 was introduced in the other place the sponsor had this to say:

> ... the sponsors desire that it be made clear that this proposed federal pipe line, as is the case with the existing Alberta pipe line, will serve all producers in the area without discrimination. These lines will not be limited to the carriage of oil belonging to the four companies which are sponsoring this application.

It should be pointed out that the sponsors of this company, Mobil Oil Canada Limited, Imperial Oil Limited, Aquitaine Company of Canada and Banff Oil Limited, are desirous of being in a position to offer facilities for the transportation of oil to areas in the Northwest Territories north of the Alberta boundary as soon as sufficient production develops. As the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has already indicated, it is suspected that the oil bearing formation apparent in Alberta follows a line straight through the Northwest Territories to the Arctic circle.

The bill now under consideration would provide for an extension into the Northwest Territories to serve anticipated production in that region. As pointed out by the hon. member, there is a pipe line which extends almost to the boundary of the Northwest Territories, owned, controlled and operated by a company with a similar name, although it is an Alberta incorporated company.

The company we are now considering would be ready to provide facilities if as and when the level of production warranted the extension of the pipe line now constructed in the Rainbow lake area of northern Alberta. This company would operate under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board in the same way as other oil and gas pipe line operators. A new feature has been added. This company requests the power and authority to do all the things that an oil exploration and development company would be expected to do, namely, to acquire and hold leases, prospect for oil and gas, drill for and produce oil, gas and related substances.

There are several aspects of this undertaking, including the one I just mentioned, which should be given careful consideration by this house. This would require too much time at this stage of the bill and I believe it can be given the thorough examination it deserves only in committee. We hope the committee on transport and communications will have the opportunity to examine this bill and, if it is thought necessary, to call and hear witnesses. We do not want to block this legislation because we realize that pipe lines are the life lines of the oil industry. However, the present bill not having been examined by the committee yet, we can only accept second reading at this time on division.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have heard several pious remarks about the National Energy Board which I cannot accept. In fact, I would not let this bill pass until we agree to make certain decisions rather than leave them to be made by that august body.

As an aside let me state that I have an article in my hand which says that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has made a bid for a new pipe line route. They are only three years behind the time when the National Energy Board suggested they should do certain things. The National Energy Board was very slow in making that direction and the minister now finds himself in the embarrassing position of realizing that the remarks I made, with which he disagreed violently several months ago, are accurate. There is an expected delay of two or three years in the construction of the line in the United States. The line will eventually be built and probably all this will be just a matter of record.

Mr. Pepin: One has to be right once in a while if one always says no.

Mr. Peters: That sounds a bit like Russian roulette. I have been interested in this pipe line for some time and I agree with the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) that this is a very important venture which will have a great effect on the economy of the Northwest Territories and the oil industry in that area. I have sympathy for the aspirations of this company but I do not agree with the second speaker, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Ballard), who looks at things in a totally different light from any one else in Canada. Calgary is the oil capital of this part of the North American continent and therefore people from that city consider these things on the basis of whether a fast buck is going to be made, whether the operation will make a big profit.

When outlining the purpose of this bill the hon. member indicated that although there are at the moment no producers in the area, there has been a great deal of exploration. His remarks about flying over the area and the seismograph lines criss-crossing his part of the country indicate that the interest in and development of the area may be on a very extensive scale. For this reason I would be reluctant to leave it to the National Energy Board to decide whether the proposed line would be a satisfactory carrier for the whole area.

I have read the bill and was very surprised to find that it did not say anything. A number of lawyers from Ottawa have got together to seek a charter, that will do what, Mr. Speaker? It will not develop a pipe line from one point to another but will give them a licence even to raise money with which to build houses. It will allow them, as the former speaker said, to hold mining leases, carry out prospecting, undertake development, establish a refinery, or sell oil at a service station. But it does not allow them to build a pipe line. There is no prospectus in the bill about where the pipe line will go and from where. The bill does not even indicate that these people are willing—and I think this will eventually have to be done—to relate this company to the one that holds a provincial charter.

Because the hon. member is on the government side of the house he cannot afford to be as sceptical as me. Perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) thinks that scepticism is something that only the opposition can enjoy. In allowing a pipe line to be built in this area it seems to me we are in effect giving this company, or some other company, a virtual monopoly in the transmission of oil. I would not recommend to the National Energy Board that they allow a number of oil transmission lines to be built in the area, because this would not be economical. For that reason I think this has to be a monopoly situation. Therefore whatever line we allow to be built must be a common carrier for the area.

[Mr. Peters.]

Because of my interest in the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, some time ago I read material dealing with the company and ascertained that Interprovincial were going to raise $70 million to build a line into the Rainbow lake area. I discussed this matter with the president of Interprovincial, who said this had been considered but they had decided not to do it. I was therefore interested to learn that Imperial Oil, which owns Interprovincial, also have a great interest in this company. They seem to be playing games with the financial pages of the newspapers and with members of parliament.

I have not decided that I should oppose this bill, but I sincerely believe that when we pass a bill such as this we should be sure what it is going to do and the extent of the monopoly that we are providing. We should know just what this company intends to do and whether the monopoly position that will be given will be in the interests of the people of the Northwest Territories.

Let us not forget that the Canadian government has invested money in the development of the Northwest Territories. We have granted concessions and allowed areas to be opened up in parks and other crown lands for development. We have assisted the development of the area in a number of ways. We have assisted in getting entrepreneurs to go into the area and develop it. In allowing the incorporation of a carrier we should assure ourselves that in granting a monopoly to that carrier—and obviously this will be a monopoly situation—in respect of all the oil out of the Rainbow lake area, the company will act as a common carrier. I would point out that it is not only the Rainbow lake area that is concerned here. All the area north of Rainbow lake will eventually prove, we hope, just as fruitful in this respect as has the Rainbow lake area. This company will be able to handle all the oil being transmitted from the area, and should do so only as a common carrier.

If the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) really thinks this company should be allowed to enter the bond or stock market in order to raise money to build houses, we should be told this quite frankly. I realize it is said that the houses will be for the company's employees, but it would be very difficult to ascertain whose employees they were because all these companies are interrelated. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Ballard) mentioned four major companies, but because of the stock arrangements many, many more companies may be involved. Our prime interest should be to ensure that the monopoly given in the transmission of oil will apply only to this area.

A short while ago we had the situation of a railway company coming to parliament obviously in good faith and asking for permission to build a railway line from the southern part of the province of Quebec in an easterly direction through to Ungava bay. It was said the railway would haul ore out of that whole area. The line also went across part of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador, and should have been a common carrier for the whole area. But when a company that was not connected with the company that built the railroad wanted to haul its ore, it had to come to parliament and seek permission to build a second line alongside the line already built. The company had to do this before they could force the company that had built the line to be a common carrier and allow them a connection. Even then this company had to build a line from the pit at Wabush, 60 miles to a connection on the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway.

I do not suggest this will always happen, but with regard to industry I believe that all factors should be brought to the attention of everybody concerned. If a company intends to be a common carrier, this should be spelled out in the bill. It should spell out what the common carrier will do. We will be giving a monopoly to this company.

I do not think there is any point in referring to the old days and the speculation that existed with regard to the railways. If you check through the records of parliament, Mr. Speaker, you will find that at least 40 or 50 railways out of the city of Ottawa were going to run all over the place from Vancouver to James bay. At least six railways were chartered to run to Hudson bay and James bay and to the left and right of this very large area. These railways never came about, although there were five or six in the Ottawa area which operated for a short time. The O'Brien family made a great deal of money on a number of railway charters for companies which never intended going anywhere.

We should not perpetuate this type of situation with respect to bills to incorporate companies that wish to build transmission lines. Oil is one of our great natural resources. This company has not asked to build a line to go anywhere. It is asking for a licence to enable it to go on the stock market and raise money. It really has not been suggested that the line is going anywhere. One can only assume that the pipe line is going into the Northwest Territories and eventually to Rainbow lake because the sponsor of the bill has told us this. Certainly the bill does not tell us that this is the case.

If one reads the bill we find on the first page, in clause 3, provisions respecting the stock and capital of the company. On the second page of the bill there are provisions with regard to the stock and capital of the company. The situation is the same on the third page. Similar provisions are to be found in clause 4, and several other clauses of the bill also relate to capital. Clause 9 and several others deal with the stock and capital of the company.

We have been more interested in the capital of this company, in how the shareholders will be protected and what they will do with their money, than we have in being told about the railways. In clause 6 of the bill we find that it is mentioned in two places that the company is going to have "interprovincial, extra-provincial and/or international pipe lines and all appurtenances relative thereto." There is not much information here concerning the pipe line.

Again I should like to mention the reliance which has been placed by certain hon. members on the National Energy Board. Both hon. members who have spoken before me mentioned they were quite ready to pass the bill no matter what was in it because the National Energy Board was going to look after it. I have no such faith. I remember the request of one particular company to the National Energy Board to build a line of a certain size. The board told them they could not build that line because it was not feasible, that the line was too big and they were not going to be able to meet their commitment. Nevertheless it was built. I believe the original line was to be 16 inches, the second proposal was for a 24 inch line, and finally, after their request for a 24 inch line was turned down, they installed a 32 inch line.

I was told by some officials of the company that they were probably going to have to consider the installation of a still larger line. I have no respect for the judgment of the National Energy Board. Although I am sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories will agree there has been a fairly general assessment of the foreseeable potential of the Rainbow lake area, according to the best surveys that can be made, without taking into account the investigation that will have to be made of the various types of petroleum products in the particular field, I think we should be told what kind of line they will be building, its size and an indication of the line with which this particular pipe line will connect, because this has been implied by the sponsor. There should also be an indication of where that line is going and what the facilities in connection with it will be. I say this because I have a great deal of interest in the protection of the people in the Northwest Territories. I live in an area which has only been developed in the last 65 years. I have heard all the promises that have been made about what is going to be done. The promises were a political gimmick in a provincial election. We have heard about the Ontario Northland Railway, which was then known as the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railroad. As soon as the railway line got to Cobalt, Silver Centre, it was no longer a development road. It has been anything but that ever since. I have heard these promises made and not carried out.

It is surprising that the people who have supported the idea of the development in all those areas still believe that their hopes will be fulfilled. I think the sponsor would be hard pressed to say whether there will be an oil company in five years or in ten years. He would be hard pressed to say whether the company intended to build a 6 inch line, a 24 inch line or a 50 inch line. He would be very hard pressed to say where that line was going to start or where it was going to go. I think he would also be hard pressed to say whether or not it was going to a refinery or whether that refinery was going to be in the Northwest Territories, where it obviously should be if the Northwest Territories are to be developed; whether it was going to be a transmission line which was going to connect with another feeder pipe line or whether it will connect with the Interprovincial, Trans Mountain or another of these companies with which we have had something to do before, and will be transported over the mountains, over the prairies, to the United States or out of the area.

I think the sponsor of the bill will agree that this pipe line company should provide for the development of oil in the area, at least in the initial stages, and that it should ask for the transmission of crude oil over a portion of this line to a refinery. I am sure he will agree that if that refinery was to be in the Northwest Territories, then there would be some inducement for members of parliament to say to the Imperial Oil Company and other companies "If you want to take this oil out of the area and you want a licence to put in a transmission line, then you should be prepared to make certain concessions to the people of Canada and in particular to the people of the Northwest Territories so they also can get some benefit out of this."

It is my view that there will not be much employment on the transmission pipe line of the people who grease the wheels which operate the pump at the head of the well. That area will only be developed if, through the development of this pipe line, we make some concessions in return for the monopoly that we are giving the companies. I came to the conclusion a long time ago that those members of parliament who sit here and do not pay any attention to these bills, or who are not really concerned about what happens with them, particularly the pipe line bills which have to do with our basic resources, have no right to stand up and say the government has not done this or that. The fact is they have provided the means whereby exploitation is made possible. To me the word "exploitation" is a dirty word. I have nothing against the words "exploration" and "development", but to exploit someone is to take advantage of him. And I think the Canadian people, and particularly those in the area concerned, are often taken in. So it behooves us in the granting of these franchises to bend over backward to protect those who sometimes do not even know they should be protected.

I am not prepared to concede that the National Energy Board should have sole jurisdiction over what this company is going to do. If the hon. member for the Northwest Territories depends on the board's decisions then I think he should take a look at its record during its short life. Its record certainly has not been sound from an engineering point of view or from a political point of view, nor have its policies been farsighted in the national sense. It has not done those things which the two previous speakers said it would do. However, to be fair to the National Energy Board, perhaps it was not set up to do these things. All I am saying is that certain members have put too great a reliance on the board. I suggest it will not accomplish these ends. It may not be able to do this because it has no power to do so. Nevertheless I can assure hon. members that no matter what the reason is, these things will not be accomplished.

I hope that when this bill goes to the committee and when it returns here some hon. members who really believe that this legislation should provide as much impetus as is possible to the development of that area will be prepared to move a number of amendments which will ensure that this company will do exactly what we want it to do.

If what they want to do is transport oil and get royalties for transporting oil, then I am 100 per cent in favour of the company receiving a franchise. I believe the people of this country must be protected. If this bill is going to accomplish what members have said they wish to accomplish, it would seem to me to be a very unusual thing to pass it. Anyone reading it is going to be hard pressed to find out if it is the intention of the company to build the pipe line. The only place in which that intention is revealed is the title, an act to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): As my colleague has just said, Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is entitled an act to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation. In view of the fact the bill has been introduced by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), one might be led to observe that this rainbow has an "orange" hue. However, that sort of remark is the type one is tempted to make when he is beginning to think about the desirability of having dinner.

I had an opportunity last summer of getting a glimpse of the Northwest Territories, as the hon. member knows, as a result of being a member of a committee which visited the area. I certainly share his interest and concern in the development of the basic resources of the area. As a result of that trip I realize that, in part at least, the development of a major oil producing field in the Northwest Territories would be a matter of great significance to that part of Canada and to the country as a whole. If the area is to develop in a major way, I believe that more and more it must find its basic resources beneath the ground.

The fact the hon. member is introducing this bill emphasizes his interest in the matter. However, I must say that I share the concern of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) over the fact that this parliament should not go out simply hunting rainbows. The name of the bill does not necessarily mean there is a pot of gold at the end for the people of the Northwest Territories. In this case it may be black gold. The sponsor of the bill did give some of the background, at least to the extent of indicating there was some relationship between the introduction of the bill and the activities that have been carried on within the boundaries of the province of Alberta. He explained that because of the geology of the area, activities in search of oil may shortly be extended beyond the northern boundaries of the province of Alberta.

Like my colleague from Timiskaming I am concerned about bills of this type which appear to give certain interests virtually a blank cheque to build a pipe line interprovincially, internationally or anywhere they may take the notion to do so. Reference has been made to the National Energy Board and the fact that there are bodies before whom a particular application would have to come. Perhaps the scepticism about the National Energy Board voiced by the hon. member for Timiskaming arises as a result of the terms of reference given to that board by this parliament. Perhaps the multiplicity of pipe line bills and the rather helter skelter approach that has been taken to the provision of transport for this particular product arises from a basic difference of outlook as to what constitutes a public utility, and the approach that should be taken to the building and development of public utilities. This is a particular area of debate which I believe should be made applicable to each and every one of these bills coming before us.

I really had no communication with my colleague from Timiskaming concerning what he would say about the bill. However, if time permitted I would have been inclined to draw the same parallel he did to indicate that we should take advantage of the experience gained from the railway boom in this country. I hope when the members of the committee consider this bill they will not take the line of argument advanced, that we should deal with the mechanics of incorporating a company and leave the other questions to the National Energy Board.

I hope before the bill is passed members will be satisfied that, even within the limits of present public policy in respect of pipe line construction, the proposal to incorporate this company is a bona fide one and will produce the necessary transportation facilities for the oil that may be produced in that area north of Alberta.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, since it is one minute to seven we would be prepared to have the question put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Ballard: It is my understanding, sir, that the motion will be passed on division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee will stand adjourned until eight o'clock.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of External Affairs, vote No. 1.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, before the adjournment I think I had observed that Canadian assistance to UNRWA is motivated primarily by humanitarian considerations and that contributions from Canada and from other countries have been applied to its relief and health services as well as to education and vocational training of the refugees. However, I readily admit that as yet no effective means has been found to remove permanently the basic causes of this problem.

While the United Nations can do a great deal to resolve this problem and must try to do what it can in this regard, it must be recognized, I think, that the responsibility too must be shared by the countries involved in the Middle East. The United Nations is an organization of sovereign states as provided in the charter. The United Nations has no real way of imposing its will with regard to this question on Israel or the U.A.R.

When I was in Israel in 1958 I discussed this problem with that great man, Mr. David Ben Gurion, and he outlined to me the difficulties from the point of view of Israel, just as I had an explanation of the U.A.R. point of view a few days before that from President Nasser. This is one of the key sources of conflict. An endeavour must be made this time to try to resolve this great problem, with its tragedy for so many human beings. We must not place the responsibility only on the UN. That organization does have its responsibility, but this is a problem which can only be solved with the co-operation of the countries themselves.

My hon. friend from Greenwood questioned my figure when I said we were giving $1.5 million to the United Nations Works and Relief Agency to assist the refugees. Perhaps he did not have the time to examine the estimate carefully. The original pledge to the United Nations of $1,200,000 consisted of $500,000 in cash accompanied by $700,000 in wheat flour. A supplementary contribution for the current fiscal year in the amount of $300,000 in the form of wheat flour was announced by me on May 4 of this year.

There is another aspect of this problem that I would like to mention and that is with regard to the supply of arms to countries in the area. In searching for ways and means of finding grounds for the establishment and maintenance of peaceful conditions one should not overlook the desirability of preventing a continuation of the arms build-up among the states of the Middle East. I think it has been clearly demonstrated that the contest in arms acquisition in the Middle East which has gone on in past years has contributed largely to the regrettable development of present full scale hostilities and at the same time has had a most debilitating effect on the relatively weak economies of the countries involved. Surely the large sums expended toward the establishments of war machines would have been better devoted to an improvement in living conditions of the people of the area. I say this, fully understanding at the same time the tensions and provocations and the concern of Israel, particularly for the preservation of its own integrity. In the kind of world in which we live these considerations have got to be borne in mind.

On the question of arms build-up I would earnestly hope that supplier countries, and especially the big powers, could arrive at an understanding which would prevent a recurrence of the unfortunate incidents which we have witnessed during the past few days. It is the firm intention of the Canadian government to continue its policy and practice of not providing military supplies to the area. The general policy of governments that have practised this concept is not to supply arms in any theatre of conflict.

I need hardly say that the current period of cease fire which we all earnestly and confidently hope will lead to the restoration of calm and a lasting peace is a most crucial one. Circumstances call for the utmost degree of restraint if the efforts of the United Nations are to reach fruition. If we are to make any progress on the basis of what has so far been achieved by the United Nations, all concerned must exercise restraint, refrain from harmful or dangerous statements or actions and we must all demonstrate a readiness to co-operate wholeheartedly toward the attainment of further permanent objectives.

I should like, before I take my seat, to say something about the United Nations emergency force and the future of peace keeping. I have already made a comment on the remarks in this particular subject by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I said that I did not regard the forced withdrawal of the UN forces and the forced withdrawal of the Canadian component in any way as a humiliation for this country. It was not because of any weakness in Canadian foreign policy that this developed. I am sure that there will be regret over the withdrawal of the force which, in spite of what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon, served as a great source of pacification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Lord Caradon said something similar in the security council this afternoon only a few minutes ago.

I am sure that the United Nations will address itself to a form of peace keeping presence, if that is desired by the countries more directly involved. We shall of course do our utmost, as a loyal member of the United Nations, to support such a concept.

I want to make it clear that we are not seeking any additional responsibilities. This country need not be ashamed, as I have already remarked, of its interest in peace keeping and in its contributions to this idea. We supplied in 1949 a component of the United Nations military observer group in India and in Pakistan. In 1954 we provided part of the United Nations truce and supervisory organization, which continues to function as an observer group. In 1956 we supplied the largest component in the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East. In 1958 we had a large group in the United Nations observer group in Lebanon. In 1960-64, when my right hon. friend was Prime Minister, Canada supplied a substantial group of signallers and technicians to the operations of the United Nations in the Congo. In 1962-63 we were part of the United Nations temporary authority in West New Guinea. In 1963-64, together with Yugoslavia, we composed the United Nations Yemen observation mission. In 1964 we supplied, and continue to supply, in Cyprus the largest unit in the United Nations force in that island. The only two United Nations peace keeping missions in which Canada did not participate were those in Greece in 1947 and Indonesia in 1947-48. Outside of the United Nations, the only peace keeping force as such in which Canada has participated has been the international control commission in Indochina. Our participation in the United Nations force in Korea in 1950-53 can be construed as peace keeping, although obviously this was a special situation.

I think that in the face of this record we, in this house, and the people of this country have no reason to feel humiliated because our force was asked to withdraw peremptorily one week ago last Sunday for reasons that were unjustified and for reasons which, I am sure, the government concerned would now recognize as being unreasonable and based on alleged facts that cannot be substantiated. Of course, we naturally regret—all of us—the developments which led to the withdrawal of the force itself. The tragic outbreak of hostilities which we have witnessed this week following the withdrawal of the force could not have borne more eloquent testimony to the very serious implications of that withdrawal and to the signal contribution made by UNEF for over ten years to the stability of the Middle East.

I want to join with others in paying my tribute to the members of the Canadian Armed Forces who have, over the ten and one half years in UNEF, played such an important role in the service of the United Nations and of peace. It is a fact of the greatest significance that every Canadian soldier who is employed outside this country in the forces of the United Nations is engaged in what I believe is as noble a function for a soldier as any function which could be assigned to him. I want to pay tribute, likewise, to the magnificent job carried out by the Royal Canadian Air Force personnel in airlifting the entire Canadian contingent from the Middle East to Canada in less than three days.

Demands on the United Nations to undertake peace keeping operations will, I believe, continue to be made despite the difficulties which have surrounded the withdrawal of UNEF. World conditions will remain troubled; I hope they will get better, but international disputes will remain unsettled for years to come. The United Nations will not be able to deal with all of these situations or to solve all of these disputes, but it will remain the only international organization which, in most instances, is acceptable as an impartial outside presence. In particular, it seems to me that the great powers will prefer that the United Nations intervene in certain situations rather than be drawn in themselves with incalculable consequences for world peace.

Nevertheless, and as far as Canada is concerned, the manner of UNEF's withdrawal is bound to have the effect that contributors to peace keeping operations will be even more concerned in future to define as clearly as possible in advance the terms of reference of peace keeping operations and in particular the relationship between the UN and the host country. It is clear that peace keeping must be based on the consent of the governments concerned. It is not enforcement action which is action taken by the security council to maintain or restore international peace and security in accordance with the application of sanctions under chapter VII of the charter. We fully accept that peace keeping cannot be carried out without the approval of the host government.

It should not be forgotten, however, that the contributors to peace keeping operations must also give their consent to the arrangements under which the operation is to take place. They too have their interests to protect. It is only on the basis of mutual confidence that peace keeping can be carried on to the benefit of all.

I continue to believe that it is the right course for Canada to be prepared to help the United Nations to carry out its primary task under the charter namely the maintenance of peace and security, provided we are satisfied that the terms and conditions are such as to make this task feasible and are compatible with our foreign policy interests. It may be that there are those who will say we are not impartial in regard to certain disputes and therefore that we are not eligible for particular operations. If so, we shall not find it difficult to stand aside. It is not our wish to impose our presence anywhere that it is not wanted.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I must say that I do not agree with my right hon. friend when he says that Canada, because of this incident, has lost the confidence and the respect of many nations in the world. From my experience with my contacts, and I suppose they are as extensive these days as those of the right hon. gentleman, my impression is that Canada in most parts of the world is respected as a nation that seeks to carry out its obligations under the charter as honourably and as dutifully as any other member state of the organization. We have never pretended, and we do not now pretend to be the world's peace keepers, great as has been our experience in that regard. We are a country with views of our own. We have our own interests and our own policies and these must come first. But it is still our strong view that there is no substitute for the international organization of peaceful conditions in the world, and that the United Nations still offers the best hope of peaceful intervention in certain situations.

This is not the time to turn away from the United Nations, to turn back to international conditions as they existed earlier in this century. Therefore I have no hesitation in repeating that Canadian support of United Nations peace keeping operations, provided these take into account our interests as a contributor, is the right course for us to follow as one of the important elements in our defence and foreign policy; and as long as I am in this office this is what we will continue to do.

The situation in the Middle East has brought home to us the interdependence of the world in which we live. It has brought home to us that a reluctance to face the causes of hostility and human friction is bound to assert itself in undesirable results at some future date. That is the situation that has confronted us during the past three weeks. We now have an opportunity of rectifying errors in this part of the world. These are errors that all nations must share, those directly involved as well as other countries in the international community.

We must now make sure that this war is brought to an end. This the security council has done as effectively in the circumstances as I would have hoped could be the case.

What the Secretary General will be empowered to do remains yet to be decided. We made a proposal yesterday that there should be a follow-up on the decision to order a cease fire, a follow-up by making sure that the cease fire was implemented and that the necessary steps were taken consequential on that decision.

There is now the problem of recognizing that in the Middle East, as in Africa and as in Asia, many countries have a very low standard of living. The U.A.R. is one of the less developed countries of the world. Its housing and its population problems impress one just as they do the visitor to populous India. Our responsibilities in raising the standards of the people of the world must not be confined only to Africa and to Asia. They must be extended all over, and this is one region that must be included.

Surely then it ought to be possible for all of us in the United Nations to determine by our policies that we are going to do a number of things. We are first of all going to see to it that the brave people of Israel are not denied the right which was given to them by the United Nations. It was the United Nations that brought this country into being, that gave it form, that gave it substance, and the United Nations has a responsibility to see that both the form and the substance remain. So, its integrity is basic in whatever we do, likewise its right to contacts with the outside world through the strait of Tiran and the gulf of Aqaba.

As I said earlier, we have got to meet the terrible problem of the dislocated families and peoples in the Gaza, and wherever the refugees are, and to see to it that they are given the opportunity of a full life, thereby removing one of the temptations of some of the excessive nationalism that in some parts of the Middle East has made itself felt in the last 20 years.

This is a gigantic problem. It is not a problem that can be solved overnight; but if this regrettable situation in the last few weeks does no more than bring home to us the collective responsibility of all of the nations, including those primarily involved, perhaps it will have forced on us the realization of the kind of hostility that has provoked this terrible situation.

I take my seat, not apologetically in any way for the United Nations or for the United Nations force. I believe that in the kind of world that we live in, with all its imperfections of structure and capacity, there is no other view one can take of the United Nations than to regard it as an inevitable institution in this interdependent nuclear world. Those who criticize it have been among those who at one time have lauded it the most. Those who have been criticizing peace keeping, including the United Nations emergency force, have been among those to claim the authorship of the idea.

Let no one in this house mistake the significance of the structure that we are building. We are slowly building in the international community, in spite of these regrettable situations, a kind of legal order that was gradually built up only after centuries of effort in the domestic community of every country in the world. The authority of the law in England did not always reside with England. The authority of the law in Canada did not always reside, historically speaking, with the nation state. Justice was once meted out by buying off vengeance from the individual. It was only bit by bit that the community asserted itself.

That is what is happening despite all our problems; in spite of war and the danger of war, that is what is happening in our world today. With these beliefs which I know members of this house share, we must see to it in this particular situation that the United Nations is not needlessly depreciated. It must be supported so that it can meet the tremendous problems that lie ahead in the Middle East, and which lie ahead—who knows—in Viet Nam, and which lie ahead in other situations which may develop. Let none of us believe that we make a contribution to world progress if we lose faith, the second time in 35 years, in a collective security system designed to establish order among the nations of the world.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, in the last few hours, we have become more optimist about the Middle East conflict.

Early this afternoon the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced that the members of the security council of the United Nations had unanimously agreed to the cease fire resolution. A little later he advised that the United Arab Republic had followed the example of Israel and we have reason to believe that all violence has now come to an end in the Middle East.

But that does not mean that the crisis itself is resolved.

In my humble opinion, the cause of this war, which goes back a very long way, still exists, and the fire which has broken out so suddenly in the past few days had been smouldering for about twenty years. Even though the belligerents have laid down their arms, it does not mean that the fire has been completed extinguished but rather that it is under control, and if the United Nations which represent the world nations, fail to take the required steps, that fire could blaze up again sooner or later.

Therefore, I feel, Mr. Chairman, that we can now be proud of the work done in the last few days by the United Nations which succeeded in obtaining a cease fire, and I also think that the Canadian government, and especially our diplomatic service, deserve our congratulations. I wish to stress more particularly the fine work done by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) at the United Nations to obtain a cease fire between the United Arab Republic and Israel.

If things have worked out so well up to now in the Middle East, I wonder why the security council could not adopt the same attitude toward Viet Nam.

That area has long been in the throes of strife; it has been the victim of massacres, which not only wounded many and left many mutilated, but also made numberless victims. In spite of this, less attention seems to be given to Viet Nam than to the situation in the Middle East. Is it then less cruel to massacre yellow citizens than Jews or Arabs?

A while ago, I expressed my joy at the thought of the cease fire in the Middle East because, for several years now, as arms modernize, we note that the number of civilian deaths increases as compared with the number of deaths of military personnel.

In fact, during a recent visit to Expo, Father Dominique Pire stated that, during the first world war, the percentage of civilian casualties was 5 per cent, whereas it rose to 46 per cent during the second world war and increased further to 75 per cent during the Korean war and finally reached 85 per cent in the current conflict in Viet Nam.

That means, Mr. Chairman, that soldiers are not the only ones to be affected by war, but an ever increasing number of civilians are casualties in these massacres.

I do not want to make any comparison with what has happened in the United Arab Republic because I have noted—and I am not the only one—that the reports supplied by press, radio or television did not overly insist on the casualties in this Middle East war. Just a few newspapermen, two or three, were killed in this war to date and it might seem as if this was only a newspaperman's war. According to reports received up to now, I can imagine that the number of victims, civilian or military, is surely considerable and that we must be very gratified to see the massacre ended, for the time being.

Tonight, Mr. Chairman, I should like to state the position of the Ralliement Créditiste on the war in the Middle East. Like all the other hon. members of this house and, I think, the whole Canadian people, except perhaps for a few profiteers, we deplore this war and any other elsewhere in the world. We realize that war does not solve any problems but merely satisfies passions sometimes. The present conflict in the Middle East, likewise, will not solve the problem which dates from the end of world war II.

The causes of this war must be eliminated. Those who spoke before me today pointed out that following the partition of Palestine, a great many Arabs were forced to live in what is known as refugee camps; according to what I have read, they are in fact more like concentration camps. This is, in my opinion, one of the causes of the present war in the Middle East.

I have not had the privilege of visiting these Arab and Israeli countries to see the difference existing today between this piece of land given the Israeli and known as Israel, and what it was before, and what there is in Arab countries surrounding it. I readily imagine that those who were necessarily displaced by the creation of that state, of that country, in 1947, have harboured hatred, not against a country but against men, which we can easily understand if we take into consideration the state of misery these people have been living in as a result of this partition.

I would like here to quote from an editorial published in Le Devoir today, June 8, signed by Jean-Marc Léger who precisely emphasizes the point I just raised, that it is not so much the Arabs themselves who are attacking the Jewish people than the Arab states which are attacking the Israeli state, because of this partition. Here is what Mr. Jean-Marc Léger wrote:

The various events which have been the immediate cause of the conflict are in fact only of secondary importance with regard to the only real problem: is peaceful coexistence possible between Israel and the Arab states? It is necessary to say "Israel" and not between the Jews and the Arabs, because—contrary to what a misinformed public opinion often thinks in the west—the Arabs are not anti-Jewish. Semites themselves, they have had for centuries proper, sometimes friendly, relations with hundreds of thousands of Jews living among them in north Africa and in the Near East. It is only with the advent of the sionist movement to create Israel that the Arabs took a stand, not against the Jews, but against a state which they considered to be the result of spoliation and imperialism.

I fully agree with the editorial writer of Le Devoir that such hate, unlike what is noted in certain conflicts, is more an affair between states than between men.

Mr. Chairman, we, in the Ralliement Créditiste, are in favour of an immediate cease fire, as happened in the last few hours, and we urge the Canadian government to continue its representations to the United Nations, so that the cease fire may be continued and respected, at the same time as negotiations are conducted for an enduring peace that will remove the causes of that conflict we have witnessed in recent days.

I believe that the Canadian government, the Canadian people and indeed the United Nations should draw their inspiration from the statements of His Holiness Pope Paul VI and of the Montreal-Ottawa synod of the United Church of Canada meeting at Macdonald College.

This is the statement of His Holiness Pope Paul VI, as published in Le Devoir of June 8, and I quote:

"Let the fighting be suspended," said the pope, echoing the resolution of the security council, in a speech given during a public audience.

After wondering in a tone of deep bitterness, "For more than twenty years now, peace has been preached; must this be the result?... Can the demon of violence, vengeance, cruelty never be torn out of the hearts of men?" Paul VI continued:

"We do not despair of peace, because we do not want to despair of man, and because we want to hope in the irrepressible strength of the Gospel, although slow and thwarted, and the merciful help of God." He then asked that negotiations be entered into, and that trust be shown those institutions which are called upon to "promote peaceful relations between nations".

Paul VI finally reiterated his appeal for the safeguard of the holy sites, held sacred by Christians, Jews and Moslems alike. He urged everyone to show kindness, mercy and love, and to pray that feelings of justice might prevail and peace might be restored.

Mr. Chairman, I should not like to analyse or try to explain what His Holiness the Pope meant by the words "that feelings of justice might prevail, and peace might be restored", but the speeches we heard earlier today and my own former comments on the causes of this war in my opinion confirm the fact that there was injustice somewhere, for surely war is not declared for the pleasure of fighting, as in the case of a sport, but because there are reasons for it. Even though it has been impossible to determine who was the aggressor, I think that both sides felt there was injustice somewhere and, in my opinion, this is something to which the United Nations should address themselves as soon as possible, not only in the Middle East but in every hotbed of war in the world where the United Nations are called upon to act and restore peace.

And the United Church of Canada, at a meeting held at Macdonald College, in Montreal, on June 7, stated:

The synod refuses to blame those responsible for the declaration of war. As a synod, however, we want to declare unanimously that such an action was totally useless and could not solve a conflict with international dimensions.

Even a limited war cannot be but costly in human life and equipment. More over, it may become extremely dangerous if other countries choose to take a partisan stand.

We exhort the members of our Christian community to unite in prayer with all the people of good will and ask the Lord to extend His peace to those areas of war.

And we state our desire to serve the Lord in order to show His mercy to all the victims of such violent action.

We proclaim our appreciation to the security council of the United Nations which accepted unanimously to propose to the belligerent nations a cease fire, and to our own country, Canada, which stated its neutral stand and its wish to participate in any peace keeping action and procedure in the Middle East.

We again want to assert our confidence in the United Nations and its secretary, and to voice our belief that the UN is absolutely essential to maintain peace between nations.

I think that we must be inspired by those statements, because they invite us to place our confidence in the United Nations for the restoration of peace in the Middle East, and the elimination of the causes which led to that conflict so that we may have a lasting peace.

Mr. Chairman, the Ralliement Créditiste wishes that our Canadian diplomats should continue their action and efforts with the United Nations, so that peace may be restored in that area, and that equally desirable efforts should be made to bring about a cease fire and to restore peace in Viet Nam. The conflict in this area has already lasted too long and I think that we should make the same efforts to stop the war in Viet Nam as soon as possible. Action should be taken as quickly as in the Middle East. We would then be proud of that second victory of peace over war.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was making his speech this afternoon and this evening, near the conclusion he would have filled in the members of this house on what has happened at the security council meeting during the last two or three hours. However, the minister may have some good reasons for not having done this, and there may be nothing new to report.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps at this time I might be allowed to say that there are two resolutions before the security council, one put forward by the United States and the other by the Soviet union. The resolution of the United States calls for a cease fire; it calls for withdrawal within a certain context; it calls for action by the secretary general, by a United Nations official designated by him or by someone else, to establish bilateral contacts between the parties involved and to try to begin negotiations toward a more permanent settlement. The Soviet union resolution calls for the designation of one of the countries as an aggressor. There has not yet been any vote.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. gentleman for that additional information. I was particularly interested, however, in whether there had been any further response from some of the other countries involved in the war on whether they had accepted the original resolution calling for a cease fire. We know that Israel, Jordan and the United Arab Republic have accepted, but of course there are other countries involved.

The news broadcast that I heard about an hour ago was that there had been a broadcast out of Syria, I think, that they had again stated they would fight until they had their flag flying over Tel Aviv. The other matter in which I am particularly interested is whether some arrangements have been made in the security council by way of statements from either Israel or the United Arab Republic as to some acceptable way of effecting the cease fire, because so far it would appear that Israel will accept it provided her enemies do so, and the United Arab Republic has said they will accept it provided Israel accepts. It seems to me that we must have some additional information as to what both sides have said. Also, we have no word about the action taken to reconcile these two statements and obtain some effect from them. However, Mr. Chairman, that may come later.

I wish to speak only briefly on these estimates tonight. I would say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and all hon. members of the house that it is my intention to outline six suggestions that are supported by this party and then to deal briefly with each one. Before I do that I would say that we claim no exclusive authorship or originality for what we are suggesting. In fact we are gratified to find that there is near unanimity in this house on many of the suggestions which I shall now outline.

Now that the United Nations security council has taken the first essential steps to restore peace in the Middle East there are a number of other essential follow-up actions that in our view must be taken immediately.

First, we must have the presence of the United Nations made manifest in and along all the frontiers where and when the cease fire takes effect.

Second, we must immediately strengthen the United Nations truce supervisory organization to the extent that they will have adequate personnel and facilities to continually patrol every mile of the frontier.

Third, we believe we must be prepared to provide immediately massive shipments of food, etc., to all the people on both sides who have been hurt by this war, and particularly to the refugees.

Fourth, we believe there must be a bilateral, first, and then an international commission established to negotiate and determine the immediate as well as long term settlements between the antagonists.

Fifth, we must be prepared to provide substantial long term aid for the rehabilitation of the refugees.

Sixth, all the countries in Europe, on both sides—that is, in western Europe and eastern Europe—as well as North America, must cooperate in a massive program of economic aid to raise living standards, particularly in the Arab countries.

We believe that people all over the world should be grateful indeed to every single member of the security council for setting aside past differences and unanimously passing the resolution calling for an immediate cease fire. There have been some comments by the news media recently that Russia has suffered a great diplomatic or psychological defeat by agreeing to the resolution calling for a cease fire. I have heard this commentary made more than once by the C.B.C. personnel at the United Nations. We believe that rather than pouring salt in the wounds or hurling brick-bats, the U.S.S.R. should be commended and congratulated, along with all the other member countries, for taking this action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Now that the U.S.S.R. has taken this first essential and desirable step, it is to be hoped that she will continue to co-operate by providing materially to the cost that the United Nations will have to undertake in giving effect to the resolution.

At this time, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just confirmed, some of the countries involved have not accepted the resolution of the United Nations security council and so the cease fire has not yet been fully effective. However, immediately upon being accepted by all the antagonists involved, the United Nations truce supervisory organization must be prepared to move in and re-establish the presence of the United Nations between the opposing armies in all areas. This is no small matter because first of all it is a very small organization and second, because its headquarters in Jerusalem were overrun and occupied by the Jordanian army followed by the Israeli army.

If the Secretary of State for External Affairs could interrupt his conversation long enough to listen, I would like to point out to him that during the last two or three days since the first reports that UNTSO headquarters have been overrun I have been trying to find out from him whether or not this organization has been regrouped, whether its efforts have been coordinated and what is its status. I even attempted to ask him questions during his speech this afternoon. I do not really think that this should be classified information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad my hon. friend has asked me that question. As of nightfall, local time, this evening we have had confirmation that all the Canadian personnel serving with UNTSO are safe and well. We do not have particulars concerning one soldier in UNTSO who is missing, but the force seems to be secure and I am happy to say that all Canadians with UNTSO are reported safe and well.

Mr. Olson: I am pleased to hear that, but that is not the whole story. I also think there is an immediate need to regroup, re-organize and co-ordinate the activities of all the men in the organization who are in the Middle East at present. We do not know whether or not another headquarters has been established.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, they are occupying a hotel in Jerusalem.

Mr. Olson: This is information we have not had until now. In addition to that, however, we believe that the whole organization should be substantially strengthened because the cease fire lines are apparently going to be rather long. We believe sincerely that every mile needs to be patrolled continuously so that minor outbreaks will not again escalate into massive military operations. I want to say in this respect also that I believe Canada, in spite of some of the reservations that were voiced by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition respecting the change in the Canadian armed forces, will be able to find sufficient qualified personnel within the Canadian armed forces to meet any commitment or any request that is made by the UN.

I am certainly no expert in matters in the Middle East or in external affairs, but I did spend a few days in Israel in November of 1962 so I have some knowledge of the terrain along some of the borders, particularly in northern Israel, between Israel and Jordan, Israel and Syria and Israel and Lebanon. It is a great undertaking to supervise a truce along these frontiers. Right along the frontiers there are large hills or small mountains and great valleys. The highways along them are not well developed. There are some collective farms, kibutzes, right up to the border. Therefore, unless a demilitarized zone is established there and a well supervised truce maintained in the area with sufficient men and equipment to do the job properly, in my opinion incidents will continue to occur. This is why I say to the minister tonight that this supervisory organization and the truce commissions should be substantially increased at once. I do not believe we should wait. I think we are justified in calling on our government to take action now to make sure that the personnel is ready to move immediately into any area to which the security council directs them to go.

There is also the tragic plight of hundreds of thousands of people who have been hurt, not only in recent military operations but also the refugees from both of the previous military encounters in 1948 and in 1956. These people will require food and other aid in massive quantities immediately if the discontent is not to continue festering. I think that Canada should be prepared to move immediately and provide substantially more aid over and above what we are doing now. If this matter is not attended to at once, I think it would be foolish indeed to hope that peace will be maintained for long.

Before we can expect any pull-back to permanent positions, I believe a commission must be set up to establish the lines and to consider the other conditions of a settlement. We believe that there will be some difficulties in conducting the negotiations, particularly with regard to the area around Jerusalem. We know now that the old walled city of Jerusalem was previously in the hands of Jordan. The Israeli army have occupied that area. According to the press reports we have received, the Israeli government, or at least some spokesman of the government, has said that Israel will never again leave the old walled city of Jerusalem. That is an indication that the state of Israel is not willing to move back to the borders that were in effect prior to the recent hostilities, and that there are probably other areas, such as Sharm el Sheikh, from which Israel will be reluctant to move back.

So I think we must bear in mind that the conditions of settlement will be very difficult indeed. I believe that in the first instance a commission should be set up. It should be primarily a bilateral commission involving the countries concerned, that is Israel and the United Arab Republic, Israel and Jordan, and so on, in other words, the nations directly involved. However, I think there should also be an international commission which would consider seriously what would be a just settlement, because it is far too important to the countries other than those directly involved in the maintenance of peace, to leave the whole matter to them in the hope that they will reach final and lasting agreements. I say that, not in despair that they will not be able to reach any agreement, but because I believe that if such an agreement cannot be reached it should become the responsibility of an international commission. We think this is an essential step which should be taken at once.

I said I would be brief, and I will conclude by suggesting to the members of this committee that it is a well known fact that throughout the ages the Jewish people have suffered terrible persecution in all parts of the world.

[Mr. Olson.]

It should also be acknowledged and recognized that the Arabs gave up some land which they had occupied for centuries to provide at least a measure of settlement. I suggest that this partial settlement, whereby land was provided for the present state of Israel was a great relief to the conscience of the whole world because of the persecution of the Jewish people over the centuries. I think that because of that we owe a great debt to the Arabs and especially to the refugees.

I suggest that long term aid for the rehabilitation of refugees as well as to enhance the living standards of the area cannot be postponed again. The United Nations was able to buy ten years of time in 1956 to try to settle this problem. Unfortunately very little, if anything, of a lasting nature was done during that ten year period. The cost of providing this kind of aid in a humanitarian way is far less, and in my opinion, far more acceptable than the alternative which would be the cost of providing a massive, defensive war machine. The alternatives today are clear as they never have been before. I believe it is not difficult for Canadians to choose the alternative that is most acceptable to them.

Mr. Chairman, the United Nations has been put to the supreme test during these past few days. There was the need for taking some positive action or the organization would collapse. I sincerely believe that. I am not discrediting it or discounting the useful work it has performed in the past. What the United Nations was facing in the past few days was critical. There are no words which can overemphasize the seriousness of that critical situation. It is for this reason I say the security council was obliged to bring forth some positive action or the whole world would have lost confidence in the purposes and functions of that organization.

I believe that the organization came through, perhaps because there was no alternative to saving the peace. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say things look better today than they have for a few days. As the minister has said, this is not the time for any disparaging remarks about the United Nations. The organization has come through. All we can do now is hope and pray that the aspirations of people for an effective settlement according to the resolutions passed in the security council will come to fruition as soon as possible.

Mr. Nesbitt: I think all of us in this committee are agreed on one thing, that is the absolute necessity of a world organization to try to keep peace and order in the world. If I may say so, Mr. Chairman, the taking of the attitude adopted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the previous speaker, that the United Nations, right or wrong, should never be subjected to any constructive criticism on the many problems and faults the United Nations has is, I think, a rather unrealistic way of looking at things. It is not my intention to make a speech concerning the difficulties of the United Nations, but I believe many people realize the United Nations has a great many faults. There are many things that could be done to improve that organization. If I heard the two hon. gentlemen correctly, they said that the United Nations was perfect and should not be subjected to any constructive criticism.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think either of us said that.

Mr. Olson: Neither do I.

Mr. Nesbitt: I certainly heard what both hon. members said, but perhaps I interpreted their remarks differently from the way they intended. I am basing my remarks on what was said.

The other thing which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, and with which the hon. member for Medicine Hat agreed, at least by implication, was that the United Nations came through in this emergency. Well, they did. I think we should be realistic about this. If the Arabs had been winning the war rather than the Israeli, I am not so sure things would have gone so smoothly at the United Nations. There may have been a quite different picture altogether if the Arabs had been successful in the war.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend enlighten the house on exactly what he means by that statement?

Mr. Nesbitt: It seems to me that perhaps the Soviet union might have exercised its veto on the cease fire resolution had things been going in the other direction, shall we say. Since the Arabs, whom the Russians were supporting, were not too successful, perhaps there was not any alternative. Regardless of the reason, things have worked out better than I think most people hoped they would.

There are just two or three points with which I should like to deal. I have no desire to deal with matters that have already been dealt with by other speakers. First of all, as I understand it, the minister told us a few moments ago that the Canadian resolution has not yet been voted upon by the United Nations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps my hon. friend would like to be told that the Canadian resolution is now one of the operative parts of the United States resolution.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can the minister perhaps tell us if it is included as a paragraph of the United States resolution? Has the minister a copy of the United States resolution?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, I have, but it is quite a long resolution.

Mr. Nesbitt: If it is lengthy perhaps the minister could give us the general purport of the resolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already given it to the hon. member who just spoke. First of all, it embodies the resolution put forward last night by the Canadian ambassador. The second portion requests full compliance with the cease fire resolution of the security council. These are some of the ideas embodied in the United States resolution which was tabled today.

This resolution also calls for the Secretary General or the president or someone else other than the Secretary General or the president, to try by bilateral contacts between the two countries involved to implement the terms of the cease fire, and for the United Nations to work toward a solution of the fundamental problems of the area. It calls upon all nations to co-operate toward that end. Implied in this operative part is an invitation to the great powers to use their influence in that regard.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am certainly very pleased to have this information. If I may say so, I think this resolution is a considerable improvement over the terms of the Canadian resolution. The Canadian resolution, in effect, left the arranging of the cease fire in very broad, general terms at the discretion of the secretary general and, of course, the current president of the security council. This is a help, I think, but of course the security council president changes every month. It is not very likely the United Nations would have been able to work out the problem very quickly—they never do and this way have caused some problems.

I can understand how some countries might have had reservations about the Canadian resolution because of the discretion given to the secretary general and the president of the security council. I think the secretary general would have been the one who would have carried the load of work in considering such questions as finance, whether troops were to be used to inspect the cease fire and what the geographical positions would be of the Arab and Israeli armies after a cease fire. These are broad terms and the discretion is quite wide to give to two people.

Rightly or wrongly, Mr. Chairman, many people were not very satisfied with the way U Thant used his discretion when this matter first came up and Egypt demanded the withdrawal of UNEF. A great many people feel that U Thant should have gone to Cairo and first discussed the matter with President Nasser before he disbanded UNEF. By disbanding UNEF the secretary general threw away the one bargaining lever that he had; and once UNEF was broken up it was like Humpty Dumpty,—pretty hard to put together again.

These are matters of judgment and discretion, of course, but there was not complete unanimity, to say the least, of approval of U Thant's behaviour. I think that the United States resolution to which the minister referred, which embodies the original Canadian resolution as well as some other matters, is a very decided improvement. Many countries are a little dubious about giving the secretary general, even with the assistance of the current president of the security council, complete carte blanche on questions as important and wide as these.

If I may deal with another aspect for a moment, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we are to keep permanent peace in the Middle East and prevent another outbreak of hostilities and violence we really have two choices. Obviously, there is the choice to which the minister alluded and which is implied in the United States resolution, the choice of the four major powers—the United States, the Soviet union, Britain and France —guaranteeing the borders of Israel; and I think that this would be the most practical and easiest way of maintaining peace if it could be arranged. Second, that we have a large enough United Nations peace keeping force which is sufficiently well armed to be able to keep the peace. That is the alternative.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, this suggestion was first made a good many years ago prior to the 1956 war. On January 31, 1956 this suggestion was made by the then member for Prince Albert, the present Leader of the Opposition. I have the relevant passage in front of me but I will not quote it. The right hon. gentleman pointed out that in order to keep the peace a large enough United Nations force to enforce the peace and to keep it should be provided. If we are to have a UN force there and want to be sure that there can be no other outbreak of war, and if we cannot get a four power guarantee, then we would need a pretty well armed, large force in that area.

It is not often that I criticize the government on matters of external affairs. Usually there is pretty general agreement between the party that I represent and the government party on such matters. However, I must say that in this particular instance I do have some criticism of the government and its handling of the matter.

Despite what the Minister of National Defence says to the effect that the unification of the Canadian armed services does not have the principal purpose of just serving the United Nations, General Allard stated quite differently. On the very day the unification bill was passed by this house he said in St. Catharines—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why does my hon. friend not read what General Allard said in the committee?

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister suggests that I read what he said in the committee, and as I have it right in front of me I will do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why not read that?

Mr. Nesbitt: I will read both, Mr. Chairman. The newspapers cannot always be wrong. It seems that someone is always being misquoted when reports in the press do not agree with the impression that the minister would like to give. The newspaper clipping I have from the Woodstock Sentinel-Review carries the headline "Mobile world peace force major goal, says Allard", and the report is datelined St. Catharines. This statement was made, as I recall it, the day the bill was passed.

The minister did ask me to read what General Allard had said, though I have put it on the record on several occasions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read where he outlines the three points.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not know what the minister has in mind but I do know what I have in mind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know what the hon. gentleman has in mind, which is why I am trying to get the hon. member to read the three points that General Allard made in the committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: If the minister wants to put them on the record I would be very happy to yield the floor to him in a moment. I should like to refer to an extract from the evidence of General Allard before the defence committee on Tuesday, February 28, and which is referred to at page 15004 of Hansard for April 17:

> Canada now wants, while remaining faithful to its existing commitments, to decide itself on the part it wishes to play in the new international society. This is not only its right, it is also its duty. It is its duty to participate, to the best of its ability, in keeping the peace by supporting the organization which has made itself the champion of the smaller nations, the United Nations organization.
> In short, that is the transformation proposed by the white paper. That is what we are trying to do. My duty is to organize the military forces in accordance with government policy.

That is what General Allard said at St. Catharines, and it is what U Thant said the other day in Montreal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Nesbitt: The question whether or not it is advisable is a matter of opinion and debate. I think it is wrong to make the major duty of our defence forces the serving of UN purposes and turning the defence of this country largely over to the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely my hon. friend does not do justice to his reasoning. He read out that General Allard stated that apart from our foreign policy commitments we should so mould the development of national defence consistent with our obligations in the United Nations. He did not ignore the fact that we had other foreign policy commitments, such as NATO. My hon. friend should read that passage again.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is what General Allard said in the committee, but later on he said that a mobile world peace force was the major goal. The secretary general also said the other day that he had that information. It is a question whether one thinks this is advisable or not. I agree that an argument can be made for doing that kind of thing, but that is not the subject for discussion tonight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I must insist. My hon. friend read to the committee what General Allard said. General Allard did not say exclusively what my hon. friend is now affirming. General Allard said that we had certain foreign policy commitments and that we also intended to do a peace keeping job. What my hon. friend is seeking to do is to convey the impression that General Allard said that our only purpose in national defence now was to provide for peace keeping. That is not what my hon. friend read out a few moments ago and attributed to General Allard.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister can think whatever he pleases, and if he wants to make another speech he has a perfect right to do so. I do not know what other impression can be gained from what the secretary general said in Montreal the other day. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition put that on the record this afternoon. I do not know what other impression can be gained from this newspaper sentence, which I again quote: "Mobile World Peace Force Major Goal, Says Allard" than the obvious one, even though the minister says that peace keeping is not the major goal of the unification bill. That it is the goal of that bill is the impression of a good many people, including leading members of the press, of this country. They have that impression regardless of what the minister says.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I look upon the Woodstock Sentinel-Review as one of the leading members of the press.

Mr. Nesbitt: I read out the heading of a Canadian Press dispatch. If the minister does not like the Canadian Press, that is his business.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I like the Canadian Press, too.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is where this dispatch came from.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is all things to all men.

Mr. Nesbitt: I shall come to that. The leader of the N.D.P. made a very apt observation.

I notice that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has becoming very touchy this evening, almost as touchy as the Minister of National Defence was this afternoon. I thought that the defence minister would go sailing through the roof of the chamber when he became stirred up by the Leader of the Opposition on this subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I like my hon. friend too much to get stirred up.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister usually sits in his place, with his words sort of giving the impression of a taste of honey. He has that bland look on his face. But he got a little exercised this evening.

Despite the minister's denials and protestations, even he will agree that one of the major goals of Canadian defence policy, which of course is only an arm of Canadian policy, is for a peace keeping force to be used not only with the United Nations but perhaps for NATO or for places like Viet Nam. In the recent meeting of the external affairs committee the minister said that if Canadian forces were wanted in Viet Nam they would be available for peace keeping operations. Having said that, surely he cannot deny what the major goals of unification are. The major effort of Canada, through the United Nations last fall, was to develop guide lines for peace keeping. Though the resolution was excellent —I liked its terms—Canada got a very severe rebuff at the United Nations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not accurate; my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. Nesbitt: What is that? I did not hear the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The matter is still before the United Nations. It is being discussed.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister knows better than I do that the matter was put on ice by referring it to that committee. It will stay there for a long time. Only because Canada is well regarded at the United Nations was it dealt with as kindly as it was. The effect is that the resolution did not pass. There were many abstentions, and it was a very minor resolution. One of the reasons for the resolution's failure is that the United Nations had difficulties with the Soviet union and France over the payments for peace keeping operations. Also there is a general lack of willingness at the United Nations to bring the matter up at the present time because of what happened a couple of years ago when they had to cancel the session because of the difficulties between the Soviet union and the United States. It was not an appropriate time to bring the matter up.

I think the idea is good; I am in favour of it. I like the terms of the resolution, but I think the timing was bad. Because the United Nations at that time was not too interested in peace keeping, and for a number of reasons it was not a good time to bring the resolution forward. Despite what the minister said a few minutes ago I thought that Canada was put in a humiliating position by having her troops kicked out of Egypt by Colonel Nasser. This is the fault entirely of the government, which is always talking about quiet diplomacy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do I understand my hon. friend to say that it was the fault of the government that our troops were asked by Colonel Nasser to leave?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes, and I will tell the minister why.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why? That is most illuminating.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister may not agree, but I shall tell him why that is—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am overwhelmed by that suggestion.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister can get as sarcastic as he likes, but facts are facts. The present government has always talked about quiet diplomacy in Viet Nam and elsewhere. Probably it was a good idea. If there had been a little more quiet diplomacy a couple of weeks ago with respect to the Middle East there would not have been so much trouble. First of all you have the Prime Minister making announcements that he and President Johnson had agreed on what was to be done, and that they had things cooked up; and then President Johnson denied that. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made remarks one day to the effect that Egypt had given up some of her sovereignty when the United Nations force came in; and he made a statement to a quite opposite effect on another day. This kind of thing annoyed the Arbas.

The government decided to be neutral and provide peace keeping forces in this area, yet I do not think it should be neutral in this matter, for the reasons that were outlined by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I do not think we should be neutral toward Nasser's policy of genocide. If we are neutral toward that policy, we are denying everything in the United Nations charter.

If the government had decided that it would be neutral, at least it should have been consistent and acted in a neutral manner, rather than giving clear indications that it was siding against the Arabs. Instead of acting in the way it did, I think the government should have come out clearly and distinctly and said that it thought that Nasser was wrong in his attempt to wipe out Israel, that it was genocide, and that that was against all United Nations' principles. Instead of that the present government said, "No, we are neutral." The Prime Minister said in his interview: "I have no feeling one way or another on the subject." These contradictory statements by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs all have succeeded in annoying the Arabs, and as a result our troops were ordered to get out because of this government's pronouncements. If that was not the government's fault, I do not know what was.

I wish to say another thing, too. One cannot be all things to all men at all times as the minister and the government so often have tried to be. Sometimes you have to stand for what you think to be right.

I wish the hon. member for Montreal who is always making observations would occasionally get up and make a speech.

Mr. Prud'homme: He is not from Montreal.

Mr. Nesbitt: One of the most severe problems that we face now, and this is something that has been postponed from one day to the next for a long time, is the question of the Palestinean refugees in the Gaza strip who number now about one and a half million persons. The presence of these refugees for many years has been the main bone of contention, and they are now causing trouble. One thing also is quite clear. Though the United Nations emergency force worked moderately well for ten years nobody, but nobody, paid much serious attention to the basic issue of solving the difficulties of these refugees. I do not blame any government for this, because all governments in part are responsible. The fact is that the United Nations is always under pressure to deal with urgent matters because emergencies have arisen. Also, these urgent problems in the Middle East have apparently been overlooked for ten years, since there was no immediate emergency in the area. Every year, before the so-called "old chestnut" committee where such problems are brought up, the Arab refugee problem was aired and nobody did much about it. Everybody said, "We shall have to wait; time will cure it; maybe it will go away." But it never did go away.

Then there is the question of the water rights in the Jordan river, not to mention access to the gulf of Aqaba. Nobody made any serious attempt in the last ten years to solve those problems. As the minister said, some serious attempt must be made to solve them, or we shall need a four power guarantee or large numbers of troops in the area for a long time to come. If something is not done the Egyptians or some of the others will arm again.

Other problems will arise because of the immediate and troublesome question of oil. Some Arab countries, Iraq, Lybia and Algeria, announced that they had cut off oil supplies to Britain and France. Though it would be more costly for Britain to import oil from the United States she will not place her future economy in danger again by having to rely on the whim and caprice of emotional Arab leaders. If Great Britain makes other arrangements to obtain her oil, that will remove a large percentage of the national income of these already impoverished countries and that, in turn, will present a serious problem to the United Nations.

The United Nations will have to provide a great deal of additional economic aid to these countries, the oil sales of which are thus curtailed, over a long period of time. Then there is the question also of the Israeli borders and, as has already been suggested today, Israel should be given the entire city of Jerusalem.

Possibly some of this area should be made an international territory, and it should be made clear that Israel has the right of entrance to the gulf of Aqaba so that we do not still have it as a bone of contention. Also, something should be done about water supplies from the river Jordan. These are the things which have to be dealt with.

Also, to stabilize the area the great powers and the United Nations should give much additional aid to Arab countries because poverty in those countries is an indirect contributing factor to much of the trouble. They see considerable progress and prosperity in Israel. Possibly it is the fault of their own leaders that they do not have the same in theirs. These are festering sores and much must be tackled in the long range.

We will have much to do to improve the life and living conditions of the Arab peoples, and certainly of the Arab refugees. So far as I am aware, the only country over the years that has taken in any of the Arab refugees has been Iran. The others did not want to take them in because, in a manner of speaking, they wanted to keep the trouble spot glowing. Some arrangements will have to be made to settle these people, and if countries like Egypt, Iraq and Lybia will not take them, arrangements will have to be made to provide them with permanent homes elsewhere.

I see it is nearly a quarter to ten, Mr. Chairman, and there may be other hon. members who want a chance to speak. I think we should have had a longer debate on this subject, but that is not to be the case. I think I have covered most of the points I wished to cover and so I will accordingly close.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, it is not very easy to speak on such a broad issue in so few minutes at such a time of day. We have had, as was to be expected, not many new ideas expressed today, perhaps because there are not too many new ideas which may be applied to this difficult area of the world. But hopefully, after what we have passed through, to some of the old ideas there might be brought some new will and some determination of purpose that we did not have previously.

I think most sensitive people in the world have been fearful in the last few days, literally afraid that that word Armageddon might in fact become a fearful and awful reality, and that the part of the world which was the cradle of mankind could become its grave. We had come close to the brink. We have often come close to the brink, but if there is one hopeful thing about these crises it is that it would appear that the boiling point has gone up a great deal in our time.

Things which would have created war 25, 50 or 100 years ago have been passed by. We have looked into the awful pit and somehow or other we have had wisdom enough to pull back. We all went through the same emotional experience over the Cuban crisis. With all its faults the United Nations is something to which we must cleave, to which we must give our best because, putting it very simply, Mr. Chairman, it is all we have. It has had its failures and it has had its successes. It is a body stronger structurally than the League of Nations, and I think it is stronger in a way that is often most criticized, namely that through the composition of the security council it shows a realism that, on the great questions of war and peace, unless you have some sort of accommodation among the great powers the goal will not be attained. The old classic concept of the concert of Europe is involved in this realistic structure of the security council. As we have been talking this last few days about the permanent members of the council we have constantly referred to four. Strictly speaking there are five, and why do we do not say five is itself an indication of something very important.

I agree with many of the suggestions that have been made. Much more must be done in financial terms. Much more must be done with respect to the terrible human problem of these suffering refugees. Many people are responsible for the plight of these people, including Israel, but I would think not primarily Israel. However, aid and finance alone will not solve these problems, which are as old as time itself. Man has slain his fellowman in the Holy Land for generation upon generation. There are ancient hatreds; there are remembrances of egregious errors which have been made, of covenants which have been broken, of promises which have not been fulfilled. We would be very naïve indeed, Mr. Chairman, to believe that it will be any easier tomorrow for Arab to speak to Jew, and for the enemies who have just gone through a war to be more readily prepared to work hand in hand and to attack problems many of which indeed affect, if not afflict, both peoples.

So, I think that while we are all feeling a sense of relief that the worst did not happen, and are all profoundly grateful that great power accommodation did take place under the aegis of the United Nations, these problems remain to be tackled. I think it is very important that the great powers met under the aegis of the United Nations. I was not at all happy at the prospect of the four great powers withdrawing to some part of the world in summit conference, thus figuratively closing the doors to the United Nations.

Some things must be said about the great powers. I think great leadership was exercised by Washington, a place often criticized by some of our Canadians. Perhaps the Soviet union was realistic. Perhaps it might have acted differently had not the heroic and brilliant Israeli army done what it did. We do not know, but foreign policy is a very realistic science if it is to be successful, and we have to take stock of the realistic aspects.

The days ahead will not be easy: They will be hard. We have these hard, impelling problems that the hon. member for Oxford mentioned. We talk about the right of Israel to live. That is something that any UN member must talk about. Of course the people of Israel have a right to exist, but what happens if other people say it is a cardinal point of their foreign policy that Israel be destroyed? The mere utterance of the earlier statement puts you in contradiction with such people. Therefore it is extremely difficult to be regarded as uninvolved in the dispute. We are involved of course to the extent that we are UN members, but I would not think that we are impelled to go any further in our designation of who is right and who is wrong.

A lot of people have been wrong a lot of times. The record of reports which have been dealt with in various UN bodies indicates that. I am not one of those who are terribly proud of what Britain and France did in 1956. Britain has done wonderful things and fought many just wars. It has been a great champion of freedom, but if the book were written I think the Boer war and the invasion of Egypt would not be in one of the more glittering chapters. However, that is in the past.

Many errors have slipped into the record. Now we must be positive. We have to work very hard. How long will it take to sort out the boundaries? Will it be easy to say to a victorious army, "You now withdraw"? The normal thing is that the defeated withdraw, and yet we cannot expect that the spatial territorial gains can all be maintained.

Someone today mentioned the holy city of Jerusalem, a city which is holy to so many people. One is sorrowful that these areas so sacred to so many millions have been the scene again of slaying, and have echoed again to the sound of gunfire. Can anything new be done about Jerusalem? I know there were earlier efforts made to make it an international city. Should a new effort be made? Could that area with freedom of worship available to all be made a great UN centre? In my opinion Jordan is a country which has suffered a great deal. I think it is too easy for some of us to say that we could take a portion away from Jordan. This might not be an adequate solution. There is no simple solution here. The hon. member for Greenwood mentioned that it is not a question of east-west but rather a question of north-south. He is right to a great extent. But there are east-west involvements. Some people have long been fishing in the troubled waters of the Middle East in an attempt to cause trouble. While there are many many reasons Israel is hated by its neighbours—if I may use that word in an unbiblical sense—one is because it is the greatest friend the west has in that area. I remember a very wise Israeli statesman telling me this at the United Nations.

Canada is a much better member of the United Nations than it ever was of the league of nations. I think we were a terrible member of the league of nations. As a charter member of the United Nations let us do our best to make the United Nations as strong as possible. I for one am not totally content with any explanation I have heard in respect of the voluntary withdrawal of the UNEF. I am not assessing the blame nor am I questioning the right of Egypt to so request, but I am not sure that the wisdom of yielding immediately to that request can be so easily defended. I believe it would be terribly difficult to fix the cease fire line. It would be tremendously difficult when one considers the kind of border Israel has, and when one considers the geography and topography of the land. It may be done. Something certainly will have to be done. The problem of the refugees surely must be attacked. I have read report after report from the commissioner. We are not even keeping pace with the problem; it is getting worse. We must do more, for now is the time—if there ever was a time when this was not the case—when the ills of mankind in any part of the world must be cured, for they affect all parts.

These constant agonies which threaten conflict are not something in which we can be casually disinterested. There can be crises in many parts of the globe. Let us improve the machinery and make it as strong as we can. I suppose in a way—this is the Holy Land we are talking about—we will end up in the final analysis asking ourselves, if we improve the machinery, will we strengthen our will to make it work. I noticed that the Prime Minister said a certain affirmation can be made but that the question is how to get the affirmation put into practice. Thomas Hobbes long long ago declared that man will not keep his covenants made. Perhaps if we become a little more alarmed at the kind of awful propensity we have for our own destruction —perhaps for such mundane reasons as that—we might become better international entities.

I think Canada, although not a great power in a military sense and sometimes perhaps not as important as we in this House of Commons think, has a record of which we can be proud and surely has an opportunity to continue to be a good member of the international community. I for one hope that we will improve our United Nations role. I hope that we will extend our foreign aid. I hope that we will look at the UN realistically. I am not afraid to criticize it, because I think it has made its way. We cannot have it pass and wither away like the league of nations, because I am sure there is nothing to take its place. Considering what has taken place in my time I am not sure that we have ingenuity with which to proceed to create a new one.

In that benedictional tone I should end my remarks and say how much I appreciate the practical suggestions of those who have gone before. I should like to say that I realize the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been under a great strain the last few days. We all know that. When the chips are down in foreign policy we are not partisan. We wish him well in all his endeavours. We have the same wish for the efforts of the Prime Minister and Ambassador Ignatieff.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Douglas: No, Mr. Chairman. It is almost ten o'clock. I should like to ask what the position is in respect of item 1. The standing committee is dealing with the estimates concurrently to their being dealt with by the committee of supply. We wish to continue the discussion? Are we to continue with this item tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the business for the house tomorrow is unchanged from what was announced last evening. We will call the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Douglas: Do I understand then, Mr. Chairman, that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are to be returned to the committee although they have never been taken from the committee. They actually now are the property of the committee. I am opposed to allowing item 1 to pass. If we are not to continue the debate in committee of supply, then the item ought to be passed on to the committee on external affairs.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, if we pass item 1 tonight the committee on external affairs would be precluded from discussing it at all. With great respect, I do not think it should be allowed to pass.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, whatever is done here will not prejudice the standing committee in the study of the estimates.

Mr. Douglas: The minister may say that it will not prejudice it, but the fact is that if the item is passed by the committee of supply, then the committee on external affairs is not likely to discuss an item which already has been passed by the committee of supply. Therefore we would ask that the item stand and either be discussed by the committee of supply or be studied again by the committee on external affairs.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I call it ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, does the house leader have any changes to announce in respect of the business for tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the business as announced last evening will be the business for tomorrow and all next week in so far as I can foresee.

I understand that arrangements have been made which would allow me, with consent, to refer the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the standing committee on veterans affairs. If I had consent to revert to motions and to waive notice I would make this motion, which would allow the standing committee to consider the annual reports of the department, the Canada Pension Commission and the War Veterans Allowance Board.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions and to waive the notice?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIntosh: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—NORTHERN ONTARIO—POSSIBLE CLASSIFICATION AS DESIGNATED AREA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, after the world matters we have been discussing all day it is almost anti-climactical to raise the point which is now on the agenda. On May 23 I asked the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) the following question which appears at page 471 of Hansard:

—whether it is the intention of the government to change the criteria for designated areas so that areas of slow growth may be included, as requested by the Northeastern Ontario Development Association. If so, will northern Ontario qualify as a designated area, and will this change be announced soon?

His Honour, Mr. Speaker, ruled that the question was too general in scope. I repeated a part of that question a couple of days later, on May 25, and Mr. Speaker, ruled at that time that perhaps it ought to be discussed at ten o'clock. It is as a result of those questions that I now raise this point.

I can summarize in only a few minutes what is at issue. For some years several members of the house—and as I have found from reading Hansard, this is particularly so of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters)—have argued that the old criteria for the designation of designated areas were not adequate, and the criteria relating to the number of unemployed or the extent of unemployment in an area took no account of areas such as northern Ontario where there might easily be unemployment, but the unemployed have left, or areas where the economic growth is slow, or areas where there has been a contraction both of the economy and the population. They have argued therefore, as I have read their speeches in Hansard, that the proper criterion was one that took into account the economic state of an area and all the factors of contraction of employment, contraction of population and contraction of opportunity for developing the area.

I do not pretend to be an expert on northern Ontario, but I have seen some of its problems over a number of years and I have been all over the area a number of times. It is perfectly obvious that in some parts of that part of the country there has been too much reliance placed on mining, which in many cases has come to a stop with nothing to replace it. It is also perfectly obvious that there has been very little development in some parts of the area of secondary industry, such as there ought to have been, to supplement mining.

This fact has always worried not only those who represent northern Ontario in this house and the Ontario legislature, but also the various reeves, mayors and municipal councils of the communities in northern Ontario. Some time ago they organized the Northeastern Ontario Development Association and, if my memory serves me right, about a year or so ago they made some submissions to the cabinet relating to the criteria for designating areas, and to the general problem in northern Ontario regarding economic and industrial development.

I understand there was also established a northern Ontario committee on which there were a number of members of this house and a number of representatives of municipalities. All these organizations and the northern Ontario committee have been saying the same thing for a long time. They have been pleading with the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and with the government to broaden the criteria under the statute so that areas like that of northern Ontario could have the advantage of the incentives and the other advantages under the legislation for the development of industry.

For two or three weeks some of us have heard rumours that there have been discussions and there may have been some decision to change the criteria, and that something would be done to designate northern Ontario. The purpose of my question was to find out what actually is the case. I ask therefore the minister, who is here—and I appreciate his coming here because I know he was out of town during the day—this question: Has the government changed the criteria for designated areas, and if so is northern Ontario or any part thereof likely to be a designated area, under the statute, in the near future?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for being forbearing on a number of occasions when this question might have been asked and I was out of town. However, I am now back and the simple answer to the hon. member's question is yes. I should emphasize that this program is not, and is not intended to be, a program of regional development. I think most people would agree that the problem of regional development, particularly economic development within a province, is a matter primarily for the jurisdiction of the provincial government and not the federal government.

If we were to be engaging in a program of economic development within a province, this would necessitate a joint federal-provincial program; and this is not what we have here. This is a program designed to provide job opportunities in areas of high chronic unemployment, in the discharge of what has been accepted as a primarily federal government responsibility, namely unemployment. The program, and the criteria, are consequently related to this problem.

The program is not concerned with simply statistical averages of registered unemployed. Account is taken not only of the numbers who are registered as unemployed in a manpower service area, but also of the unregistered unemployed. The best instrument we have for measuring this is to take the average non-farm family income as disclosed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and to assume that a family with a very low average annual income must of necessity, contain unemployed people, whether registered or not. With regard to areas having a widespread low non-farm family income, even though there may be very few unemployed registered there it is safe to assume that there are a number of people who are either fully unemployed or underemployed. Consequently, a level has been established for average non-farm family income and where the average is below this, the area is designated. Where the average is above this, the area does not on this account qualify for designation.

In addition we have a further qualification that in areas where there is a higher than average rate of unemployment but the rate of growth of the labour force has been very rapid, such unemployment is merely a question of catching up. The growth which is continuing has been overtaken by the influx of new workers, and consequently there is current unemployment. But because the employment opportunities are growing, this is not likely to be a chronic condition. So in areas where there is unemployment registered above a certain level, in fact 200 per cent of the national level, there is designation. In areas of lower registered unemployment, 150 per cent of the national level, and the rate of employment growth is less than two-thirds of the national average, this will qualify for designation. Again I will mention that where the non-farm family income is below a certain level—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

[Mr. Drury.]

PUBLIC SERVICE—LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 2, as reported in Hansard at page 1081, I put this question to the Prime Minister:

> Can we be assured that the government's legislation implementing the recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada for increases in the pensions of retired civil servants will be presented to the house before we break for a summer recess?

The Prime Minister's reply was as follows:

> I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend that assurance. We will do our best if progress on other matters in the house is sufficiently encouraging.

I want to say that at this stage that reply is totally unsatisfactory.

I see that the answer to my question tonight is to be given by my genial friend, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue. It is difficult to quarrel with him, but I want him to tell the government that I am as close to the point of anger over this issue as I have ever been over anything since I have been in the House of Commons. There is not enough time to tell the story of the battles that some of us have put up for our retired civil servants for more than 20 years, but I will take a moment to recite a few facts regarding the last 12 months.

In June of 1966, a year ago, we finally got the agreement of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) that so far as he was concerned the question of the pensions of retired civil servants could be referred to the special joint committee on the public service of Canada. The only condition he attached was that we must first of all deal with the other legislation before us. We dealt with that other legislation but we kept this question alive. Finally, in January of 1967 the government agreed to refer the matter to the committee. That agreement was expressed in a motion which enlarged the terms of reference of the special joint committee and gave us the authority to deal with this question. According to the report that our committee made on May 8, 1967, we held eight meetings during which we dealt with this issue, and we heard the evidence of 21 witnesses. Our report indicates the various organizations that these witnesses represented.

The result was a unanimous recommendation from the committee which was presented to parliament on Monday, May 8, 1967, recommending that there be increases in the pensions of federal civil servants already retired. We did not prescribe an exact formula but we did lay down principles. I want to say that it was our understanding when the matter was referred to the committee and during the whole time that we were dealing with it, that if we came up with an agreement in the committee that something should be done the government would follow that recommendation with the appropriate legislation.

On May 8, in the closing hours of the last session, the report was tabled. I asked the President of the Treasury Board if action would be taken on it soon. Well, the answer was that the matter was under consideration. I asked my question again on May 15, again on May 25 and again on June 2. All we are getting now is the assurance that the matter is under consideration. But, the most recent answer is this reply by the Prime Minister that he cannot give the assurance this matter will be dealt with before we break for a summer recess.

Mr. Speaker, if the government asks this house to rise for the summer without dealing with this issue, this will be as cruel a hoax as it has ever perpetrated. These people have had the right to believe since last June, a year ago, when the President of the Treasury Board said he was willing for the matter to be referred to the special committee for study, that something would be done about it. This right was re-enforced when the matter was referred to the committee, and the right was further re-enforced when the committee composed of members representing all parties in this house made a unanimous recommendation in its report to the house on May 8.

Now, it is sheer nonsense for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to stand up and give us this old line about dealing with other matters that are before the house. I hope my anger is misplaced. I hope our retired civil servants are not going to be misled or fooled on this matter. But all we get in the house or in the meetings of the house leaders discussing the business of parliament is the fact that between now and the summer recess we are only going to deal with estimates, so far as we can, and two or three little matters of legislation that really do not amount to very much. Never has this item been listed as one of the things with which we are to deal before we rise for a summer recess. I say that this would be a cruel hoax, that this parliament will be acting in an immoral fashion if it goes away for a summer break without having dealt with this issue.

Do not tell us it is a complex matter. It was dealt with in 1957 by an item in the estimates and then in 1958 by legislation. I am sure that the departments concerned have been working on it for months. They ought to have been. We have been discussing the question for 20 years, generally; we have been discussing it specifically for the last 12 months.

There is no excuse for not going ahead with this measure. So far as I am concerned, this parliament should not take a summer recess until we have dealt with the problem of increasing the pensions of our retired civil servants. If we put it off until the fall hundreds of people who are waiting for the increase will not be alive to receive it. I urge that there be no more of this kind of answer but that we be assured that there will be action on this issue before we break for a summer recess.

Mr. James E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the hon. member who just resumed his seat feels very keenly about this matter. I feel I would be remiss in replying to him tonight if I did not point out to this house, and to those civil servants affected, that this question is very much on the minds of the majority of the members of this House of Commons. It is particularly on the minds of the members of this house who have served or are serving on the joint special committee on the public service which was set up by this government.

Mr. Knowles: By this house.

Mr. Walker: But on the initiative taken by the government. No one is more concerned about civil servants, both past and present, than this government, which initiated legislation that brought into being collective bargaining. This is something which had not been done for 20 years or longer. This legislation brought about a new régime in personnel relationships between the government and its employees. The committee which had been considering the matter of civil service pensions was doing so, as my hon. friend has stated, because the subject matter was referred to them by the government.

Mr. Knowles: By the house.

Mr. Walker: On the initiative of the government.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, my eye.

Mr. Walker: The committee reported its findings and recommendations to the President of the Treasury Board. The government has assured me and the President of the Treasury Board has assured me that this report is currently receiving the most urgent consideration.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be far more beneficial to those who will benefit to have a sensible proposal put forward to the house by way of legislation than to do something under extreme pressure that in the long run may not be as helpful to those people we all want to help. When this consideration that I ask my hon. friend to accept has been finalized by the government, I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that legislation will be introduced in respect of this matter.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the pensioners concerned will live to see it.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

TRANSPORTATION

CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if on motions I might make a very brief personal explanation on the matter raised yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson).

I have checked my recollections and they are quite correct, namely that what I said about the abandonment of branch lines was that all applications for protected lines would be withdrawn as soon as the bill was passed. I have had a very careful check made of all my references, and I indicated that in the case of unprotected lines, it would not be necessary for new applications to be made but that the applications would be dealt with under the provisions and with all the protection of the new law, and that if there was any delay in establishing the Canadian Transport Commission the Board of Transport Commissioners has the power given to it by parliament to deal with these matters in the meantime. It would not be reasonable to hold them up because of a delay in the establishment of the new commission, but the new protection and the new provisions will apply.

CANADA DAY

PROVISION FOR NAME AND OBSERVANCE OF NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-129, respecting Canada Day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give to our national holiday the name Canada Day, and to provide for it to continue to be celebrated on July 1 except when that day falls on a Sunday. This bill would make one other provision, namely that in any year in which July 1 falls on a Saturday, Canada Day would be observed on that day but Monday, July 3, would also be a legal holiday. If arrangements could be made for this bill to be passed shortly it would be effective, so far as its latter provision is concerned, this year; otherwise the next year that provision would be effective would be 1972.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF ANNUAL REPORTS

On the order: Government notices of motions:

June 7—The Minister of Transport—That the annual reports for 1966 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways securities trust, tabled April 26, 1967, and the auditor's report to parliament for 1966 in respect of the Canadian National Railways tabled May 29, 1967, be referred to the standing committee on transport and communications.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 21 this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN POSSIBLE PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the satisfactory conclusion of the situation in the Middle East in what I might call an armistice, I would ask the Prime Minister this question. What is the situation now existing in respect of the reconstitution of a peace keeping force, has the government of Canada offered to the United Nations directly or indirectly the services of a mobile peace keeping force, and if so, in what numbers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of the reconstitution of UNEF does not arise because that force has been disbanded. Whether the United Nations security council will request the establishment of a new observation group or peace force, or whether they will request the enlargement of the existing United Nations truce organization will depend upon decisions taken at the security council. They are at the moment considering resolutions which will have a bearing on this. No request has been made of the Canadian government for participation in any force because there is no force in being except UNTSO, and we are already participating in UNTSO.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. With respect to the two resolutions which are now before the security council, one introduced by the Americans, which I believe incorporates in part the Canadian resolution, and the other by the Soviet union, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what position Canada will take with regard to these two resolutions. Also, can we have some assurance from the government that the Canadian representative at the United Nations will oppose any resolution which would require Israel to withdraw to its previous boundaries without a guarantee as to its security and its access to the open sea?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is not possible for me to say what stand we will take in respect of any particular resolution before the security council. I understand that at least one or two of these resolutions are being re-examined in the light of the current situation. This does not apply to the Canadian resolution, which is still on the table. One of the resolutions, that is the United States resolution, has an element in it which could effect a withdrawal, but I gather it is being examined this morning, as is the Soviet resolution. Until we know exactly what resolution is being considered at the security council I think it is impossible for me to answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the security council is in the mood to order a cease fire in the Middle East, would the Canadian government give consideration to introducing a resolution calling for a cease fire in Viet Nam?

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend knows of course that the situations are not in any way parallel.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

PROCLAMATION OF JULY 3 AS PUBLIC HOLIDAY TO CELEBRATE CONFEDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I state, in reply to certain questions which have been asked in the house recently, that an order in council has been passed proclaiming Monday, July 3, 1967 as a public holiday throughout Canada to mark the centennial observance of Confederation day, which this year falls on a Saturday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in that connection. I notice the Prime Minister said "Confederation day". I thought July 1 was still Dominion day. Has the government changed that by order in council?

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know whether the Prime Minister heard the question I asked a while ago. I now ask him specifically, in view of the fact that the statutes of Canada refer to July 1 as Dominion day and he this morning called it Confederation day, does this mean more chiselling away of part of our heritage, when the government refers to this as Confederation day without a decision of parliament?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer such a picayune, chiselling question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Prime Minister this question, which is not to be answered by facetious attempts at wit. Is the "Dominion" in Dominion day a dirty word now?

An hon. Member: It could be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A shameful answer.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture but in view of his absence, I shall put it to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

As a result of the farmers' march on parliament on May 24 last, it was announced that the government would reconsider the request made by the farmers. Can the minister tell us now what decision has been reached with regard to the request the farmers made on May 24 last?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the dairy commission announced last Friday, in a release distributed to the press and the members of this house, a revision of its quota policy and the alleviation of its subsidy policy to dairy producers with a low quota of fluid milk deliveries, giving them the opportunity to become manufacturing milk producers.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

We understand from the reply given that the meeting will not take place tomorrow as previously decided?

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker. We had announced, after the meeting with the leaders of the farm organizations, that before June 10, the government would make its position known on the farmer's requests for changes in the dairy policy and secondly, that there would be a meeting with the representatives of farm organizations to discuss the future dairy policy and farm policy.

TRANSPORTATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of Transport which are relative to the statement he made this morning. The first is, does he intend to have withdrawn order in council P.C. 167/569, which appears to wipe out the application of the new bill to certain abandonments? My second question is, when will we have the new Bill C-231 proclaimed, so that any abandonments which are to be proceeded with will have the protection of the new act?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, so far as the first of the two questions is concerned, I think I would have to look at the order in council before I would dare give an opinion, and perhaps I would not even then.

With respect to the second question, I did my best to answer it yesterday and the answer is still the same today.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question. In view of the fact that one of the key functions of this new commission was to be undertaken by the ancillary or independent group of cost accounting experts who were going to advise the new transport commission on economic matters relating to such things as applications for abandonment, master agency plans and so on, does the minister not think we should hold all these applications in abeyance until the new transport commission is fully constituted?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

NATURAL GAS

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY ACTION BY U.S. ON PIPE LINE APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the possible rationing of natural gas in certain parts of industrial Canada, would the minister consider going to the United States government and asking that government to request their court of record, the federal power commission, to expedite proceedings as a courtesy to Canada in order that Canadian gas may be supplied to Canadian consumers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I believe the federal power commission is very well aware and has said so, of the point my hon. friend has mentioned. I do not believe I have to tell the commissioners what they already know.

Mr. Hamilton: I do not believe the minister quite understood the full import of my first question. I repeat it very simply. Will the Canadian government go to the United States government and ask the United States government to go to their court of record, as a courtesy, and ask it to expedite proceedings so this emergency may be avoided?

Mr. Pepin: Our concern has already been brought to the attention of the United States government.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

INQUIRY AS TO PENSION ELIGIBILITY FOLLOWING RESIGNATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the nature of Mr. Justice Landreville's resignation and the circumstances in which that resignation was induced, will the minister assure the house that the government has no intention of compensating Mr. Justice Landreville by a generous pension?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the word "induced" used by the hon. member might apply to persons he knows, but I do not think he should put that word in my answer.

Mr. Lewis: I was referring to the Rand report, not the minister. He is as innocent as the driven snow.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the report, sir?

Mr. Lewis: The Rand report.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): He does not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the Rand report refers to a pension—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister assure the house that no retired judge's pension will be awarded to Mr. Landreville without the matter first being brought to the attention of parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why I should give that assurance.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: May I direct a further supplementary question to the one I asked of the Minister of Justice, in the light of the answer that he gave me a few moments ago. Has the question of a retired judge's pension for Mr. Landreville already been settled?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the house whether the government has yet reached a decision on the recommendations of the Atlantic Development Board in connection with Bell Island, Newfoundland?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, sir, I am happy to say that the government has made a favourable decision on the recommendations. I hope an announcement of the details by the Atlantic Development Board will be possible some time soon.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF PENSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that the government has seen fit to insert paid advertisements in newspapers across Canada proclaiming the week of June 11 to June 17 as veterans week and calling upon all veterans to wear their insignia as evidence of their service to Canada, will the minister inform this house when the Wood commission report will be received and whether the government will honour Canadian veterans by legislative enactment on pensions this year?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As to the Wood commission report. I had the opportunity of speaking to the secretary in Winnipeg the day before yesterday. It is still hoped that the report will be in our hands by the end of this month.

As to the second question, I did answer it on a number of occasions in this house and I have nothing to add.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. Since the Wood report will be received by the end of this month, will legislative action be taken this session?

LETTER EXPLAINING RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN OLD AGE SECURITY AND VETERANS ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. For the information of the members of this house would the minister inform us as to the contents of the circular letter which was sent out by the chairman of the war veterans allowance board to all war veterans allowance recipients, in which he explained the relationship between old age security and war veterans allowances, and advised them on how to proceed?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best way of dealing with this matter might be for me to table a copy of the letter at the first opportunity, and I would be pleased to do that.

PUBLIC WORKS

AMHERST, N.S.—USE OF CANADIAN MATERIAL IN WHARF EXTENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any good news for the week end about the extension of Pugsley wharf terminal at Saint John, which information has been sought in two previous questions?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was in any event intending to reply to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam because I did not have the information yesterday. It was fortunate that I did not have it because the information I have today is much more up to date.

I am informed that tenders for the main job were opened by the National Harbours Board yesterday and that they are making a check with the lowest tenderer, the Foundation Company of Canada. There seems to be very little doubt, according to the information I have, that the subcontractors will be using Canadian steel. However, the steel contracts are subcontracts by the Foundation Company and not direct contracts let by the harbours board.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT—STATEMENT ON NEW JOBS CREATED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Yesterday the minister released figures estimating that there had been 15,900 new jobs as a result of the Canada-United States automobile treaty. My question is in arriving at this estimate did the minister take into consideration the number of people who lost jobs in the closing of several car parts manufacturing plants?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is out of order.

RESULTS OF SURVEY OF FOREIGN OWNED SUBSIDIARIES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the press release he issued yesterday concerning the survey of foreign owned subsidiaries in Canada. The minister said he had had a good response from 266 of the 820 subsidiary companies operating in Canada. Since this response comes from less than one third of the companies I want to ask the minister whether in his opinion this is a good response, and when he expects to get a reply from the other 554 companies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is in order.

Mr. Douglas: Then may I rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. I merely ask the minister, in view of the fact that the response is from less than one third of the subsidiaries operating in Canada, when he expects to get replies from the other 554 companies.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think I should answer that question because it leaves a misleading impression. Virtually all the companies we wrote to asking for this kind of information replied. A very small percentage of companies have not yet replied, but have said they will reply.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister why only 266 companies out of 820 mentioned by the minister in his report were asked for information?

Mr. Winters: I think the hon. member must be misinterpreting some of the figures, and I will have a chat with him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN SITE OF NEW BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct to the Minister of Public Works a most urgent question having to do with the city of Vancouver, but in his absence and because of the urgency of an answer being required by the city council of Vancouver, may I ask the acting minister whether he would take note of the question so an early reply may be given. Can the minister advise what consideration has been given or what decision has been reached relative to the request that the Department of Public Works make a change in the proposed site of a new federal structure to be erected in Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question qualifies for this period of time.

Mr. Winch: The Vancouver city council think it does, sir.

FINANCE

IMPLEMENTATION OF TARIFF CHANGES FOLLOWING GENEVA CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Because it has been indicated that there may be a release of information in July regarding the tariff changes made at Geneva, and because of the importance of the matter, may I ask the minister whether legislation will be required before any of these changes are implemented?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some of the tariff changes that have been negotiated will not require parliamentary approval because parliament has already authorized the government to make reductions in certain tariffs. Others will require legislation because they involve reclassifications. In other matters, for example, as the change in the anti-dumping laws, parliamentary action will be required. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the changes would not come into effect until parliament had been given ample opportunity to debate the matter.

BIRTH CONTROL

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Considering that yet another great country, France, has decided to legalize birth control, might we not have a definite assurance from the Prime Minister that legislation will be introduced during this session to legalize birth control in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already indicated that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if that is not a repetition of a question which has been asked very recently.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): It is a repetition of the answer, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Administration—

1. Departmental administration, $2,209,800.

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 is to be found on page 200 of the blue book of estimates and details are listed on page 203. Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, does the minister intend to make a statement to open the discussion this morning? I think it would be helpful if the minister could make a brief statement which would act as a frame of reference for our discussions today. It might even help to confine the subject and expedite proceedings in the committee. Otherwise many members, as a result of recent committee activity, I know would be inclined to range far afield.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Chairman, I should like to made a brief comment on the work of the department, and I intend to keep it brief because I propose to deal with only three or four aspects of the department which are of the greatest importance.

Mr. Barnett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before the minister begins his remarks I wish to ask the minister and the committee whether it is proposed that we deal with the various aspects of the department in some sort of orderly sequence. That is to say, could we not take the Indian affairs branch, then the northern program, the parks program and so on, in an orderly fashion. That, I think, is partly what was in the mind of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I wonder if the minister could not proceed in the way the hon. member for Brandon-Souris suggested, so we do not jump all over the place or from one aspect to another of the minister's department.

Mr. Laing: Of course the hon. member who has just spoken will realize that under item 1 in the estimates the responsibility devolves upon the minister to deal with all aspects of his department. It will be my proposal to say a few words about the national parks of Canada and the historic sites and monuments work allied to that, also about my responsibilities in respect of Indian affairs and my responsibilities in respect of the development of the north. I propose to take the subjects in that order.

I wish to remind the committee that again we have a crisis in connection with the provision of park facilities in Canada, but this is a crisis of plenty and not of poverty. During last year the attendance in our national parks again increased by 15 per cent to a total of 11,300,000 persons. This is an indication of the desire of Canadians that these services be supplied. In addition we are beginning to realize that the national parks of Canada are one of the great magnets for that part of the tourist business of this country that comes from outside Canada.

We have worked most co-operatively, I think, with most of the provinces in looking toward an expansion of the national parks system.

We are progressing very well with the Kejimkujik park in Nova Scotia which will open next year for the public of Canada. We have studies under way with Ontario, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Alberta at the present time, and also a small study with the province of British Columbia dealing with the long expressed desire that is reflected by hon. members from British Columbia. Whereas we have five national parks on the Atlantic coast, it is felt that it is about time we should have one park at least on the Pacific coast of Canada. Recently we have given an undertaking to the province of British Columbia, and at the present time we are studying with British Columbia authorities an area that is very close to the Long Beach part of Vancouver island which I am informed—and I must confess I have not been there—is one of the most beautiful areas of Canada.

We have been thinking in terms of amending our act to make it possible for us to acquire additional amounts of sea shore in Canada. As I have already reported to the house, and I repeat this, we are concerned that an increasing amount of our sea shores are being purchased by persons who are not citizens of Canada. We think it is about time we took steps to see to it that an adequate amount of these open areas along the sea shores of Canada is available for national purposes—

Mr. Douglas: Does the announcement mean that the government has not been able to reach any satisfactory arrangement with the government of British Columbia regarding a park in the lower mainland around Garibaldi mountain?

Mr. Laing: I must say we have had no satisfaction in negotiating for Garibaldi park. That area is a provincial park at the present time. The province pointed out to us that there were resources there, timber and reputed resources of metal, that it wished to develop. We undertook to move the boundaries of the park so as to exclude these areas which the province thought contained resources, placing its limits at the sea shore and the Squamish river. We have not had a good response in respect of that proposal. However, I am still hopeful that some day this will be a national park, because it is reported to me by people who are authorities on alpine meadows that here we have an area unsurpassed by any in the world.

We have received good co-operation from Saskatchewan, and we hope to make an announcement at a fairly early date concerning a national park in that province. Other provinces have been very co-operative indeed.

Mr. Roxburgh: May I ask the minister a question. How far have the discussions between the federal government and the province of Ontario advanced with respect to the establishment of a national park in this province? How soon is it expected that these talks can be concluded? How is this progressing?

Mr. Laing: I appreciate the interest taken in this subject by the hon. member. He has repeatedly shown a very deep interest in these negotiations. I must tell him that we are working very well in respect of three different areas. Hon. members are aware, I believe, that the rule governing the acquisition of parks at the present time is that the province shall acquire the property free of encumbrance and turn it over to the federal government for development. Unfortunately due to a lack of foresight which is so easy to condemn, it would be very costly today for the government of Ontario to acquire a suitable area and turn it over to us. Nevertheless, even in the heavily populated and highly developed area of southern Ontario we are endeavouring to develop a park in co-operation with the province.

We have some 998 acres of national park in the province of Ontario. Had we been able to go back a hundred years we would, of course, have made other arrangements. There are two northern areas at which we are looking carefully now, but the government of Ontario is interested, if it is at all possible, in establishing a national park in the southern part of the province.

We are in some difficulty when it comes to assessing what the demand is likely to be 10 years or 20 years from now. If we fail to make some prediction even in our own minds, we feel we shall not be preparing adequately for the future. For this reason we are instituting a study of what Canadians are likely to be needing 10, 20 or 30 years from now in the field of recreation. This is something which is receiving study in other parts of the world, and it is about time we began to look into it here in Canada. Magnificent road systems have completely altered the type of people who are visiting our parks, and in many cases it is difficult to decide what kind of recreational facilities, what kind of outdoor services, should be provided for Canadians in what are primarily wilderness parks.

The need is certainly changing as compared with 30 or 40 years ago. The popularity of certain types of recreation such as skiing and the presence of magnificent ski areas in our western parks is placing a weight upon the service and raising questions to which, frankly, we do not have the answers at the present time. But we are undertaking the study to which I referred and hope to come up with a fairly accurate prediction to show where we are heading.

[Mr. Roxburgh.]

The committee went out to the western parks to interview people on the spot. There were protests from leaseholders to whom the department has said we cannot accept responsibility for maintaining the parks in the way we think the people of Canada want them maintained unless we clarify the position of private investment in these areas. After hearing the views of people within the parks, and of their organizations, the committee substantially confirmed the policy we had set out, that basically these parks should be maintained as wilderness areas with service arrangements under stricter control by the federal government in the operation of the leases.

We shall continue to endeavour to supply the services which Canadians want in respect of the outdoors. It will be a tremendous task, Mr. Chairman, because when one is operating an industry which is increasing at a compound rate of 15 per cent a year, problems are bound to arise. Moreover, organization is not made easier by the fact that this is a highly seasonal business, concentrated substantially within three or four months of the year. We shall continue to do our best, and I want to praise the work of our parks staff. I know what has been the response of those who use our parks today, because we get more correspondence from them than from all the others in connection with the activities of the department. Ninety eight per cent of those letters are the most laudatory and commendatory letters anyone could wish to read. About 2 per cent of them constitute complaints. They are legitimate complaints, too, and we check to find out how somebody in the service of the parks has slipped up. But in general we are beginning to believe we probably have as good a national parks service as any country in the world.

Now I should like to deal for a few moments with the subject of Indian affairs. I was asked to assume responsibility for the Indian affairs branch on January 1, 1966. I have said publicly that I did not ask the Prime Minister for this responsibility. It is a towering task. I have told the Indian people and Canadians in general that according to my assessment most ministers responsible for Indian affairs have been adjudged failures, and that after I have been on the job a little while I shall be adjudged a failure too.

This is a consideration which should be impressed upon the members of this house; that is, if we act wisely, achieve the co-operation of the Indian people and expend our money in such a way that we encourage the Indian people to regain their pride so they will introduce themselves to the modern economy of this country, we will have begun to break the back of this problem in the next generation. Today, out of a total budget of about $100 million, we are spending $47 million on education. I believe most members of this house will agree with me when I say that the gold ore among the Indian people today exists among those who are under the age of 20. We are endeavouring to integrate our Indian people into the educational systems of the provinces as rapidly as we possibly can, so that when they go to school they will go with a section of the Canadian population of that age group instead of going with their own people. We have found remarkable improvement in the many cases where this policy has been adopted.

I should like to say to members of this house that in respect of Indian education and co-operation with the provinces we enjoy absolutely 100 per cent co-operation. I believe there is among the Canadian people today, as I sense there is among members of this house, a desire to do the decent thing for the Indian people. In doing the decent thing I have told the Indian people I will not accept, and I hope Canadians will not accept, a general condemnation of the white man for all the troubles of the Indian people today. I think so far this attitude I have adopted has struck a commendable note with those Indians whom we wish to take over the leadership of their people in Canada today.

We hear a great deal about integration and what will happen to them in the future. I do not know what will happen. I believe it would be premature for anyone to say that the Indian people will become totally integrated and lost as Indians in this country. I think it is premature to say this. There is the difficulty today that so many of the Indian people want to restore the glories of their people and return to their own administration within their own tribes and their own areas. At the same time there are others who say they must become modern and have jobs and high wages just like other Canadians. Then there are others who say "Go away and leave us alone".

Many people today condemn the red tape and intrusions by the government into the affairs of the Indian people. There are those who say "Don't go away and leave us: Remember the historic treaties, the indispensable lifeline we have in the commitments that were made in the historic past". So here we have a people who require help but who, in my view, require the right kind of help.

While I am asking and will continue to ask for money votes in respect of Indian affairs, I have stated to my Indian friends that if we misspend this money or waste it, we will do the problem far more harm than good. Today we are spending in the order of $16 million for welfare among the Indian people in Canada at a time when I feel we could reduce that amount by two thirds if we were doing the right things.

This is pretty much all I have to say about Indian affairs. We have a national Indian advisory board which I believe is representative of the various areas of Canada. We are consulting more and more with the members of this board. We are endeavouring to encourage them to develop the Indian lands, which total six million acres in this country. Some of these lands are extremely valuable. There are some still undeveloped Indian lands in Canada today of fantastic value. Some of these are within our cities. Under the provisions of the Indian Act today we are not permitted to force the Indians to release these lands for development purposes. We can, however, encourage them to do so, and we are doing this. In many instances the Indians themselves are taking a hand in the development of these areas. In some cases they are entering into contracts involving amounts as high as half a million dollars. They are receiving these large amounts in respect of development leases they have granted for the purpose of building houses and so on.

A difficulty exists in respect of the more remote reserves. There are reserves in Canada to which there is no access other than by air. Yet there are Indians in these places. We are of the opinion that as time goes on we may well have to offer these Indian people the opportunity to move from these ridiculously remote areas down to other areas where there is productive land.

I have endeavoured to be cautious in my work with the Indians because I had not greatly familiarized myself with the Indian problems, although I did know a great number of Indians in the province of British Columbia. I am not pessimistic about the progress we have made in the last year. Rather I am optimistic. I believe the much appreciated interest I have noted on the part of individual members of parliament pertaining to the Indian people is a reflection of the Canadian wish to try to do something for them. It may be that our conscience is beginning to prick us. However, we have endeavoured to do something, although in some cases of past efforts have often left the Indians in a position which is no credit to Canada or Canadians.

I should now like to say a few words about the development of northern Canada. We are beginning to find that north of latitude 60 we probably have, in respect of those resources which lie under the earth, the richest areas of Canada. In recent years we have seen a number of mines developed in the Northwest Territories along latitude 62. As time goes on many of the developments will be extended farther north. There is a tremendous amount of new interest in the area by oil companies, mining companies, metal companies and exploration companies in general.

It is my view that this is an area about which we know very little in respect of individual places. I think it is an area which probably is unsurpassed anywhere on the face of the earth for those who want to seek out metal. I believe very little of it has been looked at as yet. Fortunately we have secured the attention of large investment groups in respect of transportation and exploration.

We have done a few things to encourage exploration. I have told the investment people frankly that we have put small bits of cheese in traps to encourage them to go in there. The exploration subsidy program which I announced a year ago in my view is one of the finest things we have ever done, because people are interested all over the country. In the few instances where we have made very modest allowances of $20,000 or $30,000, finds have been made which are extremely important and which have a good chance of becoming mines in the future. In addition we have the enthusiasm of the transportation companies. I believe this north country of ours will go through a revolution by virtue of the introduction of the jumbo airplane. I believe transportation by plane will become sufficiently economical to provide food and transportation to those areas in such a way that this northland of ours will be entirely changed. As a matter of fact the officials of one or two of the mines which are located there have told me they are in the process of reviewing their entire operation in the light of certain offers which have been made to them by air transport companies.

[Mr. Laing.]

I should like to pay a compliment to the air lines which are operating in this area. I do not think many members of this house realize that since six months ago two companies which service the Arctic area have been serviced by jet aircraft. Daily service is changing the situation in the north.

• (12 noon)

When I accepted responsibility in respect of the north I called together the heads of mining companies, and we met for a full day. At the end of the meeting I said "Gentlemen, tell me what the north needs." They looked at each other and finally one man said "I'll tell you what it needs. It needs television". He went on to say that if we could give them hockey night in Canada even three days late the men would be happy to stay there twice as long.

I think probably there is much to be said for that opinion. At the present time in cooperation with the C.B.C. we have a frontier package, so-called, which gives them four hours of television per day including news, some of which is 24 hours late, and this is a very satisfactory development. Yellowknife is one of the areas getting this service, and it is very well received there. We have been informed by the C.B.C. that they will have 27 to 40 of these packages ready for us in about a year. This will bring a tremendous change in the north, because the biggest difficulty in the area is isolation. If the problems relating to isolation can be solved many other difficulties will disappear, and I am sure my predecessors in office will agree that these people have not been properly served by radio alone. They want to see what is going on in the outside world as well as hear about it. I am sure my two predecessors in office will agree that in some of these areas radio reception has never been noted for its efficiency.

I have outlined some of the aspects of the north. There is no more optimistic or promising an area in this nation today than our north. The finds being made there are of very great order indeed. I can think of one example. There was to be a small clean out operation of a silver mine about three years ago. I was told that last month it had become the biggest silver producer in Canada. We all know, of course, about the historical mine at Pine Point. I am not giving any tips at this time, because this is a matter of record, and the annual report presented at the last annual meeting of the company showed $32 million net earnings from gross sales of $42 million. With that kind of thing taking place I am sure hon. members can visualize the type of riches that lie in that northern country of ours.

We will continue to be as optimistic as possible because we believe that the old time suggestion that we should leave the north in cold storage until we consume everything we produce down south and then go north is not a sound policy for this country. If we are going to built Canada in any depth at all it is imperative that we look now at all of its regions. The challenges in that particular part of Canada are such that if, Canadians do not respond with some of the spirit of the frontier, this will not be a good sign for Canada. We are now finding that young Canadians are showing more interest than has been apparent for many years in going to northern Canada to participate in the magnificent development now taking place.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. members for listening to this very short summary of the position of the department, and should questions arise I shall endeavour to answer them.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members will agree that it was good to have a statement from the minister helping us to pinpoint some of the problems and progress being made in this important Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister has been mainly concerned with outlining the progress that has been made through the various activities of his department. Let me assure him that hon. members on this side of the house will fill in the gaps by referring to some of the problems that have developed during the past several years in the various areas of responsibility of the minister's department.

Let me begin by indicating that the old department of northern affairs and national resources was one of the first to come under the scrutiny of the royal commission on government organization, popularly known as the Glassco commission. I imagine that during the past few years the experts have been busily engaged in assessing the functions of the department, and that before too long we will have a report on the operations of those officials and experts who are endeavouring to set up this department to promote greater efficiency having regard to the guide lines laid down by the Glassco report.

The minister made some earlier statements on this subject, indicating that while during the current year the estimates would not follow the pattern recommended by the Glassco report, he hoped that by next year we would have some evidence of improvement and increased efficiency. As a result we are faced with a discussion of the estimates pretty well on the basis of the traditional pattern. To assist in an orderly discussion we will endeavour to follow the outline laid down by the minister.

In the book of estimates the Indian affairs branch is mentioned first. I think that is the proper place for this important activity. It has been said that the first shall be last and the last shall be first, so perhaps I should leave my comments regarding Indian affairs to the conclusion of my remarks this morning.

A great deal of information on the operations of the department was obtained by hon. members on all sides of the house as a result of committee examination last year into three separate areas. The estimates of the department were very thoroughly considered by the members in committee. Many recommendations were made and many problems were discussed. No doubt the result will be a shortening of the length of time required to consider the estimates today. Several members of the committee on parks spent several days visiting western parks where very real problems have been precipitated by the situation outlined this morning by the minister.

Some members toured the north, and I am sure some of those pilgrims who were privileged to travel north of the 60th parallel for the first time during a period of two weeks will have many points to raise which came to their attention during that time. In addition to the actual confrontation between members of the committee and residents of Banff and Jasper we had many representations from interested groups. Out of these will eventually come a comprehensive policy of park development in Canada, we trust.

Then of course there is our Indian affairs committee, which has planned an extensive itinerary of visits to reservations from east to west but still has to get off the ground in this respect. I am appreciative of the operational difficulties because of the crowded calendar during centennial year, but I hope this committee will be able to continue its proposed itinerary during the current year.

Merely making reference to the multiplicity of the activities of these various committees indicates that we have had a busy year; some of us feel, too busy. I should like to suggest

—I have suggested it before—that we might better approach this matter of committee consideration of the functions of the department if we could combine and co-ordinate the committee on Indian affairs and that on northern affairs, which in many respects have the same personnel and are always running into conflict because of the obvious difficulties that arise. I strongly recommend that the government give consideration to bringing together these two committees. The committee system recently has expanded its operations and as a result we are treading on frontier territory. I think every hon. member who has faced this difficulty will agree that the time has come for co-ordination and co-operation between these committees.

I should now like to refer to some of the specific points dealt with by the minister. He referred to the problems that have arisen in Canada and indeed in our neighbour to the south, the United States, with reference to the demands on our park facilities. We have been talking about this for many years now. We had a conference away back in 1961, six years ago—it seems a long time ago—which was dedicated to a comprehensive consideration of how we should best develop, preserve and conserve our renewable resources.

I have made many speeches on this subject in the past and it is not necessary to be repetitive today. However, I should like to deal with one or two specific problems. We all recognize, or at least we give lip service to the fact, that we must expand our national parks system. The only developments in this regard in the past six or seven years have been the Terra Nova national park in Newfoundland and the second park in Nova Scotia which has that unpronounceable name, Kejimkujik.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have to rise on a point of order. These are fairly simple maritime names. There is Kejimkujik in Nova Scotia, and Kouchibouguac in New Brunswick. I think they should be pronounced correctly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What about the Hansard reporter?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Halifax for that lesson in pronunciation. These parks were developed back in the late 1950's and early 1960's, and the crisis grows apace. We need action now, not in the future. Unfortunately there has been a delay in implementing the recommendations that came out of the resources for tomorrow conference and those of the Audubon society which is active in these matters, which suggested that as one of our centennial projects we might embark upon an emergency program of park development. Obviously that has not materialized, because we are now halfway through our centennial year.

The matter was referred to the federal-provincial conference on national parks that was set up back in 1962 to deal precisely with this problem. They are still in deliberation and meet from time to time, but we have had no concrete action therefrom. We all agree that there is a crisis in the use and availability of land in Canada for park purposes, not only for national park purposes but recreational parks. As far back as 1962 and 1963 a conference was set up within the department which was designed to bring the provincial governments, who have responsibility in these matters, into consultation with the federal government so there could be some positive, concrete action to resolve the difficulty. They are still discussing this question.

I should like to pay tribute to the federal-provincial parks association, which was recommended during the course of the resources for tomorrow conference. It is a voluntary group made up of businessmen, recreational authorities and conservation authorities who act without any cost whatsoever to advise the government park policy. We had the privilege of listening to the president of the association, Mr. Frame, and its executive secretary, Mr. Gavin Henderson. They came before the parliamentary committee and made some very sensible recommendations as to how the current, continuing crisis in respect of the use of our parks might be resolved. High on their list of priorities was a program to develop recreational park facilities particularly near the large urban centres of Canada.

I do not have to go into the theory of this matter because it is now so well known to the public of Canada, and not only to the experts. We know about the pressures created by leisure time, the increase in mobility and the population explosion. We talk about these things ad infinitum; we know all about them. All we need now is action by the government. We know the problem, and for the past several years we on this side of the house have been looking for positive announcements and action from the government, which after all has executive responsibility in these matters. We have been hoping that something might be done about the problem other than talking about it.

We are fully aware of the situation in our national parks. We have never had a uniform policy with regard to the development and management of the national parks across the country. The approach to the parks in the maritimes is somewhat different from the approach in the western provinces. This matter has historical overtones, of course. We were able to establish national parks in the western provinces when the resources were still under the control of the federal government prior to 1930, when the control of these resources was transferred back to the provinces. Therefore we have comparatively large national park facilities in the western provinces.

• (12:20 p.m.)

On the other hand there are no national parks in the province of Quebec; therefore they do not have any of the current problems that those of us from western Canada constantly face in the administration of national parks. There are very few national parks in the province of Ontario. In fact they are not really national parks, they are small areas which in no way carry out the purpose and function of the National Parks Act.

Perhaps this is why such newspapers as the Globe and Mail can intone piously and advise us concerning the peculiar problems in our western provinces, as it did in an editorial on Thursday, March 23 of this year, entitled "A Heritage Preserved". This editorial takes a very dim view of the viewpoint expressed by the residents of Banff and Jasper. I think it would be much better for a Toronto newspaper to encourage the government of Ontario to make land available so we could expand our national park system in this province than to turn its jaundiced eye westward and advise westerners on how they might deal with their peculiar problems.

I will not go into the problem of the western parks in any detail. We will have more discussion in the house on that matter in the days that lie ahead. However, I would like to point out that during the course of the committee hearings at both Banff and Jasper we were impressed by the willingness and in fact the enthusiasm of the residents of those two parks to support the principles, the precepts and the policy of the wise management and multiple use of our renewable resources which have emerged in Canada during the past decade. They accept these principles. What they criticize and object to is the arbitrary manner in which the minister and the government are trying, as the old preacher says to "unscrew the unscrutable", unravel problems that have been created by government decrees over the years.

Of course I am referring specifically to the arbitrary manner of dealing with the leasehold problem. In the western parks, because of the peculiar circumstances which I have outlined, when they were set up and when the federal government had control over the resources, comparatively large tracts of land were preserved for this purpose. Because the population was isolated and limited, settlement in the parks was encouraged, particularly in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

So far as Banff is concerned, it was a townsite before it was a park. It is a railroading town, as is Jasper, and without drawing any diagrams it is obvious that the fact that these towns are located right in the middle of the national park will create problems. The problems will have to be dealt with, and they will be resolved over the years.

However, I think the government is pursuing a very unwise policy in trying to arbitrarily superimpose an approach to leasehold privileges which these people have had over the years and which have been established by earlier government actions. It seems to be the intention of the government to arbitrarily cancel these leaseholds, if I understand correctly the report which came out of the proceedings of the committee which dealt with national park problems.

It is for this reason that the members of the Conservative party serving on that committee publicly dissociated themselves from the report. We will not go along with this bureaucratic approach to rights which have been established over the years by the government of Canada itself. We will not go along with the policy which ignores the peculiar problems of the parks in western Canada which have been created as a result of the historical circumstances I have outlined. Perhaps the reason the government members have so enthusiastically supported these arbitrary recommendations is that they come from other parts of Canada which are not faced with these difficulties. Ontario members have no problems because they have no national parks; neither do the Quebec members. This also applies to maritime members because right from the beginning their provinces have pretty well operated within the framework of the National Parks Act. So I make a plea here today.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member suggesting now that he supports perpetual leases in the parks? He has criticized me for acting arbitrarily in respect of these leases, but I would like him to explain to us why he introduced an order in council in 1959 which ended perpetual leases and made it obligatory on the minister to issue 42-year leases only. This is precisely what we are doing. Our policy is in accordance with the order in council of 1959 introduced by the then minister.

Mr. Lambert: The minister is not serious when he is saying that.

Mr. Laing: I am entirely serious, and the bluster of my hon. friend does not detract from my seriousness.

Mr. Lambert: There is no one in the parks who believes the minister.

Mr. Laing: There are a great many people in the parks who believe me, and when it comes to support for our policies with regard to national parks, my policy has more support than the ideas of my hon. friend, who would boil everything down to a dollar bill.

Mr. Lambert: That is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Laing: We will see about that some day, but I would like the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to answer my question. Is he or is he not in support of perpetual leases?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am very pleased that the minister has pinpointed the crux of the problem, because I did not intend to deal with it, nor is there time today. This is a statement which he has made repeatedly, and it is quite contrary to the facts.

With reference to the further exchange across the floor of the house, it is true that the minister has strong support for his policies from the Liberal members on the committee who do not understand the peculiar problems in western Canada. But I think he must be looking at the map with blinkers if he thinks he has popular support in western Canada for what he is endeavouring to do.

With reference to the specific question put to me by the minister, I was not minister until 1960. The minister claimed that the previous administration arbitrarily cancelled perpetual leases. All it did was to declare a moratorium on any further leaseholds in the national parks, which was a sensible policy because obviously the parks were becoming overexploited. In some instances this was used to cancel out the perpetuity feature when some of the existing leases came up for renewal.

We will speak about this in greater detail later on. When this came to my attention I, as minister, immediately issued an order in council to avoid this difficulty and at the same time deal with the necessity for closer control, reflecting the attitudes which emerged out of the resources for tomorrow conference in respect of wise management of these parks. This was a lease for 42 years, renewal for 21.

Mr. Laing: Excuse me, but in the first instance it was 42 years. Then it was changed to 42 plus 21.

Mr. Dinsdale: Exactly; that is what I am saying. The problem came to my attention. When I was minister we changed the policy so there would be no mistake and said 42 plus 21, after which the situation would be reviewed. I think this was a more successful approach than the minister's confiscatory policy at the moment. We introduced policies that would control the future use and development of national parks and at the same time preserve the rights of the residents of Banff and Jasper who, after all, are living in permanent townsites.

We asked in the committee that this matter be referred to the courts by the government. The request was refused, and as a result the residents themselves are taking the matter to court at their own expense. This action indicates that the government has been high-handed, arbitrary and bureaucratic in these matters. The residents of the park are going to be represented by a Liberal lawyer I guess I should give him a large "L". He is Mr. George Steer of Edmonton, who as a member of the Liberal party has uttered some strong words against the un-Liberal tendencies represented by this particular action. I merely wanted to refer to that so we may remove the misunderstandings that have been created by statements such as the minister made in asking me a question a moment ago. I am glad he gave me an opportunity to clarify the record.

Mr. Laing: No, I should like to clarify the record by saying the hon. member introduced a measure by order in council at one time and found the pressure so great he retreated. We have come to the point now, with the increase in use of the parks, that I cannot afford to retreat. If he were in my position he could not either.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me repeat, because apparently the minister did not hear me; I was not the minister in 1959. Actually it was 1958 when the moratorium was declared on future leaseholds in western national parks. My responsibility began in the fall of 1960. We came to the conclusion which resulted in the action to which I have just referred. But in addition there were comprehensive plans to develop national parks for the future use of all Canadians; town planning; town managers; regional officers, and the zoning principle was established to prevent any further intrusion on the wilderness areas of these beautiful mountain parks. This applies also to the prairie parts.

Park planners were brought in to thoroughly examine each of the western parks beginning with Banff and Jasper, then going on to Prince Albert and Riding Mountain so a master plan could be developed to bring park policy into conformity with the needs that are so obvious in these days. A program of new national park development should have gone ahead on a crisis basis. As I have already noted, there have been no further developments in this regard. Certainly a recreational park program should have been launched long before this by the federal government. I hear announcements from time to time that there will be such a program, but the longer the delay the more critical the problem becomes. I merely take the opportunity of saying at this time that I hope the government will come forward with something positive in the way of a program rather than repeated propaganda statements that something is just around the corner.

I should like to refer in passing to the historic parks. A program of historic park development was launched which was supposed to tie in with centennial year. There has not been too much activity in this regard in recent years. One of the two major examples is the fortress of Louisbourg, the restoration of which is proceeding. This is a substantial historic site restoration involving originally some $9 million. I do not know what the figure is now. It is designed as a living museum of Canadian history. I hope it is the forerunner of similar developments in other parts of Canada. Fort Garry in Winnipeg is designed in the same direction. I do not know where its development stands. Dawson city in the Yukon Territory was declared a historic site in 1961, and that program was bitterly attacked by my friends in the Liberal party. They tried to destroy the whole program of historic site restoration for unadulterated political reasons. There were not many votes in the Yukon Territory; therefore they thought they could attack that important part of our historic site restoration program.

Mr. Laing: We did pay the bills.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister is talking about the bills. About half a million dollars was spent in the restoration of the old auditorium theatre. Compare that to the expenditure that has been made on Expo this year, about which no one has complained and which has been justified in terms of the tourist dollars it is bringing into this country. The same principle operates in connection with all these things that are developed by successive governments of Canada. I point out that already the restoration of Dawson city has more than repaid any government expenditure through the influx of tourists.

This year Alaska is celebrating its 50th anniversary and is following Canada's example, stealing our thunder. They are importing the festival and spending $6 million in their effort this year.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue? Does the committee give unanimous consent for him to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members, for your kind consideration.

I should like to deal with one or two specific problems and my colleagues can deal with some of the details. Perhaps we can deal with them when we come to the items. The wildlife division within the department has done a very creditable job within recent years. I was impressed with the publication of a book that has just been made available to members and people interested in the subject right across Canada. It outlines the national policy for wildlife, and on page 4 of the book I find this:

> A national policy for wildlife was tabled in the House of Commons on April 6, 1966. The announcement culminated a process of discussion among responsible ministers, conservationists, sportsmen, wildlife officials and others, dating back many years but highlighted by the resources for tomorrow conference in 1961.

I think the wildlife branch is one of the most efficient parts of the department. I should like to commend those who have been responsible for bringing forward such a positive and forward looking national wildlife policy including the duck stamp program and the pothole preservation program. It seems so simple on the surface, yet it has already demonstrated it is playing a major role in preserving our migratory water fowl. I should like to pay tribute to the Audubon people and the National Wildlife Federation who have done an amazing job with limited funds in educating the people of Canada along the lines of conservationist philosophy. I should like to invite all hon. members of the house to become members of the association. By paying an annual fee of $5 or $6, as I recall it, they can become members and lend their support. This is the sort of assistance which makes it possible for these groups to carry on their work.

Then there are the private conservationists in the field, such as the Jack Miner sanctuary which inspired the annual celebration of Canada's wildlife week. Another conservationist and naturalist who is becoming increasingly well known throughout Canada and the world is Mr. Al Oeming, of the Edmonton game farm. I suppose Mr. Oeming is one of the world's outstanding naturalists. Actually he is a practical naturalist because he is conducting an experimental program demonstrating that amazing things can be done, even in a rigorous climate such as that which exists in and around the city of Edmonton, in the preservation of many of our wildlife species.

In connection with the current program under way to assist in the preservation of the whooping crane in a domestic habitat, I should like to ask the minister whether any of our Canadian wildlife authorities are involved in this experiment. A question was asked about this in the house the other day, I believe by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but unfortunately the minister was not able to give a reply. However, I hope Canadian naturalists of the calibre of Mr. Oeming are also involved in preserving the whooping crane. It is not quite as Canadian as the Canada goose, but it does spend a good part of the season in Wood Buffalo national park. I hope we will give Canadians an opportunity to participate in this interesting conservation program.

I am going to say a few words about Indian affairs. As the minister indicated, the past record should be forgotten because it is not a very happy one. It is presented for all of us to see if we visit the Indian pavilion at Expo, which is having a beneficial shock effect on millions of people who are visiting this tremendous exposition. However, recently I think we have more cause to be proud of ourselves; I certainly agree with the minister in this respect. I think this began in 1960 when we finally recognized that Indians were citizens and gave them the vote.

I know it is fine to be altruistic and say that the interest that has been aroused in the problems of our first Canadians has intensified in this house during recent years. I can remember, and I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay West can remember, when there was very little discussion of Indian affairs in this chamber. Now there is considerable interest. I think this is partly because Indian citizens are now voting Canadians, and we have to be concerned about their welfare whether we like it or not.

The major breakthrough has been in the field of education. I think Hon. Ellen Fairclough during her ministry established the precedents in this regard which are now bearing fruit. She was one of the first ministers to visit almost every reservation across Canada, and her program of integrating Indian children into the regular community schools has had wonderfully beneficial effects.

I should like to inform hon. members—I am sure the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa would do so were he here—that there will be an excellent Indian high school choir singing at Expo in July, though I do not know the specific dates. I think this choir is the only one of its kind in Canada, and consists of high school youngsters from the Portage la Prairie school. I have heard them sing and they do an excellent job. I would say they would compare favourably with choirs of many other ethnic groups in Canada, and I trust they too will have an opportunity to perform on parliament hill.

I do not want to trespass further on the time of the committee at this stage other than to say, in summing up these remarks, that as in the case with parks, where up to the present time only pronouncements have been made, the same might be said about northern affairs generally. I heartily agree with the minister of northern development when he talks about the tremendous upsurge in the north; the Registrar General nodded across to me and said "You agree with that, of course". Certainly I agree with it, because it was a policy and a program that was born in spite of the resistance of our friends of the Liberal party who voted against the Pine Point railway and were generally critical of what they derisively called the vision of northern development.

Now of course, Mr. Chairman, everyone is jumping on the bandwagon. Though we heartily agree with it, the trouble is that there have been no new initiatives in recent years. I know hon. members opposite talk about road programs, but this is a regurgitation of the old program. They talk about educational programs. The educational program was set up so that by 1967 every young Canadian living north of 60 would have the opportunity to obtain an education. This program was laid down years ago. I do not know whether the target has been achieved in 1967.

I also point out that the mines which are now going into production are the result of programs and policies which are coming to an end. We must have new initiatives, a new vision—if I might use that word that was derided so vigorously, even violently and viciously, by my hon. friends of the Liberal party—otherwise, Mr. Chairman, we will have a vacuum. Some of my colleagues will say more in this respect during the course of the debate today.

Centennial year and Expo are occupying the minds of Canadians everywhere. We are all enthusiastically supporting these projects. Let us get some positive programs from the government rather than propaganda statements, so the vacuum that will inevitably be created after Expo and the centennial celebrations are over will be filled by new upsurge of development north of 60.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I want to thank the minister for his comprehensive review of some of the problems facing his department. I should also like to compliment the former minister of northern affairs, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, who has just taken his seat and who has also given a more than comprehensive review of some of the problems that we must face up to.

I have had the honour of being a member of the committee on Indian affairs and northern development and its predecessor for several years, and I agree with the minister that his is a very important department. It also has its problems. It is a department that creates a certain amount of controversy, particularly over its activities relating to Indian affairs. The department has been creating problems both for committees and for parliament over the years, and as the minister says will continue to do so for several generations yet.

Not many in Canada are familiar with the great northern part of this country. I, with other members of the committee, was fortunate last year in having the privilege of flying into the Canadian northland and being able to survey about 40 per cent of Canada's land mass, and in being able to have a first hand look at the problems facing the citizens of the area—and I am thinking of the Eskimos, Indians and whites. The members of the committee agreed generally about what needed to be done. What we saw was a revelation, and ever since I and my colleagues on the committee have discussed generally the developments that should take place in the north.

After all, Canada is a country of pioneers; we still have the pioneering spirit, and the last frontier of this country is in the north. I was glad the minister admitted the importance of the roads to resources and the communications that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris referred to. Our party between 1957 and 1962 developed the roads to resources. The minister also referred to the Pine Point railway and the development at the end of that line that we had the privilege of seeing last year.

At the beginning of his remarks the minister referred to the national parks policy. As members of the committee know, I have been directly and intimately interested in this policy because my riding of Moose Mountain is in the centre of one of the most progressive and highly patronized provincial parks of Saskatchewan. It has been said that in Saskatchewan we live by bread alone, though in recent years with the development of our oil and potash resources the economy of our province has been revitalized. Another national park would give our people added incentive and another boost up the economic ladder.

I was glad to hear the minister say that the committee in that province has co-operated well with the national parks officials of Ottawa in the development of a second national park for our province. I do not know what the criteria will be for the establishment of the park, but for a long time I have advocated that the Moose Mountain area be considered seriously, for several reasons. Basically the area has become popular because of the provincial park, and a second reason for establishing a national park there is that such a park would be close to the United States and would have many visitors from there. The people of the southern part of the province and those in the adjacent areas of Montana, Minnesota and North Dakota would have access to the water and woods in our area. The national park at Waskesiu is well patronized, yet I do not think we are selfish in asking the federal government to develop a second national park for our area. After all, Alberta has five national parks. When the government announced that it planned to create a second national park in my province, or in our area of the country, I immediately rose in the house and asked that my area of Saskatchewan be considered for the reasons I have outlined.

I hope this park will not take too long to develop. It will enhance the economy of our great province. I realize that the government faces many problems, but I hope my remarks will be considered.

Another problem facing our government is how to bring about developments that will help establish our Indian people in our society so they may live happily and progress with the rest of us in this great land. The problems have been magnified during recent years because of the rapid increase in our standard of living. When Indians see the living standards of the rest of us rising it is quite natural for them to be discontented. We must do everything possible to develop Indian housing facilities and education and to assist them to establish themselves in various walks of life according to their aptitudes. The vocational and technical training program which was developed by the former minister of labour went a long way toward giving these people an opportunity to enhance their education in vocational schools so they might take their place in our society. As the minister says, it will take several generations to solve the problems of our Indians, but with the co-operation of members of parliament and Indian leaders the problem can ultimately be resolved.

A similar problem exists among the Eskimos of the north, at whom our parliamentary committee took a first hand look. The Eskimos themselves are co-operating well in adapting themselves to our educational and economic system, but more effort will be needed to solve their problems, and the northern affairs administration will have to make that effort.

[Mr. Southam.]

I am glad that the capital of the Northwest Territories has finally been established. That will create new incentives for the people of the north to co-operate with the federal government in the development of their area. Health services and communications are important for those people. The committee listened at great length to witnesses appearing before it. What it heard emphasized the need for further educational facilities in the primary, secondary and adult field for that part of the country. Also needed are greater radio and television communication facilities. I was pleased to hear the minister announce this morning that there is to be what is known as a package deal for television to provide communication with the rest of the world for the people of the north. If the people up there know what is going on in the rest of the world they will have an incentive to better their own standards of living.

I should have liked to speak at greater length, but I must board an aircraft this afternoon and fly away to perform a pleasant duty in my area. I am to present a centenary certificate to a grand old lady, who is 103 years of age. I am glad to have the opportunity of giving her the certificate. I look forward to reading what other members of the committee may contribute in the debate that will take place this afternoon.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member kindly give the old lady the congratulations of all members of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, pursuant to standing order 6(3) this sitting is suspended until two thirty o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, in introducing his estimates the minister indicated that he felt the portfolio he holds to be an exciting and challenging one. With this appraisal I am sure any hon. member who has an idea of the extent of the hon. gentleman's responsibilities will agree. It could be argued that any one of his major areas of responsibility could in itself provide a stimulating enough challenge and one to which the minister might well devote his whole time.

I got the impression from minister's remarks that when he was asked to become superintendent general of Indian affairs he experienced a sinking feeling. This I can well understand because the decisions to be taken as superintendent general touch deeply and intimately the lives of more than 200,000 residents of this country. His position is in many ways unique and without parallel in Canada.

Indeed, his responsibilities in this area might be compared in certain respects, though not all, with those undertaken in trying to solve the problem of the Arab refugees in the Gaza strip, and I say this having listened to some of the discussions which have taken place here in recent days. I will not press this comparison too far, but one might argue that there is a certain relationship inasmuch as the lives of individual human beings are directly involved in each case.

I realize one cannot hope in a single effort to deal in depth with all the matters which were raised by the minister in his speech to the committee. So far as the operations of the Indian affairs branch are concerned I think it would be advisable to discuss them under item 5 where we can go into the subject more thoroughly. I hope to do so if I find some time on my hands.

The minister spent the major portion of his remarks dealing with national parks and the ever-increasing need for wilderness and recreational areas. At the outset I should like to say that many members of this house have been devoting a considerable amount of their time and attention to the whole question of parks. To the best of my knowledge the members of the committee on northern affairs and national resources, and I think probably all hon. members who have given the matter any thought at all, will agree with the minister when he says that as we look ahead we recognize that with our growing population and with the growing number of visitors to our country there is a need for various forms of recreational areas and that this need will increase by leaps and bounds. When the minister suggested that we should now be looking forward 10, 20 or 30 years into the future in respect of these needs, I think he was perhaps being quite conservative in that connection. I would be inclined to say that we should be looking forward 100 or 200 years while we still have, as we all know, great areas of open space in our country.

Small though our population is we recognize that with the encroachments which can be made through the use of modern technology many inroads are being made at a terrific pace into what until quite recently was completely virgin wilderness. I think of this when I have the opportunity to visit my community where I see what has happened during the last 20 or 25 years to the whole area of Vancouver Island which is part of the constituency of Comox-Alberni. When I see the vast inroads that have been made by the forestry and pulp and paper industry, by means of the modern techniques at their disposal, into an area which until a few years ago was completely virgin territory I appreciate what has happened.

In a discussion we had in the house yesterday I believe reference was made by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories to the fact that one could see the results of seismic surveys stretching through great areas of that part of Canada. This again is visible evidence of how quickly and vastly the inroads of man can alter the wilderness in a very short time.

I believe one of the difficulties at the present time with regard to parks and wilderness areas is that we use the word "park" to encompass such a wide variety of areas. In the term we include everything from a small plot with maybe two or three trees on it in the middle of a town or city to such areas as the great Rocky Mountain wilderness park or Wood Buffalo park in the northern area of Alberta.

I must say I was pleased that when the committee on northern affairs and national resources presented its report to this house at the last session it laid emphasis on the need for recognition that the national parks system is only a segment of the total requirement for recreational and park areas in this country. I think this is a point of view which the minister has enunciated a good many times. I am glad that increasingly reference is being made at the various levels of government to the fact that it is recognized that there must be a joint effort on the part of all levels of government to meet the future recreational needs of the people of Canada and their visitors.

On the question of the desirability of acquiring new national parks in various parts of the country I should like to say that I share completely the views the minister has expressed today and on many other occasions. With particular reference to the province from which I come I must say I share his regret that the government of British Columbia has not yet seen fit to take a positive position in respect of participation or even to ask that the federal government participate in the development of one or more great national parks in the coastal area of our province.

I should like to mention today, as I have on one or two previous occasions, that I believe one area which in the future might be a great natural wilderness park is the Mount Waddington area on the coast of British Columbia. This virtually untapped and undeveloped area is one of the places where we should now be thinking of creating a great national park which in time to come will serve to relieve the ever-increasing pressure being placed on the Rocky Mountain national parks.

I share the minister's pleasure that the officials of his department as well as those of the provincial government are currently looking at an area on the western coast of Vancouver Island which happens to be in my constituency. I have suggested that I feel there is a potential there for a national park which as an international attraction could outrival Banff and Jasper. I have also made clear that in my view when we talk about a west coast marine park on Vancouver Island we are not talking about a little postage stamp type of park somewhere on the fringes of the Long Beach area. As the investigation proceeds and as reports are made to the federal government and to the government of the province I hope there will be a growing recognition that in this area there should be put together all the necessary elements for a west coast marine park of major proportions. Such a park could very well become a major park in the beautiful alpine mountain area of Vancouver Island. An area of this sort carefully segregated from the conflicting resource claims of mining or forestry interests could be something which, as the minister said, our children, our grandchildren and their descendants could treasure for all time If steps are not taken quickly the possibility of this ever happening will be greatly reduced.

I hope all concerned will display the necessary vision and tolerance to work together for the good of the whole country so that this kind of area can properly come within the terms of the national parks trust. Many of the residents of Vancouver Island are becoming increasingly aware of the distinctions between a national parks trust and the manner in which other parks are held in Canada. I need only mention Buttle Lake in Strathcona provincial park on Vancouver Island in order to make my point to anyone who is acquainted with the geography of the coastal region of British Columbia.

It was a matter of considerable regret to me that the report of the northern affairs committee which was presented to the house toward the end of the last session after a visit by the committee to Banff and Jasper did not come up for discussion in the house. This is an unfortunate situation because in my view the members of that committee spent a lot of time and energy giving careful consideration to the whole range of subject matters placed before them during the hearings in Banff and Jasper. Believe me, the matters placed before the committee in the various briefs presented covered the whole range of subjects that could be dealt with in relation to parks. We heard from people who conceive of a park as a completely wilderness area left in its virgin state, almost untouched or visited by man. We heard from people who view a national park simply as a money-making tourist attraction and we heard from those who took a view somewhere in between.

We also had an opportunity of hearing and discussing the views of various officials of the parks branch regarding policies being implemented for the administration and development of these parks. In respect of the development plan for Banff and Jasper, as it has been conceived, and the zoning of these major Rocky Mountain parks into wilderness areas and recreational areas with visitor service centres, I feel this is an approach about which there can be very little difference of opinion so far as the majority of Canadian people are concerned. This approach, as I understand it, is designed to preserve the basic ecology of the parks and at the same time to provide an opportunity for those who in ever-increasing numbers wish to visit them and enjoy their natural splendor. That recognition has been given because of the size and location of the parks, and there is a need within their boundaries for visitors' centres in order that people can find overnight accommodation, be it camping areas, motels or hotels.

The report of the committee to the house, which was never discussed but which we now have an opportunity to discuss, is in agreement with this point. The matters placed before the committee that caused the most controversy, certainly those that caused the most controversy in Banff and Jasper, have already been touched upon this morning by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and the minister in his question to that hon. member. Let me say immediately that I am not particularly concerned at this time about who did what and when so far as the present and previous administrations are concerned. What we should attempt to do at this time is take a fair and square look at the present situation and then move on to determine what can and should be done in the future.

As a member of that committee I listened to the briefs presented and, as members of the committee will know, when we got back to Ottawa more meetings were arranged in order to provide an opportunity to hear from the minister and certain of his officials in relation to what had been presented by the residents of Banff and Jasper.

After those meetings, when the committee was approaching the time of drafting a report and not until then, having heard what I feel was a full range of expression of views on this whole subject our chairman suggested that we ought to put down in writing some proposals as to what might be contained in the report. Following that suggestion I attempted to do just that. It was obvious from our discussions that there were certain limited areas of differences of opinion, and the proposals that I considered for the consideration of the committee did not touch upon those subject matters in respect of which I felt there was a consensus. I simply tried to work out, to the best of my ability from the facts as I had heard them, some proposals regarding what undoubtedly are very difficult and complicated questions.

At this time I should like to take the opportunity of putting before this committee the proposals I submitted to the other committee. They did not meet with the general approval of that committee and therefore are not part of the committee's report. I shall present them pretty much in the form in which I placed them before that committee. I intend to do so in order that anyone who wants to take the trouble of reading them in the context of the committee's report will understand why I have dealt with these particular topics. These are the proposals I presented:

The committee recognizes the townsites of Banff and Jasper are, in certain respects, anomalies within the national parks system. No like developments should be allowed to take place in the future, either in the Rocky Mountain parks or elsewhere.

The committee suggests their existence as permanent communities be accepted; that given the size of the parks within which they have developed, the fact they are on the main trans-Canada transportation arteries, and their distance from other centres of population, these communities are and can continue to be an asset rather than a liability to the parks.

The committee approves the general ground rules which have been put into effect to limit their size both as to geographic area and population, and commends the department for its attempts to inaugurate town planning and redevelopment.

The committee suggests that parliament and the government cannot ignore the history of these communities. Their existence in their present form is largely the result of actions taken by previous parliaments and governments, both before and after the establishment of Banff and Jasper parks.

While current and future residential and commercial leasing policies may properly be regarded as matters of administrative responsibility, subject only to normal parliamentary scrutiny and debate, your committee is concerned that no injustice be done residents established in the parks under terms sanctioned by previous parliaments. This concern has reference in particular to the so-called perpetual leases. Your committee is of the view that, without prejudice to any constitutional or legal position, the government should give favourable consideration to the introduction of special legislation to deal with this matter in terms which will make certain that no hardship or disadvantage accrues to persons who in good faith have taken action based on commitments given by governments in times past. Your committee has concluded that such action is a necessary prelude to implementation of policies currently required for preservation and development of the Rocky Mountain national parks.

Having accepted the proposition that Banff and Jasper are permanent communities within the parks, presently and in the future unique in certain respects, your committee is concerned with the future of these towns as functioning entities, and with the opportunities for exercising civic rights and responsibilities which will be available to the Canadian citizens living in them. Your committee recognizes the main economic base of these relatively small communities is and will remain the provision of services to a large and fluctuating transient visitor population, with the servicing of railway operation a lesser but, particularly in Jasper, important activity.

Proposals for dealing with the situation outlined above have run, on the one hand, from the extreme of geographic extraction of Banff and Jasper from the parks and through "corridor" links placing them under normal provincial jurisdiction to, on the other, operating them in perpetuity under the direct "colonial" jurisdiction of a ministry of the federal government, administered through a townsite manager. Your committee rejects both such extremes. It is of the opinion that the first is financially impracticable, and incompatible with the successful maintenance of the national parks trust in the two parks concerned. It is of the opinion that the second is incompatible with the exercise of civic rights and responsibilities which residents of any Canadian community should enjoy.

Your committee therefore recommends that the government give favourable consideration to the introduction of legislation incorporating Banff and Jasper as towns under special federal charter.

Your committee recognizes that such charters must be drawn in terms which will ensure that no powers exercisable by the corporations will interfere, either within or without their boundaries, with the proper management of the parks; further that the terms of the charters must provide a careful delineation of financial powers and responsibilities as between the federal government and the corporations, having due regard to retention by the crown in right of Canada of ownership of all land within the national parks.

Your committee suggests that, among other provisions, a proper balance of powers under the charters might be achieved through a council with a mayor appointed by the minister and a council elected by and from the duly qualified residents of the town.

Your committee further suggests the chartering legislation provide that subject to the terms of agreements made between the federal government and the government of the province of Alberta, the corporations be authorized to enter into arrangements with appropriate departments or agencies of the provincial government in respect to services normally provided to municipalities incorporated under the laws of the province.

The minister earlier asked the hon. member for Brandon-Souris whether he thought perpetual leases should be allowed to continue forever, which was the word used in the committee. I want to state my view quite clearly. I do not believe that these perpetual leases should be allowed to continue forever. I am not learned in the law, but it appears to me that the way in which some of these leases were drafted comes pretty close to being the equivalent of title in fee simple as we ordinarily understand it in other parts of the country outside of park boundaries.

I believe that the national parks trust is such that the lands within the national parks of Canada should be those of all the people of this country. But the fact remains that these actions were taken in the past. The fact remains that because of the way in which these leases were worded, as far as I can understand after listening to the pros and cons put forward with regard to them, some of the people who acquired leases in earlier days, at least before the moratorium imposed in 1958, held leases that were in effect perpetual. Because of the terms of these leases they believed they had the right to expect their automatic renewal forever, subject to certain conditions required by the department from time to time.

Notwithstanding any question of the legal or constitutional position of these leases, I think this parliament should deal with the question as a matter of equity and the normal citizenship rights of the people of this country. We have heard it argued that people have capitalized on the inflated value of these leases, and this may very well be true. When the committee made its report to the house it in effect told these people that if they wanted to question the actions of the department they could take the matter to the Supreme Court on their own initiative. I do not think this was a proper position for a parliamentary committee to take.

When we went to Banff and Jasper I had the feeling that the people there thought the committee was the highest court in the land coming to hear their case. I believe those people had the right to expect more from the committee than a complete brush-off of the representations which they as Canadian citizens made to us. I think the least that could be done, bearing in mind all I have listened to about the past history of this matter, is that a proposal be placed before parliament which would have the result of settling this problem in an equitable manner. If I may say so as an aside, I think it would be very sound politics for the government to place a proposal before parliament which would deal with the matter in an equitable manner and not as one of legality or constitutionality.

I am not a lawyer nor am I a financial expert, but as I understand the terms of these leases these people have an entitlement to what I would term, for want of a better phrase, some kind of severance allowance, if we are to terminate the practice initiated in the past. How this matter should be dealt with is, I freely admit, a very complex and complicated question. I have heard the argument advanced that the appreciation of these leases has been as a result of the expenditure of public moneys in the parks. The leases have undoubtedly appreciated because of that fact. I think parliament should look into this question and consider its responsibility as between what is admittedly a small group of Canadian citizens and the citizens of Canada generally.

If we were to consider taking action along these lines it might very well be said: In order that no one who has been in the parks will be able to exploit their position, let us determine what is the average increment across Canada from coast to coast in respect of land values. Let us compare these values with those of lands which have been held under perpetual leases and let us work out a formula which will provide that these people will be neither better nor worse off than would be a citizen of Canada who is in possession of property representing the average appreciation of land values in the country.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, some hon. members have suggested that I carry on. However, I believe I have made my point on this matter. As I have said, I will have an opportunity to deal with other aspects of the minister's department as we proceed with the consideration of these estimates.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take advantage of the study of the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to call the attention of the minister to a matter which concerns Indian affairs in particular.

At the outset of his remarks this morning, the minister told us that the government entrusted him with the responsibility of Indian affairs about a year ago. In view of the changes being effected by that department in the area that I represent and where I live, I feel that the minister should also answer to the house for the activities of his departmental officials.

The minister advised me recently in writing of the official decision to transfer the Indian affairs office from Amos to Val d'Or. I had been aware for several weeks that the department of Indian affairs wanted this transfer and I was also aware, having been involved personally, that steps were taken on both sides. I was involved in the steps taken by the authorities and by the public bodies of Amos to keep this office in Amos where it has been for more than 25 years. I wondered why this transfer was being made from one city to another in this northwestern region. After analysing all reasons that were given to me and to the representative of the town of Amos, I concluded that it was more a question of accommodating the civil servants than giving the Indians the service the department is required to give them.

On February 8, I received from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing) a letter giving the reasons supplied by his officials to ask for such transfer. Here is what he said, and I quote:

> It has been suggested that the main office of a new division which will serve the whole northwestern part of the province, be set up at Val d'Or.

I would like to know who made that suggestion. The minister does not say who did in his letter; he merely says, "It has been suggested". I would therefore like to know who made the suggestion, whether it was the Indians themselves, the leaders of the Indian bands in the area or officials who, for some reason I do not know exactly, prefer living in one city rather than in the other.

The minister also pointed out to me that, according to his officials' reports, and I quote:

> Val d'Or has an airport which gives regular service towards Poste-de-la-Baleine and other points, and I understand that that was one of the factors which the branch officials took into consideration.

On January 24, 1967, the clerk of the town of Amos, on behalf of the municipal corporation of Amos, sent a letter to the assistant deputy minister of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in which he said in part:

> The town of Amos has now almost completed the municipal airport started a few years ago and air traffic could begin as early as next summer—

Meaning this summer.

> —since the landing-ground itself is more than sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the airport is concerned, I think the problem can be solved shortly and I know that representations are being made by the authorities of the town of Amos with the Department of Transport for the completion of that airport.

So, I continue reading the reasons given by the minister in his letter of February 8:

> Moreover, Val d'Or is more central since it is linked by road with Maniwaki and Notre-Dame-du-Nord.

With Maniwaki, right, but it is not quite the same thing as far as Notre-Dame-du-Nord is concerned because to get there—if my information is correct; I live in the area—one must pass by Rouyn, and from Rouyn, the distance to Amos or Val d'Or is about the same. Therefore, only the Maniwaki area would have the distance advantage. On the other hand, the Matagami and La Sarre areas and others to the north would be at a disadvantage, because their residents would have to travel farther to go to the Val d'Or office, whenever the need arises. The letter goes on to say:

> The need to expand the office so that it may serve as a regional office is not, it seems, an important aspect of the question, for this need could be met in both places.

That is true, for a letter was sent to an official of the department living in Rouyn to tell him that there were unoccupied buildings in the town of Amos which were large enough to house these offices, and that if these buildings did not meet the needs of the department, a number of Amos businessmen would undertake to build others within a short time.

I continue to quote the minister's letter:

However, I am told that it could more easily be done in Val d'Or.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Therefore, do not think it is easier to put up public buildings in Val d'Or than in Amos. Sometimes, it is building contractors from Amos who erect buildings in Val d'Or.

I continue:

As far as living accommodation for the staff is concerned, Val d'Or, being a larger town, has more facilities; that is one thing which should be taken into consideration, because staff recruitment can be hindered at times because of a lack of accommodation for rent at reasonable prices.

Here is what the tour clerk of Amos wrote to the deputy minister on January 24:

The matter has been referred to the municipal authorities which intend to facilitate access to appropriate housing to employees of your department; at any rate, several large projects are anticipated for the spring. The town of Amos is developing rapidly and will certainly be able to provide accommodation immediately, and even better this summer, for all additional employees your department may need in Amos.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think that meets the requirements of the Indian affairs branch as far as offices and housing for the staff in that city are concerned.

In his letter to me, the minister said:

The proposed district will include Indian people of different languages and religious faiths. To meet their needs and to provide them with our services in the most acceptable manner, it can be expected that some members of the staff of the proposed district office will also be of different origins and request, for themselves and their families, schools and churches which exist in Val d'Or but not in Amos.

Mr. Chairman, there again, I feel that as far as education and religious services are concerned, the city of Amos can meet the needs of any nationality just as well as any other city in northwestern Quebec. As a matter of fact, in his letter of January 24 which I quoted earlier, the Amos city clerk mentioned this with regard to schools:

The city has several primary and secondary schools and is also the headquarters of the Harricana regional school board which controls the whole secondary educational system in the area. Amos also has an Institute of Higher Studies, soon to be certified by the provincial government, which prepares students to enter university.

The Indian population of Amos is already integrated in the city of Amos and its religious and cultural institutions, and every day, young Indians can be seen fraternizing with the white population of the city. We submit that the educational experiment of the Indian affairs branch in Amos has been very successful and that the prevailing educational climate in Amos is unique in northwestern Quebec.

Eventually, the city of Amos will be in a position to accommodate all the Indian students from the north of the province and provide English classes for them, since several requests have already been made by English-speaking families who wish to settle in Amos and are only waiting for the establishment of English schools to do so.

Mr. Chairman, now that could meet the requirements mentioned by the department officials to justify transferring the office?

In the light of the reasons given by those officials and the services which are planned at Amos, as well as at Val d'Or and everywhere else, I have come to the conclusion that it is not so much that the Indians want to settle in Amos but rather that civil servants want to ensure their own well-being instead of wanting to serve the Indians who come under the jurisdiction of the department.

Last summer I accompanied the committee on northern affairs and national resources on a tour of northern Canada, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and I found that in those places too there are civil servants who do not seem to understand why they are there.

Of all places we visited, I noticed that the community where this situation was most obvious was the town of Fort Smith where, it seemed to me, nobody cared about Indians or Indian affairs.

I also noticed that civil servants, in that town especially, were mainly concerned with their own welfare. They are helping Indians to ensure their comfort, but as far as their education or their care is concerned, they almost completely forget about them, to the extent that when we held meetings at Fort Smith, all the Indians and Eskimos who must live in that area, I imagine, were absent, except a half-breed I think.

All that to say, Mr. Chairman, that reforms would probably be needed within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to ensure proper administration of Indian affairs.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, the comments I wanted to address to the minister this afternoon. I would also ask him once again who requested that transfer of office from Amos to Val d'Or. Could he tell us, at the same time, whether the Indians, individually or through their chiefs, have asked for that transfer or whether they have been consulted? In the latter case, how was it done and what was their reply? It would be interesting to know the answers to those questions.

[English]

Mr. Orange: I should like to begin my remarks, Mr. Chairman, by thanking the minister for his statement at the commencement of this discussion. He touched on three major areas of his department, national parks, Indian affairs and northern administration. In the few minutes allotted to him, as he stated, he was unable to deal with these subjects in the depth he would have liked. In my view the remarks he made regarding resource development in the Northwest Territories were amongst the most significant.

However, for the moment I should like to talk about Indian affairs. Earlier this week I had the opportunity of visiting the Canadian Indian pavilion at Expo '67. This pavilion, which was sponsored by the minister's department, was designed and developed by the Indian people themselves. I believe every Canadian who visits Expo should take the hour necessary to visit it. It tells completely the story of the Indian people and their association with the white man from the time the white man first came to this continent. The department provided the funds for the construction of the pavilion but told the Indian people, this is your pavilion and you tell us what you think it should be like.

I believe the most significant thing about the pavilion is the story it tells and the indication of a change in attitude toward the administration of Indian affairs because the government said, "We want you to do it." The story told is not necessarily a happy one. When you walk into the building you feel the bewilderment that the Indian people must have felt when they first encountered the white man on this continent. Then there is an indication of some semblance of hope that they could live with the white man. As the white man expanded westward there was a feeilng of despair and frustration, and finally hate. We see the effect of the white man's institutions on the Indian people and their culture.

However, as you walk out you see the story of what is happening in terms of Indian education today. As you leave you feel that the Indian people believe this may be a time of change and the white man and his red-skin brother may be able to live together on this continent. I was rather impressed upon reading some of the inscriptions on the walls of the building. In the early days the Indian people said:

> We paid honour to the spirits in all living things by wasting nothing.

This is so symbolic of the culture of the Indian people. On the other hand, there were some words that were rather harsh and bitter, not the least of which were these:

> Well into the twentieth century the welfare of the Indian was regarded as proper work for retired soldiers, many of whom were kindly and well intentioned but treated their charges like amiable, backward children.

I hope that this pavilion and the story it tells are an indication of a change of attitude, a change in approach on the part of individuals generally with respect to their relationship toward the Indian people. In this respect I should like to draw the attention of the committee for a moment treaties Nos. 8 and 11 which affect the Indians of the Northwest Territories, northern British Columbia, northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan. These treaties were signed in the 1920's. Certain agreements were made between the Indian people and the Queen, including the disposition of certain lands to the Indian people. To this day these treaties have never been fulfilled in that the Indian people, who incidentally do not want to live on reserves in these areas, have never received compensation in lieu of the lands they were to receive.

At Inuvik last week I spoke with Mr. James Koe, a member of the Indian advisory committee, about treaties 8 and 11. Mr. Koe expressed to me a feeling of incredible confusion, distrust and lack of understanding regarding the position of the Indians with respect to these treaties. The treaties themselves were obviously written in a hurry by meandering bands of well intentioned civil servants who were sent to negotiate some form of arrangement with the Indian people.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What year were the treaties signed?

Mr. Orange: The treaties were signed in 1921. An example of the kind of confusion is that one of the terms in treaty 11 is the provision of $3 worth of shells, nets and other paraphernalia needed for the Indian way of life. In 1921 this amount may have been significant. Today the Indian people are still receiving $3 worth but instead of five or six boxes of shells and one or two fish nets they receive perhaps one box of shells and one fish net for every second family. I am hopeful that the department and the minister will resolve to treat the problems facing our northern Indian people as urgent and will discuss with them the provisions contained in treaties 8 and 11, which to date has not been done.

When I had the opportunity of saying a few words in the debate on the speech from the throne I touched on a subject which I believe is of great importance in the development of the country to the north. I refer to the provision of basic services to the communities there. I spoke at great length about the extension of adequate water and sewer services to the community of Inuvik. I must congratulate the minister and his department in that within three or four days of my speech they were able to announce the start of an experimental system at Inuvik. I know this was not necessarily as a result of the few remarks I made because I understand that action was under way prior to the debate in the house. However, I think this is an important matter which must be faced by the government of Canada together with the governments in the territories, both territorial and municipal.

In the process of transferring responsibility from the federal government to the territorial government I would like to see arrangements made whereby the senior government would take upon itself responsibility for initiating and establishing an adequate water supply, sewage disposal, electricity and basic housing in all northern communities. This is an opportunity for the federal government to show the seriousness with which it intends to develop and is developing the north. It seems to me that this would be a logical, reasonable and practical step.

In the process of opening up northern Canada communications and transportation are two of the obvious factors of great importance. The minister made reference this morning to the fact that within the last several weeks two air lines commenced operating jet equipment to the Arctic coast. This is true and it is a good thing. It is an example of the initiative that can be taken in the north by the private operator or entrepreneur.

However, Mr. Chairman, one of the difficulties with which we are faced is the development of adequate facilities. In many parts of northern Canada and the northern part of many provinces there are periods of the year when communities are completely cut off from the outside. These periods vary from three to six to nine weeks, at break up and again at freeze-up. Apart from the obvious dangers that could arise as a result of epidemics, the over-all growth and development of these areas is greatly affected.

Yesterday I received a telephone call from a community in Keewatin called Eskimo Point. The object of the call was to see whether somehow or other the backlog of mail which apparently exists in Churchill could be moved out very quickly as the break-up was expected in two or three days. Fortunately the post office was one step ahead of us and there was no need to follow up this matter. But the point is that sometimes those in the south forget that a community of 200, 300 or 400 people can be completely cut off from the outside for a period of time.

The point I am trying to make is that there is urgent need for the development of adequate air strips in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, as well as in other areas of Canada which at times are isolated and cut off from the rest of the country. I know the minister has proposed an air strip program which would bring year round transportation facilities to every community for which he is responsible. I know that this program has had some rough sledding at the hands of members of the Treasury Board. However, I should like to add my words of support in the strongest way for this program, with the hope that the minister will be able to convince his cabinet colleagues that the only way we will develop this great northern country of our is to provide adequate transportation and communication services to meet the growing needs.

Within the past several months it was announced that Yellowknife had been selected as the capital of the Northwest Territories. It was also announced that the commissioner of the Northwest Territories would move to the capital of Yellowknife. We are all anxiously looking forward to seeing the legislation brought before the house to bring about the development of responsible government in the Northwest Territories.

A few days ago I said I hoped that the legislation would be in line with the views of the people who live in these territories so that it will be passed readily by the house. There will be a certain amount of discussion of what the government is proposing and I suggest to the minister that there are three areas which he might want to consider before such legislation is brought before the house.

The first matter is the relationship between the commissioner of the Northwest Territories and the minister. If I might explain under the present legislation the commissioner is responsible to the minister and at the same time he is the head of a partly elected and partly appointed council. As such he is in the rather awkward position of having to keep the minister happy and having to keep the elected representatives happy. He serves two masters, which is awkward. I have no patent solution to the problem and I do not intend to bring one forward today, but I ask the minister to keep in mind what I have said when bringing down his proposals.

The second matter that the minister ought to consider is the amount of indemnity that is to be paid to members of the territorial council. Approximately one year ago we enacted legislation which raised the salaries of the elected members of the council from $2,000 to $5,000 a year. We also agreed to pay $3,500 a year to the appointed members. At that time it was said that these changes were housekeeping amendments. If we expect the elected representatives to bear responsibility in the territorial government I do not think it should be up to this house to set their salaries. We should not say what the elected representatives are to be paid. I sincerely and firmly believe that if the members of the council decide to raise their own salaries beyond what is reasonable they will receive their answer from the electorate. The next time round they may be looking for a new job.

The third point that I hope the minister will take into account when he brings in this legislation has to do with the appointed members of the council. I know there are compelling arguments for having appointed members for the time being on the Northwest Territories council to represent the views of all Canadians, because the federal government itself has a great interest in the north. But what the government seeks to achieve can be achieved as effectively, or possibly more so, by establishing a series of advisory groups or committees which would report to the commissioner with respect to those areas on which the appointed members now report. I suggest that the minister consider my proposals so that when the legislation is brought forward all aspects of it can be examined in a non-partisan manner. This would be in the best interests of the two territories in the northern part of Canada.

I was interested in the reactions of many hon. members who have already spoken on parks. They said nothing new, having repeated their ideas on many occasions and in various committee meetings. The one area I wish to bring to the minister's attention is the Wood Buffalo national park. We have heard the minister acknowledge that if, somehow or other, the federal government and the province of Alberta could get together arrangements might be worked out whereby certain areas of the park would be transferred to the province and be administered by it. These areas include the so-called gypsum deposit which along the Peace river and the timber stands in the same area. The northeastern corner of Alberta, as a result of the tar sands development, has become a centre of new economic activity and resource development. When these arrangements I have spoken of are worked out between the federal and provincial governments I expect that the economic activity will extend virtually to the border of the Northwest Territories.

My point is that there has been much talking about this subject. I do not know at what level that talking has taken place but the newspapers have had much to say about the matter. I do know that it is important to resolve the discussions between the two levels of government as quickly as possible. There seems to be a tendency for each of the governments concerned to say: "Well, if you will come to us with a proposal we will be prepared to listen to you without making any commitment." I am not skilled in the arts of diplomacy and negotiation but I am sure that somehow or other arrangements could be worked out to bring about an agreement to transfer part of Wood Buffalo national park to the Alberta government.

In this our centennial year all Canadians should take great pride in what is happening in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon Territory. I listened this morning to the remarks of the former minister of this department and to his biased platitudes about what he and his government had done when they were in office. We acknowledge that there was an impetus to do what they did. We also acknowledge that the roads program, for example, in the north was an extension of plans which were already on the drawing board. We are aware that in the years 1962 and 1963, when an austerity program was implemented, that the unfortunate area to be hit first and hardest was northern Canada. Millions of dollars for the construction of roads and schools disappeared from the estimates. Only in the last two or three years have programs to achieve what should have been achieved come back on the rails. These programs have been added to the new programs.

Be that as it may, I am hopeful that we have started on a course which will develop the great natural resources of the north. We hope that any such program will involve the people of the north in the development of their natural resources. Mr. Chairman, the greatest asset that we have in northern Canada is our people.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee on northern affairs and national resources in the last session of parliament I feel compelled to offer a few remarks at this time. Having been a member of the expedition composed of committee members, the deputy minister and officials of the northern affairs department which toured the Northwest Territories and the Yukon from July 28 to August 8 last, I believe that as a result of this tour we now take more interest in these territories, their peoples and in their administration than we did previously. We feel closer to these people.

I had never been in the Arctic before. I marvelled at the magnitude of that land, its emptiness, the bleak loneliness of the north. I also learned to appreciate the unique beauty of the hardy life which, none the less, does flourish there. In a 15-minute walk across the tundra just outside the village of Frobisher Bay I picked ten different kinds of beautiful wild flowers unknown to the rest of Canada. I also noted during that walk that the white man is defiling the north. We left our bus along the road to take pictures of a beautiful bed of wild flowers outside the village of Frobisher Bay and we found proof that the white man is littering the north as he is littering the south. I had to pick up a couple of empty beer bottles from that flower bed before I could take a picture of those beautiful Arctic wild flowers.

I maintain that we as Canadians must govern ourselves in the north in such a way as to avoid what has happened in other parts of Canada or we shall find the north polluted and defiled, something which should never be allowed to happen. I mention this in passing, and I know the minister agrees with me in this regard.

I congratulate the minister on having arranged this "first ever" trip. It was the first time a committee of the House of Commons had visited the vast far north. I thank the deputy minister, Mr. Gordon, the northern administrator, Mr. Henderson, and the other officials who accompanied us for the vast amount of information they were able to impart to the members of our committee. I also thank all my travelling companions for a very pleasant journey in such distinguished and agreeable company. I also wish to thank formally the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Fort William, who gave us such good leadership during our journey.

The next expedition to be made north of the 60th parallel, which is the southern boundary of these territories, should consist of the Prime Minister and all his cabinet colleagues. They would then waken up and become cognizant of the shortcomings of the present government with respect to the needs of these territories and their peoples. If they were to take such a trip their attention would be diverted from subjects on which they have been wasting time for the past three years, namely, flags, national anthems, political inquiries, coats of arms, bilingualism and other matters which divide Canada and distract public attention from the shortcomings and blunders of the present administration in other and more important fields of their grave responsibility, including the Arctic.

As a member of the committee I appreciated the meetings we held every evening in each northern centre we visited. I will outline some of the needs expressed, some of the progress made and some of the comments, both favourable and unfavourable, advanced by the Eskimos and the Indians. At Frobisher Bay we met with the Eskimos in Apex Hill hall which is in the Eskimo village of Apex Hill just outside the town of Frobisher Bay. Hon. members will be proud to learn that this hall was built by the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire. It filled my breast with pride to read the sign outside the hall linking this illustrious order with the needs of the north. I thought of the tremendous influence for good which the Daughters of the Empire and all other patriotic Canadian ladies' organizations have exercised in the building of Canada.

One of the things which concerned the community council was the need for more adult education for Eskimos. Members of the committee will recall that the council protested the building of a government liquor store at Frobisher Bay. Most council members said it would have been better to build a radio station at Resolute Bay. They told the committee that a good radio station covering the eastern Arctic would help serve as a classroom for the educational program they wanted. A good 10,000 watt transmitter would pay off in this regard. The government could see to it that receivers were issued to all residents and knowledge would be imparted by radio courses to these potentially adept and receptive people the year round, especially during the long months of the Arctic night. Members of the community council pointed out that though southern Canada now has colour television 40 per cent of Canada and the 30,000 people of the Northwest Territories do not even enjoy satisfactory radio transmission.

Medical services at Frobisher were said to be good, and I compliment the minister and his department on this. But the remainder of the eastern Arctic depends on the ship C. D. Howe which once a year brings medical attention to outports near Arctic waterways. The C. D. Howe costs $15,000 a day to operate and we were told that last year it was stuck in the ice for about 15 days during which time, of course, people were getting no benefit from its services.

Mr. Orange: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: When I have finished.

Mr. Orange: What about the nursing stations?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Most of the council agreed that it might be better to have a flying doctor service, especially on Baffin island.

Mr. Orange: They have one.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I hope they have one by now. They did not have one at the time I mentioned. I am only reporting some of the shortcomings of this government, some of the conditions about which these people were rightly complaining. A flying doctor service costs less than a marine service and would be more efficient.

• (4:00 p.m.)

In order to establish tourism in the eastern Arctic it would be necessary to have concerted community development and a very careful policy. I do know there are many United States citizens who would like to tour the Arctic, especially the eastern Arctic. I believe there is a potential, especially in the Baffin island area, which in time could be cultivated.

I was informed that the Eskimo natives are crying for more work to do in their homes and in their fur garment and sealskin industry. I was advised that vast amounts of money are being wasted in the north in relation to welfare payments. Apparently many of the native recipients just sit around drawing relief. Their dumps get bigger and bigger, and so do the welfare payments. One Eskimo member of the council, when speaking to us at Frobisher Bay last July, said "Do not give us something we do not know what to do with; give us something that we know or can learn about, and how to use". That is pretty plain English. As someone said, it is not necessary to be among these people very long before they are able to impart to you knowledge which applies to them and about which one could not know from any other source.

When one learns to know the way the Eskimos think it is possible to appreciate what they mean. There also seemed to be an inference that the Eskimos, compared to their affluent white fellow citizens, are many levels lower in the community. One Eskimo woman stood up and spoke to the meeting. These people are very eloquent. They have an inborn innate quality which enables them to express themselves very articulately. This woman voiced the opinion that there was too much difference between the white people and the Eskimos. She said that the white people are served their fuel oil while the Eskimo people must go where the oil is kept and carry it home in a pail.

I also learned there is a big difference between the pay and the living conditions of personnel of the Department of Transport and personnel of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the Northwest Territories. For example, personnel of the Department of Transport fare 25 per cent better than their counterparts in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in this regard. I was told that over the past three years personnel in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have actually suffered a cut in wages because of the rapidly rising cost of living which we have been talking about here for the past year, and in respect of which the government has done nothing.

I have said that we must bring to the Eskimo people more needed medical services. On October 18 I pointed out to the house that there is a lack of medical services at Pond Inlet, a village of 250 people, and at Clyde River, an Eskimo village of 240 people on the northeast coast of Baffin island. These medical services are needed at those points immediately. Surely by now this problem has been taken care of by the minister and his officials.

The council at Frobisher Bay was critical of the government housekeeping. It was said that the administration allows the dumping of sewage at high water near the Apex Hill housing settlement. This must be corrected and stopped. A councillor, named Tickabick—and the hon. member for the Northwest Territories probably will remember him, because I believe he is an acquaintance—protested the fact that white people have freezers and the Eskimos are not allowed to have them. He said they might not be required in winter, but that they are required in summer because this is the time when more animals are available and can be frozen for food to be used later.

Another councillor, named Uladjuk, deplored the fact that the council has no power and should be able to do more than just sit around and talk. I am sure that all of the members of this house agree with Uladjuk. The Eskimos at Cambridge Bay require more financing for their local co-operative. An Eskimo woman who was in the audience at the Cambridge Bay meeting said that times are changing very fast as Eskimo ways change to the white man's ways. This woman too was very eloquent which, as I said before, is something common to the Eskimo race. She said she is encouraging her children to stay in school in order to learn more of the modern ways of the great outside world.

At Cambridge Bay the medical services are good. There are five nurses in the field, three doctors, and one hospital with 26 beds serving 3,000 people on the island. I should like to remind hon. members that this island, Victoria island, is a territory larger than Newfoundland.

So much for some of the needs of the Eskimos. As I told the house on October 18, the public health nurse who looks after the Dog Rib Indian tribe at Fort MacPherson needs a means to transport her patients from the outlying points to the nursing station and often to the landing stage of the Peel river. Many hon. members who have visited this area can vouch for this need. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni was with me at the time I was discussing this small but very important need at that village. I would hope that by this time the administration and the minister have arranged for the provision of a car at Fort MacPherson on the Peel river.

When speaking of the Indians, Mr. Chairman, I remember when I was a child hearing one of the first Indian songs I ever heard. It is known as the Indian Lament. Many members probably remember it. I should like to quote the first verse of this song, because it is so true in relation to the subject we are discussing this afternoon:

An old Indian sat in his birch bark canoe
And sailed o'er the waters so deep and so blue
And he sang of the time when the lands were their own
Before the pale faced men among them were known.

This lament went on through many verses to commemorate the tragedy of their race.

The story of the North American Indian is one of the greatest tragedies in modern history. We found this to be the case when we visited certain sections of the north which were populated by Indians. Their plight is regrettable. The Indians at Churchill are in a very poor state. When we visited their village, their low standard of living, which is largely self inflicted, was evident. We went up a road flanked on either side by what once were neat and comfortably built government houses. These houses were recently built. They did not appear to be much over five years old. I did not see one house in which the windows were intact. This village was a real slum. It is a disgrace, not necessarily to the natives, but to us, to the people of Canada and to those of us who sit in this chamber and endeavour to administrate.

The chief of that tribe just outside the town of Churchill apologized because of the broken windows in his house. He said that he did not break them but that they were broken by the younger generation who, since the tribe left the bush five years ago, had no respect whatever for tribal authority. I can see a parallel in this in relation to younger generations in other parts of Canada. These Indian young people will no longer respect civil or tribal authority. Let me commend the government for correcting this situation by moving this village to a point four miles outside the town near the Eskimo village, but I hope this is not just an act of sweeping the dust under the rug. Perhaps this will improve the lot of this Chippewan tribe of Indians outside of Churchill.

The Prime Minister has said that the Company of Young Canadians would be employed in social and citizenship work among the Indians of Canada during this our centennial year. It is my understanding that this group now consists of 112 young Canadians, 66 of whom are volunteers and 46 administrators. It seems to me that in this case there are more chiefs than Indians. Surely this situation does not augur well for the future of this Company of Young Canadians. Apparently there is a shortage in recruitment for this company of 2,400. The Prime Minister suggested that the group should comprise 2,500. It has been forecast that this company will spend $2,445,000 in carrying out its activities this year. On the basis of the number now in this company this figure works out to about $38,000 per volunteer, and 12 cents per citizen in Canada including those unfortunate Chippewan Indians who are supposed to be helped. Apparently this group of young Canadians, for which we all hold great hopes, has had little success. I do not blame the minister for this situation, but I do draw it to the attention of the Prime Minister and the cabinet.

The chief of this tribe of Chippewans has said that their greatest problem results from Indians drinking alcoholic beverages in the town of Churchill. Apparently they go into the town, partake of these beverages and then return home and destroy property. Let me ask the eternal question: Why do we aid and abet this terrible curse on these people? These were once proud Indians who have now lost all their inbred initiative as a result of the white man providing them with alcohol. We have been told that when the Indians could not buy alcohol from the white man they made their own. This problem must be solved if these once proud people are to survive, but apparently this government is doing nothing to find a solution.

At this point I should like to emphasize the need to continue the roads to resources program initiated by the former Conservative government under the sound leadership of Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. This program has paid off and the Pine Point railway development is living proof of that fact. I marvel at the work being done in that area and the wealth being wrested from the north and transported by that railway to markets in the south. I know that this is our most famous road to resources. Last year 185 men produced $55 million in new wealth from this northern area. I do not know what the figures are for the current year, but it is likely proportionately greater. This wealth has come from the movement of concentrates and other materials from that area to all parts of the continent.

Having regard to this railway let me remind the Minister of Transport that I noted a number of unprotected level crossings on this line, some of which were in the town of Hay River. There is quite a bit of automobile traffic in that area and these people are entitled to safety signals at these railway crossings, just as we in the southern part of the country are entitled to them. Last spring I warned the government about the folly of building new railway lines with unprotected crossings, and my remarks in this regard can be found at pages 4270 and 4271 of Hansard for that session. One might find some excuse for the lack of safety signals at level crossings on well-established lines which were built before the advent of automobile transportation, but there is no excuse for unprotected level crossings on newly constructed railway lines. On those lines every crossing should be protected. These protections should be as basic to the construction of railway lines as ties, rails and rolling stock.

In closing, let me express the hope that this government will awaken to the needs of the north and the value to Canada that this vast area could become. Let all Canadians recognize this fact and devote themselves to the development of this last and largest geographical and physical frontier of this country. We cannot all live in a narrow strip within sight of the great lakes or the 49th parallel. Let us bury the things that divide us along this narrow strip I have mentioned, and walk a little further northward in the unity that we owe this great land. We must do so if we are to develop it fully for posterity.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, I too would like to make a few remarks on the estimates of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing).

As the member for the largest riding in Canada, that of my hon. colleague and friend from the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) excepted, of course, I must say that there are several problems in my riding concerning not only the Indians but the Eskimos as well; some also stem from the tremendous size of northern Canada and the Quebec part of it in particular.

Mr. Chairman, my riding covers 375,000 square miles and has a population of 128,000. Needless to say, problems often arise which are very complex. I have already mentioned this area a few times in the house and I insist on mentioning it again.

The northern part of my constituency is inhabited by most of the Indian and Eskimo population of the Quebec far north. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I should like to mention here what has been done for certain Indian reservations, because extensive work has been undertaken recently and I would like at this stage the thank and congratulate the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for his great understanding of these problems, and his staff for their initiative, particularly for the program which I would call the five-year home building plan launched two years ago in the renewal of certain Indian reservations of Canada.

I must also mention that my constituency includes eight official Indian reservations partly composed of the Montagnais tribe, the Naskopis and the Eskimos. These reservations are situated at Les Escoumins, Bersimis, Sept-Iles, Maliotenam, Schefferville, Mingan, Pointe-Parent, and La Romaine.

In the Bersimis reservation, several houses and schools have already been built and other improvements made. At the Sept-Iles reservation, the largest of all the Indian reservations in my constituency, there has been going on since last year a complete and total renovation of this reservation located within the very limits of this modern town which grew up and expanded through the mining developments that have occurred during the last ten years.

I also know that provision has been made to move the Schefferville Indian reservation for the greater good of this whole Indian community. However, there again, problems occur and this move will only take place when agreement is reached with the government of Quebec concerning lots, that is the land that is now owned by the crown.

There remain the Indian reservations on the lower north shore which are in a rather sorry state, not to say pitiful. These are the reservations of Mingan, Pointe-Parent and La Romaine and I hope the minister will duly note and that he will continue, as he has so well started, the improvement of the other reservations I mentioned a while ago.

I should also like to say a word about the improvements that were made to the Sept-Iles reservation, because, I said in 1956, while I was president of the chamber of commerce of that town, that the Indian reservation within the very city limits was in a deplorable condition, that there were a lot of slums and insanitary houses there and that such a situation for Indians should not be tolerated any longer.

And I remember that at that time—I am still referring to 1956—we appealed to the minister. Indian affairs then came under the department of citizenship and immigration, which, if my memory serves me well, was then headed by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill).

He came in person on the spot to assess the situation and he agreed that this situation was intolerable.

I am pleased to inform the house to-day that the minister realized that these improvements were a "must" and we are now satisfied with the results.

A little further up the north coast, as I mentioned earlier, there are several more Indian reserves in need of improvements. Some studies have been carried out in this area also, and I repeat once more I hope that the minister, who hears what I am saying, will take notice and will carry out the work to which he has given such a good start.

During the last year, Mr. Chairman, I received from various chiefs of Indian bands in my riding complaints concerning their responsibility.

They were complaining, and still are, that the government does not give them enough responsibility or freedom or, if you prefer, initiative. They are always told: The government will see to this or that, and Indian bands consider that they are thus deprived of their initiative.

Therefore, I think that as Indian bands are allowed to elect and appoint their chiefs—as is already done in a few reservations in my riding—who will be able to agree, understand and come to Ottawa—as has been done in the past—to exchange views with the departmental officials, it will then be possible to progressively delegate more responsibility and give more latitude to chiefs of Indian bands.

Mr. Chairman, there is another important matter which I would like to raise in this house today. Although it comes under provincial jurisdiction, on the one hand, it concerns also the federal government and more particularly the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I received not very long ago a request from the employees of the federal government who work in the far north. They are posted on the shores of Ungava bay, Hudson strait and Hudson bay, all in the province of Quebec.

Following that request signed by several federal employees, here is what was published last May 18 in the Ottawa Citizen:

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

It is entitled "2000 are deprived of franchise". I want to bring it to the attention of the minister because I think it is a big problem. The report from the Ottawa Citizen of May 18 reads as follows:

The Labrador boundary dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland has been depriving about 2,000 Quebeckers of a provincial franchise.

Involved are whites, Indians and Eskimos of voting age in most of the vast northern territory of new Quebec, formerly known as Ungava.

These people, except for residents of Schefferville and Fort Chimo, cannot vote in a provincial electoral riding.

They can vote federally in the riding of Saguenay but although they pay taxes to the province they are not yet represented in the Quebec legislature.

Several have complained to the tax appeal board of taxation without representation while the government works out a solution to a sensitive situation.

1927 DECISION

An official disclosed that if Quebec created a new riding in new Quebec without including Labrador the move would tend to undermine Quebec's claim on the disputed boundary.

Quebec does not accept as valid the British privy council decision of 1927, awarding Newfoundland the 110,000 square miles of Labrador wilderness.

Premier Daniel Johnson has established a four-man commission to examine the "territorial integrity" of Quebec, particularly the border with Newfoundland.

Chairman of the commission is Henri Dorion, a geographer from Laval University who argued in a 1963 book that the privy council decision is legally invalid.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, I wanted to let the house know about that communication. I have here the federal employees' request which reads as follows:

[English]

As residents of the province of Quebec, we feel that we are the victims of an iniquitous situation and we would therefore like to enlist your assistance.

We are residents of a community in the far north of the province, and as such are levied all the provincial taxes such as income tax, sales tax, gasoline tax and so forth.

However, the government of Quebec has not seen fit to establish an electoral district in this area in order that we as bona fide residents of the province have the right to vote in provincial elections.

We have made previous attempts both personally and collectively to obtain satisfaction on this matter, with no results. In this connection we attach a copy of a letter dated April 24, 1967 which we wrote as a group to the Income Tax Appeal Board in Ottawa, copies of which were forwarded as noted thereon. We received a reply from this board dated May 2, 1967, which stated that the board had jurisdiction solely to hear appeals against income tax and estate tax, and that the matter raised in our letter was not within its jurisdiction.

The federal member for Saguenay, in whose federal riding we fall, contacted the Minister of National Revenue on the matter; we have received copies of the minister's reply to Mr. Blouin, wherein he stated that the matter was outside the jurisdiction of his department.

We have received nothing from either of the other recipients of copies of our letter of April 24.

As mentioned above, we have also been pursuing this question upon an individual basis, and we attach further a letter received by one of our group from the chief ruling officer of the provincial department of revenue dated May 16, 1967. As you will see from the third paragraph of this letter, the provincial department has ruled that the fact of residency is the deciding factor in taxation, not the right of representation. We feel that this is a point of doubtful moral legality, with its inference that we must pay all taxation without voice in the management of our affairs.

This letter goes on to state that "every resident of the province of Quebec is entitled to every benefit that the law may grant". In this community, we receive no provincial benefits whatsoever; all community services such as education, roads, power and medical treatment are provided by the federal government.

We must emphasize that we have no objection to the payment of taxes per se. Indeed, we are merely using the fact of taxation as a vehicle for our protest. Our contention, which we must reiterate strongly, is that it is a situation of the utmost gravity in this day when a group of people can be denied the right to vote regarding the disposition of their affairs.

Quebec and Canada draw their heritage from two of the world's oldest democracies, England and France. England won the right of representation in 1215, and France in 1789. Surely, with this great heritage, we, residents of New Quebec in 1967, cannot accept this present situation without protest.

Here is the protest from the federal employees working in the far north. I had thought I would bring this matter up while we were studying the estimates of the department. Although, as I said before, this matter is under provincial jurisdiction, it is a big problem and I think something should be worked out in collaboration with the provincial government because there is absolutely no sense in the fact that in 1967 the people, even those working in the far north, should be deprived of the right to vote, which is so dear to every Canadian.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I will limit my remarks in an effort to try to show some progress this afternoon. I merely want to refer to the use of the parks in the winter time. I am particularly interested in the Fundy national park in my constituency, but my thoughts might also be applied to the other maritime parks. I know that some work has been done in this field, but I feel that the department should conduct a full survey. I hate to advocate another investigation or survey for any department of the government, but I feel the time is approaching when we need a full investigation of the parks, particularly of the Fundy national park, in so far as any possible winter use is concerned.

The park is a big thing for the area of New Brunswick in which Fundy is located. It is a tremendous hardship upon those who are dependent on the park to have a complete shutdown in September when the tourists leave. I know there are difficulties connected with winter operations. Someone asked "Do you have any visitors to Fundy national park in the wintertime?" The residents replied, "The only visitors we have are the moose that walk up and down the main street". It is that bad.

I know we investigated the possibility of opening a ski resort there a year or two ago, but it was found that would not be highly profitable. I suggest that the way people are moving around to different areas in the wintertime it might be possible to plan a skiing, curling and snowmobile resort. These things are very popular. I hope the minister will consider this appeal and have a through investigation made, during which the inhabitants will be consulted about the possibilities of the winter use of Fundy and other maritime parks.

My other thought concerns the new legislation. I believe the minister agrees with the thinking in New Brunswick in this regard. I have read one or two of his speeches and they seem to indicate quite progressive thinking. We have this park in New Brunswick which is, after all, the second smallest park. We need extra territory, and I suggest a coast line area so that we would have some beaches. This is one reason why the new legislation is necessary. I am not asking for a second national park in New Brunswick. There seem to be two points of view in the department in this regard. I hope that, in the light of the way the minister is thinking, Fundy national park will acquire additional areas along the coast line. This would give us an opportunity to have the Fundy vacation trail, and some beaches which we do not have now.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

In closing, may I say I hope that, although I realize the minister has many other problems in his big department, he will not give the impression of not being as interested in the parks as he is in other branches of his department. I have been connected with this park in New Brunswick for 15 years. This is a sort of swan song because I am losing that area under redistribution. I was not around when the park was originally set up, so I cannot claim credit for that.

However, it has been a source of pride to visit the park each year and see the way it is progressing. During the time the Conservatives were in power they emphasized a scheme of winter works and park expansion. Some of this work has been continued but the impression is—I say this to the minister because I know he is a good politician and will want to correct it—that there has not been the same interest in the development of the park under the present administration. This may mean more money, and I suppose we will have to go along with that. The role of the park is changing. The length of stay for each visitor has gone down from 2.7 to 2.3 days recently. Quite a number of these commercial people have improved equipment, and I do not think we need to spend the money which we used to spend. I hope the minister will continue to foster interest in this family recreational park of Fundy.

I hope it will be possible for the parliamentary committee to visit the maritime parks now that they have that northern visit under their belts. I for one would welcome them to Fundy park in New Brunswick and would show them some of the delightful activities that can be undertaken there. For the information of members, a new branch of the liquor store has been opened in Alma, the heart of Fundy park, which indicates how progressive we are.

Mr. Badanai: Having served as chairman of the committee on northern affairs and national resources, having had the privilege of leading 22 members of that committee on a two week visit to the north, from the eastern to the western Arctic, and having held hearings in western national parks, I feel I should say a few words of commendation to the minister for his very co-operative attitude. He has appeared before the committee at various times and given every bit of information asked of him, which was most useful to the committee. I should like also to express deep appreciation to the deputy minister and assistant deputy ministers for their assistance in guiding the committee through their examination of the estimates, and for the arrangements made for our visits to the north and to the national parks.

I should like also to congratulate the minister upon his presentation of government policy in connection with national parks with which, notwithstanding some opposition to it, I heartily agree, and believe to be a policy which is acceptable to the overwhelming majority of Canadians. I heard the hon. member for Brandon-Souris make a very useful and classical presentation here this morning on this particular subject. We agree on many things, but there are one or two points concerning the leasehold proposition which may be debatable.

During our visits to the parks numerous presentations were received from many segments of our society regarding all aspects of park policy. Among all the submissions we received, there were several commending the government for its policy. I am not going to quote them all, but I am going to quote from the submission of the National and Provincial Parks Association of Canada. On page 8 of that submission, I find this:

> As I realize your committee is concerned with the policy as it affects leases, I shall say a word about this.
> We have studied both sides of this question to the best of our ability and have read statements by both Mr. Laing and the organized leaseholders.
> It is most regrettable that the controversy over this issue has generated such extreme bitterness and ill will. In our view, this came about more because of a breakdown in communications than from any real objection to the government's policy per se.

Without going into the question of the legality of the government's proposals, there is no doubt in our minds that there is need for the crown to control leases more effectively than in the past in the interests of the Canadian people as a whole and taking into consideration the enormous and growing pressures on the use of parks. The idea that individuals should have the right to hold leases on cottages or summer homes in either national or provincial parks for their private use and enjoyment, no matter what the justification for it in the past, is an anachronism in this day and age. Doing away with such leases is a problem which some of the provinces have already faced up to. Ontario, for example, has for some time now been withdrawing leases as they fall due on cottages and commercial properties in Algonquin park. We support the government's policy to have eventually only those persons engaged in the administration of a park or the supply of necessary visitor services, and their dependants, as permanent park residents.

We urge most strongly, however, that everything possible be done to avoid causing hardship to those affected by this new ruling. We are quite sure that the government intends to be fair, and will be fair in carrying out this policy. In view of the difficulties that have arisen with regard to leases, we believe that the government's proposal to set up a crown corporation to deal with this matter in future deserves consideration. Its terms of reference and the composition of its board of directors will need to be given most careful study, however, if the corporation is to function effectively and its influence kept within bounds. Great care will have to be taken if the corporation is established to see it is not able to wield power for which it does not have to account; nor must its powers enable it to influence policy in areas other than leasing. In other words, it must be an instrument for carrying out policy, not creating it.

A little bit of history may be appropriate at this point. When the first national park was established there was discussion in the House of Commons over proposed lease terms. Provision was made to grant leases for terms of 42 years with provision for repeated renewal—in other words, in perpetuity. Due, to a very great extent, to the very large capital expenditures by the federal government and to the enormous increase in park visitors, especially in recent years, the value of leasehold property has been greatly enhanced. As a result, sales of leasehold interests have often been made involving exorbitant profit to the leaseholder with no commensurate return to the landlord—the citizens of Canada. Today there are approximately 2,500 leases and licences of occupation in existence. Seventy per cent are old leases containing renewal clauses on expiration of each 42 years. Fourteen per cent are for 42 years, with provision for a single renewal for 21 years. The remaining 16 per cent have been issued since 1962 and are for 42 years or less without provision for renewal.

In all leases, the crown reserved certain rights, such as the prohibition of assignment without the written consent of the minister, and the right to review periodically the rent charged and to charge a rent equal to the annual value of the land.

The objectives of the national parks system are, first, to ensure the national park lands are passed on to future generations; second, to provide for the best use of the national parks consistent with their intended purpose; third, to serve the people in an effective and meaningful manner by helping them to understand and enjoy the parks; fourth, to encourage private enterprise to invest in and manage appropriate facilities for the visiting public inside and adjacent to parks, complementing governmental developments; and fifth, to expand the system adequately in every region of Canada.

I realize that among the many submissions we received from the residents of Banff and Jasper there may be some whose cases may deserve some special consideration. I am sure the minister is only too happy to take their cases into consideration.

Before I leave the question of national parks I would like to recommend to the minister that some serious consideration be given to the establishment of a national park in the lakehead region, where a beautiful chain of mountains, known as the great northwest, are situated almost at the gate of Fort William.

I have indicated to the minister the desire in this respect of the lakehead chamber of commerce, enthusiastically supported by the publisher of the Daily Times-Journal of Fort William, whose name is George Macgillivray, a member of the clan of Sir William Macgillivray, a governor of the Hudson Bay port in Fort William, after whom the city was named.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox for his kind remarks and for giving us a comprehensive and interesting report on the visit of the committee to the Canadian Arctic. His assessment of our visit demonstrated the co-operative and friendly spirit which animated every member of my committee.

Just a few words about the north, Mr. Chairman. During our visit to the north the committee held meetings at every point, from the east to the west, and the report which was presented to the house last September reveals some of the problems the remedying of which should present no difficulty to the government. One of these was the matter of radio and television, which the minister has indicated today will be taken care of gradually beginning with the T.V. station at Yellowknife.

One thing which was brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories during the throne speech debate was the provision of water and sewage services to the west end of the town of Inuvik, as the centre and east parts of the town are already serviced by utilidors.

There are many other questions that I could touch upon, but I see that there are other members anxious to speak on these estimates and I will therefore not prolong my remarks, except to say that the committee has served a useful purpose by visiting the far north and the western national parks, which now leaves the need for a visit to the eastern national parks which I hope the house will authorize to be made this fall.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members business, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, would you permit me to make a suggestion. I thought that if we could possibly conclude the estimates of my department this afternoon there might be some inclination on the part of members of the committee to forgo private members hour on condition of course that the time would not be lost but would be picked up again later. That is just a suggestion I make. On the other hand, if members would indicate that they want separate items brought up on another day, probably we should go over to private members hour. However, I thought that if there was a chance of concluding the estimates there might be some merit in continuing.

The Chairman: If there is any inclination on the part of members of the committee to continue with the estimates of this department, I think this should be discussed with Mr. Speaker in the chair. To do otherwise would be to dispense with a standing order of the house.

Progress reported.

• (5:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I object to the suggestion of the minister. Our party has two speakers who wanted to speak, but we cannot get in touch with them now. I am afraid that I cannot agree to the minister's suggestion. Had we had notice of his intention we could have got in touch with those two speakers.

Mr. Barnett: With respect to what was said by the Conservative whip, we could agree to going on with the estimates in place of the private members hour, but that should not be taken as implying that we would agree to finishing the consideration of the entire estimates. Possibly we might finish discussing item 1. I do not know if my suggestion would meet the requirements of the Conservative whip, but if we completed item 1 we might leave the consideration of the other aspects of the administration of the department and its branches to another day.

Mr. Rapp: Let item 1 stand.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is it the suggestion that we continue with the estimates, rather than proceeding with private members hour?

Mr. Laing: That is a suggestion.

Mr. Dinsdale: Unfortunately the minister's suggestion came unexpectedly. One or two members of this party wish to speak on the first item, and I think it would be only fair to them to leave that item open, to allow those hon. members who had wanted to talk on it the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Laing: In light of what I said at first, I think it would be better if the house proceeded to consideration of private members hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members hour as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

Mr. Pilon: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the government may items Nos. 1 to 5 on today's order paper listed under public bills be allowed to stand? Would Your Honour proceed with item No. 6, second reading of Bill C-9 to license and regulate the operation of rainmaking equipment.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RAINMAKING EQUIPMENT

PROVISION FOR LICENSING AND REGULATION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-9, to govern, license and regulate the operation of rainmaking equipment in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the short title of this bill is a misnomer, because I am interested in legislation to deal with techniques which have recently been devised which affect the weather, and in that way constitute an interference with the weather enjoyed by individuals. It is suggested that in these days the weather can be influenced by technology, which involves seeding clouds by the use of silver nitrate and iodine crystals, as well as other crystals which mix with the clouds, thus causing precipitation. The theory is that these crystals have an affinity for water, and if they are released into the air, under certain conditions with appropriate temperatures the molecules of water in clouds are drawn together with the molecules in the crystals; heavier water molecules are created and these, in turn, fall to the earth in the form of precipitation.

It is debatable whether one can make rain, though this subject has been discussed on the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I do not refer to the sort of rainmaking that the Indians engaged in with some success over the years. Hon. members may remember a court case on this continent that took place a few years ago, where the Indians were sued for large sums of money for causing a catastrophe by making rain. The Indians were hired to make rain; they were hired to make a reasonable amount of rain and the rain came, but it kept coming and coming. Eventually there was a flood and the Indians were sued because of the calamity that developed. Whether such a thing is possible I do not know, but I do know that it is possible, from scientific advances, to change atmospheric conditions so as to produce rain. Rain may be produced, provided other conditions are suitable.

Several departments of the provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec have been using rainmaking equipment to help to prevent forest fires. In Ontario, especially, a great deal of discussion has taken place in certain communities about the question of rainmaking. Several years ago the housewives of the Lake St. John area complained that, because of certain activity by the Department of Transport, they had not been able to dry their clothes for 60 days. In that period the sun never shone and it rained every day. The transport department at that time were conducting tests to determine the efficiency of rainmaking equipment in that area. The surprising thing is that when this activity stopped, after the housewives had complained, the weather cleared, the rain disappeared and fair weather followed immediately.

Hon. members may also remember what happened when the Ontario government used rainmaking equipment to solve some problems that farmers experienced. At that time there was a motion to adjourn the legislature under the special section which calls for the consideration of an immediate national problem. There was discussion about the drought which had been recurring over a period of years in the Renfrew area. The provincial government, to solve the difficulty, finally authorized $250,000 to be spent to hire a United States firm of rainmakers. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the firm brought its equipment to the Ottawa valley and—this may be taken as coming from Ripley's "Believe it or Not"—on that very day, when the matter was being discussed in the legislature, the rain began. The equipment was operating, though the company said that it had not influenced what happened on that day.

The house may remember that the farmers were again in difficulty later on because the rain did not stop once it had started; they found themselves facing, not drought but an overabundance of moisture. Whether or not the rain making equipment in use today achieves the results which the farmers allege, I cannot claim to know with any certainty. In many of the areas where this equipment has been used the farmers claim there is a "yo-yo" effect; the crystals are sent into the air by the use of a heat generator; they are carried by the clouds for a period before rain is produced, and then they fall back to the earth along with the rain. There are farmers who say that as soon as the sun comes out the crystals warm up, become lighter than air and rise into the clouds causing rain to fall again.

I know that in my own area where this equipment was used extensively some years back, no cloud passed over without some precipitation falling, even though in some cases it was very little. The department of lands and forests has been using these methods for some time, with limited success, as far as I know. The difficulty appears to be that after a cloud has been seeded the wind can change and the rain can fall where it is not needed.

This is what happened when the department seeded clouds for the purpose of dampening down forest fires. The prevailing wind changed and rain fell on agricultural land where it was not needed. This lack of assurance that rain will fall where it is intended to fall is another factor which affects the need to licence rain-making equipment. If this was a skilled science, as some of the companies operating this equipment would have us believe, it would be possible for a man to seed clouds in such a way that rain would fall on his neighbour's property. This is not possible. It is all too likely to fall on his own property or on the wrong neighbour's property. This is not a field where provincial jursdiction is applicable. The winds know no boundaries and the results of this rain making are interprovincial in scope. For this reason I believe the federal government should assume responsibility for the control of the equipment used.

I am not proposing that rain making equipment should be prohibited. What I am proposing is that it should be licensed so that the government would have a measure of control over those who operate it and where it is used, in order to be in a position to judge whether rain falling in a given area had been brought about by those who were operating these machines and who might therefore be responsible for any damage caused to other parties.

In the example I gave, equipment was being operated in northern Ontario by the Ontario government's department of lands and forests. Damage was caused to agricultural communities which had no connection with that department at all. After it had been assessed the federal government had to make grants to assist farmers who had lost crops because of the continuing rain. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was in the area at the time—an election was in progress—and he promised immediate relief to those concerned. Incidentally, this was not forthcoming. Indeed I wonder whether the federal government really had any responsibility; the fact that the provincial government took certain action is no reason for the federal government undertaking to pick up the tab.

The simple purpose of this bill is to licence, rainmaking equipment, thus allowing for records to be kept and the consequent assessment of any damage which might be claimed. Hon. members may say that this is not the responsibility of government. I would point out to them that in many parts of the country it is necessary to obtain a fire permit before burning any cover or brush during certain periods. A permit is required so that if a fire gets out of control the man responsible for it may be held liable for any damage caused.

There is not much difference between this and the circumstances I have been discussing. I believe everyone who has studied this subject agrees that it is possible to cause rain to fall in certain conditions. Provincial governments are certainly aware of the technical advances which have been made, otherwise they could not pay for rainmaking services and equipment. Incidentally, when I talked to the minister of agriculture down in Ontario he told me they did not know what to do about the drought in the Renfrew area and had hired rainmaking equipment as a last resort. A year later he told me his department had still not been able to assess whether $250,000 of benefit had been received from that equipment or whether rain would have fallen anyway. But in order to satisfy the public and keep the farmers off their backs the department had undertaken this expense, with considerable success, it would appear; in fact it was greater than anticipated and, in the end, became a liability.

I know that some hon. members will take lightly this idea that rainmaking equipment should be licensed. Perhaps they have not looked into the technical aspects of this operation. If they do, they will probably be as interested as I am in some of the things which the professors and technicians have been accomplishing in this field. As I say, there is general agreement that in certain conditions rain can be induced to fall from clouds which otherwise would not have released rain in a given locality.

I think that most members, if they really think about the situation, will agree that the licensing and regulations which the government should establish around rainmaking equipment and which would be to the advantage of those operating the equipment and those who are paying for the use of the rainmaking equipment, would eliminate the valid objection by other people to the making of rain with this type of equipment. They will know that there is an avenue open to them to ascertain whether or not the equipment itself has been responsible for the creation of their damage and that there will be an opportunity for them to claim compensation for any damage caused to them as a result of the use of this equipment.

I do not expect that this bill will be passed today. We do not usually pass private members bills. I do suggest, however, that hon. members who are interested in agriculture, forestry and in fact in any control over our natural resources should be interested in the bill. I certainly would be pleased to support any government legislation which may flow from what I think is a new problem and one which will grow considerably with the technical advances that are being made in this particular field.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised that other members of the house are not in a rush to speak on this very interesting subject. I should like to say a few words in support of the bill which has been brought before us by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I was rather interested in the situation which developed in eastern Canada a while ago when the authorities of the province of Ontario undertook a program of seeking to induce rain by means of cloud seeding equipment. A few years ago similar events took place in the province of British Columbia, in the area of Canada which I represent in this house. At that time the then B.C. power commission and also the then Powell River company installed silver iodide generators for the purpose of inducing rainfall into the watershed areas which provide the source of supply for the dams for power purposes, in the case of the B.C. power commission, and for the supply of water for the production of pulp and paper in the case of the Powell River company.

So far as I know I was the first member ever to introduce this subject on the floor of the House of Commons. At least I had that impression from a discussion I had afterward with the then minister of justice, Hon. Stuart Garson. I may say, as a result of having raised this matter for the first time, among certain members of the house I was unofficially known by the nickname "Rainmaker". It was the then hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, Mr. Jack MacDougall, who tagged me with that label. He was rather fond of giving nicknames to members.

I should like to say that I raised the matter as a question which should receive consideration by the government because I expected, if this development continued, that the kind of problems which have been raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming in his speech, concerning the right of a certain individual or a corporation to take action which might affect the rights and well being of others, would arise.

I remember that I used the example of the farmer who had his hay out in the fields to dry when the B.C. power commission decided to precipitate rain in that particular area. In my view the potential infringement of the rights of the farmer was there. One question of course which immediately arises in a consideration of this kind, in a federal state such as ours, is as to where the jurisdiction lies. Is it a federal or a provincial matter? I argued then, and I argue still, that certainly the weatherman knows no provincial boundaries and that the conditions which create weather conditions, be they rain, sunshine, drought or flood, certainly are not confined within the boundaries of any individual province. It seems to me therefore that any legislation in this field probably lies within the jurisdiction of the federal authorities.

I think the proposal of my colleague that this regulation, through licence, should come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, is an appropriate one, because as we all know the meteorological services which would provide the basic data on which to base any control or regulation come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. It is for that reason I believe this bill should receive serious consideration. I know there are questions which remain concerning the technical or technological efficacy of the various devices which have been used for cloud seeding, be they devices operated from the ground or devices used from airplanes in dispersing the silver iodide crystals which I understand are the generally used medium for helping the formation of the kind of water droplets which become heavy enough to be precipitated to the earth in the form of rain.

All too often it seems to me we have a tendency to lock the barn door after the horse has been stolen, as the old saying goes. In other words, in this chamber, we are not moved to the point of legislating until a situation involving serious damage or trouble has occurred. In view of the fact that we do know that there are established business concerns which are in the business of providing this service, and in view of the fact that we do know that provincial authorities and publicly owned corporations such as the B.C. power commission have taken this seriously enough to actually engage business firms to carry out this type of operation, it seems to me it would be quite appropriate that we should not be reluctant to agree to provide to a responsible jurisdiction control and licensing over such operations.

It is for these reasons that I thought I should like to say a few words in support of Bill No. C-9, which has been put before us by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there is a story that a Russian meteorologist by the name of Rudolf was lecturing on the subject of rainmaking one evening when a member of the audience turned to his wife and said, "Rudolph, the red, knows rain, dear".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deachman: I want to say that having listened to their able addresses, it is apparent the two gentlemen opposite also know something about rain. Being a member from the city of Vancouver I have some slight acquaintance with this subject as well.

I enter this debate this afternoon not because I am an authority on rain making, and indeed not because I have prepared myself to address the house on this subject, but because—

Mr. Knowles: Because you were drafted.

Mr. Deachman: —I was drafted in the absence of another member, who I am sure, if he were here, could deliver a very, learned lecture on this subject. He left me an abundance of papers and I should like to deal with them for a few moments because they cast some interesting light on this subject.

When we discuss a technical subject of this kind in the house during these last hours of the week, and if the subject is technical enough, some executive assistant is asked to go back and dig out the material that has been put together by experts of various departments in order to deal intelligently with the subject. In this way he can outline to hon. members what the government is doing and what the policy may be. In this particular case the government takes the subject quite seriously, and a considerable amount of work has taken place in the Department of Transport and in the meteorological branch in an attempt to follow the experiments of the emerging science of cloud seeding, and its importance in influencing rainfall. It is interesting to note that some of the material which has come into my hands as a result of drafting this effort this afternoon indicates the amount of material which is available to us on this subject.

I have a memo from which I should like to read a few sentences, because it helps to shed some light on the background of this subject. In part it states:

> From 1959 to 1963 inclusive, a precipitation physics project was carried on by the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport in the Rouyn-Noranda area of the province of Quebec.

That is an area in the neighbourhood of the riding of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). Members will recall that during the last session of parliament this subject seemed to frighten the living daylights out of that gentleman from time to time, probably because he thought that the opposition was attempting to bring down thunderclouds on his head.

The memo then goes on to state that an aircraft was fitted out with instruments for taking physical measurements of precipitation mechanisms, and at the same time to conduct an investigation to evaluate the effect of cloud seeding. The memo states:

> Two areas in Quebec, along the border of Ontario in the vicinity of Rouyn-Noranda, were chosen for these cloud seeding experiments. The areas were approximately 35 miles square and 35 miles apart... On suitable occasions, clouds already producing rain upwind of one of the test areas were seeded with silver iodide. The clouds upwind from the other area were not seeded, so that a comparison could be made of the rain that fell in the seeded area and that which fell in the unseeded control area.
> From 1959 to 1963, 54 cloud and rain situations were seeded with silver iodide. Seeding was carried on for a total of 173 hours and 19 minutes. Forty five of these cases were found suitable for analysis, and the rainfall from these situations was compared statistically.

The memo then goes on to say:

> However, it appears that the chances of making large changes in rainfall by this method are very slight. As expressed by the statisticians, the probability of an increase or decrease in rainfall greater than 22 per cent was found to be less than 1 in 20.

There appears to be something less than a good chance of making rain, not even great enough to frighten the nervous member for Villeneuve. The memo then continues:

> Because of the large natural variability of rainfall it was found to be impossible to be more precise about the effects of seeding. These results are similar to those found in most other carefully controlled tests of cloud seeding such as have been carried out in Australia and the United States.

That was not an isolated expression of an attempt to gain knowledge by the Canadian meteorological department on this subject. There is a considerable amount of information on the subject contained in government pamphlets, samples of which I have. The first was dated December 1, 1965, under the title "Cloud seeding to influence rainfall—it's importance and present status" written by C. L. Crozier and J. D. Holland. It is interesting to note in this particular pamphlet that experiments have been going on all around the world regarding this very interesting subject. Field experiments have taken place in Argentina and statistical evaluations have been made there.

Since 1947 Australia has been undertaking fundamental studies of physical processes occurring in clouds. In France about ten French organizations are working on various facets of artificial weather modification, closely related with basic cloud physics studies. Israel has conducted field experiments and laboratory studies on artificial cloud modification for many years. After a number of years of experiments, Italy has now begun a program which is attempting to solve, on a practical basis, the problem of control and evaluation of the results of seeding cumuliform clouds. Two groups in Japan with weather modification interests have experimented with ground based and balloon borne silver iodide generation, and experiments are being carried out in Mexico as well as in the U.S.S.R. and in communist China. There is also a considerable amount of experimentation taking place in the United States. From all this one can see that there is interest throughout the world in this subject.

In view of this great interest throughout the world perhaps the time has come, as the hon. member suggested today in introducing his bill, to think in terms of what may be needed should rainmaking become a science through which it is possible to precipitate moisture in sizable quantities under control. If this could be done all sorts of problems might be created in relation to when, to what extent, and through which company, corporations or municipalities, rain should be created.

This bill is perhaps timely because we should give some thought to this subject and keep in touch with the experiments that are being made in this field. Perhaps it would be a good idea to have the subject matter of this bill referred to the transport committee. That committee would then have the opportunity of calling upon government experts and outside witnesses in order to gain some comprehension of what is involved.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I hear some thunder now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deachman: The noise of thunder points up my remarks. Not so very long ago we began worrying on an international scale about regulating the use of outer space. If we are seriously considering such matters as regulating outer space, it is perhaps high time we began thinking in terms of regulating the moisture in the clouds which hang over our heads.

Licence for Rainmaking Equipment

There is another aspect of making the earth fertile that will undoubtedly come to us more quickly than rainmaking. I think that making the land fertile will come in the movement of rivers and with irrigation projects generated therefrom. I believe this is a field we should be studying concurrently with such matters as rainmaking, because it is becoming more and more important to learn how to govern the water and moisture available to us in a world increasing in population and aridity.

One of the things you notice when flying westward over old Toronto is the way in which the forest has been denuded. The land now appears quite arid. This is especially so in midsummer. I am sure that in our fathers' and grandfathers' time this condition did not exist. There was then much swampland, much forestland, and the temperature and humidity were different because of the tree coverage and the retention of moisture therefrom. As we fly over and look down at the great lakes we see around the rim of the lakes the receding shoreline and the evidence of widening beaches. We then realize that the water tables of the continent are sinking as a result of decreasing forest cover, swampland and the moist areas which the forests retain. I think this should be an important part of our studies in learning to husband the resources of water on this continent.

We in the west are very concerned about these matters because we have the privilege of living in an area of a great amount of water and see to the south, in the arid desert land of the United States, people who would like to move this water into their areas in order to water the deserts and make them green. When one considers the Middle East problem which faces this house today I think you will find that a great deal of the problem arises from their difficulties with regard to water and moisture, the subject we are talking about today. We find that the nations experimenting with rainmaking, all forms of irrigation and methods of producing moisture for their lands—this is the case in the Middle East—are very much worried about how they will cultivate the soil for their increasing populations.

This is a very all-embracing and important subject. It is one to which we in the House of Commons should address ourselves in several ways. Even as a pinch-hitter this afternoon, with no expertise on the subject, I realize, as I think all hon. members do, that this question is vitally important to us and deserves serious consideration.

[Mr. Deachman.]

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have heard speeches from the hon. members for Timiskaming and Comox-Alberni (Messrs. Peters and Barnett) which provided us with valuable and enlightening information with regard to a matter which deserves our most serious consideration.

That is the reason why I thank the hon. member for Timiskaming for raising this problem in the house; indeed, on several occasions, it was a source of deep concern for many people living in various ridings across the country.

In 1964, we remember that an hon. member had called the attention of the authorities on the problem caused by what it was agreed to call rainmaking equipment, and we shall remember also a particular debate which took place in the house, in an attempt to clarify this really serious problem.

It is too bad that the members of the official opposition, the members of the Conservative party, do not see fit to take part in this debate. Of course, when it comes to technological evolution and scientific contribution, our friends, the Tories, are outclassed.

When it comes to fight to keep the word "Dominion" they are all there. When it comes to fight in order to keep part of the Union Jack on our flag, they spare no effort. But when the real problems of society are involved, when it is time to consider scientific progress, a problem in which our younger generation is keenly interested rather than in the survival of obsolete symbols recalling certain parts of our history, the development of which we hope for, in some respects, since our country is developing when it is a question of science and technology, this is beyond the Conservative party.

I congratulate the members of the New Democratic party and my Liberal colleagues on their fine contribution to a debate held in a modern context. The year 1967 is the area of science and of technology. Obsolete symbols are no longer worth generating useless struggles which have so often hindered the progress of our country.

Mr. Speaker, the problem, as I said earlier, deserves to be studied thoroughly. We know that in the United States, for example, rainmaking machines are being investigated by the most brilliant minds, for it has been proved that these machines can prevent hurricanes. Hon. members will remember the disaster caused by hurricane Flora in 1963, in which 7,000 people lost their lives and the damage was assessed at some 500 million dollars.

Scientific research has progressed to the point where, today, rainmaking machines may turn out to be the answer to the disasters caused by hurricanes.

Hurricanes which cause great damage are classified as such when winds are blowing at 75 miles per hour over a surface between 100 and 800 miles in diameter and last about 30 days. Now, Mr. Speaker, these "rainmaking machines" can prevent hurricanes and prevent irreparable disasters because crystals of silver iodide can penetrate to the very core of hurricanes and bring their course to an end. That is why a problem such as the one which is brought up today certainly deserves special study.

Doubtless, the hon. member for Timiskaming will say once more: Bills introduced by members are never passed and are never followed up.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is a little pessimistic to speak in those terms, because the idea has been put forward. It is practically impossible for the House of Commons to say that the bill must be passed immediately, without the project which might have far-reaching consequences being studied by a special committee or referred to experts in that field.

I think that the private members' hour is worthwhile. It makes it possible to put an idea forward and it also enables the administration, whether it is the cabinet itself, the bureaucracy or the officials at a lower level, to study the bill and implement it after the idea has truly taken root in the minds of those who are supposed to prepare legislation.

Therefore, I consider that it is unfair to say: members of parliament are there to prevent the passing of a bill. I do not think that is the case. Any hon. member knows very well that if he were, say, minister of transport, and at a given moment such a bill was before the house, he would be the first to say: I find this bill interesting, but before passing it as fast as the hon. member wants, the matter should be referred to experts in that field.

Therefore, I think that it is very pessimistic to denounce those who avail themselves of the hour to kill a bill, as we say commonly. I do not think it is killing a bill; on the contrary, it is taking it into consideration. The idea is brought up. The more the hon. member will bring up the matter, the more the idea will evolve and the more it will become likely to be accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to comment on clause 3.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: May I ask the hon. member whether he proposes to refer this bill to the transport committee. If so, I am prepared to second his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give an opinion on the subject, because I am not a member of the transport and communications committee. And if members who sit on the said committee were here, I think they would be in a much better position than I to answer the question of the hon. member. That is why, unaware of the legislative program and of the work before the members of the transport and communications committee, I cannot say that I am in favour of having it sent immediately to the committee. If it were a matter concerning agriculture—I understand that there is a connection or let us say that it is indirectly related to agriculture because if rainmaking equipment is used abusively, the crops can be affected—and since I am a member of the agriculture, forestry and rural development committee, if we were studying a specific project dealing with agriculture, and if I were asked my opinion as to the development of a project within the committee, I would be in a position to answer in the affirmative.

Since I sit on the agriculture, forestry and rural development committee, I know what will be studied by the said committee. But since I am not a member of the committee on transport and communications, I think it would be bold on my part and perhaps even deceptive to say: Let us pass the bill now.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks—

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit me a question? Would he be prepared to refer the subject matter of the bill to the committee on agriculture? If so, I would be pleased to second such a motion.

Licence for Rainmaking Equipment

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, if the bill were referred to the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, the hon. member, who has been sitting in this house for quite some time, should know that it would probably be considered out of order. But I do not agree that the bill should be studied by that committee. To my mind, the committee on transport and communications is the one that should study it, and if its chairman were here, I would encourage him, urge him to say yes.

However, I do not want to meddle with the responsibilities of the members of a committee on which I do not sit.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out a deficiency—

[English]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? I do not think rainmaking has anything to do with either transport or communications. It may have something to do with agriculture, but it has still more to do with air, and the committee on broadcasting, films, and assistance to the arts deals with the air. Would the hon. member not agree that that would be the proper committee to which this matter should be referred?

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: I think that if the hon. member were to read the Glassco report very carefully, as I did, I believe for my part—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it is about time that the Speaker took to the air. The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

On the order: Government Notices of motions:

January 9, 1967—The Minister of Veterans Affairs —The following proposed motion:—That the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission and the War Veterans Allowance Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FENCE DAMAGE, PENAL INSTITUTION, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 41—Mr. Coates:

1. Was the fence at the young offenders penal institution, Springhill, Nova Scotia, damaged in a wind storm and, if so (a) has it been repaired (b) if it has not been repaired, for what reason?

2. What was the reason for the damage to this fence, who will be responsible for repairing the fence, and what is the estimated cost of repairs?

3. What are the names of the individuals who carried out the investigation, and when were the findings of these individuals made available to the Solicitor General?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes; (a) repairs are underway; (b) not applicable.

2. An unusually severe storm caused the wire fence fabric to ice up, creating undue wind resistance. The Department of Public Works is presently having the fence straightened at a cost of $7,950.

3. The findings of C. D. Davison & Co., Halifax, were made available to the Solicitor General on April 4, 1967.

COSTS OF TAX COLLECTION

Question No. 59—Mr. Saltsman:

What has been the cost to the federal government for each of the fiscal years 1966-67, 1965-66, and 1964-65, of collecting the (a) federal income tax (b) federal sales tax (c) federal excise tax (d) federal estate tax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): (a) and (d). The cost to the federal government of collecting federal income tax and federal estate tax is not maintained separately. The combined figure representing the cost of collecting both of these taxes, the levy under the terms of the Old Age Security Act, and including the cost of collecting those provincial income taxes for which the federal government is the collecting agent is:

Fiscal year 1966-67 $46,936,000 (preliminary)
" " 1965-66 $45,454,000
" " 1964-65 $42,164,000

For the fiscal year 1964-65 only, an estimate is available of the cost of estate tax collection which has been calculated to be $1,524,000.

(b) and (c). It is not possible to calculate costs of collecting excise taxes separately from sales tax because these taxes are administered jointly, being applied under the same statute at the time of sale by manufacturers.

The following figures represent the cost of collection of domestic sales and excise taxes only. When these taxes are collected at Customs ports upon importation, they are collected in conjunction with customs duties; futhermore, they are small in relation to gross revenues.

Fiscal year 1966-67 $7,416,817
" " 1965-66 $6,324,524
" " 1964-65 $5,952,484

*FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN P.E.I. AND PORT HOOD, N.S.

Question No. 62—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Did any members of the cabinet receive a resolution from the municipal council of the municipality of the county of Inverness, dated February 10, 1967, supporting a ferry service between Prince Edward Island and Port Hood, Nova Scotia, and, if so (a) which members (b) what reply was given by each member?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): In so far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned, yes: (a) The Minister of Public Works, (b) That this was a matter for the Department of Transport. In so far as the Minister of Transport is concerned, yes: (a) The Minister of Transport, (b) Potential benefits of the service did not appear to justify the capital expenditures and operating subsidies required.

HIRING PROCEDURES, KEJIMKUJIK PARK DEVELOPMENT, N.S.

Question No. 70—Mr. Crouse:

1. What procedure is followed when hiring men and trucks for the Kejimkujik park development in Queens and Annapolis counties, Nova Scotia?

[Mr. Benson.]

2. Does Mr. James Smith of Harmony, Queens county, occupy a toll gate position of authority in the hiring of personnel in Queens county?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Men are hired through the Canada manpower office in Liverpool, N.S. Truck rentals are obtained by tender calls.

2. No.

LABOUR FORCE CENSUS

Question No. 74—Mr. Reid:

1. What is the scope and nature of the labour force census taken by D.B.S.?

2. To what use is this information put?

3. How often is this census taken?

4. Has any consideration been given to taking it oftener, and (a) if so, how often would it be taken (b) if not, for what reason?

5. Has any consideration been given to taking this survey in five-year periods and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The 1961 Census of Population included the following labour force questions asked of persons 15 years of age and over: Did you have a job of any kind last week? (Even if not at work, or part time?) Did you look for work last week? Did you have a job at any time in the past 12 months? Number of hours usually worked each week? For whom did you work last week (or when you last worked)? What kind of business or industry was this? What kind of work did you do in this industry? Did you operate your own business or work for others in this occupation? In how many weeks did you work for wages or salary in the past 12 months? What was your gross wage and salary income (before deductions) in this period?

2. Census labour force statistics are used by federal and provincial government departments in assessing problems related to the labour force, particularly its under-utilization, and in developing and implementing manpower policies; they are used to measure changing labour occupation and industry mix, and as a guide to potential labour shortages and surpluses. They are used extensively in industry and universities for a wide variety of manpower studies and research.

3. A census including labour force inquiries has been taken in Canada on a decennial basis since 1871, in the years ending in "1".

4 and 5. A national population census was taken in 1956 and 1966 in lieu of censuses of only the prairie provinces which were taken in earlier decades. Consideration was given to the inclusion of a number of labour force questions in 1966, but it was not possible in view of the commitments of staff resources to finish 1961 census special tabulations and plan for the 1971 census. The 1971 census of Canada will include questions on the labour force.

Current information on labour force activity is obtained from the monthly labour force survey, and results published in the monthly bulletin "The Labour Force", giving estimates of employment and unemployment for Canada and the five main regions of the country.

INTEREST ON POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS

Question No. 78—Mr. Aiken:

1. What is the current rate of interest on post office savings bank deposits?

2. Has there been any change in the interest rate within the past five years and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. 2½ per cent per annum.

2. No. The rate of 2½ per cent has been considered fair because interest on postal savings is calculated on a monthly basis. A depositor can make deposits or withdrawals at any savings bank post office in Canada without paying a service charge.

OVERPAYMENTS UNDER CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 85—Mr. Hales:

1. What is the amount of the employers' overpayment to the Canada Pension Plan since the inception of the plan?

2. How many employers are involved?

3. What arrangements are being made to have this overpayment returned to the employers?

4. How much money was collected in overpayment by employees since the Canada Pension Plan was started?

5. How many employees were involved?

6. How much money was returned to the employees?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Unknown.

2. Unknown.

3. This problem is still under study.

4. Unknown.

5. Unknown.

6. Employees' applications are still being processed and will not be finalized for another six weeks. As at May 19, 1967, $4,579,808.05 has been refunded to the employees.

Note: Answers to questions 1, 2, 4 and 5 cannot be provided until all returns filed by employees have been processed and statistics related thereto accumulated.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO HEALTH MINISTER

Question No. 106—Mr. Coates:

Has William MacEachern, special assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, been given leave of absence from the department to take part in the Nova Scotia election campaign?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. William MacEachern, special assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, formally requested and was granted leave of absence without pay for a period totalling three weeks during the month of May.

P.E.I.	1	28,600

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No construction project has been undertaken in Manitoba.

Questions

McBETH POINT, MAN.—HARBOUR FACILITIES

Question No. 122—Mr. Stefanson:

Are there any plans for improving the breakwater and harbour facilities at McBeth Point on Lake Winnipeg, Manitoba and, if so (a) what is the estimated cost (b) what is the nature of the work (c) when will this work be commenced?

ST. LAURENT, MAN., POST OFFICE

Question No. 123—Mr. Stefanson:

During the past year has there been a change in the status of the post office at St. Laurent, Manitoba and, if so, does the government plan on constructing a federal building?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): No, there has been no change in the status of the St. Laurent post office which is still in that class of office where the postmaster, as a condition of employment, is required to furnish suitable and adequate premises in which to operate the office.

3. Has any arrangement been made whereby the Canadian government will be compensated for what has been left?

4. What is the amount of the compensation agreed upon?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. The question of Canada's interest in property formerly used by the Canadian armed forces in France is being studied at present in the light of related arrangements and agreements.

3. What progress towards this end can be reported to date?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. No representations for the establishment of a minimum security institution in Prince Edward Island have been received from the government of that province. However, a communication was received from the government of Prince Edward Island regarding the establishment of a maximum security institution in that province.

2. It is not, at present, the intention of the government of Canada to proceed with the establishment of a federal penal institution in that province.

*FEDERAL GRANTS TO JOHN HOWARD AND ELIZABETH FRY SOCIETIES

Question No. 143—Mr. Badanai:

1. What was the federal government's contribution to the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies, by year, since 1960?

2. Is the government giving consideration to an increase in grants to enable these societies to carry on their functions of human rehabilitation?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The grants in each year were as follows:

EXTENSION OF FISHING VESSEL ASSISTANCE TO MANITOBA LAKES

Question No. 152—Mr. Stefanson:

Does the government now have plans to extend the fishing vessel assistance plan to make it available to inland fishermen including those on lake Winnipeg and other Manitoba lakes and, if so, when will this plan be implemented?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Although the possible desirability of extending fishing vessel assistance in some form to inland fishermen has been discussed with the federal-provincial prairie fisheries committee no decision has been reached and there are not now plans to extend this assistance to fishermen on lake Winnipeg or other Manitoba lakes.

*BESTOWAL OF TITLE "RIGHT HONOURABLE"

Question No. 159—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the Prime Minister requested Her Majesty the Queen to give approval to the designation or title of "Right Honourable" being made available to any Canadian or Canadians although such person or persons are not members of Her Majesty's imperial privy council?

2. Has any order in council to such effect been passed?

3. If not, what is the authority on which such action is based?

4. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to deny Canadians hereafter appointment to Her Majesty's imperial privy council?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The answer to the first part of the question is that before the appointment of the present Governor General I petitioned the Queen to approve a change in the table of titles for Canada to provide that henceforth the Governor General of Canada shall carry the title "Right Honourable" for life.

The answer to the second part of the question is no.

The answer to the third part is, the change falls within the area of the royal prerogative in which the sovereign acts on the advice of the prime minister.

The answer to the fourth part of the question is, membership in "Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council" is on the recommendation of the prime minister of Britain since it is technically the privy council of Britain. There has been no decision to deny Canadians appointment to the British privy council if at any time a prime minister of Britain were to wish to recommend such an appointment, just as there has been no decision to alter the practice by which United Kingdom citizens have, on occasion, been offered membership in the Canadian privy council.

POLICY RESPECTING PURCHASE OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS

Question No. 161—Mr. Godin:

Does Canada have a preferential policy as regards to the purchase of Canadian products, and what exactly is this preferential policy?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The purchasing policy of the Canadian government is consistent with that of foreign governments concerning preferential treatment accorded to domestic industries. Canadian experience indicates that foreign governments direct procurement to their own industry or give their industry preference over Canadian suppliers, in some cases. Canada follows the same practice by giving preference to Canadian industry when there is a need to maintain a Canadian source for strategic reasons or when there is a unique capability in Canada, and always provided it is not necessary to pay excessive premiums in order to buy in Canada.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LETTER EXPLAINING RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN OLD AGE SECURITY AND VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to revert to motions?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I may. I believe the other day I undertook to table a letter, and if this is the moment I would appreciate the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table the letter?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—POSITION OF ISRAEL RESPECTING BOUNDARIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister what Canada's position is regarding the stand announced by Israel through Premier Levi Eshkol to the effect that Israel will not agree to revert to the situation which existed with respect to boundaries until a week ago? Will the Prime Minister tell the people whether Canada intends to stand with Israel in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would of course be quite premature to attempt to answer a question of that kind, which would depend on so many circumstances. However, I can say that I think Israel is quite entitled to receive from the international community a greater guarantee of her security than she has had in the past.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say what instructions are being given to the Canadian ambassador to the United Nations on the Russian resolution which provides that the Israelis shall withdraw to the former boundaries, or those in existence when hostilities broke out?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot deal with that subject until it appears before the security council. It has not been considered yet by the security council, so I cannot go beyond the answer I gave my right hon. friend in regard to the commitments which the Israelis are undoubtedly entitled to receive from the international community and the security council, which would give her greater security than she has had in the past.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has any attempt been made to implement the suggestion, apparently made first by India and then by Canada, that the secretary general of the United Nations send a special representative to attempt conciliation talks between Israel and the Arabs?

Mr. Pearson: I think, Mr. Speaker, that one of the resolutions before the security council has now dealt with the matter in a limited and brief but not direct way. I know it is being considered at the United Nations whether it would be desirable for the secretary general or someone designated by him or responsible to him to go to the Middle East at the earliest possible date to see whether it would be possible to accomplish the purposes which my hon. friend mentioned.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REPRESENTATIONS FROM VOICE OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether today he received representations from the Voice of Women organization with reference to the world situation, particularly with reference to the war in Viet Nam.

Can the Prime Minister also tell the house whether the Canadian government intends to make any further representations to the government of the United States and the government of Hanoi in the hope of bringing about a settlement there? In addition, in view of the fact that the security council has had some success in bringing about at least a cessation of hostilities in the Middle East, would the Canadian government consider trying to have the security council interest itself in bringing about a similar settlement in Viet Nam?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that a delegation from the Voice of Women organization was received this morning by the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the absence of the minister, who is attending a meeting of the NATO council. I understand that the representations they made at that time are being referred to me this afternoon, and of course I will consider them.

So far as the last part of the question is concerned, which asked whether the security council could not take cognizance of this situation, my hon. friend knows that several efforts have been made in the past to bring the Viet Nam question before the United Nations or the security council. There are some very real difficulties in the way of doing this, the North Vietnamese having shown no inclination to go to the security council or the United Nations because, of course, they are not a member of that organization.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Canada is a member of the international control commission, would the Prime Minister take under serious consideration the advisability of Canada raising this matter in the security council, of which Canada is a member, in the hope that this might bring the two parties together for some discussions within the security council?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to think this matter could be brought before the security council or some other agency of the United Nations, even the general assembly; but I know that whenever efforts were made in past months to accomplish this they were not successful. I would be very glad to look into the possibility again.

AGRICULTURE

CONSIDERATION BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF EXPROPRIATION PRINCIPLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the concern of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with the procedures and principles followed in connection with the expropriation of land, would the minister inform the house if the views of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on the question of expropriation will be referred to the next dominion-provincial conference on agriculture?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question is much too large in scope, and cannot be asked at this time.

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. The minister, who participated in answering the farmers when they made their pilgrimage to Ottawa, indicated to them that the government would answer by a specific date. When questioned in the house he replied: "We had announced, after the meeting with the leaders of the farm organizations, that before June 10 the government would make its position known on the farmers' requests for changes in the dairy policy".

Has that undertaking been carried out, and would the minister let the house know what the government intends to do about the serious dairy situation?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question last Friday. I mentioned on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, who was then absent, that the announcement was made by the Canadian dairy commission, if I remember well, on Friday, June 2, about the dairy policy and some changes to that policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now ask the Minister of Agriculture, has he received representations from the dairy farmers and particularly from those who participated in the visitation to Ottawa that came to such an untimely end with the doors of parliament being locked? I ask whether the government has now come to any decision and, at the same time, whether a request has been made by the dairy farmers, in view of the promise of the government to give them an answer regarding their problem, for another opportunity to meet with the minister some time between now and June 23.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think all the farm organizations were made aware of the changes in the policy which were announced by the Canadian dairy commission one week ago last Friday. I have received a wire today from the heads of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Farmers' Union and l'Union catholique des cultivateurs, requesting a further meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether the communiqué which was issued by the representatives of the farmers to whom he referred said that the eastern farmers would start writing to the minister and telling him in their own words what is the state of the industry?

Mr. Greene: That was not in the communication I received, but I read in the press that this organization or these organizations, or their leaders, apparently made some such release to the press.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You do not read these things?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED LAY-OFFS BY DRY DOCK COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he received a telegram from the marine workers' and boilermakers' industrial union, local No. 1, Vancouver, drawing attention to the fact that the Burrard Dry Dock Company Limited has laid off 350 of its 800 employees?

In view of the serious repercussions this will have on our employment situation in British Columbia, which is not too healthy at the present time, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has received this telegram and, if so, what action the government proposes to take to try to improve the situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot recall having received it, but it may have come in during the morning. I will check when I get back to my office.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

REQUEST FOR HOUSE CONSIDERATION OF PENSION REQUEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman and his cabinet consider the reintroduction of the address to parliament in the event a request for a judge's pension comes from one L. A. Landreville of Sudbury?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that this question is hypothetical.

Mr. McCleave: Then I should like to discuss the hypothetical question at ten o'clock tonight.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO ASSIST LOBSTER FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is ex officio the minister from Nova Scotia. Since I see neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary in their places I would direct it to the Prime Minister.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether to his knowledge the Minister of National Health and Welfare has received a communication from the government of Nova Scotia soliciting the co-operation of officials of the government of Canada in determining the extent of losses incurred by the people engaged in the lobster industry in Nova Scotia during the disastrous storm of April 28 and 29, and also soliciting a financial contribution from the federal government to supplement provincial aid. If so, can the Prime Minister give an assurance that the government will comply with the provincial requests?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not know whether the minister has received any such communication. In any event, it would normally go to the Minister of Fisheries, who would be the minister responsible.

Mr. Bower: I understand the communication from the province—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has to ask a question.

Mr. Bower: Would the Prime Minister be good enough to find out?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question put in this form is not in order.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I will find out.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I suggest, with great deference, that the question was perfectly proper.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not take directions from the noisy people opposite, who change Hansard when their answers are not appropriate. My hon. friend asked a reasonable question, and I suggest he should be entitled to an answer.

Mr. Pearson: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I think your ruling was perfectly proper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That being so, I ask Your Honour now to make the ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I have already made a ruling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no. Did Your Honour rule that the question was improper? Is that supposed to be a precedent? I ask Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that many of the rulings I make are precedents, and perhaps this one is also. In any event the ruling has been made.

TRADE

REPORTED INFESTATION OF LUMBER EXPORTED TO AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, and ask him whether his attention has been called to a report from Sydney, Australia, to the effect that pest control experts said on Saturday that carpenter ants which have caused millions of dollars worth of damage apparently had been hatched in lumber brought from Canada. Has this been brought to the minister's attention, and is an investigation being held?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will look into this and try to answer the question tomorrow.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF 1967 COINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister kept a record of the distribution of the new 1967 coinage? My reason for asking is that supplies in the west seem to be very short in comparison with circulation in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this question is in order, but if the hon. member thinks it is a matter of urgency he might give notice of his intention to discuss it at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Pugh: With deference, I asked this question because on July 1, 1967 we are celebrating our centenary. One of the things the government has done has been to produce new coinage in connection with this event, and the coinage is not being as well distributed in the west as it is in the rest of this country.

[Later:]

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will bear with me now when I rephrase my question which is of urgent importance to all Canadians. Will the Minister of Finance indicate whether he will take steps to look into the distribution of the new centennial coinage, not only to the various provinces but also to other countries, particularly to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already looked into this matter and have been informed that a very large quantity of new currency has already been put into circulation. It is my understanding, like the hon. member's, that regional distribution has not been too good.

Mr. Pugh: Thank you for that information. May I ask the minister whether he will take steps to see that the distribution of this currency is undertaken on a more equitable basis, keeping in mind the west as well as the rest of the country?

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCINTOSH—ATTRIBUTION TO PRIME MINISTER OF REMARK IN DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I rise on a question of privilege. It was brought to my mind by the refusal of the Chair to allow a question directed to the Prime Minister by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare. If everything is to be done according to the rules and regulations I will raise my question of privilege, and it is this. As reported at page 1340 of Hansard, June 9, 1967 a question was asked in this house by the Leader of the Opposition as follows:

> I do not know whether the Prime Minister heard the question I asked a while ago. I now ask him specifically, in view of the fact that the statutes of Canada refer to July 1 as Dominion day and he this morning called it Confederation day, does this mean more chiselling away of part of our heritage, when the government refers to this as Confederation day without a decision of parliament?

The Prime Minister answered:

> Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer such a picayune, chiselling question.

The report continues:

> Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Prime Minister this question, which is not to be answered by facetious attempts at wit. Is the "Dominion" in Dominion day a dirty word now?
>
> An hon. Member: It could be.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I did not say that.

Mr. McIntosh: I heard it and saw it.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, I made no such observation and the hon. member has no right to say I did. He had better withdraw this allegation.

Mr. McIntosh: I am surprised the Prime Minister should get up in this house and refuse to back up the words he used when he was sitting in his seat.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When an hon. member states he heard another hon. member utter certain words and the other hon. member says he did not utter them, there is not very much that can be done about the situation. The rule of the house is that we have to accept the word of an hon. member. We have to accept the word of the hon. member that he heard certain words uttered, and the statement of the other hon. member that he did not utter those words. I would say that the Chair can certainly do nothing.

Mr. McIntosh: I not only heard it, I saw his lips move.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, I said I made no such observation. I uttered no such words, and the hon. member must accept my denial and withdraw his statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): There is nothing to withdraw. I was sitting here on Friday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I can get any number of hon. members who are not inclined to ascribe Charlie McCarthy words to anyone, and they heard what the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has just averred.

Mr. Pearson: I repeat that I made no such observation and used no such words, and if the right hon. gentleman says I did he must accept my denial and withdraw his statement.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): It was I who made the remark that I think the Leader of the Opposition is referring to. I said at the time that his attitude was tending to made it a dirty word. Those are the words I used at the time.

Mr. Pearson: Now perhaps the right hon. gentleman will withdraw the statement that I uttered any words of that kind at the time. I ask him to get up and withdraw that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously we are getting nowhere at all. I suggest to hon. members that we do not serve any purpose by joining in these—

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I believe I stated the position as it is a moment ago. When a statement is made by one hon. member and the right hon. Prime Minister makes a statement formally denying that he used certain words, I remind hon. members that we have to accept the statement of any hon. member, of each and every individual member of the house. On the other hand I do not think the right hon. Prime Minister can ask the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek to withdraw his statement. I am sure his statement was made in good faith, and I do not see how the Chair can ask the hon. member to withdraw his words. At the same time I suggest that the house has to accept the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister, in the same way as we have to accept the statement made by any other member to the House of Commons.

Mr. J.-A. Habel (Cochrane): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I want to deny categorically what the hon. member has said. I am the one who said "maybe", and I am not ashamed of it at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many McCarthys are there over there?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member has withdrawn his statement that I uttered any words of that kind. I take it he has withdrawn that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that the hon. gentleman does not have to withdraw the statement he made. He has said he heard these remarks. I am sure the hon. member, as do all other members of the house, has to accept the statement by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, all I am asking him to do is accept my statement that I did not utter those words. If he would do that in accordance with the rules the incident would be ended.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The ruling has been made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EGYPT—CLOSING OF PART OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN CAIRO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether today's report is true that the Egyptian government has forced the closing of part of the Canadian embassy in Cairo. If it is true, has the government of Egypt given the government of Canada any explanation, and what steps is the government taking?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the United Arab Republic authorities asked our embassy a few days ago to remove part of the embassy staff from our chancery as a precautionary measure in view of widespread demonstrations. The embassy continued to function with reduced staff, and according to the latest information from our ambassador the embassy is now functioning normally and all members are safe and well.

Mr. Thompson: As a supplementary question, has the Prime Minister any word that this action was taken because the Canadian embassy was carrying on some of the normal functions of the embassy of Great Britain due to the lack of diplomatic relations between those two countries?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, for some months now, as my hon. friend knows, we have been looking after British interests in Cairo, and the British official personnel there come under our ambassador. In am not aware that the U.A.R. asked for the evacuation of the British interests section of the Canadian embassy. Our latest information is that there has been a U.A.R. request for a reduction in the staff of the British interests section which is now occupying the British owned chancery premises.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM NATO COUNCIL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence on a matter on which I am sure Your Honour will understand that we require an immediate explanation. Can the Minister of National Defence explain to the house why he is not now at the NATO ministerial conference, and why the President of the Privy Council is there in his place as the military adviser to our Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the spring meeting is one usually attended by the secretaries of state for external affairs. At the suggestion of several members of the government, including the Prime Minister, the President of the Privy Council accompanied the Secretary of State for External Affairs at this time, which is not unusual. Often ministers of finance or other interested government officials travel with these parties in order to get first hand knowledge of the latest problems of the alliance, and I think this is quite in accord with the precedents that exist.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, in view of the answer given by the minister and in view of recent statements regarding NATO made by the President of the Privy Council, could he inform the house whether this is a brainwashing endeavour?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is supplementary, but also out of order.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR POTATO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since March 22, 1967, has his department negotiated with the provincial agriculture department on assistance to potato producers? If so, what are the results?

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult for me to determine whether the question of the hon. member for Labelle is urgent. I am inclined to think that this question should be put on the order paper, but, if the hon. member feels this is an urgent question of national importance, he could bring it up on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, it is because the premier of Quebec claimed that a request for such assistance had been made by the Quebec authorities and that the federal agriculture department had rejected it.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MEET INCREASED DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence perhaps I might ask it of the Minister of Finance, since they both share the blame. In view of the startling increase in our trade deficit for April, as shown in the D.B.S. weekly report issued on Friday last, according to which our deficit rose from $1 million to $73 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has to ask his question.

Mr. Aiken: —for the month of April, what action is the government taking to improve this dangerous situation and, in particular, will the Kennedy round of tariff reductions further affect this balance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, developments in our trade situation are pretty much as we had expected. I am happy to share with my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce the credit for the remarkable increase in exports from this country. I think the trade balance will turn out about as expected, and I do believe the Kennedy round will benefit both the consumers and the exporters.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Prime Minister, at the request of various superannuated civil servants across the country, asking when they may expect the increases which were recommended by the parliamentary committee, the matter having recently been before Treasury Board. There is a great deal of anxiety among these people, and I think deservedly so.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter was dealt with the other day in reply to a question directed by my hon. friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It was stated then, and I am glad to repeat now, that the matter is under active and urgent consideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he can now assure the house that the matter will be before parliament this month?

Mr. Pearson: That depends, Mr. Speaker, on how we get along this month among other things.

Mr. Knowles: Is the legislation ready to be placed before parliament?

Some hon. Members: Order.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of his government to prevent the government of Nova Scotia from dealing with the cabinet minister from Nova Scotia except on matters pertaining to national health and welfare?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see where such a question is out of order, though I accept your ruling. The Prime Minister has indicated to the house that representations coming from the government of Nova Scotia must be channelled through the Minister of Fisheries. If this is so it is certainly a break from long established precedents.

Mr. Pearson: On fisheries matters.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the question is in order, and I thank the hon. member for his acceptance of my ruling.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, and not as an Atlantic province minister. My question arises out of a statement he made before the Fishery Council of Canada on May 7, in which he indicated that within a month the government would begin to initiate the straight base lines. In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to ask the minister, who I know follows this matter closely, whether such initiation has commenced and whether the situation has changed in any way since his estimates were under discussion in the house not long ago.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to the statement I made when my estimates were introduced in the house on Monday last. I am sure the hon. member will understand that because of the international situation which has existed since then it has been impossible for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to give this matter the attention it really deserves.

Mr. Barnett: I have a supplementary question. I recognize the truth of what the minister has said, but I should like to ask him whether he has been following this matter through his department during this particular time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is repetitious.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether, when the co-ordinates and base lines are announced, this will mean that all matters concerning historic and treaty rights will have been settled with other countries.

Mr. Robichaud: I already stated that at the time the Secretary of State for External Affairs makes his statement he will give all the details available on the matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERIES OF TELEVISION CAMERAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the government house leader may I direct this question to the acting house leader or to the Prime Minister. In view of the presence of television cameras in the gallery, are we soon to bring the Canadian people into closer contact with the proceedings of parliament through radio and television coverage of this house or its committees?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

Like my colleague for York-Scarborough, (Mr. Stanbury), I see television cameras in the east and west galleries of the house. Could the hon. minister tell us whether the permission of members is required for the broadcasting of the debates?

Miss LaMarsh: That is Mr. Speaker's responsibility.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order. I suggest that notice can be given.

[Later]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how to preface this question, but with great respect the questions asked by the hon. member for York-Scarborough and the hon. member for Saint-Denis were questions that affect the rights of members of parliament and this House of Commons. No one can conclude that these machines are here just for storage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I may have leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of indicating that to the best of my information the cameras were placed in the galleries at the request of hon. members who decided to support a C.B.C. centennial project in reference to the operations of parliament. I believe that when a certain bill which is now on the order paper is reached, arrangements will be made with house leaders for the filming of certain parts of the debate on that bill. I am also informed with authority that the house leaders have already discussed this subject. I might add that independent members have also been consulted by the Chair, and their support or approval was obtained some weeks ago.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. What action is the government taking to level off the dramatic increase in the cost of living index as reported for May in the weekly Dominion Bureau of Statistic bulletin on Friday?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I gave a fairly lengthy answer to that question when I presented my budget.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN SITE OF NEW BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works which is of urgent importance to the city of Vancouver. Has the minister received a copy of the resolution passed by the Vancouver city council regarding the location of the new federal building for Vancouver? If so, what consideration is being given to this request for a change in location?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my opinion that this question cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I am certain the minister would be happy to answer the question if you will allow him to do so. The Vancouver city council would like to have an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows there are rules of this house, and that one of those rules is that if a question is ruled out of order on the basis of urgency members can give notice of their intention to debate the matter on the adjournment motion. That is the course I suggest the hon. member for Vancouver East follow.

FINANCE

MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED AT MEETING OF TAX STRUCTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I understand the tax structure committee will be meeting tomorrow in Toronto. Can the minister give us any information as to what will be discussed at that meeting?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the tax structure committee, which is a committee of federal and provincial finance ministers, is meeting in Toronto because of difficulty in obtaining accommodation in Ottawa. I may say I am happy that the meeting will take place in that city.

We are going to review the main conclusions of the Carter commission; that is, the royal commission on taxation. The purpose of the meeting is not to discuss particularly the commission's views on federal-provincial matters, but to examine the basic proposals on tax structure which have been put forward and to look carefully at their implications. Of course I shall welcome the views of the provincial ministers on this important matter.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dubé in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

ADMINISTRATION

1. Departmental Administration including administration of the guaranteed loans Acts, the Inspector General of Banks' Office, and payments to provinces and grants as detailed in the Estimates, $3,806,600.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Finance for fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 is to be found on page 140 of the blue book with the details thereof listed on page 143. Shall vote 1 carry?

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I felt that on this occasion we might have a statement from the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the fact that he delivered himself of a budget speech the other night. There are a number of items that should be discussed because of their rather technical aspects. Perhaps the minister could give us some information. While I do not wish to get into a budget debate or anticipate the type of speech I would make in such a debate, there are a number of matters with regard to which we must ask the Minister of Finance for the views of the government and his predictions.

I turn first of all to the subject of interest rates. As we know, the Bank Act which was passed recently by this parliament has within the provisions of section 91, if my memory does not fail me, a rather intricate formula for the, shall we say, triggering-off of any ceiling on interest rates chargeable on some of the loans chartered banks may make. It is a sort of trigger formula for the removal of any ceiling on these interest rates.

At the time the committee and this house were considering Bill No. C-222 last year there was a very clear indication by the minister and his officials that the interest rate of last year, in terms of the average rate for government short term loans, was declining. In effect, it was as a result of the minister's remarks that the committee decided to make an amendment to the act whereby the ceiling was fixed at 7¼ per cent for the balance of 1967. This was done because it was indicated that if interest rates declined as they had been doing over the course of the winter, some time next November the trigger in the Bank Act could operate, and it was deemed that there could be too sudden a change and therefore the rate should be phased out. But since then one has been hearing reports that a trough has been reached with regard to the decline in interest rates. As a matter of fact, the financial press has been replete with articles indicating that notwithstanding the relative freeing of money, interest rates are going into a reverse process and will probably go up as a result of strong demands for funds.

Does this mean that the trigger will not apply with regard to the Bank Act? I think the minister should now be in a position to tell us what he anticipates for the next half year with regard to interest rates in so far as they relate to the trigger formula under the Bank Act. I think the minister should also report in some detail on the developments under the Bank Act, the developments with regard to the Bank of Western Canada and the Bank of British Columbia. We have also received notice now through the publishing of advertisements that there is another bank proposed for incorporation this year, the Bank of Alberta.

I ask the minister: is there anything in what some financial writers have said? Is there now too much competition? What are the views of the minister with regard to the developments under the Bank Act? I think this is an admirable time for the minister to give us his assessment of the situation. The new Bank Act has been in force only six or seven weeks, but already we have seen some significant developments with regard to types of savings accounts, the interest rate that is being paid to depositors in these bank accounts and the reaction of the near banks to them.

The next matter is related to the Bank Act but concerns a different subject. Is the minister in a position to tell us when the government intends to refer to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs the regulations that were to be made with regard to interest disclosure? They may have been published in the Canada Gazette, but the Minister of Finance is not the one who files these details. This is done by the President of the Privy Council. As a matter of fact, it was only by a careful combing of all the Votes and Proceedings that I found that some weeks ago the President of the Privy Council had tabled the regulations made under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. It must be remembered that in this regard there was a very definite undertaking that the regulations would be sent to the finance, trade and economic affairs committee. I suggest this should not be done at the tail end of this session.

I think it is unfortunate that the committee did not have direct access to these regulations. Of course, the members of the committee can get the order in council and see what the regulations are, and I have already done so with regard to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, but the matter should be referred to the committee by way of resolution. The minister must bring in a resolution to refer these matters to the committee. I think the sooner this is done, the better off we will be. I hope to see such resolutions on the order paper within the next week with regard to both the Bank Act and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act so that the rules and regulations will be turned over to the committee and we may consider them. We will not be able to attend to them before the end of June, when parliament is scheduled to rise for a recess of an indefinite period, but at least we will have them before us and can talk to our friends and contacts within the banking system and the near banking system, who will be able to give us a professional assessment of these rules and regulations. We can then in the month of September, or earlier if that is to be the case, come back and be prepared to get down to work and discuss these matters rather more intelligently than would be the case if we were to arrive back here cold, as it were.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I make a special plea to the minister to see that his colleagues agree to these matters being put on the order paper and dealt with. As far as I am concerned and, I think, my colleague the hon. member for Perth—I cannot speak for my colleagues on the committee from other parties—we would be prepared to see such resolutions go through the house without debate in this instance so those regulations may be sent to the committee.

I trust that the minister will tell us something about a matter dealt with in numerous speeches which he has been making of late. The minister has a very good distribution service from his office and I receive pages and pages of speeches. They all have one central theme—the wisdom of Canada not doing anything to upset a continuing, strong flow of foreign funds for investment in this country. While the Minister of Finance has been making these speeches, ably assisted by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, other members of the cabinet have made speeches on a different theme. I do not know why we have not had a duel between the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development and the President of the Privy Council, because in other jurisdictions this is apparently how differences between members are sometimes settled. I suppose ours in Canada are really verbal duels.

However, so far as ideas are concerned there is a head-on confrontation between the Minister of Finance and his associate, the minister of forestry on the one hand and the erstwhile minister of finance on the other. We know that a few weeks ago he really gave the old pail a solid kick and threatened to upset it when he spoke out on the subject of Viet Nam. Personally I find I cannot accept the view of the hon. member for Davenport concerning cabinet solidarity and his semantics regarding the expression of government policy and the expression of views or opinions. That is one luxury which the President of the Privy Council can no longer have now that he is back in the cabinet. Now he is off to the NATO ministers' conference in a related field of foreign affairs I fear we should tremble in dread of what ukases may come forth from him with regard to that aspect of our foreign affairs.

To return to the subject of foreign investment in Canada I point out that the speech from the throne dredged up as a prospective bride, for the fifth time I think, the Canada Development Corporation. I suppose it was originally in the thought of the then minister of finance who first propounded this idea that the Canada Development Corporation should be set up by the government of Canada. How was it going to operate? We were going to either buy back Canada or borrow back Canada. Here I am not using an original phrase; others have used it far more effectively than I can. We were going to go into debt financing rather than equity financing. However, this is not the time to argue in detail the pros and cons of equity versus debt financing, and I am certainly not going to argue ahead of time what I consider to be the potential tragedy in the introduction of the Canada Development Corporation. I can only point out that I do not think the Canadian people support this idea.

In a province as wealthy as the province of Alberta the Alberta Development Corporation was started. It was anticipated that $10 million would be raised in the first year, which is all right for a provincial jurisdiction. However, I doubt that they received subscriptions for $2 million. That is how far it went. In so far as the Canada Development Corporation is concerned, now that the Canada Pension Plan is siphoning off some $800 million a year from the private sector of investment into the public sector, there is to be even much less money available for investment in the Canada Development Corporation. Therefore I think the concurrent existence of the two, both competing for money, will place one more demand upon less and less dollars which are available to the taxpayers or the investors of the country. Notwithstanding the fact that the Canada Development Corporation has been referred to in the speech from the throne, I hope the Minister of Finance will see to it that this idea gets lost amidst the shuffle and press of parliamentary business and that it will ultimately be pigeonholed and there gather dust and remain merely an interesting idea which was put forward at one time by a man who had extremely nationalistic ideas in so far as Canada is concerned.

There is also another matter on which the minister may have made a brief statement. He will recall that when we were considering last year the estimates of the Department of Finance and also the Bank of Canada Act there was a good deal of discussion concerning the concrete decision by participants in the World Bank with regard to a new world monetary exchange unit. I believe that a conference was held not long ago and the minister reported to the house that he was disappointed that not as much progress had been made in this regard as he had hoped. I think he could elaborate on that subject so that we can see just where we are heading with regard to our world foreign exchange relationships.

There are indications of greater and greater pressure being put on the U.S. dollar, and certainly the results of last week's activities in the Middle East are likely to create a very serious potential problem for Great Britain, virtually a convertibility crisis in the making, because if a number of oil-rich Arab states which now hold tremendous sterling deposits in the United Kingdom suddenly get it in their minds that they will withdraw their funds and go off in a huff—I do not know where they would place their money—this would pose a very serious problem. As a matter of fact, we might see a further deterioration in the relationship between Great Britain and its erstwhile friends in the Middle East which would cause a blocking of sterling balances. This would upset the whole world pattern and prove the necessity for some form of agreement at least between the major countries of the world to ensure that a national unit shall not serve as the ultimate reserve for international exchange payments.

Several of my colleagues intend to speak in detail about the minister's estimates. There are one or two points that arose the other day when I attended a meeting of the committee on external affairs. As a matter of fact members of the committee were mystified at the tables which the director of the external aid branch produced with regard to the quantum of external aid supplied by Canada, and it was found that the figures he was using bore absolutely no relationship to the estimates as they appear in the blue book. The partial explanation was that the total of external aid was made up from a number of departments including, as the witness said, the Department of Finance. In this connection I would like to know if there is some other source of external aid, apart from item 50, in the very general wording of these estimates which the Minister of Finance would consider as his contribution to external aid. If so, perhaps the minister could indicate it to the house.

Recently the minister issued some statements concerning small business loans made under the act of that name. One of these was dated June 2, 1967. I believe this act has been much maligned by being ignored by the public and the news media. As we know, this measure was brought into its modern dress and completely overhauled in 1959 or 1960, if my memory serves me right. I would not like to insist that the previous administration introduced that act because I have not been able to check that aspect, but certainly it was brought up to date about 1960.

It is very instructive to see how much money has been available to small businesses under this act. On June 2, 1967, the minister announced that loans totalling $3,590,997 were made to 401 borrowers under the Small Businesses Loans Act during the months January to March. The announcement does not say "inclusive" so I am not sure whether the minister was reporting for the first quarter of the calendar year 1967 or for only two months. At any rate, under this legislation the government may guarantee loans made by chartered banks for a wide range of business improvement purposes to small business enterprises engaged in manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade or in the service industries. A maximum of $25,000 may be lent to a borrower at any one time. Loans must be secured and may be repaid over periods of up to ten years. The maximum rate of interest is 5.5 per cent.

In my opinion, it is instructive to see how much money the banks have lent at 5.5 per cent over the past several years when money was allegedly so tight. The same situation applies, of course, to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, with regard to which I have a recent statement by the minister. In any event, I notice that according to the minister's statement the date of origin of the Small Businesses Loans Act was January, 1961, so I was not too far out when I suggested 1960. Since then, to the end of March, 1967, there have been 16,636 loans made for a total of $150,763,473.

I think this points up a salient fact, namely, that this was good legislation and the arrangements made thereunder with the banks and with the public have been working well. Over 16,000 businesses, with a gross annual revenue of about $250,000 each, have benefited from this measure. Recently the maximum estimated gross annual revenue was raised to $500,000. These businessmen have been able to borrow $150 million at 5.5 per cent interest. I believe this is a clear indication that this was good legislation. I hope there will be a continuation of these facilities, that businessmen will avail themselves of them and that the banks will take advantage of the guarantee so the program will continue to be a satisfactory one.

The same remarks may be made in connection with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. In March of this year the Minister of Finance announced that 15,380 loans had been made for a total of $37,227,219 during the period October 1 to December 31, 1966. The total in 1966 was 85,553 loans for a total of $212,796,464 compared with 91,191 loans in 1965 for a total of $202,706,910. So here we have two heads of legislation, one for the small businessman and the other for the farmer for farm improvements. The Farm Improvement Loans Act is not designed to cover the purchase of farms because that comes under the Farm Credit Corporation. It is actually for the improvement of farms. When we look at these two measures we can see that the banks, with government co-operation, will provide loans at 5 per cent with the result that progress can be made.

I am not going to go into the details about the quantum of loans made under these acts. I merely point to them as examples of the fact that progress can be achieved with government co-operation without setting up government agencies. This is not what I want to do. I do not want to have the government acting as big brother. There is all too great a tendency toward this today. The government, along with business and individuals who may want to do some financing, can get an intelligent, workable program which does have good results.

There are a number of other people who want to speak on the estimates of the minister so I am going to conclude my remarks by saying that I hope the minister is not going to feel the estimates of his department are going to pass in a great hurry this year at the tail end of the session. I trust we will have a good discussion today. I do not believe we need to have an interminable discussion, but certainly we should have a reasoned and intelligent discussion. I am sure there will be other questions raised, but I should like the minister to give me answers to the points I have mentioned.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the passage of the Bank Act, Mr. Chairman, I have received quite a number of letters with regard to loans on which the banks have been asking an increased rate of interest even during the lifetime of the loans. The other day I received a letter from a man who had a loan at 6 per cent which does not mature until this fall. His bank manager called him in and, knowing I suppose that this particular customer was going to need an extension of his loan after the due date, persuaded him to sign a new note for the rest of the period at a higher rate of interest.

I have had a number of complaints of this sort, although I am quite sure what the banks are doing is quite legal, however dubious it may be ethically. I have tried to deal with the banks directly about it and have communicated with head offices on one or two occasions without any particular success. I wonder whether the minister has had such cases brought to his attention. If so, is he prepared to speak a little sharply to the banking fraternity by pointing out to them that the measure we passed, while it did give them some relief or will do so by the end of this year, should not be used as an excuse to hike rates on existing loans?

I feel that somehow we did not go far enough in the legislation with regard to providing competition for the banking fraternity. I am not going to repeat my argument to the minister, since he has dismissed it two or three times already, that the only way to do this is to follow the example of our Australian and New Zealand cousins. I think he is going to find himself under considerable pressure before very long to introduce some sort of curb on the evidently irresponsible actions of the chartered banks.

I have also noted with a certain amount of concern that since the passage of the Bank Act some of the banks have announced their intention of splitting their shares with again not too much explanation as to why this should be considered desirable. The banks and other corporations which have asked for this particular privilege have never been very clear as to what advantage the general public derives from such action. It is argued that there is a wider distribution of shareholding, but no evidence is adduced to suggest that the existing shareholders are prepared to part with part of their holding in order to have a wider distribution.

[Mr. Lambert.]

I am unable to avoid the suspicion that the desire to split shares is a desire to conceal, at least partially, the rate of profit on the existing capitalization of the banks. I recall during the hearings congratulating the president of the Bankers Association on his perfect timing. It was not until the day after he left the witness stand that the report of the profits of the banks, his bank in particular, was made public. I may say that the president of the Bankers Association gave me a charming smile and said "Yes, my timing is always very good". I suspect that the desire to split shares perhaps has that as its motive rather than the one that is usually ascribed of trying to bring about a wider distribution. Until I find existing shareholders publicly announcing that they are prepared to put some of their shares on the market when the shares are split, I shall continue to have suspicions of this sort.

One of the problems during the hearings of the committee was the question of the near banks of various sorts in Canada. Our attempts to bring them under some control were, I thought, perhaps not quite as decisive as they should have been. They consisted, of course, largely in the introduction of the deposit insurance legislation, which had one very bad flaw in it in that provincial institutions were not obliged to take it, and indeed were not allowed to take it, unless their provincial governments approved.

We have a number of rather curious institutions of this sort. I have often wondered whether the federal government and the Minister of Finance have examined the position and operations, for instance, of the treasury branches of the province of Alberta. I have long had the suspicion that these operations may be contraventions of the Bank Act, but I am not quite sure. I believe that one case is now before the courts. I did express the view at the time that the deposit insurance legislation was not quite adequate to protect the Canadian people from the plethora of financial institutions of various sorts with which they are plagued. I even expressed the view that probably the best solution would be to expand greatly the powers of the chartered banks, advocating at the same time, as I intend to continue advocating, placing in the centre of our banking institutions a government-owned institution to act as a watchdog and as a competitor.

I do not know of any other way to get over the constitutional difficulty of the federal government in being able to control chartered financial institutions. I felt that the minister had perhaps missed an opportunity at the time of the regrettable collapse of one or two of these institutions, when I am sure that every provincial government was shaking in its shoes, in that he did not at that time suggest to them that the course of wisdom would be for them to insist that financial institutions licensed by the legislatures of the different provinces should voluntarily come under federal control and inspection.

I had the feeling at that time that every provincial government would have realized that this was the lifeline of safety in face of the very serious developments which were taking place within the financial institutions of the different provinces. I am quite sure the minister is fully aware that that was the psychological moment to do it and that he was deterred from doing it for fear of adverse reactions from one particular province. I think that federal governments will have to get over their continual phobia about the possibility of reactions from that province if we are going to advance as a nation.

I should like to say a word or two about another of those ticklish questions which came before the committee, and that is the position of the Mercantile Bank of Canada. I raised the matter with the minister not long ago in the house on the basis of an article which appeared in the Executive magazine which, while it was not conclusive, suggested to me that Mr. Rockefeller and his associates are planning to do precisely what I suggested they might do when the motion which I seconded was introduced in the committee to give the bank a five year period in which to expand their operations and make their shares attractive to Canadian investors. I had an uneasy feeling at that time, despite the blandishments of the hon. member for Verdun, that Mr. Rockefeller and his associates might be preparing to play a game of Russian roulette with the minister and would keep telling him that the time is not now propitious to put their shares on the market, that they would finally come up against the five year limit and would point out that it was still not propitious, and then would say to the minister: "What are you going to do now? Are you going to confine us to the 20 to one ratio or are you going to allow us to go on expanding in defiance of your legislation?"

I should like to be sure that the minister is keeping a very sharp eye on this situation. I confess that my interest is largely because of the history and the record of this financial group in the United States of America and its operations outside that country, which lead me to the conclusion that while there may perhaps be a case to be made out for permitting a foreign bank to enter the Canadian business community, this is not a group that I should like to see in Canada. I say that because their record in other countries renders them, to my mind, somewhat suspect of being rather ruthless, rather concerned for their own interests to the neglect of the interests of the host country.

I too, like the hon. member for Edmonton West, was interested in the minister's remarks about the necessity to maintain the inflow of United States capital. I noticed that at least in one speech he based his anxiety that the flow should continue on the need to have capital to expand the Canadian economy. If one looks at it in one way I suppose that is a reasonable and correct estimate, but actually I am sure the minister knows there has been almost no net inflow of United States capital for development in Canada for some time. What we do have is an inflow of capital which balances the now rapidly increasing outflow. In fact, we need more in order to pay for the loss of previous investment. The bulk of the expansion of the Canadian economy in non-Canadian hands takes place on the basis of the retained earnings of existing subsidiaries of foreign corporations. Eventually I think the minister will have to face up to this problem and determine whether or not we are being fair to the people of Canada by allowing this continual expansion on the basis of funds earned in Canada from the work of Canadians to result in expansion of foreign holdings in our economy.

I have wondered whether the minister has considered the possibility of fiscal measures that would make it a little less attractive to plow back such an enormous volume of retained earnings, that would make it a little less attractive to have such a large body of retained earnings. After all, when we find that 70 per cent—perhaps it is over 70 per cent now—of capital for new investment comes from internally generated savings we can see that this is a most serious matter.

The hon. member for Edmonton West had some acid comments about the Canada Development Corporation. I will not make acid comments about it until I find out what type of beast it will be. It has had a number of sea changes and it may have some more. I can see that such a corporation might be extremely useful, not to buy back foreign-owned holdings in Canada which, to be fair, I frankly believe is an imbecility, but to act as a means of expanding the Canadian economy in Canadian hands so that the proportion of foreign-owned holdings in Canada will decline in relation to the whole.

I can see where the Canada Development Corporation could be a very valuable institution into which to pool a large part of the capital required for our expansion.

The hon. member for Edmonton West had some scathing comments, or, to use another word, some deplorable comments to make about the effect of the Canada Pension Plan and that it drained so much money from the private sector into public hands. No one would expect me to sympathize with the hon. member on that score. I wish at this time to reiterate a proposal that I have made a number of times in the house. I hope that the Minister of Finance at some time will see that my proposal is not so much for a publicly owned banking complex as something that it would be sensible for a harassed minister of finance to follow. My proposal is that we extend the operations of the Canada Pension Plan and that we offer the Canadian people a series of options. I do not see why we should allow private groups—and we are licensing more and more of them every session of parliament—to take control of the savings of the Canadian people and to do with those savings what they will. Indeed, if the minister is concerned about continuing the flow of United States capital to balance the outflow and to produce investments he will keep a careful eye on the investment dollars of life insurance companies in Canada, both Canadian and foreign owned, and he will find, interestingly enough, that there is nothing to choose between them in their investment policies.

Canadian and foreign owned life insurance companies invest up to 50 per cent of their total investments outside Canada and not in the development of this country. That is a compelling argument for expanding the operations of the Canada Pension Plan in such a manner that it will attract the vast bulk of the savings which now go into private hands, and over which, as investment funds, we have no control.

I, too, wish to say a word or two about the reform of the international monetary system. First, I wish to pay tribute to those officials of the Bank of Canada who have worked extremely hard in presenting Canada's view at international conferences on this matter—regrettably, without too much success—and I express the hope that before long we shall persuade the other trading nations of the world of the necessity of establishing a new and additional unit of international exchange; I hope that we shall not be frightened by the possible implications of such a move that was suggested first, I think, by the prominent economist, John Maynard Keynes. I think that it was the late Lord Keynes who said, after he had introduced his idea of Bancor, that if it were adopted it would be the first step toward global administration.

He should have kept his mouth shut, because I am sure his suggestion frightened many people off at that time, just as I am sure the same idea frightens them today. Nevertheless, so far as I am concerned, this is an added argument in favour of a reformed international monetary system. If exchange positions have been acute up to now—and I know that opinions vary on this topic—I think we can all be sure that they will become increasingly acute as the United States economy suffers from increasingly severe strains owing to its military commitments in southeast Asia. The United States strains will bring an almost unbearable load to the international monetary system and methods of exchange as they now exist.

I was greatly heartened to see that in Canada we have extremely competent people in the Bank of Canada who are fully aware of these problems and are advancing our ideas in the world. I hope that the minister and the Government of Canada presses these ideas as decisively as possible.

The reform of the international monetary system is essential, not merely to deal with the present volume of world trade, but, more importantly, to solve the problems of the present century in promoting the development of the undeveloped countries of the world and to enable their populations to enter the twentieth century. That can be made possible only by the technological revolution of our times. Nothing must be allowed to stand in the way of that development. It is not a matter of charity, philanthropy or humanitarianism; it is a matter of survival. If Canada and the other members of the affluent world are not prepared to grapple with this problem of developing the undeveloped countries, then humanity will be in a precarious way. One of the tools with which we must work is a modernized international monetary system of exchange.

With those words I share with the hon. member for Edmonton West the hope that the minister, before we are finished this debate, may give us his ideas on these and other points which I am sure he has in his mind.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring a few points to the attention of the Minister of Finance. I criticize the failure to provide sufficient funds in the estimates in those areas where money is so sorely needed. Also, I wish to compliment the minister for removing the sales tax on drugs, something which I and other members of the house have advocated for many years. That was a worth-while step.

I am interested to know what the minister intends to do with respect to the drug industry as an industry. I shall mention only a few firms. In this country we have old firms such as Ayerst, McKenna & Harrison, Limited which produces natural hormones for the production of estrogen and other valuable drugs as well. Such firms produce drugs which are of great benefit to Canada and other countries. The industry also employs many men who do research that is beneficial to agriculture. Especially useful is that research that has to do with mares for the production of estrogen.

I refer also to the Warner-Lambert firm, a multimillion dollar outfit that came to Toronto and is doing medical research, research into the production of drugs, which we have not got at present, and research in many fields which if it was not done would be a great potential loss. I also want to draw to the attention of the minister that this firm brought in Dr. Lumb, a British scientist doing research in the United States, which is one instance of a reverse brain drain. They were able to set up in Toronto a multimillion dollar investment in plant and equipment. I am also going to mention Smith, Kline and French. They have invested over $2 million in the Montreal area where they are conducting an extensive research program.

What is the intention of the government? Is it to remove all the advantages of this drug research or do they propose, as they propose in industry, to subsidize all those industries in Canada which find it difficult to meet competition from abroad? I think these are the questions that the Minister of Finance must ask himself, because the drug industry in Canada is far too important to write off with a shrug saying that cheap drugs are the only advantage we require in this country. We have to think of the research done and the scientists and other people who are trained and developed in Canada, as well as employment. Has this investigation been done?

I want to deal also with the health resources fund from the point of view that today we are tremendously short of doctors. Three years ago I drew this problem to the attention of the hon. member for Davenport, then minister of finance, and said the government should be getting ready to provide finances to run medical schools during the summer. This government brought in the medicare legislation two years before it goes into effect. I do not blame the Minister of Finance for the delay because he said there were certain financial problems involved, but I am saying that he said: Come what may we are going to bring it on July 1, 1968. I want to ask him what provision has been made to service the medicare contracts that they propose giving to the Canadian people. Are they going to cheat them and say they cannot possibly fulfil them because they have done nothing to guarantee there will be the number of doctors required to fulfil the demands of medicare across this country?

I have urged him to do this and newspapers have urged him to do it. There have been half a dozen editorials such as one in the Toronto Star a couple of weeks ago urging the government to supply the funds for summer terms in medical schools. This is an easy thing to do. It is not expensive. All you have to do is have the medical students who are taking a six year course at Queen's or at the University of Toronto take summer courses and you will create doctors in four years. This would mean an increase of one and a half times in the number of doctors graduating. This would in some measure meet the requirement for doctors set out in the Hall commission report.

Some may say, why was it not done? The biggest problem, according to what I have been told by people in the know or who should be in the know, is that funds would have to be provided to enable these medical students to go to school in the summer and not have to go out to work. The money could be made available through loans because once they graduate they are able to earn the money to repay any advances. But over and above that you will not be cheating the Canadian taxpayer out of something he is entitled to receive and for which he will be paying the bill under medicare.

Just in case the minister thinks I am rather hot on this point I want to draw his attention to an article by Dr. K. C. Thomson, past president of the Canadian Medical Association. He was describing the health resources fund of $500 million. This fund which was announced with glowing praise was described as a source of moneys to provide Canada with health education facilities. The need had been emphasized earlier by the Hall commission as a requirement to be met before Canada introduced any medical health insurance scheme whatever.

The minister said it is coming on July 1, 1968, without proper preparation. That is the only conclusion one can draw. The Hall report called for a great increase in doctors, nurses, technicians and all the personnel required for adequate medical care before medicare was instituted. Doctor Thomson goes on to say it is all right to build these structures if the provinces can match the grants dollar for dollar. Again I want to say to the minister that taxes went up 14 per cent federally last year. Some of us criticized him for that. I did not criticize him on that occasion. But at the same time provincial taxes across Canada went up by 25 per cent. I know he wants to be fair. With these increases, how in the world can the provincial governments go ahead and match the health resources fund dollar for dollar unless they are among the wealthiest provinces in Canada? I do not believe any of them can do it.

But after the minister has done that and has provided for the buildings, what about the staff facilities? What is the use of putting $500 million into buildings if we have not got the personnel to operate them? It comes back to the point that we are not providing the funds to do it. Again I quote this medical research report. It states that medical research needs a minimum of $56 million during 1967-68. For 1967-68, government grants total $25 million or less than half the amount prescribed in the report. This is not good enough. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that there is a crisis in the medical profession. Town after town in Canada is without doctors. I drove through one the other night which the doctor had left just the other day. In the town of Wingham two of the four doctors have pulled out and of the two who remain one is suffering from a heart condition and the other is getting along in years. There is a hospital in that town. Who will serve the public there? Who will do the night calls?

I am not blaming the federal government entirely because this is also a provincial affair but I come back to the point that the federal government is not pulling its weight in providing the necessary funds so that the provinces can discharge their responsibilities. This is the point I am making. I want to read again from Dr. Thomson's report and put it on the record that we cannot afford to forget research. Canada has a brilliant record. He points out that the American Medical Association has quoted the Economic Council of Canada as the authority for saying that 2,000 graduate physicians and surgeons left Canada in the decade 1953-1963.

That is over a ten year period and it means 200 physicians per year. At present it costs $50,000 to graduate a doctor. I do not have to belabour the economics of that because the minister should be smarter than I am in this field. Further, many of those who go to the United States are doing research work there.

We in Canada have had a spectacular record in research. It was in Canada that insulin was discovered by Banting and Best. Look at the boon to diabetics that was and money it has brought in on patent rights. We had Collp with the isolation of hormones from the parathyroid, the pituitary and the placenta, the discovery and introduction of anti-coagulants, major surgical achievements in epilepsy, and revascularization of the heart vessels. Look at Montreal, at Vineberg and the work he did. Other Canadian successes have been the use of hypothermia in surgery, cyclopropane in anesthesia, and the identification of the sex chromatin. I could continue with the list.

The Canadian Medical Association reports on the brain drain and hopes that it may be stemmed or even reversed. Dr. Thomson and his associates hope so. Just in case the minister might think I am over zealous I wish to quote an article which appeared in the Oshawa Times on June 5, 1967. It reads:

> The shortage of medical men in Ontario is a problem of growing and serious proportions.

And this applies across Canada.

> Back in 1964 anxiety over the situation was expressed by the Hall Royal Commission on health services . . .
>
> The four medical schools of Ontario have been graduating 300 doctors every year since the second world war. In the same period the population has almost doubled.
> According to Dr. John Evans, dean of the medical faculty at McMaster University, the profession is fighting a "losing battle" in trying to supply new doctors.

I want the minister to pay particular attention to that because he is the one who finally put the stamp on medicare which is to come into force on July 1, 1968, no matter what happens. I continue the quotation:

A start has been made. At Queen's, Toronto, Western and Ottawa, medical schools are being expanded. A new medical school at McMaster will open in two years.

But Dr. Evans claims that this is not enough. He suggests that the medical course should be shortened.

I am not an expert on the training of doctors and I am sure the Minister of Finance is not either, but I believe we can shorten the present course to four years by making it a continuous course and dividing it into three semesters. By doing that we would produce as many doctors in four years as it is presently taking us six years.

It now takes a medical student seven years after grade 13 before he can qualify for practice. Another two or three years must pass before he can specialize.

Now comes the point that I want the minister to consider:

If the government underwrote medical education completely, it would not be necessary for students to take four months off in the summer to earn money to continue, the Kingston Whig Standard comments.

In passing I would point out that the Minister of National Revenue comes from Kingston where Queen's University is situated.

Under a new system training could go on all year. Also, as is being shown at Queen's, the course can be safely shortened by eliminating non-essentials. McMaster plans to cut a year off the four years of medical studies by carrying on all year.

It would not be a loss to Canada if the government underwrote medical education completely. The money could be given as loans to students and every nickel would be paid back. Such a scheme would guarantee more doctors and perhaps stop some of the brain drain to the United States.

Another thing I want to point out to the minister is that it is my understanding that at present we have fewer interns in Canadian hospitals than we have had at any time during the last five years. At the same time there is more outpatient care at our hospitals. Outpatient care is increasing at the rate of about 15 per cent per year but the hospitals are understaffed. I ask the minister, what does he propose to do about this? He is the one who put the stamp of approval on the medicare bill which is to come into operation on July 1 next year.

I am not being critical of the minister. I am not being critical of anybody. I am merely trying to direct the attention of hon. members to a very serious situation. Every dean of medicine across Canada can testify to the crisis we find ourselves in today, but the government sits here, not providing the funds to do the things that are necessary in order to graduate the doctors that are needed. The situation is so bad that if a person moves to another town and does not know a doctor there or is not recommended to one the only place he can get attention is in the emergency department of a hospital. This is because all doctors are busy and overworked.

I warn the minister that a cracking point comes, and the cracking point in this case comes when governments make a second class profession of the medical profession because of their lack of support. I appeal to the Minister of Finance to provide the funds necessary to allow medical schools to operate during the summer. He should also provide funds for teaching and facilities in the new medical centres which are to be built whenever the provinces find themselves in a position to match dollar for dollar the funds granted by the federal government.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I was raised in a somewhat Calvinistic atmosphere in my home. I was always told by my father and mother that I should never buy anything unless I had the cash to pay for it. I have tried to practice that throughout my life. They also told me that if I denied myself in order to save money to buy the things I wanted, I would get more happiness from those things than if I went into debt to get them. So, Mr. Chairman, although I am one of the most progressive members of this group I am somewhat influenced by my home environment when I approach questions of finance.

I have always believed that the people of Canada are entitled to all the programs they are willing to support but that nothing is free. People are entitled to all the programs they want if they are willing to support the taxes required to pay for the programs. The money has to be taken from some one. No government can give anything in the way of services or funds to any group of person without taking it from some other group or person in our society. We have to realize the significance of that.

First, Mr. Chairman, I want to say I appreciate the minister's personal attention to any problems I have brought to his notice. I might say that my constituents also appreciate receiving copies of his letters which show that he has replied in person to the problems they brought to my attention and that I later brought to his notice.

Let me say that I was glad to hear that the competent officials of the Bank of Canada are working to promote international monetary reform. I think this is urgently necessary in the first instance if we are going to have complete national control of our own finances and independence in that direction, and also if we are to accept our global responsibilities to the underdeveloped countries which require our assistance on a logical, long-term and sound basis.

Once again let me bring to the minister's attention that I am one of those who believe that the Bank of Canada can be used to provide the social capital required by federal, provincial and municipal governments and that we should utilize the Bank of Canada for that purpose. I understand there are certain steps being taken in this direction but that nothing very much has been done to date. When I look at our debt charges, which I judge to be over $127 million per year, I think this is more than ever necessary.

I am not going to repeat the things I said the last time I spoke on this subject, but I should like to bring to the minister's attention some interesting correspondence from a certain gentleman writing on behalf of the Social Credit federal election association. Fancy me quoting them. The letter is from the honorary secretary, Mr. George Howland, 361 Vancouver Avenue, Nanaimo, British Columbia. The correspondence reads as follows:

A reduction or cancellation of the 8 per cent of bank deposits gives a golden opportunity to provide for short term interest free loans to be made available.

The bank should not have so valuable a proposal handed to them free of charge, so to speak.

Part of the extra dollars which would come within their grasp should be made, by compulsion, available to those provinces asking for interest free loans, when they can back their requests with satisfactory evidence that they could supply as cover, bonds saleable on a par with other gilt-edged securities.

It is an indisputable fact that Mr. Robert Thompson, leader of the Social Credit party and Mr. T. Douglas, leader of the New Democratic Party are 100 per cent in favour of interest free loans; letters from them are evidence of this. If the Creditistes and either the Liberal or Conservative leaders also favour such loans, now is the time for action.

Today we are having a revision of the Bank Act; to lose this opportunity might mean many years wait for another one.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Sharp: Has the hon. member converted his fellow N.D.P. members?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, and I shall read a letter which will show that I am right on the beam. This correspondence was sent to my leader who replied on July 2, 1965. I want to place his letter in reply on the record. It is addressed to Mr. George Howland and states:

Dear Mr. Howland:

Thank you very much for your letter of June 25 and for enclosing the leaflet advocating interest free loans to provincial governments and local government bodies.

This is in keeping with the program of the New Democratic Party. Indeed, I think we must go further and have the federal government make grants for at least 50 per cent of the expenditures for schools, hospitals, etc. in areas which require such assistance.

Thanks again for writing me in this connection and kindest personal regards.

Yours sincerely,

T. C. Douglas.

I hope the minister will not ask any more questions as to whether I am dealing with party policy, because this is the best evidence I could possibly give of my leader's support for the programs I have been urging upon the Bank of Canada from time to time. A great deal could be done in this direction because these loans would be made on our ability to repay, on our resources and industrial structure, as well as on the capacity of the Canadian people to produce. Why should we not use the Bank of Canada to develop our country in the way I suggest?

I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands regarding the accumulating Canadian pension fund capital. Surely that could be used in conjunction with action on the part of the Bank of Canada to promote public and private investment in this country. Surely there are plenty of opportunities for this money to be used on a sound and satisfactory basis.

In addition we have the Industrial Development Bank which provides capital for smaller private industries. It has been very useful to several small industries in my own constituency which required assistance at a certain time. As a result of that assistance these industries were established, have become successful and have grown.

I believe there has been a failure in recognizing the great opportunities for the development of the credit union movement in this country as it relates to the mobilization of the savings of the working people. I called the first meeting for this purpose in my constituency when I was in the provincial house and helped organize the credit union in Trail. At the time this credit union was organized there were six or seven people present and it was obvious that many of the workers did not feel the working man could handle his own money properly. It may be of interest to note that at the present time in the constituency of Kootenay West there is over $15 million in the capital of credit unions. They provide loans to working people in respect of consumer goods as well as an opportunity for investment. These credit unions are now supplying money to road contractors and people of that sort, and did so particularly at a time when they were unable to obtain money from the banks. The federal and provincial governments could do a lot more to promote and stimulate this movement.

What we need at this time is a national credit union act. This is particularly true because these credit unions are operating as a result of the participation of those Canadians concerned. This provides a tremendous opportunity for the mobilization of a very large amount of capital which can be used for consumer loans, investment and in the development of small local industries in the areas where the credit unions are organized. When the minister replies I hope he will indicate the government's intention in respect of a national credit union act. Let me emphasize the fact that there is tremendous opportunity in this field and tremendous enthusiasm on the part of those groups who utilize these credit unions and support them.

I should also like to ask the minister what progress has been made in the study of charitable donations. Chambers of commerce, farmers organizations and other groups have throughout the years made certain representations in connection with exemptions for donations to charitable organizations. I am in favour of providing an exemption if the donations are actually made to charitable organizations and not to organizations masquerading as such.

When the minister replies I hope he will have something to say in this regard, and I hope he will give some further consideration to those individuals who are holders of perpetual bonds. I have received quite a lot of correspondence about this matter, as I am sure other members have, and I have always felt that these people were not being treated fairly in respect of the small amounts they hold. I think consideration could be given to their circumstances, especially where they bought these bonds having in mind that they would be something to fall back on when they reached retirement age. The persons I hear from generally are those who have a number of these bonds and who expected the interest would be available and would be useful at a time when they were no longer working. I do urge further consideration of this problem.

I had several other questions to bring to the attention of the minister. I have written him about these matters and he has replied promptly and in detail. I think consideration should be given to the sort of overlapping between federal and provincial responsibility in connection with certain financial questions, acceptance corporations and things of that sort. It is a very foggy area at the present time and should be more clearly defined.

That is all I have to say at this moment. I certainly look forward to hearing what the minister intends to do about the several matters I have brought to his attention. Before I sit down may I say I can almost feel that I have made him a convert to my philosophy with respect to the issuing of loans by the Bank of Canada to all governments that require them for investment in social capital.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I ought to say a few words about the estimates of the Department of Finance. I regret that the former minister of finance, now President of the Privy Council, is not here to give the house the benefit of his philosophy, which for some reason seems not to be accepted by the present minister and others of the cabinet. But the Minister of Finance's loss is NATO's gain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Totally unacquainted with international affairs, the President of the Privy Council left Canada a couple of days ago to accompany the Secretary of State for External Affairs to deal with problems of NATO. This is a matter of very considerable importance when one considers the expenditures in respect of foreign affairs. Whether there is any significance in the fact that he is now abroad, having expressed the view that NATO should be abolished, will be an interesting study during the days ahead.

Why did the former minister of finance depart this country at a time when his views would have been so helpful, namely, when the estimates of the Minister of Finance are before the committee? The President of the Privy Council has gone abroad to deal with international affairs, a subject he has shown no capacity to understand up to the present time. Is it a fact that having joined the entourage for NATO is the first indication by the government that his views are now being accepted and that NATO, at a time when it should be strengthened, faces the danger of being weakened if the philosophy of the former minister of finance is accepted? These things occur to those who endeavour to look at what is called in certain circles the spectrum created by a government that goes every direction on every subject and is always able to say that some minister has taken a position contrary to that followed by the others.

In this centennial year the Minister of Finance has much to boast about. It begins to look as though he will be the Minister of Finance with the greatest deficit in Canada's peacetime history. It looks as though we will have a billion dollar deficit unless there is an assiduous application of paring down. Up to the present time this government has shown no sign of believing in the necessity of that. The Minister of Finance is able to boast in centennial year that he has introduced the heaviest taxation in Canada's history. During his period of office he has increased taxation in several fields to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars. He is able to boast in centennial year that under his administration the highest cost of living in all history has been attained.

These things are deserving of mention, particularly when it is realized that the minister belongs to that group that had all the answers to all the problems in 1963. At that time, when Canada was spending something over $6 billion, it was a frightful situation for this nation. This year it will be at least $400 million more.

An hon. Member: Four billion dollars more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, $4 billion more. After all, as Mr. Howe said, "What's a million, anyhow?" The only difference between Mr. Howe and this government is that they have substituted "billion" for "million".

I do not wish to deal with the budget directly at this time, but I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you will allow me to say that while everybody commends the removal of the tax on drugs it is particularly appropriate, having regard to the things I mentioned a moment ago—the prospective billion dollar deficit, the highest taxes in Canadian history and the highest cost of living in Canadian history—that aspirin will now be cheaper. This will no doubt assist Canadians as a whole to suffer less pain. Again I say I do not want to deal with the budget because it will be dealt with later. In fact there was no budget; therefore there can be no infraction of the rules in simply referring to that document.

I wish to deal with the fiscal payments to the provinces. There, too, the great men who now sit opposite had all the answers. They would bring about a fiscal system that would help the provinces, and deny any possibility of injustice or unfairness. On page 149 of the present estimates the statutory payments to the provinces are listed in accordance with the recent fiscal arrangements. During our period of office we would not have had a deficit in any year, I think, had it not been for the increased payments that we made to the provinces in order to assist them to discharge their jurisdictional authority and responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1958 we entered into new agreements. We did not have to enter into new agreements; the agreements still had four years to run. We entered into new agreements because we realized that the provinces could not carry out the responsibilities set out in the British North America Act. We helped them. We gave new hope to the Atlantic provinces. We made it easier for the people of the maritimes to walk as Canadians, upright and without fear. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, who at that time was premier of New Brunswick, knows it well. Now what has happened? The government has been tinkering with this problem, failing to face up to it.

The figures relating to the distribution of increases in 1967-68 over the previous year give an indication that there is something radically wrong with the fiscal policies, of this government. In 1967-68 Newfoundland is to receive $71 million compared with $47 million in the previous year. Prince Edward Island receives $14.2 million compared with $10.4 million. Nova Scotia receives $79.3 million compared with $50.8 million. New Brunswick receives $70.6 million compared with $46.4 million. Even with these increases the provinces cannot carry out their responsibilities.

Quebec receives $280.5 million compared with $158.7 million in the previous year. Ontario will receive in 1967-68 $18.8 million and in the previous year it received $17.1

million. I will leave it to the Ontario members to devote themselves to the study of the figures that I place before the committee.

I come to western Canada. Manitoba receives $34.2 million compared with $30.7 million. Saskatchewan was forgotten. It is to receive this year $28.9 million compared with $35.4 million, a substantial reduction of some $6.5 million. Alberta will receive the same sum as it did the previous year. Why has there been such a reduction in the sum given to Saskatchewan? What is the variety of abstruse mathematical calculation performed in the recesses of the Department of Finance? Why was this done. All the mathematical formulae that can be produced, all the juggling that the minister can do, cannot explain the unfairness to the province of Saskatchewan. I would be the last to suggest that there were any political connotations or that the province is being penalized to any extent because of the last federal election. But why is there such a situation? Am I unfair in this criticism?

Anyone who thinks so should hear what the premier of Saskatchewan has to say. He knows this government. He is fully acquainted with the Minister of Finance, and his views are of a nature that I would not want to repeat them in the House of Commons lest the government blush with shame. Somewhere in this equation there is an X factor. Is the X factor related to the voting record? These are questions that naturally arise. The minister cannot say that the province wanted it this way because he will recall his hurried trip to Toronto to meet the premier of Saskatchewan. That was not a get-together for social purposes. What explanation did the minister advance to the premier of Saskatchewan for having knocked down the $35 million to approximately $29 million? These are things which we would like to hear about from the minister.

The situation today in dominion-provincial fiscal relations is far removed from the concept that the Fathers of Confederation had in mind and also far removed from the principles that activated the Mackenzie King and St. Laurent administrators in their day. No glib response can answer the charge that this government has failed the provinces. There is no question about it. It is because it has failed the provinces that it refuses to convene a dominion-provincial conference on the subject of confederation. We have asked for it. The Canadian people are in a mood to bring about the necessary agreements on the constitution in keeping with the experience of 100 years, agreements which will assure the provinces that they will be able to carry out their responsibilities.

We were told for about a year and a half the government could not act. The minister said he could not do anything because the Carter commission had not reported. When the Carter commission did report the alibi was that they had to examine the recommendations very carefully. That is true and I can understand it. Now consideration is to be postponed again. There is to be another meeting as mentioned today by the Prime Minister. It is just simple eyewash on the part of the government to pretend that it intends to do something about the Carter recommendations while at the same time it does everything it can to postpone and procrastinate in anticipation hopefully of not having to do anything. What is going to be done? This cannot go on. Confederation cannot live with the day to day and year to year handouts which this government perpetuates.

There will have to be acceptance of the principle that in certain fields the provinces have rights of taxation, otherwise we will build up within this nation concepts far removed from the determination of the Fathers of Confederation. I might deal with this later after the minister gives an answer to the questions that have been asked.

I come to a matter of interest not only to Canada but to western Canada in particular. What has happened to the Bank of Western Canada? It was not very long ago that Sinclair Stevens and his group, B.I.F. and all the subsidiaries which he had gathered together, were going to operate the bank. This was the new wizard of finance with all the ideas. Trust companies were absorbed and included in B.I.F. He decided he should go into the banking field. One can understand why he thought action was necessary. I should have paid a further tribute to the minister. He is the minister who, in this confederation year, has produced the highest interest rates. Everybody is being mulcted under this government. We have the highest taxes, highest interest rates and highest cost of living.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: The highest standard of living and the highest employment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I heard the highest employment. Don't you think you ought to—

Mr. Sharp: You don't want to hear about it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I am not waved aside when he waves his imperial hand as easily as the flunkies under the minister.

Mr. Sharp: Just as you are doing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to him, when he speaks about unemployment, will he tell us why the number of unemployed in Canada is approaching, if correctly computed, half a million?

Mr. Robichaud: Half of what it was in 1960.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Here is the fishmonger general, the man who cannot look after the skinning of seals. If you want a man who knows and understands skinning, then I say to the Minister of Finance, get the Minister of Fisheries. He is an authority on that subject. I am glad he interrupted. Any further interruptions from him will be welcome.

Mr. Robichaud: I am glad to help.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should not get annoyed.

Mr. Sharp: I am not annoyed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a great regard for the minister when I see him on television. I say, there but for the grace of God—I listen to him because there is something deeply attractive about him. He and I are not blessed with physical beauty but he has an attractive manner. He should not get annoyed now. If I thought he was going to get annoyed, Mr. Chairman, such is my regard for him I would not continue. The question of unemployment is a touchy one for him. He is aware that the Canada-United States automobile agreement is now being revealed as unjust to Canadian workers in so many types of manufacture. I was dragged into that because of the interruption, so I return now to the Bank of Western Canada. If the Minister of Fisheries has anything more to say, I welcome it because it will not be long before he goes to the other place whence no one returns.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Will the right hon. gentleman, before talking about seals, check the position of his own members on this matter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not know they wanted to be skinned. All I have to say to the minister is that it is fortunate he is about to go to the other place because something will have to be done. He has stubbornly refused to accept the recommendations of such bodies as the council of the city of Windsor.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Robichaud: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Don't laugh at the city of Windsor. It is fortunate the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not here. Don't ridicule the city of Windsor or there will be further division within the government.

What about the internal struggle that is going on in the Bank of Western Canada? Is the government not aware of the potential damage to investors in the Bank of Western Canada? Will the minister say what the present position is? A licence was given. Can a bank receive a licence on the authority of parliament and fail to be set up as a chartered bank

What has happened in connection with the Bank of Western Canada represents an elegy of indifference to the interests of western Canada. What is the minister going to do about this? Will he place before the house and the country the position he is taking? What is he doing to bring reason among the warring factions? The Bank of Western Canada was set up particularly to assure that the western provinces would have a chartered bank. Difficulties arose. It was found that the controlling group was mainly from elsewhere, at least, that was the allegation. Today the question is being asked, what is the present position? This is something that comes right under the minister's department. He has these things at his fingers' ends. He will be able to answer without difficulty.

Is the Bank of Western Canada, which parliament set up after a two-year fight in the other place, to be permitted to die or to be in a state of suspended animation because of internecine strife? The people of western Canada expected the bank to be set up at the earliest possible date. I think it was expected to open in April or May. There is no indication now of any action.

I ask the minister to clarify the two matters to which I have referred. Later, if the opportunity arises and the minister is still in the good humour he is exhibiting at the moment, I will have a number of other matters to raise.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, my interest in taking part in the study of the estimates of the Department of Finance this afternoon arises both as a doctor and also as the member for Parkdale. I wish to express my appreciation to the minister for having taken steps, as outlined in his budget, to reduce the cost of drugs and for announcing the date on which the federal sales tax on drugs will be eliminated. In my personal experience I have had patients who could pay for the diagnostic services but had to forgo treatment by drugs or medication because of their high cost. I am happy to tell the minister that patients who have been in that predicament will find it easier to purchase the drugs they need to treat their ills.

The second reason for taking part in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Finance is to express my appreciation for all this government has done to assist municipalities in relieving the local unemployment problem and providing more public services. However, I should like to emphasize again the necessity for increasing financial aid to our municipalities. I have at hand a letter I received from the mayor of the city of Toronto requesting the Minister of Finance to take into consideration a resolution that was passed at the national conference of the Association of Mayors and Reeves in Niagara Falls on May 16. This resolution urges the government of Canada to enact legislation to exempt from income tax the interest payable on bonds issued for purposes of providing public housing. Such legislation would reduce income tax revenues but municipalities would gain through reduced interest charges. Similar legislation, Mr. Chairman, was enacted under the Kennedy administration in the United States. I hope it will be possible to have such legislation introduced in our parliament.

I should also like to bring once more to the minister's attention the plight of the home owner, especially in the city of Toronto. In the past 12 years the residential taxes of home owners in Toronto have doubled. Today taxes are at an intolerable level. I hope it is possible for the Minister of Finance to study the feasibility of exempting residential taxes from federal personal income tax levy.

The third point I wish to make is to bring to the attention of the minister the plight of those Canadian citizens who are still awaiting the settlement of their claims against certain governments of Europe. These are claims that were submitted many years ago but are not yet settled. These people, who are all Canadian citizens, have had property nationalized or confiscated by governments in Europe and they believe that today these governments are in a position to make a settlement of their claims. I would ask the Minister of Finance to make a statement this afternoon or at some other time on the progress of the negotiations in respect of such claims.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have a very simple request to make of the minister and perhaps he could reply to it when he replies to the other requests that have been made. I want to raise a problem in connection with the working mother who is a widow, has children and perforce has to engage a babysitter to look after her children while she earns their keep. I think that this problem is fairly common in different parts of Canada, and it is one I should like to see tackeld by the Department of Finance through the budgetary laws of the country to the end that such people may be given some relief. For a few hours of the day they are required to hire a babysitter for their children, and part of what they earn is spent on this purpose.

When a man suffers bereavement through the loss of his wife certain provisions in the income tax law give him relief. However, this problem has been drawn to my attention by various widows in the Halifax area. I realize that the widows in the rest of Canada belong to the hon. member for Kootenay West but there are a number who are pleased to present their problems to me. I believe that the problem is a substantial one with which parliament should come to grips. Such expenditure is surely a legitimate expense that should be deductible from gross income. Parents do have obligations to look after their children and payments of this sort in effect reduce a widow's earnings. I hope my short plea will commend itself to the minister and his department and that something can be done for these people.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I open my remarks by saying that I am perhaps one of the few members of the House of Commons who would be quick to tell the Minister of Finance that he is not an expert on financial matters. I assure the minister that when I study company and bank balances, credits and debits, appreciation and depreciation, income tax, corporation tax payments and reserves for same, quite honestly I become completely confused. I am one—I think there are many more like me in this house—who, when I receive my cheque at the end of the month and deposit it in the bank, pay my bills and anxiously look forward to my next month's cheque hoping that what I have left will last till that time. Therefore in making my remarks this evening I am not speaking as an expert on finances in any way.

There is one phase of financial investment about which I hope the minister will give an explanation to a great many people in the country. I refer to those in the aged group who have only a little money, those typically who have $1,000, $3,000, $5,000 or perhaps $10,000. Thousands of people in Canada who have but little money and do not want to lose it honestly believe that the finest guaranteed investment they can make is in federal government bonds. This is almost axiomatic in the thinking of people with small savings, with only so many years ahead of them, who want to know that they are going to be paid interest on their investment and, in particular, will never lose their capital. In addition, Mr. Chairman, there are certain types of trust, such as education trusts, which by law can invest only in government bonds or, on occasion, in first mortgages.

What has been the experience of these people to whom I refer? Over the months I have received letter after letter from people who have invested their money to provide for themselves in their declining years. However, sometimes an emergency arises and they have to sell their investments. What happens to those who invest in government bonds? They find themselves in a paradoxical situation financially that I confess I do not understand. They sell their government bonds sometimes at heavy loss on their capital investment. I understand the reason for this is the money market, and that when you invest money you do so on the understanding that you hold your security until maturity date. I once had an experience, not a personal one, with an education trust where money was suddenly required and I believe the trust lost about $8 of its capital investment on each $100 bond purchased.

The only point I am trying to make is that there are thousands of people who trust the federal government and who are not familiar with the complexities and intricacies of finance and the effect of the money market on government bonds. As I say, these people trust the federal government and trust investment in federal bonds. I have recently been advised that such people cannot sell their bonds without suffering a capital loss. It is true that they can borrow money from the bank on the security of their government bonds but then they suffer a loss because of the interest they have to pay. The loss through interest payments is not as great perhaps as the loss they would suffer by the sale of their capital investments.

Perhaps my presentation is needlessly complex, but this question concerns thousands of Canadians. They have put their trust in the federal government and in federal bonds. Can the minister say what action people ought to take when they wish to reclaim some of their money? What are they to do if they are not to lose part of their capital and retain their trust in government bonds? The government has needed money and has entered the world financial market. The people of our country have invested in government bonds but when they are in dire need of money and wish to sell their bonds they lose on their capital investment.

I hope that the minister understands the point I am trying to raise because I do not know how else to put it. I have received many letters asking that the problem I have referred to be corrected. Those buying government bonds are real Canadians who by thrift have saved their money and have invested it in Canada. They are people who, when they are in dire need, find that the Canadian government lets them down and allows them to lose money on the capital they have invested in Canada.

Mr. Monteith: I shall be brief, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to ask the minister a question. Though the hon. member for Vancouver East suggested that he was not an expert on finance he expressed himself very well on behalf of those Canadian citizens who have been holding government bonds which have deteriorated in value. I am interested in the minister's reply to the hon. member for Edmonton West's question concerning the reserve unit. The governor of the Bank of Canada in his annual report dealt with this matter, which has some urgency. I am also interested in the minister's reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Parkdale, which had to do with the situation of Canadians with claims against various European governments.

I now wish to ask one or two questions. I am interested in how many refunding issues the minister contemplates for this year and how many new issues he contemplates to meet the projected deficit. Could he outline his intentions in this respect? The other question I wish to raise stems from a letter I received today and it concerns a suggested reduction in tariffs on church vestments, prayer shawls and the like. A clergyman who moved to Canada and who brought some vestments was told by a customs official that there had been a reduction in the customs tariff on such vestments in the most recent budget but there was uncertainty whether the reduction would take effect immediately. The clergyman is waiting before claiming his articles because he wants to see what is to happen with regard to the duty that is applicable on them. Those are the only questions I wish to ask at the moment.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I want to add to what has already been said about making it possible for women working outside the home to deduct the expenses of babysitters or housekeepers from their income tax returns. They should be able to make a deduction for those expenses in the same way as businessmen deduct for business expenses. It is necessary that this be done.

Great numbers of women working outside the home are the sole support of their families and if their families are not to be neglected they must have housekeeping or babysitting services during working hours. There is no provision in any thoroughgoing way for housewives to deduct these expenses at the present time. We also find that in many families the husband is a widower and has to work and provide housekeeping services for his family. It is important that children should not be allowed to run at large or be without proper housekeeping services. Such expenses also ought to be deductible.

Many women who work outside the home cannot possibly afford from their wages or salaries the expenses of babysitters. In certain countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom the tax position for married women is quite favourable. Here I am thinking about the way married women are permitted to make deductions for their expenses from income tax. For example, in the United States a working wife can deduct up to $900 for child care expenses when there are two or more children, or $600 for one child. The stipulations are that the child be not more than 12 years old and that the joint income of the parents not exceed $6,000.

In the United Kingdom preference is given to working married women. They get a single person's tax free allowance for earnings, in addition to the husband benefiting from the married man's allowance which is nearly double the single person's.

The tax structures in a few countries, on the other hand, appear to be intended to discourage the wives of all but the neediest of husbands from employment. In the Netherlands, for example, a married woman's earnings are taxed 15 per cent if she is not the breadwinner.

My remarks at this time are directed particularly to the plight of the nursing profession. It is essential that married women who are nursing be able to deduct the expenses of housekeeping services. For married nurses, who represent 60 per cent of all nurses employed full time, the present tax policies must be frustrating, costly, and discouraging. That these nurses continue to work in spite of them is proof of their desire to remain active in the profession.

For the 19,781 married nurses listed as "not employed in nursing" in 1965 the present income tax policies undoubtedly discourage reemployment. The return of even a portion of these women to active nursing would do much to lessen the effect of the shortage of nurses throughout this country. This is only one example of what could be achieved by permitting women to deduct the expenses of housekeeping and babysitting for income tax purposes. We are complaining because we lack sufficient numbers of medical personnel. Some people say we cannot launch the medicare plan because we do not have sufficient numbers of trained personnel. I can tell the minister that a great many nurses would be available right now if they were able to deduct for income tax purposes the expense of hiring a proper housekeeper. At present they cannot do so because of the expense which would be involved.

I should like the Minister of Finance to tell us why this should not be a legitimate busisiness expense in the case of women working outside the home. Today 30 per cent of the labour force is made up of women. Why should they not have the same rights as men so far as deductions for income tax purposes on account of expenses are concerned? Certainly, a deduction in respect of housekeeping and babysitting expenses is one which might legitimately be claimed. The most effective way of enabling trained women to undertake important work is to allow them to deduct for income tax purposes the amounts paid in respect of housekeeping services.

I should like to hear whether the minister's ideas have changed in this regard. I would point out that more and more women are bringing pressure on us to recognize the case for allowing expenses of this sort. Such a concession is only logical if these services are to be given without unnecessary anxiety as to the well-being of the families concerned.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity to make some comments on the general direction in which events in this country are moving. I do so on the basis of reports on Friday last showing a worsening in our balance of trade.

We have been saying for a long time that the government is permitting the cost of living to increase dramatically. I have the figures and I will produce them in a moment. Taxation in Canada has been increasing. The cost of government administration has been increasing in alarming fashion. The number of persons in the government service has increased dramatically—something like 12,000 within the past year. Government overhead expenses, the non-productive part of government, have been increasing faster than the productive portion of this country's economy.

All of us have been asking for months: Where is this leading and where will it end? I think we are beginning to see where it is leading. We have seen in the most recent return from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics evidence of a worsening of our trade position. During the months of April, 1966, imports amounted to $774 million. In the same months in 1967 imports amounted to $973 million, an increase of 25 per cent. It should also be said that there has been an increase in exports and for this, of course, we have to give credit where credit is due. But the increase in exports has not been sufficient to balance the increase in imports since a year ago when there was a small favourable balance amounting to slightly over $1 million. There is today an adverse balance amounting to over $73 million or, in terms of percentage, a 6,000 per cent increase. The result of the use of percentages gives an unreal figure but in fact that is what it amounts to. It is an indication that Canada is losing the fight to provide for its own people by means of its own productive capacity.

At the same time, employment is not increasing as it should and unemployment is increasing. It is not my purpose to stand here, as hon. members on the other side did for two or three years, beating away at the question of unemployment. They knew then, as they know now, that to a degree the unemployment figure is a false one. In many cases it does not mean hardship. Indeed, it is relatively meaningless in some respects because it is calculated on the basis of the numbers looking for work. It is not related to destitution.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Nevertheless, we in Canada are increasing the cost of producing goods in this country to the point where we are not competitive with countries abroad. For some time we have been saying this would happen. Now it has happened, as the figures on external trade clearly show. If we were to take the figure for September last and compare it with a month earlier this year, the minister might say: There is a seasonal drop in April so you cannot compare the two months. But the hon. gentleman cannot say this drop is seasonal because I have been comparing identical months. It cannot be claimed that this is an odd or unusual situation because the import balance position has gradually been worsening as far as Canada is concerned. I am very worried in case we are gradually drifting toward the imperceptible point of no return at which we can import goods into Canada more cheaply than we can produce them. When that point comes, we buy more goods from countries abroad and sell less beyond our own borders.

I wonder whether the auto trade agreement has something to do with the situation. The minister may say it is temporary and that in the long run the auto trade agreement may work out to our benefit. But there are a lot of things the government has done about which it has said, "Well, in the long run, this is going to be better." We have to look at the figures which are given to us in this context.

According to the latest dominion bureau of statistics figures which were issued on Friday last, in 1966 we imported $72 million worth of motor vehicle parts. This year we have imported $98 million worth of parts, an increase of roughly $26 million. In 1966 we imported $24 million worth of what are referred to as new closed sedans. This year we have imported $63 million worth, an increase of roughly $40 million. Imports of trucks, tractors and chassis have risen this year to $8½ million from $5½ million in 1966. If this is the benefit we are getting from the auto trade pact, to me it does not seem to be much of a benefit. I could use other examples but I am not going to go into the details at this time.

These are not items for which the Minister of Finance is necessarily and primarily responsible. They are covered by government policy. But we are permitted to beat him over the head with them when discussing his estimates because it is his responsibility to see that the budget is kept in accordance with the Canadian economy and to see that the economy of the country is kept viable through what the Department of Finance does. I never like being a prophet of doom. I hope the figures are all wrong. I hope we are making great progress, but I cannot see it in anything emanating from the dominion bureau of statistics.

Granted we sometimes take too much comfort or discomfort out of d.b.s. figures because from time to time they may not reflect the true picture. If we want to we can always make a case using d.b.s. figures, but the cost of living figures are very telling. In February, 1963, the year that the government took office, the cost of living index stood at 132.3. From 1957 until 1963 it increased by just over 11 points from 121.9 to 132.3. By 1964 it had increased to 134.5 and by February, 1967 it had risen to 146.1 an increase of 12 points within a few years. The figure for May of this year is 148.1, two full points above the February figure.

We know the reasons for the increase. It is partly due to free spending without real thought given to the productive value thereof. It is partly due to carelessness and neglect. We can blame programs and policies if we like, but with the government permitting the cost of living to increase so dramatically we are losing our ability to compete in world markets, and that ability is one of the fundamental bases of our economy. We are drifting, and I have seen no evidence from the minister's statements that the government is going to halt the drift and say, "Look, we are now at the critical point."

One of these days we are going to lose our markets. We are already starting to lose them. We are importing too many things. We have a great economy and we could maintain it by greater production. We rely on trade but there is something wrong with the current trend. It is going the wrong way and I take this opportunity to protest as strongly as I can. Our balance of trade figures are starting to show a bad trend. We are starting to lose the battle. When the saturation point is reached we will be in great difficulty.

I wish to conclude by referring to another subject. I have been very critical during the past year of the Industrial Development Bank for its lending policy, but in the last few months I have noticed that the officials are making a greater effort and I want to acknowledge that effort. I have noticed that more loans are being made to companies that need help to become productive. I have noticed an increase in the amount of loans made to service the tourist industry, in which I am particularly interested. This trend should be encouraged to continue. Maybe my prodding had something to do with it. I hope the trend will continue because the bank's job is to increase production in Canada. By helping business become more productive we can somewhat reduce our adverse trade balance.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dubé): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39-A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Consumer Credit—inquiry as to legislation this session; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), Immigration—U.S. citizens in Canada to escape army draft; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), Subvention—Etats généraux du Canada.

• (6:00 p.m.)

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PROPOSED RENAMING AS CANADA GRAIN BOARD

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in order to remove any misunderstanding among foreign purchasers of Canadian grains to the effect that wheat only is handled by the Canadian Wheat Board, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation for the purpose of renaming the said board the "Canada Grain Board" and thereby indicate that other products such as oats, barley, flaxseed, rapeseed and rye are also handled by this board.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I introduce this motion somewhat reluctantly because the Canadian Wheat Board since 1935 when it came into being to handle Canadian grain because of very serious problems in respect of price, has built up a very good reputation. At the time it came into being the farmers were not in a position to hold their wheat and sell when the price was high. Very often they had to sell at a lower price because of the need for money. At that time the Canadian Wheat Board handled only Canadian wheat but in 1949 oats and barley were also brought under the jurisdiction of the board.

This year I was a member of the delegation that flew to Russia on the inaugural flight of service between Canada and Russia by Aeroflot and Air Canada. We spent a few days in Russia, and as a result of being able to speak their language I found that many people there thought that the Canadian Wheat Board handled only wheat. They were not aware of the fact that in 1949 this board was given the authority to handle oats and barley as well as wheat.

There is a strong feeling in the three western prairie provinces that rapeseed and flaxseed should also be placed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is my feeling that by changing the name to the Canada grain board we will indicate to people in foreign countries that this board handles not only wheat but all the other grains grown in this country. It may well be that this board will be given the authority before very long to handle other grains, and if the wrong impression which exists in foreign countries is allowed to continue we may lose many markets for these other grains. We now have markets in China, in Japan and in a number of European countries. I might say that Japan is our best customer for rapeseed.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I brought forward this motion with some hesitation because of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board has built up a good reputation and has helped the farmers of Canada save a great deal of money by finding markets for their products at stabilized prices. The time has come when the name should be changed. World demand for our grain is growing and if foreign countries have the impression that the Canadian Wheat Board handles only wheat we may lose a number of valuable customers.

I have discussed this matter with some members of the wheat board who feel a little bit reluctant about a name change because of its good reputation. Our customers know that if they buy a certain grade, whether it be No. 1, 2 or 3, through the Canadian Wheat Board they will receive that grade. On the other hand, if the name is not changed to make it readily apparent to prospective customers that the board handles other grains as well our Canadian grain growers may lose these potential markets.

At the present time China and other countries buy mainly wheat from Canada but the time is coming when more rapeseed and other grains will be grown in Canada and markets will have to be found. For this reason I think all grains grown in the west should be brought under the same agency. I hope this motion will not be talked out and that consideration will be given to changing the name from the Canadian Wheat Board to the Canada grain board.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a little time to discuss my hon. friend's notice of motion, and let me indicate at the outset that I am sure there is no desire on the part of any hon. member to do other than offer constructive criticism of the recommendation contained in this notice of motion. I want to confine my remarks to an analysis of the terms of the notice of motion and, for whatever help it may be, to indicate to hon. members the serious doubts I have as to whether it would be in the interest of the western Canadian producers of grain and the country generally to accept this motion at this time.

I should like to direct my remarks to two aspects of the notice of motion. Perhaps I may do so, Mr. Speaker, by referring to its terms. I think the hon. member who is sponsoring the motion is trying to do two things. First, he states in his notice of motion:

That, in the opinion of this house—

I think this is the hon. member's first point.

—in order to remove any misunderstanding among foreign purchasers of Canadian grains to the effect that wheat only is handled by the Canadian Wheat Board—

I hope I am being fair to my hon. friend when I suggest this is the primary reason for the suggested change.

—the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation for the purpose of renaming the said board the "Canada Grain Board" and thereby indicate that other products such as oats, barley, flaxseed, rapeseed and rye are also handled by this board.

It would seem to me that the second objective of the notice of motion of my hon. friend is to bring about indirectly something that probably would not pass constitutional scrutiny if the house were to deal with it in this manner. Dealing with the argument of the hon. member that the change of name should be made to make clear that the Canadian Wheat Board is not merely a wheat marketing agency, I think it would be wise to remind hon. members at this point that the Canadian Wheat Board is at this time a marketing agency in international and interprovincial trade in wheat, oats and barley.

I listened carefully to the argument of the sponsor of the notice of motion. I listened for evidence in support of the hon. member's argument. It was a good argument. However, I should like to have seen it supported by, for example, a resolution of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union, or resolutions of other agricultural groups. I think this would have given the sponsor a much stronger argument to present to members of this house.

As I understood the argument of the hon. member it was based to a great extent on his own opinion. I respect the hon. member's opinion but would point out that it is the opinion of only one member of this house and it is unsupported by the sort of evidence that would have made it a much more compelling argument. It would have been a much more compelling argument if the hon. member could have backed it up with evidence such as I have indicated which might have been forthcoming from agricultural and producer groups.

I wish to make my first argument a positive one and say that I have great concern, and I think other members of this house have similar concern, about whether the change suggested in the notice of motion would create a great deal of confusion in the minds of the customers with whom the Canadian Wheat Board deals. I believe it would have this effect. My hon. friend who sponsored the notice of motion has indicated that such a change would be helpful in eliminating confusion but, with respect, Mr. Speaker, he did not give us any evidence to indicate that such confusion does in fact exist. I believe, therefore, that we would only be creating more confusion in making the change suggested.

I have a personal interest and a little knowledge in this matter because of some years spent in close association with the farming industry of Saskatchewan. I am very anxious to agree with my hon. friend about the reputation the Canadian Wheat Board has earned not only among the grain producers of western Canada but among the customers with whom the wheat board deals.

I well recall, as does my hon. friend, the days before the Canadian Wheat Board was set up in western Canada. In those days there was in the marketing of wheat and other grains a great deal of confusion. It was not a form of marketing that was in the best interests of the producers. I join the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) and agree that the Canadian Wheat Board has done a good job in this respect. I suggest to hon. members that we would not want to detract from the good job the board has done. In particular we would not want to detract from the relationship of the Canadian Wheat Board with our international customers by changing the name of the board unless there was a good, concrete and compelling argument put forward for our so doing.

In this respect perhaps we should rely on the old saying that there is nothing that succeeds like success. I think hon. members will agree that the fact is that this is the record of the Canadian Wheat Board since its inception in 1935. In the marketing year 1965-66 the board visited 30 countries, some of them several times, in order to maintain the close contact it has with millers, grain traders and government officials in those markets. The hon. member did not suggest that there is confusion in the minds of the officials of approximately 100 countries of the world as to the functions of the board and what products it handles.

The second theme that I suggested is inherent in this notice of motion is one for which my hon. friend is well and properly noted and regarded in the house and throughout the country, at least throughout western Canada. I refer to the hon. member's record of championing the inclusion of other grains, particularly rapeseed, in the list of grains handled by the Canadian Wheat Board. I think the second objective of my friend is to introduce into the list of grains handled by the board flaxseed, rapeseed and rye because these are not not handled by the board in international and interprovincial trade. If we were to adopt the notice of motion it might be a basis for an argument that we were trying to accomplish in an indirect fashion something that the house has felt it advisable not to accomplish in a direct fashion when it has considered the matter. In my opinion the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed within the group of grains handled by the wheat board in international markets should be effected by an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I think we should not try to make changes of such magnitude through an indirect method.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as other hon. members know, the question of including other grains in the list that the Canadian Wheat Board is entitled to handle in export and interprovincial markets was considered by the house very recently during its examination of amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It would seem to me, and I make this suggestion to my friend, that if such a change were to be made it was at that time that it should have been made. In view of the fact it was not made at that time, it seems to me the house would not want to give any suggestion, indirect as it may be, of support for such a change at this time.

I do not make these suggestions in a negative sense, nor do I make them in a political sense. I think all members of the house recognize the sincerity with which the notice of motion has been advanced and the weight of argument, although I have been critical of it in some aspects, with which it has been put forth by the sponsor of the bill. However, I suggest that we should be very cautions in adopting this notice of motion. To do so might injure the great reputation which the Canadian Wheat Board has established for itself not only in Canada but throughout our trading markets in the international area.

Although I cannot document it at the present time, I think I am correct that the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. McNamara, when speaking before the agricultural and rural development committee, indicated a great lack of enthusiasm for any change. My recollection is that one of the arguments he used was that a change in name might have the effect of watering down the very substantial reputation which this agency has created for Canada in international markets.

I think there is no doubt that Canadians, particularly those in western Canada and those who have had relations with the Canadian Wheat Board, are of the opinion that this is probably the most successful and outstanding agency of the federal government that we have ever had in our history. I believe my hon. friend, the sponsor of the motion, would probably agree with that. In fact, he said the same thing in different words. In no way would I want my remarks to be interpreted as being critical of the Canadian Wheat Board. All I wish to say is that I think the house should zealously guard the reputation which the board has established for itself both in Canada and abroad.

The last matter I want to mention briefly is one to which I referred earlier. My hon. friend's argument would have been much more substantial had he been able to produce definite evidence of a desire for such a change on the part of the people directly concerned with the operations of the wheat board. To my knowledge the producer groups and the agricultural agencies of western Canada who are most directly concerned with the operations of the board have not indicated any such desire. It seems to me, and I hope hon. members will concur, that until the sponsor, other hon. members or, indeed, the government receive representations from these interested groups that it would be in the interest of the western producers and of Canada generally to make such a change, it is not one of the functions of the house to change the name of an agency which has established a sound reputation for well over 30 years, is acknowledged throughout the world and is particularly appreciated by the producers whom it serves.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was particularly interested in the remarks of the last speaker who seemed to indicate that if the house took some action on this motion it would immediately produce some result. I point out that the key words in the motion are, "the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation". I do not see how anyone can object to the consideration of the advisability of introducing legislation. I am of the opinion that the house should be willing to consider almost anything and there should be no fear of considering the matter.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) mentioned that he had introduced several times the proposal to consider the addition of rapeseed and other grains to the grains handled by the Canadian Wheat Board. If it were not for the fact that I have been here a long time and heard the predecessor of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale refer on numerous occasions to rapeseed in a very decided and knowledgeable way, I might be prepared one of these days to introduce a motion to change the name of rapeseed to "rappseed".

Two points should be taken into consideration in examining the proposed change of name from Canadian Wheat Board to Canada grain board. First there is the sentimental aspect attached to the name of the wheat board. As the previous speaker has indicated, many farmers in western Canada would be opposed to changing the name to Canada grain board on the basis of the fact that this is one of the few government agencies about which more favourable than critical comments are made. I think that in the main most farmers, most politicians and in fact the majority of the Canadian people accept the Canadian Wheat Board as a viable and very useful implement of the government. For this reason a sentimental and historical attachment surrounds the name of the Canadian Wheat Board. This is the opinion of the president of the Canadian Wheat Board who, as the previous speaker mentioned, has shown little enthusiasm for a change in the name of the board. Incidentally, I find he shows little enthusiasm for any change. For that reason I discount his objection to this change.

The reason this matter should be referred to the committee and why the government should give it consideration is that I believe we could probably solve the problem much better by changing the name of the board to the "Canadian wheat and grain board". Even this does not go far enough because of the simple fact that at present oats and barley are included under the act and these are cereal grains. However, this name would not include other grains such as flax, rapeseed and grass seed which we normally call grains and which are mechanically handled in the same way as other grains but which are not in the same botanical category.

We in the agricultural field consider these grains and seeds to be in the all embracing category of grain. However, there are those who say that grains should be the botanical grains, and the others should be considered as seeds of the oil bearing type. It may therefore be necessary to add grains and oil seeds to the title of the board, so we might get a very complicated name that would not only confuse the farmers but would confuse the board and everybody else. For this reason I agree that there has to be some consideration given to changing the name. It would seem to me that the name might be changed to the Canadian grain board. However, such a change would not accomplish the purpose of the hon. member who introduced this motion.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: Following the hon. member's line of argument, one might come to the logical conclusion that we could just call it the board.

Mr. Peters: There are so many of them that this would be confusing. I will agree, however, that if you talked about the board in western Canada there would be very little argument about what board you meant. Here in eastern Canada we might get into some difficulty because of the Board of Transport Commissioners and other boards that are better known. Eventually I think we are going to have to solve this problem. Probably the simplest way of solving it is by setting out in legislation a list of the grains to be handled by the board, including flax and rapeseed. I presume such action would not offend the botanists, the farmers or the board. It is possible we will be able to solve the problem by simply including these products under the act.

This matter was raised at a number of the meetings of the agriculture committee in western Canada. I will agree that it received varying degrees of support depending upon the area in which the meeting was held. The matter was raised continually on the prairies and has become a problem we are going to have to face. I agree with those people who believe that the Canadian Wheat Board is in a different position today than it was when it handled coarse grains. We were surprised to find that coarse grains actually were being handled through the Winnipeg grain exchange, and there was a totally different system being used for the handling of these grains. For this reason, there probably has been a good reason for retaining the name.

However, I agree with the hon. member that this is a subject which could well be given to the committee for study to ascertain the effect of such a change upon our domestic population and our customers abroad. If, as the hon. member states, the customers who are interested in purchasing these other grains from us are of the opinion they could not do this with the wheat board, then I feel the wheat board has been negligent in issuing propaganda throughout the world. This board has the responsibility of handling oats and barley. I was of the opinion they were marketing as much of these products as they could. If the suggestion is to change the name to assist in extending the sales of these products, then I feel this measure would be worthy of committee study.

I, Mr. Speaker, would be opposed to accepting this motion as an amendment at the present time, but I believe it could well receive the support of the house if the subject matter were referred to a committee for further study. It is becoming more and more important, with increasing production, that coarse grains and oil seeds should be handled by a board. I can see merit in changing the name, and at least we should be willing to refer the matter to the agriculture committee for detailed study because obviously it is going to become a greater problem in the years ahead.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My remarks will be very brief with regard to this motion, which has been presented by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I am somewhat amazed at the arguments that have been presented, particularly some of those presented by the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Honey) and some of those presented by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), although I agree with the latter speaker's basic analysis of the situation. I think I have some familiarity with the agricultural situation in the west. All the farmer in the west is asking is that other grains, including rye, rapeseed and flaxseed, be given the same marketing and handling facilities as the wheat board has provided for wheat. This is not a criticism in any way of the wheat board, but I think it is an expression of the value of some of the facilities it has provided to the wheat grower in western Canada.

I can well understand the hon. member seeking to have this subject referred to the agriculture committee. I hope, too, the agriculture committee of the Liberal caucus will consider it, because it seems to me it is a very practical suggestion. It is not one, really, in which sentiment is involved, although I can understand how sentiment might be involved on the part of those farmers who have been more or less satisfied with what the wheat board has done.

We want the name of the board to represent the actual functions the board is expected to carry out. If other grains have been added to the responsibility of the wheat board, if it is logical to assume the same service is going to be extended to include flaxseed, rapeseed and rye, then it is only reasonable that the name be changed to reflect the two functions of the board. Surely in the years ahead the wheat board is going to be concerned not only with marketing wheat but also these other grains and seeds.

• (6:40 p.m.)

It seems to me that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale should be commended for bringing the motion before us at this time. I hope the house can accept it because all he is requesting is that the government give consideration to changing the name of the wheat board to a more distinctive title. Now that the wheat board has taken on a more permanent structure—and it is good this is so—I think it is all the more urgent that consideration be given to this question. The hon. member for Timiskaming has already mentioned that the agriculture committee had this question brought before it at various points during its trip to the west, and it is certainly one that should be given further consideration by the committee and by parliament. The very fact that it has been brought up is indicative that there is genuine worth in the motion before the house now, and I hope hon. members will accept it.

[Translation]

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since we are considering today motion No. 5, the purpose of which is to rename the Canadian Wheat Board, I wish to make known my views fully.

I first want to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) who is certainly an expert in the field of western agriculture in general, and especially, with regard to the growing of rapeseed. Besides, he is the proposer of that motion.

I was able to appreciate his knowledge during a trip to the western provinces with other hon. members, members of the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development.

During our meetings, he explained to us on many occasions the significance of rapeseed.

However, before voting on such a piece of legislation, I think that we ought to give it further consideration.

[English]

There are several other points that should be brought up in a discussion such as that brought on by the motion that now occupies our deliberations. We should consider the implications of the fact that the bulk of our coarse grains production is actually consumed within Canada, whereas the bulk of our wheat production is exported overseas. The Canadian Wheat Board's agents are, of course, members of the grain trade whose Canadian headquarters are to a great extent located in Winnipeg, close to that board. The bulk of the sales of Canadian grain are made by these grain firms acting as export agents for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Of course when the state trading nations are in the market they do approach the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Canadian Wheat Board in the first instance in order to arrive at an over-all agreement. But by and large the Canadian Wheat Board rely on their agents to sell the bulk of the wheat exports. In like manner I suppose they look to these same companies to merchandize oats and barley.

It therefore seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that while I would take nothing away from the Canadian Wheat Board as far as their excellent reputation in world grain circles is concerned, I would nevertheless have to believe that an equally fine reputation is needed by each and every one of the export grain firms who act as the export selling agents for the board. Those reputations, coupled to that of Canadian grain, are responsible in large measure for the successful marketing operations carried out on behalf of Canadian grain producers.

That would appear to bring me to the second theme that I detected in the motion now before us, namely the handling of flax, rye and rapeseed by the Canadian Wheat Board. During the recent debate on Bill No. C-106, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, several members brought up the subject of putting flax, rye and rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, making that board the sole marketing agency for those grains. I was somewhat surprised. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) did not rise on that occasion to bring to the attention of hon. members once again his ideas concerning either the changing of the name of the board or the matter of giving the board jurisdiction over flaxseed, rye and rapeseed.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) was one of those who took the trouble to bring to the attention of the members of this house the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed under the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. He correctly explained that a problem does exist, in that the board applies delivery quota restrictions to the deliveries of rye and flaxseed in particular. He mentioned that a recommendation had been submitted in the report of the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development at the close of the last session.

My reading of the committee's report, Mr. Speaker, leads me to believe that what the committee was actually recommending was not that these other grains should be brought under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, but that at least a plebiscite should be held, probably in like manner to those held several years ago in Australia. And again of course some enabling legislation from provincial governments would be required before any action could be taken. This is very important, and I feel that all members should bear in mind the constitutional problems inherent in these marketing shemes.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I am not among those who would be in any haste to change the name of the Canadian Wheat Board. I do not stand with those who would impose upon the grain producers of western Canada the obligation to deliver all their marketings of all their grains to the board; nor, indeed, would I be in any haste to require of the board that they be the sole buyer of these farm products. I do not believe sufficient study has yet been given to either of these matters. We realize that we really do not have an idea of what is likely to be the impact of a change in the board's name. Nor are we yet well enough acquainted with the possibility of improvements to net farm income if the Canadian Wheat Board were to become the sole buyer and initial seller of virtually all grain grown in western Canada.

One further point that should be made, Mr. Speaker, is the confusion that the change in name of the board could generate in the minds of overseas customers, between the Canada grain board—the name suggested by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale—and the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada. The similarity between the two names is already confusing enough, even to members of this house, many of whom do not have a clear idea of the jurisdiction and responsibilities of each of these boards. The change in name would not improve this situation but would I suggest only aggravate it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the motion introduced by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) seems to deal with at least two points. The first concerns the changing of the name of the Canadian Wheat Board. The second point is more subtle and concerns the different grains which would be handled by this board.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Wheat Board Act, or Bill No. C-106, which gave rise to several debates in this house recently, mentions wheat, oats and barley only, whereas the motion now before us deals with the sale of wheat, oats, barley, flaxseed, rapeseed and rye which the Canadian Wheat Board might handle for the western producers.

When the directors of the Canadian Wheat Board testified before the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, in February last, in the city of Winnipeg, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale asked the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. McNamara, what were his views concerning a new name for the board. Here is what Mr. McNamara answered him, and I quote:

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

All I can say is that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet and I hope we would smell just as sweet in the eyes of the world as we do now in being called the Canadian Wheat Board. I assume this developed from the pool organizations calling themselves wheat pools, but handling all grains. The Australian wheat board merchandizes only wheat. There is an Australian barley board which is a separate organization. But I am surprised to hear you say that in your visit abroad you ran into people who do not realize we are also interested in marketing Canadian barley and oats and that we are also interested in doing what we can to market flax, rapeseed and develop business generally for Canada in these markets. As I say, I never thought about changing our name. In a commercial organization, if you have a product that is well known in the world, whether it is White Rose flour or something like that, you try to capitalize on your reputation. I am just vain enough to think that the reputation of the Canadian Wheat Board throughout the world is such that we should continue to capitalize on it.

And there you have, Mr. Speaker, the opinion of the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, which he has led so ably and so successfully during the last ten years or so, on the matter of changing the name of the Canadian Wheat Board to the Canada grain board.

[Translation]

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what the western farmers would think if the name of the board were changed, since this name is known all over the world.

[English]

It is interesting to note that the Australian experience has been somewhat like our own. In 1935, which happens to be the year that the present Canadian Wheat Board was inaugurated, the Commonwealth of Australia tried to set up a wheat marketing board having trading powers, and legislation was actually passed by the commonwealth parliament. However the privy council made the plan unworkable in a decision that declared that section 92 of the Australian constitution bound the commonwealth equally with the states. I am sure hon. members will find no difficulty in seeing the parallel here.

Upon the outbreak of war in 1939, the commonwealth government established the Australian wheat board, giving it complete trading powers. So it is evident that while the Australian wheat board was first established under national security regulations at the beginning of the second world war, it could not have continued in existence without some further action to get them over their constitutional obstacle. In Australia plebiscites have been held twice since the war on the question of the introduction of a wheat stablization plan involving the retention of the Australian wheat board as the sole marketing authority. These ballots indicated that the Australian wheat growers were in favour of the plan. Since the last ballot in 1953, grower's support has been so evident that ballots have not been considered necessary.

I bring this to the attention of hon. members, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that we are not the only nation with constitutional problems concerning the marketing of our agricultural products. I really did not intend to go further in this description of the Australian experience, Mr. Speaker, but I find it so very fascinatingly close to our own experience that I would ask your indulgence for a few moments more to add just one or two further sentences about the Australian situation.

The Australian wheat board, like our own, has a monopoly trading powers. The growers are required to deliver to it all wheat other than that retained for seed or feed on the farm where it is produced. The wheat board negotiates export sales direct with overseas buyers. However sales to the United Kingdom, Europe, the Middle East and India are usually made through the Australian wheat committee, an agency of the Australian wheat board located in London. Wheat flour is sold overseas by private traders under the general control of the Australian wheat board. Where their board differs from the Canadian Wheat Board is in the matter of the grains they handle. In Australia, the wheat board is concerned only with wheat. As hon. members are quite aware, the Canadian wheat board is the sole initial buyers of western wheat, oats and barley that enter commercial channels crossing interprovincial and international boundaries.

There is an Australian barley board, Mr. Speaker, but its name is a legacy from the second world war. In Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board was originally established to handle only wheat. In the beginning this was on a voluntary basis, and did not become compulsory until September, 1943, when the Canadian Wheat Board became the sole marketing agency for wheat produced in the designated area. It was not until August 1, 1949, that the Canadian Wheat Board became the sole marketing agency for oats and barley produced and sold in the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

An hon. Member: Author?

Mr. Clermont: And bearing in mind the Australian experience, hon. members should take note that before the Canadian Wheat Board could become the sole marketing agency for oats and barley enabling legislation was required from each of the provincial governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The extension of their monopoly to oats and barley was made possible by an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act which was passed on March 19, 1948. Although this was so, the government of the day had refused to proclaim this amendment until the governments of the three prairie provinces had passed the enabling and complementary legislation.

There was no thought in anyone's mind at that time to change the name of the Canadian Wheat Board to indicate that the board now marketed coarse grains in the same way as wheat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dubé): Order. Since the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired, the house will now revert to business interrupted at six o'clock.

[English]

The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dubé in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order, please. The house again in committee of supply. It being 7 p.m. pursuant to standing order 6(2), the committee stands suspended until 8 p.m.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Legault): House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Finance, vote No. 1.

Mr. Knowles: I gather that the minister is now ready to reply to some of the points which have been made in the discussion thus far. I will take only a minute or two, but I should like to add a couple of items to his bill of fare. I believe they have not been discussed by other hon. members.

First I should like him to comment on a matter about which some of us have been asking for a long time, namely improving the section of the Income Tax Act which has to do with the deductibility of trade union dues for income tax purposes. As the minister knows, I was one who pressed for this legislation a long time ago and I welcomed the decision of the government to bring in this provision, but it seems to me there is an element of unfairness about the way in which some portions of trade union dues are not allowed for income tax purposes, specifically any portion of those dues which would go into a building fund or for certain specified purposes.

An hon. Member: Such as the N.D.P.

Mr. Knowles: May I point out that there is no such treatment of donations to a charity or to a charitable organization. There is of course a percentage limit on the amount a taxpayer can claim in relation to his income, but the government does not presume to tell a church how it can spend this money, at least in so far as income tax deductibility is concerned; and it seems to me similar treatment should be accorded to the trade union movement and that the government should not tell the unions the way in which they may spend their money, as far as deductibility for income tax is concerned.

I would not object if a percentage limit were introduced similar to that applied in the case of the charitable contributions, but in any event I should like the minister to comment on this matter. My contention is that the full amount of trade union dues should be allowed as deductible. I would remind him that this must be the tenth or the fifteenth time I have raised this question since deductibility in respect of trade union dues was allowed 15 or 20 years ago. There has always been some reason for not taking action. For the past few years it has been the Carter report. Well, we now have the Carter report and I should be glad to hear the minister's views.

The other subject on which I should like the minister to comment has to do with the transferability of pension funds and pension rights as between certain kinds of employment. As the Minister knows, the government has boasted of the extent to which it has provided this kind of transferability. It is possible for a person to go from the public service to the service of a crown corporation and carry his pension rights with him. It is possible for this to be done in reverse. It is also true that agreements have been made between the federal government and certain universities, and perhaps some other employers, to the same end.

I realize this is something that has to come about step by step, certainly where private employers are concerned, but it has been drawn to my attention that there is one area where transferability is not allowed, and it does seem a bit unfair. I refer to the fact that persons employed by the Department of National Defence, for example in the air force, can transfer to the public service and take their pension rights with them, but if they transfer to a crown corporation such as Air Canada they cannot do so.

As I understand it there is a fair amount of this transferability from public service to crown corporations and to some private employers, and vice-versa, but amongst the kinds of transferability that cannot take place is the one I have identified, namely from any employment under the Department of National Defence, or in any of the armed forces, to a crown corporation. In the past when the government brought in legislation or announced regulations regarding this matter it boasted that it was a very good thing to have pension transferability. I wish it were more or less universal. I realize it is difficult to effect it where private employers are involved, but surely where the crown is involved it should be possible to establish universal transferability without further delay. I should hope the minister would comment favourably on this and on the other matter which I have raised tonight.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I did not make an opening statement because it is only a few days since I presented the budget, and I felt that it would promote better and more thorough consideration of the estimates if I were to reply to questions rather than to make another speech on the subjects on which I wished to give a dissertation. I am grateful, however, to the committee for calling the finance estimates somewhat earlier than usual. It is customary in our proceedings for the finance estimates to go through at the last minute when no one has any time left, and the minister of finance is not given an opportunity of answering some of the questions that ought to be answered and of defending more adequately the policies that he administers. Therefore I propose, Mr. Chairman, to deal with some of the questions that have been raised tonight.

Perhaps, however, I ought to make one general comment at the beginning, and that is that I do not look upon this as an extension of the budget debate, and if I do not deal with some of the questions relating to technical matters of taxation it is because I think it would be better for me to do this in an orderly fashion when the budget is under discussion.

Mr. Knowles: Except that you are not amending the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Sharp: That is right, but I have to defend that decision in the budget debate and will deal with those questions then.

The hon. member for Edmonton West began his remarks by referring to monetary developments, and he asked me in effect if I would make some projections of interest rates. This of course I would not do since, like other people in the financial world, I do not know what will happen to interest rates. However, I would like to make one or two comments in reply to some of the specific points he made.

Since the passage of the Bank Act, and even during its passage, interest rates began to decline and there was quite a marked drop both in short and long term rates. As I recall it, the rates on treasury bills, for example, declined from levels well in excess of 5 per cent down to less than 4 per cent. Subsequently they have increased again moderately and are now in the neighbourhood of 4.4 per cent, or something of that kind.

Interest rates on long term also declined quite significantly, but not to the same extent, nor did we expect that they would, even in a period of easier monetary conditions and declining interest rates. They have in fact gone up again, not to the high levels that were attained last year, but they have responded in the main to influence in the United States, where long term interest rates are about at the level that they attained at the height of the monetary squeeze. It is of course impossible for Canadian interest rates to diverge very widely from the United States because we are, and will continue, so far as I can see into the future, to be a capital importing country. Therefore we must have a scale of interest rates in relation to the United States that enables us to borrow in that country to meet our requirements.

The hon. member also asked about the interest ceiling under the Bank Act. As he will recall, section 91 of the Bank Act as approved at the last session, provided that the interest rate ceiling would be removed when average of the market yield on short term bonds of Canada for all Wednesdays in any period of three months ending after December 31, 1966, was less than 5 per cent. In fact the average of the market yield on short term bonds of Canada did fall below an average of 5 per cent during a period of three months and therefore, in the parlance of the street, the trigger has released, and it has been announced publicly that after December 31, 1967, there will be no ceiling on bank interest rates.

As hon. members know, during the time since the passage of the Bank Act there has been a very great increase in competition among the banks, and between the banks and other financial institutions. Indeed the complaints that I have heard, perhaps more than others have heard, are complaints about the competition, particularly from other institutions that are finding they are no longer protected as they were by the Bank Act and now have to compete for their funds with the banks.

The banks have increased the interest they are paying on deposits, and immediately after the Bank Act came into effect they reduced the prime rate from the prevailing rate of 6 per cent down to 5¾ per cent. As expected, and as was intended, interest rates charged by the banks are no longer uniform. They differ between institutions and they differ in accordance with the credit rating of the borrower so that you have a range of interest rates going from a prime rate of 5¾ per cent up to the present ceiling of 7¼ per cent.

Moreover the banks have been moving in a massive way into housing loans from which previously they were excluded. Therefore the Bank Act is having, as we intended, a very marked effect upon bank practices, upon the service the banks are able to perform for the public, and most of all there has been an enormous increase in the competition among them and between them and other institutions, this for the benefit of the public.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The hon. member also asked if I would refer the regulations under the deposit insurance act to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I apologize for not having done so earlier. It is my intention to do so, and I shall forthwith. The reason I did not do this earlier is because the committee was not organized, and when I spoke to the chairman he asked me not to do so until the committee was under way. It is now under way and I will be happy to refer these regulations and whatever other matters it might be useful to have the committee discuss. It is my opinion that it would be very useful for the public's education to have these regulations under the deposit insurance act scrutinized, and I believe it would also be useful for the education of the public to look at other regulations in respect of consumer loans. All of these matters deserve public airing, and that can only do good.

As I understood the hon. member for Edmonton West, he said he hoped the legislation to establish the Canada Development Corporation would be lost in the shuffle. I regret to disappoint him, because that is not my intention. It is my intention to proceed with the Canada Development Corporation legislation as soon as we can find a place for it on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: It is very thin right now.

Mr. Sharp: I can assure hon. members that the legislation is almost ready to present and it will be presented shortly after we resume. Those are not all the comments I wish to make in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West, but I will reserve some of my other comments in order that I can deal with his remarks together with those made by other members on the same subject.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands made some comments about the Bank Act, in respect of which he as well as other members of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, are now somewhat expert. That committee did an extremely good job of work on the Bank Act and there are now many members of this house who know a great deal more than they originally did about the workings of our banking system and the effect of the Bank Act upon those institutions and others with which they compete.

I do hope that hon. gentlemen will agree that there has been a very big change in the way in which the banks have operated since the passage of the Bank Act amendments. I will not say that competition has been restored, because it never existed, but it has been established. I expect in the next few years to see changes in our whole financial structure arising out of this new kind of competition, changes that even now we cannot foresee or envisage.

The hon. member made some comment about splitting of shares. I inquired during the dinner interval as to whether either the inspector general of banks or I had any responsibility, or whether we had to give any approval, and I found that neither of us has any responsibility in this regard under the Bank Act. While I recognize there are many reasons for splitting the shares, I do think it is important that in respect of institutions like banks the price of the shares should not be so high as to discourage investment by relatively small investors. Therefore, I believe that splitting of shares, while this may be in the interest of existing shareholders, is also in the interest of maintaining as wide a distribution of these shares as possible.

The hon. member also referred to near banks. I hope he has followed very closely the developments which have taken place in connection with the application of deposit insurance, because I do suggest to him and to other members of the committee, particularly those who took such a close interest in this matter while the legislation was under discussion, that developments have been pretty much as predicted.

Federal deposit insurance is now in effect in respect of all publicly incorporated companies and all provincially incorporated companies, except those incorporated in the province of Quebec, under arrangements made between the other provinces and Ottawa, so that deposit insurance in so far as nine of the ten provinces are concerned is operating just as we hoped it would. There was a short time when, because of the pressure of events, and because of some undesirable developments in the financial world in respect of certain Ontario companies, Ontario deposit insurance came into effect as an interim measure. However as the Ontario government minister said, as soon as the federal legislation was available the insurance was transferred from Ontario to the federal institution.

Let me suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton West as well as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that the attitude of Quebec toward deposit insurance does support the argument that I made both in the house and before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, that if we had introduced legislation to bring near banks under federal jurisdiction, using the power that we believe Ottawa has in connection with banking, that legislation would have been challenged and today there would not have been the degree of supervision over deposit taking institutions which exists in nine of the ten provinces.

That was one of the reasons the government decided deposit insurance was the most practical step to take. At least this brought the institutions in nine of the ten provinces under supervision and gave the depositors there a greater assurance of safety in respect of their deposits than they had before. If we had proceeded to legislate in respect of near banks, that legislation would certainly have been challenged by Quebec, which even now challenges our jurisdiction in respect of deposit insurance and thus held up the whole legislation. By following the procedure we did, by which institutions could only come under federal insurance with the approval of the provinces, we have avoided the kind of stalemate I do not think any one would want to have seen.

Perhaps I could go on to the next point made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, about the Mercantile Bank. The committee will recall that at the last minute in our discussions of the Bank Act amendments a proposal was made that the extension of time should be subject to review by the governor in council. We have not yet had an application from the Mercantile Bank for an extension of time beyond December 31, 1967. I have indicated to such of the directors as have happened to see me that this approval would not be given unless the Mercantile Bank put before us its plans for the disposal of stock. In other words, I have made it quite clear, as I said in the house and before the Senate committee when the bill was before the other place, that the extension of time was given for a particular purpose. I quite agree with what the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said, that the most regrettable thing that could happen would be for the Mercantile Bank to proceed to expand, and for us to find at the end of a period of five years that nothing had happened, and no effort had been made to dispose of the shares, in order that they could get out from under the restrictions, or find an extended basis on which to support their deposits. I believe that parliament acted very wisely in restricting that approval to the prior approval of the governor in council from time to time.

Perhaps I may return to a point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, namely the state of play in the discussions of international liquidity. I believe the members of the committee are well enough aware of the history of these consultations that I need not take the time now to go through all that history except to remind the committee that deputies of the ministers and governors of the Group of Ten—which are the ten most important countries, from the financial point of view, in the world —were instructed in October, 1963, to undertake a thorough examination of the outlook for the functioning of the international monetary system and of its probable future needs for liquidity. That is the instruction upon which the Group of Ten ministers and their deputies have been operating. There have been various developments. I have had the privilege of sitting in on one or two of the meetings since I have been minister, and I have in front of me an official who was at all the meetings.

Last September, at the meeting of the governors of the International Monetary Fund, it was proposed that the executive board of the International Monetary Fund should meet with the deputies to attend a meeting of the Group of Ten. These meetings have been held. There have been three joint sessions of two or three days each and another is scheduled to take place in Paris next week. I expect I will be asked, as minister, to attend the meeting of the Group of Ten in July. Efforts have been made to find a suitable date and I am not quite sure which day in July it will be, but it looks as if something will be possible about the middle of that month. Then, of course, we will be reporting again at the International Monetary Fund meetings in Rio in September.

I think it is fair to say that most of the technical studies necessary to establish a new reserve asset have now been made. What is needed now is agreement amongst governments as to the major characteristic of the new asset. The basic point at issue is what, if any, condition should be attached to the new asset affecting its use and transfer ability. Speaking as the Canadian minister, as one of the Group of Ten, I am inclined to a more unconditional kind of transfer ability. I would hope that at a meeting of the ministers and the governors that I have been speaking about, and at the annual meeting in Rio of the governors of the International Monetary Fund, further progress will be made in resolving differences amongst governments on these matters.

I should like to make one point clear because of a remark that was made during these discussions. The new asset would not replace any of the existing forms of reserves. It certainly would not replace gold, and it would not replace the United States dollar; and in so far as sterling is used as a reserve currency, it would not replace sterling. It would be an addition to the assets that are available to finance world trade and world payments.

The hon. member for Simcoe East put forward a very strong appeal for further support for the teaching of doctors, and generally for the support of the training of medical personnel. I could not help remarking, as I listened to the hon. member, that this is an example of what I said in my budget speech, of worthy but expensive projects that add to government spending and is one of the reasons why there is a problem not only in Ottawa but in all the provincial capitals and in all city councils, namely of trying to find enough money to do all the good things we would like to do.

Personally I agree with the hon. member. I would like to see more resources devoted to this purpose. I have been moderately encouraging to some of the doctors who have come to me in search of support of medical research, which is another aspect of the same problem. May I add that this is the first time it has been said in this house that I insisted upon medicare coming into effect on July 1, 1968. Most of the criticisms I have heard have been to the opposite effect, that I insisted upon its postponement until July 1, 1968. I am very, very grateful to the hon. member for having put this problem into perspective.

Mr. Rynard: I want you to be well prepared.

Mr. Knowles: It has not yet happened.

Mr. Sharp: Now I come to the intervention of the hon. member for Kootenay West. I enjoyed this intervention perhaps more than any other. I do not refer to the hon. member's comments about perpetual bonds or any of the other things he mentioned, but the evidence that he gave that he and his colleagues had been converted to the principles of Social Credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: This delighted me. I knew that the hon. member for Kootenay West had moved in that direction, but when he brought forward evidence that the leader of his party and his whole party had moved in that direction, I was delighted. It had occurred to me from time to time that perhaps this might be so, but I found it hard to believe until that evidence was put forward, namely that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who has such a firm grasp of these things, had somehow slipped. It gives me a little encouragement in my own errors from time to time to think that even a man like he could have slipped in such a way.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is the fault of my colleagues, Mr. Minister. I have not yet been able to disabuse my colleagues of the fact that there are fairies at the bottom of the garden.

Mr. Sharp: It is always delightful to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West. I hope his party enjoyed his speech of this afternoon as much as I did. He made one or two comments about credit unions and asked whether there should not be a national credit unions act. I would point out to him that in fact there is one. At the federal level there is the Co-operative Credit Associations Act which provides for the incorporation by special act of the parliament of Canada of co-operative credit societies. I might add that amendments to this act are under consideration at the present time. This is one of the reasons why, when we brought forward the deposit insurance legislation, I did not include credit unions as the sort of deposit-taking institutions that would be subject to insurance. It seemed to me that they were of a different character, and what we think would be more appropriate for the development and assistance in the development of those institutions would be facilities by which they might be able to obtain loans to increase their liquidity when they needed it. After all, these are not deposit-taking institutions in the ordinary sense. They deal with their own members, and you have to become a member of the co-operative before you can have deposits with it.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I have answered a great many questions in the house on the subject of perpetual bonds and I do not think there is very much that I can add. Like other hon. members, I have received many letters. Indeed, for a while, they formed a very high proportion of my correspondence. It would appear there were many people who purchased these bonds originally, or perhaps even at later stages, who misunderstood their character. They were intended to be perpetual bonds. When they were issued they were considered to be excellent buys, indeed they went to a premium. It is difficult for us to realize now that when these bonds were issued some 30 odd years ago a 3 per cent rate of interest forever looked like a wonderful bargain when the short term rate of interest was 1 per cent. However, they were intended to be perpetual bonds. The government looked at the possibility of paying them off on a selective basis, but after thoroughly examining each one of these alternatives we came to the conclusion that the only way we could deal fairly with all concerned was to treat them as what they are, namely perpetual bonds that never have to be paid off. They vary in price in accordance with the interest rates on the market. When you can get 4, 5 or 6 per cent on other forms of investment, of course you will not buy these perpetual bonds which yield 3 per cent for more than 50, 60 or 70 per cent of their value. But if interest rates were to go down again to levels around the 3 per cent, which is conceivable, as interest rates are essentially unpredictable, then these bonds would again rise in value to somewhere near par. We thought of paying off those individuals who bought the bonds originally and held them until now, but that would be unfair to those who had been advised to sell them earlier. They would have as great a claim upon the government as those who held them. So in the end we had to decide that even though we knew there were people who had been misled in buying these bonds, in order to deal fairly and in the interests of all concerned we had to treat them as perpetuals, which is what they are.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Legault): I regret to inform the minister that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Legault): The minister has the unanimous consent of the committee to continue.

Mr. Sharp: I thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I will pass over the comments of the Leader of the Opposition and come back to them later.

I should now like to deal with some of the specific points raised by the hon. member for Parkdale. He suggested that there might be some exemption for the interest on certain types of bonds issued by municipalities. We have examined that proposition from time to time and have come to the conclusion that it amounts to an indirect subsidy to the municipalities. It seemed to us that if we were going to give subsidies to municipalities, it should be done on a much more logical basis and in accordance with a government policy, and not just because a municipality decided it was going to issue some bonds now, whereas another municipality which had issued its bonds earlier would not have the advantage of a tax free status.

On the question of whether there should be a deduction on home owners' taxable income, we have looked at the matter from time to time and found that it has one obvious fault, namely that it is a suggestion which favours one particular kind of resident, that is one who happens to own his home and not rent it. Of course this is not fair, particularly to those who live in apartment buildings. So I felt that as Minister of Finance I could not recommend to the government the proposals put before me by the mayor of Toronto, which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Parkdale.

The hon. member for Parkdale asked me for a report on the claims of Canadian citizens on foreign governments for the settlement of nationalization claims and other matters of that kind. Perhaps I could give a brief progress report. We have completed our negotiations with Bulgaria. A settlement was made last year and announced in June, 1966. Negotiations are now in progress with Hungary. Indeed a Hungarian delegation is in Ottawa now. Czechoslovakia and Rumania have now both agreed to enter into negotiations. Canadian claimants have been asked to submit the details of their claims. With Poland, with whom the negotiations have been perhaps more difficult than with any other country, these negotiations, which have been under way for some time, are to be resumed after a break. We now believe that they can be resumed within the next few weeks or months.

As I said, I will not deal with questions of taxation policy. I think these should be dealt with in the budget debate.

The hon. member for Vancouver East raised a general question about government bonds and the investments of individuals who find, when they want to realize these bonds, that they have declined in price. This related not only to perpetual bonds but to all market issues of Canadian bonds. All I can say to the committee is that this is why Canada savings bonds were created. Today very few people of modest circumstances buy market issues of Canadian government bonds because of the fluctuations which take place in their price. Now they buy Canada savings bonds which can be cashed at their face value at any time.

The hon. member for Perth asked me how we were going to finance ourselves in the next year. He will realize that it is not possible to predict in advance the exact amount of any particular bond issue, even a bond issue which is only a refunding issue. However, I can say that in general I do expect to refund all maturities coming due during this fiscal year. In the white paper which appeared with the budget there is a list of the unmatured debt, from which one can get a list of all the bonds that are maturing this year. These maturities, coming due during the remainder of this fiscal year, will total $525 million on October 1, 1967, and $515 million on January 15, 1968. As to the new issues for cash which the hon. member understands I will have to make, I cannot add anything to what I have said in my budget address.

He also asked about church vestments and inquired about the item which appears among the resolutions in the budget. I am answering this question because I understand there is an inquiry about its meaning, but I will not discuss the policy. In fact, the rate on church vestments was reduced to 10 per cent in 1960. All that this resolution does is to bring parts of vestments into line at the same rate. So there should be no reason why the customs officials should not just proceed to enter church vestments at the prevailing rate of 10 per cent.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka drew attention to the April figures on imports. I should like to point out to him, if he had not noticed it, that in the release which was made on these figures, the figure for April included some technical adjustments which exaggerated the imports. This is the short answer to the point he made. In fact, we had been expecting some improvement in the trade balance and this has been happening. The April figures are not contrary to the trend, but they are exaggerated by these technical adjustments.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised some points about the deduction of union dues and the transferability of pensions. In so far as the second of these points is concerned, I was unaware of this limitation on transferability. I will certainly look into it. Referring to the deduction of union dues, I may say this is more of a budget matter. I hope the hon. member can raise the question again when we get back to the budget debate.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister tell me at what point in the budget debate we can deal with that since there are to be no amendments to the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Sharp: Neither are we amending the income tax now, so it will be just as good a time to discuss it when discussing tax matters.

Mr. Knowles: At which time will one get action?

Mr. Sharp: This whole question, I am sure, will be discussed when the government brings forward its general proposals on the Carter commission toward the end of the year. Matters like this will then be open for discussion because the Carter commission has a great deal to say about this matter.

I will conclude, Mr. Chairman, by referring briefly to the comments of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sorry he is not here. I could not help, when I was listening to those comments, but think back to the events of 1962-63, particularly to the events preceding the coming into office of the present government, and the financial mismanagement which brought about an exchange crisis, probably the most unnecessary exchange crisis this country has even had to suffer. I think it is quite noticeable that, notwithstanding the views that the right hon. gentleman had expressed, there are no signs of any loss of confidence in Canada today nor in the Canadian dollar. This is my brief comment on his intervention. It seems to me that his memory is peculiarly short to have forgotten so soon these events of 1962-63.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Lambert: You were not there in 1964, when we almost had the same thing.

Mr. Sharp: Again, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition indulged in this game of criticizing the government for its growing expenditures and then proposing very large increases in those expenditures. He criticized the government for not having dealt fairly with the provinces, but I could just see those tens of millions of dollars totalling up in his mind as he thought how lavish he would be if he were in office. When the hon. member for Perth was commenting on the budget the other day, he castigated me and the government severely for rising expenditures.

Now, I understand these things. I do believe that it is incumbent upon everyone in this house to look very carefully at government expenditures. It is not only incumbent upon the Minister of Finance, it is incumbent upon all members. However, I do wish whenever members criticize the government for its increasing expenditures they would follow through by not proposing something that would increase those expenditures by tens of millions of dollars. This is just a simple request, and I know it is one that will be acted upon.

In the course of his comments the hon. gentleman referred, for example, to Saskatchewan. Now, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam knows what has happened. It has been brought to his attention before. In recent years, there has been an enormous improvement in the condition of Saskatchewan. Whether this is due to the fact there is a Liberal government in office in Regina or in Ottawa, I am not sure. Whatever the reason may be, there has been an enormous improvement in the condition of Saskatchewan since the Leader of the Opposition left office as Prime Minister and since the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam left office. The reason there has been a reduction in these payments is that Saskatchewan is now one of the "have" provinces, one of the most prosperous provinces.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if he would give us the figures which would show Saskatchewan was also a have province before 1964, except we had a much more generous financial arrangement between the federal government and the provinces. It is much less generous now.

Mr. Sharp: I deny this; there has never been such a generous arrangement of financial affairs between the federal government and the provinces. Indeed, I was looking at the figures as I quoted them in my budget speech, and our expenditures in this respect are going up by hundreds of millions, when we take the whole range of adjustments that have been made in the financial arrangements with the provinces this year alone as compared with last year. This results from a much greater generosity in connection with these claims, as well as the fact that this arrangement which is in effect now is neutral. It does not select any one tax, it selects the whole range of provincial taxes and equals them up to the provincial average. In the course of this development Saskatchewan has been moving toward being one of the "have" provinces and is not any longer entitled to payments from Ottawa. For that reason, we have arranged a system of graduated payments so as to phase Saskatchewan out of the very large payments she has been getting. It may be, of course, if there is a short crop there will again be a time when Saskatchewan becomes entitled to payments. The main reason, and I repeat it, is that in recent years, for whatever reason—it may have been, but I will not claim it was, because a Liberal government was in Ottawa and in Regina; that may be just a coincidence—Saskatchewan is very much more prosperous than it has ever been before.

Mr. McIntosh: In spite of the government.

Mr. Sharp: There was some reference to the Bank of Western Canada by the hon. member for Edmonton West and the Leader of the Opposition. Personally, I would be very happy to see the Bank of Western Canada open its doors and get into business. I have followed these developments closely indeed. I get reports two or three times a week on the latest developments. I can say one thing to the committee, that the present owner of a great block of shares who lives in eastern Canada would be only too happy to find buyers in western Canada. I believe, myself, this would be a very happy outcome, but in the meantime such buyers have not been found. There remain however some difficulties in getting this operation under way.

I was thinking when I was listening to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition talk about the Bank of Western Canada, criticizing Sinclair Stevens, how greatly things had changed in recent years. At one time, Mr. Coyne was the man who was responsible for all the troubles that his government suffered in a financial way; yet today the Leader of the Opposition has become such a staunch supporter of the president of the Bank of Western Canada.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to start out, of course, by thanking the minister for answering the questions put to him during the course of the debate. He did very nicely in this respect, and in some detail. I appreciated the fact he answered the question I asked which had to do with the current budget, even though this debate will not be resumed until the autumn.

I should like, however, to point out that I cannot allow what has been said by the minister to go by without some rebuttal. He asserted there had been financial mismanagement in the period immediately prior to 1963 by the previous government I would remind him that when the dollar was devalued to 92½ cents, the government of that day was castigated high, wide and handsome by the members of the present government. It was pointed out what a detriment this would be to Canada. However, it has since been admitted, sir, that this devaluation was one of the main starting points of Canada's recovery from the recession it had been in.

I should like to go back and suggest to the government that the Liberal government of 1947 devalued the dollar undoubtedly because of financial mismanagement, and devalued it to an even greater degree than we did. I might point out that the dollar today is still rated at 92½ cents U.S., so that despite what the minister said and the claims of the opposition of that day that the Conservative government finances were in a precarious state, it has been proven beyond question that we did the correct thing and took the right action.

I should like to refer to one other matter that I think the minister completely misunderstood in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition pointed out that when the Conservative government under his leadership came into power in 1957 they found unfair dealings had taken place with the provinces. We raised revenues to the provinces in 1958, even though the existing agreements ran until 1962.

What the Leader of the Opposition was contending was that he thought there was some finagling of some kind in making the agreements. In other words, many of the provinces had received much greater amounts, to the detriment of others which suffered accordingly. I only wish to mention that, if I understood his remarks this afternoon correctly, the right hon. gentleman was not suggesting larger contributions should be made to the provinces at this moment, though this might well be called for; he was suggesting that there had been some inequity of treatment.

The last matter mentioned by the minister with which I wish to deal is this. He said that I had apparently castigated the government for their present expenditure. I certainly did so in my reply to the budget speech, and I will do. This is not in contradiction to what was said by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon. With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will resume my seat.

Item agreed to.

3. Grant to the city of Ottawa toward the cost of the civic centre; the government of Canada's share not to exceed $1,000,000; amount required for 1967-68, $400,000.

Mr. Monteith: I want to refer to the legislative item that is not subject to vote. I was wondering whether the minister would explain the statutory items under public debt charges, the servicing costs and costs of issuing new loans. The amount is not large but it is less than last year. Would the minister give us a short explanation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the decrease of $70,500 is attributable to an over-estimation of the figure for 1966-67. While the estimate for 1966-67 was $790,000, the actual figure was of the order of $690,000. So that this does not represent a decline; the reduction is due to an over-estimate the previous year, which appears to indicate a decline.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I have made representations to the minister and to previous ministers of finance about edible oil and soybean oil entering this country from the United States. Canada pays a tariff on edible oil going to the United States. Would the minister look into this?

Mr. Sharp: May I suggest to the hon. member that he wait until he sees the results of the Kennedy round.

Item agreed to.

Subsidies and other payments to provinces—

5. Payments, computed in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, to the government of each province, in respect of income tax paid by corporations whose main business is the distribution to or generation for distribution to the public of electrical energy, gas or steam; the said payments to be made in respect of such part of the income of the corporations for the taxation year ending in the calendar year 1965 (as determined under and for the purposes of the Income Tax Act) as is derived from the said distribution or generation in the province to which payment is made and in respect of similar income of such corporations for any taxation year ending in a calendar year prior to 1965 that was not taken into account in computing payments made in respect of that taxation year, $6,700,000.

Municipal grants—

10. Grants to municipalities in accordance with the Municipal Grants Act and regulations made thereunder, and grants to municipalities in lieu of redevelopment charges in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, $40,700,000.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question on this item. I have before me some correspondence between the city of Stratford and the Department of Finance having to do with part of the federal building which has been used by the Emergency Measures Organization. The city have pointed out to the department that the Department of Public Works is actually receiving rent for that portion of the basement being used by the Emergency Measures Organization. As a consequence of this organization using part of the basement, the grant to the city in lieu of taxes has been reduced. This means, according to their calculation, a saving to the government in the neighbourhood of $2,713.26.

I do not want to go into detail tonight, but this matter is of importance to the city of Stratford. I would ask the minister whether he would mind looking into the mechanics of this. Although I have an explanation on the file from certain members of the department, I wish he would look at it again.

Mr. Sharp: I would be very happy to do so, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

15. Grants to provinces in respect of a fiscal year commencing after December 31, 1966, and in respect of federal property situate therein, where a real estate tax has been imposed or levied on property by a province to finance services that are ordinarily provided throughout Canada by municipalities, the grants to be calculated, subject to terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, in the same manner as grants to municipalities under the Municipal Grants Act, $1,000,000.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about the appropriations not required for 1967-68, which I think comes under vote 15. Would the minister explain what this actually means? I am not very bright on these things, not having had a postgraduate course in the finance committee.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, might I refer the hon. member to page 151 of the blue book where there is a full explanation of this item. I am sure he would not want me to read it, but it does authorize the Minister of Finance to establish a special account in the consolidated revenue fund to be known as the foreign claims fund, to which shall be credited various items to the amount of $1,000.

• (9:10 p.m.)

It also authorizes, notwithstanding the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, the transfer from the exchange fund account to the consolidated revenue fund of the profit of the calendar year 1964 and each subsequent calendar year from trading operations in foreign exchange, gold and securities, and from the net valuation adjustments on unmatched purchases or sales during each such year. The total given for the two items is $1,001. The $1 is for the purpose of making it legal to transfer these amounts of money; that is an enabling item. The $1,000 is largely for the same purpose.

If the hon. member is not able to understand this, he is in very good company.

Mr. Herridge: What is the foreign claims fund? Is this a new fund?

Mr. Sharp: It is established in the vote, as shown in the blue book. I hesitate to read the whole paragraph—but that is what the fund is for.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister something about the earlier part of vote 15 which refers to grants in respect of federal property on which real estate tax would have been imposed. I notice that the amount is $1 million. Is this a new appropriation? Could the minister say what sort of situation this $1 million is supposed to deal with and why it has not been included before?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this vote would give the government authority to pay grants in lieu of real property taxes, in respect of departmental properties, to provinces which impose such a tax to finance services that are ordinarily provided throughout Canada by municipalities. The payments would be calculated in a manner closely similar to the payments in lieu of real property taxes made to municipalities under authority of the Municipal Grants Act. The Municipal Grants Act contains some limitations on grants, one of which is that payments may be made only in respect of taxes which are levied in municipalities by municipal taxing authorities. A separate vote is therefore necessary for payments to provinces. Additional payments, not covered by this vote, would be made by crown corporations, with each body making payments on the basis which it uses for grants in lieu of municipal real property taxes.

It is difficult at this stage to estimate the amount of the new grant payments. The amount shown, of $1 million, is less than the normal annual cost which is estimated at $1,700,000. It is considered unlikely that the grants in respect of the first year of the program could be calculated and paid in full during the 1967-68 fiscal year as the property in respect of which payments would be made would have to be valued for tax purposes. For this reason only $1 million has been included in the vote for 1967-68.

The principal beneficiaries of the new grants would be the provinces of British Columbia and New Brunswick.

Mr. Herridge: My curiosity is aroused. Is this something new? Does this cover some new situation, or some new type of case?

Mr. Sharp: There has been a change in the rule that we previously imposed of only dealing with municipal taxes. Now we are dealing with provincial taxes which, in other provinces, would be levied by municipalities.

Mr. Barnett: Speaking to the same point that was raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, what interpretation does the minister place on the phrase "services that are ordinarily provided throughout Canada by municipalities". Would this include the equivalent of land taxes for school financing purposes and education?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. This is intended to be of a general character. You see, as the hon. member knows, taxation systems are changing and the provinces are imposing taxes upon property that would be imposed in other provinces by municipalities, for the same services. This is an attempt to avoid the discrimination that would arise if the payments were to be made only to municipalities, and it covers the same area as the municipal grants do now. It is not an expansion of the payments; it is only where provinces are replacing municipalities as the taxing authority that this applies.

Mr. Barnett: I had in mind the manner in which our consolidated school districts operate in British Columbia. A certain tax is levied on real property for school purposes throughout the school district, and inside an incorporated municipal area within the school district. The taxes are levied and collected by the municipal authority.

But in the so called unorganized areas of the school district the levy, which is arrived at by the school board as a result of calculating its need, is actually collected by the provincial taxing authority. That normally has the effect of creating a uniform tax rate throughout the whole school district, for school purposes. A charge is levied on property, in unorganized parts, within the boundary of the school district. I wonder whether this proposal would apply to federal property or installations lying within the boundaries of a school district where the tax is collected for the school board by the provincial tax collector.

Mr. Sharp: One of the reasons that we brought in this item this year in this manner rather than by legislation is that we should like to gain some experience in the sort of situation the hon. member has described before bringing permanent legislation forward. It is in such unorganized areas that we have not had experience. It would be the intention to apply in unorganized areas the same rules that we apply in an organized municipality.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have a brief question for the minister. I realize that no municipal authority can impose taxes on the federal authority. It must receive whatever the federal government sees fit to grant in lieu of taxes. To determine the final amount to be paid in lieu of taxes I believe the federal authority sends an assessor to the municipality. My question is this: Why is the federal assessment of the amount to be paid in lieu of taxes in some instances being lowered, resulting in less revenue for some municipalities. I am referring to post office buildings, local armouries and buildings like that.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the particular instances that the hon. gentleman is now raising. Perhaps he might write me a letter and I shall be happy to get whatever information I can for him.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Shall vote 15 carry?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question about the statutory payments made under the British North America Act? Every province in Canada except Saskatchewan had its 1967-68 payments increased. The payment to Saskatchewan was decreased by $7 million. The details of this are found on page 149 of the blue book. Someone has to stick up for Saskatchewan.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: I understand this is caused by population changes. These statutory items were provided for originally in the British North America Act, as the hon. member has stated. The subsidies were established by the terms of confederation and subsequent arrangements. They include allowance per head of population, interest on debt allowances and other special amounts as agreed upon under the terms of union, and subsequent to union.

Allowances per head of population are based on the decennial census except in the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta where, on account of the former rapid growth of population, the allowances are also based on each quinquennial census and on an estimated population midway between each decennial and each quinquennial census.

There are changes in the subsidies estimated to be payable to Newfoundland and the three prairie provinces as compared with 1966-67 estimates. The estimates for the other provinces, being based on provincial populations as of June 1, 1961 census are unchanged. While the 1967-68 and 1966-67 estimates for the prairie provinces are based on an estimate of their populations as of June 1, 1966 the estimate employed was revised downward, in preparing the 1967-68 estimates, from that employed to determine the 1966-67 estimate. The population estimate will have to be replaced by actual figures from the quinquennial census which recently became available.

So Saskatchewan may get the $3,000 back.

Comptroller of the treasury—

20. Administration, including the administration of the Superannuation and Retirement Acts and recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada pension plan, $32,402,000.

Mr. Lambert: Somehow or other I keep getting complaints from widows of superannuated public servants that on the death of their husbands an incredible long period of time elapses before a settlement is received from the superannuation branch. I realize that in some cases difficulties will arise, but delays have usually been accompanied by an apology for somebody having "dropped stitches". I hope this can be avoided in future because these cases usually concern older people and delay bears heavily upon them.

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. gentleman I will bring his remarks to the attention of the officials and I will take a personal interest in this. As he knows, there are sometimes very peculiar situations.

Mr. Winch: In connection with vote 20 there is a matter which I hesitate to raise because it concerns the affairs of an organization we much admire, the Corps of Commissionaires. I refer the committee to the details of the estimate on page 152 where an amount of $46,300 is earmarked for commissionaires' service. I am aware of the wonderful work being done by the Corps of Commissionaires in their 17 divisions across Canada in finding employment for individuals, some of whom are disabled and unfitted for heavy, physical work.

In the past few days I have been in touch with Mr. Leggat, the president of the corps —unpaid, may I say—because I have been receiving complaints from members of the Corps of Commissionaires. Following those complaints I raised certain matters with the president of the corps and in his answer, which I received only last Friday, he told me that the Corps of Commissionaires obeys all laws and meets all statutory requirements. But members of the corps here in Ottawa tell me this is not true. They inform me that when they work overtime, as is sometimes the case when somebody fails to turn up, they are paid for the extra hours but not at overtime rates. They are paid straight time. The law, apparently, says that if you work over eight hours, you work at overtime rates. The president says they obey the law, but members of the corps tell me that here in Ottawa they are paid straight time for overtime. The men also tell me that provincial and federal law lays down statutory holidays, but that when they work on statutory holidays they do not get a day off in lieu of working on that day nor are they paid for an extra day because they have worked on a statutory holiday.

Those are just two examples of what members of the corps working in Ottawa have told me in my office in the course of the last two or three weeks. I raise this matter knowing what the corps does. I ask the minister this: When provision is made here for $46,300 for commissionaires' services, is this estimated on a contract basis with a divisional headquarters? Are inquiries being made to find out whether the president is correct when he says that all laws are obeyed, or are the men correct when they come to me and say that the corps does not abide by the law because they are not paid overtime rates and they are not paid for statutory holidays?

I do not want in any way to upset the work or the employment of the commissionaires. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to see that an investigation is made into the employment of commissionaires in Ottawa, and that they receive their full entitlement under provincial and federal laws.

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to take these remarks into account, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister explain the increase from nothing to $96,700 for "other professional and special services" on page 152? What does the department contemplate?

Mr. Sharp: I regret, Mr. Chairman, I am not as well informed on that item as I might be. I would think it relates to a program for computers being introduced into the comptroller's office, but I am not absolutely certain.

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister write a note about it, and at the same time let me know the reason for the $80,000 increase for travelling and removal expenses?

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to do so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. More: I am intrigued by the second item from the bottom on page 152 which reads, "Expenditures chargeable to the Canada Pension Plan account for services normally rendered by other departments free of charge." If other departments render the service free of charge, why is there a charge in this case, and what is it for?

Mr. Sharp: I really cannot answer that question. I do not have an explanation for this group of items here, but I will write the hon. member and let him know.

Mr. Winch: Can we have an explanation of the $77,000 increase for travelling and removal expenses before these estimates pass? We who are members of the public accounts committee are becoming more and more concerned about travelling and removal expenses going up year by year. Just why, in this fiscal year, in this department, do you require an additional $77,000 which will boost the cost from $275,000 to $352,000? We hear a lot of talk about the expenses of government increasing. If you watch a few dollars they become hundreds of thousands of dollars, and if you watch the hundreds of thousands they become millions of dollars. We want answers.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the attention that is paid to these items. Before these items were put in the estimates book they were very carefully screened and scrutinized by the treasury board, and I can assure the committee at least of this fact, that when they pass that test they are necessary expenditures. I regret I do not have a detailed explanation here for the items in this group. I would point out that this is the office of the comptroller of the treasury. While that may add to the weight of the question asked by the hon. member, in fairness I should say that this is not the whole of the travelling account for the department.

Mr. Winch: It is $352,000 for one office alone.

Mr. Monteith: The minister says he does not have the detail at the moment. With all due respect I suggest he should have an explanation to give to the committee for this item, although I do not propose to hold up the estimates because of this lack of information. The minister intimated that he would write me later as to the reason for the increase, but I think the committee as a whole should be given the opportunity of knowing why this estimate for travelling and removal expenses has gone up so considerably.

Mr. Winch: I too do not want to delay long, but this is an opportunity to examine government expenditures. I presume that the operation of the comptroller of the treasury is a fairly permanent one. Why then does this office have a policy of renting equipment? The estimate for the rental of office equipment shows an increase from $675,000 to $1,397,000. That is quite an increase. Good heavens, that must be an awful lot of equipment that is being rented. It is something that should be investigated. We should get answers. To me $1,397,000 for rental of office equipment in that one department does not make sense.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, there is a relatively quite simple explanation of that sort of charge. This is the rental of computers which cannot be bought, and the main reason for the big increase here is the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan, the payment of salaries and so on. We are trying to automatize these matters. The comptroller of the treasury is responsible for all those operations within the government, and so it is not surprising that the sum for the renting of office equipment should have risen very substantially. As hon. members know, in all businesses these days it is necessary to pay very large rental charges for equipment that cannot be purchased. Some computers are not for sale. They are only provided on a rental basis, and with the renting goes the service. If you buy them you are stranded without any service. The only way you can get this equipment is on a rental basis, and that is the explanation of this particular item.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there has been constant reference to expenses on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan. These appear in the blue book as a charge on the consolidated revenue fund. Some of them are indicated to be recoverable from the Canada Pension Plan. On the top of page 153 there are given certain amounts for administration which are chargeable to the Canada Pension Plan. My recollection of that act was that it was to be a self-sufficient operation, and that the fees charged on the fund were the expenses of administration.

Why do these things which are matters of accounting have to be funnelled through in the estimates of the Department of Finance to artificially inflate public expenditure? These are not expenses at all, because they are chargeable to the Canada Pension Plan which is not supposed to be a part of ways and means. We do find that in some ways these expenses are being shown in the general estimates as a charge against ways and means. I would have thought that a neater way of segregating these would be to charge them to the funds, without putting them in the blue book. In this way they would not clutter up the records of the Department of Finance.

Earlier this session, I referred to a similar situation in the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. Items for external aid seem to come from various places, and unless one has a complete list from the directorate he is unable to find out just how much external aid we are contributing. In the same way this does not indicate how much of this is chargeable to the Canada Pension Plan unless we check little items here, there and everywhere.

Mr. Winch: May I just add that it was thoroughly understood that the Canada Pension Plan was to be completely self-supporting, and that after it because self-supporting money would be lent to the various provinces. If we accept the answer I received a few moments ago, that this is a charge on the comptroller of the treasury for equipment required for administering the Canada Pension Plan, then it does not belong here because it is a charge on the Canada Pension Plan. Perhaps the minister is prepared to indicate that we will find a revenue or credit somewhere else which will offset this amount. This is the sort of difficulty we find in the public accounts committee. This is apparently a charge against the Canada Pension Plan for necessary computers. If that is so, it has no business here because that plan is supposed to be self-supporting.

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps the hon. member will turn to page 153 where he will find under the first item a figure which offsets this amount. It refers to a deduction of the amounts recoverable from the Canada Pension Plan, $1,287,200, and from the National Harbours Board, $396,000. Let me say in defence of this method that it reveals more of what is going on than if we carried our accounts in any other way.

Mr. Barnett: Let me return for a moment to the subject raised a short time ago by the hon. member for Vancouver East. He asked several questions about the operation of the corps of commissionaires. If I heard the minister correctly he said he would look into the matters raised. While he is doing so will he also provide answers to one or two other questions I have had in my mind for some time about the operation of this corps, with particular reference to individuals working under various functions of the federal government.

Specifically I should like to know who sets the rates of pay received by members of this corps, and whether these rates are set on the prevailing rate principle as is the case in respect of certain other operations of the federal government. As the hon. member for Vancouver East quite rightly suggested, the operation of this corps has made employment opportunities available to veterans who might otherwise find it difficult to obtain employment because of disabilities. In my own area certain members of this corps are receiving very substantially less in the way of remuneration than other people who may be as disabled—and I am thinking of people required to do light jobs. According to the information I have, they are hardly receiving enough to provide for a reasonable or decent standard of living. These are questions in the minds of members of this house which deserve some clarification. There is increasing evidence of dissatisfaction in respect of the operation of this body, which I think would be unfortunate if continued.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister anything more to say in this regard?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I nodded to the hon. member indicating that I did understand his comments and would look into the matter. I would think that some of these questions might also be directed to my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. He is much more directly concerned with the determination of pay. In any event I will also look into these matters.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather broad administrative item covering all the work of the comptroller of the treasury, but I note that it includes the administration of various superannuation funds. May I ask the minister where the responsibility regarding superannuation matters now rests. Are policy matters to be taken up with the President of the Treasury Board or with the Minister of Finance? Is there an element of policy in this or is it just administration? I am not quite sure which answer I want the minister to give, but I ask the question anyway.

Mr. Sharp: In so far as the administration of present law is concerned, this comes within a division of my department. I very rarely have questions raised with me by the administrator because he is carrying out the laws as they now exist. Other questions about superannuation of retired civil servants, the matter in which my hon. friend is particularly interested, are discussed not only by the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance, but from time to time by the whole government.

Mr. Knowles: The minister was quite right in suspecting that my question was related to this subject. As he knows, we have been discussing this matter with the President of the Treasury Board. The minister admits that he comes into the picture as well, and I hope he realizes how strongly some of us feel about the position of retired civil servants. The minister knows that it took a long time to get the government to agree to have the matter of their pensions referred to the special joint committee on the public service, but at long last it was referred to that committee, which made its recommendations to parliament on May 8.

I spoke about this matter with some vigour last Thursday evening in an overtime debate, so I will not now repeat what I said then. But I hope the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the government realize that some of us feel this is a matter that cannot be put off even for another few months. I hope he realizes that some of us feel this matter should be dealt with before the house breaks for a summer recess. I am referring in particular to the implementation of the recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada that increases be now granted to civil servants already retired.

The question has been raised a good many times on the orders of the day. In fact, it was raised again this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition, and we got one of those stock answers that is sometimes given to us by the government, namely that we have to wait and see where it fits into the parliamentary program. I remind the Minister of Finance that there is practically nothing on the parliamentary program between now and the proposed summer break, certainly hardly any proposed legislation, and that answer is not good enough. He tells us it is a complicated question. That answer is hardly good enough, either. After all, a solution of sorts was found to the problem back in 1957 and 1958, and I am sure the people concerned have been working on the problem for a long time. To ask these people who have waited for a long time for a measure of justice in this respect to wait until fall would be, I think, most unfair. As a matter of fact, one can be sure that a good many of these people will not live to receive their pension increases if they are put off until fall. I do not need to go into all the arguments with the minister. He heard them frequently in the past when he was fully responsible. But I hope that he and his colleagues fully understand that some of us feel very strongly that parliament should not break for a summer recess without dealing with this matter. Does the minister realize that?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible to be a member of this house and not be aware of this problem, when I consider all the representations that have been made by the hon. member.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I have one simple question to put to the minister for clarification. The administration of central office and branch offices of the comptroller of the treasury comes under vote 20 of the estimates we have before us. Is this a renumbering, because it seems to me it is when one looks at the supplementry estimates for 1966-67. Those supplementary estimates indicated that this was vote 25g. Has there been a renumbering this year? I am seeking clarification in this respect so I may make some comparisons, or drop making comparisons if I am wrong in relating these items.

Mr. Sharp: I do not know whether I quite understand, Mr. Chairman. The comparative figures are shown.

Mr. More: Supplementary estimates (G) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, under vote 25g show a heading of "Central office and branch offices administration." I ask for clarification because in those supplementaries there is reference to "Professional and special services" and "Travelling and removal expenses." The question has been raised about the central office and branch offices administration, vote No. 20 in the estimates we are considering of $96,700 for "Other professional and special services." There is no comparable item in the estimates of 1966-67, but according to the supplementaries there is an item of $21,000. It is not shown opposite "$96,700" in the estimates for 1967-68, but they seem to be comparable; they both have beside them "(4)" and seem to be related. I also raise this question because there was in the supplementary estimates for 1966-67 an item of $30,500 for "Travelling and removal expenses." Is this amount included in the $275,000 shown for 1966-67, or is the $30,500 additional? These are the points I wanted to make.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I now have the explanation for a couple of the questions asked earlier, including the question concerning professional services. This item of $96,700 was the conversion of family allowance accounts to computers. The key punching is being carried out by a commercial firm plus one government department. I was pretty sure that many of these items related to the conversion of these accounts to computers.

The item of "Travelling and removal expenses" which has, as the hon. member for Vancouver East pointed out, risen by some $70,000 results from the centralization of certain of the operations of the comptroller of the treasury in moving some of their operations from outlying points into central places where computers can be used more effectively. This is resulting in our having to pay certain removal expenses.

Tariff board—

25. Administration, $358,000.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell us how many references are still outstanding with the Tariff Board and when we may expect reports on those references?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the board has before it now, as directed by me as Minister of Finance, the following references: chemicals, on which they have reported in part, equipment for hospitals and other institutions, and precision instruments and apparatus. These are the three references outstanding at the moment.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, does the minister expect a report in the relatively near future, or are these, like the chemicals reference, rather long range examinations?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Chairman, I expect we will receive reports fairly soon on these references. The chemicals reference is probably the biggest reference ever made to the Tariff Board; indeed it was so large that we still have not recevied the whole of the report and have only a summary of it, which we found useful in connection with the Kennedy round. There have not yet been published all the reasons for the recommendations of the Tariff Board. As I understand it, the Tariff Board is not now under the pressure that it was, and we expect to receive their reports much more quickly.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance could tell the committee, perhaps next time we meet, if he has been considering the various recommendations made by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission over the years recommending that where a combine exists—I am not going to go over all the different reports tonight, but we had fine papers, electrical goods and so on—tariff reductions be implemented. I wonder if the minister can at some point report to the house whether these recommendations have been considered, whether the government intends to implement them or whether they are going to continue to gather dust in the back files of the minister's office.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can only give the hon. member the same advice I gave to another hon. member, namely that he should wait for the results of the Kennedy round of negotiations to be published.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, some of us have been asking this Minister of Finance and former ministers the same question for years. I do not see why recommendations to try to control combines which are against the law, recommendations made by a government agency that the government use its powers to reduce the tariff or to wipe it out to stop the people who are robbing Canada of millions of dollars, have to wait for the results of the Kennedy round. It seems to me the government could use the very simple tool at its disposal of cutting the tariffs so as to protect the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I notice it is ten o'clock but perhaps I might just say that it is always desirable when cutting one's own tariffs to get some reductions in other people's tariffs at the same time, if one can manage it. I suggest to the hon. member he will not have to wait very long for the results of the Kennedy round. I believe these will be published on July 1.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a question about tomorrow's business. Does it include only the estimates of the Department of Defence Production or does it also include the estimates of the Department of Industry?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to call the estimates of the Department of Defence Production and the National Research Council. Perhaps I misunderstood the hon. member. I did not catch the full import of his question.

Mr. Drury: I may say that the estimates of the Department of Industry are currently under study by the house committee and have not yet been reported out.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER CREDIT—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 I asked the Registrar General whether he intended to introduce legislation in this session to incorporate any of the recommendations of the joint committee on consumer credit. To say the least, the reply of the minister was pretty vague. Certainly he gave no indication that action would be taken this session. This is a matter which is of great concern to many people. Members of parliament have been increasingly aware of the tremendous problems faced by people, particularly those in the low income groups. The result was that over the years as many as a dozen bills were introduced by various members of the house, from all parties, which had the object of controlling the rate of interest, calling for the publication of the true rate of interest, and controlling the door to door sale of merchandise so as to give people the opportunity to cancel the contract, if they signed one, to purchase things without real, knowledge of the facts.

So insistent were the complaints, Mr. Speaker, that the government finally agreed to the establishment of a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to study the question of consumer credit. This committee was chaired jointly by Senator Croll and the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), the hon. member for Renfrew South. The committee held its first meeting on June 2, 1964, more than three years ago. So important was the subject which the committee was considering that the committee recommended, and the house approved for the first time, the hiring of expert staff. The committee had working with it a chartered accountant and a lawyer who were able to give the committee expert advice.

The committee heard representations from a large number of organizations representing the retail trade, the finance companies, credit unions, co-operatives, government agencies such as the superintendent of insurance and the Bank of Canada, consumers associations, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and a host of others. It became obvious that it was necessary for the government to move into this field by passing legislation.

The committee was confronted by evidence that people were paying 20 per cent to 30 per cent interest; that people were borrowing money or purchasing goods when they did not have the slightest idea of the amount of interest they were paying; that people were purchasing goods and the companies selling the goods were selling the contracts for the collection of money to a third agency; that sometimes the merchandise was inferior and even after it was returned the people were still required to pay the money they had contracted to pay. The committee made a series of recommendations concerning the type of legislation that should be passed.

Before I go to that, I want to point out that the committee found what many lawyers already knew, namely that the field of jurisdiction was divided between the federal and provincial governments. The provinces have begun to move in this field. In the Financial Post of April 15, 1965 a story appeared which summarized the legislation being considered or already passed by the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These provinces have either passed or are considering the passage of legislation covering their jurisdiction.

Now, the committee made some excellent recommendations. It recommended for example that legislation be passed which would spell out what had been commonly referred to as truth in lending so people would know exactly the total cost of credit expressed both in a lump sum and in terms of simple annual interest. The committee recommended that the advertisements which offered credit should be required to set out annual percentage rates, as well as in dollars and cents, the cost to the consumer for the use of money. The committee recommended also that the protection accorded to borrowers under the small loans act be increased from the present limit of $1,500 up to $5,000. Incidentally this recommendation was made by the Porter commission.

The committee recommended a cooling off period of three days for reconsideration by the purchaser of goods on credit from other sources than stores. This committee recommended terms upon which a purchaser may, without penalty, return goods or recover any moneys paid by him, and so on. This was an excellent report.

• (10:10 p.m.)

We now have a department of consumer affairs which will be in the charge of the Registrar General. To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no minister has had the kind of publicity that the Registrar General has had. Every newspaper and magazine in Canada has been filled with stories about the great things the Registrar General is going to do. The Financial Post for April 15 carried a story which summarized the ideas the minister had about amending the combines act to give it new and sharper key, extending the legislation to cover service industries and to open the way for injured parties in price fixing cases to sue in civil courts for damages. Then the minister promised a complete review of the Canada Corporation Act, and so on.

Here is a committee which has gone in great detail into a very important field affecting most of the people in Canada, particularly those in the lower income groups.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dubé): Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Parliamentary Secretary to Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, just a few words in reply to the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) to let him know that the government is very much aware of its responsibilities with regard to the consumers.

The hon. member, who is well acquainted with the important work performed by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on consumer credit and cost of living, knows full well that the over-all legislation to improve the fate of the consumers generally touches upon every measure which can be passed by every level of government, on the provincial as well as on the federal level.

The government, at least for this session, has made known its views on consumer problems generally in the speech from the throne of May 8, when it listed the various legislative measures that it would introduce in the house, and the hon. member also knows that, from the beginning of the session, it has not been possible to introduce such legislation.

Once the legislation suggested in the speech from the throne is decided upon by the cabinet, it will be announced to the house in the usual manner, and hon. members will then have an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. Orlikow: This session?

Mr. Laflamme: Most definitely this session. I may also say to the hon. member that if he has supplementary questions to put to the Registrar General concerning the minister's intentions, he will have an opportunity to do so on Friday of this week, when we will consider the estimates of that department. He will then have the opportunity to ask any question concerning the problems of consumers which, I am sure, interest not only the hon. members opposite, but the government itself which intends to take all the steps that lie within its power in order to deal with the problems facing all consumers, including ourselves.

IMMIGRATION—U.S. CITIZENS IN CANADA TO ESCAPE ARMY DRAFT

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to bring before the house which is considered the highest court in the land. Before I give some details you might be interested in knowing that the department of immigration has known for some days that I was to raise a question tonight regarding a Greek citizen now visiting in Canada. I am appealing for fair consideration of his application to remain here as a landed immigrant, but the house will be interested to know that the department of immigration, through a man I could identify, an employee of the department in Toronto, notified this Greek citizen on Friday last by telephone to be ready to leave Canada next Friday, June 16. I should not like to accuse the department of immigration of having already made up their mind before they hear the matter that I wish to discuss, but it does appear somewhat as though an appeal court had said to an appellant: "We will hear your appeal tomorrow but be ready to go to Kingston penitentiary the day after".

The last time I had occasion to take up a matter with the parliamentary secretary to the minister I can assure you I received the kindest consideration, and I am expecting the same tonight.

On June 6 I asked this question in the House of Commons, as reported at page 1191 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he give us any estimate as to how many United States citizens may be visiting Canada at the present time in order to avoid the army draft?

I asked that question because of this Greek who is 23 years of age, unmarried and living with an uncle in the riding of York-Humber. This Greek came to Canada as a visitor last August. When he came here he came to visit relatives, fully intending to return to Greece. At Christmastime he got in touch with me to ask if I could get an extension of his three month visit so that he could spend Christmas and New Year with his relatives here. This the Department of Manpower and Immigration readily granted.

I never heard from the Greek man until about three weeks ago when I ascertained for the first time that he had made an appeal for landed immigrant status and had been turned down by the immigration department and by the immigration appeal board. Interestingly enough, he was turned down in the first instance on March 8 and appealed some time later in the month, was turned down and ordered deported.

I must bring to the attention of the house and of the Department of Manpower and Immigration that on April 10 and 11 the Minister of Manpower and Immigration issued two statements which I have in my hand, about changes which have been made in the qualifications with respect to landed immigrant status. Those changes are such that the Greek can qualify to remain in Canada as a landed immigrant.

Much more important is the fact that on April 21 there was a revolution in Greece and the country is now in the hands of the army.

When I raised this point with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the latter part of May and told him of this young lad who has done service in the Greek army and who does not wish to return to Greece because his country is in the hands of the army, and because the premier has been deposed, and because they do not have democratic government in Greece, I was assured with the answer: "We can assure you that everything is fine in Greece."

On May 29 I received a letter signed by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration—so it must be official—in which this appears:

> In addition to the circumstances of the individual case, you will be interested to know that the department has made enquiries through the Department of External Affairs regarding current conditions in Greece. Our ambassador in Athens reports that conditions are quite stable, and that persons returning to Greece have no reason to fear hardship or difficulty.

That is terrific. With the army in control I imagine conditions are stable in Greece. I can tell the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that conditions are very stable in Washington and New York, in Buffalo and Los Angeles. The government is in control in the United States. Why do we not force the 300 odd Americans who are over here dodging the draft in the Viet Nam war to go back to the United States? Why force this one Greek who has already done his two years in the army, who has already served his country, to go back to a land that is in the hands of the army?

[Mr. Cowan.]

If conditions in Greece are so stable why are we keeping a Canadian army contingent in Cyprus. I know that Cyprus is an independent republic, but also remember that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member who once represented Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) who is no longer with us, kept asking what is to happen to Canadian troops when the Greeks land in Cyprus? The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) said that the plans for the evacuation of Canadian troops when trouble starts in Cyprus are complete.

Why send the Greek back to Greece if there is some likelihood of the Greek army invading Cyprus, where we now have Canadian troops. I submit that if we are not ordering the 300 United States citizens back to their country we have no right to order the one Greek back to Greece.

A member of the Canadian federal cabinet went on a United States network and admitted that there are perhaps 300 draft dodgers in this country. I have nothing against them; they have to live with themselves. I remember that between 1914 and 1917 Canadians went to the United States, so perhaps we should not mind if a few people from the United States now come to Canada. Americans can quite easily come to Canada and lose themselves in the population of this country, but a Greek has to provide a visitor's visa when he comes in; his every address is known, as is his every movement. I say, let us be fair to the Greeks in the same way as we are trying to be fair with the Americans. Let us not make fish of one and fowl of the other.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dubé): I am sorry I must interrupt the hon. member to tell him that his time has expired.

Mr. John C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) has referred to present conditions in Greece. The department has made inquiries through the Department of External Affairs and we are informed that the ordinary Greek citizen who is returning to his country, voluntarily or otherwise, has no reason to fear persecution.

The hon. member also has referred to my department's policy toward aliens who may be subject to military call-up in their homelands. An individual's status with regard to compulsory military service in his own country has no bearing upon his admissibility to Canada either as an immigrant or as a visitor; nor is he subject to removal from Canada because of unfulfilled military obligations in his country of citizenship. In any event, in the particular case of Mr. Sistanis, the young man already has completed his period of compulsory military service in Greece and we have no evidence that he is subject to any further compulsory service there.

Mr. Sistanis entered Canada as a visitor and later applied for immigrant status here. He did not comply with the conditions for such a change of status and was asked to leave Canada. His failure to do so resulted in the holding of an inquiry and the issuance of an order for his deportation. The immigration appeal board dismissed his appeal against the order and recommended that the deportation be carried out. The minister can find no reason to change their decision.

Whether or not Mr. Sistanis might qualify for admission to Canada from Greece when new immigrant selection criteria come into force is beside the point. He does not qualify under the conditions the minister announced to the house last July. As hon. members know, the minister is proposing to change and, I believe, improve the criteria for the selection of immigrants. The minister made it clear to the parliamentary committee, however, that it will be some months before our officers are in a position to apply new rules and procedures. No one can say at this point how Mr. Sistanis, if he were in Greece, would stand under those rules. Therefore, it would be unfair to other people if, on the basis of the personal view of the member for York-Humber, the minister were to act now on the assumption that this particular young man is going to be admissible.

It must be clear to any practical person that we would have chaos if the minister were to exercise his discretion to defer settling a case until it could be dealt with under the new criteria, as anything more than a rare exception for particularly strong reasons. The minister is prepared to do this when special hardship may otherwise be involved. Indeed the minister has done so already in a few cases, but he is satisfied that Mr. Sistanis does not come within that category. Therefore the immigration officials will arrange for his deportation as soon as possible.

If he wishes to apply in Athens, in the normal manner, for readmission to Canada as an immigrant when the new selection criteria come into force, the minister wishes to assure the hon. member that his deportation will not be held against him in any way.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

TRADE

NICKEL SCRAP—ADDITION TO EXPORT CONTROL LIST

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, following the imposition by the United States government of export licence restrictions on nickel materials intended for destinations other than Canada, nickel scrap, nickel alloy scrap, and other nickel bearing scrap materials, including residues and dross and secondary ingot made from these scrap materials, have been added to the export control list for Canada affecting shipments to destinations other than the United States, under order in council P.C. 1967/1183 of June 13, 1967.

This action is necessary to prevent diversion through the Canadian market of materials now restricted for offshore shipment from the United States.

FISHERIES

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING LOG DRIVE ON STELLAKO RIVER, B.C.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I ask for permission to table copies of an exchange of correspondence between Hon. R. G. Williston, minister of lands, forests and water resources of British Columbia and myself concerning the log drive on the Stellako river.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR EXTENSION OF DUTIES OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-130, to amend the Financial Administration Act (parliamentary commissioner for administration).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, this bill is necessitated by the fact the government has failed to deal effectively with the recommendation of the special committee to set up the office of ombudsman. Actually this bill extends the duties of an office already in existence, that of the Auditor General. This office, which is already organized to deal with such matters, has no authority for certain functions and duties which by his own admission the Auditor General has already assumed because of the nature of his office. This bill would therefore set up an ombudsman for administrative matters. The bill is related to Bill No. C-36 but is complementary to it in the setting up of a special ombudsman for administrative affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AND RIGHT TO APPEAR IN COURT

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-131, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, this bill makes specific provision in the Canadian Bill of Rights to eliminate discrimination by reason of belonging to a particular profession or trade or by reason of one's education in respect of the basic rights or freedoms recognized by the Canadian Bill of Rights. It provides also for the right of a Canadian citizen to appear in person before courts and tribunals, and the right to handle his own case. Furthermore, if a decision is rendered in his favour he should be reimbursed for the costs therein involved.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-132, to amend the Criminal Code (Off-track betting).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, this bill has three main objects:

1. To legalize off-track betting which now exists illegally and is controlled by the underworld. Provincial governments could either control betting entirely or hand over its control to private enterprise subject to strict citizenry.

2. To provide provincial coffers with money which could be used for education or other ends related to the well-being of youth and citizenry.

3. To facilitate federal-provincial fiscal relations at coming conferences by decreasing the needs of the provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—THREATENED STRIKE BY SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether it is correct that he has received a telegram from Leonard McLaughlin of the S.I.U. threatening a strike of the 15,000 S.I.U. seamen on the great lakes. If so, what has been his reply and what action, if any does the government intend to take in this regard?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having just returned from the I.L.O. conference in Geneva, I will have to take the question as notice.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD RESOLUTION RESPECTING AGGRESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. My question is, what is the position of the government with respect to the very unusual suggestion coming from the Soviet union that the question of whether Israel is guilty of aggression be referred to the general assembly of the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, that will be a matter to be considered by the security council, I take it, in the terms of a resolution being submitted to it. Our delegate, acting on instructions from the government, will make the position of the government known when the time comes to vote on the resolution. We should like to hear the views and the remarks of others before a final decision is taken, which will depend to some extent on the debate and the terms of the resolution. Meanwhile I can say that if the resolution is merely in terms which denounce Israel as an aggressor in this particular matter within the meaning of the charter, we would not support that resolution.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF BUSINESS TO INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the house leader I should like to direct my question to the acting house leader or the Prime Minister and ask whether it is the intention soon to refer something to the Indian affairs committee so the committee can conduct the business it was prevented from conducting last session.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss this matter with the house leader as soon as he returns, which I believe will be later this evening.

NATURAL GAS

DECISION BY U.S. COMMISSION ON PIPE LINE APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of energy and resources. Would the minister inform the house when he expects the federal power commission to reach a decision on the application of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines for the construction of the United States portion of the proposed pipe line?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said before, that this is still a secret. There are rumours from Washington that the federal power commission is about to make a decision, but it is still only a rumour.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE PAYMENT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase yesterday's question to the Prime Minister. Will the government immediately clearly indicate its intention that under no circumstances will a judges pension be paid to L. A. Landreville?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That matter has already been answered in the house by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister, arising out of an answer given to me yesterday by the Minister of Fisheries in relation to base line co-ordinates under the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act. In view of the fact that it appears likely the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be preoccupied for some time, would the Prime Minister be prepared to consider transferring official responsibility for the negotiation of base line co-ordinates to the Minister of Fisheries?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is as interested in this matter as he has always been. It is also being pressed vigorously by the Minister of Fisheries, who is concerned with the problem and working with the Secretary of State for External Affairs to find a conclusion as early as we possibly can.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO ADDITION OF ANTIBIOTICS TO LIVESTOCK FEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that Canada was represented at a symposium in Washington held by the national research council and the national academy of sciences at the request of the food and drug administration, where it was decided that antibiotics added to livestock feed result in the emergence of drug resistant bacteria, is the government planning to investigate this matter further?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that his question might be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION OF BRITAIN IN EGYPT—SHIPS IN SUEZ CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Prime Minister can give an answer to this question at once as the matter just came to my attention as I came into the house. I should like to ask him whether Canada is now looking after the interests of Britain in Egypt as the result of the severance of relations; and can he advise the house as to the position of four British cargo ships presently marooned in Great Bitter lake in the Suez canal? The company which owns them claims that this places these ships in great jeopardy.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As far as the latter part of the question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about these four British ships. We will make inquiries, but perhaps the British government would know more about their ships than we do.

So far as the first part of the question is concerned, we have been looking after the interests of Great Britain in the United Arab Republic for a good many months, and there is no reason that we should not continue to do so, as far as I am aware.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister have an inquiry made in this regard, in view of the fact the British government is unable to obtain this information?

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to make an inquiry into this matter, though I would think the owners of the ships or the British government would know where the ships actually are. We will be glad to make inquiries.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY, N.S.—REPORTED FURTHER LAY-OFFS AT STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. Is he aware of the Canadian Press item today which indicates that 300 or 400 more men received layoff notices at the Sydney plant? If so, what steps does he consider can be taken to assist in solving this most serious matter along the lines I suggested the other day, to which the Prime Minister agreed? I suggested an investigation could be carried out in co-operation with the Nova Scotia provincial government.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we are carrying out the investigation agreed to by the Prime Minister.

IMMIGRATION

DENIAL OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS TO GREEK SHEPHERD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I have his letter denying landed immigrant status to a Greek shepherd, and I should like to ask the minister whether Moses, who looked after sheep for 40 years, or King David, who was also a shepherd, would have been admitted to Canada under the present regulations.

Some hon. Members: oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister wishes to reply to the hypothetical question.

Mr. Cowan: Nothing hypothetical. A Greek has been refused landed immigrant status.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend will never get into the promised land by asking that kind of question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Does the answer of the Prime Minister indicate that the hon. gentleman is about to go to the other place?

Mr. Pearson: It would not be a bad idea.

Mr. Cowan: I do not expect to see the cabinet where I am going—up there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO FORMATION OF NEW DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister in connection with housing. Some time ago the right hon. gentleman said he was considering the creation of a full time ministry of housing and urban affairs. In view of the continuing housing shortage I wonder whether a decision has been made to set up such a department. If so, is the Prime Minister in a position to announce it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; no decision has been made. This does not mean we are less concerned about housing difficulties than we were. All efforts are being made, and I am glad to say the situation is more encouraging than it was a few weeks ago.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. Is the minister giving consideration to extending the loans on existing housing?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The matter is under constant study. If a decision to make any changes is reached it will be announced in due course.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FORESTRY WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and inquire whether in considering amendments to the unemployment insurance regulations now before the cabinet for approval any consideration has been given to amending the legislation as it applies to forestry workers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is obviously out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—RECEPTION BY CANADA OF ARAB REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that great numbers of Arab refugees are now in refugee camps or wandering unwanted from place to place, will Canada, as a contribution to a peace settlement in the Middle East, offer to receive a generous number of these Arab refugees?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This agonizing and continuing problem, which is likely to become an even more serious problem in the future, has been receiving attention in the United Nations over the years, as the hon. member knows, without much success. The problem is now greater than ever and it will require more attention and much more action on the part of the United Nations. Just as Canada has played her part, I think, in previous efforts to deal with this situation, we shall certainly play our part in any new and more effective effort which may be made.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dubé in the chair.

Supply—Defence Production

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

1. Departmental administration and (a) the care, maintenance and custody of standby defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling; (b) grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on crown owned defence plants operated by private contractors and (c) the repair of office equipment for all government departments, $25,669,000.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Defence Production for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 66 of the blue book. The details thereof are listed at page 67. Shall this item carry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Chairman, in respect to the Department of Defence Production I would like to refer briefly to both the department's traditional responsibility in the field of defence procurement and the additional undertakings that are being assumed in the purchasing and supply field for the civil departments of the government. I propose to deal initially with the Department of Defence Production, and when consideration of that is completed to tackle separately, and I hope in order, the emergency measures organization and, if we have time following that, the National Research Council.

The Department of Defence Production is responsible for the procurement of goods and services for the Department of National Defence, and also for ensuring that the necessary production capability is available to support our defence production program and related activities.

In addition, as I mentioned last year in my statement on the departmental estimates, the department is continuing to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization which relate to departmental purchasing and supply responsibilities. In this connection as I indicated last year, the government, has approved the establishment within the department of a central purchasing agency to serve all departments and agencies of the federal government other than the commercially oriented crown corporations. The government has also approved the establishment of the basis for an integrated supply service.

Although it would not be appropriate to review all the procurement programs of the department at this time, I would like to draw the committee's attention to several areas of activity.

In shipbuilding a study of government procurement policies resulted in the adoption by the government of the principle that national competition should be sought whenever the nature and operational circumstances of the requirement so permitted. Procedures have now been introduced to let shipbuilding work competitively. Results of this policy have been successful.

A contract has been awarded to the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company Limited for the construction of two operational support ships for the Royal Canadian Navy. This is the largest shipbuilding contract ever placed in Canada, and these two ships will increase the fleet's anti-submarine warfare potential by keeping our destroyers at sea for a longer period than is now possible.

The modernization and refit of seven destroyer escorts of the St. Laurent class was completed in the fall of 1966. Work on the modernization of the first of seven vessels of the Restigouche class is being undertaken by H.M.C. Dockyard, Halifax. The six following vessels will be modernized by commercial shipyards selected through competitive tenders. The work on the first of these ships is scheduled to commence in January, 1968.

Production contracts for new and advanced sonar systems for these ships are in progress. New data processing methods for anti-submarine warfare are being developed which will result in a significant improvement in the ships' capabilities, and new communications systems are to be installed using a unique method of switching to permit common use of antennae, thus reducing deck clutter. Studies are under way to establish a method of electronically monitoring all the ships' systems in order to improve maintenance procedures.

The first of the three Oberon class submarines being procured from the British ministry of defence, the Ojibwa, was delivered in September, 1965 and the second submarine, the Onondaga, which was lauched the same month is scheduled for delivery in mid-1967. The Okanagan is scheduled for delivery in mid-1968.

Four vessels are being constructed for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in support of their hydrographic, oceanographic and linographic research programs in international, Canadian coastal and great lakes waters. Under this program contracts were awarded late in 1965 for two tidal and current survey vessels, with completion scheduled for August and October, 1967. Contracts for two other research vessels were awarded in 1966 with completion scheduled for August, 1967 and May, 1968.

A contract for a naval research establishment vessel required to provide an ocean-going research facility for acoustic, anti-submarine warfare, hydrographic and oceanographic research was awarded in November, 1966, as a result of competitive tenders. Completion of the vessel is scheduled for early 1969.

In the field of communications, consultants are completing a comprehensive study of the design of a modern communication system for the Department of National Defence. In addition a wide range of equipments is being purchased to provide communications for the operational elements of our forces.

In the aircraft field, in addition to the production of the 115 CF-5 aircraft for the Canadian armed forces, significant programs include the de Havilland Buffalo aircraft. Progress on our own military order for 15 of these aircraft is satisfactory, and 12 aircraft have been sold commercially in the export market. Current and prospective sales of the de Havilland twin engine Otter aircraft, which features the Canadian designed and manufactured PT6 turboprop engine, justify our initial confidence in and financial support of these two programs.

The first of seven Falcon Dassault transport aircraft was accepted in Paris several weeks ago. The Canadian industry must prepare plans for the electronic systems that it will have to install; it will also furnish the seven aircraft.

Ten Bell tactical transport helicopters are also being purchased for the Canadian armed forces.

Export sales of the Canadian designed and produced Black Brant research rockets are being made by Bristol Canada whose facilities are able to offer quick delivery to potential customers.

Modernization programs, including the fitment of new avionic equipment, are being carried out on such aricraft as the CS2F Tracker, Argus and Neptune anti-submarine warfare aeroplanes and CHSS-2 Sea King helicopters. My departmental officers are also collaborating with the aerospace industry and other nations in a number of interesting development projects with good market potential. For example, the CL84 vertical and short take off and landing dynavert is now being evaluated by the United States.

While we may tend to emphasize the development and production of new aircraft, there are also contracts placed, totalling some $70 million annually, for the repair of aerospace equipment, with 40 to 50 contractors from coast to coast in Canada.

The Department of Defence Production is also continuing to procure various types of conventional weapons and ammunition to meet the training requirements of the Canadian defence forces. To the extent feasible these requirements are produced in Canada.

The recent development of the anti-submarine projectile which has now been introduced into the Canadian navy has resulted in substantial sales of this item to Britain and to the Netherlands. Canadian development of the Lance lightweight launcher is on schedule. This development is being supported under the Canada-United States defence development and production sharing program. Already an initial production order has been received as a result of development work.

Negotiations have also been completed for the procurement of 800 military type jeeps to replace similar vehicles bought during the Korean conflict. Delivery was obtained on the majority of the 150 aircraft refuelling trucks previously ordered for support of the air service at home and abroad. Action is now under way to purchase Lynx command and reconnaissance vehicles, self propelled 155 mm. howitzers, and Ram trucks to replace the present M37 cargo trucks.

The contracts awarded on behalf of the Canadian Centennial Commission and of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition are of very special interest this year. They deal mainly with the purchase of railroad cars for the centennial train and the operation of the train, the production of the truck-trailers needed for our eight centennial caravans and the operation of special trains to ensure the transportation of the heads of state who will visit Canada.

The Department of Defence Production bought a great number of articles for Expo, including the exhibits for the theme pavilions and awarded contracts for printing and services.

The complexity of military equipment required to meet the most modest and limited defensive roles is continously increasing. This expansion in technical sophistication arises from the necessity to achieve greater flexibility of application and, by increased automation, to raise the efficiency of employment of military manpower. These factors contribute substantially to the steady rise in the cost of developing and producing modern defence equipment, which has been evident in the past few years and which is expected to continue in the future.

In common with our allies we seek to achieve maximum cost effectiveness in the application of our necessary defence budgets. This means that every defence procurement contemplated must be considered not only in the sense of military necessity but also in regard to many interrelated economic factors. We must strive to obtain the best equipment for the lowest cost while at the same time considering the importance of the procurement to the maintenance of an essential minimum Canadian industrial defence base and the extent to which it may contribute to our over-all national economic growth.

Our allies are generally faced with the same considerations and it is becoming increasingly apparent that in many cases our mutual interests are best served by co-operative development and production. By such means the cost reduction advantages attendant on larger scale production can be realized. At the same time the development investment and risk can be shared and the participating nations afforded the opportunity to specialize in fields of technology appropriate to their resources and interests. The number of such co-operative projects is steadily increasing, involving not only the smaller nations but also the larger powers who in spite of their extensive industrial resources are finding it progressively more uneconomical to justify independent development and production. The difficulties inherent in putting together multi-national defence equipment programs are very great, but expertise is being developed in Canada which is being put to good use.

It would not be practical to review all such projects in which Canada is involved at present or likely to be in the future. I would, however, like to refer to two typical projects now in being. First in the aricraft field, where production of 115 CF-5 aircraft for the Canadian armed forces is proceeding on schedule, the government of the Netherlands has now confirmed its desire to participate in the Canadian production of the CF-5 tactical ground support fighter. The Netherlands air force is in the process of placing orders for 105 aircraft and associated spares, which will have the effect of almost doubling the production requirement over the next four years. This arrangement offers potential savings to both governments in production costs and the lifetime maintenance expenses for the aircraft. Expanded navigation and other facilities are being added by the Netherlands thus further increasing the flexibility and effectiveness of this aircraft in certain roles. Both the Canadian and Netherlands aerospace industries will be co-operating in the manufacture of the many components and subassemblies required, and this association offers the opportunity to develop advantageous longer term industrial trading relations.

Second, in the area of battlefield surveillance systems Canada, Britain and Germany have co-operated in the development in Canada of the CL-89 reconnaissance drone. The three countries shared the cost of this successful development on an equal basis and are currently planning production to start later this year to meet their joint requirements. By sharing the cost and the risk the three countries will thus be able to acquire essential advanced defensive equipment for a minimum investment.

The department will continue to explore and develop all such opportunities for co-operation wherever it appears in the best interests of Canada and of our allies.

As a step toward the implementation of the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization, a thorough evaluation of defence acquisition methods and techniques indicated early in 1966 the possibility of a significant improvement in departmental management of major defence procurement projects. Accordingly it was decided to establish a program of single office project management within which a single officer would be assigned appropriate authority and responsibility for managing all aspects of the implementation phase of selected procurement projects. The primary responsibility of these project managers will be to maintain the time, cost and performance objectives established by the funding authorities.

The project managers head small offices composed essentially of planning, engineering and contractual capabilities which enable them to arrive at optimum trade-off decisions by logical and systematic evaluation of cost versus effectiveness. Where such decisions are beyond their authority the project managers present alternative solutions directly to senior management for policy decisions.

Responsibility for establishing this new program within the department has been assigned to the project management branch. It is responsible for the establishment of project offices for acquisitions which have a high cost and/for priority; involve organizational complexity or technical risk; require extensive interdepartmental or international co-ordination; or have potentially difficult industrial or economic aspects. Examples of projects which fall within this area of activity are the CF-5 aircraft, the CL-89 surveillance drone and the periscopter short range elevated viewing device.

Before closing my statement I would like to refer to the present status of departmental activities relating to the implementation of those recommendations of the royal commission on government organization which relate to the responsibilities of the Department of Defence Production.

As regards the consolidation of all purchasing for federal departments and agencies other than the commercially oriented crown corporations, I am pleased to report that a consolidation plan and schedule has been established and to date a total of 16 agencies and departments have had their purchasing functions taken over in whole or part. In addition it is planned to consolidate the purchasing activities of the Departments of Fisheries, Transport and National Revenue before the end of 1967. It is also planned to transfer the purchasing functions now remaining with the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Public Works and Manpower and Immigration to the Department of Defence Production early next year.

The Canadian government supply service is comprised of No. 1 supply centre in Ottawa, warehouses in Toronto and Montreal, 16 regional purchasing offices in Canada, Britain and western Europe, and seven headquarters branches. These seven branches perform many diverse functions related to materiel management within the federal government.

The operational elements of the C.G.S.S. are concerned with regional purchasing, the repair and maintenance of office machines, No. 1 supply centre, which is the prototype C.G.S.S. supply centre, and warehouses in Montreal and Toronto. At the present stage of supply consolidation the Department of Defence Production has assumed responsibility for stationery, paper, furniture and a few other minor commodities for all government departments. During the 1966-67 fiscal year No. 1 supply centre issued 445,000 line items of these commodities having a value of $10,218,000, and C.G.S.S. regional purchasing offices arranged for the purchase of materiel and services valued at over $102 million.

The technical services branches of the C.G.S.S. provide the technical support and functional direction required by the operational elements oof the supply service. In addition these branches provide civil government departments with advice and service in the functional areas of cataloguing, traffic management, quality assurance and specifications and standards.

The cataloguing branch up to March 31, 1967 had identified and catalogued approximately 50,000 line items, of which 56 per cent were new items and 44 per cent were either common with existing catalogued items or disposable, thus providing an opportunity for a reduction in inventory as supply consolidation proceeds. This branch also produced purchase descriptions for 4,600 fast moving items to allow more efficient and competitive procurement. It further assisted Canadian industry by providing identification and sourcing data to facilitate bidding on NATO contracts for certain technical equipment requirements.

The traffic management branch has negotiated for federal government employees special hotel rates with an estimated saving of $150,000 a year. The introduction of an analysis of the freight content of contracts is expected to result in a cost reduction of nearly $200,000 annually. A new method of acquiring in-transit insurance on a governmental group basis for household goods removals will reflect a decrease in insurance cost at an annual rate of approximately $390,000.

During 1966 the Canadian government supply service made progress in developing the organizational structure, management plans and operating systems required for the consolidation of civil government supply activities in the capital region. These important preliminary activities will permit the C.G.S.S. to develop plans for the gradual assumption of certain supply activities now being carried out individually by numerous departments and agencies across the country.

In 1966 the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production agreed to a set of principles on which an integrated federal materials management system will be based. The primary objective of the integrated system is to provide the government of Canada with a wide system for the procurement and supply of material and associated support services at minimum cost. My officers are cooperating with their counterparts in D.N.D. to bring about the achievement of this objective. A major activity of the C.G.S.S. during the current fiscal year is the consolidation of civil government supply facilities in the capital region. There are some 150 warehouses and substores being operated by civil government departments in the capital region. It is planned to consolidate these stores into No. 1 supply centre.

Mr. Chairman, I commend these estimates to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for having shed some light on the activities of his department. However, most of what he said was with regard to the procurement of certain military equipment or the plans in connection therewith, and I think most of us in the house are very considerably befogged as to just what is the situation in the Department of Defence Production, how it is organized at the present time, the activities it carries on and how those activities are apportioned within the department.

I note from the estimates that there has been a considerable increase in staff. This increase has amounted to something better than 400. I presume the increase in staff has been to take care of the function of purchasing on behalf of all government departments, which it was planned this department would take over. The minister in his remarks noted that there are 16 agencies for which the department is now purchasing. He also said there are a number of others in regard to which the department will be carrying out the purchasing.

I hope the minister will be able to tell us to what extent the department has taken on the purchasing function for all government departments as planned, in other words how many departments do not have their purchasing carried out by this department. Also, is it planned that all departments will eventually have their purchasing carried out by the Department of Defence Production? I am in very considerable doubt as to the extent to which this policy, which I think was announced two years ago, of the department becoming the purchasing agency for all departments has actually been implemented. When the minister says 16 agencies I do not know whether that means 16 departments, branches of departments, crown corporations, or exactly what it does mean. Therefore I hope the minister will elucidate further on this question and tell us exactly what is the situation.

I think it would also be helpful, though probably it cannot be done at this time, if the minister would issue a chart showing the present organization of the department and the functions carried out by each of the branches or parts of the department. At the present time, in view of the numerous changes that have been carried out, I personally—although I was fairly familiar with this department at one time—do not know what the situation is, how the department is organized and how it carries on these various functions.

I believe we should also know what proportion of the activities of the department are devoted to its original purpose, the purpose for which it was set up, that is defence production, supply and purchase and associated activities. What proportion of the activities of the department is really concerned with this new function which has been undertaken, that of being the general purchasing agency for all government departments or a certain proportion of them? At the present moment I do not think anybody in the house has any idea of the division of work as between the personnel of the department and its general resources vis-à-vis the two chief functions for which the department is responsible.

I should like some information on another matter. What is the situation of the Department of Defence Production vis-à-vis the Department of Industry? I have an idea that a good deal of the administrative work for the Department of Industry is carried on by the Department of Defence Production, but I do not know whether this is actually the case. I should like the minister to give us some information in this respect and tell us what is the relationship between these two departments. To what extent does the Department of Defence Production carry on administrative work for the Department of Industry?

I note in looking at the estimates that the Canadian Commercial Corporation has disappeared except for a bookkeeping entry, as far as I can make out. Apparently the work formerly carried out by the Canadian Commercial Corporation is all being done by departmental personnel. There is no item left for personnel and administrative costs in connection with the Canadian Commercial Corporation. The only item left is a payment by the Canadian Commercial Corporation to the Department of Defence Production for administrative services. It would appear that for all practical purposes the Canadian Commercial Corporation has disappeared. All the work it carried out is now being done directly by the Department of Defence Production.

I wonder what is the purpose of keeping this corporation in existence as far as the estimates book is concerned, and showing this one entry of a payment by the corporation to the department. In other words, we vote so much money to the Canadian Commercial Corporation, and that money is then turned over to the department to cover administrative and other costs for work formerly carried out by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Perhaps the minister could explain why this item is still in the estimates, and why the name of the Canadian Commercial Corporation is still maintained when it would appear that its functions have been taken over by the personnel of the Department of Defence Production.

I also note that the provision for the care, maintenance and custody of stand-by defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling is down to a little more than half what it was before. I wonder how many stand-by defence plants and what tools, etc., are still left. I should like to know where those plants which are left are located and what is the purpose of retaining them at the present time, in view of the fact that the majority of the plants, tools, equipment and so on have been disposed of, as far as I can see.

Those are some of the general questions which a cursory examination of the estimates has brought to my mind and to which I hope the minister will be able to supply answers.

In the remarks he made under the general heading of government procurement policies he dealt first with the shipbuilding program and stated that shipbuilding contracts have been put on a competitive basis. I wonder whether this so-called competitive basis on which the shipbuilding contracts have been placed actually works. This is not the impression we have, particularly judging from the history so far as we know it, of the refitting of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure. I believe it has been alleged that the original tender was let on a competitive basis. The cost of the refitting is now considerably more than double what the original tender called for. To say that shipbuilding contracts are let on a competitive basis is I think, a travesty. First a contract is let on a competitive basis and then it is increased until the original cost is doubled. Although it may be said that a contract is let on a competitive basis, what it really comes down to is a cost plus basis in view of all the money which is expended above the initial tender. This again is a matter on which we need some explanation, particularly with regard to the refitting of the Bonaventure about which I think many people may have quite a number of questions. Perhaps some of my colleagues would like to ask more specific questions on that matter.

With regard to aircraft, the minister spoke at some length about the CF-5. All he said was that the program was going ahead satisfactorily. This is, of course, a nice, pleasant, general statement such as we have heard in this house on many occasions, and very frequently it does not mean too much. I should like to know when deliveries of the CF-5's are to start. The program was announced, I believe, nearly 18 months ago and production was to have started well over a year ago. Therefore one begins to wonder when deliveries of this aircraft will commence.

Another question I should like to put to the minister is, what proportion of the total cost of these aircraft will cover work done in Canada and what proportion of the cost will cover parts of engines or frames imported from the United States? In considering the value of producing an aircraft such as the CF-5 or any other aircraft in Canada, it is quite material for members of the house to have an idea of how much of the total cost which the taxpayer pays for these aircraft covers imports into the country and how much covers labour and goods which are Canadian in their origin.

The minister said something about an anti-submarine projectile of which there had been sales to the United Kingdom and other countries. I do not know whether he was referring to a projectile for aircraft use or for use by destroyers or other ships. Perhaps the minister could give us some information on this matter. I should also like to know where in Canada these anti-submarine projectiles are being produced and who is the contractor for them.

With regard to the general question of defence production sharing, as it is called, we would also be interested to know what have been the total sales of defence equipment to other countries and what have been the total imports of defence equipment from other countries, particularly to and from the United States. Putting defence production on a reasonably shared basis has been an awkward and thorny question over the years. During the period when I was minister of defence we were constantly working on the problem, in conjunction of course with the Department of Defence Production, in order to try to persuade our allies in NATO to adopt more common programs with regard to equipment of all kinds. It was always an uphill struggle and it was always difficult. In fact it proved to be impossible to get unanimous agreement on a single article that I can think of because every country was anxious to produce as much of its own defence equipment as it possibly could. However, a considerable amount of progress was made. The extent to which we do sell defence equipment to other countries is one of the measures of the success of the efforts which were made through the years toward this end. However, as I say, I would like to know what the general picture is in that regard so far as the operations of the past years are concerned and particularly whether we have a debit or a credit in foreign exchange payments as a result of this type of activity.

I would like to say something about a number of other matters such as Canadian Arsenals and in particular the emergency measures organization. However, as I understoood the minister's remarks he hopes to deal with each of these subjects in turn. Therefore I will defer my remarks on these other subjects until we have disposed of the general discussion on item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister's opening remarks can really be divided into two parts, first, a report to the house on the traditional role of the Department of Defence Production in procuring for the armed forces of Canada and, second, the transformation of the department into a procurement agency for government departments generally. My own feeling with respect to the second part is that his remarks were in the nature of an interim or progress report. While the process of transition, to which the hon. member for Calgary North referred, may have been going on for some time it has not yet reached the point where we could expect much more from the minister than he gave us in his opening statement. Second, I believe it has not yet reached the point where members of the house generally are in a position to judge fully the success or otherwise of the developments that have been taking place in this direction. In any event, I think we all recognize that the department as a whole is largely concerned with what one might term the internal housekeeping operations of the federal government. In my view this lends itself much more readily to the kind of consideration that could be given by a standing committee of the house where various officials of the department could be heard in greater detail. This would be true, of course, unless there were particular policies that required full debate in this chamber.

I should like to suggest, therefore, that possibly by the time the departmental estimates are considered next year we may very well have reached a point where it would be worth while for the estimates to go before a committee so that the developments that have been taking place within the department could be reviewed in some depth. I make this suggestion with two purposes in mind. The first would be to give members of the house who are most interested and concerned a well-rounded picture of what is occurring. Second, this procedure would enable members to form judgments that would be based on detailed information. So far as the work of the average member is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that, apart from that kind of approach, the questions involved in internal housekeeping come to us largely as the result of rather accidental situations that may develop in conjunction with other aspects of our general work as members.

There is a question in connection with central purchasing and distribution which will have to be discussed at some point and on which we should have detailed information when such information can be properly made available. We should be informed about whether the trend toward central purchasing and distribution of government supplies is in actuality creating more efficiency and economy, whether this procedure has the kind of flexibility that is necessary to meet efficiently the requirements of operating departments. There is, of course, the danger of simply creating another area of bureaucracy, as a result of which the people working in the field in the various departments may find it much more difficult to go ahead with the tasks they are required to perform. This is one of the dangers in having another agency through which they have to go in order to get their supplies. This matter can only be assessed when we have had an opportunity of reviewing the whole operations of the department in some depth in a standing committee. At some appropriate stage such a committee may wish to ask members of the various operating departments of government their opinion of the arrangement of having purchases made through a central agency of government.

So far as the minister's report to the committee is concerned, I think he indicated that progress has been made in the general direction that we all agreed we should go at the time the program was announced. There is little more that one can usefully add by way of general observations at this point in the development of this program under the minister's department. I hope the minister will give us some indication whether he agrees or disagrees with my suggestion that in a year's time it may be desirable from his point of view and the point of view of members generally that the kind of review I have proposed be made.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of the committee some of the points that have been mentioned already by the hon. member for Calgary North. I believe that he touched only briefly on a major development in the Department of Defence Production. I am referring to the staff increase in departmental administration. As the hon. member for Cargary North mentioned, the increase in staff for 1967-68 over previous years is 412. Most of the increase is in the higher salary brackets. There has been an increase of four, from 16 to 20, in the senior officer level within the $14,000 to $16,000 bracket. At the executive level there has been an increase of five in the salary range of $10,000 to $12,000. However, the real increase appears under the administration and foreign services section where there is an increase of 69 in the senior officers. There is an increase from zero to 69 in one year. In the second salary category under administration and foreign services there is an increase of 506 in the $14,000 to $16,000 bracket.

I realize that in some of the brackets a little farther down there has been a decrease in administrative staff. However, as I have noted there is a total net increase in personnel of 412 and for the most part the increase is at the senior level. There has been a tremendous increase in the total cost of administrative personnel. The increased cost in 1965-66 over the previous year was something over $4 million and the increase in 1966-67 over the preceding year is over $5 million. The total increase in two years amounts to more than $9 million or 66 per cent.

Having in mind that the department is taking over the responsibility of purchasing supplies for many government departments, some of this increase is justified. However, the increase is so large that it seems to me the minister should give the committee a detailed explanation of the reason for the tremendous increase which has taken place in the last year. The estimates show that the expenditures for this calendar year are going to be far in excess of the normal productivity growth of the country.

While the government is engaged in slowing down many other areas, particularly the private sector and local government areas in the country, the costs of government at the federal level are going ahead at a rate three to five times the normal increase in productivity of the country. In the light of these circumstances, I think the minister should give the committee a detailed explanation of the necessity for this tremendous growth in the administrative costs of the department.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman, we have posed a considerable number of questions to the minister which I believe he should answer before the vote carries.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: The first problem relates to the increase in the number of personnel, and this question was raised by both the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Red Deer. As the hon. member for Calgary North assumed, the largest part of this increase relates to the establishment of the new operation which I described, namely, the establishment of a new Canadian government supply service involving both purchasing and also warehousing and distribution of supplies for government departments other than the Department of National Defence, which of course will continue to perform its own warehousing and distribution functions. Part of the increase in salaries is accounted for by the increased levels of salaries which have been accorded to the whole of the government service. I do not think I need discuss this particular aspect at all.

The hon. member for Red Deer made some mention of the fact that there seemed to be a number of senior positions involved. I should explain to him that what we are endeavouring to establish here is a very efficient and large supply service, including warehousing, which calls for skilled managers who are familiar with the most recent techniques and have had training in such techniques in warehousing and distribution. The result of having both a consolidated service and skilful people engaged in operating it will, I hope, be that the occasions on which the government finds itself with overstocking or being left with obsolete or obsolescent stocks on its hands will decline quite materially. In my view it is well worth the investment of getting good people to manage this operation in order to achieve the savings that will follow.

The hon. member for Calgary North wanted to know which government departments and agencies have been taken over. I mentioned that there were some 16. Starting in March, 1964 and running through January, 1967. I had reference to the Civil Defence College; public printing and stationery; public works in Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal; the former department of northern affairs and national resources in relation to the western Arctic and Mackenzie regions only; the department of citizenship and immigration; the R.C.M.P. in respect of vehicles; national flags, all departments; the Department of National Health and Welfare in respect of prosthetic devices or services; the Department of Veterans Affairs; the Secretary of State so far as museums are concerned, northern affairs and national resources, national parks and historic sites; Secretary of State, national gallery and civil service commission; the remainder of the Department of National Health and Welfare in July of last year; the Secretary of State, public archives and national library; the Secretary of State, chief electoral officer, last December; and the Department of Trade and Commerce in its entirety in January of this year.

I think I mentioned in my opening remarks that during the course of this year we hope to take over in their entirety the responsibilities for purchasing and supply for the Department of Fisheries, the Department of National Revenue, the balance of the Department of Public Works, the balance of the Department of Transport, and Indian affairs and northern development. I am advised that this represents an assumption to date of responsibility for purchasing and supply of materials and services to the value of some $65 million per year.

There still remain to be taken over—I hope the hon. member for Calgary North will not want me to enumerate them—purchasing and supply representing an additional $100 million per year. This gives the order of magnitude of what has been assumed and what still remains to be done. This is a five year program, of which three years still remain to be achieved.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, may I at this stage ask the minister whether the plan is to take over purchasing for all departments and to have it completed by the end of the five year period, or will certain departments or parts of certain departments continue to do their own purchasing and let their own contracts? I am thinking particularly of the P.F.R.A. organization in the Department of Agriculture, which I think is in a much better position to let contracts for the dams and other things it builds than would be the Department of Defence Production.

This is a specialized type of business, and the only people fully qualified to conduct it in any government department, so far as I am aware, are those in the P.F.R.A. organization. I would hope there might be some exceptions made in respect of organizations of this kind which have specialized knowledge regarding the letting of contracts for the type of business and activities that they carry on. For this department to take over these functions from them would, I think, be wasteful, expensive and would not produce as good results.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that the object of this particular operation is to establish a more efficient, less wasteful and more productive result. If the effect of taking over P.F.R.A. would be to produce the result indicated by the hon. gentleman, we should not, would not and will not do it. The purpose of trying this consolidation is to achieve economies. It is not intended to assume purchasing and supply responsibility for either specialized materials or services which are not common to more than one department and which the current department holding this responsibility can probably do more efficiently than a centralized service. We are proceeding with the departments having the greatest volume of common materials and services, leaving the rather more unique ones until later. No final decision has been taken on what will eventually be included in the over-all plan and what will be left to continue operation as the hon. gentleman suggests.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Harkness: I have another question specifically on this point. Has the Department of Defence Production now taken over the purchase of automobiles and other automotive equipment for all departments or are there some departments who still purchase their own? I noted the minister said that the purchase of vehicles for the R.C.M.P. had been taken over. Are these vehicles now purchased on a wholesale basis more or less directly from the manufacturers, which has been the case for a number of years so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, or are they being purchased locally, as has been the case heretofore with most of the other departments.

Mr. Drury: In respect of the departments having the largest fleets of motor vehicles, we have now proceeded to take these over. There are still some departments that have requirements for and purchase relatively few vehicles which have not yet been taken over.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson: I have two further questions for the minister. Having regard again to the question of the increase in personnel, I can well understand the increase at the level of executive, scientific and professional people, but with regard to the second section under administrative and foreign service, will the minister explain to the committee what is meant by foreign service personnel so far as his department is concerned? Let me also direct his attention to the fact that the greatest increase in personnel has occurred in this particular branch. Not only is there a net increase this year of 163 but the breakdown shows that 830 of the personnel shown on this year's establishment earn over $10,000 per year, that is, from $10,000 to $18,000, and only 313 earn under $10,000. Will the minister explain to the committee why this particular set-up is as it is and why there has been such an increase at the senior level of this department?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the first question let me say that the category of administrative and foreign service is a general classification in the public service. It is a fact that we have abroad some officers of the government supply service who are charged with purchasing and supply in cities outside Canada, notably Washington, Bonn, Paris and Rome, to cite a few. They are classified as officers entitled to draw foreign service allowances just as those in the general category of administrative and foreign service officers.

Having regard to the second question about the proportion of senior people compared with those at lower salaries, it would be a little difficult to justify this in the house without going into a detailed examination of the duties and responsibilities of each individual concerned. I think the hon. member for Red Deer is probably aware that establishments proposed by government departments are submitted to a group under the supervision of the Treasury Board which does this for all departments of government service. It is this group's responsibility to examine in great detail the proposals for establishment put forward by each and every department to make sure they are on a comparable basis and that the numbers and rank of the people called for are required.

I can assure the hon. gentleman that this has in fact been done in relation to the establishment outlined here. I did indicate that I thought it was important in terms of cost efficiency to be prepared to engage the services of people having a considerable degree of training and skill in the techniques of purchasing, warehousing, accounting and distribution. In the long run an investment of this character will more than pay off in savings as a result of avoiding mistakes in inventory and in purchasing, as well as through efficient transportation arrangements with regard to freight and other transportation costs.

Mr. Thompson: Perhaps I could ask a related question. In the minister's opinion, does the taking over by his department of the purchasing responsibilities of 16 government departments mean that there has been a corresponding decrease in the staff of those other departments?

Mr. Drury: There has not been a corresponding decrease as yet. In order to take over both the purchasing and warehousing of supplies it is necessary to set up a coherent establishment which can function on an integrated or as a whole basis. This means that in the initial stages there will be more people engaged in the total operation than at the beginning or, indeed, at the end. There is a period of overlap.

Perhaps I should point out also that in some instances there will be individuals in government departments currently performing a dual function, one administrative and the other purchasing, or half purchasing and half administrative. One half of that responsibility will remain in the department hither to doing the purchasing and the other will move. This cannot result in the transfer of one complete individual but it will mean a reshuffle in the whole department and a decrease in administrative personnel to correspond with the increase in supply services. The over-all manpower to be used under the consolidated system will be substantially less than the number presently required in individual departments for purchasing.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question along the same lines. My question was partially answered by the minister in his reply to the question of the hon. member for Red Deer, although I must confess I could not quite follow the minister. I assume that at least in some departments there must have been people whose responsibility was primarily purchasing. In the consolidation of personnel which has taken place what shift of personnel has there been? What has happened to the people who were purchasing for the Department of Public Works, for example, when their services in that department became redundant? I expected the minister to say they had been drawing from the experience and talent of other departments in order to build up a purchasing function in his own department. From what he has just said to the hon. member for Red Deer that does not seem to have happened. I would expect some shift in the personnel concurrent with the development of this function in the minister's department. Can he add anything further to what he has already said on this point?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, that assumption by the hon. member is entirely correct. I was not talking in terms of bodies, so to speak, but rather establishment positions, to which I assume the hon. member for Red Deer addressed himself. When the purchasing function is transferred from a department to the Department of Defence Production there will be an increase in the number shown for the establishment of the Department of Defence Production. For instance, there might be an increase of eight, which would correspond to a reduction of eight or more if they were all full-time purchasing people shown in the establishment of the department from which the transfer is being made.

When one thinks in terms of people, obviously the Canadian government supply service is looking for people who are skilled and talented and any who are will be transferred from one department to the other. I think the hon. member for Red Deer was addressing himself to these establishment figures. In most cases what has been just assumed, namely that bodies will be transferred from one department to the Department of Defence Production, is correct.

The hon. member for Calgary North was wondering about the Canadian Commercial Corporation which exists merely in name, and asked whether we should not abolish even the name. A couple of years ago when this question arose during one of our committee meetings I provided an explanation which I will be glad to repeat in brief form.

The Canadian Commercial Corporation acts for the most part as the agent in Canada for foreign governments. They would prefer to have as their agents in Canada a corporation rather than the government of Canada itself or a department of the government of Canada. This has been our experience. By keeping alive the name and the form of the Canadian Commercial Corporation it is possible to meet this desire without any additional cost to the people of Canada, and because it is a convenience I suggest it makes us more effective when it comes to selling. The corporation has no great staff, as once it had. The functions of contract letting and contract supervision are all discharged by the Department of Defence Production. The name of the corporation is used as party to a contract and immediately, in turn, the corporation enters into a back to back contract with the Department of Defence Production or the supply service as the case may be.

Mr. Harkness: Apparently the Canadian Commercial Corporation has become what might be called a convenient legal fiction which enables the department to operate with greater ease in its dealings with foreign countries. I take it that the amount of $2,058,000 which we are asked to vote for the administration and operation of this corporation is the estimated cost of the personnel in the Department of Defence Production who are engaged in these activities formerly carried on by the Canadian Commercial Corporation?

Mr. Drury: Yes. The entry arises out of a recommendation of the Auditor General that a careful record be kept by the Department of Defence Production of all the time spent by the officials in the department on Canadian Commercial Corporation work and that this should be charged against the corporation. The officials of the department are doing work which they would be doing anyhow, but this arrangement does enable the committee to get some idea, if you like, of the value of the effort that this corporation represents.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us what this work consists of at the present time? Is the corporation chiefly concerned with making contracts in connection with the NATO brigade and the air division in Europe—formerly it was with France and Germany—or is it chiefly concerned with contracts for the manufacture and supply of defence equipment purchased by countries abroad? I have in mind the projected purchase by the Netherlands government of the CF-5 aircraft.

Mr. Drury: It is principally in the latter category, namely, the placement of procurement orders in Canada from foreign governments or their agencies.

Mr. Harkness: Does it still carry on some work for the Canadian government in connection with contracts for the supply of goods and quarters for the NATO brigade and the air division?

Mr. Drury: The contracting for quarters for the NATO air division and the Canadian ground forces brigade is done by Defence Construction Limited. There may be some smaller contracts made in the name of the Canadian Commercial Corporation in Germany in respect of Canadian armed forces there, but the bulk of these contracts is handled through normal defence production channels.

The hon. member for Calgary North asked about delivery of the CF-5. I am advised that the first test aircraft will be delivered in November or December of this year. The production program remains on schedule and should be completed in mid-1969. The hon. member also asked about the Canadian content of these machines and he wanted this information in relation to the larger question, namely, how much of this work for which the taxpayers are putting up their money does, or perhaps should, remain in Canada. I hope he will bear in mind the production sharing agreement we have with the United States which provides that there shall be a rough balance maintained in procurement programs as between north and south. So in respect of any particular piece of equipment the significance of whether it is 100 per cent manufactured in Canada or largely manufactured outside Canada does not arise, certainly not in relation to the balance of payments.

It is true that content is significant in terms of maintaining basic manufacturing capabilities in Canada but the quantitative elements are of no great significance. On the other hand, the qualitative elements are significant, as I think the hon. member would agree. In respect of the CF-5 I am advised that the Canadian content will be about 60 per cent by value, the balance being United States content. This particular program happens to be in itself almost self-balancing. But even if it were not, I suggest that in terms of quantity it is not too significant whether it balances or not.

Mr. Harkness: I might point out, however, that it would become of undoubted significance if a considerable number of these planes were sold to other countries. The amount of Canadian content would then become very much more important than if it were only a case of defence production here balancing that of the United States, a concept to which I referred in general terms when I spoke earlier. To the extent that we sell any of this equipment to third countries, this becomes a much more significant matter from the point of view of foreign exchange.

Mr. Drury: I agree that it then becomes more significant. Clearly Canada does better when there is a high percentage of Canadian content in items which are sent to countries other than the United States. With respect to this production sharing agreement, the hon. gentleman wanted some figures on the progress made under the heading of trade in defence equipment. For all the details I would refer the hon. gentleman to the annual report of the Department of Defence Production for 1966. I will summarize the information here by telling him that, as at the end of the first quarter of 1967, under the joint procurement program between Canada and the United States, Canada had purchased from the United States some $1,384 million worth of goods and the United States had purchased from Canada, in the same categories and under the same head, $1,573 million worth of goods, a difference of roughly $200 million.

Unfortunately I do not have here cumulative totals for any particular period in respect of overseas trade in defence equipment, but in 1962 there was an excess of exports over imports of some $17 million. In 1963 the excess was some $36 million, in 1964 an excess of some $16 million, in 1965 also an excess of some $16 million, and in 1966 an excess of $48 million. Because there are no formal procurement sharing arrangements with overseas countries I do not know where to start to reach a cumulative total, but I would hope the hon. gentleman would agree that we are demonstrating some activity in this particular field.

The hon. member for Calgary North also asked about the Bonaventure and questioned whether the competitive approach to shipbuilding and ship repair really made any sense when, in the event, it was found that the total cost of repair, if not of new construction, vastly exceeded the amount of the competitive tender. The hon. gentleman has been in the business and understands the difference between a bid on known work and the additions that arise when a ship is in drydock, is opened up and the engineers have an opportunity to examine the interior mechanisms of the ship and make rather more accurate decisions as to the full nature of repairs and all work that has to be done which, of course, is quite impossible when the ship is in its closed or non-open condition.

In the case of the Bonaventure the contract was competed for under two headings. The first was a call for a firm price bid on the known, specified overhaul repair and modification work. Everything that could be specified and drafted in advance was particularized and firm price bids called on it.

On the best advice we could get from the Department of National Defence as to the likely volume in man hours of repair work, based on past experience and on what they had heard elsewhere and so on, an assumption was made, if I remember correctly in this case, that approximately 200,000 man hours might be required for the Bonaventure. The shipbuilding companies bidding on the repairing were invited to bid man hour and overhead rates on additional, unspecified work, assuming that this would be in the neighbourhood of 200,000 additional man hours. There was no guarantee that it would be exactly 200,000 man hours or that it would not be less or that it would not be more.

In relation to the additional overhaul work no one can know this until you get the ship open and look at it. We did this, and by analysing and combining the two, the firm price bid and the man hour rates and overhead rates on additional unspecified work, I think an opportunity was provided to the contractors to engage in real price competition. This was done. But what does tend to mislead people is that the firm price bid gets projected into the public mind as the estimated cost of the overhaul when, in fact, it is merely the firm price bid for a part of the work, the major part but not the whole of it by any manner of means. This has resulted in a number of parliamentary questions and a whole series of answers.

To demonstrate what I have been saying, the Davie Shipbuilding company bid a price of $4.9 million for the firm price element. The Davie Company submitted the second lowest firm price bid and the lowest hourly rates, and since the contract was awarded there has been some $3 million worth of work arising from later examination of the ship and its equipment. Against a firm price bid of $4.9 million, unpriced work amounting to $3.2 million has already come up. To assume that one was going to incur a total cost for overhaul of the Bonaventure of $4.9 million would have been unrealistic. Indeed, provision was made in the estimates for a sum of $9.7 million for overhaul and repair of the Bonaventure, including government furnished equipment.

Mr. Harkness: What year's estimate was that?

Mr. Drury: This estimate was the one we were given just before going out to tender, which would be about a year ago.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That was the revised one. That was the second estimate after the contract was awarded.

Mr. Drury: No. This was not the estimate after the contract was awarded. This was the estimate of the cost before we went to tender. When one discovers precisely what repair work has to be done another estimate is made, probably a series of them. As new work comes up, in effect another budget has to be prepared and only when the work is completed can one determine the final cost.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us the estimated final cost of refitting the Bonaventure and when it is now expected the refit will be completed?

Mr. Drury: The total cost of overhaul and refit, including the cost of government furnished new equipment, is now estimated to be $11,770,000, and our latest estimate of time for completion is September 1 of this year.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pugh: The minister says that the total cost will be over $11 million. He also mentioned new equipment. Is this a new type of equipment or is it replacement equipment and how much of the total does it involve?

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Drury: The new equipment to which I have referred is not replacement equipment. It is new original equipment in a variety of fields such as communications, aircraft handling and I think fuel handling. It is all new equipment; it is not merely replacement of worn-out parts. In the estimate of $11.7 million the value of the new equipment would be something in the order of $2 million.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, am I right in understanding that the $11.7 million to which the minister has referred includes the original tender for $4.9 million?

Mr. Drury: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In his statement the minister referred to the contract awarded to the Saint John Shipbuilding Company for the twin naval ships. In our community we are interested in this and are pleased that the contract was awarded to our local yard. Has the minister any readily available information concerning the progress of this contract, when work may begin, how many men will be employed, when the naval overseers will move in, and so on?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that work on these ships has already started. It is expected that the vessels will be delivered in June, 1969 and November, 1969.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I have a query in respect of the general production of arms in Canada which are sold outside Canada other than through the Department of Defence Production. Does the government have its finger in the pie in respect of all arms produced in Canada, aircraft and otherwise, sold outside the country? Do we have a measure of control in this regard and are such sales included in our balance of trade? Is any part of the production sold other than through the government taken into account in respect of our balance of trade with various countries with regard to defence production? I think the minister will understand what I am getting at. Does the government control all arms produced in Canada which are sold outside Canada? Does the government enter into the picture in respect of the sale of arms produced by private firms—when I use the term "arms" I am making a distinction between commercial and other production—for shipment out of the country?

Mr. Drury: The government does not enter into the picture in respect of all contracts either for the production or sale of arms in Canada. There are some corporations in Canada which produce quite largely for the domestic market, particularly the sporting market, both arms and ammunition. These corporations also export. Exports of arms and ammunition are subject to the issue of export control permits. The inssuance of these permits is administered by the Department of Trade and Commerce. As a consequence I have no detailed knowledge concerning the volume of exports for which permits have been granted. I do know, however, that private firms are free not only to manufacture but also to export arms and ammunition from Canada.

Mr. Pugh: The minister used the term "sporting" and also mentioned arms and ammunition. The average person on the street speaks of arms and ammunition in the sporting sense. I should like to stick strictly to the matter of the production of war equipment. I am wondering whether or not the minister has complete control over that operation. Surely there must be some figures in the Department of Trade and Commerce in respect of arms—here I am using the term not in the sporting sense—produced in Canada and surely there must be some control by the minister's department. Is this taken into consideration in speaking of the balance between Canada and the United States in respect of defence production? Does the minister understand what I am getting at?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am not too sure what the hon. member is getting at but I will try to answer his question. The production of arms in Canada is not subject to government regulation. If the hon. member wished to manufacture a tank, for instance, for any purpose at all he would be at full liberty to do so. He could do it so far as I know without obtaining a permit from anyone. If, however, he wishes to export that tank from Canada he must secure a permit from the Department of Trade and Commerce. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman was trying to suggest that in some way the Department of Defence Production should have control over all arms produced in Canada. I do feel that we have a fairly complete knowledge concerning the production of arms and components of military equipment in Canada, but as the federal government we do not have control over such production.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very interesting discussion—

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to follow up my point. The minister has said that they have a fairly complete knowledge of what goes on in respect of the production of arms. In cases where we do export privately—when I use the term "privately" I mean in the commercial sense where an export permit is obtained, for instance, for export to the United States—is this taken into account when in arriving at the balance of defence production between the two countries?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, when the Remington Arms Company in Canada, for example, which manufacturers a variety of sporting rifles, shotguns and so on, exports sporting equipment to users or purchasers in the United States, that does not enter into the figures I have quoted in answer to a question by the hon. member for Calgary North concerning the production sharing arrangement. In so far as armaments and military equipment exported from Canada to the United States for the account of the department of defence in the United States are concerned, these are included in the totals I have mentioned. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Pugh: I believe it does. Your department would have complete detailed knowledge concerning the production of all war equipment, whether it is produced through the Department of Defence Production or through a commercial firm, which is sold to the United States or to any other country. I quite agree with the minister that there cannot be any check in respect of the sporting arms aspect, nor do I see any necessity that this should be brought into the picture with reference to the general question of the balance. The minister is now saying, however, that all armaments produced in Canada, whether through the Department of Defence Production or by private commercial firms, which are sold outside the country—and we will again use the example of the United States—form part of the balance of defence production in each country. Is that correct?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. I hope the hon. gentleman would not suggest that as a department we have detailed knowledge of every single transaction. Perhaps I should describe it a little better as statistical knowledge obtained from a variety of sources. There are some prime contractors in the United States for the production, say, of aircraft for the department of defence of that country. These aircraft are made up of a very large number of systems and components of those systems. The prime contractor in the United States may well subcontract to a systems subcontractor for part of that aeroplane and he is turn may subcontract components to a Canadian firm for manufacture.

It is unlikely that my department would know of this, and they are not required to know it, unless the firm in question came to us and let us have that information. However, it would be known to the United States defence department, which receives a statistical analysis from the prime contractors of the United States content and source of all the components. The particular item which I mentioned would show up in the United States statistical lists as being sourced in Canada.

We would have, equally, from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics information which would disclose, without saying what firm it was or in respect of what contract, the export of a class of components which would fit into this category. By marrying these two sets of information periodically we achieve the figures I have given to the hon. member for Calgary North. But as I say, our control is statistical rather than in detail and physical.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to follow that through. The minister pointed out that whatever might be the breakdown given by the prime contractor in the United States we can arrive at similar figures here through the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This information is available in the United States, and obviously the information the minister's department receives is available to the Canadian government. I ask the minister: Do you regularly trade off this information as between governments so that the total can be taken into account?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure what the hon. member means when he asks, "Do you regularly trade off the information". Every quarter there is a meeting between the Canadian group concerned with the statistical picture and the American group concerned, and they reconcile the figures. In an ideal system no doubt the figures would be exactly the same. There tend to be discrepancies, as there are on all these international accounts, and reconciliations have to be made. This is done quarterly either by a Canadian group going from Ottawa to Washington or an American group coming to Ottawa.

Mr. Pugh: I thank the minister. That is the information I wanted.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am very surprised to hear that the manufacture of arms and war materials does not come within the jurisdiction of one government department. I presume, from listening to the minister's replies to the questions asked by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, that we will have to defer our remarks on the question of the private production and sale of arms for the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I wish to direct a question to the minister. I presume that the minister's department is responsible for the defence production agreement between Canada and the United States for the sale of $300 million worth of these materials a year. Has the minister's department been made aware of the fact that there is a good deal of concern among some people in Canada with respect to the terms of that agreement and its effect, in that they are opposed to the war in Viet Nam and are afraid that the Americans will either use some of this material in that war or it will be used to replace material produced in the United States which is sent directly by them to Viet Nam? Perhaps the minister would enlighten us in this respect. Are we tied by this agreement? Is it possible for the Canadian government, if it wishes, to terminate the agreement?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, one can answer that question very quickly. All agreements can be abrogated. But I would point out to the hon. gentleman that this agreement resulted from what I think was a very intelligent economic decision regarding defence production in Canada. Some years ago it was recognized that military weapons systems change and we must provide for such change. One must look at these as systems rather than individual weapons, because the day of the simple sabre, the simple lance and the single shot revolver is gone.

Mr. Herridge: I realize that.

Mr. Drury: One of the items—the hon. gentleman may find this difficult to believe—which accounts for quite a significant proportion of total military equipment expense is computers.

Mr. Herridge: If the minister says so, I have no hesitation in believing him.

Mr. Drury: This indicates the extent to which there is a commonality between military equipment and items of civilian use.

Virtually all the electronic controls, and they are becoming more and more widespread now, have both a civilian and a military application. In many cases, if not the whole system at least significant components are the same for both civil and military use. This means that defence production, which classically perhaps could be limited to a few arsenals producing specialized military equipment such as guns, tanks, certain electronic equipment and the like, was unique to the military, but it is no longer unique. Indeed, to furnish the equipment for a modern military force requires the output of virtually all our manufacturing concerns—I emphasize, all of them, particularly the more sophisticated—and requires the output of some manufacturing concerns which we do not have in Canada and which, because of the small domestic volume of Canadian demand, it would not make economic sense for us to have in Canada.

So the decision was taken to endeavour, where military weapons systems were concerned, to specialize in Canada in the production of either elements of systems or systems themselves in which we could have and could expect to have a proficiency and an efficiency to manufacture economically, not only for ourselves but also for export. In this way it was considered that we would have a large enough unit of the market, which means a large enough unit of production, that the process of the particular manufacturer would be economic in current industrial terms. If we are to specialize our production for a limited number of items for our own forces, we must import the balance of our needs.

This is the case because to produce within Canada the whole range of systems would beggar the country with uneconomic production. We would then not only have to import but also to export. Agreement was reached between the secretary of defence and myself that we would endeavour to maintain a rough balance between the two countries in relation to exports and imports. Indeed, no tariffs are charged on military equipment moving north or south. Military equipment for the department of defence entering the United States is free of the restrictions of the "Buy America" act, and Canadian contractors have the right to bid with United States contractors on a competitive basis but they must be competitive and economically efficient if they are going to succeed. In the reverse sense the same is true for items sought by the Canadian armed forces. They also are sought on a bid basis.

By integrating the whole of North American production in this way we have been able to achieve very substantial economies in respect of equipment for the armed forces of both countries. Indeed, in this particular field the production sharing agreement is somewhat akin to the automotive agreement with the United States. There is the same relief from both the invisible and the tangible barriers to trade. In philosophical terms the North American market is regarded as a single unit and production is for the whole of the North American market rather than for separate parts of it.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to speak about the defence sharing agreement except with reference to the information that was given to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. I would say first of all that I find it rather difficult to believe that the officials of the minister's department are a mere passive organism in this regard. I think this belittles the efforts of the Air Industries Association of Canada which I am sure keeps the minister and his officials more than up to date regarding the activity or inactivity of the air industry. For years efforts have been made by the Department of Defence Production to maintain in one form or another a viable aircraft and related industries in Canada. Therefore to say merely that the department must rely on statistics which they cull from sundry anonymous reports of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is as difficult, for me to believe as it must be for a good number of members in the house. I am sure that my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North, does not believe it either.

I am sure I could name some officials in the minister's department who would have at their fingertips information on just how much defence sharing production is done by Canadian firms on behalf of prime contractors in the United States. I think, for instance, that it is one of the legitimate activities of the aircraft division of the minister's department to gather information regarding the degree of the utilization of the industry in Canada. Otherwise the minister's job of rationalizing the defence contracts coming from the Canadian government would be too difficult.

Perhaps this might be taken as a criticism that I might make of the minister's answer to my colleague, the hon. member for Okanagan

Boundary. I do not know what the hon. member for Kootenay West will say in this further regard. Sometimes he asks tongue-in-cheek questions. I am referring to the defence sharing agreement. From time to time we read editorials, often on behalf of organizations dealing primarily with Viet Nam, that Canada should immediately stop the export to the United States of anything that could be considered as war material destined for Viet Nam because the possible end use makes it unreasonable, unjust and frankly immoral in their eyes.

I believe it is dangerously naïve to think that defence production sharing can be considered in isolation and, in fact, that pure military policy can be considered in isolation from economic factors and an economic policy. After all, we do know that if under these circumstances Canada were brash enough and foolish enough to advise the United States government that the defence sharing agreement was at an end, it would be a long time after peace is settled in Viet Nam and elsewhere in the world before we could get another agreement with that country. Canada as a whole derives many benefits from these agreements, as does civilian industry. In addition, let us remember the oil agreements and other similar agreements we have with the United States which I think would come to a rather abrupt demise because if we see fit to abrogate unilaterally our defence sharing agreement it would not hurt anybody in the United States to abrogate the oil marketing agreement. After all, one has to travel on both sides of the street. I think the minister was right when he said that a number of other factors had to be taken into account and simply to say "cut it off, we will deal with Viet Nam and the end use of these materials in complete isolation" is incredibly naïve.

In saying this I do not want to imply that I like the situation in Viet Nam. No one does. As a matter of fact I think that those people who dislike war more than anybody else may well be those who have experienced it. On the other hand, we know that the United States is involved in a very difficult situation, and having embarked on a certain course it must do its best to see the situation through to whatever may be the best solution that can be devised by man. But men's motives are often devious and their solution may be far from satisfactory to all of the idealists in the world. I do not hear the same representations being made with regard to the unpleasant situation last week and its solution. It seems to me that the doves of Viet Nam were among the hawks of the Middle East. However, this is an aside. It is difficult to rationalize the differing attitudes taken by the same people.

To come back to the point I was making, I think the minister could improve the answer he has given us. I think he could take us into his confidence and let us know just what is going on in the aircraft industry.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about the rationalization of our shipbuilding industry and ask the minister a few questions. Personally I am all in favour of our shipbuilding industry becoming more competitve. Perhaps, as same people have said, we could do with fewer shipbuilding yards. Perhaps we could do with eight or nine yards instead of the 12 or 13 we have. I therefore go along with the government's present policy which is being followed by the Department of Industry of buying ships on behalf of the federal government on an entirely competitive basis and calling for national tenders.

About two years ago the minister announced a program of phasing out and away from the old practice of allocation. I believe that the allocation of very large contracts, sometimes running into tens of millions of dollars, to individual yards was an unfortunate practice. To get away from that, the decision was made first to bid on a regional basis and then increasingly to bid on a national basis. This is having a substantial effect on the yards on the west coast.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Davis: I listened with some interest to the hon. member and I shall be glad to elaborate if he can ask me some questions at the end of my speech.

On the west coast we have, of course, lost contracts, at least in the eyes of the management of the three yards there, that might otherwise have gone to our shipyards in Victoria and in the Vancouver area. The yards on the west coast have been and are being protected to some degree. There was a schedule for allocation of contracts prepared two years ago and I believe it was communicated in some detail to the industry. The schedule indicated that whereas the industry on the west coast had been sure of getting between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of all federal government work, the amount of government work it was assured of getting would decline. The figures ran something like this and on a declining scale: 1965, 25 per cent; 1966, 24 per cent; 1967, 18 per cent; 1968, 16 per cent; 1969, 15 per cent; 1970, 10 per cent.

Now, this was to be the result of the specific allocation of work to regions by the federal government, and it indicates a declining amount for the yards on the west coast. They will have to compete amongst themselves for the assured percentage. This does not necessarily indicate the total amount of work these yards will get from the federal government because they are all free to bid on tenders called for on a national basis. So far the yards on the west coast have not been very successful in bidding on a national basis. They have come close to winning contracts for federal work and they have certainly been successful in the private, commercial area.

For instance, Yarrows in Victoria recently won two contracts totalling $4 million for fishing vessels for the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company which will operate on the Atlantic coast. There is, therefore, some hope that our yards on the west coast can be competitive not only in getting work in respect of vessels which will be used in the Pacific theatre but perhaps occasionally also in the Atlantic area as well.

As is certainly well known to most of us in British Columbia, our costs in the main are higher. Wage rates have varied but there has always been a substantial differential in wage rates between the yards in British Columbia and the yards on the St. Lawrence and in the maritimes. The differential has been about a dollar an hour. This differential seems to persist as the unions on both our coasts negotiate with management from time to time. There is also another item of cost which is essentially in the area of materials. Freight rates are against us, so to speak, and certainly freight costs on steel and components, machinery and equipment, are additional items of cost which result in higher bids from west coast yards than bids received from yards in the Quebec area.

I am concerned at this moment because of the situation which now exists in the largest single yard, Burrard Dry Dock, located in my own constituency. Within the last two weeks there has been a lay off of some 300 men and Burrard's work force has gone down from 800 to approximately 500. I am told that this lower level of employment will continue for some months. However, I know there is a large federal contract amounting to $9 million for a research vessel which has been won by that yard and that work is going to begin on it this fall.

So far as I can see from the program which I have been able to obtain both from the industry and from the department, there are very few substantial federal government contracts in prospect. This $9 million contract is one. It was allocated to the west coast region and it happens that the yard in my constituency won the contract in competition with two other yards on the west coast.

As I said at the outset, I am all for competition. I think that in modern circumstances, especially circumstances short of all-out war, perhaps we could do with fewer shipbuilding yards, at least big yards. A number of smaller ones are springing up on the west coast which are building log barges, tugs and other small craft. We could do without a dozen or 13 large yards and perhaps get by with eight or nine. From the taxpayers' point of view we must get value for our money and national competition for tenders on a national basis is certainly desirable. However, I should like to think that during the transition period, the period of adjustment from government allocation of contracts to individual yards to a situation in which there is all-out competition, the phasing out would be conducted over a period of time as, for example, is the case in the automobile industry. I would hope that the five-year phase-out from 1965 to 1970 which I outlined earlier could be stretched out, either that or several substantial contracts could be included in the declining period so that the letdown would be more even and the phasing out would permit a greater opportunity for readjustment.

In addition, I should like to think that the Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production would take a very active part in helping the industry to adjust itself to these new and more competitive conditions. A task force, a sort of joint committee of government and industry, was set up about a year ago. I gather that its terms of reference, at least as I read them, were broad enough but I would plead with the minister that he make this task force more effective. In fact, it needs people in top positions from the government side, and they should take a real interest not only in the best practices and the most efficient processes and construction methods in this country but in other countries. This task force should communicate information to the management of the various yards across Canada and perhaps even publish a report at the end of its study or several interim reports.

Right after the war I was very much impressed with the teams of experts from the United Kingdom who went to the United States in particular and took back information which was published in respect of certain industries. This information helped those industries pull up their socks. We need a similar exercise in the shipbuilding industry in this country, which has had a limited market. I have no doubt a number of yards are inefficient by national standards, let alone international standards. We could certainly become more competitive in this way.

I should like to not only urge the minister to give a little more muscle to this working committee but also to let us know whether there is any possibility of us being able to sell ships on any scale to the United States. In other words, in the sum total of our defence production sharing arrangements with the United States is it possible that we, particularly in our lower wage rate areas, may eventually become more efficient and be able to sell ships to the government of the United States or, on a long-term competitive basis, to commercial interests in the United States as well? If this were the prospect, if we could at least hope to compete in the continental market as distinct from the limited Canadian market, I think our yards on the west coast would have a genuine opportunity of not only surviving but looking forward to a period of expansion.

Finally, I should like to point out that the harbour in Vancouver, if it is not already, will be the busiest harbour in Canada. A busy harbour requires a shipbuilding industry, at least a ship repairing industry. It needs modern drydock facilities that will handle some of the largest vessels afloat. It needs an active ship outfitting industry which can look after repair jobs as the occasion demands. I should like to ask the minister whether he has given any consideration to the viability of the port of Vancouver in terms of the allocation of government contracts as distinct from giving the taxpayer the best possible value for his dollar in respect of ship procurements for this country.

Mr. Lambert: In light of the hon. member's outright condemnation of the allocation program formerly carried out by the maritime commission, would the hon. member not agree that if it had not been for that allocation program there would be no shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast today able to compete with some of the other yards?

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Davis: I am not at all sure of that. During the war years, for example, the need for ships was so great that work had to be allocated to the facilities which existed at the time. Work had to be allocated to the facilities on the west coast almost regardless of cost in order to produce an adequate supply of naval and support vessels.

However, surely after all these years our industry has matured to the point where it can be reasonably competitive. I note, for instance, that the provincial government of British Columbia is now buying competitively. It has just bought a ferry built on the east coast as distinct from buying a new one built in the yards in British Columbia. Speaking personally—and I think I am reflecting the views of many people using the ferries in British Columbia—I would prefer them to be low in cost as well as efficient. I do not believe that the allocation principle, while it might be justified in an emergency, can be applied over the long run because it leads to all sorts of other abuses.

Mr. Lambert: But does the hon. member still not believe that the 17-year period between 1948 and 1965 is supposed to be the period of potential extinction of the shipbuilding industry?

Mr. Davis: We have built a great many vessels of different types on the west coast. The biggest boom at the moment, one which is causing the incorporation of a number of new, relatively small shipbuilding yards, has resulted from building of log barges and various other vessels, including tugboats, which cannot be sailed through the Panama canal or across the ocean, for example. The situation is governed by the requirements peculiar to the area, and these vessels can be supplied by local yeards and supplied quite efficiently relative to prices quoted in other areas. We will have an industry. But I would plead with the minister for a substantial industry, one capable not only of building small vessels but also of building and repairing large vessels as well.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few comments and perhaps I can put them in the form of two questions to the minister because I have no wish to prolong the debate.

My first question is: Is consideration being given to the cost involved in settling officers and men and their families when tenders for refits are drawn up? Let me put this in practical terms by giving an example. When an aircraft carrier is sent up river for a refit a large number of officers and men have to be settled for that particular period of time at a point not too far distant. I wonder whether consideration has been given to this factor in assessing the over-all cost of such an operation.

My second question is: Will it be government policy in building the four new warships for what was formerly the Royal Canadian Navy to choose one lead yard to build the first two vessels and to put out to tender to other yards the building of the other two vessels?

Mr. Drury: First of all, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the points made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano may I say I am glad to hear that he approves of the revision of our ship construction policy. I think it has been successful both in reducing costs to the federal government and also in infusing a measure of pretty critical self-analysis among shipbuilding firms as well, perhaps in the form of a rather more planned approach in the future than has been the case in the past.

The hon. member also suggested that the period of rundown now set at five years might be extended to ease the problem of adjustment. This, in principle, has much to commend it, but I have yet to receive any concrete evidence that programs of adjustment are under way which would require a longer period to complete. I have every hope that the successes of the west coast yards in bidding on commercial work for ships which normally sail the Atlantic and their near successes to being the lowest bidder on government work will continue, and that far from enjoying merely the assured volume of work they will in fact gain a larger percentage.

The hon. member suggested that the department might take steps to make the task force that is looking into the problem of the shipbuilding industry and trying to produce solutions more effective. I suppose that any operation, task force or group can be made more effective, and it should be our continuous duty to take what steps we can take to make this task force more effective. Any suggestions about incorporating in their spectrum of consideration some knowledge of practices outside of Canada, if this is not already in hand, I agree should be implemented.

The hon. member asked about the possibility of exports of ships built in Canada to the United States. In this respect we face two barriers. One is the relative cost of ship construction in Canada. The other problem is United States maritime law which has rather restrictive rules about the ownership and origin of vessels flying the United States flag or under United States registry. As has been said, I think this is a barrier beyond our control, one which is much more difficult to overcome than merely being able to build more cheaply and competitively than some of the yards in the United States. However, this is clearly a matter that we should look into in regard to small vessels, if we can achieve expertise in building such vessels, for the United States department of defence which does not impose the same restrictions as those to which commercial ship owners are subject in respect of the origin of construction of vessels.

The hon. gentleman also asked whether the department, in devising a shipbuilding policy, had taken into account the necessity for the port of Vancouver to have economic viability. He suggested that part of such economic viability of the port would be adequate repair and overhaul facilities. If I recollect correctly, there is now on the west coast a large government-owned drydock, though it is not in Vancouver itself but fairly close, in Victoria. I understand this drydock will continue in operation, though this is a responsibility of a department other than my own. There seems every likelihood on the basis of the current outlook of there being within Vancouver harbour itself a substantial and viable ship repairing and, indeed, shipbuilding industry. Perhaps it would help to qualify Vancouver as an attractive port if it had the capacity to build the largest and most sophisticated ships in the world, but at the present time and as far as one can see in the future Vancouver does and likely will continue to enjoy a healthy shipbuilding industry. The hon. member well knows that it is our intention to attempt to make this industry even more healthy.

The hon. member for Halifax asked two questions which I neglected to note. In relation to the new destroyer escorts, as the hon. gentleman perhaps knows, there has been a call for tenders for the new vessels in batches of two or for a total of four. This type of tender call was arrived at following a great deal of consideration by the government and after discussion with the industry. We were faced with the choice of awarding the contracts on the basis of one ship per shipyard, four ships to one shipyard, or perhaps a lead yard for one ship, and a batch of three ships.

Faced with this difficulty the department engaged one of the leading firms of marine architects in the world, namely, Gibbs and Cox, to look at our problem and the shipbuilding industry in Canada. Gibbs and Cox recommended the two and two system as being the most economical for the taxpayers and the most reasonable from the point of view of the builder. The recommendation was accordingly followed.

Obviously the task of building the first ship in the lead yard is a more complicated and sophisticated assignment than the task of building the follow-up ships. With the assistance of Gibbs and Cox an assessment or evaluation of the major Canadian shipyards was made. Some were classified as competent, having all the necessary facilities to perform the function of a lead yard, while others were classified as having the capacity, the ability and the equipment of a follow-up yard. There were a limited number of invitations sought from different tenderers. These tenders have been received and are in the process of being evaluated. This is done in conjunction with the Department of National Defence. It is difficult, lengthy and time-consuming process and it will not be until the fall, with the present schedule, that the results of this analysis and comparison will be known.

Mr. McCleave: That answers the second question. My first question was whether consideration was being given to the costs involved in settling officers, men and their families when refitting of the aircraft carrier takes place some distance from its home base, in this case Halifax. To a lesser extent the same question might be asked in relation to other vessels which are moved to river yards at other places remote from Halifax.

Mr. Drury: In assessing competitive tenders for this type of work account is not taken of the cost, whatever it may be, to the Department of National Defence of finding temporary accommodation for men and officers who have to be looked after at the location where the ship is being repaired, for certain periods of time. However, as the tenders are being considered by the Department of Defence Production with the Department of National Defence it is reasonable to assume that before a decision regarding an award is made the direct costs in relation to personnel are considered. These costs are carried by the Department of National Defence, not by this department. If they are very much higher in one case than in another, such as to upset the price advantage shown in shipyard proposals, we would hear about them.

As I pointed out, the Department of National Defence has to pay the whole bill for permanent or temporary accommodation as well as its cost in relation to the D.D.P. contract, and this can be expected to be taken into account. This cost is not examined as such by the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. McCleave: All I can ask at this stage is that when the final costs are arrived at in respect of the Bonaventure the two departments will get together to see whether this was the wisest policy to have followed in this case.

Mr. Drury: I shall be glad to see that a review is made to determine whether this was the wisest policy.

Mr. Harkness: At the outset I asked the minister what proportion of the resources, human or otherwise, of his department was now devoted to defence production functions and what proportion to the new function of general purchasing agent for other departments of government. I also asked to what extent this department provides administrative support for the Department of Industry.

Mr. Drury: I did not answer that question. The division of work of a purchasing agent who is buying for the Department of National Defence and for a civil department has not been worked out. We do not know what the division is in respect of the effort required to purchase the same article on that basis, but the classical role of the Department of Defence Production is to purchase for the Department of National Defence. What the proportion of time spent in this regard is I do not know. I could give the hon. gentleman some figures about the total purchases on civil account as against the total purchases on military account. One could assume that this might represent a proportion of effort, although this may tend to be misleading because it does not take a million times as much effort to buy an aircraft as it does to buy a pair of socks.

Perhaps it would be helpful to give the numbers in each of the branches. Last year the Department of Defence Production contracted on behalf of the Department of National Defence for goods and services to the value of some $710 million and, as I mentioned earlier, on behalf of civil departments in the amount of some $10 million. This gives the ratio of the work in connection with purchasing for civilian as opposed to military requirements. The warehousing and supply functions which we are in the process of establishing and taking over from other departments are being carried out for purposes unrelated to the requirements of the Department of National Defence. All this effort is entirely on the civilian side.

As to the numbers of people employed in connection with these various functions, in the finance branch there are 332 and in the purchasing service, including the purchase of transport, 1,185. The purchasing service includes both civilian and national defence functions. The operations branches include both project management for national defence and the international programs staff who are largely engaged in promoting the sales of the output of industry which the hon. member for Edmonton West mentioned. The number is up to 214. In the supply services branches, whose efforts are devoted to the civil side rather than to the military side, the number is 732. In the deputy minister's office, the office of the departmental secretary and the personnel branch, employees number 132. I am not sure whether this provides the hon. member with the information he is seeking.

I have to make a correction. When I said that in 1966-67 purchases on civil account amounted to $10 million I should have said $100 million.

Mr. Harkness: I do not think that reply is really related to the point I was trying to make. I was concerned about the extent to which this department has now become a civilian purchasing department rather than a defence production department with all that this involves. The minister indicated that the increase in the number of personnel employed by something like 12 per cent was made necessary by increased civilian purchasing functions. A comparison of the volume of contracts handled would indicate that there has not, in fact, been any saving made at all. The increase in staff would simply take care of the increase in the volume handled.

I am sure there are a large number of people now engaged in civil purchasing activities who were formerly engaged in similar work in the field of defence production. I was trying to determine the extent to which this department is becoming a general civil purchasing agency for all the other government departments rather than remaining primarily a defence purchasing and supply department. I understand the difficulty of trying to apportion these things. What I really wanted was a general answer along those lines, an indication of whether or not in the future this department will be primarily concerned with general purchasing on behalf of all government departments or whether it will be primarily concerned with defence purchases and so forth.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to raise one or two questions with the minister in respect of the awarding of small defence production contracts. I will say at once that my interest in this matter arises out of the discontent of some people in my constituency who operate under the name of Waikiki Holdings Limited. I have in my hand a telegram I received from this company under date of May 31 expressing dissatisfaction with the present situation. I may say that prior to that date they had been in touch with the minister and I had also made some inquiries of the department in an endeavour to straighten out this matter and obtain some information on it. However, from the tone of the telegram these efforts obviously did not work out. To illustrate my point I should probably put the text of the telegram before the committee. It reads as follows:

> As a local company contributing hundreds of thousands of dollars to the economy of the Comox Valley we strongly resent and protest the method of tendering, qualifying and awarding of the catering contract for H.M.C.S. Quadra 1967. We are in the food business and are absolutely capable of handling a catering contract such as H.M.C.S. Quadra. We requested the opportunity to bid on the contract. However, industrial sourcing section of D.D.P. did not have the courtesy to extend us an opportunity to even submit a tender and inferred we were not able to qualify. The contract was awarded to an outside catering company. We consider this attitude extremely biased as we have the financial resources and the manpower to handle much larger contracts than the one in question.

I am not asking the minister to go into details with regard to all the statements made in this telegram because I am sure he does not have all of them in front of him now. What does cause me concern, apart from the fact that naturally I would have liked this contract to go to a local firm, is the whole question of how smaller firms can go about getting into the picture as far as these smaller contracts are concerned.

If I understand the situation correctly, on the basis of information given to me by the minister's department a system of listing is in effect. I gather that once a firm qualifies and is listed it is then notified of all calls for tenders in the area of its interests. I believe the minister told us that there are area offices engaged in the work of the department, including one in Vancouver. I think he referred to this earlier in his remarks when he spoke about the purchasing activities of the department. As I understand it, all applications for listing have to be dealt with centrally by the head office of the department.

From the discussions I had with the people involved in this matter, obviously this long-distance dealing was not very satisfactory from their point of view. They implied at least that because of this system there was a built-in advantage for the larger, perhaps national firms in dealing with Ottawa under what I might describe as this Dun and Bradstreet process of selection. I realize that selection is related to other matters in addition to the financial position of a company, but essentially this is how I understand the situation.

One of the questions in my mind is why, in respect of this type of contract, this process cannot be handled entirely between the firm and the department's regional office, at least where direct dealings are concerned? I may have it all wrong but my understanding is that there is no relation between the regional office and a firm in regard to the calling for tenders until the firm qualifies. As the minister will see from the telegram, there is a fair amount of dissatisfaction with this situation. The firm obviously feel that they are qualified to handle a contract of this size. The department's judgment may or may not agree with that view, but my main point in raising this matter on the estimates is to ask the minister to give us the true picture in regard to the listing process and notification of calls for tenders with respect to smaller contracts. Am I correct if I assume that the listing process is handled at headquarters? If so, has consideration been given to making more easily available the advice and guidance of the officers of the department to firms in an area such as this?

I was told that these people did inquire of Ottawa and that they were mailed some completely incomprehensible forms that had little relation to the catering business. The forms seemed to cover the whole field. It was as though they were being asked if they were qualified to tender on the destroyer escorts which my hon. friend from Halifax was speaking about a while ago. That may be putting it in an extreme way, but for my information and satisfaction could the minister give a clear picture of the situation regarding opportunities to bid on these contracts?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think I can safely say that anyone who is interested in tendering on government contracts may do so if he demonstrates his interest and is qualified. The question the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has been raising is with respect to the technique, the procedure for qualifying. In some cases in respect of smaller contracts the total volume is such that an elaborate process of qualifying tenderers would not be worth the cost. The savings or losses that might arise out of failure to adequately qualify tenderers would not be worth the effort put into a thorough examination.

In larger contracts the process of qualifying does produce dividends in both tangible and intangible form. The case to which the hon. gentleman has been referring relates to catering in British Columbia. If a contract is in excess of $10,000 a group of individuals visits the firm which is seeking to qualify and they make not only a statistical but also a physical examination. We have found that this can be done more economically from Ottawa in respect of the limited number of catering operations we have rather than trying to organize to do it locally. This is the reason why a decision on qualification was reported to the hon. member as emanating from Ottawa. I hope this answers that question.

The problem in the case of the firm in Comox is one of dissatisfaction with the high standards of qualification which have been set. I think the hon. member will agree that the higher the standards can be set and still achieve efficient price competition, the more effective will be the service to the government department or agency seeking the service and the lower the net cost will be to the taxpayer. I would hope the hon. member would support our efforts not only to raise the standards but to keep them as high as possible. But obviously this is going to produce cases of dissatisfaction on the part of those applying to operate with lower than the best standards and who consequently are not qualified by the department.

Mr. Barnett: In this instance I do not know who was awarded the contract but I have been informed that in previous years the contract was awarded to a catering firm with headquarters in Toronto. The firm then sent one or two people to the area, recruited local help and carried on in that fashion.

I suppose one might argue that the people who came to the area might have managerial capacities that were not available locally, but I do not think it necessarily follows that it would be a more efficient and more economically run operation or that the standards would be higher than if the operation had been carried out by people with an interest in a local business who want to develop that business. I know that in part this is a question of how does one prove one can do a job until one has already done it. As I say, I do not ask the minister to make a decision as to the merits or demerits of this individual case. But I have had some opportunity of observing quite large corporate operations and I can say they are not always necessarily the most efficient. Anyone who has closely watched what goes on in a corporate operation where the ownership is divorced from the area of management is quite aware of the kind of waste and inefficiency that can often prevail.

The firm from whom I received the telegram is in the process of developing. It is argued that because of the existence of the nearby major armed forces base at Comox they are in a position to recruit very experienced ex-messing personnel who have worked at Comox and are available for this type of work. From what the minister tells me, I understand that the assessment of this situation would be difficult to make in Ottawa in the case of an operation of this size.

After all, the field of catering has many aspects which are outside the operations of the federal government or the Department of Defence Production. The department has considered, in order to achieve the necessary standards in relation to a contract such as the one for H.M.C.S. Quadra, that this kind of decision should not be made at the regional level. One hears many things which one can mentally compare without having a statistical basis for the comparison. I live in an area where much catering is done for logging camps. Generally they have a higher standard of catering than there is, reputedly, at any of the armed forces messes in Canada. From what I have heard over the years and from my experience in enjoying the bounty of the armed forces catering services I believe this is true. Is the minister really convinced that the present policy of having the making of these decisions centralized in Ottawa is beneficial and necessary?

Mr. Drury: In view of the remarks of the hon. gentleman I am not convinced and I shall be glad to have another look at the matter.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief questions which I should like to ask following the questions asked by the hon. member for Calgary North. As the minister is aware, of course, the department regularly issues a long list of contracts awarded for various purposes. It is very seldom that one sees the name of a Saskatchewan supplier on such lists. In the last list I received I believe there were contracts awarded to businesses in every province except the province of Saskatchewan. On many occasions I have been asked why the list does not include the names of Saskatchewan suppliers. Is there an established list of suppliers and how can a Saskatchewan firm get its name on that list? Further, are departmental contracts of any size publicized in all parts of Canada so that any supplier has an opportunity to make a bid?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, to answer the second question first I should like to say that an endeavour is made to publicize on a national scale all large prime contracts in an effort to attract the maximum amount of competitive tendering.

Mr. Pascoe: How are they publicized?

Mr. Drury: They are publicized in a variety of ways, the most effective of which probably is newspaper advertising. In respect of the list of suppliers, I might say that the hon. member will recognize that in terms of military equipment there certainly are relatively few suppliers in the province of Saskatchewan. One would not expect to find in the province of Saskatchewan very many suppliers of the type of equipment which would be included in the total of some $710 million worth of material and material ordered by the Department of National Defence. This has not been the form of economic development of the province of Saskatchewan to date. The province has prospered rather more through the production of cereals than it has either in manufacturing or in the production of other primary resources.

Within the past few years, however, there has been an increasing emphasis on the production of minerals, particularly potash and, as a consequence, fertilizer. As a result of these mining operations there is a growth in ancillary manufacturing industries. Consequently one might expect more and more, as manufacturing industries grow in Saskatchewan, to see the quantum of successful bids for the kind of things which the Department of Defence Production acquires for the Department of National Defence increase in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I see it is one minute before six o'clock and my remarks may take two minutes. I am interested in the way in which the government's policy of nation-wide competitive bidding with regard to ship-building contracts is actually working out in practice. It was my understanding that for the first time all government shipbuilding requirements would be ascertained for a considerable period of time in advance and that this information would be released to the industry so that for the first time they would be in a position to see ahead and bid closely on contracts when their yards need the work. Such a policy would result in an even flow of work for the yards. This would be good for the industry and would also bring about price savings for the country.

However, to give the west coast shipbuilding industry time to adjust it was decided that certain vessels would be allocated for competitive bidding among the west coast yards alone. In addition, all west coast yards were to be allowed to bid competitively on all government shipbuilding requirements. I would be interested in knowing how this is actually working out in practice. I should like to know whether the west coast yards are submitting bids on the majority of calls for nation-wide tendering and how close they are coming to winning these contracts. Are they winning any at all? Generally speaking, how is the program working out?

My concern in respect of the shipbuilding industry is that the west coast yards should not find themselves, as a result of the government's program, limited to simple types of shipbuilding such as barges, tugs and similar vessels. I am particularly concerned that on the west coast there should be the ability to build highly technical ships as exemplified by modern naval vessels such as destroyer escorts. I would not wish the west coast to lose out completely on the destroyer escort contracts which will be coming forward shortly.

The labour force required takes a long time to put together. We have the force there now and I would not like to see it dissipated if perchance we were to lose out on all four contracts which will shortly be open to competitive tender. Would the minister not agree it is desirable that on the west coast there should be such a capability and, if so, will he not look into the possibility of including in the group of ships that will be allocated for competitive bidding among the west coast yards one of the four projected destroyer escorts?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Honey): Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman. It is six o'clock and I think we should go into private members' hour.

HOUSING, URBAN DEVELOPMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

First report of the standing committee on housing, urban development and public works—Mr. Gendron.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

COMMERCIAL SOLIDS PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 1 consideration of the motion of Mr. Deachman (for Mr. Basford) for the second reading of Bill No. C-113, to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last under consideration I had just begun my comments when the hour for private members' business expired. As the house will recall, the bill was introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), who was absent from the house for good and sufficient reasons and I gather has not yet returned to the house.

The house will also recall that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had commented on the bill just before I was given the floor. I had referred to the fact that one of the considerations involved in the introduction of such a bill is the experience we have had in this country in previous decades with the provision of transportation facilities by rail. I said that from the experience we have gained over the years it is clear that the financial difficulties and otherwise still remaining in the field of transportation were caused by the mistakes of the past.

We all agree that hindsight is easier than foresight, but when we consider a development such as that proposed in the bill we should keep in mind that background of experience and endeavour to approach these matters in that light. If possible, we should take action to ensure that we do not repeat the mistakes of the past. I believe this is particularly pertinent to the bill before us, which seeks to incorporate a company for the transmission by pipe line of goods in solid form.

This is a field which I think all hon. members recognize is rather closely related in its function to that which has heretofore been performed by the railways. It is therefore a field of operation which will come rather directly into competition with the railways. For this reason it enters very directly into the whole question of transportation economics in Canada which I submit is one of the most important considerations in our whole internal policy because of the vast distances so often referred to in the house as being one of the principal features of our country, and our relatively small population. Also often referred to is the fact that so much of our economic life and activity and our prosperity or otherwise is based upon our ability to put into international markets many of the commodities we are able to produce in large quantities.

With that sort of background in mind we have to consider this bill and what is implied by its terms as they have been put before us by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. No one can deny that the proposed powers of operation to be given to this company, if it is incorporated, are broad indeed. The company is seeking the right to build pipe lines inside or without the borders of the country and to operate a broad range of other works or undertakings, some of which are related only rather indirectly to what is stated as being the desire in incorporating a pipe line company. It is also proposed that the company be empowered to acquire processing facilities and to engage in teletype, telegraph and microwave or television communication systems, subject to the Radio Act, and so on.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, however, when addressing the house outlined a proposal for the construction of a pipe line for a particular purpose which he said the sponsors of this company have in mind. In this connection he referred to a sulphur carrying pipe line with a 12-inch main line and feeder lines of smaller diameter which are to originate in the city of Calgary. After reaching the Shell plant at Waterton the line would enter the mountains—here I am making direct reference to the hon. member's statement—and proceed through the Crowsnest pass to the coast in the Vancouver area. He goes on to say that a preliminary survey has already been made and that one can assume the feasibility of transporting sulphur in the slurry form to which he referred has been investigated in some detail.

The question which immediately comes to my mind is that if this company had a specific plan to construct a 12-inch main line from a point near Calgary in the province of Alberta through various mountain ranges to the coast at or near the port of Vancouver, this would be a major project and our approach to it would be quite different. If the bill then received second reading in the house and went before a committee for study, the committee would have something into which it could put its teeth. In such a case the committee could endeavour to make a rational examination of the project on the basis of its feasibility, the existing state of technical knowledge of the best method of transferring sulphur in this form, and the impact which the proposed pipe line system, whereby sulphur would be transferred from the gas fields of Alberta to a seaport outlet, would have on the existing railway lines and their potential capacity to transport the product in modern bunker cars.

I think all of us recognize the massive capital investment which has been made in our existing railway system. Certainly those of us from British Columbia are well aware of the high cost of engineering and construction of railway lines through that part of Canada, and all of us recognize it is quite an important consideration to the economic health of this country that the railways operate in a manner that is economically healthy. These are some of the factors which I think a committee of the house could intelligently weigh if the company had come before us with a definite proposal to construct a specific line.

However, this is not what we have in the bill. Although we can certainly accept without question the statement made by the sponsor of the bill that the company intends to undertake the project which he outlined in some detail, there is no such assurance contained in the bill. All we have here are broad, general provisions which will give this company the right to discard the proposal completely and to decide, for instance, that it will build a pipe line from Calgary to Hudson Bay and ship the sulphur to Hudson Bay for transmission through the port of Churchill.

We have listened to many discussions in the house concerning the virtue of building up the volume of shipping through the port of Churchill and the Hudson Bay route. Many of us, even though we may not come from that part of the country, recognize that this would be a very desirable development. But I submit it is not desirable for parliament to give a blank cheque to a company such as this one.

Members such as the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who represent the main coastal seaport of Vancouver, should perhaps demonstrate a more direct concern by investigating whether or not the company's proposal will benefit the development of the port of Vancouver. What is proposed in this bill will certainly not achieve this. I have been present at committee meetings when the publicly owned railway company has had to come before parliament with a specific project before being allowed to extend their railway lines to any extent. The vice president of Canadian National Railways in charge of engineering and development has had to place before the committee full details concerning the economics of the specific section of railway line to be built. This is not the approach of this company. We are presented with vague, all-embracing clauses in the bill on the basis of which we have to make a decision. We can set up these companies by the dozen if we choose. Indeed, parliament has done so over a period of years. Then, as was said the other day in connection with another bill, we rely upon the National Energy Board, with its rather vague terms of reference, to make other necessary decisions.

I am not certain whether the pipe line proposed under the bill would be under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board or of the new Canadian Transportation Commission. However, I feel that transportation facilities should be regarded as a public utility and that a much more desirable approach would be to develop at least the main arteries of our national transportation system as a public utility under public ownership and control. But even apart from that consideration I feel it is not a good policy, from any point of view that may be held in this parliament, to give blanket approval to the incorporation of companies which would empower them to do what is sought under the bill now before us. I think we should say to the sponsors of this bill: If the Shell Oil Company and the related interests associated with this bill have a specific need to move sulphur from point A to point B, and if you can demonstrate to parliament that this can be an efficient and economic operation, one that will not operate to the detriment of existing transportation facilities, then parliament might be prepared to consider your proposal on its merits.

I must say it is a bit surprising to me that so many members have been prepared for so many years to go along with this haphazard approach to the development of transmission of gas and oil by pipe line in this country. Now, when we are considering a new and revolutionary form of transportation, one which in some ways has more far reaching implications in the general field of transportation than did the construction of gas and oil pipe lines, we should take a good, hard look at the proposal. I submit that before we are prepared to entertain a specific proposal for the incorporation of a company to construct a pipe line for the transmission of solids we should have before us the results of a much broader study of this whole field than has heretofore been undertaken by parliament or the government of Canada.

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to the fact that some research is being done in this field in Alberta under the auspices of the Alberta Research Council. As I recall, he stated that the research is related to the proposal placed before us. The hon. member may know more about the operations of the Alberta Research Council than I do but from the little bit of reading I have done about its work and from discussions I have had on one or two occasions with people in Alberta, the research undertaken by this council has been confined almost entirely to the possibility of transporting goods by pipe line in what is referred to as capsule form. However, the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I have to advise him his time has expired.

Mr. Barnett: If I may finish my sentence, I simply say that the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra is related to another form of transmission of solids, namely, in the form of slurry.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): The bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is something in the nature of an iceberg in that one-tenth of it is on the surface and is obvious and nine tenths is unknown or is the subject of speculation. There are two aspects of the bill with which I should like to deal. The first concerns the venture into the bill of transportation by Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company and the change that this may bring about in the transportation industry as well as the economic effects that may flow therefrom. Then there is the matter of the ownership of the company itself. As we all know, the Pearson-Gordon duet on foreign ownership has been mentioned far and wide across the country. Reference has been made to foreign ownership on television by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) in his capacity as an author, a royal commissioner and a cabinet minister. We have dealt with this aspect in the house on previous bills. It may sound a bit like repetition but I think it is such an important aspect in our consideration of this company and its ownership that it bears repetition.

The philosophy enunciated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to a nation-wide television audience supported entirely the position taken by the President of the Privy Council over the years, and it applies directly to the bill before us. This philosophy, I understand, advocates the repatriation of the ownership of our industry. It may be it is not possible to bring about repatriation overnight because the consequences which might flow from such action could be rather terrible if we ran into the threatened retaliation which our so-called friends to the south are not adverse to using whenever it suits their purpose. I believe the government has recognized the necessity of phasing the return of ownership of Canadian industry to Canadian hands. I believe an indication of that recognition can be seen in the Mercantile Bank situation in that Mercantile was given a period of time to comply with the law. Just a few days ago the United Investment Life Insurance Company had read into Hansard by the sponsor of its bill a commitment that it would phase out foreign ownership of the company it was seeking to have incorporated within a period of ten years. Perhaps the thought that should be uppermost in our minds at the moment is how we can get Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company into the hands of Canadians.

It seems much more difficult to do here than it has been in the case of companies which are controlled in the United States. Whether or not our difficulties are greater or less when companies are owned in other countries is more than I can say at the moment. As a preface to my remarks I should like to read from Hansard for June 1, page 852, where the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) was dealing with the ownership of this company. He is reported as having said:

> With regard to Shell Canada Limited, which will be the principal shareholder of the new company, 17.5 per cent of the voting power is in the hands of the public, and these shares are traded on the stock exchanges in Canada. The remaining 82.5 per cent is held by another Canadian company called Shell Investments Limited, the head office of which is also in Toronto.

Looking at the matter from that point, it appears as if Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company is going to be a Canadian owned company because 82.5 per cent of the shares are owned by a Canadian company and 17.5 per cent of the shares are in the hands of the general public. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra went on to say:

Shell Investments is in turn wholly owned by a Netherlands company situated at the Hague and, finally, the ownership of the company is divided as to 60 per cent in the hands of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Company at the Hague, and as to 40 per cent in the hands of the Shell Transport and Trading Company in London, England.

I have not worked out the intricacies of this to see who owns what, but I think it is fairly clear that Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company is owned or will be owned by the Royal Dutch Petroleum Company and Shell Transport and Trading Company, one company at The Hague in the Netherlands and the other in London, England. Therefore I think this is a situation we should seek to alter.

If I recall correctly, Mr. Speaker, the oil industry in Canada in one form or another is owned 100 per cent by foreign companies. There was one Canadian company, called if I am not mistaken Canadian Oils, which held out but finally went under a few years ago, giving over our entire oil industry in Canada to the hands of foreign companies controlled by people who are not Canadian citizens, who do not even live in this country and who give political allegiances, if these transcend profit ones, to other nations. There are in any event companies who look at their Canadian interests after they have concerned themselves with their major investments in other parts of the world.

I should like to see a declaration made by someone within this lineage of corporate ownership related by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, and made before the standing committee, that it is the intention of the company to divest itself over a reasonable period of time of its foreign ownership aspects, so that this company would become in fact a Canadian owned company, and thus at least emotionally identified with Canadian interests in the first instance.

Presumably the whole objective of the company, at least as I read the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, is to operate at some time in the future a solids pipe line within Canada. This does not exempt them from the prospect of exporting by solids pipe line, because other commodities are exported by pipe line; but I think it would be far better if this company were a Canadian company and recognized that the declaration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) carries some weight. I also think this parliament gave some expression to that declaration.

Perhaps this is a matter that could be dealt with in greater detail at the committee stage. I simply put the suggestion on the record now. At the appropriate time—perhaps at the committee stage so as to give the company fair warning in advance—I for one, and I know there are other members of the house of this view, should like to see the company come forward and declare that within a certain period of time, which I submit should not be an unreasonable one such as 50 years—ten years seems to be the period that has arbitrarily been decided on—the company will divest itself of its foreign ownership aspect and thus permit it truly to become a Canadian-owned company.

During the course of the last session, though it may have been during a private discussion on this bill, I gained the impression that the bill was introduced with the object of enabling the company to conduct research into the transmission of solids by pipe line. The sponsor of the bill relied on the fact that research is one of the activities of the company because he talked of the prospect of transmitting sulphur. As reported at page 852 of Hansard he said:

As sulphur has not so far been transported in solid form by pipe line on a commercial scale, research still has to be done before the company can be certain that this 750 mile pipe line from Alberta to the west coast is feasible. Since to a large extent the exact location of the route will be dependant on the outcome of the research and development program which is presently taking place and which will continue after incorporation of this company, no specific route can be designated, at this time. The company's confidence, however, can be measured by the large sums of money it has already spent and will spend in the next two years, if this bill is passed, in developing this research to maturity.

At the commencement of the remarks of the sponsor of the bill, after he had got through marrying the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), in his first sentence related to the bill he said:

This bill deals with a company that wishes to operate a commercial solids pipe line.

Then as reported at page 852 he went on to deal with the cost aspect and the $50 million that it is estimated sulphur transmission alone will cost, the manner in which this would be financed, and so on.

If this is to be a research venture, Mr. Speaker, then I do not see the necessity for incorporating the company. As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out in some detail, there are already a couple of solids pipe line research groups in existence, groups which have received public aid and in which there is a great deal of interest by Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and certain oil companies.

And well there might be interest by the Canadian National Railways in this aspect, Mr. Speaker, which gives me more concern than this particular company becoming a research operation. Because if we are now to embark, as I think we are, upon a project to replace the current transportation system with something of this kind, then we are likely to throw completely out of kilter the economy of a large part of this nation. For instance, the building of a line in my own constituency for the transmission of solids involving, for argument's sake, wood chips for a pulp mill may in itself be an economic move, but would cut into the financial and economic position of the Canadian National Railways Company and would undoubtedly injure and curtail its activities.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, we are moving a tremendous amount of grain by railway. If research proves that it is feasible to move grain by pipe line, then this could practically destroy the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as freight carriage of that commodity is concerned. Once we do this and impinge upon their income prospects by removing from them some of the products they now carry, we cut into the prospects of either one of these companies operating on any sort of economic basis.

I could mention other commodities. For example the sponsor of the bill mentioned coal having been moved in slurry form. Potash comes to mind as a commodity for potential movement by pipe line. Many more commodities and materials might be added to this list of potential materials for movement by pipe lines, and I would not like to see us embark upon a program of giving a carte blanche right to a foreign company to build and operate a solids pipe line anywhere in Canada for the movement of materials in Canada or for export. This would cause a great deal of disruption to our public transportation systems and to our economy.

I am not opposed to change. In fact, I welcome change as well as anybody, but I like to see that change or alteration in our economic structure come about in such a way that dislocation is orderly, so that the working force which depends to such a great extent upon our current transportation method is not found out of existence and in the unemployment lines, simply to meet the convenience of Royal Dutch Petroleum or the Shell Investment Company, or for that matter whoever is behind this company. I do not want to see change or alteration come about in such a way as to pull the economic rug out from under any other communities in this country which depend to a great extent on our current transportation systems for their livelihood.

The research aspect of this whole proposal should be of concern to the public of Canada and this parliament. After all, this is the public's business with which we are dealing, rather than the affair of a few people named in clause 1 of the bill, or those who may become the shareholders or directors in the future. We have gone far beyond the stage when we could consider a bill such as this and its impact on our economy as a private matter to be dealt with only to meet the convenience of its promoters. This bill, perhaps more so than any other legislation placed before this parliament in some time, has an aura of public importance about it. It should perhaps be treated by parliament as a public bill, because its importance demands that parliament consider not only the foreign aspect of it but the public welfare, in light of the complete disruption that may result to many communities, workers and areas of our economy. If this is a gamble, and I am not so sure that it is, it should be considered seriously in that light. I suggest it is not as much of a gamble as one might think. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) in his opening remarks pointed out that the confidence of this company could be measured by the amount it has spent and will spend in the next few years. I see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker, and I assume that my time has expired.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when this bill came before us on the last occasion we had an opportunity of discussing some of our objections with officials of the company. It was interesting to note that they were in agreement in respect of one contention I had, namely that this was an exceptionally important bill which would have as great an effect on the transportation facilities in our country as a third transcontinental railroad. Anyone who considers the prospect of a third railroad across Canada must realize immediately how the construction of this line would affect the transportation facilities existing in this nation.

It has been agreed by a great many individuals with knowledge in this field that this should not only be of interest to members of the opposition but also to members of the government. When this bill goes to the committee there should be some indication on the part of government members and other opposition members that they realize the implications involved in the creation of a totally new company to move solids by pipe line. The other day when we were talking about rainmaking equipment, considerable interest was expressed about the technical feasibility. I am sure there are many members who have not really thought about this particular bill and are not aware of the fact that it is within the technical knowledge of many companies to move many types of commodities by pipe line. Many basic commodities in capsule forms can be moved through pipe lines. This would eliminate the need for large commodity handling facilities.

When discussing this proposal with officials of the company, it was pointed out that they were well aware that the sulphur they intended to move would have to be put into slurry form, and that after it was transported to its destination the sulphur would have to be taken out of the slurry vehicle. It was not known whether the same quantity of sulphur put in could be taken out at the destination point. The suggestion was made that certain types of oil could be used as the vehicle, because sulphur is found originally in that oil. They felt that perhaps the proportion of the sulphur in the slurry could be increased to 90 per cent, but there still would be some difficulty in removing that sulphur from the slurry and some uncertainty as to the type of facility required.

If I lived in the area of the transmission destination, for example in the Richmond area of Vancouver, I would be very skeptical about having that type of facility located there in order to take this sulphur from the slurry, particularly if it involved a method similar to that used for removing the sulphur from the oil in the refinery. The disagreeable smell which often exists in Ottawa, when the wind is blowing from Gatineau Pointe, I suggest is mild to what might be the smell at the terminal point of one of these solids pipe line. However, I suppose it is up to members who live in such an area to decide whether the location of the terminal there would be advantageous. Perhaps they are not interested in that aspect.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it is technically easy to move these commodities by pipe line. I am sure that not only sulphur could be moved from sources in Saskatchewan, but also the potash that is produced there. This potash could be moved to markets on the west coast by putting it into slurry form, through the use of water or some other vehicle. In this manner it could be moved over the mountains to Vancouver at a rate cheaper than the railway companies are able to offer.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Every time I ride on the railway I am reminded of the lack of interest the railway companies show in my comfort and in the comfort of others travelling on the trains. I might therefore be expected to say that I have not much interest in railway affairs. However, if we look at the role the railways play in the movement of commodities we are bound to realize it is an important one and that there will probably always be commodities more suited to travel by rail than by pipe line.

An hon. Member: Including human beings.

Mr. Peters: Yes. I am not sure I am prepared to travel through the mountains in a capsule propelled through a pipe line. It might come to that in the future but I am not sure I am prepared for it. Bad as they may be, trains are preferable to capsule travel.

The problem facing the government is not a technical one. In Britain the movement of coal by pipe line has proved feasible, and technical difficulties in the way of the movement of sulphur and oil are in sight of solutions. As the use of these methods develops however it is likely that many basic commodities in this country could be moved quickly and economically by pipe line.

This competition would obviously have an adverse effect upon the position of the railroads; they might even be threatened with extinction. But if there were no railroads, what would happen in the case of those many commodities which it would still be necessary to move by rail? Suppose a decision was made to keep the railways going, in any case.

Would not the cost to the shipper and to the public be extremely high? With these things in mind, I believe the government must show some interest in pipe lines as a form of transportation. If the government would assure us that it was willing to carry out research to determine the end result of successful pipe line operations of the kind which are contemplated in the bill before us, then I think we would be prepared to send this measure to a committee where further discussion could take place.

The committee to which this bill would normally be sent is, in my submission, not competent to make a decision on the questions of principle I have raised. This is because it lacks the necessary information, the necessary research data. Then again, I believe many of its members would not be interested in reaching a decision in connection with the broader policy matters I have outlined.

I am aware that the transportation commissioners will have some control over this situation as a result of a section in the new act which brings solids pipe lines within their jurisdiction. But the examination of the relationship between pipe lines and the transportation system and other types of transportation in Canada cannot be undertaken by the committee, and will have to be undertaken by the government itself outside the committee. I am of the opinion that the government will have to reach a policy decision about the development of solids pipe lines. If the company wishes to do the necessary research into the feasibility of carrying certain commodities between specific points, this could be considered by the committee. But it seems to me that when we are confronted by an entirely new form of transportation the government itself should be interested in ascertaining what the end result will be before allowing a company to establish a monopoly in handling a particular commodity.

I do not think it would be difficult for the transport commissioners to arrive at equitable rates as between this form of transport and others under their jurisdiction. But this would not solve the broader problem to which I have referred. Many of the major products of the prairie provinces can now be moved by pipe line. Before too long it will probably be possible to move wheat by this method.

What would be the result? It might well be possible to transport grain more economically and at the same time to remove much of the dissatisfaction which has existed over the years in connection with the handling of this commodity at port terminals. Many of the bottlenecks which now occur in the railway yards of Vancouver could be removed. As I say, our main consideration should be the effect this would have on the operation of the railways. I agree with previous speakers that it is important there should be as much Canadian control over pipe line transportation as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dubé in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Dubé): Order. The house again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of Defence Production, vote No. 1. It being seven o'clock, the committee stands suspended until 8 p.m. pursuant to standing order.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Legault): House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Defence Production, vote No. 1.

[English]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, before the committee recessed I had asked the minister several questions which I thought he was about to answer, but he has not done so yet. The first was with regard to the extent which this department is providing support for the Department of Industry. What prompted me to inquire about this is an item on page 239 of the blue book in the estimates of the Department of Industry under the heading "Approximate value of major services not included in these estimates." The specific item is "Advisory and administrative services (Department of Defence Production), $1,150,000." Is this an accurate account of the amount of support, both administrative and otherwise, that this department provides for the Department of Industry?

Again this comes back to the point I made earlier. There is considerable doubt on the part of most of us as to just what this department is doing and how it ties in with the Department of Industry; and when we look at the estimates of the two departments we wonder if we are getting a true picture of the amount of money going into each one. It is quite understandable that with the two departments being under the same minister and in certain fields pursuing to some extent somewhat similar functions, there should be a considerable amount of tie-in and overlapping. What has the minister to say in this regard?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the division of support effort as between the Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production, when to a large extent these two departments have common support staffs, is of necessity rather arbitrary. Whether the figure is precise or not, whether it is fair or not, is difficult to prove absolutely, one way or another. It is an estimate made by the two departments concerned and concurred in by the Treasury Board.

Perhaps some of this difficulty will be resolved in the not too distant future when, as a consequence of rearrangement of office accommodation in Ottawa, the two departments will become separate, each having its own administrative support services. It will then be quite clear what is the actual cost to each in respect of each. But for this year the services are common, the quarters are common, and I think the hon. gentleman would agree that any figure set down here, provided it reflects the total costs of the two departments, is necessarily a somewhat arbitrary division between the two departments.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member for Calgary North rose I thought the minister was about to answer the questions I asked him just before six o'clock.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just spoken asked me what general progress there had been in the matter of increasing the economic usefulness of the shipyards on the west coast as a consequence of the new program in respect of government shipbuilding activities which was initiated about two years ago. The answer in general terms is that I think this is proving reasonably successful.

It will be remembered that representations were made at that time that, because the then current costs of shipbuilding on the west coast were higher than elsewhere in Canada, the translation of government procurement from a system of allocation by a government commission to one of full and free national price competition would not allow an appropriate or reasonable period for the west coast shipyards to rearrange themselves on a rather more competitive basis with what were reported to be lower costs in east coast and St. Lawrence river shipyards.

[Mr. Harkness.]

• (8:10 p.m.)

As a consequence, it was agreed that in respect of national competitive contracts there would be an allocation of a specific total tonnage year by year over a five year period as a minimum assured volume of business for the west coast yards regardless of national price competition. Because of the assured business, it was hoped that it would be easier for the west coast shipyards to adjust to a policy of full national competition. Over the course of the past two years we have observed, in respect of government shipbuilding contracts on the west coast as well as on the east coast and the St. Lawrence yards, that the west coast yards, although they have not been the lowest bidders, on occasion have been the second or third lowest bidder. This indicates an ability at least to operate in the same ball park.

In so far as non-government work is concerned, in respect of a national competition for fishing trawlers for a firm based in Halifax and in respect of ships to be used in the east coast fishing trade, a shipyard on the west coast turned out to be the lowest bidder. I hope therefore that west coast shipyards will become as effectively competitive as east coast shipyards.

The hon. member also asked me about the possibility of one of the new destroyer escorts being allocated to the west coast, regardless of price competition. He probably is not aware that we retained the services of one of the leading firms of naval architects to look at the ship construction industry in Canada. Our particular problem was to produce at the most reasonable cost to the taxpayer four new destroyer escorts. We asked them for their advice with regard to what would be the most satisfactory and advantageous way to put these out to price competition. Their recommendation, in the interest of the shipyards, of the user department and of the taxpayer, was that two ships should go to a yard qualified to do the work of lead yard operations, and that two ships should go to a yard qualified to do the follow-up work for the remaining two ships.

As a consequence, this spring invitations to tender were given to the yards judged to be qualified to do lead yard work. They were invited to tender on two ships, including the requirement for the first ship. The remaining yards were invited to tender on the two follow-up ships. It was the view of the consultants, a view which I must say my department shares, that any attempt to have a scheme whereby one lead ship was followed by three others in a package, or one ship each for four yards would result in a very considerable increase in total cost to the buyer of the four ships.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's remarks and I thank him for his explanation. I was not aware of the division which had taken place to the effect that two ships were to be given to a lead yard which qualified, and that two others were to be given to a yard in a follow-up program. I should like to ask him whether any of the three west coast yards were considered to be among those which qualified for initial lead work or follow-up work. I ask the following question, because I have never heard this suggested before. I do not suppose he intends to suggest now that so far as qualifications are concerned the west coast yards are any worse off than any yards anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am guided largely by the advice of the consultants. One yard on the west coast is qualified as having the capability to do the lead yard work. The three major yards on the west coast have qualified for follow-up work.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one more question. Can he tell me whether, in accordance with the government's program, the work for the Department of Transport passes through his department and then goes to nation-wide competitive tender

Mr. Drury: Not yet, Mr. Chairman. It is my hope, when we are better organized to handle the volume of ship construction work in which the department is currently engaged, that the Department of Transport which now is doing its own ship procurement would transfer these activities to the Department of Defence Production.

Item agreed to.

5. Payments, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for capital assistance for the construction, acquisition, extension or improvement of capital equipment or works by private contractors engaged in defence contracts, by crown plants operated under lease or other management arrangement or by crown companies under the direction of the Minister of Defence Production, $200,000.

Mr. Harkness: I have one question, Mr. Chairman. I note that previously this vote provided for the following:

—plant modernization, and in connection with the establishment of production capacity and qualified sources—

I do not know what that means, but it has disappeared. Last year the amount in this vote was $8 million. Does this mean that the department has ceased to provide the funds to industry for these purposes, or is this just a temporary thing for which we might find something in the estimates for next year?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Chairman. This particular item now is carried by the Department of Industry. The item now appears at page 241 in the estimates of the Department of Industry. Vote 20 of the Department of Industry is the equivalent of vote 5 here. In fact vote 20 is limited to defence manufacturers. I was thinking of vote 5, at the top of the page, which is not limited to capital payments.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, will this also apply to equipment? I notice that under vote 5 there is an item for equipment, whereas the vote in respect of capital assistance—that is, for modernization—to prospective manufacturers has been transferred to vote No. 20 of the Department of Industry. The equipment apparently still remains in the Department of Defence Production. Is it intended that this will also be transferred?

Mr. Drury: The item for the modernization of equipment in defence plants is continued under this vote and in a slightly higher amount than last year.

Item agreed to.

Emergency measures organization—

20. Administration and operation, $3,229,300.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether the minister would say something about the Emergency Measures Organization which is covered by this vote. There are a few remarks I should like to make on it. It seems to me that the Emergency Measures Organization is languishing; at least, I have seen and heard very little about it during the last year or two. It would appear that there is not very much energy or drive being put into the Emergency Measures Organization program. We used to have an annual meeting of dominion and provincial representatives with regard to emergency measures matters. I have not heard of any of these meetings being held for some time. In fact, if my memory is correct, only one has been held in the last four years.

I found these extremely useful meetings. They did a great deal to maintain interest and to ensure that the same sort of measures and programs were being put into effect throughout Canada. I do not know whether this part of the program has been terminated. I do not know when the last of these meetings was held and when the next one is to be held. In the circumstances we would like these questions answered.

Also, Mr. Chairman, there used to be at least one annual exercise a year more or less on a national basis, as well as a number on a regional basis. I have heard of no exercises along these lines having taken place. There may have been some regional exercises carried out, and I hope this has been the case. I know there have been some in Alberta, at least on a regional basis if not on a provincial basis. I do not know whether there have been any others. It so happens that Alberta, which is the province I come from, has been more active and energetic than any other province in regard to the activities of the Emergency Measures Organization. I do not think there have been any national exercises carried out.

It seems to me that if the Emergency Measures Organization is to be kept in a reasonable degree of efficiency, exercises are essential in order to maintain their expertise in these various matters and to test their operational efficiency. Thus they would be in a position to make improvements in the whole Emergency Measures Organization set-up.

I also ask, what has happened as far as the warning system is concerned? This used to be carried on to a great extent by the army; nuclear detonation reporting centres were maintained by the army outside all the larger cities and other stations were maintained by provincial officials, and so forth. The army having withdrawn from this activity, I wonder what the state of efficiency is, as far as the warning system is concerned.

Equally important in this regard is the state of the communications set-up, which was also operated to a large extent by the army. Who is now operating the Emergency Measures Organization communications set-up, and is it geared to meet an emergency if one should occur? I know that in the last three or four years there has been a general feeling, not only in Canada but in other parts of the world, that there has been an easing of tensions between eastern and western blocs of nations, and perhaps, naturally, there was less interest in the Emergency Measures Organization and its functions generally than was the case a few years ago. However, Mr. Chairman, as long as the threat of nuclear attack exists—and I think everyone will admit that threat does still exist—I think it is essential for the protection of the population of Canada that an efficient Emergency Measures Organization be kept in operation. I have been more and more concerned that this is not being done and that this organization generally has been allowed to die, or at least languish. The various programs that were being actively carried on seem to be no longer in operation at all, or they are not being pursued very actively.

Another program about which to my knowledge we have heard absolutely nothing, in the last two or three years is the shelter program. The last time I heard about this program was when I asked the minister a question about it in the house two or three years ago. At that time, as I recall, he said that a survey of all public buildings, federal and provincial, which had previously been initiated was still being maintained and he expected it to be completed fairly soon. The minister said this survey would give us information with regard to what types of shelter and what degree of shelter existed. I have heard nothing of this program for some considerable time. I wonder what the situation is in this regard. I ask the minister whether the survey has been completed; and if it has been completed, what use is being made of the information being collected? This program was quite extensive and cost the Canadian taxpayer a considerable amount of money. I hope that some use is being made of the information secured by the survey.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I intended to make only a few brief remarks. I hope the minister will be able to tell us what the situation is and what it has been during the last two or three years with regard to the Emergency Measures Organization.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in the interests of trying to get this item through tonight, and the estimates of the National Research Council, I did not volunteer a statement on this subject. But if the committee is interested, and the hon. member for Calgary North has indicated such an interest, I will make a short statement on the Emergency Measures Organization. I hasten to say that I welcome the opportunity to provide information on the activities of this very useful organization and I am glad the committee is desirous of hearing about it.

Civil emergency planning has been a program of the government of Canada since 1948. Under the authority of privy council order 1041-1965, emergency planning responsibilities have been assigned to various ministers of the crown. The Minister of Industry, through the Canada Emergency Measures Organization, is responsible for co-ordinating the national program.

Although the probability of nuclear war is remote, the government feels that one cannot simply dismiss its possibility. Consequently, in our view it is only prudent that we devote some attention to that unlikely possibility. It is also our view that the nature of such a war would be such that to make reasonable preparations requires the co-ordinated and co-operative efforts of all levels of government. As a result of the good relationships which exist between the federal and provincial governments in the general field of civil emergency planning, I feel that the capacity of the country to survive nuclear attack is increasing. This is an area of government in which substantial sums could be expended, but it is my belief that in the long run relatively modest appropriations on a continuing basis will achieve the desired level of preparedness.

Although the substantial part of the work of the Emergency Measures Organization is related directly to nuclear war conditions, greater attention is now being given to increasing the capacity of governments to deal with peacetime disasters. Mr. Chairman, hon. members will recall the co-operative work which was carried out last year by the federal and Manitoba emergency measures organizations at the time of floods in the Red river valley. In late April of this year, in British Columbia, the respective organizations commenced preparatory work to meet the potential flood situation in that province. Fortunately, serious flooding has not yet taken place and, with a proper assist from the weather, may not occur. Nevertheless the state of preparedness as developed by the co-ordinated efforts of municipal, provincial and federal agencies, is of a high order.

The three national objectives of civil emergency planning can be stated as follows: first, to protect and preserve life and property by adopting measures which will assist the civil population to survive the hazards of nuclear war; second, to maintain a structure of civil government so as to ensure that all important aspects of all levels of government could continue to provide leadership and to direct their essential services; third, to conserve resources by developing measures which will ensure that surviving resources of all kinds will be managed properly so that an orderly economic recovery could be effected.

The activities of the Canada Emergency Measures Organization as well as those of the several provincial and municipal emergency measures organizations, are directed toward the achievement of those objectives. I think a few brief comments would be appropriate on what has been achieved in each of these areas.

Then, with regard to measures to assist the population to survive, I would say that a warning system is operated by the Canadian forces which will provide warning to the public, should an attack on this continent be detected. This system is fully operational, and work continues to improve its capability. An emergency broadcasting plan, involving the use of all radio and television stations, is in existence and can be put into operation instantly. Therefore, we have the ability to broadcast advice and instructions to the public. Key transmitters in the system are protected against fallout and have standby power facilities.

A national survey of all large buildings in Canada is under way now using a new technique for quantitative measurements. The purpose of this survey is to determine what radiation fallout protection could be provided to the public by each building in an emergency. The survey is scheduled for completion next year. Information arising out of the results of the survey will permit us to advance our planning in this important area of protection.

During the past four years we have assisted the provinces in developing a capability to detect radiation fallout by issuing over 50,000 radiation detection instruments. This is a continuing activity.

Mr. Chairman, at this juncture, I should point out to hon. members that even if Canada were not attacked the resulting fallout from weapons detonated on purely United States targets could cause a substantial number of casualties in areas close to the United Stated-Canada border. This is the reason why we feel that the fallout protection survey and the capability for detecting radiation fallout are so important.

The federal government, through its emergency medical stockpile program, has accumulated over $21 million worth of medical supplies and equipment at various locations in the country. All equipment and supplies are packaged into operational units, and arrangements are being made for the responsible provincial organizations to take charge of these supplies.

The Canadian forces, in addition to their responsibilities for warning, continue to develop their capability to direct and conduct rescue operations, should this prove to be necessary.

The public education program of Canada E.M.O. has been oriented toward having readily available a wide range of information so that should a demand arise, it would be able to respond to that demand. I do not believe that it is necessary, or even desirable, in the present state of international tension to keep vivid in the minds of the public the importance of survival preparations.

These are a few of many activities which are directed to the first national objective.

The second national objective, which is directed toward the maintenance of government under nuclear war conditions, also shows continuing progress. In addition to a complex of protected facilities outside the Ottawa area, there are in existence in six provinces protected headquarters from which components of the provincial and federal governments would operate. The remaining four provinces, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan, have interim facilities available. During the next four or five years it is our intention to develop longer term facilities for those provinces, as well as continuing to improve the emergency facilities already provided in the other provinces.

Below the provincial level, Canada E.M.O. has been working closely with their provincial counterparts to provide protected facilities from which municipal governments would be able to operate. I am told by the provinces that there are approximately 130 of these headquarters in existence and operational.

This network of emergency government headquarters, from federal down to municipal levels, is tied together by a comprehensive communications system.

[Mr. Drury.]

Much remains to be done in this general area, but as each year passes additional elements are added and improvements continue to take place.

In working toward our third national objective—the effective management of surviving resources—much of the work is carried out by the responsible federal department, co-ordinated as necessary by the Emergency Measures Organization. Emergency plans are in existence and are under constant review, to manage supplies of all kinds; to continue the productive capacity of our agricultural and fishing industries; and to operate the communications and transportation industries. Work is continuing in the areas of emergency manpower planning, control of accommodation and engineering, and construction resources.

Needless to say, although most of the work in these areas is under the direction of the federal government, the achievements to date would not have taken place had we not received the co-operation of the appropriate provincial departments, and of many hundreds of officials from business and industry.

Mr. Chairman, hon. members should note that seven or eight years ago very few of these measures or activities were in existence. Today they are. Many of them were started by the previous government. And this, I think, bears out the observation I made earlier, that is to say, that with relatively modest annual expenditures a great deal can be done to improve our nation's capability to survive.

At this point I would like to pay tribute to some 150,000 volunteers who, over the years, have contributed significantly to the organization at the local level. Additionally I would like to express the thanks of the government to many thousands of federal, provincial and municipal employees who have accepted the responsibility for emergency planning as a functional extension of their peacetime responsibilities. This is the key to effective civil emergency planning. This ensures that we do not duplicate our efforts and that we make the best use of our existing resources to build up an effective emergency preparedness program.

The true function of the Emergency Measures Organization, be it at the federal, provincial or municipal level, is to co-ordinate emergency planning and to assist existing departments of government in developing their existing capability to meet emergency situations. It has never been the intention of this government, nor of past governments, to have the Emergency Measures Organization usurp or replace the functional responsibility of governments or their departments at the time of an emergency, be it in peacetime or during a war emergency.

Mr. Chairman, I would like now to deal briefly with the estimates of the Emergency Measures Organization. Your agreement is being sought for an appropriation of $10,659,500. This amount is approximately $400,000 less than last year's appropriation, and is the result of a more effective system of program planning.

Vote 20 covers the administration and operation of the Canada Emergency Measures Organization, which is comprised of a headquarters in Ottawa, ten regional offices, the Canadian Emergency Measures College and an office at NATO headquarters. The total authorized staff is modest, standing at 180 persons. In addition to covering the salaries of the staff, this vote provides for the continuation of the national fallout protection survey, various research and study projects, the operation of the college at Arnprior, and the public education program.

Vote 25 covers the expenditures to be made for rebuilding the Canadian Emergency Measures College at Arnprior, the construction of a regional headquarters in Prince Edward Island and pre-engineering work in New Brunswick, the continued development of zone emergency headquarters in the provinces, and the purchase of further radiation detection instruments.

Vote 30 provides for our financial assistance program to the provinces. This program underwrites up to 75 per cent of the expenditures made by the provinces and municipalities in the development of their emergency preparedness program I recommend to hon. members, Mr. Chairman, the favourable consideration of these Emergency Measures Organization programs.

Mr. Harkness: The minister has just read what was undoubtedly intended to be an encouraging outline of the situation, so far as the Emergency Measures Organization is concerned. However, on the basis of my own knowledge and on the basis of what he did not say, I do not believe there is any doubt that the Emergency Measures Organization is not nearly as effective at the present time as it was four years ago. To begin with, the minister said that the army had an efficient reporting system. I take it from this what he means is that the army is still manning the general communications system which would report nuclear contamination and fallout or the fall of an actual nuclear bomb anywhere in the country. I do not believe the minister will deny that the military nuclear detonation reporting centres, and so forth, have been washed out and taken out of operation. So far as I can see, all the military authorities will be able to do will be to man the communications. Who is going to actually report the presence of fallout to these people to begin with, or the fall of nuclear bombs, if the worst came to the worst, I do not know.

In any event, this essential part of the emergency measures set-up has now disappeared, and so far as I know there has been nothing comparable established to take its place, nothing that would be nearly as effective. The minister mentioned the six protected provincial headquarters which are in operation. However all of these six provincial headquarters were either under construction or had been completed four years ago. I take it therefore that in the intervening four years nothing has been done to provide the other four which the minister now mentions will be completed in the course of time. It would seem to me once more, as I said at the beginning, this whole program has not been pushed forward with anything like the drive or energy which characterized it some years ago.

The minister mentioned also the medical supplies which were stored. I understand that a certain portion of these medical supplies have been withdrawn and sent to Viet Nam and other places in the form of aid. I think some were sent to Chile a year or two ago. I wonder if the minister would have anything to say about that?

Mr. Drury: I do not believe I was making specific reference to the nuclear detonation reporting system when I spoke of a system of improved communications. It is a fact that in the past four years regional headquarters, which were not then operational, have become fully operational and equipped with an adequate system of communications, both between regional headquarters themselves and headquarters directly. We have also substantially improved our communications between four of the regional headquarters and their counterparts in the United States. This represents a step-up not only in cost but more importantly in the effectiveness of communication.

The system for reporting nuclear detonation has been reviewed and revised. The system with which the hon. member was no doubt familiar at an earlier period is now being replaced by a system of reporting from existing army stations or ground force stations in Canada, to be supplemented by aerial reconnaissance and aerial reporting. I am told that this, over the long run, is a more efficient approach than was the earlier system of a series of interconnected nuclear reporting stations.

In so far as medical supplies are concerned, there is of course the necessity of medical supplies held as an emergency reserve being turned over periodically, with greater frequency for some items than others. It would be reasonable to assume that out of the medical stockpile held for emergency purposes, the Department of National Health and Welfare would feed medical supplies which should be turned over to a variety of units of consumption, to be replaced with new stock. Although this hardly comes under the heading of rotation of stock, there was dispatched to Viet Nam a 200 bed hospital, complete. The beds obviously do not deteriorate in storage, nor perhaps do the mattresses, although some of the medical supplies would. These 200 bed hospitals from the emergency stockpile is being replaced in that stockpile by the Department of National Health and Welfare. I suggest that perhaps this is a very good use of our reserve stockpile, to be able to meet at short notice urgent demands as they occur.

Mr. Herridge: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the minister for the answer he gave to the question I asked this afternoon. It was a very painstaking answer and was quite complete from my point of view. I do want to say this is the first time I have heard the minister responsible for the Emergency Measures Organization read a statement to the house that gave some indication of the policy and the purposes of the organization at the present time. I remember that when the organization was first established there was considerable enthusiasm. There was a great deal of organization at the national and local level. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that there was a program to have a shelter in everyone's backyard in Canada. I know one firm in the west which was incorporated to supply these shelters, which people thought they required at the time. This firm has since gone bankrupt and the market did not last very long. There was this burst of enthusiasm, which could be understood because of conditions which existed at that time.

[Mr. Drury.]

Then there was a sort of apathy which crept in. I have talked to a great many men who have been interested in civil defence and the Emergency Measures Organization who gradually, through the years, lost their enthusiasm. It was for this reason I was glad to hear the minister read the statement he did, which gave an outline of the policy and purposes of the organization at the present time.

I want to ask one or two questions. First of all, what is the policy of the Emergency Measures Organization with respect to any peacetime disaster? In talking to people I have found they were more interested in an organization if it had a twin value, if it were a war measures organization and could be used in case of disaster in any particular district. Perhaps the minister would tell us what is being done in this direction.

Second, with respect to peacetime disasters, what co-operation is there with the armed forces to assist? We are all human, and at the present time there is in my district the fear that many communities may be flooded by the rising waters of the Columbia. At the moment these people are interested in the Emergency Measures Organization in so far as it will co-operate with the civilian population in meeting a particular and local problem in conjunction with the reserve army and other personnel. Can the minister explain in a little more detail the role that the Emergency Measures Organization can fulfil in meeting local peacetime disasters, whether floods, forest fires or other unforeseen disasters.

Would he also explain what form of agreement is reached with the provinces in respect to the administration of this organization within the provinces? I have noticed quite a diversity of approach on the part of various groups in this regard. Perhaps the minister could briefly outline the agreement with the provincial governments in respect to the administration of the Emergency Measures Organization. I understand that a grant is made to the provinces for this purpose, but what check is made by the federal authorities to see that the money that is granted to the provinces is spent efficiently and properly, for the purpose for which it is designed?

Another comment I wish to make is this. Although the minister mentioned public relations, the dissemination of information, and that sort of thing, I think things can be improved. This improvement depends on the locality in which the organization is based.

Some local papers are very good in this respect, and give news items about the organization's activities, or any particular local development,—what they are intending to do, and so on. On the other hand, in other areas the organization is almost overlooked.

I would suggest that the public is entitled to all the information it can get about the purposes of the organization in emergency situations, its function in peacetime and the contribution that it can make to the area in this regard. I find that a great many young men whose primary interest is in the purposes of the organization are also interested in working with the organization in order to meet any peacetime disasters or local emergencies which may arise. If the minister would deal with these points when he speaks later, I should be very pleased indeed.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned a moment ago the turning over of hospital supplies, and I agree with his remarks. I think this is a very worth-while idea. He then went on to mention that one of these portable hospitals which had been made up by the Emergency Measures Organization staff had been sent to Viet Nam. This is probably one of the finest portable hospitals in the world and I think the staff deserve a lot of credit.

However, is the minister aware that in the December 1966 issue of the magazine put out by the external aid office in Ottawa on international developments it was pointed out that the Canadian government is sending ten of these pre-packaged hospitals to Viet Nam? According to this magazine they were to be shipped out at the rate of one per month, so since December I presume that six have been sent to Viet Nam, rather than just one. Only recently, I believe last month, the external aid office announced that it would be sending another ten of these 200 bed hospitals to Viet Nam which will operate under Dr. Alje Vennema who is in charge of the Canadian program of rehabilitation in Viet Nam. This would make a total of 20 hospitals.

As I say, I think this idea is very worth while. Since the minister seems to be sending these hospitals freely, and perhaps is not aware of it, I should like to make a pitch for a few of them, if I may. A few months ago in this house I suggested that it was time that some members of the medical profession took part actively and voluntarily in giving aid to foreign countries such as Viet Nam, and perhaps South America and the Caribbean the idea being based on the method now being used in the United States and presently carried on in Viet Nam by civilian doctors, who go there on a rotational basis spending 60 days in Viet Nam.

These doctors come from right across the United States and I believe that at the present time there are 34 surgeons and medical men operating in Viet Nam helping civilian casualties in that country. Their services are given purely voluntarily. Perhaps this fits in with the plea recently made by the director general of external aid before the external affairs committee the other day, when he said he would like to see some voluntary work instead of just money going into this type of external aid. This is exactly what I have proposed, Mr. Chairman, and I was presumptuous enough to suggest at the time that the minister be good enough to release a few more of these 200 bed pre-packaged hospitals for this purpose.

The minister pointed out, and I agree, that it would be a good idea to rotate pre-packaged stocks of drugs available in the country. It seems to me, however, we had better rotate them a little more, because according to Dr. Vennema there is a great shortage of medical supplies even in the Canadian facility in South Viet Nam. The amount of money spent by the Canadian government there at the present time is about $2 million, and although I understand that the Chile situation was a special one, perhaps we could keep in mind that the hospitals, supported by our government and our people in South Viet Nam might use some of these rotation supplies to help ease the critical shortage, particularly of drugs and bandages.

I should like the minister to give serious consideration to my proposal, which has already received a lot of favourable support among members of the medical profession who have expressed their willingness to operate such a venture. The Canadian Medical Association, though it feels that our medical resources are perhaps a bit thin to send too many supplies to Viet Nam, is looking with a great deal of interest at this proposal and has already met with members of the government concerning such a program in South America and the Caribbean. This type of hospital, which can be transported in one of our large aircraft or sent by ship, could easily be set up in any available area, and with this sort of Canadian ingenuity I think the staff of the organization certainly deserve credit for designing this type of hospital. They are ideal for these units. Volunteer doctors could go to these areas to work as ancillary units to the medical facilities in the locality.

This proposal, Mr. Chairman, is not treading on the toes of the type of program that the government already has under way, which is more in the line of rehabilitation and training in Viet Nam under Dr. Vennema's care. However, it would mean that instead of bringing children who have been badly burned and badly maimed to Canada for care, as was once suggested, they could receive proper surgery and medical treatment from some of the skilled surgeons and medical men who are practising in Canada today. I would at least like to hear a faint word of encouragement from the minister for what I consider a very vital and important matter, one which I am sure can do a great deal toward improving Canada's image in the world today.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Perhaps I may respond to the questions asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West and also say a word or two about the representation made by the hon. member for Saskatoon. The hon. member for Kootenay West asked what the Emergency Measures Organization does in respect to peacetime disasters. I tried to indicate in my general remarks that the role of the Emergency Measures Organization was one of co-ordinating and planning. Provided the various agencies of government have prepared adequate plans to cope with emergencies, there is really nothing for the E.M.O. to do. Its job is to ensure that adequate plans and preparations are made by the various levels of government and agencies responsible for carrying out particular functions. It is not the object of the E.M.O. to usurp or replace emergency operations of governments or agencies in Canada.

Let us consider as an example a flood threat in the Columbia river valley. There is a provincial government agency whose task it is to report on the threat of superabundant water as a result of surveys, meteorological reports and so forth. It is the job of a provincial government department to ensure that road communications in the Columbia river valley are in good condition at all times, including times of flood. It is the job of another department of the government to ensure that there is an adequate supply of water and electricity for municipalities in ordinary times and during disasters.

The role of the Emergency Measures Organization is to keep after these government departments to make sure they have adequate plans and are making the necessary plans in the event that an anticipated disaster, in this case a flood, should occur. I am glad to say that the Emergency Measures Organization has met at the federal and provincial level and has received co-operation from all provincial governments and from the armed forces of Canada, which also have to make plans to cope with disasters which call for their assistance. They have such plans and are ready to implement them.

The initiative in seeking such assistance rests with the municipality which finds itself faced with a disaster with which it cannot deal. It then will call upon the province, and if the province finds it is faced with a disaster which is beyond its resources to cope with, it calls upon the federal government. Fortunately we are in the position to respond to such requests effectively and quickly.

The hon. gentleman also wondered how the Emergency Measures Organization was administered in the provinces. I think I gave a general indication of the role of this organization at the provincial level. Its role is to make plans to meet emergencies and to ensure that all agencies which would discharge these plans have in fact knowledge of the plans, have accepted them and made the necessary preparations. This is the role of the organization. It is not an executive agency but merely a planning and co-ordinating agency. That is the specific background.

Having regard to the representations of the hon. member for Saskatoon, I fully support the external aid programs of the government of Canada, although I am not responsible for their administration. In fact, they are quite irrelevant to the estimates we are discussing tonight. I wholeheartedly support the use, on a replacement basis, of our medical stockpile including the very efficient 200 bed dismantleable and transportable hospitals, and I think the designers deserve a great deal of credit. I am pleased to note that the learned doctor shares that view.

As the hon. member pointed out, there have been shipments made of some ten of these hospitals to South Viet Nam, and more are to follow. I will refer his representation regarding doctors volunteering and serving in South Viet Nam to my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, under whose province perhaps this more particularly falls.

I read Hansard in respect of the discussion which took place before the dinner recess and I may have misled the house. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, following a statement made by myself to the effect that we endeavour to publicize on a national scale all large prime contracts, asked how they are publicized. I said that they are publicized in a variety of ways, and indicated that the most effective way was probably by newspaper advertisements. I may have conveyed the impression that the government of Canada publicizes prime contracts through paid newspaper advertisements. That is not the case. We do not pay for such newspaper advertisements. Releases are made of the details of these contracts on both a regional and local basis for distribution to newspapers in the hopes they will publish the details and enable potential contractors to have knowledge of them.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the provision of our drug and mobile hospitals from our stockpile, either to Viet Nam or other places where they can be used, I should like to make it clear that I have no objection, provided the stocks are replaced. The minister previously said that one hospital had been sent. He now indicates that ten have been sent and more are to follow, but there is no provision in these estimates for the replacement of those hospitals or the stocks of drugs that have been provided. That is the point I made when I originally referred to this matter of mobile hospitals and drug stocks which have been piled for emergency measures use. It is fine to send them as part of our foreign aid, but as far as I can make out there has been no provision made for replacement, contrary to what the minister has said. There are no funds provided for their replacement.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the initial cost of the drugs and these hospitals appeared in the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, not in the estimates covering the Emergency Measures Organization, the estimates we are dealing with tonight. By the same token, the cost of replacing the hospitals and the drugs shipped to South Viet Nam would not appear in these estimates. Their replacement cost could be financed in one of two ways, either through an item in the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, representing the cost of replacement, or by an item in the estimates of external aid covering the replacement cost. I am not sure which way this is being done or which way it is proposed to be done.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister assure us that an item will appear in one place or another? I know there is no such item in the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, because we dealt with those estimates in committee last Thursday. I have not looked at the estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare but I understood the minister to say there is no such item there. Can he assure us that there will be a supplementary estimate to cover the replacement of these supplies which have been shipped away?

Mr. Drury: I have been assured that these will be replaced, and as a consequence the appropriate financial provision will have to be made. I will check with my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare to find out how the replacement is to be financed.

Mr. Harkness: Is it to be done this year?

Mr. Drury: I am not sure as to the precise time table, whether the items shipped will be replaced in one fiscal year or not. Again, I will ask my colleague.

Mr. Harkness: I submit this is another example of a lackadaisical approach to the emergency measures program which has characterised this government during the last four years. These medical supplies and mobile hospitals were stockpiled for a specific purpose and are being used for another purpose. Apparently they have not been replaced, and the minister does not know whether they will be replaced this year, next year or, indeed, I suggest, at all. This is not good enough. If the necessity exists for this stockpile—and both this government and the previous government were of the opinion that it does—then it should be maintained until it can be shown that there is no longer a need for it. I do not think the minister is advancing that contention this evening.

Mr. Drury: Not at all.

Mr. Harkness: I would say the same with regard to the provision of protective headquarters for the provinces under a program which was projected four years ago. Nothing has been done since, except that the government has completed the six headquarters which were under construction—in fact, I believe one or two of those had been completed by the time they took office.

Once more, the whole matter has been soft-pedalled and very little more has been done about it. When I spoke earlier, I asked the minister what national exercises had been held to test the efficiency of the organization and ascertain any weaknesses. The minister has not answered that question. I do not think any such exercises have been held. I also asked him what had happened about the dominion-provincial conferences which used to be yearly events. I do not think more than one of these has been held during the last four years.

Mr. Drury: The most recent federal-provincial conference was in June of 1965 and the most recent national exercise was in October of 1966. The hon. member should appreciate that in respect of supplies the role of the Emergency Measures Organisation is one of planning and co-ordination. The responsibility, in departmental terms, for maintaining the stockpile rests with the department charged with the particular work. It is not, in jurisdictional terms, the task of the Emergency Measures Organization to procure or operate the stockpile; it is the responsibility of the department, and one assumes that when a senior and responsible department gives an assurance that the stockpile will be replaced, it will be done.

I do not think it is fair for the hon. member to suggest that nobody knows whether it will ever be replaced. This is to impugn, quite unfairly I think, the sense of responsibility of those in charge of a large and responsible government department. The hon. member says with respect to regional headquarters that one or two may have been completed four years ago and that since then nothing has been done except to complete two. This is something of a distortion. I did make reference to the provision of an adequate communications systems connecting these headquarters, something which, I may say, did not exist four years ago. The previous government may have had great plans for doing these things but in fact they were not carried out. Now they have been. Further, I indicated that this year a regional headquarters was being constructed in Prince Edward Island. It really is not satisfactory for the hon. member to say nothing has been done. Either I am wasting my time talking or he is trying to controvert what I say.

I think some hon. members feel that not sufficient publicity has been given during the last couple of years to the activities of the Emergency Measures Organization. I myself feel strongly that an endeavour to maintain at a high level interest in an organization whose functions in peacetime are relatively undramatic is doomed to failure, and that attempts to raise public interest in such an organization during peacetime will only result in a substantial let-down. We have had some examples of efforts to build up the activities of the Emergency Measures Organization to a pitch which could not be sustained, and I think it would be a mistake to repeat those errors.

Mr. Harkness: The minister is quite wrong in the statement he made that the emergency measures headquarters in the provinces did not have communications five years ago. Permanent headquarters were in the course of construction, but there were temporary headquarters in each of the provinces and they were provided with communications. At least one exercise on a national scale was held each year in addition to a number of regional exercises and these confirmed that the communications system was working satisfactorily. All that has happened since is that the communications apparatus has been moved from the temporary headquarters to the permanent headquarters. I am surprised that the minister should try to give an erroneous impression about what existed four years ago in comparison with what exists at the present time.

The minister talks about the Department of National Health and Welfare being a responsible department, and suggests that if this department makes it known that the medical supplies and mobile hospitals which have been sent abroad are to be replaced, we must accept it that this will be the case. I would like to ask the minister whether the cabinet committee on emergency measures still exists on which sit ministers representative of these various departments? When I was in charge of emergency measures this was the situation. When the cabinet committee came to a decision with regard to a matter of this kind, the provision of replacements for any equipment disposed of or sent overseas,—although I do not think such was actually done at that time—, that decision was recommended to the cabinet and, if approved, became a cabinet decision, and action was taken. I wonder if this system still exists, or is it up to each department to do as much as it wants with regard to emergency measures, or to do as little as it wants?

Mr. Drury: The hon. gentleman, as a privy councillor, would not expect me to indicate the actions taken by cabinet committees and by the cabinet. There are both departmental decisions and government decisions, and the decision to replace the hospital equipment shipped out of the country is a governmental decision. Perhaps the hon. member will not want me to go further than that.

Mr. Harkness: I was not asking the minister to tell me any cabinet decisions or anything else along that line. I was simply asking him if the cabinet committee on emergency measures, which was set up during the time we were in office, is still in operation. We announced the establishment of it, there was nothing secret about it. Is it still in operation?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

25. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, including authority to make recoverable advances not exceeding in the aggregate the amounts of the shares of the governments of the provinces of the costs of joint programs, $2,230,200.

30. Grants to provinces and municipalities for civil defence and related purposes and authority to make recoverable advances in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the treasury board, $5,200,000.

On item 40:

C—Crown companies—

Canadian Arsenals Limited—

40. Administration and operation, $1.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, could the minister explain the $1 estimate for Canadian Arsenals Limited?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, for a number of years Canadian Arsenals has been operating in a situation in which the revenues realized by the crown corporation were inadequate to cover its total expenses. As a consequence every year an appropriation has been made to cover this deficit. It is clearly understood that when deficits occur there will be an appropriation to cover them. We hope that in the current fiscal year the administration and operation of Canadian Arsenals will be in balance, that there will be neither a deficit nor a profit. This $1 item is merely to indicate that there is accepted a responsibility to meet the deficit of this particular crown corporation. The fact that the net cost of administration and operation has been reduced from $446,000 to $1 means that as a consequence of the reorganization of Canadian Arsenals we do not anticipate an operating deficit this year.

Mr. Hales: The minister is asking us to vote $1 as a blank cheque. We do not know what it is for, whether there will be a deficit of $1½ million or a profit of $1½ million. Could the minister give us some idea what the operation was in the last fiscal year? Did Canadian Arsenals end up with a deficit of $1 million?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the cost as provided in the initial appropriation last year was $446,000 as shown in item 40 on page 66, and also on page 72 of the blue book. A supplementary estimate was required last year to increase this vote to cover the costs we incurred in respect of the closing down, through sale, of the Val Rose plant at Valcartier. The items involved were a profit of $232,000 in respect to the head office, in the Dominion Arsenals division at Val Rose a deficit of $184,000, in the small arms division at Long Branch a deficit of $1,163, and in the Valleyfield division a deficit of $670,000. This works out at a deficit of $623,000, which is represented by the item shown in the estimate at the beginning of the year and in a supplementary estimate.

In this case any sum in addition to the $1 provided in these estimates, required to cover a deficit greater than $1, will have to be sought from parliament by means of a supplementary estimate. This is not a blank cheque on which Canadian Arsenals can draw. All the moneys required for covering a deficit must be explicitly appropriated by parliament.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister give us some idea as to the policy of the department and the future operations of Canadian Arsenals Limited? I understand there are four plants in operation. Is it the intention to get rid of some more of them? So far as I am concerned it is a real white elephant and is a drain on the taxpayers' pocket. What is the policy of the department in this regard? Are we going to get rid of Canadian Arsenals or is it going to continue operating at a deficit?

Mr. Drury: The policy in relation to Canadian Arsenals is that if we can be successful in respect of armaments and ammunition manufacture in seeing established appropriate and adequate private enterprise capacity, then Canadian Arsenals will not be in that field.

In respect of operations concerning the manufacturing of small arms and ammunition and explosives, where we are unsuccessful in getting private enterprise to undertake this on its own, Canadian Arsenals Limited will continue to provide facilities so that they will be available. We have been successful in interesting a commercial enterprise to take over the explosives plant which is outside of Montreal, at Valleyfield, and because along with this plant the corporation undertook the responsibility of maintaining the necessary capacity for the production of explosives should these be needed by the federal government, this no longer represents an operation of Canadian Arsenals.

Similarly, arrangements were made with an entrepreneur to take over the small arms ammunition plant at Valcartier. In return for taking it over he has given an engagement to maintain in that plant the necessary level of small arms ammunition manufacturing capacity sufficient to meet emergency needs of the government of Canada; so this no longer is at the charge of the government of Canada. There do remain two further operations, one at Long Branch in Toronto for the production of light automatic guns and small arms, and a shell filling division at St. Paul l'Ermite. We have not yet been successful in interesting private enterprise in taking over either of these operations. As a consequence Canadian Arsenals Limited will continue to operate them. I am glad to say, however, in so far as the operations of these two and the head office are concerned, that we have budgeted in such a way that it will not represent an operating deficit to the cost of the taxpayer.

Canadian commercial corporation—

50. Administration and operation, $2,058,000.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the Canadian Commercial Corporation the minister will recall that two years ago, when he appeared before the defence committee, there was rather an extensive discussion about this corporation. At that time there was, shall we say, an administrative change that was being made in the corporation. Could the minister outline to us briefly just what is the administrative set up in respect of the Canadian Commercial Corporation at the present time. Are the officers entirely persons who are members of another branch of the public service of Canada, and is there an actual president of this crown corporation? There was a president at that time. It is my information that this man has left the service. Could the minister give us more information in this regard and tell us whether this now is sort of an incorporated branch of the public service of Canada.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the discussion to which the hon. gentleman referred took place in the committee some time ago. The Canadian Commercial Corporation now has a president and a board of directors, all of whom are officials of the public service of Canada. None of these persons receives any additional emolument as a result of being either the president or an officer of the corporation. The operation of the corporation is performed entirely by officials who already have been appointed to the public service in another capacity and who occupy another position in the establishment.

As was pointed out earlier, the department is required to keep a costed accounting of the services provided by these officials in the public service on behalf of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. This charge then is made by the Department of Defence Production on the corporation and the amount is then voted by parliament in an appropriation. This amount then in turn is used to offset expenses of the Department of Defence Production.

The president, who had no other duties in the public service other than president of the corporation, resigned in the fall of 1965. He has been replaced, as indicated, by a president who is an official in the public service and who receive no additional remuneration.

Mr. Lambert: All the officers of the corporation are persons who also are in the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. Drury: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, so far as this is concerned this is the incorporation of a branch of the public service and the legal entity, shall we say, is for commercial dealings. In this way, rather than dealing with the government, the persons who wish to deal with the Department of Defence Production are dealing with the Canadian Commercial Corporation, a legal entity which really is a branch of the public service of Canada.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Commercial Corporation I believe is another one of those white elephants which we could lead out to pasture and let the Department of Defence Production do the work it is doing in any event. Apparently the Department of Defence Production is doing most of the work. An amount of $2 million is being charged for the services rendered. I should like to know what the income is from the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Then we might arrive at the net cost of operating the department. We are told nothing here. It says, "Details page 72". Then on that page we find the same thing. I should like to know what the net operating costs of this corporation are.

Mr. Drury: Well, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the hon. member was not here a little earlier when it was pointed out that the Canadian Commercial Corporation, as the hon. member for Edmonton West has just indicated, is a legal entity, or perhaps more properly expressed, a legal fiction. It exists in name only. There are a number of foreign governments and agencies of foreign governments which are authorized to enter into contracts with other foreign corporations. They are not, however, authorized by their governments to enter into contracts with foreign governments.

This means for instance that the procurement service of the German army is under its statute allowed to enter into procurement contracts with foreign corporations, but if it should wish to enter into a contract with a foreign government it must proceed through the German foreign office, the Canadian foreign office and the Department of Defence Production. The process of procurement is vastly simplified if the German army procurement service is able to deal directly with the authorized entity in Canada and not have to proceed through the process on a formal government to government basis. This is the reason for the continued existence of the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

In practice what happens is that the foreign purchaser executes a contract with the Canadian Commercial Corporation. This is a contract between the crown corporation and the foreign purchaser. The same officials who have negotiated this contract immediately have the Department of Defence Production execute a contract in identical terms to the contract executed with the Canadian Commercial Corporation. They then proceed to act on that contract in terms of procurement, exactly as if it had been a contract entered into in the first place with the foreign government or agency.

This makes it easier for us to sell abroad the output of Canadian equipment manufacturers. Rather than being a white elephant, this is an institution which costs the taxpayers nothing, but which is very helpful in our promotion campaigns.

Mr. Hales: The minister has not yet answered my question. There must be certain tasks credited to this corporation and I suggest they would offset this amount of money which is being charged to the corporation. I should like to know the net operating cost of this corporation.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the corporation there is some holdover of funds or deposits held by the corporation, the interest on which amount is something in the order of $100,000 a year. Apart from this, the income in terms of service charges or surcharges is purely nominal and really quite meaningless. If one were to abolish the corporation, presumably the interest on the income would be transferred to some other government account and the interest would continue to be earned there. There would disappear a revenue of an amount of some four thousand dollars a year assorted petty service charges. There would also disappear something in the order of $2,000 in the year for losses, or there would be a net difference of about $2,000 applied against what has been estimated as the total cost for the time and effort spent on the promotional work in respect of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, in the amount of $2 million.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Item agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Honey): This concludes the estimates of the Department of Defence Production. The committee will now consider vote No. 1 of the National Research Council. This item may be found on page 364 of the blue book, and the details at page 365.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL OF CANADA INCLUDING THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

1. Administration, operation and maintenance, $40,693,000.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on this item. I notice that the gestures of the minister tell me to keep it short, but I think that anybody following what the minister has said in the house tonight will realize he has been keeping it long. I should first like to congratulate the minister on being head of the National Research Council, because I think it is one of the most important departments of the federal government. The progress of this country will depend a great deal upon how the National Research Council is operated.

Employment and prosperity go hand in hand in a country, and they depend entirely upon the expansion of our manufacturers. I think if you look over the record of the last 10 years, Mr. Chairman, you will find that there has been a steady increase in employment in the manufacturing field. The manufacturing industries alone employ 1,500,000 people. Wages account for a large part of the nation's purchasing power. This illustrates the necessity of research and competitiveness in the manufacturing field if we hope to increase our sales and economic growth.

How are we doing this? The minister has followed in the paths of the previous government which made incentives available back in 1960. That government allowed not only write-offs against tax, but a write-off of 50 per cent in respect of new work that was undertaken. This government thought that program was so good that they replaced it with the Industrial Research and Development Act, which does the same thing but also allows a cash grant of 25 per cent where research has been undertaken. I congratulate the government for undertaking this program. I do not believe it is enough, but it is a step in the right direction.

We must admit that research in Canada has been very slow in developing. Perhaps the greatest research development in this country has been in the pulp and paper and chemical industries. I hope the minister will bear this fact in mind when considering tariffs in respect of the chemical industry, because this industry has done very well in Canada. The minister said he will have to protect some industries, and I hope this will be one of them.

The primary industries, in which we have for so long been engaged in Canada, require a minimum amount of research. A great deal of the raw materials and the semi-processed materials have been shipped out of this country to be processed in other countries and shipped back to us. The reason for this is obvious. We do not have the know-how to manufacture these articles and be competitive in so doing.

There is another factor to be considered in this respect. There are operating in Canada many subsidiary firms of American industries. I do not know whether people realize that most of the research in connection with these industries is carried out in the United States. The subsidiary firms operating in this country have paid for this research. I think we have to go one step further in pointing out how essential the research is. We have educated in this country many scientists who have crossed the border to the south. I was looking at the figures the other day and found that in 1964 over 4,000 professional and technical people crossed the border to the south. Many of them carried on research in the United States for the parent companies which have subsidiaries in Canada. It costs us upwards of $30,000 to educate each of these professional and technical people. When they work in research for the American parent company, the subsidiary operating in Canada pays part of the cost of that research. I would point out that the figures indicate that in respect of research over $300 million are spent by American subsidiaries operating in Canada.

We will always be hewers of wood and drawers of water unless we can stop this brain drain and carry out in Canada the necessary research to produce the goods to sell not only to Canadians but in the markets of the world. This is very essential, and this is why I say the minister is not spending enough on research. He is looking pretty grave at the moment, but according to the figures he gave in a speech he made in Paris, the amount spent on research should be 2 per cent or better of the gross national product. If you look at the figures of the amount of money spent on research in Canada today, you will see that $45 million is spent on science and engineering, and $20.5 million on medical research. If the minister wants to carry out an effective policy in this respect, let him implement the recommendations of the Gundy report, which asked that $56 million be spent on medical research. The minister is allowing only $20.5 million.

In respect of research in business and industry there is an item for $5,700,000. We are spending one tenth per capita of the amount the United States are spending. We cannot all at once make the same grants to research as are made in the United States, but if we were spending the proper amount of money on research, according to the minister's own figures given in the speech in Paris we would be spending $1,210 million, if my figures are correct, because our gross national product is $60 billion. This means we should be spending on research $1,200 million, and we are spending only $71 million. This is not good enough for the Canadian people.

I would point out to the minister, and he knows it as well as I do, that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer in the scientific field. The United States are able to attract qualified people from this country because they can pay higher salaries than we are able to pay. I ask the committee to consider the asset we could have in this respect. It costs us $30,000 to educate a man at engineering college. If he remained in this country, he would pay income tax; he would buy goods and services in Canada; he would create employment. If he goes to the United States, what does it cost this country? It costs us millions of dollars, because he will be an asset to the United States not only in the work he carries out there but in the discoveries he might make.

This brings another thought to my mind, namely that a successful industry today needs raw materials. We have a great deal of raw materials, and in this respect we are richer than any other nation in the world. However, we need scientifically trained people and we need capital, of which we do not have too much. We need modern equipment and a highly technical know-how, not only so that we can manufacture new goods and sell them in the markets of the world, but also so that we can successfully compete by manufacturing articles of better quality than those which are sold by other countries.

The minister made a statement, for which I congratulate him. He said that we should not rely on other countries to do our research work. I compliment him for making that statement but I would also urge him, if he sincerely believes in what he said, to step up the research program.

The minister stated that the best way to create incentive, to foster research and developments in addition to a skilful imposition of taxes and so forth, is to maintain an effective patent system and to protect it. I wonder how this will apply to the drug industry in Canada. Does he believe it will apply in the same way? Did he so advise the minister in the other department?—because this is a very important matter. I believe we should stimulate research in every way that we can.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that Canada deserves the best. He knows that we are not doing what we should do in research, and he has given us the figures to prove it. We are spending only $70 million when we should be spending $1,000 million. The more money we spend on research, the better we will be able not only to process our raw materials but to process our manufactured materials to be sold in the markets of the world. The more money we put into research the better we will be able to fight the brain drain and to create greater employment in Canada. This is the challenge which faces the minister responsible for research.

I will not dwell on matters relating to the medical field because my time is nearly up and I am sure the minister would like to make some remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wish to begin by expressing not only amazement but concern about the fact that we have begun only now to discuss the estimates of the National Research Council, which I consider to be one of the most important agencies of the federal government, an agency on which in my opinion depends to a large extent the future welfare of this country. It has been well said by people who are greater experts in this matter than I am that in this day and age a country needs not only trained manpower and resources, which we have in great quantities, but that in order to prosper it needs technical know-how. If there is one thing of which we have been short in this country in recent years it is technical know-how.

The amount of money which is being spent on research in Canada is pathetic when compared with the amount spent by other industrial nations. It has been estimated that for every $1 per capita that we spend for scientific research, Great Britain spends $3 and the United States spends between $10 and $15. That being the case, although the estimates for the National Research Council are substantially higher this year, when we compare the amount which it is proposed we spend on N.R.C. next year with the amounts which have been asked for by the people who know best, that is the scientists in various fields, we should hang our heads in shame.

I am not suggesting for one moment that this government, or any other government, could meet in one year all the requests which the scientific disciplines have made on the government of Canada in recent years. However, if one considers, for example the requests, not only those that have come out of thin air but requests based on a hard-headed examination of what is needed and what can be done in the field of medical research—and the most recent one was prepared by Mr.

Gundy, working with a group of most competent researchers in the field of medical research in Canada—he really wonders whether the government has begun to realize what is required.

Within the past week we saw the publication of a report entitled "Physics in Canada, Survey and Outlook" prepared by a study group of the Canadian Association of Physicists. I do not have the time to put on record some of their findings, nor did I have the time to read the report in any detail, but I understand that the situation with regard to research in the field of physics is just as bad as it is in the field of medical research according to the Gundy report.

Therefore I find it amazing that the minister should permit these estimates to be discussed tonight without first making an opening statement. I think he did a disservice to the house.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately our discussion of the estimates of the National Research Council was terminated by the clock. I did not have an opportunity to reply to the many members' questions or to make comments, so with the leave of the house I should like to table now the 50th annual report of the National Research Council for 1966-67 in English and in French.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader if the schedule of business which was previously announced for tomorrow will be proceeded with in the same order, or are there any changes?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the business for tomorrow, except that I would mention to hon. members I should like to call item 27 to refer certain reports to the committee on veterans affairs. This would be done at the request of committee members, so I will call this item first tomorrow on the understanding it would be passed without debate.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Knowles: Why not do it now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: Ten o'clock.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (for Mr. Teillet) moved:

That the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission and the War Veterans Allowance Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR USE OF LAND FOR PARK PURPOSES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on May 31 I asked the government concerning recent representations made by the city of Vancouver requesting the Department of National Defence to permit the city of Vancouver the use of Jericho for park and recreational purposes. This is a very long standing request from the city of Vancouver, but it has been made again in very specific terms. The city of Vancouver is asking the federal government to grant the use of the land north of Fourth avenue, the defence lands known as Jericho, to the city for park and recreational purposes at a nominal rent of a dollar per year for a period of 99 years, with perpetual renewal.

I should like to make certain points which are very clearly and specifically made in this excellent brief from the city council. First of all, Jericho national defence lands break an almost continuous waterfront park system stretching from Stanley park to the north of the Fraser. Jericho national defence lands are one of the few consolidated areas still available to the city for the major park Vancouver needs in that area. In considering this, I must say that the provincial government has promised the release of its two waterlots which are adjacent to Jericho national defence lands if Ottawa will release Jericho. In other words, we have a promise from the provincial government that they will make possible the continuation of this Marine Drive and parkland area—I mean the land adjacent to Marine Drive, for a continuous park area in a belt around Vancouver.

Then, in the fourth place, the city makes it quite clear it has been grateful for the use of the national defence lands at Kitsilano. It has not let them lie fallow. This is where the centennial museum and planetarium are being established. My reason for mentioning this is that it is an indication of the good intentions of the city to use Jericho national defence lands if the city can get them. We need all the beaches we can develop because we regard them as invaluable, since they provide wholesome pleasure for our people and the tourists who come in. Our beaches have public access and are tremendously valuable not only to our own citizens but to others. Many cities have to pay princely sums to get such water frontage, and Vancouver would take the beach now if the Jericho lands were released.

This afternoon reference was made in the house to the Old Testament figure of Moses. Tonight I would appeal to the federal government and particularly to the Department of National Defence to blow its trumpet so that the red tape walls of Jericho will come tumbling down, and set Vancouver free to make yet another lovely park available to its own citizens and to the thousands of tourists who throng our parks and beaches. I hope the minister will be able to let Vancouver have this which we need so badly. We know how to use parks and to share them with people from all across Canada as well as from other countries who come in ever greater numbers. I hope the minister will make it possible for us to get Jericho beach and the two big water lots adjacent to it.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time I have heard about Jericho beach, but it is the most eloquent plea for its release that I have heard. Unfortunately, I cannot right now release this valuable property, as it was described by the hon. member. We also realize that it is a very valuable asset.

We have received a brief presented by the city of Vancouver. This was passed to our property people for study and report. As a matter of fact, we have hired a consultant of our own and we expect the consultant's report to be presented within six weeks or thereabouts. Then of course the report will have to be referred to the government for decision.

I believe the hon. member referred to the fact that this matter has been hanging on for a long time. We realize that and want to do something about it, but the question is very involved and we want to have all the facts and to study the question in depth. I can assure the hon. member that this question is very much in our minds. We are doing something in order eventually to solve the problem, and I hope to the satisfaction of everyone concerned, including of course the hon. member.

TRADE—TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and the government to the steady increase of foreign textile imports, to the stifling problems they cause Canadian industries and to the harmful effects they have on our working class.

Further to the questions I had put on the order paper of the house last year and to which the hon. Minister of Finance had to reply, we know that the Pearson government allows 83 countries to export textile products to Canada.

Thus, in 1963, total imports of foreign textile products reached a value of $486,350,000; in 1964, $559,795,000; in 1965, $581,880,000; in 1966, more than $600 million and this increase is rising further in 1967. In the last three years, imports of foreign textile products have increased on the whole by more than 25 per cent. This is an unacceptable situation, Mr. Speaker, and the present government is to be severely blamed for failing to reasonably protect our Canadian textile industries and for systematically refusing, in spite of my numerous interventions in this house, to adopt measures and to enter into more sensible and less irresponsible negotiations.

I am sorely disappointed at the apathy of the ministers and Liberal members from Quebec in view of such serious problems which affect thousands of our workers. Indeed, textile factories are to be found not only in Sherbrooke, where there are twelve, but also in Shawinigan, Grand'Mère, Joliette, Trois-Rivières, Magog, Granby, Drummondville, Montmorency, Sorel, Cowansville, Lachute and Montreal.

What concern is expressed by the members and ministers from those areas in view of the steps taken by the government to participate in the Kennedy round? It is high time that these gentlemen leave their ivory tower and abandon their partisan self-satisfaction, while their overly liberal ministers make ready to cut duties on imports of foreign textiles by 50 per cent and quietly do away with our anti-dumping regulations.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) should intervene immediately, so that the Japanese may stop cheating on their voluntary quotas and limit their exports to materials made of artificial and synthetic fibres. Canadian textile companies and workers unions want very much the Canadian government to impose general restrictions on imports from Japan and other Asian countries and to insist on a lower import quota than the present one.

It should not be necessary to point out that Japan, in particular, does not care what inconvenience it causes our Canadian textile industries by increasing dangerously the number of items not covered by its voluntary quotas, by raising its quotas each year, and by shamelessly copying our lines and types of products.

Our Canadian textile industries have been ingenious and aggressive up until now, but they cannot perform a miracle, and they show less and less profit. That is why the government must act immediately.

Last week-end, the hon. Minister of Finance spent two days relaxing in the eastern townships. Instead of limiting himself to general and innocuous statements on television in Sherbrooke, he should have taken advantage of his stay to visit the industries and meet the representatives of Dominion Textile and the union leaders.

He would have learned that the situation is serious, that imports are growing constantly and that the federal government should institute forthwith a royal commission of inquiry on the Canadian textile industry like the Turgeon commission of 1936.

The 1936 inquiry was requested by the city of Sherbrooke and it examined many subjects, among which the development of the textile industry in Canada, the change in the structure of the world textile trade, Canada's customs tariff and its application in recent years; prices and production, investments, profits, costs, salaries and bonuses, business associations, combines and monopolies, salaries, employment and industrial relations and on the importance of the inquiry and the responsibilities of the protected industry.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by urging the government, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) to take immediate action so that our Canadian textile industry does not find itself in stagnation; I urge the Canadian government to take without delay the necessary action to restrict textile imports which stifle and paralyse our industry, which take jobs away from our Canadian workers, particularly in our twenty Quebec towns that live off the textile industry and in the riding of Sherbrooke, which has 12 textile mills employing 40.4 per cent of that riding's workers.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the subject raised by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance and I had the opportunity earlier of informing the hon. member that the Minister of Finance was unfortunately out of town today. I took note of the remarks made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke and I can assure him immediately that his concern about the textile products is shared not only by the Minister of Finance but also by the whole cabinet and all the hon. members on this side of the house.

However, I know that there is perhaps a difference between the speech made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke and the responsibility which rests with the government at the present time in a field which is of interest to all countries, because the hon. member for Sherbrooke should know that every country is interested in the textile industry because of its production.

Anyway, I take due note of his remarks and I shall pass them onto the Minister of Finance and Receiver General who will be able to give even better answer in due time.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE PAYMENT OF PENSION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, a question has been raised by the resignation of Mr. Justice Leo A. Landreville as of June 30 immediately before a Senate committee was to hear an address based on the findings of a parliamentary committee of the Senate and the House of Commons.

In my opinion, the findings of that committee made him guilty beyond any reasonable doubt in the mind of any reasonable thinking person of the allegations with which he was originally charged before various commissions, before a court and before the committee, and my opinion is that admission of that guilt was made when he resigned before the Senate could come to grips with the case.

What happened? That afternoon, various questions were asked in parliament. The record of one of them appears in Hansard of June 8 at page 1283. I quote from Hansard of that day. In reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> I can only say that as far as I know there is no question of bounty.

The record continues:

> Mr. Diefenbaker: Then let us get a comment from the minister. Will Justice Landreville receive a pension? Is that a commentary?
>
> Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand this question. I think it is very much the type of matter to which the government might well give some consideration.

That, I interject parenthetically, was a fine start for a new minister in the House of Commons.

Then, the matter being raised a second time the next day as reported at page 1343—

> Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice? Will the minister assure the house that no retired judge's pension will be awarded to Mr. Landreville without the matter first being brought to the attention of parliament?
>
> Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why I should give that assurance.

Later, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked:

> May I direct a further supplementary question to the one I asked of the Minister of Justice in the light of the answer he gave me a few minutes ago. Has the question of a retired judge's pension for Mr. Landreville already been settled?

To this question, the minister answered, no.

Hence my question, and hence my indignation, which is probably becoming rapidly obvious, that after a catalogue of sins which I shall shortly relate a man should come before the government of Canada, having made, or preparing to make, some nefarious deal, nearing the twilight of a career which has proved nothing but dishonourable, at least for the last ten years, and seek a pension of $18,300 a year. There is one gentleman in the House of Commons who has probably served three times as long as the former judge served, and under our pension set-up he would receive $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000.

• (10:20 p.m.)

When a man who has served ten years, always under the twilight of dishonour, should come before us with that sort of request, well, Mr. Speaker, my indignation does boil over, but not to the point that I cannot stop it at the moment to ask one question of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. I would ask him this, whether there is a resignation under foot without any deals, with no promise of a pension being considered for L. A. Landreville of Sudbury, with no provisional pension promised, and with the government firmly bent on providing no pension under any circumstances?

If the Minister of Justice says yes to that at the moment, or no to that at the moment, then I will proceed accordingly. If he can assure me that no pension is promised to this miscreant judge under any circumstances I will sit down and he will hear no more from me. But if he cannot rise at this moment and say it is not promised under any circumstances, then I will not only pursue the matter now but I will pursue it on any other occasion I can; and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the government, that there will be many other members of this house, and not alone on this side, who will pursue it also.

Does the minister promise that? He sits silent.

In his career on the bench, which roughly, oddly enough, coincided with my career in parliament, Landreville did these things:

1. He committed perjury before a parliamentary committee, before commissions and before various courts of Canada.

2. He treated a commission of the highest court in the land, that is the committee of parliament, as a group of bumpkins who could be beguiled by loud protestations and long words.

3. He was guilty of trying to put undue and unseemly pressure on the Liberal candidate in the Sudbury by-election to secure a pension.

4. He was guilty of conduct unbecoming a judge when the R.C.M.P. came around to ask him what he was doing with regard to certain dealings with NONG stock.

5. He was guilty of lack of candour and honesty in dealing with any authority and,

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Speaker, he never volunteered information until that information, or the hint of it, first came out and he knew he was caught in some sort of a dead end.

Now, there is a question here as to whether under the discretional provisions of the Judges Act any government should be allowed to give him a pension. I say, sir, that there is no question of discretion involved here at all, that he was guilty by any admission he might have made, by resignation before the guillotine fell on him in parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) asked me two questions. I am sorry I cannot read my own writing but I think I remember what the hon. member was saying. The first question was whether there was any deal, with provision to a pension, or something of that order. The answer is no. Neither the government nor myself made any deal with Mr. Justice Landreville regarding pension. The second question was whether the government was firmly bent on giving any such pension, and the answer is no. The government is not firmly bent on giving any pension.

Beyond those two simple answers, Mr. Speaker, if I have a moment I might comment on some other aspects of the hon. member's statement. He took offence at the fact that I said I would not give an undertaking to parliament that I would necessarily consult with it on this question, and I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) say "shame" when the answer was quoted as being no. There is nothing under the law of parliament or of the land that would make me give such an undertaking to parliament. Hon. members know the law pertaining to judges and to judges' pensions. They can read it.

There are cases where the government by order in council can give a pension. I have no intention of intimating that this is a case where the government would give a pension, but the answer I gave was perfectly proper because I stand by the letter of the law.

Mr. Knowles: There is a question of parliamentary morality.

Mr. Trudeau: On the question of parliamentary morality, sir, I think the shoe is on the other foot. I am a little distressed that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) should have made such an accusation about Mr. Justice Landreville committing perjury.

Mr. McCleave: He did.

Mr. Trudeau: Sir, this is gratuitous affirmation by the hon. member.

Mr. McCleave: It is not. He did.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member knows, Justice Landreville has been found guilty of no crime under the laws of this country. In the view of the parliamentary committee and of the commissioner, hon. Mr. Justice Rand, he has been found guilty of conduct, not on the bench but as a private person, guilty of conduct unbecoming a judge, that is to say, in meeting the high standards which we demand, and I think rightly so, of judges in this land. But he has been found guilty of no crime, and I personally do not subscribe to the kind of persecution upon which some members of the opposition seem to be bent since we got Justice Landreville's resignation.

Surely this is what we were hoping for. Surely hon. members were not looking forward with glee to the procedure of a joint parliamentary address. Surely if Mr. Justice Landreville resigned this should be the end of the matter, once the government has accepted the resignation. I do not share at all the kind of thinking which is behind the question asked by the hon. member of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the minister has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MAINTENANCE AND OPERATING EXPENSES, WELLAND CANAL

Question No. 72—Mr. Aiken:

1. Have the maintenance and operating expenses of the Welland ship canal, per vessel transit, increased or decreased since 1959 and, if so, by how much?

2. What is the reason for such increase or decrease?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows: 1. Yes, from $339 in 1960 to $1,082 in 1966.

2. The reasons for the increase are: (a) Increases in payrolls and employee benefits arising from collective agreements negotiated in 1959, 1961, 1964 and 1966. (b) Increases in miscellaneous costs reflecting generally increasing prices, including grants in lieu of municipal taxes at prevailing rates. (c) Following a long period during which maintenance had been kept to a minimum, the need to relieve increasing congestion and to keep traffic moving, which dictated a major improvement program, involving both capital and non-capital expenditures. (d) Increasing traffic, characterized by substantially larger cargoes per transit. This dictated a traffic survey by expert consultants to identify critical areas requiring improvements. This survey, which had been substantially completed by the end of 1966, together with the improvement program in (b) above, produced a 35 per cent increase in canal capacity.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE, P.E.I. NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 107—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Does the government intend to construct a bridge across Rustico harbour as a part of the gulf shore highway of the P.E.I. national park?

2. If so, when is construction scheduled to begin?

3. What reason or reasons prompted the delay in the construction of this portion of the gulf shore highway?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No decision has been reached at this time on a bridge across Rustico harbour pending the results of current engineering investigations being carried out to determine if a bridge is technically sound and advisable. Also, an analysis will be necessary to decide if the benefits derived from such a bridge will equal the cost involved and any effect it may have on the natural and recreational features of the area.

2. Not applicable.

3. See part 1.

NAVIGATIONAL AIDS ON "CAPE BONNIE"

Question No. 126—Mr. McCleave:

On the morning that the Cape Bonnie ran aground, were all of the following navigational aids in complete operation at all relevant times (a) lights on Sambro Island, Chebucto Head, Devils Island and Maugher beach (b) fog signal on Sambro Island (c) fog signal at Chebucto Head and on Maugher beach (d) radio beacon on Sambro Island (e) radio marker beacon on Hartlen Point (f) Loran navigation system (g) Decca navigation system?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g), yes.

Note: With respect to (g), while the Decca navigation system was reported as unreliable between 1.25 and 1.45 a.m. on the morning of February 21, a navigation warning was broadcast at 2.08 indicating that unreliability had occurred during that period; moreover, the system became fully operational again well before the presumed time of the accident and it is not considered that the short period of unreliability could have had any bearing on the accident.

UNDERWATER RIGHTS, ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Question No. 139—Mr. Godin:

1. Is Canada now involved in negotiations with France concerning underwater rights in St. Pierre and Miquelon and, if so, what precisely are the claims made by (a) France (b) Canada?

2. How large is the area under dispute?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada has been engaged in discussions with France for approximately one year with respect to the areas of Canadian and French jurisdiction over the continental shelf south of Newfoundland and more particularly in the vicinity of the St. Pierre and Miquelon islands. The positions of both countries are based on different interpretations of the applicable principles of international law. As negotiations have not yet been brought to a conclusion, it would be contrary to practice to divulge, at this time, the details of the respective claims of Canada and France with regard to this matter.

Questions

2. See answer 1 above.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hydrographic survey of lake Winnipeg has not been re-established this year and therefore (a), (b) and (c) are not applicable. However, it should be noted that a reconnaissance survey of the Red river from Winnipeg to lake Winnipeg will be carried out by a small sub-party during this summer to enable a new small craft chart to be prepared.

GREEK VIOLATION OF EUROPEAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Question No. 219—Mr. Ormiston:

Was the government requested by the international commission of jurists in Geneva on May 13, 1967, to investigate the alleged violation by Greece of the European human rights commission.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is no. It is my understanding that a letter dated May 13, 1967 was addressed by the secretary general of the international commission of jurists to the European governments which are high contracting parties to the European convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to members of the council of Europe. As Canada is not a member of either of these bodies, it was not included among the addressees.

SEASONAL FARM LABOUR

Question No. 223—Mr. Danforth:

1. From what countries were seasonal farm labourers brought into Canada under mutual agreement in 1966 and 1967?
2. What were the total number of seasonal workers brought into Canada in 1966 and 1967?
3. With what countries has the Canadian Department of Manpower and Immigration held direct or indirect negotiations regarding availability of seasonal farm help for Canada?
4. If Bermuda and the Bahamas have not been included, what are the reasons for their exclusion?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In 1966 seasonal farm labourers were brought to Canada from U.S.A. and Jamaica. In 1967 it is expected workers will be coming from U.S.A., Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados.

2. The total number of seasonal workers brought into Canada in 1966 was 2,808, with 2,544 from U.S.A. and 264 from Jamaica. The total number of seasonal workers brought into Canada in 1967 so far is 148.

3. The Canadian Department of Manpower and Immigration has held negotiations with U.S.A., Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados regarding availability of seasonal farm help for Canada.

4. The 1966 movement of workers from Jamaica was an experiment. It was decided this year to broaden the experiment to the two next largest source countries in the Caribbean. A wider extension would have imposed excessive problems of administration. But it has been made clear that, apart from the movement organized by governments, the department will co-operate with employers who, through their own arrangements, hire individual seasonal workers in other commonwealth or French Caribbean territories provided they meet the same terms as those stipulated for the organized movement. If the 1967 movement is successful, and such seasonal labour continues to be required in considerable numbers in 1968, a further extension of the source countries for the organized movement will be considered.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTIONS BY SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister bring the house up to date with regard to the discussions at the United Nations? In particular would he say what significance there is in the fact that France is apparently supporting the U.S.S.R. in the current resolution before the security council; and would the Prime Minister say whether consideration is now being given to the creation of an armed force to maintain the equilibrium in those areas in the Middle East that were recently at war?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend knows the security council was meeting this morning to discuss the resolution of the U.S.S.R. which would have provided for condemnation of Israel and the withdrawal of her forces behind the armistice lines in force before the conflict began a week ago. I am informed that this resolution did not carry. I think it was voted on just before we came into the house, at about 2.20 or 2.25, but it did not carry. I am not sure of the position taken by France on that resolution. There is no information I have which would indicate that France supported the U.S.S.R., but I will know that in a few minutes.

There has been no discussion yet at the security council about the establishment of a United Nations presence, though there has been a good deal of discussion behind the scenes among the members of the council about the desirability of establishing such a presence in the area at this time. I am not sure what the security council will do this afternoon. There are two other resolutions before the council, one by the United States calling for discussions among the parties concerned looking toward the conclusion of arrangements for the withdrawal of the armed forces and the establishment of peace in the Middle East, and the Canadian resolution, which has been before the council for some days, requesting the president of the council and the secretary general to take the necessary measures to bring about effective compliance with the cease fire.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, subject to confirmation—because I do not know what the security council will decide—the council will probably be discussing the United States resolution this afternoon. Whether it would be desirable to bring forward the Canadian resolution for discussion and decision will depend, of course, on developments. It is our view that only after the security council has exhausted its consideration of all these resolutions and any other action it might take would it be appropriate to have a meeting of the general assembly on the subject, as already proposed by the Soviet delegation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say whether in the speech delivered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the NATO meeting, including the page that flew out the window, the guarantee that Canada asks that Israel will not again be subjected to unilateral intimidation included as well the provision that the gulf of Aqaba shall not again be closed? Is that part of the proposition that Canada has in mind, as envisaged by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have seen the speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Knowles: All of it?

Mr. Pearson: All of it, including the page that fell out the window. It just so happens that sometimes a page that falls out the window gets more publicity than other more important pages in a speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Great was the fall thereof.

Mr. Pearson: The Secretary of State for External Affairs put forward ideas which have already been put forward in the house, and I am sure he would be very glad indeed to have this statement tabled. Perhaps that could be done tomorrow morning.

I think it is a little premature at this stage, while discussions are going on, to indicate the exact measures, the international guarantees, which Israel has the right to require for her own security and for the security of the waters leading to the gulf of Aqaba. These two principles which I am sure all members of the house have felt to be very important indeed and should be subject to international arrangements, if possible with international commitments, if we are to ask Israel not to rely on her own strength for her own security.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister two supplementary questions. The first is, how did the Canadian representative at the UN security council vote on the resolution which was considered this morning? My second question is with respect to the speech at the NATO conference by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who made references to guarantees that should be given by the permanent members of the security council. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he would not agree that any guarantees which are given ought to have the support and the prestige of the entire security council rather than the support merely of the big four, if those guarantees are to carry some weight in the years ahead.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, so far as the guarantees of the four permanent members of the security council are concerned, I think it is essential, if there is to be any international guarantee, that it should include these four, of course. As my hon. friend knows, it was in 1950 I think when there was a tripartite guarantee of the territorial integrity of Israel. That was agreed on outside the United Nations and did not prove very effective in the circumstances.

While I feel, as I am sure my hon. friend feels, it is of vital importance that these four countries should participate in any guarantee, it would be even better if they participated as four members of the security council and of the United Nations. I hope it can be done in that way.

So far as the Canadian vote that took place at 2.25 today is concerned, I can only say this; that they did not vote for the Soviet resolution.

Mr. Churchill: Did they abstain?

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand from the Prime Minister's answer that the Canadian delegate abstained? If so, why?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot answer that question, but I do know that in discussions yesterday certain members were opposed to this resolution in most of its parts but felt there were some parts that should not be opposed. They decided that in the circumstances they would abstain on the resolution. Whether that was the decision taken this morning I do not know. I apologize for not being up to date on my information, but the voting only took place at 2.25.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian representative is not acting on instructions from the government of Canada? What instructions were given to the Canadian delegate?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, he is acting on instructions from the government of Canada. But as I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate, in present circumstances the Canadian representative, subject to decisions in principle that have been taken, must be given a certain leeway in carrying them out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask if any discussions so far have been held regarding the early reopening of the Suez canal; or must this await a settlement of the other issues that are involved?

Mr. Pearson: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether there have been any discussions among the governments most concerned about the reopening of the Suez canal which has been blocked, as my hon. friend knows, by ships which have been sunk in the canal. I am sure those countries that are most concerned, which would be the countries that used the canal most, will be holding discussions. I cannot at the moment say whether these discussions have begun. I do not know of any discussions which have taken place within the UN on this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question regarding certain ships and he said he would endeavour to ascertain the position. Has he been able to do so?

Mr. Pearson: We have asked our representative in the United Arab Republic to get us all the information he can about those ships. We know, of course, where they are, but we are trying to get information about the condition of the men on the ships. We have not got that information yet.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A related question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman give consideration to suggesting to the government of Israel that in view of the present Israeli military position, that country might make a magnanimous gesture by offering to help train the large group of Arab refugees to assist in their resettlement? And will Canada suggest to the other countries with which we are associated that we might help to finance such an operation should it be approved?

Mr. Pearson: We have already begun, together with other countries in the United Nations, to consider this aspect of the problem, one which was brought up yesterday in this house. I cannot say much more than I said yesterday, except that if any arrangement of this kind is made we shall certainly have to participate not only in terms of money but in terms of accepting some of these refugees.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I add supplementary information to the answer given to the question asked about the voting which took place a few moments ago in New York on the resolution in question, the Soviet resolution. On the paragraph dealing with condemnation of Israel there were four members of the council in favour of that paragraph, the Soviet union, Bulgaria, Mali and India. All the other members of the council abstained. On the paragraph dealing with withdrawal by Israel there were six members in favour, the four I have mentioned plus Nigeria and one other, and the remaining nine members of the council abstained.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPLICATION TO STAFF OF BILINGUAL BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the 7 per cent bonus for bilingual personnel.

Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell the house what is happening with regard to implementation and when the officers and secretaries of the House of Commons will receive this bonus?

Mr. Speaker: The first question should be placed on the order paper and the second should be put to the Chair in the usual manner.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GREATER UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS TO UNEMPLOYED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the opinion expressed by Professor Vincent Bladen, whose studies and recommendations provided the foundation for the Canada-United States auto trade pact, that more generous unemployment insurance benefits should be substituted for the special assistance known as TAB, now available to those who lose their jobs as a result of this pact, would the minister say whether he is prepared to give this suggestion favourable consideration?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I read with great interest a newspaper report of Professor Bladen's views. When a man with his background makes a suggestion of this kind I can assure the hon. member it will receive serious and prompt consideration.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—THREATENED STRIKE BY SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): May I take this opportunity to deal with a question raised yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition with reference to a telegram that he stated had been sent to me by Mr. Leonard McLaughlin of the S.I.U. threatening a strike. The right hon. gentleman asked what action, if any, the government was taking to prevent a possible work stoppage.

I can advise the house that while I was on my way back from the I.L.O. conference in Geneva earlier in the week a telegram from Mr. McLaughlin was received in my office alleging that Canada Steamship Lines, with whom his organization was engaged in a contractual dispute, had unilaterally attempted to change working conditions. In my absence the officials of the department intervened at once, and a meeting was arranged between the representatives of the shipping company and the union. The discussion took place this morning I believe and the matter has been satisfactorily settled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HATE LITERATURE

REPORTED DISTRIBUTION TO MEMBERS BY MAIL FROM MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) put a question to the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Pennell) on hate propaganda against the Jews being distributed through the Canadian mails by a Montreal association.

In reply to this question, Mr. Speaker, I may say that my department has concluded its investigation on the purported use of the mails by L'Alerte de l'Occident, P.O. Box 185, Postal Station "R", Montreal, to distribute hate literature. Our counsellors feel that these writings are obscene and scurrilous and thus come under the prohibition provided for by section 153 of the Criminal Code prohibiting the use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting obscene and scurrilous material.

On June 9, 1967, I therefore signed an interim prohibition order stopping the delivery of any material mailed by or to the aforesaid organization.

DOMINION DAY

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF JULY 3 AS STATUTORY HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. I refer to the statement he made on June 9 when he announced July 3 as a public holiday to celebrate confederation. There appears to be considerable confusion as to whether July 1 is still a statutory holiday in addition to July 3 as proclaimed by the Prime Minister. Would he clarify this, because questions are being asked all across the country about the matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, July 1 is still the statutory holiday, Dominion day—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —known legally and constitutionally as Dominion day, but perhaps in view of the fact that this is the one hundredth Dominion day we might be permitted for one year to call it Confederation day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is an afterthought.

Mr. Pearson: July 3 was proclaimed as a public holiday by the federal government so there would be a long week end on this the one hundredth anniversary of our confederation. That was considered to be appropriate. That only has legal effect so far as federal public servants and banks are concerned, but, as an indication, there has been a proclamation of a public holiday, though provincial governments will do as they see fit. I believe some are already taking action in this respect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TELECASTING OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the house leader if he could inform us as to the state of the discussions concerning televising the proceedings of the house.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to my hon. friend for this question because it will give me an opportunity to clear up some of the inaccuracies that have surrounded this matter in the last few days.

As I understand it, prior to my becoming government house leader there had been some discussions with respect to filming procedure on a particular bill in the house as part of the centennial effort by the C.B.C. Apparently, although I cannot confirm this from my personal knowledge, there had been agreement among house leaders about the matter.

At any rate, shortly after I became house leader I was approached by the public affairs department of the C.B.C. and asked about the possibility of filming the progress of a bill through all its stages, or at least parts of those stages during this month. There had been only one bill eligible for this treatment in all its stages, namely the Cape Breton development corporation bill, and I assure members of the house it was not selected because of any local interest on my part.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You can say that again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Confession is good for the soul.

Mr. MacEachen: I felt, Mr. Speaker, that my local interest was sufficiently well known without having it televised.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: At any rate, I did discuss this possibility with two of the house leaders. To my recollection at no time did matters reach the point that it was necessary to consult the house leaders of the remaining parties in the house. At the end of last week from my point of view I had concluded, in consultation with others, that it would not be appropriate at this time to undertake this particular filming, and I communicated to the producer of the public affairs program on Friday last that there had been difficulties in the way of undertaking the filming of this particular bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that personally I am in favour in principle with doing this kind of thing, although I did register objection at that time in respect of this particular bill. The matter of the installation of cameras and the removal of cameras is a matter which is outside my jurisdiction as house leader. May I say, in direct reply to the question, that at a meeting of house leaders this morning I believe we concluded that the filming of the proceedings in respect of this bill by the C.B.C. is now rather a dead issue, although the bill itself will make a magnificent contribution to the economy of Cape Breton.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the C.B.C. has made plans in this regard, would it not now be possible to have this agreed to by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any truth to the rumour that the reason for the minister's decision is that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria are better looking than the minister?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in respect of this matter it is so very important that the people of Canada, and particularly the school children, have some idea concerning the operation of parliament. Therefore I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Under all the circumstances would he not give his support to something being done along this line early next week? If it is not to be in respect of this particular legislation, then perhaps it could be done in respect of some other legislation. The C.B.C. made its plans on the basis of an apparent agreement arrived at among the house leaders before the Minister of National Health and Welfare occupied that position. I think there is a general desire on the part of all Canadians that this be done so the people as a whole and particularly the school children may be given a new idea of the operation of parliament.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree, particularly as a centennial project, that it might be desirable to have the C.B.C. film the progress of a bill through its various stages. It is unfortunate that the C.B.C. did not await a decision on this matter so it could have been planned and carried through in the right way. I hope this can be done during our centennial year. I think the house leaders and others might get together in an effort to see how it can be best planned and done.

This is apart from the general question of television coverage of our debates. I do not know whether other members will agree with me, but I have felt that while this is desirable and inevitable, perhaps the best way to begin would be by filming the proceedings of some of our committees. I hope if that is done the committees will not find themselves unable to meet because they do not have a quorum when the cameras are there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I suggested a long time ago that we start with the committees. That, however, is not the question with which we are faced now. The C.B.C. has planned a program, part of which would be the operation of parliament. Having gone so far as he has now will the Prime Minister, along with the other leaders in the house, do his part so the broadcast can take place here before July 1 in order that the C.B.C. may be enabled to carry out its program, and also so the demands of the Canadian people will be met.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to suggest that the house leaders have a meeting immediately, perhaps tomorrow morning, to see whether it is feasible to do this at this time. If it is not feasible to do it at this time, it certainly should be feasible to do it at the time of the introduction of the first appropriate piece of legislation.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At the same time this is being planned, would the Prime Minister arrange for the substitution of perhaps Quentin Durgens for the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

DRUGS

STEPS TO GIVE CONSUMER BENEFIT OF TAX REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is a follow-up to a question I asked the Minister of Finance last week concerning the increase in drug prices by manufacturers. My question arises as the result of a resolution passed yesterday by the Ontario Pharmacists Association in which these drug increases were confirmed. Is the government taking any action now to see that the tax benefit will be passed on to the consumers?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for sending me notice of this question. I note that a resolution was passed at the meeting which proposed a six months voluntary restraint on prices by manufacturers and distributors, which in the circumstances would be quite desirable. However, I shall be happy to draw this question to the attention of the Minister of Finance and undoubtedly he will wish to reply at an early date.

Mr. Aiken: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he is aware that this resolution which was passed by the retailers really was directed to another body, the manufacturers, and therefore is only a moral restraint and of no legal effect.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DOCTORS AND PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the minister in addressing the Canadian Medical Association in Quebec city, as reported, state that it may be necessary for doctors to see their patients on the basis of priority of illness when the medicare program comes into effect?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not in order. The hon. member may not ask about the accuracy of reported statements.

Mr. Rynard: Did the minister say this?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question which should not be asked.

Mr. Rynard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I said it has been reported that the minister said this. I am asking him as to the accuracy of the statement.

Mr. Speaker: I would think neither question is acceptable or in order. In respect of statements made outside the house by a minister, the only question which can be asked is whether the reported statement represents government policy, and this question must be directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his discussions with the Canadian Medical Association in Quebec was it brought to the attention of the minister by the members of that association that Canada is facing a serious shortage of medical manpower? If this is so, could the minister inform the house what position he took in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this question is in order.

TRADE

FURNITURE—POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF GENEVA TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister allay the fears of the furniture manufacturers of Canada by assuring us and the house that this is not one of the industries which will be opened up following the tariff negotiations under the Kennedy round.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the furniture industry, along with other industries, will have to wait until the results of the negotiations are known. I do not think, however, this industry need have any more fears than other industries. The government has taken note of all these contingencies.

REPORTED LACK OF DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL SPEAKING JAPANESE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the rather startling disclosure yesterday that this department has no personnel who are fluent in the Japanese language, has the minister any announcement to make regarding a crash program of language training or a recruiting drive to fill this serious gap?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the question is one which should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

PROPOSED NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister received a submission from the Canadian political council on youth asking for support in promoting a national conference on political education? I might say this idea is receiving a wide measure of support, and the program is one which is highly desirable. Has the minister replied to this request and, if so, is the reply favourable?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, a certain proposal did come in and was referred to the ad hoc committee, which rejected it and any support for it through public funds. The centennial commission, however, as part of the youth travel program has approved a grant if this program goes ahead. I have had the situation looked at by the citizenship branch to see whether they are prepared to make a grant in this regard. When further information is available I shall be glad to advise the house.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FROBISHER BAY—INQUIRY AS TO HOUSING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Does the department intend to carry on the intensive development program at Frobisher Bay by building this year some houses for Eskimos and government personnel?

There is some urgency, Mr. Speaker, on account of the short navigation period in those northern areas.

Mr. Speaker: I think just the same that this question should be put on the order paper, but if the hon. member feels that there is a real urgency, he could have it considered at the time of adjournment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED LAY-OFFS BY DRY DOCK COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister about a question I put to him on Monday as to whether he had received a telegram from the marine workers' and boilermakers' industrial union, local No. 1, Vancouver, in which it was claimed that the Burrard Dry Dock Company Limited was in the process of laying off some 350 of its 800 employees. Has the Prime Minister been able to activate any department of government to take some action in respect of this very serious situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I received a note about this yesterday, but I do not seem to have it today. Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to answer this question tomorrow.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including the administration of the Explosives Act, and Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History, $4,315,000.

The Chairman: Hon. members can find vote No. 1 on page 78 of the blue book and the details at page 82.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Chairman, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, conceived on December 17, 1965, when the Prime Minister announced an important redistribution of responsibilities among the departments, was born normally nine months later, on October 1, 1966, date of the proclamation of the Government Organization Act.

The estimates which I introduce today, and which relate to the needs of the department as far as staff, buildings, equipment, operating costs, etc. are concerned, therefore reflect the enthusiasm and the vitality, as well as the evolutive character, the future prospects, a philosopher would say, of a body less than one year old.

Mr. Chairman, I do not need to show the importance of the new department. When the reorganization took place, the most enlightened commentators did that. It is trite to say that scientific research, the optimum use of natural resources, particularly the power sources, are of fundamental importance to the economic development of Canada.

This young department counting, it is true, on the experience of one of its components, the former Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, has begun already to influence the economic policy of the Canadian government and to translate into administrative facts, programs and deeds, the aspirations and good intentions which brought about its creation.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, many debates and questions in this house have given me the impression that hon. members are not as much disposed to question the needs of my department's activities as they are to asking whether we are moving as quickly as possible in these vital fields of national concern. So I shall do my best today to demonstrate that this is so and to answer any other questions which hon. members might wish to raise.

At this point I should like to say a few words about each of the main sectors of my department, namely mines and geosciences, mineral development, water and energy. First of all, in respect of mines and geosciences, the principle objective of this sector is to keep up a high level of survey and research in mineral and geosciences so we can learn better the nation's potential mineral resources, provide industry with the data required for discovery, exploration and utilization of the nation's mineral deposits, assist in the planning and development of these resources and contribute to man's knowledge of the sciences of the earth and its contained minerals.

In developing resources the first requirement is good maps, and to this end we expect that the four mile mapping will be completed in this centennial year; that is four miles to the inch, as hon. members certainly know. We will then be able to devote all our attention to the specialized maps required to develop resources in various parts of the country. The reconnaissance geological study of Canada is progressing very well, and we expect that the initial mapping will be completed in about five years.

In astronomy, the new Queen Elizabeth II telescope and associated instruments on Mount Kobau are now in the advanced stage of planning, as is the associated institute of astronomy on the campus of the University of British Columbia. I may give that in passing as an example of the co-operation that exists between the department and the universities of Canada.

Studies of gravity effects have always been important in geological studies, but it is now known that they have extreme importance for satellite investigations, and this particular aspect of the department's activity is being stepped up.

The department carries basic studies on metals, mineral processing and mineral extraction. Let me give you some illustrations of that work. The department is carrying out studies on the bacterial leaching of uranium ore, a method which has considerable promise for treating lower grade deposits in Canada and elsewhere.

Another example is the fundamental studies of the characteristics of rocks and how they break—matters of great importance to the mineral industry—that have recently been undertaken on a large scale at the research centre established at Elliot Lake. Studies have also been undertaken on the addition of small amounts of uranium and gold to alloys in an attempt to improve the characteristics of these alloys, by reducing corrosion, for example. The mines branch also operates a laboratory studying the effects of atmosphere on explosives. These are examples of the practical work which is being done in this sector of the department.

Special investigation of various instruments, their development and their improvement, is a continuing study in the department, including such things as tellurometers which have greatly speeded up our topographic mapping by providing a fast and precise way of measuring distances. For the benefit of those of you who wonder what a tellurometer is, it is a scientific device for measuring distances with great accuracy by using waves.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Remote sensing devices in the geophysical field have also greatly speeded up and improved the utility of aircraft for locating areas favourable for the occurrence of ore deposits. I might add as an aside that the department supplies research grants to universities, and these are designed to stimulate research and training in fields of concern to the department. The total amount for the department this year is in the order of $350,000 for research in mining, geological sciences, geophysics, astronomy, geography and surveys and mapping.

The mineral development sector has administrative and economic research responsibilities. For example, that sector issues exploration permits in respect of all minerals in offshore areas south of the sixtieth parallel and in Hudson bay and Hudson strait, as well as in respect of certain minerals in federal lands in the provinces.

Offshore exploration for petroleum continued to be active during 1966, both on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, with the various permit holders carrying out seismic and core-drilling surveys. Needless to say the acreage of offshore exploration permits is considerably greater than the petroleum exploration areas in the western provinces and has tremendous economic importance for the future.

As is well known, federal jurisdiction over offshore mineral resources has been contested by the provinces, and the adjudication of this question, at least with respect to the western coast, is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Along with these new tasks this sector, that is, the mineral development sector, is continuing and expanding studies in the fields of mineral economics, mineral commodities, energy resources, resource management, and mine assistance.

The same group also serves as the repository of mineral industry statistics and information. Its functions include acquiring first hand knowledge of mineral industry activity throughout Canada by on-site investigations, from exploration to marketing, and the publication of reports in this connection.

Activities of the group cover regional studies of the Atlantic provinces' mineral economy, including the Cape Breton coal situation; preparation of a digest of the mining laws of Canada; assessment of several mineral projects throughout Canada for which federal support has been requested; and finally participation in international minerals work through such agencies as the United Nations lead-zinc study group, the organization for economic co-operation and development, and the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

I might mention with regard to this last named institution that the department has taken part in the Kennedy round of negotiations which concluded on May 15, 1967. The results of these negotiations indicate that trade and competition in a wide range of products will be freer than ever before thus providing a country like Canada with larger markets and offering our economy broader opportunities for expansion, not only in the field of raw materials but also for industrial products. All this does not necessarily mean that a fabulous bonanza is to be envisaged for all Canadian mineral producers, but the lowering or elimination of several tariffs can be viewed as a healthy development with long-range benefits for our country.

The mineral development group has also the task of co-ordinating, for the external aid office, education and training programs for mineral scientists, technologists and economists brought to Canada under the various aid programs, and of advising on mineral projects undertaken by Canada as an aid to developing countries. Other responsibilities of the group include the administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, the administration of the roads to resources program, and advice on legislation and tax matters concerning the mineral industry.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, before the minister starts on the next section of his report, could he tell us whether he has any information when the supreme court decision with respect to offshore mineral resources is likely to be handed down?

Mr. Pepin: I cannot give an answer offhand but I expect to receive a note from my advisers in the next few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the third sector is that of hydrology.

I need not, I am sure, insist on the importance of water for the economic life and even cultural life of our country. Everyone is aware of the many domestic and industrial uses of water.

Canada has been bountifully provided with water—Providence must be thanked for that —but that does not mean that we have no problems. Indeed, we have several of them: floods, droughts, pollution, conflicts between users, utilization of tidal waters, etc.

My department has been entrusted the task of developing, of defining a national water policy, the task of co-ordinating the federal responsibilities in this field, of improving through research our understanding of hydrological problems, and that of co-operating with the provinces in this field of research as well as in the implementation of programs of general interest.

Federal-provincial co-operation is essential, Mr. Chairman. Assuredly, the main jurisdiction in hydrology is provincial; still, the federal government, because of its responsibilities in other spheres, namely fisheries transport, trade, defence, public works of interest to more than one province; in those of international relations, agriculture and what not, has obvious responsibilities in this field.

When dealing with water, we are therefore touching upon a field where federal and provincial jurisdictions are shared, where they inevitably overlap. Consequently, federal-provincial co-operation is indispensable.

If the water level of the great lakes drops or if their waters become more polluted, Ontario is not the only province to suffer; Quebec is also affected, for the St. Lawrence is, in a way, its main street.

Therefore, a good Canadian water policy necessarily requires the co-ordination of federal and provincial policies in this field, and even concerted action in many cases.

With the enthusiastic support of my officials, Mr. Chairman, I have tried, since coming to office, to improve the co-operation between the central government and the provinces in this field. For example, our participation in the International Water for Peace Conference held in Washington, with regard to both personnel and the exhibition which took place within the scope of the conference, was really a joint federal and provincial contribution. The future will show the progress that was made.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion a department or branch of a department, to be successful, must have good personnel, a good administrative structure, good legislation, a good research division and good relations with the outside, with the other departments, other levels of government, industry and the public. That is what we have tried to accomplish with regard to hydrology. We have tried to equip ourselves in each of those fields.

A few words, for example, concerning administration. The department had inherited the water resources branch from the department of northern affairs and national resources. It had also inherited the hydraulic research branch and the marine sciences branch from the department of mines and technical surveys. These three elements have been grouped and reinforced and have become the hydrology services, which will now comprise three branches.

First, the inland water branch, second, the marine science branch and, third, the policy and planning branch.

We have hired and continue to hire staff as quickly as the financial resources of the government and of the department will allow us, as well as the human resources of the country. Today's estimates will help us meet our requirements.

In the legislative field, we hope to introduce this fall, the Canadian waters act, whose main purposes would be to promote co-ordination between federal departments as well as a concerted action with the provinces. In this connection, we have consulted with the provinces, and we shall continue to do so, in order to introduce to the house a piece of legislation that will be acceptable by the greatest possible number of people.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

A basic requirement to national water policies and programs, Mr. Chairman, to the establishment of guides and priorities for action and to the development of specific programs, is a Canadian water inventory of supply and demand of water. There have been people asking me or asking the department, will we or will we not export water to the United States, should we provide for the diversion of rivers from area to area? My answer is always the same. I do not know what we are going to do on the subject of export of water to the U.S., but one thing is absolutely certain. Our present responsibility is to find out as precisely as possible how much water we have and as precisely as possible also how much water we are going to need. I feel this is the main responsibility of the water sector at this time, and that responsibility we are going to fulfil as well as we can.

On the supply side of the inventory, we are rapidly expanding our network of stations to obtain data on water quantities, water levels and water quality. Most stream flow gauging stations are operated in co-operation with the provinces, with the provinces paying 50 per cent of the construction costs and a portion of the operating costs. There are now 2,285 of these operating in Canada, that is, gauging stations. There are now also 124 tide gauging stations, 168 water quality stations and a network of ground water and sediment stations. The estimates provide for a considerable expansion of all this network. So you see, Mr. Chairman, by getting this program working we should, within a minimum of time, obtain a good assessment of water supply and water quality.

In so far as water demand is concerned, this is the other side of the picture. Our information on existing demand and potential demand for water in various basins and regions is inadequate for sound policy formation and planning. With the formation of the policy and planning branch in the water sector, studies are planned in co-operation with the provinces to develop and carry out this part of the inventory. Work will be under way soon.

In addition to good personnel, a good administrative structure, good legislation and a good inventory, Mr. Chairman, we also need good research on water in order to provide scientific and technical insights on which to carry out programs. This is particularly true, in my opinion, when we are dealing with the great lakes. The International Joint Commission has fairly recently given us an interim report on the deplorable situation of pollution in lakes Ontario and Erie. In order to cope with the situation, therefore, we are coming up with a major new interdisciplinary water research centre which is going to be called the Canada Centre for Inland Waters at Burlington on lake Ontario, near Hamilton. This centre will provide answers to some of the management problems of the great lakes, and at the same time will provide technical support to water pollution abatement programs throughout Canada. In due course, the research station at Burlington will be useful to both federal and provincial institutions. The estimates provide for a start on building this vital research centre.

The fact that we are busy setting up conditions for action does not mean we are not doing anything. Walking is still the best way to learn how to walk. Although involved in these preparations, the department has been very active and has been doing things. I should like to give some examples of the things we have been doing. We are continuing joint programs in Ontario and British Columbia under the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act. We now have under way new joint studies and working arrangements in both provinces.

In addition, we are undertaking with Ontario a study of northern Ontario waters. We are completing the Winnipeg floodway program and we are negotiating with British Columbia a joint program for flood abatement in the lower Fraser Valley. We hope shortly to join with the three prairie provinces in a major water supply study in the Saskatchewan-Nelson system. We will be stepping up our federal-provincial programs as fast as the required legislation, institutional arrangements and staff can be supplied. We are thus moving on a number of fronts to meet our new responsibilities to evolve a sound national water program. I used the word "evolve" but I do not like it much. I think we have a national water policy. It may not be as good as every one of us would like it to be, but we have one and we should improve it to make it as comprehensive as possible.

I should like now to say a word about oceanography. Members know that the continental shelf and surrounding oceans have great importance to Canada. It is estimated that about one quarter of Canada's land area lies beneath the ocean. We are developing a strong competence to study and know the continental shelf and oceans surrounding our shores. Recently I visited the Bedford Institute and was very much impressed with the work done there. This knowledge is being employed and will be increasingly employed in support of exploration and development which will have an important impact on the economy of our maritime regions as well as the entire country.

I come now to the fourth sector of the department, the energy sector. The organization of this particular group is not as advanced as the water sector group. Like everyone else, we had to establish priorities. The Public Service Commission has been searching for some time for a possible person to appoint to the position of assistant deputy minister of energy. I hope the appointment will not be delayed too long.

The energy sector is to be responsible for the development of energy policies at the national level. Organizational planning has been based on full recognition of the continuing important contribution to be made in this field by the several crown companies and agencies concerned which are accountable to the house through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This sector of the new department will assist in the co-ordination of policy advice which is prepared for me in these several agencies. I might mention, however, that there have already been some considerable accomplishments in this field during the brief lifetime of the new department.

Hon. members have been informed of the creation of the Bay of Fundy tidal power programming board, with the initiative of this department. This is a joint venture of the New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Canadian governments to try to find a feasible, economic and engineering basis for the development of the tremendous resources of tidal power which are matched nowhere else in the world.

[Mr. Pepin.]

My department has also picked up the question of a trans-Canada grid for electrical transmission. A federal-provincial committee has met on several occasions and obtained reports from private consultants. I am hoping that the several interested governments will receive a report from this committee in the not too distant future.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Hon. members have been informed on successive occasions of plans for the development on a large scale of the hydroelectrical potential of the Nelson River in northern Manitoba. I expect to make an announcement in the very near future respecting the conclusion of an agreement with the province of Manitoba to this end.

I have tried, Mr. Chairman, to indicate throughout my speech the responsibilities, the realizations and the potentialities of the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. However, I should like to point out again that the nucleus of this young department is the former department of mines and technical surveys, with its long experience in research and development as applied to the mineral resources of Canada. This technical skill will remain as the central core of the new department, and we are building around it the special skills we require for developing national policies related to our natural resources. The great advantage we now have is the technical and scientific skilled personnel who are working hand in hand with the specialists who are developing ideas and plans for the national programs. Quite often they are the same people.

Government expenditure on research is growing, and growing rapidly, as it should. The research arm of this department is carrying out investigations directly related to the economic development of the country, and over the years their pay-off has already been substantial. May I indicate two examples. The old maps of the geological survey of the area at Elliot Lake were the basis for development of the whole Elliot Lake uranium project. The processes for extracting the metals from the ores were developed at the mines branch. As another example, our geographers provided the basic information for ARDA and are providing specialized information for E.M.O. Our topographers have made available maps and air photographs required for the assessment and study of our resources.

In general, Mr. Chairman, I think it is right to say that mines and technical surveys, the old department, had been mostly concerned with providing the basic data for industry, for other branches of government, for other levels of government, in order to bring about the maximum resource development in the country. The new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will, of course, go on doing that but it will do still more. It will be more involved in the development of basic governmental policies and the development of programs in order to bring about maximum use of these resources, and over a much wider area than that covered by the previous department. I hope that these policies will meet with the approval of members of this house.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think the report of the minister is a tribute to his department. Personally I had hoped that we would hear something of the minister's own views on this very important department over which he presides. In my judgment there is no department of the government that is more important to the present and future development of Canada than the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It can be described as a Cinderella department, and any ambitious young politician who wants to do great things for this country could ask for no higher task than to have in his possession the portfolio that the minister holds.

Just about a year ago, Mr. Chairman, when the bill to reorganize the various departments of government came up for discussion, it was a Conservative proposal that gave the minister the powers he needed to move forward and to take initiative on his own. The minister is quite correct when he says that the old department of mines and technical surveys fulfilled the function of supplying information to all departments of government, and over the years it has done a wonderful job. I have said this before and I repeat it. The men who manned this department were scientific personnel, the type of personnel who are the eyes and ears of the future of Canada.

Today we waited for the views of the minister. One year ago when the reorganization bill was before us, with the co-operation of the opposition the bill was put through in the minister's absence. I asked the minister presiding over the bill certain questions. Because they covered matters which are so important I am going to repeat them today. The minister has apparently not had his attention directed to the suggestions that were made, even though we had a firm commitment from the Minister of National Revenue that they would be.

I should like to quote from page 5784 of Hansard for May 31, 1966, where I am reported as follows:

We should like to know what is the minister's policy in relation to the national oil policy on such questions as (a) setting annual targets to industry. We have not had a statement from the minister on this subject for two years now. Then, (b), what is the attitude of the minister toward building a refinery at Quebec, which negates the background of the whole national oil policy? (c) What is his policy on the second oil pipe line to Montreal? (d) What is his attitude toward oil and gas regulations in the north? (e) What are his attitudes with regard to the oil and gas regulations on the continental shelf which are now in existence? These are matters, Mr. Chairman, vital to the whole future of Canada, and we must have a clearcut statement from the minister so that we know where we are going.

The second major question which I want to put before the commitee for the minister to discuss when he makes his statement deals wth the national energy policy. We should like from the minister some statement (a) as to the relations he foresees between the Federal Power Commission of the United States and the National Energy Board of Canada. There is obviously trouble brewing on this front unless there is a clearcut policy to avoid the difficulties ahead. Then, (b) we also want from the new minister a statement on the national transmission grid, which is vital to the whole concept of sovereignty and using our energy as a basic part of strengthening our bargaining power in the field of resource use on the continent. (c) We shcu'd like a statement from the minister with regard to the relationship between atomic power and hydro reserves in Canada. (d) We should like projections on what the minister foresees is the energy demand for new industrial complexes in Canada during the next 20 to 30 years.

The third subject, Mr. Chairman, deals with water policy. (a) We desperately need something which has been recommended since 1962, and that is a study on the suply of water in Canada.

The minister mentioned something about this and I will come back to it.

I can go into detail on this, but that is sufficient to indicate the subject. (b) Even more importantly, we need a study of the demand.

The minister also mentioned this today and I will come back to it too.

If we have to use United States figures and translate them into figures showing Canadian use, this is a little embarrassing when we are trying to estimate our demand for water. Before we can discuss water intelligently we have to know the supply and demand picture. Then, (c), we should like from the minister officially in his new capacity a statement on the NAWPA plan which the United States has proposed and has been pushing on the legislators of this country in private sessions. And, (d), we should like a statement from the minister on the Kiernan plan proposed by a Canadian engineer. We should like the direction of the minister on these subjects.

There, Mr. Chairman, is a list of about 12 subjects, on two of which we got partial answers today. You can understand the deep distress of those of us who had something to do with first giving Canada an awareness that our future depends upon the development of the resources of this country in a rational and logical manner.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The Conservative party formed the government in June, 1957. I became a minister on August 22, 1957. On February 12, 1958 the government announced a development policy for Canada. It took us about eight months to prepare what this government has been unable to prepare in four years. This is a matter most vital to the whole future of this country. It is the basis for the future jobs of unborn generations. We have had a report about what a fine job the department is doing. I accept that and I praise it wholeheartedly. But where does the minister stand? I remind the minister that when the bill was passed it was the Conservatives on this side of the house who proposed the amendment to the bill which gave him some power. These are the terms of the amendment which was introduced on behalf of the government by the Minister of National Revenue:

8B(1) In carrying out his responsibilities under Section 8A, the minister may formulate plans for the conservation, development and use of the resources specified in that section and for research with respect thereto, and with authority of the governor in council and in co-operation with other departments, branches and agencies of the government of Canada, provide for carrying out such plans.

We wanted to hear about such plans, but what have we heard? Continuing:

(2) The minister may co-operate with the provinces and with municipalities in formulating and carrying out any plans under subsection (1).

Today we heard a little about this in regard to the Saskatchewan-Nelson system and one or two others. We started these projects but they are still in the planning stage. It continues:

(3) In carrying out his duties and functions under this section, the minister may consult with and inaugurate conferences of representatives of producers, industry, the universities, labour and provincial and municipal authorities.

These amendments were accepted by the government. Their purpose was to give the minister some power or to create some means by which the minister could use the initiative of the federal government to build this nation. One and a half years later what do we hear about these plans? Very little. There have been studies about this and about that.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

I remind the committee about some things that are well known but about which we have to remind ourselves on every occasion. We live on this continent with the great United States of America. They also conduct studies. I hold in my hand the five volumes of the Paley report of 1952 which warned the president of the United States of that day that the United States was running short of strategic items to maintain its industrial complex. Every one of the shortages that the report warned would exist between 1952 and 1980 represented an opportunity for Canada. Because of this report the Conservative government in 1957-58 was able to come up, at short notice, with a national development plan to take advantage of the opportunities for Canadians. Since then a more sophisticated report in the United States has been made, known as "Resources in America's Future". The subheading is: "Patterns of Requirements and Availabilities." The authors are Hans Landsberg and others. The report deals with projected needs from 1960 to the year 2000. The projections, which are maximum, minimum and average, show all the possibilities that may happen to forestry, water resources, minerals, and what have you. The United States knows what it is short of and what it must do to meet its needs.

On the other side of the ledger, what has been done in Canada? The only substantial action we have taken was to hold a conference in Montreal in 1961, known as the Resources for Tomorrow conference. I hold in my hand the first of the four volumes of the report which points the way that the government must follow. There is no lack of suggestions in these four volumes about what we must do to preserve and better utilize our renewable resources. The conference was very general in its outlook but it did point out objectives.

In sheer desperation the people in the private sector tried to bring about some sort of analysis of Canada's resources. I hold in my hand a book entitled: "Canada: An Appraisal Of its Needs And Resources". It is written by Canadians, by George W. Wilson, Gordon and Judek. These professors, helped by grants, put out a timid, gentle little appraisal which went up to the year 1975, eight years from now. These men performed a task that should have been performed long ago in Canada. Their timid, gentle approach to our needs only points out the urgency of doing something to carry out the suggestions made by the Resources for Tomorrow conference.

I intend to propose two ways in which we can act, and I put forward my propositions in the way I do for the simple reason that I have grave doubts that the government intends to act.

Private enterprise has ample reason to wish to know what the future is for its products. Private enterprise in the United States uses the Landsberg volume to guide it in its projections, as do one or two companies in Canada also. This is my proposal. In the amendments that were included in the bill of last year the minister was given certain powers. Why do we not ask private enterprise, which makes money out of our resources, to conduct research in this field? Perhaps a group of companies could to it. The Conservative government amended the Income Tax Act to allow any group of companies or an individual a 150 per cent exemption on income tax for research—not a 100 per cent exemption for the expenses for this type of research work but 150 per cent. Second, we amended the Combines Investigation Act to allow companies to combine legally if they did so for research purposes. With the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act there is no reason for the minister, in using his responsibilities as a minister of the crown acting on behalf of the people of Canada, not to call groups of our private companies or enterprises together to ask them to do this research work which is so financially advantageous to them.

The private sector need not deal with the water segment of research; it need only take the commodity segment. It could take the Gordon commission report of 1957 as a starting point. It is true that that report is seven or eight years out of date, but it is a starting point. It could be used in conjunction with the Wilson-Gordon book which gives projections up to the year 1975 A.D. Even if the studies are considerably in error, even if they are followed by more sophisticated studies later, if they could include optimum projections varying from the most pessimistic to the most optimistic, they would be of great help.

In saying these words I have in mind an example about which I have spoken in this house before. In 1958 when I was the minister responsible for resources I realized that within seven or eight years, if we did not develop more zinc and lead production in western Canada, we would be forced to import lead and zinc into western Canada. Here we were, a nation with bountiful lead and zinc resources, and private enterprise was not meeting its responsibilities. Apparently our boards of directors could look ahead only for a couple of years. If some of them look ahead for five years they think they are being bold and imaginative.

The government did not fail in its responsibilities. We were the ones who put up the guarantee for Canadian National Railways to build a railway to Great Slave Lake. Today there is a mining operation there, which means we need no longer import lead and zinc into western Canada. Not only are we earning exchange dollars for our country but we have added tremendously to the wealth of this nation. The C.N.R. will get all its money back and receive a profit on the money it borrowed. The company which developed the mine will be paying taxes to the federal treasury next year at the rate, I would expect, of between $12 million and $15 million a year. When you show initiative, when you show you know what you are talking about, when you can push private enterprise into making money and when the treasury will get $15 million a year without spending a nickel, that is good, dynamic government. The word "dynamic" does not describe the present government. If private enterprise will not give us the required commodity output even though it is in its own interest to do so, then the government will have to induce or push them into action.

It is not just an inventory of our resources which is needed. We need a projection of the demand and a projection of the supply in relation to every commodity. Canada undoubtedly is a resource nation and will continue to be one for many years to come. But though we have been a resource nation from the very beginning, there has never been developed in this country a resource philosophy which dominates the thinking of ministers of finance, which dominates the thinking of governments. If our future depends on the use made of these resources, then the whole organization of tax laws should be orientated to this end. Agriculture is one of our great resources. But there has never been a clearcut understanding in Canada by ministers or by governments of the fact that agriculture is not just an orphan to whom a few crumbs are thrown every so often but an important source of wealth which should be so planned and used as to bring the maximum return to our people and serve the world as a result of the ability of our land to produce.

The same is true of our mining industry. We look on it as a means of raising taxes, providing a certain amount of employment and bringing in a certain number of dollars in foreign exchange. We do not look on it as a vital part of the whole economic structure of our country. Our economists use the great ideas of Lord Keynes. Lord Keynes developed a system of economics designed to suit a homogenous, integrated country such as the United Kingdom, a country which was an exporter of manufactured goods and an importer of raw materials. He developed this economic system as a means of avoiding the ups and downs of the economic cycle. We in Canada have transferred this doctrine to our own country without taking account of the fact that Canada is not a homogenous or even an integrated country. We are a country of regions. We are not a sophisticated, mature industrialized country yet. Nevertheless our policies at the national level assume we are all in the same boat. We are not. So if we find two provinces threatened with inflation and eight provinces stagnating, we seek to cure the inflation in two provinces by imposing the same restrictions on the whole country, whether all parts need it or not.

The whole concept of fiscal, monetary and trade policies fails because governments have failed to accept our need for a resource philosophy. What percentage of our resources should we sell abroad in our best interest? What percentage should we process in Canada in our best interest? Certainly we cannot process them all. This is what I mean by a resource philosophy. It must be apparent from the actions of every minister that he understands it. That is the test. Having sat in this house for four years waiting for some sort of leadership, I confess I am at a loss to find evidence of any. The 60 days of decision petered out into stagnation. Then we saw the reorganization of the government. I can honestly say of the present government that they are great at setting up structures. We have heard more structures described to us today than I have heard in this house in ten years. They are great at setting up structures but are wholly lacking when it comes to action. They fail to realize that when a structure is set up there has to be a brain, there has to be a will at the head of that structure, someone who can think and act. This is what is lacking. The government sets up beautiful structures and mans them with the most competent people they can find. But they lack the brain; they lack the will at the top. They are like a leaderless group. All I can say is: dear Lord, how long must we endure?

[Mr. Hamilton.]

I am glad the minister has accepted the fact that we need to study the extent of our water resources. I suppose the best figures we have are those produced by the Resources for Tomorrow conference in 1961. When I hear the minister talking about the need for water it occurs to me that it is important to know not only the extent of the supply but the extent of the demand both now and in the future. I often wonder whether he has referred to the article by Mr. D. Cass-Beggs in volume 1 of the conference background papers. On page 184 appears an estimate of annual water consumption in the principal regions of Canada. The author notes that in 1956 consumption of water in Canada amounted to 10 million acre feet in round figures. He predicts that by 1990 it will have risen to 56 million acre feet.

Why talk in generalities when here is a person who has done the projection? I admit the author had to make his projection by interpolating United States figures. But it appears we have a projection for an increase in water consumption from 10 million acre feet in 1956 to 56 million acre feet in 1990. Whether these figures are entirely accurate or not is beside the point. They are something we can talk about. With all this talk about water, I wish the minister would be a little more definite. Otherwise he may frighten the Canadian people half to death. How much water have we got to meet the expected demand?

The water resources branch of the government has tabulated our river flows and arrived at a total of 2.5 million feet per second based on minimum flows. This works out to 1,620 billion United States gallons of water a day. Translate this into acre feet and we have an indication of our capacity. As a rough yardstick of comparison let us compare our situation with that in the United States. If we have 1,620 billion gallons a day, they have about 650 billion gallons. I should make it clear that the estimate of 650 billion gallons is based on flows of realizable water from surface waters in the United States. Let us take our figure of 1,620 billion gallons a day and reduce it by half. Then consider that today in Canada we are using 10 billion or 12 billion gallons of water a day. We have 800 billion gallons a day to meet that demand. So there is no need for the Canadian people to be terrified for a few years yet.

Naturally we are not likely to give this water away. What attitude was taken by ministers of the crown while Canadians were being assaulted during the last two years by requests from the United States for water. Incidentally, I am glad to hear that these have now been abandoned. Where were the ministers of the crown to defend the Canadian interest by telling the Canadian people and the American people what the United States authorities were asking? They were asking for 120 million acre feet a year under the NAWPA plan. What is the value of an acre foot of water? To my knowledge only one quantitive study has been made. It appears in the Landsberg report at page 385, and is dated 1963. It is estimated with regard to New Mexico, a completely water deficient area:

> —an acre-foot of water used for municipal and industrial purposes engendered over $3,000 of total economic product (a combination of primary value-added and value-added by purchases).

If you want to put this into a simple phrase, the value of an acre foot of water for municipal and industrial purposes is $3,000 a year. The report continued:

> For recreation the range was from $200 to $300 and for agriculture the range was from $40 to $50.

Thus, an acre foot of water is worth over $3,000 a year in industrial production. Yet the Americans had the colossal gall to come to us and ask for 120 million acre feet a year. Let us forget about the recreational and agricultural values for a moment. One hundred and twenty million times $3,000 is $360 billion a year. This is what the Americans were asking. This shows how generous some people can be with other people's wealth. I never heard a minister of the crown give these figures to a Canadian audience or to an American audience. It is the duty of a minister to defend, and to point out the facts so that the Canadian people will not be robbed of their heritage.

There are many questions I would like to ask and the 12 points I listed a year ago still remain unanswered. I have read the reports of the standing committee which met last year when the new department was being formed, and I have many questions to ask on energy and all these other matters but time does not allow. I would think this committee might be well advised, in view of the importance of the department with which we are dealing, to ask all the questions that should be asked, and to do this we need a longer day than a Wednesday. We in the opposition are allowed an hour and a half to make a few comments and ask questions about this department upon which so much depends. I hope the sense of responsibility of the minister will be such that he will go to his house leader and ask that the committee get another chance to deal with the estimates of his department.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the committee might resume tomorrow. I agree with the hon. member that I did not answer all his questions but my introductory remarks were related to the estimates of the department. I will deal with some of his questions when we reach the National Energy Board estimates.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to pay a very hearty compliment to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle on the excellent speech he has just made. I might take advantage of an inadvertent slip of the tongue on his part when he mentioned a leadership mob to say that his speech should give him a good start.

As was mentioned by the hon. member we should have much more time to deal with this most important department of government. But since we do not I will confine my remarks to one particular policy of the minister and the government.

I wish to protest against a government policy which has brought a certain situation in Canada to a crisis stage. This policy might best be described as fawning, craven subservience and, at the worst, possibly a clandestine conspiracy. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking about the government's policy or lack of policy with regard to a vital resource and industrial lifeline of Canada, natural gas and gas pipe lines and the vacillating of the government in that regard.

I do not want to go into the pros and cons of the north line versus the south line. This question has been debated at great length in the house without much change in opinions or positions on either side, but I think it would be worth while to review briefly just what has caused the present situation. To do this I have to go back ten years when a policy was being determined in this field by the House of Commons. at that time we had a very strong policy. Whatever else may be said about the late C. D. Howe and his cohorts, nobody at that time denied the strength of their policies when they decided on them. Indeed, many people who were familiar with the situation in those days must now wonder that we can look back on that Liberal government and realize it was much better than the one we have at present.

That government laid down a policy that natural gas must be transported over a Canadian route, that it must supply Canadian needs and, above all, that it would remain in the control of the Canadian government and the Canadian people. At that time the government of Ontario also played an active part by insisting, at least to the extent of its ability, that the pipe line should go through Canada and, second, that it should go through northern Canada in order to develop northern Ontario.

Mr. Pepin: Would the hon. member kindly indicate to me where the government of Ontario insisted on the line being in Canada, and where in Canada?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I have documents that stack about a foot high which I can let the minister see, but from memory I recall that the government of Ontario of that day came out publicly and strongly indicating its desire and insistence that this was what should be done.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, the hon. member was not referring to the present situation?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): No, I am referring to the situation ten years ago.

Mr. Pepin: I apologize.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It was the government of Hon. Leslie Frost at that time. What did we see happen after a few years went by? First of all we had the National Energy Board meekly and mildly warning about the developing shortage of natural gas in eastern markets. Unfortunately that is about the only role the National Energy Board is empowered to play, to warn meekly and mildly, and to issue licences when people make applications.

For reasons which became only too apparent later, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines deliberately ignored the growing shortage in eastern markets. There was an ignoring or unawareness on the part of the present government of the situation that was developing. I do not care which it was. Both are a condemnation of a government that is supposed to have the interests of the country at heart.

Finally we had the blackmail attempt by Trans-Canada to rush everything through at a moment's notice in order to enable them to have their cake and eat it too. Then we saw the first reaction of the government, the only good reaction I can recall it having in the past four years, but unfortunately the reaction lasted for only five weeks. The government was unable to resist the pressures brought to bear on it and did an about-face. But it lapsed once more into its familiar role of vacillation, the role of the innocent and helpless bystander, the role of a meek observer of vital decisions having far reaching effects on the country it was elected to protect.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The government said, "Let Trans-Canada decide, let the federal power commission decide, let anybody decide so long as we do not have to make a decision as to what we should do." Unfortunately the minister was the epitome of this tragedy of government on the unhappy day when, in reply to a question as to when we might expect a decision, he rose, shrugged his shoulders and said, "I wish we knew". In fairness to the Ontario government I should say that they had a death-bed repentance. Finally, after bitter debates arose in this house and across northern Ontario and Queens Park, they stirred themselves to raise their voice along with others and decided to make an intervention with regard to this problem.

I say we have had enough delay in respect of this matter. If we look at the Globe and Mail of May 25 last we will see the following in a big write-up about this situation:

> Testifying before the commission last month, N. John McNeill, Trans-Canada vice-president, indicated that the company would require a decision on its application for certification of the Great Lakes project by the end of May.
>
> In the event no decision was forthcoming by that time, or the ruling was unfavourable, Trans-Canada would have no alternative but to proceed with its plan to loop sections of its existing line east of Winnipeg to assure the supply of additional gas for Ontario and Quebec next winter.
> Panhandle's application for renewed hearings of the Great Lakes scheme may well be rejected by the commission but such a ruling by the F.P.C. would almost certainly be cited by the company as one of its grounds for challenging the legality of any F.P.C. decision in favour of Great Lakes if Panhandle resolves to take it to the courts.

This situation certainly should be clear to anyone who is interested in this matter and who has followed it through the newspapers over the past year. Everyone should have been able to realize that no decision could be made by the end of May. We see now that no decision was made by the end of May. Today, in the middle of June, still no decision has been made. The crisis is growing. The markets are getting shorter and shorter.

In yesterday's Globe and Mail we find further comment on this same subject. From an article by Bruce Macdonald I read the following:

> The decision by the Federal Power Commission on Trans-Canada Pipe Line Ltd's proposal for a new natural gas line to eastern Canada via the United States—expected this week—may confront the troubled company with yet another dilemma.
>
> There appears to be a reasonable possibility that the application on behalf of Great Lakes Transmission Co. may be approved with an important condition attached deleting all the current provisions for net export in the United States, which in turn would raise important questions about the economic feasibility of the entire project.

The final paragraph reads as follows:

> Given these circumstances, Trans-Canada might find itself forced either to scale down the 34-inch line it had originally planned to build through the United States or to abandon the southern link altogether in favour of looping the existing Canadian line east of Winnipeg.

This points out in an all too startling and clear manner just what a tremendous hoax has been played on this government over the past year and a half. They reversed a decision on the basis of a comparison that was made at that time and now, a year and a half later, we find that the facts and circumstances given at that time had no relation to the actual situation. It was all part and parcel, as I said, of a blackmail attempt to stampede this government into making an agreement which would benefit one particular company and neglect the interests of the Canadian people almost from coast to coast.

I do not know whether it is necessary to repeat the reasons for the necessity for action to be taken immediately with regard to this burning problem. Certainly, however, this has been pointed out to us almost daily in our newspapers. The government and the country are being reminded of the desperate and growing need for gas in eastern Canada so that the industries we have already built up will continue to operate. Unless immediate action is taken there will be a curtailment of work and production because we have vacillated, waited, played silly games and have done everything except what we should be doing.

There is no need to repeat again that a building boom would generate all along the course of the twin pipe line. I do not care particularly whether Trans-Canada follows the present line, which probably would be the quickest and least expensive way to get gas to the east, or whether it follows the other proposed line roughly along the route of highway 17. I believe that the building of that line would be in the best interests of Canada as a whole because it would open up another vast region of what is potentially the richest part of Canada.

I might remind the government again of the industrial potential that the line would bring to the affected areas. The government pays lip service to looking after the north and is prepared to put people on welfare and declare designated areas and regions. But when there is something which would build up the country they vacillate for four years when they should have been doing something. Most important of all, if we proceed and proceed now to keep this vital resource carrier in this country, we will at least maintain the ability to make Canadian policy in Canada rather than place ourselves at the whims of a foreign body in a foreign country. Surely the lessons of the past year should have been sufficient to prevent us placing ourselves in this very vulnerable position.

So, Mr. Chairman, I say we have had enough procrastination; we have played enough games. The government should instruct the National Energy Board not later than next Monday to grant this licence and get on with this job which we have delayed far too long.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about natural resources, research and technical surveys.

I congratulate the minister for his good work and for the speech he made; I would like also to tell how impressed we were with the wonderful account of the situation given to us by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

Personally, I am not qualified to go into the details, but I should like to deal only with the principle of the organization and make my views known with regard to the development of our Canadian resources.

Our natural wealth and the development of our resources are a primary factor in our economy. If we want to develop our economy, we must also develop our resources. Therefore, our resources are one of the primary factors if we want to have a developed economy, a substantial economy, in short an economy which will be useful to the people. From the cultural and research points of view, developments must go hand in hand with technological advances. We need all those developments and mainly water supply.

As the minister stated earlier, Canada is blessed with ample water for its population, but a lot of work and research must be undertaken in cities and adjoining areas affected by water pollution. There is a lot of room for improvement, for although Canada is not densely populated, its waters are polluted. Again, we must undertake a great deal of research and make substantial capital investments if we are to develop our water resources which constitute, in my opinion, one of the main factors of the economy of the whole country.

As the minister has told us, we need a national water policy, and I agree with him one hundred per cent. We need a definite policy, we must know what we want, where we are going and what we intend to do in order to make the necessary reforms and purify our water resources.

We know that great improvements must be made and a great deal of capital invested.

With regard to all these developments, mineral and others, we need to develop our resources and undertake the necessary research in all parts of Canada. All regions must benefit by this research and each one of them should be developed if possible.

• (4:30 p.m.)

There are older areas, as the eastern townships, for instance, which have been in existence for hundreds of years and where there never has been any research made as far as minerals are concerned. There are quantities of deposits there and we are told that certain private sectors are trying to operate very rich mines which would be most useful to the people and to the world, but we lack what is required to develop them. The first step is bringing out the ore, but due to lack of capital, the mines have to be closed. It has been tried in several areas, but all have given up. Mines which are said to be very rich and which held all kinds of ores have been abandoned and closed down for lack of capital. Nothing can be done without capital. I know the estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are rather high, I think they are approximately $110 million. It is a lot for our present capabilities but it is not enough. We will never do enough for the economic development of our riches. We must do more than that, but we do not have the financial means to do so. Therefore, something should be done from the financial point of view.

The minister said earlier that, in co-operation with the provinces, we could develop all kinds of fields, undertake all kinds of research. That is our opinion, and that of the provinces, I think. All the provinces do not have the capital needed to do that, to support the federal government in those developments.

We know how much the Canadian citizens are paying in taxes at the present time to develop something and to support that economic plan. We cannot pay more taxes and deficits follow: at the federal, provincial and municipal levels, in school boards, private industry, everywhere. We have touched bottom everywhere.

Although that does not come under the minister's jurisdiction, he should study the financial situation a little. I think that all hon. members in general should try to find a way to finance those developments. If that is physically possible why should it not be financially possible?

Our country is rich with engineers, technicians, scientists and they are all able to make further developments, to undertake great developments, to set up large businesses in Canada, but we do not have the financial means to do so. Therefore, I think that it is our duty to try and find those finances to do it.

If interest rates are too high, let us bring them down. Sacrifices do not have to be made always by the same people. It is not always the turn of the people, the little people, to pay taxes, interests, to reimburse war debts, debts for this or for that.

Now, I say that if this is physically possible, let it be made financially possible. It is easier to make all this financially possible than to render the developments possible.

Developments are possible as long as we have scientists, experts, and the required technology. If we have all that, if we have the required men and if those men are able to undertake something else, well, let the financial field be organized accordingly. We can accomplish what the people of Canada are looking for and give the country what it is entitled to have. Further, we owe it to ourselves to give assistance to other countries.

We have all the natural resources to do so. We have all sorts of unexploited natural resources which could be developed, but we cannot develop them because we do not have the necessary capital.

Well, all hon. members should, once for all, get it into their heads that it is easy to finance any project, as long as we have the necessary men and materials. It is easy to undertake any technical, psychological and ideological development in the country, as long as we have the necessary men and materials. Why not? Why should finance not be the reality of good things, of wonderful developments to be brought about in a country? We could give the whole world the finest example ever seen because we have the necessary resources, in short everything necessary to develop all sorts of resources, all kinds of things, and we could assist other countries in an admirable and exemplary fashion.

I shall conclude my observations by saying that we must assume our responsibilities. The minister is not the only one who must assume his responsibilities; each one of us must assume his own responsibilities and, if to do this, we will be able to make the required developments, we will be able to do what has to be done in order to have good drinking water. We will also be able to do what has to be done in order to develop the required ore, in brief, everything underground, all that nature made available to us for our own needs and those of others.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, there are three matters I should like to discuss briefly with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. First I should like to commend the minister for his attitude and in many cases his realistic approach to some of the problems facing him in the mineral and energy development fields as well as those fields relating to water conservation and utilization. I think the minister has performed a good service for Canada in attempting to deal with these matters realistically and progressively.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The three matters that I want to discuss are, first, oil markets, second, the extension and addition of pipe lines to deliver natural gas to eastern Canada and to the eastern or central United States and, third, coal exports from the Crowsnest pass area in Alberta and British Columbia to the west coast.

I will deal first with oil markets. We are apprehensive and deeply concerned about what is being done to expand the markets for Canadian oil, particularly oil from Alberta. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that Alberta's petroleum production has dropped to slightly over 30 per cent of its total capacity, even with the application of good conservation practices, and this of course does not include a significant amount from the tar sands. We do not believe this to be a fair or realistic level of marketing, at least until we have reached the stage where the production of petroleum in Canada is equal to its consumption in this country. We believe a balanced level will be achieved when the total production of petroleum in all of Canada equals the total consumption of oil. This is not the case at present. We know that the market area extending eastward from Montreal is still being supplied by offshore oil. We think that Canadian producers have a right either to supply this market or an equivalent market some place within continental North America. There are a number of reasons for this. One of them is that petroleum should and could be a great asset in earning foreign exchange, and at the present time I understand that Canada is in a deficit position in balancing its exports and imports.

We would like to hear from the minister what he has been doing to expand the availability of markets for Canadian oil, particularly in what is referred to as the Chicago loop. A few days ago the minister was in Washington. When he came back he told the house that he had had some discussions with secretary Udall, but that is all he said. He did not say whether there was a favourable response to his suggestions, whether the United States government was going to encourage this sort of arrangement, or what further action the Canadian government intends to take. All we heard was that the minister was interested—and we are pleased to hear it—and that he had conversations. He did not say anything about the subject matter of the discussions and the response he received. We think it is important for the province of Alberta and for the national economy that some action be taken. We have heard many words, plans, discussions and utterances of good intentions, but we have had no action yet and we think the time has come for the minister to give us at least his impressions of what he expects will happen on the basis of his discussions with the United States officials.

With regard to gas delivery from western to eastern Canada, it is becoming increasingly urgent that some decision be taken to provide additional capacity to deliver gas to eastern Canada. We hear conflicting arguments regarding the deficit which may occur during the winter of 1967-68. Some knowledgeable people have suggested that it may be as much as 33 million cubic feet. Others challenge that figure. I do not know what it will be but I am sure the minister and his advisers have a keen interest in this matter and perhaps an opinion as to how large the deficit will be.

They should also have an opinion as to how much time will elapse before the date on which construction must start so that deliveries can be made this coming winter. I am not sure whether that date has already gone by. I hope not, but perhaps we can hear from the minister on this matter.

Some complaints have been made about the government's unfortunate decision some months ago to reject the National Energy Board's decision regarding the Great Lakes development, following which some time was lost. I am not too critical of the government in this respect because it saw the light and changed the cabinet order. However, the major problem here is loss of time. Some hon. members have complained previously, and have done so again this afternoon, that the government should never have considered the Great Lakes project to supply additional gas to eastern Canada. However, I appreciate the minister's position and I realize that he is looking at the whole problem of the shortage of gas, the markets both in eastern Canada and in central and eastern United States, and the cost of transporting the gas to the consumers in eastern Canada. All these considerations have to be taken into account.

What has been overlooked by those people who favour the Great Lakes route as opposed to the looping of the present line of the construction of another one a little farther south is that that line would not supply any gas to additional customers in the eastern United States. There is a market there for Canadian gas which would benefit not only the Canadian economy but also that of the province of Alberta. So we believe that the government should do what it can to encourage an early decision by the federal power commission. It should do everything to expedite a decision in this matter so that this line can be built and the looping of the additional pipe line installations in northern Ontario can be proceeded with.

I wish to turn now to my last point, the matter of coal. I am very critical of the manner in which the Canadian government has handled the transport of coal from southwestern Alberta and southeastern British Columbia. However, my criticism does not extend to the minister because I do not think anyone would be justified in criticizing him for carrying out his responsibilities through the national coal board by setting up and providing facilities for the expansion of coal mining in the Crowsnest Pass. I do not believe that this action should be criticized. However, it seems to me that the Canadian Pacific Railway is being unreasonable and unjust and that the government has been unable to take a positive stand with regard to the railway company's demands for higher rates to transport this coal.

According to the Minister of Transport, both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance have a direct responsibility to ensure that if there is even the slightest possibility of a subsidy being given to the transport companies, the variable costs of that transportation plus the mark-up are not unreasonable. A cost study has been made on behalf of the coal operators in the Crowsnest pass by a very competent firm of cost analysts. They came up with a figure of $2.86 for the variable costs. So far as we know, and I should like the minister to explain this to us, the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has a complete monopoly on railway transport in the area, has never offered to haul the coal for less than $5.28 a ton until the volume is well over a million tons. They adamantly refuse to enter into any kind of deal for less than that. I do not believe that is being reasonable. I do not believe it is a justifiable charge on the Canadian treasury to be paying a subsidy which in effect means an 84 per cent mark-up of variable costs. This statement is based on the figures we have that the rate would be $5.28.

It may be difficult for the minister and his department to establish these costs. However, I believe we have a responsibility to get on with the job of establishing, first of all, the methods and techniques that are used in establishing the variable costs. Then we can apply these methods and techniques to the problem of transporting coal from Coleman, Blairmore, Michel and Natal to the Pacific coast. This has not been done yet. We, as members of parliament, and the Canadian taxpayers are going to be faced with paying a subsidy.

In my estimation one cannot criticize the intent in entering into this kind of deal in order to get mining operations going. I think there is a very bright future for coal mining operations in the Crowsnest area in view of the market in Japan and other offshore markets if we can arrive at transport arrangements to the west coast at a reasonable rate. The minister has partly met this problem, but I believe we also have a responsibility to make sure the railway companies do not gouge the taxpayers in their demands for rates. Therefore I want to make it clear to the minister that we appreciate the co-operation he has given to the coal board in making these arrangements with the Coleman collieries. I believe there are others pending.

I also think that if the industry is going to have a long term future on a sound basis the coal must be moved on the basis of a well established variable cost plus a reasonable mark-up. Then the railway will not need a subsidy at all. It is the belief of more knowledgeable people who have studied this situation that the Canadian Pacific Railway can transport this coal at a reasonable rate and still make a profit. We know that the Great Northern offered to haul it for $4 per ton and, according to some of these people, even at $4 per ton there was a profit. This rate is supposed to be the average for hauling coal in the United States.

Under the arrangement that has been made the Canadian Pacific, even after the total volume reaches a million tons from Coleman or two million tons from the area, is demanding $4.60 per ton. Then, of course, there will be no subsidy paid. This figure, as far as we can tell from the studies that have been made, is still too high and represents an unreasonable mark-up in variable costs.

I plead with the minister to have a conference with the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance so that they can go ahead and do what the Minister of Transport promised to do, have a public hearing to establish the methods and techniques used in connection with setting variable costs. A hearing of the interested parties could then be held to determine what the variable costs are after the methods have been determined. This has not been done, and it needs to be done. In every case in the past where the railways have been challenged by competent people, these so-called variable costs have been analysed and a great service has been done for the people of Canada. The time is past due when this needs to be done in so far as variable costs for moving freight are concerned, particularly on heavy commodities.

In closing my remarks I want to say again that we appreciate the attitude shown by the minister in approaching this problem. We wish him well. I hope he will give us additional explanations with regard to the three matters I have raised.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of this department cover a wide range of activities. I want to deal with only one or two points. May I preface my remarks by expressing my pleasure and appreciation at the developments within the area of water policy. In his opening statement the minister stressed the emphasis that is now being placed upon co-ordinating water pollution measures as between the federal and provincial levels of government. He emphasized research as a pre-condition to any intelligent action in this field, and that statement is welcomed.

The minister has, in the past, stressed the importance of the inland waters. I have often wondered whether the department felt that the inland waters were the great lakes and forgot that the Kawartha lakes existed and that there are serious problems of algae there which are of concern to the people. In passing, I may point out that the new university in Peterborough, Trent University, has set up a marine biology department and is doing important research work in this field. I hope that in the future there may be some way in which the Department of Energy Mines and Resources can co-operate with ventures of this character.

The main point I want to raise with the minister relates to the Nelson river project. As an introduction to my remarks, I should like to make a few general statements about the role of the government of Canada as a major contractor in the resource field. I do not need to remind the minister or the house that the federal government is working with public funds. I believe it is very important that the government be particularly sensitive to the effects and ramifications of this work. The effects may be felt well beyond a particular contract and make a lasting contribution to such important fields as Canadian technology, Canadian employment, export sales, to mention but a few areas.

I believe it is in the these three areas particularly that the Nelson river project is of tremendous importance to this country. It may be that in terms of awarding a contract there is a difference between the public sector and the private sector. The private sector, in selecting a tender, concerns itself almost exclusively with cost. This cannot be so in the public sector.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. gentleman since it is five o'clock and the house must proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Income Tax Act

• (5:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PERMIT HOME OWNERS TO DEDUCT CERTAIN TAXES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to provide for private owners to deduct from their taxable income all the amounts paid as real estate, municipal and school taxes and the interest on the mortgage of their dwellings.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to enable private owners to derive a minimum income from or obtain a certain guarantee on their dwellings.

Every human being is anxious to own a home. Who would venture to suggest it is unreasonable for anyone to wish some day to own a home for his family?

In this country, private property is closely connected with the family. Private ownership is an undeniable natural right that all members of this house, I am sure, or at least, I hope, have their heart set on protecting.

On the other hand, that same private property is a heavy financial burden for the Canadian labourer, for the Canadian worker and, more generally, for the Canadian citizen.

Owning a home is no problem for a family head who earns $8,000 or more a year. But we know that salaried Canadians earn, on the average, less than $4,000 a year, without hope of any increase, either because the industry for which they work cannot develop or because the worker who grew up during the depression does not have many diplomas.

In any event, despite professional training obtained after 15, 20 and 25 years of experience in a given field, very often employees are limited by salary ceilings. This situation is often found among labourers and also among white collar workers in industry and trade, and even civil servants. Those workers who once felt they possessed a certain security when they acquired their homes are now in serious difficulty because in addition to the income tax they have to pay many other real and hidden taxes, new or higher taxes, excise tax, federal and provincial sales tax.

All these taxes imposed by higher levels of government were the main reason for the higher cost of living. That rise in the cost of living created real problems for our municipal and school officials, because all the services rendered by those intermediate bodies are more and more costly. Indeed, home owners who once could pay up their school and municipal dues with as little as $150 a year, are now faced with the obligation of expending between $450 and $500 a year for the same services. That unforeseen rise in the essential services is reflected in the fact that a great many nice private properties are put up for sale.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Speaker, in its war against poverty, the Canadian government recently decided to spend an additional amount of money in order to lower as much as possible the cost of rents in the poorer quarters of Montreal, and I take this opportunity to commend the government for that humanitarian action.

It is proven that it is very well to throw a rope to a drowning man but, to my mind, it would be better to build a guardrail at the right spot at the right time to prevent drowning.

True, without government help, many Canadians would be deprived of everything, but it should be recalled that many Canadian families deprive themselves, for in the case of the head of a family, the expenses are a lot heavier when he has a wife and children.

If we look at the income of an unmarried person earning $4,200 per year, we see how the income tax exemptions for married persons are far from balancing the family budget.

For instance, the unmarried person who earns a salary of $4,200 pays an income tax of approximately $475, after a deduction on $1,000, which leaves a net income of $3,725.

The head of the family earning $4,200 pays $128 in taxes each year after benefiting from a deduction of $2,000 for himself and for his spouse, and a deduction of $1,150 for the three children, if we suppose that he has one aged 19 who is a student, one of 14 and one of 8.

The 14-year-old child receives an allowance of $8 a month, or $96 a year. The 8-year-old child has an allowance of $6 a month, or $72 a year. That adds $168 to the income, which then amounts to a total of $4,368 a year—$4,368 less $128 tax, which brings it to $4,240.

The net income of a father of three children of 19, 14 and 8 years old is $4,240 after payment of $128 income tax. The single person having the same salary of $4,200 has a net income of $3,725, after payment of $475 income tax.

The difference in income and allowances leaves this family head with a surplus of $515 to support his wife and three children.

Hence, four additional persons for $515 more, which represents about $125 a year, $10.50 a month, or 30 cents a day.

I know very well that we are not sufficiently aware of that situation. We are so happy and pleased to see progress in the other sectors of the national economy that we forget the most important one, the home. Since taxes are for the most part hidden in the purchase price of goods, the man who has more children to support has less money to give them housing, food, clothing and education. That must be recognized.

Therefore, I feel the time has come to amend the Income Tax Act in order to allow private home owners to deduct from their taxable income any amount paid as municipal and school taxes as well as the interest of on the mortgage of the houses they live in.

The government would thus render a real service to the citizens who already are home owners.

Thus the government could counteract the present decline in home construction by encouraging Canadians to invest their money in the purchase of a house.

Although economists maintain that the building industry should increase its production every year until it reaches some 200,000 units per year by 1975, the present situation has led to a 30 per cent decrease for the year 1966 as compared to the 166,000 houses started in 1965.

Therefore Mr. Speaker, I hope that the members of this house will recognize that the home building industry has been seriously reduced by increased municipal and school taxes as well as by increased mortgage interest and that the shortage of homes this year will again affect very seriously the renting conditions, especially in the expanding metropolitan areas.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the only purpose of this motion is to alleviate this financial burden on Canadians and to encourage, by this very simple and efficient means, I believe, our fellow-citizens to avail themselves of private property which will not overwhelm them but help them to forge ahead.

Canadian citizens are quite willing to pay the taxes levied by the various governments.

Why then would the government not agree, in turn, to allow the private property owner to deduct that amount from his income tax? The private property owner has to pay the cost and the depreciation of his property, and that is normal. His income is taxable, just as it is for every citizen and, under the present system, that again is normal. In addition, he is subject to all kinds of taxes which enable the various levels of government to meet their budget.

Mr. Speaker, in this line of thought, this motion which I have the honour to present to my honourable colleagues today tends to help the private propery owner to meet his own family budget. Taxes will have a bright side not only for the various governments but also for the private property owner.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I hope that hon. members, who are probably private property owners themselves, will give me their support.

[English]

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) has presented an interesting notice of motion that the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to provide for private home owners to be able to deduct from their taxable incomes all amounts paid as real estate, municipal and school taxes and the interest on the mortgages on their dwellings. This suggestion, as well as the argument of the hon. member, has great merit.

Today, with the rapid increases in municipal taxes and the increases in mortgage lending rates the home owner suffers from severe hardship by his real estate having to bear all the costs of municipal government, added to which are the high costs of education. I have always had a great deal of concern for the person who earns less than $5,000 per year. He should have the right to own his own home. Yet many municipalities, by restricted area bylaws or by restrictions in the agreements between developers and municipalities, prevent such a person from building a home of 600 square feet. A person earning less than $5,000 per year cannot afford to purchase a 1,000 square foot home. As the result of bylaws and restrictions in the deeds on land, the low income earner is prevented from building a 600 square foot house on the majority of parcels of land, and when I speak of the majority I mean 99 per cent. There are hundreds of thousands of people across Canada who would take pride in ownership of a small home if they were permitted to by their local municipality. The government should do something to aid the small wage earner who wishes to buy his own home.

One of the main reasons for the increased cost of homes has been the rapid increase in serviced lots. Mr. Jack Key, the president of the Toronto real estate board, has said:

> Lot prices have gone up by $3,000 because of the high cost of municipal services and in delays in processing subdivision plans by various public authorities.

The Toronto real estate board says that land accounts for about one third of the cost of a home. Here is an area where costs could be substantially reduced by municipal and government co-operation. This would reduce home costs a great deal more. The saving would be greater than any reduction of taxable income and it would apply equally to all home owners.

While speaking in the house on the question proposed by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), which would have given home owners the right to deduct real property taxes and mortgage interest for income tax purposes the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) said:

> On the question of whether there should be a deduction on home owners' taxable income, we have looked at the matter from time to time and found that it has one obvious fault, namely that it is a suggestion which favours one particular kind of resident, that is one who happens to own his home and not to rent it. Of course, this is not fair particularly to those who live in apartment buildings. So I felt that as Minister of Finance I could not recommend to the government the proposals put before me by the mayor of Toronto, which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Parkdale.

The royal commission on taxation, when dealing with this subject in volume 3 of its report, came to this conclusion, as found on page 206:

> ...we do not believe that mortgage interest and property taxes should be deductible, because the allowance of these items discriminates against the individual who rents his living accommodation.

This substantiates my former argument that to allow the deduction of municipal taxes from taxable income discriminates against the low wage earner. He would receive much less benefit from this deduction than those living in more expensive homes. What we need is a home ownership plan or rental plan that will provide satisfactory living accommodation for the home owner whose income is less than $5,000 a year and for his family.

It is my understanding that income tax deductions for real property taxes and for mortgage interest in regard to owner occupied dwellings would also confer a greater benefit on individuals with higher incomes. Individuals with higher incomes tend to have more expensive homes which attract heavier municipal taxes. Although we are concerned about the high costs to people in every bracket of income, one of this government's main concerns is with those in the low income brackets. This government has always been the friend of the man who carries the lunch pail. This government is determined to do something for him to enable him to enjoy the comfort and security of home ownership.

This is why our government has always supported the program of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, a corporation which has been, and is, instrumental in providing financing at a cheaper rate than conventional mortgages because the plan favours those in the lower income brackets. For instance, the interest rate on C.M.H.C. mortgages is usually 1½ per cent lower than the rate charged on conventional mortgages by the money lending institutions. It is also interesting to note that on January 11, 1966 the C.M.H.C. interest rate was raised from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent while conventional mortgage rates were in the neighbourhood of 8¼ per cent or 8½ per cent. Therefore I maintain that C.M.H.C. favours the low wage earner by providing cheaper rates for him if he can qualify.

It is also interesting to note that when this government took office the C.M.H.C. interest rate was reduced from 6½ per cent to 6¼ per cent. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Portneuf that the Liberal government has always been concerned about providing for the people of Canada quality housing at reasonable rates so that all Canadians may be able to own their own homes or rent suitable accommodation.

I might state that housing starts by the end of May have reached a figure which will ensure that 170,000 units or more will be built in Canada in 1967. This is a good centennial project for C.M.H.C. which can now say that the Canadian construction industry in co-operation with our lending institutions will provide more than 170,000 home units in 1967.

This government has tackled the housing problem and is regarding it not merely from an economic point of view but from a human and social point of view. As a matter of fact, the government has accomplished these things through a minister who has two portfolios under his jurisdiction.

I would urge the government to investigate the situation in rural centres whose population is less than 5,000. It has always been my contention that C.M.H.C. should do something for Canadians in rural areas who wish to own their own homes. I should like to quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of February 3, 1967. Mr. Sol Burke of the Canadian Housing Manufacturers Association had this to say:

> Even during periods when mortgage money is readily available, funds for new houses in rural areas are difficult to obtain.
> Conventional lenders are not interested in scattered lot investments and C.M.H.C. aid for rural housing is virtually ruled out through the application of restrictive regulations.

Mr. Burke went on to say that the population limit of 5,000 imposed by C.M.H.C. prevented many scattered communities in rural areas from obtaining mortgage assistance. I personally carried out an investigation in my own constituency and found that the corporation had processed only 11 loans over a three-year period in an area which has a population of more than 20,000 people. Mr. Burke went on to say, according to this report, that rural housing in Canada has been neglected and that it should qualify for the same C.M.H.C. assistance as is given to urban areas.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government, through C.M.H.C., to provide all communities in Canada with equal opportunity to enjoy the preferred financing rate offered by the corporation. It is estimated that the revenue loss to the government of Canada as a result of income tax exemptions for real property taxes would be high, and that mortgage interest would be high. Two years ago it was estimated that the granting of income tax exemptions in respect of real property taxes alone would mean a loss of revenue amounting to $150 million. The figure today would be closer to $200 million. Loss of revenue on such a scale would only aggravate our present budget deficit. Contrary to the assertions of many hon. members I maintain that the government has provided and will continue to provide reasonable cost housing for our people and that our present housing policy will be extended to include more and more Canadians seeking homes.

I should like to quote C.M.H.C. statistics to show the extent to which the cost of houses has risen during the past year. The over-all cost has increased from an index figure of 148.9 to 151.6, while the cost of wages in construction has risen from 235.5 to 254.2. The contractors and the people engaged in construction have introduced economies which have held down the over-all cost of housing.

One of the principal cost factors is the development of serviced land, which now represents about one third of the total cost of a home. I am sure the government is searching out ways and means of reducing the price of homes so that all Canadians throughout our great nation may enjoy the benefit of owning their own homes or of renting suitable accommodation at a price they can afford.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in my intervention. I merely wish to say that I find no difficulty in supporting the intention behind the motion moved by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin). With all respect to the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. Lind) I was disappointed not to hear him say he has no quarrel with the motion, because I feel it is high time that Canadians generally, and home owners especially, should be given some relief from the burden of taxation they are now required to pay to help raise the ever-increasing sums needed for education and other community services.

The intent of the notice of motion proposed by the hon. member for Portneuf is good in that it would provide an incentive to home owners and increase our home owning society. To that extent I support it, but perhaps the aspect relating to school taxes might conflict with the school tax rebate which is in effect in some provinces. Nevertheless, any incentive to home ownership is desirable.

The hon. member for Middlesex East pointed out that this would mean a substantial loss of revenue to the federal and provincial governments. To that I simply reply it is high time that restraint was placed on government spending, particularly when one reads of the tremendous increase in expenditure by some branches of the government service, notably the recent example of pentitentiary construction in the maritimes. Some five years ago a contract was awarded for $2.5 million but the cost has since risen to $11 million. Something has gone wrong when expenditures can soar that high after a contract has been let. I say that the government has a responsibility to make a closer check on its expenditures in all phases of activity. Loss of revenue might be recovered by watching expenditures more closely. If they were watched more closely we would not have the prophesied deficit that the hon. member for Middlesex East warned us about.

I do not share the view of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), in his reply to a motion presented some time ago by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), that acknowledgement of home owners by some special tax concession would be unfair to non-home owners. This is like saying that because we are not all farmers legislation which is beneficial to farmers is inequitable, and because we are not all industrialists legislating anything that will give incentive to industry is inequitable. That is no excuse for the government not acting to give a benefit to home owners.

The housing area is one which is badly neglected by the government. Certainly this is true with respect to rural housing and it applies even more to urban housing. I can support in principle any measure that will increase home ownership on the part of Canadians.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion is proof of the fact that the government's housing policies are quite inadequate to cater for the people of Canada. Although the notice of motion springs from the best possible motives, in my opinion its adoption would not do the job that the sponsor has in mind. If implemented it would be exceedingly inequitable. It calls for deduction from income tax of real estate, municipal and school taxes. It does nothing to limit taxes according to people's income whereby little people could make large deductions and big people small deductions. The notice of motion would discriminate against the small property owner and favour the large property owner. It would discriminate against people who rent their homes and favour people who own their homes.

Hon. members who sat on the consumer prices committee know that the proportion of people who rent homes is increasing and the proportion who own homes is declining. Recently the minister in charge of C.M.H.C. stated that the percentage of people in the larger centres who can hope to own their own homes will decline because of the costs of building fully modern homes. According to the last figure I saw, no one in the city of Toronto can hope to own a modern home unless he has an income of about $8,200 a year. Only 12 per cent of the Canadian people have an income of $8,200 or more.

We will have to deal with the housing crisis and the income crisis in ways much more far reaching than proposed by this notice of motion. On a number of occasions we in the New Democratic party have made proposals which would provide housing to people at prices they can afford. We have made proposals to keep mortgage rates lower and to provide different types of housing for lower income people. We have also made proposals for increasing the income of people in various ways. This resolution would do none of these things. It is also impractical because it would intrude on the municipal and provincial fields instead of dealing strictly with the federal tax field.

For these reasons we in this group feel this notice of motion is not calculated to help the people who need help the most.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. Lind) as he gave his definition of the policies of the government. He said that the Liberal government has always been the friend of the man who carries a lunch pail and is concerned about people who desire to own and occupy their own homes. I do not think the hon. member will be really surprised if he finds that his views are not enthusiastically shared by all members of the house. The fact that this notice of motion is before us and the fact that this matter has been drawn to the attention of the government on many occasions are indicative of the dissatisfaction that is to be found with respect to government policies.

I believe we can support the objective that the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) has in mind in introducing this notice of motion, the purpose of which I understand is to assist persons who desire to do so to own their own homes. It has been the stated policy of this group for a considerable length of time that we should do everything we possibly can to encourage home ownership because of the sense of security it gives to those who occupy their own homes. This is something which makes a substantial contribution to the development of true family life and has so many beneficial effects for society as a whole. Therefore I believe that anything which would assist in the realization of this objective should receive the very careful consideration of the government.

On many occasions it has been pointed out that home ownership is being pushed farther and farther beyond the capabilities of the ordinary citizens of Canada. One of the contributing factors, of course, is the high cost of capital. We have found that as the population has continued to increase and as the money supply has become more and more restricted, those in the lower or middle income groups have been entirely unable to obtain the necessary finances in order to proceed with their building plans.

Another factor which has entered into the cost of home ownership and which points out the neglect of the government in this field is the conflict in their policies. We remember the time when they introduced a measure to give a $500 winter bonus to those who built homes in the winter, but then they turned around and withdrew the tax exemption on building materials which more than offset the beneficial effect of the other program they had instituted.

In this regard at least—and I could cite many more examples—I suggest that the government's policies have been conflicting and, of course, in conflict with the stated purpose of the government. Therefore I believe that anything which will contribute to home ownership and the feeling of security which results therefrom should be encouraged. I am not sure just what the over-all effect would be of the suggestion which has been put forward by the hon. member for Portneuf. It may be that there are other ways in which the problem can be resolved more easily. I do say, however, that these are matters which should be given very careful consideration.

There is another matter which we have raised and which I believe should also be considered. I refer to the allowance of depreciation on private homes. I cannot see any reason that this should not be possible. I do not see any reason that it should not be desirable. It would be of tremendous assistance to those who are seeking to own their own homes.

We all know that the government has been constantly reminded of the housing needs of Canadians. Various members have brought this to the attention of the government. The minister who is in charge of this area of concern has rather played down the fact that there is a national crisis. The minister states everything possible is being done and that they are making progress. He suggests that the situation is not nearly as bad as it has been portrayed by various hon. members. It may be that there is an increase in housing starts. It may be that some developments are taking place. I suggest, however, that they are far too inadequate to meet the needs and satisfy the demands of those who wish to acquire better housing or satisfy the needs of the new family units which are being organized constantly in our country.

This notice of motion calls for amendment of the Income Tax Act. The act is a real hunting ground for those interested in finding matters which should be taken into account because I cannot think of any other field of government activity in which there are more inequities and inadequacies than there are in the income tax legislation. Therefore we could spend a long time analysing the act and making recommendations in connection therewith.

I believe the idea behind this whole exercise is to ensure that the people of Canada have sufficient income to meet their basic needs. When the basic deduction for income tax purposes was established it was considered that $1,000 was about the lowest amount that people could get by on. That was many years ago. The cost of living has spiralled but the basic deduction of $1,000 still remains. I say that it is a completely inadequate figure. I cannot understand any government taking the position that that level should be retained. We have beaten the Liberal government over the head and we used to beat the Conservative government over the head, but neither party has been willing to make the necessary amendments. I feel, therefore, that it should be one of our objectives to try to leave in the hands of the Canadian people sufficient of their income to meet their requirements and enable them to provide for themselves.

I submit that it should not be necessary for the government to enter into so many other fields of activity in order to let on that they are giving something to the Canadian taxpayers when, after all, they are just returning a little of what they have taken from them. Because of the government's unwillingness to meet this problem in any substantial degree, I believe that any of these adjustments which are suggested should be considered. I suggest that some of them are highly desirable even though they are palliatives rather than a cure for the problem of a shortage of purchasing power in the hands of the people.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to voice my personal views on the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin).

As a rule, it is obvious that we cannot but approve the basic and humanitarian reasons put forward by the hon. member for Portneuf. He advocates the protection of private property, small owners, families, workers, and small wage-earners. He suggests that the government should take the necessary steps to render a real service to the small owner by reducing his burden and helping him to make ends meet.

This question had been raised in the house on June 12 by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who also suggested that the owners of houses should be in a position to deduct from their taxable income real estate taxes and interests on mortgages.

To this, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), when we were discussing the estimates of his department and he was answering some questions raised by the hon. members, answered, and I quote from page 1433 of the June 12 Hansard:

On the question of whether there should be a deduction on home owners' taxable income, we have looked at the matter from time to time and found that it has one obvious fault, namely that it is a suggestion which favours one particular kind of resident, that is one who happens to own his home and not rent it. Of course this is not fair, particularly to those who live in apartment buildings. So I felt that as Minister of Finance I could not recommend to the government the proposals put before me by the mayor of Toronto, which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Parkdale.

Further, if we refer to volume III of the report of the royal commission on taxation, which deals mainly with the taxation of individuals and families, we find on page 49 a paragraph dealing precisely with the question raised by the hon. member for Portneuf: And I quote:

The foregoing argument has implications for the question of whether municipal taxes should be deductible by home owners. It is often urged that property taxes should be deductible from income on the grounds that this would stimulate home ownership, increase home construction, and make it possible for municipalities to raise more revenue. To the extent that municipal taxes cannot be regarded as a charge for specific municipal services which benefit the property, municipal property taxes are regressive. It can be argued that some relief for such taxes should be granted against income taxes as a deduction or a credit, in order to bring the burden of taxation more closely in line with ability to pay. However, home owners already have an advantage in regard to income tax through the fact that imputed income is not taxed.

And the imputed income, as I understand it, is the difference that may exist between the owner of a house living in it, who has no rent to pay, who does not deduct a rent from his taxable income and, on the other hand, the owner who rents his house and receives a rent from his tenant, the amount he receives being taxable.

I shall continue my quotation:

—is not taxed. It may well be desirable to work out techniques that will give municipalities more revenues without raising property taxes, but this objective can be accomplished in other ways that are not so inequitable between taxpayers.

This report of the royal commission on taxation will be discussed shortly. It is also expected that some recommendations will be disproved and rejected by the experts, but it is most probable also that several of those recommendations will result in pieces of legislation designed to help among others, small wage-earners and to improve the Canadian economy.

It is suggested that such an aim could be achieved by other means which would not result in unfairness for taxpayers. Unfairness among taxpayers should always be avoided.

The royal commission expresses similar views with regard to the deduction of mortgage interests paid by home owners. Also, as one of my colleagues said earlier, there are other ways to protect the small owner or wage-earner.

Who would benefit most from this proposition? As stated a moment ago, it is the one with the large income. It is not the one with the small income, and we are always trying to protect the small wage-earners.

In closing, as an example and according to my information, in the case of a home owner whose property taxes would be approximately $1,000 and whose income is considerable, the tax he would have to pay on the last slice of his income, let us say it is approximately 50 per cent, the deduction of the property tax would save him something, approximately $500.

If, for instance, you take the case of a wage-earner whose salary is small and whose property tax amounts to $500 yearly and whose last slice of income would come under an income tax rate of 25 per cent, this deduction would save only $125 for this wage-earner, while the one with the larger income would benefit more from this measure.

MR. SMALLWOOD—IMPORTATION OF CHAROLAIS CATTLE INTO U.S. THROUGH CANADA

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of an article in the Western Producer which carries the headline "Canada a 'stopping place' for U.S. Charolais imports". I will be brief and will not read all the article, but it says in part:

> Charolais cattle, owned by United States interests, are quietly being imported into Canada from areas other than France without going through the elaborate quarantine station established in 1965 in Gross Ile, Quebec—

Then the article goes on to describe two shipments of cattle to the Grant Campbell farm near Toronto and another to the John Miller farm near Ashburn. These cattle were the property of the union stock yards at Chicago and an Oklahoma syndicate.

• (2:40 p.m.)

On April 25, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Agriculture about this matter but he did not have any information. I am a very co-operative and patient member, I hope. I spoke to the Minister of Agriculture, who is also co-operative, and promised to send him this newspaper clipping. On May 3 his executive assistant telephoned our office and we sent this information. As of yesterday, June 14, we had received no answer regarding this serious matter of the United States circumventing Canadian laws to bring cattle into that country. I hope the minister will have his officials look at this serious matter at an early date, and I hope he will take action on behalf of the Canadian cattle industry.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CARE AND CONTROL OF MOTOR VEHICLES WHILE INTOXICATED

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-133, to amend the Criminal Code (control of motor vehicle).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Nesbitt: This is similar to a bill I introduced in the last session. It closely resembles legislation which was enacted in the United Kingdom about two years ago, and its purpose is to encourage drivers of motor vehicles who are intoxicated to remove their vehicles and themselves from public highways. Under the law as it stands they may be penalized for doing so. It is my hope that after this bill has been discussed on second reading it will be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

CHOICE OF WORDS TO BE RECOMMENDED BY CANADA COUNCIL

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-134, to provide a national anthem.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, with a view to avoiding the confusion caused by the adaptation of French and English versions of the national anthem "O Canada", my bill proposes that the Canada Council choose suitable versions to be approved later by the house and the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent Mr. Pepin, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, moves that the house go into committee of the whole later this day to consider this resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies in amounts not exceeding, in the calendar year 1967, the amount of $264,800,000, and to make, in the calendar year 1968 prior to the 1st day of July, 1968, certain capital expenditures, by way of investing in the securities of Air Canada, not exceeding $135,000,000 and to make certain other capital expenditures and enter into certain contracts, prior to the 1st day of July, 1968, for the acquisition of equipment, additions, and conversions not exceeding $94,000,000; to provide for the financial requirements of Air Canada in an amount not exceeding $122,000,000, either by means of loans from Her Majesty to the national company or by means of issues of securities of the national company, authorized and guaranteed as to interest and principal by Her Majesty, the cash proceeds by either method to be used only for the financial requirements of Air Canada, the capital needs of the national company itself being met entirely through the sale of preferred stock to Her Majesty and from reserves from depreciation and debt discount; to authorize Her Majesty to continue to purchase until December 31st, 1968, Canadian National Company 4 per cent preferred stock in an annual amount not exceeding 3 per cent of the gross revenues of the company; to extend until December 31, 1968, the moratorium on interest on the loan of $100,000,000 to the company authorized by the National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating reserves to June 30, 1968, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the railway company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION FOR TODAY OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Mr. Speaker: Before I call orders of the day may I refer for a moment to the makeup of today's order paper. Acting on the assumption that the resolution concerning the Cape Breton Development Corporation had been set down, pursuant to standing order 61-A, as the first item of government business in this sitting, the order paper does not provide for a private members' hour between six o'clock and seven o'clock p.m. this day.

Standing order 15(4) provides for the suspension of the hour for the consideration of private members' business when a money resolution, pursuant to standing order 61-A, is set down as the first item of government business on a Thursday. Accordingly this day's sitting of the house will be suspended at six o'clock until eight o'clock p.m.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—RUSSIAN REQUEST FOR GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Prime Minister. The U.S.S.R. having been prevented or circumvented from effecting a resolution harmful to Israel and the matter now having been put before the secretary general, with a call on the part of the U.S.S.R. for a convening of the general assembly, and the request in this regard having been sent to the various members, what is Canada's reply to this request that the assembly should now be seized of this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are still two resolutions before the security council dealing with the matter to which my right hon. friend refers, and in the past it has been the practice not to refer a matter to the general assembly in special session until it had ceased to be dealt with in the security council. The Soviet union have indicated that if these resolutions were proceeded with, the United States resolution in particular, they would veto them. But pending that, as my right hon. friend has stated, they have asked for a special emergency meeting of the general assembly, a request with which 62 members must agree.

We have received a telegram from the secretary general bringing this matter to our attention and asking for our agreement or otherwise. The matter is now under consideration. My own feeling, Mr. Speaker, is that we should not object to a meeting of the general assembly because an objection at this time on grounds of procedure would not delay matters very long. Undoubtedly, from the information we have received, they are going to get 62 affirmative votes. Therefore it would be wise not to object to the matter going before the general assembly, without prejudice to the constitutional correctness of the procedure followed on this occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest to the Prime Minister that the answer by Canada should be in the negative, so Canada will make clear to all the world that it will not countenance the kind of attitude toward Israel which the U.S.S.R. has in mind and has shown in the security council in recent days. Would this not be the proper time for Canada to stand up and say we shall not accept this? If 62 other nations agree, well and good, but why should Canada not stand on its own feet?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not consider that this would be the situation in respect of a request from the Secretary General to express our views as to whether there should or should not be a special general assembly session. I do not believe the refusal to agree to a meeting of the general assembly would have any bearing on the stand we might take at the general assembly. If we have any views on the matter we can express them before the general assembly.

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, asking him whether the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the NATO ministers' meeting—and I hope I read it correctly—to the effect that the best way of obtaining peace in the Middle East is to have negotiations between the parties rather than at the United Nations, represents government policy, and whether the Canadian representative at the United Nations has been instructed to follow that policy during discussions there?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the most desirable procedure would be to have direct talks between the parties concerned, to be supplemented by an international agreement to guarantee the security of countries in that area including, of course, Israel. It is difficult to adopt that procedure when at least one side to the talks is not willing to negotiate with the other side.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY, N.S.—REPORTED FURTHER LAY-OFFS AT STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Defence Production with regard to the 17 man delegation from Nova Scotia which waited on him and other members of the cabinet yesterday in respect of the steel crisis in Cape Breton, where some 700 men have already been laid off this month and another 400 are to be laid off at the end of this week. I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that the delegation asked the government to give some financial assistance so that steel could be stockpiled pending the improvement of the steel market, and what reply the government is prepared to give to this request.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, in response to the representations made yesterday the concern of the government in respect of the very difficult situation facing the steel producing communities of Cape Breton was expressed. There also were expressions of appreciation of this by the delegation. With regard to the proposal that the government should stockpile soft steel from the output of Dosco in Cape Breton, the delegation was assured that the government would give consideration to this. It was pointed out, however, that a program of stockpiling steel from one company alone would constitute a precedent to which careful consideration must be given before such a program is embarked upon.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister also what reply the government is giving to the appeal from Mr. C. H. Drury, the president of Dosco, that the government request that only Canadian steel be used in public works projects, since this would add some 30 per cent to the amount of reinforced steel used in the four Atlantic provinces which would be available in the Canadian market.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the conclusion drawn concerning the result, if there should be a prescription for the use of Canadian steel, is incorrect. In fact the government of Nova Scotia does now in that province prescribe the use of Canadian steel in provincially financed projects. It is apparently in respect of privately financed projects rather than provincially financed projects that the consumption of imported steel is taking place.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the appeal by the president of Dosco was to the federal government in respect of federally financed projects, which he says would enable some 30 per cent of the steel requirement in the four Atlantic provinces, which is now being met by foreign imported steel, to be met by Canadian steel, is the Canadian government prepared to accede to this request in so far as the federal jurisdiction is concerned?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any such request was made by the president of Dosco. He did make a statement to the effect that a substantial proportion of foreign steel was now coming into the Atlantic provinces, and he did quote the percentage mentioned by the hon. gentleman. He has not made such an appeal to the federal government, and I do not think he said that the entire 30 per cent related to government purchases.

TRADE

REPORTED INFESTATION OF LUMBER EXPORTED TO AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, earlier I directed a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a report originating from Sydney, Australia, to the effect that a shipment of lumber had landed in Australia which was infested with insects which could cause millions of dollars of damage in that country, and it was alleged that this shipment came from Canada. Has the minister anything to report in this regard?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this report referred only to one ship. We have checked and found that the ship did not load lumber as a cargo in Canada. It did use some lumber as dunnage in Montreal, but I understand it was kiln dried and fumigated in accordance with standard practice. However, the ship did call at several other ports before reaching its destination. The shipping company is aware of this situation and is continuing to check into it, as are we.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE FOR EGYPTIAN SOLDIERS DYING OF THIRST IN DESERT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in relation to news reports that several thousand Egyptian soldiers are now dying of thirst in the heat of the desert. This has caused a good deal of humanitarian concern among Canadians. Has the Canadian government made any representations to the government of Israel in regard to saving the lives of these people and, if not, will the Prime Minister do so?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that and other related matters of a humanitarian nature were considered by the government this morning in an effort to see what we might do with the Red Cross as an emergency measure to assist in this situation. We are in touch with other governments, and I will be glad to get in touch with the government of Israel if we have not already done so, regarding the desirability of doing something about this situation at once.

TRANSPORTATION

CONFERENCE ON PROPOSED BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In his absence perhaps I should direct it to his parliamentary secretary. The Board of Transport Commissioners has called a conference in Ottawa for August 1 to be attended by all interested parties regarding proposed railway branch line abandonments. Could the parliamentary secretary explain the purpose of this Ottawa conference?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think perhaps this kind of information should be given on motions rather than by way of an answer to a question at this time.

FINANCE

REPORTED REFUSAL OF CHARTERED BANKS TO MAKE FARM LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of recent complaints that the chartered banks are turning down applications for loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act because of the statutory rate of 5 per cent, will the minister look into this matter as soon as possible and take the necessary remedial action?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the information to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I certainly will be glad to make inquiries.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS RESPECTING OBSCENITY IN ART

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General relating to the Dorothy Cameron case, in respect of which the Supreme Court of Canada ruled it had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal. There has been widespread criticism of the law in this regard by artistic organizations across Canada, supported by the views expressed in Toronto by the Secretary of State. The reports indicated that the minister intended to look into the matter when she returned to Ottawa, in an effort to make sure that a magistrate shall not have jurisdiction to determine whether art is or is not obscene.

What action has been taken in this regard and does the government intend to bring in an amendment to the Criminal Code to bring this matter up to date rather than leave it in the state it is in today and as it has continued for some years? This has now come to the fore as a result of the supreme court ruling to the effect it had no jurisdiction to determine the matter.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Secretary of State has privately expressed views to me concerning the law as it relates to works of art and literary matters. We have also received submissions, one oral and one written, requesting a change in the law in this regard. All such submissions are considered when amendments to the Criminal Code are being considered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister in a position to say whether the government is going to carry out the purport of the views expressed by the hon. lady officially in charge of art in Canada?

Mr. Pennell: I can only say that we will follow the usual course and give serious consideration to all representations made as we review the Criminal Code from time to time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BOARD DECISION RESPECTING REPRESENTATION OF C.B.C. EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the Canada Labour Relations Board was to render its decision on June 12 last about the request of the C.N.T.U. to represent the C.B.C. employees, can the minister tell us if the C.L.R.B. has reached a decision and when it will be made public?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that any such decision would have been brought to my attention by this time, if it had been announced, and I have not heard of it as yet.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Minister of Labour tell us if the report of the cabinet committee studying that matter was submitted for consideration by the Canada Labour Relations Board?

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: No, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

GEORGIAN BAY—CONSIDERATION UNDER DESIGNATED AREA PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry whether, in relation to the recent extension of the designated area program, he considered the strong representations made by the Georgian bay development association regarding the balance of economy in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS TO EMPLOYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister arrived at a satisfactory system or formula whereby employers will be paid back the excess contributions they have made to the Canada Pension Plan, reputed to be as high as $12 million to $14 million?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hales: Will the minister advise the house when he expects to arrive at such a formula?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we are presently compiling information and I cannot give an exact date as to when this will be complete. We require this information in order to consider this matter.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO CONTROL INCREASED NARCOTICS TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General based on a report this week to the effect that there is a heavy increase in drug and narcotic traffic. Naturally we cannot expect an answer in detail, but will the minister assure this house that appropriate action is being taken?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I should like to refer the hon. member to the remarks I made at the opening of the debate on my estimates last week. I said at that time that the R.C.M.P. had reason to believe that traffic in hard narcotics was reasonably well under control, but were not as optimistic regarding soft narcotics, particularly marijuana.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT AS TO BRITISH SHIPS MAROONED IN SUEZ CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me a question about four British cargo ships now marooned in Great Bitter lake in the Suez canal. The right hon. gentleman asked whether I could give him any indication as to the condition of these ships and their crews. As I have mentioned, they are British ships. The British government has asked our ambassador in Cairo—the Canadian embassy is now responsible in the United Arab Republic for British interests—to give what help we can to the crews of these ships, and find out anything we can about their condition.

The ambassador sought permission from the U.A.R. foreign ministry and from the Suez canal authorities for consular officials to make contact with the crews of these ships. He has not yet received that permission, but we have learned that the officers and men of the ships seem to be well and in no difficulty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the Prime Minister.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the President of the Treasury Board. In order to prevent the matter becoming caught in the scramble over a summer recess, will the government now place on the order paper its legislation to provide for increases in the pensions of retired civil servants?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said the other day that this matter was under urgent consideration. It is. I hope that consideration will be completed shortly. I can assure my hon. friend that it will not be caught in any scramble over a summer recess, because I hope there will be no such scramble.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any reason why the matter cannot be placed on the order paper within the next few days?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TELEVISION

AGREEMENT BETWEEN C.B.C. AND QUEBEC RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister confirm to the house whether an agreement has been concluded between the Quebec government and the C.B.C. for educational broadcasts for 1967-68, and can she tell us who is responsible for the selection and contents of these programs?

Mr. Speaker: That question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): I should like to join with the hon. member for Sherbrooke at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and to put for the first time the following question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration: Have the Estates General of French Canada requested the government or a group of government members to send a delegation to take part in the meeting which this organization will soon be holding?

Mr. Speaker: This question could be put on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—PROTEST AGAINST INCREASED IMPORTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister and, in order to enable him to understand the problem more clearly, I should like to read part of a telegram addressed to Hon. J. J. Greene by the minister of agriculture of the province of Quebec. I quote:

The federal government has allowed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is aware that the rules do not permit him to read a telegram in support of a question. The hon. member can put his question directly I am sure.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has probably not received the message, I simply wanted to acquaint him with its contents.

In his telegram to the federal Minister of Agriculture, the Quebec minister of agriculture protests against the fact that the federal government has admitted 90,000 cases of eggs from January to May 1967, as compared to 15,000 cases for the same period last year. Would the right hon. Prime Minister convince his Minister of Agriculture to take the necessary measures to put an early end to this harmful situation for our egg producers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a suggestion or a representation much more than a question.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DAMAGE TO PAINTING IN RAILWAY COMMITTEE ROOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State, or through the minister to the appropriate person connected with the hanging of art in the House of Commons, or paintings.

Mr. Pearson: "Art" who?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pugh: Is the minister aware that the picture "Vimy Ridge" hanging in the railway committee room has become damaged? I suggest that it be looked at immediately and that steps be taken to stop any irreparable damage.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thought for a moment the hon. member was talking about the hanging of my colleague who usually sits on my left, which has been suggested from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: However, this is not the responsibility of my department; it is in fact within the province of the Speaker. But I shall be very happy to have members of the National Gallery staff offer any assistance required so there shall be no damage.

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry. I might say that I rise as a very sensitive soul who has been touched to the quick because I did not expect to receive from a fellow comrade and colleague the treatment I will mention. In view of headlines to the effect that Mr. Ray Perrault, leader of the Liberal splinter group in the legislative assembly of British Columbia—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —has arranged a meeting with the minister to plead the Kootenay area's case for economic development, would the minister inform the house if it is now the government's policy to give particular consideration to representations made by Mr. Ray Perrault in ridings in British Columbia not represented by Liberal members of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is in order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister would very much like to answer this question, and it is the cause of some concern in British Columbia.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CHILDREN TO MEET HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. Could the hon. lady tell the house whether any provision is being made for the children of Canada to meet Her Majesty the Queen during her forthcoming visit?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on the afternoon of July 1, on the grounds of parliament hill, a birthday party will be held. It will be particularly for children but will be open to any Canadian or visitor who may be here. Hopefully there will be many thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, of children here. In addition a special meeting has been arranged for Her Majesty at Landsdowne park with certain selected children.

PROPOSED NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question that is related to an earlier question. Some weeks ago the minister indicated that the ad hoc committee dealing with the political youth seminar would be called together to consider the recommendations of the Canadian political youth council. Could the minister indicate when that meeting might be called, in view of the passing of time?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question yesterday. The ad hoc meeting was held and the proposal was rejected, but since that time the centennial commission has offered some assistance. It is now a question whether the citizenship branch will be able to offer other assistance and whether cabinet will approve it.

INQUIRY AS TO NATIONAL TOURS BY CANADIAN PERFORMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State which will leave nobody in suspense. The question involves the centennial commission. Has the commission lined up other national tours by outstanding groups, such as the one now being undertaken by Don Messer and his Islanders complete with Charlie Chamberlain and the Buchta dancers, who are now in the far galleries from Your Honour, to mark centennial year?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO SALES TAX EXEMPTION FOR BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister inform the house what type of construction will be exempt from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials under his budget proposal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a legal question that I do not think is answerable at this time.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the 11 per cent sales tax exemption applicable now to home construction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question cannot be answered at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED LAY-OFFS BY DRY DOCK COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I again ask the right hon. Prime Minister the question I asked him on Monday last and referred to yesterday. The Prime Minister did not have the note about it on his desk and thought he might be able to answer the question today.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did receive the telegram. I answered it and said the matter is being considered by the ministers concerned. I think the Minister of Industry can perhaps supplement this answer.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members will be aware since it was mentioned during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production, a policy of national competition for government shipbuilding requirements has been introduced which included a transitional assistance program whereby certain federal requirements were allocated for competition on a regional basis only. I understand that existing government work at Burrard Dry Dock consists of a tidal and survey vessel with a value of some $3.5 million which is scheduled for delivery in late summer, and a research vessel which the company recently won under the transitional assistance program. Work on this research vessel, which has a value of some $9 million, is now in the design phase and it is anticipated that the work force will progressively build up over the summer months.

In addition to this government work already under contract, the company is bidding on two of the new destroyer escort vessels, with the successful bidder to be determined before the end of the year. Finally, invitations to tender for the first of the Restigouche class conversions will be issued during the summer for competition which will be limited to west coast yards.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that out of 800 employees some 350 are in the process of being laid off, does the minister have any figures from the company in question as to when it expects to get back to a full complement of employees.

Mr. Drury: I have not any such figures.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR TAKING OVER COAL UNDERTAKINGS, DEVELOPING INDUSTRY, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a Cape Breton Development Corporation to acquire, reorganize and rehabilitate certain coal mining works and undertakings on Cape Breton Island, to conduct coal mining operations in the Sydney coalfield and to promote and assist the development of industry on Cape Breton Island to provide employment outside the coal producing industry and to broaden the base of the island's economy; to provide for the administration of the corporation and its initial financial and operating capital requirements including the consideration or compensation established or determined to be payable in connection with the acquisition by the corporation of the said coal mining works and undertakings, the sum of twenty-five million dollars for the purpose of reorganizing and rehabilitating the said coal mining works and undertakings and for preparatory work in connection with the conduct by the corporation of coal mining operations, and the sum of twenty million dollars for the purpose of promoting and assisting the development of industry on the island.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Drury.]

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I have kept very carefully, for several months, in order to use it today, a quotation from the London Observer, published in the Vancouver Sun of August 19, 1966.

[English]

Democratic politics is the art of finding sound policies that are also acceptable to the people.

The resolution and the bill that we are about to introduce are of that kind. Those of us who have worked on it, and we worked hard, Mr. Chairman, think that the content of the bill is sound, that it offers the best solution in the circumstances to a most difficult problem. They hope that spontaneously or after reflection the public will agree with them.

For the benefit of those who are not too familiar with the Cape Breton coal problem, Mr. Chairman, may I offer a few basic background elements. The coal industry in the Sydney-Glace Bay district employs some 6,500 people; that is in the mines, in the railways and in the shops. Along with the steel workers they represent one third of the wage earners of the area.

The Dominion Coal Company Limited, a partly owned subsidiary of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, that is Dosco, owns and operates No. 12 colliery at New Waterford, No. 21 and No. 26 collieries at Glace Bay.

The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of Dosco, owns the Princess at Sydney Mines, also referred to as Old Sydney, and McBean mine also referred to as Acadia, in the Pictou area. The production of the three collieries of Dominion Coal I have mentioned amounts to 2.6 million tons per year, and they employ 3,790 people on an average. These figures are for 1966. The production of the other group, that is Princess and McBean, is as follows: Princess, about 600,000 tons; McBean, about 200,000 tons, which is 800,000 tons altogether. Princess employs 1,071 people and McBean 376.

Added to this there is the contribution of the independent operators. There are three of them in Cape Breton and four of them on the mainland. They produce altogether a little less than half a million tons of coal per year. The total production of coal in Nova Scotia in 1966 was 3.8 million tons, and in the Sydney coal field 3.3 million tons. This gives an idea of the importance of that production.

What about reserves? Even under the most liberal of geological assessments the coal resources of Nova Scotia comprise no more than 3 per cent of the Canadian coal resources which, as you know, are confined mostly to western Canada. The existing working and structural plant of the seams of the Sydney coal field point to the extension of the coal seams to about 12 miles out to see. Coal is now currently being extracted up to four miles under the sea and at depths approaching 3,000 feet from the sea bottom. I have been down there, as some other members have, and I must say I was surprised to realize that it sometimes takes more than one hour for people to move from the pit head to the face of the mine. Of course the same time is consumed coming back after a day's work.

Consequently we are faced with increasing problems of transportation, rock pressure and ventilation which bear directly on mining costs and the costs of maintaining safe working conditions. These considerations place a finite limit on the amount of coal which can be recovered, even by using the best tools which current mining technology provide. It should be added, Mr. Chairman, that coal is in competition with other sources of energy in the maritimes and in other parts of Canada and in other parts of the world. We very often read in the daily press and in magazines on the situation in France, Great Britain, Germany and Japan. Coal presents a problem in all of these countries as a result of technological changes. We are not in the nineteenth century any more. Coal today is not the near-exclusive source of energy that it was then. Canada is not the only country in the world with a major coal problem. The situation in regard to coal in the maritimes will be further aggravated if the current offshore exploration program in respect to oil and gas is successful.

A word or two about markets, Mr. Chairman. Fifty-two per cent of the Nova Scotia production is marketed in Ontario and Quebec at very high subsidy cost. May I give some examples. To move coal to Toronto requires a subsidy of about $9, to Noranda about $7.50, to Sudbury about $9.50, to Trois-Rivières about $8. The remaining 48 per cent, or about 2 million tons, was marketed in the four Atlantic provinces at lesser subsidy costs, the average there being about $6.66. Hon. members know that the maximum federal subsidy is $10.50 in Quebec and Ontario and $8.50 in the Atlantic provinces.

The current market for Dosco coal in the Atlantic provinces is about 1.1 million tons per year. The thermal power coal market is not expected to grow significantly beyond the 1.5 million tons level in the Atlantic provinces because of the probability, perhaps I should say the certainty, of new power plants being based on oil rather than on coal.

To illustrate the uncompetitive nature of coal, let me say that residual oil is available at Atlantic and St. Lawrence ports at about $2.15 per barrel, which is the equivalent of about $9.10 per ton of coal. Dosco coal at the pithead currently costs about $14 per ton, and with a minimum transportation rate of about $3 per ton the level of subsidy required to make it competitive with oil in the Atlantic provinces and at St. Lawrence ports would be at least $8 per ton.

Feasibility studies have shown that a mine-mouth power plant is not an attractive proposition compared to the shipping of coal to existing generating centres. Some hon. members might disagree with that but this is the best information available to us at this time. The metallurgical coal market of some 500,000 tons to the Sydney steel plant has been largely lost to United States coal due to a high and increasing sulphur content in the Sydney coal, notwithstanding efforts which have been made to purge the sulphur from that coal. Last year 474,000 tons were imported from the United States for the Sydney steel plant and only 120,000 tons from the Sydney coal mines were used by the plant.

The difficulties of coal mining in Cape Breton are thus of long standing, Mr. Chairman. The industry has been investigated by several royal commissions, the last three being in 1946, 1960 and 1966, and also by a collection of committees. During 38 years of subvention payments the Nova Scotia coal industry has received nearly $200 million in subventions. Over half of this has been provided since the public hearings of the 1960 royal commission on coal.

Perhaps it would be well to underline that in 1957-58 the subventions were about $8 million, in 1964-65 $17 million, and that this year they will be $31 million. This figure is a little bloated because it includes some carryover from the previous year. The estimate for next year of $27.4 million gives a better picture of the situation.

The amount of subvention per coal miner represents today over $4,000 annually.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Mr. Lewis: That is an improvement on the figure given by Dr. Donald. As I remember it his figure was $3,500 or somewhere around there.

Mr. Pepin: I do not know that I would call that an improvement.

Mr. Lewis: The word "improvement" was in quotes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question? What is the average production per miner on which those statistics are based?

Mr. Pepin: It varies very much from one mine to another.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But what is the average?

Mr. Pepin: I would say that two or three tons a day would be a good average but I will check that to make sure.

Mr. Lewis: I think 2.8.

Mr. Pepin: In comparison with production in other countries, for example, strip mining in the United States, I think the figure is four or five times lower than the results achieved in the United States by strip mining. However, I will come back to this because I would not want to give a false impression.

In addition to direct coal subventions, other forms of assistance to Nova Scotia coal mines amount to some $5 million per year. This assistance is provided under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, the Maritime Freight Rates Act, the Canadian Coal Equality Act and the Coal Production Assistance Act.

I have before me the subventions per mine, and if during the course of debate hon. members would like to have them I would be delighted to provide them.

In 1950, following the 1946 royal commission report, Dosco embarked on a $18 million program to rehabilitate the mines and introduce new mechanical coal cutting equipment. This program was financed with the aid of a $7.5 million loan from the federal government under the Coal Production Assistance Act. I might point out, by the way, that the principal and interest payments are now in default by about $5 million.

This financial transfusion, however, was not sufficient. Early in 1965 Dosco informed the government that in order to continue operating it would require large capital grants ranging from $21.5 million to $37.8 million for a second major program of mine rehabilitation.

Subsequently Dosco informed the government that it wished to withdraw from coal mining altogether, and it offered to sell its entire coal mining interests to the government. So the mines will be forced to close unless substantial new capital is provided for rehabilitation and modernization. It is obvious that no commercial organization or financial institution is willing or eager to advance the necessary capital funds.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

The policy followed by the Canadian government has been influenced by several major considerations. One of the first considerations is the limited viability of the Dosco mines.

A factor other than the one I have just stated is the intention of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation to get out of its coal mining operations in Nova Scotia.

A third factor is the need for very large capital to modernize and rehabilitate all those mines. A fourth is the lack of a market for Nova Scotia coal without federal subsidies.

I do know that there are markets, as I have often been told, but those markets remain as long as the federal subsidies remain and, moreover, provided those subsidies are increased.

At the present production pace of 3.5 million tons per year, it has been calculated that subsidies would have to reach close to $400 million during the next fifteen years; even then, the basic sources of the problem would not be eliminated. In other words, if we do nothing today, if we simply continue the present policy, fifteen years from now, having spent $300 to $400 million, we will be faced with the very same problem as we have today.

Mr. Lewis: As in the past.

Mr. Pepin: As in the past. I am not here to blame or justify the actions of past governments; I leave that to the conscience of the members of this house. I consider that all the preceding governments meant well, and I am not accusing them of not having done any better.

Of course, we cannot allow this situation to endure. However, nowhere in Canada shall we find one social problem comparable to this one. Here, and I insist upon this because it is the reason for our intervention, here we are faced with an important urban labour force, we are faced with established collectivities which depend almost entirely upon a big industry which is no longer profitable, which cannot survive for more than a few years, by means of substantial subsidies. This is probably the most thorny problem that this country has ever had to meet.

The coal problem in Cape Breton is essentially a social problem. It is because of its concern for the welfare of individuals and collectivities, and not for the welfare of companies, that the government intends to subsidize the regional economy so that it may evolve from a state of subjection to a declining natural resource toward a more wholesome economic situation.

Undoubtedly, extraordinary efforts will be required and that is what we will be asking the house today, to activate the industrial renewal so as to create new jobs in that area.

Since the development of resources is involved, it seems that corrective measures should be left to the province. This opinion was often expressed before me. The answer is that the Canadian government has historically been involved through its subsidies programs which have kept the mines producing long after they would have been forced to close down, and this would have caused considerable economic and social dislocation.

That is why the Canadian government feels somewhat obligated—together with the Nova Scotia government—to provide financial and other assistance as long as the Sydney collieries are operating.

[English]

It was in the light of the foregoing circumstances that the government, through the then minister of trade and commerce who is now Minister of Finance, asked Doctor J. R. Donald to investigate the Cape Breton coal situation once again and to recommend a possible solution. Doctor Donald submitted his report and it was tabled in parliament on October 11, 1966. There is much good philosophy in the Donald report. I mention that partly because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle accused me yesterday of lacking philosophy in the presentation of my estimates. There is much good philosophy, as I said, in the Donald report.

Doctor Donald examined the coal industry not in isolation but in relation to the broad economic and social conditions prevailing in that region. His approach was not only economic and financial; it was also humanitarian and social. His recommendations are based on the fundamental premise that even on a heavily subsidized basis the realistic working life of the Sydney mines can hardly exceed about 15 years, and that the government should use this period to prepare in a positive manner for the cessation of coal mining. This preparation must involve the creation of new foundations for the Cape Breton economy and a new and more attractive economic environment. That is the only way to forestall the economic debacle which would otherwise result from the closure of the mines.

Doctor Donald says that the choice is not one of preserving or not preserving coal mining indefinitely; the choice is one of planning or failing to plan for what is inevitable. The government is indebted to Doctor Donald for his analysis of the Cape Breton coal problem and for his imaginative and enlightened recommendations. I am pleased to see him in the gallery of the house at this time.

The report was criticized at first, mostly, of course, by the miners and also by other people, some of whom said it was not generous enough while others said it was too generous. I have always been comforted when people around me say that I do not move fast enough or others that I move too quickly. I expect that Doctor Donald also likes this position.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the minister to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I feel that this report will be a landmark in the economic history of Canada. Doctor Donald made many recommendations, but considering the lack of time I will not spell them out. We have agreed to very many of them and they will be found in the legislation and in the agreement that was tabled today.

On December 29, 1966, the government, I repeat, following careful consideration of the Donald report and its recommendations, the receipt of views of interested persons and organizations, and discussions with the government of Nova Scotia, announced in consort with Nova Scotia certain basic points of policy. The Minister of National Health and Welfare and I went down to the area to listen to the views of the people. We have received many views since then, just as other ministers had received many views before. As I say, on December 29 in consort with Nova Scotia we announced certain basic points of policy. May I spell them out.

1. We agreed that parliament be asked to establish a suitable crown corporation, in which both Canada and Nova Scotia will participate, to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation and simultaneously to help promote and finance the development of industry on the island of Cape Breton.

2. For these purposes, Canada agreed to make a contribution of $45 million to the crown corporation, for the rehabilitation and operation of the mines about $25 million and for the development of new industry about $20 million.

3. Nova Scotia agreed to contribute $10 million to the initial economic development fund of the corporation.

4. In place of the present system of providing subsidies to a private corporation on its individual coal sales, the government agreed to request parliament to provide funds to the crown corporation to enable it to mine and market its coal to the best advantage, that is, to underwrite the annual coal losses of the crown corporation.

5. Canada agreed to augment the initial industrial development fund of the crown corporation from expected savings in federal subsidies resulting from reductions in the level of coal production.

6. It was agreed that the crown corporation, in rationalizing the mines, should give full consideration to the need for orderly adjustment, including the implementation of a generous early retirement plan as recommended by Doctor Donald.

7. In view of the federal government's acceptance of the major financial responsibility for the long-term solution to the coal problem of the Dosco mines in the Sydney area, a problem of national concern, Nova Scotia agreed to accept complete responsibility for the independent coal mines of Nova Scotia. These are the several independent coal mines that I have already referred to.

• (3:50 p.m.)

8. Nova Scotia agreed to consult with the crown corporation on coal markets in order to maintain an orderly market for Nova Scotia coal.

9. Nova Scotia agreed, moreover, to issue no further coal mining permits or leases during the next 15 years unless the application for the coal permit or lease carries the approval of the crown corporation.

[Mr. Pepin.]

10. The opening of a new mine at Lingan has been a matter of much controversy. In view of the government undertaking of October, 1965 and of Doctor Donald's strong recommendation against it, the government agreed to allocate sufficient money to fulfil its own commitment but to leave to the crown corporation the decision as to how these sums can best be used in the interests of the community.

11. Canada and Nova Scotia agreed to establish a joint framework which will permit the concentration and co-ordination of all federal and provincial efforts to promote the economic development of Cape Breton island.

There are all sorts of organizations already in existence at the federal and provincial levels. We do not want to duplicate these efforts. There will be a great need for co-ordination between the two levels of government.

Mr. Lewis: Before the minister speaks on another point, may I ask him whether one would be right in assuming that any payment to be made to Dosco for its alleged assets in Dominion Coal and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal would be in addition to the sums mentioned in the resolution?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, but we can deal with that more profitably when we are discussing the legislation itself. There are clauses in the legislation in connection with the acquisition of the mines. I can guarantee that it is our interpretation that the money which may have to be paid for the acquisition of the mines is additional to the sums mentioned in the resolution.

I was talking about the agreement with Nova Scotia. Since the joint announcement in December by Canada and Nova Scotia of the basic points of policy on which the two governments are in accord, detailed discussions have been held with the province. I labour this point a little because people have so often asked, in the press and elsewhere, what we were doing at that time. I can guarantee that we have been working on this legislation, but the subject is much more complicated than is realized by many of the people who were asking us questions. The Leader of the Opposition knows how difficult and complex the writing of legislation can be. As a former professor of political science I did not suspect it would be as complicated as it is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One learns from experience.

Mr. Pepin: I expected the right hon. gentleman to invite me to go back to the university in view of the fact that I am now more competent to teach properly.

The agreement I have tabled today contains provision for co-operation between Ottawa and Halifax in a number of areas which I shall enumerate. They include the form and functions of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and of its two divisions, the coal division and the industrial development division; the responsibility of each government in respect of the corporation; the matter of the annual capital and operating budgets of the two divisions of the corporation; the annual report of the corporation—the corporation will, of course, have to report to both governments; the early provision of a target phase-out timetable for the coal mines; the general means by which the two governments will co-ordinate economic development activities on Cape Breton island; the acceptance by Nova Scotia of responsibility for the independent coal operations; the agreement that no further coal mining permits or leases will be issued for the next 15 years without the approval of the corporation, and so on.

Thus, the two preoccupations of the corporation are the nationalization of the mining operations and the stimulation of industrial development in Cape Breton. Both are of equal importance. Can Cape Breton be stimulated? Can the economic base of Cape Breton be broadened to use the wording of the resolution? My colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare will, I hope, take part in this debate. He will tell the house about recent developments in Cape Breton and about the federal contribution to these developments. He will tell us about the contribution made by the various departments—transport, public works, industry, manpower—and about the contribution made by the agencies of the government such as the Atlantic Development Board and ARDA. He will tell us about the new industrial park at Point Edward, about the new heavy water plants, about the new B.A. refinery project at Point Tupper.

I have studied these things with him. I have taken part in some of the negotiations and consultations which led to some of these projects, and I must say I am optimistic. Hon. members expect that from me, anyway. But very often in the past we have been told that there is no future for Cape Breton in coal and steel. Present events are demonstrating, I think, that there is a future for Cape Breton, partly out of coal, anyway, and that Cape Breton can be modernized.

I have read a report on the B.A. refinery project for Point Tupper which is of extreme interest. This project could contribute immensely to the broadening of the economic base of Cape Breton.

The purpose of the forthcoming legislation is to delegate to an autonomous crown agency the responsibility for carrying on this developmental work. I am well aware that problems of the magnitude which face Cape Breton island cannot be solved by governments alone without the full support of the people themselves. Without their help one cannot arrest the social blight which has afflicted their area. That we shall receive their support I have no doubt, for as Mr. Justice Rand wrote at page 50 of his report in 1960:

> The people who make up the communities concerned, miners and their families, clergy, professionals, tradesmen, skilled and unskilled workers, are of the ordinary stuff of Canadians and, in general, are outstanding in personal relations, in friendliness and hospitality.

One cannot imagine such a people failing to respond to this new challenge. I am sure they will take an active part in the rebuilding of the economic basis of their island.

Mr. Lewis: Before the minister resumes his seat, may I ask him a question—unless the hon. member for Cape Breton South is rising to ask a question?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is quite possible I shall be asking a considerable number of questions and I trust the hon. member for York South will get the answers to his at the same time.

The minister told us that the resolution was a landmark in the economic history of Canada. I hope that in particular it will be a landmark in the economic history of Cape Breton island. If we wait as long for the implementation of this resolution and the bill that will follow it as we waited for other potential developments that were to take place, the miners in Cape Breton will continue to go underground for a considerable time yet.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The minister gave us a rundown on what the Minister of National Health and Welfare will have to say about economic development in Cape Breton. He referred to the B.A. development, the heavy water development, and so on. I trust that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare addresses the committee he will give members an understanding of what the Liberal leader in Nova Scotia said during last month's election campaign about developments in Cape Breton in recent years. I trust he will point out the actual facts.

I and I think all other hon. members directly interested in the coal industry in Nova Scotia are willing to expedite the passage of this resolution in order that we may get the bill before the house, at which time we may have further remarks to make. However, when making his arguments on behalf or in favour of Cape Breton whichever way one wants to look at them, the minister returned to another touchy subject, and I think it is time the government told the people of Canada the truth with respect to what is involved in subventions or subsidies paid to support Cape Breton coal mining. I appreciate very much, and I hope I will continue to appreciate, what is being done now for the mining situation in Cape Breton, but it is only right that the committee be given more of the history of what mining has meant to Cape Breton and what future developments to replace mining will mean.

At present in the town of Sydney Mines 38.6 per cent of the actual working force is employed in the coal mines. In the Glace Bay area 38 per ent of the actual working force is employed in coal mines. In the town of New Waterford 56 per cent of the actual working force is employed in coal mines. This gives an over-all average of 44 per cent of the work force employed in the mines. Everybody must understand what that means to the economic base of the area. Without the mines there would be no such towns. They could not possibly exist without the work which the mines provide.

Prior to the 1963 election Liberal candidates in Cape Breton as part of their platform said that a Liberal government would bring about great development, would start a research program and look after sales. But history moves on, and on October 5, 1965 in the city of Halifax, not in the coal mining area, the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a grand promise of $25 million to mechanize and improve mining in Cape Breton. Not only did he promise $25 million but poll workers for the Liberals in all the mining towns had the flat statement in their instruction books that $25 million would be given to the coal industry in order to put new life into it.

History moves on further to 1967 and now, despite assurances given over the last 20 months by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Industry—you name them, they are all included—that the policy announced on October 5, 1965 would be carried out, we have here what I hope will prove to be the answer to our problems. Unfortunately, however, another problem is developing. Mention of this other problem was made today by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, although this resolution does not tie in with it. We all hope that the future new development will have favourable consequences and that it will prove to be what we all hope it will be and give new opportunity to the working force.

I trust that the bill to the resolution will give an assurance to each and every miner that before he is displaced from a colliery he will receive employment elsewhere. The difficulties in this connection will be tremendous, because one cannot just phase out a coal mining operation by taking individuals out of the mine. As many as 300, 400 or 500 new jobs will have to be available for the men taken out of a coal mining operation. There is also the question of training to be considered. The government will have a hard task before it.

I draw some satisfaction from the fact that, following passage of this resolution and the bill which will come before us on Monday, until the new development corporation can get its schemes off the ground the miners will have the protection of this legislation. However, I take strong exception to some remarks made by the minister. Since 1963, when the government took office, its members have been unable to differentiate between subvention and subsidy. Today the minister referred to subsidies and what they would mean. He used the word subsidies and said they mean a total of $4,000 per year to each and every miner employed in the coal industry.

The hon. member for York South questioned this figure and referred to the fact that Doctor Donald used the figure of $3,500. Doctor Donald was the commissioner appointed by the government to look into the matter of subsidies, and that was the figure he used. But worse, within the last month the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had the audacity to say that these subsidies would mean $7,000 per year to each and every miner employed in the Cape Breton coal fields.

We have a situation where Doctor Donald says $3,500, one minister says $4,000 and another minister says $7,000, and we keep on hearing these ministers use the word subsidy. Let it be understood by the minister once and for all that it is not only the miners who are covered by the subventions. Without these subvention payments we could not get our coal to market, but the subventions cover any number of C.N.R. employees and the employees of other carriers. The subventions are paid to the carriers; they are not subsidies paid to the coal company itself.

The minister is still shoving the same old argument down our throats with respect to what the government has been doing. I say, let him point out the number of other industries and other developments in the economic life of this country that are also getting subsidies from the government. If he wants to talk about subsidies he can talk about the American magazines that are receiving subsidies. But no, one of the ministers talks about $7,000 a year as a subsidy to each coal miner. As I said to that minister when he made his stupid statement in the first place, if he wants to save money why not give $5,000 a year to each and every miner? They will be happy to spend the next 15 years of the phase-out period receiving $5,000 a year. According to the minister's figures this would be a saving of $2,000 per year on each and every miner employed in the coal fields.

Now we have a Cape Breton crown company. The hon. member for Coast-Capilano made a grand statement about this industry being one which we allowed to die. A member of the New Democratic party, speaking in Montreal—I cannot recall the date—said that they did not believe in nationalizing a dying industry. If this should be questioned I will do the research because it will only take a minute or two to check the date. I realize that the hon. member for York South is very anxious to have something to say on this matter. No doubt he has some questions to ask. I believe that the hon. member for York South could tell an interesting story about what may have developed on the sixth floor yesterday when the individual from the Canadian Labour Congress who recently joined the Prime Minister's staff ran the risk of getting his mouth shut in the proper way. Possibly the hon. member for York South could tell us the story.

It is regrettable that the agreement signed by the province of Nova Scotia and the federal government was placed in my hands only 15 minutes after the house opened, because I did not have much of an opportunity to go over it. No doubt, with Premier Stanfield's name on it, it is acceptable to me in most instances. There is one question but I can deal with it later when referring to the policy statement made by the Prime Minister.

With regard to the acquisition of the coal mines from Dominion Coal, I should like to refer in part to the policy statement of the Prime Minister on Cape Breton coal which was released on December 29, 1966. At the bottom of the first page and the top of the second page it reads as follows:

> Assured of the participation of the government of Nova Scotia, the government of Canada is prepared to ask parliament to establish a suitable crown corporation—the composition and powers of which will be defined by the two governments at an early date—to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation and simultaneously to help promote and finance the development of modern industry on the island of Cape Breton, within the context of a comprehensive economic plan for the redevelopment of the Cape Breton economy.

The resolution before the house covers that statement. He went on to say:

> For those purposes the government of Canada will make a capital contribution of $45 million to the crown corporation for the rehabilitation and operation of the mines (about $25 million) and for the development of new industry (about $20 million).

I think we arrive now at the question to which the hon. member for York South was anxious to have an answer. I did not quite catch the minister's answer. Apparently the $25 million is for the rehabilitation of the coal mines and will be used for that purpose. The $20 million for the development of new industry will also be used only for that purpose and anything else paid for the acquisition of the coal company assets will be something which the federal government will look after over and above the other sums. Here I might make a recommendation to the government. In the acquisition of the coal company assets by the crown company there should be a rider attached—this might be part of the answer to the problem in respect of steel—to the effect that, since this company has done nothing but let the operations go downhill from the time it came to Nova Scotia, any money involved in the transaction between the federal government and Dominion Coal should remain in Cape Breton. This money might be used to help develop the steel industry in Sydney. In any event, it should remain in Cape Breton. Otherwise I would recommend to the minister that the whole thing should be expropriated. The shareholders of Dosco would not be hurt financially. It is granted that they would lose money, but anybody who could afford to hold Dosco stock over the years without receiving a dividend would not miss the money.

The Prime Minister in his statement went on to say:

> The new crown corporation will have, as one of its two objectives, the broadening of the industrial base of Cape Breton. To further this objective, the government of Canada will augment its initial $20 million economic development contribution to the crown corporation from expected savings in federal subsidies.

There is that word again, Mr. Chairman. One would think that in respect of something like this they would use more care in choosing their terms.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to interrupt? I have the Concise Oxford Dictionary definition of the word subvention. It is: "Grant of money in aid, subsidy."

Mr. MacEwan: That is not a recognized authority in Cape Breton.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You had better get another dictionary.

Mr. Pepin: I am ready to accept that the Oxford Dictionary is not a recognized authority in Cape Breton.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Now that the minister has convinced himself that a subsidy and a subvention are the same thing, probably he could clarify for the benefit of the members of the house how much money went to the Dominion Coal Company as a subsidy. Is he prepared to say that a cheque was sent or will he admit that this money was paid to Canadian National Railways and other carriers?

Mr. Pepin: The subsidy or subvention was paid to the coal producers of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister had better do some homework. The Prime Minister's statement continues:

> In addition, it is the intention of the federal government to establish with the province a joint framework which will permit the concentration of all federal and provincial efforts to promote the economic development of eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island in accordance with a comprehensive plan.

I do not intend to say too much about that. The hon. member for Pictou is far more qualified to speak on that question. However, the resolution before us, unless the bill provides otherwise, is definitely not in accordance with the policy announcement of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister made this definite statement:

> —the economic development of eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island in accordance with a comprehensive plan.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Again I repeat that the hon. member for Pictou, who has much more personal knowledge of he situation in this area, particularly in respect of the McBean mine which has been eliminated under the resolution, will deal with this matter when his opportunity arrives. The statement then continues:

> The government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia believe that a rigid adherence to a fixed timetable to reduce the level of coal production might involve unnecessary hardship on the dependent communities. Consequently, the rationalization of the mines will be related to the success in the introduction of new industries.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member for Cape Breton South that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I thank hon. members for their indulgence. I will try to wrap up my remarks in a few minutes so that other members who wish to speak in support of this resolution will have an opportunity to do so. The Prime Minister's statement then continues:

> The crown corporation will be instructed to give full consideration to the need for orderly adjustment, including the implementation of a generous early retirement plan for the miners as recommended by Dr. Donald.

I should like to have the assurance of the minister that there will be a guarantee in the bill to follow regarding the need for orderly adjustment and the implementation of a generous early retirement plan so the miners can depend on this legislation. I am particularly interested in this point because of the situation in Cape Breton in respect of the $30 per month supplement to old age security payments. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will listen closely to my remarks because prior to that legislation coming before the house he apparently did not fully understand the situation regarding these retired miners.

In my opinion every retired miner in Cape Breton who is receiving a gratuity from the company—I will not refer to it as a pension—is entitled to the $30 supplement unless he is receiving income from another source.

The Minister of National Revenue includes the gratuity paid by the Dominion Coal Company as income with the result that retired miners in Cape Breton are receiving only $8 to $13 per month instead of the $30 per month supplement. The miners should be given the assurance that this legislation will contain some protection for the $75 per month they receive from the company. If the crown corporation decides that this gratuity should be protected as a pension I am sure this will be acceptable to the retired miners. It is my hope that the crown corporation will assure the retired miners of Cape Breton that they will receive this payment from the Dominion Coal Company as an earned pension. Since 1953 all retired miners receiving $75 per month from the Dominion Coal Company have only been able to qualify for $35 per month at age 70 when they began to receive old age security payments. In other words, the company has cut the gratuity down to $40 per month on the basis of the fact that it has to pay 2 per cent of income toward old age security payments. For this reason I say it is ridiculous for the Minister of National Revenue to argue that this gratuity is a part of income.

The payment of $75 per month to the miners was never based on a signed agreement between the union and the company. It was never the result of an agreed contributory plan and therefore it has never been protected. The company could cut off the payment completely at any time it wished. Since an agreement was signed, as a result of the Canada Pension Plan to which the miners contribute, there is no assurance that these retired miners and miners who retire in the future will continue to receive this payment. I hope the crown corporation will look into this situation and provide the necessary protection.

Let me turn again to the Prime Minister's policy statement. Hon. members may have some difficulty in following my remarks regarding this statement as I have read various parts and interjected my own comments. The statement continues:

> Subject to these conditions, the government of Canada believes that an orderly reduction in the output of these mines to an annual rate of about 2 million tons as recommended by Dr. Donald will be necessary because of rising costs and the limited life expectancy of the mines; and the government of Nova Scotia accepts this view.

It is my belief that under present circumstances coal operations will have to continue for a considerable time. The most realistic part of this resolution is the expressed intention of the government to spend a great deal of money on mechanization. As a result of recent developments in the Middle East I believe that coal as an energy fuel is even more important. As someone has put it, the great "King Coal" is not dead. Unfortunately I cannot relate that remark directly to Cape Breton coal but generally speaking the demand for coal is not decreasing.

The minister went to great pains to indicate the amount of United States coal being used in the Sydney steel operation. The fact remains that Cape Breton coal is still considered very good for steam production and the demand in this regard is increasing. The need for coal is far from disappearing, particularly when one considers the importation of coal from the United States.

One of the greatest difficulties in respect of coal production in Cape Breton is in moving the coal from the underground face to the surface. I am convinced that if the government started a pilot project at one of these mines using the very best transportation equipment to get the coal from the face to the surface it would prove economical. Coal cutting and mining equipment has become very sophisticated and production costs can be greatly reduced. In view of the recommendation in the Donald report to cut coal production back to 2 million tons I hope the government or the crown corporation will waste no time in setting up a pilot project at one of these collieries. When the results of such a project are ascertained perhaps the feasibility of continuing to mine Cape Breton coal will be apparent.

I could say a great deal more about the benefits of new industries in the area and how they will help the over-all economic picture, but I will forgo any further remarks until the bill has been presented. I trust it will contain guarantees for the protection of retired miners. In this way, regardless of the opinion of the Minister of National Revenue who insists that the payments they are receiving represent pensions, the miners in Cape Breton will have the benefits of these payments as well as old age security.

With all these new developments and as a result of the efforts of this crown corporation I am sure that rather than a cutback in production to 2 million tons there will be further development of the coal industry. We must remember that as late as 1965 the statement was made that a new mine would be opened at Lingan and the entire coal operation would be mechanized. Then as late as 1966, possibly even as late as 1967—I could check this very easily—the statement was made that the policy of spending money on modernization was supported by a good number of cabinet members. I trust that the crown corporation will spend a great deal of effort in developing and improving the coal situation, because when one considers development in other areas one realizes that we need all the assistance we can get. I trust that hon. members will see fit to support the bill and that it will contain the promises which have been made in this connection.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. member for Cape Breton South was right, for two reasons, when he twitted the minister and others for constantly repeating the total amount paid by way of subventions or subsidies. First, subsidies and subventions of one sort or another are not new in the development of the Canadian economy. I have a great deal of sympathy with the miners of Nova Scotia for resenting the implication of the suggestions constantly made that they have been beneficiaries of particularly privileged treatment, when in fact subventions have been made over the years to the western coal producers and support prices have been instituted for other products and resources in our economy.

An economy such as Canada's, stretched over many thousands of miles from one ocean to the other, frequently presents the country with a need to support the production and transportation of a particular product, one instance being to bring cheaper fuel to the markets in central Canada. My friends in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia generally and the other Atlantic provinces refer at times to those in upper Canada as having been greedy throughout the 100 years history of this country. I agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South in his objection to the constant reference to subsidies. But, second, that is not the problem. The problem, as the minister has stated and as Doctor Donald has stated, and as many other inquiries before Doctor Donald's have established, is the constant, almost total economic deterioration of a whole community, and the fact that the two major industries on which the community of Cape Breton has depended and still depends have been over the years on a toboggan slide downward. For this reason, even though my colleagues and I of course support the belated but useful step taken by the government as indicated in this resolution, I submit that once again this government and this parliament under the leadership of the Liberal government will take a half step instead of a full step to deal with the community problem of Cape Breton because the resolution deals with only one industry in the area.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred in glowing terms to the report of Doctor Donald. Undoubtedly it is a very important document, couched in concern for the community and the human problems involved. But his terms of reference, as I remember the statement in his report, were limited to a consideration of the coal industry. So he considered that industry. But the fact is that there is another industry on which Cape Breton's future depends and that industry is also going down. The same corporation is involved. Unemployment is increasing in that industry, in the Sydney plant. Neither this resolution nor the legislation to be based on it deals in any way with the second industry which is the basis of the Cape Breton community, namely, the steel industry. That is my complaint and the complaint of my colleagues about steps now being proposed by the government. I will come back to that in a moment, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

I went to Cape Breton island for the first time about 30 years ago. I do not recall whether I had the privilege of meeting the hon. member for Cape Breton South at that time. He is probably too young. But the thing that has struck me over the 30 years—and the blame for this lies at the door of this and other governments, federal and provincial—is that every time I have gone back to Cape Breton, and I have done so, I suppose, about 20 times in the 30 years, I have found that the same problems existed but they had grown worse every subsequent time I visited there.

Inquiry after inquiry has been held. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to one of them. I think there have been four of five inquiries. The volumes of the reports and their supplementary data could fill a library. Almost every one of the reports—and over the years I have studied most of them—has emphasized the need of doing something fundamental, even though none of them was quite as extensive and broad as Doctor Donald's and, I would say, Mr. Rand's report of 1960, if my memory serves me right.

For all these years we did nothing as a country or as a province. What has been the result? I think it is important for everyone of us, those of us like myself who do not live in Nova Scotia or Cape Breton, to realize what we as a country have allowed to happen in Cape Breton. It is not the fault of the people in Cape Breton. It is superfluous for me to say, as I am sure every member of this house who has visited that island will agree, that the people of Cape Breton are as industrious and as devoted to Canada and their community as any other people in this country. It is not their fault. It is the direct fault of a corporation, a non-human, indeed inhuman coporation that has exploited the coal and other resources of that province.

In the case of the steel plant at Sydney, at the turn of the century this corporation was given municipal tax incentives by the city. It was given other incentives. Through the years it has received almost $200 million in subventions, subsidies and other assistance and has cared not a fig for the future of the community. It has cared not one iota for the future of the people of Cape Breton island and the communities they have built. It has taken all the largesse throughout these years from the federal, provincial and municipal governments. After these moneys had been paid the corporation closed down mines and is now closing down, bit by bit, the Sydney steel plant.

My social philosophy is well known to members of this house. Perhaps one of the most typical examples of what I am saying is to be found in what Dr. MacKintosh once said. Dr. MacKintosh is a famous Canadian economist. I have his words before me. With respect to the capitalist or free enterprise system he said:

• (4:40 p.m.)

It draws a very bad mark indeed for its allocation of the penalties of the destructiveness of change.

This is exactly what has happened. The people of Cape Breton have paid the penalty. Dosco and the government have paid no attention to the long-range problem. I should like to cite from a speech by Reverend A. Hogan to the 18th dominion-provincial coal conference on September 16, 1966. He is a well known economist who teaches at St. Francis Xavier and he has been interested in Nova Scotian social and economic matters, particularly those relating to Cape Breton, for a good many years. In addition he is, if I may say so, a social economist instead of one of those economists who claim not to make any moral judgments. He makes them, and I respect him for it. This is what he says in the speech to which I have referred:

All of us know from common observation and history, as well as a general understanding of the nature of our economic system, that the decline and disappearance of an industry is not a new thing. We especially realize this in regard to the gradual depletion of the economic seams of a non-renewable resource such as coal or any other mineral.

Yet I venture to say that for many of us regardless of age, education or skill, the experience of being caught up in such a ferment of change with all its implications, is an abstract one.

I am trying not to make it abstract for myself and for those who are listening to me.

We've read about such occurrences, heard about them, but rarely if ever have concrete experience with what this type of upheaval means, in social and economic terms.

As have hon. members who represent ridings on Cape Breton island.

At a deeper psychological level we are scarcely aware of the emotional impact in terms of fear, suspicion, despair and even rage that a severe dislocation effects in relationships between individuals and groups at such a time.

This is the kind of problem with which governments, federal and provincial, have been faced for many years. The Reverend Mr. Hogan also says in the same speech, and it is worth putting a few of these quotations on the record, that one of the consequences of the neglect of Cape Breton as a community by the corporation, Dosco, which has been the main corporation in the community, as well as by the provincial and federal governments, has been a constant migration from Cape Breton. This has resulted not only in a loss of population but a loss of that adult population which is productive. He says, after setting out a table, that the figures above reveal there has been a substantial migration of the young and active element of the population. Many of those who are left have low or no mobility potential.

These are the problems, I insist, that we face. Father Hogan also points out that the loss of people in the most productive years of their lives has meant that the local communities have not been able to get the taxes necessary in order to produce the services that are needed, whether they be housing, education, road building or sewage facilities. These facilities have not been produced at a level which the people of Cape Breton deserve and which the local municipalities want to have.

Obviously, in a declining economy and with the loss of people in the age groups which are most productive, you necessarily have a lower base for municipal revenue. You have, therefore, immense obstacles to the building of what economists call an infrastructure to a level which can receive modern industry. I refer to the various services that are required for this.

I should like, finally, to refer to page 13 of the speech, a copy of which I have before me, where Rev. Mr. Hogan repeats in strong terms what the minister said. I agree with Father Hogan, and I think with the minister, that there is every possibility for the re-development of the Cape Breton area. It is both possible and feasible, Father Hogan says, and he reaches that conclusion after a long and careful study of all the literature available to him. I may be putting this in a more exaggerated way than he would, in humility, have put it himself. However, he has obviously come to this conclusion on the basis of study.

Since there is a shorter time limit on speeches at the resolution stage I have to be sketchy. I may have to exceed it as others have done, but I do not want to do so to any great extent. I may say, very briefly, that the government opposite, which has been in power in Canada for most of this century, carries on its shoulders responsibility for the fact that an entire community has been permitted to become run down. It is ready to take action only at the moment when the situation is so desperate that even the doctrinaire people sitting opposite are forced to do something in the only way in which it could have been done, that is, by the direct intervention of the federal and provincial governments.

I hope I do not have to spend very much time indicating to the public and to members opposite that the steel industry in Cape Breton now presents a difficult problem, almost as difficult as the coal industry. The Rev. Mr. Hogan pointed out in his speech on page 2:

> Your concern here is primarily with coal and its acute problems. In my opinion there is just as real, if not as immediately pressing, a threat to that area's future survival from an impending serious situation confronting operations of the Sydney steel plant.

This is true. It has been increasingly true for ten years, Mr. Chairman. There is nothing in the resolution before us or in the bill based on it, because I have looked at the agreement which was tabled today, to suggest that this government or indeed the corporation which is to be set up will do anything about this plant at Sydney. The only thing that can be done for the Sydney plant, and probably the plant at Trenton as well, is that they be included under public ownership of the crown corporation being set up. The reason I say the only way I will come to in a moment, if I may. In the meantime, may I indicate some figures that have been provided to me by the unions at the Sydney plant?

[Mr. Lewis.]

The working force somewhere around the beginning of this year, including the hourly rated as well as the salaried people, was about 3,075 at the Sydney steel plant. This was a reduction from an average of about 5,000 to 6,000 not more than ten years ago. Since these figures were obtained, I went back to the reports in the newspapers to write down the lay-offs that have already been made or announced. We find that on June 4, 210 were laid off and on June 11, 112, even though the forecast was only 90. We have also been told that about 300—probably more—are to be laid off on June 18. If you add to that—this is an estimate made by certain people—the 100 office employees who will be laid off because the employees on the production force have been laid off, you have a reduction of about 25 per cent from the work force at the beginning of the year. There will be a reduction of about 730 or 740 people if the figure for June 18 is not more than the 300 which the company now forecasts.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It is also clear, Mr. Chairman, without taking the time to go into the details, that Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation has no intention of improving or diversifying its steel operations in Sydney but, on the contrary, has every intention of moving department after department of its Sydney operation to the Contrecoeur complex near Montreal. I challenge anybody here to contradict this statement in view of the actions of the company during the last little while. It is perfectly clear, and this is what we ought to guard against, that if Dominion Steel and Coal carries on its operation on the same basis as it has hitherto—and there is no reason in the world to suspect that it will do otherwise—that is to say, looking at its financial statements without regard to the welfare of the community which it is supposed to have served for many decades, from the point of view of the profitability of Dosco it is better for the company to transfer more and more of its operation to Contrecoeur which is closer to the Quebec market. By doing this they will probably forestall the building of a large steel complex by the Quebec government because they will have pre-empted the market.

What action does the government take in this regard, Mr. Chairman? Surely it is senseless and utterly irresponsible—and I suggest to the minister that his government is irresponsible in this situation—to talk about phasing out coal, because whether this is done at a slow or fast rate it will mean tremendous local dislocation and the creation of tremendous human problems. The government talks about building new industry—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the members of the committee. The government talks about building new industry but takes no steps now to ensure that an important industry, which according to many experts could be made economically viable and on which so much of the economy of Cape Breton rests, is not allowed to continue to go down the drain, as is the steel industry in Sydney as a result of deliberate action taken by Dosco.

I said before, Mr. Chairman, that if the minister should say or if anyone should suggest that the corporation it is proposed to establish will be free to assist Dosco to modernize its plant in Sydney and so on, then as far as I am concerned—and I think I speak also for all of my colleagues—I have no confidence whatever in the intentions of this giant corporation which has bled Cape Breton island for decades and has left nothing of value in return. I certainly have no confidence in them knowing that the decisions are not made by Dosco but are made by the large international corporation, Hawker Siddeley, of which Dosco is now a part.

Second, Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that there is no evidence whatever that any help that Dosco gets to rebuild its plant in Sydney will be used for the purposes that he and I have in common. There is only one way. I would urge the minister, as the members of the C.C.F. party and the New Democratic party have urged governments over the past 30 years, to accept that the only way to save the steel industry in Nova Scotia and thus to save the second most important industry in the Cape Breton economy, is to bring the steel industry as well as the coal industry under public ownership through the crown corporation being set up.

This crown corporation would be able to formulate a plan and would have the opportunity to co-ordinate the two basic industries in Nova Scotia. Even if the coal industry were eventually phased out, I venture to prophesy, though this is dangerous to do particularly for a layman, albeit one who has made some study of the subject, that there will be a coal industry in Nova Scotia for many years to come. The industry will be modernized.

The Prime Minister said in his statement that coal production should be reduced to two million tons. However, even that means a relatively substantial industry for that community and it would take a good many years to achieve that reduction. I am not saying that I agree with the Prime Minister because I honestly do not know. I am prepared to leave the matter to the corporation, which because it is a public corporation will, I hope, act with the welfare of the community at heart rather than act in the heartless way in which Dosco, as could be expected, in fact acted.

I am not saying that I agree with the Prime Minister's estimate of two million tons or with the conclusions of Doctor Donald, though I have every respect for the competence of Doctor Donald and I am not contradicting him. But for the purpose of the present discussion I am saying that it will take many years before this reduction to two million tons per year will take place, and this in itself will retain a pretty substantial coal mining industry in that particular community.

Therefore, I suggest that the corporation ought to be given authority over both steel and coal. I am informed both by those who have studied the subject and from my own reading that it is perfectly possible to produce in Sydney various shapes and sizes of structural steel both for use in the Atlantic provinces and for export, particularly to developing nations. I am also told, and I understand from my reading on the subject, that all of this will require a great deal of modernization of plant as well as the introduction of new equipment. This is something Dosco would not undertake; if they wanted to do it they would have done it before. They did not have to do this at Contrecoeur. No one forced them to go to Contrecoeur. Therefore it is obvious they would not undertake this in Sydney; it can only be undertaken as a result of public ownership.

I want to spend a minute or two on one other subject and I will be through, Mr. Chairman. I am very concerned about the negotiations which are going on with Dominion Coal and Steel Company and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal with regard to the compensation that those companies are to receive. I hope—I say this with some sense of responsibility—that those companies will not receive any compensation under the circumstances. I emphasize the words "under the circumstances" so that no one will take that sentence out of context and say on political platforms across the country that the hon. member for York South, or the deputy leader of the N.D.P., or David Lewis, however they put it, says that he is in favour of not compensating an industry when the government takes it over, because this would not be true. I am in favour of compensating companies when they deserve compensation, when what the company in question hands over is a going concern.

What is happening in this case, Mr. Chairman? The coal mines are not owned by Dosco or by the subsidiaries of Dosco. They are, of course, crown property and Dosco is supposed to pay royalties for the use of the land. But what assets does the company have? Since only the coal mines are being taken over, this means that this company will be saved the headache of carrying on an industry which has lost money for years. What compensation should a company receive for being relieved of a headache? That is what I should like to know. We would be much more justified in saying to Dosco that it was about time that they paid something out of the huge treasury of Hawker-Siddeley instead of putting their hands in the public treasury to pay their preferred shareholders, or whoever it is, when they are operating a losing proposition.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I hope the minister will tell us during the course of the resolution stage or on the committee stage of the bill who these preferred shareholders are, how long they have held their shares and how much they have received in dividends up to 1962, since when, we are informed by the officers of the company, no dividends have been paid. I am not saying this merely because I am being hard on a company but because one of the subjects raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South is important. If the minister or the federal government have an extra $1 million or $2 million or $3 million to spare, then, instead of giving it to the company which does not deserve it, they ought to give it to the pensioners of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company.

[Mr. Lewis.]

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, if my memory serves me correctly, in 1952 or 1953 this company reduced the gratuity which it paid to its retired employees. The hon. member is really justified in what he says. I am not saying he is justified in his legal arguments with the Minister of National Revenue because those have to do with another subject, but he is justified in characterizing what the company paid not as a pension but as a gratuity. There was no pension plan; not only was it non-contributory but there was no fund. It was entirely unfunded. Whether somebody got the pension depended on the company's will and when the company decided 15 years ago to cut the pension it did so and no one had any recourse; no one could do anything about it. Whether or not there is any spare money, I think that the welfare of the pensioners of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company and of the other coal company ought to have priority. I know that my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, wrote to the Minister of Industry about this pension problem. That minister handed the letter over to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I know that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and others have raised this matter many times.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the bill ought to give three guarantees, which are as follows: First, that whatever pension is now being paid will be taken over by the new corporation, because as the payment was in the form of a gratuity rather than a pension the new corporation could make that payment disappear in law. I hope that the bill will show that that guarantee is included. Second, that the bill will contain a guarantee that those who are now retired will have their pension increased to a decent level, at least to the level of some years ago before the company reduced it. Third, that the promise of the Prime Minister that Doctor Donald's recommendation for a generous and just retirement plan will be adopted will also be written into the law as a guarantee, because God knows what might happen were the members of the board of directors of the new corporation or the bureaucracy left without some statutory guidance on these points and problems that might arise.

I wish it had been possible—with all my heart I say this—for me as the first spokesman for our party today to say to the minister, "You have taken a useful and important step and I have no criticism of it in general terms, whatever criticism we might have when we see the details." I cannot say that. To do a real job for the Cape Breton community and to assure all the people of that community that a new dawn has really risen and that they can look forward to a future of progress, which might even attract those young people who have left the community back to it, the government in this resolution and in the legislation ought to have included steel as well as coal. Their failure to do that proves to me once again for the umpteenth time that from the government, with its social and economic concept and conscience, we can at best expect a half step taken under the duress of desperation but never a full step.

That is why I cannot extend the kind of heartfelt thanks that I should have liked to extend with respect to the resolution before us and the promised legislation. The step could be important. Whether it will be will depend on what the government does in the future with the steel industry and the coal industry and will depend particularly on the imaginativeness with which new industry is brought into the community and how community needs are geared to the reception of new industry.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak briefly at this stage of the debate on the matter before the committee. I do so not because I have knowledge of the economic and social conditions of Cape Breton but because several millions of dollars of federal government money are involved in giving effect to the proposal now before the committee. At the outset I wish to say that we in this party do not disagree with the federal government giving emergency assistance to any area of Canada to help with economic and social problems. In his statement the Prime Minister said that the federal government realizes that the Cape Breton coal problem essentially is a social problem. On that basis our party in large measure agrees to support this action to revitalize the economy and to deal with the social problems of the area concerned.

The economic climate in Cape Breton has declined, and I wish to ask one or two questions of the minister. On the second page of the Prime Minister's statement we find the Prime Minister saying that it is anticipated that the operating losses in the first year alone will be in the order of $25 million. My first question is: How long will the federal government be called upon to make up these losses on the coal operations? The government will also assist with the social problems of the area. In another place the Prime Minister says in his statement that the government of Canada will make a capital contribution of $45 million, $25 million for the rehabilitation of the operation of the mines and $20 million for the establishment and development of new industry.

The $25 million that is apparently earmarked for the rehabilitation and operation of the mines, according to the resolution and the bill to follow, is to be for only one year. Will we be asked to contribute $25 million for 1968, 1969 and 1970? What plan is there for diminishing this amount? The minister did say that the federal government was concerned with the planning which would take care of this problem. If the government has planned well we ought to know before the resolution passes what the losses on the coal operation will be in subsequent years.

I listened fairly carefully to the minister's opening remarks and I did not hear him suggest that there would be an aggregate amount of $250 million or $300 million. Perhaps the minister wishes to say something now.

Mr. Pepin: The $25 million is for the development or rehabilitation or modernization of the mines. The $20 million is for economic development. Then, as I have already said, the corporation will take over the subvention—I do not know what other word I could use. It is expected that in the first year the loss will be of the magnitude of $25 million but as we progress in the phasing out of mines it is expected that savings will occur. I cannot now say what the savings will be in the first, second, third, fourth or fifth years. That will depend on the number of mines which will be closed.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: What this committee and the House of Commons are being asked to approve is $25 million for the rehabilitation of the operation of the mines, to be provided in the first instance as a capital investment by a crown corporation. Then there is an additional $20 million, to begin with, as a capital contribution toward the development of new industry. Over and above this there is an additional $25 million, at least in the first year, to cover losses in the mining operation. In other words, this is a call for something like $70 million, to start with, not $45 million, and there will probably be a call in the next fiscal year for another $25 million or perhaps a little less, and the same in subsequent years, if I understood the minister correctly.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister is nodding his head in agreement. But does he not place this interpretation on it, that the loss which would be faced by the crown corporation would correspond to the moneys which are now paid by way of subvention? It is not really a case of a double loss, as the hon. member seems to understand it and as the minister appears to be approving. It is really a matter of the government taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another.

Mr. Pepin: I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat understood that.

Mr. Olson: I understand that the $25 million does not represent an entirely new expenditure. It is a substitute for an expenditure which has been made up to the present time. But we have not been told whether the precise amount now paid by way of subvention is to be paid. Is the cost to the federal government in subventions $25 million at the present time or does the $25 million represent a substantial increase in the cost to the federal treasury?

Mr. Pepin: I said in my speech that this year the amount will be $31 million and that it was expected to be $27 million next year. May I be more precise? We already have two sums, $25 million for the mines and $20 million for economic development. The third sum is not dealt with in the bill. It will be voted as usual by estimates.

Mr. Olson: That clarifies one or two of the points I wished to raise. My next question is this. Reference was made in the minister's statement to another $10 million. We were told that the government of Nova Scotia would contribute $10 million to the economic development fund of the corporation. Is there any arrangement between the federal government and the province under which the federal government would assume all or part of this provincial obligation? I ask this question because there have been a number of examples of cases in which provinces have been party to an agreement under which they undertook to make contributions to certain programs whereas in fact, as became known later, arrangements were made for a large portion of those contributions to come from the federal treasury.

Mr. Pepin: In this case it is as simple as it looks. The Nova Scotia government will give $10 millon to the corporation for the economic development of the island. I understand that some of this money has already been voted in the provincial legislature.

Mr. Olson: That is fine. There is one other point I wish to make with respect to the $45 million. It seems to me, after a cursory examination of the situation and having listened to the minister and to the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that perhaps more money be spent on the development of new industry and less on the modernization of an industry which some people believe is declining rapidly. It seems to me a wrong balance may have been struck. Perhaps the minister could give us an explanation later of the reason these figures were chosen.

Finally, I wish briefly to bring up the subject of the compensation to be paid to the company which now owns the operations to be taken over by the crown corporation. We in this party do not believe that the federal treasury has any inherent responsibility even in this situation to compensate shareholders for the loss of an asset which apparently has no market value. I believe it may be a bad precedent for the government to agree to pay any arbitrary amount as compensation for so-called assets which are really no assets at all. These undertakings have exhausted their value as viable economic units. I say it would be a bad precedent to pay compensation because it would establish that in one case at least the government had taken over a dying industry, on the grounds that a social problem was involved, to the benefit of shareholders who were not part of that social problem. We can look across Canada at prosperous areas as well as depressed areas and find examples of businesses which have failed causing hardship to their employees and to the surrounding communities, and we are apprehensive about giving our approval to any substantial payment being made for an alleged asset which really has no value.

It has been pointed out by several hon. members that the marketable value of the Dosco assets is nil except, perhaps, for some salvage. We do not believe it is the proper function of the federal government to bail out the people involved in a corporation, at the end of an industry's life, when those people are not part of the social problem with which we are trying to deal. What matters here is the welfare of the people of the communities on Cape Breton island, not the situation of those either in Canada or abroad who may happen to own shares in the corporation. So I hope the government does not intend to raid the federal treasury to pay people who, as I say, are not part of the social problem we are trying to solve.

We in this party are in favour of assisting our fellow citizens when they face a serious social or economic problem but we would be opposed to any action which would compensate people who do not require social assistance.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I will not be too long because we are anxious to see the resolution pass and have the bill come before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I appreciate the applause from the Liberal benches. I say I will not be too long because we have waited a year or more for this legislation to be introduced. However, a few more hours will not matter too much.

I appreciate the remarks of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who expressed support for the resolution and for the new corporation to be established. I fully agree with his comments regarding the payment of compensation to people who came to Canada about ten years ago and took what they could out of this industry.

I also wish to commend the minister for his introductory statement on the resolution. He gave us some of the history and background of the coal industry. I am sure he must have been surprised to receive such condemnation from the hon. member for York South because it was only a few short weeks ago that one of the principal speakers for the New Democratic party was in Nova Scotia and on that occasion the minister's name was not mentioned at all. In fact, someone demanded to know why a fellow by the name of Stanfield had not set up the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I am sure the hon. member for York South realizes that this is a joint arrangement between the federal and provincial governments. But on the occasion to which I refer, someone seemed misinformed regardless of the fact that he had sat in the house day after day and heard questions posed to the government front benches regarding the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The initiative for introducing this measure had to come, of course, from the minister and the government.

I would express one more word to the minister with respect to the delay in introducing this legislation. I agree with him that it is not an easy matter. I know that the minister has spent many nights working on it, and some time ago he said to me that he was willing to learn all he could about the problem. I see the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough saying something in the minister's ear. He is probably telling him, "Now you can expect the brickbats." I can tell the minister they will not be directed at him. They will be directed at the government both for the delay and for several things mentioned in this resolution.

On October 5, 1965, the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia announced all the great things that were going to be done with the $25 million he promised. Among these was the opening of a new mine at Lingan. I do not see anything about that in this resolution. Possibly it may be mentioned in the bill which will follow or we will be told that the new corporation will go ahead with it. That statement was made by the cabinet representative from Inverness-Richmond, with a great fanfare and eruption at Halifax. It just happened that it was only a few weeks before a federal election and maybe that had something to do with his making the statement. I do not know.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It did not help very much.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): No, it did not. I appreciate that remark from the Postmaster General. He is realistic.

Then, on October 11, 1966 the Donald report was tabled. Despite the fact that day after day we in this party and members in other parties had been asking about the Donald report, no one on the treasury benches knew anything about it. We got the impression it was not ready, that this guy Donald was lazy and was not getting it out. As I say, it was tabled on October 11, but it is interesting that the date of the report is May, 1966.

I must presume that during all the time statements were being made by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources we were being given evasive replies in answer to our questions. Many times we would have liked to pose questions to the minister from Nova Scotia who now avoids his responsibilities, unlike other representatives from Nova Scotia who were ministers in previous governments, including the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. But we cannot pose questions to the present Nova Scotian minister on any subject but health. Well, we hope he remains healthy.

Cape Breton Development Corporation

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the report was tabled on October 11 but the date on it was May. There may be an explanation for that. I am sure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in his usual genial manner, will have some explanation for it. However, a few hours after it was tabled I was asked to issue a statement on it to the press and radio. Unlike the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough I dislike quoting myself but I must read part of my statement into the record because it is pertinent to this debate. As I say, I made this statement a few hours after the report was tabled and I had only time just to skim through it. This is what I said:

> Since I have not had an opportunity to thoroughly digest all of the long-awaited Donald report, I feel that while it certainly paints a black future for Cape Breton in many ways, it also has some good points.
> The recommendation for the Cape Breton Development Corporation looks excellent on paper; how it will work out in actual practice is another matter. If this corporation were established, it would have to bring new employment to our island post haste and provide displaced miners with new jobs with a pay equivalent to what they are already earning or more, and not subject them to a long period of unemployment.
>
> We are all aware of the efforts made by Industrial Estates Limited over the years to bring industry into our area, and while they have made excellent progress we have seen that it requires a tremendous expenditure to provide even a few jobs. Further to that, we have been faced with the loss of 650-700 jobs at the Point Edward naval base through the actions of the present government, and within the next year or so we are going to see another 600 to 700 men displaced at the North Sydney ferry terminal, again through the present government's action. So, I would think that this, along with the recommendations of Dr. Donald, would mean that such a corporation would have to act and act very quickly.
>
> The member for Inverness-Richmond on October 5th, 1965, made a definite commitment on behalf of the government that a new mine would be opened in the Lingan area, plus several million dollars of new capital for rehabilitation and modernization of existing mines. Strangely enough, Mr. MacEachen's policy announcement came only several weeks prior to the last federal election. He, along with the Prime Minister and Minister of Transport, have reiterated this commitment on a number of occasions since. Surely they are not going to back down on such a commitment at this time. If they do, we can only assume that this is a continuation of phony promises to secure votes before an election.
>
> After all this time, we are now confronted with information in the house from Mr. Pepin, minister of mines, that there are now going to be further discussions take place and representations made to the government in the coming weeks before any action is to be taken or any policy announced on the Cape Breton coal situation. So, was Mr. MacEachen announcing government policy when he made his original statement on October 5th, 1965, a few weeks before a federal election, and which he reiterated just recently when he stated at his annual Liberal meeting in Inverness that "any new policy announced by the federal government would be fully consistent" with his announcement last fall?

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

So, Mr. Chairman, I presume we are going to have a new mine at Lingan because the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that new coal policy would be consistent with his announcement. I continue the quotation:

> If the Donald report is going to be implemented by this government in full or in part, I feel that the people of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia must demand that there will not be the phasing out of even one job at the coal mines unless the present federal administration makes available an alternative source of employment in the immediate area. And, that Walter Gordon's now famous "one-way ticket out", now known as the manpower mobility program, not be put into effect.

I have put that on the record for one reason, to show that my feelings have not changed. We must have employment before any mine or portion of a mine is closed, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South has said. It would be rather difficult to shut down a portion of a coal mine. I am sure that all of us are looking forward to the development corporation which will go ahead and bring in industry to provide employment in substantial numbers so that 200, 300 or whatever number is necessary can be moved into other employment immediately.

The minister has said that on some occasions we have accused him of moving too slowly and on other occasions of moving too quickly. I say that on this occasion he has moved too slowly. I would be expected to say that, because it is a fact. The question of subsidy or subvention is a matter of words. However, I have always understood that a subvention is something which is paid to carriers such as the Canadian National Railways or the shipping lines. I was surprised to hear the minister say that it went to the corporation. It may be channelled through the corporation to the carriers. Certainly it is not received by the coal miners. It is paid to the transportation companies and in turn benefits the constituents of the hon. lady for Westmorland. Canadian National Railways, in the eastern Atlantic provinces area, assists many people, not only coal miners, because when a subvention is paid in respect of the transportation of coal they in turn use it to employ people who operate the railways and so on. That is why I say it assists the constituents of the dear lady from Westmorland. I mention her because she represents an area in which there is a very large number of railway employees.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South said something in his remarks about the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stating that the minister from Nova Scotia would refer to a heavy water plant, and so on. I am pleased that the minister is so happy about this plant but, by gosh, there is a fellow by the name of Regan, the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia, who does not think it would be any good at all. We thought it was pretty good, and I am sure that the government of the province of Nova Scotia and the federal government thought it was very good. However, the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Nova Scotia does not agree. One of his cohorts, Dr. Kirby, the second rate professor whom they sent to Cape Breton, stated that it was a terrible thing, a waste of money and shocking. He did not make that speech anywhere else after that.

I should like to say a further word about the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I suggest to the minister and the government that the board should be composed of the most competent persons available. I am sure both the provincial and federal governments have been looking everywhere for the most capable and able men that can be found to take over the duties of this corporation. It is my hope, and my suggestion to the minister, that it will not be a haven for defeated Liberal candidates, party hacks, or what have you, because this is something which does happen in government, whether Liberal of Conservative. Indeed it happened under the N.D.P. in Saskatchewan or wherever it might be. In this case I would certainly hope we would get the most competent persons regardless of their politics or where they come from, because we will need the best people we can get. I notice that the Postmaster General is interjecting. I cannot hear what he is saying but possibly he would like a position on that board. I would hope not, because so far as I am concerned he is doing a very good job as Postmaster General.

To reinforce the argument I am making I should like to refer to a newspaper item which appeared in the Cape Breton Post of Friday, April 28:

> The Cape Breton Development Corporation must lead Cape Breton forward in the future and not serve as an avenue to pay off political debts, Harvey Webber, president of the Sydney Board of Trade, warned Thursday.

This is an indication of how some people in the island feel in this regard. I hope we will obtain the best men possible. We would also hope that the minister would obtain the best people possible for the co-ordinating committee.

If I may refer again to the question of what is to be paid for the Dosco holdings, may I say that I fully concur with what was said by the hon. member for Cape Breton South when he suggested expropriation. I think this is a wonderful idea. Let some independent board decide how much a lot of the junk they have is worth. I believe the minister would agree with me when I say that Dosco shares have gone up since the word went out that the federal government might take over. Well, they certainly received their pound of flesh over the years they have been there. This old boy, Sir Roy Dobson, sits in his ivory tower in Britain pulling the strings and operating the puppets. He is not too worried about the guy who gets smashed up in his coal mines as long as he brings in a few dollars. But now that they are not making any money for him he decides to throw the operation in the ashcan and not worry about it.

I do not think the government should be too worried about what they pay these people. They already owe the government over $5 million for loans granted some years ago. When these big shots came to Cape Breton they put on dinners for the Board of Trade, the Rotary Club and other groups. They were going to make Cape Breton the Pittsburgh of Canada in respect of steel. Well, it is not the Pittsburgh of Canada, far from it. They were going to do great things for coal too but we have not seen them either.

The hon. member for York South mentioned the assistance to the industry and at the same time said that this is a characteristic of the history of the country. Down through the years there has been assistance to different industries. By the same token we have subsidies in the reverse form. We have a tariff policy in this country. If we wanted we could get cheaper cars. We could go across to the state of Maine and pick up our cars there rather than keep the workers going in Oshawa or anywhere else in Canada. The same thing is true of goods such as refrigerators, washing machines, television sets, and so on. They are all protected by tariffs. I do not see why anyone should object to what is happening today; it is usual. I think the government is taking a proper step.

Let me also say a word about the coal miners who are now on pension. The hon. member for Cape Breton South and I have been working on this problem for many months. We introduced the matter in the house and have discussed it with the minister. I wrote a letter to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in respect of the problem.

I received a very nice, fine, two-page reply, but it did not say whether these miners were going to be classified for the guaranteed income supplement. All it said was that if the Minister of National Revenue ruled one way such and such would be the situation but if he ruled the other way something else would be the situation. That minister has never committed himself. We have brought this situation to the attention of the minister of mines. He wrote me a short letter, a copy of which I sent to the pensioners' union. At that time the minister suggested that this matter should be taken up with the Cape Breton Development Association. I do not think we should wait that long. I think the minister with the advice of the Minister of National Health and Welfare should decide to amend the bill in order to cover this situation. These pensioners have given their lives to the coal mining industry and they have received very little in return.

I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for York South speak so highly of the people of Cape Breton, their hospitality, industry and so on. It is very nice to hear that, particularly from someone who is not from Cape Breton. Some of us who as children saw mounted soldiers breaking up strikes, who have served on the picket line, who have worked in mines and have been carried out of them, know something about this whole situation. It is not the prerogative of members of the N.D.P. only to have a feeling of sympathy for the workers and the ordinary man, as he is often called. The majority of people in the Liberal party, the Conservative party and other parties are not so-called big capitalists or millionaires. They work for a living. Many of these people who suggest they are all for the working man just wrap themselves up in the white robes of purity and sanctity and pretend to worry about the working man.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that his allotted time has now expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on in the same vein.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I thank hon. members for their kind indulgence in allowing me to continue. The point I am trying to make is that there are many, many people in this country with various political affiliations who worry about the so-called working man. This worry is not confined to socialists. Many of us have been involved in this type of thing, and I venture to suggest that a number of members of the N.D.P. have never been involved. The ability or desire to worry about the farmer, the miner, the steel worker, the fisherman or about any person who works with his hands is not a domain of the N.D.P. We are all interested in these people.

Progress has been slow during the years in some respects, both under the Liberals and the Conservatives. Much as I love to condemn the Liberals, they have made some progress. If a socialistic government is so great, and this has been said very often in this house, why did we not witness a great rush on the part of people from other regions of Canada to the province of Saskatchewan? They did not rush out there to get on the Douglas bandwagon or obtain the fruits of socialistic government.

Mr. Douglas: We did not let the coal industry collapse, anyway.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You let a lot of other things collapse including the morale of the people.

Mr. Douglas: You have never been there. You don't know anything about it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am afraid the New Democratic party is living in a dream world as it has for many years. Its members keep making crazy, weird promises that they know they will never be in a position to fulfil, and the hon. member knows that full well.

The hon. members for Cape Breton South and York South spoke very wisely and eloquently about the steel industry in relation to this resolution. On many occasions we have asked questions in the house about including the steel industry for consideration by the new development corporation. The Prime Minister in his statement, whether unintentionally or not, gave the impression that this would be the case. I am not the only one who has had this feeling. Obviously the editorial writers of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald understood the Prime Minister's remarks in the same way.

The Halifax Chronicle-Herald on Monday, June 12 carried the following editorial which I should like to read. It is headed "Major Development" and it states:

> Undoubtedly, the major news item of this week, as far as Nova Scotia is concerned, will be the introduction by the federal government in parliament of a bill to establish the long-awaited Cape Breton Development Corporation. Thursday has been suggested as the day on which this action will be taken.
>
> Whatever the timing, the legislation will be unveiled against a background of mounting concern about the Cape Breton steel industry, in which a number of disturbing layoffs have occurred in recent days, notwithstanding the acquisition of yet another order to produce rails for the Mexican national railways. The matter was discussed, somewhat heatedly, in the House of Commons late last week, and it was possible to infer from Prime Minister Pearson's remarks that the development corporation might have something to contribute to a solution of the steel industry's difficulties.
>
> Certainly, Nova Scotia's voluntary planning board has suggested that the corporation should be concerned about the uncertain health of this Dosco operation. Presumably, the thought is that the agency might be able to help the promotion of a process of product diversification in an industry which confines itself largely to the production of basic steel.
> Hopefully, some encouragement on this score can be drawn from the legislation when it is introduced.

So you can see that quite a number of us had the idea from the Prime Minister's statements and the statements of others that the steel industry would be improved.

Yesterday a delegation from Cape Breton communities was in Ottawa. These people came to present their case in respect of the steel industry. They received a very cordial welcome from the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet including the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Fisheries, the Minister of National Revenue and that great leftist of them all, Barry Goldwater—the Minister of Industry. He was not very encouraging in his comments.

It has been pointed out very clearly to the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet how very great are the problems that confront the steelworkers in Sydney. For many weeks now the hon. member for Cape Breton South, the hon. member for York South, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and myself have been trying to obtain some information regarding the steel industry. The situation goes back six or eight months so the government cannot cry and say: Well, at this last minute, what can we do? We have not had time to do anything.

The government has certainly had time to investigate—I have called for an investigation on several occasions—the future intentions of Dosco with regard to steel. This investigation has not been forthcoming. There is a small investigation going on now with regard to the dumping of steel, and so on. The union cannot get any reply from Dosco officials. Community leaders cannot get any information. They get a reply but it is like some of the answers we get from the government benches, a few words but no information. The premier of Nova Scotia cannot get information. Therefore we look to the federal government to get information for us. Because of the closeness of the Minister of Industry and the president of Dosco, surely we can find out something more about the future intentions of this corporation.

As the hon. member for York South asked: Is Dosco also going to allow steel to crumble? As I asked in the house a couple of weeks ago: Are we going to end up without any steel industry at all? I know it is not an easy situation for the government, but we should have action of some sort by the government to find out what is happening in this respect. The cabinet member from Nova Scotia was present at the meeting yesterday and heard the problems and information outlined by the international representative of the union, the mayor of Sydney and representatives of other areas that are concerned. There is no lack of information; it has all been provided to the government by these people. Now we ask: What is the government going to do?

Now we are faced with another lay-off this week end, the 18th, of between 300 and 400 men at the Sydney steel plant. Is the government going to do anything to attempt to solve the problem? I know it is difficult for the government to move before the end of the week, but is there any intention by the government to do anything? Is the Prime Minister going to make a statement, is the minister from Nova Scotia going to make a statement, with regard to the future of steel? Is anyone on the government benches going to tell us about this corporation or is it to be allowed to do anything it likes?

I believe that steel should come under the auspices of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This is my view. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources raises his eyebrows, but I sincerely believe this is what should happen, although it is not my usual policy. Here we have a situation where people are going to be hungry, and I am not exaggerating. It is an extremely serious situation. Within the last eight months almost 1,200 people in the city of Sydney and environs have been thrown on the streets. Some of these men have 25 years' service. There is nothing for them in the future, so far as anyone knows.

Someone must take action to solve this problem. I suggest that it be the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Someone must do something. I am now dealing with the social aspects of the situation. Almost all the speakers from the government side of the house, the minister and the minister from Nova Scotia who knows the situation so well, as well as Dr. Donald and Mr. Justice Rand, know the social problems connected with this question and the seriousness of what may occur if so many people are thrown on the streets. I urge the government to give very serious consideration to the points I have raised. I should like to quote from the statement made by the Prime Minister on December 29 last when dealing with the question of the Lingan mine. He said:

> The federal government gave in October, 1965—

That is when the minister from Nova Scotia made the statement that there would be a new mine at Lingan.

> —an undertaking to provide financial assistance for the rehabilitation of existing mines in Cape Breton and in the opening of a new mine at Lingan.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was dealing with this matter he made it sound as though the Cape Breton Development Corporation would now decide whether there would be a new mine. However, as I stated earlier in my remarks, the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia said there was to be a new mine. All the advertising by Liberal candidates in the election campaign of 1965 said it was a fait accompli. They said: We have a new mine at Lingan. We have told you this, and our minister has said so. Therefore we are looking forward to a new mine. The minister nods his head. I am so pleased at that indication that there will be a new mine at Lingan. I thank the minister very much for that indication, because we have been quite worried about this matter for some time. There is now no need to deal further with the question because we will have a new mine at Lingan.

Mr. Chairman, it is close to six o'clock. I have not had very much opportunity to deal with a few smaller details. I hope later to say a little more about steel. Our dealings with the minister have been very good. He has been most co-operative. I hope he continues in that manner in the future. I am sure he will with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation and anything he can do for Cape Breton. I hope to have an opportunity later to say a few words. I see it is six o'clock.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The Chairman: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), National Disasters—suggested establishment of Canadian fund; the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe), Health and Welfare—request for investigation into addition of antibiotics to livestock feed; the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), Northern Affairs—inquiry as to continued development at Frobisher Bay.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that I support this resolution wholeheartedly. I look forward to the bill and to the results of that bill possibly with more anticipation than the minister seems to possess. What I have to say is not on the resolution or the contents of the proposed bill, but about the mood that prevails in this house. It seems to me, having listened to the debate here that there is something lacking. Optimism is lacking. I have attended wakes at which a greater air of optimism was noticeable than during the introduction of this measure.

Consider what was said. The minister pointed out that in reality what this resolution anticipated was a development corporation which, over a period of time, will cost us about $155 million. The hon. gentlemen from Cape Breton North and South pointed out the social benefits that would flow from this measure. There was some argument over whether or not a subsidy was involved. However, no one has yet said what will be the results of this legislation. What do we expect the benefits of this corporation will be? Now, surely if that attitude prevails at a time when young people, the active people of this country are going forward with great strides and undertaking great ventures, we will not attract them.

Here, we have a development corporation. The minister, who has a keen sense of the meaning of words, should tell me what we mean by a "corporation". Do we mean a group of individuals incorporating themselves into a body for the purpose of undertaking something, something that would bring beneficial results to Canada? Here we seem to have a development corporation—of course, I do not believe it is going to turn out this way—which is going to die, judging by the attitude that prevails here.

Comments were made from the other side that we should make sure we do not use worn out politicians on this board. Well, do you expect you are going to get an active group of people together to run this corpration, if it appears to have no future? This is my argument, and I am not referring to the resolution or the bill, which seem to be good. I should like to see some measure of confidence exhibited, some anticipation of beneficial results, rather than just the impression that the corporation will spend money without any idea about how we are going to make this corporation worth while.

I want to say a few words about the minister's remarks, as well as the remarks of other hon. gentlemen, about how this corporation is going to entice industry into Cape Breton. I think we should be rather pragmatic about this. Industry will not go to an area unless it foresees a future for itself. Surely, as a short term prospect, it will go to an area if it is given tax concessions. Essentially, however, industrial expansion requires that some advantage be given to industry. You must give industry something more than it gets elsewhere. You may give cheap electrical power, and you will entice industry. If you give raw materials not found elsewhere, you will entice industry. A fluid labour market, specialized skills, transportation facilities to markets—these things will entice industry.

What are you going to give industry in Cape Breton? Are you going to give cheap power? Are you going to give proximity to markets or a fluid labour supply? What will you give? The minister has not explained in what way industry will be convinced to go into Cape Breton on a long term basis. I suggest that we have the answer, but it takes some daring and it takes some confidence. Let me point out to the minister the present situation in connection with the heavy steel industry. The ore goes from Labrador and by boat through the great lakes to Chicago. Coal is brought in from Pittsburgh and the southern United States. Steel is made and then the finished product is brought back down the St. Lawrence to the New York market, the Montreal market and the world market.

Let us consider that ore, a very heavy commodity, is brought all that distance, six times the distance between Sept Iles and Cape Breton. In spite of this, somehow they are managing to prosper. I suggest to the minister that with a little technical skill and ingenuity great things could be done. There is no reason in the world why iron ore could not be brought down this short distance to Cape Breton, which is much closer to the buyers' market in New York, Montreal, indeed the whole world, instead of sending it all the way to Chicago and back again. I understand there is some problem with the sulphur content in the coal, but neither the minister nor the department could convince me that in this technological age a solution to this problem could not be found, and quickly. It needs incentive and leadership. Most of all, it needs a dedication that a solution can be found.

We should be able to make this area the steel centre of Canada, and then I dare say that the interests in Chicago and around Pittsburgh would follow this development. This is the logical place for a steel industry. The raw material is close at hand, and all we need transport to the market is the finished product, not the heavy raw material. Anyone who has been in business will understand the advantage that the maritimes have. They have coal there, iron ore close by, they have the people and the technicians. There are fantastic possibilities. This is the sort of mood I should like to see prevailing in the approach taken in any legislation.

The minister said that the production of electricity at the pithead was not a good idea, and that may be so. It may not be a good idea to bring coal out of the mines for use in producing electrical power on Cape Breton Island, which would be sent out through the grid; but there are methods today which achieve the same objective without the coal even being brought out of the mine. The coal is burned in the mine, and the heat generated is used to produce power. I believe this is being done in England today. What we need is confidence; we need to know that this can be done

It is not enough to say that eventually we will have to disband the coal industry, that we are not going to make use of any advantages that we have, that what we will do is to facilitate the phasing out of the industry. This is no trick. Anyone can phase out industry; the trick is to create something. Surely this is possible in our centennial year, a time when we take such great pride in our country and listen to the laurels and tributes paid our forefathers who came to this land and with their bare hands wrested the prize, which they left to us. Our forefathers did not intend us to sit idly by; they wanted us to emulate their actions, to have confidence, to know that there is a fantastic future for us, instead of taking the position that Canada is a sixth or seventh rate nation.

I fail to understand the attitude of some of the members here, Mr. Chairman. We accept it, yet we know full well that if we were to deny wheat to the world market we could bring half of the people in the world to their knees in hunger. We supply the United States with most of their iron ore. We have the sole source of uranium and we have large supplies of fresh water. We have natural advantages, no matter which way we turn. What we have not got—and this is why I decry the attitude here—is a sense of destiny and accomplishment.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I am wholeheartedly in support of this resolution, but I should like to see some confidence among us here, and also some indication of what this corporation is going to do. In this way I think the government would have shown that we are going to lead, rather than follow.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, may I say first of all that I enjoyed the interesting discourse of the hon. member for York East, which is a Toronto riding. We in the maritimes and Atlantic provinces appreciate the interest taken in us by other members.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We might get him to run for Inverness-Richmond.

Mr. MacEwan: I do not know about that. However, I did note in the press not long ago that an alderman in the city of Toronto—I do not know whether he was resident in the hon. member's constituency—made a statement about sending some of the maritimers home because they were taking up all the housing in the Toronto area, so I would suggest to the hon. member that he might speak to some of his fellow Torontonians and ask them to accept maritimers.

An hon. Member: Do a little missionary work.

Mr. MacEwan: Yes, a little missionary work.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, as is usually said in this place on these occasions, I agree with the resolution but it does not go far enough. I also agree with the remarks of the two able members from Cape Breton, the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, who I might say came into the house the same time as I, and who have done an excellent job of representing their constituencies. We know that day by day they are here hammering away at matters of importance to the people of Cape Breton; and as has been shown by the number of times they have been re-elected, the people of Cape Breton appreciate their efforts.

I have something in common with them in that the area I represent depended at one time, although to a lesser extent today, almost totally on coal mining. This is why I said at the beginning of my remarks that I am not in full agreement with the resolution put forward by the minister.

On December 19 of last year, Mr. Chairman, I asked the Prime Minister a question in the house at the time the proposed setting up of this Cape Breton Development Corporation was being considered. As reported at page 11300 of the debates for December 19 last year I asked this supplementary question of the right hon. gentleman:

> I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, arising from the reply he made to the leader of the official opposition. If it has not already been done, will the Prime Minister, in respect of any agreement with the province of Nova Scotia—

That is with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

> —take into consideration the Dosco-owned mine in the constituency of Pictou, which will also require aid?

I was referring there to the McBean mine in Thorburn, which is in my constituency. The Prime Minister answered:

> All relevant matters have been considered in relation to this very important question.

That raised my hopes, Mr. Chairman. That was on December 10. On December 29 I received through the mail at the kind instance of the Prime Minister's office a copy of his statement of that date, December 29, 1966, which has been referred to by other speakers today. On the first and second pages the following statement appeared:

Assured of the participation of the government of Nova Scotia, the government of Canada is prepared to ask parliament to establish a suitable crown corporation—the composition and powers of which will be defined by the two governments at an early date—

These next words are the important part.

—to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation and simultaneously to help promote and finance the development of modern industry on the island of Cape Breton——and so on.

The part I want to underline is:

—to acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation—

• (8:20 p.m.)

In his opening statement today the minister disclosed the interesting and detailed background of the corporate set-up of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, as well as Dosco and the Dominion Coal Company Limited, but I am not going to go into that. My suggestion is that this resolution should also deal with the McBean mine which employs more than 400 people. As the minister said in his opening statement, it employs 376 miners, plus office staff, plus those on the surface running the engines, plus those in the wash plant in the town of Stellarton. This is quite a sizeable industry, employing 400 people.

I read quite a bit of the Donald report, after it came out. It is a well prepared document, but I did not agree with some parts of it. I issued a statement at that time, in response to a request by a newspaper, in which I said in part:

One recommendation of the report—

That is the Donald report:

—calls for the early closing of the McBean mine at Thorburn. Such a move would cause unemployment for over 400 coal miners and would cause great hardship to these hard working citizens, unless alternative employment is provided. The Nova Scotia Power Commission will be constructing a new thermal power plant at Trenton—

I shall refer to that later:

—which will require an additional quantity of coal to what is now used at the present plant, and the McBean mine could supply a considerable amount of it as well as the independent mine in the area. There should be definitely no closing of this mine, as I have stated, unless alternative employment is provided . . .

And so on. The report continues to talk about independent mines and about the one at Westville.

The minister will probably say, from reading the Donald report of May, 1966, that the McBean mine has a probable life of about four years. I am led to believe, from information of the last few days, that the company does not agree with that assessment; it says that the mine has a lesser life span. Whatever the life span of the mine may be, and whatever its resources are—and I will accept Doctor Donald's estimate of four years from 1966, which would bring the end of the mine life to 1970—every assistance ought to be given to it. The employees of the mine should be taken under the protection of the crown corporation to ensure that the mine might continue working until the very end, so long as resources are there to be mined.

Not long ago I received a telegram, which the minister also received, from local 8672 of the United Mine Workers of Thorburn protesting that money for new equipment was not allotted for the McBean mine. The people out there were very put out. I was advised that certain equipment was required and was purchased by the Dominion Coal Board, for lease to Dosco. That was to ensure that the mines should continue in operation pending the setting up of the crown corporation. I was advised that certain equipment is necessary at this time for the McBean mine.

In replying to me and to the U.M.W., the minister said that the location of equipment and the use of equipment which was purchased by the Dominion Coal Board is subject to the decision of company management. I do not know whether that is so, and perhaps the minister can enlighten me further when he has an opportunity to speak. Perhaps that is the situation, but my information was that this equipment is definitely necessary to continue the McBean mine in operation to the end of its life, which I hope will be in 1970. I do not know whether the government intends to take the estimate of the Donald report; frankly, I do not know what will become of this mine. It is a little orphan, being the only one of the Dosco mines which is not covered by this agreement. I do not know whether Dosco will continue to operate it and I wish the minister would enlighten me on that point, and enlighten as well the 400 people who depend on the mine for their livelihood.

I suggest to the minister that if this mine is not covered in the resolution, or in the bill which is to be brought forward, alternatives should be considered for this area. The life of the mine must be lengthened as much as possible to alleviate the situation and to see that these people are kept employed, until the employees could be taken by another independent mine which could be set up or until alternative employment is found for them. Nevertheless I suggest that the McBean mine must be continued, and I hope that the minister does not adopt suggestion "I"—I think it is, of the Donald report, that the McBean mine will have only one year to go. However, since it is now 1967 I presume that under this suggestion the mine would close in 1968.

The same report states that the life of the mine would terminate in 1970, as its resources are adequate until then.

I do not think the Dosco people intend to open another mine in the area; they are getting out of the mining business. The government ought to assist in the establishment of another independent mine or an alternative means of employment for 400 people in the McBean mine, before it closes.

The minister may ask, "What is the point of that?" I noted at the beginning of the debate that he was optimistic about the corporation and about getting other industry into the Cape Breton area, but pessimistic so far as coal in this country is concerned. I wish to make a few observations about the future of coal in Canada, and in that connection to quote from the Montreal Star of March 27, 1967. This is a Canadian Press dispatch, containing this report of what was said by the chairman of the Dominion Coal Board:

> Consumption of coal in Canada is rising slowly but steadily and probably will continue to meet a vital part of Canada's future energy needs, J. Watson MacNaught, chairman of the Dominion Coal Board said.
> "For industry, there is no doubt that the use of more convenient fuels will increase more rapidly," he told the coal division of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy.
>
> "But directly or indirectly through thermal electricity, coal, I think, will always have a substantial share of the market."

Then he continues:

> Despite rapid development of other fuels, coal consumption "is again slowly but apparently steadily increasing," due mainly to demands for coal-fired electric generating stations.
> The thermal electric power industry in Canada expects to be using in the future more coal than this country consumed for all purposes at the peak of past consumption in 1948—and this in spite of the fact that Canada is a leader in the development of nuclear power plants."

Next I wish to read from something that will interest the hon. member for York East; something from the Ontario Hydro News which is put out by the Ontario Hydro people. The article speaks of the uses of coal in Ontario in the next few years, and goes on to say:

> Coal remains by far the largest single item on Hydro's shopping list. Last year, expenditures in this field amounted to approximately $37,000,000—an all-time record but one likely to be eclipsed regularly as the balance of generation swings more heavily in the direction of coal-burning thermal plants. By 1980, the Commission's annual coal bill could reach nearly $77,000,000.
> Ontario, a power-hungry province, tends to double its electrical energy requirements every 10 to 12 years—a demand far beyond the ability of our rivers to satisfy. And so the emphasis now is on coal-burning facilities located close to major load centres and with adequate water facilities for cooling and coal transportation purposes.

Then the article refers to the Lambton plant.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Of course, it may well be said that these remarks refer to Ontario. Subventions had to be paid on the coal going to that area. I wish to point out that the capacity of the new generating station to be placed a few miles from the McBean mine will be 150,000 kilowatts as compared with some 60,000 kilowatts generated by the present plant. Operating at full capacity, this plant, which is being set up with assistance from the Atlantic Development Board, will require approximately 400,000 tons of coal each year. The McBean mine at Thorburn would be no more than ten miles from the new station at Trenton. For this reason I believe the mine should be continued in operation as long as possible. Perhaps an independent mine could then be set up with assistance from the federal government, because the power plant will provide a market for the coal produced.

The minister will no doubt tell us, when he speaks what has been done by the Atlantic Development Board to help establish new industry. There is the Clairtone plant, and so on. I feel strongly that the industry I have mentioned is one that should be carried on, especially if, as the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia says, operations with high labour content are needed.

I went over the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia and I should like the minister to advise me as to precisely what is meant when the agreement states, on page two, in connection with subventions:

> Immediately the corporation acquires the Cape Breton coal mining and related coal works and coal undertakings of Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company Limited and Dominion Coal Company

Limited, Canada shall withdraw order in council PC 1966-54 dated March 23, 1966, which provides for the payment of subventions in respect of coal produced in Nova Scotia, in so far as these subventions relate to the coal mines being acquired by the corporation and to the independent coal mines, it being understood by both Canada and Nova Scotia that the McBean Mine in the county of Pictou is not an independent mine.

I have a copy of that order in council here. It refers to the subvention mentioned by the minister of $10.50 per net ton in Ontario or Quebec and $8.50 per net ton in the Atlantic area. Will this subvention continue to be paid for coal mined at the McBean mine? What about the assistance given under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act which provides for subventions in respect of coal used in power plants to generate electrical energy?

I recall that Doctor Donald said in his report that the government should review the various acts under which assistance is provided for the Nova Scotia coal industry. I wonder whether clause 3 on page two of this agreement wipes out all these subventions under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. Or would it be correct to say that it only wipes out this particular subvention of $10.50 in Ontario or Quebec and $8.50 in the Atlantic provinces?

The independent mines will of course be under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. I have one such mine in my own constituency, the Drummond mine. The Drummond mine is a colliery close to my heart inasmuch as it helped me get my education. I worked there during vacations. It still employs about 100 miners. I am hopeful that this mine will continue in operation. But I am wondering whether the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act which has assisted it so greatly, as well as the McBean mine, will continue to give this support. The agreement is not clear on this point, in my opinion, and I should like the minister to clear the matter up.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue?

Mr. MacEwan: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEwan: I thank the committee for allowing me additional time. I shall take only a couple of minutes. May I again urge the minister that an amendment be made, in this resolution or in the bill which we hope will shortly follow, which will cover the McBean mine at Thorburn. I ask this in view of the words in the Prime Minister's statement of December 29 that the crown corporation when established will "acquire, reorganize and manage the coal mining interests of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation". This pronouncement led me, the union and the workers in that area to believe that this mine, too, would be taken over by the crown corporation which is to be set up.

There is much anxiety among the miners, the clerical staffs and the rest of the workers in my area to know what will happen to them. Once this corporation has been set up, will Dosco close down the operation within the year or will it continue as long as the resources of this mine can be exploited?

These anxieties would be relieved if the operations of this mine could be continued for the full life of the undertaking, and I therefore ask the minister to broaden this resolution, if necessary, or the bill when it comes before us, so as to make provision for this mine with its 400 workers in my constituency.

Mr. MacEachen: The passage of this resolution and, I trust the passage of the bill which is to follow will bring a message of hope to the coal miners and their families who are dependent upon this historic industry in the province of Nova Scotia. This message of hope is all the more important in the exceptional circumstances, the aggravated circumstances, which presently prevail in the Cape Breton area as a result of major lay-offs in the steel industry.

It is frustrating and depressing that at a time when we thought we were making real progress to produce a solution to the long term problems of the coal industry we should, almost at the very moment we are debating the resolution here, be faced with an almost equally serious problem in the steel industry. Yesterday we met a delegation headed by the premier of Nova Scotia, and heard representations from the government of Nova Scotia, the union officials and community leaders pointing out the effect of these lay-offs upon morale in the community. Naturally the government of Canada is very concerned about these developments and is ready to explore every possible and practical measure that could avert further lay-offs and return unemployed steel workers to their jobs. The terms of the resolution do not provide, as advocated by the hon. member for York South —as I understood his remarks—for a take-over of the steel industry. That would be a complicated addition to the heavy responsibilities placed upon this corporation at present, and there is no likelihood that a take-over of the steel industry by a public corporation would command much support at the present time. That is not to say that the new corporation will be indifferent to the future of the steel industry in that area.

The terms of reference of the corporation will be clearly spelled out in the bill which is to follow, and these terms of reference will be seen as broad terms of reference empowering the corporation to deal with a variety of techniques in increasing employment opportunities and broadening the economic basis of the island of Cape Breton. Certainly the part of the resolution setting aside an initial sum on federal account for industrial development indicates that the job of the corporation will be to promote and assist the development of industry on the island.

I have no authority to dictate to the corporation, but it is inconceivable to me that a corporation entrusted with such responsibilities could avoid taking a keen interest in the future of a major employer in the area, namely the steel industry. But that of course is a long term function or job facing the corporation, and the corporation will not be in a position to influence the immediate problem facing the steel workers of the island of Cape Breton.

The hon. member for York East suggested that the introduction of this resolution had been, as it were, surrounded by an atmosphere of lethargy. I assure him any such atmosphere is the result of climatic factors, rather than lack of confidence on the part of the government in the possibilities for development on the island of Cape Breton. We have had recent illustrations of important developments on the island of Cape Breton, and I believe that the expertise and the financial capacity that will be attached to this corporation will accelerate these favourable trends.

I assure the hon. member that the purpose of the federal government in reaching an agreement with the government of Nova Scotia is to create an atmosphere of development so that the economy and the population will not be as dependent as at present on the coal industry, which is in economic difficulties. I think it is important to underline that the policy at the root of this measure is a joint policy, agreed to by the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia, and carrying the support both, morally and financially, of the government of Canada and of the government of Nova Scotia.

I regard as a real triumph the work of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in undertaking these negotiations so successfully with the government of Nova Scotia. No other minister in any government of Canada has been able to engage any former government of Nova Scotia in such an ambitious joint undertaking to resolve the problems of this industry, and it seems to me the fact that both governments are involved ensures that the task will be undertaken on an objective basis and with the public interest in mind.

There is no conflict between the governments on the policy. There is no conflict between the governments on the objectives. There is a clear understanding that has been incorporated first of all in a policy pronouncement of last December and which is now crystallized in an agreement signed on the one hand by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and on the other, by the premier of Nova Scotia, so that in this resolution we are dealing with a bipartisan approach to a long standing problem.

The fact that two governments with a great deal of public support have been able to produce this kind of policy underlines an immense change in public attitude towards the existence of this historic industry in Nova Scotia. If the former member for Cape Breton South, the late "Clarie" Gillis, were in the house he woud be surprised that at the present time a public authority had been established not only to rehabilitate the coal industry, but had been established to provide alternative employment for any persons who would be displaced as a result of that modernization. I remember when the late "Clarie" Gillis was the coal authority in the House of Commons and when his interests were always directed to the problems of the coal industry.

There has been an immense change in public attitude, not only in the readiness to bring forward a public corporation but also in the readiness to accept a possible progressive decline in coal production in the coal industry in Nova Scotia. The economics of the situation are clear. Because of rising costs of production, because of the onrush of competitive fuels, it is becoming increasingly difficult for Nova Scotia coal to compete in fuel markets.

Increasing public support has been given to the industry through subventions to the extent that, in the words of the minister, this year approximately $31 million will be spent for this purpose.

The government was faced with the prospect of continuing these large subventions with no ultimate solution to the problem. The expenditures would continue and, in the absence of any plan, at some point these mines would no longer be able to operate and the result would be the collapse of the economy of the island of Cape Breton. We know that if these mines were allowed to close today, if suddenly the public support were withdrawn, it would mean the collapse of the economy of eastern Nova Scotia and it would have a very bad effect on the total economy of the province of Nova Scotia.

No modern government could permit this to happen, especially in view of the long standing commitment to the industry in the form of subventions. So the economics are that of an industry embattled by unfavourable economic forces, and the sociology is the readiness on the part of the public authorities to move in to help the industry modernize and phase out its operations on a progressive basis, and in the meantime build up alternative industries so that there will be a cushioning effect on displacement and so that the total economy and the total community will be protected.

The governments of Canada and of Nova Scotia have agreed that there must be a relationship between the phasing out of the coal industry and the development of alternate industries. It would be inconceivable to me, for example, that suddenly No. 12 mine at New Waterford would be closed out without there having been some success in establishing alternative industries. This is a mine which employs about 1,000 men. This attitude is clearly stated in the policy pronouncement by the two governments and I think will be implicit if not explicit in the bill when it is revealed to the house.

The resolution authorizes the investment of $25 million in the coal industry. The question immediately will arise, why spend $25 million in an industry which it is believed over the long term will not be a permanent industry. Well, the reason is that this capital investment is necessary to maintain the industry in a safe and economic condition over a period of 10 or 15 years, which is regarded as its normal working life. So the corporation will have this capital to use in modernizing the mines, or in opening a new mine if in its judgment this is the best way to spend the money. In addition the corporation will have an initial endowment from the federal authority of $20 million and an initial endowment from the provincial government of $10 million so that it will be in a position to engage in industrial promotion and industrial development. This will be a powerful weapon which can be used in an effort to encourage industry to come into this area. It is part of the policy pronounced that savings from subventions will be applied to augment the industrial development fund.

Members from all parts of the house will understand that this is not a local problem. It is a national problem because of the large numbers of individuals, their families and, as a result, other persons who are dependent upon a single industry. It is reasonable therefore to plan the adjustment of this industry. It is for that reason that the public authority has been obliged to step in, take over the operation of these mines, modernize them, rationalize them throughout their lifetime, and simultaneously develop the alternative industries which will be necessary to maintain a strong economic foundation. That is the philosophy behind the resolution.

In the House of Commons for a long time we have grappled with the problem of the coal industry. This is the first time we have been able to come forward with a realistic solution which takes into account the economics of the industry and the sociology of the people living in this part of Canada. The hon. member from Pictou county understandably is concerned about the operations at McBean. Undoubtedly he will have some further discussion with the minister who is directly responsible. All of us are concerned about and understand the problem.

We are gratified, that among all the areas of Nova Scotia, in recent years Pictou county has made marked industrial progress. It has made marked industrial progress because of the operation of Industrial Estates and because of the funds channelled into Pictou county from the Atlantic Development Board. As my hon. friend will realize, these were very large amounts indeed. There are 400 men employed at McBean. There are 6,000 or 7,000 miners involved in the economy of Cape Breton island. This government and the government of Nova Scotia were not indifferent to the interests of the McBean miners and the people of Pictou county. It was concluded, however, that the special thrust of a special corporation was not essential to the solution of the McBean problem, especially inasmuch as the mine is located in an area which has shown a healthy industrial development.

I have always been interested in the coal industry. There are very few miners in the constituency of Inverness-Richmond. Previously it had been a constituency with several large mines. It was an important coal producing area. These mines worked themselves out; they left ghost areas, not only in that part of Nova Scotia but elsewhere. This tragic result in the coal mining industry was caused by a lack of planning and adjustment. There is no industry that has more tragedy behind it than the coal industry, not only in Canada but in every part of the world.

I have been interested, even though there are very few miners in my constituency, because my father worked in a coal mine for 44 years. He spent all his life in the coal mines. I was closely associated with the psychology, the working conditions and the economic conditions of the coal miners of Cape Breton Island. I have taken a part in the debate on the resolution stage, Mr. Chairman, because of a long standing interest in the problem and because of an immense satisfaction that proper steps are ultimately being taken to resolve this problem.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question. I should like to ask him whether he would take time out to explain how he can assume that the policy statement has been crystallized by the resolution, when we go back to the problem faced by the hon. member for Pictou. The policy statement says:

> In addition, it is the intention of the federal government to establish with the province a joint framework which will permit the concentration of all federal and provincial efforts to promote the economic development of eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island in accordance with a comprehensive plan.

The inclusion of the McBean colliery, as the hon. member for Pictou so ably put before us, certainly was referred to in the original policy statement.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The minister might also consider the fact that when the naval base closed down, placing 600 people out of employment, the federal government at that time announced an alternative work program for each and every man laid off. Today there are still a number of people laid off at this naval base who have not been placed in alternative employment. In this connection we must remember that phrase used by the Prime Minister, to the effect that the development corporation would cushion the effects of displacement. It was my understanding from the earlier statements and the resolution that any minor displacements in Cape Breton would be looked after by alternative employment.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I might try to answer some of the questions at this point very quickly so as not to filibuster my own resolution.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the committee that the minister requires the unanimous consent of the committee to speak again.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has described the resolution and the legislation which is to follow it, regarding the setting up of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, as a star of hope for the miners of Cape Breton. I hope his prophecy proves to be accurate and that when the legislation comes down we will be able to find as much hope as the minister seems to indicate. Certainly, in the statement made this afternoon by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I cannot see this star of hope shining on the horizon. As a matter of fact, the program the government is introducing at this time is like so many of its programs: It is a matter of too little and too late. It certainly is very late.

The problems which are now on the government's doorstep have been accumulating over a long period of time. The minister made reference to the late "Clarie" Gillis. He and I were deskmates in this house for quite a few years. Some 25 years ago he was pleading with the Liberal government of that day to set up the kind of corporation we are now considering, to establish a Cape Breton coal, iron and steel complex under the authority of the federal government. The minister said he was sure that the late "Clarie" Gillis would be surprised now if he were here and saw this legislation. He certainly would be surprised that it has taken the government 25 years to get around to it. That hon. gentleman recognized the tragedy of the political leadership of this country for so many decades, mainly because they are always bringing in the solutions of yesterday to meet the problems of today. Had the corporation been set up 25 years ago, or even immediately after the war while the industry was still reasonably economical, before the resources had been depleted and the profits had been sucked out of Nova Scotia, and before the communities had been allowed to deteriorate, we would now face a totally different situation.

We are now facing a crash program to deal with a crisis. The government is dealing with it very, very late. The hon. member for York East was quite right and with very good reason, when he said that the government was dealing with this matter as though it were attending a wake. Almost everything the minister said this afternoon, and a considerable part of what has just been said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, had to do with phasing out the coal industry. Clause 5 of the agreement which was signed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the premier of Nova Scotia sets out the responsibilities of the corporation, one of which shall be to establish the target phase-out timetable for the coal mines.

I am not as pessimistic as some people about the future for coal either in this country or in the world generally. I know there are particular problems in respect of the Nova Scotia coal industry. However, most coal authorities admit that with the increasing capital costs of hydro power and the very high capital costs for nuclear power, thermal plants are coming into their own.

There has been a very considerable expansion in the demand for coal in many areas. New research is being done with reference to chemical production from coal. I notice that the Nova Scotia voluntary economic planning board suggested in a summary of a report that there seems to be a fairly firm demand for some 4,500,000 to 5 million tons of Cape Breton coal until about 1972. I have not seen their working papers and do not know how dependable this estimate is, but as the member for York East has done, I rather deprecate the government for its assumption, that the main purpose here is not to praise the coal industry, but to bury it.

When we get to the bill itself I hope we can obtain from the minister some idea of what he means by phasing out the coal industry. If he means phasing out some of the uneconomic mines and opening some new seams that are more economical, like the Lingan seam, that would make sense. If he means a gradual phasing out of the coal industry in Cape Breton the people should be told.

What has the government in mind? Is it aiming at 2 million tons per year as the norm, or 1 million tons by 1980? Does it estimate that coal production in Cape Breton will have been reduced 1 million tons per year by then? We should have some idea of what this phasing out program is, because phasing out really means phasing out the livelihood of some 6,500 coal miners, many of whom are probably too old to be retained for other kinds of employment.

I think we should know something of the training programs that are going to be introduced. On second reading of the bill we will want some assurance from the minister that there will be no phasing out of any coal operation, or a discharging of men engaged in the coal industry until such time as the industrial development program has provided job opportunities for them. There has to be a synchronization so that coal miners and others will not be thrown out of work until the Cape Breton Development Corporation is able to assure them employment in some other industry in Cape Breton.

Mention has already been made of the matter of compensation. The minister has not said anything about it, but I assume that when the legislation comes down we will be authorizing the development corporation to acquire the mines presently owned by the Dominion Coal Company. Certainly this parliament ought not to be asked to give such authority to an autonomous corporation without knowing the basis upon which compensation is to be paid, and the underlying principle, and whether or not there is to be a ceiling.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I noticed that a report in the Globe and Mail of March 8, 1967, said that a government committee had met with a committee of the preferred shareholders of Dominion Coal Company and had agreed that the pro forma book value would be a reasonable price for their acquisition. The pro forma book value, according to this report, is $19,947,677, possibly $20 million.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I should deny immediately that such an agreement was reached.

Mr. Douglas: Then I think it would have helped a great deal if the minister had told us this afternoon, when he introduced the resolution, what will be the basis of compensation. The minister is surely not going to come into this house with legislation—

Mr. Pepin: It is in the bill.

Mr. Douglas: The minister says, "In the bill." He introduced the resolution. The resolution ought to cover the main tenets of the bill. If the minister is going to introduce a bill into the house asking us to authorize an autonomous corporation to handle certain arrangements, we ought to know on what basis the corporation will be operated and what arrangements will be made, because the cost of operating the corporation will come back into parliament in the form of supplementary estimates.

When the minister introduces the bill I hope he will tell us what payments will be made and on what basis they will be made because, as has been said repeatedly already, we ought not to be paying for liabilities. These are mainly what the government will be taking over. The resolution says we will be asked to authorize the payment of $25 million to this development corporation for the purpose of rehabilitating and modernizing the industry. I hope the minister will give us some information about this.

The minister said this afternoon that whereas the Minister of National Health and Welfare had said on October 5, 1965, that $25 million would be given to the coal industry, $10 million to open the Lingan seam and $15 million to modernize the industry, Doctor Donald in his report had taken a contrary view. So the government, with its usual decisiveness has decided to leave the matter to the development corporation to settle. I hope the minister does not think he will get a bill through the house without something more specific than that.

In October, 1965, the government thought it was worth spending $10 million of the taxpayers' money to open the Lingan seam and it was worth another $15 million to modernize the coal mines in Cape Breton. That was the policy. If that is not going to be the policy the government intends to follow, we want to know what policy it is going to follow. Also we want to know the reason for a change in policy, unless the minister thinks the Minister of National Health and Welfare was not speaking for the government and was merely making up that policy out of his head.

When the minister introduces the bill I hope he will also tell us what relationship there will be with the seven small, private coal companies which I understood him to say this afternoon are going to be taken over by the province of Nova Scotia. Will they be operated by this development corporation? It would seem to me somewhat ridiculous to have the federal government setting up a corporation to provide a coal marketing service and to have the provincial government setting up a different coal marketing service, and to have both of them carrying out certain research on the uses of coal and market prospects for coal. Surely it makes sense if this development corporation which we are now setting up is to operate all these mines with some arrangement with the province of Nova Scotia, and also to include the McBean mine. I see no sense in leaving that mine by itself, even though it is in Pictou county.

When I said this measure was not only too late but too little I had in mind the fact that the government is in danger of proceeding to do in respect of steel what it has already done in respect of coal. Having neglected all the pleas for action by the coal industry until we are now in the position where the government is talking about phasing it out, we are facing an almost identical situation with regard to the steel industry.

The minister said a few moments ago that to include the steel industry in this development corporation would not gain widespread support. I do not know on what the minister bases that statement. If there is one thing the government ought to learn, it is that the art of governing is the art of foreseeing. It is not a matter of waiting until the government is pressed into doing something. It is a matter of the government seeing the signs that are all about it that the steel industry in Cape Breton island is in trouble. The government should not wait until the steel mill is closed, but should do something about it now.

The steel industry has for some time been having increasing difficulty. I do not think there is a doubt that it is in the process of being phased out by Dominion Steel and Coal Company. Dominion Steel and Coal Company constructed its rod and bar plant at Contrecoeur. It constructed its flat plate mill at Contrecoeur. This means there is virtually no processing at all being carried out at the Sydney plant. Those two mills at Contrecoeur will each require about 300,000 tons of steel per year, but the capacity of the Sydney steel plant is over one million tons a year. Where is the market to come from for the other 400,000 tons, unless there is some diversification of the steel plant at Sydney to begin processing light standard fabricated steel? There is no indication that Dominion Steel and Coal Company has any such intention. As a matter of fact, it is much more likely that if they decide to fabricate light structural steel, it will be fabricated at Contrecoeur.

It is rather significant that the steel plant at Sydney has two blast furnaces and two open-hearth furnaces. It is almost the last plant to continue with open-hearth furnaces. There are a good many people who suspect that when the time comes to close out these obsolete furnaces, the plant will be moved to Contrecoeur, and that we are now in the first stages of phasing out the steel industry.

The minister says there is no public support for this, but I would point out that the Cape Breton Post in an editorial of Saturday, June 10 last, suggested three things: First, a take-over by more competent management; second, a take-over by government, federal and provincial, in association with new management; and third, a transfer of control and management to the new crown corporation which comes into being shortly, operating the Sydney plant under the status of a new industry. So there seems to be some support in Cape Breton for the government including the steel industry in this new development corporation. The Federation of Labour has made similar representations. As a matter of fact, I predict that if this government does not take steps now to include the Cape Breton steel industry in the development corporation, 10 years from now some government in this chamber will be introducing legislation to deal with a steel industry that has folded up in Cape Breton. Now, instead of wasting time as we did with the coal industry, instead of allowing opportunities to slip by and then engaging in a phasing out operation, surely this is the time for the government to step into the steel industry in Cape Breton. These industries are complementary, as they have found in other countries where governments moved in to set up a complex of coal, iron and steel. They go together naturally.

As a matter of fact, the steel industry provides some of the market for coal. I understand that 50 per cent of the coal which is used in the steel plant is Cape Breton coal. If the steel industry folds up, this will be another set-back for the coal industry in Cape Breton. I hope the minister and the government, before they bring in the bill, will give very serious consideration to this matter. They are not going to be able to evade this issue by doing what the Minister of National Health and Welfare did this evening, by saying, "I cannot conceive of a development corporation being set up that will not concern itself with the steel industry." What can this corporation do about the steel industry, with $20 million?

This is a matter of total government policy. As I said this afternoon, the president of Dominion Steel and Coal Company, Mr. C. H. Drury, pointed out last year that in the Atlantic provinces 14,000 tons of steel were brought in from other countries.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I thank the members of the committee, and I will certainly not impose on their generosity. Mr. C. H. Drury, the president of Dominion Steel and Coal Company, has pointed out that last year 14,000 tons of steel from other countries came into the four Atlantic provinces. He points out this represents 30 per cent of the consumption of reenforcing steel in the four Atlantic provinces. It was for this reason he made an appeal to the government of Canada to specify in all their contracts that Canadian steel must be used. This would not solve the whole problem, but it points up the very serious situation in which the steel industry finds itself in Cape Breton.

Some 700 men have been laid off since last November. The latest notice which has been given to the union is that one blast furnace and one open-hearth furnace are to be closed. This will mean laying off another 400 men. I urge the government not to give us any more soporifics, that this situation will right itself. It is not going to right itself unless there is direct and dynamic government action. The time to take that action is when this legislation is before the house. The Cape Breton Development Corporation should be given jurisdiction over the steel industry in Cape Breton, as well as the very sick coal industry which we are handing over to their care.

May I say just one other thing, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down? I should like to refer to the second function which is being given to the development corporation, namely that of sponsoring and initiating new industries. I would certainly say that $20 million is a very small capitalization upon which to establish new industries. There are many small cities in Canada with bigger industrial development funds than $20 million. As a matter of fact, millions of dollars have already been invested in Cape Breton by the government of Nova Scotia and as a result of the activities of the Atlantic Development Board. To date, I think they have provided something like 400 new jobs. I am not complaining about this. I am simply pointing out the tremendous sums of money it takes to provide employment.

I believe they have been able, with three new industries, to create 400 jobs. If that is so, how much does the government think it is going to take to provide jobs for not only the 6,500 miners who may be eventually displaced, but for the 1,500 jobs which must be found every year in Cape Breton if we are going to keep the young people from having to move off the island. If the government feels that this $20 million is merely a token payment and other money will be brought along as it is needed, then that is fine. I believe the government would have given the committee a much more realistic impression of its intentions if it had put a lump sum in the resolution and in the legislation, on the understanding of course that it would be spent only as the opportunities arose. We should know from the minister what goal he has in mind and what sum of money is to be available. Surely he does not think that $20 million is going to be an adequate amount.

Mr. Pepin: I stated very clearly this afternoon that the moneys saved on subsidies would be devoted to economic development. This is clear, so the sums the hon. member is referring to now are simply a first investment in this operation. We are just as aware as he is of the requirements that are needed to proceed to the kind of economic development we have in mind for Cape Breton.

Mr. Douglas: I heard the minister say that. I also understood, unless I misunderstood him, that the sums which the government is going to save by discontinuing the subvention will also be used to meet the losses of this corporation in operating the coal industry. The coal industry in Cape Breton is now going to operate without subventions. Is the minister telling the committee that the government will meet the losses out of the federal treasury, and that the savings on the subventions will be turned over to this development corporation for the development of new industry? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Mr. Pepin: I will repeat what I said. The moneys saved on subsidies will be transferred to the economic development branch of the corporation.

Mr. Douglas: Oh, yes, of course. However, the minister must not try to kid the troops like that. Of course the money saved on subventions will be turned over to the economic development corporation. How much of that money will be used to meet the very considerable losses that will result from the fact there are no longer subventions? This corporation is now going to have to operate on the basis of no coal subventions. This will mean either that it has to sell coal at a lower price and lose money, or lose markets.

Now, the minister has given himself a good problem in arithmetic, so I suggest he get his homework done by the time the house meets again. I want the minister to tell us when he brings down the bill how much of the, let us say, $30 million which will be paid in subventions will be required to pay the losses which will occur by virtue of the fact there are no subventions. How much of that $30 million will be available for the development of new industries? I want the minister to tell us that. Unless he can show us that there are considerable sums of money to be available, then I come back to my main contention, that this $20 million is merely a token figure. Unless the government is prepared to make much larger sums available there will not be many new industries. Consequently new jobs will not be available to provide employment for the men thrown out of work as the coal operation is phased out, that being the government's plan.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The problem we are dealing with embraces more than coal and steel. We are dealing with the livelihood of men and women. It is extremely important that when the government brings in this legislation they provide all of the facts that are required. I say this because we are laying down a blueprint which is going to affect the lives of the people in Cape Breton for at least the next 25 years. Therefore I hope that the minister can give us a great deal more information than we have had up until now, and that this information will be forthcoming when he introduces the measure following this resolution.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. MacEwan: I asked the minister some questions, Mr. Chairman. Would he answer them now or does he prefer to wait for second reading?

The Chairman: I should point out that according to the rules under which the committee now operates the minister would require the unanimous consent of the house to speak again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[And the Chairman having left the table:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When the chairman put it to the committee whether the resolution should pass, both the hon. member for Pictou and myself came to our feet intending to pose a question to the minister. The Chair then advised that the minister would need unanimous consent to speak, and I thought he was given that consent.

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. MacEwan: Who objected?

Mr. Pepin: Do it on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has not yet reported the resolution. If there is any desire on the part of members of the house to resume in committee, there is no reason why that cannot be done. Is it the wish of the house to resume the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister said he was in a big hurry. Where is the hurry now?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When the Chair asked for unanimous consent, agreement was indicated on this side of the house. Unless someone cares to deny it, no one on this side of the house heard any objection to that from the other side of the house. The fact that you are now in the chair, Mr. Speaker, is an automatic way of getting this question out of the committee. We on this side have already given unanimous consent. It seems you are back in the chair just because the Liberals would not allow you to take the chair in committee. That seems to be the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I asked the committee whether they would give unanimous consent to allow the minister to speak again, but under the terms of standing order 61A the minister, like other members of the house, with the exception of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, is limited to 20 minutes. The minister having spoken for 20 minutes, he has exhausted his right to speak unless the committee gives him unanimous consent to speak again. Then when I asked whether the minister would like to have unanimous consent to speak again, he said that he would speak on second reading of the bill.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): With all due deference to Your Honour, that remark of the minister's was not heard. When as Chairman of the committee Your Honour put it to the committee whether the resolution should pass, both the hon. member for Pictou and myself rose to our feet in order to pose a question. The fact that Your Honour is now in the chair I think is a denial of the privilege of the members on this side of the house who are greatly concerned with this particular matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize to hon. members. The resolution has not yet been reported. If it is the wish of the members of the house to resume in committee of the whole, I shall certainly do so.

[And the Chairman having returned to the table.]

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, the question I wanted the minister to clarify was the matter which was brought up this afternoon by the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

The Chairman: Order. I shall also have to point out to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that according to the rules he too has exhausted the time allotted to him.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Am I not allowed a question, sir?

Mr. MacEwan: Does the minister prefer to answer the questions on second reading?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated that. I have about 25 questions to answer and I do not think the time would allow me to do it properly.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am raising a point of order. I have often wondered about this rule 61A, which deals with a money resolution. I quite understand that it limits the debate to one day, and subsection 2 provides that no member shall speak for more than 20 minutes. When we are in committee of the whole it is customary, and has always been the case, when dealing with resolutions to make a speech of a duration, say, of five to 20 minutes, but at the same time to ask questions and to get answers. Surely this rule does not prohibit the long established custom of this house, despite the length of time a member may have spoken in a prepared speech, of asking questions and getting answers from the minister.

I do not think it was the intention of the committee on rules to change this particular procedure that has been followed in the past. As it stands now—and this is the point on which I should like your ruling—it appears that a member is prohibited from asking a series of questions, but that he must get up and make a speech which is not to exceed 20 minutes duration. That never was the purpose of the study of resolutions in committee of the whole house.

The Chairman: Perhaps I can refer the hon. member to a ruling made by Mr. Deputy Speaker Lamoureux on April 27, 1965 when a similar question was discussed in the committee of the whole. At that time the ruling of the Chairman was that a member of the committee could speak as many times as he wished but the total time was not to exceed 20 minutes.

My difficulty with the minister is that, if he were to be asked a number of questions, since he has already exhausted the time allowed him he would need the unanimous consent of the committee to answer those questions. The Chair of course, has no objection at all to asking for that unanimous consent.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, a little common sense approach would go a long way toward solving this problem. Do I understand from that ruling that any member who had used up his 20 minutes would therefore be debarred from asking any questions? Since it has been established that I used my allotted time this afternoon and I was permitted to ask a question, it seems to me that a precedent has been established. I am sure that the same principle could be applied to the minister here, even though he has used up his allotted time of 20 minutes.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I understand the desire of hon. members to ask questions of the minister, but if we pass the resolution hon. members will then have the bill. They will have a full opportunity to study the bill and to ask more informed questions in committee, at which time there will be no limitation such as that now imposed by this particular rule. My only point in rising is to assure hon. members that they are not losing anything by allowing the rule to be observed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the house leader a question. The hon. gentleman said that we will have an opportunity to discuss the matter when the bill comes in. Can he tell us when the government intend to proceed with second reading of the bill? That will certainly facilitate any settlement that might be made of this matter at the moment.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, we have laid on the Registrar General's estimates for tomorrow. If we complete those we will take second reading of this bill; otherwise we will take it on Monday.

Mr. MacEwan: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say I did not intend to ask further questions. I thought that in my speech during the 20-minute period allotted to me I had asked sufficient questions. I wondered whether the minister wished to answer the questions now. He seems to have decided that he would answer them on second reading, and I am agreeable to that. I have asked my question, and I do not wish to ask more at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the purpose of the 20-minute rule in this kind of debate was associated with the fact that the debate was limited to one day. In other words, since we were limited to a debate of one day we did not want a few members to monopolize the whole day. But we have not used the whole day; 17 minutes of it are left and nobody else wishes to speak. What is wrong with the common sense of allowing the minister to have the floor to answer some of the questions which have been put to him. I understand the difficulties in interpreting the rules, but there seems to be agreement for the minister to use the rest of the time to answer the questions. Why is there the timidity?

The Chairman: Order, please. I remind the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the Chair does not object, if hon. members ask for unanimous consent. If the minister wishes to answer questions, and if he has the unanimous consent of the committee, he may do so. But he has stated that he would answer questions on second reading of the bill. If the minister wishes to answer questions now, the Chair has no objection.

Mr. Knowles: The word "timidity" did not apply to Your Honour. It was expressing the hope that the minister would take advantage of these few minutes to answer some questions.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it appears that the minister, in common with the Minister of National Health and Welfare is tired. We have 16 minutes left. I wonder if we could agree to let this request stand. Perhaps after the minister has had a good night's sleep he may be in a better position to answer questions.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I do not rise on a point of order or on a question of privilege, but merely to say that the minister allowed the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who spoke this afternoon, to misinterpret him. The subvention money will not be withheld once the corporation is set up. The corporation will of necessity have to use that money for transportation, and to keep the mines operating until they can be phased out. There will be no additional money, as I said this afternoon, and the minister agreed with me. This evening he tried to leave another impression. It is a matter of taking the money, so to speak, from the subvention pocket and putting it into the corporation's pocket. As I said, the corporation would have to spend money for the transportation of coal to markets if the mines are to be maintained until they are phased out. At least the minister ought to make that point clear.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I want to say a few words, not because we have any coal mines in my province, but because this matter is important to the economy generally of the maritime provinces. We have no coal mines in Prince Edward Island, though by devious means we have produced at least one chairman of the coal board.

I want to impress on the minister the importance of finding a solution, without reservation or hesitation, to this serious problem, and I want to ask him and the government to bring the most generous and exacting consideration to it.

The economy of any area such as Cape Breton island and eastern Nova Scotia is not an entity in itself that can be separated from the general economy of the area. When the economy of Nova Scotia is prosperous, there is an ever widening circle of economic benefit that accrues generally to the maritime provinces. When the reverse obtains we in Prince Edward Island feel the pinch. Traditionally, when eastern Nova Scotia is prosperous we have found there an important market, chiefly for our farm and food products. When a depression or lack of employment becomes apparent in the industries of Nova Scotia, the effects, rather strikingly, are immediately and recognizably felt in the economy of Prince Edward Island.

There was a time half a century ago when the industrial prospects of eastern Nova Scotia seemed bright. That was a period of buoyancy and optimism and it had beneficial effects on the economy of the entire area. For the last 25 years we maritimers generally have been plagued by a series of industrial difficulties, first in one industry, then in another; and often these were not unrelated to each other. The failure of an industry, or the lack of vitality in an industry owing to its low profits or because it could not be viable without subventions or an artificial stimulus, had a depressing effect and lowered confidence in the whole area.

This matter is not of exclusive and direct concern to the industries in the area we talk of. What happens has a subsidiary effect on the whole economy of the maritimes. I am sorry to take time with the statement, but I want it to be understood that this is a matter in which all maritimers have a deep interest. I believe all Canadians should be deeply interested in this, and they probably are.

In the maritimes and the Atlantic provinces generally we are cursed—that is not too strong a word to use—because, to balance our economy, we have to buy for the most part manufactured goods which are manufactured chiefly in central Canada, behind protective tariff walls, and we must find markets for our own products, not generally in Canada but in foreign places. This is especially true of Newfoundland, and it is true to almost as great an extent of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces.

In that part of Canada we have no bargaining position vis-à-vis the rest of Canada. We cannot argue about tariffs and other arrangements which might be beneficial to large segments of our economy. We are the victims quite often of measures that are considered beneficial to Canada as a whole, or beneficial to the large economic interests. By "large economic interests" I refer to the large segment of the Canadian economy.

• (9:50 p.m.)

This leaves us in the Atlantic provinces in the position where we have not enough weight from a political point of view to give our views an overriding effect—I use the phrase "political point of view" in a general way to mean that we are not large enough in the over-all picture to do so, and that is only to be expected. So we have to make the best of circumstances in which artificial effects on the economy are brought about by tariffs and other devices. Then we are left, or have been, historically, to forage for ourselves—to do the best we can to find markets for our products, products of the mines, the forests and the sea which for the most part must be exported to world markets at a world price which is generally based on lower wage standards and lower local prices than those which exist in Canada and the United States. Only in some cases are markets for our products to be found in the United States. Most of them go to low price areas, low labour cost areas such as the West Indies, Spain, Portugal and Italy.

If the bill which is to follow this resolution will do anything to solve the serious economic problems of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia generally, we in the maritimes support it wholeheartedly. We are not at all certain that this will be the effect. All I want to say is that this is not a matter which is of interest only to members of parliament from eastern Nova Scotia.

Mr. Peters: Now that I have thought about it, I am sorry I do not have more time in which to make a speech. The question which the minister has to answer is: Where does the subvention go? There is a relationship between the Dominion Coal Board, with its subventions, and the effect of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act on the operations of mines in northwestern Ontario. These subventions concern the economy of the gold mining area, as they do the economy of the maritimes.

The fact that the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond has left the chamber is no reason for the minister not answering the question which was put to him. It will undoubtedly be brought up again on the second reading of this bill. The Prime Minister has said that this $25 million, the coal subvention, will be given to the corporation. But does the minister not realize that if the corporation mines and sells coal it will have to pay exactly the same subvention as the coal board did, or it will find itself with no markets? This means that the $25 million is transferred from one pocket to the other; the situation will be unchanged.

[Mr. MacLean.]

The fact that the industry will be operated by a government agency and that the Canadian public is now becoming more interested in allowing efficient crown corporations to run economic operations in this country, will not really make much impression on Toronto when that city buys coal for its steam generating plants; it will still want to pay the same price, and to maintain the same price the government would have to pay a transportation subvention of approximately $25 million. There will be no change. No inducement has been offered to consumers to warrant their paying more to a crown agency than to the Dominion Coal Board.

The minister can be assured he will be faced again with this question on second reading. I am of the opinion he will find it more rewarding politically to answer it than to avoid it. Indeed I am surprised that the minister, who is usually informative, should decline to clarify a point of this kind. There must be a very obvious answer, because it is a very obvious question. It might be in our best interest to have the question answered tonight.

Mr. Pepin: The answer is obvious, too.

Mr. Peters: If the answer is obvious, I should like to hear it, even in the last minute before this debate concludes. I would be prepared to give the minister just two minutes in which to answer the question.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pepin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-135, to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): May I ask the leader of the house whether he is in a position to inform us of the business for the next few days—for a week, if possible.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: As I stated earlier, the business for tomorrow is the estimates of the Registrar General. If we complete those tomorrow we would start the second reading of the development corporation bill and continue it on Monday, or otherwise begin it on Monday. On Tuesday we will take the estimates of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; on Wednesday the estimates of the Minister of National Health and Welfare; on Thursday those of the Minister of National Defence, and on Friday those of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader one question. Is he counting Wednesday as a full day for the consideration of estimates, because the practice last year was that Wednesday counted as only a half day?

Mr. MacEachen: I would have to check the practice, Mr. Speaker, but I had understood that Wednesday was a day.

Mr. Churchill: May I point out to the minister that on Wednesday of this week we spent only one hour and 45 minutes on estimates, and that surely is not a day. A day normally is five or five and half hours.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wonder if the house leader would now make available copies of the development corporation bill to hon. members?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the bill will be made available in English and French. We do not have it in Gaelic.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Made available when—tonight?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DISASTERS—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN FUND

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I think it is a bit unfortunate we have not got the television cameras here to televise the drama of parliament, as I have heard it called. Anyway, I must say that for years I have been convinced of the need for a national disaster fund. I remember when this idea came to my mind in embryo in 1929. I was in charge of building 20 miles of highway through a mountain pass in British Columbia. As the result of a spark coming from a locomotive climbing a steep grade I witnessed in four hours the destruction of sawmills, of homes, of farm property and of 200 million feet of timber. As a witness to the whole spectacle, I shall never forget thinking to myself that there should be some reasonable way, through law, to meet a disaster of this magnitude.

In recent days, Mr. Speaker, the Fernie disaster and other disasters that have threatened as a result of forest fires and are presently threatening as the result of the flooding of some of our rivers, indicate the need is increasing for some form of national disaster fund. It was only yesterday the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) informed us that the Emergency Measures Act is established as a result of co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal governments and that it can be applied on the municipal level where the resources are sufficient. Where they are not sufficient at that level they can apply to the provincial government, and where they are beyond the scope of the provincial government they can apply to the federal government. There is a logical basis for the operation of that fund, as a result of co-operation between all levels of government to meet any particular situation, whether it is in peacetime or under a wartime emergency.

It is because of my interest in this question, Mr. Speaker, that for many years I have introduced a bill entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment of the Canada Disaster Fund." As a result of studying this bill, I find I would now call it a national disaster fund, so as not to compete with a private organization that is in the field.

I introduced this bill for the following reasons. It is intended to meet the problem of deciding at what point disaster losses are beyond the capacity of a province to deal with effectively, and the disaster essentially becomes national. The bill would set up a fund to which contributions can be made in advance by federal and provincial governments and by individuals, companies and institutions. The board of trustees would determine each year in advance, in respect of each province, the provincial financial tolerance point above which losses are of national scope. Should a disaster occur in a province the board would contribute to the province out of the fund in respect of the losses above the tolerance point.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is perfect in all respects. It was introduced to give members an opportunity to study the question and to give the government an opportunity also to consider the importance of this matter. It was because of my interest in the subject initially, and the interest which has been stimulated as a result of my experience in this house over a period of 22 years, that I introduced the bill. It was for that reason that I asked the Prime Minister the following question:

> In view of the recent Fernie disaster, the possibility of disaster to the residents of Sioux Lookout and Chapleau, and other disasters, has the government given consideration to the need for a Canadian disaster fund after the fashion of the bill introduced by the member for Kootenay West, that will provide for a Canada disaster fund to which contributions can be made in advance by federal and provincial governments and by individuals, companies and institutions for assistance where the losses are considered of national scope.

I am very pleased to see the minister here this evening. I shall be interested to hear of the government's intentions with regard to the establishment of the disaster fund I have mentioned.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that there is a law on the Canadian statute books entitled the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund Act. This act, passed in 1953, provides for almost the same thing for which the hon. member is asking. It sets up a corporation known as the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, Incorporated, consisting of five members, each of whom represents one of the geographical divisions of the country. The first members of the corporation were named by the act, which provides that when a vacancy occurs in the membership of the corporation the Secretary of State may appoint a new member.

The corporation was established to manage and distribute the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund which consists of all money, property and securities received by the corporation for the purposes of the act and all income derived therefrom. No payment shall be made out of the fund except as authorized by the act. Section 6(3) of the act provides this:

> The corporation may make payments out of the fund for the purpose of meeting emergencies and needs arising in Canada from flood, fire, tempest, earthquake, pestilence or other disaster, mitigating loss and suffering caused thereby assisting in repairing damage resulting therefrom, and rehabilitating persons who have suffered injury or loss by reason thereof, when in the opinion of the corporation the implementing of such purpose is beyond the reasonable capacity of the area affected.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there are associations such as the Red Cross Society which do their best to help in these situations. In every case the government looks into the situation and does its best to improve the situation in respect of those who have suffered discomfort.

Mr. Herridge: These are private associations and are not under the control of the government.

[Mr. Herridge.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO ADDITION OF ANTIBIOTICS TO LIVESTOCK FEED

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question actually of the Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, simply because I could not decide who is responsible for the feeding of cattle in this country. In an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of June 13 I learned that there is widespread use of large quantities of antibiotics as animal feed supplements. The danger in this regard of course is that there are remainders of small amounts of antibiotics in the meat which humans ingest every day.

In the practice of medicine we must be very careful, when we use antibiotics, that we use them in effective doses for a certain period of time until we kill the infection, rather than in small ineffective quantities, so that the bacteria do not gain the opportunity to build up resistance to the effect of the antibiotics.

I was unaware through my own ignorance, that antibiotics were used in cattle feed and that all of us were ingesting small amounts of antibiotics at all times when we ate meat. Because of the care we have to take in the practice of medicine it was a source of worry to me that possibly we are losing the effectiveness of antibiotics in that practice, because of this gradual but insidious absorption of antibiotics. I do not understand or pretend to understand the purpose of using antibiotics in cattle feeding.

There was a three day symposium held in Washington, the date of which is not given in the article, and I could not find out precisely when it was held, but according to the article Canada was one of the nations represented. It was my intention in asking the question to derive what the government's role was, what was said and what investigation is being carried out to prevent a link between the drug resistant bacteria found in man and the widespread practice of using antibiotics as a food supplement for animals whose meat we ingest.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there was a public symposium held in Washington on June 5 to June 7 on the use of drugs in animal feeds. Representatives of the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare and representatives of the Department of Agriculture were in attendance.

It was evident from the proceedings of the symposium, which was attended by officers of our departments, that antibiotics added to animal feeds can result in the emergence of antibiotic resistant strains of micro-organisms. The possible impact on human health of such micro-organisms in animals is not at all clear. The Department of National Health and Welfare is continuing to keep this problem under close surveillance.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—FROBISHER BAY—INQUIRY AS TO HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the following question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Does the department intend to carry on the intensive development program at Frobisher Bay by building this year new houses for Eskimos and government personnel?

If the Chair had not felt that the question was out of order, I would have asked the following supplementary question: Can the minister tell the house about the 1967-68 program concerning the number of units which will be built as well as their total value?

During my trips to that locality, I had the opportunity to realize the economic importance of Frobisher Bay and to consider also the sanitary needs and others for which it is urgent to make provision.

Frobisher Bay has a population of approximately 1,600 inhabitants, 1,000 of whom are Eskimos. It is the largest centre in the eastern Arctic both by its size and its large Eskimo population. It has the only international airport in the far north, and one is pleased to find that Nordair company serves this area effectively on a regular basis. It is the headquarters of a great number of government officials and other private enterprise employees who often live under deplorable conditions. Frobisher Bay is a regional centre whose administrative role is comparable to and even more important than that of centres like Churchill, Inuvik and Yellowknife. Capital investments there exceed $25 million.

Apart from the federal building which was constructed on a permanent basis, the other buildings, houses, schools, are temporary and as you all know, temporary services and quarters which are not up to Canadian standards reduce the efficiency of the workers and weaken their morale. It is absolutely necessary to replace all these temporary buildings with permanent and modern constructions.

The government's construction program has been set for a five year period. In 1967, it was projected to build 30 houses for government employees and 20 for the Eskimos. This program was carried out and I want to congratulate the government for that. This does not mean, however, that all the needs have been met. Nevertheless, this was a promising start which now seems endangered for 1967-68.

This was the program for the 1967-68 period: Construction of 70 houses for government employees; construction of 100 houses for the Eskimos; construction of adjacent roads; planning for the construction of office and store buildings; preparation of plans for living quarters of 100 bachelors; preparation of plans for building a technical school.

I hardly think it is necessary to list the projects for the years to come, but I do hope that they will not be abandoned, so that the economic development of this area may be pursued satisfactorily.

However, I note that vote No. 25 of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the estimates for 1967-68 provides no money for part of the 1967-68 program, particularly for the following items, according to the replies given by the minister to the member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) at the beginning of June: No money to continue the program to build 70 houses for government employees; no money to prepare plans for the construction of office and store buildings; no money for the preparation of plans to build living quarters for 100 bachelors.

Due to the fact that Frobisher Bay has no basic resources and is entirely dependent on the government for its existence, this attitude by the department is causing a feeling of frustration and instability among the population and, consequently, is reducing its productivity and legitimate aspirations.

I hope that the government will not only continue the program submitted to and accepted by Treasury Board but that it will step it up and improve it.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) that it is most refreshing, on a day such as this when the heat is intense, to hear about the Canadian northland.

The hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is away at the present time. Indeed, he is up north attending to his business with the diligence and determination for which he is known. As he is not here to answer that question, I shall be glad to convey to him the representations of the hon. member for Laurier.

It is also most interesting to see a member from an urban centre like Montreal show concern for the people living up north. The Canadians of the province of Quebec thus show that they take an interest in all Canadian problems, including those having to do with northern development, and I wish to congratulate the hon. member for that initiative.

EXTERNAL AID

MIDDLE EAST—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FOOD RELIEF AND GRANT TO RED CROSS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce that Canada is sending—indeed, the movement has already begun—approximately $2.5 million worth of food relief to the Middle East. Of this $1 million worth of wheat flour will be sent for distribution to Palestine refugees through the United Nations relief and works agency. The remainder will go through the world food program to the Arab countries of Syria, Jordan, Lebanon and the Yemen to meet food shortages there.

As an immediate emergency measure the government has also matched an initial grant of $20,000 from the Canadian Red Cross Society to the international committee of the Red Cross for medical supplies to help meet urgent needs arising from the recent conflict.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has said will meet with general support. However, in addition to the sums to which he has referred and assistance by way of food supplies and the like, there is one paramount question which I should like the right hon. gentleman to consider, namely the terrible possibility that thousands of Arab troops in the Sinai desert apparently face an awful death because of lack of water.

I hope action will be taken with some urgency in this regard. The United Nations has been meeting in a rather desultory way. Nothing has been done by the United Nations to meet this problem, one which cannot be postponed. This is a matter of life and death; and whatever may be the views of people as a whole toward the Arab position if ever there was a case demanding action it is the frightful situation which has developed in Sinai. I hope Canada will give a lead. Apparently the nations of the United Nations are devoting themselves to other matters, but unless we take action immediately to provide some hope of survival for those, whatever their numbers may be, wandering aimlessly over the desert, a sorry situation will be created. This will lead in years to come to resentment which will fester with the passage of time.

We have aircraft in the Middle East. Cannot they be used to convey assistance? Cannot something be done to rouse the United Nations to action now? Delay can only result in disaster and that frustration which comes to hopeless men.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, may I just say that this matter was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary North and I had intended to deal with it on orders of the day.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the people of Canada will support the expenditure which the Prime Minister has suggested for aid to refugees in the Middle East. The $2½ million the Prime Minister has mentioned is a relatively small amount but it is a beginning, and I am sure, if on further investigation the government finds that more food and larger sums of money are required to help the refugees of this unhappy war, it will have the full support of the members of the house and of the country generally.

I would also like to associate myself with the plea which has just been made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to the plight of the Arab refugees in the Sinai desert. Canada demonstrated when we were taking the Canadian forces in UNEF out of that area that we are capable of putting on a very efficient and effective airlift. I think the Canadian government might do well to offer the services of our air force and whatever helicopters can be moved to that area to take these people out of the Sinai desert just as quickly as possible. I know such a program, if the government were to undertake it, would have the wholehearted support of the Canadian people.

Whatever one may think about the reasons for the outbreak of hostilities, all of us want to see that human beings are protected against an agonizing death, also having in mind that any humanitarian actions we can take at this time will help allay some of the present bitterness and, we hope, might lay a foundation for better understanding in the future.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we all realize that there has been increasing concern right across this country with respect to the plight of those who are facing starvation and death in the Middle East. We in this group would like to associate ourselves with the expressions of commendation on the fact that the government has seen fit to take immediate action to provide the sum of $2½ million to assist in meeting this problem.

As has been pointed out, possibly this will just be a beginning, but I am sure any further contribution that is required will be recognized as worth while. However, I would like to ask whether there has been a concerted plan on the part of European and North American countries to join in this particular program. I think the program should be shared in by all, and not by just a few who perhaps are more than willing to step in and meet their responsibilities.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. A. Byrne (for Mr. Macaluso): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the standing committee on transport and communications, the hon. member for Hamilton West I have been asked to move:

That the first report of the standing committee on transport and communications, presented to the house on Tuesday, June 13, 1967, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROVISION FOR TERMINATION OF PREGNANCY BY MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-136, concerning the termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the question of the termination of pregnancy has been the object of extensive study in the last few years, and also of legislation in several countries. Recently a bill has been introduced in the United Kingdom to amend and clarify the law relating to termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners. The present bill is inspired by its British counterpart and is for the purpose of allowing medical termination of pregnancy in certain cases under the surveillance of medical and governmental authorities.

I have consulted with interested persons and groups and with eminent counsel in the drafting of this bill, and while its principle is the same as other bills that have been introduced on this subject it includes some modifications of the United Kingdom bill related to Canadian circumstances. I am sure all hon. members will look forward to studying the details of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it now appears certain that the United Nations general assembly will be convened. Therefore I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the attendance at the assembly of Premier Kosygin and the probable attendance of General de Gaulle, whether he will be representing Canada at that meeting.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, as yet no decision has been taken with regard to that matter. The only head of government who has indicated his intention to attend the special assembly is Mr. Kosygin. I will not be making a decision as to whether it is desirable for me to take the place of our ambassador in New York until we have more information from other governments concerning their intentions.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the meeting of the general assembly would appear to be an attempt to force Israel to withdraw its troops without any guarantees concerning its future security and existence; and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister himself from time to time has said that it would be advisable to have the four permanent members of the security council meet at the highest possible level, does the Prime Minister not feel that his presence as the head of the Canadian delegation would lend weight to any statement made by that delegation, and would also bring to the discussion his very wide experience in the field of Middle Eastern affairs?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not hesitate to go to New York if I feel my presence can be helpful there. I will be making up my mind on this matter over the week end. We are in consultation with many friendly governments as to how best we can proceed in the assembly.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a further supplementary question. In view of the fact that this meeting of the general assembly of the United Nations will be extremely important, can we get some idea from the Prime Minister as to what position Canada will take on the proposed resolution by the Soviet union, and an assurance from the Prime Minister that Canada will insist that any withdrawal of Israel forces must be contingent upon guarantees to Israel of its recognition by the Arab states, the sanctity of its borders and access to the sea?

Mr. Pearson: I think perhaps, Mr. Speaker, any statement to be made in the house should be reserved until we see the nature of the resolution or resolutions that will be introduced. I assume that may be done tomorrow, when there is to be a formal session, or more likely on Monday. When we know what the resolutions are then perhaps that would be the time to make a statement in the house with regard to our position regarding them. At this moment, however, I do not mind repeating what I have already said, that any request for withdrawal of Israeli forces from the territory they have occupied certainly should be accompanied by effective international guarantees for the security of Israel.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): My supplementary question refers to the attendance of the Prime Minister at the United Nations. He mentioned that he was making a decision and that it would be based on what other nations were doing. May I ask the Prime Minister if there will be a staying away or a going of the leaders of nations in a group, as they may decide?

Mr. Pearson: What I had in mind when I spoke of consultation was the consultations that are going on with regard to the possibility of meetings behind the scenes at the United Nations as well as participating in the actual work of the assembly. Even if the Canadian delegate, the ambassador, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or myself were not down to speak on this matter until Wednesday or Thursday, it might be desirable to go there earlier than that because of the possibility of consultation.

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR PERSONNEL FOR TRUCE SUPERVISORY ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether the secretary general of the United Nations has requested personnel and equipment to strengthen the United Nations truce supervisory organization. If so, what has been Canada's response to the request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no request made by the secretary general to Canada or, as far as I know, to any other government at this time for officers to strengthen the truce supervisory organization. I recall seeing a telegram from the commander of that organization to the effect that he had sufficient officers to man the truce supervisory posts that are in action at the present time, so presumably he has enough personnel for his present duties. As far as I know there has been no request for additional personnel.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could advise the house whether the truce supervisory organization is active along all the frontiers between Israel and her Arab neighbours.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think—and I speak subject to correction—that it is active along those frontiers on which it was operating before the recent conflict, that is along the borders of Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION AT GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister know whether the question of the war in Viet Nam will be discussed at the forthcoming session of the general assembly of the United Nations, either on the floor or behind the scenes? If so, what position will the government take?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what will be discussed behind the scenes. Practically everything is discussed behind the scenes at the United Nations. As far as I understand, it is certainly not on the agenda of the special assembly, which is called for a particular reason not having to do with Viet Nam. Therefore I am not able to answer the latter part of the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE FOR EGYPTIAN SOLDIERS DYING OF THIRST IN DESERT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to reply to the question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary North and again today regarding the disastrous situation in respect of certain Egyptians in the Sinai desert. When this matter was first brought to our attention we got in touch with the Israeli government. After all, the Israeli army is in occupation of this territory and these particular people we are concerned with are members of the armed forces of the United Arab Republic.

We asked the Israeli government for information concerning what is being done and indicated our desire to help in any appropriate way to meet this and related problems on other parts of the border. This morning I have received information that the Israeli authorities are taking all possible steps to avert human suffering. To this end, during the past few days they have been sending air search units to locate the distressed persons in the Sinai. They were parachuting water and food to them wherever possible, and aiding their movement westward toward the Suez canal.

One of the difficulties in connection with helping these people has been that the water pipe lines under the Suez canal had been cut off. It is open again by action taken by the U.A.R. government and the international Red Cross, but for a time there was no fresh water getting across the Suez canal by these pipes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For how long was that?

Mr. Pearson: Just for a few days I think, Mr. Speaker. The Israeli authorities, as I said, were parachuting water and food to them wherever possible. Medical assistance has already been given in co-operation with the Red Cross. We have also communicated with the international committee of the Red Cross in Geneva to ascertain what they are doing with regard to this problem.

In so far as the refugees on the west bank of the Jordan are concerned, the Israeli government reaffirmed what our ambassador told us the day before, that the Israeli government had signed an agreement with UNRWA to co-operate with that agency in looking after the refugees along the Jordan river. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think we can get some reassurance from this information that the government in occupation of these territories is doing whatever it can to meet this terrible human problem. Certainly we will be glad to assist in any way we can.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I wonder if the Prime Minister has any information as to whether the refugees in the Gaza strip and those west of the Jordan have sufficient supplies of food and drugs to keep them going while awaiting the assistance that we and other countries are going to give to them.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. A good many telegrams have come in overnight on this very point and other related refugee questions. From a first examination of these messages it seems the refugees in the Gaza strip are being looked after at the present time. There is no danger of a further breakdown in the distribution of food and supplies. There is enough there under the UNRWA machinery to take care of them until additional supplies arrive.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I think we all realize that Canada has been ready and willing to accept responsibility in various emergencies, but I should like to ask the Prime Minister now if any plan has been developed whereby the European and North American countries will co-operate in meeting the need which has been brought to our attention this morning.

Mr. Pearson: Plans are being worked out for co-operation in this very important matter and all its aspects, including the question of refugees. It will take some time for these plans to be worked out even in respect of the immediate emergency. Telegrams I read this morning show that it is not yet quite clear what the emergency is in terms of first requirements.

I quite agree with my hon. friend that this is not a matter for any one country. It is a matter for all countries concerned, especially some of the big powers, if I may say so, who have so actively supported the United Arab Republic and the Arab states in this matter and should be perhaps even more interested than other countries in the plight of the U.A.R. forces in the Sinai desert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister the other day stated in general that Canada's position is that it would be prepared to accept some Arab refugees. He said a study was being made of the subject, as I recall it. I now ask the Prime Minister how many thousand refugees Canada is prepared to accept.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is quite impossible to answer that question at the present time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Having in mind the fact that while there has been some increase in employment in Canada, at the present time there is an abnormally high unemployment rate, 57,000 above this time last year, can the minister say whether he expects this situation to improve, and are any steps being taken to that end?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that there will be some improvement. Two significant factors enter into the picture. One is the abnormal number of young people between the ages of 14 and 18 who have entered the labour force during the period in question, and the other is the sudden termination of the construction work at Expo in Montreal. A program of work in Montreal is already well advanced, and I hope it will go a long way toward correcting the situation in that area. In addition other steps are under study.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any hope for the maritimes, where the figures are very serious?

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising from the answer he just gave, but first perhaps Your Honour will allow me to make the observation that I do not think the Minister of National Defence scared the child in the gallery we just heard crying.

My question to the Minister of Labour is, are the Department of Labour, the department of manpower or the unemployment insurance offices registering 14-year olds as unemployed in this country?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance authorities and the National Employment Service are simply complying with the law.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Child labour.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of Labour arising out of his previous answer. I should like to ask him what law under the Unemployment Insurance Act requires 14-year olds to be registered.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he may not ask questions concerning the interpretation of statutes.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, you ruled that I am not allowed to ask questions relating to the interpretation of a statute. My question was whether there is a statute on the books which would require 14-year olds to be registered.

Mr. Speaker: That is also out of order.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister having gratuitously made the statement, he should certainly be able to answer a very simple question. Are 14-year olds now being registered in connection with unemployment insurance?

Mr. Nicholson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which arises out of the answer just given to the Leader of the

Inquiries of the Ministry

Opposition by the Minister of Labour in which he said that to his knowledge 14-year olds were not registered, may I point out that in his previous answer he stated that 14-year olds were being registered.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose it is human to err. The minister has given a reply to the question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and if there is a discrepancy between that and his previous reply I suggest there is nothing the Chair can do about the situation.

EXPO '67

POSSIBLE DANGER TO PUBLIC FOLLOWING EXPLOSION ON SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We all know about the explosion yesterday at the Expo site in which one man was hurt. Can the minister inform the house and the public in general whether there is any danger to the millions of people who will visit the Expo site in the future?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. The fireworks were set off within an area which was sufficiently protected so there was no danger to the general public. Every precaution will be taken to see that there will continue to be no danger to the public in the future.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESH WATER FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the minister plan on introducing legislation at this session of parliament based on the recommendation of the McIvor commission that a fresh water fish marketing board be established?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that matter is still under study with the provincial governments and other interested organizations. I cannot give any guarantee that legislation will be introduced at this session.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF ROLE OF UNIFIED FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It is in reference to a question I asked three weeks ago, on May 25, which has remained unanswered, dealing with the role of our unified forces. The question I put then to the associate minister, but I thought in the interval the minister would bring forth an answer, was as follows:

> Is the Canadian unified mobile force now available for—and I use the minister's own words—"putting out, containing or controlling incidents which might escalate into something more serious", and is the crisis in the Middle East the type of incident for which the force has been prepared?

I follow that with this question. Now that the minister has a better appreciation of the realities of modern warfare, is he going to revise this unrealistic policy for Canada's unified mobile force?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of any experience we have gained in the last few weeks we are convinced that the organization we are developing is the one that will be best suited to the needs of our country, and probably other countries as well, in the years ahead; and that the force we are developing will be available for any tasks which are assigned to it by the government of Canada in the interests of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, instead of generalities could we have a particular incident dealt with? How does the minister consider that the unified force would "put out, contain or control an incident which might escalate into something more serious"? Does that mean the Canadian armed forces would be fighting against both sides?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think we are reviving a policy debate at this time, and I doubt whether the supplementary question posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is in order.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not reviving a policy debate. This statement was made by the minister on April 3, and it was an expansion of his earlier statements on policy. It is very important, particularly when we are looking to the future as to what shall be done to maintain peace in the world. I want to know what the policy is.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the question is the type that requires an answer today. If the hon. member feels it is important and of some urgency, the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it has been on Hansard for three weeks.

Mr. Pearson: Put it on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PENSION INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this has been designated as veterans week and that only an interim increase in veterans pensions was put into effect something over a year ago, this would seem a particularly appropriate time to announce what the final or complete increase will be. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position to do that at the present time.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly an appropriate time to raise the matter, but I am afraid it is not a time when I could possibly give an answer. I will give an answer as soon as I can.

[Later:]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one posed by the hon. member for Calgary North and is directed to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether he has heard the rumour that the legislation on veterans pension rates will be implemented before the end of the year?

Mr. Speaker: The question may be supplementary but it is out of order.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the cabinet is giving consideration at this time to an increase in the disability pensions and war veterans' allowance?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, I think, this matter has been under consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DISPOSITION OF GENEVA AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the present round of GATT negotiations at Geneva is being concluded and there is considerable concern about the terms of the agreements, may I ask the minister whether these negotiations will be continued if some of the signatories to the agreements find that the terms work undue hardship or will there be a lapse of time over a period of years before a new agreement can be contemplated?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that when the agreements are signed on June 30 or thereabouts they will be regarded as definitive. However, it is always open to any government to take action within the framework of the provisions of GATT if it feels that unnecessary hardship is being caused.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY POLICY—FURTHER DISCUSSIONS WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

As a result of the farmers' march last month, it was decided to hold a day of study, presumably tomorrow. Can the minister tell us whether, on that day, discussions will bear only on the dairy policy or on the overall agricultural problem? Can the minister also tell us whether he intends to announce a new policy to the farm associations?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are meeting the representatives of the farm associations this afternoon to discuss the dairy policy and also I think, the general farm policy.

TRANSPORTATION

CONFERENCE ON PROPOSED BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with the fact that the Board of Transport Commissioners is convening, here in Ottawa on August 1, a conference of all the parties interested in the abandonment of railway branch lines. I wonder whether the government has received any representations from those who may want to make recommendations, particularly farm organizations, as to the wisdom of holding the conference in the prairies and particularly in Saskatchewan where the greater number of affected lines are to be found. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the government is giving favourable consideration to this reasonable request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that question and discuss it with the minister who, as my hon. friend may or may not know, has been indisposed this week.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he is in a position today to announce any decision reached by himself or the government on the request made by the delegation which came from Sydney two days ago concerning the possibility of stockpiling steel in an arrangement with Dosco which would probably eliminate the expected lay-offs on June 18. I realize there has not been much time, but I wonder whether the minister has anything to report on this matter.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker; as the hon. member has pointed out there has not been sufficient time to consider this question, but we are working on it.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE REGISTRAR GENERAL

1. Departmental administration, $625,100.

The Chairman: This vote will be found on page 456 of the blue book, and the details are listed on page 457.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Chairman, in undertaking my new responsibilities as Registrar General I want to say to the house at the outset that I am vitally aware of the importance of the task given me, and since this is the first opportunity I have had to speak in this capacity I want to thank all hon. members who have sent me letters or who gave me words of encouragement. I undertake to do my best in this new job.

Last year the former president of the Privy Council explained the rationale of the department in the reorganization bill which set it up. At this stage I should like to say that I had the opportunity of being acting minister in this department for some time during the time of Mr. Favreau's illness. In all my dealings with him, not only serving under him but as a member of this house, I found him to be a Christian gentleman, always a conscientious member of the house and a conscientious minister. I am sure every hon. member here shares my regret that he was constrained to seek relief from the heavy responsibilities which he had here as a minister and as a member of parliament, and wishes him, as I do, health and happiness on the bench of the superior court of the province of Quebec.

This department is designed to bring together several agencies which have a role in defining, shaping and directing public policy in the economic field. On the one hand we have the task of ensuring that our market system is competitive, alive and vital and that public interest is protected in matters relating to combines, mergers, monopolies, restricted trade practices, bankruptcies, patents, copyrights, trademarks, corporations and the securities field.

• (11:50 a.m.)

On the other hand we are just beginning to formulate the kind of role that within its constitutional jurisdiction the federal government can play in aiding and assisting the consumer to gain the maximum benefit and enjoyment under our economic system. There have been a number of federal agencies working in this field already Mr. Chairman, and our purpose will be to strengthen and co-ordinate their activities and to add whatever new programs are necessary to give the consumer full and equitable participation in the market. In this fashion we link together the federal government's concern to see that both the supply and the demand sides of the market are healthy and in balance.

So, Mr. Chairman, I see a considerable role for this department. I feel it can help this country in responding to the many significant changes taking place in our economic life, and can contribute to the essential tasks of defining and refining the important relationships among business, the consumer, the investor and the government.

I think I should draw to the attention of hon. member the fact that certain key responsibilities of the department, or the subject matters lying within its jurisdiction, were referred last year, on July 22, to the Economic Council of Canada. The Economic Council was charged with studying certain important aspects of the responsibilities of the Registrar General. I think it would be useful if I read the terms of reference:

> In the light of the government's long term economic objectives, to study and advice regarding:
> (a) the interests of the consumer particularly as they relate to the functions of the Department of the Registrar General;
> (b) combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade;
> (c) patents, trade marks, copyrights and registered industrial designs.

That means, Mr. Chairman, that the consumer interest, the area of combines and mergers and the area of patents and copyrights have been referred for depth study by the Economic Council of Canada. It means that this department in bringing forth its policy must have due regard to the reference made to the Economic Council of Canada, and hopefully await the report of the Economic Council on several of these areas.

In the consumer field, in relation to a consumer division in the new department I am hopeful that the Economic Council will report very shortly. I would think the next priority would be in the combines area and then finally in the area of patents, trademarks and copyrights.

This is the first time that a department which was originally concerned with the legal aspects of government and government regulation has been linked to a vehicle of economic policy. So that we are combining for the first time, I would think, Mr. Chairman, the economic and legal tools for the furtherance of a department of economic policy.

Needless to say, in the department a considerable structure will have to be reoriented and built. In the consumer area, for instance, there are several agencies and various departments spread over the government service. In the Department of the Registrar General there has to be co-ordination, and personnel have to be recruited. The same feature, of course, applies in establishing a federal presence in the regulation of securities. We will also need to strengthen the bankruptcy forces, the combines forces and the corporate law forces of the department if we are to discharge the responsibilities which I am sure parliament and the Canadian people will rightfully impose upon us.

So one of my principal functions in the early stages, Mr. Chairman, is to analyse the structure from the basis of the best budgeting and program analysis possible in relation to the cost and benefits of the program that we hope to inaugurate and implement; and we will from time to time be seeking both internal and outside advice on these subjects.

I think it is important at the outset for members to recognize that the jurisdiction over many of the areas for which the Department of the Registrar General has authority is a shared jurisdiction with the provinces. This is particularly so in the corporate and securities field as well as in the consumer field. So that anything parliament and the government are able to achieve in these areas must be done in close co-operation with the provinces, and I undertake to achieve as best I can both full consultation and close co-operation with the ten provinces of this country.

I should now like to review some of the principal areas falling within my responsibility and for which I am rendering an account to this house. The first matter relates to bankruptcy. Members who have compared this year's fiscal estimates to last year's will notice that the increase in the estimates is due largely to an increase in staff from 27 to 72 positions in the bankruptcies branch as well as an increase from 81 to 102 positions in the combines branch. A close scrutiny of the estimates will reveal that virtually the entire increase in cost will be found to be the result of the increase in personnel and expertise in those two areas. Those increases, of course, reflect public interest and demand as they impose themselves upon the responsibilities that I have been given.

[Translation]

Bankruptcies have aroused much interest recently on account especially of the publicity that was given to some serious and most reprehensible abuses of the bankruptcy process which were uncovered in recent years. It must be agreed that these abuses are most serious and extremely reprehensible.

It is most important that we continue our policy of improvement in this field in order that the confidence of our fellow Canadians in our system of free enterprise be not jeopardized. Furthermore, it is essential that the institution of bankruptcy itself be completely rehabilitated from the state of disrepute in which it has fallen in recent years, so that it may fulfil adequately the essential role for which it is designed in our modern society.

We intend not only to continue our policy, but accelerate the process of implementation of the measures which are necessary to achieve these goals.

The bankruptcy regional offices in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, the setting up of which had been announced at the time of the enactment of the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act in July 1966 have now been in operation for more than two months. The opening of these offices which are staffed with expert auditors and investigators, I am convinced, will be quickly recognized as one of the most progressive measures taken in a long time in the field of bankruptcies and will constitute our most effective weapon against abuses which have been uncovered in that field in recent years.

Although these offices have been in operation for a relatively short period of time, they already have, in many respects, proven their usefulness. With these regional offices in operation, we are in a position to intensify the much needed enforcement of the Bankruptcy Act with regard to offences of an administrative character. These offences, as announced by Hon. Lucien Cardin during the debate on motion for second reading of Bill No. S-17 to amend the Bankruptcy Act, are now prosecuted whenever necessary by the federal Department of Justice. We feel that it is most important that these offences be prosecuted vigorously if we want to stimulate in this field a sense of honesty and integrity which, in the past, has too often been lacking, not only on the part of some trustees but also on the part of some debtors and creditors alike. It is essential, by reason of the far-reaching effects of bankruptcy on debtors, creditors and society as a whole, that the integrity of the procedure be respected. We are prepared to take every step that may be necessary, not only to protect that institution, but also to ensure that it has the respect of all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner: Hon. members are aware, of course, that the federal government occupies only a portion of the larger field of criminal law enforcement when we are dealing with bankruptcies. In the last few years, we have intensified our ties with the provincial authorities. Each level of government is now very much aware of the nature and extent of its responsibility and the improved lines of communication and co-operation that have been, and are still in the process of being developed will bring about, I hope, a much better enforcement of the law in this field. Let us hope that this aggressive approach will serve as a good deterrent on those individuals who are too prone to use the bankruptcy legislation for their own selfish and illegal purposes.

Before leaving this subject, however, I should like to emphasize that the role of bankruptcy regional offices is essential in this field. Its expert auditors and investigators have already proved their usefulness and particularly have had the opportunity to help certain provincial and municipal authorities which are often faced with most complex and difficult problems.

• (12 noon)

With respect to our bankruptcy legislation itself, I might mention that there are many indications that the amendments of July 1966 to the Bankruptcy Act have already contributed a great deal to correct the abuses that they were designed to remedy. I am not thinking only of the increased powers of investigation of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy but other provisions as well, such as those concerning reviewable transactions, proposals, etc. It must be appreciated, however, that the enforcement of the Bankruptcy Act and the amendments of 1966, however effective and useful they might be, are not, by any means, the complete answer to all of the problems that we are facing in the field of bankruptcy nowadays.

So many developments have taken place in the field of consumer credit, financing, debt collection, commerce and business since 1949 that our present legislation needs to be completely re-appraised and re-assessed in the light of present day conditions. Our approach to bankruptcy problems must be rejuvenated and new solutions must be devised.

As an example of this, I might mention the problem of the wage-earners' or consumers' bankruptcies which, with the ever-increasing rate of consumer credit, is becoming more and more pressing. We have to ask ourselves whether the solutions that have been devised, many decades ago, for the businessmen and the traders are adequate in the case of consumers and wage-earners of present days. We also have to ask ourselves whether our present legislation keeps a proper balance between the opposite interests of debtors and creditors in our changing business and commercial world.

The 1966 amendments dealt with this problem of the wage-earners' or consumers' bankruptcies by providing for an orderly payment of debt. Those provisions have been in force in Alberta since April 17 of this year and, in Manitoba, since June 1. I am not sure, on the other hand, that it might not be possible to find yet a better solution than that contained in the 1966 amendments to the problems of bankruptcies by wage-earners or consumers.

At all events, the report of the three men committee set up to assist the department in its revision of our bankruptcy and insolvency legislation will be, I am sure, most valuable in our study of those problems. We have not asked the committee to study and recommend measures aimed only at mere patching up our legislation. Nor have we asked the committee only to clear up the ambiguities, to recommend a new arrangement of the provisions of the act or to include some partial solutions liable to remedy the most pressing problems, as was done in 1949 at the time of the last revision of our Bankruptcy Act. On the other hand, we asked the committee to make a thorough examination of the legislation, to consider the very assumptions and the underlying principles on which it is based, in the light of present day conditions and practices. We also asked the committee to review all the various machineries and procedures provided by our legislation and to report on any changes it considers necessary concerning our legislation and its administration. This applies not only to the Bankruptcy Act but also to the federal Winding-up Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangements Act and the Farmers' Creditors Arrangements Act.

I am following very closely the work of the committee and I am in a position to say that it has been most active since its very inception in February 1966. It has already drafted a good portion of the new Bankruptcy Act which the committee will eventually recommend to the government.

However, it must be recognized that effective bankruptcy legislation and a healthy and vigorous administration is not a cure-all solution to the various and complex problems that insolvency may bring about in our modern society. These various measures of which I have just spoken, Mr. Chairman, must be coupled with other legislation that can afford a degree of protection that is outside the scope of an ordinary bankruptcy legislation.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act would fall into this category, as would all these other measures that are primarily designed for the protection of the investors.

[English]

To summarize the present state of the policy on bankruptcy, important amendments to the Bankruptcy Act were enacted on July 11, 1966. The work of the advisory committee on bankruptcy also is progressing satisfactorily, though a draft bill completely revising the federal legislation in the field of insolvency and bankruptcy will not be ready for some time—probably not before early in 1968.

We have set up regional offices of the bankruptcy branch. They have been set up, since March, 1967, in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver and are staffed by bankruptcy investigators and accountants. The role of these offices is to implement the work of the bankruptcy branch with a systematic audit program of trustees, and to investigate alleged cases of irregularities connected with bankruptcies, whether those have taken place before or after the bankruptcy.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is cooperating closely with the bankruptcy branch and the regional offices in cases where fraud and other offences of a criminal nature are involved. This summer, between July 9 and 22, we have organized seminars for bankruptcy branch officers at Carleton Place.

We have continued our careful review of trustees' operations, and the licences of more than 60 trustees have either not been renewed or have been restricted to the administration of the estates in their hands.

The bankruptcy branch has circulated bulletins to assist trustees in upgrading their performance. No new trustees have been appointed since April, 1965. An interim policy for the licensing of trustees will be adopted very shortly.

• (12:10 p.m.)

I should like to pass now to the corporations field where we are studying a general overhaul of the Canada Corporations Act. The purpose of the amendments we wish to incorporate in the act is to bring the federal act into line with the new Ontario legislation as it relates to insider trading, proxy solicitation and so on—amendments which were effected in Ontario in 1966—and the general disclosure of information for the protection of shareholders, particularly minority shareholders.

The Canada Corporations Act is now more than 30 years old. Intensive study will be necessary to ensure that this act may continue to play a useful role in the development of a modern, outward-looking and efficient Canadian economy. Changes in legislation are therefore seen in the act. Though amended extensively in 1965 and slightly in 1967, it is due for a complete revision because of the growing importance of corporate law and recent developments in connection with disclosure of information in the securities field.

I wish to announce to the committee the establishment of a task force to study the provisions and working of the Canada Corporations Act. The director of the force is Dr. Robert W. V. Dickerson of Vancouver and the associate director is Mr. Robert J. Bertrand of Montreal. The task force will have the services of a number of people who have worked on recent studies for the federal and provincial governments such as the Carter royal commission on taxation and the Kimber and Lawrence committees in Ontario. I am causing a press release to be issued at this moment and hon. members will receive a copy which will contain biographies of all the full-time and part-time members of the task force. The members have now been assembled and have already held two full two day meetings. The work has been assigned and I have asked the gentlemen involved to follow a critical path approach and to submit their report to me on the specific problems put to them by September 15.

Speaking about task forces in general terms I believe a great deal can be said in favour of bringing in authoritative people from the academic world to give advice and assistance in any field to be reviewed and I am delighted with the calibre of the men who have agreed to devote their summer to examining the problems I have described. I believe in mobilizing where possible all the brains in the country for the solution of specific problems, since by using this technique we can bring fresh ideas into government and marshal the views of various interested groups by means of what I call a filter process.

After the task force has reported I hope to submit its conclusions to a reviewing panel of practising lawyers, accountants and representatives of the various interests involved. Then, of course, the departmental officials of the government will consider the results, putting them through another filter, as it were, and finally, when the bill is put to the House of Commons, I expect it will be referred to an appropriate standing committee where hon. members and members of the public may have ample opportunity to scrutinize it and suggest improvements. Our object is to enlarge the scope of the Canada Corporations Act to make investment in Canadian corporations as attractive as possible to Canadian investors and to ensure the most effective investment of resources in Canada.

I pass now to the securities field. A study of the subject within the government is now in its preliminary stages. We are continuing the work which was undertaken last summer to analyse the role the federal government ought to play in this field. When I spoke during the federal-provincial conference on securities matters last April, I envisaged that the federal initiative would lie in four areas. First, the federal government should encourage the provinces to adopt uniform legislation across the country and do everything it could to bring about uniformity. Second, we should establish a central repository of information on security matters, and this we have undertaken to do. Third, the R.C.M.P. would establish a fraud investigation squad, and their services in this field would be available to all provincial securities commissions. Fourth, we should contemplate the establishment of a federal presence inasmuch as the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction over international and interprovincial trading. I want to say that a federal presence in some form is necessary in the national interest. Of course, the co-operation of the provinces is essential and should be sought.

I may say there were two federal-provincial meetings, one in April and one which ended only yesterday. Some very interesting discussions were held and I hope we can envisage uniformity and the virtual elimination of duplication of administration for the better regulation of the capital market in Canada so as to encourage Canadians to invest with confidence in the securities of this country.

Perhaps I may pass now to the field of patents, copyrights and trade marks. My department is also responsible for the administration of legislation dealing with intellectual property. As hon. members probably know, this field was the subject in the late fifties of an extensive study by a royal commission under the chairmanship of the late Mr. Justice Ilsley. The reports by the commission on patents, copyright and industrial designs were tabled in the house in the early sixties but action on them is still forthcoming. My officials were about to recommend legislation in line with the commission's recommendations when further progress was withheld following the announcement last July by my predecessor that the government had requested the Economic Council of Canada to undertake a study of certain important aspects of the responsibilities of the Registrar General and his department, including patents, copyright and industrial designs. I have already drawn this to the attention of the committee.

In the area of copyright also, legislative changes are unduly behind schedule. A number of representations have been received from time to time on behalf of interested organizations urging the government to act upon some of the Ilsley commission's recommendations. The present act requires almost complete revision and here again my officials are prepared to proceed with the drafting of new legislation as soon as the Economic Council reports.

The Chairman: I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like the minister to continue.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner: I am grateful to the committee for allowing me to continue. This is my first opportunity to outline my responsibilities to the house in a comprehensive way.

While I am on the subject of copyright, I should like to speak briefly of the Stockholm conference which is to take place from June 12 to July 14 with the object of revising the Berne Convention which was last revised at Brussels in 1948. The Berne Convention is an international agreement with respect to artistic and literary rights. The Stockholm conference proposes to amend existing requirements for the protection of choreographic works, to broaden the definition of cinematographic works as well as to change the terms of protection afforded cinematographic works, photographic works, works of applied art and works of joint authorship. It also envisages special rules for the benefit of developing countries to facilitate cultural, social and educational expansion in these countries.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I might take this opportunity to announce that the government of Canada will have at that conference an important delegation composed of officials from external affairs, officials of the Department of the Registrar General, representatives of the C.B.C. and of the National Film Board, as well as advisers from various private sectors.

Upon receipt of the final report of the special committee of the House of Commons on drug costs and prices, I immediately referred its recommendations to departmental officials and these have since been under intensive study. I want to take this opportunity, in my capacity as the minister responsible for the implementation of some of these recommendations, to congratulate the committee for the coherence of its report and for the research and fundamental review that the committee gave this very complicated and delicate subject.

The committee made a number of recommendations constituting a package program designed to bring about a lowering of the cost of drugs to the consumer. Some of these recommendations were directed to the government, some to the medical profession, and some to the industry, both the drug industry and the pharmaceutical industry.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance, in introducing his budget on June 1, announced the removal of the sales tax on drugs and other budgetary measures as part of a major government attack on high drug prices. These measures can only be a part of an effective program to reduce drug prices. The effect by itself of the removal of the sales tax and the lowering of the tariff, while beneficial and necessary to the general program of helping the consumer, will necessarily be limited. Indeed, according to the press some members of the industry have already indicated a somewhat extraordinary reaction to this action by initiating an immediate price increase.

Of the recommendations of the special committee directed to government, some would require legislation. These proposals will be considered on an urgent basis over the summer months and it is my intention that any necessary legislative measures will be announced to parliament in the autumn.

I have the responsibility, Mr. Chairman, of receiving the reports of the director of investigation and research of the combines branch. Turning now to developments relating to the Combines Investigation Act, as hon. members are aware and as I have already mentioned, the government requested the Economic Council of Canada to undertake a study of certain important aspects of the responsibilities relating to combines falling within the authority of the Registrar General of Canada.

When the estimates of the branch were before the house last year there was a discussion of the necessity for increase in staff. I said at the outset that the increase in our spending within this department over the last year related primarily to increase in staff within the combines branch and within the bankruptcy branch. With my full support a continuous program of recruiting professional staff has been in progress during the 1966-67 fiscal year, and the establishment in this respect was increased from 34 to 42 positions as of April 1, 1967. The actual strength on March 31, 1967, was 30 professionals, and since that time additions have been made and several offers of employment have also been made.

The director still considers that substantial staff increases are necessary to cope with the increased work of the branch but he is faced with the difficulty of recruiting, assimilating and training new staff, which necessarily places limits on the possibility of rapid growth of the branch. However, while the major part of the work of the branch must be carried out by officers on the permanent staff, the director from time to time has engaged special assistants for particular purposes and in appropriate cases is prepared to make use of outside assistants.

In increasing the staff of the branch particular attention has been paid to the question of staff for the research section. At the end of the fiscal year 1965-66, one officer had joint charge of the merger and monopoly section and research section, staff for research being drawn from the merger and monopoly section. The permanent professional staff of the section now numbers five, including an officer in charge and four economists, all these officials having joined the branch since April, 1966. In addition, two university professors and four graduate students have been retained by the section for the summer.

We are looking for new legal and economic talent, honed in commercial skills, to give more effectiveness to the branch.

The following research projects are presently under way: First, an inquiry into mergers in Canada in the post-war period 1945-1965, a very important and large scale analysis of all known mergers in the period, designed to assist the government in formulating any future policy in regard to mergers. Second, the branch is undertaking a study of service industries at present not within the scope of the act, including professional sport. Third, the branch is undertaking a study of concentration in Canadian manufacturing industries.

I want to say that the department has an opinion from the Department of Justice that services are not currently within the ambit of the Combines Investigation Act but I would think, without trespassing on the reference to the Economic Council of Canada, that services constitute a considerable part of the gross national product and we should be thinking seriously about amending the act to embrace the service factor. I would also hope we could contemplate a stronger use of the trade and commerce clause, so as to give the act civil as well as criminal jurisdiction, and with a civil jurisdiction a power to insist on cease and desist orders.

We must also continue the scrutiny of the Combines Investigation Act as it applies to our exporting impetus because there is obviously a difference in the application of the act, recognized already by the statute, as it affects the domestic and export parts of our industry.

A matter of importance in the enforcement of the act has been the size of the fines imposed. While it has not been the general policy of the crown to ask for specific fines but rather to draw all relevant facts, including the seriousness of the offence, to the attention of the court, the policy now is that after obtaining and considering the recommendation of crown counsel in this respect he is instructed to request a minimum fine where the court invites a specific representation.

Until recently the largest single fine imposed was $25,000. In a recent case, however, individual fines ranging up to $150,000 were asked for by the crown. Although the maximum fine imposed on any individual company in this case was $75,000, the total fines amounting to $391,500, the crown is seeking leave to appeal against the amount of the fines levied.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address the committee on the matter of consumer interest. As all members of the committee know, there was reference in the speech from the throne to the establishment of a department, or a reorganization of the present department, into a department of corporate and consumer affairs. The legislation concerning the minister's authority and the departmental name—we are not yet wedded to any particular name—will be introduced at the present session of parliament in the fall. The contents of the bill will be made known in due course in the proper way, and at that time I would hope we could have a full debate on the scope of the department.

I want to pay tribute to the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on consumer credit prices. I think that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard and Senator Croll played an outstanding role, as did all members of the committee, in bringing the high cost of living and its relative aspects to the attention of the Canadian people and the House of Commons. I also want to applaud in particular members of the opposition who served on that committee, especially the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who played a very crucial part in its decisions.

Further, I want to pay tribute to the efforts of the Consumers Association of Canada and other groups who contributed to the work of the committee. This committee is in the vanguard of a revolution in the committee system. This committee broke new ground. The use of the committee system in this fashion allows wide public debate. I believe it allows members to be better informed and through them allows the public to be better informed. I think it strengthens the independence and widens the knowledge and participation of members and the people in the development of public policy. It calls upon the experts and the technocrats, both within and without the government service, to account for and explain the basis behind the policy judgments and decisions. It, of course, allows the private sector and business to bring their views directly into the legislative process. I think this is a very encouraging trend indeed. I should like to see the committee reconstituted in the fall so it may continue its work.

The broad objectives of the consumer program which the government intends to develop are the following: First, to give the consumer a voice in government; second, by legislation, research and education to improve the quality of consumer demand and to place the consumer in a better position to protect his or her own interest and establish his or her own choice more effectively. I said before that no department of government will be able to protect the consumer. All we can do is put the consumer in a better position to protect himself or herself by assuring that the market forces are fair and equal and that there is as much research, information and public education as possible made available so that the choices the consumer has to make in an increasingly complex economy are made clear to her. Third, we hope to provide for the orderly channelling of consumer submissions and inquiries which are made to government. Fourth, in consultation with the provinces we hope to work toward unification throughout Canada of a program of consumer protection. Here again it will be necessary to have the closest co-operation with the provincial agencies and departments which now, happily, are beginning to assume some responsibility for this area.

I should like to digress briefly to reply to some very interesting remarks made during the debate in reply to the speech from the throne by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. She took exception to the department having responsibility for both corporate and consumer affairs. She felt that consumers would be sacrificed to corporations. I hope I have stated her argument fairly and I hope she will contribute to this debate later this afternoon. I should like to say to her as respectfully as I can that I disagree. I should like to offer the suggestion to her that I feel she may be misconstruing the mechanics of the department. In order to put the consumer in a stronger position, two aspects of the market relationship must be scrutinized, that is, the supply aspect and the demand aspect, the seller or distributor on the one hand and the purchaser or buyer on the other.

On the supply side the whole field of competition must be looked into. There is the area of fair market practices; there is the area of disclosure so that there is sufficient information available for the investor or consumer. It relates also, on the supply side, to the methods which would enhance the validity of the consumer's choice. There is the matter of the method of packaging, labelling and weights and measures. All these aspects of the supply side involve corporations. They involve, on the part of companies and businesses in this country, self-discipline and self-regulation so that there are competitive forces at play and so that marketing practices are fair and not deceptive.

I would hope that by the concentration of this effort within a department of government we would be able to persuade industry and the mercantile interests to fulfil the objectives we have in mind. If we are unable to persuade them within our constitutional authority as a federal government, we have the power to regulate. This would involve the combines branch, the corporations branch, the securities branch and the bankruptcy branch.

On the demand side there is the necessity that the consumer be informed. This is the primary objective. It involves such things as education and research. The summary of my argument, therefore, is that in order to give the consumer proper representation and in order to give the consumer what protection we can within the limits of government we must have authority over both the demand and supply sides of the market relationship. Otherwise it would be ineffective.

It is not possible for me to state in greater detail at present the government's plans, because in accordance with what I have previously said we want to have the views and recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada when formulating the consumer program. As I said before, we hope these will be available shortly or at least before the fall.

In order to be effective the federal program must be developed carefully, deliberately and not hastily. I should like to suggest a number of reasons for this being so. The federal jurisdiction is limited in this field. We cannot, for instance, contempate direct controls such as price controls or the regulation of industry within this scope because ordinarily these are provincial matters. The federal government does not have jurisdiction over prices. Prices depend on competitive forces. We hope to ensure that the forces are truly competitive. Prices in general depend on the general economic and fiscal policies of the country. Second, we need to consult and liaise with the provinces. We need to do this in order better to supplement and integrate the existing and future provincial consumer programs. In the third place we must proceed carefully because it will take time to recruit and co-ordinate adequate staff. Finally, I believe it is a useful thing to know what we are doing before we do it, because I am very anxious that what we do shall become effective. It is all very well to go off in all directions like a chicken with its head off, but I feel this would only cause unnecessary distortions in marketing practices and would provoke more difficulties than it would solve. If I were to suggest something which perhaps is un-Canadian, I might say I think we should have facts before we have policy. I intend to proceed with all deliberate speed in that fashion.

Within the consumers' interest, the department of the Registrar General will have responsibility for the relationship of business with the public, the investor and the consumer. We do not intend needlessly to interfere with the relationship between business and the investor and consumer. We do not intend to tell the manufacturer what to produce. We do not intend to tell the retailer what to sell or at what price he should sell it. We do not intend to tell the worker where to work and we do not intend to tell the consumer what to buy. We believe in a free market economy. I feel that we should release the competitive forces. This means we must attack monopolies and prosecute seriously all price fixing. It means there must be fair selling practices. We need to do the best we can to ensure that there are fair selling practices. We believe in persuasion before regulation, but we believe in regulation if that becomes necessary. We intend to do that.

Finally, of course, there must be education of the public. The consumer must be equipped by all reasonable means to make valid choices and judge true prices. We hope we can make this a department for the average Canadian. I should like to say that we will place particular emphasis on ensuring that the lower income consumers, those under the poverty level, those who are on the fringe of poverty, those with disabilities and pensioners can expect to have the maximum purchasing power for every dollar.

In conclusion I should like to thank the committee for its courtesy in putting up with such a long statement. I felt that I should outline to the committee the general responsibilities of this department. I should like to say to hon. members through you, Mr. Chairman, that this is a new department. It is a department with an important effort, a pioneer effort. The interests of the consumer, the investor and the businessman are not the responsibility of the government alone but are the responsibility of all of us in all sectors of the economy. I want to say that all members of parliament have a direct responsibility. I welcome comments not only from the floor of the house but if at any time a member from any quarter in the house has any particular point of view to discuss we can meet on a formal or informal basis and discuss it. I welcome constructive criticism from all quarters in the house.

We seek in this department to become a voice for the consumer in the councils of government, but we also want to ensure that the business interests of the community are able to operate effectively and efficiently. The keynote of our approach is partnership between all the constituents—consumers, investors, business and government.

I should like to point out to the members of the committee that this is not an expansion of big government but a reorganization of the existing responsibilities of government. I was looking at the estimates before I came in here and comparing the revenues of this department against the expenditures. This department will cost the Canadian taxpayer, net, $1,278,500. This is a considerable sum of money. However, when that sum is considered in proportion to the $9.5 billion in the estimates we are not going to be one of the big spenders in government. I do not expect any appreciable increase in expenditures, and every increase will be directed primarily toward recruiting skilled personnel to help us achieve the objectives which I have tried to outline. I say this is a reorientation; it is a co-ordination of existing agencies.

I believe that the expenditures of government must be controlled and that priority in spending must be determined. It is on this basis that an effort such as this, being a new one within the federal government and an important one, needs the support, assistance and co-operation of all members in this house and of everyone interested in the problems with which we will be dealing. I say again that we welcome any suggestions and criticisms. We will seek the co-operation of everyone. I want to thank the committee.

Mr. Woolliams: I have listened with a great deal of interest, Mr. Chairman, to the minister who is a new minister with a new department. I believe he has given it a new look. I feel that the reorganization of some of these departments, particularly those related to this field, is a good thing because it means that some of these activities are being dusted off. As the minister said, some of them have been neglected for a long time. I am going to deal with the department in its various phases. The minister has responsibility for the general administration. He has responsibility for the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which administers the Combines Investigation Act. He has responsibility for bankruptcy. He has responsibility for the corporations branch. He has responsibility for the patent and copyright branch as well as trade marks and a few other items which are thrown in.

I believe we have heard today a young man of the new generation. I have never been concerned too much about chronological age. I am more concerned about mental age and the ability of a person to keep abreast of the times. I think I can pay the minister this compliment. He is one of those men who belong to the new generation. Not only is he young chronologically but he is young mentally and is very aggressive and progressive. Mind you, I am going to make some reservations because even when we flatter each other we have to make reservations.

I would say to hon. members through you, Mr. Chairman, that we have been listening to a good advocate. After all, a counsel is a man who sells ideas just as a salesman sells products. I would say the minister is a great salesman. He ended up on the theme of great freedom without control. I am going to put forward particular criticisms of the department itself and what has gone on in the department, but not of the minister or the other members of the department. As I have said, they have dusted off a few of the things that needed to be dusted off. I will come back to that theme.

I still believe, in spite of what the minister has said, that this government—whether the minister has any responsibility for it I do not know—is bringing about more control of business than any government since confederation. I believe there is not much difference between Liberals and Conservatives when it comes to how we say things. However, I believe that the Liberals believe in control and regulation. This is the reason the minister ended on the theme he did because he is concerned that the public should know where he stands.

When I travel throughout this nation I find that businessmen, small and large, farmers and trade union people are concerned about government control and government regulation. Some of the great things the minister has recommended can be done without any element of control. We have today the biggest bureaucracy the country has ever seen. The figures for last year indicate that $1.57 billion was spent on bureaucracy in this country. When I use the word "bureaucracy" I am using it in the broadest sense. I do not intend any particular criticism of any of the members of our public service. I am one of those, and I have said it before, who believe we have probably the best civil service anywhere in the world.

I want to deal with a few of the important items raised by the minister, particularly the Combines Investigation Act. This act is certainly essential. I agree with the minister that just as we have to have a Criminal Code to set a moral standard for the people, so we have to have an act to set an economic moral standard for business. There is always a danger—I know the minister is aware of it because of his experience as a lawyer prior to becoming a minister—in any group having power such as the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission has. The way the commission implements the law, the degree of harshness with which it is enforced, may prevent a company discussing matters which would enable it to be more efficient in competing with other companies at home or abroad. It was for this reason that when we amended the Combines Act at the time we were the government the then minister of justice, the hon. member for Kamloops, dealt with that very aspect. Certain exceptions were made for the fish industry so we could compete with Japan and other nations.

In so far as the Combines Investigation Act is concerned, the idea is to prevent any phase of business from getting a virtual monopoly. The interpretation of the act with regard to the word "virtual" is that degree of monopoly which is against the processes of law. It is unfortunate that in the past some of the great cases under the Combines Investigation Act, such as the sugar case and the brewery case, were dismissed because the evidence produced was not sufficient. In my opinion there was certainly a virtual monopoly in those cases from the layman's viewpoint, if not legally. As I say, those charges were dismissed, but that does not mean there were not competent lawyers prosecuting those companies.

In dealing with the Combines Investigation Act the minister talked about mergers. There are some mergers that may be very good and there are some which may create what I have referred to as a virtual monopoly. There is a new and, I think, dangerous trend today. I am as much against monopolies as I am against socialism. The kind of free enterprise which I think we should seek is one which would keep average-sized corporations in business. We oppose mergers of the kind where great monopolies in one field merge to control a whole industry, as in the case of the sugar industry in this country. When we have evidence of that the Combines Investigation Act should be used.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I want to mention something that I believe the Combines Act should look into, and I hope the minister will take note of this. The most expensive thing in Canada today, outside of paying income tax is dying. I have received letters about this matter. I am told that a monopoly exists today in the case of all the hardware that goes into making coffins. Some hon. members may feel this is a humorous topic, and perhaps it is. But because of this monopoly prices are set throughout the nation. I want to make sure that I do not leave the wrong impression in this regard. The fault is not that of the undertaker or the small funeral parlour in our cities, towns and villages. They have to pay a certain price for materials and that price if fixed. If you go anywhere in Canada you will find there is a virtual monopoly in respect of funeral prices today, not because of the undertakers but because of the monopoly in respect of hardware and the making of coffins.

The Combines Investigation Act should be enforced in this field. It may be found that those who control this monopoly—I will not name them here because I do not believe in carrying on an investigation in the House of Commons, and this information can be arrived at very easily—will be the cause of some sensitivity on the part of the government and other industries. An investigation may put the finger on the pulse of sensitivity in this respect. This virtual monopoly should be immediately investigated.

How much the Combines Investigation Act should be changed to fit new circumstances is something that can only be determined by the future progress of business in this country. I do not believe that the provisions of the act should be implemented too harshly. I am against the kind of decision that has been made in this regard. It seems, however, that the courts have followed this line. Where they found as a fact that there had been a virtual monopoly, say in the field of electrical supplies or plumbing equipment, even if the companies got together at a meeting in order to safeguard their businesses from insolvency and bankruptcy they were charged under the act. I was involved in one of those cases. The argument put forward by crown counsel at that time was that even if it was shown that the companies lost money they were still guilty under the act.

The act does not provide, of course, that there has to be a profit involved, but surely where companies in an industry because of new circumstances, perhaps automation or a change in the economic situation of the country, meet to solve some of their difficulties the act should not be too harsh with them. The act must be changed to fit new circumstances. Sometimes companies in an industry have to meet, and meet legally, in order to compete for the domestic market and export trade. As I have said, if there were not some sort of combine in the fishing industry or other industries of this nation, we could not compete with the United States and Japan. We could not compete in this field if there were not some meeting and agreement among those in the industry. So much for the Combines Investigation Act, Mr. Chairman.

I now turn to the question of patents. This is an area where a young minister with young ideas can step in. Our patents are not recognized internationally; they are not worth anything outside Canada. I will use an example in this respect. A fellow named Goett in Calgary invented a new plow. It not only plowed the ground but pulverized it. You could go into a field cleared of brush and with this plow pulverize the roots and stumps to dust. This made the ground more fertile because the tree material was mixed with the soil. This was a new idea. This man came to my firm and asked us to obtain a patent for him. I have talked to many lawyers about this situation, and I am sure the minister is aware of it. After discussing the question with specialists in the city of Toronto I found that the only safeguard for this man, because big companies in the United States like Minneapolis-Moline and others wanted to get hold of the plow, was to patent the machine in Great Britain and then re-register it in the United States and Canada. This had to be done because the United States does not recognize a Canadian patent; they do not care about it. Words are only words and we can be too nice about these things.

This is only one of the many experiences I have had in the field of patents, and it is one field that needs to be dusted off and looked at very carefully. I hope the minister will give careful consideration to this question. To make patents effective we have to go to the authorities of the United States and Great Britain. It is a blow to our nationalism and our growth when a Canadian patent is good only in this country and is no good in Great Britain, the United States or anywhere in the commonwealth. I know the minister has to be a little more careful than those of us who sit on this side of the house, but I am sure he will agree with me that Canadian patents are not worth anything outside this country. We are a nation of 20 million people but a Canadian patent does not mean much. In our trade with the commonwealth, the United States and other countries, patents are everything. Our patent law needs a complete overhaul.

I now come to a matter that is perhaps slightly outside the jurisdiction of the minister, but, after all, he sits with the Minister of Agriculture. I own some registered horses. In fact, I have in Alberta a stallion that was imported from Wales by the Duke of Windsor. This stallion and the horses are registered as purebreds in Great Britain. I can register them immediately in the United States without any trouble. The colts from that strain of Welsh ponies are registred in Canada. The certificates in this country are much prettier; you get a great big star and a lovely signature. I sent the certificate to Washington and they sent them back and said they did not recognized purebred stock registered in Canada. I have letters to prove this. This does not apply only to horses but also to cattle. In western Canada particularly there is a great ranch industry with purebred cattle of all kinds. In order to protect ourselves we have to go to Great Britain to register them and then to the United States. I am fortunate that one of my colleagues is away today and it is my lot to discuss this topic. At one time these matters came under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice and the Secretary of State. I have had some experience in this field.

These are three matters on which the minister can work. Let us get our patents recognized in the United States and Great Britain. Let us get certificates of purebred stock that are recognized outside Canada. Let us have a document that is recognized in the United States, Great Britain and throughout the world. If action were taken to improve the situation in these three areas a great deal of good would be done for the nation. People are constantly complaining about the problem of registering cattle as purebred. I know that this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture but it is very close to the field of patents and trade marks; it is in the same area of law.

I now want to say a few words about the branch of the department that will deal with corporations. It was refreshing to hear the minister discuss this topic so intelligently. This is indeed a big field because, as the minister pointed out, under the British North America Act securities fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government under certain conditions and in other conditions they fall within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

I believe that some of the problems that arose recently in Ontario, as a result of which companies went bankrupt and people lost their savings—and nobody in particular is to blame for this—were brought about because the provincial and federal officials were not quite sure of the ambit of their jurisdiction. As a result the provincial government waited for the federal government to do something and the federal government waited for the provincial government. Therefore the proposal of the minister is good; it is good philosophy. As I understood the minister—and I made a careful note of what he said and listened carefully to him—the government will work out with the securities commission and the provinces a system similar to that used in Ontario, which everybody recognizes is the soundest in Canada. We have copied it in Alberta. We should work out a plan, after liaison between the federal government and provincial governments, whereby we can administer securities without there being a conflict of jurisdiction.

• (1:00 p.m.)

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Chairman. Will we take a break for lunch today? I would like one as on Fridays I am more hungry than on other days of the week.

The Chairman: Order, it being one o'clock the sitting is suspended until 2.30.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Registrar General, vote No. 1.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment I was speaking about corporations and securities. I said that perhaps the big problem at the time of the collapse of Atlantic Acceptance Corporation and Prudential Finance Corporation was that neither the province nor the federal government appreciated the jurisdictional aspects and nothing was done to warn the people who had placed their savings in those concerns about the economic and financial catastrophe which resulted.

The minister said that he does not want to regulate such concerns and it is true, I think, that most people would agree with him. The minister said that what we need is the kind of regulation that protects the Canadian investor. I am not one of those who go along with the arguments of my hon. friends to my left, which are sometimes heard not only to my left but also in other parts of the house. When a person wants to invest his money in stocks he must accept the fact that some element of chance is involved. If he is not prepared to take a gamble he must confine his activities to a yield of 4 or 5 per cent in the bond market. But there must be a certain degree of freedom in the investment field so that people are encouraged to invest their money. If the field were too well controlled by the securities commission, you would never be able to change a private company which has certain objects into a public company and sell the stock to the public. Nevertheless, as I say, at the same time the public must be protected.

Before I leave the subject, Mr. Chairman, I dealt earlier in my remarks with the monopoly position that obtains in certain aspects of the work of funeral directors. I should like to put on record, because it is interesting, that preliminary investigation shows that there are 51 firms in Canada making caskets and 8 manufacturing embalming fluid. It is also interesting to note that only one or two firms control the manufacture of hardware for caskets. Therein lies the monopoly.

It is further interesting to note that there is no record of who the directors are of the National Casket Company of Toronto, which is also engaged in the manufacture of embalming fluid and accessories. Neither is there any record of other business details in connection with that company. The National Casket Company of the United States, which has its headquarters in Boston, has no Canadians on the board. Indeed, there is no hint of any Canadian connection. There is no business directory which shows that Mr. McConnell is connected with anything but publishing and sugar. There is a variety of material available, pro and con, in connection with the unnecessary and extremely high cost of funerals, but none of this material is more recent in date than 1960.

I think that this is a field which should be investigated immediately in order to ascertain who controls the casket and embalming fluid manufacturing companies in Canada. This would be, of course, the job of the restrictive trade practices branch. I have always found that when they conduct an investigation they do a very thorough and capable job. They have the kind of personnel we need in this field. I am not ignoring the services of the director of that branch when I say that, but I do know that the men working for him, some of whom have not been trained in the field of law, do an exceptionally good job of investigation and inquiry in relation to preliminary matters which may lead to a prosecution.

I should like to review one other matter before I go on to another aspect. I pointed out this morning that the statute relating to patents has been so long embalmed that if under its terms a Canadian applies for a patent for an invention and that patent is not registered properly in the United States or in Great Britain, someone else in either of those countries can copy the invention and sell the same thing back to Canada and there is nothing that can be done about it. In effect, it means that a Canadian has to ignore the Canadian statute and make sure that his patent is registered properly in the United States or Great Britain so as to protect his own interests.

I will now turn to the proposed department of consumer affairs. The minister mentioned drugs and the reduction in tax. I think that this problem is very well summed up in an article to which I should like to refer for a moment, because in my opinion drugs are the biggest racket there is. This is an extract from the Albertan for June, 1966:

> Your friendly neighbourhood druggist is a spoke—often an unwilling one—in a free-wheeling, sugar-coated racket.
> Each day hundreds of thousands of dollars are wrung out of Canadians for badly-needed prescription drugs, and almost without exception the customer shells out from two to ten times as much as he should.

There is a good example here to which I might refer:

>
> A German company seized during the war, it was sold to private interests in 1952 for $29,000,000, and chalked up such fat profits that the owners got their investment back in 5½ years. During this period the hottest item was an anti-arthritic with the generic name prednisolone. A package of 100 tablets cost the firm $1.57, wholesaled to druggists for $17.90, and retailed at $29.83.

In Calgary. That represented a mark-up of 1,863 per cent.

> The same drug was available at the time from a small U.S. generic company at wholesale price of $2.70 per 100.

That was the price they charged instead of $17.90 per hundred.

Words are great. We have our committees and our investigations and they look into this and that and everything else. We want action. The Canadian people are crying for action so far as the drug industry is concerned. Today is the day of pills. That is what people take after going to the doctor. There is a shortage of doctors, and people are taking pills and drugs. As I say, today is the day of pills. If you have an ache here or an ache there, or a pain in this or that part of your body, pills are prescribed for you. This is the era of drugs. We have advanced far and drugs are helping to keep people healthy. The drug industry knows that this is the age of pills and it has moved into the racket. That is what it is.

We talk about medicare, but the great difficulty these days is not in paying the doctor but in paying the druggist. The doctor may charge you $5 or $10 for an interview but the druggist charges you $25 for the prescription. This is where the problem arises and this is what must be examined and dealt with. The drug industry is a monopoly. In Canada as well as in the United States it has become a racket, and in this country we have only scraped the surface of the problem.

The minister talks about the cost of living, but we must be fair. The Canadian cost of living has been increasing since 1963 and has increased at a much faster rate than at any other time since the war. When we talk of the cost of living we really are talking about consumer credit and the prices consumers must pay, and some of the responsibility for the increase in living costs must be borne by the government.

When the Conservative party formed the government from 1957 to 1962 there was somewhat of a recession in the United States which was reflected in Canada. The leading economists of that time agreed that there was a case for deficit financing. Yet today, when the economies of Canada and the United States are rising and are better than at any time since 1962, we have deficit financing. We have a deficit of $700 million and a new kind of budget. We do not know what would have happened had there been an orthodox budget. When one adds to that deficit the $600 million to be spent on medicare, which is to begin next July, the total deficit will be in the order of $1,100 million.

The minister talks about free enterprise. What is the matter with the country today? Why do we have these combines? Why do we have these monopolies? It is not because the combines investigation people are not doing their job but because governments—not only on the other side of the house but also formed from this side—have been bringing in, beyond the ability of the gross national product of Canada to bear, such grandiose plans that the government spending has necessitated high taxation.

In any small business the greater partner is the government. You cannot tax a small medical clinic, a small legal firm or a small business firm up to 50 per cent of its income and expect it to stay in business and compete with monopolistic groups that have a large turnover for their products. As a result, no matter in which Canadian city you conduct your research you will find the small storekeeper, the small druggist or the small professional man going out of business. I know of a firm of four people which employs a staff of six. Of those six, two are employed to fill out government forms.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear my left-wing friend saying, "Hear hear." He is happy.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics sends out forms demanding that they be filled in and returned. Anyone failing to comply with such requests is subject to a fine. Added to that, employers are faced with income tax forms, unemployment insurance forms, pension documents. Two people are needed to fill out forms to take care of every four employees. In the big, automated businesses, machines cope with the demands of bureaucracy, demands which are ever increasing under this government. Small businesses, which have to hire employees to cope with this work, are being driven out of business. That is why we have monopolies. The cost of living is partly the responsibility of this government. The only real new wealth in Canada is not created by the government spending money but is brought about by the creation of capital from the production of goods in the nation.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad that my hon. friend from British Columbia agrees with me. He does not always agree with me.

Now I come to the subject of bankruptcy. The minister told us about the new act and about the new set-up in the bankruptcy field. His speech was full of words and fine phrases, but there are other matters that I and other hon. members would have liked to hear about. Has there been any investigation into the group bankruptcies that we have heard about in this country? What about the lawyer, whose name for the moment escapes me, who 18 months or two years ago after investigating bankruptcies was murdered? Has that crime been solved? The Prime Minister talks about syndicated criminals and the bankruptcy racket. What has he done to bring about a solution of the crime?

The house spent some time during the last session of parliament debating capital punishment. The Liberals for once sent their whip home and we had a free vote. We voted against the abolition of capital punishment. I took the position that the government has power to commute and that the government, unless it abuses that privilege, is not flouting the law. Is that privilege to be exercised on behalf of syndicated criminals of the kind who murdered the lawyer or who murdered the 11 people who were discovered buried in lime in the Montreal district? Members of parliament voted to retain capital punishment so that society would have protection against such criminals. There must be some reason for crime to be increasing. The British are reviewing their criminal laws on the subject I spoke of earlier. Why should this matter once again come before this house?

I shall now return to the subject of bankruptcy. I hoped that the minister would give us information. It is true that we have a new act, but that does not mean to say that syndicated criminals in the bankruptcy field will not find ways to enrich themselves at the expense of Canadian business. That sort of thing has been going on for a long time. It is a racket.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

An hon. Member: Go on.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: I have only a few minutes to go. I have tried to summarize my remarks. I may be the only member from our party to speak on these estimates. We are trying to cut down the number of speeches. The minister may be glad to hear that I believe I am the only speaker from this party—there may be one other. So it is likely the estimates will get through quickly and we can turn to other business.

I was discussing bankruptcy. The former minister of justice, Mr. Cardin, set up a commission of three people to investigate the bankruptcy field. I should like to know what this commission had to say. I should like to have its report summarized for my benefit and for the benefit of the country. I notice there is nobody in the press gallery so perhaps it will never be summarized. When we are absent they mention it, and I do not see why we should not do so when they are absent.

An hon. Member: They can hear you upstairs anyway.

Mr. Woolliams: That will be very refreshing for them. Bankruptcy is a specialized field and I feel that special courts should be set up to deal with it. There are very few solicitors who understand the law relating to bankruptcy and, as a matter of fact, few judges understand it. In most districts the practice is to appoint one judge with special knowledge in this area and he does 90 per cent of the work. Of the small group of solicitors who understand bankruptcy law, few have knowledge of the criminal law, with the result that it is difficult for them to detect offences under the Criminal Code and prepare charges, when there is evidence of fraud, with the evidence necessary to bring cases before the courts of law.

In summary I maintain, in spite of what the minister has said, that the government has shown little more than a readiness to make regulations and regulate the lives of Canadians. We can point to examples. With regard to the pension plan, for instance, the nine provinces were told: This is what you will get. The former minister, now Secretary of State, told the premier of Alberta: If you don't like it, you will pay for it anyhow and you will not get the benefits. Hon. gentlemen over there are placing business in a straitjacket as a result of increased bureaucracy and stricter control. They are increasing taxes, already heavy, as an indirect way of socializing business.

I hope, therefore, that when the minister comes to answer some of the questions I have raised he will get away from his beautiful phrases, dust off some facts and let us have some concrete information about the bankruptcy situation. Let him tell us what he is prepared to do with regard to patents. Let him tell us how he proposes to increase liaison between the provinces and his department so far as corporations are concerned. If he keeps these suggestions in mind I think he will be running a very efficient department.

I began on a note of commendation and I meant it. I think we heard this morning a new generation speaking in the House of Commons. I hope I have measured up to my responsibility by calling to the minister's attention some of the difficulties with which he will have to cope. He is new in this department. Every young man is out to make his name, and I know the hon. gentleman is no exception. He is politically ambitious, and it is no crime to be so. I wish him the best of luck. Maybe next year when the estimates are before us again he will be able to tell us that the patent law of Canada means something to Canadians, will be able to give us a full account as to how the bankruptcy law is operating to clear up crime and a full report on the legislation he has been able to work out with the provinces to control fraud in the selling of stocks and securities so as to protect Canadians who have invested in their nation and who have faith in their nation.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, listening to the statement made by the hon. member for Bow River about funerals and embalming I could not help contrasting the morbidity of those remarks with the enlightened observations of the minister, whom I congratulate. The house was certainly left in a different mood. I hope the hon. member for Bow River does not become too confused when he has to look to the right to the left.

I wish to speak about the cost of drugs in Canada, about combines and monopolies, about competition or the lack of it in the drug industry. It is my intention to discuss drug prices in the hope the government can produce legislation which will effectively lower the prices of drugs to Canadian consumers. The hon. member for Bow River made a casual reference to drugs. I intend to devote my entire remarks to that subject and will refer to the studies which were made by the committee and information which I myself have gleaned since the committee last sat. I believe the prices of drugs could be lowered by changing the patent law and by easing compulsory licensing regulations. By way of background I shall seek to explain why the price of drugs is today at such a high level.

It has been stated that drug prices in Canada are the highest in the world. Responsibility for this lies, in my opinion, with a monopolistic group known as the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, referred to as P.M.A.C. for the sake of brevity. This is a combination or combine of 57 drug companies which manufacture 85 per cent of the prescription drugs used in Canada today. They do not compete with each other in price and I like to consider them as a private club to which a manufacturer can belong if his prices are high enough and if he is capable of making a brand name drug with a long name.

This association is monopolistic, as I have said, because there is no competition except in the volume of advertising directed to doctors. Doctors are swamped with advertising material to the tune of $5,000 per year per doctor. Efforts are made to influence them through direct mail advertising amounting to something like a pound of literature a day, most of which is thrown immediately into wastebaskets. The companies use advertising in journals, particularly medical journals including some owned and produced by themselves in which commercials are interspersed with bits of medical information. In addition, gimmicks are given out whose value is difficult to estimate. Certainly they have some value, though no medical information is contained to enable a doctor to decide scientifically which drug he should prescribe for a patient.

I believe—and this was not contradicted in the committee—that there is no direct relationship between the cost of manufacturing a drug and the ultimate selling price to the consumer. I should like to refer to a brief submitted to the special committee on drug costs and prices by the government of Alberta. It was written by Mr. Henry Steele, a professor at the University of Houston, Texas. It is one of the most comprehensive briefs I have ever read. It contains more than a hundred pages and I agree that it is an excellent piece of work. Referring to the Hoffman LaRoche submission to the committee, Mr. Steele states:

• (3:00 p.m.)

The submission relates that Bell-Craig, in its application for a compulsory licence for chlordiazepoxide (the so-called "Librium") maintained that while it could not estimate its probable cost of manufacturing the drug very accurately, this was largely irrelevant to the selling price. Roche agreed without comment. The implication is clearly that prices need not be related to costs, and that the cost is so small relative to price that substantial variations in cost would have no significant effect on expected profit margins.

I quote further from the same brief:

Although the "broad-spectrum" antibiotics all sell at virtually identical prices, production costs appear to differ greatly, at least on the basis of available cost information.

This, Mr. Chairman, certainly proves the point that there is no direct relation between the cost of manufacturing and the ultimate selling price.

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

When the P.M.A.C. group appeared before our committee I had in my possession at that time a list of 56 drugs with the manufacturers' selling prices to the retail outlet, the drug store, in England, compared with the cost that druggists pay in Ontario for the same drugs, according to the cost book. In this list of 56 drugs there was a differential in price of up to 20 times as much in Canada as in England. One particular drug was sold in Canada at $10 per hundred to druggists, while the same drug sold at 50 cents a hundred to druggists in England. The brand name was the same. The differential had nothing to do with generic manufacturing.

This posed a problem for the P.M.A.C. and their economist took one whole week end to work it out in order to try to give me an answer. In the answer he came up with he lumped together all 56 drugs on my list, not all of them having a price variation of 20 times as much, and devised a factor of the number of hours of work necessary in Canada compared with the number of hours necessary in England to buy this basket of drugs. Then he used this factor, which I believe was 2.4 or 2.04, and multiplied all the English prices by it. This did not bring them quite high enough, so then he went into various other explanations of their system of retail pricing, wholesale pricing, and so on. If we were to accept this explanation, then by the same token I would presume that if I went to India, or any other less developed country, I should be able to purchase a brand new Ford car for about $400, using this line of reasoning. I cannot see that this line of reasoning is acceptable in trying to rationalize the price of drugs in Canada today.

To cite specific examples, Smith, Kline and French is a drug manufacturing company which is a member of this private club. They manufacture a drug known as stelazine, and in 2 mg. size the subsidiary company in Canada was recently purchasing it from the parent company in the United States in dosage form, in other words, in completely manufactured tablets in bulk, all ready for bottling and labelling, at a cost of $1.32 per thousand tablets. These ultimately are sold to the consumer at $6.50 for 50 or $125 for $1,000. I make this out to be a 9,700 per cent mark-up. I know that labels and bottles are expensive and that pushing drugs is expensive, but I cannot see that a 9,700 per cent mark-up is justified.

I have with me today a book I recently got, printed in 1967, called "The Pill Conspiracy," by George Johnson. It is a very revealing book and should be read by the minister if he is going to do anything at all about drugs. It has been stated that drug prices averaged out only come to double the average profit of over-all industry, which really brings a tear to your eye when you stop to think that the drug manufacturers can only make double the average profit at the expense of sick people.

This book takes individual companies to give a comparison, which is the only fair way of doing it. Based on percentage of sales, which in a sense is not a fair way of estimating profit—it should be figured on dollar investment—this book lists the top 50 industries as individual companies. It shows, for example, that Dupont makes a 22.8 per cent return, General Motors 22.8 per cent and I.B.M. 19.1 per cent. No. 4 on the list, at 35 per cent, was American Home Products Corporation, which owns two or three of our previously Canadian drug manufacturing companies. Smith, Kline and French, which I have just referred to, is No. 6 on the list at 33.9 per cent. All in all, in the top 50 there are six drug companies which are making profits at this level.

To give another example, Mr. Chairman, there is an antibiotic sold by Parke, Davis which, interestingly, is imported from Italy. It would not pay them to manufacture it themselves. They buy it from the very same place in Italy from which they complain we should not buy low quality drugs. They bring it over here, make tablets out of it, bottle, label and sell them. With duty paid the price goes from $1.52 per hundred to $51 per hundred. This leaves quite a bit of leeway too.

I would like to refer to patents in connection with this matter and in particular to Pfizer, a drug manufacturing company which instigated the use of some of our wide-spectrum antibiotics. This will show what patents tend to do to drug prices. Pfizer's manufacture a drug known as terramycin, whose generic name is oxytetracycline. Its patent on the drug recently expired, something which has happened to very few modern drugs because patents last for 17 years. Pfizer was selling the drug at $16.76 per 100 250 mg. capsules, and here I am taking the liberty of changing shillings and pence into dollars and cents.

About April, 1966, Imperial Chemical Industries started producing and selling oxytetracycline under the trade name imperacin. Its price to druggists for 100 250 mg. capsules was $5.55, one third of Pfizer's price. Since then Pfizer's price has dropped from $16.76 to $12.58. It must not be forgotten that Pfizer had the advantage of having the market for a period of 17 years and was known as the manufacturer of oxytetracycline.

In addition, these companies are protected by antiquated patent laws and patents which apply to the processing in Canada and by anti-dumping duties, prior to the budget earlier this month, which were based on class or kind imported into Canada. As I understand it, the word "class" has been eliminated and the duty is based now on kind only.

Manufacturers have a great deal of difficulty in acquiring a compulsory licence, and the initiator of a drug also has the advantage of new drug status for five years. There has been an actual example in history of a company which, having a compulsory licence applied for against it, in turn applied to be reinstated on a new drug status in order to protect itself against having a compulsory licence granted whereby another company could manufacture its drug. The idea of new drug status is to keep a drug under the control of the initial manufacturer so that any side effects can be reported and the food and drug directorate can take steps to remove the drug from the market, or whatever the case may be.

In order to ensure that drugs sell well and that the doctors are properly brainwashed by the brand name companies, these companies send detail men to doctors' offices in order to push the sale of their drugs. They do not really teach a doctor anything except the advantage of the taste of a drug, its colour, its size, and the brevity of the name of the drug they are pushing. Their second purpose is to disparage the use of generic drugs. They do not do this openly or overtly but nevertheless they give the doctor the feeling that any generic drug is second rate. The suggestion is that the doctor would not want to give his patient a second rate drug. Because doctors are very busy they are very vulnerable to such propaganda. It is easy to remember a trade name, and the doctor does not do the purchasing. The purchasing is done by the patient, so the price is of no real concern to the doctor.

• (3:10 p.m.)

At the same time the drug manufacturers, through the detail men, are providing the only form of continuing education that the doctors receive. The detail man brings the drug and the information right into the doctor's office. He brainwashes the doctor. He tells him that the only drug he should use is the one from his company. He does not tell the doctor anything about price nor does he suggest a price which should form the basis for competition. This leaves the doctor in the position of being the agent of the drug manufacturers. He does not buy the drug himself but he receives the advantages, if any, of all the advertising and all the gimmicks. Yet it is the patient who spends the money.

I should like to refer again to the book known as "The Pill Conspiracy" in order to read two paragraphs which appear at page 156:

> The American companies took an intense interest in how the Italians could sell tetracycline anywhere near as good as the domestic brands for as little as $1.43 per one hundred.
>
> The American Cyanamid Co., parent of Lederle Laboratories, soon discovered that some Italian brands were not almost as good, they were precisely as good—because they were precise copies of its patented product. It had no legal recourse in Italy, which has no patent laws, so it started investigating to find out how the Italians obtained the mold cultures and production knowledge essential to duplicating achromycin.

This is the trade name under which they sell tetracycline.

In a recent issue of the AFL-CIO News of May 13 there is an article by Sidney Margolius. One sentence reads as follows:

> The F.D.A.—

The food and drug directorate in the United States.

> —pilot study reports that 7.7 per cent of drugs sold under generic names, which it had tested, and 8.8 per cent of those sold under brand names failed to meet acceptable potency standards.

In other words, 8.8 per cent of the brand name drugs were unacceptable and 7.7 per cent were unacceptable among the disparaged generic names which it is suggested it is inadvisable for the doctor to prescribe. These companies have a great deal of difficulty acquiring a compulsory licence. They cannot obtain a compulsory licence on imported manufactured products. Basically the price is much less.

There is another example involving a tranquillizer. We seem to be in an era of tranquillizers. If you are not in it you are not taking tranquillizers. Equanil, which is the brand name for meprobamate, sells to the patient for approximately $10 per 100. The brand name drug is purchasable for $6 per 1,000. Tetracycline here in Ottawa—and I made inquiries to ascertain this—can be purchased by the druggist for $2.50 per 100 whereas the previous price he was paying was $18 per 100.

There is a problem here in respect of drugs which are prescribed by a doctor in their generic form, because the druggist is able to dispense either the brand name drug or the generic name drug. If he is going to make 40 per cent on the sale, it naturally will pay him to dispense the most expensive drug he has. It has been my suggestion—there are drug stores across Canada which are doing this—that druggists should dispense on a cost plus a professional fee basis. I realize that this will make the very cheap drug a little more expensive for the patient but it will make the more expensive drug much cheaper and will stop the temptation of the retail druggist to dispense the most expensive brand he has in his store.

I should like to refer again to the book "The Pill Conspiracy":

> McKesson & Robbins put its generic tetracycline on the market at $6 per one hundred capsules—compared to $17.60 for the brand names—and the pharmacists of America promptly provided the public with an education as to their pricing practices.
> They had been selling the brand names at about $5.70 for 16, for a profit of almost exactly 100 per cent. When McKesson & Robbins cut the wholesale price 66 per cent the pharmacies reduced the retail price to $4.40 for 16, increasing their profit to almost 460 per cent!

So one can see the advantage of what I have just said. It is acutely necessary that druggists get into the habit of dispensing on the basis of cost plus a dispensing fee. I should like to cite one more example from this book:

> Senator Long found an even wider spread between the public and government prices for a reserpine brand named serpasil. As serpasil, he said, it cost the druggist $39.50 per one thousand. As reserpine, it costs the government 47 cents per one thousand. The cost to the patient is about $65, versus 47 cents that the government pays.

This is a large price spread. I do not see how the minister can do other than agree that there is a monopoly, a combine and almost everything there should not be so far as the P.M.A.C. group of manufacturers in this country are concerned.

Dr. Chapman, the director of the food and drug directorate of Canada, appeared before the committee and made the statement that generic drugs basically are just as good as name brand drugs. They have the protection of the new drug standards. The brand name companies maintain that if it is a brand name drug this means it is a quality drug. I suggest that the brand name does not mean quality. It is not a synonymous term. Quality is determined by how the drug is manufactured and not by the name which appears on the label or how pretty the bottle is.

• (3:20 p.m.)

There is one way that people can do something about lowering drug prices and that is by shopping for their prescriptions at various retail outlets. They will find a considerable difference in drug mark-ups at discount stores as a result of volume sales. The patient can also go to the doctor and ask for the generic name. The patient really has just one choice when he shops and that is the store to which he goes. If you go to buy a loaf of bread or a can of vegetables from a store you have two choices. You can go to whichever store you like and you can buy whichever brand you want, realizing that they are all expensive. In any event you have a double choice. With a prescription you have only one choice and that is as to which friendly neighbourhood drug store you take your prescription.

This means that we have a powerful moneyed group which is subsidized by the sick and partly by the doctors who are writing prescriptions because of the pressure exerted by this monopoly group. The expense of research is subsidized by the sick who can afford it the least.

I found out to my amazement that the P.M.A.C. did not like some of the things I have been saying, and I have proof of this fact in a letter I received about a month ago from the president of the P.M.A.C. I should like to put it on the record in sections and comment on them. It is from Dr. W. W. Wigle. Dr. Wigle was previously the president of the Canadian Medical Association and he was hired to try to add an air of decency to the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association. He starts off by saying:

Dear Dr. Howe:

As a physician I am amazed at the interpretation of your remarks printed in the Ottawa papers recently.

He referred to the interpretation of my remarks. Actually I said these things and there was no interpretation necessary. Today I believe I have made my point very clear so there is no need to interpret any of my remarks. They can be reported verbatim. The letter continues:

Having presented factual evidence to the parliamentary committee on which you served that the manufacturer's portion of the prescription dollar is 37½ per cent I cannot imagine how a reporter would get the impression that a reduction (or the complete elimination) of the manufacturer's portion could reduce the price by 75 per cent. We quoted from figures supplied by the pharmacists' association, not the P.M.A.C.

I made the statement that drug prices could be lowered by 75 per cent, but this outfit has the ability to twist figures around to make it look as though it is a charitable institution and that only 37½ cents could be taken off the drug dollar. But it does not stop to think or purposely avoids stating that there are different kinds of dollars. I would be very willing to let these people have 37½ per cent of my drug dollar but it would be a great deal less than the one they have in mind. Perhaps they should have 40 per cent of my dollar if they need the money, but each dollar would be a lot smaller and there would be fewer of them.

Government offices invariably purchase drugs from drug manufacturers on a tender basis and almost invariably they buy generic drugs. If drug stores were to work on a Canadian formulary basis under which drug companies submitted tenders to the drug stores it would be amazing how far the 100 per cent they have in mind would drop. In some cases it would drop to 10 per cent. In this way drugs would reach the drug stores much more cheaply and the stores would only have to carry one brand. This would eliminate about 30 per cent now being spent on the advertising done by the drug companies.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Does the hon. gentleman have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Thank you, Mr. Chairman and hon. members. I will not take too much longer and I did not realize I had already taken so much time.

As I was saying, if a formulary basis were adopted and drug stores had the choice of buying any one of a number of brand products which were all equal, the quality having been determined by the food and drug directorate of Canada, with the elimination of the need for the space to store 20 different brands and the elimination of the 30 cents of the prescription dollar spent on advertising directed to the doctors, I am sure drug prices could be reduced by 75 per cent. I disagree with these distorted figures of the P.M.A.C.
