This policy announced on April 6, 1966, Mr. Speaker, indicated and revealed a certain ment although, at the time, this policy seemed effort in the right direction by the govern-quite timid and overly gradual, as emphasized to me by some members, by many newspaper commentators and by other Canadian citizens.

That policy, also set forth on April 6, contained certain deficiencies. Right then, a true statute of bilingualism should have been defined and the criteria whereby bilingualism fills a need should have been determined, rather than leaving the decision to the fancy of the new secretariat within the Privy Council. In addition, the creation of a protective and arbitration organization to settle grievances which would unavoidably arise was then overlooked.

It is to be wondered today, after this new policy on bilingualism has been in force for 15 months, exactly what progress has been made with regard to the positions then to be considered, first office clerks and secretaries, and also in the spirit that prompted the very statement of the Prime Minister, who was anxious to introduce bilingualism as soon as possible within the public service in the national capital. This measure seemed to be appropriate, in view of the following year, that is the present centennial year.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems now that this policy has not been followed according to the announcement then made. Apparently, a bonus of 7 per cent has been granted to certain classes of civil servants, that is to the clerks or secretaries, but according to some rumours, it seems that several of these classes have not yet benefited by this bonus for bilingual employees.

Naturally, there is some talk of not disturbing employees of long standing who are not bilingual and more or less interested in learning other languages. The point must be taken into consideration. Although we must not hurt employees of long standing who, particularly in the national capital, did not see the need of learning both of the official languages of Canada, believing the country to be unilingual, or thought it sufficient to speak only one language, we must also remember bilingual Canadians, found mostly and in great majority among the French Canadians. I am proud to say that we French Canadians understood the bilingual and bicultural nature of our country, and that our contribution in this respect has been great, although a certain discrimination is practised against several thousand civil servants who are apparently bilingual and competent, and who do 10 per cent of their work in the other official Canadian language.

We should therefore like to know from the government to what extent that policy has been implemented, and just how far the secretariat set up within the Privy Council has progressed with its work.

May I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to ask the government not to let another hundred years go by, not to let another generation die, before implementing bilingualism somewhat intelligently and rapidly. Because most of the bilingual people are French Canadians, they should not continue to be discriminated against through slow implementation of the program.

That is why I wish to point out to the government how important it is to extend rapidly the bilingual standards advocated by the April 6 policy, to implement that policy in the federal capital, to extend the premium for bilingualism to the secretaries of the members, who are extremely competent, to the messengers, to the members of the parliament security service, to the employees of the various divisions of the house. I appeal, particularly, to the Speaker to kindly go along with this policy on bilingualism. We have bilingual constables. We would like to have more who would be able to answer the people who come here in the two official languages.

Several of the pages are bilingual as well and would deserve this bonus which is a token of competence and enrichment for any Canadian.

That is why we would also agree to an extension of bilingualism, and this bonus be granted to the employees of crown corporations, the armed forces, the R.C.M.P. and also the small wage-earners of the public service, just as in the case of government employees.

I am making this appeal because this is the best time to do so. By the way, July 1 and July 3 are not far away. July 3 is Confederation Day. It would be a good time to announce such a generous, liberal and Canadian policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the public service generally, I think most hon. members will know that the 7 per cent bonus for bilingual personnel has already been implemented for employees in the secretarial, stenographic and typing occupational group and that plans are proceeding as quickly as possible to extend it to other occupational groups.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Before an employee may receive the bonus, two conditions must be met. First, he must demonstrate a satisfactory degree of language proficiency by passing a test administered by the Public Service Commission. Second, the deputy head of the department in which the employee is working must make a determination that the second language in question must be used at least 10 per cent of the time in the performance of the employee's regular duties. With respect to the officers and secretaries of the House of Commons, this is a matter to be considered by the Commissioners of Internal Economy who will, I understand, be meeting again shortly.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 28, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1967-68

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates A for the financial year ending March 31, 1968, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the house the third report of the standing committee on trade, finance and economic affairs. In this report we are returning to the house the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

I am also presenting to the house the fourth report of the standing committee on trade and economic affairs, which will return to the house Bill No. C-114, a private bill concerning United Investment Life Assurance Company.

[Note: Text of the foregoing reports appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

ADDRESS OF LOYALTY AND APPRECIATION OF PRESENCE ON CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know we are to be honoured by a visit from our Queen during which, on Saturday next, she will address members of both houses of our parliament. It is most fitting that she should be present in our capital city as we commemorate the day one hundred years ago when, because of the vision and determination of some great men, our confederation passed from dream to reality.

The crown, Mr. Speaker, through Queen Elizabeth, who in her own life represents so much that is fine and good in our society, is an integral and valued part of our constitutional structure. The monarchy symbolizes with grace and dignity the continuity of our institutions and the depth of our roots. It is a force for stability and ordered progress in our life, standing above controversy without any trace of partisanship yet adapting itself to the democratic and changing requirements and opportunities of modern life and society.

The Queen and her consort, Prince Philip, and their family have made themselves greatly admired, respected and loved by all Canadians. Their unselfish dedication and sense of duty have become a model for us all.

I am sure all hon. members would wish the Commons of Canada to extend to Her Majesty through the Speaker an expression of our loyalty and appreciation of Her Majesty's presence among us on our centennial birthday. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen on Saturday next, July 1, in the following words:

That an humble address be engrossed and presented to Her Majesty the Queen by the Honourable the Speaker on the occasion of the celebration of the centenary of confederation, 1st July, 1967 in the following words:

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY ELIZABETH THE SECOND,

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the ..... Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, wish humbly to convey to Your Majesty this expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our appreciation of the presence in Canada of Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip at the celebration of the Centenary of Confederation.

We pray that Your Majesty may continue to reign for many years as our gracious and beloved Sovereign.

And:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that the House of Commons had passed the said address and requesting Their Honours to unite with this house in the address by inserting therein the words "Senate and".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order—

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1957—

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would simply like to know if such a motion does not require a 48-hour notice before being discussed and, in such a case, Mr. Speaker, has the unanimous consent of the house been asked?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to introduce a motion moved by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker)?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I will tell you quite frankly that I am willing to come to an arrangement with all the members of this house. I am ready to grant the unanimous consent but on one condition. Usually, when a motion like this is brought forth, the Prime Minister is permitted to speak as well as a representative from each of the parties. Now, if I want to state that it is carried on division, then, according to standing orders, I would not be entitled to speak, since only one representative of each party is allowed to speak on motions.

When this motion is moved, if I am not allowed to speak I ask then that a 48-hour notice be given. On the other hand, if I am entitled to give my opinion on this motion and say why, if it is passed, it should be passed on division, then, so as not to frustrate all members of the house, I am ready to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member does not understand the present situation. There is no ministerial statement involved at this time on which only one representative of the other parties has the right to reply, but a motion duly introduced by the Prime Minister and seconded by the Leader of the Opposition, to which all members, including the member for Lapointe, have given their consent.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I well recall that on October 14, 1957, when Her Majesty opened parliament she referred to the words of Elizabeth I:

> Though God hath raised me high, yet this I count the glory of my crown, that I have reigned with your loves.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Then Her Majesty said:

> —here in the new world I say to you that it is my wish that in the years before me I may so reign in Canada and be so remembered.

Ten years have passed. The Prime Minister stated objectively some of the things the monarchy means and some of the things it has achieved under the present Queen, the Queen of Canada. The expression "Queen of Canada" was first used by Sir John Macdonald more than 85 years ago. Some argue in favour of ending the monarchy. Sir, our freedoms, the rights of Canadians and in particular those of our compatriots who are French Canadian, were achieved by and under the British crown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was before there was any question of Canada's independence.

• (2:50 p.m.)

It is an interesting fact of history that throughout the entire gamut of the years there has always been, in Canada, a sovereign. This was so during the days of French rule. It has been so ever since. Those who argue that the day of the monarchy is over have been answered in words which I now adopt, words of Right Hon. Vincent Massey, the first Canadian to be Governor General, when he wrote:

> The monarchy is so essential to us that without it as a bastion of Canadian nationality, of Canadian purpose and Canadian independence, we could not, in my view, remain a sovereign state.

That is the opinion of one who through the years served this nation both nationally and internationally and who occupied the position of representative of the crown.

I join with the Prime Minister in welcoming to Canada Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. The overwhelming sentiment of Canadians will be deep respect and affection; affection for a person who is well loved in her own right, and respect for the fact that she represents in terms of freedom and human dignity that something which is above political partisanship.

She is the head of our political system. As a symbol of the state she commands a loyalty which transcends any other possible symbol. Finally, as the Prime Minister stated, with her husband Prince Philip and her children she represents to all the beauty and fullness of a family in the highest degree. As Queen or as mother, in majesty or simplicity, the Queen of Canada has devoted herself to the primary duty of the monarchy, that is service to the people. I recall the words of the first Elizabeth in 1601 when she said:

> There will never queen sit in my seat with more zeal to my country, care to my subjects, and that will sooner with willingness yield and venture her life for your good and safety than myself.

Those words, spoken 400 years ago by the Queen of England, sum up the credo of service of the present Elizabeth, and I am honoured to be given the privilege of seconding this motion of loyalty to one who in her person epitomizes all that is good in the human family, one whose life has been of devotion to the service of the state.

My only hope is that from time to time in the years ahead she will again follow the course of opening the Canadian parliament and other parliaments in the Commonwealth. I second the motion with approval and with deep sentiment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I wish to join the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in welcoming Her Majesty and Prince Philip to Canada in this important year of the centenary of our confederation.

It occurred to me as a student of political science when the Prime Minister rose to pay his tribute and to move the resolution, that our democratic system in Britain, as in Canada, has in large measure been a development arising out of the original powers of the monarchy and the democratic institutions which later followed. I think the great achievement of our system has been its ability to retain the qualities of dignity, leadership and service attached to the monarchy while developing democratic rule by our people, through our parliament and the members of parliament.

For this and other reasons I am happy to associate our party with the expression of loyalty from the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to Her Majesty, to express our admiration for the dignity with which she has performed her onerous duties, and to join with other members of the house in expressing to Her Majesty and Prince Philip our deepest affection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as a French Canadian, I want to join the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the preceding speakers to welcome Her Majesty the Queen of England to Canada.

I do not believe that our present government, as suggested by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is 100 per cent monarchic. I always believed that we had a democratic government, and I believe it more and more strongly. As a matter of fact, I cannot reconcile monarchy and democracy. It is one or the other, and not both together.

As French Canadians, we must be grateful to the British crown which was, I believe, at the origin of the present constitution, the basis of confederation, the centennial of which we are celebrating in 1967.

We believe that if there were certain breaches of the constitution, as initially thought out by the British crown, it was certainly not by the British crown but by some English-speaking people who even believed at the time, 100 years ago, that the British crown was favourable to French Canadians and had, as a matter of fact, established that constitution for the benefit of the French-Canadian element in Canada.

That is why we owe a debt of gratitude to the British crown which, in my opinion, acted in a spirit of justice at that time. I hope, therefore, that Her Majesty will see for herself, when she comes to Canada, whether we have benefited from the advice she gave us the last time she was in Quebec city when she said this:

> A dynamic state must not be afraid to review its political philosophy. It is not surprising that an agreement drafted a hundred years ago does not necessarily meet all the requirements of this day.

Thus, Her Majesty invited us to become adults and to leave the cradle and grow in our country. I wonder what she will think when she comes soon, and I hope that she will repeat her previous advice, so that some hon. members in the House of Commons will become adults as soon as possible and welcome as adults, independent men and great Canadians, every royal guest who will visit us.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, there have been other occasions when we have been honoured by the presence of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada and His Royal Highness Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, but we are looking forward with particular pleasure to welcoming them on this occasion, the 100th anniversary of confederation.

Addressing the Canadian Club of Toronto several years ago the first native born Governor General of Canada stated four reasons for the value and importance of the crown; the crown at the head of the political system; the crown as the head of the intangible thing we call the nation; the Queen as the head of state, and the Queen with her husband and family the first family of her realm, showing us the essential unit of human society at its best.

It is with a profound feeling of pleasure and satisfaction that we in the Social Credit party support the motion just proposed by the Prime Minister and seconded by the right hon. leader of the official opposition, welcoming Her Majesty to Canada and assuring her of our affection, loyalty and respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, there is a saying in British politics which goes like this: The king or the queen reigns but does not rule. This gives rise to another saying: The king or the queen can do no wrong. That is obvious, Mr. Speaker, when we speak of Her Majesty the Queen of England. This concerns, to my mind, the system and the institutions themselves rather than the person of Her Majesty the Queen of England.

We have no personal reproach to address Her Majesty, far from it. She has always been an example by her personal and public behaviour, but what I find objectionable in that motion, Mr. Speaker, is the very system represented by the British monarchy in Canada.

We can read at the beginning of this address:

> By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

Mr. Speaker "Queen of the United Kingdom, Canada and her other realms and territories", this means queen of numerous independent and self-governing countries, and I feel the time has come for the North American people to assume their responsibilities as adults, as stated earlier by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), and to make or, at least, bring about in our country the political changes necessary to have our independence definitely recognized.

For instance, when in 1963-64, I was a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations as parliamentary observer, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was invited or, at least, was also a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations, and he was not treated as a Canadian head of state, indeed not, because that role belongs exclusively to the Queen of England. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that, at that point, I felt ill at ease for the Prime Minister, the man appointed by all Canadian citizens, and who democratically represents the authority in Canada. He was not treated as head of state by the other peoples of the world. Indeed, he had to leave his seat at the back of the hall of the United Nations general assembly and cross the full length of the hall to address the other countries, while the other heads of state of the world, whether heads of small, middle-sized or large countries, got what is known as the blue chair treatment; they sat in front on the platform, and only had to go from there to address the other nations of the world.

But our Prime Minister, the head of our country elected democratically by the Canadian people, the only one elected democratically by the Canadian people, could not be treated as head of state, because that is reserved solely for the Queen of England.

Well, Mr. Speaker, being a Canadian embarrassed me on that day. And, I told myself: a fundamental change must be made in our political institutions.

Our Prime Minister was not the head of state recognized by the United Nations, the Queen of England was. Mr. Speaker, if only to prove to the other nations of the world that Canada is truly independent, is not a colony, for the sake of self-respecting Canadians, a change is imperative.

Another reason, Mr. Speaker, why a change is necessary is that each time the Queen's representative attends some public event, well, England's national anthem is played before ours.

That is another situation in which Canadian citizens worthy of that name must be embarrassed, because I have been on several occasions when the national anthem of a foreign country was played instead of ours.

Why all this? Because our political institutions force us to accept that state of affairs. Well, Mr. Speaker, I protest against the use of words such as:

> By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, etc.

I could agree to the title of "Head of the Commonwealth". "Queen of England, of the United Kingdom, Head of the Commonwealth", I am ready to accept and recognize that. But, Mr. Speaker, I believe the constitution must be changed in Canada.

We pray that Queen Elizabeth may continue to reign for many years, I am ready to accept that. "Queen of Canada", I agree less with that, and I am not the only one in this house. There is even a Liberal member who once had the courage and boldness to confess to this, to shout it out in this house. I agree with the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), who once claimed that Canada should become a republic instead of remaining a constitutional monarchy.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing, and I conclude with this, against the person of Her Majesty the Queen of England. On the contrary, I think that she fulfils her role magnificently as Queen of England, that she had always given a good example to all the heads of states across the world. But, I believe that it is time, in this land of America, for a people such as ours, to become adult even in spite of very strong feelings, and I quite understand that some hon. members who spoke before me may have such deep feelings. However, feelings are not enough and reason must prevail.

Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because I understand, without accepting it, however, the thinking of many others in this house, that I did not refuse unanimous consent.

This motion could have been moved on Friday and even after forty eight hours, it would have been the same. However, I want to register my disapproval with regard to that motion. If it is agreed to, I would like the words "on division" mentioned, and in the last paragraph where it says:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that the House of Commons had passed the said address—

I should like the words "on division" to appear.

However, when the motion is presented and the words "on division" are mentioned, I pray Her Majesty the Queen of England to believe that I have nothing against her personally; on the contrary. I wish her a pleasant stay in Canada.

Many heads of state will be visiting us this year and they are all welcome. Whether it is the President of India, the President of the United States, the Queen of England, the President of the French Republic or the President of Italy, they are all welcome and I wish them a pleasant stay in our country. As for the Queen of England, in addition to wishing her a pleasant stay in Canada, I hope that she will enjoy her visit to Expo '67. But as far as this motion is concerned, Mr. Speaker, if it is carried, I ask that it be on division.

[English]

• (3:10 p.m.)

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON GENEVA AGREEMENTS TO BE MADE ON JUNE 29

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform hon. members that the final act of the Kennedy round agreements is being signed in Geneva on Friday morning. In view of the time difference it has been decided that the announcement of the results will be made in Canada on the preceding evening. On behalf of the Minister of Finance and myself I will be tabling in the house at 8 p.m. on Thursday, June 29, detailed information about the trade and tariff agreements concluded in the Kennedy round.

This information will also be made available to the press for release at the same time, and will be sent without delay to trade associations for distribution to individual firms across the country. I will also be mailing the material to some 150 firms which have approached us directly.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will detail the detrimental effects on various industries of the adoption of a pronounced reduction in tariffs. We have a right to know before this session ends what industries will be opened to competition from abroad, what assistance is contemplated by the government for industries affected, and also what will be done in respect of workers and employees.

Competition for the domestic market will be intensified. Under this plan Canada's foreign trade will prosper only if her prices are comparable in relation to the international market-place. What will the Canadian government do to improve productivity and competitiveness? We have not had a word from this government except in speeches outside parliament. We want to know here and now before this session is adjourned what are the facts and the programs. Does the government know, or is it facing a mirage in the future, the effects of which are not known? The Minister of Transport is a postgraduate in the course of indifference about these matters. He can laugh. He can ridicule now, but Canadians know this government has bought an agreement the effects of which are not at all known to them. What are the government's proposals to deal with the serious situation which will arise?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not really possible to comment on the Kennedy round until we have the details, but I would hope that one of the results of the implementation of the tariff changes will be that the government will devise a different policy from the one they have had to date which has put an undue emphasis on the export of raw and semi-manufactured materials, and will direct their policies to the development of secondary industry in Canada to compete with the goods which, as the Leader of the Opposition said, will tend to come here in greater volume than they do now.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

AMENDMENTS TO SUSPEND FOR TRIAL PERIOD AND TO PROVIDE FOR PAROLE

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-141, to amend the Criminal Code (abolition of capital punishment) and the Parole Act (persons convicted of murder or treason).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) today I was tempted to withdraw the bill. On the other hand I have concluded that he is already dead politically.

This bill proposes to follow the British precedent in suspending capital punishment for the trial period of three years during which it would be replaced by a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment with parole possible only on approval by both the National Parole Board and the governor in council.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING USE OF FIREARMS

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-142, to amend the Criminal Code (firearms).

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, last year, on June 28, 1966—which is an anniversary—I had the honour to introduce Bill No. C-214, concerning firearms problems. For lack of time, however, the bill was not debated. Nevertheless, on October 12, 1966, I had the pleasure to discuss that question, when my notice of motion concerning the same problem was called.

The bill being introduced today emphasizes the education of the people of Canada as to the use of firearms.

I hope this legislation will contribute not only to the restriction of crime but also to the prevention of the numerous accidents which are due to an excessive use of firearms.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

REQUIREMENT THAT INJURIES TO CHILDREN BE REPORTED

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-143, to amend the Criminal Code (maltreatment of a child).

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the previous session I introduced a bill which I am now replacing with this one because several changes were necessary. In the first place this bill makes it obligatory on everyone to report maltreatment of children. Legislation has been passed in some of the provinces but I maintain there are no teeth in it because no penalties are attached. I suggest that separate penalties be imposed on the medical profession and somewhat lesser penalties on all other individuals, thus making it necessary for everyone to report any instances of maltreatment of a child of which they have knowledge.

However, there is a further provision which I think should be contained in the legislation, namely that a person who reports information should be free of libel if it were proved later that there were no grounds for the accusation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*COST OF TRUSCOTT SUBMISSION TO SUPREME COURT

Question No. 8—Mr. Brand:

1. What was the total cost to the government of the submission to the Supreme Court of Canada on behalf of Steven Murray Truscott?

2. What are the names of the following and the amounts paid to them (a) defence counsel (b) crown counsel (c) witnesses?

3. What other costs have been paid?

4. Have all bills been rendered and, if not, who has not as yet submitted an account?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this answer contains a long list of figures, fees, disbursements and totals, and I am wondering if I could just read the totals and perhaps the other details could be taken into Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, is this not the type of answer that might be made an order for return if copies could be made immediately available to members? I do not think it should be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the question be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is objection, so it will appear in Hansard.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the reply to part 1 of this starred question involves a great many figures, I wonder if the hon. member would be willing to have the table, giving the information available in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, be taken as read and allow it to be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

EFFECT OF EXPLORATION ACTIVITIES ON WILDLIFE

Question No. 114—Mr. Orange:

1. Has the Canadian wildlife service or any of the government departments or agencies of the government undertaken any studies to determine the effect of mining or oil exploration activities on the natural habitat of fur-bearing animals and on the normal fish runs together with their effect on wildlife migration in the Northwest Territories and, if so, what are the results of these studies?

2. Have the results of these studies, if any, been published and, if not, will they be, and when?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of Fisheries is concerned:

1. Department of Fisheries personnel have made observations during oil, seismic, exploration surveys. Exploration companies take precautions to avoid fish kills as stipulated by the department. No serious fish kills have been observed in the Northwest Territories.

2. No. No.

In so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned:

1. This issue has arisen many times before and in the past has resulted in minor investigations reported by a memorandum from or to initiating agencies. We have been made aware of the following occurrences which may be construed as damage to wildlife habitat: (a) The destruction of lichen tundra by tracked vehicles—Recovery may take many years and tracked vehicles except those with very low ground pressure appear to be the biggest offenders. Most exploration companies are aware of this problem and there have been few complaints. (b) Councillor Robert Porritt of the Northwest Territories council has registered concern over the effect of staking in the Pine Point area on trapping and wildlife habitat. The amount of line cutting between Hay River and the Wood Buffalo national park boundary is quite extensive, but the detrimental effects on wildlife have not been assessed. The area is almost uniformly wet and boggy and openings effected by line cutting would dry some of the area and probably increase the amount of browse for ungulates. On the other hand, slash left by line cutting crews on ponds and streams reduces their suitability as muskrat and beaver habitat. This type of damage was investigated in Wood Buffalo national park by the Canadian Wildlife Service and commercial logging opertors were instructed to desist. (c) The Canadian Wildlife Service has alerted water carriers on the Athabasca river to report any pollution of the Athabasca and Slave rivers by effluent from the oil extraction plant at Bitumont, Alberta. Any oil travelling downstream could seriously affect waterfowl populations in Wood Buffalo national park and elsewhere and could also be detrimental to fish populations. At present, there is no evidence of pollution from this source. (d) The numbers of forest fires attributed to mining exploration crews have not been determined. It was felt that although the numbers may have been significant in the past, such crews are now obligated to carry fire fighting equipment of their own to reduce the incidence.

2. Present studies have not been intensive enough to warrant publication at present. It is expected that in the near future, a more systematic survey of this problem will be done and the material published.

[Mr. Speaker.]

*CHANGE IN COINAGE METAL

Question No. 124—Mr. Reid:

1. Will the metal in Canadian coinage be changed from silver to nickel and, if so, will industry be given sufficient warning to enable them to make the necessary conversions to coin-operated machines?

2. Will the government provide help financially, or otherwise, during such conversion?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the answer is as follows:

1. As announced in the House of Commons on June 5, 1967, it is the intention of the government to change the composition of our present 10 cent and 25 cent coins to pure nickel and to relate the introduction of these nickel coins to the requirements of the vending industry in respect of the installation of new coin selector devices.

2. Assistance has been requested by the Canadian Automatic Merchandising Association and the association has been asked to support its request with further information and argument.

CONTROL OF FIREARMS OWNERSHIP

Question No. 133—Mr. Mather:

1. How many persons were known to have been slain in Canada in 1964, 1965, and 1966?

2. Of these numbers, how many persons died from a bullet?

3. What are the views of the government with respect to present controls of firearms ownership?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State):

1. (a) The total number of persons slain, i.e. dying or killed accidentally or by other violent means were:

	Death classified as:
	Total	Accident	Suicide	Homicide	Other
1964	12,396	10,564	1,586	241	5
1965	12,957	10,978	1,715	259	5
1966	not available

(b) of the above the following number of deaths were due to firearms or explosives:

	Death classified as:
	Total	Accidental	Suicidal	Homicidal
1964	847	180	560	107
1965	868	138	622	108
1966	not available

2. Of the numbers shown in 1(b), the following number of deaths were due to wounds caused by bullet or other firearms ammunition:

	Death classified as:
	Total	Accident	Suicide	Homicide
1964	not available
1965	857	127	622	108
1966	not available

3. The Minister of Justice is presently reviewing the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to firearms and considering many representations on the subject received from interested organizations and individuals and the Government will reach a decision on this question in light of the study that has been mentioned.

REPRESENTATIONS ON SLOWDOWN OF U.S. INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Question No. 194—Mr. Ormiston:

Has the government of Canada made any formal or informal representation or expression to the government of the United States of America since June 23, 1963, regarding the slowdown of U.S. investment in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned: There have been frequent discussions on matters relating to the United States balance of payments program including the United States interest eequalization tax and investment guide lines since July 1963 at both official and ministerial level. The Canada-United States balance of payments committee and the Canada-United States ministerial committee for trade and economic affairs, which have met on several occasions since that time, have generally provided the forums for these discussions. There has been no formal representation, as such, from the Canadian to the United States government.

ORDER OF CANADA MEDALS

Question No. 220—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the order of Canada medal gone into production yet?

2. Where are they to be struck and produced, and what firm or firms will carry out their production?

3. What material will be used in their production?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Secretary General of the Order of Canada as follows: 1. That an initial order of the Badge of the Order of Canada, the Medal of Courage, and the Medal of Service has gone into production.

2. They are being produced by Garrard's, Crown Jewellers in London, England.

3. The Badge of the Companion of the Order of Canada is being made of enamel and gold, the Medal of Courage in silver gilt, and the Medal of Service in silver.

VOTING PRIVILEGES OF FOREIGN CITIZENS

Question No. 225—Mr. Stanbury:

1. Have citizens of any foreign countries the privilege of voting and seeking election in Canadian federal elections after one year's residence here?

2. If so, which countries, and in any of these is this privilege (a) extended to Canadian citizens (b) not extended to Canadian citizens?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer and the Department of External Affairs as follows: 1. British subjects other than Canadian citizens who have been ordinarily resident in Canada for the 12 months immediately preceding polling day at a federal election have the privilege of voting and seeking election providing they are otherwise qualified.

2. This question is a complex one which will require inquiries from each of the Commonwealth countries as well as British colonies.

The Department of External Affairs will attempt to gather this information. It will be appreciated that obtaining full and complete results will take some time.

PILFERAGE IN EASTERN PORTS

Question No. 234—Mr. Forrestall:

During each of the past five years, what has been (a) the dollar value of cargo losses from pilferage at the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Saint John and Halifax (b) the relative value of such losses in terms of total (general) tonnage (c) the number of convictions resulting from investigation of such losses and the dollar value of recovered goods?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: Information not available.

CARGO LOSSES FROM ACCIDENTAL DAMAGE, EASTERN PORTS

Question No. 235—Mr. Forrestall:

During each of the past five years, what has been the dollar value of cargo losses brought about by accidental damage at each of the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Saint John and Halifax?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: Information not available.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MARINA IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 236—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What assistance is available for financing improvements to marina facilities in Canada?

2. To whom should requests for aid be directed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: 1. Under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the government may guarantee loans made by chartered banks to small business enterprises for a wide range of business improvement and expansion projects. Operators of marinas are included in the categories of businesses that are eligible to borrow under the act.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

If financing is not otherwise available on reasonable terms and conditions, the Industrial Development Bank can consider creditworthy applications for the improvement of marina facilities in Canada.

2. As loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act are made by the chartered banks, prospective borrowers should apply to their local bank manager.

Applications for financing by the Industrial Development Bank should be directed to the nearest local office of the I.D.B. The regional and branch offices are listed in the annual report of the Industrial Development Bank.

In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: The Department of Public Works does not provide assistance for financing improvements to marina facilities. It provides for the development and maintenance of mooring basins and harbours for pleasure craft, principally through the construction of breakwaters, and through dredging.

Projects will be undertaken only where there is a commitment by private, municipal or other local interests to develop shore facilities within the harbours so created.

2. Requests for aid by the Department of Public Works as described in 1 above should be directed to the Department of Public Works.

SELECTION OF DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 252—Mr. Mongrain:

What are the standards governing the selection of designated areas in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The criteria for designating areas of high unemployment, slow growth and low income for purposes of the area development program are: (a) A Canada manpower centre area in which for the most recent five years (i) the unemployment rate is at least 200 per cent of the national average; or (ii) the unemployment rate is at least 150 per cent of the national average and the rate of employment growth is less than two-thirds the national average rate.

(b) A Canada manpower centre area in which for the most recent five years there has been a decline in the level of employment.

(c) (i) A Canada manpower centre area in which the average annual non-farm family income is below $4,250; (ii) A Canada manpower centre area in which 40 per cent or more of all non-farm families have an average annual income below $3,000;

(d) A county or census division in which the average annual non-farm family income is below $4,250, provided it is contiguous to areas that are designated by the foregoing criteria and which together with these areas form economic regions or districts;

(e) A group of Canada manpower centre areas traditionally recognized as a distinct geographic and economic region which, considered as a whole, meets one or more of the foregoing criteria;

(f) A Canada manpower centre area which was designated under order-in-council P.C. 1965-1394 of 4th August, 1965 and which had an average unemployment ratio in the area, relative to the national average, which was not lower in the most recent 12 months than the average unemployment ratio in the period for which the area originally qualified for designation.

Areas designated in accordance with the foregoing criteria shall exclude the sparsely populated northern parts of the country and the northern boundaries of designated areas shall be drawn along county or census division or subdivision lines which correspond to the boundaries of recognized economic districts.

SEARCH AND RESCUE SERVICE FOR PRIVATE AIRCRAFT

Question No. 255—Mr. Ballard:

1. For the years 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966, what was the cost annually to the Canadian taxpayers for the conduct of search and rescue services for privately owned aircraft?

2. How much of this cost was borne by the provincial governments and the federal government?

3. Are owners of private aircraft required to carry liability insurance?

4. If insurance is carried, does this cover any portion of the cost of search and rescue operations?

5. Is any charge made by the federal or provincial governments to the owners of private aircraft in order to recover the cost of search and rescue operations?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Transport as follows:

1. As order in council P.C. 1962-13/653, dated 2 May 1962, stipulates that no fee will be charged for humanitarian assistance, specifically search and rescue, no record of costs for individual searches are maintained.

2. The entire cost of search and rescue conducted by the Department of National Defence is borne by the federal government.

3. No.

4. As indicated in the answer to part 3 the owners of private aircraft are not required to carry liability insurance and the coverage of any insurance policy taken out by the owner is a matter for his own discretion.

5. No.

P.F.R.A. ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 258—Mr. Stefanson:

1. When was the P.F.R.A. advisory committee established?

2. Who are the present members of this committee?

3. How often did this committee meet during 1966 and 1967, and where did the meetings take place?

4. What meetings, if any, are now planned?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. October 13, 1951.

2. Mr. Norman Roebuck, 63 Haultain street, Yorkton, Saskatchewan; Mr. Roy Clark, 117—20th street, Brandon, Manitoba; Mr. Fred Croy, Stonewall, Manitoba; Mr. Harry Shearer, Elm Creek, Manitoba; Mr. Arnold F. Christie, Grand Prairie, Alberta; Mr. Boyd Anderson, Fir Mountain, Saskatchewan; Mr. W. H. Hollier, 1618—100th street, North Battleford, Saskatchewan; Mr. Ed. Wright, Eastend, Saskatchewan; Mr. H. J. Collison, Star city, Saskatchewan.

3. No meetings were held in 1966-67.

4. No meetings are planned at present.

JUDGES, QUEBEC SUPERIOR COURT

Question No. 264—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many judges are there for the Superior Court of Quebec?

2. Does the minister concerned plan to appoint a larger number of judges to the Superior Court of Quebec?

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. The chief justice, the associate chief justice and 73 puisne judges.

2. The constitution of the Superior Court, including the number of judicial offices, is the responsibility of the province. If a larger number of judges is required, the Minister of Justice will consider introducing in this house an act to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for such additional judges as are required when the relevant provincial legislation is passed.

2. If so (a) what was the purpose of the dinner, and in whose honour was it given (b) how many people attended (c) has the bill been paid and, if not, are arrangements being made to do so?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was host at a dinner at the Ritz Carlton hotel in Montreal. This was held on May 22, 1967 rather than on May 25.

The dinner was given in order to honour the delegates attending the international congress of the Comité France-Amérique then being held in Montreal. The Comité plays an important role in promoting cultural, technical and economic ties between France, North America and South America. Four hundred guests, including three hundred delegates to the congress and their wives, attended the dinner. The remaining guests were the relevant heads of diplomatic missions in Canada. Members of the Senate and the House of Commons from the Montreal area, provincial and municipal representatives, and representatives of the news media. The bill is being processed and will be paid shortly.

*FEDERAL LEASE OF HOTEL SUITES IN MONTREAL

Question No. 268—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the federal government leased suites for the prime minister and members of his cabinet in Montreal for the period of Expo '67 and, if so, how many such suites have been leased and what is the rental of each of the suites in question?

2. From whom were the suites rented or leased?

3. What cabinet ministers have used the suites in question and are they available to all members of the cabinet and, if not, what members have the right to use them?

4. How many cabinet ministers have used the suites in question and on what occasions and were they used by these cabinet ministers in a personal capacity or as part of government, and on each occasion what individuals were entertained by the minister in question?

5. Are these suites available to anyone not a member of the federal cabinet and, if so, what are the names of these persons and on what basis are the suites made available to them?

6. Has entertainment been provided to the cabinet ministers and their guests at these suites and, if so, has the federal government assumed responsibility for this entertainment and what has been the cost of such entertainment to date?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Three apartments have been rented by the Department of Trade and Commerce from the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition at monthly rentals of $645; $575 and $560 respectively.

These apartments are for the use of the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers and senior departmental officials as required. For example, the members of the United States and Canadian delegations to the eleventh joint ministerial meeting were received there last week.

Cabinet ministers who have to date used the apartments are the Prime Minister, Messrs. Benson, Gordon, Greene, MacEachen, Marchand, McIlraith, Robichaud, Sauve, Winters and Hon. Judy LaMarsh.

In respect of part 6, the federal government has assumed no responsibility for entertainment costs.

Mr. Churchill: What about No. 5? I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It appears to me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce failed to deal with paragraph 5 in the answer he gave.

Mr. Winters: The first part of my answer was intended to deal with questions 1 to 5, and I dealt with section 6 separately.

*REVENUE FROM SPIRITS, BEER AND WINE

Question No. 276—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, was the federal revenue from spirits, beer and wine in 1966?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The statistics are not available which would enable us to determine that portion of the general sales tax revenue which is derived from the sale of any particular product or group of products.

Federal revenues collected on domestic spirits, beer and wine in the fiscal year 1966-67, not including sales tax, is as follows: excise duty, spirits matured, $158,157,420.64; beer, $113,254,288.10; excise tax, wine, $4,751,632.92.

*FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO TEMPERANCE PROMOTION

Question No. 277—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, was the amount of federal contributions to anti-alcoholism or temperance in 1966?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): There have been no contributions by the Department of National Health and Welfare to anti-alcoholism or temperance programs. Grants are provided under the national health grants program to provinces to assist alcoholism research units and medical research scientists in studying the causes, treatment and prevention of alcoholism.

DRIVER EDUCATION FILMS ON EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION

Question No. 289—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to encouraging the inclusion of driver-education films in ETV programs?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The subject matter of ETV programs is within provincial jurisdiction.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CAPITAL INVESTMENT BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 4—Mr. Caouette:

When making capital investments, do the crown corporations known as "Proprietary Corporations" take into account any non-economic factors, for example, promotion of regional development and industrial decentralization?

Return tabled.

RECRUITMENT OF BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 6—Mr. Caouette:

1. Do the crown corporations known as "Proprietary Corporations", as defined in the Financial Administration Act, promote the recruitment of bilingual employees?

2. If so, what is the exact nature of this policy for preferential recruitment of bilingual employees?

Return tabled.

OIL AND NATURAL GAS PRODUCTION

Question No. 128—Mr. Isabelle:

1. What was the total production of crude oil and natural gas in Canada, in dollars, during 1965 and 1966?

2. What percentage of all such products was exported and to what countries?

3. How many barrels of oil were produced in Canada in 1965 and 1966?

4. What was the ratio between domestic consumption and export and to what countries did we export our oil?

5. To the government's knowledge, are some provinces providing subsidies for oil drilling and, if so (a) what provinces (b) what is the amount of the subsidies?

Return tabled.

Mr. Lewis: I thought I heard the parliamentary secretary suggest that Your Honour should call either question 67 or 68, or both.

Mr. Speaker: I believe both questions 267 and 268 were called.

Mr. Lewis: I am talking about 67 or 68. I believe you did call one of them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Starred question 67?

Mr. Béchard: I have already answered starred question 67, but No. 68 was not answered.

Mr. Speaker: Starred question 68? Question stands.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I raised this question the other day, and I find it difficult to understand why six weeks should elapse before we receive an answer to question No. 81. I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs is very busy, but six weeks is a long time to wait in respect of a very simple question to which the answer should be equally simple.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question my right hon. friend has asked involved a considerable amount of research by the Department of National Defence, and this is now almost complete. I am sure my right hon. friend will recall that he had to deal with many aspects of this question when he was prime minister because some of the improprieties, which have nothing to do with espionage or anything like that, occurred during the period when his government was in office. However, it will be clear from the reply, which I hope will be tabled soon or not later than early next week, that no Canadians connected with the international commissions in Indochina have ever been removed from North Viet Nam for alleged clandestine activities.

However, Mr. Speaker, question 81, very ingeniously framed by my right hon. friend, refers to what are called—and I use quotation marks—"other improprieties", which is a vague formulation which can include a whole range of disciplinary problems. The question thereby made necessary very extensive research in the Department of National Defence. The reply is just about ready. I saw it today, and knowing my right hon. friend's precise interest in this kind of situation and his carefulness, I decided to emulate his technique and make sure that the reply fully complied with the interrogations so ingeniously put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the reply given by the hon. gentleman indicates an ingenious intricacy of mind to find some reason for the delay, and he is now trying to obscure the facts by verbiage.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it would of course be wrong for the right hon. gentleman to be allowed to say I am obscuring the facts; that would be contrary to the rules. I will give my right hon. friend an answer that is exact in every respect, but one which will not warrant the suggestions that have been made about the loyal service of members of the Department of External Affairs and those who serve on the international commissions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the minister pointed out that some of these improprieties took place while I was prime minister. I knew that when the question was asked, but the minister is now trying to conceal facts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is contrary to the rules of the house for the right hon. gentleman to make such an assertion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have both taken part in a debate, I am not sure whether on a question of privilege or a point of order. I suggest that we might go on to another matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with great respect, any member who suggests that another is trying to conceal the facts is making a statement which is contrary to the rules. I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not mean that suggestion to stand. It has not been my habit since I have been a member of this house to conceal anything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand? Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 15 is acceptable to the government.

Would Your Honour kindly call notice of motion No. 8?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notice of motion be allowed to stand.

[English]

DAMASCUS STEEL PRODUCTS LTD., WINNIPEG

Motion No. 8—Mr. Schreyer:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents and correspondence between the federal government or any of its agencies and the government of Manitoba and any of its agencies, relative to Damascus Steel Products Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member is willing to clarify his motion by referring just to documents dated subsequent to January 1, 1965. Subject to that, to the usual reservation about privileged and confidential documents, and to the usual courtesy of obtaining the consent of the government of Manitoba, we would be willing to accept the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house that motion No. 8 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH LIEUT. COL. DE SALABERRY

Motion No. 15—Mr. Nugent:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a letter dated June 20, 1967, to the Prime Minister from Lieutenant Colonel J. J. P. de Salaberry, rtd., 4850 de Courtrai, apartment # 11, Montreal, P.Q., and the reply thereto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, might we revert to question No. 68?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house to revert to the previous item of business, questions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement of the house to revert to the previous item of business.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING JERUSALEM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government is in agreement with the views expressed by the President of the United States concerning the quick annexation of the old city of Jerusalem. Would the Prime Minister say what is the attitude of Canada on this question, and does he believe that consultation with religious leaders will be sufficient to meet the situation and permit Israel to have the entire city of Jerusalem?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to obscure anything but I do not think I can comment on a statement reported to have been made by the President of the United States in respect of this policy, especially as I have not studied that statement. As far as Canadian policy is concerned, I have already indicated in the house that we think there should be international supervision of the holy places in Jerusalem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking about international supervision. What is the attitude of the Canadian government to annexation or the taking over or absorption of old Jerusalem by the Israelis?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is an aspect of the whole question which is now under consideration by governments and at the United Nations assembly which already has before it resolutions dealing, among other things, with this particular matter.

MIDDLE EAST—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS LEADING TO SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I was going to address this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs but I am sure that the Prime Minister can deal with it. Recent reports indicate that the present debate on the Middle East crisis in the United Nations is nearing an end and that the assembly is in the same impasse in which it began its debate. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman can inform the house what, if any, continuing diplomatic discussions are taking place in search of an appropriate resolution to promote peace negotiations as well as a just settlement of the refugee problem and the entire question of the withdrawal of forces.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Very active discussions are going on at the moment, Mr. Speaker, with a view to finding agreement on a resolution which is likely to receive the support of two-thirds of the members of the assembly, a resolution which will deal not only with a particular aspect of this situation but with related aspects including withdrawal, the question of belligerence and also political settlement.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether the Canadian representative is taking an active part in these discussions, as I surmise he is, and whether these discussions are taking place among only one group of representatives or several discussions going on simultaneously?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there are discussions going on, I believe, in more than one group. I am familiar with the discussions taking place in one group in which our own ambassador is playing a very active part. I believe discussions on this matter are also going on in what is called the non-committed group. There is contact, I think, between the two.

DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. To correct the impression caused by reports that divorce reform legislation is now before the house, will the Prime Minister say when he expects legislation on this subject to be introduced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, careful study, of course, will have to be given to the committee report which has now been made public. After that study is completed the government will be in a position to introduce legislation at the resumed session in the autumn.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the government's intention to have a free vote on the subject or will it be treated as a government measure?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of that question. I know that this subject is of direct and immediate concern to every member's individual conscience. I think this would have to be taken into consideration in any procedure in parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the minister has answered my question.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Justice is based on the position the minister took on constitutional reform outside the house within the last couple of days. Does this statement of government policy indicate that the government is satisfied that the present British North America Act, as it is now drafted, is flexible enough for current needs and aspirations? I ask this question because I think it is tremendously important that the matter be clarified. The minister mentioned three points; that there would be no government white paper on constitutional reform; that no member or supporter of the government would meet with the estates general; and that there would be no attempt to examine the B.N.A. Act with the provinces in a spirit of co-operative federalism. I think it is important that this question be answered in the house and for the minister to make a statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is suggesting that a statement be made to the house, I suggest that this type of general statement cannot be made during the question period.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): On a question of privilege, I wish to correct an impression which the hon. member has erroneously entertained.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: I am rising on a question of privilege to correct an erroneous impression. The statements I am alleged to have made outside the house were not made outside the house but before a committee of the house; they were also made in an answer on the late show.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Starr: One of those instances was outside the house.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was not accepted and therefore the hon. member may not ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: I will ask a separate question of the Minister of Justice. How does the Minister of Justice reconcile his position on this subject with the Prime Minister's statement of yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION OF MEANS TEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of a speech made in Jasper by the premier of Manitoba, has the federal government yet received a formal request from the province of Manitoba that a means test be applied to the federal family allowance program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, we have received no representation for this kind of test with respect to family allowances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They brought it in for old age pensions.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO WARNING RESPECTING RABIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continuance of rabies infection across Canada, has the government considered issuing warnings to those travelling with children, or to those at their summer places?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR LIMITATION OF IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

Has the minister received the report of the investigation carried out by the Canadian Textile Institute, and is the government about to protest to Japan and to insist on the application of section 22 of GATT in order to limit textile imports?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had that question under consideration and talks are now underway with the Japanese government to find a solution.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FERRY RATES, NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday afternoon the Prime Minister assured the house that the Minister of Transport would have further and important words on the possible increase in car ferry rates to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister spoke to me about the question which had been asked by the hon. gentleman and which I heard in the house. We had some little discussion about it. It does not appear to the government, considering that this is a very modest increase and considering that all persons using this service regularly for business purposes will be exempt therefrom, that there would be any real reason for making any change.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether he has received a formal protest against this action from the government of Prince Edward Island?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not unless it has come in within the last two or three hours.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION OF FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN SAINT JOHN, N.B. AND DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to inquire about the Digby-Saint John ferry in regard to which a meeting was held this morning. Can the minister say whether he gave any commitment when this ferry service may be ready, or is it simply a case of more promises?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Of course, sir, I am not accustomed to making promises, and no promises were made. I saw the very distinguished delegation which came from Saint John and the Annapolis valley. The matter depended largely on a further meeting, which took place only yesterday, between the government and the Canadian Pacific, and I said that we were very much encouraged about the prospects of improving this service.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—THREATENED CLOSING OF VOCATIONAL SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has he received a complaint from the Churchill chamber of commerce about the threatened closing of the vocational school? Has he received a telegram pointing out the detrimental effect on Churchill and that it would cost $20 million, according to the estimate of those in that area, to remove that school and establish it elsewhere? If he has received that complaint, will he reconsider the matter? Removing the vocational school will certainly be a serious blow to Churchill.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, replying to the right hon. gentleman may I say that so far a copy of that telegram has not come before me. I would prefer to leave the answer to this question until tomorrow when I might be able to make some comment.

FINANCE

DEPOSIT INSURANCE—CONSULTATION PRIOR TO QUEBEC LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

In view of the introduction of a bill in the Quebec legislature yesterday with regard to deposit insurance, can the minister tell us whether that piece of legislation has been introduced after full consultation with the Canadian government and whether the latter is in agreement with the Quebec bill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed this bill with the Quebec government and this answer is too complicated to be given in French.

[English]

I should like to add, to make more lucid my response in French, that the officials of the two governments discussed the matter at length. I have exchanged correspondence with the prime minister of Quebec and I believe that we have found a way of co-ordinating activities in Quebec and under the federal bill that will avoid conflict and duplication.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance referred to some exchange of correspondence. Would he agree to table that correspondence after, of course, obtaining the consent of the prime minister of Quebec?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I will be glad to do so. I do not think there will be any difficulty about tabling this correspondence.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO HOLIDAY FOR EMPLOYEES ON JULY 3

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Goyer (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Will post office employees have the day off on July 3 next?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a previous question I indicated it was the intention of the government that employees should have Saturday and Monday as a holiday. Under the civil service regulations, those who do not work on Saturday would normally automatically have Monday off. It is not the intention that people shall have more time off than the Saturday and the Monday; we want them to have a long week end. However, employees who must work on Saturday or on Monday because of the nature of their employment in the government service will be entitled to either time and a half for time worked, as is normal on holidays, or to an equivalent amount of time off.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

In view of the refusal of the Minister of Justice, on behalf of the Liberal caucus, to take part in the estates general of Quebec and French Canada, can the minister tell us whether the government will also refuse to provide the necessary documentation and statistics required by the estates general to prepare a worthwhile document on the situation?

Mr. Speaker: The question could be put on the order paper.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask the Minister of Justice whether he would be ready to discuss this matter at ten o'clock?

[English]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INVITATIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he will table tomorrow the invitations to the provinces for the July 5 meeting. The Prime Minister stated that this gathering will provide an opportunity to raise constitutional matters and be a substitute for a federal-provincial conference on confederation. He was asked to table the correspondence on two occasions, as I recall, and he said he would. I know it is an oversight. Would he table that correspondence now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I have neglected to do something I promised to do. I will look into it right away.

TRADE

PROVISION TO MEMBERS OF DETAILS OF GENEVA AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce pertaining to the announcement he made this afternoon in connection with tariff changes under the Kennedy round. He announced he would be giving us the information tomorrow evening and that the press would simultaneously be given a report. Will the printed report and list of the industries affected and tariff rates be supplied by the Department of Trade and Commerce for the immediate use of hon. members tomorrow night?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, a list of tariff items and the changes will be tabled with the material.

AGRICULTURE

FREIGHT ASSISTANCE TO FEED GRAIN TO EASTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Has the government authorized further increases in freight assistance on western feed grains moving into the eastern provinces, and is the government now giving active consideration to providing freight assistance in connection with Ontario feed grains reaching the same markets?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes, for certain destinations in Nova Scotia. As to the second part of the question, this matter is under consideration by the feed board administration.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED SIGHTINGS IN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport; perhaps he would like to take it as notice. Has he received any formal report containing the rather strange information that approximately 20 sightings have been made in a period of six weeks or less of unidentified flying objects in a relatively limited area of eastern Manitoba, including sightings by R.C.M.P. constables? Can the minister say whether the special investigation branch of the United States air force has been invited to come to Canada to make an investigation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe this question should be placed on the order paper.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF TUG IN LAKE WINNIPEG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the Department of Transport carrying out an inquiry or investigation into the tragic sinking in lake Winnipeg of the tugboat Teddy in which the captain lost his life?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, generally speaking investigations are conducted into all these tragic accidents. I have no information about this particular case, and I will have to inquire.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT TO CANADIAN WORKERS IN MAINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-P. Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Having heard that the Minister of Labour once again contacted the Maine authorities recently about unemployment insurance, can the minister tell the house whether any progress is being made in the negotiations to have those Canadians working in the state of Maine get unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member's question and the statement he is asking the minister to make are of a rather general nature and should be made normally on motions.

[Later:]

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase my question in the hope that, this time, it will be in order, and ask the Minister of Labour if he has recently met with high officials of the state of Maine to discuss unemployment insurance for Canadian workers employed in the United States?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me right, I told the house some weeks ago that I had had a meeting with the governor of the state of Maine, and that we had discussed this problem which has been one of serious concern for some years. As a result of our meeting, a task force has been set up, and it met on June 20. It has established certain ground rules for a study in which it wishes to obtain additional information. It is now engaged in that study and the governor and I are awaiting the results of the study.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DETERMINATION OF JURISDICTION RESPECTING OFF-SHORE DRILLING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that preparations for drilling for oil on the continental shelf off Vancouver island are now well advanced, can the hon. gentleman tell the house where the question of constitutional jurisdiction in respect of these resources stands at the present time?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the case is now before the Supreme Court, and I have received no communication from the court as to when a decision will be made.

NATIONAL PARKS

ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the government any plans for the establishment of a new national park in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that this question is one of immediate urgency. I think it ought to be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ISSUE OF MEDALLIONS TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State of Canada.

[Mr. Racine.]

In a folder recently distributed to Canadian school children, outlining Canadian history and listing some Canadian achievements, the centennial medal is also mentioned; the folder suggests that this medal be carefully kept and states that all Canadian school children will receive a medal, whether they live in Canada or abroad.

Consequently, I should like to ask the minister to tell the house what measures the Secretary of State Department or the centennial commission intend to take so that all Quebec school children will receive that medal in the next few days, that is before July 1st, in view of the fact that those school children are now on holidays and the medals have not been distributed in a large part of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall look into the matter right away.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED EXPATRIATION OF ARAB NATIONALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of any effort being made under international auspices to investigate allegations that Israel is expatriating Arab nationals from areas recently conquered? I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs about this before and he said he would take the question as notice, but that was some time ago.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know there have been inquiries made into various allegations by the International Red Cross, but I do not know of any official investigation being carried out. No doubt inquiries are being made by the Department of External Affairs to find out whether these allegations are being investigated officially by the United Nations or anyone else. I will check on what is being done.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBLE EARLY ADJOURNMENT JUNE 29 TO MEET THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, since all hon. members have been invited to be present on Thursday afternoon at Uplands airport when the Queen of Canada is due to arrive; and since I believe most hon. members, with the possible exception of the hon. member for Lapointe, have signified their intention to attend, I wonder whether steps have been taken to adjourn the house early on Thursday afternoon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any special steps which may have been taken but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

SUGGESTED PROCLAMATION BY HER MAJESTY OF "O CANADA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to advise the Queen of Canada to proclaim "O Canada" as our national anthem in time for July 1?

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE PAYMENT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did he or his department make any deal with Mr. Justice Landreville that if he resigned instead of the matter of his continuing to hold his post being placed before the two houses of parliament, he would get his whole pension or any part thereof?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the question asked by the hon. member is a repetition of one that was asked previously.

Mr. Woolliams: As I understand the answer given at that time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice said he would give further information in reference to the matter and I am merely following that up because it is an important question.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): With respect to the question by the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I did not say I would disclose or say anything further. The answer to the question was no, and it is still no.

Mr. Woolliams: Then do I take it from the Minister of Justice that no pension will be paid to Mr. Justice Landreville?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the logic of the hon. member is fallacious. I would, on the other hand, be interested in knowing from him reasons why no pension should be paid in any case like this.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the minister used the word logic. I would say that is the most illogical answer I have heard.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

1. Departmental administration including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan and $500,000 for health grants and welfare grants, under terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board, for research and demonstration activities in the field of mental retardation, $4,127,000.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 338 of the blue book and the details on page 341. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, the other day I listened to the minister's statement in introducing his estimates. Like so many of his statements it was full of assurance, reassurance and statistics. From it we could assume that the nation was in an excellent state so far as health and welfare are concerned. But one recalls previous statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, also full of hope but not matched by performance after they were made. I am afraid that when we examine these estimates we see several areas where concern must be expressed about the performance in implementing previous announcements by the minister.

I mention in particular the old age security supplement, of which the minister spoke with considerable pride, as well he might, because it was his idea to establish a guaranteed annual income supplement and at the time it was a major change of policy. But as one examines how the income supplement is being administered across the country it becomes more and more clear it was the government's intention to have the Canada Assistance Plan take care of the increase in old age security pension payments. However, when it became obvious that this intention was impossible to carry out, and indeed was extremely unwise, politically, the guaranteed annual income supplement was introduced.

In the minister's statement we were given the statistics respecting some 700,000 old age security pensioners who were receiving payments and some 430,000 who were receiving payment in full. It would be interesting to know how many in all applied for the guaranteed annual income supplement, how many were refused, and how many of those who had been receiving some supplement in the form of a veterans allowance payment were rejected. This kind of detail would be very meaningful in examining the success of the guaranteed annual income plan. I am afraid that for many pensionable Canadians it was not much of a guarantee. There was a real contradiction between what they were told in the green instruction booklet sent to them and what happened when they applied for the supplement. Further, there was a real difference between what we were told in this chamber during debate on the supplement and what subsequently happened in relation to the veterans allowance supplement and to provincial supplements being paid by some of the provinces.

We had a pretty solemn assurance from the minister last December on how the supplement plan was to be implemented. He used words like these, Mr. Chairman, and I quote from Hansard of December 8, 1966, page 10896:

> They will not suffer any indignity, if this can be called an indignity, and I do not think it is. They will not be asked to do anything that a corporation president is not asked to do, or any other person in the country, in the way of providing information with respect to income or having the accuracy of that return checked.

Further, as recorded on page 10898 he said:

> We are doing this without the application of the much dreaded and odious means test. There is no possible comparison between the simple declaration which must be filled out merely asking applicants to list items of income under the Income Tax Act, and a means test. If the program embodied a means test in the way in which it has been administered in the provinces I would not be recommending it to the House of Commons. This is not a means test. It merely asks the old age pensioners to fill out a simple form listing the items of income which they would normally list if they were filling an income tax return. I see no indignity or loss of self-respect in the process.

At the time, Mr. Chairman, I did not see any indignity or loss of self-respect in the process but now I do see a great deal of indignity resulting from the actions of the Department of National Health and Welfare in conjunction with the Department of Veterans Affairs. People who have applied for the guaranteed income supplement have discovered that the veterans affairs means test is applied rigidly and that the veterans allowance they are being paid is taken out of the guaranteed annual supplement. Putting it the other way around, the supplement is not a guaranteed annual one and their veterans allowance is cut. Either way you look at it, this is what happens.

[Mr. Johnston.]

The old age security pensioners were told not to list that item. If they go ahead and list it they end up with monthly payments which are less than they were before. When this is taken into account they suddenly find they do not receive the monthly amount they were receiving before. I realize that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has come around to seeing some good lately in a guaranteed annual income and I trust that he and the minister are looking into this concept jointly for the future. This may mean the easier passage through the house of future proposals along the line of a guaranteed annual income.

Mr. Rynard: The new cohesion.

Mr. Johnston: I think it will take a bit of persuasion to soften the minister in this regard. The assumption is made over and over again in both the veterans allowances branch and the Department of National Health and Welfare that somehow the sums that are going out to the old age security pensioners are so magnificent that these people are able to save some of it. This seems to be the underlying assumption.

I can assure the minister that there is no saving possible for those who are on the minimum, whether it be the old $75 a month minimum, the now $105 a month minimum or the minimum that was in existence with the provincial supplement. There is no saving; there is only a falling behind as they go along from month to month. If a lump payment arrives at any time, it cannot be regarded as the regular monthly payment to be carefully husbanded over the next nine months of the fiscal year. It can only be used immediately to help the old age security pensioner catch up in some of the areas in which he has fallen behind. He will have to spend this money all at once. Therefore it is quite possible that such a person will suffer considerably if he finds, during the next nine months when the word comes to him from the Department of Veterans Affairs, that the allowance has been eliminated or has been reduced sharply. In this case he will not even have what he had before. This has happened. I trust there has been sufficient co-operation between the two departments in respect of cases like the one I have just mentioned so that at least the monthly payment will be what it was before, because it seems to me this is the very least that should be done.

In respect of the provincial schemes, members of this house were confused because of the assurances which were given us that the guaranteed annual income supplement would not affect those schemes. I am sure all members of the house who voted unanimously for the Canada Assistance Plan assumed that that plan stood in its own right in conjunction with the payments which were being made to the provinces. There seemed to be a bit of federal munificence at the time in that the federal government was taking over half the payments which were being made as pension supplements. It appeared that these would stand because that bill was passed previously, but the provinces have been learning, as we have learned, that this is not the case. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to this the last day these estimates were before us. I will not labour that point at this time.

Surely the minister must understand that the provinces which were paying supplements were paying them because they were necessary. The increase in the old age security pension was delayed for years before it was finally passed and in the meantime the cost of living had risen. There are some provinces in Canada where the cost of living is higher than in other provinces. This is one of the facts which arise because of the geography of our nation. The western provinces are among those provinces which have the very highest living costs. So the need for the provincial supplement did not disappear when the federal government raised the figure to $105.

In that connection there is another important aspect. The guaranteed annual income supplement came about as a result of the report of the Senate committee on aging which studied the problem very thoroughly over a long period of time. In its second recommendation the committee suggested figures which led directly to the $105 a month. It should be remembered, however, that that was the second recommendation. The first recommendation was that a complete study should be made directed solely to the question of the amount and that it should be made immediately. It was recommended that once this study had been made and the amount established there should be increases every five years and then another specific review to determine whether the increases were adequate and whether the amount which had been set was at all adequate in the new period. This was the first recommendation and it seems to have been totally forgotten by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the minister and the government in their administration of this plan.

The $105 a month seems to have become absolutely sacrosanct. It appears that if the provincial supplement interferes in any way with the $105, then the federal share must be reduced and the co-operation between the provincial and federal governments must be terminated so that somehow the figure will settle back to $105. It also appears that if the allowances which are paid under the War Veterans' Allowance Act interfere with the payment of the $105, then they must be reduced.

I urge the minister to co-operate and negotiate with the Department of Veterans Affairs and the provinces which had been paying the extra supplements, because the $105 is not sacred. I should also like to have the assurance from the minister that the study recommended by the Senate committee will be made and that the $105 figure will be regarded as only temporary, a figure in which the Senate committee had no great faith. This figure was established by the Senate committee as something that would do until the work had been done by the federal department. I should like the minister to tell us on what date this review will be made. I am sure the old age security pensioners across the country would welcome the news that this review will be carried out.

If this review is not carried out and if the idea in respect of the guaranteed annual income supplement as set out by the Senate committee on aging is not followed, then I am afraid that the whole question of pensions for the aged once more will go back into the political pot and we will be faced again with the old problem of everyone vying for the attention of these people and promising them something which should be set out on a more logical basis than the imminence of the next election.

Another subject with which I think we should be seriously concerned is hospital construction grants because here again there is a great difference between enunciated policies and the amounts in the estimates. If we look at the estimates for this year we find that the figures have not really changed in respect of hospital construction grants. Page 352 of the estimates indicates that the total hospital construction grant for 1967-68, in relation to actual expenditure, is $20 million. In 1966-67 the amount was $20 million, and if one reads the fine print on page 351 one will see that the grant consists of $20,367,320, being the annual allocation and a revote of $9,339,281 for unclaimed allocations since April 1, 1953. I suspect the reason for these unclaimed allocations is that it has been a long time since the grants for hospital construction were revised, and that there are many areas across this country which hoped they could go ahead with hospital construction but could not find the finances at the time, although might have found the finances had the federal grants been revised and brought up to date to a realistic figure.

I have found, as I am sure many other hon. members have, that it is utterly amazing that in the fiscal year 1967-68 the figures in respect of grants are the same as for recent years in spite of the promises we have received from the minister that we are to have medicare in 1968. We know now that hospitals, as well as other medical facilities in the country, are strained beyond the point of endurance. We know also that there are many hospitals throughout the country which cannot adequately take care of the patients now coming to them. Yet once the full medicare program is instituted we expect greater utilization of hospital space, some of which will be necessary and some of which will not. There undoubtedly will be an assurance that this is being paid for from the general revenue, and this will have a bearing on the length of time usage of hospital space. In my opinion there must be a revision of this federal grant very soon. No matter how soon it is made, it will be too late.

The federal government contributed $419,543 toward the construction and renovation of the new Jubilee unit of the hospital in the city of Vernon in my constituency. I welcomed that contribution as did my constituents and I realize that the minister took a great deal of care to make certain that the announcement of this contribution to the constituency was directed in such a way as to provide the maximum amount of political advantage for the Liberal government and the Liberal party.

Mr. Byrne: Did we get ahead of Bennett for once?

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. Johnston: The announcement was made in such a way as to gain the maximum political advantage, and this was done carefully and deliberately. Let me suggest seriously to the minister that if he really would like to obtain the greatest amount of political advantage from hospital grants he should reexamine the structure of the grants and revise them in accordance with the increase in the cost of hospital construction. This increase in the cost can be laid at the feet of this same government which chose to impose an exhorbitant and inflationary tax on construction materials, thereby showing absolutely no restraint in taxing construction. This has caused a greater spiralling of construction costs, including the construction of hospitals, than anything else.

An examination of these grants should have been made long ago. With the implementation of full medicare and the resulting demands that will be made on the hospitals of this country, it is scandalous that no changes have been made in the schedule of these grants. When the people read the statements of the minister regarding his promises for medicare they will be lulled into the false assurance that their medical needs will be taken care of after 1968. However, when they go or attempt to be admitted to hospital after 1968 they will learn that space is simply not available. Whether or not doctors will be available is doubtful, but the space will not be available and medicare will be meaningless for them because the groundwork has not been laid. They will be victims of the same illusion that some of the old age security pensioners laboured under when they accepted the promises that some of their problems would be alleviated by this government but later learned to their sorrow that promises and the implementation of them are not always the same.

Finally I should like to refer to what is perhaps a minor part of the spending of the department, that on grants for fitness and amateur sport. We in this country are proud of our contribution to amateur sport and our efforts in a great many fields, some of which we consider particularly Canadian. We have been particularly proud of our efforts in the field of hockey and extremely proud of our recent ski teams. However, compared to what happens in many nations of the world, our approach to these things on the governmental level cannot even be considered amateurish, but only rather infantile.

In this respect, although we had a sharp increase from 1964 to 1967 in the estimates there has been no increase this year. We know there are any number of governments in the world which set out deliberately as national policy to have the finest teams of athletes to take part in various competitions in the world that they can possibly send. This is done as government policy. We in Canada apparently feel that the system we used 30 or 40 years ago can still work. We send our teams and, with rare exception, we are disappointed with the results. Our hopes are raised in respect of world championships, but we invariably lament the fact that we no longer can maintain our standard.

We should remember that this grant of $5 million must be sliced many ways. It could well be increased because this is an area very worthy of support. No amateur can get to the top in world competition without a tremendous sacrifice in time, effort and money. We are not asking here for an out and out subsidy but for a grant which would be large enough to allow the fitness council to do some of the things they would like to do and should be able to do.

For example, let us consider a sport that is of importance to my constituents, namely skiing. They would like to know in advance what grants could be allocated to meet the many demands over a period of three years, because it is very difficult to get the team together and to keep it together when the committee organizing the meet applies for the grant and does not know until very late in the game whether or not it will receive it. I believe that grants should be allocated on a more definite basis so that plans for the future can be made more adequately. It is more and more difficult to find people willing to risk the enormous sums that are now necessary for teams competing internationally, and no grants are made at present for international tournaments. Yet if a tournament is to be meaningful it obtains much of that meaning from international competition. So again there is need for help and assistance in that field.

I hope the government will consider very carefully the sum involved, which is a small one, and will also consider the fact that this year of 1967 is our centennial year during which there has been a great increase in contributions in the sports area through the centennial commission. This has not been administered through the Department of National Health and Welfare. These contributions have been of great help and assistance but they will disappear next year. So in the whole area of amateur sports across the country there will be a great drop-off next year. I am not suggesting we can maintain the centennial enthusiasm through every one of the next 100 years, but it seems to me some thought should be given to the rather devastating effect of the fluctuations in the total sums of the grants at a time when governmental taxation policies have reduced the number of "angels" in amateur sports and will continue to do so. Goodness knows, if the Carter report is ever fully implemented by the government then the government subsidies for national sports will have to be increased many times if we are to maintain our standard in sports because we can be sure there will be a greater drop-off in the contributions from private sources.

Mr. Patterson: There will be no angels at all.

Mr. Johnston: I think the hon. member for Fraser Valley is correct, there will be no angels. The government is set on a policy toward industry which can only lead to that result. So what used to be provided through private sources must increasingly be provided through governmental sources.

The Chairman: I regret to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Harley: Mr. Chairman, I want to take advantage of the debate on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare to say a few words about some of the committee reports which are so seldom debated in the House of Commons. First of all, I want to say a few words about the health and welfare committee and its hearings last year on birth control. As I am sure all hon. members of the house are aware, the committee recommended that the words "preventing conception or" be removed from the Criminal Code, the effect of which would be to make the dissemination of knowledge and the sale of contraceptives legal in Canada. I must say that during its hearings the committee was greatly concerned about the fact that if these words were taken out of the Criminal Code there might be some trouble with the advertising of contraceptives which would be considered to be in bad taste and the indiscriminate sale of contraceptives in various stores which again would be in very bad taste. The committee made some very sensible recommendations regarding a few amendments of a simple nature to the Food and Drugs Act which would cover the sale and advertisement of contraceptives.

I should like to say as a member of that committee which adopted the report almost unanimously, a report which in my view reflects the feelings not only of members of this House of Commons but of the people of Canada, that I would be quite shocked and surprised if the government did not carry out the recommendations which that committee made. I certainly expect it will do so in the fall when amendments to the Criminal Code, about which we have been told, will be brought about.

In that connection I should like to say a few words about a subject which has not been discussed in the committee to date, namely, the matter of abortion. When the committee met on the question of birth control it was understood by the committee that they would be dealing solely and specifically with the question of birth control and not the question of abortion. The two matters are completely separate and should not be considered together or confused.

As the house is aware, yesterday several private members' bills dealing with abortion were sent to the committee on health and welfare which now has that reference before it. It is hoped the committee will meet soon in view of the fact that representations have already been made to various members of the committee, and hearings should be held in the fall. It is hoped that during the summer recess the people who are interested in the subject of abortion will have two or three months in which to prepare briefs and get ready for an appearance before the committee which should sit early in the fall. I believe that full and detailed hearings will be necessary. I think most people in Canada agree that some changes with regard to abortion are necessary in the Criminal Code, but there are a great many different opinions as to how far these changes should go and how they should be brought about.

I should like to devote most of my remarks to the special committee on drug costs and prices which reported to this house on April 3 of this year. However, before I get into that subject to any great extent I should like to say a few words about the 12 per cent federal sales tax on drugs which, as the Minister of Finance mentioned in his budget, would be taken off the price of drugs as of September 1 of this year. Hon. members will note that the report of the committee did not recommend that the sales tax should come off all drugs but that it should come off prescription drugs only. It is my understanding that the government removed the sales tax from all drugs because it was administratively very difficult to take if off one form of drugs only and it would also create great difficulties for a doctor to whom a patient might say "I know I can buy such and such a drug over the counter without a prescription, but if you give me a prescription for it I can buy it without having to pay the federal sales tax." This would mean a great deal of paper work for the doctor. I thought the government made a wise decision in removing the tax from all drugs.

The reason, of course, that the effective date is September 1 is to allow the drugs now on the druggists' shelves, and on which tax has been paid, to be used up. A druggist always has to keep a large stock of drugs on hand to meet any demand, and these stocks will not be used up by the time the change is made on September 1. Unless a druggist is willing to absorb the loss on these stocks, prices will not automatically fall on September 1, 1967. As is mentioned many times in the report of the committee on drug prices, the prices of drugs will not fall 12 per cent when the 12 per cent federal sales tax is removed.

I should like to put on the record two paragraphs from the report of the joint committee on drug costs and prices, starting at page 30:

> From these figures one might be inclined to conclude that elimination of sales tax could result in an average reduction of 5 to 10 per cent in the price of drugs to the consumer, depending upon the particular pricing method in use. However, reduction in prices is not ensured simply by the elimination of the sales tax. This point was emphasized by many who made representations to the committee. It was pointed out that the elimination of the federal sales tax should be taken as part of a program to reduce drug prices and that this can be better assured by introducing competition into the drug market. Evidence, for example, has been shown that tariff reductions have not always been accompanied by a corresponding decrease in the price of drugs although the cost to the manufacturer was lower.
> Both the drug manufacturers and retail pharmacists offered the opinion before the committee that the benefits of a reduction in sales tax would be passed along to the consumer. However, the committee concludes that, without more effective operation of competitive forces than presently exists in the drug industry in Canada, the only certain result from removal of the tax would be a reduction in costs to the manufacturers. The consumer must also understand that the removal of the 12 per cent federal sales tax on drugs will not, (however much drug manufacturers and retail pharmacists honestly co-operate), lower the price of drugs 12 per cent for the reasons already discussed in this section.

Since the publication of this report, Mr. Chairman, we have heard rumours that drug prices either have gone up or will go up prior to September 1 so that there will be no effect from the removal of the sales tax. I personally, along with many other members of the committee, have had a great deal of interest in this subject. I have taken pains to make as many detailed inquiries as I could concerning this rumour. I must say I have found no evidence at all other than the case of one drug by the name of demerol, which is a narcotic that is not prescribed very widely nor it is very expensive. I feel it is only fair to the drug manufacturers and pharmacists to point out these facts. I have found no evidence that drug prices have gone up or will go up. As a matter of fact, I am told no increase in drug prices will take place now after all the adverse publicity. I should point out that one of the companies brought about a reduction in the price of a fairly expensive antibiotic during the hearings of the drug committee.

As I know all members are aware, the special committee made 23 recommendations, which we refer to as a package deal, to bring down the cost of drugs. Generally speaking, the recommendations contained in the report can be divided into two sections, each of which emphasizes a basic idea. The first section of these recommendations to lower drug prices would make cheaper drugs available in Canada or make drugs manufactured in Canada less expensive. Fifteen of these recommendations were designed for that purpose.

The second group contains six recommendations, and these are designed to make sure that if available drugs are cheaper or if cheaper drugs are available—I am sure hon. members will see the distinction—they meet the requirements for safety established by the food and drug directorate. There were three other recommendations made in the report which probably have no effect on the first two groups but which the committee felt might be useful.

I should point out that while lower drug prices are important, they are of no use if the drugs are not prescribed. I should point out too that the report itself is not worth the paper it is written on if we cannot convince the medical profession that they can safely prescribe the drugs that are available in Canada. Less expensive drugs must not be less safe. We must do what we can to bring down prices but we cannot do that by sacrificing the safety or the quality of our drugs. There is no question but that less expensive drugs are available in Canada now. If one has any doubt about this, one has only to look at the practice of the government of Canada and most of the provinces in tendering. I am pleased to say that there was no evidence before the committee that any significant problem dealing with the safety of drugs had been introduced since the government began issuing the requirements for drug firms tendering on a particular drug.

These requirements come under the Canadian government specification board and are called standards for manufacture, control and distribution of drugs. Certainly the drugs purchased by the government are cheaper because no federal sales tax is paid on them, but the saving as a result of tendering on drugs goes far beyond that. The inspection of drugs intended for government use or public use comes under the food and drug directorate.

It seems to me that cheaper drugs can be made available because the inspection services are the same. I feel that to ask doctors to change their prescribing habits would be a very serious responsibility, but the committee undertook it and eventually the government will have to take that responsibility. When the doctor prescribes drugs he wants to be sure they are safe. I should point out, and I am sure every member of the committee is aware, that any drug can kill if it is taken in large enough doses. Some drugs can kill even if they are taken in the prescribed manner because the person may develop an idiosyncrasy or allergic reaction. As a result of my experience I can say that no drug is ever prescribed or taken lightly by the medical profession.

In order to ensure knowledge of drugs and their safety, the committee also recommended that a bulletin be published and that copies of it be given free to the doctors. It should be published by the federal government and sent to the doctors monthly. Here I would include the following information which is found in the report on page 17, and this information should be contained in the publication:

(i) Generic name of the drug

(ii) Names of all manufacturers of the drug, and brand names of the above drug

(iii) Comparative costs and clinical equivalency of the above drugs

(iv) Therapeutic action of drug

(v) Side effects of drug, contra-indications and toxicity

(vi) Last assay for each company's product, of content and availability of active ingredient, solubility and disintegration

(vii) Any problems with any company's product—toxicity, impurity, seizures, court actions, failure to meet standards, etc.

If this bulletin were published it would provide the doctor with knowledge of all the products which were available on the Canadian market, how safe they were and how much they would cost in each case. I am convinced that cheaper drugs, or perhaps a better expression is less expensive drugs, can be made available in Canada, first of all, by importing cheaper drugs. The committee made many recommendations concerning trade mark and patent changes. If these were carried out as recommended by the committee the importing of cheaper drugs would be possible.

I know that the drug manufacturing industry in Canada is afraid that if these recommendations were carried out the industry would suffer a great deal and perhaps disappear. I do not agree with that view at all. I think it is a very live industry and that it would drop its prices and be forced to compete. Bringing in cheaper drugs from outside Canada, provided they were safe—and the committee report took that into account—would inject competition into a relatively non-competitive market as it exists at the present time.

The second way that less expensive drugs could be made available in Canada is by lowering the cost of the drugs that are actually manufactured in Canada. One of the startling things to committee members, I think, was when it was revealed that approximately one third of the manufacturers' dollar in Canada actually goes on marketing and promotional expenses.

Reference was made in this debate earlier and also in the committee hearings to a recommendation in the Hall report concerning marketing expenses, and I should like to put it on the record. I read from page 22 of the committee report on drug costs and prices:

The Hall commission likewise came to the conclusion that marketing expenses in the drug industry were too high, and recommended a compulsory method whereby this expense might be lowered, namely, "that in the application of the provisions of the corporation Income Tax Act to the manufacturers, importers and distributors of drugs, consideration should be given to establishing a maximum of 15 per cent of total sales as the allowable deductible expense for advertising, sales promotion, 'detail men', and other similar items".

[Mr. Harley.]

The committee did not agree with the Hall commission on this point, and in explanation of that disagreement I want to put on the record a sentence in our report. If I may again quote the committee report, in the next paragraph there appears this passage:

Yet again, regardless of the savings hopefully expected as a result of the recommendation, it might well be that the drug companies would, regardless of increased taxes, press their promotional activity to meet the continued competition of their rivals—which might easily result in higher costs at the manufacturers' level, and then higher drug costs to the consumer.

So the committee felt that the recommendation of the Hall commission would actually tend to increase the price of drugs rather than lower it.

We often hear a great deal about the question of quality control or safety of drugs. Evidence put before the committee showed that this is not a feature of great cost; therefore the question of safety is not a debatable one. There is nothing in this report that would jeopardize the safety or quality of any drug. To use safety as an argument for the high cost of drugs is just not acceptable.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, what the report really says is that price competition is the answer in the Canadian drug market, not product competition between companies as now exists, with the accompanying high marketing and promotional costs. As I mentioned earlier, this is a package deal. The recommendations made in the report would mean changes to the Food and Drugs Act, the Customs Act, the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and, as I have already said, there have been changes made in the budget.

The federal government actually has no power to carry out many of the recommendations which have been made, but we certainly hope that those who have jurisdiction in these areas will carry out their own investigation based on our recommendations. Personally I am convinced—and I think the members of the committee are too; the report was adopted unanimously—that less expensive but safe drugs are possible in Canada. I ask the government, and in particular the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Registrar General who are responsible for implementing many of these recommendations, to bring in the necessary legislation early this fall.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin my remarks by referring to the conclusion of the minister's remarks in the committee the other day when introducing the estimates of his department. The minister stated that in the past 22 years the expenditures of the department have increased almost tenfold. I am not going to put the figures on record, but to my mind the fact that in the past 22 years the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare have increased almost tenfold is one of the surest indicators that slowly but definitely we are working toward a reasonable standard of civilization in this country. I regard the Department of National Health and Welfare as one department which, to a measure at least, is trying to get people co-operatively to build a standard of income and living across this country which is acceptable. It is a way of redistributing income and services across the country in a planned and co-operative manner.

I very much hope that the minister will continue to expand his department in spite of any pressures that there may and will be to the contrary. As a matter of fact, I was a little frightened today on hearing somebody ask a question that suggested that one of the premiers in this country had thought that it might be a good idea to apply a means test to recipients of family allowances. I think the danger is that pressures of this kind will be brought to bear in this country, but they must be resisted.

It is not a matter of resisting these pressures on the basis of making handouts; it is a matter of resisting them on the basis of good, common-sense planning and having a sound economic and social fabric in the country. Not long ago I read an article which indicated that one of the cushions against momentary or short, periodic depressions in Canada is the fact that we have these comprehensive schemes of old age security pensions, family allowances and the like. These ensure that there is this much buying power in the country to cushion shocks.

I do not suppose that the minister will altogether share that theory. Sometimes the minister reminds me of the story of the old farmer who was talking of all the improvements and changes that he had seen brought in during his lifetime, how the steam engine had been invented and various other things, and he wound up very triumphantly saying "And I was agin them all!" I think that a great many changes have had to be brought in with the minister resisting them pretty vigorously, in their fullness at least, but having reluctantly to be shoved and prodded into agreeing to the full measure of the changes later on.

I see that the hour is approaching when I shall have to close my remarks, Mr. Chairman, but I want to be sure of getting in a special plea for a group which I believe has not been mentioned so far during our discussion of these estimates. I refer to the blind persons in this country of whom there are a great many.

I recall that last May our attention was drawn to the fact that a delegation from the Silver Cross Women of Canada was in the gallery of this chamber, and I remember there was a great deal of desk thumping and banging in appreciation of their presence. A few days later I received a resolution from these women which reads as follows:

> Resolved that due to the extra expense incurred because of blindness or near-blindness the present allowance given blind persons is inadequate and rules governing same with relation to earning and blind women marrying are most unfair.
> We, the Remembrance Association, Silver Cross Women of Canada in convention assembled in Ottawa, May 7-10, 1967 respectfully request the government to seriously and immediately review the status of the blind with respect to their allowance and rules relating thereto, and we further request that the means test be abolished.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Had that been received with the same degree of desk thumping and appreciation as accorded on the other occasion and had corresponding action been taken, we should have honoured in a much greater way the silver cross women when they were here as well as the blind of this country.

Of all those who are handicapped, the blind suffer from the handicap which is most difficult to bear. They find it hard to convey the limitations from which they suffer. During the past week end I was in Vancouver in my constituency, and at the gathering I attended there were about a dozen blind people from Queen Elizabeth Hall, the residence for the blind of that area. I wish that the minister would not turn around and giggle. It is important for him to hear my remarks about the blind. He can giggle when the session is over. There will be lots of time for that before we resume again.

The blind people at the gathering told me that the cost of living in their institution had gone up within the last short period. That did not bother them in so far as food and lodging was concerned, but they were troubled because the cost of living made clothing expensive for them. They knew that they looked dowdy and they could not afford clothing because the cost of living had taken it out of reach. They wanted to see the means test removed. But more than anything they wanted to be able to afford the clothing and amenities which, because of rising living costs, were difficult for them to buy.

The blind who spoke to me said: "The blind who are living in private homes, with sons and daughters, are much worse off than we are."

The Chairman: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I call it five o'clock.

Progress reported.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TERMINATION OF PREGNANCY BY REGISTERED MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we sent two bills to the committee on national health and welfare so that it might deal with their subject matters. A third bill should have been sent to the committee. May I have unanimous consent to move a motion with respect to the third bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lincoln have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McNulty: I move:

That the Order for the second reading of Bill C-136, an act concerning the termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners, being order No. 121 under the heading "Public Bills" on today's order paper, be discharged and that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on health and welfare.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad that this bill is being sent to the committee as I am getting a great deal of support for its principle and purpose.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF INLAND WATERWAY FROM WINNIPEG TO EDMONTON

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of establishing an inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton, via the Red River, Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had this same motion on the order paper last year and it came up for discussion on June 1, 1966. As the government has not taken any action on it, I felt duty bound to place it on the order paper again.

I am happy that there is an opportunity again to discuss the merits of this motion. All I am requesting is that the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing an inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton via the Red River, Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River. This is not an unreasonable request. I hope that the Minister of Transport particularly, as a former Manitoban, will lend his support to this motion and not let another year go by without initiating a feasibility study of this proposed waterway.

When speaking on this resolution last year the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) said he would have been happier if I had specified that one end of the system be Rocky Mountain House. I would have no objection to this. In fact the Voyageurs, one of Canada's centennial projects, started from Rocky Mountain House in the foothills of the Rockies on the North Saskatchewan River and will finish at Expo in Montreal. The Voyageurs will arrive in Selkirk, Manitoba, on Sunday, July 2. Besides being greeted by the residents of Selkirk, many other people will be there to greet them, including Lord and Lady Selkirk. Those participating in the centennial canoe pageant will be familiar with the terrain along this proposed waterway and they will be a valuable source of information for compiling the merits and feasibility of this system.

I pointed out last year that the first promoter of this proposed waterway to whom I listened was the late Mr. J. F.—Fergie—Cunningham, who had personally carried out research and study of this system. He firmly believed that it would be practical. Subsequently the Selkirk Chamber of Commerce took up the promotion of this proposed inland waterway and did an excellent promotional job. So far, however, there has been no government action. If one firmly believes in a project and does not immediately meet with success, one should not give up but should continue to promote the project and request the government to take action.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stefanson: My experience in regard to other matters and other projects has been that if one believes strongly in them and perseveres long enough, one generally meets with success in the end.

The purpose of this proposed waterway is to provide another means of transportation. It is only natural that some of those engaged in other modes of transportation will oppose this proposition and even ridicule it. I personally believe that this proposed western inland waterway will reduce freight costs in the prairie provinces, will accelerate development in northern areas and will encourage production of minerals as well as agricultural and forest products. It will open new frontiers to recreation and will encourage tourists to come to these areas. It will help to bring in much needed United States dollars and thus help to rectify the imbalance of trade with our neighbour to the south. In addition, it will shorten the distance for building roads to resources and will create substantial additional employment.

Many have said to me that this idea of a western inland waterway is a very good one but that before it will be practical or feasible we need a much larger population and much more industrial development. I do not dispute the fact that this is probably correct. The population of Canada from now on will increase at a much faster pace than in the past and the same applies to industry. With an increasing population, industrial development will take place at a far greater place than in the past. In view of this I feel it is imperative that the government start now with studies and not wait until we require this additional transportation system.

It is a foregone conclusion that extensive population growth and extensive industrial growth will take place in the three prairie provinces in the years ahead. The prairies have wheat, oil, potash, minerals, agricultural products, pulp and forest products, fish, and so on. For these reasons this is a natural area for industry to establish and a western inland waterway will help to bring industry there.

In the period from 1870 to 1917 many boats travelled the Saskatchewan River system. There was no expenditure made for river improvement. Some of these boats were of a good size, as long as 200 feet. We have today a fleet of tugs and barges operating on Lake Winnipeg. I am told that this is the most up-to-date equipment of its kind on the North American continent. During the construction of the hydro development at Grand Rapids this fleet moved a lot of material and equipment to that power site. These crafts will be ideal for operating on an inland waterway such as I visualize.

An extensive detailed investigation to ascertain the feasibility and cost of providing a navigable waterway for vessels and barges to operate between Edmonton and Lake Winnipeg was carried out between June, 1910 and October, 1915. The complete report of this investigation was submitted in November, 1917 by the chief engineer of the Dominion Public Works Department. This report, based upon a minimum of six feet of water at mean low water levels from Lake Winnipeg to Edmonton, estimated the cost as follows: Dredging and channel improvement, $6,200,000; seven locks and dams, $14,565,591; total, $20,765,591. When this report was received the first world war was in progress. Then came the post-war years, the depression and the second world war. No action was taken on the report.

Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that it is over 40 years since the last study of the proposed inland waterway was made I would urge the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works, or both of them, to initiate a study at this time in order that up-to-date figures may be available. At the time of the previous study the economy of western Canada was centred on wheat and other grains. Now, western Canada is becoming industrialized and, as I have pointed out, industrial development will from now on expand at a much more rapid pace. It is essential to have competitive transportation systems which will be able to provide low-cost transportation service. I believe that in the future a multi-transportation service which will include highway, rail, air and waterways will be needed to serve the needs of the people.

Following the second world war, tremendous developments of waterways have taken place in the United States, in Europe and in other parts of the world. The St. Lawrence seaway was built after the second world war and now permits ocean liners to sail to the lakehead.

In the June issue of Ship-Shore News there is an article under the following headings, "Canal Traffic And City Will Benefit From $350 Million Dig". It reads in part as follows:

A $110 million excavation project began this month on the Welland section of the seaway, where a new eight-mile channel will replace a narrow and winding part of the waterway that now bisects a city of 38,000. Minister of Transport J. W. Pickersgill officiated at ceremonies marking the start of excavation near the south end of the channel, mid-way between the cities of Welland and Port Colborne . . .

The Welland bypass is the first stage to bring the 35 year old 27-mile waterway up to date and to meet the projected needs of the next decade's shipping traffic.

The second plan, which still requires government approval, is relocation of the canal at the northern end, with a new lock running from Lake Ontario—east of the existing canal—to Thorold, above lock 7.

Another heading appeared in the same paper, namely, "Experts Will Discuss Potential Of Waterways At Niagara Falls Meet." I now quote from this article:

The Great Lakes Commission will hold its semi-annual meeting this year in the Parkway Inn, Niagara Falls, N.Y., June 27, 28 and 29. The program of activities includes a tour of the Canadian and American falls area. The Commission's executive director, Colonel Leonard J. Goodsell, says: "The theme of our meeting is Multipurpose and International Use of Great Lakes Waters: (1) Water Resources Programs; (2) Navigation, Power, Recreation and Scenic Beauty, and (3) U.S.-Canadian Activities.

Our objective is to demonstrate the very wonderful things that can be done to develop our water resources, while assuring their wise use and conservation for the benefit of all who use and are interested in the water resources. We are especially fortunate in having Niagara Falls of the U.S. and Canada available to us. Here we can very quickly and conveniently view outstanding developments in the multipurpose and international use of the water resources of the Great Lakes basin . . .

The agenda for June 27 includes committee meetings to discuss the St. Lawrence Seaway, navigation and commerce.

In the United States several waterways have been developed since the second world war. Some of the major navigation inland waterways in the United States are the Mississippi River system, the Missouri River system and the Ohio River navigation system. All these inland waterways have brought tremendous benefits to the communities along the way. Travel on inland waterways in the following European countries, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the Netherlands and the U.S.S.R., has greatly increased in the last 25 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member's time has expired, unless there is agreement for him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the consent of the house to continue. Order. There was a joint mistake made between the table and the chair. The hon. member has additional time available to him.

Mr. Stefanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought I was allowed 20 minutes.

[Mr. Stefanson.]

The Moselle Waterway, a 170-mile link between the steel producers of Lorraine and the Rhine, was officially opened in 1963. The construction of this waterway was an engineering feat of some note and the cost was shared by three countries, France, West Germany and Luxembourg. This inland waterway enabled the French steelmakers to ship steel to prospective customers in southern Germany more cheaply than before. It also enabled them to bring in coal by barge from the Ruhr area and from Holland and this means lower freight rates. This inland waterway is helping the economies of the three participating countries.

The proposed inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton is approximately 1,200 miles long. The type of waterway I have in mind, suitable for tugs and barges to use, would not require any great depth of water and would therefore not require any great amount of digging. Every power development creates a lake; I am thinking of the power developments at Grand Rapids and at Squaw Rapids. The formation of these lakes should make navigation easier. There will be locks needed at the dam. From an engineering point of view there should be no problem about making this inland waterway a reality.

During the past year, construction of a pulp and paper mill at Prince Albert has been started and another pulp and paper mill and a forest products plant are under construction at The Pas, Manitoba. Some time in the future, another pulp and paper mill may be established at Grand Rapids.

At the present time Marine Transport hauls pulpwood by tug and barge to the pulp and paper mill at Pine Falls. Some of the pulpwood is hauled in from north of Norway House on the Nelson River. The Selkirk Silica Sand Company hauls silica sand from Black Island in Lake Winnipeg to Selkirk where the sand is processed. It is logical to suppose that eventually there will be a glass factory established alongside the sand processing plant. Under the ARDA-FRED agreement, there will be an industrial park established in Selkirk. In considering the future development of Selkirk, one must not discount the possibility that some day Selkirk may be situated on a great inland waterway. At the present time most of the lake traffic on Lake Winnipeg funnels out from Selkirk. In the future water traffic may greatly increase and become far more important than it has been in the past. No doubt an inland waterway could be established from Lake Winnipeg to the Great Lakes. This is the route which the explorers travelled.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I can also visualize a waterway from Lake Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. With power development now taking place on the Nelson River, consideration should be given to the possibility of making the Nelson River into a navigable waterway. If these waterways become a reality then Selkirk will become a busy inland seaport.

Recently I had the privilege of attending the official opening of the new melt facilities at the Manitoba rolling mills in Selkirk. These new, modern facilities cost the company over $9 million. The modernization of this plant is an indication that this company has faith in Manitoba and in the town of Selkirk. Also recently I attended sod-turning ceremonies for the distillery which the House of Seagram is building at Gimli, Manitoba. The establishing of this distillery at Gimli involves an expenditure of $10 million. This is an indication that the House of Seagram has faith in Manitoba and in the town of Gimli.

Lake Winnipeg is by far the largest producer of fresh water fish in western Canada. The fish are brought in by boat to the fishery plants at Gimli, Selkirk and Winnipeg. Canadian forces base Gimli is a very active base where jet pilot training is carried out. Indications are that this base will be active for many years to come. The Pan-American sailing races are being held at Gimli this summer. I merely point these things out, Mr. Speaker, to show that business has confidence in this area of Manitoba and that exciting things are already taking place.

I urge the government to take steps to ascertain the transportation needs of western Canada for the next 10, 20 or 30 years. I am personally convinced that the time will come when inland waterways will become an important part of our transportation needs. Perhaps the government will prefer to conduct a study of the whole water system in western Canada, including source and supply, conservation, power development and inland waterways. If the government is prepared to do this I will be satisfied provided such a survey or study is initiated at an early date.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to assure my good friend that I do not intend to ridicule his idea. On the contrary, the hon. member is to be commended for his perseverance in bringing up again the subject of the motion under discussion which was debated in the house, as he stated, on June 1, 1966.

This motion, which requests the government to give consideration to the advisability of establishing an inland waterway from Winnipeg through Selkirk to Edmonton via the Red River, Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River was first placed on the order paper in March, 1962. Even older than the hon. member's motion of 1962 is an engineering survey of this project which was first made by the Department of Public Works more than half a century ago, in the years 1910 to 1914. Then, of course, the first great war broke out and the scheme was abandoned for the duration of the war. Afterwards other things happened to curb the enthusiasm of those who favoured the idea at that time. It is quite conceivable that if the first world war had not intervened the scheme envisaged by those involved in that study might have had a chance of receiving serious consideration by the government of the day.

The report of the 1910-1914 engineering survey, based upon a minimum of six feet of water at mean low water levels from Lake Winnipeg to Edmonton, estimated that the cost would be in the order of $6,200,000 for dredging and channel improvement, and for other improvements $14,565,591, making a total of $20,765,591.

I believe I mentioned in my previous speech on this motion the plan of Mr. John R. MacNichol, former M.P. His plan was to make the old fur trade route navigable for coal and oil transport, something which the hon. member for Selkirk seems to be advocating also or, in other words, that this particular plan be revived. Another interesting scheme suggested by a Professor Hind of the University of Toronto in the 1870's was to pipe water across the prairies to the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina, which would have meant the construction of a dam and a diversion of the Elbow River, with the possibility in mind of travelling by boat all the way from Winnipeg to Calgary.

However, none of these schemes materialized, and in 1961 the premier of Manitoba requested a review of the information obtained in the survey which was made before 1914. At this time the review concerned the engineering and economic problems associated with the canalization of the Saskatchewan River to determine the justification for a detailed engineering survey, including field investigation, preliminary design and, of course, cost estimates.

Establishment of Inland Waterway

The 1961 survey concluded that there would not be a sufficient volume of traffic to provide significant transportation savings to set against the heavy capital and operational costs which would be involved for the federal government in the construction of such a waterway. I venture to say that the 1961 survey holds true today. The road and rail transportation systems now in existence would appear to be capable of meeting foreseeable future requirements.

When this transportation system was first suggested the prairie provinces did not have the facilities which exist today. At that time the railway and the waterways were the main transportation systems. The trans-Canada highway now provides a direct first class route for interprovincial truck and passenger traffic, and our air lines offer excellent passenger, freight and air express service between all major points.

Although the 1910-1914 engineering survey was confined to the route from Edmonton to Winnipeg and did not investigate the potential of the South Saskatchewan for navigation, it is still considered adequate for determining the order of magnitude of the costs involved in developing either or both the north and south branches of the Saskatchewan River for navigation purposes.

The engineering survey of 1914, as I stated before, estimated the cost of providing navigation facilities from Edmonton to Lake Winnipeg at approximately $20 million. In 1961 the revised costs, based on the original plan, had sky-rocketed to an estimated $100 million. I shall leave it to my hon. friend to imagine the cost six years later.

• (5:30 p.m.)

It is extremely doubtful that present circumstances would result in a substantial downward revision of these costs. It was stated that the 1961 estimated cost of $100 million could possibly be $250 million if the project was completed today. It might be noted that one estimate is in respect of a navigation route using the North Saskatchewan River and that the other is in respect of a navigation route using the South Saskatchewan River. However, the review carried out in 1961 for the previous minister of northern affairs and national resources found that it was reasonable to assume that a minimum cost to develop a navigation route originating either on the North or South Saskatchewan river and ending at Lake Winnipeg would be in the neighbourhood of $100 million and could possibly be $250 million. It naturally follows that if the expenditure of the estimated $100 million cannot be justified on the basis of potential transportation savings, any further studies conducted at the present time are not warranted.

In 1961 the estimated cost was $100 million to $250 million, and if the lower figure is amortized on a 50-year basis, having in mind the economic factors which are involved, the equivalent annual costs, including interest and amortization, would be some $5,500,000. On the higher figure of $250 million the annual costs would be $13,750,000. Neither of these amounts includes maintenance or operating expenses.

The estimated physical capacity of the locks in the proposed system would possibly be nine million tons of freight annually. This assumption is made on the basis of equal traffic in both directions, which is highly improbable. It appears that by far the greatest volume of traffic that would move on such a waterway would be bulk cargoes such as coal, petroleum products and grain. These would be the main cargoes on the waterway during the estimated seven-month season and, as I said before, these main cargoes would probably move from west to east with little apparent backhaul traffic in sight.

With the estimated physical capacity of the locks set at nine million tons of freight annually, and the greater portion of the freight moving eastward, it would be possible to handle only 4.5 million tons one way. This figure is based on continual operation of the locks during the seven-month season. Therefore a more realistic figure on the capacity of the system would be approximately three million tons a year.

The future estimated requirements of the Manitoba Hydro-Electric Power Board for coal during the next 10 to 20 years are approximately one million tons annually. This is based on the assumption that natural gas would not provide a cheaper B.T.U. base. In view of the recent announcement in this house that a second natural gas line will commence construction shortly, a move which could eliminate the Hydro-Electric Power Board's need for coal to a bare minimum, the expected revenue from the transportation of coal could be eliminated.

I wonder whether the hon. member has heard of the study and research being conducted in respect of the movement of wheat and other commodities from western Canada by pipe line. I regret that I do not have the figures showing the amount involved in this research but it is substantial. I venture to say that eventually pipe line transportation will be a major factor in covering the costs of moving merchandise over the long distances which we have in Canada.

Incidentally, according to figures the cost of transporting coal by rail compared with barge movement is as follows: For barge movement the cost per ton of coal is $3.65. In addition to the hauling of the barges there would be the cost of taking the coal from the mine to the water terminal, loading at the terminal, and carrying the five-month inventory at the power station for use in the winter months. While there are no definite figures on the cost of these operations they would probably total as much as the cost of the barge movement itself for an over-all total in the order of $6 to $7 per ton.

The present rail cost for a corresponding haul from pithead to power plant is estimated at $6 to $7 per ton. As hon. members can see there is little if any margin in favour of transporting coal by water rather than by rail in so far as Manitoba Hydro is concerned. Therefore the movement of coal by water might not occur at all, and even if it did coal would make no appreciable contribution in terms of transportation savings. The result would be that the savings which are necessary to justify the large capital outlay would need to be found in other traffic.

In so far as grain and petroleum products are concerned, there is nothing at present which indicates that the proposed water system would be competitive with present rail rates for grain and petroleum products moving eastward.

In summing up I might say that on the basis of these preliminary studies there would appear to be little justification for expenditures on works in the order of $100 million to $250 million in the interests of navigation on the Saskatchewan River. Hence it would seem doubtful that there is any reason to quarrel with the 1961 finding which was that a large outlay on engineering investigations is probably not warranted at this time. If it should be considered desirable some day to pursue the matter further, it is believed that studies should be made first of all on the economic side which would involve a more detailed analysis of traffic potential.

It may seem unpleasant to have to be realistic and dash cold water on such a romantic suggestion as a waterway through the heart of our great prairies. It would be much more pleasant to be able to agree with Professor Edward Kuiper of the University of Manitoba who, in a paper prepared for the 1961 Resources for Tomorrow Conference, said that a similar development would turn Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta into "The Garden of Eden of North America."

Dr. Kuiper was of course referring not only to a waterway but to a full irrigation system that could be developed with it. Such a system, he said, would mean the end of drought for all time in the prairie provinces.

Dr. Kuiper's proposals were more ambitious than those of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). He also suggested the canalization of the Nelson River in northern Manitoba. Such a development, he said, would make it possible some day for Winnipeg residents to travel by boat deep into the heart of Alberta and for a change come back by a different route, through the Saskatchewan wheat fields to Hudson Bay. He said it would be a simple matter from a technical viewpoint to build ship locks in conjunction with future dams on the Saskatchewan and Nelson Rivers.

However, the results of the preliminary investigations I have described indicate, I believe, that although it may be simple from a technical viewpoint the capital expenditures involved would be very considerable, while the economic justification has not been firmly established in any of the investigations that have been carried out to date.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Badanai: I have only one sentence to complete my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member suggests he has only one sentence left. Is it agreed that he be allowed to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, for allowing me to finish this brief dissertation on this very romantic project brought forward by my very good and genial friend, the hon. member for Selkirk. As I was saying, while the economic justification has not been firmly established by any of the investigations that have been carried out to date, this waterway is not beyond the realm of possibility. There is little evidence to indicate that the results of the review carried out by the previous government in 1961 do not still apply. Nevertheless, great changes have taken place in the prairie provinces in recent years in industrial and natural resources development, as well as in transportation. In view of this growth and development I would not want to suggest that the Winnipeg-Edmonton waterway will not be built some day, nor for that matter that even Dr. Kuiper's more extensive proposals will not be adopted or prove to be impossible in the light of future developments of the west. I visualize this great project as a very romantic one which should not be considered as one that will never come to fruition.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us simply calls upon the government to give consideration to the possibility of establishing a great new inland waterway, and it was well described by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). I simply rise to say, as I did about this time last year, that I have great pleasure in supporting the proposal. It might be thought, as it might have been thought about the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, that as I come from an area concerned with waterways I would not be the first one to get up and support a proposal to establish another waterway. I come from the western maritimes, the city of New Westminster on the lower mainland of British Columbia, but I think we should rise above regional considerations in this matter, particularly during centennial year. In the hope that the motion will come to a vote I shall take my seat, but I support the proposition that has been so well put before us.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I join the other speakers on this subject this afternoon who have said that it is one of great interest, particularly because in this centennial year the feat of the voyageurs who travelled over the route under discussion in opening up this country is being re-enacted. To anyone who was born on the prairies and lived in the west and absorbed some of its history, that was an era of wonderful adventure for Canadians and marked the greatest era of discovery in our history. It was an era of discovery which involved a water system longer, I believe, than the St. Lawrence, certainly stretching over a greater area.

It is probably not well known in eastern Canada that the Saskatchewan river system stretches literally over all the prairie lands to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. It was on this great waterway that Alexander Mackenzie travelled in his voyages to discover a route to the Pacific. He arrived at Bella Coola and he painted on the side of a rock at that site the words "Alexander Mackenzie from Canada. By land. July 22, 1793."

It is interesting to consider his voyage from Montreal and the meaning of this waterway and its development in the terms which have been outlined by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). We can follow this waterway again today with Mackenzie in order to gain some comprehension as to what its development could mean to the west and commercial traffic throughout that area. Alexander Mackenzie travelled from Montreal to the prairies. As I understand the history of his voyage it began above Lachine Rapids. His party moved in canoes up the Ottawa River. These canoes were approximately 30 to 35 feet in length. They were manned by six to eight men and carried freight loads weighing two, three or four tons. These canoes were known in the eastern section of this nation as "canot maître," or master canoe.

Alexander Mackenzie travelled the Ottawa River route rather than the St. Lawrence because of the difficulties with rapids he would have encountered. He negotiated the Chaudière Falls and travelled above them on the Ottawa River to the Mattawa River. He then followed the Mattawa River to Lake Nipissing. He crossed Lake Nipissing and after portaging coasted down the French River to Georgian Bay. He went along the north shore of Georgian Bay following the canoe route to the north of Manitoulin Island and working his way westward he passed through the Straits of Mackinac and crossed lake Superior to the head of the lakes and what was known in those days as Grand Portage. This was the route that Radisson and Groseilliers had travelled in 1650. It was the route along which Marquette and Joliet had travelled on their original voyage of discovery to the headwaters of the Mississippi in 1673 and the same route over which LaSalle had gone when he made his voyage in 1682 across to the headwaters of the Mississippi and down that great river to its mouth.

Having reached Grand Rapids let us pause for a moment to think of the feats of these voyageurs as they opened up the country. They made this trip involving approximately 36 portages from Montreal to the head of the lakes, some of them up to two miles in length, carrying canoes and loads on their backs of 200 pounds. One traveller who went with them tells of voyageurs who were loaded down with 200 pounds of freight on their backs, jigging along portages which caused these people to drop. These travellers wrote in their diaries that they could hardly keep up with the pace. They made these voyages in 35 to 40 days. There is an incident of a letter being taken from Montreal on May 6, 1817 and arriving at Grand Portage on June 3 in a canoe which was really an express canoe, not loaded with freight as the others were. This shows the speed at which mail and light freight could be portaged by these voyageurs as they moved westward.

From Grand Portage they moved through the maze of lakes, which was a very complicated process, through the wilderness leading to the prairies, and then took the route along Rainy River into Rainy Lake and thence into Lake of the Woods. Then they came to the mouth of the Winnipeg River leading into Lake Winnipeg. This was the historic route which La Vérendrye and his sons had taken in 1731 when they moved across that country and out into the prairies for the first time. I might say they were not the first white people on the prairies because Henry Kelsey of the Hudson's Bay Company had gone there before coming down the northern route in 1690. At that time he went to the north end of Lake Winnipeg and into the mouth of the Saskatchewan River.

It is interesting to consider the long history of that river and its importance in the development of early Canada. In the early part of the eighteenth century these voyageurs were moving in considerable numbers west of Grand Portage or west of the head of the lakes, trans-shipping at this point into somewhat smaller canoes, the "canots du nord", or northern canoes. These were light canoes which could carry one or two tons of freight and were operated by a smaller crew. They were manned by the elite of the voyageurs who at that time, in the middle of the eighteenth century, were moving far across the Canadian west. They followed a course up Lake Winnipeg, across Cedar Lake into the mouth of the Saskatchewan River and along the Saskatchewan River to the forks. They took the line of the North Saskatchewan from the forks and moved on to where the city of Edmonton now is and beyond. Then there were a series of portages and they made their way over into the Athabasca and coasted down the Athabasca to Slave lake where Fort Chippewa was established.

It was at Fort Chippewa that Alexander Mackenzie wintered during his historic voyage to the west. He tells in his diaries how imperative it was to the voyageur of that day in making the trip between the opening up of the rivers in the springtime and freeze-up in the fall to meet the rugged schedule from Montreal to the Great Lakes, thence across to the prairies and across the prairies to Fort Chippewa. There was little time to waste and little time to do anything else except bend to the paddle if they were to make it in time to winter at Fort Chippewa. To those who were left on the prairies during those harsh winters it was indeed a rough experience and often one which resulted in the death of these brave and intrepid men. Mackenzie broke camp in the spring and began his journey up the Peace River, taking the fork southward along the Parsnip River and made his way into the headwaters of the Fraser. Then he went down the Fraser river past where the cities of Prince George and Quesnel now stand and made his way across country to Bella Coola where he chalked his name on the rocks.

Mr. Rapp: Don't talk it out.

Mr. Deachman: This was the historic route which he and the great voyageurs of that day travelled. Looking at this river system one sees no reason why, as time evolves and the need for prairie transportation develops, it should not be used for this purpose.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 29, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

MESSAGES OF CONGRATULATION FROM COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform hon. members that messages have been received from a number of commonwealth parliaments extending congratulations and good wishes to the House of Commons and to Canada on the occasion of our centennial.

These messages have been addressed to the house by the New Zealand House of Representatives, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Australian parliament, the House of Representatives of Trinidad and Tobago, the National Assembly of Basutoland, the House of Representatives of Ceylon and the National Assembly of Kenya.

I know hon. members will want me to reply expressing our thanks to our colleagues in the commonwealth legislatures for their generous communications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MRS. ARTHUR MEIGHEN

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of the wife of the late distinguished prime minister of Canada, Mrs. Arthur Meighen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GRÉGOIRE—REQUEST THAT RECORDS SHOW MOTION ADOPTED ON DIVISION

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with regard to the accuracy of the Votes and Proceedings of this house, and I do so both in my interest and in the interest of all members of this house.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, a motion for the presentation of an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty Elizabeth II was agreed to. That motion was passed by the House of Commons, but only on division, as I shall indicate in a few minutes. The fact that the motion was passed on division is not mentioned at all in the Votes and Proceedings of the Canadian House of Commons for its sitting of Wednesday, June 28, 1967, that is yesterday. And that is the correction I want to be made in the Votes and Proceedings.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, at the end of my remarks on this motion, as indicated in the last paragraph, I said:

> But as far as this motion is concerned, Mr. Speaker, if it is carried, I ask that it be on division.

Further on, the following words appear:

> Motion agreed to.
> Mr. Grégoire: On division.

Therefore, it is clear, and clearly stated in Hansard, Mr. Speaker.

Further, in the same text I had indicated a couple of times my objection to the motion. For instance, I said, as reported on page 2061 of Hansard, and I quote.

> If it is agreed to, I would like the words "on division" mentioned—

Further on I again stated:

> However, when the motion is presented and the words "on division" are mentioned, I beg Her Majesty the Queen of England to believe that I have nothing against her personally; on the contrary. I wish her a pleasant stay in Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a quantity of precedents showing that when a motion is passed on division it must be mentioned in the Votes and Proceedings. I have some examples here taken during this second session of the 27th parliament.

On page 71 of the Votes and Proceedings of May 25, 1967, we can read the following:

> On motion of Mr. Pennell, seconded by Mr. Trudeau, it was ordered, on division—that—

The words "on division" are mentioned. Why? Because we see on page 551 of Hansard of this year, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?
> Mr. Herridge: No.

Therefore, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) was the only one on that occasion to say "no" and the words "on division" were mentioned in the Votes and Proceedings. That is a precedent.

Therefore, knowing the hon. member for Kootenay West as I do and since his dissenting voice was registered in the Votes and Proceedings, when he was the only one to oppose the passing of a motion, I am sure that he will support my request to the effect that my opinion or my point of view should also be mentioned in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings.

I could also refer to the Votes and Proceedings of the sittting on Wednesday, June 7, and I quote:

> After debate, the said report was concurred in, on division—because an hon. member had mentioned "on division", as indicated in Hansard.

Another precedent can also be found in the Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, June 8, 1967, as well as in those of Friday, June 16, where the words "agreed to on division" or "passed on division" are again mentioned.

During the sitting of June 20 last, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) was the only member to oppose a motion moved by the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron), as reported on page 1711 of Hansard, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?
> Mr. Churchill: On division.

Now, the Votes and Proceedings for the same day indicated that the motion was carried on division.

Mr. Speaker, since the hon. members for Winnipeg South Centre and Kootenay West had the benefit of having their dissent recorded in the Votes and Proceedings, I should like to ask for the same privilege, the same right, with regard to the dissent I recorded yesterday to the motion, namely that a correction be made to yesterday's Votes and Proceedings, so as to show that the said motion was passed on division.

There are also other precedents, Mr. Speaker. If we refer to the standing orders of the house, we find that there is no specific section in the standing orders of the House of Commons of Canada, and reference must be made to the standing orders of the house of commons in London. Now, Mr. Speaker, it can be seen that in the British parliament, the mother of parliaments, where first appeared parliamentary life as we know it today, there are currently independent members from Scotland and Wales, and their rights and privileges are respected in fact, everyone makes it a point to respect them.

Well, that is a precedent that must be of considerable import for all those who, like me, have faith and believe in British parliamentary institutions.

Now, in closing, I should like to say that it was the opinion of all to vote an address yesterday. That is stated in the Votes and Proceedings, it is the opinion of all. But my own opinion, to the effect that it was passed on division has not been mentioned. To my mind, this must be corrected. Therefore, I ask you to see to it that this correction is made. The Speaker of the House of Commons, whether here or in London, is first and foremost the protector of the rights of the members and particularly of the minorities.

If there is a weak minority, a small minority in this house, Mr. Speaker, it is surely the member for Lapointe, because I am the only one who thinks in this way, and proof of this is that I was the only one to call "on division". In the circumstances, being the weakest of all minorities in this house, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to perform your duty towards me, to protect my rights and privileges, and to insert in the Address and in the Votes and Proceedings that this motion was passed on division. If you want my name to be recorded, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises an interesting point of procedure and I can assure him that I will not fail to consider it. I have taken due note of his suggestions. He suggests that this dissent, the fact that he objected yesterday to the motion introduced must be recorded in the Votes and Proceedings. He is requesting that this be done also with regard to the Address. In my opinion, there is no question of recording as an appendix to a resolution passed by this house the dissent or the refusal of an hon. member, even of a minority group of hon. members. The hon. member might have a point which deserves to be considered as far as the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons are concerned, and again I assure him that I will be pleased to study the suggestion he has just made.

Mr. Grégoire: May I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this will be reported in today's Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can only conclude that his representations will be considered.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Second report of standing committee on justice and legal affairs—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REARRANGEMENT OF PREVIOUSLY ANNOUNCED ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the house of a rearrangement in the business for the next two days in an endeavour to meet the convenience of a number of hon. members.

We shall begin today with the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, as was previously indicated. If these are completed we will then take the estimates of the Department of Public Works, except in the eventuality that the estimates of the Department of National Revenue are completed early in the afternoon, in which case we will take the estimates of the Department of National Defence until the end of the afternoon sitting and then go on with the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will begin with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, a course which I think will meet with the agreement of hon. members in view of the statement that will be made tonight by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Tuesday we will continue with the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

FINANCE

MEASURE TO REPLACE EXISTING CUSTOMS TARIFFS

Mr. Steven Otto (York East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-144, respecting customs tariffs.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, I am always apprehensive about introducing a bill which contains a very radical idea. I have learned that reform should be undertaken by very gentle measures. However, this bill introduces a new concept of export-import parity in place of the old idea of tariff control. In my usual style it would repeal all the old act and replace it with a brand new measure.

The purpose of the bill is to do away with tariffs as a punitive measure to restrain the importation of goods into Canada. Instead the bill introduces a system by which the amounts formerly paid to the government by importers by way of penalty will be directed to Canadian exporters as an incentive.

In dealing with Canada's balance of trade with other nations this bill discards the old assumptions that the sale of natural resources could validly be considered as part of a favourable balance of trade on the part of Canada, and adopts a new proposition that if Canada is to maintain a trade balance with other nations it must be done on the basis of equating dollar labour contents of goods imported with the dollar labour content of goods exported.

Motion agreed to and bill read first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF SITTING TO ENABLE MEMBERS TO GREET HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, and I do not think there will be any division in this regard even on behalf of petty puppets who try to use parliament for their own purposes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister agree that the opportunity should be given members of this House of Commons to be present this afternoon at the arrival of Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip? I think this would be a very proper step to take, and one which should receive general support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion made by my right hon. friend, which also was made yesterday by my hon. friend from Red Deer.

I looked into the matter this morning, and I find that an invitation to be present at the arrival of Her Majesty the Queen was sent to hon. members. They were asked to reply stating whether they would be able to do so and, in the event that they were, they would be sent tickets and accommodation would be reserved for them at the airport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

The replies indicated, Mr. Speaker, that there would be a great many members left to carry on the business of the house. I shall be glad, however, to see whether we can give some further consideration within the next few minutes to the suggestion made by the right hon. gentleman. I know it is important also that we get on with the business of the house, but it might be possible to combine the suspension of our sittings on this occasion with the addition of an hour or so later on so we would not lose any time.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the government house leader. I refer to the announcement he made earlier that after the orders of the day we will proceed with the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, followed by those of the Department of National Defence. Some hon. members who are interested in participating in the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Defence have planned to go to the airport to meet Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh. I am sure even the Minister of National Defence plans to do likewise. In order that hon. members who wish to speak on this topic will not be deprived of the opportunity to do so, would the house leader consider calling the estimates of another department?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point made by the hon. gentleman and will be glad, if the estimates of the Department of National Revenue are passed, to call the estimates of another department after I have had a word with the other house leaders.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would consider, instead of going on with the estimates of another department, adjourning the house so that everyone will be given an opportunity to meet Her Majesty the Queen on her arrival at the airport.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest that we take some time off tomorrow. My hon. friend the government house leader will discuss this matter with the house leaders of the other parties. Then hon. members will be able to take part in the ceremonies in front of the parliament buildings. They would be finished around four o'clock, I think, and we could then start again and perhaps continue for an extra hour.

I feel it would perhaps be desirable to recess this afternoon, say at 4.30, so those hon. members who wish to go out to the airport may do so, on condition that we work later tonight on our return to the house. But in the rearrangement of our work we should not forgo private members' hour. Four thirty might be a little too late; we had better make it four o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: We could adjourn from four o'clock to seven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The suggestion made is that the house suspend its sitting from four o'clock until seven o'clock and resume at seven o'clock. Is it understood that from seven o'clock to eight o'clock tonight will be private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister not consider giving up private members' hour tonight and holding it over until later? I expect little will be accomplished in that hour this evening anyway?

Mr. Pearson: I think we ought to keep private members' hour today. There is a bill we would like to have looked at during that hour. If we could dispose of that bill in say half an hour we could then go on with public business.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—INQUIRIES AND STATEMENTS ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the other question I have for the Prime Minister has to do with the suggestion made a couple of days ago that there might be the possibility of a discussion between King Hussein and the Prime Minister particularly with reference to the position of the Arab refugees. Is it possible that such a meeting might take place? If not, would the Prime Minister give more particulars than the generalities we have had to date concerning the extent to which Canada is prepared to accept refugees?

Second, because King Hussein is king of that portion of Jerusalem which has now been taken over by Israel administratively and municipally, will the Prime Minister say whether Canada supports the stand taken by Israel that the entire city of Jerusalem should fall under the jurisdiction of Israel, a claim which I think is reasonable under all the circumstances.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think there are three questions with which I have been asked to deal. The first concerns a possible discussion with King Hussein, who is in the United States at the present time, and who I understand is leaving for his homeland tomorrow evening. It has been impossible to arrange a meeting between King Hussein, myself and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who are in Ottawa. However, our ambassador to the United Nations has seen the ambassador from Jordan in New York and will be seeing King Hussein himself tomorrow in New York to talk with him, on behalf on the government, before he returns to Jordan.

So far as the question of refugees is concerned, I can only reiterate what I have already indicated; that is, Canada is willing to play her full part in any international effort to liquidate this problem, which consists of more than one aspect. I cannot be definite with regard to the number of people we would be willing to accept into Canada as part of a United Nations scheme until discussions have proceeded much farther than they have at the present time.

So far as the situation in respect of Jerusalem is concerned, this is a matter which also, as I have said, is under consideration. Our view has been made quite clear that there should be some international control and supervision of the holy places in Jerusalem. We would certainly regret any unilateral action taken by Israel or anyone else which would make this difficult, let alone impossible.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the assistance being given to refugees by UNRWA is temporary and cannot do more than keep them alive, which is what has been done during the last 19 years, is any initiative being taken by Canada at the United Nations to see whether it is possible for that body to undertake a program for placing these refugees? This would involve not only Israel and Arab countries accepting a proportion of them, but also the United Nations contributing a substantial capital sum to compensate these countries for accepting these refugees.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the matter which is being discussed and which indeed has often been discussed in the last ten or 15 years. The hon. member's remarks underline that the problem is threefold, the solution to which Israel, the Arab states and the outside world will have to contribute. It is on that basis that we have approached the matter in New York with other nations.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING RECONSTRUCTION AND COMPLETION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask whether any approach has been made to the Canadian government by the government of the United States, or whether there has been any consultation in recent months between these two governments, regarding the reconstruction and completion of the Alaska highway. I ask this question now because of a bill which was introduced yesterday in the United States Senate which would authorize the United States government to pay half the cost of paving and rebuilding that part of the highway not yet completed.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive notice of this question so I can only speak from memory. I do not believe there have been any recent consultations or initiatives taken as far as we are concerned, but I will be glad to look into this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say by way of supplementary answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Red Deer that at the recent meeting between Canadian and United States ministers the question of the Alaska highway was discussed. I have not had a chance as yet to examine the record in this regard, so I was not aware of this, but my colleague the Minister of Finance has just informed me of this fact.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TELEVISION

TORONTO, ONT.—REPORTED APPROVAL OF ADDITIONAL OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. A few moments ago it was brought to my attention that the B.B.G. has given approval to the moving of the Barrie television station to metropolitan Toronto. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman, would the government or the cabinet not just rubberstamp this approval but consider all the aspects and implications of this move to residents of metropolitan Toronto.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows of course that the Board of Broadcast Governors is the agency which makes decisions in respect of these matters according to the law, and it would be a very serious matter for the government to interfere with a decision of that board.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister why it was that the cabinet did interfere on a previous occasion. Was it because the proper people were not receiving the licence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: I am reminded that this fact merely underlines what I have said.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was the only time it was ever done. You did it, and it was not proper then.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PROPOSED CHILDREN'S REHABILITATION CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, regarding the attempt of Dr. Gingras to establish a children's rehabilitation centre in South Viet Nam. In view of the fact that the Canadian government has offered to provide facilities to the government of South Viet Nam, and that so far this offer has not been accepted, is the government of South Viet Nam now offering to provide these facilities and, if not, has any reason been given?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I had a talk with Dr. Gingras about a month ago regarding the question of the proposed rehabilitation centre for South Viet Nam. We have also had discussions with the Red Cross with respect to Canadian assistance in this area. This body has not yet found it possible to take final decisions.

We have accepted a proposal of Dr. Gingras that a doctor named by him should proceed to South Viet Nam to examine the matter further. Our own doctor, Dr. Vennema, has proposed consideration of a children's rehabilitation centre outside Saigon. It may be possible to do this, but we are waiting for a report.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the apparent reluctance on the part of the government of South Viet Nam due to the fact, as the minister's parliamentary secretary suggested some time ago, that the government of South Viet Nam is insisting that this be a military hospital rather than a rehabilitation centre for disabled children?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen what the parliamentary secretary said in that regard. I hope my hon. friend is not seeking to get me to say something that would appear to be contradicting what the parliamentary secretary said. I would prefer simply to say that I believe the proposal recently made by Dr. Gingras for an examination of this question further by a doctor to be named by him is perhaps the most practical way of trying to resolve the problem.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Has the government given consideration to using a specially outfitted hospital ship for this purpose, which could get there in a hurry and move from place to place?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has given consideration to that and has concluded it would not be a practical way of meeting the problem.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us if this doctor representing Dr. Gingras, and presumably the Canadian government, will himself be making representations to the government of South

Viet Nam, or has the government of Canada made representations to the government of South Viet Nam through the government of the United States?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government of the United States, of course, has nothing to do with this particular problem. The doctor in question will be seeing our representatives in Saigon. He will make whatever representations are needed.

AGRICULTURE

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHERN COUNTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, in view of the reference to this matter by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during our discussion of recent legislation I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Has the government yet completed its study of the report of the task force on the nine northern counties of Nova Scotia and, if so, when does the minister or the government expect to take some action in this regard?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the report of this task force has been ready for a couple of months. It has been studied by the government of Nova Scotia and we are to have a meeting later in July to discuss the implementation of the task force report.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF PENSION UNDER JUDGES ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The purpose of the question is to seek clarification of statements made yesterday during an exchange between the minister and the hon. member for Bow River. Is Mr. Leo Landreville now in receipt of a pension under the Judges Act?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this question should be addressed to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence may I address it to the Minister of Finance who reports to the house for the Canadian Wheat Board. I have a telegram from an elevator agent who reports that his elevator at Nokomis, Saskatchewan, is filled with wheat and there are no box cars available for shipments to make room for grain still on farms. Will the minister make inquiries into the complaint that there is a great shortage of grain cars on C.N.R. lines?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to point out to the hon. member that the wheat board is now in the capable hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the question on that basis, but I will take it as notice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister any further word for the house on when we may expect the long promised Indian claims commission to be set up?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have some information from British Columbia. They asked us to postpone the introduction of this measure until such time as they had had a discussion on the land question in British Columbia. I have received no information yet. But I think we shall have to make up our minds very quickly whether we are going to wait much longer before giving some indication of introducing the Indian claims commission legislation.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ISSUE OF MEDALLIONS TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) asked yesterday what measures the centennial commission intended to take so that all Quebec school children would receive the centennial medallion by July 1.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I am advised by the centennial commission that the province of Quebec had asked and received medallions in sufficient quantities for distribution to all schools. The centennial service of the province of Quebec, according to the instructions of the department of education has sent a letter to all the regional and local school boards and independent schools, with an application form.

Out of the 2,049 institutions contacted, 1,524 had answered by June 19, by filling out the form, and the centennial service had shipped 1,467,410 medals. The centennial service is prepared to satisfy all new requests from school boards and independent schools which have not yet made their intention known. If the stock of medallions on hand in the Quebec centennial service is insufficient, the commission has undertaken to make up the difference.

UNITED NATIONS

INCLUSION OF MAINLAND CHINA IN NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the almost imminent agreement between the United States and the Soviet union on the proposals to be laid before the 18-member nuclear disarmament conference, is the government of Canada now giving consideration to advocating the inclusion of mainland China in further discussions on this very important matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the view of the government that mainland China should participate in international disarmament discussions. When it was proposed a year and a half ago that there should be a world disarmament conference, Canada repeatedly suggested that mainland China should be invited.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to say whether or not the government is giving consideration now to advocating the inclusion of China in the present discussions taking place at Geneva.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As we and other governments have made known, notably the governments of Britain and the United States, we would hope that not only the countries participating in the 18-power meeting but also all countries including China and other countries having a nuclear capacity would join in adhering to the non-proliferation agreement which we hope will be agreed to at the 18-power meeting.

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INFORMATION RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the acting minister of industry, and I have just discovered who he is.

Mr. Knowles: The minister himself is here.

Mr. Herridge: I did not notice the minister coming in. I ask this question at the request of a number of chambers of commerce and other persons interested in the development of industry in the interior of British Columbia. While I fully appreciate the personal efforts of the Minister of Industry to inform people of the role of his department, would he take advantage of the first opportunity to advise the house of his policy with respect to officials of his department informing chambers of commerce and other groups of the role of his department and particularly of the operation of the Area Development Incentives Act?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is suggesting that the minister make a statement, but this can only be done on motions.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, with all respect, if the minister does not wish to make a statement now could he revert to motions later and do so at that time?

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACCIDENTAL ADDITION OF ARSENIC COMPOUND TO WATER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can he give the house any information on the reported intrusion into the waters of Teakerne Arm on the west coast of 19 barrels of an arsenic compound and indicate what results this has had on the salmon and shellfish operations in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that this is the type of question that can be asked at the moment. I feel that this also is information which could be given by the minister on motions.

FINANCE

STATEMENT RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF 1967 COINS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, during my absence in Montreal last week the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary asked about the distribution of centennial coins in western Canada. Coinage demands are made on the Royal Canadian Mint through the Bank of Canada by the various chartered banks across the nation. These demands normally are based on the commercial coinage requirements in the various areas. I am advised that during the first five months of this year, issues of 1967 centennial coinage by the mint were 42 per cent larger than in the corresponding period of last year. Shipments of the new coinage to western Canada also show a substantial increase which is not far short of the national average.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Was his reference to shipments from the mint only in respect of actual demands from Canadian banks or are collectors' demands here and in the United States also included?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that these shipments are for commercial coinage purposes.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a further question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the use of centennial coinage in Canada. The minister gave me an answer with regard to regular commercial deliveries from the mint. I should like to draw his attention to the fact that this is new coinage as against old coinage. I wonder whether he has figures which would indicate not the newly minted coinage but the new centennial coinage as against coinage issued in other years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have gone as far as possible with this type of question. The hon. member has asked two supplementary questions and it seems to me the type of information for which he is asking in his second or third supplementary is perhaps a little too statistical in nature.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, may I say with deference that it has been pointed out over the last number of weeks that the issuing of new coinage as a centennial project is not being fulfilled. It is all very well to say that just as much as possible is being shipped to the west but the fact remains there is no centennial issue coinage in the west, and July 1 is imminent. This is why there is some urgency in my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation. This is no longer a question.

AGRICULTURE

ONTARIO—ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS IN HOLLAND MARSH AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I will address it to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Owing to the excessive rainfall during the past month resulting in severe crop damage and in some cases total loss, is the government considering a survey and assistance program for the farmers and also for the market gardeners in the Holland marsh area in Ontario?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Revenue for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, Vote No. 1. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 370 of the blue book and the details are listed on page 371.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

1. General administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from firms and individuals requiring special services, $59,720,000.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, these estimates have been considered in some detail in committee at which time I made a lengthy statement with regard to both the customs and excise and taxation divisions of my department. I do not wish to repeat in committee of supply the statement I made at that time but simply to point out two important changes which have taken place in the department in the last year. First of all, to provide better service to the public we will be setting up six regional offices of the customs and excise division over a period of two years. I believe the last one will be set up in late 1968. This will be done in order that rulings with regard to customs and excise may be more readily available to the importer and taxpayer.

One of the important changes which has taken place in the taxation division of the department in the past year is the reorganization of the head office. Formerly there was a deputy minister and only one assistant deputy minister. After consultation with the methods officials of the Public Service Commission it was decided the establishment would be changed to one deputy minister and three assistant deputy ministers. This change has been progressing and the department is now in the process of completing the reorganization. When this is done the taxation division will then contemplate some reorganization at the district taxation office level.

I should also mention, since the income tax appeal board item appears under my estimates, that the work load of the tax appeal board has been growing over the years, not because more people percentagewise are objecting to their tax assessments but because the number of taxpayers is growing. It is anticipated that the board will be asking for an increase in its membership some time later this year.

I should like to congratulate all of the officers in my department for the fine work they have done. I should point out that on the taxation side the cost of collecting $100 has consistently diminished over the years, from a high of $2.06 per $100 collected in 1950 down to the present day when it costs 85 cents for all administrative and other expenses to collect $100.

I would be most pleased to answer any questions that members may have on the various items in my estimates.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as the minister indicated, these estimates have been before the finance, trade and economic affairs committee where a number of questions were asked. It is unfortunate that we do not have the transcripts of the proceedings available to hon. members as this may bring forth some superfluous questions which have already been asked and answered in the standing committee.

I think that this could be an object lesson for the house leader in so far as his plan to rush through the estimates is concerned. If the idea is that estimates shall continue to be sent to the committees for examination, then they must not be brought back before the house until the administrative processes have had an opportunity to put into the hands of all hon. members the transcripts of the proceedings before those committees. Otherwise we are faced here with an exercise in frustration. Even those of us who are members of the committee cannot attend all sessions which are held, and we cannot be expected to remember all of the questions asked and the answers given. So the proceedings here are either a sort of gentle waltz or the other kind of waltz, in which case we will have a repetition of what has happened today.

I trust that the Minister of National Revenue will emphasize to his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who at the moment is otherwise occupied with other matters, that this is a fundamental point. Unless the transcripts of proceedings before committees which have examined estimates are put into the hands of members—I appreciate there is an obvious time lag because of administrative requirements—it is complete nonsense to call the estimates of a department for consideration by the committee of supply. We just waste our time.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, and without emphasizing it further, there are some questions I should like to ask the minister with regard to customs and excise and the proposed reorganization of the department in terms of decentralization. The minister indicated that there are to be six regions, 22 customs districts and 35 excise tax districts. First of all, I would appreciate knowing what these regions are and where the regional headquarters will be situated. If I hear the rumour rightly, Regina is being considered for western Canada. Without downgrading the city represented by my colleague from Regina City, I feel that administratively for customs and sales tax purposes Regina is one of our smaller centres and that in actual fact we could deal with Ottawa just as quickly as we could with Regina. As a matter of fact, I think Ottawa can be reached by mail just as quickly as Regina. Therefore I am wondering whether this move really makes sense. As I say, I do not want to downgrade Regina, but from the point of view of volume of business Regina is not one of our leading centres compared with Winnipeg, Calgary or Edmonton.

In the matter of customs districts, there again I should like to know where the headquarters of these customs districts will be located. Rumour has it that Calgary may be chosen over Edmonton for the province of Alberta. I believe the figures will show that the volume of business in Edmonton vis-à-vis customs and sales tax is greater than in Calgary. So why choose a city of lesser population and business volume as the district headquarters? There is very definitely a much greater population in the north central part of the province than in the south central portion. So why has Calgary been picked over Edmonton? Perhaps this is a local consideration, but I am sure that the same situation will be found elsewhere. Since these changes are being made I think the minister should tell us what is proposed to be done and the reason it is being done.

That is all I should like to say about customs and excise at this time. The questions I have asked have been answered to my satisfaction, but I am sure there are a number of my colleagues who want to question the minister about customs and excise matters. For reasons of continuity I will leave my remarks on the taxation division until we reach that point in the estimates.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to deal with the questions raised by my hon. friend. First of all, with respect to the customs and excise regional offices that are being established, the first one was established in London, Ontario. They are being established in certain locations not because of the volume of business in a particular area but rather because the place in question is a central point where contact with the rest of the area can best be made. There will be another one established in Vancouver, one for the prairie region in Regina, one in Toronto, one in Montreal with a sub-office in Quebec city, and one in Halifax for the maritimes.

With regard to the 22 district offices, I can give my friend the names if he wishes in a moment or two. Again these are locations which are close to a fairly large number of ports—importation points—and have not been chosen because of the volume of business in the particular area. The anticipated system of operation is that the ports will be in touch with the district office, and the district office with the regional office. This is why they are located in specific areas.

The officials in my department carefully studied the western provinces, about which my hon. friend was most concerned, before coming to the conclusion that the regional office should be established in Regina. I point out that this does not take anything away from any other port. We are really trying to establish these offices as sub-offices of the main Ottawa office so that information is closer at hand to those in a particular area. That is the sole purpose of these offices. It does not mean that we shall take people from Edmonton, for example, because we are establishing an office in Regina. The people in the Regina regional office will be head officer personnel, capable of giving information on the spot to those involved with them.

We entered into this operation after a test run of about one year's duration at London, Ontario. We found that the test worked successfully. We are pleased, and I believe the people in that part of Ontario are pleased, with the improved service that has come about because the regional office was established.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask a supplementary question? I do not know what the attraction is in London, Ontario—perhaps it is the United States border—but can the principle that applies to the London office be applied to offices in western Canada? The whole of the northwest operates out of and through Edmonton, Alberta. I am wondering whether there is to be a difference in opportunity for contact. That was the point I was concerned about. What about the northern points? Must they report to Calgary? While the principle may have applied to London, Ontario, I feel that it need not necessarily apply elsewhere. This is not like saying that what is good for General Motors is good for the United States and what is good for London, Ontario, is good for western Canada. That is not the point when it comes to communications. With regard to Edmonton and Calgary, it is just as easy to reach either centre by flying from Winnipeg or taking a train from Winnipeg or driving. The distances from Winnipeg are practically the same. I am wondering what principle should apply with regard to the district offices. If there is any downgrading, is it not true that a senior collector, say, from Edmonton will be transferred to Vancouver and that a junior collector from a lower level will be brought to Edmonton?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the criteria used by my department and its officials in choosing locations of offices were, first, that offices should be geographically central for a particular area. The Regina office, for example will also cover the whole of the prairie provinces. Second, communications were considered and the fact that a centre containing an office might be a provincial capital, because there is communication between provincial governments and my officials fairly consistently. Another criterion was the availability of accommodation. I think that people sometimes overemphasize the importance of a city having a regional office. The number of employees will not be great.

My hon. friend also mentioned the matter of travelling from northern Canada to the regional office in Regina. The idea is not to make taxpayers travel to Regina to be in touch with the regional office; rather, what needs to be done will be done through the local port which will then refer to the district office.

Mr. Lambert: My question really was with respect to the district offices.

Mr. Benson: The district offices will be in touch with the regional office. Our people from the regional office will, when necessary, travel to the district offices.

Mr. Lambert: Can the minister say where these district offices are to be?

Mr. Benson: I can indicate the present intention. We have not established those offices but I can tell the hon. member where it is intended to establish them. As I say, they have not been established yet except in Ontario. In that province they operate at Fort Erie, Hamilton, London, Niagara Falls, Sarnia and Windsor. The proposal for British Columbia is that they be established at Pacific Highway, Vancouver and Victoria. To cover north central Ontario, coming under the Toronto office, they would be at Ottawa, Sault Ste. Marie and, of course, Toronto.

Under the Halifax regional office present thinking is that district offices will be at Halifax, Saint John and St. John's. In Quebec, under the Montreal office, will be Lacolle, Montreal, Quebec, and Sherbrooke. In the prairie provinces, under the Regina regional office, would be Calgary, Regina and Winnipeg. These are the present plans for the establishment of district offices. A final determination has not been made and I shall be pleased to hear representations from my hon. friend or anyone else until the final decision is made. Suggestions for the locations of district offices have come from officials in the department and are based on their studies of the clustering of ports and how those ports can be best serviced through a district office.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the committee may I ask the minister to give a detailed explantion about the principle of the matter I am about to raise. For a long time it has seemed to me that different departments of government have differed in interpreting various statutes with regard to whether a man is married or single. That may sound a strange statement but I submit it is true. While some departments of government maintain that a man is married, under certain circumstances the Department of National Revenue, even though a man has a wife and dependants, says that for income tax purposes he is single. How does this differentiation come about? Income tax is the heaviest burden a man must bear. Why should the income tax authorities say that a married man who has a wife and children to support is under some circumstances single?

May I give an example to illustrate my meaning. Let us take the instance of a man born in Canada who marries a girl from the United States who is a divorcee with two children from her previous marriage. She comes to Canada with the two children and lives with her husband in Vancouver. From that marriage is born a third child. The family now consists of the natural born Canadian husband, his wife, and three children. For various psychological and other reasons the home breaks up and the wife with her three children goes back to her home in the United States. Her Canadian born husband supports her and the children by sending $200 a month. He has complete records from the bank of the money he sends her. He loses his job, goes to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, maintains that he is married, and the commission says to him: "Of course you are married; you have a wife and three dependant children. You are unemployed and therefore you will receive the married rate." The income tax authorities, on the other hand, say: "Oh, no, you may have a wife and three children but for income tax purposes you are single." How in the name of heaven a man with a wife and three children can be single is beyond me.

I went into this matter and found that according to income tax law deduction of his payments would be allowed provided a certificate were forthcoming from a family court. But in the case I have in mind officials of the family court tell me that no such certificate can be given because the wife and the three children are in the United States. In the absence of a court order, however, the Department of National Revenue rules that a Canadian with a wife and three children, to whom he is paying a regular amount each month, is not married despite the fact that there is ample proof of his married status. According to the unemployment insurance regulations he is married, but the income tax department says he is not.

Try to imagine what it means to a man in this position when he is treated by the revenue department as a single man. Did you ever see such a stupid position taken? Yet this is precisely the attitude taken in a case with which I am very familiar. Why do I know it so well? I have referred to the case of my eldest son. He is considered by the income tax authorities not to be married. But let no one try to tell me that my son is not married and does not have a wife and three dependants in the United States.

Mr. Benson: The answer is that the Income Tax Act does not determine whether a person is married or not; it indicates the circumstances in which a person is entitled to an exemption of $2,000 as having married status. That is what the act says.

If one is considering the position of a separated person, the act says that alimony or payments made in support of a family may be deducted when paid pursuant to a court order or a written separation agreement. This is the law as passed by parliament. It is the duty of my department not to make the law but to administer the law as this parliament in its wisdom has determined it should be.

Anyone who thinks that my department is not interpreting the law correctly has a right to appeal to the Tax Appeal Board, an independent body which sits all over the country. The appellant does not need to be represented by counsel. He can appear personally if he wishes and explain his case, and if the board decides that the department is acting improperly we are bound by its decision.

Mr. Winch: How can a person who is married and who has dependants be considered as not being married? How is it that under the unemployment insurance regulations he is considered to be married, while under income tax law he is not?

Mr. Benson: I would refer the hon. member to section 26(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act which sets out very clearly the circumstances in which a person is entitled to the $2,000 exemption in respect of married status. Incidentally, most of the information contained in that section is also given on the income tax form.

Mr. Hales: I have one or two brief observations to make concerning the estimates under discussion. The minister gave us some figures this afternoon in connection with the cost of collecting $100 of tax money and he told us that through the efforts of his department it had dropped from $2.06 to 85 cents. I give the hon. gentleman full credit for an efficiently run department. I have always felt that the Department of National Revenue was very efficiently run. But I think he was misleading the committee when he put forward those figures because a reduction in the cost of collection is brought about automatically as a result of the increased amounts of money we are collecting. In other words, instead of ten men collecting $1,000 the same ten men are collecting $2,000. The cost of collection is bound to go down. I did not want the minister to mislead the committee on that score, though I still give him full credit for running an efficient department.

Turning to another subject, I draw attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman's department is responsible for collecting Canada Pension Plan money. This brings me to the point I wish to make. As Minister of National Revenue he should collect all moneys which go to the federal government. He should be collecting unemployment insurance money, he should be collecting the Canada Pension Plan money, as he is now doing, he should be collecting any other moneys which are raised on behalf of the federal government. If this were the case, all the money would be going to one central place from which disbursements could then be made as necessary to the other departments. The result, I submit, would be greatly increased efficiency.

As things are now, businessmen find they must deal with various officials from different departments all of whom ask for the production of records and cause considerable duplication of effort. He must deal with inspectors interested in unemployment insurance payments, inspectors auditing his books in connection with Canada Pension Plan payments, inspectors who wish to examine payrolls and other records in connection with income tax. Why not get all these people together and make these audits in one operation?

Mr. Benson: I should like to make a slight correction. The Canada Pension Plan audit is done by officials in my department. They do the income tax audit as well.

Mr. Hales: I hope that is the case, but there is still the unemployment insurance question to deal with. Let us have one audit carried out at one time and get down to a business-like operation, which I am sure is what the minister wants.

I turn now to the money which is deducted in connection with the Canada Pension Plan. As hon. members know, overpayment of contributions by employees is taken into account and refunds are made. Employers, however, are not given any refund of overpayments they may have contributed. Many people find themselves in this category, for example, those who sit on county councils and are paid on a per diem basis. They are probably in business too, so they pay twice. I think also of people elected to city councils, of presidents of companies, and even of members of parliament who must often pay twice, here and at their place of business. Yet at the end of the year no refunds are made to employers although employees are given refunds when applicable.

The minister tells us from time to time that he and his officials have failed to devise a system whereby overpayments can be returned to employers. He says no refunds are made in the United States. But we are as smart as the people of the United States, if not smarter, and I see no reason for not coming up with a plan ahead of the United States. I refuse to accept that we are not smart enough to devise a scheme under which an employer would be credited with any overpayments made under the plan.

I feel keenly about this matter. It affects people in the construction business, in the restaurant business and particularly all those engaged in seasonal work. The fund has by now built up a balance of some $10 million or $12 million in overpayments, which is far from peanuts. It is up to the government to find a system whereby overpayments can be paid back to employers to whom they rightly belong.

Taxation—

5. General administration and district offices including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan, $57,833,900.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make certain observations in connection with the Canada Pension Plan. While the estimates rightly set out those portions of the costs attributable to the Canada Pension Plan which are recovered by the Department of National Revenue, and so form an offset to the expenses of the department, we still have to consider the total cost of the Canada Pension Plan. The distributive costs are given in the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. It would be helpful if full information were given in the estimates of either department by way of a summary of the total costs of the Canada Pension Plan. The minister has indicated that he is in agreement with this suggestion and I think it is important that it be done.

In the days when I was connected with this department the minister under whom I served had a tidy shop and the officials were very efficient administrators. At times difficulties were encountered with respect to sales tax or income tax in the interpretation or the issuing of regulations and bulletins to business. This has occurred and I believe it could have been avoided by more consultation with business. Last year instructions to business had to be withdrawn because they were not clear. More consultation would prevent such a situation occurring.

I am going to make one last plea to the minister that he should try to convince his colleague, the Minister of Finance, of the difficulties associated with terms payments for estate tax. This is a plea I have made year after year. My colleague from Wellington South has placed motions on the order paper dealing with this subject. As I say, it is an old problem and it is becoming more and more important that it be solved.

Possibly the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan may follow Alberta's example in remitting 75 per cent of the estate tax paid. But where this is not done in other jurisdictions something should be introduced to alleviate the hardship. It is all right to fix the estate tax assessment within the six-month period and have the return filed, but it should not be necessary to make full payment of the tax within that six months.

The people with whom the minister is dealing are honest. They are not trying to escape payment. I have never been able to see the rationality of insisting on full payment of estate tax within the six-month period. A move should be made to do away with that limited method.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, since it is just a couple of minutes before four o'clock and as there are several matters I wish to draw to the minister's attention, may I call it four o'clock?

The Chairman: Does the committee wish to rise now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BAIL REFORM

MEASURE TO PRECLUDE UNNECESSARY DETENTION

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, may I have the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions? It is for the purpose of sending a bill to the justice and legal affairs committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McNulty: By leave of the house, and with the consent of the hon. members for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) and Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro):

That the order for resuming debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-4, "an act concerning reform of the bail system," and on the motion proposed in amendment thereto, being order 121 under the heading "Public Bills" on today's order paper be discharged and that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), Fisheries—Ocean Traveller—chartering of vessel by research board; the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald), Transport—increase in ferry rates, New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island; the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), External Affairs—reported invitation to visit South-West Africa.

Pursuant to an order of the house made this day this sitting stands suspended until seven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

RAINBOW PIPE LINE CORPORATION

The house in committee on Bill No. C-105, to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation—Mr. Orange—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting bill, as we said when it first came before us for consideration a year ago. Since the committee heard the evidence in respect of this measure we are doubly sure that we were right. We do not suggest there should not be a pipe line from the Rainbow Lake area to the refinery. All we are suggesting is that such a pipe line to carry these commodities should not be owned by three or four private oil companies.

This bill was referred to the transportation committee and, although I did not have the opportunity of attending its meetings, I have read the evidence which was made available only today. I am not even sure it was made available in the French language. Obviously there were questions in the minds of the members of that committee regarding the ownership of this pipe line. I should like to refer to some of these questions to indicate the general feeling of at least some hon. members. It is interesting that the chairman of that committee decided that this bill was of great interest, because when the hon. member for Acadia asked a number of questions, pointed out that the major companies holding interests in this proposed pipe line were United States owned, and said that Acquitaine was French owned, the chairman said:

Let us not get into that, Mr. Horner. Order, please. This is a private member's bill, Mr. Horner, as you know. Mr. Horner, you are getting out of line now. You are free to vote against it.

The hon. member for Acadia then said that he just might do that, to which the chairman replied that this was his prerogative. At that time the question was put to a vote, and to indicate how impartial the chairman was, let me tell hon. members of the committee that the hon. member for Acadia asked whether the chairman had voted and the chairman indicated that he was just casting the deciding ballot. Before this company receives federal authority to enter into the pipe line transmission field it will have to answer satisfactorily some of the questions in the minds of hon. members.

At another point in this report there is an indication that the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) asked a number of questions pertinent to this application and I think he stated the crux of the problem we have in mind. That hon. member asked whether this company was being established as a common carrier for the transmission of oil from the Rainbow field. He also asked the officials of the company to explain, if that was not the case, the purpose of setting up this company. Any hon. member who reads this committee report will find some very interesting information.

It appears from the evidence that three companies got together to develop this company. Someone also pointed out that there already is another provincially chartered company of the same name. The three companies involved are Imperial Oil which owns 33⅓ per cent, Mobil Oil which owns 33⅓ per cent, and Acquitaine which owns 30 per cent. The report then indicates that Banff Oil owns 3½ per cent. It was then asked whether Acquitaine had a controlling interest in Banff Oil and Mr. Barroll replied:

> My knowledge, sir, of the stock ownership of Banff Oil is such that I could not answer authoritatively.

This would indicate to me that probably only the three companies, rather than four, have the controlling interest in this proposed company. Surely the Minister of Finance should be interested in this fact and the statement made by the officials that the company is not primarily concerned with the transmission of oil but in the writing off of development costs against income tax. As stated by Mr. Barroll, the company is more interested in the possibility of expanding its revenue by increasing the volume of production than in increasing the price in the market place.

If one refers to page 6 of the committee report one will see that Mr. Bredin indicated that one of the reasons for the establishment of this company is so it can write off the costs of drilling and development against income with the ultimate objective of reducing the profits of the company and thereby reducing the tariffs. Mr. Bredin then said:

> We propose to operate this with a minimum of profit, and should there be some small profit it can be written off by doing drilling or exploration work and thus there will be no tax payable. That being so, you can ultimately lower your tariffs and the benefit of this will accrue to the producer. If you use your money to pay income tax you cannot lower your tariffs to the same extent as you can otherwise.

[Mr. Peters.]

The hon. member for Edmonton West has been here for some time and he has been interested in the activities of the public accounts committee. I have read some of his remarks as reported in this committee report which would indicate that he was surprised about the statement that if the company operated at a minimum of profit it could use the profits for drilling and exploration work and if it did not have to pay income tax it could reduce the costs to the producer. The hon. member for Edmonton West then said:

> I was interested in the logic that Mr. Bredin was using because frankly I find it the reverse of mine. If there are profits in a pipe line company against which it can charge development and exploration expenses it is to the benefit of the producer to be able to charge off those profits. Those profits of the pipe line are, of course, derived from carrying the producer's own crude as well as that of those on the market who come in under the common carrier. Therefore the profits are provided by your producing competitors as well as by yourself.
> Therefore, to say that you are going to have as low a rate as possible for your common carrier business for your competitors in the producing field is not quite in accord with the facts.

It is not only not in accordance with the facts but it certainly is not the free enterprise system. I would say that the officials of these two companies must be very poor businessmen to allow a third company to obtain an advantage. It is not too difficult to see which company will have the advantage. I think I am safe in saying it will be Imperial Oil. I assume that Imperial Oil owns Mobil Oil, which may or may not be the case. I have had some experience with the manipulations and machinations of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, which was considered by parliament some time ago. This company is under the control of Imperial Oil in various ways, although not in respect of stock control. I found they were not in a position to lower the price of transportation of their oil product through the pipe line because, if they did, not only would Imperial Oil gain an advantage but so would their competition. Therefore they decided it was much better to adhere to the price allowed by the National Energy Board and at the same time make profits out of their holdings in the pipe line.

I agree entirely—and it is very seldom that we do—with the hon. member for Edmonton

West that the statements made by the representatives of this company were not only not correct but were probably dishonest, unless you allow for inability or incompetence on the part of the representatives of the company. Nor can I see in the other evidence presented by the representatives of the company any information that would lead anyone to reach the conclusion that because they had a method of writing off drilling expenses against income tax they would be able to pay more money to the producers if the company was acting as a common carrier in addition to carrying its own oil.

This is a very important pipe line. In this area Canada has made several very bad mistakes. At one time we had a pipe line from Norman Wells through the Quesnel area to the coast. It was installed during the war and was a very small line, it is true. It was sold for probably less than the scrap price of the pipe. Therefore it will be seen that over the years there has been some manipulation in this area. I think it is also safe to say that in this area there has been a great deal of exploration and development of the potential.

Hon. members from Alberta seem to think that oil is a commodity that we should dispose of on the international market as quickly as possible. I was very surprised to learn that the reserves, according to the official of this company, are sufficient for only 33 years at the current rate of production. We talk about conservation in other fields but the people reaping the benefits of the development that takes place in this area are acting in a very uncontrolled manner. Our children will find that their parents have wasted a great deal of money in respect of the natural resources in the area.

For this reason I urge the sponsor of this bill and those interested in the development of the area to make sure that the granting of this licence is not in effect a licence that will allow a monopoly to operate. I think everyone will agree that to put in two or three competitive pipe lines for long distance transmission is probably not in the interest of the oil companies nor the producers and neither is it in the national interest. There must be some other interest behind the seeking of a monopoly situation. Before we grant a licence to operate this kind of monopoly I believe we should see that this common carrier does the job it should do for the many oil producers in the area.

The committee dealt with many aspects of the bill. Most of the clauses are concerned with whether stocks should be split or transferred, whether the common stock should be changed to preferred stock, whether the preferred stock should be changed to common stock, and so on. We all know that a great many things can be done with stock. This raises an old problem with which we have dealt on many occasions. The question we should ask ourselves is, what does the company really want to do in this regard? They ask for the power to do a great many things. In the bill the company asks for the right to "purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold, develop, operate, maintain, control, lease, mortgage hypothecate create liens or other security upon, sell, convey or otherwise dispose of and turn to account any and all interprovincial, extra-provincial and/or international pipe lines and all appurtenances relative thereto for the gathering, processing, refining treating, transmitting, transporting, storing and delivering of any substances capable of being transmitted or transported by pipe line including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing," and so on. I do not understand how in thunder the company's powers can be limited if this bill is passed. The company seems to have covered about everything. Clause 6 also provides as follows:

> —transporting, storing and delivering of any substances capable of being transmitted or transported by pipe line including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any natural and artificial gas and oil and hydrocarbons and related substances or any of them and any products or by-products thereof and all works relative thereto for use in connection with the said pipe lines; and buy or otherwise acquire, process, refine, treat, transmit, transport and sell or otherwise dispose of—

What the company will be able to do goes on ad nauseam. They can buy houses, sell property, go into the field of housing development, make loans, and so on. This company is almost in the category of a financial institution. Very little is said about what the pipe line itself will do. I know that the financial aspects of the company are very important, but it seems to me the geographical aspects are also very important. I would have thought more questions would have been asked about the geographical aspects of the company. It seems to me that before the bill is passed we have to decide what we shall allow the company to do. The committee appears to have given more consideration to what they thought the company would do than to what is was really going to do and how it would operate in this area.

Private Bills

• (7:30 p.m.)

The Income Tax Act amendments that were made by the house in 1962 were originally intended to provide a better opportunity for oil exploration. The parliamentary agent goes on to say:

> Prior to 1962, companies which were in the business of exploring for oil could deduct a certain amount of their exploration expenses from their revenues for the purpose of computing income tax. Some time before 1962 all these sections were amended to provide that mining companies, for example, could go into oil exploration, and vice versa. The whole scheme of the act was to provide more money for this kind of exploration.

This has been true for a long time not only with regard to the actual operation of companies but in the financial arrangements which the companies concerned made.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I attended the meeting of the transport committee when it was considering this bill. Although I am not a member of that committee, I felt there were certain aspects of the incorporation of this company which had to be drawn to the attention of the members of the committee. Personally I feel it is quite right to allow development and exploration companies to avail themselves of the opportunities offered them under the law and I am quite sure that everyone will agree that the 1962 amendment was put forward as an incentive for oil exploration and development. After all, not only the question of finding the oil is involved but also the matter of transporting it to the market. In many instances there were opportunities for the gathering lines to act as common carriers under the control of the oil and gas conservation board of the province of Alberta and under similar bodies in the provinces of Saskatchewan and British Columbia. I think it is only fair that a producing company should have the right to amortize some of the expenses of its exploration and development programs over its whole operation. This is provided for under the act, but it has to be clear that the exploration and development have been done.

However, there is one advantage gained by a pipe line company which is also in the business of development and production in that by being able to charge its expenses for exploration and development against its profits it has an advantage over its non-owner competitors in the production field. I have no objection to that and all I wish to point out is that this fact does exist.

I listened with interest to what the hon. member for Timiskaming had to say with regard to pipe lines and their development. However, I must say I cannot agree with everything he said because I think some of his statements are incorrect. Rainbow Pipe Line Limited operates entirely within the province of Alberta. It is being incorporated federally in the event that the group of companies, that is, Mobil Oil of Canada, Imperial Oil Limited and Banff-Acquitaine, continue their operations farther north across the Northwest Territories boundary. In view of fact that the Zama lake area is not very far from that boundary, it is possible to foresee that within a year or 18 months this company, along with others which hold leases granted to them by the government of Canada, may undertake some development work and actually bring in some producing wells.

There is no sense in the production of oil if there is no opportunity to market it, and in the Northwest Territories there are no alternative means beyond a pipe line. There are no roads or railroads, so tanker trucks cannot be used, and therefore gathering lines must be used ultimately leading to a central pipe line. This is what has happened in northwestern Alberta.

The Rainbow pipe line is presently under construction from Zama lake to Rainbow lake and, although I stand to be corrected on this, I believe it goes down to the Mitsue lakes field north and east respectively of Lesser Slave lake. Farther to the south of this area there is the Peace River pipe line which heads west. There is at present before the other place an application for another very short pipe line which will be entirely domestically owned. I believe it is to be only about 15 miles long, which makes it much more economical, and the only sensible thing to do is to build this short length of pipe line across the British Columbia boundary to join the gathering system of northeastern British Columbia and ultimately feed out through Westcoast Transmission to the Pacific coast.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. member permit a question? I have listened with interest to his description of the area. Could he tell me whether the Rainbow oil field is situated outside the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Lambert: The Rainbow oil field is situated entirely within the province of Alberta. It is in what is known as the north

Peace River country. It is not in the Northwest Territories but along the eastern slope of the Rockies. The whole oil development starts in southern Alberta near Pincher creek. It changes from gas to oil and vice versa and the indications are that this will continue all the way to the Arctic coast as exploration locates the oil pools. The companies in the consortium intend to bring the oil, if they should find it, from north of the Northwest Territories' boundary on leases which it now holds.

I have no criticism of the plans for development. However, there are two questions which I do raise. First of all, it is a 20-inch pipe line in the Zama lake-Rainbow lake area. It is a major oil pipe line and because of the rather restricted operations in the future it seems to me there is a danger it may become a monopoly pipe line. No one else can say: We may find an oil pool in some area close by and then we will build a major pipe line all the way down to the refining area near Edmonton. Therefore for economic reasons this pipe line may become the sole pipe line. I do not quarrel with that. However, my view is that the ownership of such pipe lines should be in Canadian hands. I believe that a lesson could have been learned at the time of the construction of Interprovincial Pipe Line when ordinary Canadians did not have the chance to buy shares in it. There were large blocks of financing available to that company and they took up the major holdings.

As a result of the lesson of Interprovincial Pipe Line, there was then the experiment of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line and the formula which developed therefrom. It was not entirely perfect but I think it was a major step forward. The crown caused the Alberta Gas Trunk Pipeline to be incorporated. There were some nominal directors. The shares were placed on the public market with a maximum allocation, I think, of 25 per person. The shares were first limited to residents of the province of Alberta, and if they took their full quota, fine. Any unused portion of the quota was to be sold on the open market, but I believe the issue was oversubscribed.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the ordinary citizen, be he railroad car man, truck driver, or what have you, was able to buy shares. As a matter of fact, the initial issue of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line was 25 shares per person at $5 a share, representing a maximum investment of $125. But within two weeks or a little more people were able to sell them for $10 or so per share. However, the small investor was able to buy, and he had the opportunity to hang on to them for further profit. Many of them did.

This is what I should like to see take place with some of our solids and other pipe lines. I should also like to see the same happen with a line such as Rainbow from one end to the other. I am sure that the companies concerned would like to get their capital out of that pipe line because they can certainly put it to better use in other ways than by investing it in a pipe line for a long time.

The operations of the line within the province of Alberta are entirely under the control of the oil and gas conservation board. The common carrier rates are fixed by the board. The production from the wells is controlled by the board upon monthly nominations by the refineries and allocations by the board.

What the prospects are for the Northwest Territories I do not know, except that the National Energy Board, to whom application must be made for the establishment of a pipe line in the Northwest Territories to connect with any pipe line in Alberta or British Columbia, will determine the method of construction, rates and so forth of any such pipe line.

If the department of northern affairs and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have any conception of proper conservation, then I suggest they will likely follow the Alberta plan. After all, the chairman of the National Energy Board was the chairman of the oil and gas conservation board in the province of Alberta. It is in the mutual interest both of that province and the federal government to see that there is the maximum development of oil resources and reserves. Naturally these resources have to be marketed in order to make any development program economically feasible.

According to the evidence given before the transport committee the other day, our oil reserves today will last 33 years. I do not know whether the figures took into account the tar sands resources in northeastern Alberta where the first refinery is due to go on stream some time later this autumn at a cost of something like $250 million, with a 50,000 barrels a day capacity.

These reserves are far greater than those in the conventional oil field areas of Alberta and the Northwest Territories. At the present time the Alberta oil wells are producing at about 50 to 55 per cent capacity. Many of the older wells with lighter production which have been in operation for 20 years are almost at the point of shutdown because they are uneconomic under the present marketing system.

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I have no objection to the incorporation of this company to build a pipe line. There will have to be an application made to the National Energy Board and the board can hold public hearings. It is not as if we were giving this company the right to establish a pipe line wherever it wanted, and that by the passage of this bill we were giving the company the right to build the pipe line. Not at all. There are still several steps that have to be taken both before the oil and gas conservation board of the province of Alberta and the National Energy Board of the Government of Canada.

However, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the bill itself I referred the other day to clause 6 (c) as an open hunting licence and I do not withdraw that phrase today. As I said, I feel it would be far better if this company were open to public investment. By the term "public" I mean in the same way as the Alberta Gas Trunk Pipeline, or under some similar formula where by residents of the province of Alberta and people in other parts of Canada would have the opportunity to buy shares instead of these companies being controlled by three corporations, two of whom are United States corporations, the other one being French with a tie-up with the French government.

Notwithstanding the fact that this consortium has done a good deal of development work and has a good record, it seems to me that where you have a pipe line which I think, economically speaking, will be the only major pipe line working toward the north for many years to come, Canadian citizens as such should be entitled to acquisition of the equity holdings in that line.

I hold no brief for nationalization or public ownership by a crown agency or otherwise. I think that would be the last thing we would want in the oil and gas business. But I do feel that widespread ownership by the Canadian public is highly desirable. This is the sort of move that would detract from the alleged necessity of a Canada Development Corporation. I think that ultimately a much greater number of proposals of the sort I suggest will have to come before parliament. There should surely be much greater participation from the onset in such development by Canadian investors. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are any number of people in all parts of the country who would be quite happy to invest $200, $300 or $500 in a type of operation like this or in a solids pipe line or in other types of transport utilities.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I do not for one moment hold any brief for public ownership by the crown. On the other hand, I believe that Canadians as such should have the right to invest in the equities of their resource development industries, and this would be one way of doing so.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I see that the Minister of Transport is in his place and I would hope he would comment on something which involves such an important aspect of our transportation system. I felt that he might give us the benefit of his views on the bill that is before us but, apparently he has no intention of doing so at the present time. May I point out that if this company is incorporated it may one day, under the terms of the bill, wish to build a pipe line to Bonavista, and the Minister of Transport might show a more active interest in it then.

I was interested in some of the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West who gave the committee the benefit of his knowledge which arises partly from the very fact that he represents an Edmonton constituency. He has had more opportunity than most of us to become familiar with the operations of the oil industry and he has taken considerable interest in some of the financial legislation, income tax and otherwise, that has come before the house from time to time.

The proceedings of the standing committee on transport and communications on Tuesday, June 20, came into our hands today and we have not had much chance to look at the evidence in detail. I have tried to follow some of the information which was given and after I have made one or two references to the evidence perhaps I might be permitted to ask the hon. member for Edmonton West whether I correctly interpret the situation to which he referred at the outset of his remarks.

I found myself somewhat puzzled by some statements made by those presenting the case for the applicants before the committee. If I understand correctly, it is the intention of this company provided the charter is granted to be in a position to operate as a common carrier with a published rate of tariffs. That being so, it will carry the oil produced by it and as well as will be required to carry the oil produced by any other oil producers in the area that wish to use this pipe line. In that case, the reference to the question of income tax write-offs for exploration expenses becomes of considerable interest as it relates to the position of a common carrier carrying the products of the principal shareholder as well as of other companies.

On page 6 of the committee report Mr. Bredin is reported to have said:

> It is not the intention to operate this pipe line as a going concern in the sense of making a profit in itself. It is to provide a vehicle to get the oil out of this area at a low cost to the producers.

That may be a laudable objective but it seems at variance with the accepted objectives of a common carrier. So far as I know our railways, privately owned and publicly owned, have never suggested that they were in the business of moving goods for the love of it. Their intention is to make a reasonable profit from their transport operations.

After an intervention by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) Mr. Bredin said:

> We propose to operate this—

I assume he is referring to the pipe line.

> —with a minimum of profit, and should there be some small profit it can be written off by doing drilling or exploration work and thus there will be no tax payable. That being so, you can ultimately lower your tariffs and the benefit of this will accrue to the producer. If you use your money to pay income tax you cannot lower your tariffs to the same extent as you can otherwise.

The hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) then said:

> I would like to see how that reads in the transcript. It does not seem to add up.

Having read this part of the evidence two or three times I must agree with the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.). It still does not add up. It seems strange that you can spend money on exploration and thereby lower your tariffs as an operating pipe line company to the point where you make no profit, or to that point where your profit is so reduced that you are not liable for tax, but if tax is to be paid higher tariffs must be charged. This question, incidentally, throws into relief some of the strange provisions of corporation income tax legislation in regard to tax write-offs for exploration. Perhaps in drawing this question to the attention of the house the company in question has performed a commendable service.

If one considers a pipe line operation in the sense that the hon. member for Edmonton West considers it, as an operation which is brought into being because of the economics of the situation which enable it to operate as a monopoly carrier, it seems strange that the oil producing company which will control the pipe line company can manipulate the profit position of the pipe line company and expend money in exploration in such a way as to avoid paying income tax.

• (8:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has expired.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business having expired, the house will revert to the consideration of the business which was interrupted at seven o'clock.

Mr. Winters: May I ask the leave of the house to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

STATEMENT FOLLOWING GENEVA AGREEMENTS

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank hon. members for their kind consideration.

The final act of the Kennedy round is to be signed tomorrow morning in Geneva, thus bringing these negotiations to a formal conclusion. The resulting agreements, including the schedules of tariff concessions granted by all participating countries, can now be made public. I should make clear that these tariff cuts will not come into effect until January 1, 1968, and in many instances they will be staged over the next four years.

At the conclusion of my remarks I will ask leave to table, on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and myself, detailed information on the tariff and trade agreements of interest to GATT concluded during the Kennedy round. Everything possible is being done to ensure that the Canadian business community is made aware of these results without delay. The Minister of Finance and I will now issue a joint press announcement containing details of the agreements.

Copies of this announcement, as well as of a special issue of the department's publication "Foreign Trade" are being sent to the major trade and business associations in sufficient quantities for distribution to their member firms across the country. I am writing to the ministers of trade and industry of all provincial governments inviting their co-operation in joining with us in organizing seminars with business groups in their regions. I am also writing to the many individual firms which have expressed interest in particular export products in these negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated on numerous occasions, the Kennedy round constitutes by far the most important trade pact in history, the most comprehensive in coverage and the most significant in the extent and depth of tariff reductions. Some 50 countries, representing well over 80 per cent of world trade, participated in these negotiations.

Over $45 billion of goods and hundreds of thousands of tariff items are affected by the concessions exchanged; all aspects of world trade including tariffs and certain non-tariff barriers, and agricultural as well as industrial goods were within the ambit of the negotiations. Never before have trade negotiations of this scope, magnitude and far reaching impact taken place.

It is fitting on this final day, to pay tribute once again to the statesmanship and farsightedness of the late President Kennedy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: To his initiative were due in large part the ambitious objectives which these negotiations set themselves and which have to such a high degree been attained.

It was to be expected that the Kennedy round would be exceedingly complex and difficult, involving a great deal of intensive bargaining; indeed there were occasions through the nearly four years of negotiations when the obstacles appeared to some too great to be overcome. However, despite crises and delays, and due to the perseverance and basic good will of all the countries concerned, the issues blocking agreement were resolved.

As one who attended these negotiations in Geneva on behalf of the Canadian government at various critical junctures, may I say how much is owed to the leadership and skill of the director general of the GATT, Eric Wyndham-White, in contributing to the success of the negotiations, and to our own negotiating team under the leadership of Ambassador Sidney Pierce. The Kennedy round now stands not only as a symbol of the most sweeping advance yet made in the liberalization of world trade, but also as a model and example of constructive, forward-looking and meaningful co-operation among the countries of the world.

For Canada, the success of the Kennedy round has wide-ranging implications, opening new broad perspectives of expanded trade and benefiting all sectors and regions of the economy. Indeed, a dramatic and sustained increase in Canadian export trade is essential if we are to deal effectively with the common issues confronting us as regards standards of living, balance of payments, jobs and the like. The concessions granted in our own tariffs to gain greater access to other markets must be regarded in the light of the very great benefits which can accrue to Canada from expanded exporting opportunities.

Many sectors of industry where Canadian tariffs are being reduced are also the sectors which stand to benefit most from export gains. In many instances, the cuts in Canadian tariffs are in areas which will help reduce the costs of production for Canadian processors and manufacturers, as well as for consumers. That, Mr. Speaker, is important.

The export benefits obtained by Canada from its agreements with major trading partners cover, including wheat, over $3 billion of our current export trade. In the United States and the E.E.C. most industrial tariffs will be reduced to levels of 10 per cent or less. As a result of the across-the-board tariff cuts made by our major trading partners, trade opportunities will become available for the first time to a very wide range of manufactured goods—many of which will be Canada's exports of tomorrow. For Canada therefore the Kennedy round could contribute to the solution of many of our basic economic problems and set in motion the process of adaptation and restructuring which could, in time, reshape the character of the economy. There are many areas where we need more values added, more up-grading of our raw materials, and this should help.

It may well be that the Kennedy round will be regarded in the future as a crucial turning point in the transformation of Canada from a resource-based economy to one of the most advanced industrial nations of the world.

I have commented on previous occasions in some detail on the significance of the new cereals agreement for Canada's wheat trade, for the western prairie provinces, and for the economy and balance of payments as a whole. The International Wheat Council is convening a special negotiating session in Rome on July 12, with a view to revising the international wheat agreement so as to incorporate the cereals commitments agreed to in the Kennedy round.

Canada welcomes the participation of all countries with a significant interest in wheat trade in these negotiations, and would like to see the new agreement completed and put into operation as soon as possible.

I would like to take this opportunity to express again the government's appreciation to the members of the wheat advisory committee, representing major western producer organizations, who served as advisors to the Canadian delegation throughout the cereals negotiations in Geneva. Their counsel and guidance were invaluable.

Now that the Kennedy round is concluded, it is vitally important that every sector of the Canadian economy should exploit the new export opportunities before us. The main initiative must rest with private enterprise itself. The department is being geared to provide maximum assistance to the Canadian business community in their export efforts. There will of course be areas and sectors which may feel a sense of greater exposure to competition because of tariff reductions made to gain access on a wider basis to the markets of the world for a very broad range of Canadian products. There are bound to be some local, negative reactions. But in the overall, this is a great, positive step, and it can mean a very large net gain for the Canadian economy. I am sure our dynamic Canadian enterprise will ensure that result.

I have asked the house leader to bring before the house tomorrow, if it is agreeable to hon. members, the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce so that this important development may be gone into more fully, to the extent that hon. members might wish. I understand from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) that he too will be here tomorrow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of hon. members I would like to table in English and French the following material:

1. A copy of the special issue of the Department of Trade and Commerce publication "Foreign Trade," dated July 1, which is devoted to this issue and shows the major tariff cuts gained, together with concessions granted by Canada, and some editorial comment on them.

2. A descriptive analysis of the concessions received in our major export markets by broad commodity sectors.

3. A descriptive analysis of the concessions extended by Canada.

4. A detailed list of items of interest to Canada on which concessions have been secured from the United States, the E.E.C., Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Switzerland, Spain, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Yugoslavia and Israel. This list shows the present and new rates of duty as well as the most recent trade figures. This represents all the major trading items but it is not a complete list of all concessions obtained. Information on items not listed will be available from the Department of Trade and Commerce.

5. The complete schedule of Canadian tariff concessions showing a description of the items and the rates of duty. Under the term of GATT these tariff concessions are extended to all members of GATT, and also to all other countries with whom we have most-favoured-nation agreements.

6. A detailed analysis of the new world cereal agreement as well as the text of the agreement.

7. A descriptive analysis of the new international code on anti-dumping policies as well as the text of the code.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the documents to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jorgenson: May I ask if the minister would agree to have these documents printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will look at the volume of the documents now on the table he will see that would be a physical impossibility. I understand that the documents in question will be distributed in the lobbies to hon. members.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker, copies are available in both lobbies. They are also available in the distribution office, and there is a supply available in my own office.

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I think I am making the understatement of the year when I say through you to the minister that it would have been rather helpful had we had some of this material in advance. I realize, however, the difficulty involved.

I was pleased to hear the minister make some kind and well deserved remarks about the late President Kennedy. I think that was only proper. Certainly all hon. members would agree with the sentiments he expressed.

I believe most hon. members will agree that the minister's speech was a great deal of window dressing, full of vague generalities without anything concrete in it. Until we have an opportunity to read the various tariff agreements we will not know exactly what happened. Hon. members will be pleased that the minister's estimates will come before us tomorrow, at which time we will have an opportunity to probe a little further into some of these matters.

The tariff agreements made at Geneva in the Kennedy round negotiations will have far reaching effects, particularly on this country of ours. I am concerned mainly about their possible detrimental effects. I hope these will not be great in volume, but I would like to know what assistance will be given to the firms and manufacturing concerns that are adversely affected. At the moment I am thinking of the hard goods business, and in this connection I recall the automobile pact which we discussed in this house some time ago. In particular I question the reason why an automobile manufactured in Canada is sold for less money in the United States than it is in Canada.

What about our agricultural markets? In particular, what about our wheat markets, which are possibly the greatest export markets we have? We also have to think about our soft goods markets. What about the extra competition we are going to get from far eastern countries, in particular Japan? In the last few years we have experienced much competition in this particular area, competition which has had a profoundly adverse effect on some Canadian industries.

What will be the effect of these tariff cuts on our leather goods business? What about their effect on the shoe manufacturing business? At present a high percentage of the shoes sold in Canada are imported from Europe. Many goods produced in Canada are sold in this country at certain prices and are sold in foreign markets at lower prices. What will be the effect of these agreements on them? Are our people going to get any advantage? The minister mentioned that the net result would contribute to lower prices. I know he said so in all sincerity, but we shall have to wait and see the results ourselves.

This is a very important step which has been taken. When one considers the present inflationary tendencies in this country, one must see in this a most alarming situation. If the new agreements are going to be for the general good, if they are going to be for the good of Canada, then I am all for them. I shall be most interested to read the documents tabled by the minister tonight.

[Mr. Irvine.]

In considering these agreements we must remember that wages in this country have risen by 10 per cent to 12 per cent per annum, while our productivity has increased at the rate of only 6 per cent. The matter which I and most people in this country are concerned about is whether by these tariff cuts we will be priced out of some foreign markets, because of the additional competition that we are going to face. But on the other hand it must be remembered that we have already been priced out of some foreign markets.

I would like to ask the minister what plans he has to increase productivity in Canada. Second, I would like to ask him what assistance he and his department are planning to give Canadian industry that may be adversely affected? We know some of our industries will be hard hit, just as was the fate of the automobile parts manufacturers under the auto trade agreement.

The minister mentioned private enterprise. There was a time when private enterprise was the backbone of this great country in which we are privileged to live. But with the large number of bankruptcies we have experienced in recent years, and the large number of people who have gone out of business for other reasons, private enterprise has shrunk to something very small in dimension. What protection are we going to give some of the firms that are going to be hit, and perhaps hit hard?

The minister also mentioned that various seminars will be held across the country at which I believe local manufacturing concerns and others will be brought up to date on some of the new tariff and trade agreements. I am just wondering whether, when these seminars are held, the minister intends to invite the attendance of the local member of parliament in the area concerned, regardless of what his party might be, because I think the education would be good for that member as well as for the firms concerned.

The minister has drawn attention to the importance of co-operation. I think it is important too, because throughout this world in which we are living we do believe that a semblance of brotherhood and co-operation, particularly in these times, is so important.

With the tariffs in this country of ours down something in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent, I think we are facing something which we should consider very seriously. I should be very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see the reports which have been tabled by the minister. Let us hope that this is a step forward, and that it does not contain a retrograde aspect.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we in this party join with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) in the tribute he paid this evening to the late President Kennedy in connection with the announcement he made tonight, and the agreement which is being signed tomorrow. I think it is fair to say, if the results of the Kennedy round measure up to the predictions made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that the late President will have no greater memorial than the attachment of his name to these agreements.

We thank the government for making the arrangements for the statement to be made tonight and for the material to be distributed to members. We also thank the government for making the consequential arrangement for the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce to be discussed tomorrow. In other words, we can postpone any further comments in respect of these agreements until we reach that stage in our proceedings.

There are just one or two comments I should like to make at this time. The minister referred, and I believe quite properly, to the advantages which can flow to a country like Canada from increased trade, from greater opportunities to get into export markets, and from the possibility that our economic base may be shifted from one which relies largely on resources to a mixed base of resources and broad industrialization. We trust that the result will be an increase in the total wealth that accrues to Canada. We wish to make the point, however, that this is useless unless it is matched by domestic policies designed to make sure that the greater wealth which accrues to this country will be shared by all of our people; in other words, improved trade policies must be matched by improvements in legislation in the field of social security, housing, and in all the other fields which get the wealth which we produce through to the people. It is not good enough simply to have expanding sets of figures in the Department of Trade and Commerce. We must see to it that the result is the highest possible standard of living, education, health and security for all our people. These things must be the ultimate goals of the Kennedy round.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. members who spoke before me, I too wish to congratulate the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for having given us, this evening, a general idea of the agreements concluded during the Kennedy round.

But first, I must congratulate the minister for having chosen that name or, so to speak, for having christened the Kennedy round as a memorial to the greatest president, to my mind, who ever ruled over the destiny of the United States in the social field, a president who, in his work, gave the human being precedence over the financial system.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that those agreements will enable Canada, whose population is very small but whose wealth is tremendous in natural resources of all kinds, even in the field of agriculture, to have easier access to export markets.

I deeply regret that those documents did not come to us earlier—we have just received them—which would have enabled us to analyse them and to make more specific comments on these agreements. When I look at the negotiations, I wonder what that will mean for farm, fish, forest and processed wood and paper products, more particularly in my region, which is recognized as a large paper-producing area. I believe those agreements will be welcomed throughout the province of Quebec, as well as Canada, and we will be happy tomorrow to issue some more specific opinions on these agreements.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, at this point, without having the details before us, it is not really possible to comment in any specific way or to make any sweeping statement in respect of the details of the arrangements which have been worked out in the Kennedy round and about which the minister has informed us in general terms. There are, however, one or two points which I might mention. The minister spoke about the expanding export opportunities. I believe this is one of the great challenges before Canada as we move into our second century, because not only have we tremendous natural resources but we also are rapidly becoming the great manufacturing country which our position in the world gives us the opportunity to be at this time.

There are several points about which I am concerned. These relate to the remarks the minister has made. The first refers to our tremendous imbalance of trade with the United States. I would hope that in some way the new tariff arrangements might help meet this problem a little more effectively than it has been met in the last several years. Likewise I would trust that the benefits from these tariff reductions might be directly related to the consumers and to the costs of those things which the consumers must buy.

I think one of the great criticisms in respect of the automotive arrangement is the simple fact that the benefits, at least in the early years of this arrangement, were not passed on directly to the consumers. These reductions in tariffs will really lose their point unless this takes place. So I would hope that these arrangements will relate to some of the problems we face.

I should like to remind the minister and the government as a whole that one of the great problems we face in respect of trade today is far beyond that of the lowering of tariffs. I refer to the problem of international settlements and international liquidity.

Unless a new arrangement can be worked out as far as credits are concerned in this whole area of trade, then all of the tariff reductions that may be worked out will really not help to solve the problem we face. I believe it has become urgently apparent to some, if not to all countries which are major traders in the world, that unless there is a new basis of international exchange, a new opportunity in the area of international settlement, and a greater financial liquidity can be provided for the nations of the world as they develop in their respective and different areas with the increase of greater trade patterns, we are going to continue to be in trouble.

Speaking on behalf of this party, I welcome the trend that is evidenced in the tariff reductions as a result of the Kennedy round. I believe that it is not only important to our position as a trading nation, it is important to the world. We talk about peace and we think of keeping the peace in terms of military force and might. One of the greatest opportunities we have in working toward peaceful opportunities and for the development of our resources in the world, both human and material, can be gained from more free trade patterns and, ultimately, unrestricted trade for the world. In this regard we welcome this major step in that direction.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The house again in committee of supply, the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, Vote No. 5.

5. General administration and district offices including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan, $57,833,900.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned the debate at four o'clock I had several points in mind I wished to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. I realize that his position is not an easy one. Certainly the public tax collector is not a position one would normally consider with much relish. However, this is an extremely important responsibility because governments have no sources of revenue other than from the taxpayers' pockets, and someone must be responsible for collecting the taxes which the government imposes.

The second phase of the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue which is not particularly enviable is that phase relating to the collecting of taxes the minister had little to do with in design. I am disturbed about some aspects which have developed in regard to tax collecting which result in infringements upon the rights and freedoms of citizens. I am thinking particularly of small businesses in respect of which the owner and his employees must collect and keep record of the tax. I have received many complaints in this regard, and have a great deal of correspondence, which I believe is very little different from that received by other members of parliament.

It seems to me that this type of businessman is being asked more and more to devote a great deal of his working time to the services the government requires of him. This is true not only of tax collecting but in the interpretation and enforcement of taxing regulations, as well as filling out innumerable tax forms which are constantly before him. The small businessman must comply with these demands on behalf of the government, and at its request.

The Department of National Revenue must constantly keep in mind that much of this work which is being done by the small businessman is really being done as a courtesy to the Department of National Revenue. It must be understood that this very often costs the small businessman a good deal, and causes him a great deal of concern. It is with this fact in mind that I introduced a bill in this house, C-130, which relates to the establishment of the position of ombudsman for administration. I suggest in this bill that this appointee could very well be the Auditor General, and in this way avoid the appointment of another official, or members of another staff. I made this suggestion because someone must better look after the interests of the small businessman and other taxpayers, as well, other than just members of parliament.

To be more specific let me refer to some of the problems which have come to my attention in recent days. First of all I refer to the exemption of the tax on drugs, to become effective on September 1 of this year. I am concerned because no provision is being made to protect the druggists of this country regarding their investment in the stock which now sits on their shelves. I have received correspondence from a number of druggists and have become aware of the fact that there are many corner drug stores, as they may be described, the owners of which will be out of pocket anywhere from $3,000 to $8,000 because no provision has been made to refund the tax they have already paid on these inventory drugs, prior to the implementation of this tax removal.

I have in mind particularly a druggist in my own town. He tells me that this revision in respect of the tax exemption on drugs is likely to cost him $6,000. He operates an average size drug store, but he expects he will lose that amount of money because no provision has been made to refund the tax he has already paid on the drugs now on his shelves. The minister has already said that no one will require these druggists to make an immediate reduction in their prices, as soon as the removal of this tax comes into effect. It is very nice to talk as the minister does, but who would sensibly suggest that such a man would be able to charge the price charged before the removal of the tax, after the tax removal goes into effect? That is not possible. Certainly the minister and his officials know that the public will expect that after September 1, 1967 the cost of drugs will come down by an amount equivalent to the tax which has been removed.

I urge the department to take some action in this regard in order to protect the small businessman who is going to pay money out of his own pocket because of this tax reduction. Surely this is not fair. It seems there ought to be some consideration given by the department for these people who do so much for the government in collecting taxes and keeping records. Their plight should be considered when the tax exemption takes effect. I would urge that the department take a second look at this problem and do something about relieving the very heavy burden which will face most people in the business of selling drugs when the tax exemption comes into effect.

I should like to mention another matter in respect of the collection of sales tax from small businesses which may be classified in part, as far as their activities are concerned, as manufacturers manufacturing items totalling more than the minimum exemption per year, which I believe is $3,000. Here again a difficulty is being worked on a number of small businesses. It is really so heavy on some that it means the difference between being able to stay in business and not being able to do so. Let me be specific and quote one example. In any city or town in this country you may find a welding shop. This welding shop is not really in the business of manufacturing, but in the course of its business clients bring to it the type of work that can be classed as manufacturing. If this type of business totals through the year more than the minimum exemption, it is necessary for the owner of the shop to collect the sales tax from those with whom he does this business. This is the regulation. If the welding shops in every community across Canada were classified and inspected by the tax department no hardship would be imposed on some that did not apply to the others. The simple fact is that because the taxation offices do not have sufficient staff to go out and check on every type of business that might come under this classification or category, some are registered and are required to pay tax and others are not.

What disturbed me about the attitude of the department is this, and I hope the minister takes note of this problem. The tax department says, when you bring this matter to their attention: We do the best we can about bringing every business in this category under the inspection of the department, but we cannot be sure that we get them all. Will you please ask those shops that are complaining about having to pay the tax to tell us the names of those who are not paying it. Ask them to give us a list of those shops that are not paying the tax.

They even ask us as members of parliament to make a list of the shops that are not paying the tax. How foolish can the tax department be in this regard? Does this mean that a member of parliament should become a policeman for the tax department? Does it mean that a man has to make a report to the department about those with whom he competes? Certainly the clientele of these shops will not accept this. It is not the responsibility of the businessman or the member of parliament to check into these matters for the tax department. If the department does not have sufficient staff, or is otherwise unable to make the proper inspection to make sure whether firms in this minor category—I think this is how it might be described—are paying the right tax, it is up to the department to check into the matter.

It seems to me it would be only fair not to collect tax from one firm if the department is not able to ascertain all other firms which fall within this category. This problem applies to many communities across Canada. I am not putting forward a theoretical proposition; I am talking about a situation that exists. In many small cities and towns two, three, four or five people are engaged in the same line of business; one or two of them are paying tax and fall under the inspection of the department, and others are not paying tax and are not required to meet the regulation. Surely this is not fair.

This is a real problem that is presented to a number of small businessmen in this country. The situation is not satisfactory and something should be done to resolve it. Again I say that I believe it is the responsibility of the tax department to ascertain who should pay this tax. The department must look into the problem and not just condemn these people as complaining for the sake of complaining or trying to get out of paying tax. I do not believe that very many people in Canada try to get out of paying taxes that are required according to the law of the land. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I have found that the great majority of businessmen want to do what is right, but because of the complexity of the tax regulations and the unfairness of the application of some of these regulations they find themselves in a very difficult position. Also they find themselves in a position of tension because they are continually concerned as to whether they are properly carrying on the type of work that requires them to pay tax. They fear they may be in error and will be brought before the department for having made a mistake or for not having paid tax which they did not believe was their responsibility. I should like the minister to give me an answer to this question before these estimates are passed, and I would urge the department to take a very careful look at the problem.

Another point is that under tax regulations certain types of equipment are classified as farm equipment. An increasing number of new machines used on farms legitimately come under the classification of farming equipment. This equipment has not necessarily been used in the past and the farmers are not being properly classified in respect of the equipment as far as tax exemption for agricultural machinery is concerned.

One such problem that has been brought to my attention, of which I have informed the minister—and I believe the department is aware of it—concerns a type of farm trailer that can be used behind small trucks or tractors. This equipment is used both commercially and agriculturally. Some farmers are required to pay the normal tax and others are exempt from it. In my opinion it is the responsibility of the tax department to make sure that the application of its regulations is equitable and fair to everybody, which definitely is not so in this case.

There is still another problem with regard to which I have not been able to obtain a satisfactory answer from the department. It concerns an item that is not yet manufactured in Canada and must be imported from the United States. This matter has been mentioned a number of times in debate. I refer to the motor vehicle that is used as a funeral coach, a hearse, or as a combination coach and ambulance. As these vehicles are manufactured only in the United States they come under a regulation that is specific in so far as tax exemption is concerned. The department has recently attempted to classify a similar unit made in St. Catharines as an ambulance and funeral coach. In the opinion of the department funeral coach and ambulance types imported from the United States would now come under the tax regulations that otherwise would not be applicable. Here again it seems to me the department should be more concerned about looking at the problem as it relates to the businessman involved or the user of the particular piece of equipment, rather than applying the regulation in all its apparent legality. In the case I have in mind a combination ambulance-funeral coach has been manufactured in the United States and brought into Canada as a vehicle to be used by a voluntary organization in the city of Jasper. It is required that a duty be paid on this vehicle both because of anti-dumping regulations, as well as the normal customs and excise tax.

On top of that it is subject to other taxes, which I do not believe should apply to this type of vehicle, on the pretext that a minibus or a truck type of stationwagon can be modified by raising the roof to make it into this type of vehicle. Perhaps ambulances may be made by modifying other vehicles to meet the requirements of public health and safety, but the fact remains it is not really this type of vehicle. Again it seems to me that the decision of the department in the interpretation of regulations should be in favour of the user of this equipment and of the businessman who is responsible for importing this type of vehicle into the country.

I have one more point which I should like to bring before the minister tonight. It applies to the registration of charitable organizations to which gifts would be exempted under the income tax regulations. I think there has been a great deal of trouble with regard to this matter. I do not think anyone can be blamed for this because the legislation was only passed shortly before Christmas and the announcement that it would be implemented as of January 1 came much too soon for the necessary preparations to have been made in order to process the thousands of organizations in the country which come under the legitimate classification of charitable organizations.

I wish to commend the minister for having speeded up the processing of the larger organizations that I have brought to his attention. I believe that most of the larger organizations in the country have already been registered. However, we are six months along in the new year, and there are still hundreds of organizations, many of which have applied as early as in January, which have not yet been registered and have not had a number assigned to them which they must indicate on receipts given to those who make donations to these organizations. It seems to me that here again undue hardship was worked on the person who is not trying to evade taxes but is trying to follow the regulations and obey the tax laws of the country. It would have been far better if the implementation of this tax could have waited until the department was ready to process the thousands of applications which it knew would inevitably come before it. I would only hope that at this late date the department will make every effort to deal with these applications so that the receipts that are being held up for lack of a registration number will be soon available to the organizations which are legitimately classified as tax exempt charitable organizations.

There are other points that I could bring to the attention of the minister. However, the four or five points which I mentioned represent urgent problems to many Canadians. I trust the minister will give an answer to as many of them as he can while we are discussing the estimates tonight and that action will be taken to clarify them as quickly as possible.

Mr. Benson: First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer on the interesting points he raised with respect to the administration of the Income Tax Act. I should like to say to him that in the determination of tax policy there is very close co-operation between the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance. I would not say the Department of National Revenue ever administers a policy which it has not had the opportunity of considering previously.

The hon. member mentioned the cost of collection by small businessmen. The idea that small businessmen having to collect taxes for the government of Canada—a very interesting proposition—should receive some recompense for doing so. This matter had been considered by this and previous governments but the conclusion has been reached that to recompense the small businessman would entail an increase in taxes in order to raise the funds to pay them.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, may I clarify a point? I did not suggest the government should recompense these businessmen. The point I was trying to make is that the government should facilitate the work they are doing. I understand that paying them for doing this work is out of the question. I would only ask that consideration be given to assisting them in facing the problems which they have as a result of having to do this work.

Mr. Benson: I should like to say that the officials of the taxation division of my department try to co-operate with small businessmen as much as possible in order to simplify their task, which is a difficult one. The hon. member for Wellington South put forward an idea this afternoon which has been in my mind for a long time, namely that the collection of all the revenues of the federal government should be handled by one department. However there are some very difficult questions involved with regard, for example, to unemployment insurance which is handled by a separate commission. I would simply like to assure hon. members that this matter has been receiving constant consideration by the government and although legislative steps are involved we will continue to consider the matter of facilitating the work of the small businessmen on behalf of the government.

The hon. member for Red Deer mentioned the matter of the ombudsman. It is my opinion that so far as taxation in Canada is concerned we have in effect a group of ombudsmen in the income tax appeal board, a body of men quite separate from the Department of National Revenue, which travels about the country hearing taxpayers' complaints with regard to individual taxation matters. They have been most successful in their work, and I think all of us should congratulate them on the manner in which they have carried out this task over the years. This board does the job of dealing with the taxpayers very satisfactorily. As I mentioned this afternoon, I hope that in order to clear up the backlog of their work we might expand their number so that taxpayers may be given a better chance to appeal to these quasi ombudsmen.

The hon. member for Red Deer also mentioned the matter of drugs and the problem of some people who will be left as of August 31 of this year with the sales tax on drugs which are on their shelves. Basically this is a matter for the Department of Finance. It is the job of my department to administer the law as approved by parliament, and not to make the law. However, a good deal of consideration has been given to this matter, and I believe the Minister of Finance would support me on this. One of the reasons for which the tax was not reduced immediately but was delayed for several months was to give people an opportunity to review their inventory and protect themselves as much as possible. Of course it is not possible to protect oneself completely, but the other alternative would have been to reduce the tax immediately and this would have raised a far greater problem than the one raised by my hon. friend. As things stand at present pharmacists have an opportunity to adjust their inventories in order to minimize their losses.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the minister a question? He said the only other alternative would have been to impose the tax immediately. Why not trust the druggists of this country to submit reports which would give them an exemption on the inventory of drugs on their shelves as of August 31 in order that they may relieve themselves of this very serious problem? Does the minister mean they would have to sell everything they had on their shelves, and then through some miracle replenish their shelves again on September 1? There is no logic in his argument.

Mr. Benson: When a federal sales tax is charged, a federal law is passed and the tax becomes effective on the same day. The reason generally that this is done is that efforts are often made to minimize the effect of sales tax. The reason that the Minister of Finance —I am not trying to justify his policies; he is quite capable of doing this himself—decided upon the four month period was in order to remove any problem for the people involved.

The hon. member for Red Deer also mentioned people who pay sales tax on their production while others are exempted from that sales tax because their production amounts to less than $3,000 a year. This has been a constant problem to the customs and excise side of my department, whose estimates we passed earlier. Indeed, we have tried to seek ways of easing the problem involved.

However, arguments are made on both sides. It is argued on the one side that the $3,000 exemption is insufficient, that people should be allowed to produce goods worth $4,000 or $5,000; on the other side it is argued: "I have just exceeded $4,000 production and have to pay 12 per cent sales tax, whereas a fellow I know down the street who is moonlighting and producing just $3,000 worth of goods a year does not pay the sales tax".

Probably the simple solution, Mr. Chairman, would be to impose sales tax on all production regardless of value. The reason this is not done and that there is this exemption is an administrative one; we would have to try to deal with everyone working in production part time and who might be subject to the imposition of sales tax.

My hon. friend also raised a question about farm equipment. I think some of the problems he raised will be eased as a result of the decision of the Minister of Finance and the government to remove the sales tax on production machinery. One of the big problems that we encountered when sales tax was imposed on production machinery was due to this. In the past people in the farming industry had considered purchasing certain production machinery, which was sales tax free. Then all of a sudden sales tax on this machinery was imposed and these people wanted this machinery moved from the category of production machinery into the category of farm machinery. I think this particular problem will be eased a little by the decision of the Minister of Finance and the government to remove sales tax on production machinery as such.

The hon. member also mentioned sales tax on funeral coaches. One of the difficulties in this regard is that not only is there a sales tax and customs duty on used cars imported into Canada, but except in special cases the importation of used cars into Canada is prohibited. Over the years I think this prohibition has been justified. In view of the vast United States market and the differential in car prices in Canada and the United States, succeeding governments have decided to protect Canadians against a flood of used cars from the United States.

I should like to inform the hon. member that some of the few exceptions which have been made to this rule against importing automobiles from the United States—and these exceptions are made pursuant to section 22 of the Financial Administration Act—were in respect of funeral coaches. The government has always taken the position that this prohibition of importation was for a specific reason, and that before allowing any less restricted importation of used funeral coaches from the United States the government must canvass the industry in Canada to see whether there was any objection.

This canvass was made, and some of the few cases where we did ease up on the importation of second-hand vehicles into Canada related to funeral coaches which were bought by people with relatively small means in this business, who imported these vehicles from the United States because they could not afford to buy new vehicles. Generally, Mr. Chairman, we have looked reasonably sympathetically toward these people in this regard.

The other point raised by the hon. member for Red Deer concerned registration of charitable organizations. I think that the staff of my department is to be congratulated on the tremendous progress that has been made—I am speaking here of my officials—in the registration of charitable organizations in Canada. When the legislation was passed last fall—legislation which I think was good, and necessary—my department was faced with registering some 40,000 charitable organizations in Canada. We had to decide how to handle these organizations, whether we would hire new staff to handle them, or have close consultation with the charitable organizations themselves and try to move them through in as orderly a manner as possible.

We decided to adopt the latter course, and I think this has generally worked out very well. My hon. friend indicates that there are still hundreds not registered, but in cases where non-registration of a charitable organization is causing difficulty, if the organization will get in touch with my department they will be given special treatment. However, we followed the general policy of determining in connection with these charitable organizations when they collected most of their funds. We dealt first with those who collected their funds in the early part of the year and sent their registrations out to them, and we will deal with the others when we have more time.

In cases where changes have been made and funds were collected at a different time, or where special problems were involved, when hon. members such as the hon. member for Red Deer got in touch with my department I think they would have to agree that they received reasonable and fair treatment from the department in dealing with these problems.

In conclusion I would say that I think the people in the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue who have dealt with this matter have done a tremendous job to date, and I think they are to be congratulated.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, might I make one or two comments; I think there has been a misunderstanding on one or two points I made. I was not criticizing the department in the latter instance at all. In fact, I said I found them very co-operative whenever I brought to their attention the problem of an organization which had not had its registration approved. What I was pointing out was that we are now in the sixth month of the year and that there are not only hundreds but several thousands of organizations which have not yet been dealt with. I was drawing to the attention of the minister that many of these organizations are presented with a real problem and perhaps were not aware that they could ask for special consideration. I put forward only the cases of those that I felt really deserved special consideration in view of the volume of receipts that they issued. While the department may well be deserving of commendation, we have now reached the point where the situation must be cleared up very quickly.

With regard to funeral coaches, I was not talking of used coaches at all but of new coaches and some of the problems which are arising over the calculation of duty and tax. According to the regulations—I am not disputing this—if these vehicles are made in Canada—at least, vehicles of similar type, the imported vehicles would be subject to certain regulations which would not be the case if they were not made in Canada. The point is that when we do require equipment that is not manufactured in Canada, then I think every consideration should be given to the users of and dealers in such equipment, for proper tax exemption.

It is understandable that the volume of demand for funeral coaches, and particularly for proper funeral coach and ambulance combinations, is such in Canada that it will be a long time before we can manufacture them here. There is not sufficient demand to warrant the setting up of factories for their manufacture. That is why I brought this matter to the minister's attention.

Perhaps I did not make myself clear when I was speaking about sales tax. I was not particularly concerned about the small manufacturer, who is probably $100 over the minimum or $100 under it. I was referring to the apparent inability of the department—and this is probably owing to a lack of staff which makes impossible adequate supervision—to bring under inspection every business that is eligible to pay this tax. Many smaller manufacturers which are paying taxes are doing so in conscience or because they know of the tax regulations, whereas others which are not paying the tax may be deliberately avoiding its payment, or are not aware of the regulations. I draw this matter to the minister's attention because unless the matter of tax collection is properly administered the tax works a hardship on some but not on others.

This may be an administrative problem. If you talk to the tax officials in the hinterland, where the taxes are collected, they will be the first to admit and to understand this problem, and to express regret that such a situation exists.

I brought these matters to the attention of the minister because more attention ought to be paid to them, in order to alleviate the problem which affects this area.

Mr. Benson: If I might be allowed to say a word in reply to the hon. member for Red Deer, I wish to assure him that the problem of charitable deductions and registration is being cleared up as fast as it is physically possible to do so. The second matter he raised, with regard to new funeral coaches, I shall look into carefully with officials of my department and with officials of the customs and excise branch.

The third problem the hon. member brought up, with regard to the registration of firms for sales tax purposes, I can answer in this way. Due to our program of regionalization this year, it is estimated that during the year 1,000 new manufacturers will be admitted to the register—if that is considered an honour—under the sales tax legislation. I think, generally, that our administration will be improved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise, in short order, three problems that are important. The first has to do with deductions in personal income tax. The situation in Ontario has become chaotic. Some, who receive insufficient income in one year to pay income tax, under certain circumstances receive enough revenue to pay income tax the following year, and a confused situation has arisen. The provincial department dealing with social welfare has not been able to cope with the problem that has arisen.

Another matter I wish to raise is that of simplifying the means test as it relates to the income tax form. Not all married couples live together. A man of 70 or 75 may be separated from his wife, and similarly a woman of 70 or 75 may be separated from her husband. They may have been separated for a long time. How is a spouse to know how much the other earned in any year, if that spouse cannot find the other? The department wishes to know what the combined income of the couple was. Of course, there is a form that may be filled out to show that a couple is separated and that one spouse has not supported the other; but getting involved with such a form is a complicated business and I think a simpler way of providing the required information should be found.

Perhaps on the application form a section for separated persons should be included. A number of people have asked me to get in touch with a husband or a wife, so that one could find out how much the other earned.

Often the information has not been forthcoming. Remedying this situation would be useful.

Consideration should be given to exempting non-profit organizations from the building tax. Specifically, I am thinking of a legion which decided to build family unit homes for some senior citizens. They had to pay the building tax. Surprisingly enough, the tax made a difference of $7 or $8 in rent. I should not think that there are too many non-profit organizations that would be affected by the removal of the tax; and I do not think tax collections would go down appreciably.

Every member of parliament, I believe, wishes for a simple income tax application form. The simpler the forms, it seems, the less even the Philadelphia lawyers can figure them out. It seems that the man in charge of the computer expects only those in the $30,000 and $40,000 bracket to be able to answer the form. Personally, I have advised people who have got in touch with me and who make that kind of money to fill out the form as best they can, send it to the department, and let the department figure out if there is anything wrong. There must be a better way of compiling tax forms and schedules.

Frankly I do not know how they calculate some taxes. I studied trigonometry, algebra and geometry, but I do not know the mathematics involved. It seems that the simpler the form is said to be, the more complicated in fact it is. The minister said that this year we should have the simplest form we have ever had. Well, even the accountants are not sure of what should be done. I should like to see the minister putting two or three of his best men to work on this problem, so that when we get our income tax forms next spring we will find forms that are simpler for us to fill out, rather than simpler from the point of view of the department.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, answering the hon. member for Timiskaming, I wish to say that several of the matters he raised are policy matters that come under taxing statutes, rather than under the administration of my department.

So far as welfare applications are concerned, and the matter of taxable income as well as the matter of simplication of the test with respect to the supplementary old age pension, that must be determined by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

As for the tax on non-profit organizations, that matter is to be determined by the government and this parliament before my department can consider it.

With respect to the matter of simplying income tax forms, I think the tax return form this year was simpler than ever before.

The reduction in error, other than with respect to the Canada Pension Plan entry which was included as a new calculation and caused trouble, was of the order of 60 per cent this year as compared with last year. Though the return may be complicated, most people had little trouble in filling it out. I wish to say that in Canada, I believe, we have the simplest tax return of any country in the western world.

Mr. Barnett: How simple?

Mr. Benson: The only way to make it simpler is to have simpler tax laws. In the long run I do not think that is possible, and I do not think that the forms will become simpler because the taxation system is becoming more involved. Believe me, if one were to heed some of the suggestions that have come to my attention, the tax returns would become very involved.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I should like to assure the hon. member that there are officials in my department who spend a great deal of time trying to find out where people have problems in connection with tax returns and trying to make the forms simpler for them to follow. But this is never a completely simple matter and all I can say is that we shall keep trying.

Mr. Webb: I know the minister is sympathetic in his attitude toward small businessmen—and here I do not have in mind the department's definition. I am not speaking of businesses handling $500,000 a year; I am speaking of small businesses handling $50,000 a year.

Could not something be done to change the heartbreaking and discriminatory legislation which at present does not allow a storekeeper, for example, to deduct wages paid to his wife when computing tax liability? I would say that more than half of our small businesses operate under this disability. I have in mind small town grocery stores which would be forced to go out of business were it not for the fact that the wives help the husbands to carry on.

The minister told us himself a few minutes ago about the ever increasing demands made by the governement in the taxation field. Someone has to do this work. If a clerk were hired to do it, his wages would be deductible. Could the minister not give this question serious consideration? Throughout the country, especially in the rural areas, this is one cause of great dissatisfaction to a large number of people. I plead with the minister to give it his attention.

Mr. Benson: As hon. members will understand, this involves a matter of tax policy which has nothing to do with administrative decisions made by my department. I have a great deal of sympathy with the plea made by the hon. member. The situation he describes does not involve liability for income tax alone; it also concerns unemployment insurance. A small businessman may not deduct the expenses of a wife, though he may deduct salaries paid to his children. And he may not insure members of his family for purposes of unemployment insurance. If his business were incorporated, he could do this, and one solution might be to file a joint return. The ideas suggested in the Carter report, on which the government has made no decision, would probably clear up this kind of problem, though they might create many others.

Mr. Herridge: First, I should like to thank the minister for the personal attention he has given to any matter I have brought to his notice. This is good public relations. A number of people have written to me saying how much they appreciated having the questions they brought to my attention answered in detail by the minister or by some of his senior officials. One lady told me that she had never met anyone who could pick Canadian pockets so congenially and with such a winning smile. I appreciate the co-operation I have had from members of the staff of the department and also from members of the staff of the district office with whom I have discussed questions in respect of my own constituency—transportation, the best way to go here and there, and so on.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer with respect to charitable organizations. I have brought this matter before the house on a number of occasions throughout the years, because I have never been satisfied that all the organizations which are registered as charitable organizations really are charitable organizations. Could the minister tell us briefly the result of the study which was made of this situation? Would it be possible for hon. members to be given the names of the organizations which are now registered as charitable organizations, together with an indication of the formula used by the department to determine their eligibility under the terms of the act?

[Mr. Webb.]

The other thing I wanted to say was this. Although greatly increased amounts are collected in taxation every year, the efficiency of the department is increasing as a result of the introduction of various types of unusual machines. I have very little knowlege of how they work, but I have been through the building, have seen these machines in operation, and have seen the results.

It is fair to say that persons who work in a department such as the Department of National Revenue are doing something which has no drama attached to it—their work is related to figures and facts and to the interpretation of an exact law. I think the officials and the staff who work in the department are deserving of a great deal more credit than the people of Canada give them at the present time. It would make for good public relations if the Department of National Revenue would put out some booklet or pamphlet which could be sent to taxpayers when they receive their tax forms or correspondence from the department, a booklet which would indicate the vast increase which has taken place in the work done over the years and the efficiency of the staff in general in dealing with it. Some of the problems related to the administration of the department could also be drawn to the attention of the public in this way.

I offer this as a suggestion. Two or three people have spoken to me along these lines, feeling that such a move would assist the operations of the department, improve public relations and bring the administration closer to people who are more inclined to be irritated by its activities than pleased by its efficient operation of the law.

Mr. Benson: I have no doubt we shall be able to supply any hon. members who are interested with the names of the charitable organizations which have been registered up to the present time, within a reasonable period. We must bear in mind that the officials in this particular section of the department are working very hard to get the matter cleared up.

As to relations between our personnel and the public, we have been trying to do something about this over the last two or three years, at least since I have been minister, by means of an advertising campaign which has sought to make people understand that the officials in the taxation division are there to perform a necessary task. Basically, they are there to help the public meet its obligations as laid down by this parliament with regard to taxation. I think we have met with some success in this regard and we shall continue to move along these lines.

I should like to thank the hon. member for his compliments with respect to myself and my department. The only way in which he could help me more would be by allowing the committee to pass these estimates.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to look at the minister and not realize that he is also President of the Treasury Board. I realize, however, that on these estimates I cannot discuss a burning issue until he dons his other hat. For this reason I shall raise just one matter that comes under his responsibility as Minister of National Revenue. It is a matter we have raised before. I still hope it will be sorted out in a way that will cause less hurt to the people affected.

I am referring to the fact that quite a number of older people who have adjusted to a pattern of income tax payments discover that the addition of the old age security pension, or of some other pension payment, puts them into a category in which, if their tax is not paid quarterly, interest is added to it at the end of the year. The cases that have been drawn to my attention, and they have been many, all involve small amounts of money, $4, $5, $6, $7, or $8 as interest. I do not need to tell the minister how plaintive some of these letters are because I am sure he gets even more of them than I do.

I realize that the minister and the department argue that it is a kindness to people to urge them to pay their income tax quarterly rather than annually, and also that since most people have to make tax payments monthly, or even more often, through deductions at source, fairness demands that all people be treated the same way. But in actual fact what happens is that some of these people go along for two or three years without being required to do this. They make their income tax payments at the end of the year and are notified that the payments are satisfactory. Then all of a sudden comes a year when they get a bill for $4, $5, $6, $7, or $8 interest.

I am not trying to lay down the law to the minister. All I am suggesting is that the problem be looked at with sympathy for the position of these people. One suggestion I do make is that at least people be warned that this can happen. I hope the minister will not tell me that this is a matter of income tax policy. But even if it is, he could discuss it with the Minister of Finance.

I realize that old age security is taxable. At the moment I am not arguing about that. But this is the element which requires many older people to pay income tax quarterly, or to pay interest after believing they have computed the right amount of tax that they owe. As a matter of fact in all the cases that have been drawn to my attention, with the exception of the interest the taxpayers had computed their tax payments accurately. Older people have many other things to cope with, such as the rising cost of living, and it is a cruel blow when they have to pay this amount in interest. Maybe older people who are already in a different category because of the $500 extra exemption they receive over age 70, might be given a different status with respect to this matter.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to say that this problem was a very difficult one when I first became Minister of National Revenue, but it has become somewhat of a lesser problem because of some steps we have taken. One of the things we have done is that when people are sent their first old age security cheques they are also forwarded a notice telling them to look to see whether they now become subject to payment of income tax in instalments.

As my hon. friend indicated, this often is the case because these people have small incomes. They get $900 a year extra and so become taxable and subject to quarterly instalments. I am not speaking on behalf of the government on this point because I am not authorized to do so, but I would be very pleased personally if this parliament said that the Minister of National Revenue was not responsible for collecting instalment interest under $5 in amount that may be due by any individual taxpayer. This would clear up a lot of these problems, and the amount of revenue involved would not be great. However I should indicate to my hon. friend that under the existing law it is the duty of the minister and of the officials in his department to apply the law as it exists, so that if somebody owes $1.50 we have to send him a bill for it. I think it is possible to do something in this regard. Indeed we have already done something, through co-operation with the Department of National Health and Welfare, by sending out these notices with the first old age security cheques.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the minister for the suggestion that he has made. What pleases me is that the Minister of Finance is sitting pretty close to him and seems to have listened intently to the suggestion. There is already provision whereby if a person computes his tax to within $1 up or down from what it should be, no payment is required or no refund is made. Surely a way could be found to do away with interest payments of less than $5.

Mr. Sharp: The Minister of National Revenue is afraid of the Auditor General.

Mr. Knowles: I do not think it is the Auditor General he is afraid of at all. I think it is the Minister of Finance he finds hard of heart, but perhaps this kind of public appeal from one minister to another right on the floor of this chamber may bear fruit.

Item agreed to.

Tax appeal board—

10. Administration expenses, $193,400.

Item agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Benson: I would like to thank hon. members for their co-operation in assisting me in the consideration of these estimates by the committee and for the constructive comments they have made in regard to them.

Mr. Knowles: It won't be so easy when you come down as President of the Treasury Board.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $19,734,600.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Vote No. 1 will be found at page 420 of the blue book. The details thereof are listed at page 432. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, the estimates of the department have been reviewed by the standing committee on housing, urban development and public works. This is the first time the estimates of the Department of Public Works were placed before an estimates committee, and I believe from my own observation that it was a useful procedure for all who participated. I also believe it will be a useful technique in the years ahead, in providing some of the detail that is desirable and necessary in order to have a critical examination of the estimates.

In addition to the opportunity to discuss the estimates in the standing committee an undertaking was given by me that when additional information becomes available later in the year on one of the main items an opportunity would be provided for the committee to get that information and deal with it, either by referring the annual report to the committee, or some other procedure of that nature. That is also a new departure and will provide an opportunity for dealing with a subject when the information is not available on the first occasion.

The details of the estimates were prepared almost a year ago and since that time we have implemented a major reorganization of the department. The functional branches as described in the blue book, therefore, no longer exist. They have been replaced by an organization based upon the sequence of operations which applies to each project and upon a decentralization of authority to six regional offices. The sequence of operations is reflected in the headquarters directorates which are program planning, design and operations. When these three necessary functions have been completed for each project, the regional offices then assume the responsibility for constructing the work and for its subsequent operation and maintenance. A fourth new branch in headquarters is program evaluation which is important in view of the substantially increased delegation of responsibility and authority to the decentralized unit.

As I have mentioned, the duties of the administration in the blue book do not correspond with the new organization, and therefore the allocation of personnel as shown in the blue book does not correspond with the new organization. In taking together all the votes for which personnel establishments are required, we anticipate that we will be able to implement the new organization with no increase in the number of positions beyond what these positions were prior to the reorganization. In future years, our personnel establishment will, of course, have to be regulated by the work load; however, we expect to be able to handle greater work loads under the new organization without an increase in personnel.

The total increase in the estimates over last year is $15.7 million. Most of this increase is attributable to the cost of providing accommodation for other government departments. With reference to accommodation for the departments, we are working within a long term plan which will enable us to meet the requirements of the departments by constructing new buildings and at the same time maintaining a reasonable balance with accommodation leased from private owners. There is a backlog in this activity, and the increase in our building construction appropriation reflects our efforts to catch up.

The expenditure on harbour and river engineering services in the present fiscal year will be about the same as in previous years. There are several large harbour projects under this heading such as those at Long Harbour, Newfoundland; Belledune Point, New Brunswick; and Gros Cacouna and Matane, Quebec, which are of great importance in connection with local industrial development and consequent transportation requirements. We will also, of course, be constructing a large number of small projects which are not listed individually in the details of the estimates since the requirement is that only items in an amount of over $50,000 are listed.

I could extend my remarks, but I think it probably is the wish of members of the committee that I do not do so at this stage. I shall be pleased to give all the information I can in answer to the questions which are asked. I shall be very glad to hear the views of hon. members on this subject.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, we have just heard the minister refer to the fact that this is the first time the estimates of his department have been referred to a standing committee. I am sure that this move is one which is well appreciated by the members of the house. However, we feel that the time given to the study of the estimates in committee was not sufficient. We hope we will have the opportunity—and I believe the minister already has committed himself in this regard —to study the last annual report in the committee. Therefore, when the house meets in the fall we will be able to continue our study of the estimates of the department as well as the organization of the department.

While making my few remarks I should like to ask the minister to convey to his officers and staff expressions of gratitude from the members for the long, arduous and sometimes tedious hours they spend in the interests of the public and Canada. I realize fully that they are not working for a private enterprise where decisions can be taken quite quickly. With the red tape which sometimes must accompany government legislation, I am sure that they too often must feel that some of their time is being wasted. We do, however, appreciate their efforts.

I should like to say at this time that I was very happy to hear the statement made by the deputy minister when he explained in detail to the members of the committee the reorganization of the Department of Public Works. This department is becoming more and more important in the administration of government. Naturally there are the dangers of too rapid an expansion and also the possibility of failures due to the shortage of experienced and specialized staff in the administration. However, the move which has been made I believe is one which had been recommended to the government. As I look at the records prepared by the deputy minister it would appear that they have covered the reorganization of the department in such a way that it is systematic enough to be able to handle the present work load which they have and the additional load which may be placed upon the department as the years go by.

This reorganization is divided into planning, design, and then construction and operations. I am very pleased that we have given to the regional and district officers more authority than they have had in the past. This country which is spread over many thousands of miles is one where at times its distances cause many inconveniences. Through the establishments of regional offices it will be possible to make decisions on certain matters more quickly and this will be to the benefit of the general public. I am also happy to note that these offices will have more leeway in respect of decisions involving expenditures up to a certain amount. I know that so long as these regional and district officers are not subject to the pressures of political patronage they will render a great service to the people.

This reorganization which I have just mentioned is one which certainly is more in line with good business practices. It is one which is more in line with well tried and acknowledged procedures in the business world. This would bring about great savings and the elimination of a duplication of services by home offices or in the field.

For many years I have been worried about the duplication of services which exists in various departments of the government. Some six or seven years ago as a member of the committee on public accounts I asked how many architects were engaged by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. At that time the officials said there were approximately 90 employed. With the new procedure and responsibility given to the Department of Public Works I am sure there will be an elimination of the duplication or multiplication of the work of architects, draftsmen, engineers, either mechanical or electrical, researchers, specification writers and the staff of the procurement branches of different departments.

As a result of the adoption of this policy there will be created certain agencies specialized in certain fields of activity. Surely this can only lead to savings, better administration and solutions to the problems which face so many Canadians, and I refer to the taxpayers. When the government tends to economize and continuously searches for ways and means to save the taxpayers money on behalf of the Canadian people, it is doing a good job.

How many branches of departments of government have their own architects, engineers and draftsmen? The duplication of service in this regard could be eliminated if these efforts were centralized in the Department of Public Works. There are very many services which are of a specialized nature. I am thinking particularly of services performed for the Department of National Defence. If centralization could be brought about, all the departments of government would require only a small staff with a very few consultants who could keep in touch with the officers of the Department of Public Works, who would advise them as to their requirements in respect of buildings and other things. I am sure these officers of the Department of Public Works could do this job as efficiently, with a greater savings of the taxpayers' money.

Some of the recommendations of the Glassco commission in respect of the Department of Public Works were very interesting. The first I should like to mention related to the processing and control of mail. The report suggested that statistics now reveal that the cost of processing mail is $79 for 1,000 pieces in the Department of Veterans Affairs, and $472 for 1,000 pieces of mail in the Department of Public Works. The statistics also revealed that the cost of processing outgoing mail in the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration was approximately $2.40 and $1.70 for 1,000 pieces respectively. The statistics showed that this cost in respect of the Department of Public Works was $16.50. This amount is the result of some expensive practices. I am sure this information has been considered, but we would be very interested to find out just how the situation has been improved.

In respect of the Department of Public Works acting as a purchasing agent for all departments of government, I believe it could specialize in the fields of construction and maintenance. In my opinion it is sensible that the purchasing for all government buildings, owned, leased or operated by the government, could be done by the same department. In looking at the same report I note there is an expression regarding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In the view of the commissioners the scope of the corporation's engineering activities should be limited to technical areas directly related to broadcasting.

I believe these recommendations reinforce the argument that I have been trying to advance, that one department should have the technical and professional men needed to carry out these requirements for all departments, including those associated with the acquisition of land for all departments. I am sure if the Department of Public Works had the authority and responsibility of acquiring land it could specialize in this field and act in such a way as to protect the public from unnecessary expenditures. The question of rentals and other facilities is again a specialist field. I am sure that if the department took on the responsibility for all leasing we would receive much better service.

One very interesting recommendation of the Glassco commission concerns the elimination of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. If a department such as public works is in charge of the procurement and purchase of all material needed in structures occupied by the government, it is logical that the department should also be in a position to dispose of any surplus equipment owned by the government of Canada. We could save the Canadian taxpayer many thousands of dollars by eliminating Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

The final recommendation of the Glassco royal commission was that the Department of Public Works be made responsible for the planning and supervision of all construction required by civil departments and agencies and the employment of all professional, technical and supporting staffs needed for such purposes; that it be responsible for the planning and supervision of construction for the Department of National Defence of all classes of property other than those at present provided for through the planning and construction staffs of the armed forces. We are very anxious to go back into committee at a later date in order to inquire of the minister and his officers exactly how many of these recommendations have been implemented and how many are in the process of being implemented.

In the committee I gave notice that I was interested in hearing from the minister the policy the government has adopted concerning the construction of marinas, or the subsidies and grants that would be made available across this country to those interested in constructing marinas. As everyone knows, more and more people now have extra time on their hands. These people are interested in boating and they are travelling quite a long way in pleasure craft. They need protection as they travel along our coastlines and our larger lakes.

Not very many months ago the minister wrote me a letter stating in general the policy of the department in so far as help in the construction of marinas was concerned. At that time my immediate reaction was that there was a lack of regional approach to such a policy. Any policy concerning marinas applies right across the country. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you will agree with me that if all policies of the government were applied across the country, without any regional consideration, we would not be rendering a service to the Canadian people.

In certain large metropolitan areas near the water marinas are built and operated at the expense of the boat owners. However, in other regions inhabited by people of limited means who work only 40 or 45 hours a week recreation is necessary, and if these people decide to go boating they need protection and the necessary structures to do so. Therefore I hope the letter which the minister wrote to me reflects a flexible policy which will not deprive many of our Canadians of the right to enjoy marina construction and marina privileges in their areas.

Another policy on which I should like the minister to comment concerns protective walls. This is a policy which no doubt has caused many headaches to the department, but at the same time it has caused large losses to many of our people who own land along the navigable waters. Ten or 15 years ago the government built protective walls in many of these areas, but since those days they have not been repaired or reconditioned. The result has been that the land owned by some of these people is being gradually eroded, and although the department may consider that a protective wall should only be built in an area where the cost would be justified in comparison with the value of the land to be protected, it seems to me we are forgetting that many of these people may not have the necessary income or the possibility of being able to move elsewhere.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions considered in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

• (10:10 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house may I say I understand that my hon. friend the house leader, who had to leave us a few minutes ago, has had some discussions with hon. gentlemen opposite and there is a general feeling that it would be desirable tomorrow to sit from eleven o'clock till 2.30, to recess until four o'clock and to sit from four o'clock till six o'clock. If that is the general wish of the house I wonder whether it could be so ordered. I do wish to put it in the form of a motion which I now hand to Your Honour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by the Minister of Transport, seconded by the Minister of Public Works:

> That, notwithstanding any standing order, tomorrow's sitting of this house shall be as follows: from 11 o'clock a.m. until 2.30 o'clock p.m., and from 4 o'clock p.m. until 6 o'clock p.m.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—"OCEAN TRAVELLER"—CHARTERING OF VESSEL BY RESEARCH BOARD

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on June 19 I asked a question of the Minister of Fisheries that Your Honour suggested was not acceptable in the period before the orders of the day, and pointed out that if I considered it to be a matter of urgency I might give notice to raise it at this particular time in the day's sitting. June 19 is ten days ago now, and my question involved the chartering of a boat by the Fisheries Research Board.

I based my question on a communication that I received from the Vancouver island organizer of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union in which he intimated that he understood that the motor vessel Ocean Traveller was to leave Victoria on June 19, the day I raised the question, under charter to the Fisheries Research Board. The communication stated that this vessel had been strikebound since March 17, and, so that I could advise the union, I asked whether it was government policy to charter strikebound vessels.

I noted after I asked my question that I was some way down the list, and I thought that the Ocean Traveller might be half way to Japan by the time I had the chance to raise the question, if, in fact, the charter had been made by that body. So my question was, in part, to confirm or otherwise whether or not the Department of Fisheries, through the Fisheries Research Board, was responsible for this charter.

Therefore I asked the minister whether the Fisheries Research Board has under charter a motor vessel called Ocean Traveller and, if so, whether it has put to sea despite the fact that according to the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union it has been strikebound since March 17.

If the charter was arranged as alleged, I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have been given to understand that it and a number of other vessels were involved in a dispute in which the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union was concerned in the Victoria area. According to the information that was given to me, the owners of some 29 vessels had signed an agreement and made an arrangement with the union in respect of their employees since the dispute was commenced, which I assume to have been March 17; that the vessel, with the blessing of the union, had gone to sea, but that this particular vessel was not among those which were involved in any settlement with the union. The question therefore arises whether the government has been involved in the chartering of a strikebound vessel.

[Mr. Barnett.]

I have listened to many discussions in the house in which spokesmen of Liberal administrations indicated that it was their government's desire to maintain a position of meticulous neutrality in various kinds of disputes. I also wish to draw to the attention of the house that relationships in the fishing industry between employers and fishermen, and various companies and business interests, have been in a sorry state for some time and that little has been done to resolve the matter except for the perennial amending legislation to the Combines Investigation Act which provides a sort of umbrella under which investigations can be conducted.

I remind the house that under the publication date of November, 1964, we made available to the house, with some fanfare at the time, a small review of information relating to the problems of wage and price disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry. The publication was prepared by a federal-provincial committee on wage and price disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry.

Some of us assumed at that time that this publication heralded some positive formulation of policy which we hoped would bring order to the matters that were involved in the negotiations between the employing and working interests of the fishing industry of British Columbia. So far as I know, since the publication of this report no positive steps have been taken by the federal or provincial governments. That being so, I suggest that the federal government, considering the lack of action which has been taken to clarify the jurisdictional and other matters involved—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries it falls upon me to reply to the hon. gentleman, in my exalted capacity as acting minister. I am afraid I cannot go into any of the larger questions the hon. gentleman appended to his original question, because I am not sufficiently well informed to do so.

I am informed by the Department of Fisheries that the Ocean Traveller is under charter to the Fisheries Research Board. It is to do research on shrimp. This operation is in no way connected with the issues of the present strike. Tenders were called before the vessel was strikebound and the Ocean Traveller submitted the lowest bid and was accepted. There is no question of catching or selling fish; it is purely a research operation.

TRANSPORT—INCREASE IN FERRY RATES, NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Minister of Transport is playing a double header tonight. Though he said he had been raised to the exalted position of acting Minister of Fisheries, in the answer he gave just now, I hope that he will listen to me in his capacity as Minister of Transport, because it is in that capacity that I wish to direct to him a question, the answer to which I have been attempting to obtain on every day of this week, beginning with Monday.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The headline on the editorial page of the Charlottetown Patriot last Saturday read: "Pickersgill Pickles Probe and Raises Ferry Fares." It is not hard to understand why the Minister of Transport should have issued his press release at a time when there was little opportunity to comment. I am not sure precisely when this press release was issued, but it seems it went out surreptitiously on Friday afternoon. In the course of this release he announced that a proposal which has been under consideration for some time will be followed through, and that there would be a substantial increase in ferry rates.

The minister himself did not think it was substantial. In answer to a question of mine yesterday he referred to it as being a very modest increase. Surely an increase of 33⅓ per cent, from $3 to $4 for a visitor and auto, is not an inconsequential one to those who from time to time use this ferry system as the only means by which they can transport themselves and their vehicles between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

The minister has on more than one occasion referred to this contemplated increase as a modest one. He is right, in one sense, because if we compare the amount which will be gained from this increase in revenue with the amount of the subsidy which is paid annually to provide the service I doubt whether in the coming year it will amount to as much as 2 per cent.

It is difficult to understand why the minister has taken this action, particularly when it follows only a few days after another action involving a further delay in the construction of the Northumberland strait crossing. If the people of Prince Edward Island ever felt that a government in Ottawa fails to consider their needs and the many problems which face them, particularly with regard to transportation, surely in the past few weeks they have been strengthened in reaching such a conclusion. I think there is a question in the minds of many as to whether, when the government commits itself to one method of acting, it will follow through with its undertakings.

From time to time during the past year we have heard affirmations from the minister that a commission headed by Mr. Henry J. Darling would meet with all those affected by any possible increase in ferry rates. In May of last year, in answer to the junior member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), he told us there would be a meeting of the commission to hear protests of this kind. Even as recently as April of this year, asked whether it was the intention of the government that hearings be held by the Canadian Maritime Commission into the rates charged on the ferry service, the answer was, yes.

In the light of these affirmative answers it is difficult to understand why the government would unilaterally, apparently without even notifying the provincial government, adopt a stance which at the very least shows a degree of insensitivity to the difficulties faced by Prince Edward Island in keeping a continuous link with the mainland.

Last year in the house I said there might be some sensible way in which a change could be made. The minister has provided, in this contemplated revision, that books of ten tickets would be made available to those using them within a two month period. It is true this would lower the cost to active shippers. But I am just as much concerned about those who travel less often, perhaps to visit family and friends in the same way as many of us drive from town to country and from country to town. If these books of ten tickets were valid for one year, the arrangement might have been agreeable and acceptable to those concerned.

Another possibility which might bring in just as much revenue as that which is now contemplated is an increase in fares on a temporary basis covering the active tourist season. When tourists have occasion to use the ferry only once or twice during the course of the year they probably would not mind paying an additional dollar or so, but to Prince Edward Islanders and maritimers generally this increased burden of 33⅓ per cent, without any opportunity for a close examination of it by those critically affected, seems to be most unwarranted and most unfair.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman made two points. One was that it had been the intention at one time to have an inquiry before any change was made. Two circumstances altered the view of the government, and my view as minister, about that. No representations were ever made to the government in any earlier period about there being any hardship through increasing the rates on ordinary motorcars for casual and occasional crossings. Considering the price of everything these days I do not think that a nine mile trip on a boat at $2 is very excessive. In fact I do not think the Prince Edward Islanders would like it to be represented that even they could not afford that for casual and occasional trips.

What we were concerned about, and properly concerned about, was the question of people who used these ferries commercially. We came to the conclusion that we had found a method that ought to be tried out before there would be much sense in having an inquiry into it, and that method, of course, involves no increase for anyone who makes ten trips in a two month period.

I also indicated in my statement the other day, and I do not think it is necessary to repeat it at this time and put it on the record again, that if there were cases of hardship, for instance of farmers delivering their own products where they would not be covered by this ten ticket arrangement, we would take a very sympathetic look at them; and we intend to do that. So far as the increase on casual, occasional crossings of an extra $1 on the round trip is concerned, I think it is still the cheapest trip on a boat anywhere in the world today, certainly anywhere in the western world.

A week has gone by and the hon. gentleman, as a good and assiduous representative of his riding, has done his best to keep this question alive. But the fact is that up to the last time I checked I had not received one word of protest from anyone in Prince Edward Island to suggest that my assessment of the situation, which is naturally the assessment of the government also, is far out. I think the hon. gentleman should be given full marks for trying.

Perhaps the hon. gentleman should devote himself to larger questions, and I would remind him that in the supplementary estimates brought down yesterday there is another $2½ million to be used to build all-weather roads in Prince Edward Island. I think that any little inconvenience from this ferry rate increase will be far more than offset by that good news of yesterday, added to the additional service that is to be provided for the summer months of this year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPORTED INVITATION TO VISIT SOUTH-WEST AFRICA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of an article in the January-February-March Report on World Affairs, issued under the authority of the general council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. In that report I came on the following paragraph, referring to South-West Africa and South Africa:

> Another move in the diplomatic offensive by South Africa to project a favourable picture of South-West Africa to the world was the invitation extended by the foreign minister, Dr. H. Muller, to ambassadors of all countries represented in South Africa to visit the booming territory and "see for themselves". Dr. Muller said that the government's attitude was that there was no aspect of South Africa's policy, either in the republic or in South-West Africa, that it need hide.

There was another paragraph which read:

> Meanwhile in February the South African government had invited the diplomatic missions in Pretoria to visit South-West Africa to see for themselves what was being done for the indigenous inhabitants. By the end of March none of the diplomats had accepted the invitation, largely because they feared that such a visit might be construed as recognition of South Africa's right of jurisdiction over the territory.

• (10:30 p.m.)

It might be suggested that the only possible visit to that area should be under the auspices of the United Nations. This, however, is not likely to happen because a mission from the United Nations went to South-West Africa in 1962. On invitation of the South African government the chairman and vice chairman of the special committee for South-West Africa, Mr. Victoria Carpio and Dr. Martinez de Alva, went to South-West Africa and, after a ten day visit issued a joint communiqué with the South African government in May 1962. This communiqué stated that they had found neither evidence of genocide in South-West Africa nor of militarization of the territory in violation of the terms of the mandate, and that there was no threat to international peace and security arising from South Africa's administration of the territory.

This report was immediately objected to by the United Nations and the two delegates were repudiated by that organization and by their own countries. So the United Nations carried on with the program, with which they seemed determined to proceed. The Canadian government in the most recent votes, admittedly, has abstained. They have not, however, opposed a policy which is totally unrealistic and one which involves a danger to world peace and security. South-West Africa has therefore been turned over to the mercies of the United Nations. Recent events have shown us the inadequacy of the United Nations to even maintain a peace keeping force in a troubled area. Where it will obtain the strength and power to undertake the task it is setting for itself is something I do not know.

I believe the Canadian government and the Department of External Affairs should be seriously concerned about the policy that is being set by the United Nations. The only question was whether the invitation had been received and, if so, whether it had been declined, because it would seem to me that a visit by the Canadian representative would serve several useful purposes. It would either corroborate or deny the earlier report of the United Nations representatives who went to South-West Africa. It would also provide the Canadian government with a better source of information for any future action at the United Nations.

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is that the Canadian ambassador in South Africa did receive such an invitation from the South African government on March 1, but no formal reply has as yet been given to it.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 30, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

INDUSTRY, RESEARCH AND ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Second report of standing committee on industry, research and energy development—Mr. Hopkins.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

RECEIPT OF LETTER OF CONGRATULATIONS FROM LEGISLATURE OF INDIA

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day may I take this opportunity to advise hon. members that I have this morning received from the Speaker of the Lok Sabha of India a letter conveying the warmest congratulations of that body on the occasion of our centennial year. I intend to advise the Speaker of the Lok Sabha of the gratitude of members of the House of Commons to the members of the Indian legislature for their courteous action on this occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT PROCEEDINGS BE TELEVISED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would now ask the Prime Minister whether consideration has been given by the government to the question of having the house welcome television cameras for the purpose of assuring that across this country during centennial year the boys and girls may have some idea of the operation of parliament. We on this side of the house give this our full support, and I am sure all the Prime Minister has to do is act and action will be taken.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the other day I received a copy of a memorandum from an officer of the C.B.C. outlining in some detail how a special program of this kind on the operations of parliament could be undertaken. I believe it was addressed to Your Honour as Speaker, and was referred to me.

I was much impressed by the proposal in the way it was put forward, and I have been discussing it with our own house leader. But it seems to me that to have a program of this kind undertaken next week, which would have to be on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday, at a time when the house is not likely to be as crowded as is normal would not be the best occasion; especially in view of the plans that were put forward which could and I believe will be very impressive when they are carried into effect. I would think, Mr. Speaker, it would be better to have this done when we resume next September, which I hope would probably be the month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think the presence of the television cameras might account for a larger attendance here? Members would not dare stay away.

TRADE

CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE OF PROPOSED TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the far reaching effects which the Kennedy round of negotiations will have upon the economic life of Canada, is it the minister's intention to send the proposed tariff changes to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs before final approval is sought from parliament?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that would be a matter for the Minister of Finance, and I think he intends to deal with these tariff items by way of budget and consideration in the house. The standing committee has just completed its study of the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I do not think these changes need be referred back to it from my department. If they need to be referred to it from the Department of Finance, that is another consideration.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. In view of the fact, as I understand from members of that committee, that an assurance was given to it that these Kennedy round negotiation changes would be submitted to the committee in order that the general public might have an opportunity to make representations, would the Prime Minister take whatever steps are necessary to see that the committee is given an opportunity to examine these proposals?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will discuss the matter with my colleague, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): As a further supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, is the minister planning a series of meetings with the leaders of business and industry that will be affected by the wide ranging tariff cuts on imported materials, considering in particular the drastic effects on Canadian manufacturing and industry in textiles, plastics, chemicals, fine papers and other major lines which will be hard hit by the reduction of tariffs especially against the United States?

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do propose to tell the business community of the great opportunities that arise from these tariff cuts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: I should remind the hon. gentleman that in the particular areas he mentioned the concessions granted by Canada were relatively modest.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Whether relatively modest or not, is there going to be consultation with business—

Mr. Winters: I said yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and is the minister in a position to say what effect these reductions will have in making Canada even more subject to American control?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs I should like to direct a question to the acting minister. Since the minister previously stated that he expected the Woods report to be tabled by the end of June, has he any further information for the house or for the veterans on this matter at this time?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take this question as notice and have a reply for my hon. friend early in the week.

TELEVISION

TORONTO, ONT.—REPORTED APPROVAL OF ADDITIONAL OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question which is for the Secretary of State is in two parts. It concerns the television channel at Barrie. In spite of the quite proper reluctance on the part of the government to interfere, I wonder whether the minister would not consider that perhaps this matter should be held in abeyance until the question of educational television is settled. Second, has the minister received representations from the metropolitan educational television association in Toronto on this matter?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the procedure followed by the B.B.G. now is that there is an application to the Minister of Transport which must bear his signature and subsequently must bear my signature before it goes to the cabinet for approval or any other action. With regard to the second part of the question the answer is yes; I received such representations this morning.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. In view of the complaints to the effect that others who intended to forward or who had forwarded their applications were not given consideration in connection with the outlet in Toronto, can the minister say whether the government will give consideration to that aspect; or are they just prepared to go ahead and allow this pay-off to the trio from Barrie to be consummated?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell you what kind of consideration my colleagues would give to it but as a resident of southern Ontario you may be sure I will be giving it plenty of consideration.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that statistics published this week demonstrate that in 1966 we set a record in Canada for highway deaths and injuries, and in view of the fact that the same statistics show that in the first half of 1967 we are establishing an all time new record, I would like to ask the Minister of Industry whether the government now is seriously considering the implementation in the near future of the recommendations in this regard of the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we have been holding discussions on this matter with the provinces, and it would be my hope that in the not too distant future positive action will be able to be announced.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister whether progress has been made in respect of the setting up of the federal board recommended by the committee on justice and legal affairs, which would concern itself with all matters of motor vehicle safety.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to the previous question covers that point.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question about complaints of a lack of box cars on C.N.R. lines to take grain from congested country elevators. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce say whether this problem has been drawn to the attention of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to advise the hon. member that last night seven box cars arrived at Nokomis on the C.N.R. line. The railways are aware of the situation at this delivery point, and have assured the Canadian Wheat Board that there will be an increased number of box cars arriving at Nokomis in the next few weeks.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SALE OF ARMS BY RUSSIA TO ARAB COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the minister have any knowledge of plans on the part of the Soviet union to sell arms and other military material to the Arab bloc countries?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have some information on that subject.

Mr. Sherman: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to make it plain that this country would view with considerable alarm any sales or negotiations in this respect, and would regard such as a direct contravention of the spirit of the United Nations cease fire and the peace efforts which are being made in that area of the world?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when speaking on behalf of the Canadian government at the United Nations general assembly I urged that there be a halt in the sale of arms by all countries to nations in the Middle East. I was able to point out at the same time that it was not the policy of Canada to sell arms to any country in that area.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TILCO DEMONSTRATORS—SUGGESTED GRANT OF CLEMENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Solicitor General. In view of the manner in which the cabinet exercises clemency and extends mercy to convicted murderers, I should like to ask whether the cabinet at this time during centennial year would graciously grant amnesty to the men of the Tilco plant at Peterborough who were convicted of illegal picketing in the wake of a mass demonstration.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any application that has been made for pardons on behalf of these men. If an application is made it will receive the usual careful consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTION ON REPLACEMENT AUTOMOBILE PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. In view of the recent trade agreement under which Canada agreed to lower the duty on replacement car parts from 25 per cent to 15 per cent, can the minister say whether this is a first step in the movement toward free trade in replacement car parts?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the house is aware that during the course of the fall the agreement respecting trade in automobiles and automotive parts will be reviewed. During the course of that review there is no question but that the situation in respect of replacement parts will be examined. I should not like at this time to attempt to anticipate what might be the outcome of this review.

Mr. Hales: I have a supplementary and related question. In view of the fact that Canada gives the car manufacturing companies of Canada a concession of $50 million per year, and in view of the statement the minister has often made, when can Canadian car buyers expect to be able to buy Canadian made cars at a reduced price?

Mr. Drury: As I informed the hon. member the other day when this question was raised in the committee, the so-called gift of $50 million to automobile manufacturers was in fact passed on to the consumers in the first year in the form of reduced prices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INFORMATION RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry whether he is now in a position to answer the question I addressed to him recently.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would indicate what the question is because I am suspicious it might be one which was ruled out of order.

[Mr. Pennell.]

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—SPECIAL MEASURES RESPECTING PASSAGE OF ROYAL YACHT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can the minister tell the house whether the locks on the St. Lawrence Seaway, between Montreal and Kingston, will be closed during the next few days for commercial shipping or pleasure boating? I mention the next few days, in reference to the trip of the royal yacht Britannia through the locks of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the details in respect of the passage of the Britannia through the seaway are not at my fingertips, but I will make inquiries and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. Starr: Why let him know? What has he got in mind?

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General of Canada as minister responsible for the R.C.M.P.

Could the Solicitor General tell us whether instructions have been given to the naval units of the R.C.M.P. first, to prevent pleasure craft from coming close to the royal yacht Britannia while it is berthed at the Marc Drouin dock in Montreal and, secondly after it is made fast in the St. Lambert locks?

I should like to ask the Solicitor General of Canada if instructions on this score have been given the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member may ask whether instructions have been given to the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, could I reframe my question so that it may be in order?

Will freedom of movement be given pleasure craft in the Montreal harbour and surrounding areas of Montreal harbour during the forthcoming week end?

[English]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INVITATIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister now in a position to table the letters of invitation sent to the various provinces in respect of the conference on July 5, and the replies?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, after my right hon. friend asked about this the other day I made inquiries and found that all the replies have not been received. I think there are one or two more to come, and I hope they will be received over the week end.

ROYAL VISIT

INVITATION TO TERRITORIAL COMMISSIONERS TO MEET HER MAJESTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Have the commissioners of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories been invited to meet Her Majesty on the yacht Britannia, as well as the provincial premiers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The invitations to meet Her Majesty on the yacht are given by Her Majesty. I think arrangements have been made for the commissioners to be here during the visit, but I will look into the details.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will these commissioners be sworn into the Privy Council as befits their increased stature and public responsibilities?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ARBITRATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. With regard to the arbitration board which was set up to deal with the recent railway dispute, I would ask the minister whether he has any indication of how soon the board is likely to report?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did make some inquiries two days ago, and my information is that the report will probably be completed in or about the second week of July. No definite date is fixed for transmittal to me but I believe it will be some time between the 7th and the 15th.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT RESPECTING LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, further to the question about the Picard report concerning the longshoremen, may I ask whether the minister can give an assurance that to his knowledge none of the contents of this report have yet been made public?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, they have not been made public, though I understand that the technical adviser to the commission made certain representations, but they were made in public as part of the hearing.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REDUCTION OF LAND REQUIREMENT FOR HOME CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government made any decision in respect of the reduction of the land requirement for the building of veterans' homes under the V.L.A.?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will have to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a further question, Mr. Speaker. This is the same answer I received two months ago. I would draw the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that when I followed the matter up with the Minister of Veterans Affairs and indicated that the Department of Veterans Affairs were considering such a reduction, the minister denied it. I have in my possession a letter to which I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or a question of privilege? This is not a proper question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The same answer was provided to me two months ago when this question was raised. It was referred at that time to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. When the question was followed up with the Minister of Veterans Affairs he denied that the department was considering such a move. My question was raised at the time because of the difficult housing shortage, especially in respect of our veterans, and I wondered whether the matter could be cleared up. At that time the minister denied that the department would consider such a reduction in land requirements. I have in my possession a letter signed by Mr. R. W. Pawley, director general of the Department of Veterans Affairs, Veterans Land Act, which directly contradicts the answer given in the house by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the President of the Treasury Board. Will the government over the week end give notice of the legislation to increase the pensions of retired civil servants so we can deal with this matter next week?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): I do not think this would be possible, Mr. Speaker. The matter is still under active consideration by the government.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government make it clear that this matter will be dealt with before we break for a summer recess?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General and ask whether he could make arrangements to have the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) put in protective custody until after the Queen's visit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO ASSIST LOBSTER FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. I wonder whether the minister could advise us if the government can now give the house information in respect of the level of federal-provincial assistance that will be made available to Nova Scotia lobster fishermen in order to overcome the storm damage of earlier this year.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I have already said in the house on this question. The matter is under consideration with the government of Nova Scotia.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—THREATENED CLOSING OF VOCATIONAL SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me about a wire he had received from the port of Churchill chamber of commerce in respect of our Eskimo school there.

I am sorry I could not answer the right hon. gentleman's question on Wednesday, it would appear the copy of the telegram to the right hon. gentleman had out-raced the original. I suggest that the right hon. gentleman refer to the answer I gave to a question put to me by the hon. member for Churchill on February 24, 1965 as reported at page 11695 of Hansard. At that time I indicated that the Eskimo school would be remaining in Churchill for from three to five years, and that situation has not changed. In the meantime we are happy to be able to use the facilities at Churchill.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister prepared to go a little further and say the three to five years will be extended? It would be most unjust to Churchill if this school were removed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUIREMENT FOR REGISTRATION OF ALL PERSONS IN INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, some two weeks ago, in answer to a question put by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I stated that to my knowledge 14 year olds did not have to register under the Unemployment Insurance Act regulations. Upon going into the matter further I find that under regulation 18 every employer who employs a person in insurable employment, whether he be 14, 15 or older, must register him. To that extent, I was wrong in my previous reply, and I want to correct it.

TRADE

POSSIBLE RECOURSE FOR INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY GENEVA AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If it is found that under the trade agreement just signed at Geneva undue hardship is worked on a particular industry, will it be possible for negotiations to be held directly between Canada and the principal country involved or must a universal agreement be sought with all the signatories of the agreement?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): First of all we would want to talk to the company concerned; then recourse would have to be sought through the machinery of GATT if there were grounds for it.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED ADDITIONAL SERVICE, OTTAWA-WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Last Monday I asked him about an application from Pacific Western Airlines to the Air Transport Board to provide an additional service from Ottawa to western Canada. Has the minister any further information with regard to the deliberations of the board concerning that matter?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I regret I was not able to make inquiries in my office this morning, because I was detained at a meeting. However, I had asked the board to let me know as soon as anything definite was decided. I had heard nothing up to last night. I know it is an urgent matter, but it is under active consideration and action may have been taken by now.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I know how anxious we all are to deal with the various matters which must be considered before the adjournment. However, according to my understanding the estimates of the Department of Public Works were supposed to come up for discussion today. It was also mentioned by the minister in the course of his remarks that an opportunity would be given us today to deal with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

No member of the house, no matter how studious he is, would be in a position to deal today with the Kennedy round tariff matters which must be discussed before we adjourn. I have read the statements that were delivered and I have tried to make some analysis of them, but it was quite impossible to do this in the short time we had. I suggest the minister should put this over until next week, thereby enabling a study to be made of the subject and an intelligent discussion to take place.

If we take up this matter today we will be able to give it only cursory, uncertain and uninformed consideration. This is a matter of tremendous consequence to Canada, and I suggest that in the spirit of co-operation that has prevailed the minister should agree to this proposal because otherwise these issues, the importance of which to the economy of Canada cannot be overestimated, will merely be touched upon.

Mr. Winters: I think that is a reasonable approach to the problem. Under normal circumstances the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce would have been called yesterday but I thought this might have been unfair to hon. members because it would preclude them from asking questions in connection with the Kennedy round tariff negotiations. So I suggested the estimates be held over until today to give hon. members the opportunity to examine the documentations overnight.

I realize this has not given sufficient time so I suggest, to accommodate the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and hon. members, that we proceed with the other items in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I am quite sure the Minister of Finance and I could arrange to be here at a convenient time next week. I refer to the Minister of Finance because the details of the tariff structure are matters more appropriate for the Minister of Finance than for the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think that is a very proper decision. Item 1 could be allowed to stand and could be dealt with next week. I thank the minister for that suggestion.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition may I say that I think we all agree it makes common sense for us to delay consideration of the Kennedy round until we have had time to study this matter. However, I would like to ask that some consultation take place on matters to be taken up next week. We will only have a short time before we conclude consideration of the estimates on Thursday night. I believe arrangements should be made as to what departments will be under discussion next week. I am not asking that we negotiate in public as to what we should do, but my point is that if we spend a day next week on consideration of the trade and commerce estimates some other matter will suffer. I know what matter I do not want to suffer. Can we have some consultations on this during the day?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the comments made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre let me say that we have already had consultations relating to the program for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and it would be possible on Friday of next week to call, for example, the Department of Finance. If consideration of the trade and commerce department is completed today this would provide an opportunity to deal with the specific problem of the Kennedy round negotiations. So if the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were passed today there would be no prejudice to a further consideration of the Kennedy round of negotiations late next week, because we could still call the Department of Finance next Friday if it were desirable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the house leader if there would be any objection to leaving item No. 1 open so there would be no question of the limitation of discussion. I thought we had come to that agreement here, and I hope it will be confirmed, because it is quite satisfactory to have the discussion next Friday. I should like to have item 1 left open, and I can see no objection to that.

Mr. Sharp: I wonder if I might ask whether the committee would consider whether I, as Minister of Finance, might make a statement supplementary to that made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce yesterday when presenting to the house the document and results of the Kennedy round. I have no desire to take the time of the house, but I think it might expedite consideration of these estimates when we come back to this item if I were to make a statement on behalf of the ministry of finance as to the plans we have for the implementation of these results. Then when the debate occurs it could take place in the light of my comments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure all of us would like to hear from the Minister of Finance. I think, however, today is not the day. We could arrange for the matter to come up next Friday, and before that date the minister will have the fullest opportunity to make his statement. We are getting this information piecemeal. Last night we got one part, then we are to get another part today. I know that serials are interesting, but possibly the minister could wait until some time next week to give us his viewpoint.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I might proceed, then, with item 1 of the Department of Trade and Commerce and make whatever brief remarks I have, and then it would be open to any hon. member, including the Minister of Finance, to make any comments he wished. Then I suggest we stand the item and go on and pass the other items of the department, in the hope of returning to item 1 next Friday or to the estimates of the Minister of Finance. Is that agreeable to hon. members?

Mr. Churchill: There is just one matter I should like to mention in connection with trade and commerce. We are under no obligation, according to the agreement we reached last week, to pass this department in this portion of the session. It is not one of the specified departments we have left with which we agreed to deal. They were transport, national defence, health and welfare, Indian affairs and northern affairs. These departments will be guillotined next Thursday night if we do not pass them in the interval. However, there has been no agreement to complete trade and commerce.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That being so, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there should be any agreement to the course suggested by the minister. This course was well planned, since it would enable the Minister of Finance to make a statement today and have the record plastered up. In view of the fact we are permitting the minister to go ahead with something to which there was no agreement, I feel there should be no such element entering into it as the Minister of Finance proceeding to deal with the Kennedy round. We are consenting to the minister going ahead today, provided item 1 is held over. The minister can make his statement, and then next week the Minister of Finance will make the statement he has in mind.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): May I ask a question about this procedure. What has happened to the undertaking given by the minister to the committee that this entire matter would be brought back to the committee for the hearing of witnesses and a thorough investigation? Why is that not going to happen?

Mr. Winters: I would have to refresh my memory as to the nature of the undertaking. Frankly, I do not recall giving it in those terms.

Mr. Starr: I feel, Mr. Chairman, that we should stick to the agreement at which the house leaders arrived for the culmination of this part of the session. We should concentrate our efforts on those departments we have agreed to pass and for which an appropriation bill could be introduced at the end of this part of the session. I do not see that anything can be gained by giving consideration to the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce without a full discussion of the Kennedy round results. May I suggest that we proceed with the Department of Public Works for the balance of the day, then the Department of Trade and Commerce can be brought up next week and the Minister of Finance can make his statement on the Kennedy round. I feel this discussion is taking up time that could be devoted to the consideration of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Winters: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thought we had reached an agreement on this yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; then the Minister of Finance came in. It could be done simply in this way; leave item No. 1 open and go ahead with the rest of the items in the Department of Trade and Commerce. There will be no objection to that course.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps we should do that. The officials are here, so I suggest we go ahead with the Department of Trade and Commerce leaving item 1 aside.

The Chairman: Is it agreed now that the committee of supply will proceed with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce and that vote No. 1 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: We shall proceed with vote No. 5, the details of which will be found on page 495 of the blue book.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Trade Commissioner Service—

5. Administration, operation and maintenance, $10,832,100.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure the minister has material in front of him on the basis of which he can make a statement on this $10 million item. I think we should have that statement.

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I should make my general statement here, then, because much of it revolves around the trade commissioner service which recently spent a very profitable seven weeks touring Canada in the interests of trade and the general economic health of the country. I will not deal with the Kennedy round at this time.

On June 8 I was privileged to meet the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Essex West. The estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were reviewed very thoroughly at that time. I dealt with the current and projected plans of the department. The proceedings of that meeting have been printed and published, so I do not intend to burden hon. members with a repetition of the department's achievements and intentions as of that day. However, we have been moving forward, and it might be useful if I were to comment briefly upon certain activities which I believe might be of interest to the committee.

Following an almost unprecedented expansion in exports in 1966, sales abroad have continued to advance strongly in the current year. To emphasize the vital importance to the Canadian economy of sustaining strong export growth, a target of $11.25 billion was set last fall as an export objective for Canada's centennial year. Although considered at the time to be a particularly stiff challenge, this target has received the full endorsation and support of the export community.

Developments so far suggest that these high aspirations are in fact well on the way to realization. Notwithstanding the prevalence of less pressing demand conditions this year in some of our principal export markets, particularly the United States and the European community, figures for the first five months of the year show exports up 16.5 per cent or $650 million compared with the same period of 1966. This means that about two thirds of the projected increase for the year has already been achieved.

The figures for the month of May show total exports of $1,066.7 million, as against $932.9 million for May, 1966, an increase of 14.3 per cent. This includes substantial increases in exports to the United Kingdom, other commonwealth countries and the United States. The figure for the United States, for example, for May is up by 18.2 per cent. For the months of January through May the total amount of our exports is $4,593.3 million as against $3,943.1 million for the period of January through May, 1966, a total full increase of 16.5 per cent.

Even allowing for a diminution in the strength of some of the forces contributing to this early-year expansion, there is good likelihood that the $11.25 billion target will be realized and possibly exceeded. This will represent a creditable showing indeed in a year characterized by significantly slower growth in world trade as a whole.

I have indicated, without going into the Kennedy round negotiations, what steps we plan to make the results available to the business community in Canada. The statistics have been circulated to trade associations and have been sent out directly from my office to some 153 companies. The export advisory board has been invited to Ottawa; they will arrive here early next week. We shall brief them and ask them to carry the message back to their communities. In addition, we plan a series of regional or sectional seminars in various parts of Canada—some in co-operation with provincial authorities concerned with trade, some in collaboration with sectors of our trading community direct—to examine the Kennedy round results and to expedite and recommend ways to exploit specific new exports prospects. I have already communicated, in fact, with the provincial ministers. These seminars will commence this autumn when our businessmen have had time to consider the relevance of the agreements to their individual operations.

[Mr. Winters.]

Over and beyond the foregoing, we in the department have commenced our own detailed study of the Kennedy round agreements to ensure that every program and activity in our trade promotion operations is tuned to maximize the realization of the new export prospects. I assure hon. members that our promotional efforts will reflect this as our prime concern. I have every expectation that Canadian businessmen will demonstrate equal resolve and effort. As recommended by the export advisory council, we intend to encourage the formation of export committees within trade associations and to use these channels and that of seminars, regionally and within annual conferences of trade and industry associations, to support our export drive.

As to operation export, which is the item to which the hon. member just referred, final data reveal that 2,144 firms actually held interviews with our trade commissioners during their seven week, highly successful, cross-Canada tour. This figure is a new record for operations of this type. This preliminary review indicates that half these firms are new to the export field or inexperienced in exporting.

The department is analysing all the data of operation export 1967. We feel sure the information derived will be useful in furthering our trade promotional activities and programs. For example, 10 per cent of the participating firms were subsidiaries of foreign parents. That indicates an increasing willingness on the part of foreign subsidiaries operating in Canada to enter the export field. Again, we will be able to identify firms by province and city of residence and degree of export experience, as a step in determining whether the concentrations of such firms warrant, say, a group approach to guidance in the techniques and practices of export. The trade commissioners who took part in the operation have now returned to their posts and are following up on the more than 16,000 interviews they held. The first progress reports on the results will be submitted before the year end.

As hon. members know, exports are only one side of the trade picture; it is a side that helps to stimulate our domestic economy, provide jobs and also helps to bring about a high level of economic performance. Imports, Mr. Chairman, are the other side and as a nation we import almost as much as we export. The importing of goods and services, and importing as an industry, all contribute to our high standard of living. Moreover, it is fair to say that we must import in order to export. Trade is a two-way street and will be more so when the concessions of the Kennedy round are fully implemented. Canadians, I think, too often look abroad for sources of supply without first finding out if the goods and services are available in Canada. As a result, over the past five years while our exports grew to three quarters as much again as in 1961, our imports have grown almost as much.

Last year we had a substantial favourable trade balance. Unfortunately that was not quite as much as was reflected by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics year end figures. I want to inform hon. members of the discrepancy and the reason for it. It was found, in the course of confirming the earlier figures in 1967, that one important port had failed to submit its export figures to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in time to have them included in the year end figures. The appropriate officers of the D.B.S. did not detect the discrepancy in time; as a result there was fault on both sides.

This has been reported in the press. It has been intimated that the favourable trade balance might in fact disappear. I can assure hon. members that while the trade balance might be reduced as against the figure reported by D.B.S., it will still be favourable. I can also assure hon. members that adequate steps and precautions are being taken to see that there will not be any recurrence of such a discrepancy.

There are other features of the department, very important ones, that I will not deal with at length at this time. I should refer, I think, to Expo '67 because it has received considerable attention in the world, not to mention the attention of Canadians. It has demonstrated that it is a great credit to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: It will give us a new sense of national pride and status. I doubt whether Canadians ever again, after 1967, will feel that they are the kind of Canadians they were when they entered 1967. I think we shall adopt a new approach, with higher resolve, increased status and a greater pride, in ourselves and our country.

The attendance figures at Expo are striking in themselves. Yesterday, for example, a total of 267,318 guests attended, for a total to date of 16,535,419, which is considerably above the estimates. However, despite the fact that visitors are coming to Expo far in excess of expectations, the corresponding revenues have not been commensurately great. So far, the people who have visited Expo have spent rather less per capita within the gates than had been anticipated. It is thought that when the flow of United States visitors arrives during the holiday season the slack will be taken up. It may be of interest to note that the total receipts as of June 22 from admission sales, advance admission sales and other revenues from visitors, including revenues from concessions and the performing arts, were expected to be of the order of $59 million whereas actual receipts totalled about $56 million, somewhat lower.

• (12 noon)

The success of Expo will not be judged, however, from the financial returns within the gates. We always anticipated a substantial short-fall of revenues against expenditures within the gates of Expo itself. We as a government—and I know this is true of the government which preceded us—count on the financial success of Expo being reflected in its benefits across Canada and in the receipts which will accrue to the treasury through other channels.

I am sure that in the long run the net beneficial effects to Canada, financial and otherwise, will be substantial. I did want to tell hon. members of the great success of the exhibition as an attraction to visitors and point out at the same time that though revenues are not running quite as high as the number of visitors might indicate, the success of Expo is assured.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement the minister made with regard to the $100 million discrepancy. I am sure the explanation he has given will satisfy all hon. members.

I was pleased to hear the hon. gentleman repeat what he said last night with regard to the seminars which are to be held in conjunction with provincial ministers. I should like to ask whether members of parliament will be invited to attend these seminars, regardless of the party they may happen to represent. This is a subject of great interest to members of parliament.

I am sure all members will be pleased with the decision to discuss the items involved in the tariff changes next week rather than today. I believe it would be almost impossible for anyone to become conversant with this intricate subject in the very short time during which the details have been available to hon. members.

The minister was asked today whether he would agree to have this matter referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. In fact, he was asked in one of the meetings of that committee on June 8, I believe, whether these tariff changes would be studied in the committee. It appears to me that the minister intended this to happen and that the members of the committee were also under that impression. This is what the minister said, according to the report of the committee's proceedings on June 8, page 40:

> I would be glad to come together with you on an ad hoc basis, on a study group basis, or any other basis you wish to approach it. I think it would be a wonderful opportunity to help to disseminate information about what is going to be the most important development in the trading world in this generation.

I believe this clearly indicates that it was the intention of the minister that the whole question should be studied further by the committee. If we read further, we find mention of the fact that various firms could be invited to give evidence before the committee.

Dealing with the votes under the heading "General Administration", I believe the picture presented is somewhat misleading, though not intentionally so. The estimates are up by almost $4 million. The cost of running the standards branch is to rise by roughly $150,000. The estimate for Expo is down by $1,921,000, which is understandable because last year we were naturally spending great sums of money on this outstanding event. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister and his department as well as all those people who were in any way responsible for the conduct of its affairs and the construction and administration of Expo '67. I am sure all hon. members who have visited Expo, as I have done, will agree with me that one's heart just naturally swells with pride over the fact that one is a Canadian, and we have such a great achievement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Irvine: I think it would be particularly remiss of me if I did not also take the opportunity to congratulate the former administration, first, for selecting the site and, second, for choosing the first committee. They were the ones who actually got the ball rolling; it was their baby, so to speak. Expo is doing a fine public relations job for our country, and I think every one of us should be proud to have even a small part in this affair.

Farther down the list of items are some which are of particular interest to me. From the entry at the bottom of page 492 we note that in 1966-67 the estimate for carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves and payments in connection with the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act amounted to $40,388,000 while in this current year it is $33,940,000, a decrease of $6,448,000. If the amount of grain being carried in reserve is less, then the cost of carrying these temporary wheat reserves must, of course, be lower. This distorts the final figures set out against these items in that a decrease is shown whereas in fact no such decrease has been brought about.

For the next item, the Pacific National Exhibition in Vancouver, last year the government spent $1,200,000 and in the current fiscal year will spend $800,000. In the right hand column the decrease is shown as $400,000. I do not think this is right because the item reads:

> Grant to the Pacific National Exhibition, Vancouver, towards the cost of constructing a trade fair and sports building at Exhibition Park, Vancouver, the government of Canada's share not to exceed $2,000,000.

Having paid $1,200,000 in the previous year a balance of $800,000 was left. A decrease in expenditure is shown but actually the $800,000 is the unexpended balance of what had been previously committed for this venture.

At the bottom of the page we find listed, as I said before, a decrease of $4,775,600, and I think this is somewhat unintentionally misleading. The actual cost of administration is up almost $4 million and this at a time when we should be saving, not expanding our expenditures.

According to the details given on page 494 there is an increase of 15 per cent in the administrative staff. We are again back to the old empire building program in government at a time when the accent should be on saving, on cutting the estimates and saving the taxpayers' money. At present people are carrying such a fantastic tax load that they have reached the limit in this field. Now we must go to work on the other end and see where we can secure definite savings. As with all other departments, and in particular with the Department of Trade and Commerce, we shall have to work hard with the goal in mind of increasing departmental productivity.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I would direct the attention of the committee to the list of trade posts abroad under vote 5. The total amount of the estimate for these posts has been increased somewhat, but I gather increases in rates of pay have had quite a bit to do with it. We seem to have closed two offices and opened four others. I wonder why the office at Bombay was closed leaving only one in New Delhi to cover the great subcontinent of India. I notice there are two offices in Pakistan, at Islamabad and Karachi, and I think it possible there would be sufficient co-operation in that area for one of those offices to deal with matters on the west coast of India. I would be interested to know whether this is the case and whether consideration will be given to transferring one office to handle trade affairs in that vast area. It would also appear that we have no office in the great city of Calcutta.

Throughout the Pacific area our offices are few in number. We have two very close together, at Kuala Lumpur and Singapore. One wonders whether it is necessary to have two so close together, especially since the only other one in the area is at Tokyo. We are sadly unrepresented throughout the area of the Pacific rim. I would mention specifically Seoul, the capital of Korea, Bangkok, the capital of Thailand, and Taipei, the capital of Taiwan.

The Prime Minister made a special trip to British Columbia to assure the Canadian west that the government was keenly interested in Pacific trade, was doing all it could to encourage it and in fact was doing so much that the provinces were told not to bother. Yet when we examine the details of the estimates we are bound to wonder how genuine is the Prime Minister's argument and how sincere is the government in its protestations of doing all it can for Pacific trade. I would be interested to know whether there are plans to open additional trade offices in that part of the world during the coming year. It is an area which is sadly unrepresented either by diplomatic offices or trade offices. We do not have offices in several countries where we should have representation of some kind.

One of the offices which has been closed was at Salisbury and one of the new offices opened was at Nairobi. I gather that is an attempt to make up in that vast area of east Africa for under-representation of Canadian interests. It would be more correct to question on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs some of Canada's trading actions in that area, but at the moment I would be interested to know whether the office at Nairobi will be able to represent us fully in that very large and very diverse area of Africa.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I would take advantage of this opportunity to mention a few things about the trading practices of the government in the hope that my remarks will be constructive and enlightening. I do not intend to deal with the effect of the GATT tariff cuts on Canadian industry at this time, but I do wish to point out to the minister that in my judgment Canada still marches along on a set path, showing no imagination with regard to taking advantage of the opportunities that exist for us as a nation in the field of world trade.

Most of the remarks I am going to make I made in the house three years ago and since then I have waited, relatively in vain, to see some indication that the government was going to take action on my proposals. For the interest of the new Minister of Trade and Commerce I am going to repeat in summary the ideas I put forward on October 8, 1964.

First of all, it is very clear that world trade patterns are expanding primarily among the industrial nations of the world. Over the last four years the efforts in the Kennedy round of negotiations were designed to increase this flow. It is equally obvious that the trade patterns of the newly developing nations are not developing at the rate they should. This poses a challenge to us. We in the industrial nations of the world are now faced with two major choices. One is that we should use our great and growing wealth in a combined operation of giving handouts to the newly developing nations to try to keep them afloat, and the other choice is to push self-help proposals. One of these self-help proposals is epitomized in the phrase "trade, not aid."

• (12:20 p.m.)

The facts of life are that events since the last war indicate that nothing that has been done in the effort to bring the newly developing nations into the world trade pattern has succeeded. We are growing richer; they are growing poorer. All we are doing at the present time under the GATT concept is simply gathering the rich nations of the world into a club where we are building a high wall of tariffs around ourselves and offering a few crumbs to the poor at the door. This is moving our western world toward the first choice, the choice of handouts. This means that we stir the animosity of the individuals who live in these countries and arouse their national opposition. In the interests of Canada and in the interest of world peace I maintain that some nation in the western world must break through the wall of the rich man's club which we have built around our countries and do more than just hand out crumbs at the door.

What I have done before and what I intend to do now is merely outline in simple points some of the proposals that have been made and then record, as I know it, the progress which has been made in respect of them. The first proposal which I think would be accepted by all people who are knowledgeable in respect of world trading patterns is the wisdom of supporting the idea of international commodity agreements. We have had commodity agreements before and we will have them in the future. The main proposal I am making in respect of commodity agreements is one which I believe is now widely accepted by the parliamentarians in every country of the world. It is that commodity agreements should be broken into two groups, first, those dealing with the products of the newly developing nations and, second, the staple products of the industrial nations. In concerning myself first with the newly developing nations may I say that primarily they have a staple product or two to sell. Yet in our traditional bargaining practices we try to force their prices down to the lowest possible point.

We used to have, for example, a sugar agreement, but when Cuba got in trouble with the United States it collapsed. In the last year we have seen sugar prices go down to their lowest level in 35 years. This is a great advantage to many consumers in such countries as the United States and Canada but actually it is the worst thing in the world for us. We may save a cent or two a pound on our sugar, but when we buy from these newly developing nations and force them to take a low price we force them into lower and lower levels of living which only build up grief for us in the future.

I think we should deliberately send our representatives to UNCTAD this autumn with instructions to state that it is Canadian government policy, supported by all parties, that we as a nation will enter into commodity agreements with the newly developing nations so they will receive an enhanced price for their primary products and so that their producers will be given a much better chance to attain a better living standard. We on our part will voluntarily accept any greater costs which come to us in this regard. I know that such an agreement must be backed up by undertakings that those countries which accept the benefit of voluntarily higher minimum prices under the agreement will look after the question of surpluses, will see that the money gets through to the people who need it, and so on. I think, however, that the nations of the world are ready to move in this direction.

What I am asking the minister to do is this. With the ground carefully cultivated for him in advance and with the parliamentarians of all the countries of the world accepting the principle, will he not lead the nations of the world by seeing that Canada takes this step publicly and openly and asks for the support of all people? I am certain that support will be forthcoming because the vast majority of the people of the United States and Canada and all the free countries of the world are interested in the type of help under which people will be helped to help themselves and under which the producers will get a fair price for their products. In this way there will be material benefit in the end for us. First of all, this must be done with the primary purpose of helping these people.

In the negotiations at GATT our negotiators had to be tough and hard in order to get such terrific reductions as 2 per cent here, a half per cent there and so on. They fought for four years. But there are a billion and a half people in the world who need a little help too. This is a new type of concept which could be promoted by Canada at this stage, and I believe it would do 500 times more good than the little bit of gain we have received from GATT. This is the type of thing I should like to hear the minister boast about. I should like to hear him boast that he had put his country into the forefront by trying to help the newly developing nations in a way that they could maintain their pride and make their own way upward in the world.

Second, under commodity agreements there must be a recognition of the fact that much of the world will depend on those of us who are the great producers of basic products such as copper. Canada, Russia, Africa and South America will have to provide a vast share of these products from their mines and forests which the world will need in the future. Surely in the interests of ourselves and in the interests of commerce it is about time we began to put into the rule of law some sort of concept not only of a fair price to the producer but also of protection for the consumers so that there is a minimum price, a maximum price, and between the two the laws of supply and demand will work. This stability of price would do a great deal for the producing countries like South America and Africa which are new countries, as well as Canada which is one of the newer countries of the world.

These countries will have to supply the bulk of this type of product.

There really is a need for an international world commodity agreement which will provide prices which are reasonable at the bottom and at the top and will allow competition between the two levels. After a five year period the two levels can then be renegotiated again. The countries of the world which are trying to build up the industrial segment of their economies prefer industrial price stability on their basic products. This would help us and it would help them.

I think I have said enough in respect of commodity agreements to make it clear that I consider this government has been a laggard in this regard. If the minister would go back over the questions I have asked in the past four years he will find that I have asked about the sugar agreement. First we were told that we had to wait until the prices were low before we could take action. Now the prices are low and still there is no action.

There must be some sort of leadership. It cannot always come from the civil service. I know that the Department of Trade and Commerce has a good reputation as a "go, go, go" department compared with other departments which are known as "no, no, no" departments. But everything cannot be done through the civil service. There must be leadership at the political level. There must be the kind of leadership under which we will be able to go to the various cities of Canada and say that these are ideas which we think will in the long run be in the interests of this country and certainly in the interests of world trade and the peace of the world.

I should like to ask the minister to take advantage of the second UNCTAD conference this fall to let Canada take the lead. This is something in which we could take a real pride. If there should be gains or losses in respect of the GATT agreement, we can quarrel about these at home. In view of the needs of people all over the world I would hope that Canada would take the lead in proposing, for the newly developing countries in particular, the type of international agreement which would give these people a better living.

The second proposal I wish to offer is in respect of the necessity today to have international trading companies. As I listened to the minister give a report concerning the increased pressure in the trade promotion drive, it was clear to me that we are still thinking in terms of getting individual Canadian companies into markets all over the world. Let me assure the minister that we support his concept. I hope, however, that the minister's mind will be flexible enough to agree that if there is a new type of institution which could be established to help this form of promotion we should support it.

The concept I am putting forward is not new in respect of trading companies. They were in existence in the old days. There were such companies as the British East Indian Company, our own Hudson's Bay Company, and others. I am speaking, however, of modern trading companies such as the Japanese have. As a matter of fact we have them in the grain business. I mentioned these before. There is the Argentinian company, the French company and the two American companies. These companies sell the bulk of the world's grain. They certainly can function more efficiently than the small grain companies in Canada. They can reduce the cost of selling goods that are graded and they can be stored and shipped so cheaply that the very small companies cannot compete. I simply say that what has been set as a precedent by the Japanese in their trading around the world and by the grain companies of the three countries I have mentioned should be followed by Canada through the formation of international trading companies.

I should like to see, as a first step, a Canadian company go into the business of international trading, buying and selling, using modern electronic techniques for recording sales and purchases. In this way goods could be moved around the world very much cheaper than they can be moved by private companies. Through this type of international trading these companies could go into the new countries, Indonesia, China, Ghana and Nigeria, and offer to buy all the goods they have to sell under a grade standard. If they could be shipped and stored they could be sold all over the world. There is money to be made in selling. There is money to be made in the production of these goods but there is also money to be made in selling.

I am simply proposing that we try to get some form of Canadian international trading companies. The big step, of course, is the financial one and I hope that our big banks in Canada will realize that this is a way to make money and will work either individually or in a consortium to back up Canadian entrepreneurs in the setting up of this type of Canadian international trading company.

Quite naturally I am thinking of these international trading companies selling goods to the new developing nations all over the world, but the money these countries receive from the sale of their goods will provide a Canadian market. We have many things to sell but the customers have to get the money and they do not have the know-how to sell their products. This is particularly noticeable in respect of state trading nations which have not learned the techniques of selling in competition with highly complicated private enterprise in the United States and the western world generally.

The third proposal I refer to as buying and selling agencies of a national type. Let me give one or two examples of what to me are lost opportunities. I have recorded figures on Hansard which indicate that in the last four years—I think it is now five—not a single dollar of Canadian money has been spent on buying rice from China. We buy $10 million worth of rice each year. China is selling rice on the world markets and is buying our wheat on the world markets; yet we in Canada do not buy one single dollar's worth of rice from China. Is this because China will not meet the grade or the price? The answers to those questions do not hold water. There are only six companies marketing rice in Canada and five of them are American. They naturally sell rice from the producing areas of Louisiana and California. They do not hunt markets for other people when they are growing this product themselves.

I say it is in Canada's interest to help the countries that are buying from us by selling their products in this country. Most of the things China produces will not sell here, but this is one product that will sell. We do not produce any rice, except a little wild rice in Manitoba and western Ontario, but we do not buy one dollar's worth of our rice from China. We buy every dollar's worth of rice from the United States. This is the result of a lack of energy on the part of private enterprise and certainly on the part of the government in getting behind private enterprise to set up some sort of group that could buy these products from companies which sell them and then make them available through regular business channels and through the big shopping centres which distribute most of the rice in Canada.

I use this as a small example of the lack of initiative on the part of this government. There are no dynamics. The government just sits still and watches things develop. I am no socialist but I think that private business to be properly efficient should set up a type of buying agency to bring rice in of a standard grade, put it in the right type of packages and set up the selling apparatus that is apparently required to sell rice in the big shopping chains. The shopping chains themselves will do nothing. First of all, they do not believe in doing anything. They wait for the buyers to come to them. This is a laissez-faire type of operation. The buyers are only interested in goods coming from their distribution agencies. They do not care whether we buy rice from the United States or China. As a matter of fact, most of these shopping chains are tied up with United States interests and naturally are more friendly to their national sources. It is in Canada's interest to give customers a chance to sell. We cannot ask the Chinese to go around with a few bushels of rice looking for markets. This is why we need a buying agency.

Let me give another example. Canada is one of the world's great producers of paper and newsprint. We now hold about 20 per cent of the world market. The world is desperate for newsprint. The reports of the FAO for 1949, 1959, and again in 1964 indicate the serious emergency we are approaching. Yet there has been no effort on the part of our newsprint industry to move into state trading areas in a big way. They only deal with the areas which can provide an enterprise type of operation. State trading nations are customers and they do not want to deal with 29 companies which handle paper; they want to deal with one.

It is about time that somebody with the force of persuasion asked our 29 paper companies in western Canada which produce newsprint to take advantage of the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act of 1959 and form a single export company to go to these state trading nations. One company could act on behalf of the 29 to sell paper to these nations. The same thing could apply on the east coast in dealing with these new countries in Africa, for example, which have to be state trading nations for a good many decades. We need some form of buying and selling agency to bridge the gulf between our highly complicated private enterprise companies and these new countries which will be state trading countries for many years to come. This is the area in which we need dynamics and leadership. I am sure that with a little bit of push these Canadians companies are not going to resist making money for too long.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

I will go quickly over my fourth and fifth proposals because they are more properly dealt with under finance. In the rapidly expanding business world we need in respect of trade with newly developing nations some form of international clearing house for short term credits. Most of the newly developing nations will have to buy on credit for a good many years and their products will be going to the newly developing nations because they are not sophisticated enough to sell to the industrial nations. They will have to buy and sell on credit. If there was some machinery through which short term paper could be used to expedite the cash flow in both directions it would create a remarkable ability in speeding up sales between these new developing countries and the industrial countries. I had some personal experience in this regard in respect of credits with China. This is the type of experience which leads me to believe it is necessary for those who know a great deal more about this than I to see whether we cannot set up some form of international clearing house for short term paper, up to about three years.

Finally, international liquidity is still the number one obstacle to developing trade with these new nations. They all need greater access to financial trading operations and they also need tremendous amounts of development capital. So far we have only been pecking away at this problem through international associations like the International Monetary Fund and the International Development Fund. We are up against the hard fact that we are using in the international financial situation, not only gold as a media of exchange but also the national currencies of the United Kingdom and the United States. The barriers placed on international liquidity by using these national currencies are such that they represent a great handicap to international trade.

I think the government is doing a pretty good job in the group of ten, according to my understanding of the reports that are made public, but I think we should follow the concept of increased liquidity to try to find a new medium of exchange in order to get away from United Kingdom and United States currency. National reserves accounts show that these countries should be able to carry out their own domestic economic tasks without having the responsibility of the stability of the reserve accounts of other nations. Lack of international liquidity, therefore, is at the moment the greatest stumbling block we have. I hope that all Canadians will support the efforts of those representing us in the group of ten in trying to get increased liquidity. On the other three points; commodity agreements, international trading companies and buying and selling agencies, we can do all these things if there is any initiative and dynamic action shown by the government. I put these points before the minister in a constructive mood because marking time for four years over GATT and still excluding the newly developing nations will have serious repercussions not only on our trade patterns but on the future trading health and peace of the world.

There are two or three small matters I wish to raise in conclusion. Some years ago, after great efforts about $800 million was put into the export credits program. It struck me at the time that we were falling behind the export credit facilities provided by West Germany. Four years ago West Germany and Canada were about equal in respect of exports. Yet at a time when we had $800 million behind our export credits program West Germany, a competitor, had $3 billion.

I noticed the difference this made when visiting various countries. We deal with only big orders of $10 million or $24 million. It takes us several months to negotiate these agreements. The export credits policy of West Germany allows their small merchants to meet small merchants of other countries and make a sale of $3,000 or $6,000. Within a few hours the credit arrangements are worked out in Germany.

If we are to send our small companies around the world to enter into world wide competition and ask them to get out and sell in world markets—and there are world markets for them—we should consider a new dimension in respect of our export credits program. We should establish a system of credit that will allow the salesmen of Canadian companies to get credit quickly so they may complete the sale at the earliest possible moment and beat out their competitors. If one of our competitors can offer credit facilities on sales with a value of $3,000 or $6,000, it seems to me that Canadian businessmen should have the same facilities. This means that we must adopt a completely new attitude to export credits. At the moment the government operates this program and it is a function of the department. The banks have not yet done a full job in this respect.

I wish to express a word of sadness about the fate of the international wheat agreement.

I know that everyone says we shall now deal with wheat under GATT. We fought for so long during those trips to London in 1932 and 1933 to obtain an international wheat agreement, which was eventually obtained in 1949. In the wheat agreement Canada's voice was one of five. We had a big voice because we are the biggest commercial seller of wheat. Now, according to the news stories, the international wheat agreement is disappearing and we are going into GATT, with 50 nations. We are one voice out of 50. We still do not know whether there will be automatic renewals or automatic price negotiations. We will find out these things as time goes by. I suggest that the death of another international commodity agreement is a reason for sadness. I suggest that we would do better dealing with single products rather than trying to negotiate over the whole spectrum. I hope on another occasion to repeat my views on this subject.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I realize that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has a very difficult role to play. There are certain things which limit his ability to carry out his job most effectively. One is the fact that Canada must brace itself for a tremendous increase in world trade over the next two or three decades, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in only a peripheral position when dealing with matters of port development. I know the minister will throw his weight hard behind those members of the government who are trying to meet the problem of port development. We have an unhappy situation on the west coast where rivalry between the provincial government and the federal government has come into the picture. If we can increase our world trade, we do not care who does it. We do not care whether it is done by the federal government and provincial governments working together or whether private enterprise does it. We do not care how it is done as long as the port facilities are developed. This is not just a matter of Vancouver. We have to consider the west coast as the outlet for the interior of British Columbia, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

As far as the discussions which are continuing on the west coast are concerned, I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be well advised to explode a bombshell by saying that he thinks both sides should get together and develop the whole coast. We need more facilities at Prince Rupert. When I consider the lack of development in that area, after the great plans we had a few years ago, I am dismayed. There is now no access to the Panhandle. I should like the minister to raise his voice on this issue. Even some of the Americans admit that they stole it from us in 1903. It is time we got it back. If we cannot get the whole panhandle, we want sovereignty over access routes. Providing access will be costly, but if we are to develop those areas which are so wealthy and whose products are so close to tidewater we must have access through the panhandle to the Pacific.

I could deal with the question of the St. Lawrence river and the east coast. I could talk about Hudson Bay. All these are places in respect of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the interest of developing world trade, should exert pressure on his cabinet colleagues who are concerned about their narrow responsibilities in this area. This situation should be examined not just from the point of view of Canadian exports but as a move to taking advantage of the great demand at the present time for goods all over the world.

We must remember that Canada has almost everything. We want to move into the world trade pattern not only with basic raw materials but also with finished goods. It would be dreadful if we had to continue fighting, as we have for the last ten years, to get our products into the markets of the world and if businesses have to battle in order to get goods out of the country. This situation exists because of lack of facilities. I do not think we can blame anyone in particular for the situation. The blame must fall on all those persons who should be expressing their views loudly and clearly on the question of port development.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just a few brief remarks concerning the estimates of this department. I refer first of all to the item under discussion, the trade commissioner service. I have always had a very high regard for the minister and I know the great success he has had in the business world. I commend him for making the statement not too long ago that he owes part of his success to the fact that he was always taught to make a dollar before he spent it.

Mr. Baldwin: He should impress that on some of his colleagues.

Mr. Hales: I give the minister full marks for that. What I have to say may not be too complimentary but I say it in a spirit of constructive criticism. I realize that the trade commissioner service is essential. They are doing a good job. But what is it costing us to do the job?

Other hon. members have spoken about policy and I do not intend to deal with that subject. I shall speak about cold facts and dollar bills. I believe the trade commissioner service is costing this country altogether too much money for the results achieved. I have quickly jotted down the eight trade commissioner offices that we have in the United States. Imagine, Mr. Chairman, we have eight of them—Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Washington. It is costing this country practically $2 million to operate them. I should like to know what efficiency exists in these offices. I should like to know whether they keep a trial balance in their ledgers to show how many dollars worth of goods exported from Canada each office has been responsible for to offset the cost of its operation.

• (12:50 p.m.)

In other words, we are asked to pass an estimate to the extent of almost $200,000 to operate the office in Boston. Can the minister say how many dollars worth of goods that office has been responsible for exporting from Canada to the United States to offset such an expenditure? My question applies to all the other offices. This is the kind of information we would like the minister to give us.

Another point I should like to make is that in several centres where Canadian embassies are located there are also trade commission offices. For instance, in Boston there is a Canadian embassy which under the estimates of the Department of External Affairs is costing us approximately $212,000. The cost of the two offices combined is $411,950. Can we not combine the offices? Can one building not be used for both of them? Could the stenographic and other services be pooled so as to cut down the cost of operating these offices throughout the country?

I think there is a great waste and extravagance in this branch. It is a great bonanza for some of the trade commissioners and I believe it is high time they took off the striped pants and put on overalls, an expression that was used once before. I know that the government has forecast a deficit of $740 million this year and I am sure the minister would want to cut down the expenses of his department as much as possible. I believe this would be a good place to start.

With regard to the trade commissioner service I should like to point out that in the United Kingdom we have only three such offices, located in Glasgow, Liverpool and London. The total expenditure for operating these offices is $601,000 and yet we spend $2 million in the United States. I think this matter deserves careful scrutiny.

My other remarks concerning the department will have to wait until we come to the standards branch. In conclusion I wish to say that I believe the department is doing a reasonably good job but let us consider carefully how much this work is costing us.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one word on that subject because I have been very much aware of the need to stress an atmosphere of cost consciousness and I have applied myself to helping to deal with this problem. Nothing worries me more than the very large expenditures in relation to the revenues accruing to the government. The pressure of public demand is such that in many areas it seems almost irresistible but I feel, as the hon. member does, that there are areas where more careful control of expenditures should be exercised. However, I do not believe the trade commissioner service is one of them. I have looked at this branch very carefully. This is not a striped pants branch of the government but rather an overalls branch.

The hon. member knows as well as I do that selling involves service in areas that are already developed, as well as sales development. In some of the areas where we have moved we think there are opportunities for Canadian sales that are not being exploited so we start a sales development program. Boston is not one of these. It is one of our most well established selling areas, particularly for the eastern part of Canada where fisheries products are a major item of our exports.

Even though I have had some knowledge of that office I was surprised, when I visited Boston recently, at the volume of goods sponsored through the trade commissioner service there. But I must say frankly that it would be wrong to contemplate a dollar for dollar return for the amount of sales effort that is made in each particular office because a sales program could never be developed on that basis. For example, we contemplate, as soon as we can afford it, making a large effort in the South American countries. It may be some time before we get a return from that area, but that is part of the sales development program.

We closed our office in Bombay, to which the hon. member referred, because we were not realizing commensurate returns, and we are concentrating all our efforts in India in the sales office in New Delhi. We are watching these matters as closely as we can. We audit and we have accounting systems, but I know the hon. member would not expect me to say that we can expect a dollar for dollar return for all the sales efforts that are being made in every office. What we must consider is the overall sales program of the government. Of course I do not want to take credit for the sales program of the country, but let me say, with respect to the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, that the total sales effort of the country has been quite remarkable and for that I give full marks to our dynamic private enterprise. However, I do think a contribution has been made by our Canadian representation abroad and particularly by the trade commissioner service in the climate which they have created.

Mr. Hales: I wonder whether the minister could answer the two questions I have asked him. The first one is whether a record is kept by each of these offices of the sales that are made and, second, whether steps have been taken to amalgamate the embassies and trade commissioner offices located in the same city and thus cut down overheads?

Mr. Winters: Yes, we do that. Evaluations are made and we know quite accurately on the basis of what our statistics reveal the volume of Canadian export sales serviced by each trade commissioner. We cannot attribute all these sales to each trade commissioner because it would be wrong to say that the commissioner makes a sale. His job is to create an environment in which private enterprise can sell rather than become an extension of the sales branch of any particular enterprise in Canada. This cannot be done, although sometimes I feel we tend to move more and more into that area, but we are glad to do it and we are pleased to represent Canadian business abroad.

In our last operation, "Export 1967", I feel we did in fact become the sales arm of a myriad of smaller companies across the country which do not have sales facilities of their own and the possibility of doing their own market research and market analysis. So we brought the trade commissioners to them. That was an expensive operation but I believe it is an investment in future sales. We do break down on an accounting basis the amount of sales made in any one area serviced, but not necessarily generated, by the particular sales trade commissioner.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Hales: Could the minister answer my question about the amalgamation of the offices?

Mr. Winters: We try to do so in most areas where both offices are located in the same building. This is not possible in London, for instance, where the establishment is too large. But in most areas we do combine the services. There are some offices in which we actually do a representational job in addition to the sales effort. In areas where we do not feel representation by a trade commissioner is justified, we ask the Department of External Affairs to service sales opportunities for us. There is very close co-operation between the two departments.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like, first of all, to ask you to be lenient with me because I have a few remarks to make which may not be completely in order. I trust you will be lenient.

I should like to say once again to the house that I completely dissociate myself from the words spoken in the last few days by the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) with regard to the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth.

I am one of those who feel that the timeliness of maintaining or abolishing the monarchy in Canada can be discussed. But, that is another matter to be discussed in due course, according to the normal procedures of the house. But, in the present circumstances, this is more a matter of Canada welcoming what we call in my province "de la très grande visite" (very special company). It will give us the opportunity of extending to Her Majesty our well-known hospitality with our usual good manners.

I think that, on this point, the member for Lapointe has gone too far. I dissociate myself from him, Mr. Chairman, and say in my own name and in the name of my electors that I am happy to pay homage to Her Majesty the Queen, to admit that there is a situation in fact—she is the Queen of Canada—and that she fulfils her role with considerable dignity, and we are more than proud to greet her today; in fact we have affection for her, because she has up to now fulfilled her role with dignity and high purpose. And once again I repeat that even though I sit in this house next to a member suffering from an illness called independence, I would not want anyone to think that it is true of the majority in the province of Quebec. It has been noted that this is a very small exception, and the member for Lapointe himself stated yesterday that he thought he was the only one to have such feelings.

It is said in the province that there is a black sheep in every family. Well, he is ours in the province of Quebec.

[English]

I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have listened carefully to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I will not venture to make a sweeping exposé of my opinion of foreign trade because I recognize that I am only a student while the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is a master in this field. I have listened to him carefully and I realize I have learned a lot from him. I know the minister is a very broadminded person, so he must have been taking a lot of notes while listening to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

However, while listening to the hon. member I could not help but feel he had a marked leaning toward our socialist friends, so much so that he felt bound to apologize by saying that he was no socialist. I do not believe he needs to apologize. A good idea is always a good idea whether it comes from a socialist, a Conservative or a Liberal. It must have been a good idea because he felt he was taking something away from the socialists. I hope he is doing so for the good of the country, and I repeat that he does not need to apologize.

I listened to the hon. member for London who praised the government for Expo. I think it is very opportune that we do so, and I join with him not only in praising the government but all those who were or are responsible for this exposition. I believe it is an outstanding achievement in Canadian history. I do not suppose such an achievement will be repeated. We discovered other countries that we did not know too well and other countries discovered Canada. I am happy in the realization that they also discovered Quebec and Montreal.

I believe Expo will have many good results. It will promote national unity. It has done so already in that it was started by a Conservative government and was completed by the Liberals. This is proof of the fact we can achieve unity in some fields. I am sure the exposition will be a fresh stimulus to research and to new discoveries for industry. It will help Canada expand its foreign trade and will develop a sense of national pride in this country, a new sense of Canadianism. Everyone who has taken part in the realization of this wonderful achievement should be praised and we should rejoice in the fact that it augurs well for the future of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I am now returning to specific questions which I would like to put to the minister. As I said, I confess my incompetence in the field of foreign trade, and I presume that if I have the opportunity to listen for some time to authorities on the matter, like the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), I will eventually acquire some knowledge.

But there is one thing that is I find quite obscure; I suppose it is that way also in the mind of many Canadians. I see that there are some 70 foreign trade officers in the Department of Trade and Commerce and I wonder, like many others, what their specific duties are? For instance, are those people in those foreign cities simply as contacts between the government or the Department of Trade and Commerce and those foreign countries? Would their duties be simply a matter of fulfilling some specific tasks assigned to them by the department on occasion or would they be, for instance, in a position to give information to Canadian businessmen who might need it? Would they be, for instance, at the service of Canadian businessmen who might want to travel around the world to promote their own businesses? Could they depend on those people, the representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to guide them or to tell them where they could make new contacts? Could those agents, occasionally, distribute literature which could be sent by a province, a municipality or again a company which wants to do some promotion abroad? I am not referring only to massive distribution but to distribution in places where we might find new customers.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the department has made some commendable efforts to popularize that idea and make the Canadian people understand what they can do to promote external trade, but I do not think that we have yet reached what could be called the popular classes of society. In my opinion, such material has reached only enlightened people such as hon. members and some business people who follow a little more closely the activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I wonder whether it would not be possible to popularize trade a little more, so that all our businessmen, all our industrial commissioners, all the members of our municipal councils could know exactly what kind of co-operation they can expect from the Department of Trade and Commerce as far as foreign trade is concerned.

The thing is not only to buy from other countries, I imagine, but also to sell our own goods. I shall now deal with another subject which is perhaps irrelevant, but may prompt the minister to initiate fuller discussions with those of his colleagues who are concerned.

I am one of those who, after having discussed the matter with many businessmen, are worried about the future of our external trade, because of the rising cost of living in our country, which stems from numerous causes, of course, but which is due in great part to the fact that salary increases are out of line with the increase in productivity.

I wonder if it would not be possible to make information more readily available, that is, to popularize information, so as to make all labour leaders, and the workers themselves, aware that if salaries keep increasing prohibitively, we shall hardly be able to compete with other countries in the field of international trade.

I know that we are already experiencing difficulties in certain fields, because other countries are able to produce at a lower cost than we are. I do not, however, mean to blame the labour unions and the Canadian workers for this. I simply wish to reach a conclusion which I think is obvious to all those who are concerned with the rapidly rising cost of living which will soon affect our foreign trade, if it has not already done so.

I wonder whether perhaps the time has not come for the government to take steps so as to set a ceiling on the cost of living, not only concerning salaries but in all fields, in order to put a stop to this escalation and prevent us not only from facing inflation at home tomorrow, but from finding ourselves at a great disadvantage in regard to other competitive countries in the field of foreign trade.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, all this could be summed up by what I said earlier. I think it would be appropriate to intensify, by popularizing it, our whole literature or propaganda, if you wish, all the information published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, so that each Canadian and especially the businessmen or those who have a certain responsibility toward businessmen, such as the members of our municipal councils, may know the kind of co-operation they can expect from each of the officials of this department, who are working in foreign countries, and so that they may themselves take part in this project or program which the department is trying to implement on a wide scale by encouraging our businessmen to expand their foreign trade in order to improve our trade balance with other countries.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a few questions about vote 5. I notice under trade commissioner service that in the Hong Kong office there is a marked increase from $144,000 odd to $198,000 odd. Why is that? Is that the office which conducts trade with the People's Republic of China? I understand that it does conduct such trade. Information I have received indicates that in 1965 our sales to China totalled $104 million, of which $103 million was for wheat. In 1966 our sales to that country totalled $184 million, of which $183 million again was for wheat. My information also indicates that our imports from the People's Republic of China in 1965 totalled $14 million and in 1966 $20 million. That shows a trade imbalance between Canada and the People's Republic of China. I ask the minister for his views with regard to our present trade policy with respect to that country. What will be our future trade policy in the light of events which have taken place recently in Hong Kong? Will they affect our trade policy in respect of the People's Republic of China?

I also wish to know the minister's views about our trade policy with respect to India, particularly the amount of wheat we sell to that country and the aid we can give its poverty-stricken people. I also wish to ask about our trade policy with regard to the West Indies. Many Canadians think that there should be strong trade agreements with countries in the West Indies and that more trade could be developed not only with the West Indies but with South American countries also.

Possibly the minister could express his views about the possibility of an international sugar agreement as there is no such agreement at the moment. How would such an agreement affect the sugar beet growers of Canada and their accesss to markets?

I also wish to ask the minister about his views on the world textile market and Canada's trading policies with respect thereto. While he is at it, possibly he could make a few remarks about the positions of nickel and copper in our trading policies.

These are some of the general matters with which I should like the minister to deal. He might also state this country's position in regard to the export trade bank and the government's participation in that bank. If we are to develop our exports, possibly there should be more vigorous participation by the government in the activities of the export trade bank. Would the minister comment about this matter?

My final remarks concern the application of some principles that the minister set out last year when he talked about the guiding principles of good, corporate behaviour. Many Canadians are disturbed at the actions of subsidiaries of United States companies which are doing business in Canada and the behaviour of those subsidiaries with respect to Canadian foreign policy. I should like to know the minister's present views about the corporate behaviour of some of these companies. Would he also say what they have done to create a climate of good will between our two countries? These are some of the matters I should like to hear the minister express himself on, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, that is a pretty full slate. I shall try to answer the questions roughly in the order in which they were asked. If I miss any I am sure the hon. member will not mind refreshing my memory, as I did not make a note of his questions seriatim.

I think he referred first to the Hong Kong office and to the increase of approximately $53,000 in the estimate. He will note that we added two officers to the office. We also obtained new office premises which involved us in the acquisition of more space at higher cost. That office has become quite a centre of operations because most of our negotiations with China are through Hong Kong. We have no access to mainland China at the present time. Our main item of trade with China is wheat, which they are taking on time and paying for on schedule. Our wheat contracts are in good shape.

It is hard to be precise in answering what our trading policy is with that country to which we have no direct access in the geographic sense. They come to Hong Kong and we go to Hong Kong, which is not a good arrangement, but the trade we do apart from wheat is not very great. We are hoping that our trade will become greater. We are also hoping that the opportunity to sell more wheat to China will continue. We shall probably do so through Hong Kong, though certainly if we could open a direct channel to Peking—I hope we can do so very soon because our present way of doing business is frustrating—it would be most beneficial.

I think the hon. member asked next a question about sugar.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member asked about an international sugar agreement. The hon. member may recall from my previous statements that we are pressing for an international sugar agreement. This would be one way to benefit the lesser developed countries which are so reliant on sugar to support their economies. We have stated to the British commonwealth countries of the West Indies that we would make available to them the residual amount of tariffs under the preferential tariff structure, which would mean about 29 cents a hundredweight in respect of sugar that they sell us this year, up to a total amount—I have forgotten the exact figure but I think it is for 275,000 tons. This should be helpful, but we think the long-term solution lies in a world sugar agreement. We have proposed this and we understand that Dr. Prebisch who is responsible for broader collective commodity agreements such as this will visit us this fall and we hope to advance the cause of a world sugar agreement.

• (1:20 p.m.)

What is next on the list?

Mr. Gilbert: Textiles, nickel and copper.

Mr. Winters: As to textiles, the hon. member has probably had an opportunity to read the material I tabled last night concerning the Kennedy round concessions made by Canada as against the access gained by Canada to other countries, and I think he will recognize that here too we have been able to minimize the impact of the Kennedy round concessions on the textile industry. Many of the textiles which now enter this country from oriental countries do so on the basis of a voluntary quota system. This system is working well and I see no reason why it should not continue to work well.

Perhaps I should refer to a note I have on my desk to the effect that Dr. Prebisch, the director general of UNCTAD, expects to visit a number of capitals to discuss the possibility of new international agreements this year, and he will probably visit Ottawa. In the meantime, contingency plans are being made to convene a conference this fall.

On the subject of nickel, this commodity is still in short supply. We are helping the producing companies to co-ordinate their programs in order to see that Canadian requirements are met, at least to the limit of consumption in Canada during 1966. This program is working reasonably well, even though it means that the companies have not been able to serve their foreign markets as well as they would like because they are giving some measure of preference to domestic requirements.

The world copper situation has improved; supply and demand are pretty well in balance. I do not think anybody is in short supply. There are a number of big operations which have come into production, or are just coming into production, and this is helping the situation. The world copper supply is not in bad shape.

Mr. Gilbert: I mentioned the export trade bank.

Mr. Winters: I presume the hon. member is referring to the Export Credit Insurance Corporation which insures exports and also reimburses banks on a non-recourse basis. We finance exports by private companies as part of a program which has played a significant role in increasing our exports abroad.

I have asked the officials of the corporation to generate ideas for improving the application of export insurance to Canadian exports and I have asked the advisory council whether they have any ideas on the subject. I have also asked members of the banking fraternity if they can generate ways and means, within the structure of the banks themselves, of providing better support facilities for Canadian exports. While I believe the present arrangements are working well, there is always room for improvement and I am trying to find ways and means of bringing improvement about.

Mr. Gilbert: I appreciate the answers the minister has given me. Only this morning I happened to read an article in which the need for greater effort in this particular field of participation in our export endeavours was indicated. I appreciate the active consideration which the minister is giving to this problem.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak for very long. I realize that as a result of the agreement which was made this morning I am prevented from dealing in detail with results of the Kennedy round. As a matter of fact, quite apart from the agreement which was reached, anyone examining the material which was made available will understand that the sheer bulk of this information would prevent any intelligent discussion now. However, under this item I am able to deal with trade in general and the benefits which flow to this country from the use of our trade commissioners.

I am all in favour of the minister's view, as he expressed it in reply to my hon. friend from Wellington South, that this service is not a frill but a hardworking agency essential to our economic development and to trade relations between Canada and countries abroad. I might even suggest to the minister that from time to time trade commissioners who have returned to this country should be asked to appear before the standing committee to give hon. members some indication of the success they have had in their work and what they hope to achieve in the future. I do not propose that this be done wholesale, as it were, but occasionally it would be of benefit to all concerned if members were given an opportunity to examine some of these commissioners and listen to their views.

I stand here as an unrepentant, unrestricted and, at times, very isolated believer in the greatest possible measure of free trade. I am still optimistic, even after being here for more than nine years. This, of course, means complete free trade, and to achieve complete free trade is almost as difficult as it is for politicians, particularly privy councillors, to reach heaven. Nevertheless, what we have achieved so far is very substantial. I only wish we could have done more.

I am one who believes it was unfortunate that the United Kingdom did not enter the European Common Market early enough to take advantage of the provision in the United States trade expansion act under which a 100 per cent tariff reduction might have come into effect with results even more far reaching in the future than those which have now been achieved. When the treaty of Rome became effective we saw the freer movement of labour, capital and goods within the four corners of the E.C.M., the tremendous expansion of trade which occurred, the development of industry and commercial activity, the general increase in the standard of living in the countries concerned, and surely these are the best arguments anyone could use as to the benefits which flow from freedom to trade and exchange goods and services among all parts of the world.

One of the reasons for the levelling off, at least, of trade and industrial activity within the common market nations today is that having reached a substantial degree of trade expansion they now find themselves restricted as a trading market by the common tariff barrier they have erected against other nations and trading blocs in the world. In any event this is my view, and I think it is one held by many other people. I have no hesitation in expressing my satisfaction that we have been able to go as far as we have. I understand it is not unlikely that further legislation will be sought by the executive of the United States from congress. I assume the minister will be kept posted as to the extent of such legislation and I hope it will be matched by the efforts which we make on our side. This is particularly essential considering the position of the undeveloped nations.

I know this is trite. I know these clichés are used over and over again by people in public life not only in Canada but in other parts of the world. But clichés are clichés because they are statements and restatements of facts, of what is obvious, and they are uttered every so often as evidence of the truthfulness of the facts contained in the statements.

At present some 25 or 26 nations of the world which have the lowest per capita income have the highest rate of population growth. Conversely 30 nations with the highest per capita income have the lowest rate of population growth. The effect of this is very simple. Inside a comparatively short period of time, instead of half of the world being hungry, three quarters of the world is going to be very hungry. Nations are like people, and when that happens they are going to look about and seek ways and means of taking what they have been deprived of. We as one of the great trading nations, as one of the developed nations, must play our part through the aid of the trade commissioners' offices and all the other various weapons which we can place at the command of the government.

Much is being done in the furnishing of aid by Canada and other countries. Not so many years ago I noted that even if we took all of the aid in the form of capital goods, loans, cash, and the dispatch of trained people with certain expertise and knowledge to assist in the development of the underprivileged nations, and added to that the actual dollars or sterling earned by them through the sale of their products, there would still be an enormous gap amounting to $10 billion or $12 billion between what they were earning and what was being given to them and what they required to produce in their own country the plant and the capital goods they need to make their standard of living a reasonable one.

Because of this the developed nations should stretch a point wherever possible to take from those countries, even at some sacrifice to us from time to time, a greater measure of their products than normally might be the case, especially from countries with whom we can develop suitable trading arrangements. In other words, it is not adequate to continue developing solely a system of aid. These underdeveloped countries must lift themselves up, so far as possible, by their own efforts. Only in this way will what we seek be gained. In our trade relations with developing nations we should seek from time to time to accept from them, at a lower tariff rate than would normally be the case, goods which we can use in Canada and thereby provide additional capital to assist those nations.

That is all I propose to say, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to make my position clear because I probably will not be here during the latter part of next week when this issue is to be debated. My views are very strong. I have held them with conviction for a long time. I only regret that during my years in this chamber there has not been one example of an intelligent discussion and debate on the question of foreign aid. We have touched on it concurrently and incidentally when dealing with other matters. I believe that on an issue so important to Canada it is important that we debate it in the house and in committee.

One of the reasons that we will be entering into discussion of the Kennedy round of negotiations is that there has been a great deal of apprehension about the outcome. I recall two or three years ago asking the minister's predecessor to consider producing a white paper which, without harming the efforts of our negotiating officials at Geneva, would give an indication of the government's views and intentions so that we could have an intelligent debate in the house and arouse national interest in the issue. That did not happen, but from now on I hope this is a matter we will pursue more diligently.

With the assistance of the minister and the use of committees we can achieve a greater consciousness of our trade relations with other countries, of the trade agreements which have been made and the trade agreements which are being contemplated. This is only a start. We shall go on to achieve more trade agreements of this kind in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer for a few moments to the comments of the minister about Expo.

[English]

Before doing so I would like to ask him one question. In the course of his remarks he mentioned that the number of visitors to Expo had far exceeded the most optimistic forecasts. Could he give us an indication whether this increase applies equally to foreign visitors and domestic visitors?

Mr. Winters: I am sorry I cannot give a breakdown but I suspect we have been receiving more local visitors in proportion to the total than was anticipated. I would guess from the level of expenditure that Montrealers in particular have been patronizing Expo in a very great way which, of course, is right and proper. We anticipate that the proportion of foreign visitors, particularly from the United States, will increase substantially now that the schools are closed and families can travel with their children to Expo.

Mr. Régimbal: This brings me to the point I would like to make. I suspect that the overflow of visitors is mainly due to the fact that Canadians have taken Expo to heart, particularly, as the minister mentioned, the local people within a radius of approximately 100 miles of Montreal. They have gone all out to visit Expo and have reacted with great enthusiasm to what they have seen and experienced. I think it is worth while to note that the vast majority of these people are French speaking Canadians. When questioning local people on the grounds it is not uncommon to hear them say that they have visited Expo eight, 10, 12 or even 14 times. If there is any lesson in respect of unity and pride which can be taken from Expo I think it is the overwhelmingly enthusiastic interest which has been shown by the people within this radius of Montreal.

The lessons to be derived certainly are far reaching. It is worth noting that in a small city like Lachute at least 90 per cent of the school children above grade four have visited Expo where they have had a great lesson in Canadian pride and the potential of Canadian accomplishment. I believe it is true that one cannot visit Expo without leaving it a little bit more Canadian. I think it is worth while to note that French speaking Canadians have gone all out for this all-Canadian venture. I believe that out of it will develop a great degree of Canadian pride from coast to coast. I believe it will provide a great contribution toward an all-Canadian unity. I believe it is more than likely that this will be the main byproduct of Expo.

It is particularly important that this be underlined at this time because in past months we have read on occasion certain statements which have been made by radicals in all quarters. These people who speak of separatism and independence unfortunately receive much coverage in the news media across the country. I believe we should take this opportunity to underline that these people who often try to put forward the idea that they are speaking on behalf of French Canadians have no mandate and no authority to speak in that manner.

When speaking to various groups across Canada in past years I have had the opportunity to say that my name is Roger Régimbal, my constituency is Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes and that I come from "la belle province de Québec". I say that I am French but reasonable. The essential footnote to add to that, however, is that there are millions like me in the province of Quebec but unfortunately they do not get headlines. Therefore we should take an opportunity like this to underline for the benefit of all Canadians that French Canadians are aboard, are very much a part of this enterprise, and wish to be identified as being a part of it.

I believe that the enthusiastic response to Expo by Quebeckers, old and young, is without doubt an indication, contrary to the impression which might be given by the outlandish statements made by certain individuals, that when the chips are down and it is time to act and show solidarity and pride in Canada, French Canadians like other Canadians, no matter in what domain, whether it be industry, commerce, or finance, will deliver the goods.

Mr. Winters: I should like to say that I believe the hon. member deserves a great many headlines today.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, as one who happens to come from a different part of Canada I should like to thank the hon. member who has just preceded me for his statement and for his correction of the bad impression given by some people in this country with regard to certain sections of it. I might say to him that there are some people from western Canada who sometimes create a bad impression of that wonderful land.

These words have to be spoken. I hope they get the attention they deserve. I believe that unnecessary attention has been given to a small minority which constantly is given the privilege of appearing on television or on radio to express views which are so far removed from the views of the vast majority of the people that they are really ridiculous. I believe a great disservice is rendered to Canada by the news media which play up these minority views.

We had one example the other day when the hon. member for Lapointe attempted to upset the proceedings of this house and destroy the expression of unanimous respect which we were showing to Her Majesty the Queen by the resolution passed by the two houses. That was played up on television as if it were a major incident. Actually what should have been played up on television were the remarks of the party leaders which expressed the thoughts of the members of this house rather than the play for publicity by one member who sits as an independent and carries no weight at all in this House of Commons.

I did not rise to speak on this subject, Mr. Chairman, but I was interested in what my colleague said. I express my regret that the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce have reached the House of Commons just at a time when the attention of so many people is engaged elsewhere because of the royal visit. This is a department which deserves great attention from the House of Commons because of its importance to our economy and because of the good work that the trade commissioners have been doing over the years in so many posts abroad. I should like every year, when the opportunity arises, to pay my tribute to the work done by the people in the department and particularly by the trade commissioners with whom I had a very pleasant experience during a relatively short interval.

I know of no department that is of greater interest. I know of no department that is more efficient than the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not believe there is any department which does more abroad for Canada than it does. I do not wish to appear to be downgrading the Department of External Affairs which also works abroad, but the expansion of our trade has always seemed to me to be more important than some of our activities in diplomatic circles. For many years now I have advocated that greater emphasis should be placed on our trade commissioner service and on the employment of trade commissioners rather than on some of our activities in external affairs, because the information which we receive from some of the smaller countries of the world as a result of our external affairs activities is not of the same vital importance to the development of Canada as is the information that the trade commissioners supply in respect of the development of our economy.

I note that there has been an increase in the number of trade commissioners, to which I raise no objection. I should like, however, to ask the minister certain specific questions. Apparently he has opened two or three new posts. I should like him to mention these and tell us why they have been opened. I also notice that he has closed one. Perhaps we might also have an explanation about that. Will the minister please enlighten me in this regard? I have always felt moderately competent in geography and I seldom feel at a loss to determine where various cities are located, but the name following Hong Kong is new to me. I do not know how to pronounce it and I do not know where it is. I am sure the minister has this information at his fingertips or will receive a message from above.

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. Winters: It is in Pakistan.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister to reply to my questions about the opening and closing of these various posts?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, we are closing the one in Bombay because we find we can obtain better efficiency through operating our facilities in India in New Delhi. The office to which my hon. friend has just referred in Islamabad, which is in Pakistan, is being opened because, as I understand it, this is to be the new capital. We have just opened an office in Nairobi to serve the developing area of central Africa. We have opened an office in Belgrade to take advantage of what we think are better trading opportunities in the socialist countries in eastern Europe. That is all I can say at the present time.

Mr. Churchill: I understand you have opened another one in San Francisco.

Mr. Winters: We are opening a tourist office there and I will provide supplementary information in this regard in a few minutes.

Mr. Churchill: The minister has said nothing about closing the post in Salisbury which came about as a result of the activity to which I have raised objections on other occasions, namely, the imposition of sanctions against Rhodesia. I have expressed the hope that now it has become evident that the imposition of economic sanctions against that country has not been effective in achieving the objectives that were set out at the commonwealth conference, steps will be taken to remove those sanctions and re-open trade with Rhodesia.

When this matter was discussed earlier in the House of Commons and the sanctions were imposed the impression was left with us that within a matter of a few months they would be effective and that the political settlement desired by some of the leaders of the commonwealth would be achieved. That has not been the case. I hope the minister will use his good influence to see that there is a lifting of these economic sanctions in order that we may once again establish a trade mission in Rhodesia and resume trade with that country.

We trade with virtually all the countries of the world. We have grave differences with some of them in respect of political matters but we have not hesitated to engage in trade with communist countries with which we are frequently not in agreement. We continue to trade with various countries which have suffered a number of coups d'état. Their governments have been upset and unitary governments or military dictatorships have been established. We have continued to trade with them but we have cut ourselves off from trading relations with Rhodesia. It is a country which has not been subject to military dictatorship or any serious internal trouble but which has had a political difference of opinion with Great Britain.

For 43 years Rhodesia had the right to act independently in respect of all matters except defence and foreign policy. Yet Canada at the urging of various people immediately swung into line and severed relations with Rhodesia. I think that diplomatic relations should be resumed and that trade relations should also be resumed. Why should we continue to trade with certain other countries which have effected bloody revolutions and where the heads of state have been assassinated or disposed of in one way or another and not trade with Rhodesia? Canada's response in many of these instances has been an immediate recognition of the new government. Yet in respect of Rhodesia we broke off relations and imposed economic sanctions. This is a blot on our record.

[Mr. Churchill.]

We have heard on many occasions that one way toward maintaining peace in the world is through friendly trading relations. Yet with this country of the commonwealth we have broken off trading relations and set up a barrier. We can afford to have a difference of opinion in respect of how the government of Rhodesia should operate but surely this should not extend to the realm of our trading relations. Can we not maintain our trading relations with Rhodesia despite our difference of opinion in respect of political matters? We continue our trading relations with Nigeria which appears to be on the verge of a civil war. We are entering into and have carried on trade with nations in Europe which are under Russian domination. We have not hesitated to trade with Russia, although we have never approved of its form of government. So it goes all down the line, even with the African country of Ghana, the government of which was upset and the premier expelled. We immediately recognized the new government and continued our trading relations. We have maintained our trade post there. I ask this question of a minister of the crown who in our opinion on this side of the house ranks as being one of the more reasonable members of the treasury benches.

Mr. Knowles: Watch out, Bob.

Mr. Churchill: Will the minister use his good influence to change the opinion of the Canadian cabinet and insist on re-opening trade relations with Rhodesia? How can we ever get to understand a country unless there is some communication? We are now cut off from Rhodesia which is one of the more developed countries of Africa, having been developed in a material sense by European whites. The native population is not oppressed in the way the native population is oppressed in some other countries of Africa. There has not been bloodshed or genocide there such as we have read about in other countries which have gained their freedom. Yet Canada adopts this attitude of breaking off trade relations with Rhodesia. I should like to know why this attitude continues when the imposition of economic sanctions has proved to be ineffective. I ask the minister to do something about this.

• (2:00 p.m.)

I have one final question for the minister. I was hoping to find a really awkward question for him. Under the last item of vote 5, "Unallocated and miscellaneous" there is an increase of between $700,000 and $800,000, which strikes me as being rather unusual. Has the minister an explanation for that?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. member refer me to the page?

Mr. Churchill: It is page 497.

Mr. Knowles: It is over $800,000.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, it is over $800,000. My subtraction was poor.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, while I am getting that information I should say that the hon. member was quite right in his reference to the office in San Francisco. We did open one in January, 1967. We financed it out of general appropriations until we could get an estimate for it this year. That is why it did not show up in the estimates last year but has this year. We also closed the office in Salisbury. I share the regret of the hon. member about this. In days gone by I had opportunities to do business in Southern Rhodesia and always enjoyed it. It is a fine place in which to work and a good place to conduct operations. But the relationship between the Canadian government and the government of Southern Rhodesia had to be viewed in the broader context of our commonwealth relations and in fact our position in the United Nations.

Once that was determined, quite apart from our trading relationships we had no option but to close the office because we were not doing trade. A number of Canadian enterprises there have suffered severely because of this. It is one of those situations in which nobody gains. Our trade has been impaired and our relations have been impaired. I suppose this is part of the sacrifice one must make in support of a principle. But I share the hope that this principle can be worked out in the near future because nothing would please me more than to get back on good, friendly relations with Southern Rhodesia and, from the point of view of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to get back on good, sound trading relations with the very fine country of Southern Rhodesia.

If the hon. member would permit me, I will get him the information on the item "Unallocated and miscellaneous". I do not have it before me at the moment but expect to have it in a few moments.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, while the minister is waiting for word from on high perhaps I might ask him a question with reference to a matter on which he made a reply a while ago. Before I do so may I say that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has referred to the situation in Rhodesia as being simply a matter of a political difference of opinion between that country and the United Kingdom. I saw the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre moving in his chair and thought he was going to rise and object that I had not quoted him correctly. However, I believe I did. I would like to make the point that we think the issue over which that difference arose is a pretty basic one, namely, the rights of people regardless of colour. In any case, I agree with the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Some time ago when the minister was answering the hon. member for Broadview with regard to our trading policy with the People's Republic of China, he indicated that the negotiations have to be conducted at Hong Kong. If I understood the minister correctly, he said that he found this situation quite unsatisfactory and hoped it would not be long before we had an office of some kind in Peking. I should like to ask—

Mr. Winters: I did not say "an office in Peking"; I said, "direct contact in Peking."

Mr. Knowles: All right, I accept that correction. The minister says that he said the government would like to have a direct contact in Peking. Precisely what the minister meant by that is what I wanted to ask. Did he imply the opening of an office by his department, did he imply that the hope was that we might soon open diplomatic relations with mainland China, or what did he mean by that reference?

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman. All I meant was that when we negotiate with somebody we like to be able to do so face to face on their home ground and face to face on our home ground. We do not necessarily have to open an office to negotiate a business transaction with people. I am not prepared at this stage to say whether we will open diplomatic offices in a formal way or trade offices in a formal way. All I am saying, and nothing more at this stage, is that I like to be able to come face to face with people on their home ground when we are doing business with them.

Mr. Knowles: Those are fine words, but I wish the minister would say what they mean.

Mr. Winters: That is all I mean. I would like to have freedom to go to Peking and would like to be able to invite our Chinese friends with whom we do business to come here and negotiate with us. I think it is not entirely satisfactory to do it in a neutral place such as Hong Kong. That is all I mean.

Mr. Knowles: Why don't you do it?

Mr. Winters: Because of circumstances of which my hon. friend is very well aware. We do not receive a ready response to our requests to visit Peking, nor do we receive a warmhearted response at all times to invitations we extend to them to come here. It is just a modus vivendi we have worked out to meet current circumstances. We have lived with it, but it is not the best way of doing business.

Mr. Chairman, may I answer the question posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre? I am told that the figure of $1,004,830 shown on page 497 for 1967-68 corresponds to the total of the two figures shown in the 1966-67 column as $202,555 and $761,700, which together total $964,255. So the differential in the two figures is only $40,575.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, one of the many questions I asked the minister was with regard to his views on the application of the principles of good corporate practice. I notice that in the statement he made to the committee he said there was information available concerning surveys in 1964 and 1965. I understand that the President of the Privy Council has a task force assembled to study foreign ownership in Canada. I was wondering whether it is going to study the application of these principles of group corporate practice. Would the minister express a more up to date opinion on this matter than that contained in the statement he made to the committee?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, it occurred to me just a moment ago that this was part of the series of questions the hon. member had asked and I had overlooked dealing with it. It slipped my mind. There is very little I can add to the report that was tabled in the house a relatively short time ago, which was a condensation of some 250 returns representing some 800 companies; there was consolidation by a considerable number of them. Since that time we have received about 70 returns. They are being processed now. There are one or two, figuratively speaking, that are still outstanding but the companies concerned said they would submit them. They are therefore all complying with our request for this information which is now being processed.

On the overall they show quite a normal method of corporate conduct, and I think it is fair to say that the subsidiaries of foreign companies in Canada operate in very much the same manner as do our domestically owned companies. In some cases they do so a little better. On the whole they tend perhaps to conform a little better to the principles of good corporate citizenship as now defined. Of course, when striking an average there are some which do better and some which do worse. Some are not quite as good as we would like them to be. One or two of them have said that their corporate policies are determined in the head office. However, we intend to pursue the matter with them and I do not believe there is any ill intention on their part. We have made all the material relating to this subject available to the committee presided over by the President of the Privy Council, and I think it will be very helpful to him in conducting his own analysis.

This is not just a one-shot operation. We have asked the companies to continue it on an annual basis. It is very hard to observe their conduct from a single return. This can only be done by observing trends, and we are trying to accumulate sufficient information to enable us to do so.

Mr. Churchill: I regret I did not understand the minister's explanation of the last item of vote No. 5 under the heading "Unallocated and miscellaneous". It may be all very well to say it is a combination of the two items which appear in the 1966-67 column, but surely the same practice is not in effect for 1967-68. In 1966-67 the Minister of National Revenue used a sleight-of-hand procedure and extracted money from the contingency fund and from other sources in order to avoid the difficulty which he was having over the voting of interim supply. I do not know whether the 1966-67 figure means that the department paid back to the contingency fund $761,700. That may be all right for 1966-67, but why should there be over $1 million in the unallocated and miscellaneous fund for 1967-68? The minister does not have to go through the same procedure as the Minister of National Revenue did.

Mr. Winters: The reason for unexpended moneys is to be found, for example, in the office in Salisbury for which we budgeted but which was not opened. We had some unexpended funds in Havana and in Belgrade where the office was not opened as early as was anticipated. There were some unexpended funds in Colombo, Geneva, the United Nations office in New York and all other embassies where we do not have representation where minor expenses were incurred by the Department of External Affairs on a recoverable basis. The sum total adds up to the figure indicated.

Mr. Churchill: I do not know what the Auditor General will think of this but I do not think much of an unallocated sum of $1 million.

Mr. Winters: It is better than to have an over-expenditure of $1 million.

Mr. Churchill: The minister is expected to be specific in requesting supply from the House of Commons and to give us the specific items. This has been done all the way through vote No. 5 up to this item. I would not call it a slush fund but some people who are not as careful in their use of language as I am might do so. I can see the minister is anticipating the employment of 22 more people for whom provision must be made. This would come under "miscellaneous". It seems to me that $266,765 is adequate for the office in Paris where 22 or 23 people are employed, but here we have an unallocated sum of $1 million. If it were not for the fact that we are here on a Friday afternoon when all sorts of interesting activities are going on in town I would move to have that sum reduced to $1.

I gave the minister a few seconds in order to devise a better and more palatable explanation of this unspecified appropriation of funds. The minister says it is better to have it this way than to overspend, but the practice of bringing in supplementary estimates has been well established and when a department overspends, makes a mistake or has to enlarge its activities, supplementary estimates are brought in to cover the amount of money that is expended. However, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is expansively asking for a blank cheque for $1 million. I do not want to be too hard on him because he agreed with me with regard to Rhodesia, which is good.

Mr. Knowles: Did the minister agree with the hon. member?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, he sympathized with the point of view expressed and he did not agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: In that case I withdraw what I said about him.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member was an exponent of a one man, one vote policy in Rhodesia with which I disagree completely. I do not want to be too hard on the minister, but I wonder whether he has a better explanation for this unallocated sum.

Mr. Winters: The only supplementary information I can give is that out of the total amount of $1 million, $687,150 relates to funds provided for retroactive salary revisions which were allocated from the financial contingency fund. These were not prorated to individual offices. It was set up in this way at the request of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Churchill: Should it not have been set up separately as it was in 1966-67?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps it should; I am not sure. I do not know the precise reason for that. The only reason I know for doing it this way is that it was done at the request of the Treasury Board and I understand it carries the judgment of the Auditor General.

10. Canadian Government Exhibition Commission, $5,258,000.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, let us not rush through this item. As I said earlier today, we are not under any obligation to pass the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce under a guillotine procedure, as we are with regard to four other departments. These estimates may very well be concluded later. I think we should be a little careful about rushing things through today and voting money without obtaining an adequate explanation.

However, this is not my only reason for rising at this point. The Canadian Government Exhibition Commission is a very active branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce and it does not always receive the recognition it deserves. There are 125 people working in that branch and they are continually on the job preparing government exhibitions in various places around the world. I think that the minister, who takes some pride in his work, would not mind at this stage taking a few minutes to tell us what this commission is doing and what, for example, it has done over the last year as well as what are its plans for the future. In the course of his remarks he might tell us whether they are already starting on work for the world's fair which will be held in Tokyo. The Canadian Government Exhibition Commission is too important a section of the Department of Trade and Commerce to pass without attention. It is a very worth-while commission and the public should be informed through the House of Commons, and for the sake of the members as well, just what the commission is doing.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Winters: I agree, Mr. Chairman, that this is an important part of the departmental function and it is a very good operation in my opinion. The commission is responsible for setting up Canadian exhibits around the world when we participate in fairs. I believe it does a highly creditable job. It was responsible, among other things, for setting up the display in the caravans that are operating under the general jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. I had an opportunity to see one of these caravans and was extremely impressed by it.

There is a great list of fairs and shows around the world in which Canada participates. One recent example was the air show in Paris where the department set up the exhibit and helped to service it. This air show was attended by my colleague, the Minister of Transport. Perhaps he could give his own opinion on whether or not the exhibit was suitable.

Mr. Churchill: Why didn't you go instead?

Mr. Winters: The Minister of Transport has more direct responsibility for aviation than I have, and it was an air show. There is a long list of fairs in which we participate but I am sure the hon. member would not want me to mention them.

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister mention half a dozen of the more important ones?

Mr. Winters: Yes. For example, we are participating in the Alaska centennial celebrations in Alaska, which will take place from May 27 to September 1, 1967; the international exposition for 1968 which is known as the hemisfair, in San Antonio, Texas; the Japan world exposition, which is known as Expo '70 and is scheduled to be held in Osaka in 1970. The Canadian government has agreed to spend there an estimated amount of $11.2 million.

We held a competition to which we had a response from over 200 architects and architectural firms. The 200 entries were narrowed down to six finalists from which we selected a design which was unveiled just last week. The winning firm of architects is a well known firm from Vancouver by the name of Erickson-Massey. I believe the design they have produced is highly imaginative and will attract considerable attention. Our participation in Osaka will cost $11.2 million, including everything, but the building itself will cost very much less than that.

This is a creative branch of the department, and I think the work done in this field is in keeping with that done by any other country in the world. If the hon. member would like me to give details on what we have done or what we will be doing, I will be glad to give them.

Mr. Churchill: I think it is very important that there should be a more detailed list given. I realize the list is given in the annual report. However, an opportunity is presented here to attract the attention of members who might not, because of pressure of work, read the annual report. There is an opportunity, despite the press releases issued by the minister's office, to draw the attention of the news media to this branch. I presume there are business enterprises in Canada that sometimes do not take full advantage of the opportunities provided by these exhibits. The minister might also tell us what part, if any, this branch played at Expo '67 in Montreal.

Mr. Winters: At Expo '67 in Montreal the trade fair people played a prominent role in laying out the exhibit in the Canadian pavilion and they were consulted widely with regard to other layouts. I feel that as a result the Canadian pavilion is a very good place. I have a long list of fairs in which the Canadian government is participating. I could give a few examples. In January there was the SAE Automotive Engineering Congress and Exhibition in Detroit; the National Boat Show in New York; the International Hardware Trades Fair in London. In February there was the National Sporting Goods Association Convention at Chicago. In March there was the Boston Gift Show, Boston; the Salon International de l'Agriculture, Paris; the Netherlands Industries Fair, Utrecht; Daily Mail Ideal Home Exhibition, London; Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers Conference and Exhibition in New York and the Canadian Housing Exhibit, Paris. In April there was the International Children's and Babies Fair, Cologne; the American Society for Tool and Manufacturing Engineers Exhibition, Chicago; the International Engineering Exhibition, London and the International Fur Fair, Frankfurt. In May there was the American Institute of Architects Convention, New York and the Salon International de l'Aéronautique et l'Espace, Paris. In June, there was the Barcelona International Samples Fair, Barcelona; the Supermarket Institute Show, Cleveland; the 36th Poznan International Fair, Poznan, and so on. Do you wish me to read the others?

Mr. Churchill: Go on, that is very good.

Mr. Winters: In August we will be participating in the New York Gift Show, New York; the Belfast Telegraph Ideal Home Show, Belfast. In September, there is the International Autumn Fair, Zagreb, where I had the pleasure of visiting last year, and the International Trade Fair, Brno, where I also had the pleasure of visiting. There is the National Office Furniture and Equipment Show, Chicago, the International Exhibition of Fine Foods and Provisions, Cologne and the International Dairy Cattle Fair at Cremona.

In October, Mr. Chairman, there is the German Industries Fair, Berlin; the National Shoe Fair of America, Chicago; the Salon Technique International de l'Equipement Hôtelier du Matériel de Cafetéria et des Industries Connexes, which is an exhibition of hotel, cafeteria and catering equipment in case hon. members did not understand my brand of French. This will take place in Paris. Then there is the American Society for Metals Show, Cleveland; Electra '67, Johannesburg; the International Fair for Sports Goods, Camping Equipment and Garden Furniture, Cologne; Pacific International Trade Fair, Lima. In November, there is the International Building Exhibition, London; Salon International du Bâtiment, Paris.

Mr. Knowles: It is 2.30.

Mr. Winters: Do you wish me to finish the list?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, finish the list.

Mr. Winters: In December there is the National Association of Home Builders Convention, Chicago. Then, there are a number of regional lumber shows in New York, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Charlotte, Omaha, Houston, Orlando and Oklahoma City.

The Chairman: Order. Pursuant to an order of the house passed yesterday the sitting of the committee of supply is suspended until four o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 4 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Vote No. 10. Shall vote 10 carry?

15. Canadian Government Travel Bureau—To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada including a grant of $55,000 to the Canadian Tourist Association, $9,991,000.

Mr. Churchill: One minute, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to delay matters but we have about 50 minutes at our disposal and we are dealing with a department of considerable interest. The minister himself is anxious to give a great deal of publicity to his operations in this department, and I want to help him.

Mr. Winters: Thank you.

Mr. Churchill: I was associated with this department for a number of years and I know how valuable it is to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Yes. Many ministers on the government side have had some association with that department. It deserves attention. Though I do not advocate that the minister should beat the drum all the time, nevertheless I want him to draw to the attention of the House of Commons the advantages that this department brings to Canada as a whole and how the Canadian Government Travel Bureau assists in promoting the tourist business in Canada.

This item ought not to be passed without comment. Here is an opportunity for the minister once again to emphasize the value of the tourist business and of the government travel bureau. He can give us information about what the bureau has been doing under his stewardship. I assume that, as other ministers of trade and commerce have our present minister has taken some interest in this aspect of his department and is prepared to tell the committee what is going on, what his forecast of future operations is and if there is to be an expansion of this service.

Because of a number of elections and the postponement of the study of estimates, as well as other, similar considerations, we have not had a chance during the last three years to pay the same attention to departmental activities that we have paid in the past. As I said before, we suspended today's session

For understandable reasons we are working under a slight disadvantage today and cannot give to this department all the attention it deserves. Nevertheless I shall ask the minister to inform us about some matters and to put on the record what this travel bureau does, how effectively it is working, what its future prospects are, as well as letting us know whether he has any suggestions toward improving the service, if it needs to be improved. He can say whether he wants the support of the members of the House of Commons in his activities, in that regard.

Sometimes ministers of the crown find that their colleagues in cabinet cause them the greatest difficulty. If they can go to a cabinet meeting and say, "The House of Commons is in favour of this proposal," that strengthens their hand in cabinet. Then there is that awful establishment called Treasury Board which rides roughshod over members of the cabinet who are not on the Treasury Board committee. I shall not recount again, as I have in the past, my experiences with Treasury Board a few years ago; but I still bear the scars. Perhaps the present minister has a different approach to Treasury Board. Maybe he is on Treasury Board himself.

Mr. Monteith: I rise on a question of privilege, as one who was a member of Treasury Board at the time to which my hon. friend is referring. He seemed to imply that ministers who were members of Treasury Board found their requests for funds dealt with much more rapidly than those who were not. I take exception to that statement.

Mr. Churchill: Well, in that case, I have been under a misapprehension for a number of years, obviously. Of course I am bound to accept the statement of an hon. member made here in the House of Commons. It is my good fortune to meet this hon. member frequently in private, however, and we shall discuss this matter privately on some occasion and not burden the committee with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will permit me to ask him a question before he goes on to another point. Does the exchange we have just heard indicate that he and the hon. member for Perth are now joining in the leadership race?

Mr. Churchill: Well, I already have a mover and a seconder, but neither of them has as yet committed himself to vote for me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Churchill: I see no obstacle in the way of any member of this party putting his name up for leadership. As a matter of fact—this is just an aside, Mr. Chairman—I was talking to the leader of the New Democratic Party last night and I asked him how they managed things in his party. He informed me that according to their constitution there will be a vacancy as of Monday. I said: "Then you will be relieved of all your responsibility." He agreed. The burden would then be carried by the joint co-chairmen of the convention. I asked him what he would do if some statement were made of national or international importance. "Oh," he said, "I would carry on as house leader and, in that capacity, I would deal with the statement."

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Churchill: I expressed the hope that the hon. gentleman would be re-elected, you know; his party can go on making mistakes if it wishes. I said I was not certain he would encounter any opposition, but I had discovered there was a surplus of candidates in the Conservative party, and we might supply some assistance in that way. His suggestion, in return, was that we might work out a lend lease program which would be of benefit to both parties.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I hate to interrupt the hon. gentleman. If he had included the words "trade and commerce" in the remarks he has just made, they would not have been out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Chairman, a lend lease program is, in effect, a trade exchange, and that is what I was coming to. I do not know how this interruption occurred.

Mr. Knowles: It was caused by a colleague of yours on the front bench.

Mr. Churchill: No, it was an interruption by the Minister of Transport, who is frequently irrelevant. I was talking about the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, and I will now sit down and let the minister answer my questions by giving us a short resumé of the activities of this bureau.

If he wants support from the committee with regard to these activities, then provided he can indicate to us that he has a knowledge of the subject we shall endeavour to support him; and this, in turn, may have a persuasive effect on his cabinet colleagues and on Treasury Board—and it was because I mentioned Treasury Board that a sensitive member of this house rose and made some objection.

Mr. Winters: I will try to meet the rigid standard of acceptance put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I have a long association with this operation dating back, now, to 1948 when I assumed responsibility for the Canadian Government Travel Bureau.

Mr. Churchill: It has vastly improved since then.

Mr. Winters: It was then part of the department of reconstruction and supply operated under the direction of Mr. D. Leo Dolan, who had a great maritime background and heritage which he acquired largely, I think, through his association with Senator William Dennis who first sponsored what was to become the Canadian travel bureau.

We went through the pangs of building up this operation for which I was responsible until 1953, at which time it was passed to my successor, who was the Hon. Jean Lesage. I greatly enjoyed my association with the Canadian travel bureau which was then in its infancy. I officiated at the opening of its first office in the United States, in New York. We thought it was a great step forward and we wondered whether or not we could stand the expenditure. It turned out to be a good investment. This is now being followed up, and I think today we have some 23 offices abroad and are on the point of opening several others. The budget of the bureau used to be relatively modest. It is something of an experience to realize that we are now spending $10 million a year on tourist activity. Translate this in terms of results, the amount which derives from this investment of money, and the figure is just as startling—perhaps even more so. Last year, total gross revenue on this account, as far as it can be estimated—and there are no precise yardsticks—was of the order of $840 million, which was a record.

Even so, Canada experienced a net deficit on travel account, showing that Canadians are the greatest travellers in the world. On a per capita basis I think Canadian tourists spend more money than any other tourists. This may be attributable to the fact that we live in such close proximity to the great and friendly United States, and its vast opportunities for travel and purchasing.

This year we are aiming at a total gross revenue of more than $1 billion. This will be a landmark of achievement and I think we will reach the target. If we do, we can forecast with some confidence that Canada will have a net favourable balance on travel account for the first time in our history, as far as I know.

An important development is the number of inquiries which are being generated by these 23 offices of ours around the world. I participated this year in the opening of an office in Paris. We opened another in Seattle a few days ago, and my hon. friend from Peel officiated on my behalf. During the year 1966 there were 1,808,000 inquiries, and these are now all handled by computerized devices.

• (4:20 p.m.)

It is a marvel of modern ingenuity to see the way these inquiries are processed, replied to expeditiously, kits of material made up, all mechanically sorted, put in envelopes and dispatched. That was an all time record, more than the number of inquiries received by any other travel bureau in the world. But in the five month period this year from January through May we had the astonishing number of 2,350,000 inquiries received, thereby setting an all time record of inquiries, and giving an indication that this is going to be the greatest travel year in Canada's history. A great deal of the interest is owed to Expo '67 and all our other centennial celebrations.

Mr. Churchill: And the Pan-Am games in Winnipeg.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I hope to have the privilege of attending them, and I expect to see my hon. friend at them, perhaps in the 100 yard dash.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how much more I have to say to qualify for approval of these estimates, but perhaps what I have said is an indication of my interest in this great government operation.

Item agreed to.

Standards branch—

20. Administration and operation, $4,323,200.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): The minister has expressed great hope that as a result of the Kennedy round negotiations there will be a tremendous opportunity for Canadian manufacturing generally to find new markets throughout the world. This brings me to the fact that most of the world in which our manufacturers will find markets for their goods is already on the metric system. This trend will continue because the metric system has tremendous benefits from the point of view of being practical. Of course it is used universally in science. It would be a great benefit if it were applied to engineering and manufacturing because it would simplify standards, right down to such things as thread measurements, sizes of buildings, manufacturing stock, etc.

The money under this vote is for the standards branch, a branch of government that operates very unobtrusively. The average person tends to forget that it exists at all, and I think it is a criterion of good government when people are not continuously aware of a branch of government because of the irritations it causes. Over the years the standards branch has been doing an excellent job. Standards are the very basis for trade. Historically, standards were the first thing that had to be established for exchange and trade.

I confine my remarks at this time to recommending that the government expedite as much as possible the study, and perhaps development on a gradual basis, of the metric system and its application to our manufacturing concerns, so that they will have the opportunity and the capability of competing with Common Market countries in the markets which the minister hopes will be opened to a greater extent to Canadian industry. I would appreciate it if the minister would bring the committee up to date on the government's thinking in this field, on what has been done, and on what is contemplated will be done toward this objective.

Mr. Winters: Of course, Mr. Chairman, we must guide ourselves by developments in the markets of the world. Our biggest market is the United States, which is still on the current standards system of inches, feet, and so on. However, I believe the trend around the world is toward the metric system. The British have indicated their readiness to adopt it, and I think have given themselves a period of some five years to phase into its adoption.

Certain segments of our economy have already come into the metric system, notably the photographic industry and the pharmaceutical industry. We are keeping very closely attuned to these developments, and as markets in the world develop an acceptability of the merits of the metric system we will go along with them. I do not think I can go beyond that at the moment.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the standards branch which is responsible for enforcing the Gas Inspection Act, the Electricity Inspection Act and the Weights and Measures Act. These respective statutes stipulate that the fees are to be regulated so that they will cover the actual costs of inspection, but from the latest figures available to me it appears that the branch lost $735,000 on its operations in 1966. That is not the actual cost. If all the costs involved were charged to the department the loss would have been over $1 million. Why does the minister not follow the statutes in this respect, and thereby wipe out this deficit? This is something which should be watched more carefully, in view of the fact that the estimates for the whole department shows a loss of $1,672,400.

The staff of the whole branch has been increased by nine, and there is an increase of $10,000 for office supplies. The increase for travel is $31,000, yet no effort is made to have the branch pay its own way. Is consideration being given to a reassessment of fees so that it will not continue to show a loss on its operations?

This branch is also responsible for checking all measuring devices. I refer in particular to odometers, which are those parts of speedometers that register mileage travelled. I understand that nearly all speedometers imported into Canada come from the United States, and about a year ago it was stated that these speedometers, when tested, were consistently found to be 3.5 per cent over-rated. In other words they were not giving the true picture so far as mileage was concerned.

This has a direct bearing on the car rental business. People who rent cars would like to know they are paying for the actual miles they travel. People who keep close tab on gas mileage, and oil and tire performance, also want to know they are getting the true picture. Are checks being made on these speedometers which are put in Canadian cars?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Wellington South for his intervention and I congratulate him on the homework he has done on this branch, which normally remains in the background but which does such valuable work in checking the system of weights and measures we have in Canada.

For some time, I think perhaps dating back to the reign of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, we have had in mind doing something about this branch by way of broader legislative authority in order to bring it up to date. The legislative program of this house in respect of items which have high priority has been so heavy that we have been unable to deal with this, but it is our intention as soon as possible to bring before the house legislation which will revise some aspects of the statute. We do not need to do this in order to charge fees which are more in line with the expenditures. We are looking into this matter and perhaps I will have more to say on this at a later date.

Item agreed to.

29. Canadian Government participation in the 1967 World Exhibition, Montreal, $6,750,800.

Mr. Churchill: This vote I imagine is acceptable to the house because of the general interest in the world exhibition in Montreal and because of the general success of that enterprise. I wonder whether the minister at this stage might review this from the beginning. In addition to the estimate which appears here, perhaps he would indicate the total amount of money we have voted over the years in respect of Expo '67. In so far as he has the information, he might also give us the figures for attendance at the fair and the forecast with regard to the financial success of the exhibition.

The reason I ask for this is that although a tremendous amount of information appears in the daily press, radio and television, nevertheless I think it should be recorded in Hansard at this particular stage so that the progress to date will be included in our permanent records. This will all come out later, of course, when the world fair is over and the totals are added up, but I think an interim report at this stage would be helpful.

It is very appropriate that this should come under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is interesting to note that two very active and major figures on the staff of Expo '67—without in any way detracting from the work which has been done by others —are former members of the Department of Trade and Commerce. This is an indication of the type of able people who are employed by that department. They have had an opportunity at an international exhibition to show to everyone that we have in Canada men who are fit and capable to do things at an international exhibition which are comparable in standard to what has been done by people of other nationalities at other world exhibitions. There may be others, but I am referring to Mr. Andy Kniewasser and Mr. Leslie Brown, both of whom were very active and capable members of the Department of Trade and Commerce when I had the pleasure and honour to report to parliament for that department.

The engineer who was largely responsible for the construction of the site and for the general arrangements surely must be, somewhere along the line, a relative of mine. I have not quite discovered the close connection, but he appears to exhibit the characteristics of the Anglo-Saxon clan to which I belong.

Although I have not said anything in the house about Expo '67 from the time of its origin, I think this is one of the great accomplishments of Canada. I had the pleasure of attending the world fair in New York in 1939, and had an excellent opportunity to see that fair in detail. I also had an opportunity to see the world fair in Brussels in 1958. Therefore I have had an opportunity to make a comparison. In so far as my recollection is concerned, those two world fairs, important as they were, have been exceeded by the extent of, and the emphasis placed upon Expo '67. Time of course has moved on and technological improvements have occurred. Nevertheless, the world fair in Canada this year, in Montreal, has set a standard which will be hard to match in the future, not only from the standpoint of the number of countries which have participated in the fair—this is a major achievement and one which I am sure must be an all time record—but also from the standpoint of the standard of competence which has been displayed at the fair.

As Canadians we naturally are very proud of having such a successful exhibition in our country. We are fully cognizant of the fact that this has attracted world attention to Canada and will result in better relations between Canada and other countries. It will also stimulate trade. We are grateful to the countries which have undertaken to participate in the fair. Thanks to a great many people—the director general whose career in external affairs is well known to the members of the house, and the competent staff —Canadians have found that in this centennial year we have been able to put on display to the world a fair which surpasses any previous world fair. I am sure we are all grateful to those who have done the planning, who have worked hard and who have participated. We are also grateful to the members of the Department of Trade and Commerce for their contribution.

So, at this stage I should like to ask the minister to give us some of these facts, so that they will be recorded in Hansard and so that we will have an official statement of what has transpired with regard to the amount of money expended and the attendance at the fair. Then the minister, from his greater knowledge of the whole operation than is available to me, may wish to mention some other aspects which he considers important. He might indicate what he believes will be the permanent beneficial results from this great Canadian achievement.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, this particular item covers the Canadian participation through the Canadian pavilion only. The total amount voted for this is $21 million. I am glad to note that this is one of the projects at Expo which is operating within its budget. In this regard I think we must recognize the good work Mr. "Les" Brown has done, and I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for his recognition of that. I believe the Canadian pavilion is a great credit to Canada. It is recognized as such by all Canadians who have visited it, and there have been fine and glowing tributes paid to it by visitors from abroad.

In respect of the broader picture of Expo itself, although it does not come under this item and I do not have all the facts and figures at my disposal for that reason, I should like to say a few words about it. I did refer to this earlier today, before the hon. member took his seat in the house. I said that the total attendance now exceeds 16½ million people and is far in excess of the number which had been estimated up to this date.

The mere fact that so many people have visited the site has required the corporation of Expo to spend additional amounts of money, and this is increasing the requirement for capital. It was thought there might be a deficit of something in the order of $137 million in respect of Expo itself. It was hoped that the increased number of visitors through the turnstiles would increase the amount of revenue correspondingly. We still hope that will be the case, but to date it has not been, presumably because many of the visitors are from the local area, who come in in the morning and leave in the evening, without spending a great deal of money on the site. With the summer season now in full flight and increasing numbers coming from abroad there are indications that the amount of money left at the site per capita will increase. By whatever yardstick you use to measure, perhaps with the exception of a strict financial balance sheet approach, this is going to be a great Canadian accomplishment and a great Canadian asset.

We are already concerned about the disposal arrangements for Expo. The master plan which was tabled some time ago indicated an amount of some $74 million which the C.C.W.E. hoped will be realized through salvage and the disposal of assets. We have established a committee under the tripartite governments—federal, provincial and city—to make recommendations to the Corporation of the World Exhibition as to how these assets can be disposed of to the best advantage, and the amount budgeted actually realized.

Hon. members will recall that under the terms, the participating countries are required to remove their buildings from the site, and leave the site in good repair unless other provisions are made. A number of nations have indicated they would like to contribute their buildings, and the mayor of Montreal has indicated he would like to have some of them. This, together with the other arrangements for disposal on winding up in due course, are under consideration. It has already been agreed that La Ronde, which is the amusement area, will continue in operation for a period of some two years under the tripartite arrangement. I expect to bring legislation before parliament in the fall seeking authority to continue participation in this operation for a period of two years, after which it is the intention of the federal government to dispose of its share of the assets, presumably to the city of Montreal.

I am sure we all agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that this is a great success, and with the compliments he paid to the commissioner general, Mr. Pierre Dupuy, the assistant deputy commissioner, Mr. Andre Kniewasser, and to the chief engineer, Col. Churchill. There was one man he omitted to mention, because he was referring only to those with previous government service. I refer to Mr. Shaw, the deputy commissioner general, who has been a tower of strength in making a success of Expo. He has made a great contribution around which the whole program has in great measure revolved.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say to the minister that I am sure all members of the committee extend their congratulations to him and to his department, and to those who have been responsible for the unqualified success which has attended Expo. I have talked to many people who have visited almost all the world fairs over the years, and one of them said to me that this is the greatest fair he had seen in his lifetime and the greatest he ever expected to see. This is a fine tribute to all those, including the minister, who have planned and carried out this very large undertaking. If Canadians ever suffered from an inferiority complex, this ought to dispel it.

It is only natural, living beside the country which has the most advanced technology in the world, that there are times when we wonder whether we can do things on as grand a scale, with as much success and with as much flamboyancy as our United States neighbours. Certainly Expo has demonstrated that the governments of Canada, federal, provincial and municipal, in co-operation with the business community and the general public, when they have a common purpose to achieve can do great things together, and Expo is a living example of that type of accomplishment.

We have only seen part of the picture and I think the summer months will add even more lustre. There will be bigger crowds, and before the end of the season I am sure Expo will be far beyond the finest expectations of all of us, including the minister.

At a time like this when we are having a party it is bad manners to ask how much it cost, but I should like to ask the minister two questions for the purpose of clarification. He mentioned the world exhibition and said the total cost was to be something like $21 million.

Mr. Winters: That is for the Canadian pavilion.

Mr. Douglas: Is this amount covered under vote 29? I noticed the figures for the fiscal years 1964-65, 1965-66 and 1966-67 amount to just about $29 million. I think we have already spent $14 million. Will this total amount cover the entire cost?

Mr. Winters: Yes, I understand this will cover the entire cost. The $21 million should be adequate to cover the operation.

Mr. Douglas: The other question I should like to ask relates to Expo itself. The minister mentioned something about an anticipated deficit. I think he referred to a short fall this morning, which is a much nicer way of expressing this situation. He suggested the deficit would be $137 million. He also referred to an amount of $74 million as a salvage and disposal value. Has this amount already been subtracted before calculating the anticipated $137 million deficit, or will that deficit be reduced by $74 million, if we are able to realize that amount?

Mr. Winters: No, we have assumed that there will be $74 million recovered through salvage and disposal of assets in the calculation of that $137 million figure.

Mr. Douglas: So the $137 million will be the deficit after we have recovered the $74 million, assuming we are able to recover that amount?

Mr. Winters: That is a correct observation, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 29 carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have one final comment to make, and I do not wish to appear to be delaying the procedure of the house unduly. I did want to give an opportunity for the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to make a speech this afternoon. For that reason I provided him with a topic, as he faces a leadership convention next week.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I certainly want to thank the member for Winnipeg South Centre for giving me the opportunity of shining in such brilliant company. The only difficulty is that he put me at a great disadvantage by having to follow such an outstanding orator as himself. On a comparative basis this has placed me at a great disadvantage, particularly having to go before the convention. I intend to hold him to his promise to enter into a lend lease arrangement, in that some Conservative members are going to be present next week. I assure the hon. member that we will send them back to him completely untouched and untarnished. To avoid your calling me to order, Mr. Chairman, let me assure you that these comments have to do with trade, but not commerce.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics—

1. Administration and Operation including the fee for membership in the Inter-American Statistical Institute and a contribution of $500 to the International Statistical Institute.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: We have a few minutes left, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps the minister would deal with another matter. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is another vital factor in the operation of Canada's economy. Very considerable alterations and improvements have been going on in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics over the last few years, because of the realization that is abroad as to its valuable work and the need for enlarging it. We have a few minutes left, and I wonder whether the minister would tell us something about that bureau, which has done such good work in the past.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to say a word on behalf of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which I think is one of the finest organizations of its kind in the world. I am constantly amazed at the volume and the broad sweep of information collected and disseminated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Hon. members might note that a great percentage of the answers in reply to questions asked on a wide variety of subjects comes through this organization. The subjects range from the consumption of snuff in Canada to the number of whales caught in the north Atlantic ocean.

One might almost say that the bureau has been in a constant state of growth because of the pressure of the demands that fall upon it from various departments. Last year it undertook the census, and this required a considerable amount of extraordinary expenditure. But it was done expeditiously and well. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is endeavouring to computerize its operations and it has done so to a very large extent. The bureau has a very fine computer operation which enables it to get out the information required quickly. They are constantly working toward accelerating the pace with which information is made available, because the value of any information depends, (1) upon its correctness and (2) upon the speed with which it is made available to those who use it.

This information is made available to the consuming public of Canada, the various trade associations, provincial governments, and many others. The bureau has a wide variety of users and it is important that this information be made available expeditiously and correctly. We are spending a great deal of time and effort in building the bureau into the kind of organization that can meet those tests.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the minister said with regard to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I notice that there has been a growth in the bureau over the years. I am wondering whether there is any way of assessing how much of this growth results in increased benefit to the taxpayers, and how much of the growth in what we might generally term the public service—and I include all branches of the public service—is due to Parkinson's law. Of course, we have to recognize that this is a complicated age and there is a greater and greater demand upon public services of various kinds. These services can be of great benefit and no doubt are of great benefit, but sometimes I am appalled by the fact that we are told that because of automation, new electronic gear, and all this sort of thing, a service becomes very much more efficient, but the net result is that it costs more to provide that service.

I should like to mention an example of this sort of thing. The Minister of Transport made a very attractive statement the other day with regard to the telephone service of the government. A new system was evolved in the last year or so, and every call that is made is costing the taxpayer less money. Nevertheless there has been a very considerable gross increase in the cost of telephone services to, I think, practically every department of government. The answer to this of course is: Well, the government has become much more efficient and the departments use the long distance telephone service much more frequently than was the case when it was more expensive. It is also said it is much more efficient to make a long distance telephone call than it is to write a letter. But there is no evidence that there is any reduction in the cost of the traditional means of communication. We seem to go on and on in this way.

I would like to think there is a very close examination of the necessity for and value of any new service that is provided. I hope I am not misunderstood. I am all for providing every service that is reasonable for helping the economy and the general development of our country. But I think we have to be selective on occasion. I believe we have to select the things that give the greatest benefit for the money spent on them. There will undoubtedly be occasions when we cannot afford certain things, in the sense that they are not justified in the circumstances, and if as a result of deciding that we are to have a wide collection of attractive things the cost to the taxpayer continues to rise at a greater rate than the general growth of our country.

If this trend were to continue indefinitely, the tax burden would become heavier and heavier. This growing tax burden will have exactly the opposite effect on our economy, our ability to compete in world markets and raising the standard of living for all Canadians, because if all these costs are passed on to the consumer—and it is inevitable that they are, in some form or another—the cost of living will go up and therefore for a given income the standard of living will go down.

I do not wish to create the impression that I hold the view that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is particularly guilty or vulnerable in this regard. I assume that under the present minister a very careful watch is kept on a tendency to empire building, if you want to put it crudely.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I have just one comment to make to the minister. I wonder whether he has read the report of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate and the recommendations of the committee in connection with the service provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This committee ran into a problem all through its hearings. The problem was that the items relative to the price of food were weighted with this, that and the other thing in such a way that nobody, not even the economists, could give a true comparison with market fluctuations.

One of the recommendations was that the service of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in this particular field should be overhauled and speeded up, and the reports brought out so that they were readily understandable by the general public. I wonder whether the minister has any comment in this regard.

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman, other than that we are striving toward that end. As I mentioned, as always there is the demand for the earlier presentation of this sort of material. I have not read the report in full but I have seen references to it. To the extent that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics can improve its efficiency and update its making available of information, we will try to do this.

• (5:00 p.m.)

May I say in reply to the hon. member for Queens that we have been taking a good look at the growth to which he referred. I have been spending a fair amount of time on this point recently, together with the officials of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and Treasury Board, to see to what extent Mr. Parkinson has been at work there. There has been pressure from other departments requiring information and it is a problem for Treasury Board and the other departments to screen out what is essential. Once it is set out for the D.B.S. as a program approved by Treasury Board or by the government, it is up to the D.B.S. to render the best service it can with their program. The selection of programs is not its primary function; that is a matter for determination by the government, but if these things are not carefully watched there is a danger of Parkinson's law being applied to full effect. This is what we have to guard against.

Item agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: With the exception of Vote 1, this concludes the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions considered in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on todays' order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

LEIFR EIRIKSSON DAY

MEASURE TO COMMEMORATE LANDING IN CANADA

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-7, respecting the observance of Leifr Eiriksson day.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-7, respecting the observance of Leifr Eiriksson day, is a very short bill. The explanatory note says that:

> —the purpose of this bill is to commemorate the fact that Leifr Eiriksson was the first European to land on what is now Canadian soil.

I am not asking the government to declare a national holiday but merely to declare a Leifr Eiriksson day to commemorate or give recognition to the fact that Leifr Eiriksson was the first European to land on that part of North America which is now Canadian soil.

On September 3, 1964, the president of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson, issued a proclamation designating October 9, 1964 as "Leifr Eiriksson day", in recognition of the discovery of North America about the year 1000 A.D. In view of the fact that the United States has seen fit to declare a Leifr Eiriksson day, it would be only appropriate that Canada do likewise.

I have suggested that the first Monday in August be recognized as Leifr Eiriksson day. My reason for suggesting that day is that on that day the annual Icelandic celebration is held at Gimli, Manitoba. Manitoba has the largest Icelandic settlement on this continent, and Leifr Eiriksson being of Icelandic descent I felt that this would be an appropriate day. The implementation of this suggestion would not cost the people of Canada any money; it would, however, give recognition to what is now known as factual history. That is the important issue.

I wish to read a short article from the Canadian Press which appeared in the Saturday, June 10, 1967 issue of the Winnipeg Tribune. Under the heading "Ontario Displays Vinland Map" it says:

> The Vinland map said by Yale university scholars to be proof that Canada was discovered by Norsemen at least two centuries before the voyages of Columbus will be on display at the Royal Ontario Museum for three days next week.
> The map, about 11 inches by 16 inches, was drawn on parchment about 1440 from source materials dating back to the 13th century voyages of Leifr Eiriksson, researchers say.
> In the upper right hand corner is a large island labelled Vinland, with two river outlets thought to be the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Hudson straits.

This is the same map as was referred to in an article in the October 11, 1965 issue of the Washington Post written by staff writer Howard Simons, in which he outlines that Yale University and British museum scholars had unearthed evidence that Leifr Eiriksson had discovered North America about five hundred years before Christopher Columbus. I would recommend this article for perusal by all those who are interested in history and the preservation of historic facts.

Another article which I would recommend for study entitled "Leifr Eiriksson Discovered America" is contained in the 1965 winter edition of the Icelandic Canadian. In the same edition there is an article entitled "Some Notes on Leifr Eiriksson's National Origin and the Source on Greenland and Vineland" written by Professor Haraldur Bessason. Mr. Bessason is professor of Icelandic at the University of Manitoba, and he has done a great deal of research on this subject.

The observance of a Leifr Eiriksson day will not in any way effect Canada's recognition of the sailings of John Cabot and Jacques Cartier, or the achievement of Samuel de Champlain who was the first European to establish a permanent settlement in Canada.

[Mr. Stefanson.]

I wish to quote from a letter written by Dr. P. H. T. Thorlakson to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), dated January 7, 1965, giving a brief account of the early Viking voyages of discovery and exploration to the western hemisphere, and a brief reference to the recent archaeological discovery in Newfoundland. It reads as follows:

> Eiric Thorvaldson, more commonly referred to as "Eric the Red" because of the colour of his hair, was the first explorer and colonizer of Greenland. In the year 985 A.D. he sailed westward from Iceland on a voyage of exploration. Having selected the west shores of Greenland as the sites for new settlements, he returned to Iceland to arrange for the transportation of his own and several other families to this new land. It is recorded that 35 ships sailed from Iceland but only 14 arrived. Some were driven back, others were lost. With Eric's family was his famous son, Leifr, born in Iceland. Their family home in western Greenland was situated at Eiricsfjord and was called Brattahlid.
> Some 15 years later, Leifr was sailing from Iceland to Greenland to visit his father when he was driven off course to the westward and southward by strong winds. He landed in a country which, according to the available records, had never been reached before by Europeans. When he finally arrived at his father's home, he reported the discovery of this new land situated to the west and south of Greenland.
> In the year 1007, Thorfinn Thordarsson—better known as Thorfinn Karlsefni, an Icelander who had married Gudrid, the widow of Eiric's son Thorstein, set out to explore and establish settlements in this new land. His expedition consisted of 160 persons and several ships. They sailed from Greenland towards the southwest. He sighted a barren land covered with flat stones, "Helluland" and further south he came to a wooded land, "Markland". He recognized both these lands from the earlier description by Leifr. Thence they sailed far to the south. Finally, on their starboard side, they saw a long coast line with a sandy shore indented with bays. A river entered the ocean at this point. Here they landed and set forth to explore the country. Inland, they gathered ears of wild grain and an abundance of wild grapes. This was Vineland (Wineland) the Good originally described by Leifr Eiriksson.
> Thorfinn Karlsefni and his adventurous colonists stayed in this new country for at least three years. During the first autumn (1007) a son was born to Gudrid, the wife of Karlsefni. The child was named Snorri. Many notable Europeans, including the celebrated Icelandic-Danish sculptor Thorvaldsen, trace their lineage to this first child of European blood born in North America.
> In the year 1917 the Icelandic sculptor, Einar Jonsson, was invited to the United States by Dr. Henry Goddard Leach on behalf of Mr. Bumford Samuel. By the provision of her will, the late Mrs. Bumford Samuel established a fund which was to be used to erect statues of representative pioneers of America in Fairmont park in Philadelphia.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As a result of this visit, a statue of Thorfinn Karlsefni, created by a gifted Icelandic sculptor, was placed in Fairmont park in 1918, to memorialize these early attempts at settlement and as a tribute to the first European pioneer in North America.

In a book entitled the "Life of Christopher Columbus" written by his son, Ferdinand, is recorded the visit of his father to Iceland in the year 1477, fifteen years before he landed in central America. In a letter from Christopher Columbus to his son, quoted in part only in this book, it is stated that the explorer sailed from Bristol, England to Iceland in February, 1477.

Historians believe that Christopher Columbus' decision to visit Iceland was no doubt made after he had read the works of Adam of Bremen, who was one of the most distinguished scholars of Europe in the eleventh century. Adam of Bremen had recorded the story of the propagation of Christianity in northern Europe. After describing conditions in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Iceland and Greenland, he stated: "The same king (Svend Estridson) also informed me about the discovery of one more region in that ocean—a region named 'Vinland', because grapes grow there spontaneously, produces the best wine; and corn too, without being sown in abundance."

This book, written by Adam of Bremen, was published between the years 1072 and 1076 in the manner that books were published before printing was invented.

The early discovery, explorations and attempts at colonization of North America, were memorialized by the government of the United States when they presented a statue of Leifr Eiriksson to the people of Iceland on the 1000th anniversary of the founding of the Althing—parliament—in 1930.

Canada, I believe, has now a most cogent reason for officially acknowledging the first recorded discovery of North America by designating an official "Leifr Eiriksson day". For the first time, we now have a day which has great significance to these early events and to our Canadian history. In September, 1964, a pierced stone weight used in spinning was unearthed in the northermost tip of Newfoundland at l'Amse aux-Medows. The discovery on Canadian soil of this soapstone spindle whorl indicates that the early Viking settlers included women, corroborating the accounts of the early Viking settlements along our eastern seaboard which are recorded in the ancient Iceland sagas. The day of this discovery may appropriately be chosen by Canada as "Leifr Eiriksson day" but no doubt other days of the year should also be considered.

A plaque, a centennial gift to Canada was presented by Canadians of Icelandic descent on April 14, 1967, and placed in the new library and Archives building in Ottawa. I just want to quote from the Winnipeg Free Press for Saturday, April 15, 1967. The article is headed "Plaque Marks Canada's Discovery" and states:

Prime Minister Pearson unveiled a bronze plaque in the new national library and Archives building here Friday as a centennial gift to Canada by citizens of Icelandic descent.

Dr. P. H. T. Thorlakson of Winnipeg, president of the Canadian Icelandic centennial committee, presented the plaque to commemorate discovery of the eastern coast of Canada by mariners of Iceland and Greenland in the late tenth century.

Mr. Pearson said the plaque "makes us more conscious than ever of the varied origins of our national existence."

He said it is now well established that the first discoverers of what is now known as North America were Vikings long before Christopher Columbus, John Cabot and Jacques Cartier came.

Noting on the trilingual plaque that Icelandic is the most economic language in the number of words used, Mr. Pearson jokingly suggested he would like to see it adopted as the official language of the House of Commons.

The plaque shows an open book and quill recalling work of Icelandic scholars who preserved eleventh and twelfth century records, and a replica of a Viking ship, along with two historic excerpts from The Saga of the Greenlanders, first written in Iceland about 1200 and preserved in a vellum manuscript.

Part I records the sighting of the new land by Bjarni Herjolfsson of Iceland in 986. Part II describes the voyage of Leifr Eiriksson some years later and his landing on Vinland—part of the coast of North America.

The heading on this plaque is, "A chapter of Canadian history—discovery of the western hemisphere". The introductory paragraph at the top of the plaque reads as follows:

This plaque commemorates the discovery of the eastern coast of Canada by mariners from Iceland and Greenland in the late tenth century.

The historic excerpt reproduced below is from Graenlendinga Saga (The Saga of the Greenlanders) first committed to writing in Iceland about A.D. 1200 and preserved in Flateyjarbok (The Flatey Book) a vellum manuscript compiled in Iceland about A.D. 1390.

Part I records the sighting of new land in the west by Bjarni Herjolfsson, of Eyrar, in Iceland, in A.D. 986.

Part II describes the voyage of discovery of Leifr Eiriksson some years later and his landings in Helluland (Flatstoneland), Markland (Woodland) and Vinland (Wineland). These explorations led to an attempt at colonization by Thorfinnr Karlsefni, whose son, Snorri Thorfinnsson, was born on this continent.

Archaeological research in western Greenland and eastern Canada supports these ancient Icelandic records of exploration and colonization.

In conclusion, by the acceptance of this plaque, the government of Canada has recognized that mariners from Iceland and Greenland were the discoverers of the east coast of Canada and, indeed, of North America. The United States has given recognition to the fact that Leifr Eiriksson was the discoverer of North America and also that he was of Icelandic descent. I think it would be fitting if the government of Canada saw fit to recognize this historic fact in a similar manner.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Leifr Eiriksson is a symbol, a symbol of those adventurers whose spirit of inquiry defied danger and death. They are like the men who saw fit to climb Everest, a number of whom were lost, but finally Everest was conquered. The only explanation they could offer for their effort was that it was there. There was no greater purpose than adventure itself. These fierce Norsemen sailed the wild sea and discovered this land in which we live. I am reminded of these lines:

> Forth sped the Viking bold
> E'en through the Arctic cold,
> On, ever onward...
> Three weeks we westward hove,
> And when the storm was o'er,
> Cloud-like we saw the shore
> Stretching to leeward.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) is an excellent representative of his Viking ancestors. To him and to those pioneers who played a part in ushering in the drama of this new world, we say, "Skol". I believe in the importance of symbols, whether they be flags, shields or badges. I believe in heroes. I believe it was Carlyle who wrote of heroes and hero worship. Probably it is so that great ideas have been carried in the hearts of mankind by human example. Leifr Eiriksson is a symbolic hero as were John Kennedy, Winston Churchill and Pope John. They were all great human symbols.

Leifr Eiriksson has become part of the thought structure, the symbolism of the entire western culture. I believe that any great thought must be conveyed by some human life, even though the historic facts concerning that life may be uncertain and vague. I suppose, sir, on a day such as this all of us are thinking of that very special and precious human being who is a symbol to us and who is with us today. Her life has been a living symbol of service, from every call of duty she has never flinched, never wavered, like her brave father before her. I once saw her in uniform—a slip of a girl. It has been her glory to exemplify for her people honour and moral worth and we rejoice in her presence for our centennial celebrations.

I think it is interesting to remember that some of her ancestors, for several centuries, used the title "Dux Normannorum" or "Dux Normanniae". I am not clear when this practice was discontinued or whether in fact it is discontinued. It is interesting to note how these fierce Norsemen conquered successively France, Scotland and then England.

Leifr was the son of the great clan chief Eric the Red, who was referred to as the strong and noble leader of the Norsemen. These stout hearts, with their great muscles, blond hair and blue eyes voyaged to the Faeroes, the Orkneys, the Hebrides, the coast of Normandy, to Iceland, Greenland, and even to Canada itself.

My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) who had the ingenuity to bring this motion before the house had every right to bring it. Before rising to speak I received a note from my good friend from Red Deer who will follow me, also of Scandinavian origin, in which he urges me not to talk against this bill. It would be hard for me to do so. My grandfather, John Matheson, was born in the northern part of Skye. His mother was Flora Nicolson—pronounced Nick-olsen. They spoke Gaelic. I am told that all these northern highlanders could easily understand Norwegian when it was spoken slowly. They were Vikings just a few generations removed. The Vikings were the people who—and no archaeologist and historian today can be precise as to where this was—somewhere around 1,000 A.D. touched down in our land.

I have read various historical accounts of these people and the comments by Samuel Eliot Morison, the great professor of American history. He suggests that relics such as the Kensington rune stone and the Beardmore weapons, which have been the subject of much research by archaeologists, are clumsy forgeries. I believe on the evidence now available he is wrong.

Notable European scholars, and here I am thinking of Paul Herrmann who wrote "Conquest by Man", suggest that there is much evidence, from artifacts of all kinds, to show that there were definite Scandinavian inroads very early in our history. I am intrigued by the account of Paul Herrmann, how in August, 1898, a Scandinavian by the name of Olof Ohman, in Solem near Kensington in Minnesota, discovered, by knocking his axe against a tree, a rune. I know that this matter has been the subject of controversy, but many people who are more authoritative on the subject than even the eminent Professor Morison is, regard this rune as evidence that Norsemen appeared in this land at an early time.

The stone spoke of a journey of eight Swedes and 22 Norwegians from Vinland. May I read the text of the runic inscription:

> (We are) 8 Goths (Swedes) and 22 Norwegians on (an) exploration-journey from Vinland over the West (i.e. through the western regions) We had camp by 2 skerries (i.e. a lake wherein are two skerries) one day's-journey north from this stone

We were (out) and fished one day After we came home (we) found 10 (of our) men red with blood and dead. Ave Maria.
Save us from evil

On the other side of the stone were chipped these words:

(We) have 10 of our party by the sea to look after our ships (or ship) 14 day's-journey from this island. Year 1362.

It is interesting to compare this date with the date of the attack on Rhodes and the early migrations of the Crusaders to the far east. It is interesting that there were then valorous men in armour on this side of the water. There are some suggestions that Bjarni, son of Herjulf, touched down in Canada perhaps a few years earlier. Certainly, as the hon. member for Selkirk has indicated, Lief stands above others and is the man worthy of being characterized as the symbol of this fearless and intrepid people.

Leifr Eiriksson, the Norse discoverer of North America, was probably born in Iceland. He was the son of Eric the Red, spent his youth in Greenland and in 999 A.D. visited Norway where he was converted to Christianity. He was commissioned by King Olaf Tryggvason to carry the religion to Greenland. According to "Saga of Eric the Red" in the collection of sagas known as "Hauksbok" it was on the return voyage from Norway to Greenland in about A.D. 1000 that Leifr Eiriksson, blown off his course, discovered hitherto unknown lands in which he found grapes, self sown wheat and a species of tree called Mansur.

He landed, secured specimens of this vegetation and continued on to Greenland where he was successful in introducing Christianity. There are various versions of this story but it is clear that the Norsemen from a very early period passed through some parts of our country—perhaps through the southeast corner of the United States, probably through Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: I think that is quite right.

Mr. Matheson: Do I hear an interjection by an hon. member?

It is interesting to note that archaeologists suggest that Bjarni Herjulfsson, while in his twenties, undertook the great voyage of 985 A.D. in which he navigated from some spot in western Iceland to this country and probably landed at, or saw first the flat landscape of Hamilton inlet in Labrador. After two days they sighted land anew—high mountains and glaciers, as in Greenland. They had sighted the southern part of Baffin island.

The Heimskringla records that Bjarni reported the voyage to Eric the Red, the uncrowned king of Greenland and that Eric's oldest son, Leifr, bought the ship from Bjarni and obtained a crew of 35, and the consent of his father, Eric, for a new voyage of exploration. Unfortunately, Eric had a fall from his horse; as a result it was left to his great son to take on the responsibility of that voyage of discovery. Thus Leifr discovered Vinland—a land laden with vines and grapes.

We do not know where Vinland is. We do not really know at what point on the coast Leifr landed. It may have been Massachusetts, but also, possibly, it may have been Virginia, Florida, New England or Newfoundland. The winter frost was so light that the grass had scarcely withered. In any event, it is clear from the evidence of the artifacts that from early years the Norsemen touched down on our shores. I see my hon. friend nodding his head; I should add that from early days the brave Irish, too, may have explored these parts.

While on the subject of where Leifr Eiriksson landed it is interesting to note that in Mallorytown, Leeds, in my constituency, they have been working under water for about a year and a half on what is believed to have been a British gunboat of about the year 1812. It is a flat lapstreak vessel. Though all the experts suggest that the boat is a British gunboat about 150 years old, and it has been studied by our northern affairs people for many months, my private theory is that it is Leifr's boat. Of course I may be wrong.

The importance of this bill is that Canada is a country of rich ethnic variety. Her Majesty was reminded of this variety when she saw the talent on the hill this afternoon—Ukrainians, Chinese, French, Estonian, Italian, Indian, German; one could go on—yes, and Jewish. All this is evidence of the contributions which have been made by people of many races—Africans, Slavs, men and women of both oriental and caucasian descent.

Some writers theorize on this. Roy Matthews in an article which I would commend to hon. members entitled "Canada, The International Nation," says we must not get trapped in a bicultural and bilingual set-up which relegates others to third class status. Hon. members will appreciate that I am speaking today as a Norwegian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Matheson: In this article, which appeared in that excellent periodical, the Queen's Quarterly, Mr. Matthews writes:

> The way to avoid such a prospect, in my view, is to ensure that the dilemma does not take on the form of a bilateral confrontation. Diversification is the secret; and this is the essence, again, of my plan for an "international nation." I would never imagine that Canada could escape from its unique situation vis-à-vis the United States; the relationship with our huge southern neighbour will always be paramount in our affairs and my scheme is shaped to recognize that fact implicitly. Likewise, I have no intention of suggesting that the special position afforded the English and French groups under Confederation should be weakened; I accept this factor as a valuable part of our Canadian heritage. What I seek to do is to weave these relationships into a wide and more satisfying design without in any way reducing their significance.

This respect for all has been eloquently expressed in a series of speeches by Her Majesty. She has sought always to encourage the best in us, not only in her realm of Canada but wherever in the world she is recognized as head.

In northern mythology there are three Norns or goddesses who are regarded as dispensers of fate. They are Urdur, the past—and perhaps we have been too preoccupied with Urdur in Canada—there is Verdandi, the present—and ours is a challenging present, and we would not change it for any other day—and there is Skuld, the future.

To the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) and to all the strong people from northern lands who have enriched this country we say, God bless you, and may there be many more in Canada in the years ahead by natural increase and, I hope, by immigration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because I should like this bill to pass, my remarks will be brief. I think it is fitting and appropriate that at this time when we are thinking of the history of our land in a special way we should have speeches this afternoon about a particular aspect of our history, namely the occasion when the first European found himself on the shores of what is now our land.

I think it is fitting that we should take note of the background of our history, and it seems to me that what the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) asks is little enough, namely that one day in our calendar should be known as Leifr Eiriksson Day. I should like to support this bill not only because of the link it suggests with the history of 900 or a thousand years, but also because in my view it is fitting for us to recognize the great contribution to the life of Canada which has been made by Canadians of Icelandic descent.

I come from a part of this country where we are particularly aware of this fact. Indeed, all over Canada there are Icelanders and people from Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland who have made a valuable contribution to the life of Canada. But in my part of Canada we are particularly conscious of what people of Icelandic origin have done in helping, along with people of other origins and with all of us who are here, to build this land into the one we are celebrating just now, as it becomes 100 years of age.

For these two reasons, because of the respect it shows for an important aspect of our history, and because of the recognition it gives to people of Icelandic descent in this country, I should like to see the house accept the bill proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk.

I am interested in the fact that the bill does not ask for a holiday in the sense that it would be another day on which people would be free from work. However a most interesting day has been chosen, namely the first Monday in August, which is already celebrated as a holiday in terms of freedom from work in many parts of the country, under the name "civic holiday".

I hope it will not sound like a commercial on my part if I point out that I myself have a bill on the order paper, Bill No. C-57, which seeks to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code to provide that the first Monday in the month of August shall be a holiday, along with the others listed in the Labour (Standards) Code. I did not attach any name to that suggested holiday when I put it in my bill. I have received a number of suggestions as to what it might be called; perhaps it could be given a number of names. Anyway, I see no reason at all why both these bills should not be passed. Let us have a holiday in terms of freedom from work on the first Monday in August every year, and I see no reason why that holiday should not be called Liefr Eiriksson Day.

I have pleasure in supporting the bill introduced by the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I rise to support this bill with a good deal of sentiment. As a descendant of some of the early pioneers in our land who came originally from Norway I have a strong family tie with the Nordic background of Liefr Eiriksson.

I would remind the hon. member who has just spoken, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), whose support for this bill I appreciate, that while Liefr Eiriksson was born in Iceland it was his father, Eric the Red, who first colonized that island in 970. Those Norwegian adventurers, seeking more productive lands, who discovered Iceland and settled it, went on further to Greenland and then further still to the eastern shores of Canada. Thus, Liefr Eiriksson not only has ties with Iceland, where he was born, but with the Nordic adventurers who came from Norway and who were the real discoverers of the new world of which Canada is today such an important part.

I think it is significant that this bill is being discussed today on the eve of Canada's centennial. I cannot think of anyone more worthy to sponsor it than the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). On a day when we are considering the history of our nation relating to the 100 years just about to end, it is good that we should look further back into our past and identify the beginnings of our history.

I also appreciate the scholarly presentation which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) has made. I do not want to be repetitious but I think it would be good to add a little detail to his remarks so that we may have on record more detail of how Leifr Eiriksson came to be the first Canadian of Scandinavian stock to reach what is now Canada.

The story of the life of Leifr Eiriksson falls into three parts. First came his Atlantic trip from Greenland to Norway in 999 A.D. He had gone to Greenland with settlers from Iceland. His father, Eric the Red, was the key leader in that adventure. As I say, in the year 999 A.D. he returned to Norway where, as the hon. member for Leeds has already stated, he came to know the king of that country but, more important than that, he came into contact for the first time with Christianity and became a Christian.

The second phase of his life follows his discovery of what he called Vinland, North America, in the year 1003 A.D. Following this discovery he returned to the Norwegian colony in Greenland and spent his life in stewardship there from 1004 to 1065 A.D.

These Norsemen were the first Europeans to leave their coastline and venture into uncharted seas. As their homeland was not, and still is not a rich land, 70 per cent of it being covered by mountain, glacier and moor, they went abroad seeking new lands with which to enrich themselves.

It was on the island of Iceland that Leifr Eiriksson was born in the year 970 A.D. Some ten years later his father founded the Greenland colony. Neither Iceland nor Greenland were a very great improvement upon their native land of Norway, so they continued to seek adventure farther away. Considering this, it is not strange to find in the story of Leifr Eiriksson that when he was 20 years of age he went back to Norway and, as I have mentioned, went to the court of King Olaf and came into contact with Christianity. From there he returned to Iceland, and later landed on the eastern coast of Canada.

It was a really astonishing performance. Although it is true that the hulls of the boats of these early Vikings were masterpieces of naval architecture, they were open, and they could only sail before the wind. They depended on oars to face into the weather, and also for a great deal of their propulsion. No craft was more than 50 foot long.

Whereas Christopher Columbus crossed the southern Atlantic, the Vikings sailed the Arctic without benefit of compass. They steered by the stars and by the birds. Having discovered this land in the year 1003, in the following spring they returned to Greenland. One can imagine the rejoicing and the jubilation in that colony of a few hundred souls when Leifr Eiriksson returned. It is no wonder they christened him Leifr the Lucky.

Today general recognition is advancing of Leifr Eiriksson as the discoverer of Canada and the western world. His voyage to North America in the year 1003, and then later the colonizing expedition of his brother, who set up the first colony of 160 people, are things which are now becoming established as facts of history. No one has done more to establish those facts than Professor Helge Ingstad of Norway, who himself has done much of the archeological work in Newfoundland, which has turned up the evidence of that first colony through artifacts directly related to that early period in history.

Today there are many people who believe that Columbus' discovery nearly 500 years later was directly due to the voyages of Leifr Eiriksson. At all events the Norsemen's claim to the original landing seems to be accepted. So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should seriously consider accepting this bill today so that there might be one day in the year, such as that suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk, that would give recognition to the first European to land in Canada.

Such an act would not only be fitting but would also be encouraging to our students of history and to all our young people, helping them to pay more attention to the great historic heritage of this country. Therefore I give my support to this bill. I agree with those who have already spoken on it, that it would be very fitting for the house at this time to give approval to it and thereby officially set a day in the calendar to be known as Leifr Eiriksson Day.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see this bill passed and therefore will be very brief. We are known by our heroes and I think it is fitting that today, the last day in our experimental first 100 years, we officially recognize one of the great heroes of the western world, Leifr Eiriksson.

Canada has made a great contribution as a melting pot of nations to this top part of North America. We have no great errors to live down. This experiment which is now 100 years old has been a success, and I join with the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) in hoping, nay in praying that we will not bog down in any bicultural or bilingual quarrel, but that we will use this great experiment of the last 100 years to move forward into the next 100 years and prove that the experiment is only beginning.

The town of St. Paul in northeastern Alberta, embracing the three great cultures prevalent in that area, is the most successful centennial town in Canada. I only hope that here we can add one more tribute to the many heroes we have had by following the lead of the hon. member who has proposed this bill.

There has been much talk about symbolism this afternoon. I think it is rather significant that the number of this bill is C-7, the number of stars in the great dipper which was such a great boon to navigators. If we pass this bill it will be a tribute to an individual hero, a man who did not take his lead from the mob, a man who stepped out on his own, who expected help from nobody, and made the whole world a better place in which to live. Therefore I join with others who have spoken in saying that this bill should be given second reading.

[Mr. Thompson.]

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate, as a French Canadian from Quebec, this opportunity to say a few words here tonight on Bill No. C-7, an act respecting the observance of Leifr Eiriksson day. Under this bill, the first Monday in the month of August would be known and observed as Leifr Eiriksson day throughout Canada.

Personally, I sincerely wish that this bill can be passed tonight, since Leifr Eiriksson is the man who, in all likelihood, according to old relations of the Scandinavian people, was the first to set foot on American soil.

Why observe Leifr Eiriksson day? What can Canada get out of it? I realize that there are in this house more descendants of that great people than I expected, of that ancient people that settled Iceland first from the Scandinavian countries, Sweden, Denmark and especially Norway.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) who introduced the bill is a direct descendant, through his parents of Icelandic settlers. He might be also a descendant of Sigurd Stefanson who probably was a surveyor, a very able geographer at that time, taking into account the facts known to the men of those days because, unless I am mistaken, Sigurd Stefanson who probably was a surveypeans who prepared a chart of the North Atlantic on which appear the Scandinavian countries of Europe, and those countries Leifr Eiriksson called Helluland, Markland and Vinland.

Our Scandinavian compatriots, descendants of the ancient Vikings, are perfectly justified, as we all are, to be proud of their forebears. When it occurred to me that I might speak on this bill, memories of things I had read came back to me and, in the last few hours, I took the opportunity to refresh my memory a little on such epics, souvenirs of the gruelling voyages undertaken by these kings of the fiords, the heads of families and clans as were the Vikings, knowing that in those days every Norwegian family owned its own fiord and defended it with all the strength and the valour of its brawn and heart.

Descendants of the Scandinavian peoples are justified in their pride for their ancestors and we can understand that they are proud to promote this project of observing Leifr Eiriksson day.

Their ancestors, between the years 600 and 800, were fishermen as well as sailors and traders. They travelled on every sea in light boats called drakkars.

Those Vikings did not have the compass to guide them, but it seems that they were gifted with a special instinct to find their way and not get lost hopelessly on the wide seas of the globe.

According to the sagas—chronicles which, in French literature, would probably correspond to mediaeval verse-chronicles such as the Song of Roland, which some of us have heard about and others have probably read—Leifr Eiriksson was the first to set foot on Canadian soil, on the American continent.

However, it seems likely—and we have tangible proof, such as writings and artifacts discovered through archaeological research—that other Europeans had come to America before then, even before the Christian era.

We know that Liefr—

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) a question. In view of the fact the hon. member is completely in favour of the bill, as well as—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who has the floor does not appear to have relinquished the floor.

Mr. Thompson: Would it not be good to let it pass now?

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would allow me to conclude.

Others had come before Leifr Eiriksson. We find that, a few years before his voyage to America one of his Norwegian fellow-citizens, by the name of Biarni, in the year 986, being lost in a storm and having passed south of Greenland, came to the coast of Newfoundland, went up along the shores of Labrador, reached the Land of Baffin, and finally rejoined his friends in Greenland.

It was following the accounts of Biarni, who had not set foot on American soil, that Leifr Eiriksson, because of his adventurous mind and his ambition to find wealth and establish a settlement or a new country, where he could be king, made the same journey as Biarni, but in the other direction.

This is a reason to be proud of the courage and gallantry of this man, who can serve as an example and an inspiration for all good Canadians, whatever their origin may be.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for private members business has now expired.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

TABLING OF MINUTES RESPECTING HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF

Mr. Speaker: By leave would hon. members give their consent that we revert to motions for the purpose of allowing the Speaker to table in English and in French an extract from the minutes of the meeting of the commissioners for internal economy, June 29, 1967, relating to salary revisions of the staff of the House of Commons. For the information of hon. members this extract will be published in today's Votes and Proceedings. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, would the government house leader like to restate the business for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. I understand that we will not be sitting on Monday.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday we plan to consider the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If these estimates should pass on Tuesday we will then call the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. In any event we will call those estimates on Wednesday. On Thursday it is proposed that we begin with the estimates of the Department of National Defence.

• (6:00 p.m.)

As hon. members are aware, we have various supply bills to consider on Thursday. At some point next week, following consultation, it is proposed that we call the third reading of the Interpretation Act, which is the only outstanding legislative item intended for this part of the session. This is not likely to cause or require any prolonged debate. That is the proposed program as of now.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Do I understand that it is not intended that we deal with Vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Transport? That item was allowed to stand.

Mr. MacEachen: We certainly do not propose to call it before we deal with the estimates of the departments I have mentioned.

If those estimates are passed earlier than 9.30 on Thursday we might call the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. In any event, I think it is more or less understood that we will call the first item of the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce on Friday next.

Mr. Knowles: To complete the record, should the minister not point out that the Department of Transport estimates are to be called and passed before Thursday night.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the estimates of the Department of Transport will be called and passed at some point before 9:30 on Thursday. We have already considered those estimates for two days in committee, and it may be that they can be passed without a great deal of debate.

Mr. Knowles: Do not forget the pensions of retired civil servants.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, this house stands adjourned until 2:30 p.m. next Tuesday, according to a special order passed last Monday, June 26.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING PENDING RESOLUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to place before the house the position of the Canadian government in respect of the several resolutions now before the United Nations general assembly. In particular I would ask him to clarify the position outlined in a speech by Ambassador Ignatieff on the Pakistan resolution calling for the nullification of Israel's annexation of the old city of Jerusalem. Is that interpretation the stand of the Canadian government? Is this a correct interpretation, although contrary to suggestions made by the Prime Minister, according to various representatives of the Jewish faith? Has the government decided to vote in favour of a resolution to nullify the action taken by Israel in asserting municipal government to cover the entire city?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties in answering such a question on orders of the day is that it is not possible to go into all aspects of the situation. There are a number of resolutions before the general assembly at the present time. This particular resolution has not been dealt with and may not be voted on today, according to the most recent information. There are discussions presently taking place in connection with this resolution, and until these discussions have been completed I do not believe it would be responsible to go beyond what I have said.

However, with regard to another resolution, that standing in the name of the Latin American countries, there is a provision in the final operative paragraph that note should be taken of resolutions passed by the 1949 assembly of the United Nations calling for the establishment of an international régime in Jerusalem. This resolution reaffirms earlier recommendations for an international régime, but proposes that consideration of this question should not be taken until the next general assembly.

We had not voted for the 1949 resolutions but we were in favour of international supervision and protection of access to the holy places of the three great religions. I do not believe at this time I could go beyond that.

The resolution to which my hon. friend referred is in the name of Pakistan. It calls for an expression of opinion from the United Nations assembly asking the government of Israel not to proceed with the annexation of Jerusalem. It does not do so in exactly those terms, but that is the implication of the resolution. That resolution is now being discussed in private consultations.

If Canada were to take the position suggested by my right hon. friend it might be inconsistent with the position we took in our statement at the general assembly, when we said that there should be no precipitate action taken, no freezing of any negotiating positions, and that there should of course be, as Israel will provide, access to the holy places. But let there be no doubt about this; with regard to the Latin American resolution Canada will not agree to the withdrawal of Israeli forces unless it is related to the termination of belligerency, and also to the recognition of the basic issues involved. This was covered in the six points made by the Prime Minister when he spoke here six weeks ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the minister I would not consider that statement as much of a clarification. I will come back to the question. On the Pakistan resolution, of which the minister was kind enough to give the purport, is it a fact that Mr. Ignatieff indicated in the assembly that Canada would support that resolution? That is the first question. The second question is this. The hon. gentleman said I had suggested certain action by Canada. That is not so. I asked a question concerning what Canada's stand is going to be. I am trying as hard as I can to understand what it is. That is the reason I asked the simple question, how does Canada intend to vote on the Pakistan resolution?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My right hon. friend should have no difficulty in understanding the Canadian position—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —because even though my right hon. friend does not like the response, it was stated to him in clear terms. I think everyone else in this house understood it. The resolution is before the assembly, and consultations are being carried on in respect of it. I have indicated that Canadian policy is as stated by me at the general assembly; that is, that there should be no precipitate action and that whatever action is taken in respect of the holy places in Jerusalem should be under the supervision of the United Nations organization.

My right hon. friend shakes his head. I hope that in putting this question he is really doing so for clarification, in an effort to help resolve this problem, and not—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to give the impression that we entirely support the position of one of the parties involved in this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot allow that to go.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There has been a question and a supplementary question by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Two answers have been given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether perhaps we should allow a supplementary by one of the other members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot allow the statement to stand unchallenged. I rise on a question of privilege. The minister suggested that the question I asked was not for the purpose of obtaining information, and I must say that I certainly succeeded in getting none; that much is proven. I asked him a simple question. Surely there is not going to be a continuation of the evasion and obfuscation that has been displayed here this afternoon. How is Canada going to vote on the Pakistan resolution? If that has not been decided let the minister say so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked the question now for the third time and we have heard two replies, which consumed about ten minutes. I suggest we should now allow a supplementary question by another member.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada has taken any steps to recommend the appointment of an international or United Nations commissioner for the city of Jerusalem or whether she has taken any initiative toward recommending a mediator between Israel and the Arab nations representing the United Nations or any other international body.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the security council there is a resolution standing in the name of Canada, which has not yet been disposed of. It provides for the appointment of a representative of the Secretary General to try to bring about negotiation between the parties. There is likewise provision in the non-aligned resolution for a similar arrangement.

Mr. Thompson: I should like to go back to my supplementary question, asking whether Canada has taken any initiative toward recommending the establishment of a commissioner or mediator to act in respect of the conflicting parties in the Middle East crisis. He did not answer that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thought I said clearly that in the resolution we have put before the security council there is provision for that very suggestion. The hon. member asks if we will agree to appointing a mediator, or if we have taken any initiative in this regard. To this I say yes; in the security council we have done so by a resolution standing in Canada's name and we will also try to do so by our votes in the general assembly if the assembly is called to recommend the appointment of a mediator.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

APPRECIATION OF PARLIAMENT HILL CEREMONIES ON JULY 1

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I wonder whether I may be allowed to say how proud we were on Saturday when on our behalf you addressed Her Majesty the Queen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I also be permitted to say that all of us in this house regardless of party affiliation were moved during the past four days by the stirring demonstration of Canadianism and pride in our country on parliament hill and throughout the land. I think I am reflecting what most of us feel in saying that this demonstration of national fervour was so memorable that we should like to express our thanks to the Secretary of State and all associated with her in the magnificent organization which resulted in these unbelievably rich ceremonies and these outpourings of national fervour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, following what the Acting Prime Minister has said I wonder whether the house would be prepared to agree that the speeches of Her Majesty, Your Honour and His Honour the Speaker of the Senate be made a part of the record of Hansard for this day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I thoroughly support the statement of the Acting Prime Minister regarding your magnificent address the other day, and the tremendous organization and equally magnificent job that has been done in preparation for our centennial celebrations.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other hon. members in expressing deep appreciation to all those who had anything to do with the arrangements for the past week end here on parliament hill and in Ottawa generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I heard a good many private members say during the week end "Those who arranged these events deserve full marks", and I think this should be on the record of Hansard. May I also suggest that when the speeches that were made on parliament hill on Saturday morning are appended to Hansard there should also be included a copy of the printed program, so the record of that memorable occasion will be complete.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS ADVANCED BY J. K. GALBRAITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to another area of the world. Is the government studying the proposals for de-escalating the war in Viet Nam which have been made by J. K. Galbraith, and is the government giving consideration to supporting these proposals as a means of bringing the war in Viet Nam to an end?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government proposed on April 11 a course which it believes, if the parties would accept it, would provide for disengagement in the demilitarized zone. If that were done we feel, in all equity, that the bombing would also have to be stopped. We feel that these suggestions, which are based on the Geneva agreement, are not out of line with some of the proposals made by Mr. Galbraith.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would also make sure that the infiltration from the north will stop at the same time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is something beyond the control of the government of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. In view of the fact that the United States apparently intends to very considerably increase the numbers of its forces in Viet Nam, will the government give consideration to a suggestion I made some weeks ago, and before we end this portion of the session on Friday put before the house a motion setting out the views of the overwhelming majority of Canadians on the subject of a cessation of bombing, with whatever restrictions should be placed thereon?

Would the government give consideration to this matter and facilitate the opportunity for the house to discuss such a resolution? Also, in order to assure the complete freedom of members, would the government remove the whips? I think if we took such a stand in the Canadian House of Commons the United States would know from its greatest friend —in spite of what I read about the N.D.P.

convention in Toronto to the contrary—the feelings of the house. I believe the voice of the House of Commons would be worth while and welcomed by the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In reply to the particular question asked by my right hon. friend, let me say I am sure he will realize that vital matters of foreign policy are not settled in the way my right hon. friend is suggesting. He should not be overly moved by any political convention that is being held anywhere in Canada in regard to matters that are as vital as this. In any event my right hon. friend will recall that there was a vote in this house on one aspect of this problem. I do not believe that his approach is the way to formulate or execute matters that have to do with war and peace. I say this as one who at this very moment is engaged, as a member of the government, in considering certain efforts which are being made to try to bring an end to the war in Viet Nam. I hope that would be the attitude of my right hon. friend, with his great experience in these matters and in government.

ROYAL VISIT

RELAXATION OF SECURITY PRECAUTIONS ON VISIT TO EXPO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in this wonderful spirit of felicitation, joy and gratefulness I think something should be added to what has already been said. I am so pleased that yesterday the government decided, after weeks of vacillation in the matter, to free Her Majesty from being insulated and isolated from meeting her Canadian subjects in Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When that action was taken yesterday the people of the province of Quebec revealed their loyalty, which would not have been possible had there not been an alteration in the program.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I deal with the matter my right hon. friend has introduced. I do not recall the right hon. gentleman's exact words but I would like to make it clear that in whatever arrangements were made for Her Majesty's visit to Expo yesterday the government was of course moved by considerations which must be in the mind of any Canadian government, and which I am sure would have been in the mind of my right hon. friend had he been sitting on this side as head of the government.

However, I do want to say, as one who was present yesterday as was the right hon. gentleman, that as a result of the suggestion made by the Prime Minister that the Queen should ride on the minirail yesterday afternoon she was exposed in the most loving way to the people of Canada who were at Expo yesterday. Let it not be misunderstood; this was a decision taken by the Prime Minister himself, and as a result of that decision the people of Canada who were at Expo were given and took advantage of the opportunity to display in a very heartening way their admiration for Her Majesty the Queen and also I believe for the crown itself.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would he tell the house whether he has received from Judge Robinson the second report on air traffic control which I believe was originally due in the month of May?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, sir, but I have not.

Mr. Allmand: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell us when he expects to receive this report from Judge Robinson?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand the judge has been ill and that is the reason the report has been delayed. I do hope very much it will not be too long delayed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALGERIA—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF MOISE TSHOMBE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will Canada use its good offices and friendly relations with the state of Algeria to request the release of Moise Tshombe, the former prime minister of the Congo?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, and ask him whether the Canadian government will consider making representations to the government of Algeria to prevent the removal of Moise Tshombe from Algeria to the Congo. I realize that this question has already been asked today, but no satisfactory answer was received from the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is assuming that a satisfactory answer will be obtained by asking the question a second time. I believe that is against the rules.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman's question was. I know you made some very generous remarks about the way it would be responded to, but I do not know what the question was.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO DESIGNATION OF OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask him whether the government has finalized the designation of the board of directors, the vice president and chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, sir.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate when he expects this matter to be dealt with?

Mr. Pepin: In a few days, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with the appointment of the task force about which we have heard so much. I should like to ask him whether he could assure the house that before parliament adjourns for the summer recess he will make a statement indicating the personnel and the general terms of reference of that group.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, the government looks upon this as an extremely important task force. We want to get the very best possible people for it. I do not believe any undertaking at this time, in the terms in which my hon. friend has referred to it, would be conducive to this end.

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR AID TO FLOODED DISTRICTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the widespread flooding and consequent great loss in central Ontario, has the minister received any communications from farm organizations requesting help?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, sir, I have received none to my knowledge.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which involves a matter of a more national nature than the questions he has answered so far. I apologize for not giving him notice. Can the minister tell us when the government, in co-operation with the government of the United States, expects to start construction of the Pembina river project in North Dakota and Manitoba?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot give the answer to that question. I will take it as notice and reply before we leave on Friday.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, but in his absence I will direct it to the person assuming his responsibilities. Has the report of the Wood commission been received by the government, and if so will its contents be made known to the house before the summer recess?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, may I now answer the question posed by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. I am advised that the committee has not yet submitted its report to the minister; consequently it is not anticipated that the report will be available for tabling prior to the 7th.

Mr. McIntosh: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, my riding is Swift Current-Maple Creek.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

WIARTON, ONTARIO—GRANT FOR HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): My question arises from two communications I received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare on June 28 and June 29. The letter dated June 28, 1967 reads in part as follows:

> As announced in the press today I have approved a grant, under the terms of the hospital construction grant rules, in the amount of $79,052, towards the cost of new construction and renovations at the Bruce Peninsula and District Memorial Hospital, Wiarton, Ontario.

While I welcome the intent of this communication, I do not believe the facts are—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please ask the question.

Mr. Loney: On a question of privilege, I feel the letter is misleading and erroneous. The actual facts are—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just mentioned to the hon. member that he should ask a question. If he wants to raise a question of privilege that is another matter. We will hear the question of privilege.

Mr. Loney: The question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question of privilege which does not arise out of the immediate proceedings in the house, the hon. member has to give the Chair two hours notice in writing. I realize this is the last week before the summer adjournment and I do not believe we should be too strict in the observance of this rule. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member to ask a question without further reference to his question of privilege.

Mr. Loney: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH HER MAJESTY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as this is the last week of the session, I should like to ask you to be lenient enough to recognize the validity of my question. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Queen Elizabeth and government authorities conferred with a view to convening in the near future a conference of the prime ministers of the countries of the Commonwealth?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I believe this question concerns the prime ministers of the Commonwealth countries and not the head of one government of the Commonwealth and the Queen.

[Later:]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, appealing to your indulgence once again, since this is the first sitting of the second century of confederation, I should like to take this opportunity to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on the occasion of the second centennial of Canada, if discussions should not be launched with all Commonwealth countries in order to establish a Commonwealth citizenship?

Mr. Speaker: In spite of all the leniency I am prepared to show the hon. member who quite deserves it, I do not think his question is in order.

[English]

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

MARKERS TO COMMEMORATE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on June 23, the hon. member for

Essex West (Mr. Gray) asked the following question of the Prime Minister:

Will the government undertake as an immediate federal government centennial project the placing of appropriate markers at either the birth places or the grave sites of all the fathers of our confederation?

When I announced the policy on March 15 I said each grave would be marked by a distinctive plaque to be designed for this specific purpose, and financial assistance will be provided for the maintenance in perpetuity of the last resting place of these truly outstanding Canadians.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): May I ask a supplementary question. First I should like to thank the minister for his very constructive answer. I should like to ask him whether it would be possible to complete this program by the end of our centennial year as a national centennial project.

Mr. Laing: In reply I would remind the hon. member that we are short of workmen in this particular field at the present time. The demands this year have weighed very heavily upon the department and we are running behind. However, we will make an attempt to finish the project during 1967.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): In view of the shortage of workers, will the minister consider giving priority to the grave of Thomas D'Arcy McGee, the most eloquent of the fathers of confederation?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

KEEWATIN, ONT.—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS DISPLACED BY FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask this question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He was here a minute ago but I do not see him at the moment, so perhaps I could direct it either to his parliamentary secretary or to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of representations that have reached me from the workers at the Lake of the Woods milling plant in Keewatin which was destroyed by fire over the week end, a plant that comes under federal labour jurisdiction, will efforts be made to find alternative employment for people in this town where there is no other work?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do believe such efforts are being made, but I will bring this question to the minister's attention for his reply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REQUEST THAT SOVIET UNION JOIN IN AIDING ARAB REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has to do with the extra effort many countries are making to deal with the problem of the refugees in the Middle East. I should like to ask the minister if during his talks with officials of the Soviet union at the United Nations he was able to elicit any response as to whether the Soviet union would participate in any way in the program to aid refugees in the Middle East.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I did not have any talks formally on that subject with Mr. Kosygin when I saw him, or with any other member of the Soviet delegation. We were concerned at that time with the particular resolutions facing the general assembly. I hope the Soviet union will take notice of the suggestion Canada has made for the use of the Palestine conciliation commission, on which two of the great powers are represented. This commission has concerned itself over a considerable period with the question of refugees.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN SITTING HOURS FOR WEDNESDAY, JULY 5

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that tomorrow afternoon will be the last opportunity for the public and for the members of the house to see Her Majesty the Queen of Canada, I wonder if the minister would consider postponing the opening of tomorrow's session until 3 o'clock instead of the usual 2.30.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I think the house leader will have something to say on this subject, either now or later this day.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I understand hon. members may wish to attend the ceremonies on parliament hill and possibly later at the arts centre when Her Majesty will be present. I have been discussing the possibility of sitting tomorrow morning and possibly disposing of the business for tomorrow by two o'clock or 2.30 so that anyone who wishes may be free later in the day to attend these ceremonies. I will discuss this matter in further detail with the various party leaders.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that appears to be a reasonable suggestion. I am just wondering whether the minister would put the question to the house for agreement that we sit at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. That would enable the business to be reasonably completed with no loss of a day; it would also provide an opportunity for members to see the Queen on the last occasion she will be here on this visit.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could finalize the matter now and decide to meet at 11 tomorrow morning, sitting continuously until 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Is that so ordered by the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the house would want to clarify the matter of the hours of sitting tomorrow by including in the order of the house the provision that private member's hour for tomorrow be suspended.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, if we are going to sit for only three hours tomorrow I think we should suspend private members' hour.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is quite agreeable to this side of the house. If it is generally agreeable we could decide now to suspend private members' hour tomorrow and complete the day on estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

INDUSTRY

KEEWATIN, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry and relates to a telegram that he received this morning from the mayor of the town of Keewatin. I was wondering whether the minister could indicate what federal assistance is available to the residents of that town as a result of the fire that destroyed the Lake of the Woods milling company building yesterday morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that this question also is a repetition of one asked earlier today.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with great respect may I suggest that the question asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is not a repetition of my question. I asked about alternative employment; he has asked about financial assistance. I hope Your Honour will allow the question.

Mr. Reid: I asked what the federal government could do to assist in cases of this nature, which is quite different.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the telegrams have been received by the ministers mentioned. The government is now giving consideration to this very unfortunate circumstance to see what might be done. However, I think the house is well aware that in disasters of this sort the primary responsibility for rendering assistance rests with the province. In normal cases it is only when the province has requested assistance that the federal government takes action.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

1. Departmental administration, $2,209,800.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, vote No. 1. This vote will be found at page 200 of the blue book; the details are listed at page 203.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the other day when we had a brief discussion on the first item of the minister's estimates I did not have the opportunity, because time ran out, to make a few remarks on the full report of the committee, limiting myself to that part of the report that deals with the western parks. The minister knows well from the past my interest in this particular matter. I must say that I think the committee members from the government side in particular received their first exposure to the parks on their trip there last December, some of them never having seen them before. I think that this fact is shown up in the type of report that has been prepared and presented. Government members were distinctly under the whip in the matter of following a hard government line on the national parks.

I do not think there was any great difference in point of view among members of the committee as to the ultimate purpose of the parks, although there may have been some difference of opinion as to how that purpose would be best achieved. Very definitely, though, we on this side of the house, who have the greatest contact with the parks, did express a fundamental difference of opinion with regard to certain existing factors. The minister can say what he likes about the relationship between the officials of his department and the citizens of the townsites of Jasper and Banff in particular. He can say that the relationship is good, but this is not the case. What has happened is the result of the department taking a hard and uncompromising line with regard to both commercial and residential leases, and there has been a lamentable breakdown in the relationship between the administration and the citizens.

There is one thing the higher officials of the parks branch must remember. They cannot, by a stroke of an administrative pen, eliminate those townsites. They are historical facts. They do exist. Moreover, their existence creates special problems which do not arise in any of the parks outside the province of Alberta. When the decision was taken years ago to route the trans-Canada highway through Banff national park, certain inevitable consequences were entailed. There is no question that hundreds of thousands of tourists who visit the parks or pass through them on their way west expect to stay in the parks. I do not suppose anyone quarrels with that. How are these people to be treated?

I am the last to say that Banff or Jasper should be turned into a Coney Island type of development. On the other hand, there is a change in the needs and desires of the travelling public. They are no longer prepared to accept substandard accommodation. They will not be directed to the nth degree with regard to what they should or should not do while on holiday. We have invited these people. Look at the advertisements put out by the government travel bureau. We have spent scores of thousands of dollars inviting tourists to come to our national parks. What are they to do when they arrive? Take only a flying trip? Not at all. They must be catered to if our tourist program is to be meaningful.

Pressure on the available facilities during the last few years has been scandalous during the peak season. Within a short time there will be a further increase in visitors to Jasper upon the completion of the Yellowhead route. I venture to say that by the fall of 1968 or perhaps by mid-1969 this essential link will have been established west of Jasper, bringing on a veritable flood of travellers. The only thing that will discourage them and give the parks a black eye will be lack of accommodation.

We know there has been hesitation, procrastination and uncertainty with regard to the development of accommodation in Jasper in anticipation of these visitors. It is no use saying that in 1969 or 1970, when we see the tourists coming through, we will build the essential facilities for them. Yet the present policy with regard to commercial leases discourages any meaningful development within the appropriate zoning of Jasper.

I wish to be clearly understood that I support the idea of zoning within the parks of Banff and Jasper. There should be service sections within the towns and then, because there is a complete monopoly by the national parks authorities of the mountain sites accessible by roads to the people of Alberta, there should also be amusement areas—skiing areas —in both places so as to use the facilities available to the full in winter.

We know that the present limited facilities are hard pressed even in winter. People who wish to ski at Jasper and Banff find it hard to obtain accommodation. Whenever I go out to Edmonton in winter I hear continual complaints from friends and acquaintances who love to ski that they find it difficult to get accommodation. Those who are more fortunate and more insistent go south to the state of Montana. This, I think, is the epitomy of idiocy, to insist that Canadians from Edmonton and Calgary should travel to the United States to enjoy week end skiing simply because they cannot get accommodation at Jasper and Banff. We have the facilities if we could only decide how to use them.

It is all very well for people to say there are no provincial parks in the mountains. One has only to look at the mountains from the area north of Jasper down to the United States border to see how little is accessible in relationship to roads and accommodation outside the boundaries of the parks. Scores of millions of dollars have been spent building the roads and a great deal of money has been invested in facilities. How foolish it is, then, to say that these assets should not be used in wintertime. If people want to engage in winter sports they must find another area.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As yet the province of Alberta has dedicated more than enough land to be given over to national parks use. Its proportion is multifold that of all the rest of Canada, and in that you must take into account what is taken by the crown of Canada for various facilities, One is not going to say, "You are not going to have your winter sports at Elk Island," and I am going to speak about that park later, or "You are going to have your winter sports at Wood Buffalo national park."

Mr. Laing: You could.

Mr. Lambert: The minister, who has air travel facilities at his beck and call, can go up there if he wants, but it is hundreds of miles from populated centres and its limited facilities would be available only to people who have a lot of money. Young people, students and so forth, have as much right to enjoy skiing as anybody else. Therefore I believe an adequate zoning system should be established in the parks at the earliest possible date. There is no use appointing another commission or committee which will bring in another report two years hence. The time to do it is now.

With regard to our national parks there have been recommendations upon recommendations upon recommendations, but the end result has been the same. There has been some limited improvement. However, the demand made upon Banff, for example, far exceeds the facilities that have been provided.

Policy decisions have been arbitrary. Under the planning and zoning restrictions at Banff certain proposals have been turned down out of hand; yet changes have been authorized that were contrary to the zoning regulations. These will form the subject of an interesting study one of these days.

I now turn to the question of leases. I find the minister's attitude with regard to the controversial perpetual leases absolutely incomprehensible. His officials have advised him, and I am not questioning their motives, that there was never authority for the granting of perpetual leases both prior and subsequent to 1932. The minister first asserted that there was a question about ministerial authority to grant perpetual leases after 1932. That is a debatable legal point. Now he says that there was no authority to do so prior to 1932.

The minister, who is trustee for the crown for the interests of Canadians, not a trustee on behalf of himself or any particular administration, refuses to disclose the memorandum of advice or the reasons for calling into question the jurisdiction to issue such leases. In refusing I think he has taken an entirely wrong position. He has told us, "If the holders of perpetual leases are not satisfied with their position they can go to court." His attitude is similar to that of one late crowned head who once said, "If they can't have bread, let them eat cake."

In fairness to his responsibility to his officials and to the scores, likely hundreds, of holders of perpetual leases, the minister should refer the question of the validity of the leases to the courts. He should not ask a young teacher and his wife in Banff, or some person with limited means, to challenge the government in the courts. Who would pay the costs in such an instance? No doubt there would be solicitor and client costs which would be the responsibility of the individual. It would be very simple for the minister to have a stated case referred to the Exchequer Court or the Supreme Court, most likely the Exchequer Court in the first instance, with permission for intervention on behalf of the holders of perpetual leases. I believe he should take this course immediately instead of trying to wear down and chisel away the individual lease holders who are finding themselves being cornered more and more, without any possible alternative.

In some of the cases about which I have heard, almost administrative blackmail is being utilized to pressure the holders of leases to agree to exchange their leases for limited term leases, and not all of the same term. This is quite unacceptable. This not litigation between two individuals. This is an honest difference of opinion between the law officers of the crown and hundreds of citizens who have as much entitlement to their rights as do any of us in this chamber or in the administration to ours.

In the past there was never any question that they were acquiring defeasible leases of uncertain title. I urge upon the minister that in all justice the crown should settle this matter by causing a stated case to be referred to the superior courts. It is not fair for the minister to tell leaseholders when they seek to renew their leases on the terms contained in them, terms authorized by the minister's predecessors, that unless they agree to new conditions not negotiated but imposed by the minister and his officials they will be deemed to be overholding tenants subject to all the consequences that befall overholding tenants.

• (3:40 p.m.)

In so far as commercial leases are concerned I should like to draw to the attention of the minister an editorial which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of May 23. I am sure his officials know about it, if he does not. It reads:

> This newspaper has said repeatedly that Mr. Arthur Laing's national parks policy is not a valid policy so far as it governs commercial leases. Here's a case in point:
> An Edmonton group planned a 77-unit motel at Jasper, assembled $450,000 in cash, arranged $550,000 in mortage funds, obtained the parks department's approval of a site in Jasper town—then cancelled its plans. The reason given: no compensation when the lease expires. The money is still available; so is the building site. But until there is compensation for cancelled commercial leases, say the investors, they won't go into Jasper.

It is conceded that this might be a pressure play, a mandate to call on investment for badly needed accommodation if the terms are right. But is that a valid argument for cancelling the whole thing? Is it not a little more in the interest of the general public to have a parks policy which at one and the same time protects the park from undesirable commercial development—no one denies that the minister has all sorts of restrictions on that score—and encourages desirable development? One of the most desirable, indeed the most urgent, developments required now at Jasper is more decent accommodation. The newspaper editorial continues:

> One long time Jasper hotel operator says he could fill another 1,000 rooms all summer; but no major hotel or motel has been built in Jasper since Mr. Laing's no-compensation policy was announced. Of four groups officially announced as having plans to build in Jasper, we are informed, all four have changed their minds.
> We don't favour so-called "perpetual leases" and doubt that responsible investors do. Leases should be cancelled when operators fail on performance standards. Leases should have to be renewed regularly. Some leases should be cancelled when the public interest requires a different use of a site. But in such cases, and varying with the cause of cancellation, there ought to be reasonable compensation—by arbitration, if necessary.

I could go into detail with regard to the yeas and nays of the leasehold policy, an abridged version of which I have. After all, who on earth would want to invest hundreds of thousands of dollars and perhaps over a million dollars over a period of years in a commercial proposition when at the end of that term the title is gone and everything—buildings, maintenance and some modernization over a 21-year period—is yielded up to the crown? Who on earth is going to invest even one thin dime during the last five-year period, or perhaps during a period of eight or ten years, in a commercial leasehold property, if at the end of the road there is to be one big fat zero in compensation?

Even now we see the iniquities of the policies of the present minister. Because of the increased demand a store proprietor must modernize and expand his premises. He holds a perpetual lease and has had it for a long time. But because he wants to make improvements he is told that if he is to get his permit he must yield his perpetual lease and take a limited term lease on which at the end there will be no compensation. Is there no justice between the crown and the individual? What is his alternative? Is it to let his premises run down to rack and ruin so that he loses his capital? Perhaps his life's work is tied up in the good will and continuity of that business. Yet because of administrative reasons, because somebody wants to get hold of something and squeeze it hard, then, unless it is to be contained within a nice neat framework of rules and regulations administered from far away, that man's effort is to be sacrificed. I cite that as an example of many cases and of the general principle.

It is indeed unfortunate that the government majority on the committee had limited exposure to the problem. True, they saw and heard a number of people, some of whom were very dramatic. I hope some of them were ashamed of some of the administrative boondoggling that has gone on with regard to the treatment of these people. I am not limiting that in time either.

Mr. Laing: What is boondoggling?

Mr. Lambert: The minister can look it up.

Mr. Laing: I do not think you looked it up.

Mr. Lambert: In any event these people have been mishandled. I realize that efforts are being made to bring about improvements, and this is all to the good, but for the life of me I cannot see why these people who have certain rights should be denied them. If it is decided that there shall be no more perpetual leases granted, then this is fine in respect of new leases or for the development of further practices. But there are such things as acquired rights. If we were to tell the minister that because of a change in administrative policy his home in Vancouver would be subject to different terms, in respect of his title and right of ownership, than those under which he holds his property now, then I say the hullabaloo would be heard from one end of the country to the other.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, may I ask for the indulgence of the committee to allow me one more minute to conclude my remarks? I think I have said enough on this last point.

The Chairman: Does the committee give its consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: I apologize to hon. members for requiring this extra time, but there is one further point I should like to draw to the minister's attention. With the development of the Yellowhead Pass route there will be a considerable acceleration of travel through our national parks, not only Jasper national park but Elk Island park. I know that my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, would like to speak about this matter if he were here.

Highway 16 east in Alberta bisects Elk Island park which over the years has unfortunately been one of the Cinderellas of our parks system. This park has great potential and although this highway has never been qualified as a second trans-Canada route, as suggested by members from the western provinces, it is being developed. This highway will give greater access to the national parks which lie along it including Jasper, Elk Island, and even Prince Albert national park which is some distance north. Anyone travelling this route could easily turn up toward Prince Albert national park. It would also give access to Riding Mountain national park in Manitoba. These parks are all either along the highway or within reasonable access.

My suggestion is that an immediate study be make, if it has not been already made, of methods to upgrade public reception facilities. I am not suggesting that we should allow the establishment of residential townsites in these parks such as Elk Island, but public reception services must be upgraded. I am sure this would pay dividends in the form of increased patronage and enjoyment by the public. My suggestion is that we begin a study immediately and within the next two or three years make the improvements. We should not wait for ten years to do so because a lot of traffic will be channeled through these areas and Canadians will then find that their national parks are truly accessible. In order to enjoy these parks one should not have to be a dedicated wildlife conservationist such as some of those we heard from in Banff and Jasper. Their philosophy seemed to be that we should build a ten-foot fence around our parks, lock the gates and throw away the keys. They felt it would be abusive to allow any but simple activities such as bird watching, nature study or peaceful hiking.

Mr. Laing: The attendance at our parks has been increasing by 15 per cent compounded per year for years.

Mr. Lambert: I do not feel that the one extreme should be the standard, nor do I feel that we should have the so-called Coney Island level of development. That would not be desirable nor acceptable.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks at this stage of our deliberations in respect of the educational program in Canada's north. In the last decade we have observed a fairly impressive increase in the number of young people attending school in the north. We know that 13 or 14 years ago approximately 30 per cent of our young northern Indians, Eskimos and Métis were attending school along with whites. In 1954 and 1955 the federal government recognized its responsibility in respect of the development of educational facilities throughout Canada's north and we have observed the construction of schools in virtually all communities there. As a result approximately 90 to 95 per cent of the young people of school age are attending school. Administrations of the past deserve a great deal of credit for what has taken place in this regard. I think we have now reached the stage when our aims and objectives in respect of education in the north must be redefined.

Having attended the graduation exercises at two of our northern schools in recent weeks I could not help but be impressed by the dedication of these young students. The system developed over the past few years has been directed not only to book learning as part of education but to a broadening of the horizons of our young northerners. At the secondary level of the northern educational system we have observed the young students being given an opportunity not only to move from their local areas to attend other schools but to travel and visit other parts of the country. In this regard I should like to acknowledge the centennial commission's great program for youth exchanges across Canada whereby young Canadians are being given the opportunity of travelling and visiting their Canadian brothers, cousins and friends right from the east coast to the west coast and up to the Arctic ocean. In the gallery at this moment there are 24 young people who are centennial youth travellers. They are spending two weeks in the southern part of Canada and, like other young Canadians, they are visiting Expo and the House of Commons and are spending the balance of the two weeks in the Toronto area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orange: Before concluding my remarks regarding education I should like to draw the minister's attention, as I have many times in the past and will continue to do until we get some results, to the fact that those of us who wish to see development in the north recognize that industries based on resources, particularly mining and oil development, are the ones which have a future there. I hope that in the process of developing and adequate educational system the officials of this department together with the territorial government will take into consideration the establishment of a school of mines in the north.

One of the great difficulties we experience in the mining industry in northern Canada is the lack of a stable and adequate labour force. It seems to me if we are serious about populating this area we must use the talents and resources of our young people by encouraging them to participate in developing what will be the basic economy of northern Canada. I hope the minister and the territorial government will re-examine this question and will take the opportunity of working out with industry what is needed to carry out this development. A school of mining for northern Canada would not only assist the industries of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories but would also provide a labour force for other parts of Canada, particularly in the west. I recommend this suggestion to the minister and I hope that when he has a chance to reply he will indicate at least his concern about this particularly important matter.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West on the government's policy with respect to national parks. Much of what the hon. member said seemed to make sense, although in certain respects I could not help feeling in rather basic disagreement with him. I believe many members will appreciate the difficulties the minister faces in trying to administer our national parks policy in a way that (a) meets the interests of the public and (b) appears to do justice to those who over the years have held leasehold rights in our national parks.

I do not wish to aggravate the problem the minister has in this regard by advancing proposals that might appear to be, at least in the short run, popular. But it seems to me that the minister has a prime duty and obligation to see that the recreational resources of this country are developed and made available to growing numbers of people, and that no one group or clique should be able to avail itself of these resources at the expense of the general public. Of course, it is very easy to state such general requirements, but it becomes much more difficult to try to spell them out in detail and apply such a policy.

The form of leasehold which people in the national parks should be allowed to enjoy is a matter with which I am not prepared to deal at the present time. However, it occurs to me that one suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West has merit, namely, that there should be no fear on the part of the government in allowing some of the cases referred to to go through the process of adjudication by the courts in order to arrive at a determination by an impartial body as to what is the right thing to do.

My personal view is that over the years numbers of people have enjoyed leasehold rights in our national parks and have had to pay annual fees, rentals, or whatever you want to call them, in an amount so small as to make it very difficult for others to understand how the government can allow this situation to continue. Therefore renegotiation is certainly required. If it should turn out that the only feasible course of action is to terminate these perpetual leases, it seems to me that the way to proceed is much the same as that in which the government now proceeds in respect of the expropriation of properties held by persons in full title or fee simple. If the parties who have held these leases can prove they have suffered concrete and substantial financial loss, methods of compensation should be worked out. If the government can proceed to expropriate property held by people in full title, why is it impossible to proceed to terminate perpetual leases in a somewhat similar manner and pay compensation for actual financial loss? Also, why can the government not proceed from there to make sure that no similar, imprudent contracts or understandings are ever again entered into?

It is my understanding that in the course of the past 18 months, or perhaps longer, the federal government has decided it would like to proceed with the establishment of second national parks in those provinces where only one national park exists at the present time. I do not know how old this policy is but I understand that the government has not got very far with the policy of establishing a second national park in several provinces.

I know that the province of Manitoba surveys and studies were undertaken by the appropriate department in consultation with the provincial authorities, to see just where in the province a second national park should be established. I understand that the present situation is one of stalemate or deadlock. This situation exists simply because the policy of the federal government is that if it is to establish a second national park the province must convey the land, without encumbrance and without condition, to the crown in the right of Canada.

On the surface there is nothing to which one can object in that policy. Certainly such land should be conveyed without encumbrance and, one would have to agree, without major condition. But I understand that one of the reasons the province of Manitoba is hesitant to transfer the land from the crown in right of the province to Canada is that the provincial authorities have reason to believe that one area, regarding which there was a tentative agreement, may very well contain mineral deposits, and they would like to enter a caveat on the conveyance of the land to the effect that some mineral prospecting and possibly exploitation will be allowed. I know that in respect of some national parks and provincial parks in other parts of Canada intergovernmental or interdepartmental ill will has been built up because parkland has been used for purposes of mineral exploitation, with deleterious effects on the area as a resource facility.

I hope the federal government will finally show some flexibility in this respect and will choose the area that was tentatively agreed upon as being suitable for a second national park. I hope the federal government will not abandon that area and proceed to establish a second national park at the opposite end of the province. We already have a national park in northwestern Manitoba and the establishment of a second national park in that general area, which seems to be the only other possible location, would not be very logical.

I should like to refer at this time to the estimates relating to the Indian affairs branch of the department. I realize that in this regard the minister also has a very difficult portfolio to manage. Many people think that in the last two or three years advances have been made and progress is becoming more and more visible. I tend to share that opinion. On the other hand, we need not look very hard for evidence of the fact that many people consider that the Indian affairs branch has not done very much to bring about progress and improvement in the affairs of the people of Indian ancestry. Certainly in many respects there is cause for disappointment but, as I said, there are other visible signs that progress and improvement are taking place.

I should like to express my own very firm personal view that the department is fortunate in having people who are doing good work in the field. This is not to be taken to imply that those at headquarters are not doing likewise, but my limited experience with the officials of the department in the field indicates that in working with the Indian people they are getting things done and are giving them examples of leadership and all sorts of opportunities to participate in programs of self-improvement.

I can recall visiting three classrooms at a northern Indian reserve in Manitoba about eight years ago and coming away somewhat nonplussed and puzzled by the degree of passivity among the children in the lower grades. I clearly recall thinking that there did not seem to be much prospect of these children becoming enthused about learning and it appeared that in a matter of a few years they would drop out of school. However, just three weeks ago I again visited a number of classrooms on some of these reserves in Manitoba and was literally amazed to see the extent to which the teachers of today have succeeded in instilling in the very young pupils an enthusiasm and an alertness which we would hope to find in schools everywhere. That in itself is cause for optimism because without doubt we must still rely on education most in helping the Indian people to achieve a better standard of living.

It is not so surprising to see progress being made by the department because it has had more money to work with in recent years. It is all very well to have all sorts of programs on paper with fine ringing phrases as to what will be done, but unless the department or agency has the funds with which to give effect to all these plans on paper the whole thing is a fraud. In recent years we have been voting more money and I can say without equivocation that I feel very sure the Indian people are making very definite and decided progress, as is the department.

Some of the provinces have indicated a growing desire to participate more in the programming with respect to Indian affairs. I realize that a constitutional problem is involved and I intend to offer no further comment at the present time. However, if the provinces are really genuine in their expressed desire to enter more into the programming of Indian affairs and community development on Indian reserves, before the federal government accepts such participation it should satisfy itself that the provinces intend to allocate meaningful amounts of money for this purpose. In some respects the entry of the provinces into affairs relating to the Indian people is to be welcomed. I am all in favour of the idea, for example, that the federal government should not continue to expand the educational facilities which it offers but should rather avail itself to a greater extent of the offers made by the provinces to establish joint Indian and non-Indian schools. I believe that in this respect very tangible progress has been made in the past four or five years.

However, apart from that let us consider, for example, the community development program about which we hear from time to time from the provinces. In that connection the provincial authorities seem to have a pretty good concept on paper. Some provinces have appointed provincial civil servants as community development officers who travel to and live among the Indian people. This may sound good but I must say, having regard to all we heard about the community development program and what we had come to expect from it, there is some cause for disappointment because there is not enough money backing that program to allow it to come up to our expectations. I am afraid the federal government will be indulging in wishful thinking if it feels it can disengage itself from some of its programming and leave more to the provinces. However, I do not wish to prognosticate too far into the future for the simple reason that I plead ignorance.

In my humble opinion there are some areas of activity on the reserves which the Indian affairs branch should encourage rather more than it does now. I know that in recent years very definite and genuine efforts have been made to try to encourage the younger Indians especially to take on duties and responsibilities as quasi-civil servants working amoung their own people as welfare and health officers disseminating information on hygiene and other matters. I do not know to what extent this is being done officially but I am glad to say that from my own observations it seems to be working well and the department is to be commended for every effort it makes in this direction. I feel, however, we could go quite a bit further. In addition to having people on the reserves acting as health officers we could train the younger men on the reserves for purposes of law enforcement under the aegis of the R.C.M.P. I am not suggesting that they should form an organic part of the R.C.M.P. but surely it should be possible to devise a training scheme under the auspices of the R.C.M.P. whereby young men from the reserves would be taught law enforcement as it applies directly to their local situations.

I am not sure that this comparison is a good one but I shall put it forward in any case. I am sure hon. members have heard of the efforts in the United States under the auspices of the war on poverty program, I believe, to train young men from minority groups to help keep law and order in the ghettos. I believe they go by the name of "white hats". Perhaps something along this line could be implemented in Canada in respect of the Indian reserves and the young men of Indian descent. I would be surprised if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were not at present considering the possibility of doing something like this because I understand that they find themselves hard pressed to get enough constables and officers to allocate to the different provinces as well as look after the problems of law and order in the more northerly parts of the country and on the Indian reserves. It seems to me they would welcome such a proposition as long as it is feasible. It seems to me there would be a greater response and greater effectiveness with young people from a particular environment carrying out functions and duties which up until now have been almost exclusively carried out by civil servants. It would seem to me to be a good idea if more and more of the health officers, welfare officers and ancillary law enforcement officers were obtained through this process.

If this suggestion is followed we will be hastening the day when almost every reserve will have young Indian men and women carrying out the functions of leadership. In this way they may arrive at self-rule in the same way that men and women enjoy local self-government at the municipal level. It is my understanding that the department is not fighting the process. There are some who say that the department should be disbanded or broken up, but certainly I do not subscribe to that kind of thinking. I see the minister is smiling. I really was being serious and I suggest that the functions and responsibilities of the department in connection with Indian affairs cannot be eliminated in the very near future.

No doubt some reserves are on the verge of, if not already, exercising local self-rule. I believe that one or two reserves in eastern Manitoba are already in this category. Out of the six or seven reserves I can think of offhand, one is on the verge of showing the capability of exercising complete local self-government. Two or three are in various stages of preparedness. At the same time I must admit that one is some distance away from this position. Until now no effort has been successful in enabling these people to accept the normal duties and responsibilities of living in a modern society. They have followed their own way of life which did not involve them in the same kinds of problems, and so they did not learn to cope with the kinds of problems we find in our society.

However, I should like to say that while on the one hand the department is to be congratulated for its program in respect of reserve housing and town planning, it has not given priority to something that is rather elementary, the planning of house construction. When one considers the program for the complete electrification of all reserves, one finds it hard to justify why one reserve not many miles away from another that has electricity cannot get it. On some reserves there is townsite housing construction, so it is just a case of establishing priorities. I might say in that connection that despite the statements of the band council leaders about getting electrification the department has been very sympathetic. However, they have not succeeded in getting the projects completed with the result that people on a few reservations are waiting while a few miles away money is being expended on many of the most modern amenities.

I should like to refer now to the attracting of industry. I know it is hoped that somehow, in same way, not only the reserves but most rural areas of the country will be able to attract industry. If industry were attracted to the reserve areas employment opportunities would be provided for the young people. They would then not have to move away and cut the bonds of attachment. We know that opportunities for the young in these areas are limited. There are, however, a few specific possibilities and since they are specific it seems to me the department should be interested in promoting them. I refer to specific industries, but perhaps "industry" is not the right word. I have in mind the occupation of guiding.

I know hon. members will say that there are many Indian guides, and of course there are. However, there would be a need for many more if both the federal and provincial governments were to incorporate these guides into their tourism policies. The government of Manitoba, as does the government of Canada, spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on tourist advertising in many countries, principally the United States, with considerable success. However, when people come as tourists to go fishing in our northern lakes they very often do so without hiring the services of any of the local population as guides. It seems to me there should be a lot more specific and concrete participation in the encouragement of the hiring of local Indians as guides for tourists.

In many cases certain bands or particular members of a band have a reputation as being efficient firefighters. These Indians are recruited and made use of by government agencies as firefighters. They are paid from $5 to $7 per day for this work. Five dollars to $7 a day at the very most is being paid these people for hours of work.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, if I may have your indulgence and that of the committee I can complete my remarks in about two minutes.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Schreyer: We are trying very hard through the offices of the Indian affairs branch to open up new employment opportunities and to raise general living standards. Therefore there can be no good reason for tolerating—I use that word advisedly—the practice followed by all levels of government, and to which I think there should be a public reaction, whereby they pay Indians as little as $5 or $6 a day for firefighting. Certainly this is the case in my part of the country.

We should be doing more not only to encourage the setting up of co-ops but to assist the Indians during periods when the going is tough. We all know that work such as pulpwood cutting and wild rice gathering, fishing and so on is cyclical and that some years are good and others are very bad. Therefore these co-ops need a little more than just initial assistance; they require sustenance during the lean periods. Since in past years we have shown no reluctance to inject a little more money into our over-all efforts to assist the Indians, we should not be quite so cautious and parsimonious about giving the co-ops which are established on many Indian reserves a little more financial assistance. We should exhibit more readiness to help them in the purchase of equipment such as tractors and tractor sleighs for hauling pulpwood, chain saws and so on. We should loosen up the purse strings a bit. If we do not assist them in this direction we shall have to do so in another. If we assist them through the provision of welfare these people are not given the opportunity to work alongside other members of society and solve their problems.

I promised to close in two minutes, Mr. Chairman, and unfortunately there are a few other things I should have liked to mention. However, if the minister takes into consideration what I have said so far I will be most grateful.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend at this time to attempt to deal with parks policy in any way but will limit my remarks to several constituency matters that are of some importance. We will await the answers to some of the questions raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I should like to say to the hon. member for Springfield, who has just spoken, that we are not only concerned about those who have held these park leases in the past but also about those who may hold them in the future. It is not only the recreational or conservational aspects of the parks which are important. The essential services which go along with the development of the parks are also vital to the kind of development that most of us in this committee are anxious to see take place.

I would draw the attention of the minister to a matter with which I know he is familiar and which is of sufficient importance for me to impress upon him. I am referring to the David Thompson highway. The Yellowhead pass route has already been discussed this afternoon. Reference has been made to the problems that exist in Banff national park as they relate to transcontinental highway No. 1 as well as to the facilities that must be provided to meet the needs of commercial traffic. The David Thompson route, however, might well have been developed before either of these other routes had the necessary information been available to those who were responsible for laying out the original Canadian Pacific route through the mountains and later the Grand Trunk route to the north.

The David Thompson route follows the Saskatchewan River west of my home city of Red Deer, through Rocky Mountain House, through the coal mining centre of Nordegg and surrounding communities, up to the headwaters of the Saskatchewan, across the Banff-Jasper highway, up to the Howse River, over the great divide and down the Blaeberry River to a point just at the eastern foot of Rogers Pass near the town of Donald. It cuts from 80 to 90 miles off the route to the Pacific coast from any point in central Alberta or central Saskatchewan. This means that the city of Red Deer is approximately equidistant to the Pacific coast as the city of Calgary, and consequently the route saves many miles and transportation costs for all freight and tourist traffic from central Alberta and central Saskatchewan.

The provincial government of Alberta let this year the final contract for construction of that part of the highway between Nordegg and the eastern boundary of Banff national park. On August 5 the opening ceremonies are scheduled to take place at the Saskatchewan River crossing on the Banff-Jasper highway, at that point where the David Thompson route goes eastward to join up with highway 2 just north of the city of Red Deer. Not only is this route tremendously scenic, Mr. Chairman, but it is not subject to severe snowfalls in winter. Neither does it have the grades that one would normally associate with and expect to find on mountain highways.

With the construction to trans-Canada standards of grade as far as the Banff national park, the completion of the route is now a matter of urgency. Not only must the four miles be completed to join up with the Banff-Jasper road—I understand this construction is well under way at the present time—but everything possible must be done to see that the road over Howse Pass which will connect up with trans-Canada No. 1 at Donald is completed as soon as possible.

Those who support the Yellowhead route have in the past opposed the development of this route. In my opinion, in view of the volume of traffic that can be expected over the Yellowhead route, it would be of tremendous advantage to the national parks if the David Thompson route were completed because it would result in tremendous savings in transportation costs. Not only is it a much shorter route, as I have already indicated, but the construction of the road is comparatively easy. The grades involved are very minor indeed having regard to the type of mountainous country through which the proposed highway passes.

I therefore hope the department will not wait for the government of British Columbia to build its 28.5 miles, I believe it is, of the road from the western border of Banff national park, but will take the initiative and develop the route through the very narrow waist of the park at House Pass.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Not only would it cut some 80 or 90 miles off the distance to the Pacific coast but it also offers the advantage of attracting much of the commercial highway transportation which now goes through Banff national park by way of Banff and Lake Louise, bypassing altogether the bottleneck presented by that difficult road and the costly type of construction involved between Field and Golden. I believe much of the commercial transportation which now passes through the Banff bottleneck and which has been the cause of much of the dissension in connection with park policies would prefer to take the new route instead of No. 1 highway which it presently follows, bearing in mind that the distance to be travelled is shorter and the grades are less steep. Banff park narrows to a distance of only 20 miles approximately where the Thompson route crosses it, resulting in less interference with recreational development. I would remind the minister that this heavy commercial traffic has been among the causes of the difficulties which now exist in the park, and if these could be alleviated by providing an alternative commercial route the minister would face fewer problems than he does at the present time.

[Mr. Thompson.]

From the Saskatchewan River crossing going east this highway makes a figure eight out of the circular route from Calgary to Edmonton through Red Deer and from Edmonton to Jasper and Jasper to Lake Louise and eastward to Banff and Calgary. It would be extremely attractive to tourists because they would only have to travel half the distance to see some of the most spectacular mountain scenery there is anywhere in the world, whether on the northern or the southern half of this route now being created.

I trust the minister will be able to have the first four miles of incoming road between the Jasper-Banff road and the eastern park boundary completed by August 5 for normal travel, together with the necessary bridge across the river at the park boundary. With most of the highway already completed, a park gate is needed very quickly because the volume of traffic passing into the park is already large. A new park entrance would facilitate the work which the employees of the parks branch must perform in controlling traffic and collecting entrance fees. It would also assist tourists travelling through the area. I believe budgetary provision has been made for this expenditure for at least one year, if not for two.

Another important need concerns the provision of facilities to handle tourist traffic at this particular point. There is already a need for vastly expanded camping facilities, and provision must likewise be made for the building of motels. Anyone who has travelled through the park between Jasper and Lake Louise appreciates that there is extreme pressure on existing facilities. Although much has already been done to increase facilities I believe there is need for a crash program. If the increase in the last two or three years is any indication of what will happen in the next two or three years, great attention must be paid to the provision of both campsites and motels. Action is needed now, without delay, since this highway is to open on August 5.

The highway department of the government of Alberta is to be congratulated on the vision it has shown in the development of its portion of the new highway. The potential of this highway does not just involve those who live along the route nearly as much as it does the development of the over-all tourist industry in Banff and Jasper, and the consequences which will flow from a more economical route over the mountains, affecting all western Canada.

I have drawn the attention of the minister to the importance of these developments and to the need for extra effort to be made to provide facilities for handling a growing tourist influx into the parks through this new entrance, but I emphasize as well as the desirability of completing this road from the Saskatchewan River crossing so as to join No. 1 highway at Donald station.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for his co-operation in supplying the buffalo meat for the biggest buffalo picnic in Canada's history. Had it not been for the co-operation of the hon. gentleman's department, that picnic would certainly have been a failure. I want to go on record as thanking both the hon. gentleman and his department for their part in its success.

One of the most important duties which the minister has assumed is responsibility for heading the department of Indian affairs. I happen to think it is among the most important departments in the government, though very often it fails to get the attention it deserves. Our Indian people are the senior citizens of Canada and the fact that the twentieth century has left them far behind is no excuse for a rich young country like Canada, which has profited from living in their land, continuing to neglect their important and pressing needs. I do not think we shall ever reach the Indian people and enable them to take the place in Canadian life they deserve and be as prosperous, as well educated, as well placed in our industries and professions as they should be unless we really get to understand them. They are a proud race, like all the families of mankind. They have just the same capabilities and just the same desires as all of us. But they have been left high and dry. I shall say nothing in recrimination; I will try to make a positive contribution.

Let us forget the errors of the past and press on with a positive answer to the Indian problem. We have to help the Indian restore his pride in himself. If we can do that all the other problems will fall into their proper places. The most important thing we could do would be to appoint a deputy minister of Indian or Eskimo origin. We can find such a man if we look for him. There are such men in our country as the Rev. Ahenakiew, an Anglican minister who is a full-bloded Cree. We have several Indians who are versatile enough to belong to the R.C.M.P. The minister has several members in his own department who are excellent men. There is Mr. Kelly who went to New Zealand and studied the native problem there. There is Mr. William Bull of Alberta who on several occasions has been elected chief of the Goodfish reserve. There is Mr. Steinhauer who is very prominent in northern Alberta on the Saddle Lake Reserve. He at one time ran in an election for member of parliament. I look forward to the day when we will have several members of parliament of native origin.

The old pride which the Indians had and which lies dormant in them must be brought to the fore if they are to have any hope. It is not just a question of money. We can spend hundreds of millions of dollars but as long as we are paternal with these people, not friendly, understanding and co-operative, the money will go down the drain.

It is almost useless to try to raise the standard of living of an Indian on a reserve without raising the standard of living of the whole tribe. We can send an Indian boy to school and put him through high school, but when he goes back to the reserve later he is a whitewashed crow. His very vocabulary will make him unpopular with his fellows. Unless we educate all the Indians as much as we can we are merely giving some of them the white man's ways. Unless they want those ways it is useless to ram them down their throats. Probably many people within the sound of my voice think that all the Indians need is homes like ours with hardwood floors and Crane plumbing. But Indians might be happier in good tents, temporarily at least, if the tents were warm and well stocked. They might be happier to spend money on clothes, what they call fine feathers.

I suppose some hon. members may say, "All right, if you know these people so well, what is your solution"? I am speaking primarily of western Canada because I know that area. Some of the reserves there have the most excellent ranching land in Canada but in many cases it is going to waste. I could take members out there and show them large stretches of virgin prairie owned by Indians.

Yet today at a time when beef cattle are at a premium there are no cattle on these lands or, if there are, they are owned by white men. The Indians are beginning to understand that if this grazing land can make money for white men there is no reason why it should not make money for Indians.

I suggest that we go to the Indian, consult with him, find out how much of the white man's ways he wants, how much discipline he will supply himself and by communal effort. We should give them whatever they want and allow them to be their own administrators. Indians, like any other branch of the human family, will take pride in doing things on their own. Some hon. members may try to downgrade this idea by saying it is nothing but a form of communism. But perhaps Indians need a form of communal living because they are not yet ready for the twentieth century.

We should try to restore the Indians' pride in themselves. We should provide them with a workable plan for a way of life close to their old accepted way of life when they lived off buffalo herds or by individual trapping in the woods. If some Indians want to be ranchers we should help them to become ranchers. If some of them want to remain in the woods perhaps we could work them into the tourist industry as guides.

Many Indians are very capable with their hands. They are efficient at manufacturing in the home. They are certainly capable of maintaining outboard motors. They like fine feathers. These Indians would be at a premium if they dressed in their own beautiful native costumes made of hand-tanned leather, which is still available and which we can help them to get. If they did this and acted as guides, then our American relatives and European visitors would get some of the colour of our rich Canadian culture.

The Indians must have autonomy. They are taught from the cradle to hate us. This is a negative approach. But I do not think they would hate us if we really extended to them the kind of friendship we would expect if we were in their place. If we did that they might teach their children to love us and eventually accept the best part of the white man's ways.

Where Indians have had economic security they have progressed. They are capable of all the skills of the white man. They are just as capable as the white man with their hands and their heads. As hon. members know, Caughnawaga Indians get premium wages in steel construction work. Their native skill in trotting along logs through the forest gave them sure footing. Now they raise their children to expect to be somebody when they reach their later teens. They have pride in themselves. They trot along the high steel of skyscrapers in New York, Montreal, Edmonton and Winnipeg and they show us that the red man is truly noble, like the rest of the human race, when he has a chance.

I hope the minister will pay heed to this plea on behalf of the Indians. There are legal hitches. The Indian Act needs to be revised. The treaties need to be revised. Of course the Indians are afraid to touch the treaties because they feel the treaties were not kept in the past. Again I beg that the Indian claims commission, promised for 50 years, be brought into being. Let it be a commission for the Indians, not merely the enlargement of another arm of government to make jobs for white men. Let it be a commission which will correct those errors we committed when we did not keep our side of the treaties. Such a commission can help bring about a new deal for Indians, one that is long overdue. But that commission will not work if the Indians feel it is just another piece of bureaucracy and not an honest attempt at friendly co-operation.

I have read one or two draft bills. One of them contained a suggestion that there should be a commission made up of three appointees. One member of the commission would be a member of the judiciary, one would be an appointee of the government and the third would be an appointee of the Indians. The subclause immediately following said that the Indian appointee would be subject to removal at the whim of both houses of parliament. This would be a mistake which would negate the whole effectiveness of this new commission. The Indian appointee must be subject only to the wishes of the Indians themselves. We have had at least 100 years of delay and, if this should cause further delay, a few more months would not make any difference. This man must be an Indian appointee and his tenure of office must be subject only to the wishes of the Indians themselves. Canada is a great and large country. There are many tribes involved. I believe it would be well nigh impossible to pick any one Indian and say that he represents the native people of this country. If we were to pick a Mohawk, perhaps the west coast Indians of British Columbia would think that he would know little about their ancient fishing rights.

Therefore I suggest that when this commission is set up it should be a flexible so far as the Indian appointee is concerned. By all means let an independent judge sit as the chairman of the commission, and the government, of course, would have to have an efficient civil servant who knows the act and the conditions under which the government has worked over the last 20 years or so. However, so far as the Indian appointee is concerned I suggest that this commission, which certainly will have to move across the country in order to deal with these problems one at a time, should accept an appointee from the Mohawk tribe or from the family of tribes as the case may be.

It might be possible to get the Bloods, the Peigans and the Sarcee to agree on an appointee but so far as the Crees are concerned I believe the great family of Crees should have its own appointee. In this way the Indian appointee would be one who would know the problems of the Indians in a particular part of the country. I have heard that one of the reasons the commission has not yet been set up is that there is not unanimity among the Indians. If this is what is causing the bottleneck now, it can be avoided by making the appointment of the Indian representative flexible.

Some people have said that it would be dangerous to open up all the treaties. It has been said that this might cost us a good deal of money. Well, Canada is a country which always pays its debts. This is something which should concern the claims commission. If we do owe these people money, larger pieces of territory, or considerable mineral rights which they have been unable to use, then let us establish this commission and find out what the facts are. I am sure that when all the facts are placed before us we will not hesitate to pay these people what we owe them. I am sure we will not hesitate to place at their disposal some of the tremendous resources of this country in order to bring them in this second century of Canada's history to the place of honour which because of their friendly acceptance of us they so rightfully deserve.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, my remarks at this time will be very brief. They stem particularly from the fact that our national and historic resources come under the jurisdiction of the minister whose estimates we are discussing at the moment. More particularly my participation at this time is, of course motivated by the very welcome announcement made by the minister during the question period when, in answer to a question placed on the order paper some time earlier by the hon. member for Essex West, he reiterated the statement made in March that the resting places or graves of the fathers of confederation would be considered as historical sites and consequently would be eligible for some type of financial assistance from the department concerned.

Before I speak directly and specifically about this problem. I should like to pay tribute to this division of the department. Living as I do on the island of Montreal I have had no direct contact with the work of this section of the minister's department in latter years, but I recall with a certain degree of affection the existence of the park which we used to call simply the Plains of Abraham situated in the city of Quebec, and the role that park plays in that communiry. I recall, of course, the period of my life when I lived in the city of Quebec between the ages of 10 and 17. That period coincided with the depression years. The few persons here who have lived through the depression years will know that many Canadians compensated for the lack of money by using a little initiative in utilizing their leisure time. High in the order of priority in this regard in the city of Quebec were the Plains of Abraham. That park is a tremendous credit to the department.

It is perhaps true that the Plains of Abraham are known best for their historical significance, but to the residents of Quebec, the Plains, which is the name we used for the park, was a meeting place where the citizens could enjoy picnics and otherwise make good use of their leisure time by using the park for recreation. However, like most people, during my early days I paid little or no attention or gave any credit to the battlefields commission which is charged with the responsibility of maintaining the park. I suppose that like most citizens of Quebec I assumed the park was maintained in some miraculous fashion by the city of Quebec or the provincial authorities or was endowed by private interests. It was, of course, only when I grew up and became a little more interested in politics and a little more aware of things around me that I realized that this place of beauty was maintained by a particular department of the federal government.

I think it is to the everlasting credit of successive governments, both Conservative and Liberal, that the overriding policy in the park has been to maintain the beauty of its sitting. This park has been a tremendous boon to the tourist trade. It is one of the foremost tourist attractions. Many hundreds and thousands of tourists who will visit Quebec, during our centennial year, will of course visit this park. So I should like to congratulate the minister.

I note in the estimates of the department that very little increase has been designated for this branch. This puzzles me a bit because I believe that like many others it is suffering as a result of increased salaries and the increased cost of maintaining parks and sites.

Today, as a result of a question asked by the hon. member for Essex West, the minister repeated the assurance he gave the house on March 15 that something will be done about the graves of the fathers of confederation which in many instances are badly in need of restoration. My interest in the subject arose quite naturally as a result of representations made to me by various organizations on the island of Montreal, particularly the St. Patrick's Society. I was prevailed upon to ask whether there was some department of government which would assume the moral and financial responsibility of looking after the resting places of those wonderful men who 100 years ago had the vision of forming this country known as Canada.

Like that of most backbenchers, my route to the very kindly and sympathetic ear of the minister was a long and tortuous one. I commenced my approach rather naïvely by going to the Minister of Public Works. After many months of sympathetic correspondence we mutually arrived at the conclusion that I was dealing with the wrong department. After six months of rather harrowing experience I then rather naïvely transferred my efforts to the centennial commission, presuming that in a country which was about to celebrate its centennial the resting place of Thomas D'Arcy McGee should be more important than the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. When one watches television on Sunday night and observes programs such as the Walt Disney program or others from the United States to which we are exposed culturally in Canada, it is quite easy to understand why the average youngster in Canada is familiar with the exploits of Abraham Lincoln but knows relatively little about the father of confederation who was assassinated within sight of the parliament buildings.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

I was informed on several occasions that while my project was a very suitable one centennial funds for this type of endeavour were not provided by the federal government but rather were the joint responsibility of the federal, provincial and civic authorities. I started over again and approached these three levels of government with the hope that some financial assistance could be provided for this project in which I was interested. After many months of letter writing I was again assured that my project was a very wonderful and touching one for centennial year but unfortunately the funds for this type of project had been exhausted and I was from 60 to 90 days too late.

It was at this time the suggestion was advanced by the then minister without portfolio, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, that I turn my efforts in the direction of the minister of northern affairs, whose estimates we are considering at this moment. I am very pleased to say I found it much easier and more simple to convince him of the validity of my case than any of the other avenues which I explored for some 12 to 15 months.

Let me leave this suggestion with the minister in the hope that he may expand a little when his opportunity comes later in the evening to answer some of the questions. On March 15 the minister announced that after a series of meetings with that branch of his department that I refer to as the historic branch but which is actually the natural historic and resources branch, it was felt normal and natural that the graves or resting places of the fathers of confederation should be considered as historic sites. I am sure hon. members will agree with that decision, particularly in view of the fact that we are discovering perhaps for the first time what it means to be a Canadian.

The spontaneous efforts of the people of Canada during this last week in breaking away from or putting aside our inferiority complex, make it more important that we should realize and cherish the efforts of the fathers of confederation. The fact that this country is only 100 years old makes it possible for us to do something to remember these people. Their speeches are recorded in Hansard and there are other ways of remembering them. But it does seem to me as it did to the minister that we could do something else such as providing assistance to an organization such as the St. Patrick's Society of Montreal to restore to its proper condition the resting place of Thomas D'Arcy McGee.

In his remarks of March 15, in which the minister announced that the department was prepared to render financial assistance for the restoration of these resting places, he created some puzzlement by his use of the phrase "financial assistance". That term implies that somebody or some corporation or society must exist to assist financially. How or who do you help financially in those cases where no society or corporation exists? In the case of the Thomas D'Arcy McGee project fortunately, there is a body in existence that can be helped financially. I refer, of course, to the St. Patrick's Society.

It is not difficult to visualize that in other instances there are no such societies. I have made representations to the minister asking him to elaborate further in defining "financial assistance", because it seems to me this is the key phrase in his statement of March 15. I suspect the minister will want to discuss this point and I hope that when he does he will point out that financial assistance can vary from one project to another from 10 per cent to 50 per cent or perhaps up to 100 per cent depending on how elaborate or simple the project is.

In the particular case of Thomas D'Arcy McGee I am happy to say that McGee sat as a member of the two major parties which existed at that time. We were not faced with the curse of socialism 100 years ago. In any event, Thomas D'Arcy McGee entered the house as a Liberal, although unfortunately in a moment of weakness he became a Conservative. I notice that an hon. member on the front benches of the opposition removed his glasses after hearing that remark. In a serious vein, Thomas D'Arcy McGee was a great father of confederation and certainly the complete cost of the project I have in mind should be absorbed by the minister's department, I hope that at the first opportunity the minister will re-assure me.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, everyone who has held the portfolio held by the present incumbent has realized a great sense of responsibility. I know that his predecessor, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, was keenly interested in the north and its development. He came to know the area and to love it. He did great things here in Ottawa and elsewhere to create a feeling of development in the north. I realize this very well because in 1961 when a ceremony was held at the opening of the Pine Point railway the hon. member for Brandon-Souris climbed on a caterpillar tractor to carry out the usual ceremonial functions. We saw him disappear over a hill, heading north, and it took some time to find out how far he had gone and bring him back.

• (5:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: They could not stop the machinery.

Mr. Baldwin: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that they could not stop the machinery. I think there is a great opportunity for a minister who holds this portfolio to do what I believe one British prime minister said when asked what his achievements were. He was referring to North America and he said, "I have helped call into being a new world to redress the balance of the old." I know the present minister feels this way. God knows, there is enough to redress in the balance of the old world and the old part of Canada.

There are a great many things to be done. I shall not go into detail at this stage because I have made my views known from time to time. However, I think it is of interest to point out that Dr. Deutsch, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada has become very interested in the question of the north and northern development. He made two trips to the territories in company, I believe, with the minister and some of his officials. He stopped on the way at the town of Peace River. Unfortunately I was not able to meet him. The interest of Dr. Deutsch in the north is pointed up in the third report of the Economic Council of Canada. I think this should give the minister an opportunity to do a little arm-twisting with his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance, who sits quite close to him, when the occasion arises. The problem is in getting the money and spending it in the right places.

I have made one suggestion to the minister and I make it again. I believe it would be very suitable, particularly this year, if the minister would take the initiative and convene an international meeting of those nations which have jurisdiction in the north, that is, Canada, the United States in right of Alaska, the Soviet union and the Scandinavian countries. I suggest it would be very appropriate to convene such a meeting in Yellowknife. Representatives of these countries should be brought together to consider ways and means of peacefully exchanging and pooling information dealing with northern development. We in Canada have made progress in this regard. The Russians have made progress in areas in which we perhaps have not been able to. But I believe that in a spirit of détente this is an excellent area in which these people can come together and pool their information.

In certain areas there is no question of security or classification. There is a common interest in the world to bring into a reasonable degree of economic development those parts of the north which are suitable for occupation, exploitation and development. I do not think there is any question about this. We know that for different reasons the Russians have been able to establish cities of a million or half a million people far to the north of our largest settlement of Yellowknife. There are, of course, geographical and political reasons for their being able to do this.

I believe it is now common knowledge that in Russia there is a system of incentives which persuades people, particularly the young, to go to these areas. On the North American continent today the two nations, in particular the United States, are spending billions and billions of dollars in space exploration and development. This is very essential and a start had to be made in this field. However, it seems to me it is also very essential that we be prepared to devote a reasonable part of our national economy for the purpose of seeing what parts of the north can be developed and, where there are resources, what we can do with them.

I have said over and over again that a country that concentrates its resources and population in one limited area, as we are doing in Canada, is looking for trouble. The cost of policing, sanitation, building houses and educating children grows increasingly higher in these areas. There is an increasingly large number of problems in connection with these areas. Now is the time to work together with other nations and lay out a plan for the development and utilization of the north.

We know it will not be too many years before parts of the world, particularly this continent, will be running short of certain strategic materials. I do not know to what extent the Paley report has been followed or to what extent people in the United States are examining it. But I remember there was a feeling a number of years ago that certain strategic materials required for industrial use and development would be in short supply. It is the tendency of human nature to wait too long to take the steps which need to be taken to see that there is a rounding off and a normal development in this regard. This applies to our continent and this country. I hope the minister will give some thought to convening such an international meeting as a preliminary step to solving these problems. The increasing use of commodity pipe lines and changes in trade development and the exchange of goods will in the not too distant future, I believe, bring us to a period of time when the north will have great strategic importance, not necessarily in terms of defence strategy but in terms of trade and communications.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Athabasca who spoke about our Indians and the Indian problem. I do not think we have an Indian problem, although it is often referred to as such. There are a number of Indian people who have problems. There are a number of Indian bands which have problems. This is why it is extremely difficult for us, sitting here in Ottawa, to formulate proposals on a broad, national scale which will be suitable for application to the Indian people in all parts of Canada. I suggest that we must have—and I believe the department is moving in this direction—a great measure of decentralization in order to give to the officials in the various areas, the superintendents and regional directors, a greater measure of authority and independence so they will be able to apply the general policies laid down in Ottawa broadly in a way which will best benefit their districts. We in Ottawa have a tendency to feel, when we appropriate $10 million or $20 million for a certain project, that the money will trickle down and will ultimately be used by individuals in those areas that we believe need improving. But this is not always the case. All too often the way the money is used is a matter of discretion on the part of independent civil servants who are on the firing line.

From what I have learned I believe that the policy I suggest has been applied to some extent but I should like to see it accentuated. It means getting the very best people that we can in these areas, people who will be responsible for dealing with the Indians, and giving them not carte blanche but at least within certain limits the right to modify policies according to circumstances in a way which will best benefit the Indian peoples with whom they are dealing and the areas where they live.

I should like to give the minister an example of what I mean. In the community of Hay Lakes, with which I think the minister is familiar—it is not too far from the famous Rainbow lake oil area—some years ago a white man was engaged by the band council to inaugurate a system of cutting logs and get the Indians involved in this work. He was to teach them the essential mechanical trades and help them develop a self-contained enterprise. This man made very substantial progress in his first year and a half of operation. He was able to provide the oil companies with lumber much cheaper than they could get it flown in.

At that time there was no highway into this area. I flew in there on two or three occasions and I talked to him. At one time it looked as if he would be able to set in motion an economic operation which would give year round employment to the 40 or 50 men who made up the majority of the heads of households in this area. Unfortunately, because of red tape and restrictions some difficulties developed. Eventually the man had to leave because of problems which arose with the local superintendent as a result of difficulties with the lines of communication in getting the equipment which was necessary, and so far as I know nothing more was done. Here was a situation where 40 or 50 adult Indians and their families would have been able to initiate, develop and continue an economic program which would have given employment to a large percentage of potential wage earners in the district. These are the sort of opportunities for which we should look, particularly in the northern part of Alberta, in the territories and in the northern part of Saskatchewan.

As a result of the sudden influx of people in connection with oil exploration and the development of the oil industry, the traditional sources or earning a living such as fishing and trapping have been taken away. These people have been suddenly exposed to civilization. They are untrained, unprepared and incapable of earning a living. At this time there is a special urgency about many of these cases.

However, I feel that our great problem lies with the education of the Indian children. In my part of the world in northern Alberta the Grouard vocational training school has been providing education to many Indian children who might otherwise have dropped out of school. I had the good fortune of welcoming three of these children to Ottawa not long ago. The boys had come here to study forestry and mechanical trades such as welding and the girls were taking beauty counselling and nurses' aides courses. It is my belief that in normal circumstances these children would have dropped out of school had it not been for this vocational training scheme.

This is the kind of thing on which the government should concentrate. We must bring these people one stage further and give them the opportunity to take one more step up the economic and social ladder. It is a difficult and heartbreaking problem and I know very well what is involved, but I urge the minister, if he happens to be in that district, to go to Grouard, look at the vocational training school there and see the Indian and white children working together at their desks and in the machine shops. I think these children will be far better able to enter into the economic and social life of this country than their fathers and grandfathers were.

The hon. member for Athabasca spoke about the Indian claims commission. This is a very difficult problem. If the claims commission were to be invested with the complete authority that is required to deal equitably—I stress that word—with all of the justified complaints of the Indian people and if this were to bring remunerative results, it would mean a tremendous amount of money. Not long ago I read about a decision of the supreme court of the United States according to which Florida belongs to a tribe of Indian people who under that judgment are entitled to take over Florida. I do not know what they would do with Miami Beach and the gambling houses there. However, if a court were to look at some of the original treaties and agreements made between representatives of the crown and Indian representatives over the last 50 or 60 years, it would be compelled to come up with a decision that these were fraudulent agreements obtained under false pretences and on the basis of promises which were never kept. If these treaties were to be interpreted in the light of modern conditions they would all have to be declared illegal. However, we as practical people know this is not possible.

In any event, we know that we have made great progress in this country, and what we want to do now is to give the Indian people an opportunity to participate in the reaping of the benefits which should and must be made available to them. This is the conundrum which will face the minister and the government when they come to enact the Indian claims commission legislation. They will have to consider on what terms it should be drafted. I would suggest that before the judgment of the government becomes final the minister might give thought to letting a committee look at this whole matter and make suggestions and proposals regarding it. Of course its terms of reference would have to be drawn up fairly carefully. This is a matter in which the work of the standing committee might be of benefit to the government before the legislation is drawn and brought down.

I was present and saw the Indians from Quebec perform their folk dances on June 30. I know that Her Majesty visited the pavilion of the Indian peoples at Expo during the course of her sojourn there yesterday. I am sure she read the messages left there by the Indian people regarding the injustices which they feel have been meted out to them. These are not injustices which this generation alone must sustain but injustices over a period of the last 100 years for which the people of Canada must bear the responsibility. As I watched the Indian people dancing here and as I read about Her Majesty's visit to the Indian pavilion I thought that something must be done now so that when we pat ourselves on the back and tell ourselves what wonderful fellows we are and what a wonderful birthday party we are having we will realize that we are not entitled to that feeling without accepting some degree of blame and involving ourselves in a meaningful program to help these people.

The minister has made some announcements with respect to housing and I know that the government is heading in the right direction. But time is not on our side. I would hope that all members of the house will resolve, in a nonpartisan way and without allowing their views to be swayed by political consideration, that at this time when we are celebrating our centennial something more meaningful will be done to bring the level of the original settlers of Canada, the Indian people, up to a stage where they can share and will have the right to share, as they should have had before, in a far more material way in the birthday party which we are having in Canada.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse the appeal made to the minister by the hon. member for Peace River so far as it concerned the decentralization of Indian affairs services. Since I came to Ottawa I have witnessed the federal government wallowing incompetently in areas where it had invaded both provincial and municipal authority. In view of the fact that the Indian problem is not just a general one involving national Indian policy across the country but one concerning Indians in specific locations, a program of decentralization and concentration in these areas instead of trying to deal with the statistical average Indian would be of great benefit to the Indians of Canada. I think we want to get more return for the effort and energy we are extending in trying to help the Indians.

There are, it seems to me, three types of problems connected with the Indians. They can be loosely categorized as, first, urban problems related to those Indians who have migrated from reserves to cities and those Indians who live on reserves adjacent to cities. Then we have the rural based Indians who live near rural townsites. Third, we have the Indians of the far northern areas. It is the latter two types with which I should like to deal for a few minutes because many of the people who inhabit my constituency belong in these categories.

We have found a variety of difficulties in trying to bring the Indians up to a more equitable standard of living. We must, I believe, provide them with an opportunity to make a place for themselves in Canadian society. I have found the Indians, generally speaking, to be interested in earning their own way. A great many of them resent the welfare handouts which we give them. As a matter of fact, some of them go so far as to say that we give these welfare handouts much more easily than we give them the tools and education they need to make their own way.

I have an example of this which I should like to mention at this time. One of the few natural resources available to the Indians for exploitation in northern Ontario is fish. Indians can fish both summer and winter. There is a company in Keewatin called Shoal Lake Fisheries Limited which set out to attempt to exploit the fish resources of Lake of the Woods in the northwest part of Ontario. Originally it supplied the Indians with capital equipment in the form of nets, outboard motors, boats and all the other necessary paraphernalia. The capital amount was to be paid back out of the earnings the Indians made from fishing.

Several things have gone wrong with this plan. First of all, there has been an out and out failure by the Department of Transport to enforce its own regulations concerning commercial aircraft in the north. There are a good many freebooters, people who own small aircraft and who on occasion will take a flight up north looking for an Indian who is fishing.

When they spot one they will land and offer to buy his fish for which they pay cash. They take the fish and Shoal Lake Fisheries has to take a severe loss because it is not able to buy the fish that the company equips the Indians to catch. In addition, the company cannot collect any of the money invested in capital equipment.

There are other areas in which the department of Indian affairs has taken a different attitude. I have a letter here from which I should like to quote. It was written to the Ontario Development Corporation at Toronto by the president of Shoal Lake Fisheries Limited. The company is having a great deal of difficulty finding the necessary capital to expand because their accounts receivable are so great. This, in turn, is related to the fact they are unable to collect the money which they put out for equipment because they have not been able to get the fish which the Indians have been catching. The situation is simply this. They were advised by the department of Indian affairs to cease providing the Indians with capital equipment. The Indian affairs department claimed they would provide the capital equipment because they had funds put aside for this purpose. The letter reads in part:

> We would like to point out that this statement regarding the availability of funds is probably quite true, however, no one has advised the Indians nor our organization as to how these funds may be put in the hands of the potential fisherman.

Then the letter goes on to deal with a meeting held recently in Toronto. One of the local Indian chiefs, along with some officials from the Ontario Development Corporation, met with officials of the department of Indian affairs. I should like to read from the letter again:

> At this meeting Mr. Greene—

He is an Indian chief.

> —stated that he was unable to obtain government financing which would enable him to fish commercially.

That is the end of the statement. Chief Greene is a chief at the Shoal Lake reserve which is adjacent to Lake of the Woods. If I may, I should like to continue the quotation:

> If we discontinued advances completely, a number of Indians would not be in a position to fish commercially and again would rely on welfare funds (more readily obtainable than fishing equipment from the department of Indian Affairs), as a means of livelihood.

So there seems to be a certain ambivalence here in departmental policy. On the one hand, they protect the Indians in a certain area and they protect the fish production. They see that the Indians receive a just price. The department takes no loss. At the same time, they expose a private entrepreneur to all the risks in developing Indian fishing when he is at the same time helping the Indian. The company has to take all the risks and has no protection at all. It seems to me that this is the type of operation that the Indian affairs branch should step into. I agree that in many cases it is necessary for the department to educate the Indians in modern, twentieth century money management. At the same time, it seems to me unreasonable to discriminate against this company, the only fish processor in northwestern Ontario. I bring these facts to the attention of the minister respectfully in the hope he might look into them and rectify the situation. I think it can be done without too much difficulty.

There is another matter which I hesitate to raise because it is a very sensitive one. I certainly hope hon. members will not misinterpret what I am going to say now. This point involves particularly the town of Kenora which, as hon. members will recall, was the scene of an Indian march about two years ago. This occurred on November 15, 1965 and was the subject of my first speech in the House of Commons. Since that time Kenora has become an even greater centre for the Indians than it was before. I refer to the very difficult question of policing. The Indians treat Kenora much in the same way as people from other rural areas treat a big city. They come in and have a good time. This leads to certain consequences. In the wintertime the police are absolutely necessary to prevent the Indian people from dying of exposure. In summer the police are just as necessary. The Indians themselves have suggested that one way around the bind of policing costs would be for the Indian affairs department, in co-operation with the municipality, to hire Indian policemen.

Two things would be accomplished in this way. Attention would be directed to one of the problems and the town would be assisted in financing this project. The tax base of the town is extremely limited, so it does require some assistance in dealing with this problem. Since the Indians themselves have recommended this idea of providing an Indian police force, it seems to me that the Indian affairs branch would be well advised to investigate this suggestion to ascertain if some form of arrangement could be worked out. I think it has certain possibilities and I should like to see serious consideration given to it. The problem the town of Kenora faces—

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask the hon. member a question? Can he tell us whether there are any Indians on the Kenora police force?

Mr. Reid: To my knowledge there are none. There was some talk, if memory serves me correctly, of an attempt to hire one some time ago. However, there was no one available who could take the police course. In all honesty, I think they are looking for some relief from the pressure of providing this assistance. They are also looking for some opportunity for the Indians to bring about improvements themselves.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The town of Kenora, the town of Fort Frances, the district of Red Lake and the town of Sioux Lookout all have serious difficulties in dealing with this problem because they are all urban centres for the Indians living in the neighbourhood. They do not have the finances to provide all the services required of them for the people living within their own municipal borders let alone deal with the problem they are facing as centres for a large indigenous Indian population.

However, these centres have been trying to make some progress and in the town of Kenora, through the facilities offered by the University of Manitoba adult education branch, the authorities were able to sponsor a series of ten lectures given by distinguished anthropologists and other experts on Indian affairs to explain to the people of Kenora, who have never faced this problem before, exactly what was going on, the type of cross-cultural conflicts that were beginning, why the Indian was as he was, and what were the possibilities for change. Much to the surprise of everyone concerned with the project the response was overwhelming. The sponsoring committee was caught without sufficient seats and without a sufficiently large hall a number of times.

The second thing they did was to set up a branch of the Ontario Alcohol Research Foundation which now has some very meagre facilities in the way of attempting to provide counselling and assistance to those Indians who run afoul of the juice of the grape. They have run into problems of financing and the reason for this goes back to the time of the march on the town of Kenora. Because of the confused conditions which existed at that time, a number of commitments were made without prior consultation with the proper authorities and the local people to their credit went ahead without getting formal written confirmation. As a consequence they arrived at a point where they had the facilities but did not have any money with which to operate them. They have had their problem solved for a year or two now, and I must congratulate the minister because his department is now providing more assistance than it did before. But they still have a problem in trying to deal with the situation as a whole.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, progress is being made by the local association. We have in Kenora another institution known as the Kenora Fellowship Centre, though there is a drawback so far as provision of assistance from the federal government through the department of Indian Affairs is concerned in that it has the stigma of having a religious affiliation. I understand that the policy of the department now is that any body which has a religious affiliation is looked upon with very deep suspicion, and in the end result, generally speaking, any financial assistance given is very minimal or none at all. We are attempting to broaden the base of this fellowship centre. I believe its membership is 50 per cent Indian and 50 per cent white, and the church in question is the Presbyterian church.

I do not particularly like this policy of the Indian affairs branch in discriminating against religious associations in this way. The simple fact is that, while the House of Commons did nothing for the Indians for many years, it was the religious associations that almost singlehandedly provided any kind of services to the Indians. The House of Commons has now finally decided to look into the matter of providing some assistance but it is trying to sweep out the old crew with a new broom, and I think this is unfair. The department should be providing some form of assistance to the Kenora Fellowship Centre because here is a body that has been set up on a community basis without any assistance from the federal department of Indian affairs yet because it has a religious affiliation it is being discriminated against, and so far no assistance has been forthcoming.

I understand I have a few minutes left, Mr. Chairman, so I should like to say a few words about program 5. We have been able to utilize program 5 to a great extent in my constituency. While this has caused a great deal of discontent in certain quarters as well as a great deal of criticism, I think the over-all effect of the program has been most beneficial both to the Indians and to the communities concerned.

In the first place it does away with a great deal of the discrimination the Indians have had to face in that the Indians are involved in this program along with other people. It has had a great effect in providing the Indian for the first time with a great deal of self-confidence. He has been able to go into the classroom and compete with white people and has been able to find out that he is their equal. While you and I, Mr. Chairman, may admit this, the Indian has not admitted it as a fact. I think he has always considered himself to be a little below the white man, so this program has had an impact in increasing his self-confidence. It has had an impact in making him aware that the world is a much larger place than he thought.

It has also provided the opportunity to help us integrate the Indians into our communities. Like all integration this will be difficult. There are a lot of rough edges and there will be many incidents. But it is coming, it is worth while, and I for one look forward to it.

I understand that the minister of Indian affairs will be coming to the Kenora area on August 19 to attend the centennial celebrations of the Indians who come under treaty No. 3 in northwestern Ontario. I am looking forward to welcoming him at that time, and I am also looking forward to introducing him to the many people who are engaged in these local community activities that deal with Indian affairs.

The other point I should like to make is that I understand that some time this month the department of Indian affairs is sending some senior officials to northwestern Ontario specifically to deal with those areas north of the lakehead. At this time I should like to request the minister to send those officials, if possible, to the Sioux Lookout, Red Lake, and Kenora areas where they will be able to see the pattern of Indian development in this part of northwestern Ontario. A great deal has to be done and a great deal can be done, particularly in the Red Lake area where there is a shortage of manpower for the gold mines in that vicinity. The Indians have been tried for this work and have demonstrated that they are satisfactory employees if provided with the necessary counselling services and housing accommodation. I think that this would be an invaluable experience for the minister's officials and it cannot help but improve the lot of the Indians in that area.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Public Service—legislation to increase pensions of retired civil servants; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), External Affairs —establishment of new consulate closer to Florida; the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Loney), National Health—construction at Wiarton, Ontario.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

• (6:00 p.m.)

PRIVATE BILLS

UNITED INVESTMENT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. C-114, to incorporate United Investment Life Assurance Company—Mr. Wahn—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: May I point out to the committee that this bill was amended in the standing committee and that the text of the amendment was printed in Votes and Proceedings of June 28, copies of which are available at the table.

Perhaps I should also point out that an error was made in the printing of the amendment in Votes and Proceedings of that date. At page 278, lines 13 and 14 following the heading "clause 8" should read: "the Company and so long as sections 16C to 16E of the said Act do not apply, then". I might add that I have checked this correction with the official amendment and it is a proper one.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I did not follow the wording of the change which has just been read but I presume it amounts only to a grammatical correction in any case.

We have had something to say about this interesting bill on several occasions. It appears to be the standard form of incorporation but I believe a great departure has been made in two or three different ways. We are dealing with a life insurance company and I am of the opinion that there is absolutely no need for additional life insurance companies in Canada. This opinion, I may add, is shared by many of my hon. friends. Therefore I think we might reach a conclusion simply on the basis of whether or not Canadian interests would be served by the creation of another life insurance company which would do nothing more than is done by any other such company.

One of my hon. friends on the committee dealt with this point at some length. He is much opposed to the creation of any new life insurance companies for the simple reason that they would serve no purpose and in many cases they would even be detrimental to the economy. Obviously, if the business is spread around somebody in this field will starve to death. If there are enough insurance companies, their agents selling insurance will not be able to make a living.

There is another aspect which we must take into consideration before creating new life insurance companies. As I told a friend of mine not long ago, the activities of such companies are more detrimental to the Canadian economy than are those of the banks. Some of these companies probably have more assets to distribute than one of the smaller banks in Canada. The money collected by them does not just sit in the treasury. It continues to grow and the expansion of these funds is formidable. The result is that unless we are totally committed to the free enterprise system—

Mr. Byrne: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: I can well appreciate that the hon. member would applaud in any case. The free enterprise system means to some that everyone is able to do everything he wishes to the detriment of himself and others. There must be some limitation upon the number of people engaged in a particular field or no one will be able to make a living from it. If belief in free enterprise means that everybody does the same thing, one is coming close to the communist philosophy.

This company, I understand, is not a normal life insurance company. It is being formed by an investment company which over a period of time has been selling mutual funds in a satisfactory way. At the present time United Accumulative Fund Limited which will own and operate this company possesses something like $300 million in assets. This makes it a sizeable enterprise, no matter how you look at it, not one of the shoestring type which believe they are going into the business to manufacture money as many of the promoters of small life insurance companies believe. This company has decided that while it is necessary for an individual to establish some sort of retirement fund for his future it is just as necessary for him to provide himself with short-term life insurance to cover the period in which his investments are not large enough to provide the result he wishes to achieve. It is said that on a short-term basis term insurance is the answer.

I am one of those who agree. I think it is safe to say that an insurance policy bought today will never produce the standard of living or the equivalent of the value of that policy at any other time in our history. Even the Minister of Finance would be hard put to answer if he were asked to say whether on a short-term basis $1,000 invested in an endowment policy today would ten years from now provide more money or less money or more purchasing power or less than the same amount at the time of investment.

People who bought $1,000 worth of insurance 20 or 30 years ago now find it has a purchasing value of only $400 or thereabouts. But the $1,000 that they invested originally formed a large part of their wages or other resources. In this respect this company has gone a long way toward solving a problem that has always concerned me, that of companies selling endowment plans without any stipulation to provide for escalation to meet increases in the cost of living. The federal government was not that foolish. When we passed the Canada Pension Plan we included an escalation clause to provide for increased cost of living. To my knowledge no insurance company does this, and this company in going into term insurance does not make such provision.

I have seen the figures and have been surprised at the amount of accumulated funds this company has in its mutual investment plan. There have been fantastic gains in the mutual field. Holdings in the mutual fund have increased substantially over the last 20 or 30 years. But if a person had invested in this mutual fund 30 years ago and died in the interim, his estate would not have received the accumulated gains that otherwise would have been paid had he lived. I understand that under its mutual fund this company buys some 60 individual stocks and has been successful in protecting its investments, but it still sells term insurance to investors in the fund so that relief is provided investors' relatives if an investor suddenly dies.

This is a highly controversial field. I have received representations from insurance companies that are highly pleased about mutual funds being combined with an insurance company. I would agree with these representations if the insurance concerned was anything but term insurance. A mutual fund will rise and fall according to two principal factors. One is the business acumen behind it and the other is the fluctuation in the nation's gross national product.

Under the Ontario workmen's compensation plan 100 per cent disability compensation paid to a miner 30 years ago amounted to about $80 a month. Today that compensation is in the neighbourhood of $400 a month, but no provision is made to increase the amount according to the cost of living factor. Year after year the compensation board reports to the government without recommending any form of escalation with respect to the compensation paid.

Endowment policies issued by insurance companies do not take into account escalation in our standard of living. Term insurance protects only on a short-term basis. It is the type of insurance that a company takes out on a young executive, someone it hopes will make a contribution to the company. It is the type of insurance taken out on a partnership. In this respect the bill attracts my support. I am sure it will encourage other insurance companies to put escalation clauses in their policies.

There are other reasons which lead me to support the bill. One is the type of amendment that has been accepted by the company. It is in keeping with statements we heard last night when coming out of the N.D.P. convention which showed a growing interest on the part of many people in the necessity to have Canadian ownership and control of large corporations in Canada. This company has gone a long way toward satisfying the wish that I am sure all members of parliament have to see greater control of corporations fall into the hands of Canadians. The way it has done so is quite complicated and unique, but the company is to be highly commended for its effort to satisfy this aspiration of Canadians.

The people in this company with whom I have dealt are Canadians. They have agreed to accept the amendment. Although initially the money put up for this company will be almost 100 per cent American and will be supplied by a group called United Fund Management Limited, under the terms of the amendment after a period of 10 years voting control over the insurance company will fall into the hands of Canadian representatives. As I see it, it will mean that the control will remain with the Canadians who have bought stock in the company because the non-resident, be it a corporate entity or otherwise, will not be able to vote either by proxy or in person if the control is over 50 per cent.

I think this is a great step forward. I know there are many members on the other side who have not paid any attention to these insurance companies and in fact have paid no attention to private bills. It is my opinion, however, that some of the things which happen during private members' hours warrant a much greater degree of attention than they receive. I believe that the development and the future of Canada to a great extent are involved in many of the bills which are presented during private members' hours.

This company, being large and wealthy, apparently will be the kind of company in respect of whose operations we in Canada would like to have some say. We would also like to be assured that it will operate in the interests of Canada. In the main the sums of money which are accumulated by insurance companies are invested in the United States rather than in Canada. It is surprising that although many of these companies are Canadian their investment picture indicates that they are investing their money in the United States. Canada finds itself in the peculiar position of always having to have subsidiary companies enter the country. When they do so they bring in money which in many instances we have lent them from our own Canadian companies. They bring this money in to invest in our natural and other resources. At the same time we have no control or say in respect of their investment or the subsidiary nature of the operations.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has now expired. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the closing remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming have given me an opportunity to make some further observations with regard to the incorporation of this insurance investment company and many others like it. During the course of the past few years, both in the federal parliament and the provincial legislatures, it seems to me that during private members' hour or private members' day, whichever is applicable, there has been a tendency toward the passage of more and more bills of this kind.

I believe many members would agree that there has been a proliferation of financial institutions in this country. Some will say, of course, that as our economy has been growing and developing it is the normal order of things to have an increase in the number of financial institutions such as finance companies, trust and loan companies, investment companies and the like as a means to provide some support for the development of our national economy. Surely, however, there must be some point at which it can be said with accuracy that the number of such institutions has gone beyond the optimum point. This is my distinct impression and I gather from the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming, that it is his impression as well.

I do not believe that at either the provincial or federal level in this country there has been a definitive study of the number of such institutions which would be desirable. I realize it would be very difficult to ascertain just what the optimum number should be, but it seems to me we should make some effort in this direction. Otherwise we will just carry on passing the necessary private members' bills to incorporate an ever growing number of such firms. In the general order of things, when it becomes clear in the business and financial community that there have been too many incorporations, a process of merger and amalgamation then takes place. This is all part of the wheeling and dealing of the business world. Some of this is to be expected and perhaps some of it is even to be welcomed, but surely some of it does result in gross inefficiencies and affects the economic structure of this country.

With specific reference to Bill No. C-114, during the committee hearings the superintendent of insurance was questioned fairly closely by certain hon. members concerning whether or not the subject matter of this legislation was acceptable and met all the standard requirements and forms. It is rather interesting to read some of the evidence in this regard. We find in the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs that apparently the superintendent of insurance is of the opinion that it is a bit irregular to incorporate a life insurance company which will specialize in term insurance. It would seem that his opinion is that the record over the years has been a rather poor one in so far as specialized term insurance companies being able to maintain solvency is concerned. Yet in the end he offers the opinion that perhaps this company will survive or remain solvent, not because it is a specialized type of insurance company but rather in spite of that and because of the power of a rather large and well established parent company in the United States. I believe the name given here is Waddell and Reid.

I do not intend to say anything in connection with the relationship between the corporation seeking to be established here and the fact that it will specialize in term insurance. I wish, however, to make some reference to the fact that in the opinion of the superintendent of insurance this specialized insurance corporation can remain solvent because of its backing by a parent firm in the United States.

This leads me to make some reference to the foreign ownership and control aspect which is involved here. I think I must disagree a little with my colleague from Timiskaming when he offers the opinion that the amendment, which will be new clause 8 of the bill, will provide an adequate safeguard that the corporation to be established will ultimately come under Canadian ownership and control.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The effect of the amendment as I understand it is that the majority ownership will eventually come into Canadian hands, but that control of the company might not, because of the interconnection of the operating company, another holding company, and the corporation which would be established by this bill. While there may be even a large degree of Canadian ownership it seems very evident that the control will remain effectively in the hands of the operating firm and one of the intermediary holding companies for an indefinite period of time. That is how I understand clause 8. If I am wrong I would accept a correction.

A private member is really hard put to determine just how he should react to and vote on a bill of this kind. It would seem on the one hand to be relatively innocuous or harmless to keep on incorporating an ever growing number of this kind of financial or insurance corporation. When one thinks about them one must conclude there is an optimum point beyond which we should not go in this proliferation. To go beyond that point would only serve to hurt the economy and increase the cost of essential production. They are not really the kind of organization that produces anything. They will eventually do nothing but increase the cost of providing a financial service.

In a way I was somewhat surprised that another financial concern should want to incorporate yet another life insurance company, particularly because of the reaction of life insurance companies to the recommendations of the Carter commission report. These companies were not in favour of being forced out of business, and their reaction to some of the recommendations of the commission report was so negative and reflected so much of the black side one would have thought we would never again see legislation through which groups of financiers were seeking to incorporate another insurance company. The reaction would indicate that these people felt it very unprofitable to implement the recommendations of this report.

I must also react somewhat negatively to one aspect of this bill because it appears that the people behind it are really seeking to use a specialized kind of term insurance as an ancillarly operation to their main operation of selling mutual funds, stocks or shares. It seems that this kind of operation is more of a promotional one, and one must wonder out loud whether this in itself is sufficient justification for granting incorporation through this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have found a chart which indicates a point I was trying to make earlier. Before referring to it let me say that I believe the hon. member for Springfield is correct in his assessment of what this amendment does. The fact that Canadians may control 50 per cent of the stock of the company does not necessarily mean they control its operations. I know of some companies which have 90 per cent of their stock owned by Canadians, but their operations are not controlled by Canadians. I have heard it said that certain people who own only 3 per cent of the stock of a company control those companies. I do not know how they do this, or what is behind this type of phenomenon, but I know it can happen. Let me give one example. United States control of the stock of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is very small, but this company is in some way interrelated with the Bell company of the United States. That company has manufacturing companies which serve identical purposes. The United States company does control the Canadian company, and the influence of the United States company is much greater than would normally be the case in relation to its holdings.

I have not yet learned how this situation can occur but I am sure there are members in this house who do know. They certainly are not going to tell us because it would not be in their interest to do so. I was always of the opinion that if you owned 50 per cent of the stock of a company you could control it, but obviously this is not so. They tried to teach me at the university how this situation could occur but they were not very successful. Perhaps I should enrol again to find out, but I am not really sure that one could learn by taking an economics course.

The hon. member for Springfield is probably quite right in that this amendment does not go as far as he would like, but even he, with his greater knowledge in this field, must agree that it has gone a hell of a lot further than the original bill. It certainly goes a lot further toward what we want to accomplish than the next bill on the order paper.

I also agree with the hon. member for Springfield that it seems strange to amalgamate a term insurance company with a life insurance company, hard pressed as these life insurance companies are today. Let us not kid ourselves, they are spending a lot of money in attempting to incorporate about 20 or 30 companies each year. If they keep this up we will not refer to these companies by their names, but rather by number, and we will have to add the letters of the alphabet to that reference before long.

This chart I have, put out by United Investments and dated March 31, 1967, points out that the purchasing power of a dollar had dropped by 20 points from 1957 to 1967. It also showed that during the same period values on the Toronto Stock Exchange climbed 90 points.

• (6:40 p.m.)

So we see there has been an increase in stocks, and I presume there is a relationship—although I would not hazard a guess as to how you calculate it or what it is—in the gross national product of our country and, although perhaps even more remote, in our standard of living. The Toronto stock market figures indicate that this has gone up to 90. In March, 1967, this company went up to 160 points. It seems to me, therefore, that if the standard of living in any degree follows the increase in the Toronto stock market, namely to 90, the fact that this company has gone to 160 proves that it has been a relatively good investment. Also the purchasing power of the dollar going 20 points the other way has not been a good thing.

It is very interesting to study some of the tables put out by the company. The table I have in my hand deals with mutual investment funds over an eight year period to December 31, 1965. If you invested $10,000 in 1957, by 1965 you would have accumulated $26,700. I think this would be a fairly good type of insurance policy. It means that at the end of this period you would have accumulated almost three times as much as you had invested. I believe this is not unreasonable when compared with the increase in our standard of living.

This table also indicates that if you had invested your money in a trust company at 4½ per cent, by 1965 your investment would have increased in value tremendously. If you had invested $4,200 at 9 per cent interest—I suppose the 9 per cent applies to the mortgage and insurance field—at the end of the period your investment would be worth $20,000. Some very interesting conclusions can be drawn from the figures contained in this table. I must confess that I do not understand some aspects of the matter. However, if one had been born near the time of confederation, the table indicates that if you had invested $100 in 1871, by 1961 that investment would have been worth $325,000, and now it would be worth $360,890. I suppose this shows that our grandparents did not put their money in the right place.

I am not necessarily a proponent of mutual funds, but if the stock market, the standard of living and the cost of living continue to bear a relationship there is really no point in buying insurance. I have an endowment policy with an insurance company, so I know what I am talking about. You are as lucky as hell if you get your money back at the end of 20 years. The only way you can really win is by dying in the first year of the policy. If you die at any time later than this you have made a poor investment. I should have put my money into mutual funds some time ago, rather than into insurance. It seems to me that term insurance is for a person who wants to take a gamble on the cost of living, the standard of living and increases in the stock market. He would be able to gamble in this respect with short term investment.

There are charts here that I do not understand. Mr. Humphrys should explain some of them to us because I do not understand them all. For this reason perhaps I should not quote them, because we will all become confused. I quote from a table dealing with a yearly insurance premium of $45 invested at 9 per cent. This gives you the figure of $114 and a yearly cost of $160. It would give you, if you died at 35 years of age during the initial year, $10,000. Your accumulated value of the investment would be $125. Your total benefit realized on death at 35 years of age in the first year of the policy would be $10,125. The table goes on to show that at age 64 you would have $525 worth of insurance but you would have a total asset of $17,569. From then on you would pay no more money on the term insurance, but by the time you reached 75—if any of us are that lucky—you would have $43,982 to leave to your heirs, I presume, because most of us find you can't take it with you.

For these reasons this type of insurance policy lends itself to a great deal of consideration. The day should be here when every hon. member who has insurance is taking a look at that insurance. Since becoming interested in these companies I have realized that I have never been a financial success, because I bought this type of life insurance, which has no value. It has certainly been a damned poor investment. Unless I had died in the first year of the policy the investment is not really worth while. It is too late now to do anything about that, and I will be lucky to get my money back at the end of the insurance period. If the value of the dollar keeps going down I will not get a quarter of my money back. They have taken 75 per cent of my investment and I shall not benefit from it unless we have another depression; and none of us wants that.

Those members who are really serious about the proliferation of insurance companies will have to consider carefully this aspect of the matter in terms of what people are getting out of the insurance companies and how they are to get their money back. I do not mean how they are to get their money back in terms of dollars, because I am sure that if you buy an insurance policy worth $1,000 you will get $1,000 back, in terms of dollars. But if the dollar is worth only 50 cents you will not get back $1,000 in purchasing power but only $500. If the value of the dollar drops lower than 50 cents, you will get even less back, although in terms of actual dollars you will obviously get them back.

I do not know of any member of parliament who stood up in this house and opposed the escalation clause in the Canada Pension Plan. But this is really what we are talking about. Whatever money is invested by an individual, we want him to have the kind of retirement that the money would buy when invested. If you look over the history of the last 20 years you see that the insurance dollar is worth only about one third its original value by the time a person retires. The escalation clause in the Canada Pension Plan will prevent this situation developing.

I do not know whether the sponsor of the bill wishes to explain the other point raised. It is my understanding that the amendment will provide Canadian ownership, to a degree, over a period of time.

• (6:50 p.m.)

I was not so much impressed by the wording of the bill—because frankly the legal terms were not totally understandable to me—as by the fact that the officials of the company who discussed this matter with several of us were interested in establishing a Canadian company that would be working for the interests of Canadians. Obviously their interests were the same as were ours. Of course the conflict arises in that whoever has the money has the right of decision. However I believe this amendment will cover some of the points that I have been making and I hope it will receive the support of the committee.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Peters: By leave, now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wahn moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise now to speak on the motion. As a preliminary I should like to quote the words of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) spoken at the start of the committee proceedings. He said the following:

> Mr. Chairman, since this bill was given second reading in the house there have been discussions between the officials of the company and interested members with a view to adding to the bill a provision which is designed to assure a degree of Canadian ownership over a period of years.

Apparently that result is to be accomplished within a ten year period. However, I am speaking now in view of the fact that I was one of the members involved in discussing the matter of Canadian ownership of insurance, trust and other companies both in this session and earlier. I was one of those who entered into discussions with the officials of the company, although almost invariably in the past we have resisted the invitation of company officials to enter into discussions with them, because we consider that in Canada lobbying does not form part of our deliberative and parliamentary process and that in any event it should not be engaged in by a small number of people. In this case I was not referring in particular to the United Investment Life Assurance Company or its subsidiaries, but to other insurance or finance companies seeking to be incorporated. In view of the fact that my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I and others have over the years been in the forefront in promoting the concept of Canadian ownership, we have been subjected to invitations to meet privately with corporate officials and invariably we have resisted such invitations. In this situation the company officials came voluntarily to us to express their agreement with what we had said publicly, not to dissuade us from our course but to try to work in co-operation with us with a view to attaining what was our aim, which also happened to be the aim of the company. All this is now of course a matter of public record. I merely mention this to indicate that this is not a matter about which we are very happy, partly because of the aspect of lobbying although perhaps it was necessary in the circumstances.

It may well be that as a result of the consultations which have been held between the promoters of companies and members of the house who are not on the government side—because invariably in the past company officials have been in contact almost exclusively with the chairman of the committee, who is a government member, or with members of the government party because they thought that this was the best way to attain their objectives—there will be a change in the rules and procedures of this house. It may well be that we are in the process of embarking on a new way of dealing with legislation.

The reason that I am making this point is that I was one of those involved in the discussions that led up to what I consider to be a desirable end, and therefore found it necessary to make this brief comment before the bill receives third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired and the house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

1. Departmental administration, $2,209,800.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Since it is seven o'clock the committee stands adjourned until eight o'clock and I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister about the work that is being carried out by the Company of Young Canadians in the areas of the north. How many ventures or how many projects have they undertaken? I am asking these questions because of the many rumours suggesting that this group leaves a great deal to be desired. I am dealing with the matter now because this is one of the fields in which the Prime Minister felt the Company of Young Canadians would be very active and useful. I am a little bit disturbed because I have a report here which would indicate that perhaps they are not as useful as the Prime Minister thought they would be. The report reads:

> —an unkempt collection of youthful layabouts held a five day meeting. The 69 members who turned up for some or all of the sessions spent $4,738 on transportation alone; $226 on telephone calls and $3,930 on food and accommodation. All this produced not so much as a single report; the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister advised the house that none could be expected, although he believed a member of the staff had made some record of the sessions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is a very disturbing statement. I raise the matter also because of the cost. There are only 66 volunteers in this Company of Young Canadians, and that is 2,440 short of the number the Prime Minister expected. In spite of this, the estimates covering this group have gone up to $2,445,000. This is the amount that will be provided in the next year. I believe these questions deserve answers. What have they done in this department of young Canadians in comparison with the accomplishments the Prime Minister expected? Their figures break down to about $37,000 per volunteer, or about equal to a tax of 12 cents on every man, woman and child in Canada. This is not very good for a government that finds itself, in boom times, with one of the largest deficits ever faced in the history of Canada. This deficit situation is constantly eroding the fixed income and pensions of those who have retired. It is also increasing the cost of living, and now we have the highest cost of living in this country of all time, coupled with the highest taxes.

Perhaps there are other instances, Mr. Chairman, in which this company did not perform very well. Since we are considering the estimates of the Indian affairs branch, I should like to know just what functions this group performed and what the Canadian taxpayer is going to get for his $2,444,800. I should like to know also how many Indian hospitals are operating today, and how many are operated by the Indian affairs branch? Has there been a decrease? How many have been taken over by the provinces or municipalities? I should like to know, too, how many doctors are now employed by the Indian affairs branch and how great has been the decrease, if any, over the last few years?

Then, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know how many of these doctors operate under medicare plans, that is when they are outside of the Northwest Territories or in the provinces. Does the provincial hospital commission check the regulations of the hospitals under the Indian affairs branch.

I am also very interested in the government's educational program. Out of a total budget of $100 million, as the minister says we are spending $47 million on education. Integration into the educational system is proceeding quickly. This is all to the good if the end results are proving fruitful. Indian children are attending school in my home town and are doing very well. I think it is very worth while to integrate Indian children with white school children in our town schools, with all the advantages of the generally superior facilities in those town schools.

I should like to know from the minister how many children are attending the primary and secondary schools. I also want to know the method of payment involved. Perhaps I should know the answer, but I do not know whether a per capita tax basis is used or not. I should also like to ask the minister whether any Indian reserves have been sold outright or abandoned, how many have been put on a long term lease and what properties have been leased across Canada by Indian reserves. I ask the minister what part his department has played in these negotiations. Does some body or company who wants to develop the area deal with the Indians directly and, if so, what part does the department play in those negotiations? It is important to see to it that any deals that are made are equitable and the money properly invested in securities.

I should also like to ask the minister whether the department has made an assessment of how many Indian reserves on islands are close enough to the mainland for it to be practical economically to build a bridge or causeway to the mainland. I have spoken to the minister about this matter before, and I should like to give him a case in point. I have in mind Christian island, which is a mile and a half across from the mainland. The deepest point in the channel is approximately 17 feet. This island is about seven miles long. Many school children come across to the mainland to attend secondary school at Midland and Penetang', and they cross by boat. In the stormy part of the year and when the lake is frozen over it is difficult to get across for about a month. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but often they have to stand on the wharf and wait for the boat morning and night, and it can be pretty cold.

Has the department looked into the economic aspects of this situation? I expect the costs would be shared, because the provincial government has already installed hydro and there is a radio telephone system on the island. Many properties on the island have been rented, but the only transportation to the mainland is by the boat Hooey. As the number of cottages on the island increases the situation worsens, and on many occasions the boat is loaded and people wait on week ends. Roads are being built on the island so there will be cars taken across. These cars have to be ferried across by scow.

At this point I should like to congratulate the minister on being someone you can talk to, who will listen to your argument or the point you are raising with him. The minister pays the most careful attention and I congratulate him on this. I realize he has a big department to manage. I also know that ten years ago the provincial government and federal government both said that in another ten years a bridge or causeway to Christian island would be feasible economically. Boom times have been prevailing ever since, so I should like to know what both these governments have in mind in this regard and particularly this government, as they have the administration of the island.

I should like to explore this matter a little further by asking the minister to look into the economics of the situation. What does it cost to keep this boat in service and to keep it manned? What is the cost of maintaining the facilities at Cedar Point? For years a new dock had to be constructed every second year or so, as the minister will discover on looking over past estimates, but about seven to eight years ago the government headed by the present Leader of the Opposition constructed a dock with a proper breakwater which has proved to be trouble free. I should like to know what could be gained by building a causeway and opening up the island in that way. As I say, houses on the island are being rented so some sort of policy must have been set. If we are going to continue to use the present dock, let us utilize it to the full, which may mean additional costs in facilities.

I realize that the minister will have to consult with the provincial government before he can give me an answer, but if he follows his general practice I will hear from him during the next month whether this project is economically feasible. As I say, I have raised the matter before and both houses indicated ten years ago that such a project would be feasible in ten years time. In the meantime there has been great growth and I should like to know whether they feel this project can now go ahead.

If it is proceeded with it would be of great advantage to the Indian children. They would get to school more easily. At the moment the buses wait at Cedar Point, being parked out at night and having to start cold in the mornings. These Indian children do not find it easy to reach school and I know that the minister would like to help them in whatever way he can.

The minister has mentioned integration of Indian children, which I am sure is a wonderful idea. However, I was a little puzzled by a report I saw in a Toronto newspaper one day which indicated there might be 15,000 Indians in that city who were experiencing difficulties. They were not being assimilated into the community, but sticking together in their own groups. Just last week an Indian girl was strangled to death in a certain part of the red light district in Toronto—that is, if they have a red light district; I do not know whether they admit to that or not. But if it is true there are 15,000 Indians in Toronto many of whom are not being assimilated and looked after properly, then what is to be gained by taking these Indians from their reserves and placing them in a society in which they do not mesh?

I should like to know what the minister has to say on this score because I think it raises a very important point. It is not good enough to take Indians off the reserves or encourage them and send them to our big cities where we let them disintegrate morally and socially. I cannot vouch personally for the truth of this story, but it was in the press and perhaps the minister read it, and generally when there is smoke there is fire.

I should like to dwell for a few moments on the restoration of Cahiague in my area which is situated in the neighbourhood of Warminster. The minister has been very sympathetic to this project, but I understand that it is not going ahead very quickly this summer. A lot of work has been done by Professor Emerson in the past. The northern end at Martyrs Shrine has been developed and hundreds of thousands of dollars spent. I was there last Saturday and saw that the whole Indian village has been restored. Yet I am told that Cahiague in former times was a bigger Indian city—if they called them cities—than Fort Ste-Marie.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I am all in favour of what has been done at the shrine. I wish to congratulate all parties concerned, including the provincial government and the federal government which did play a part in this restoration—the Department of Public Works dredged the river and gave other help. However, I suggest the minister should consider once again the position of some of these historic sites and ask himself whether we should not be doing something more than is being done at present. The hon. gentleman has probably studied this question and is as well aware of these things as I am. He knows that this area is rich in historic value—rich in the spiritual values of yesterday. The Jesuit priests came to this area—Father Caron was among those who came up with Champlain—and it was here that every one of those Jesuits that followed him paid the supreme sacrifice for their Christian ideals. It was to Christian island that these people fled—I think there were only 29 of them left after the Iroquois attacked and slaughtered most of them. I should like to see further attention paid to this site because I feel our efforts are probably lagging behind here.

In closing, let me say I realise there are differences of opinion with regard to the way in which Indian affairs should be handled. It is true one can take Indians from the reserves and settle them in the big cities. But what is the use of doing this if we—and they—lose sight of the very reasons for which they were moved into the cities.

In conclusion, I should like the minister to turn his attention to the matters I have brought up. He has always done so in the past and I hope for an answer from him either this evening or in the near future.

Mr. Roxburgh: I simply wish to record in Hansard a very special event which took place last Friday, June 30—the presentation of a piece of true Indian pottery by Mrs. Oliver Smith of the Six Nations Indian Reserve at Ohsweken in the County of Brant to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. In return, Mrs. Smith was of course received by Her Majesty. What greater honour could anyone, any nation, receive?

We who know these true Canadians and live near them are greatly honoured and privileged to have such a lovely lady as Mrs. Smith, who comes from the historic Six Nations Reserve, represent us on such occasions.

I should like to add a piece of information, which possibly few members have heard. Mrs. Smith, who represented us in presenting this piece of pottery, is none other than a sister of Tonto, that great television star. Might I also add that her very lovely daughter, an educated daughter who has taught school, won the Miss Ontario beauty contest a few years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, the Indians of the Six Nations form one of our most progressive groups of true Canadians in educational and cultural matters. We call to mind such names as the Andersons—incidentally, the present chief is an Anderson—the Jamiesons, the Montagues, the Montures, the Kings, the Moses, the Hills and many others. Last, but not least, we think of the Longboats and of that great distance runner Tom Longboat who made a name not only for his nation but for Canada.

A few moments ago I said the Six Nations represent advancement. Let me add that they do not forget the past—and it is most important that no nation, no people, should forget the past, because if they do they have no guide by which to enter the future. They produce a pageant every autumn, acting out the history of their nation and of Indian life in a natural setting of water and trees. Hundreds of people attend this colourful program each year, leaving with increased knowledge of the Indian people and their ways. But to me, and I am sure to the Indians, most important of all is the fact that in performing this pageant they are keeping before their children, and future generations of their people, the wonder of their ancient history and culture. May it last for ever.

Mr. Johnston: I should like to raise a point which I believe has been brought up annually for some years—I recall my hon. friend from Cariboo drawing attention to it last year. I refer to the tax imposed on those who have to enter national parks for business purposes, not intending to spend time in the park, as a park.

A toll station has been set up on the trans-Canada highway in British Columbia and a toll is charged, ostensibly for admission to the park. Admittedly one payment is good for entering all the national parks in Canada for the rest of the year in which it is made. However, this is not of much use to a member of the public whose travel in a national park has been undertaken for purposes not at all concerned with the park itself, and who would not be visiting any of the other national parks during the course of the year.

It seems to me there is an injustice here and a principle that is being violated. There is taxation of a section of the population with nothing given in return. The problem has been heightened by the fact that the commission on redistribution, in a complete lapse of good sense or reason, put together my constituency and that of Kootenay East to make a new hybrid called Okanagan-Kootenay. The main bodies of population lie at opposite ends of the new constituency. The meeting point for these two groups of people must be half way between them, and that makes it the town of Golden.

All of the political parties in the area are in the course of reorganizing constituency organizations. This means that during any given year hundreds of people from all the varied political parties—and they are all represented in that region—will make the trip to Golden for purposes that have nothing to do with the national park through which they travel. Yet they will have to pay the toll, and coming as they do from the park-like beauty of the Okanagan it is quite possible they would not feel the urge to visit any other national parks.

I wonder what is the revenue obtained through this means and whether it is not within the capability of the department, so ably served by the minister, to come up with some solution that would separate park visitors from people just using the trans-Canada highway. In our literature on the trans-Canada highway we boast that it is toll free, but at that point in British Columbia it is not. This fee becomes for many people a toll to use the trans-Canada highway and not a toll to visit the national parks of Canada. I submit that legitimate park visitors should be separated from people who have to travel this route by necessity, or else the tax should be applied evenly across the country, whereby $2 would be collected from all automobile users and applied to the upkeep of the national parks. I think some equitable system could be worked out by which this toll could be removed from people who have to use that highway for purposes other than visiting this national park.

Mr. Fawcett: Before dealing specifically with Indian affairs, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I think the minister should be commended for what appears to be a much more realistic and reasonable approach to the whole problem of Indian affairs than we have witnessed for a good many years. From the numerous press releases and circulars that cross my desk, it seems to me the minister is very interested in his department and is trying to do a good job with the means available to him. I have just one question I would like him to answer later, and it concerns the integration project at Elliot Lake.

It was decided to open up about 20 of the abandoned houses at Elliot Lake and move some 20 Indian families from 200 miles north of Sioux Lookout into them. I understand the men of the families were given $15 a day to cover expenses for themselves and their families while they were sent to the school of continuing education at Elliot Lake, in order to gain technical and vocational training of some sort. I am not sure how far this project has moved along and I would be very interested to know whether it is meeting with success, because I understand it is one of the first attempts to integrate Indian and white populations.

There is one Indian reserve in my riding. I spent some time there and was astounded to find that only about half of the homes on the reserve were being occupied. I am speaking of the Mattagami Indian reserve, about 24 miles north of the Canadian National main line. The Indians told me one of the reasons they were moving out of the reserve was lack of facilities, particularly lack of a decent road to get into and out of the reserve.

There was a serious problem in the winter months if anyone on the reserve got sick. I believe at one time the provincial department of lands and forests kept a road clear during the winter months, but then its efforts slackened. In fact it stopped plowing the road for a time, and the only way the Indians could reach outer civilization was by snowshoeing out to the village. However, an arrangement was made between the Indian agent and the provincial department of lands and forests as a result of which the department agreed to keep the road cleared. But this is not an easy proposition, and in times of bad storm it is not unusual for this little community to be isolated for two or three days.

When there I also inquired about the financial status of the Indians. Those best off made around $1,200 a year, and over all their annual earnings varied between $600 and $1,200 a year. Naturally they were having a difficult time getting by. It is an area where groceries and other things fetch high prices.

At one time it was a good trapping area, but as most hon. members know, trapping today is not a very profitable enterprise. As a result these Indians are in a precarious position, particularly during the winter months. Their houses, in effect only shells, are in a deplorable condition.

Some of the Indians have moved into the nearby village, where they have obtained employment, are doing reasonably well, and have integrated to a reasonable extent with the white population. I inquired what they thought was the best solution to their problem. They said they felt they were being discriminated against, and felt that employment could be found for them in their natural environment up in the north woods. They were a little dismayed that the provincial department of lands and forests were using students, and what I believe are called junior rangers, during the summer months to clear out parkland, of which there is a considerable acreage in the area. They felt this was an area where they could definitely do just as good or a better job. They also believed it would help them solve the financial problems. I realize this is a matter which would have to be worked out in conjunction with the provincial government, but I believe it is something worth looking into.

My colleague, the hon. member for Springfield, mentioned the matter of guiding. Any of us who come from the northern part of any province realize that guiding can be a quite profitable means of employment. I believe it is regrettable that something is not done to ensure that any party going into the woods must be accompanied by a guide. Here again I understand that this is something which has to come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. I think, however, it should be pointed out that any party which goes out with an Indian as a guide does not leave a forest fire behind when leaving the woods. I think this also is something well worth considering.

I was quite interested to read a press release in the Toronto Globe and Mail dated February 20, 1967, wherein it is reported that the minister stated that 215,000 reserve Indians would be given their emancipation, as he put it, under new legislation which would be brought out by his department. I am wondering how this is progressing and whether it is feasible.

I believe it was the hon. member for Peace River who made a statement with which I agree very much. He said that you cannot adopt an over-all policy for Indians in general, but that each area must be dealt with on the basis of what is required in that particular area. I believe this is quite evident. I have received correspondence from Indians in various parts of Ontario and of British Columbia, and it would seem to me that the problems in one area do not apply in so far as another area is concerned. What we must realize more than anything else, I believe, is that it is necessary to place ourselves in the position of the Indian, so that we will understand his thinking. After all he is being subjected to our rules and regulations with very little say in regard to how they affect his destiny.

I believe the minister's idea of giving self rule to the Indians, if it can be carried out effectively—and I realize this cannot be done overnight—would be one of the biggest steps forward, because I think it is the only way the Indians will eventually integrate with the white population and become self sufficient citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up very much more time. In passing I should like to say I was quite impressed by the remarks made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River prior to the supper recess. Having been in that area I realize the great problem there. I should like to commend him for his very forthright statements in connection with the problems, and also for the comments he made with regard to the manner in which he thinks these problems should be handled.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Chairman, I promise to be very brief. I should just like the minister to clear up something concerning which I attempted to obtain an answer the other day. During his term of office has he taken any initiative in the development of a national park in Ontario. Surely he must realize there is a great need for a national park development in this province. We have here a concentration of industrial workers who in ever increasing numbers will be in need of much more recreational and park accommodation in the years ahead.

Does not the minister think that no time should be lost in acquiring and preserving for posterity some of our Ontario wilderness areas, which are disappearing at a rapid rate. In these areas our many species of wildlife might have a haven suitable for their continued reproduction. A sizeable national park in Ontario would bring big dividends for time unlimited.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the debate at this time on Indian affairs at least, which is the subject matter in which I have a stronger interest than some others which come under the minister's jurisdiction, may be rather futile and simply a bit of an exercise. I say "futile" in the sense that such a debate may have little opportunity to influence government policy which, I believe, is the prime purpose of debate. It also may provide little opportunity for public expression of some of the feelings which the native Indian people have about their own destiny and the activities of the government.

One of the matters which has interfered with an opportunity to go fully into the matter of Indian affairs in any great depth has been that of time. If we harken back just a few years I believe we will see that over the last three fiscal years, including this one, there has not yet been an opportunity, at least that was realized, to go with any great detail into the matter of Indian affairs and government policy. In 1965 there was not much opportunity for debate, because that was the year in which we had a summer recess of parliament, with the promise that the estimates would be considered in the fall of that year. Instead of having the estimates we had an election, which interfered with any orderly consideration of matters in parliament.

The estimates in respect of the expenditures for 1965 really were considered retroactively, or after the expenditures had been made and at a time when we were in a new session to concern ourselves with the spending program for 1966. During the last session the estimates of the Indian affairs branch were referred to a committee. That committee made what I considered to be an extremely wise decision. It expressed the hope and desire that very soon the members of the committee would have an opportunity to visit Indian communities and the Indian people in order to examine at first hand as much as they possibly could the situation in the Indiar communities, and in order to have an opportunity to speak intimately with the native people with regard to their feelings concerning Indian affairs.

We have gone over this ground before, but I want to mention only briefly in passing that for one reason or another the committee found itself frustrated in its desire to carry out what is conceived to be a legitimate undertaking. The first thing that happened was that the committee decided it would be advantageous to break up into subcommittees, allowing easier handling of the situation and more visits to more communities. Accordingly a report was made to the house, but somewhere along the line there was a substitution by government in respect of committee authority, disallowing the subcommittees.

Last year in the fall, when the committee finally got around to meeting, tentative arrangements to visit a number of Indian communities were made. One community was in Quebec and the others were in the southern part of Ontario. It was found then that an insufficient number of members expressed a desire to make the visit. Consequently they could not be made because of a lack of quorum, and they were cancelled.

This cancellation caused a tremendous amount of ill feeling on the part of the native people in the communities to be visited because the advance arrangements which had been made were cancelled. The committee then came back to the house and asked again for authority to divide into subcommittees. This authority was forthcoming and the subcommittees did visit the Indian communities of Caughnawaga and St. Regis. I might add that prior to this, members of the committee had travelled to meet with the provincial advisory council, or board, of Ontario. Subsequent to the visit to Caughnawaga the committee laid out a tour of some of the communities of British Columbia, but this trip was cancelled. I might add that in conjunction with the British Columbia trip it was planned that some of the committee members en route to British Columbia would take the opportunity of stopping in Winnipeg to hold a watching brief in an Indian-Metis conference there.

These proposed trips were beset by obstacles, and the end of the session arrived. Because the committee early in the session last year conceived the idea of making visits to Indian communities in order to obtain an assessment of Indian affairs, it was decided to give only a scant or cursory examination of the estimates. Accordingly it reported the estimates to the house, where they were considered very briefly. Last session a time factor militated against any examination in depth of Indian affairs. During this session we are faced with the rules which impinge upon our consideration of these estimates. I am not complaining about these rules as they were agreed to by the house; nor am I trying to be objectionable in what I am saying. I am trying to make what I consider to be a factual statement, indicating that during this and the past two fiscal years there has been no opportunity to go into a detailed examination of Indian affairs.

To that extent I suggest that we may well be indulging in a futile exercise in attempting to influence government policy in respect of Indian affairs. That should be the purpose of our debate; that is, to put across a point of view in the hopes that it will be accepted. It may well be that we are engaging in an exercise of futility because at least a part of the debate in parliament should reflect public thinking. I am rather inclined to think that this parliament is behind the times in trying to reflect the thinking and feelings of our native people in relation to government policy.

The minister in his opening remarks on June 9 pointed out that perhaps the salvation of the Indian people rested in the hands of those of the younger generation, and I think he made mention of the age of 26 years. It is true the wealth and progress of any group rests in the hands of youth because our future leaders come from that group. The younger people among the native population are of a different sort than their parents or elders. The older Indian people were more gentle, trusting and more resigned to accept their lot and position. Speaking in general terms, the older Indians expressed their dislike for government policy by ignoring it. In other words, instead of attending meetings for the purpose of discussing certain matters which might influence their position they avoided them. They showed their objection by non-participation.

As I say, younger people have a different concept and philosophy. They have been struck by the situation which exists in societies outside the Indian community. As a result of education and participation in the armed forces during the second world war, coupled with greater mobility, these young people have been able to travel, even with their limited resources and incomes, and have found out what is the situation in society outside the reservations. They want to know why there is this difference, and the answers they receive are not satisfactory. These people are very dissatisfied because of this new knowledge, coupled with their understanding of the history over the past decade of deceit on the part of non-Indian explorers and governments. I am sure the minister will not disagree that in years past there has been a great deal of mishandling of the rights of Indian people. Because of this history and the knowledge that they have been unfairly treated at the hands of non-Indians our Indian communities are becoming discontent. As a result they may take stronger action than we would like to see.

We must recognize that forces of discontent exist in these Indian communities, and these people are beginning to discuss how they can use their strength to gain what they consider to be just and right.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Practically every day in the past few years they and we have been able to read about the civil rights movement in the United States, which is a movement on behalf of a group of people who are distinct because they have skin of a different colour from ours. The native Indian has an affinity with them in that regard and in regard to the matter of fundamental rights. I hope we can overcome the combination of these two forces by exhibiting conscientiously and deliberately in every program of the government, by example and precept, the fact that government, government forces, parliament and the non-Indian community has respect for the native Indian people as a group and as individuals. I hope we can exhibit attitudes that will beget trust on the part of the Indian people toward government policies. I hope we can convince them that we will honour all the dealings that take place with their peoples.

It is no good engendering this trust in just one, two or a dozen instances. It must be a persistent, deliberate, conscious policy carried out at all levels of government and in all dealings that government has with our native people. It will take a period of time to overcome the inheritance the Indian people have in so far as their dealings at the hands of government and non-Indians are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I might mention a few things in this regard to indicate, at least in so far as an assessment of this matter by the native people is concerned, where there is or has been a lack of openness and trustworthy dealings. Some time ago when the minister's predecessor was in office he announced the formation of an interdepartmental committee to deal with hunting, fishing and game rights of the native people. This was the result of persistent questioning in the house by members following the decisions made in connection with the Migratory Birds Convention Act, and a few other court cases of that sort.

When the announcement was made about the establishment of this committee the general understanding of the native Indian people was that the committee would be able to come up with some recommendations and suggestions as to what should be done. The minister at one stage when I inquired into this matter said the policy of the government was to let the courts—I am paraphrasing what he said—delineate the areas of dispute; in other words, let the courts make the decisions for or against the native people on hunting and fishing rights in respect of whatever instances were brought before the courts. This supposedly would give some guide line to government, which could then act upon the decisions made by the courts. The government could then see what legal impediments might exist in the way of doing something to cope with the disgruntlement of the native Indian people over loss of their hunting and fishing rights.

It is the minister's responsibility and duty, if he feels it is in the public interest, or for some other reason, not to make public that report of the interdepartmental committee, even though the minister said a précis of the report would be prepared and made available to all hon. members. I have been away from the house for the past week, but I do not think it has yet been prepared. In any event, this is the sequence of events: First, there was the announcement that this matter would be dealt with by an interdepartmental committee; then there was the announcement that the report of the interdepartmental committee would not be made public, and then the declaration that the courts would make decisions that would lay out the areas where disagreement might exist. This has all built up in the minds of a number of native Indian people with whom I have spoken and who have been watching this matter with some interest the understanding that once again government has not been true and faithful to them.

I am not saying that this is in fact the thought in the mind of the minister. I am sure it is not. But I tell him this is the thought in the minds of a number of native Indian people. This is what should be paramount and what should motivate our efforts in doing all we can to assist native Indian people. We must exhibit to them the full degree of respect that is necessary and show them that we are trustworthy in our dealings. That is just one example, Mr. Chairman.

Another example involves my own province of British Columbia. There not too long ago the minister of municipal affairs, Mr. Campbell, announced that the provincial government was desirous that Indian reserves should become municipalities, and he hoped that one of the Indian communities in his constituency of Campbell River would become the first Indian community to become a municipality. This on the surface may sound good, but in fact in so far as British Columbia is concerned it could very well mean that any Indian band which decided to become a municipality would lose every inch of its reserve land. None of them want to do this.

A few years ago there was a move by the Metlakatla people, near Prince Rupert—this was 15 or 20 years ago—to become a municipal structure under the laws of British Columbia. I ask the committee to remember that the Metlakatla people still feel the influence of Mr. Duncan, a missionary who was sometimes rather brutal and cruel in his dealings with native people but none the less had an influence upon them which exists in large measure today both amongst the people in Metlakatla, British Columbia, and their brothers and cousins in Metlakatla, Alaska. They desired to become a municipality. One of the difficulties that arose was that if those people became a municipality they would become enfranchised as a band under the Indian Act; in other words, they would lose as a band, and each individual in it, status as an Indian within the meaning of the Indian Act.

The minute that came to pass, the provisions of an order in council passed by the provincial government would come into play. This is the damaging part. I should like to make reference to order in council 1036 made July 29, 1938. It is still in existence. The members of the executive council in attendance at that cabinet meeting and who made this order in council were Mr. Hart, Mr. Weir, Mr. Wismer, Mr. MacPherson, Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Pearson. That is not our Prime Minister but a gentleman who used to be the minister of labour of British Columbia. This was at a time when a Liberal government was in office in British Columbia under Hon. John Hart. This order in council relates to the land question in British Columbia, which still has not been solved. It points out that certain lands set out in the schedule to the Indian affairs settlements act—and the lands are the reserves which were set up at that time and which still exist except those parts which have been sold or surrendered—would be conveyed to the federal government to be held in trust for the native people. This was subject to condition, and the important part is that this is made subject to the condition that in the event of any Indian tribe or band in British Columbia at some future time becoming extinct, any lands hereby conveyed for such tribe or band and not sold or disposed of as heretofore provided, or any unexpended fund being the proceeds of any such sale, shall be conveyed or repaid to the grantor. In other words, if an Indian band—and let us remember that the word "band" is legally defined in the Indian Act, and not a hereditary concept of a political or social unit of Indian people—becomes extinct, the reserve lands which it held previously revert to the provincial government. The two lawyers with whom I have discussed this matter, one of whom is very learned and knowledgeable in the field of Indian affairs and land titles, are of the opinion that if an Indian band becomes enfranchized, it then becomes extinct as an entity under the Indian Act and its reserve lands go back to the province. This was the barrier that prevented the people in Metlakatla some 15 years ago from becoming a municipality, the barrier being that the provincial government in Victoria, when Mr. Bob Sommers was the minister of lands and forests, refused to give up its authority, which it relegated to itself under this order in council, and refused to give up its rights to the reserve lands. So the Metlakatla people, who were desirous of becoming a political unit in British Columbia, found that if they decided to make any progress whatever in their political structure they would lose their reserve lands.

I submit that the same situation exists today. When Mr. Campbell, our minister of municipal affairs, starts speaking about the desirability of the Indian bands in British Columbia becoming municipalities, the native Indian people who know of this order in council and who have concerned themselves about the land problem in British Columbia for more years than I have been alive, say to themselves "You are not speaking with a straight tongue, Mr. Campbell, because you are asking us to become municipalities, and if we do so, the land that we now hold as reserve land will end up in the hands of the provincial government, plus the money from the proceeds of the sale of that land."

This is another example of the type of government pronouncements which are not backed by an honest and faithful declaration, which makes the Indian people sceptical of government dealings. The British Columbia Indian reserves minerals resources act, an agreement entered into by the government of Canada and the province of British Columbia in 1943, and endorsed by a statute of this parliament, is another example of bad faith on the part of governments. That act still exists on the statute books.

I gave two or three examples to point out that not only must the government declare, as the minister has done on a number of occasions, that it is the government's intention to act honourably and faithfully and to develop a trustworthy relationship between the Indian people and the government of Canada, but must support such a declaration by action. Where this is not so, words become futile and will not have the beneficial influence that they should have in developing a decent rapport between the government and the Indian community.

There are many other items with which I could deal if I had the time to do so. I will only say that this is the third year in a row when parliament has not had the time to examine Indian affairs in any depth and to engage in a debate by an examination of the department, by making proposals and hearing the minister's comments and views regarding the merit of any proposal. My understanding of what parliament is doing with respect to the estimates of this year, is that we have three quarters of an hour left in this session to deal with the estimates of the department.

The committee on human rights and Indian affairs, which it was hoped last year would have some really worth while work to do, has not even been called together in this session. There was no effort made on the part of those who may have been nominated for office to call the committee to consider what we might do. It is too late now. This part of the session is almost at an end and we will have to wait until September or October before the committee can be called together.

May I say again in closing that there are too many examples of untrustworthy and unfair decisions which do not jibe with the laudatory statements made by the government concerning the work done in this field, and unless the two are put together we will not get too far in promoting and advancing the cause of our native Indian people. In fact that task may well be taken out of our hands by the native people themselves, because at the present time their mood is one of rebelliousness.

Mr. Bower: Mr. Chairman, tonight I should like to bring a point to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which I brought up in the last session but with no positive results whatever. However I wish now to repeat, and I am sure the people of my consituency expect me to repeat and to keep on repeating, the plea that I am about to make. I refer to what I may call a deficiency or insufficiency of parks in my area in western Nova Scotia. I know that hundreds of thousands of Canadians and Americans know of our famous Cape Breton Highlands national park. The spectacular scenery and the breathtaking beauty of that park is renowned. I can safely say, moreover, that it has been a self-liquidating concern.

Tourism in Nova Scotia is second only to the fisheries in importance. And certainly the Cape Breton Highlands park has aided and fomented the tourist business. The Cape Breton national park is in the extreme north east of the province. Until a few years ago there was no park whatever in the western part of the province, where tourism plays a significant part in our economy; but about four years ago the government laudably decided to establish what was first known as the Western Nova Scotia national park. However, the fact that it does not extend into the west end of Nova Scotia may be one of the reasons why it is now called the Kejimkujik national park. Contiguous to the Kejimkujik park, which is located more in the central part of Nova Scotia than in western Nova Scotia, is an area known as the Tobeatic game sanctuary which is on provincial crown land. I believe, and the people of my constituency believe, that Kejimkujik park should be extended to include the Tobeatic game sanctuary area. I realize that part of the Tobeatic game site area is leased and is under active exploitation for pulpwood but that area could easily be left out. The rest of it should be included in the park so that the western part of the province does have the benefit of a national park.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The present Kejimkujik park entrance is 150 miles away from the western end of Nova Scotia and under those conditions is not the magnet for tourists in western Nova Scotia it should be. Kejimkujik therefore does not serve as fully as it might as a tourist attraction. However, with the extension westward to include the Tobeatic area, it would serve that purpose. All that is necessary is to extend the existing roads from Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby into the western end of the Tobeatic area. Kejimkujik at the present time, I believe, is considered of minimum size for a national park, but with the extension I recommend it would be of adequate proportions.

If western Nova Scotia does, as we hope it will, receive its share of secondary industry, then an adequate area for recreation would be desirable, quite aside from the attraction for tourists. I ask the minister to study with me a map that has been prepared by interested people from my constituency showing just how this could be done. I feel federal assistance could be given, as was done under the roads to resources program for the development of access roads to the area. I might add further that these roads could traverse the province connecting to the west end of the enlarged national park, and they would also serve for the transport of produce from the Atlantic shore to the bay of Fundy and to Digby.

According to an answer recently given in the house by the Minister of Transport, an adequate ferry service is soon to be developed from Digby to Saint John, thereby connecting that whole area of western Nova Scotia to the trans-Canada highway and the railroad systems into central Canada. There is another purpose that a road system I suggest would serve, and that is the development of access to an emergency airport for the Yarmouth international airport on the occasions fog prevents landings at Yarmouth.

This has to come or we will be subjected forever to a very second rate type of air service. I realize that some of these features pertain to other departments, but they are part of a package job. I ask the minister to consider this matter seriously. I shall be very willing to co-operate with him and to show him the maps to indicate how this proposal would benefit the constituency.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, without taking too much of the time of the committee, I do not want to miss the opportunity to draw to the minister's attention an area in my riding, Pointe-Bleue, with which the department is now concerned.

The minister is aware of the current projects in Pointe-Bleue. First of all, I wish to commend him and the government for their intention of handing over to the Indians within a few years the management of their own affairs. I hope that this transfer will be made systematically, but as fast as possible.

I also wish the minister all the co-operation possible from his officials in the completion of that task. We have been hearing about this event in Point-Bleue for some years, but I am afraid that the work is not always as efficient as the minister would like it to be, probably because we are lagging behind, in the reservations, as far as Indian competence is concerned. And I know what I am talking about, because I keep in close touch with those people. I have noticed that as soon as an Indian improves himself a little,—as soon as he gets some education and polish, it seems that a strange power drives him outside his reservation to earn his living.

He is even offered a very interesting salary to do the same work. A young man, who might be a school teacher at Pointe-Bleue, is offered a higher salary to teach outside Pointe-Bleue, probably—and I am not saying that I am convinced of that, but it is a fact and I want to point it out to the minister—in order to get him away from the others, because he could become an enlightened and intelligent chief, able to lead his group.

I still trust the group of civil servants, most of whom are not Indians. I am still confident that they are sincere in their work, that they want to give a clear advantage to the Indians in order that they might apply for the jobs to which they are entitled. I have spoken about the matter in the house before and I went so far as to attack publicly an agent of the reservation. I shall not do so to-night, because he has been replaced. We now have a Mr. Gosselin who does an excellent job. I trust he is sincere and will put into practice the ideas the minister has expressed with regard to the reservations, namely, that, at long last, their management should be handed over to the Indians.

Conceivably, the officers of the Pointe Bleue reservation, 90 per cent of whom are white people, are highly interested in keeping their jobs, but certainly this is not in the interests of the Indians, who would be ready and capable to take over, so as to get into higher positions and, finally, in a few years, carry out government policies themselves.

I am sure that the minister is not aware of all those small transactions which do not often come to light, but which are very effective and always detrimental to the Indians.

I listened earlier to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who is much more familiar than I am with Indian affairs, and since I have been watching the activities of civil servants, I find that few are at fault, because most of them are doing a fine job, and I commend them for it. But even if there were only one or two, it would still be enough to delay the work of the department. That is why I call the minister's attention this evening to the things that we see. Let nobody think that we are keeping our eyes closed.

The minister announced the building of a sewage disposal and water distribution system in Pointe-Bleue at a cost of $1,500,000. I congratulate him but I regret that the project should be stretched over a period of five years. For 15 or 20 years at least, they have been asking that the village streets of the Indian reservation be paved or that a few feet of sidewalk be built for there are no sidewalks and no paved streets in the reservation.

• (9:30 p.m.)

As a result, the Indians will be in the midst of a construction upheaval for five years. During five years, the village will be upside down, precisely at the time when the provincial government will be paving the approaches to the reservation, as has been announced for the summer or at the beginning of the next year. For another five years, the village will be a ploughed field.

I have already suggested to the minister that a contractor would be interested in doing the work so as to pave the streets and build the sidewalks the same year. The same contractor is willing to wait five years for payment in accordance with the agreement, that is approximately $165,000 or $200,000 per year, according to the estimates of the department.

Well, I think that the minister should consider that proposal; the department would not find it too costly, the work could be done during the same year at the Indians' satisfaction.

The reservation is now made up of some 1,300 or 1,400 inhabitants. It is quite a big village and it seems to me that they have been living in the dust long enough to ask the federal government to do something for them. In all the small municipalities of 700, 800 or 900 inhabitants in my riding, streets are paved. But in Pointe Bleue, because that reservation comes under the federal government, nothing has been done.

The present project is of course better than nothing, but it would be ideal if the department considered the completion of their water and sewer systems during the same year, for they already have a housing project which is making good progress. Then, the possibility of paving the streets and building sidewalks could be considered.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak longer; I just wanted to deal with that specific point, the amount to be spent in Pointe Bleue in the next few years. I am sure that if the minister looks squarely at the situation and if he takes into consideration the requests made by the band council of Pointe Bleue, he will do something.

I would have liked also to talk about the assistance that could be given to the Indians, especially in the field of private industry, in the reservations. I do not have much time tonight, because we must be through by ten o'clock but, next fall, when we continue the study of those estimates, I will deal with the assistance as well as the protection that the government should give the Indians in the reservations.

Today, it is impossible for an Indian to go into business because he cannot get the necessary financing. As I said previously, the Hudson's Bay Company is still all powerful in the reservations. Unless the Indians are given an equal opportunity, there will be no point in transferring to them, some day, the administration of their own affairs. The private interests within the reservations must be respected in the first place.

Recommendations and reports are fine, but when you cannot implement them, it is useless to multiply investigations. You are bound to go around in circles and there is no escape.

There is a group of serious men in the Pointe-Bleue reservation who long for the day when they may at last do like all inhabitants of other municipalities, that is, set up their own businesses, and borrow money to operate their own affairs. I am convinced that if the minister makes an investigation—not through a royal commission but a private one directed by serious people—he will probably get to the heart of the matter and then he will be able to devise a policy, at least with respect to the Pointe-Bleue reservation.

If the Indian has lost confidence in the white man, who can blame him?

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Harkness: I should like to speak briefly in connection with our national parks. I am much afraid that in recent years the general policy with regard to the administration of the national parks has become sadly distorted as compared with what was undoubtedly the original purpose of parliament when the parks were set up. This purpose was to set aside certain areas in Canada so that the people would have full opportunity to enjoy them. Because of the difference in the types of parks there has been a considerable number of errors made as far as the administration of the parks is concerned.

The mountain parks with which I am particularly familiar, having been a resident of Alberta for 50 years during which period I have visited them frequently, are a totally different proposition from the much smaller parks in eastern Canada with which I have also become acquainted to some extent, particularly during the period when I was minister of this department, or its predecessor.

There has of course been a very strong lobby on the part of so-called conservationists to preserve the large western parks particularly as wilderness areas, and I have a great deal of sympathy with this point of view as long as it is not carried to excess. More recently there has been a great deal of difficulty in connection with the ownership of leases or leasing rights to land in the national parks. All this, along with the constant desire of the officials of any department to produce a tidy administration has obscured the basic purpose of our parks, which was to provide areas in which all the people of Canada should have the opportunity to relax and enjoy themselves and those parks.

In our mountain parks, unfortunately, this opportunity has never been provided, because in order to provide such an opportunity facilities must be made available, and this has never been done in the large parks in western Alberta and adjacent areas of British Columbia. Nothing like the amount of low-cost accommodation which would make it possible for the average Canadian to spend a few days in the parks with his family has been provided.

In order to cater for these visitors a considerable number of things have to be done. First it is necessary to provide camp sites. The parks administration has provided a considerable number of new camp sites during recent years and the situation has improved, but there are still nothing like as many camp sites as there should be to accommodate the large numbers of people who should be accommodated and who wish to be accommodated, to say nothing of those who will be visiting the parks in the future years.

Second, there has to be a greater provision of trailer camps. A large number of people who cannot afford to stay at a motel or in a hotel, paying between $10 and $20 a day, come in trailers, and there is still nothing like the number of trailer camp sites necessary to accommodate the people who presently wish to use them, to say nothing of the demand which will undoubtedly arise in the years immediately ahead.

Third, there must be a considerable increase in the number of low-cost motels and cabin camps. The first thing I attempted to change in the administration during the brief period I was minister in charge of national parks was the regulations laying down specifications to be met before a trailer camp or motel could be put up. I am all in favour of having motels or cabin camps looking as attractive as possible, but you can have very attractive low-cost cabin camps or motels which blend in well with the natural surroundings of a park without the person who puts them up being required to spend a very large amount of money doing so.

This has been one of the great shortcomings of the parks throughout the entire 50 years I have been familiar with them. People have not been allowed to put up accommodation which they could rent during a comparatively short season at a price which an average low-income Canadian could afford to pay. It is no use having national parks which are available only to visitors with money or to Canadians with money. If these parks are to serve their purpose they must contain facilities which will enable our low-income group to spend some time in them. This has not been the case, it is not the case now, and it is one of the deficiencies which more than anything else needs to be corrected.

In addition, if people are to visit these parks and enjoy them you have to provide much better access by road than presently exists, and considerably more riding and walking trails. These are things in which the parks administration has in my view been deficient throughout the years. There has been on the part of a considerable number of people the idea that these large western parks should be preserved almost completely in their natural state and that it is a bad thing to put a road through, or a walking trail or a riding trail. But if this is not done, nobody can enjoy the parks, and the purpose for which the parks were set aside is defeated. It is in this respect that the general policy with regard to the parks has been wrong, in my submission, and must be corrected. Action becomes increasingly important as cities grow, as people are crowded together more and more and as there is greater necessity for them to get out into a wilderness, or semi-wilderness, area and enjoy their surroundings.

During the last two or three years the issue which has probably caused the minister the greatest amount of trouble has been that of leasing regulations. I would say that any leasing regulations which are to work from a practical point of view must give security of tenure to the person who has put up a building or bought it from somebody else. Under the present regulations a motel owner, for instance, has security of tenure for 21 years which is not sufficient to allow for the type of development necessary if the people of Canada are to get into the parks and enjoy them.

At Lake Louise a motel site has been offered for tender three times, yet the department has received no bid because there is insufficient security of tenure to justify the investment of a large amount of capital. This will be the situation in all the parks unless we adopt leasing regulations which give sufficient security of tenure to encourage people to build accommodation essential to the enjoyment of the parks by our population. A great deal of the difficulty arises from the fact that there is a desire in any bureaucracy for a nice, tidy administration. I think the national parks branch should forget about a tidy administration and follow a policy which would enable the parks to be used by all the people of this country, rather than one which to a large extent excludes the majority of the people.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I would have liked to say a few things about Indian affairs but I note it is ten minutes to ten o'clock, and one or two of my colleagues wish to make some remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to prolong the debate on the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but since the hon. minister (Mr. Laing) is here, I should like to take this opportunity to tell him that on June 15, 1967, I asked in his absence a question on the situation at Frobisher Bay concerning the Eskimos. I should like here to thank the hon. minister without portfolio (Mr. Chrétien), who answered me at that time.

My question dealt with Frobisher Bay and item no. 25 of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I have received no further answer, oral or written, since June 15, and I hope to be given one in the near future with regard to the following points which I mentioned in my intervention:

> This was the program for the 1967-68 period: Construction of 70 houses for government employees; construction of 100 houses for the Eskimos; construction of adjacent roads; planning for the construction of office and store buildings; preparation of plans for living quarters of 100 bachelors; preparation of plans for building a technical school.

I pointed out that item No. 25 of the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for 1967-68 did not provide any money for part of the program I have just mentioned and, in particular, no money for carrying out the construction program of 70 houses for government employees, no money for the preparation of plans for the construction of office and store buildings, no money for the preparation of plans to build living quarters for 100 bachelors.

I also added:

> Due to the fact that Frobisher Bay has no basic resources and is entirely dependent on the government for its existence, this attitude by the department is causing a feeling of frustration and instability among the population—

Therefore, I ask the hon. minister whether he could not answer my very urgent question.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have very few observations to make in view of the time, but first I would like to say that I think the minister, since taking over this department, has been very encouraging to Indians in what he has done. Most hon. members have been pleased with the announcements he has made, particularly with regard to housing for Indians and other improvements. However, it is my experience that, despite his good intentions, and no doubt those of the senior officials of his department who may have suggested some of these things to him, many of his well-meaning plans have become sadly frustrated, due to the attitude of junior echelons in his department.

I have some knowledge of this, as I happened to be honorary chief of one band of Indians in Ontario, and visited them within the last two days. With respect to the question of housing there is something very interesting that should be brought to the minister's attention. A great deal of money has been put up by the government, with the approval of all hon. members, to provide Indians with better housing. It is the policy of the department that the Indians themselves do as much as they can themselves to help build their new houses. However, apparently the officials in the department seem to think bathrooms are not necessary for Indians.

This is strange to me because I am quite sure C.M.H.C. would not stand for houses being built without bathrooms in areas adjacent to large metropolitan centres. As most hon. members who have experience of dealing with C.M.H.C. know, it is almost impossible to get a loan from the corporation to build a house unless the plans include all kinds of sanitary provisions. But apparently this does not apply to Indians. As a result the inference many people get is that Indians are regarded by some departmental officials as some kind of second class citizens, and I would ask the minister to look into this matter.

Surely bathrooms are not a luxury in the southern part of Ontario and elsewhere, although they may well be in the far north permafrost area. Where Indian children are attending public schools and high schools which have these facilities, they should not be denied them at home.

The department has also done a lot to promote policies under which Indians on reserves are helped to carry on businesses for themselves. One example I have in mind is the building of a marina in the Georgian bay area. This is a good project. The Indians have hired an expert, who has run other marinas, to give them advice on the project. But the Indian agent comes prowling around every week and says, "This is wrong, that is wrong; this should be done, that should be done." I suspect he knows nothing about the work involved.

Further, tenders have to be invited for even the most trivial amounts of material. The manager that the Indians have employed says he could save money if he had authority to purchase material locally. Also in this regard, the department sends down large quantities of material that serve no useful purpose in the construction of the project. Only this afternoon I happened to see at this marina a large pile of stuff sent there by the department which is useless, and is just going to waste.

This brings me to another matter which I think should be considered by the appropriate parliamentary committee, namely the question of the usefulness of Indian agents in view of the government's new policies. I am not suggesting they should be gotten rid of at once, but if the Indian people are to achieve their own welfare this form of paternalism, particularly when it is exercised by people who are not always as competent as they might be, is unwise. I hope the minister will give consideration to the points I have raised.

Item agreed to.

(The following items were agreed to:)

Indian affairs—

5. Administration, operation and maintenance including expenditures on works on other than federal property, grants, contributions and special payments including those specified in the sub-vote titles in the Estimates, recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council with the Governments of the provinces and Territories and with local school boards in respect of social assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children, authority to make grants and contributions pursuant to agreements entered into with the Governments of the provinces or the Territories or other groups or authorities approved of by the Governor in Council for the provision of welfare and other services to Indians, and authority to provide, in respect of Indian commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Indians, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other Act, the sale of such finished goods, $84,264,700.

10. Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment including construction or acquisition of works for Indian bands, the operation and control of which may be transferred to the Indian bands at the discretion of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, expenditures on works on other than federal property, assistance to Indians and Indian bands for the construction or acquisition of housing and other buildings and related works, land and equipment, and recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council with the Governments of the Provinces and the Territories and with local school boards in respect of the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children, $33,913,000.

Northern program—

20. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates; authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the Government of the Northwest Territories of expenditures on education and vocational training and for other services performed on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory; authority to sell electric power and fuel oil (and to provide services in respect thereof), in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, to private consumers in remote locations when alternative local sources of supply are not available; authority to provide in respect of Indian and Eskimo commercial activities for the instruction and supervision of Indians and Eskimos, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other Act, the sale of such finished goods, and authority to make payments to Indians and Eskimos under social assistance, welfare housing and child welfare programs, $33,777,900.

25. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the Government of the Northwest Territories of expenditures on education and vocational training; authority to make recoverable advances in respect of services provided and work performed on other than federal property when only the department is capable of performing such service or work; authority for a program of construction and acquisition of housing for Indians and Eskimos and the sale of houses to Indians and Eskimos on such terms and conditions and at such prices as the Governor in Council may approve, including the sale to Eskimos at a price $1,000 less than cost for one-room and one-bedroom houses and $2,000 less than cost for larger houses; and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $26,047,000, $21,614,800.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

30. Northern mineral assistance grants—To authorize in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, northern mineral development assistance grants to individuals and corporations, in order to assist in the mineral and economic development of the Canadian north, and to authorize total commitments in respect of development assistance grants in the current and subsequent fiscal years not exceeding $9,000,000; estimated amount required in the current fiscal year, $3,000,000.

32. To authorize interim payments to be made in respect of the current fiscal year to the Governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories on account of future payments, including payments in respect of the amortization of outstanding loans, to be made under financial agreements to be entered into between the Government of Canada and the Commissioners of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories; estimated amount required, $9,500,000.

National parks, historic sites and monuments, wildlife resources conservation and development including administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act—

35. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, payment to national battlefields commission for the purposes and subject to the provisions of an Act respecting the national battlefields at Quebec and authority to make expenditures on the proposed new national park in the area of Kejimkujik Lake in Nova Scotia, $19,820,000.

40. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including expenditures on works on other than federal property, authority to make expenditures on the proposed new national park in the area of Kejimkujik Lake in Nova Scotia and, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, authority to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $20,436,100, $19,936,100.

Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

Northern program—

L45. Loans to the government of the Yukon Territory for capital expenditures, on terms and conditions approved by the governor in council; the loans provided for in a financial agreement to be entered into between the government of Canada and the commissioner of the Yukon Territory to be reduced by the amount of any loans made hereunder; estimated amount required, $5,000,000.

L50. Loans to the government of the Northwest Territories for capital expenditures, on terms and conditions approved by the governor in council; the loans provided for in a financial agreement to be entered into between the government of Canada and the commissioner of the Northwest Territories to be reduced by the amount of any loans made hereunder; estimated amount required, $2,800,000.

Northern Canada Power Commission—

L55. Advances to the Northern Canada Power Commission for the purpose of capital expenditures in accordance with section 15 of the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, $2,650,000.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Resolutions considered in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the present government has done a good many mean and cruel things, but I suggest that nothing it has done is as mean or as cruel as what seems to be shaping up with regard to our retired civil servants. This issue of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants has been with us for a long long time; indeed in my experience—it has been with us for over 20 years. Finally in June of 1966 the present government consented to refer the matter of raising the pensions of retired civil servants to the special joint committee on the public service of Canada. That reference was actually made in January of 1967.

On May 8, 1967, that special joint committee made its report to both houses of parliament recommending that increases in the pensions of retired civil servants and also the pensions of retired armed forces and R.C.M.P. personnel be made. Since that time I have raised the matter in the House of Commons ten or a dozen times. Every time, until very recently at any rate, the answer has been to the effect that the matter was under active consideration. We were in fact led to believe before the committee made its report that if it made a unanimous recommendation, the government would act upon it. It is now more than eight weeks since that recommendation was made and yet here we are within a few days of taking a summer recess and it begins to look as though nothing is going to be done before parliament recesses for its summer break.

On May 8 the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) assured me that the matter was under active consideration, the matter being the precise recommendation that increases be made. On May 15 the same President of the Treasury Board told me the matter was presently under study. On May 25 the same President of the Treasury Board told me the government was making progress on the matter. On June 2 I put my question about this matter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I asked him whether it would be dealt with before a summer break. His answer was, "We will do our best". I thought that answer was worth something. I am beginning to think it was not worth the time it took him to say it. On June 12 I again put the question to the Prime Minister. He told me that the matter was under urgent consideration. I put it to him again on June 15 at which time he reminded me of his statement of three days earlier to the effect that the matter was under active and urgent consideration. As a supplementary question, I asked him why it could not be placed on the order paper within the next few days. I was brought to order at that time by the Chair and it was then that I decided to raise the question on an adjournment motion.

On June 22 I again asked whether there would be any action on this matter before the house rises for a summer break and again I was told by the President of the Treasury Board that the matter was under active consideration. On June 26, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board, I put the question to the government house leader, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), who assured me that he would bring the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board.

On June 30, last Friday, I asked the President of the Treasury Board whether, in view of the attention that has been given to this matter, he could get the legislation for increases in civil service pensions on the order paper so we could deal with it this week, before parliament recesses for a summer break. His reply was that he did not think this was possible although the matter was receiving the consideration of the government. That means, unless I do not understand the plain meaning of words, that the government has no intention of acting on this matter before this house rises for the summer recess.

On the last two or three occasions when I asked this question I have been greeted with impatient murmurs from the other side of the house. The only audible words I could get were: Why don't you wait; this is going to be done? To say to old retired servants of the federal government who have been waiting for months and years for this increase that they should wait still longer, that they should wait until the fall, is the ultimate in cruelty.

I am sure that between now and the fall other matters will arise which will be given higher priority and it will be October or November before we get to this legislation; and it will be December or January before any increases are added to the cheques of these retired civil servants. Many of these people will not need the increases because they will have died before the increases come through. If, as I believe, the government has made up its mind that it is going to go along with the recommendations of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada, and if, as I believe, the government is going to act on this matter in the fall, why not do so now? What rhyme or reason is there to putting off any longer the action that must be taken on this issue?

In my view this House of Commons should not break for a summer recess until it has dealt with this matter. I feel very strongly about this. We have a house order that requires certain business to be completed by Thursday night of this week, and no individual member can stop that, but there is still the question as to whether we are going to rise on Friday for a recess of a period of time not yet stated, and I for one feel we should not do that. I for one will not agree to our rising on Friday unless the government gives us the satisfaction of answering this important question.

To my knowledge these people have been put off for 20 to 25 years, those who have been around that long. The government has been dilly-dallying and boondoggling with this issue for many months, since it came to power, and for weeks since the committee made its report. I insist that the time for action is now, and by "now" I mean before this house rises for a summer break.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in respect of pensions for retired civil servants is an important one which has been raised in the house on several occasions during the present session. I do not know that I can add anything to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already said in answer to the hon. member's question.

This matter was considered most carefully by a joint committee of the house and the other place at the last session of parliament. No less than eight meetings were held with evidence received from 21 witnesses representing all possible interests. A report was filed by that committee late this spring containing certain recommendations which the government undertook to consider. These recommendations, as the hon. member knows, were supported unanimously by the members of the committee. I need not go into the details as to what the committee's report of May 8 recommended.

Suffice it to say that the six suggested requirements of the report compel, because of their ramifications, most earnest and conscientious consideration by the government. The Prime Minister has already given assurance that the government has this matter under active and urgent study.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The President of the Treasury Board, because of his important commitments today, is unable to be here tonight. He, likewise, has given this same assurance on previous occasions. I can do no more than reaffirm these assurances and say to the hon. member and the house that just as soon as the government is in a position to make its position known, it will lose no time in acquainting the house of its intentions with regard to this important matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL CONSULAR SERVICE

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I must first of all thank the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), for having willingly added a few additional minutes to his arduous day in order to answer my question.

A few years ago, the Canadian government decided to open a consulate in Louisiana, more specifically in New Orleans. Since then, it has been found that the consulate has fallen far short of expectations at the time of its establishment. It is not that the representation over there is deficient, that the choice was untimely, but rather that the activities that had been expected did not materialize.

And these consulates, scattered here and there, more often serve as commercial posts rather than centres of diplomatic activity.

That is precisely the case with the consulate at New Orleans which, with that in Los Angeles, serves the southern states. That consulate, when all commercial activities are finally added up, gives far from impressive results.

Therefore, that is my first reason for proposing that the consulate should be closed and replaced by another one that could perhaps be located in the state of Florida.

The second reason in favour of such a consulate in the state of Florida is precisely that thousands of our nationals are found in Florida throughout the year, whether as tourists or as people who, after several years of hard work, choose to retire there. Consequently, the presence of those thousands of Canadian nationals is more than enough to warrant the establishment of a place for reference, of a consulate in Florida, a much more appropriate location than Louisiana.

The third reason I would like to give is the following: the state of Florida is much more important, on the basis of population and on the basis of area, than the state of Louisiana.

The fourth reason is that the state of Florida is more industrialized and the space research centre which is located there represents a growth factor for all kinds of activities, the scope of which is difficult to anticipate.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the last reason I would like to submit is that the establishment of the consulate in Florida would, first of all, permit the establishment of a relationship between the Caribbean and Canada and then with the other southern states on the Atlantic coast which are an uncommon tourist attraction for thousands of Canadian citizens.

For all those reasons, I believe that it would be appropriate to repeat the suggestion I made at the beginning, that is to close the consulate in Louisiana, because it is not useful enough, and to open a consulate in Florida either at Tallahassee, Tampa or Miami, to give better service to the Canadian people who regularly visit the state of Florida.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must first of all say that it is always a pleasure to have an opportunity to reply to the hon. member for Lotbinière, one of most lucid and intelligent speakers in this house, in short, one of the greatest speakers in the history of the house.

I rise tonight first as the supporter of New Orleans which is the natural location for a Canadian consulate. It is one of the greatest centres of the United States. Located in the middle of the southern United States, the consulate is handy for the visitors coming from the west from Texas as well as those coming from the east, from Florida and the great state of Louisiana.

It is the old capital of the Acadians, the place where jazz was born, the location of the famous Bourbons street and it is also the place where lives the famous Mr. Garrison, outstanding lawyer.

The hon. member has set forth some striking arguments in favour of the opening of another consulate closer to Florida. Of course, the problem is always the inevitable question of expenditures, the eternal problem of realizing a proper balance between economy and service.

The government will review periodically the matter of Canadian consular representation in the United States, and I can assure you that, when the next opportunity occurs, it will take into account the remarks made, as I said earlier, by the very intelligent member for Lotbinière.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—WIARTON, ONTARIO—GRANT FOR HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I posed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising from two communications I received today dated June 28 and 29 respectively. I say that part of the information contained in the text of the communications was misleading and erroneous. The letter of June 28 reads as follows:

> As announced in the press today I have approved a grant, under the terms of the hospital construction grant rules, in the amount of $79,052, towards the cost of new construction and renovations at the Bruce Peninsula and District Memorial Hospital, Wiarton, Ontario.

The part which I claim is misleading and erroneous is the statement "as announced in the press today", that is on June 28. The actual facts are that the announcement was made on the front page of the Wiarton Echo on June 22 and must have gone out from the minister's office at least a week prior to that date, under the caption "Federal Grant to Hospital".

• (10:20 p.m.)

I read the letter which is addressed to the editor of the Wiarton Echo:

> We would like to use some valuable space in your paper to make the following announcement:
> "We have been informed by the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, Minister of Health and Welfare, that a grant of $79,052 has been approved under the hospital construction grant rules toward the cost of the new construction and renovations at the Bruce Peninsula and District Memorial Hospital, Wiarton, Ontario."
> Kent Lamont, President,
> Bruce Liberal Association.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

I ask the minister, who are "we"? Why was the board of governors not informed directly by the minister? Is he deliberately downgrading the efforts of this group? It certainly seems to me, sir, this is a reflection on their integrity.

The second letter is dated June 29, 1967, and reads:

> You will have received my letter of yesterday's date informing you of the federal assistance for the Bruce Peninsula and District Memorial Hospital, Wiarton, Ontario. Today—

That is June 29.

> —an announcement is being made to the press that I have approved a grant of $90,097, under the terms of the hospital construction grant rules, toward the cost of the construction and renovation program being carried out at the Kincardine and District General Hospital, Kincardine, Ontario.

The actual facts in this case are these: An announcement was made on June 28, which is prior to this, and it must have gone out from the minister's office during the last week. The following appears in the Kincardine News:

> Word has been received from Murray Gaunt, M.L.A., Huron-Bruce of the following communication from the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, Federal Minister of National Health and Welfare: "On June 15 under the terms of the hospital construction grant rules, I approved a grant in the amount of $90,097 towards the cost of new construction and renovation at the Kincardine and District Hospital".
> This information was received by Mr. A. E. Greer—

May I say here, that Mr. A. E. Greer is an executive officer of the Bruce Liberal Association.

> —chairman of the public relations committee of the board of governors of the hospital.

Why did the minister make the announcement in this way? Why was the board of governors not informed directly by the minister? Why must the minister bring politics into this, with all the scope we have in the house for politics? I thought the last place we would find this type of action would be the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Knowles: Oh?

Mr. Loney: The hon. member says, "Oh". The board of governors is a volunteer group. They volunteer their service, their capabilities, their time and their experience. I think it is degrading, as I said a few minutes ago, to treat them in this manner. In this instance there was no effort at playing politics. There were no representations made through me as the elected member of the district. I did not make any representations to the minister's office on behalf of the board of governors. There have been no political implications.

My question to the minister is this: Why, when ministering to the needs of those people residing in the communities which will be served by these improved and much needed facilities, does the minister engage in such an amateurish way in low, petty politics of such a despicable nature?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I regret that I am not as well informed as to the identity of the various persons who have been informed about the hospital grants as is my hon. friend—

Mr. Knowles: Oh, come, come.

Mr. MacEachen: —because I assure him this is the first time I have been informed that these citizens to whom he has referred are prominent in any political party. May I just say, Mr. Speaker, that there is quite a large flow of information from the Department of National Health and Welfare to various groups in all parts of Canada in respect of the payment of hospital grants. In such circumstances, the normal practice is certainly to advise the members of parliament at the time the official release from the Department of National Health and Welfare is put out. With respect to both these cases, that procedure was followed. The hon. member for Bruce, who raised this grievance, received information with respect to both these grants. He was good enough to write me and express his appreciation not only for the action taken but for the letters advising him of these grants. They were sent to him on the day specified and in conjunction with the official release from the department.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we do send out the information to hospital administrators and interested citizens. I notice that in respect to a number of hospitals that have been covered by these press releases letters have gone out to the chairmen of the hospital boards and to the hospital administrators. In some cases it is apparent that there cannot be perfect synchronization in the delivery of these letters. As my hon. friend suggests, it is obvious that other interested persons who were entitled as citizens to this information also received it and made use of it in this way.

No effort was made to upstage the operators or administrators of the hospital, nor indeed was any effort made to upstage the hon. member, who is as free to use this information as any of the other persons to whom it was addressed. I assure my hon. friend that no effort is being made to play politics in providing this information. This is public information and we want the widest possible dissemination of it. I am afraid that I cannot agree with him that somehow it is bad citizenship if this information is put in the newspapers by a person who happens to be identified with a political party as well as with a hospital.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

Ceremonies marking the

HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CONFEDERATION

in the presence of

HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II

on Parliament Hill, Ottawa.

July 1st, 1967

ADDRESS BY
HON. SYDNEY J. SMITH
SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

YOUR MAJESTY:

On this memorable milestone in our history—made more memorable and joyful by your gracious presence—after a century of sun and storm, we beg to tell Your Majesty that our devotion to the Crown has grown in depth and strength, and to speak humbly of our affection for your person.

To express to Your Majesty our loyalty and affection and our gratitude for the presence in Canada of Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on this historic occasion, the following humble Address has been passed by the Senate and Commons of Canada:

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY ELIZABETH THE SECOND,

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, wish humbly to convey to Your Majesty this expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our appreciation of the presence in Canada of Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip at the celebration of the Centenary of Confederation.

We pray that Your Majesty may continue to reign for many years as our gracious and beloved Sovereign.

ADDRESS BY

HON. LUCIEN LAMOUREUX, Q.C., M.P.,

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

YOUR MAJESTY,

We, the Members of the House of Commons of Canada, beg leave to express to Your Majesty, on behalf of the Canadian people, our loyal and affectionate greetings. We extend to Your Majesty and to His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, a most cordial welcome to Ottawa on this day of deep historic significance for all Canadians.

[Translation]

YOUR MAJESTY;

Your visit in this year of the Centennial of Confederation is a great honour and a great joy; we are particularly happy to express our sincere affection and loyalty.

Canadians from sea to sea are represented here to assure Your Majesty of their unfailing devotion to your person as Queen of Canada. Your presence among them confirms in their hearts the special place which the Monarchy holds in our development as a nation; your words contribute to bind our people together, to encourage them in the pursuit of their ideal and to strengthen their will to enrich the Canadian mosaic, reflecting more particularly their dual origins.

The achievement of the Fathers of Confederation therefore deserves to be pursued in accordance with the principles that marked the birth of our country, recognizing now as then that the Crown is the cornerstone of legislative power and that it is also the fount of honour and justice.

[English]

One hundred years ago today, a new Canada was born. The British North America Act of 1867, to which Your Majesty's revered predecessor, Queen Victoria, gave the Royal assent, was an act of faith in the people and in the Parliamentary institutions of the new Canada. The intervening years have witnessed an increasing fulfilment of the hopes and aspirations of those who believed in the destiny of our people and of our land.

In a very real sense, the Canadian experience with unity of political purpose in a rich diversity of cultures provided a meaningful precedent for the evolution of the Commonwealth, and expression of international neighbourhood perhaps unique in the history of man.

The Crown has become the spiritual keeper of the ideals of freedom and equality that bring together the nations of the Commonwealth. We Canadians are proud and grateful to be linked, through Your Majesty, with these sister nations in the pursuit of peace and progress for all mankind.

As we enter the second century of Confederation, may we, in Canada, express our faith and confidence in the future of our country and its continuing development as a member of the Commonwealth of which our Queen is the head.

Therefore, I am proud to tender to Your Majesty the following address of loyalty on behalf of the Canadian House of Commons:

[Translation]

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY ELIZABETH THE SECOND,

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the members of the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, wish humbly to convey to Your Majesty this expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our appreciation of the presence in Canada of Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip at the celebration of the Centenary of Confederation.

We pray that Your Majesty may continue to reign for many years as our gracious and beloved Sovereign.

ADDRESS BY

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

Mr. Speaker of the Senate

Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons

I thank you both most sincerely for the Loyal Addresses which you have read on behalf of Parliament and for your welcome to my husband and myself.

One hundred years of Confederation; what a simple statement but what a remarkable chapter in Canada's history. It is altogether right and fitting that Sovereign and people should meet together here at the heart and centre of Canadian existence to give thanks on this great occasion.

Canada is a country that has been blest beyond most other countries in this world. Although there have been all the possibilities for human anguish and conflict, the pages of Canada's history during the last hundred years have hardly been stained by serious misfortunes. The problems which faced the statesmen of 1867 and the national problems which have had to be met in the intervening years have been solved, with rare and minor exceptions, through discussion and through an effort of tolerance, goodwill and understanding.

When I visited the scenes of those historic discussions at Charlottetown and Quebec, three years ago, it came to me how quietly this nation had been created by men sitting around a table. Not the least important service rendered by Sir John Macdonald, Sir Georges Etienne Cartier and the other Fathers of the Confederation, was this tradition of calm consultation which they established.

Let no one underestimate the imagination and daring shown by those men one hundred years ago. They created one nation of this great country which reaches from sea to sea, a land rich in the things that man needs for a good life, enough to provide for a varied and growing population and to help meet the world's needs as well. They also created a nation that has grown and prospered in an atmosphere of freedom, where differences are respected, and where the rights of individual men and women to work out their own salvations have never been long denied. These are profound reasons for our thanksgiving.

On this day of celebration it is right that we should remember with gratitude the men and women who have held responsibility and authority—at the time of confederation and down through the years in the National Capital as in the Provinces—for their contribution to the birth and growth of Canada.

I can think of no more valiant and fitting representative of the people I have in mind than the late General Vanier, soldier, patriot and servant of Canada.

I have spoken of the great men, the men whose names have an honoured place in Canada's history, but we must not forget that we owe as much to the unsung work and steadfast lives of great numbers of more humble people. The men and their families who made the clearings and worked the land, and who built the roads, railways and canals. The greatness and stability of this country also rests on these firm foundations. I am thinking of the eager immigrants who came with such high hopes and had to face the dread of cholera; of the early settlers on the prairies struggling through the harsh winters; of the fishermen determined to wring a livelihood in the storm and danger of unfamiliar waters; of the many thousands who went back in two world wars because they believed so strongly in their own freedom. It is these, the ordinary people of Canada, who have given flesh and sinew to the plans of the Fathers of the Confederation.

[Translation]

It is a hundred years of nationhood that we celebrate today. But let us not forget the earlier centuries of arduous labour that came before Confederation. I am not likely to overlook the contributions made by those of British stock who came here from elsewhere in North America or who were settlers from the old world in the new. Even more extended in time, and as deep in impact, have been the contributions made by Canadians of French descent. Ever since Champlain founded his Habitation at Quebec—and planted rose bushes around it—this air has been sweetened with the French tongue and French culture and sharpened with French intelligence and French resource. It is one of the marvels of history that a society planted so precariously in the wilderness should not only have survived but should have flourished so triumphantly, still loyal to its past and open to everything that is new. From all I hear, from everything I know, I am sure that the contributions of French Canada to the life of the country as a whole will prove even ampler in the future than they have been in the years gone by.

Tomorrow I sail down the St. Lawrence to pay a visit to Expo 67. I have no doubt that I will find there a great mirror held up to the future. It will be possible to catch glimpses of what may be expected in the further exploration of space, in new methods of travel and communications, in the growth of new technologies. Such a future clearly holds as large opportunities for imagination and daring as any that have existed up to now. And the qualities that have made this country what it is will also enable Canadians to share in such a future to the full. On the basis of the natural and human resources that are available here, the broad industrial development, the many centres of learning and research, and the skills found here, there should be few limits to what Canada is capable of. Above all, the energy and resourcefulness of Canadians may be relied on to carry them forward successfully whatever the swiftness of the changes that we will witness.

Sustaining a human perspective will be possible, I am inclined to think, only if we have the courage to probe within ourselves as well as into space. And in thinking about the future we must not be too much distracted from the problems that we can see about us in our society today. This country is fortunate and prosperous above most others. But not all of its people are free from want or hardship. There are still wrongs to be righted and suffering to be relieved. There is still a constant effort of accommodation to be made so that all the peoples in this great country may live together in friendship and harmony.

[English]

Confederation have given Canada the economic strength which has made it possible for her to help the needy countries in their economic development; it has made it possible for Canada to provide forces to help keep the peace where it has been threatened, and, above all, it has given increasing power and authority to Canada's voice in world affairs. This power and authority derives from the internal national unity and it can only be sustained and flourish if that national unity prospers.

From the very earliest days, the name of Canada is associated with prodigious voyages; first the voyages of the seamen from Bristol and St. Malo in their tiny ships, then the explorers who went by canoe up the Ottawa to the Great Lakes and along the waterways of the Middle West to the Rockies and beyond. With the beginning of this new century the whole Canadian nation embarks on another great voyage. May it bring peace and prosperity, happiness and harmony and a just reward for the work and endeavour of each one of you.

PROGRAMME

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO today, our ancestors witnessed the birth of a new nation. Now, a century later, some twenty million Canadians share the heritage of freedom and material prosperity for which, on this historic occasion, all will wish to join in thanksgiving to God.

The roots of twentieth century Canada lie deep in the traditions of many peoples. Our society and system of government have evolved through generations of political adjustment and social change. We have sought to take the best from the past and to mould our institutions to meet the demands of today's world. It is fitting that we should recollect and acknowledge our debt to the wisdom and vision of the Fathers of Confederation who set the course for Canada's development. It must be our resolve to preserve and nourish all that is worthy in that inheritance and transmit it to those who will be our heirs.

Throughout this day, people are coming together across the land to celebrate the Centennial of Confederation. In the nation's capital, the Senate and Commons have assembled in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. Here, visible to all, is our treasured institution of Parliament, of which the spirit and sinew resides in the people themselves.

The future is charged with excitement and challenge. Let us now, in humility, but with confidence in that future, dedicate ourselves to the task ahead.

Call to Worship

MR. LAVY N. BECKER

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance.

O come, let us worship, and bow down, and kneel before the Lord, our Maker. For He is the Lord our God; and we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand.

O Lord My God (Beethoven)

Prayer of Invocation

RIGHT REV. TIMOTHEOS

O Lord our God, great, eternal, wonderful in glory, who keepest covenant and promise for those that love Thee with their whole heart, who art the life of all, the help of those that flee to Thee, the hope of those that cry unto Thee: Cleanse us from our sins, and from every thought displeasing to Thy goodness. Cleanse our souls and bodies, our hearts and consciences, that with pure heart and a clear mind, with perfect love and the calm hope, we may confidently and fearlessly pray to Thee;

And to Thy Name be the praise for ever. Amen.

Our Father, Who Art in Heaven...

THE RIGHT REV. DR. W. C. LOCKHART

Our Father, who art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy Name;
Thy kingdom come;
Thy will be done on earth
as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread;
And forgive us our trespasses,
As we forgive those who trespass against us;
And lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from evil.
For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen

Responsive Reading

REV. D. P. NEUFELD THE RIGHT REV. J. LOGAN-VENCTA

Clergy: I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

Response: My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.

Clergy: He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

Response: Behold, he that keepeth thee shall neither slumber nor sleep.

Clergy: The Lord is thy keeper; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand.

Response: The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

Clergy: The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; he shall preserve thy soul.

Response: The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in, from this time forth, and even for evermore.

Hymn

All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice,
Him serve with mirth, His praise forth tell
Come ye before Him and rejoice.

Know that the Lord is God indeed;
Without our aid He did us make;
We are His folk, He doth us feed,
And for His sheep He doth us take.

O enter then His gates with praise,
Approach with joy His courts unto;
Praise, laud, and bless His name always,
For it is seemly so to do.

For why the Lord our God is good;
His mercy is for ever sure;
His truth at all times firmly stood,
And shall from age to age endure. Amen.

Scriptural Reading

THE PRIME MINISTER

Be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him speak peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled.

The Centennial Anthem

HIS EMINENCE CARDINAL ROY

I entreat you, then—I, a prisoner for the Lord's sake: as God has called you, live up to your calling. Be humble always and gentle, and patient too. Be forbearing with one another and charitable. Spare no effort to make fast with bonds of peace and unity which the Spirit gives. There is one body and one Spirit, as there is also one hope held out in God's call to you; one faith, one baptism: one God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all. But each of us has been given his gift, his due portion of Christ's bounty ...to equip God's people for work in His service, to the building up of the body of Christ. So shall we all at last attain to the unity inherent in our faith and our knowledge of the Son of God—to mature manhood, measured by nothing less than the full stature of Christ.

Let us speak the truth in love; so shall we fully grow up into Christ. He is the head, and on Him the whole body depends. Bonded and knit together by every constituent joint, the whole frame grows through the due activity of each part, and builds itself up in love.

The Centennial Hymn

Prayer of Thanksgiving

THE MOST REV. H. H. CLARK

Almighty God, of whose righteous will all things are, and were created; Thou last gathered our people into a great nation, and sent them to sow beside all waters, and multiply sure dwellings on the earth. Deepen the root of our life in everlasting righteousness. Make us equal to our high trusts, reverent in the use of freedom, just in the exercise of power, generous in the protection of weakness. With all Thy blessings, bless Thy servant Elizabeth, our Queen, with all members of the Royal House. Fill her heart with such loyalty to Thee, that her people may be exalted by their loyalty to her. To our legislators and councillors give insight and faithfulness, that our laws may clearly speak the right, and our judges purely interpret them. May wisdom and knowledge be the stability of our times, and our deepest trust be in Thee, the Lord of nations, and the King of Kings. Amen.

A Litany of Re-Dedication

RABBI S. M. ZAMBROWSKY—THE RIGHT REV. DR. W. C. LOCKHART

Clergy: Remembering our heritage with gratitude and our progress with humility, let us now re-dedicate ourselves to those moral and spiritual principles which have been the foundation of our freedom. O Lord our God, that all our people may live and labour, dream and build, fulfilling their destiny under Thy providence:

Response: We re-dedicate ourselves, O Lord.

Clergy: That all may share a common purpose, striving for unity, honoring our many origins, cultures, and religious faiths:

Response: We re-dedicate ourselves, O Lord.

Clergy: That we may grow in brotherhood, without fear, without arrogance, without servility, in constant pursuit of righteousness:

Response: We re-dedicate ourselves, O Lord.

Clergy: That we may not think of ourselves alone, but of all mankind, acting within the family of nations with understanding and generosity, with patience and wisdom:

Response: We re-dedicate ourselves, O Lord.

Clergy: That in all our earthly tasks we may so order our lives as ever to confess Thy care and rule:

All: Hear us and help us, O Lord our God, and to Thy Name be the glory forever. Amen.

Hymn—Now Thank We all Our God

Now thank we all our God,
With heart, and hands and voices,
Who wondrous things hath done,
In whom His world rejoices;
Who from our mother's arms
Hath blessed us on our way
With countless gifts of love,
And still is ours today.

O may this bounteous God
Through all our life be near us,
With ever joyful hearts
And blessed peace to cheer us
And keep us in His grace,
And guide us when perplexed,
And free us from all ills
In this world and the next.

The Benediction

THE MOST REV. H. H. CLARK

May the God of peace Himself give you peace at all times and in all ways. Those things which you have learned, and received, and heard, and seen do. And the God of peace be with you. Amen.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 5, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

First report of standing committee on external affairs—Mr. Dubé.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

FINANCE

DEPOSIT INSURANCE REGULATIONS—TABLING AND REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of last session the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Perth asked that the regulations pertaining to deposit insurance be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I undertook to do so in this session. Therefore with the leave of the house I should like to table in English and in French copies of bylaw No. 1 of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, passed as order in council No. 1967-579 as amended by order in council 1967-1065.

By leave I should also like to move:

That bylaw No. 1 of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, passed as order in council 1967-579 as amended by order in council No. 1967-1065, be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the documents to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING UNANIMOUS VERDICT OF JURY

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-145, entitled "An Act to amend the Criminal Code (Dissent of a Juror)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, this bill introduces a new concept with regard to the verdict of a jury.

With a view to avoiding new trials which often cause useless delays and expenses, I propose that the verdict of 11 jurors have the same effect as a unanimous verdict.

I trust this bill can improve the administration of justice and make it more expeditious and more efficient.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*ACTIVITIES OF MEMBERS OF LABOUR RELATIONS TASK FORCE

Question No. 68—Mr. Peters:

1. Has the Minister of Labour at hand a report of the recent activities of the gentlemen appointed to the labour relations task force, particularly with a view as to whether present or recently completed tasks for other governments and private corporations and unions, such as the government of Manitoba, Domtar, and the S.I.U., may have committed them to positions regarding management's rights and the matter of labour management co-operation which would limit their usefulness and openness of mind in the work they are now doing?

2. What is the record of such activities since 1963 for Dean Woods, Abbé Dion, John Crispo, and Dean Carrothers?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred question No. 68 is as follows: 1. No reports have been received either from the task force on labour relations, or from other persons, relating to the appointment of the members of the task force. The members of the task force were selected because of their reputations and extensive experience in labour relations matters. They have not completed nor are they presently involved in tasks which would in any way limit their usefulness and openness of mind in relation to the work of the task force.

2. Abbé Dion and John Crispo have served as chairmen of Domtar joint labour-management committees. Dean Woods has served as chairman of the province of Manitoba's joint labour-management review committee, and Dean Carrothers was retained by the board of maritime trustees to advise the board on the preparation of a model constitution for the S.I.U.

*POST-WAR EXECUTIONS OF GERMAN TROOPS

Question No. 69—Mr. Peters:

1. Before the Minister of National Defence made his statement in the house on December 21, 1966 (Hansard, pages 11445-6) regarding the post-war execution of German troops, was his attention drawn to a press report in the Times of London on May 18, 1945, relating to a series of executions other than those explained by the minister?

2. If so, what was the nature of the advice the minister received regarding this report?

3. If not, has the minister ensured that a thorough search through regimental and more senior formations' war diaries of the period has been made which would belie the Times report?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The statement I made in the house on December 21, 1966 referred to the circumstances surrounding the trial and execution of two German sailors, Dorfer and Beck. I cannot recall just precisely when the Times report of 1945, datelined Utrecht, was brought to my attention but it is likely that I was aware of it prior to December 21, 1966.

The 1st Canadian Armoured Brigade was in the Utrecht area at that time and the war diaries for the complete month of May, 1945, of Canadian units, that is the headquarters 1st Canadian Armoured Brigade, 12th Armoured Regiment and 14th Armoured Regiment have been examined and no reference to the incident referred to in the Times report has been found. On May 17 the 3rd Canadian Infantry Division moved into the Utrecht area. The war diaries of the division and the three brigades, 7th, 8th and 9th and the regiments for the month of May have been examined. No reference to the incident was found. The war diary of the 3rd Canadian Anti-Tank Regiment, the only Canadian artillery unit in the area, also was examined without finding any reference to the incident. This examination of war diaries which is the only likely source of information on the subject has not disclosed any information relating to the incident referred to in the Times report.

ALTERATIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS, CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Question No. 75—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Are alterations or improvements planned at the central experimental farm to (a) the greenhouses (b) sanitary and storm sewers (c) the K. W. Neatby building (d) the William Saunders building?

2. What is the nature and purpose of such alteration or improvement to each such building or service?

3. Will any additional space or other facility be provided in any building and, if so, how many square feet or what facility will be provided?

4. What is the estimated cost of each of such alterations or improvements?

[Mr. Matheson.]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

1. (a) Yes, (b) yes, (c) yes, (d) yes.

2. (a) Completion of alterations and improvements to provide for biological examination of imported plant material, a continuing renovation and improvement program of painting, recapping, renewal of heating and electrical systems, and general work area improvements. (b) Provision of new sanitary and storm sewers to service buildings south of the National Capital Commission driveway, permitting the abandonment of a septic tank system. (c) Replacement of existing transformers and improvements to power distribution system; improvements in air exchange system; relocation of partitions to permit accommodation changes. (d) Relocation of partitions and renovations to accommodate a plant taxonomy research centre.

3. Yes, an office laboratory addition to the apiary building of 1,260 sq. ft. and interior improvements in other buildings.

4. It is not customary to publish estimates of cost before tenders are called.

ROAD REVISIONS, CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Question No. 76—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What revisions to roads on the central experimental farm are planned?

2. What is the purpose of such revisions?

3. What is the total footage of such revisions?

4. What is the estimated cost of such revisions?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

1. It is proposed to widen the entrance to the farm near the K. W. Neatby building and to extend Driveway Avenue.

2. To improve traffic flow.

3. Entrance—4 lanes with median—552 feet; Driveway Avenue extension—2 lane carriageway—1400 feet.

4. It is not customary to publish estimates of cost before tenders are called.

*REMOVALS FROM INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION FOR IMPROPRIETY

Question No. 81—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Have any Canadians connected directly or indirectly with the international control commission in Asia been removed from North Viet Nam for having been involved in alleged clandestine activities or for other improprieties?

2. If so, what is the total number?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first and second parts of this question is as follows.

No Canadians connected directly or indirectly with the international commissions for supervision and control in Indochina have been removed from North Viet Nam for having been involved in "alleged clandestine activities." With respect to "other improprieties", the term used in the question, the records of the Departments of External Affairs and National Defence indicate that during the 13 years of the commissions' existence 12 Canadians have been withdrawn from North Viet Nam by the Canadian authorities for disciplinary reasons. None of these cases had anything whatsoever to do with espionage or anything of that nature.

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.,—ENGINEERING FEASIBILITY STUDY

Question No. 116—Mr. Orange:

1. Was there an engineering feasibility study carried out prior to the selection of Yellowknife as the capital of the Northwest Territories concerning the cost of providing government housing including extension of water and sewer services in that community?

2. If so, when was this study conducted and by whom?

3. Has this study been made public and, if not (a) is it the intention of the government to make such study public (b) when?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. This study was conducted by departmental engineers in the fall of 1966.

3. No. Since this study consisted of a review of existing material commissioned by the town of Yellowknife, it will not be made public by the government.

ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAM, FILE HILLS RESERVE, SASK.

Question No. 140—Mr. Douglas:

1. When did the Indian affairs branch initiate an adult education program on the File Hills reserve, Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan?

2. Is this program still in operation and, if not, when did it stop operation and for what reason?

3. What is the name of the person who has been in charge of this program, and is he still in the employ of the Indian affairs branch and, if not, what was the reason for his leaving the Indian affairs branch?

4. What are the names of all the instructors hired for the adult education program on the File Hills reserve?

5. If any of them are no longer employed by the Indian affairs branch, what is the reason for their leaving the Indian affairs branch?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. A full time adult educator was assigned to the File Hills-Qu'Appelle agency as of September 1, 1965.

2. The position of adult educator will be abolished as of August 31, 1967. The program will be continued and expanded, utilizing services available through the university extension department and the department of manpower, supplemented as required by Indian affairs branch programs.

3. Mr. J. V. Ferguson has been in charge of this program. Mr. Ferguson is still in the employ of Indian affairs branch.

4. The following persons have been employed as short term instructors in the File Hills-Qu'Appelle agency:

	Reserve
Mrs. Thelma Jones	Okanese
Mrs. Muriel Teece	Okanese
Mr. G. Carlson	Muscowpetung and Standing Buffalo
Miss L. Goodwill	Standing Buffalo
Mrs. B. Eaton	Muscowpetung and Standing Buffalo
Mr. A. Berner	Okanese
Mr. B. Edmonds	Carry the Kettle
Mrs. Sharon Pletz	Carry the Kettle

5. At present Mrs. Sharon Pletz is the only instructor on staff. The others have completed their short term contracts but will be re-employed if there is interest in further training and they are available.

SIOUX LOOKOUT, ONT.—EXPENDITURES ON INDIAN SCHOOL

Question No. 153—Mr. Reid:

1. How much money has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development spent on the Pelican residential school near Sioux Lookout, Ontario, in each year, for the past ten years?

2. What was the purpose of these repairs?

3. How long does the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development estimate they will be utilizing these facilities and for what purposes will they be used?

Questions

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Insofar as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned, the answer is as follows: 1. 1956-57, $8,185.13; 1957-58, $9,430.84; 1958-59, $12,868.30; 1959-60, $3,874.27; 1960-61, $7,997.10; 1961-62, $2,858-.27; 1962-63, $19,893.57; 1963-64, $8,061.59; 1964-65, $15,378.17; 1965-66, $4,703.64; Total, $93,250.88. The final figure for the fiscal year 1966-67 is not yet available but it is estimated that this will be approximately $8,000.

2. These were normal expenditures covering the maintenance of the buildings.

3. It is not possible to predict, at this time, how long this school will be required. These facilities are now being utilized for the accommodation of Indian children who are orphans, or from broken homes, or from areas where day schools do not exist.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ESKIMOS AND INDIANS EMPLOYED

Question No. 166—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many employees are there working for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in isolated areas and, of these, how many are Eskimos?

2. How many employees are there working for the Indian affairs branch as Indian agents, placement officers, research officers, etc., and, of these, how many are Indians?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Nineteen hundred and sixty-one employees of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are working in isolated areas. One hundred and eighty seven of these are Eskimos.

2. There are twenty eight hundred and thirty nine employees working for the Indian affairs branch as Indian agents, placement officers, research officers, etc.; the departmental records indicate that three hundred and forty three of these employees are Indians. Since information as to whether or not employees have Indian status is not available for every employee of the branch, it is quite possible that there are more employees of Indian status than shown in the foregoing figure.

C.B.C. BASEBALL TELECASTS

Question No. 177—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many National League and American League baseball games will be telecast on the (a) French (b) English networks of the C.B.C. in 1967 (exclusive of the all-star game and World Series)?

[Mr. Reid.]

2. Will the (a) all-star game (b) World Series, be carried on both networks?

3. Is there a decision not to carry regular Saturday telecasts on the English network because of centennial sports events?

4. If the answer to part 3 is yes, what centennial sports events have been telecast in that Saturday time period to the date of answer, and what events will be telecast during the remaining Saturday time periods until the end of September?

5. How many letters requesting continuance of the baseball telecasts have been received by the C.B.C. at (a) Ottawa (b) its regional offices, by location, and number?

6. By the same breakdown as in part 5, how many letters have been received approving the decision not to telecast baseball games on a regular basis?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. (a) 14. (b) 6.

2. (a) English network only. (b) English and French networks.

3. No single factor influenced the decision not to carry the baseball game of the week every Saturday. The flexibility required for centennial programming was one factor. Another was that in most parts of Canada, audience interest in T.V. coverage of baseball has waned.

4. Coverage of a variety of sports events in Canada during 1967 has been scheduled in the Saturday sports magazine program "Kaleidosport" including Canadian championship events in gymnastics, track and field, gliding and such events as the Pan-American games trials, championship soccer, boxing, racing, etc. Other events in the Saturday afternoon sports schedule from May to September include the Grand Prix, Kentucky Derby, FA Cup final and the Preakness in May; the Belmont Stakes and the Queen's Plate in June; the Canadian golf championship, baseball game of the week and Pan-American games in July; the Pan-American games, baseball game of the week and C.P.G.A. golf tournament in August; baseball game of the week and C.F.L. football in September. The World Series follows in October.

5. Ottawa 15, Montreal 2, Toronto 121*, Halifax 4, Winnipeg 6, Edmonton 2, Vancouver 5.

*Most of the mail received at Toronto, including several organized petitions, came from viewers in the maritimes.

6. Five letters received at Toronto.

PROPOSED TARIFF CHANGES RESPECTING CONTAINERBOARD

Question No. 184—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering implementation of the recommendation in the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the acquisition of the common shares of Hendershot Paper Products Limited by Canadian International Paper Company to the effect that certain tariff changes should be made which it considered would protect the public from unnecessarily high prices of containerboard and shipping containers and would assist in removing the restrictive effects on the supply of containerboard which are inherent in the situation where a predominant part of the containerboard production in Canada is made by integrated companies and is used in their own converting operations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): As a result of the Kennedy round of international trade negotiations the most favoured nation duty on containerboard and fibreboard shipping containers will be reduced from 20 per cent to 15 per cent.

QUALIFICATION AS ELECTORS BY OATH OR AFFIDAVIT

Question No. 228—Mr. Stanbury:

1. In each province, how many persons at the last general election either applied for and obtained registration as electors or took oaths or affidavits of qualification as electors?

2. How many of such persons in each province were (a) Canadian citizens (b) not Canadian citizens?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: 1. The information is not available as a person who is a Canadian citizen or other British subject is not required, when being enumerated, to specify in which of these categories he falls. With regards to oaths and affidavits, the only oaths and affidavits that an elector can be called upon to subscribe to are those set out in schedule 1 to the Canada Elections Act. Amongst other requisites, such oaths or affidavits only require a person to swear to the fact that he is a Canadian citizen or other British subject and he is not required to swear in which of these categories he falls.

2. (a) See 1 above. (b) See 1 above.

APPLICATIONS UNDER MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Question No. 247—Mr. Godin:

Under the manpower mobility program (a) how many applications have been submitted to the Department of Manpower and Immigration since April 1, 1967 (b) how many have been accepted (c) what were the amounts granted (i) in each of the provinces (ii) in the constituency of Portneuf?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): From April 1, 1967 to May 31, 1967: (a) 3,942 applications for grants had been received at the Canada manpower centres of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. (b) 3,409 of the applications had been authorized. (c) (i) Newfoundland, $40,000; Prince Edward Island, $5,800; Nova Scotia, $53,000; New Brunswick, $5,500; Quebec, $192,642; Ontario, $257,566; Manitoba, $30,817; Saskatchewan, $21,691; Alberta, $39,527; British Columbia, $110,171. (ii) Constituency of Portneuf, $955.

N.B.: The dollar figures are the total amounts committed and paid in each province. The greater part of the amount committed in each province is for applications initiated in that province. However, when a worker moves from one province to another, payments may be made in the province from which he moves and also in the province to which he moves, particularly when a worker files an application after finding suitable employment.

*COST OF HABITAT '67 AT EXPO

Question No. 249—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the final cost of construction Habitat '67 at Expo '67?

2. Of the total cost of Habitat '67, how much will be born by the federal government and what portion, if any, will be the responsibility of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal?

3. How much has been received in rentals from Habitat '67 to date, and what is the estimate of rentals for the period of the world exhibition?

4. What is the estimated salvage value of Habitat '67?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The estimated total cost of constructing Habitat is $22,195,920 in accordance with the approved master plan cost estimates of the corporation.

2. The total cost of Habitat '67 will be borne in accordance with the tripartite agreement among the three levels of government, i.e. 50 per cent federal, 37½ per cent provincial and 12½ per cent city of Montreal.

3. The amount received in rentals from Habitat '67 up to and including June 30 is $92,370. The estimate of rentals for the period of the world exhibition is $281,000.

4. The asset value of Habitat '67 is not yet finalized.

Questions

GROCERY STORE, LAC PHILIPPE, QUE.

Question No. 253—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Does the National Capital Commission intend to operate a grocery store on its property at Lac Philippe and, if so, how will the commission operate it or have it operated?

2. Will the N.C.C. give it to a concessionaire and erect a building?

3. Will the N.C.C. give the concession of the land to a concessionaire who will be required to erect a building on the land?

4. What will be the rental rate (a) with building (b) without building?

5. What is the name of the concessionaire for the Lac Philippe area?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. The National Capital Commission already operates a grocery store as part of the food concession at Lac Philippe.

2. At the present time a small selection of basic supplies for campers are being sold by the present concessionaire from the pavilion at Parent Beach. This arrangement creates additional traffic congestion in the vicinity of the pavilion and consequently it is planned that a small building be erected within the commission grounds from which to sell campers' supplies. Otherwise the concession remains unchanged.

3. No. See answer to part 2 above.

4. Not applicable.

5. Mr. Jake Goneau.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION CONTRACTS IN WESTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 257—Mr. Schreyer:

Of the total expenditure by the Department of Defence Production in the last fiscal year, what proportion was paid out on prime contracts to contractors whose mailing address was in (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta (d) British Columbia?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Insofar as the Department of Defence Production is concerned:

	Head office		Regional offices		Combined totals
	Dollar value	Percent of total	Dollar value	Percent of total	Dollar value	Percent of total
Manitoba	16,445,000	2.12	8,043,000	9.46	24,488,000	2.8

Alberta	7,436,000	.96	10,317,000	12.14	17,753,000	2.1
British Columbia	14,504,000	1.87	9,501,000	11.18	24,005,000	2.8
	39,123,000	5.05	31,119,000	36.61	70,242,000	8.2

NOTE: The total value of contracts placed in Canada during the F/M 1966-67 for regional offices was $84M and the total amount for head office contracts was $775M making a combined total of $859M.

"BIBLIOGRAPHY OF SEISMOLOGY"

Question No. 261—Mr. McCleave:

1. Is the publication Bibliography of Seismology, items 18999-19426, September-December 1964 by F. E. Langill now permanently out of print?

2. If so (a) why was the same listed in the daily checklist of government publications on May 23, 1967 (b) when did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and/or the Queen's Printer exhaust their supplies of this publication?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. No. Copies are available from Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

2. (a) Publication listed on daily check list of government publications because 200 copies had been supplied by the department concerned for that purpose. (b) See reply to (1) above insofar as Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned. Queen's Printer exhausted their supply within a few days from the issue of the daily check list.

[Mrs. Rideout.]

Questions

FHE-400 HYDROFOIL

Question No. 292—Mr. Ormiston:

1. What has been the cost of developing the FHE-400 hydrofoil to date?
2. What is the further anticipated expenditure before this craft is operational?
3. What is the anticipated operational date for this craft?
4. What is the propulsion system used in this craft?
5. Have any breakdowns occurred in this craft during proficiency trials and, if so (a) how many (b) of what type?
6. Have the jet propulsion and electric type systems been considered for use in the FHE-400 hydrofoil?
7. What was the extent of damage incurred by the recent fire in the FHE-400 hydrofoil?
8. To what sections of the hydrofoil was this confined?
9. Has the damage been repaired and, if so, at what cost?
10. What was the solution used in the hydraulic system of the FHE-400 hydrofoil?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Insofar as the Department of Defence Production is concerned:

1. The total cost to date (31 May 1967) of the FHE 400 Hydrofoil project is $37.088 million, i.e., $29.940M for the ship and $7.148M for the weapons system.

2. The further anticipated expenditure before this craft is fully operational is estimated at $12.918 million, i.e., $9.934M for the ship and $2.984M for the weapons system.

3. The ship will be fully operational upon completion of the weapons system installation scheduled for November 1969. Acceptance trials for the ship without its weapons system are expected to complete by September 1968.

4. Two separate propulsion systems are to be installed, namely foilborne and hullborne. Both systems are of the conventional mechanical type. The foilborne system is driven by a Pratt and Whitney FT4 A-2 gas turbine engine. The hullborne system is driven by a Paxman 16YJCM diesel engine.

5. All mechanical equipment received to date has been bench operated and tested at the makers' plants. There have been three significant breakdowns to date and these have been in components being specially developed for FHE 400. These are:— (a) Bevel gear failure in the foilborne transmission bevel gearbox due to a fabrication problem which has since been corrected. (b) Failure in the 2nd reduction epicyclic gearbox of the foilborne transmission. This occurred on June 7, 1967, and is presently under investigation. (c) Failure of an amplifier unit of the type used in the anhedral tip and steering actuator. A modified unit is now being manufactured.

6. Both jet propulsion and electric type systems were considered for use in FHE 400 and were rejected for reasons of weight, size, or inefficiency at hydrofoil speed ranges.

7. Damage was sustained to ship's side plating, structural framework; deck plating, auxiliary equipment, electrical wiring, ventilation ducting and systems piping.

8. The above damage was confined, except for superficial heat and smoke damage, to the general area of the engine room.

9. Repairs to the ship and weapons systems necessitated by the fire are now in work and are expected to be completed by September 1967. The estimated cost of these repairs amounts to $3.158M.

10. The fluid used in the hydraulic system of FHE 400 was and still is hydraulic fluid to specification MIL-H-5606, a military approved hydraulic fluid which is in general use throughout the armed forces.

AREA DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS IN MANITOBA

Question No. 296—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How many projects have been approved in the province of Manitoba under the area development incentive program, giving designated area, capital investment and type of industry?
2. How many of these industries are already in operation or production and how many jobs have been created?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. 18 projects in the province of Manitoba have been approved under the area development program subject to compliance by the applicants with section 71A of the Income Tax Act or the Area Development Incentives Act and the relevant regulations, as follows:

Designated Area	Approved Projects	Capital Investment
Brandon Canada manpower centre area and adjacent designated census divisions	11	$31,487,000.
Dauphin CMC area and adjacent designated census divisions	6	$15,626,000.
The Pas CMC area	1	$ 86,000.
	18	$47,199,000.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Various types of manufacturing industries are involved in these projects: food and beverages, printing and publishing, chemicals, textiles, pharmaceuticals, machinery, plastics, optics and feed mills.

2. 13 of the approved projects are in commercial production involving 315 direct labour jobs.

DONATIONS OF STRUCTURES AT EXPO

Question No. 304—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. What nations or participants have donated as a permanent gift their structures or equipment to Expo?

2. Will other participants be encouraged to take similar action?

3. Who will be responsible for determining the eventual use of these donations?

4. What suggestions have already been made as to future uses following Expo of structures, equipment and the Expo site?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Several nations have indicated a desire to leave their pavilions in Canada but no nation or participant has donated its structures or equipment to the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Numerous suggestions have been made as to the future use of the site. All such suggestions are being considered by the committee, which has been established by the sponsoring governments, to study the question of disposal of assets and to make recommendations to the governments.

EXPO ATTENDANCE AND REVENUE

Question No. 307—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Is the actual attendance at Expo '67 to date in excess of estimated attendance and, if so, by what percentage?

2. What is the total revenue realized by Expo '67 to date; is it in excess of estimated revenues and, if so, by what amount?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Actual attendance to July 3rd was 17,666,434 (up by approximately 40%). Forecast attendance to that date was 12,618,210.

2. As of June 26th, the total revenue realized was $58,539,912 against a budgeted revenue of $63,737,206.

PUBLIC SERVICE PERSONNEL

Question No. 312—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

How many civil servants were and are now employed by the federal government for the years 1960 to 1967 inclusive?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The number of civil servants employed by the federal government under the Civil Service Act, as at September 30, 1960 to 1966 is as follows:

Year	Number
1960	131,953
1961	137,327
1962	138,867
1963	137,818
1964	138,666
1965	140,206
1966	145,783
1967	not available

ABOLITION OF DRUG PATENTS

Question No. 314—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government reached any decision as to the desirability of implementing the recommendation of the report of 1963 of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs that "patents with respect to drugs be abolished" since "in the opinion of the commission this is the only effective remedy to reduce the price of drugs in Canada"?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): In response to a similar question (unrevised Hansard, May 4, 1966, page 4688) the then President of the Privy Council stated that while careful consideration was being given to the recommendations contained in the report, it was not expected that a decision would be made until after the report of the special committee on drug costs and prices had been received. Upon receipt of the final report of the committee on April 3, 1967, it was referred immediately to departmental officials. The recommendations contained in the committee's report will be considered on an urgent basis over the summer months in conjunction with the recommendations contained in the reports of the restrictive trade practices commission and the royal commission on health services. It is intended that any announcement about legislation in connection with the various recommendations will be made to parliament in the autumn.

*ENTRY TO CANADA OF KO CHUCK-HUNG

Question No. 320—Mr. Hamilton:

Has Mr. Ko Chuck-Hung of Hong Kong entered Canada since June 11, 1967?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The answer to the question is as follows: The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no record of Mr. Ko Chuck-Hung having entered Canada since June 11, 1967.

4. In what markets were these products disposed of in each year, and in what value, giving quantity and dollar value in the case of each province, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Return tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with starred question No. 330. This portion of the session will come to an end on Friday and the information I seek is readily available. It has to do with the licence or certificate granted to the Bank of Western Canada and certain other matters ancillary thereto. I am asking that this question be answered before we adjourn on Friday. There have been too many shenanigans in connection with the Bank of Western Canada, and we want this information.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the right hon. gentleman that the reply was on my desk this morning, and I will give it before the house adjourns.

[Later:]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked if we could give today the answer to starred question No. 330. If I have unanimous leave, may we revert to questions so I may answer it?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we revert to questions for the purpose of considering this one answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 330—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. On what date was a license or certificate to begin operations issued to the Bank of Western Canada?

2. To whom was the license issued?

3. Who were the major shareholders of the Bank of Western Canada at the time of the issuing of the license to operate?

4. What is the date when British International Finance was exempted from the limitation to 10 per cent of the stocks which any one shareholder could hold in said bank?

5. Why was such exemption granted?

6. According to the latest reports to the government, have (a) British International Finance, and/or (b) Sinclair Stevens any shares in the said bank?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The answer to question No. 1 is December 8, 1966.

The answer to question No. 2 is Bank of Western Canada.

The answer to question No. 3 is Wellington Financial Corporation Limited, name later changed to York Lambton Corporation, Canadian Finance and Investments Limited and York Trust and Savings Corporation.

The answer to question No. 4 is Treasury Board order No. 658534 issued on August 3, 1966, pursuant to section 9 of an act to incorporate Bank of Western Canada, exempted the three corporations named under (3) above and any other corporations and individuals associated with them from the 10 per cent limitation, up to a maximum of 471,500 shares out of the original issue of 865,000 shares.

The answer to question No. 5 is the provisions of section 9 of the act to incorporate Bank of Western Canada are similar to those of section 57 in the Bank Act. They are intended to facilitate the establishment of new banks in Canada by making it possible for government to approve a group of resident shareholders holding more than 10 per cent of a new bank's shares during the first years of its operations and before the bank had established an earnings record which would increase the marketability of its shares to the general public. In the case of the Treasury Board order affecting Bank of Western Canada, the exemption is for a period of ten years.

The answer to question 6(a) and (b) is, the latest report to the government on individual shareholdings in Bank of Western Canada lists the holdings in excess of 500 shares. Neither British International Finance nor Sinclair Stevens is included in this list.

MINIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTION, P.E.I.

Motion No. 16—Mr. McQuaid:

That a humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents and correspondence between the federal government or any of its departments or agencies and the government of Prince Edward Island and any of its departments or agencies relative to the establishment of a minimum security institution in Prince Edward Island.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN POSITION ON RESOLUTIONS BEFORE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he will table the various resolutions that were put before the United Nations general assembly yesterday. Indeed, I might go further and suggest, if the house would agree and the minister were favourable, that they be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings, because they are of great importance.

With regard to the Pakistani resolution which Canada voted in favour of, I would ask the minister what the government has in mind regarding the city of Jerusalem, in view of the fact that the resolution sponsored by Pakistan states that the measures taken by Israel to change the status of Jerusalem are invalid, calls upon Israel to rescind all measures already taken and to desist forthwith from taking any action which would alter the status of Jerusalem, and requests the Secretary General to report to the United Nations general assembly and to the security council on the situation.

In view of Canada's vote in favour of this resolution and against the action taken by Israel in Jerusalem, what is the stand of Canada regarding the city of Jerusalem as a whole?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be allowed to deal with the subject in a more extended way than is normally done under orders of the day because of the importance of the question.

In the statement I made before the general assembly I said that Canada felt there should be no precipitous action taken with regard to the matter of Jerusalem by any party concerned. I also stated that our primary concern was for the right of access to the holy places by the three main religious communities, namely the Christians, the Moslems and the Jews.

[Mr. McQuaid.]

Yesterday my hon. friend asked me what we were going to do about the Pakistani resolution, and I told him I was not in a position to give him an answer because consultations were taking place then with regard to the wording of the resolution. The changes being considered were not, however, accepted.

Along with 98 other members of the United Nations we supported the Pakistan resolution because we felt that to do otherwise might render more difficult the task of establishing practical arrangements in respect of Jerusalem and the holy places. All along our policy has been to promote, through all available means, a fair and balanced settlement which may endure in the Middle East. It was for this reason we supported the Latin American resolution. We also opposed any demand for a withdrawal of Israeli forces which was not related to legitimate Israeli claims and rights, and which did not deal with the state of belligerency exercised by certain countries against Israel.

Over the years we have discouraged unilateral action with respect to the city of Jerusalem and the status of the holy places, as well as other sensitive issues in the Middle East. We have urged the acceptance of a United Nations role to safeguard the holy places and to facilitate international agreement on the other outstanding issues. We have felt that there should be further United Nations consideration of the question of Jerusalem, and we have endorsed suggestions that the general assembly should discuss this problem during its next regular session, following the report which will be made by the secretary general. We believe that the pause thus provided would give all concerned an opportunity for careful and mature consideration of this very vital matter. This position does not in any way prejudge our views on the ultimate terms of a settlement for Jerusalem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, when he says the matter is going to be left in abeyance for consideration at the next regular session, whether this portion of the Pakistan resolution is not most condemnatory of Israel, in that it calls upon Israel to rescind all measures already taken and to desist forthwith from any action which would alter the state of Jerusalem. Does this not mean that Canada believes what has been done is illegal, and says to Israel "This must end now"? Is this not what the section means?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Canadian government refused to join in another resolution that called for condemnation of Israel. The Pakistan resolution simply directs the attention of Israel to the opinion of 99 members of the United Nations who feel that there should be no final unilateral action taken now with regard to the disposition of Jerusalem. In response, the government of Israel say that what they have done has been to provide for common administrative services for the two sections of the city. I hope that between now and the time the next general assembly meets to consider this matter, as well as other matters that must be the subject of negotiation, Canada and other countries will be able to encourage an arrangement that will lead to a durable peace in the area.

I do not believe the resolution is open to the interpretation my right hon. friend places upon it. If it were really open to that interpretation, it would not have been possible for Canada to take the position she felt, in all responsibility, she must take yesterday. We have insisted that these problems in the Middle East can only be settled by recognizing the statehood of Israel, the right of free navigation, the right of territorial integrity, the solution of the refugee problem, and as well, of course, guaranteed access to the holy places. What the final position will be in September will depend upon the nature of the negotiations which we hope it will be possible to encourage as a result of the appointment of someone to represent the Secretary General and the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A further supplementary question in connection with this matter, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by the minister, how does he explain the words in the resolution by which Canada declares that these measures just taken by Israel are invalid and calls upon Israel to rescind all measures already taken? This is not a decision to wait until fall or the next meeting, but is to be dealt with now.

Second, as the minister mentioned the refugee problem, has Canada made any offer to absorb any definite number of refugees?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before going to the right hon. gentleman's third supplementary question, I have allowed the first part of the supplementary to which the minister might want to reply, but there are other members who want to ask supplementaries in connection with the first problem raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether it is anticipated that the security council will take any action on this resolution during the period before the assembly meets again. May I also ask whether it is anticipated that the security council will be taking action on the other matters in dispute between Israel and the Arab countries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows the government's view was that the matter should have been left with the security council. We were not anxious for the calling of a general assembly, but when 62 member states indicated that they wanted one to be convoked, we did not register any objection. I would hope that in the interest of a settlement the matter might return to the security council as quickly as possible.

Whether the security council will act under article 7 is a matter to be determined by that body. I think that the vote taken yesterday will indicate the very deep understanding which many countries have of the problems of Israel. I am sure Israel will read the results of these votes in the light of the position that countries like Britain, Canada and New Zealand took with regard to the Yugoslav resolution, which sought to ask for a withdrawal of Israeli forces without doing anything about recognizing the legitimate claims of Israel.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the original question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and is directed, of course, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is Canada planning to take any steps to bring before the security council the reported pouring of arms into Egypt by the Soviet union, which is just tantamount to pouring gasoline on a fire? In view of the fact that the minister said in an answer to questions this morning that he was hoping to negotiate a final settlement of the matter, is Canada planning to take any steps in this regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should not say that Canada is planning to take steps; Canada has already taken the necessary steps. In the statement I made in the general assembly I pointed out that Canada was not selling any arms to any country in the Middle East, and I went on to urge that all countries that have been selling arms to the various sides desist, so we might find a means of bringing about stability and peace in the area. When the security council meets and this question is again submitted, this will be the position of our ambassador in the security council.

Mr. Nesbitt: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that arms, particularly aircraft, are flowing into Egypt at an enormous rate, does the minister not think it might be a good idea to have the matter brought before the security council now before it is too late?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that the government has expressed its strong views on this matter. It has been engaged in consultations on controlling the flow of arms to the Middle East which we believe are more likely to bring about the result that my hon. friend urges on us. Certainly I agree fully with him that if we are going to resolve this problem, those countries which have been supplying arms to the various parties ought to recognize that the time has come when this should stop.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, earlier I asked the minister whether he would give consideration to tabling the four resolutions that are before the United Nations assembly. I suggest that they be attached as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I forgot to do that, but I will.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED RUSSIAN STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE COUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the official news agency of the Russian government has indicated in a public statement that a coup is about to take place in Cyprus, that the statement accuses NATO forces of exploiting the Greek situation, and having in mind what happened in a similar vein before the Middle East crisis developed, has the minister any word for us about this situation, particularly as it might relate to our own peace keeping forces in Cyprus?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not, Mr. Speaker.

MR. LEO LANDREVILLE

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF PENSION UNDER JUDGES ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Is it now the government's position that it will not award a judge's pension to Mr. Leo Landreville without first bringing the matter before parliament?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer yes to that question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope that with the same facility the minister will be able to answer no to the question whether Landreville is going to get a pension through the action of the cabinet. Would the minister reply to that?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be able to answer no to that question, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition can state as a matter of general principle that no man who has been retired from the civil service or any other form of employment deserves a pension for any consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a half-dressed answer and is not in keeping with the House of Commons. I ask the minister this. Is Landreville going to receive a pension or retirement allowance of $18,266, or any lesser sum, per annum? Don't give me those kind of answers.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have told the house I have not yet made up my mind on this point. I explained the matter quite fully the other day in the standing committee on justice and legal affairs. I added, as I have said just now to the Leader of the Opposition, that I had not made up my mind whether the punishment which has been meted out to this man for something which was not done in the discharge of his duties should extend indefinitely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a half-dressed answer not in keeping with the practice in this house.

Mr. Trudeau: Get to your feet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister tells me to rise. I say to him that that answer is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in keeping with parliament and—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be howled down in that fashion. The hon. gentleman should be more considerate of the house, dressed most improperly as he is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this argument. I should like to divert it, but I am sure you will agree with me that it is not within the rules of the house for one member to comment on the dress of another member.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Which rules are you talking about?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The proprieties of parliament are to be upheld even by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: May we please have order and return to the question originally raised. I will allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice is based on his reply to my first question. In view of his statement that the government will not act on this matter without bringing it before parliament, can we therefore be assured that there will be no executive action on this question while parliament is in recess?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member really is asking for an interpretation of law. The Judges Act makes it pretty difficult for the executive to act without going before the house either for an amendment to the Judges Act or with an item in the estimates. I said it is pretty difficult, though I am not convinced as a point of law that it is completely impossible.

Mr. Knowles: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the answer which the minister just now gave qualify his first answer on this question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That supplementary question is not acceptable.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice has indicated that he has not made up his mind on the one matter. Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the meantime made up his mind about what is to be done with respect to Judge Meunier's pension? That judge was under sentence to serve a prison term.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Its urgency is based on the widespread interest of the people in western Canada in the applications now pending with respect to rail line abandonment, the master agency plan and other pertinent matters. Can the minister say when the new transport commission will be fully constituted and operational?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think, sir, the experience of anyone who has ever served in the government is that to make predictions about something that will happen in future is a very unwise and imprudent occupation. Having said that, I hope it will not be very long.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO HEARING ON PRAIRIE SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): May I ask a question about a related subject, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house when the hearing with respect to the TransAir prairie service will be held? That is a matter of great and urgent importance.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I understand that the only delay is occasioned by certain respondents who under the law have the right to present written submissions before the hearings can be held. The necessary delays have not yet expired. If it should prove that my recollections are incorrect I shall correct them tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

KEEWATIN, ONT.—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS DISPLACED BY FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. members for Kenora-Rainy River and Winnipeg North Centre asked a question about the situation prevailing in Keewatin, Ontario, because of the flour mill which had been destroyed by fire. I am informed that yesterday the executives of this company flew from Montreal to Keewatin to take a decision about the future of the mill. In the meantime the Canada manpower centre from Keewatin went to the site of the mill and interviewed all the staff involved, approximately 100 people. These workers are presently receiving vacation pay for two weeks.

The whole range of our services will, of course, be made available, if the need arises. I also understand there is a possibility of alternative employment for the workers in the mining industry of that area. Laid off workers, should that be needed, will be considered for training courses in mining occupations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—REPORTED INVASION AND SEIZURE OF CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it a fact that troops this morning invaded that part of the Congo that is usually known as Congo Leopoldville and seized the former city of Stanleyville? If so, from what country did these troops come?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice. I have not the full information about this, and I should like to know more.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CHIEF JUSTICE OF AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the presence in the gallery of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Australia, Sir Garfield Barwick, a former and distinguished member of the government of Australia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PRICES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and for the Registrar General. In view of recent and apparently unwarranted price increases for films and flash bulbs, would the ministers have officials of their departments investigate the high prices of films, flash bulbs and other photographic equipment and supplies at the wholesale and retail levels?

Mr. Speaker: Order. As we shall adjourn in a few days I hesitate to suggest that this question be placed on the order paper. However, the hon. member is making a representation, and I assume that it has been noted by someone on the government side.

Mr. Nasserden: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the ministers can say whether these investigations are to be started. I think this is an urgent matter, particularly when one considers the amount of film that is being used this year.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In his absence may I direct it to his esteemed parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Leeds. Has the Prime Minister received a request from the premier of Saskatchewan to name the reservoir formed by the Gardiner dam "Lake Diefenbaker"? If so, what action has been taken.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): May I take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR AID TO FLOODED DISTRICTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I wished to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In view of the severe flooding and resultant damage to crops in central Ontario has the minister received communications, either from the province of Ontario or from any other government level, regarding assistance to this area?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I shall pass on this question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would put to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture in consideration of the reply given by the minister of forestry to the hon. member for Simcoe East. A similar question was asked on June 29. Can the parliamentary secretary advise the house whether any action or leadership is contemplated in regard to crop damage, particularly in the lower lying lands in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the government of course is concerned with the disaster, particularly in the Holland marsh area. The answer to the question is that no request for assistance has been made up to this time. I am of the opinion that if a request were made it would be made to the provincial government first and then come to the federal government.

Mr. Winkler: This may be the case, but I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would consider my representations on behalf of these people as an official request.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

APPRECIATION OF PARLIAMENT HILL CEREMONIES ON JULY 1

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): I am happy to speak on behalf of the people in my region who came to parliament hill during the week-end. The festivities were magnificent, and I join my colleagues in congratulating those who organized them. I would ask the hon. Solicitor General to add his name to the list of those who have done such an excellent job in choosing among the 849 bilingual R.C.M.P. officers those appointed to direct traffic on the hill.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, Vote No. 1. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 338 of the blue book and the details on page 341.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

1. Departmental administration including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan and $500,000 for health grants and welfare grants, under terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board, for research and demonstration activities in the field of mental retardation, $4,127,000.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, when the minister's estimates were being considered last week we heard a great deal about special needs and special groups of people. Much was said about the needs of people receiving old age security pension, about the way this pension impinged on veterans allowances, about the needs of blind people, and about the problem of retired civil servants. In addition we had discussion of medicare, involving the needs of the sick, the handicapped, the mentally ill and other groups of people.

In every case we found that although the legislation was intended to cover averages of people there were loopholes and cases where great numbers of people were either overlooked or their needs not adequately met by the legislation. In other words we have discovered that what covers the average in the way of legislative provisions in many cases fails to cover the needs of the individual.

All of this points to the necessity to take the next step in social security legislation. I believe that next step is the establishment of a guaranteed minimum annual income plan. In other words the time has come to change the old patchwork quilt for a modern electric blanket. The old quilt has stretched. Patches have been put on patches, until it has become over worn. In spite of the good solid work being done to keep it in good shape, the old quilt is no longer adequate for present day needs, and I believe it is time we gave thought to getting a modern electric blanket in the form of a guaranteed annual income for every Canadian and every Canadian family.

A guaranteed annual income is something which has been under discussion for a number of years, and the notion has become widespread. I believe it was the great French author Victor Hugo who said there is nothing as powerful as an idea whose time has arrived. I believe the time for implementing the idea of a guaranteed annual income plan is close to arrival. Basically this idea has grown quickly.

Back in February 1966 we read in the newspapers that a 14 member commission on technology, automation and economic progress had reported in the United States. The commission had been created by congress, and its members were appointed by President Lyndon Johnson to study technological unemployment and related problems. On February 3, 1966, the commission reported to President Johnson and to congress, and recommended that every United States family be guaranteed a minimum annual income, stating that the annual cost of such a plan would range from $2 billion to $20 billion, depending on its scope. As many as 30 million Americans could be affected if the minimum income level were fixed at $3,000 a year.

I mention this to show that the idea has been seriously considered in the United States, where the figures involved both in money and people are of course much greater than they would be in Canada, but where conditions are not so much different from what they are in Canada, and where their commission considered $3,000 a year as being a suitable level for guaranteeing income. This figure has also been mentioned in Canada.

Under the United States plan the federal government would make up the difference between a family's actual income and a fixed income minimum standard. The commission reported at a time before the cost of the Viet Nam war had almost wiped out the war on poverty in the United States. Its recommendations were seriously considered at that time, and no doubt will be given further consideration before too long.

A few days after the United States commission reported, the assistant deputy minister of welfare in the province of Nova Scotia advocated a similar plan. In this connection I quote from an editorial in the Globe and Mail of May 13, 1966, as follows:

The other day, Mr. E. R. MacKinnon, Nova Scotia's deputy minister of public welfare, proposed a similar approach to welfare cases. He believed it would remove one of the greatest causes of poverty and would encourage a man to help himself because he would be sure of a foundation on which he could build for the future.

The editorial commented:

A guaranteed minimum income is a logical step in the progress of social security measures. There is obvious merit to it, in that every Canadian would be sure of a living. Unemployment insurance and old age pensions cannot always offer a similar assurance, and a guaranteed income would cover all sections of society, regardless of age or opportunity. It would be a major step, and those concerned should begin to examine its possibilities.

• (12 noon)

Also in this connection I would like to quote from the Vancouver Sun of January 24, 1967. This is a syndicated article by Joseph Kraft from Washington in which he concludes with this line of thinking:

With this change—

That is, to the guaranteed income.

—there would disappear many of the invidious distinctions which now set the social security system apart from public assistance to the needy. Both the retirees and the welfare cases would, as the saying goes, be feeding from the public trough.

The line between welfare handouts and earned social security income would be blurred. So would the line between lower-class assistance, or welfare, and aid to people comfortably off, as is the case with many of the people on social security.

With these moralisms stripped away, there emerges a single problem—the problem of income maintenance for people who do not have the ability to earn enough through their own efforts. And once that problem is sharply defined, then there emerges with great force the simple logic of meeting it by a guaranteed annual income.

I should like to refer here, in speaking of welfare cases, to this reference to feeding from the public trough. I wish to suggest that, after all, the idea that those who are on welfare are the only ones who feed from the public trough is surely a little bit of an understatement. If I had to think of others who are feeding from the public trough these would include senators, members of parliament, civil servants, servants of crown corporations and all those who receive in any way, shape or form public funds for the performance of their duties or for their living. In my view it is perfectly ridiculous when talking about the public trough to refer only to the welfare cases. The only problem is that people like ourselves and other public servants are so close to the trough, in the front row, that the welfare cases are elbowed so far away they cannot get enough feed from the public trough. Measures should be taken by which the public trough would be made more accessible to the people who need it most.

I should like now to refer to an example in respect of this need, to which I referred earlier, to replace this old patchwork quilt with a modern electric blanket. I do not intend to refer to the many, many cases in my own riding which come to my attention all the time concerning the inadequacy of the present social security measures in meeting the needs of individuals. Instead I will cite just one case from Vancouver-Kingsway which involves a respectable and respected couple whom I know. This letter shows what they are up against. In a single case it really shows the need for a guaranteed annual income. This example could be multiplied many, many times in my own riding and I am sure in the ridings of hon. members who are sitting in this house today. The letter reads as follows:

My wife and I are also in an unfortunate predicament. We are both disabled, t.b. and heart condition respectively. Our doctor put me on light work in February, 1964. Wherever I went, there was no chance of obtaining a job. Of course my age is against me—63. In some places of industry, even the place where I worked included, only gave promises. In other places I filled out application forms, like department stores, in hope to get a clean-up job or as a watchman job, punching a time clock, never had any replies from anywhere.

In the meantime I drew unemployment insurance. When it ran out I had to ask for social welfare. They also promised to locate work for me I was able to do. We are on social welfare since Aug. 25/65. We are getting $50 a month from them and $75 a month we receive from the sale of a house my wife sold for $3,800. Now, those $75 are the payments the buyer has to pay per month. The irony of it is, this above mentioned property actually belongs to the elder son who built the place for mother's sake when he still was a high school student and, of course, with some help and advice from neighbours. But the crux of the matter is, the property was on my wife's name as the son was too young at the time to have it registered in his name. That happened when my wife Helen came out of Tranquille sanatorium in 1950. Her parents did not have proper quarters nor facilities for a person in her condition. All that happened before I ever met her or knew she existed. However, I met her in 1955. I had enough money saved up by then to buy a comfortable home for us, with all the needed furniture and electric appliances, to make it as easy for her as possible to keep house because she was not feeling too well.

Now 11½ years have passed. On applying for social welfare we told our circumstances and explained to them that the property worth $3,800 belonged to our son Peter. Then from the head official in the Grandview district came the reply that the $75 per month payments on the above mentioned house has to be as part payment of social welfare considered—

This letter came a little while ago.

—because it was on my wife's name. There is nothing we can do about it so we are getting a total of $125 per month. Out of that we have to pay the yearly taxes which amounted to $195 last year with the grant already deducted. Insurance on the house and contents is $34 yearly. Light, fuel and telephone comes also pretty high. Then food and clothing, repairs and paints on the property have also to be considered—the work I do myself.

Now our major appliances are beginning to break down, like our Bendix duomatic. We had to have it because my wife cannot inhale soap vapours. We contacted the social welfare if they will pay the repairs. Again we had to wait for a reply from the head official. Next day we were informed to our dismay the social welfare does not make any allowances of the sort. Actually we are both disabled. We are both under doctor's care. Every month I have to go for blood test and doctor check-up—and take pills three times a day. So does also my wife, x-rays, pills and check-ups. Besides taking care of her old illness she is also afflicted with arthritic pains in her joints and has no way of relieving her pain. I used to, when I still was earning, take her up to Radium Hot Springs for four or five days. That was the only place she would get relief for some time. We tried other springs, they did not help. So since we cannot afford to go there any more she is continuously in pain, especially at night.

Why should we be subjected to the indignities of bare necessities of life in this affluent, dynamic society we hear so much about? We don't squander our money foolishly, nor ever did even when I was still bringing the pay checque home. Our home and family always came first and foremost. We cannot ask our sons to help us as that would not be fair to them.

He mentions some of his sons' responsibilities and so on. Then he says:

Now I am trying to get on the disabled pension because my health is not improving. If I do a bit of housework, like vacuuming I can feel the burning sensation coming on in my chest. I also tire easily when walking uphill and get out of wind.

He concludes by saying that if they could get the disabled persons pension it would be a great help, and so on. This is a man I know. He is neither a whiner nor a complainer. He has put these things down on paper of his own volition. This shows what it means to be limited to the bare essentials.

I know the minister comes from a background in the very province in respect of which the deputy minister of social welfare was speaking when he mentioned the need for a guaranteed income. I know that the minister is aware of the conditions in which these people are, who are barely existing. I feel sure that he would be inclined to push for this guaranteed annual income on a real basis, if it could be done. I hope he will not suggest to me that I am opposed to the idea of a guaranteed annual income. We in this party are not opposed to it. What we are opposed to is the taking of something which is not a guaranteed annual income—something which bears no relation to what it costs to live—and prostituting the English language by calling it a guaranteed annual income.

What we are urging is that when a guaranteed annual income is established,—and I firmly believe it will be, but that it should be established sooner than it might,—it should be related to the cost of providing a decent living under modern circumstances. I am not suggesting anything riotous, but it must be sufficient to provide the necessities of life on a decent basis today under modern living conditions. This guaranteed annual income must rise with the cost of living and the productivity of the country.

One of the early promoters of the guaranteed annual income idea, Robert Theobald, addressed the annual meeting of the Canadian Welfare Council in Toronto the other day. He pointed out that ten years ago the very idea of devoting vast sums of money to the public sector to provide amenities and so on was the rankest heresy. Then along came J. K. Galbraith with his book "The Affluent Society" which revolutionized thinking in this direction. Today there is no argument as to whether we should put more and more funds into the public sector. The only question is how we are to raise the money to do so, and how it should be allocated.

Robert Theobald suggested that only five years ago the very idea of a war on poverty was something which did not fall within the realm of possibility. Then along came Michael Harrington with his book "The Other America". This caught the eye of President Kennedy, and was more than anything else responsible for the launching of the United States war on poverty, in which we began to take part shortly after. That was only five years ago, but today the necessity for a war on poverty is accepted.

Only three years ago it was considered absolutely foolish and far out to speak in terms of a guaranteed annual income. Today we have reached the stage when this is being considered. The only argument about it now relates to the necessity of setting it at levels which will meet a modern standard of living.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

I believe I still have a few minutes left at my disposal and I should like to outline several specific reasons for saying we need a guaranteed annual income in Canada. First we need it to build up the self-respect of many people in this country including the elderly, the handicapped, the sick and those with low incomes. People need to feel that they are of some value. It does not matter how many accolades we pay to motherhood or senior citizenship, if we do not provide enough to meet a modern standard of living these people will not believe us when we say they are worthy citizens and that we are interested in their welfare.

While it is true that we will always have a hard core of people who cannot be trusted to use a guaranteed income in an efficient way through their own judgment or as they see fit, this does not mean the vast majority of Canadians who require a guaranteed income should be penalized because of this small hard core.

Second, we need a guaranteed annual income, because only in this way can we bring out the real individual initiative of those people who are disabled, ill or elderly. During depression years we observed what happens to people who have to live on relief for too long a period of time. We observed what happened after those years to the third and fourth generation of Canadians who have had to live on welfare. I believe the difficulty of bringing out individual initiative is one of the greatest problems faced by social workers and administrators of our government welfare departments at all levels. For this reason we must get these people to react and use their true initiative, and in this regard I believe a guaranteed annual income is vital.

Third, in order to get people to feel they belong to society we must provide from our affluence a level of living which will allow them to feel this way; that they belong, that they are counted among all members of society. A teen-age dropout is a tragedy, whether it is from school, from a job or from society generally, but a castout is infinitely a greater tragedy. A teenager still has time to clamber back into society, but the handicapped, the elderly and the ill cannot find the means of doing so. When we make these people outcasts we are contributing to this tragedy. I think we should stop making these people the rejected, the unwanted, the pariahs of our society.

Fourth, we also need a guaranteed annual income in order to develop an orderly plan for the organization of our economy. Today we do not know how to plan production and distribution in order to provide everyone with an adequate standard of living. When we think of this age of computers and cybernetics—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. lady but her allotted time has expired.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Could I have just a few more minutes?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent in this regard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I will not be long, Mr. Chairman.

In this age of automation with all our techniques, computers and so on, we find it exceedingly difficult not only for the administrators of these different welfare schemes, but for those who must plan our economy, to develop good plans. If we had a set income floor we would know exactly what should be produced for food, housing, education, recreation and the other things essential to our modern form of living.

As I said not long ago in this house, when it comes to ironing out the booms and depressions, the inflationary periods and the reverse, a guaranteed annual income plan would indeed be a great stabilizer. We should be thinking in terms of our economy so that we do not move from crisis to crisis, from boom to bust, and then from boom to bust again. We must have something that is far more stable. In this regard I believe a guaranteed annual income would be a great stabilizer.

Fifth, we need a guaranteed annual income for economy in the true sense of the word. If we carry on with this patchwork system of social welfare and social security we will continue to find it is an uneconomical and wasteful way of doing things today. The cost for administration is wasteful and unsatisfactory. I can never get over the wastefulness of using social workers to delve into the details of means and needs tests. I know that you yourself, Mr. Chairman, through your earlier work as a social servant here in the city, have a great deal of knowledge of how necessary it is to use social workers for purposes other than inquiring into the tiny details of peoples' incomes.

The sixth and last reason I should like to advance in support of the establishment of a guaranteed annual income is the fact that if we are going to build quality into our Canadian society we can no longer afford to have people living far below a modern standard of living, particularly now when we are entering our second century.

• (12:20 p.m.)

If we want people in this country, to become interested in education and culture and things having to do with the spirit, we must see that they have enough money with which to care for the body in the first instance, so they will not have to spend their whole lives scratching as a great many people have to do just to get bread and butter and a roof over their heads. This has been the pattern for far too many people in this country. I urge the minister that together with the other programs which have been under way in this country, he pioneer the establishment of a guaranteed annual income, not just in name but in reality, based on a standard of living which will be recognizably modern and will cut out the wastefulness and patchwork nature of our old-fashioned social security schemes.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make just a few comments on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. First of all may I take this opportunity to comment on the speech made recently on June 12, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the Canadian Medical Association. It refers, of course, to the beginning on July 1, 1968, of the national medicare scheme. I think this was an incredible speech. After reading it I wondered whether the minister had read it himself before delivering it at that meeting.

On page three of the speech as delivered to us by the minister's office the minister is very careful to point out that the federal medical care legislation does not presage or pave the way for state medicine or state health services; it means a program of state insured medicine, which is quite a different matter. I made this point when we were discussing this legislation earlier. I said that the government bill which is presumably coming into effect next year will not insure the people against the costs of medical care, but will insure the services of a doctor. This is something which has not as yet got through the minister's head. In other words, the doctor is unable, no matter what he does, to practise outside the scheme of medicare, as proposed by the minister, because his services are insured.

No matter what the minister may have said to the Canadian Medical Association, that it is the people who are insured, this is not the case; it is the doctors' services that are insured. I agree with some of the statements made by the minister. We hope the people will be free to choose their doctors and the doctors free to choose their patients. This will probably be the case. However, I should like the minister to understand the difference between insuring people against the costs of the services, and insuring the services of a particular person such as a physician or surgeon.

The minister comments, and quite properly I am sure, as follows:

> Some Cassandras and Jeremiahs have been predicting that the introduction of a universal program of prepaid medical care will erode the quality of patient care, that doctors' offices will be awash with waves of patients clamouring for unnecessary attention and that the valued doctor-patient relationship will somehow be immediately put assunder.

Those are tremendous words.

Mr. MacEachen: They are good, eh?

Mr. Brand: Yes; I think the speech is well written. At least the minister is not mixing his metaphors, as he does on the first page. He goes on to say:

> I am not aware of any studies which suggest that the introduction of a universal, personal health care program in any country has led to a deterioration in the quality of care given by the medical profession to its patients.

Surely after the many speeches which have been made in this house and across the country, the minister should be aware of the great shortage of doctors in Canada as compared with other countries. Despite the brave words of the minister, the situation in this respect does not seem to be improving at all; in fact it is getting worse. The minister goes on to point out that more patients will be seeking medical care because a great many people are not receiving it now. The minister makes that statement and I will read it to him if he likes. If more people will be seeking medical care and the shortage of doctors is serious and acute now, what will the situation be if more patients require care? Surely if you add two and two together you come up with the same answer no matter how you look at it.

Our biggest problem in Canada at the moment is that we do not have enough doctors and other medical personnel to look after the health needs of the people. It is said that this situation will improve because we are going to take doctors from other countries, under the policy of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is said that we will bring into this country as many doctors as possible. We will forget about the morality of taking doctors away from countries which do not have enough at the moment. We should be training more doctors in Canada.

Unless we take steps to train enough doctors to handle the services that will be required we will be in a very serious situation indeed. This is the crux of the problem that faces Canada right now. My home province of Saskatchewan, which has had a comprehensive scheme of medical care since 1962, is finding it increasingly difficult to retain doctors. Patients are finding it increasingly difficult to obtain appointments with doctors because there are not enough doctors in the province to handle the demands of sick people. The problem is that there are not enough doctors.

Unless we do something now to keep Canadian graduates in this country, and try to graduate more doctors, it seems to me we are making a very serious mistake indeed. It is all very well, as the minister said in his speech, to say that perhaps we should look at other methods of treating patients. Is the minister suggesting using nursing assistants to do some of the work normally carried out by nurses? Is the suggestion perhaps that we should have physicians' assistants, persons who will carry out a great deal of the work now carried out by the physicians, perhaps doing simple things such as the examination of a person or the diagnosis of a disease? Perhaps this could be done by a partly trained assistant. Is this the minister's suggestion? He certainly makes it in his speech.

I wonder what the minister would do if he became ill and could see either a doctor or a partly trained assistant. Perhaps he would be in the same position as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when visiting Britain a few years ago. At that time the hon. member was premier of the province of Saskatchewan. He suffered a slight disability during that visit, and rather than attend one of the clinics provided under the national health service he saw a specialist on Harley street. The visit to this specialist cost the hon. member 20 guineas, or some figure like that. Perhaps the minister would do the same thing. I do not agree with the suggestion that we should in effect lower the standard of doctors or those who are looking after people, in order to meet the demand. I believe this is nonsense and I am surprised that such a suggestion should have been made to the centennial meeting of the Canadian Medical Association. It is incredible that the Minister of National Health and Welfare could have made such a statement.

• (12:30 p.m.)

As if this was not bad enough, he said the following as reported at page 5 of his speech:

> In some areas, doctors may well have to budget their time to ensure that the persons who need the care are the ones who receive it and those who can wait are the ones who do wait.

In other words if you go in to see a doctor, obviously it will be the patient who will do the diagnosing in the future because the doctor would not have the time to examine him. If you were to say to the doctor "I am having a heart attack", the doctor would give you a certain priority and assign you to a certain place, but then if the next patient were to come and say to him "I have an appendix attack" the doctor might tell him to wait. How else would priorities be given? "It is a matter of judgment and priorities." Surely it must be obvious to the minister that the doctor must look at the patient to decide what is the matter with him.

Perhaps the minister wants to adopt once again military medicine, or triage. Perhaps he would wish to set up government clinics using the triage method whereby the doctor would say: "This patient will go to resuscitation, the other one to the morgue and the third one straight to the operating room." Is this what the minister wants? Perhaps we should take over the east block and use it as a government clinic. In this way it might be put to better use than it has up till now.

This sort of nonsensical statement is typical of the type of thinking we seem to be running into in this day and age. It is the unrealistic thinking of a government that does not seem to realize that the health care of the people comes first and that the requirements of those who are ill come first. I cannot see myself receiving a phone call at four o'clock in the morning from a patient asking me to come to him because he is ill, and saying to him "I am sorry, but I am budgeting my time and this is my time for sleep". Perhaps to carry it to more ridiculous lengths I may suggest that if we budgeted our time properly we could see to it that we are in the operating room from 8 a.m. to 12 noon only, and when the peace tower chimes the noon hour we would lay down the scalpel and say "We have to go now to our office to see the acutely ill patients". The fact that the patient is still on the operating table with his belly opened up, and not sewn together, would not deter us from leaving him there to be looked after perhaps by one of the untrained or partially trained assistants whom the minister proposes.

I should now like to refer to an answer given by the Prime Minister on June 19, at page 1654 of Hansard, when the hon. member for Simcoe East asked him whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated at a C.M.A. meeting in Quebec that it may be necessary, when medicare comes into effect, for doctors to see their patients on a basis of priority of illness, and asked whether this represented government policy. The Prime Minister then said:

> Mr. Speaker, if that statement is alleged to have been made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he has told me that he did not make it.

I can well understand why he would say that. I myself would like to dissociate myself, as I understand the Prime Minister did, from any such ridiculous statement as is reported in the speech sent to me from the minister's office. I did not write it.

The minister went on to mention the fact that a nearly universal program can be expected to bring a rise in doctors' incomes in general. I will not argue the statement. If he referred to gross incomes, then what he said is probably true so far as the general practitioner is concerned. However, I would point out to the minister that although doctors' incomes may rise with an increasing number of patients, and I can give him specific examples in numbers and figures, the costs associated with the practice rise at a much higher rate than the rate of income and will produce a situation where the general practitioner with a busy practice will have to work almost continuously from 8 in the morning untill 11 at night, and very often all night, in order to provide the type of care that is necessary. I know that this is being done because I have done it myself. I am not complaining because this is the profession I chose, and I am sure it is true of most of my fellow practitioners. However, I do think it should be understood by the minister that it is not as simple as all that, namely that if a doctor will have a few more patients he will make a lot more money. A doctor does not get up at 4.30 in the morning when someone calls him on the telephone because he will make $7.35, as they do in Saskatchewan. Let the minister try and get a plumber for $20 at that hour in the morning and see if he can get him. That is not the reason for which physicians get out of bed at that time.

I recall that in 1960, 1961 and 1962 it was being said in Saskatchewan that the doctors were opposed to medicare because under that program they were not going to make as much money. That is not true. The doctors said they would make more money, just as the minister has said. That was not the point and it still is not the point. It is not the doctors' income that is in question here but the manner in which doctors like to practise their profession, so that they can give what they feel within their professional competence is good medical care for the patients that come to see them. The patients do not come to see their doctors because the bills will be paid by the government but because they have confidence in what the doctors can do for them, and that is what is known as the doctor-patient relationship. It has nothing whatsoever to do with fees. In this I accept what the minister has said, with one proviso, that a situation similar to the one in Saskatchewan may arise, when a patient was saying: "Since the government is paying my bills I will go to three or four doctors to compare their opinions". This is what breaks down the confidence between the doctor and the patient, and unfortunately it is happening in the country today.

I will refer once again to part of the speech which appears at page 8 and which reads as follows:

> It is becoming increasingly apparent that if the public's need for the more prosaic, but still basic, medical care is to be met, it will be necessary for physicians to delegate or divest themselves of certain procedures which less highly-trained people can provide so that they can concentrate on those vital services which only a physician can supply.

I wonder what procedures the minister is referring to. The service provided by the St. John Ambulance is excellent. It is quite true that if someone has a torn radial artery and is bleeding to death, anyone who can apply direct pressure to the wound can stop the bleeding. However, instead of having the wound sewn and the artery saved, as it is possible to do these days, it will be sufficient merely to put on pressure and a pad and thus stop the bleeding and let the wound heal by itself. This is one way to do it.

I am not sure what these vital services are which only a physician can supply. I suppose taking out someone's appendix would be one. However, we have all heard the stories of the sick bay attendant in the navy who, during the last war, removed an appendix by using a penknife. Really, the minister's speech makes one wonder who wrote it. The more I read the speech the more upset I get, so perhaps I had better put it away. It should be kept in the archives and resurrected later.

During the few minutes I have left, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on the food and drug services. In so doing, I do not wish to tread on anyone's toes except those of the government. Mention has been made already in the house of the report of the committee on drug costs and prices. Mention has been made too of the question of drug safety, and the work that the food and drug directorate perform. It is to this aspect of the matter I should like to direct a few comments.

I do not believe there is any argument about the fact that the food and drug directorate deserve a great deal of credit for the work they are doing as they attempt to insure that all the drugs taken by Canadians are as safe as modern science can make them. During our committee meetings, it became obvious that not only was the food and drug directorate understaffed, but it lacked sufficient funds and space to carry on the type of supervision that should be conducted over the drugs on the Canadian market. It is amazing to me that those who work in this department have been able to do as well as they have up until now. When I heard the government intended to provide more money for the food and drug directorate, I thought this was fine. Then I heard they were spreading this money over the next 12 or 15 years.

Mr. MacEachen: Where did that information come from?

Mr. Brand: I think the minister is asking a question. I am sorry I do not have the committee evidence with me, but I believe that information was given to the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: Twelve or 15 years, the government?

Mr. Brand: Certainly; the money does not come from any other place, unless we consider the people, and that is something the government does not usually do. Yes, this government: It is a matter of priority. I may be wrong, and perhaps it is seven years or 10 years. But this is not the point; the point is that in the last 10 years there have been more advances, more new drugs brought on to the market in this country than in the previous 1,000 years. What is it going to be like in the next few years?

The minister has questioned the suggestion that the government is thinking of spreading the money over several years, and I am glad to hear him question it. Perhaps, although I do not see it anywhere in the estimates, he is thinking of providing additional money now to make sure that the drugs on the Canadian market are safe for each and every Canadian who uses them. I believe it is essential, with the rapidly changing pharmaceutical technology, that sufficient funds and personnel be provided the food and drug directorate to enable them to carry out many of the recommendations of the committee on drug costs and prices. Unless this action is taken, there is no question but that the food and drug directorate is going to be in serious difficulty if they have to implement fully some of the recommendations of the Hilliard committee, the Boyd committee or the parliamentary committee.

I feel it is essential that the minister look into this matter as soon as possible to ascertain if perhaps some money can be made available to this very valuable watchdog of our Canadian health, the food and drug directorate. They are essential to the drug industry of our country, and they deserve the fullest support of the government of Canada.

There are many other matters that one could mention, Mr. Chairman. There is the matter of the Canada Assistance Plan, which is not working. There is the matter of the guaranteed income supplement and the difficulties people are meeting in that connection. I was reading some of the material put out by the minister's office. He sends out a lot of stuff and I read a lot of it, too. Mention was made of the fact the average amount being paid under the guaranteed income supplement was something like $17 or $19. We are paying $17 or $19 at a time when the cost of living in this country is the highest it has ever been. What has happened to this $19? Well, some rents have been increased so that they approximately equal this amount. This is what has happened.

I believe it is shameful that many of our pioneers in this country do not have sufficient food because of a lack of funds. They do not have any money to provide any of the other amenities which are necessary for every person. Yet this government is proud that we provide $17 or $19 on an average. Some people get only $5, you know, while others get $30.

I do not believe I need to go into what has happened to the war veterans allowance. I believe this subject was well covered by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. It seems to me that the act is being used unfairly to penalize the veterans; I do not think there is any question about that. I am sure all of us, even the minister, have received many letters on this subject. I am sorry indeed to find that the act is being used in this way against those who helped defend the freedom of our country.

There are many other problems but I will not take up the time of the committee to go into them, except to ask the minister once again to look very carefully at the food and drug directorate and the amount of money allocated to them. He should listen to the requests made. If he asks the members of that branch, he will find out what they need, and he should give them the support they need. I should like to pay tribute to the staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I feel they deserve extra credit for being able to do such an excellent job for the people of Canada, despite speeches such as the one the minister made to the Canadian Medical Association. I am sure it is a very trying thing for those people to have to put up with this. Nevertheless I congratulate them on their diligence, and I recommend that the minister listen more carefully to some of the suggestions they make from time to time.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I could not help but wonder as I listened to the hon. member for Saskatoon praising, on the one hand, the department of health and welfare and its staff under the minister, how on the other hand, he could criticize the speech made by the minister, which I am sure one of his staff prepared. I think it is normal and natural for speeches of ministers to be prepared by people within their department.

Mr. Brand: I did not think he was with them any longer after that speech.

Mr. Mackasey: I have taken advantage of the opportunity afforded by these estimates, Mr. Chairman, to comment briefly on the food and drugs committee that has just brought in its report, already known as the Harley report. But as is often the case, unfortunately, I was diverted from my main theme by some remarks that I was happy to listen to while awaiting my opportunity to participate.

I was particularly intrigued by the very excellent speech of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who in the short time she has been in the house I have come to recognize as one who works particularly hard in the house for her constituency. I suspect that she puts a lot of time and effort into her speeches. I was very gratified, in view of the turmoil going on in that party at the present moment, where they are endorsing special status for provinces before getting around to defining it and now find themselves unable to define what that special status is, to see that the hon. lady has made a complete turnabout from the stand she took last year when the minister was bringing in the first step in his guaranteed annual income policy for specific groups of Canadians.

I remember that debate very well, Mr. Chairman, because in the heat of the debate the hon. lady referred to the Canada Assistance Plan as nothing more than a handout. What struck me at that time as unbelievable was that a party dedicated to the cause of socialism, a party that prides itself on its alleged—I use that word now, though I did not dare use it before—role in this House of Commons as being the voice of the little people of Canada, opposed guaranteed minimum income legislation.

Mr. Knowles: What are you so worried about?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, it is unusual that anyone can rouse the veteran from Winnipeg North Centre to holler from his seat, and thus breach the rules that he holds so dear. Frankly, this intrigues and pleases me. I am not worried about the New Democratic party because the New Democratic party are well on the way to destroying themselves. Anyone who reads reports of the convention that is now taking place in Toronto knows that this party is on the path to self-destruction. The leader of the party makes one statement, the deputy leader then contradicts him, and half an hour later a third prominent member says that neither of these two gentlemen knows what he is talking about. So I suggest we do not have to be preoccupied with the New Democratic party. They are so confused and bent on destroying themselves, now that they have endorsed the cause of separatism by preaching a particular status concept for the province of Quebec, that no deep thinking Quebecker would pay any particular attention to them.

I do not think its members need to be singled out, but I think the people of Canada are entitled to know when one of the more distinguished members of the house shows signs of leaving the socialist party, as the hon. lady for Vancouver-Kingsway is obviously about to do, and join the more logical, moderate and temperate Liberal party. In her wonderful half hour tribute to the concept of guaranteed minimum income she was, without actually saying so, paying tribute to this party, which originated the idea under Senator Croll, and the very energetic minister of health and welfare, who had the courage to bring it in.

Had the minister been more interested in his public image and in playing politics, he could quite easily have brought in a $30 increase across the board. Rather he took the concept of a minimum income seriously and decided that we should implement it in the area it was most needed, namely the group of people who were eligible for old age pension but who, for one reason or another, had little or no other sources of income. I could say a lot about that but I am not going to.

Mr. Churchill: Go on. Tell us about Walter Gordon.

Mr. Mackasey: The anvil chorus is as usual saying "go ahead, go ahead". I want to speak about the drug industry, not the new party of separatists in the House of Commons. That subject I will leave for another day, when I can document all of the contradictions that are emanating from their convention, particularly this status for Quebec which they have not got around to defining. The deputy leader tried to define it the other day when he said that this revolutionary new concept of theirs is precisely the concept that the Liberal party was practising under co-operative federalism up to a year ago, but that since the bogeyman, Mr. Trudeau, had joined the Liberals, the N.D.P. were going to adopt this philosophy.

It is nice at times to see the socialists saying that the Liberals were right up until a year ago, and that they are going to carry on because we deviated a little. Looking at these fine representatives of the socialist party, and realizing that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been here throughout the last few days, and to the best of my knowledge has missed the whole convention, I just hope that his sort of advanced thinking has not been forgotten at the convention, and that before the convention ends the hon. member will have the opportunity to go there and put his party back on its socialistic rails.

Right now, Mr. Chairman, that party is fumbling and is badly in need of the experience of the hon. member, who has a great reputation as a parliamentarian, in helping them get back to the Regina manifesto, which certain members of the party wanted to put before the public but were refused.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question. Assuming that all of this is in order on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, does not the hon. member realize that if one does have some advanced ideas they are far more needed here in this parliament than at our convention in Toronto?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I think both members are out of order. I was trying to listen to what the hon. member was saying about an unhealthy condition, but I do not think it has anything to do with the estimates we are now studying.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, this condition referred directly to the socialist party—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is improper for a member of this house to suggest to the chairman that he is alleging an unhealthy condition in any party.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into a debate between your honour and the acknowledged self-appointed custodian of the rules of parliament and parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Knowles: What drugs have you been taking?

Mr. Mackasey: I will pause for a moment to give those two members a chance to get together and to decide what their next intervention or interruption is going to be. I agree that I am out of order, Mr. Chairman, and that the question of a special status for Quebec can be the subject of debate at some other time. Many of us have strong ideas on that subject, and while I do not want to disagree with your suggestion that I am out of order, my observations do tie in with the very excellent speech of the newly converted member for Vancouver-Kingsway. After all, there is an old saying that you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

• (1:00 p.m.)

Under the concept of a special status for Quebec, plans such as have been suggested could not be fulfilled. Such actions could only be taken under a strong central government. I do not suppose at the present moment that anybody in the New Democratic party is really sure of what special status for Quebec is all about. When the hon. member for Greenwood, in a speech of two weeks ago, tried to define that special status, he defined a strong central government with further restrictions on the rights of provinces in the field of education.

Were we to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, in her desire to see that every citizen has a guaranteed minimum income of $3,000, without taking into account regional differences in the economy of various parts of the country and without taking into account that the old age pensioner, say, in Newfoundland does not need the same amount of money to meet his overhead as does the old age pensioner in Vancouver, it could mean that we would be faced with a 30 to 35 per cent increase in taxation. Of course the leader of the N.D.P. has a pat answer to this: We shall increase productivity. That is the new phrase we are hearing now. Instead of "planning" we now hear about "increased productivity".

Having been diverted by interruptions from the opposition side, may I now return to the subject of the drug industry. The Harley committee was in existence for the better part of three years. In common with others who participated in its debates, I wish to congratulate not only Dr. Harley for the wonderful way he conducted this marathon committee, but also Miss Savard, the clerk of the committee, who stayed with it for the whole of its duration throughout two sessions of the House of Commons.

One cannot, as one would wish, discuss in depth the drug industry, on the estimates of one department. I have concluded that the drug industry is of prime importance to at least four departments of the government—the Department of National Health and Welfare. the Department of Finance, the Department of Industry, and now, the Department of the Registrar General. To discuss at length on the estimates of this department the recommendations of the Harley committee, that were designed to reduce the costs of drugs, would be unfair to the minister and to his department.

Nor do I intend to enter any controversy that might exist between members of the house and representatives of the P.M.A.C. with respect to the brand names of drugs, or their generic equivalents. Unfortunately we cannot divorce entirely questions of drug safety and drug prices. Unfortunately, because of speeches by hon. members inside and outside the house and because of speeches by representatives of the P.M.A.C. as well as by representatives of firms outside that association, debate has centered on the question of generic drugs versus drugs with brand names. Anybody who sat on the committee and remained objective will agree that to concentrate attention in this manner is unfair to the food and drug directorate. What concerns this department of government is whether drugs are safe or dangerous.

The over-all result of the Harley committee recommendations, in my opinion, will be to make slightly less expensive certain inexpensive drugs that are now available. The report will do little to induce doctors to prescribe substitutes for the products of companies which, through many years in practice, doctors have come to rely upon.

Not being a doctor or a pharmacist I found it difficult to participate in the committee's deliberations. I found it difficult, in the first three or four months, to follow the hearings, and I never learned how to pronounce some of the generic terms. I left the hearings full of admiration for Doctor Chapman and his staff. Any quarrel that I have with the present minister is that, in all probability, these estimates do not contain a sufficient increase in funds to be devoted to that particular department.

Were Doctor Chapman testifying before the committee again, I expect that his concern would not be particularly with the present state of the drug industry and his ability to police it. I imagine his concern would be over the type of service he would be able to provide when some recommendations of the Harley committee are translated into legislation. Here I am referring to the possibility that in future it may be permissible to import drugs into this country on a broader basis than is permissible today. From my time on the committee I learned that brand names are not necessarily synonymous with safety, nor are generic drugs necessarily dangerous. I think that Doctor Chapman made clear in the committee hearings that, personally, he had divorced himself from such a controversy.

The fact remains that in all walks of life, people tend to buy brand name products. When your wife buys a refrigerator she tends to look for a name brand. The same is true when one buys an automobile, or gasoline, or almost any other commodity. This is true also for the agent purchasing drugs. The agent purchasing for the patient is the doctor, and he has a tendency to trust brands.

It is significant, when one reads books which have been written about the industry, to learn that firms which began by manufacturing generic drugs have ended by marketing those drugs under brand names. As any business grows there is a tendency to use a brand name, so that people may identify the product of the growing company. Also firms are proud of their products.

One firm in Montreal, known as Elliott-Marion Company Limited, began as a small two-man operation. Unfortunately that firm has since been absorbed by a larger corporation. During the transitional period, as the small firm grew, they evolved from marketing generic forms of drugs to marketing brand name drugs.

Doctor Chapman and the food and drug directorate in the next few years will be faced with the difficulty of making certain that the new and inexpensive drugs which everybody is talking of and which will enter the country as imports will meet the extremely high standards that the food and drug directorate has always demanded from drug companies of this country. In my limited travels around the world, when I have discussed the drug industry in other countries, I have invariably found that the food and drug directorate division of the Department of National Health and Welfare of Canada is considered as having one of the highest standards of excellence in the world, as well as one of the finest staffs.

Mr. Rynard: Hear, hear.

• (1:10 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: One of the committee recommendations, and I use it only as one example because there are many of them, which will affect the food and drug directorate, extending out of the Harley committee, is that if drugs are to be imported from countries beyond the seas, once a compulsory licence has been obtained, inspections must be made of the premises and sources of origin in those countries. This is a difficult problem even at the present moment when relatively few of our drugs are being imported—and I say relatively few, meaning in comparison to what is anticipated when these recommendations are adopted as legislation.

But presuming, Mr. Chairman, that this problem is solved, that is, that through some way the source of supply can be checked out in the various countries around the world—and these sources of supply range anywhere from England to Italy, Denmark, Hong Kong, Poland and other countries behind the Iron Curtain, and some other countries where, up to the present moment, there has been some reluctance to have our inspectors visit their up to date plants—even if this problem is circumvented and these inexpensive, and I presume safe drugs, appear on the market, the main problem will once again be to find ways and means of convincing the doctors to prescribe those inexpensive drugs.

I know there are many wonderful recommendations that we re-educate the doctors and put more stress on generic names. In this connection I was struck by the experience of one of the so-called generic firms. I would describe it as a vigorous, up coming firm in the Toronto area, which is well organized and which sells an increasing volume every year to government sources. The president of the company, who is a very distinguished scientist, once said to me, "You know, we have in Canada the least expensive drugs in the world". I chatted with the gentleman for about half an hour to find out precisely what he meant. Perhaps he was generalizing and, if so, unfairly; but he did point out that because of our unique escape clause under the Patent Act there is provision for the availability of less expensive substitutes to a brand name drug where, in the opinion of the courts, the holder of a patent is gouging the public and overcharging for his product. This provision has not been used to the fullest possible extent, but I suspect it will be used much more in the future. The note of desperation in this gentleman's voice came from his disenchantment and frustration with his inability to convince the retail druggists to stock his products, rather than the so-called brand name products.

The reason I said earlier that I deplore the tendency to concentrate on brand versus generic, rather than on safe versus dangerous, is because in refuting or rebutting many of the arguments of the P.M.A.C. there has been a tendency to oversimplify and play down the fact, or rather create the impression, that for every brand name product there is a generic substitute equal in potency, equal in effect, and equal in the safety factor. This is not true. In fact it is not even certain from our investigations that one can reproduce someone else's product identically.

This of course is the basis of the Hilliard report and of the Boyd report. A very interesting article in this connection appears in this week's Time magazine dealing with investigations taking place at the present moment in the United States. For the sake of the record I may say this article appears on page 60 of the magazine. It deals with a very simple, and at times a very dangerous drug, the common aspirin. The substance of the article is that one patricular firm, I think it is Bayer, refuses to limit its quality to the minimum standards of quality set out in the United States Pharmacopoeia, which is a volunteer guidebook sponsored by doctors, pharmacists, chemists and biologists. The argument of this particular firm is that its very minute inspections, which go far beyond the minimum standards, form one of the basic reasons why its product costs many times more than that of a lesser known tablet, but which in the opinion of Bayer ensures superior quality and a greater degree of safety.

I know I have not contributed too much to the debate on drugs, other than to say that although I was a member of the committee I am not convinced we will accomplish very much by implementing all the recommendations of the Harley committee, other than to drive down the already inexpensive substitutes to an even lower cost. But this will do very little, if anything, to convince the doctors to prescribe wherever possible the less expensive drugs, provided of course that they can be convinced that the original product and the alternative product are equal in safety and effectiveness.

I am also a little concerned about other effects of the Harley report. Probably I shall have to withhold my remarks until we examine the estimates of the Department of Industry, or until we resume the debate on the budget, in order to point out that I have never been an advocate of cutting off your nose to spite your face. I am not convinced the solution lies in destroying existing drug industries, which I am fully convinced will be the end result of the recommendations in the report. However, I am not sure these industries have not brought this thing on their own shoulders.

Evidence does show that the margin of profit, gross profit and net profit, of these companies, is double that of the average industry. I believe, however, they ranked seventh in terms of profits of individual firms in Dr. Harley's committee report, well below the soft drinks industry and other industries. Nevertheless they have themselves focused the spotlight of public attention on their industry as a result of their inability to control rising prices and to introduce a greater degree of competition among brand names. But at least they are outwardly convinced that their own products have no exact substitutes.

I wonder whether it is parliament's role or the role of doctors to devote a little more time to this particular problem. I was rather intrigued by the fact that at least half a dozen doctors sat on this committee, all members of the same Canadian Medical Association. It would seem to me that there is a cynicism on their part, an unwillingness to co-operate, an unwillingness wherever possible to investigate thoroughly the alternative of prescribing generic drugs for their indigent patients.

I remember the case of someone I know particularly well who was able to have a badly wanted child as the result of taking a drug called progestoral, a very expensive drug costing $14 or $15 for a three, four or five days dosage. Later I became aware of an identical problem concerning a friend of mine with a married daughter who unfortunately had a series of miscarriages, and was considered unable to have children. I referred this young lady to the doctor in question, who prescribed the same medicine, and after two or three months of pregnancy the young lady realized there was a possibility of having a child safely. She was very pleased and the family were very happy, but unfortunately they were unable to afford the high cost of progestoral.

When I discussed the case with the doctor in question he issued a new prescription written generically. The young lady was able to buy the prescribed medicine with the same basic qualities for about half the cost. I am happy to say that the young lady now has a very fine baby boy as a result of the blessings of modern medicine.

When I took this up with the doctor and asked him, through curiosity, why he did not in all cases prescribe this drug which cost less, he told me that so far as he was concerned, as a result of his many years experience with the brand name progestoral, he knew without a question of doubt the effect this particular drug would have. He said that he took into consideration the economic factor and the ability of the family to pay for the product and wherever possible prescribed the brand name. He added, however, that in other cases where economic factors were dominant he would reluctantly prescribe a substitute, even though his experience was that the substitute did not have the same percentage of effectiveness that the better known brand had.

I realize that the time allotted to me is nearly up. I should like to serve notice here that I do not think the solution to the drug problem lies solely in the Harley committee report. I believe it requires a voluntary study on the part of the doctors and a new approach by the drug industry in respect of proper pricing. Above all I do not believe the solution is in the destruction of an industry which at the present time employs about 10,000 people in Canada and spends millions of dollars in this country.

This is an industry which is helping to develop our export markets. It spends millions of dollars in research, but unfortunately is charging the public too much. I suggest that when we have the estimates of the Department of Industry before us we are duty bound to review the Harley committee report at that time, in the light of the dire effect I suggest it will have on the industry and the fact that we might have to find 10,000 new jobs for people ranging all the way from bottle washers to those holding Ph.D's and involved in research.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, in all the speeches made by Her Majesty the Queen during her visit here in Canada, I am sure that all my colleagues will agree with me that she said a great many true things and that she reminded us, as members who have mainly the duty to legislate, of the urgency of some priorities.

I should like in particular to quote an excerpt from the speech which she made here in the front of parliament a few days ago when she said:

> This country is fortunate and prosperous more than most others. But not all of its people are free from want or hardship. There are still wrongs to be righted and sufferings to be relieved. There is still a contant effort of accommodation to be made so that all the people in this great country may live together in friendship and harmony.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the opportunity comes our way now, during consideration of the estimates of this department, which we are doing at this time, once more to appeal to those in a position of authority in the country, so that they take an even more sympathetic attitude towards misery, the destitute, the poor, the have-nots, the low-income people and the disabled.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that this government, or the preceding ones, have done nothing to alleviate poverty. I am one of those who realize, as everybody else, that, of course, some needed pieces of legislation have been passed in order to alleviate poverty in many sectors, such as unemployment insurance, old age pensions, the minimum guaranteed income, allowances for disabled persons, the Canada Assistance Plan, health insurance, hospital assistance, family allowances. That is all very fine, but I feel that, in our time, it is particularly urgent to alleviate poverty and I think it would be a fine opportunity to review perhaps our entire policy of assistance to those who are deprived of a reasonable and adequate amount of worldly goods.

And to prove once again, Mr. Chairman, the urgency for such a concern for our governments, I should like to quote from the recent encyclical of the Holy Father, entitled "Populorum Progressio," dealing thoroughly with the social situation today, in 1967.

It will be agreed that this study emanates from an authority, if we recall that the Pope consulted a great number of sociologists, that he considered seven or eight drafts of that encyclical and that he suggested all sorts of amendments before approving the final text.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to draw inspiration from such an authority and suggest even to those who are not Roman Catholics to glance through that document which takes a revolutionary and, audacious stand towards the urgency of the social problem we are now facing.

And if I may be allowed a little joke, I would even say that when I read that encyclical I had the impression that the Holy Father has become a supporter of the New Democratic party, that he tends a little towards socialism, because some of his statements are quite advanced.

And I am sure that if the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) has read the encyclical, he must have found it extremely difficult to take the New Democratic party to task as he did earlier. I noticed that he did not fustigate it on the social question but rather on the question of the special status.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I quote verbatim and I am doing it, as I said before, not with the intention of blaming anyone but in order to encourage the government in its efforts to alleviate misery among Canadians and even among other peoples which suffer also from hunger and poverty.

I see here, for instance, and I quote literally:

> Today the peoples in hunger are making a dramatic appeal to the peoples blessed with abundance. The Church shudders at this cry of anguish and calls each one to give a loving response of charity to this brother's cry for help.

Further on, Mr. Chairman, the Pope wrote this:

> We considered it our duty to set up a Pontifical Commission in the Church's central administration, charged with "bringing to the whole of God's people the full knowledge of the part expected of them at the present time, so as to further the progress of poorer peoples, to encourage social justice among nations, to offer to less developed nations the means whereby they can further their own progress":

A little further, in a chapter entitled "For Man's complete development", the Pope says:

> Freedom from misery, the greater assurance of finding subsistence, health and fixed employment; an increased share of responsibility without oppression of any kind and in security from situations that do violence to their dignity as men; better education—in brief, to seek to do more, know more and have more in order to be more; that is what men aspire to now when a greater number of them are condemned to live in conditions that make this lawful desire illusory.

It will be agreed that the appeal of Our Holy Father the Pope is certainly moving.

This is another excerpt which I find a little further:

> At the same time social conflicts have taken on world dimensions. The acute disquiet which has taken hold of the poor classes in countries that are becoming industrialised, is now embracing those whose economy is almost exclusively agrarian: farming people, too, are becoming aware of their "undeserved hardship". There is also the scandal of glaring inequalities not merely in the enjoyment of possessions but even more in the exercise of power.

And the Pope continues in that vein. We could almost quote this whole encyclical, since it is so appropriate and it meets so well today's needs. A little further, he says:

> We must make haste: too many are suffering, and the distance is growing that separates the progress of some and the stagnation, not to say the regression of others.

Once again, another excerpt in the same encyclical:

> There are certainly situations whose injustice cries to heaven. When whole populations destitute of necessities live in a state of dependence barring them from all initiative and responsibility, and all opportunity to advance culturally and share in social and political life, recourse to violence, as a means to right these wrongs to human dignity, is a grave temptation.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take your time to read the rest. A great many of those excerpts could be quoted but I want to limit myself to those two testimonies: the appeal of Her Majesty the Queen and the encyclical of our Holy Father the Pope, so that the cry of misery which cannot make itself heard alone by the people who suffer, may be heard again today in this house. I am speaking of the poor, the sick, the aged who are deprived of the necessities, especially of the handicapped. And I am doing so, Mr. Chairman, in view of the forecast of those who reflect on our future that within thirty years, by the year 2,000, conditions may be such that 20 or 25 per cent of the people will no longer have the opportunity to work and earn a salary.

This means that, with industrialization, with excessive automation, people who are suffering and unemployed today will suffer more and be even more unemployed if the governments fail now to make projections with the most modern scientific data and prepare, in the light of these projections, to pass legislation which will enable every Canadian to enjoy what is called a reasonable minimum of well-being.

Mr. Chairman, there are still people who consider it visionary and demagogic to claim that there is suffering among us and who are very happy in all their statements to discover that we are living in a country of abundance. However, a study of the official statistics will show, for instance, that in 1966 3,500,000 Canadians lived in poverty. Of course, there are various degrees of poverty: there is destitution, poverty, hardship, which is the lot of marginal classes, and among those 3,500,000 Canadian citizens, 1,300,000 suffer from some physical disability and for the most part do not have a sufficient income to enjoy at least a reasonable level of comfort which can be expected by people living in an affluent democracy.

To support my theory, I should like to quote more eloquent figures from the report of an investigation carried out last year, I believe, in the city of Montreal. I am not suggesting that there is more poverty in Montreal than anywhere else, but I am quoting a specific case, to convince those who think that there is no poverty in our country.

This study shows that:

In the City of Montreal itself, 423,418 persons, or 38 per cent of the total population, and in the metropolitan area,—

This is the greater Montreal area.

—706,830 persons, or 33 per cent of the whole population, live in poverty—

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Not only in poverty or in misery, Mr. Chairman, but in an unbearable misery for some of them, while many others endure distressing hardship.

For the benefit of those who would like to go to the source of this information, I am quoting from "Le Travailleur Canadien", edition of May 1967, which deals with the results of that survey. I quote again:

Moreover, 17 per cent of the entire metropolitan population lead a hand-to-mouth existence. If we take these people into consideration also, then the total number of people in the metropolitan area who live in misery, poverty or hardship rises from 706,830 to 1,032,000, or 48.6 per cent of the total population—

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this reveals a serious flaw in our capitalist system, and if this same system does not deal with these cases of hardship in order to find a solution as soon as possible, social upheaval will surely ensue.

For instance, poverty is defined as follows in that article:

Poverty—families and individuals are poverty-stricken: in general, any family of four whose total income is less than $2000 per year and any individual without a family whose income is less than $1000 a year.

And a little further on, the article says:

Over 55,800 families out of 217,000, or 20 per cent of Montreal families are poverty-stricken, as well as over 27,000 suburban families, or 14 per cent.

All the same, those figures speak for themselves and are alarming, Mr. Chairman, and if the popular saying: it's no use preaching to a hungry man, is kept in mind, all sorts of social evils are to be dreaded, if no way is found to give those people a minimum of reasonable comfort to which they are entitled.

I know that some people have found solutions. For instance, I read in a newspaper from last year that the dean of the department of agriculture of the University of Alberta ascribed to large families a great deal of hardship in the country. Therefore, he suggested, and I quote word for word an article which appeared in La Presse on March 10, 1966:

If the parents object to limiting the number of their children, the government should compel the father to submit to sterilization—

No more nor less.

—or see to it that the mother resort to contraceptive devices.

During a dinner in a social club on Tuesday, Mr. Bentley—

The name of this erudite professor is Mr. Bentley.

—Mr. Bentley said that the population problem is so serious that anyone who has more than three children is uninformed and not very intelligent.

Mr. Chairman, I have seven children; I plead guilty. Some sociologists propose empirical solutions, but that is obviously not the way to solve the problem. Incidentally, His Holiness the Pope answers this very question in his encyclical, for he says that those who advocate compulsory birth control by means imposed by the government are in a sense heretics, and that we should try instead to use the wealth which Providence has bestowed upon us and distribute it equally among the needy. In order to do that, of course, we will have to go a little way towards what we call socialism, Mr. Chairman. At home, we usually tell the socialists, the members of the New Democratic Party that they are Liberals in a hurry.

Well, I suggest to the members of the Liberal party that the time has come to change gear and become Liberals in a hurry also because the needs of the times are urgent and social upheaval is cause for concern.

In further support of this theory, I should like to quote another authority much more competent than I on the matter, His Eminence Cardinal Léger of Montreal who said, in a speech before the St. Lawrence Kiwanis in May last and I quote:

It is not true that a Christian should have a sickly fear of State intervention in the economic life. Nor is it true that a Christian should be obsessed by anti-socialism.

And here is where the cardinal is also becoming a socialist.

The truth of the matter is that inertia of public authority is to be feared just as much as this totalitarian concept which would stifle all initiative among the citizens. Obviously, some large undertakings can be carried out efficiently only by the State and only the State can create some security and social assistance programs. In this case, it is not reticence but dynamic co-operation or yet a highly developed spirit of initiative which must be found among all Christians involved, one way or another, in the affairs of the State.

Mr. Chairman, this is the point: Those who rightly claim increased aid, those who are deprived of a minimum well-being are told that there is a limit to what the State can do. Indeed, if pensions are paid and grants given, they must be paid for through taxes just as it may be true that the saturation point will eventually be reached and that taxation will become prohibitive. But that is precisely where I feel the government should try to seek more daring and more modern solutions and that is probably where some points of my New Democratic friends program might be agreed to, for instance when they suggest that the State should have available some highly profitable public concerns whose income is now turned over solely to some rich individuals and which could then be distributed to the have-nots, too numerous in our society. By so doing, the fantastic increase in taxes which usually accompanies the generous social legislation implemented by the government could perhaps be avoided.

Mr. Chairman, once again I repeat that I am making these remarks not to blame the government but rather to let the voice of our destitute be heard as loudly as possible.

Amongst those who suffer, amongst those who are destitute, there are surely old people. Today, people are old before their time. For instance, Mr. Chairman, at 45 one cannot find employment these days. The way things are going, and thinking about what I said a while ago, considering what life will be in 30 or 35 years from now, the eligible age for old age pensions will have to be lowered from 70 or 65 years to 40 or 45 if people are not to die of starvation.

But let us talk about those who have reached 65 years of age, whom it is agreed to call old people and to whom a $105 old age security pension was granted recently. I say that is not even enough under the present circumstances because a $105 pension nowadays is not worth more than perhaps the sum of $50 twenty years ago, Mr. Chairman. Moreover, in my opinion, not enough thought has been given to providing those senior citizens who can subsist on their pensions with something to do to occupy their time, so that they will not get bored or vegetate.

I suggest that we should follow the example of Sweden which in 1950-53 appointed joint committees to consider the case of retired old people.

Many of them would still be able to render some services if they were retrained for jobs that they could carry out at their age. The fact is that if they are in good health, they also have a vast experience, and the committee studied the matter of aged workers in Sweden.

I quote textually:

The study of statistics concerning the distribution by age in the various occupations, manpower rotation and unemployment, took also into account interviews with personnel officers concerning the policy of business firms towards elderly workers.

I submit that we should try to find means to keep at work those elderly persons who can still work, who want to work and who have acquired experience, instead of condemning them to idleness, and letting them die slowly.

I should also like to plead the case not only of those old people whose income is insufficient and who are left to die slowly from boredom or idleness to which they are condemned, but also for another group of needy people who, in my opinion, are not treated yet as they should be, who suffer still from a mentality worthy of the middle ages and who cannot ask for help. I mean those who suffer from mental illness. There was a time when people were ashamed to talk about them. Today, people are a little more broad-minded but I think that in that field also it will be necessary to increase the help given to those who suffer from mental illness.

I should like to pay a special tribute to the Canadian Mental Health Association, a non-profit organization which tries to improve the well-being of all those suffering from any kind of mental illness.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, I was surprised to read in their literature passages like the following, which I will quote in English so as not to distort their thinking.

According to the Canadian Mental Health Association:

[English]

Mental illness hits more Canadians annually than all other diseases combined including such disablers as cancer, heart disease and tuberculosis.

[Translation]

Secondly:

[English]

The cost of mental illness to the Canadian economy reaches $600 million, enough money to provide a free university education for 50,000 young Canadians.

The federal government spends only 5 cents per person per year on research into mental illness, although the causes of mental illness are known in only a few instances.

[Translation]

That is an astonishing revelation Mr. Chairman: 5 cents per person per year.

[English]

Upwards of one third of the population has suffered with at least some temporary disability because of mental or emotional illness.

If no further progress is made, at least one of every ten babies born in our centennial year will spend some part of its life in a mental hospital.

There are over 100,000 emotionally disturbed children in Canada.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

We have proper facilities for treating less than 400 of these children.

Nearly half the hospital beds in Canada are occupied by the mentally or emotionally ill.

Canada is woefully short of psychiatrists, psychologists, occupational therapists, social workers, nurses, aides, all so necesary to care for and treat our mentally ill.

• (1:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

In my home town, Mr. Chairman, people say a very cruel thing: that apparently only the very ill are confined; there are many others who are not confined and who could, if they were looked after, become an asset to society instead of being a burden or a liability. Mr. Chairman, after referring to the mentally ill whose condition could be greatly improved, I should like to deal briefly with the handicapped, the disabled who very often are unable to leave their homes and lack the money required to buy all their medicine, who live and wallow in a perpetual boredom which lessens the talents they may have. Even though they are physically handicapped, many of them are sound of mind, and I feel that more attention should be paid to those disabled in order to help them lead a more useful personal life.

I would like to give as an example a case in my own city that was handled with some success. A group of disabled persons established an association whose members are given all kinds of small jobs and make repairs in shops. The group was given a bus which is used to bring the disabled to popular events. Those people thus feel less miserable about their disability.

Mr. Chairman, to go back a little to what I was saying a while ago, I should like to mention one case which I find cruel. It happened back home, a few weeks ago. In a certain family, there is a young girl of some 17, 18 or 19 years of age, I do not remember exactly, who in addition to being mentally ill is also physically ill, and both most seriously. She is paralyzed, lives in a wheel-chair and has grown, with the years, extremely difficult to get along with. Indeed, she sorely tries the family to the point where the education of the younger ones suffers due to the fact that the parents have grown ill. The situation has become unbearable. The family therefore applied to have the girl placed in a suitable institution. Months go by; no place is available. Finally, they turn to the authorities. They go to see the mayor, the member of parliament, the vicar and everyone pleads the case of the patient. Still, no place can be found. They have to wait.

One day, a member of the family justifiably got into a wrath and called the chief of police and told him: I have a hunting-gun here, and if you do not come and get the sick girl and have her admitted this very day in an adequate institution, well, I will kill her. The chief of police went to get her and placed her in an institution. She was admitted; there was room then.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if such drastic action is necessary to place mentally ill people in institutions, there is something wrong with society. If it is true that there is no room, let us build institutions lest entire families should suffer such a martyrdom. After all, we must consider that there are younger children who suffer from their being in contact with those mentally ill people.

Mr. Chairman, I will summarize my plea with the following words. I should not like my words to be interpreted as a blame against this government or its predecessor. However, I should like to point out that we are approaching a critical point where the social issue will be increasingly urgent and that we will have to revise all those measures brought in throughout the years and which, very soon, will not meet the needs of our society which has the right to enjoy a minimum of comfort in this rich country of ours.

Perhaps it would be appropriate to say something about the two thirds of humanity that are starving, but it would be beyond the subject we are allowed to deal with here, under those estimates. Let me just say it is inadmissible that so many Canadians should go without the basic minimum. We must absolutely provide for that. In that connection, I am one of those who approve the persistent requests of our friends from the New Democratic Party. I should like to congratulate in particular our colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), for her appeal of a while ago.

I should like to point out also that kind of missionary zeal shown since many years, in spite of difficulties of all kinds, by a Quebec woman, Mrs. Thérèse Casgrain, in order to relieve those Canadians who are suffering in this affluent country.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take long, since it is already getting late. I would have many things to say, but I will make only a few remarks. I would have a table to record in Hansard so as to show that we have a substantial production and that we can reasonably finance social welfare by means of that production, and especially the surplus and capitalization.

Well, I will simply say a few words so as to define the individual, the human being. As we are confronted with civilizations which ignore, which despise man, no task is more urgent and more imperative than to come to the defence of man, to the defence of the human being.

To defend man in order to save him, to establish a social order where man will be recognized and respected, that is the basic problem facing mankind today. From the realistic point of view, man is simply a complete individual and a member of the human community. He is an entity made up of a body, a soul, an intelligence, a will, a character, a conscience, a number of needs and aspirations, a world of feelings and ideas.

Let one of those numerous and often contradictory aspects be ignored, let one be given excessive importance over the others, and man suffers, his stability and that of the whole social structure are endangered. The individual must be taken as a harmonious and complex whole.

As a member of the human community, outside which he cannot be conceived, man cannot be separated from his natural environment: family, profession, association, humanism; man can only live in a fertile soil. This reed must have the roots of an oak. Without his roots, man weakens and dies. He becomes a thing, an animal drifting through life, just like a ship is tossed about by a storm. Alone, man is just a wreck drifting away. The diversified infinity of elements which constitute man causes each human being to be an autonomous and unique reality, different from all others.

All men have a unique personality, a unique history, a unique purpose; each man, each woman bears deep inside a truth, a vocation. The characteristic of man, and his specific quality, lies in his own truth, his vocation which is not to be found in any other man, or in any other woman, but belongs to this unique being living in a unique world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would have many other things to add, but I will mention the table I want to put on record so as to explain it in a few words, the revision of the Bank Act which was made in 1944 and in 1967 provides us with very significant stages in the evolution of our Canadian economy, under the leadership of businessmen and politicians.

After 23 years, it is possible to determine those areas that have gone forward, backward or remained stationary. This will enable us to decide precisely where it is necessary to change the trends of our national economy in order to reach our goal; that is the welfare of every human being in our Canadian population, again from the economic viewpoint.

The following table will bring forward its own conclusions. Therefore, I shall place this table on the record in order to avoid taking more time. These figures show the total production in 1944 and in 1967. And the figures from 1944 to 1967 have multiplied five times, for example, the 1944 production was $11,400,000,000 and that of 1967 was $62 billion. Five and a half times more in 1967 than in 1944.

Consumption and expenditures were $10,120,000,000 in 1944, as compared to $40 billion in 1967, that is four times more.

Capitalization and profits amounted, in 1944, to $1,280,000,000 and, in 1967, to $22 billion, or 17 times more.

I want this table to appear in Hansard, because it would take too long to quote everything.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being two o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will begin with the estimates of the Department of National Defence, and we would also like to take the third reading of the Interpretation Act.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I suggest we do it now.

Mr. MacEachen: That would be fine.

Mr. Knowles: Provided another minister can be found. While the one minister we have is looking for another one, I wonder if there are not a couple of motions with which we could deal now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ASSISTANTS FOR MEMBERS—SUBJECT MATTER OF MOTION REFERRED TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): By leave of the house I move:

That notice of motion reading as follows:

"That, in the opinion of this house, in view of the growing burden of responsibilities of members of parliament, the government should give consideration to the provision of experts and specialized personnel to assist members in the discharge of their duties similar to the assistance that has been made available to members of Congress and Senate in the United States." Standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) as notice numbered 39 on today's order paper, be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the special committee on procedure of the house be empowered to consider and report upon the provisions thereof.

Motion agreed to.

INTERPRETATION ACT

REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION, AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENT OF OTHER LEGISLATION

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. S-6, to revise and consolidate the Interpretation Act and amendments thereto, and to effect certain consequential amendments to the Canada Evidence Act and the Bills of Exchange Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS HOURS ON JULY 6 AND 7

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): I understand, Mr. Speaker, there is agreement amongst all parties that private members hours be suspended on Thursday, July 6 and Friday, July 7.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Does the house agree to suspend private members hours on Thursday and Friday of this week?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: I thank hon. members for their co-operation, and wish to say that we will call the defence department estimates tomorrow. If those are completed, we will continue with the estimates of national health and welfare, and transport, on the understanding that, in accordance with an order of the house, these departments will be passed by 9.30 and we will have the supply bills covering ten departments and interim supply by that time tomorrow evening. On Friday, as was agreed some days ago, we shall begin with item 1 of the Department of Trade and Commerce to permit a discussion of the Kennedy round.

It being five minutes after two o'clock, the house adjourned, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 6, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

AGRICULTURE, FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Second report of standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development—Mr. Whelan.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

UNITED NATIONS

TABLING OF RESOLUTIONS CONSIDERED AT GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to yesterday's order I wish to table copies in English and in French of resolutions which, on July 4, 1967, were voted on at the fifth emergency special session of the general assembly of the United Nations.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to make it an order of the house that these particular documents be added as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I understand this was part of the order passed by the house yesterday.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED CONFERENCE OF PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister make a report to the house regarding the conference with the provincial premiers? He will recall that on May 10 last he stated this conference would take place in respect of constitutional matters. Will he also advise whether there is any prospect, on the basis of the consultations, that the provinces are now generally in support of the need for a bill of rights as part of a constitutional amendment rather than a statute only applicable to federal measures?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, during our discussions yesterday afternoon, which occupied between two and three hours, the question of a conference to consider the direction of confederation and confederation problems was referred to by the premier of the province of Ontario, who indicated some months ago that he intended calling a conference for this purpose. Mr. Robarts made it clear that he had in mind a conference of provincial leaders, and that in his invitation to the provincial leaders he would indicate that he would invite the federal government to send observers. It was the consensus of the provincial leaders that if an invitation of this kind were issued, and it is likely that it will be sent shortly for a meeting in the fall, it would be accepted. If we receive such an invitation asking that a federal government observer be sent, we will be glad to send one.

The other matter mentioned by my right hon. friend was also of a constitutional nature, regarding the desirability of enshrining in our constitution a bill of rights which would have both federal and provincial application. I indicated to the provincial leaders that I would be sending an invitation in respect of a special federal-provincial conference to discuss this matter, to be held, I hope, either late in 1967 or early in 1968. The consensus was that a conference of this kind would be useful, and that the provinces would be glad to send representatives. I think we will be able to make progress on this very important aspect of constitutional development before many months have passed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister indicate that as a result of the discussions which took place there was any indication on the part of the two provinces which in 1959 and 1960 objected to constitutional amendments that they have changed their views? And in view of the fact that apparently the same objection to the convening of a conference on constitutional matters has been taken by these provinces, will he give further consideration to the suggestion that it would be generally desirable to attain unity, perhaps, by convening a constitutional conference in this centennial year? I suggest this because certainly the conference he has mentioned could not by any stretch of the imagination be successful so far as the whole spectrum of constitutional change or alteration is concerned.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the premier of Ontario, who first made the proposal for a constitutional meeting, himself indicated to us that this should not be considered as a constitutional conference in the sense that constitutional changes would be raised and discussed, but a conference to consider problems of confederation and the direction of confederation in a general way. It was felt that such a meeting would be a very useful and perhaps an essential preliminary to a later constitutional conference.

While a meeting of this kind is being held, with the federal government represented by observers, we are ourselves federally examining the problem through a special section of the Department of Justice, as has been announced to the house, and are developing our own ideas. This matter will subsequently be dealt with also in parliament. It is felt, and I think the heads of provincial governments would agree with this in view of the talk we had yesterday, that this is as far as we should go in the immediate future; that the conference in 1967 would not go beyond a general survey by the provincial leaders of our constitutional problems and the direction in which we are going as a confederation.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

EXPRESSIONS OF APPRECIATION OF CELEBRATION ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I have your permission to make a statement while asking a question of the right hon. Prime Minister? I desire to do this because I have never felt so proud—and I have always been proud to be a Canadian—as I have in the past six days in Ottawa in our centennial year. Knowing the pressure on the Prime Minister and the work he did, may I ask this question in expressing my thanks—this is not put forward for the opposition—to the Prime Minister. I express the hope that with all the responsibilities now facing the Prime Minister, he can take a most well earned and relaxing holiday. He certainly deserves it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for what he has been good enough to say. I assure him that the pressure in the last six days was of a most agreeable form. Perhaps I may take advantage of the hon. member's question to indicate my own view, which I am sure is shared by all members of the house, that if the visit was as successful as we know it to have been, and if the arrangements were as effective and as efficient as we know them to have been, the credit for this should go to the centennial committee, the officials of the centennial committee; also and in particular to the officials of the Department of Public Works, who I think did a most remarkable job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: They worked round the clock to make sure that the arrangements for the next day were ready each morning. A great deal of credit should also be given to the police and security people. We may have different views as to whether there was too much or too little security, but I do not think any of us will have any difference of viewpoint as to the effective, quiet and courteous way in which all the security officers, R.C.M.P. and others, behaved during a very difficult time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is one occasion when we can all join in complete agreement. I want to pay a particular tribute to the Minister of Public Works for the manner in which he discharged his responsibilities throughout this period. His efforts were most praiseworthy, and were deeply appreciated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This, however, does not prevent me from saying one thing about a newspaper article in last evening's Ottawa Citizen. I was shocked by the cartoon in the Citizen showing Her Majesty the Queen and her husband. This is inexcusable and goes beyond the realm of what is fair and responsible when dealing with the Sovereign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED RUSSIAN STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE COUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday my colleague the hon. member for Red Deer asked whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs had any information with respect to a report emanating from Moscow that a revolt was imminent in Cyprus, and also with regard to the position of our peace keeping forces in that country. Can the minister answer that question today?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the subject matter covered by the question of the hon. member for Red Deer, and I suspect he was referring to an article which appeared in Pravda echoing some concern about alleged events in Cyprus of three weeks ago, particularly remarks that were made in the house of representatives there by the leader of the party called the Patriotic Front. That person had indicated there was an intensification of activities and intimidation by certain circles on the island. However, I believe the situation has not worsened, and I do not think it warrants the conclusions referred to in the article in Pravda.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question relates to the business of parliament between now and the time we take the summer recess as forecast in a motion, notice of which has been given by the government house leader. Is it now clear the government does not intend to do anything, before we break for the summer recess, with respect to the pensions of retired civil servants?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to point out that no administration in our history has been more sympathetic to civil servants, including retired civil servants, than has this government. I should like to point to the fact that we have introduced collective bargaining for civil servants and we have made every civil servant, and indeed every Canadian who receives the old age pension, the recipient of a minimum income of $105 a month.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister who is answering my question whether he will deal with the point about which I asked, namely whether anything will be done for retired civil servants between now and tomorrow night.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I was on the point of answering this question. As my hon. friend knows, this is a very involved question. Indeed, consideration will be given to it by the government between now and tomorrow night but, as I have told the hon. member before, legislation will not be introduced to effect possible changes in the pensions of retired civil servants until after the recess.

Mr. Knowles: Shame.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the government intends to make any increases to retired civil servants' pensions retroactive?

Mr. Benson: This would be my hope.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—THREATENED CLOSING OF VOCATIONAL SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. In view of recent announcements which have caused great concern in Churchill, Manitoba, relating to the possible removal of the Eskimo school and administration staff from Churchill to a spot in the territories, can the minister assure the house that every consideration will be given before this removal takes place; because all the facilities necessary for carrying on that school are now located in Churchill.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe the reply I made to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition the other day dealt with that matter. There is no change in our policy from that which I announced in 1965, and it will be a matter of two or three years yet before there is any possibility of any change. I do not believe, therefore, there is a great deal of validity for deep concern in Churchill at the present time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS RESULTING FROM TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON FOOTWEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that almost one third of the footwear worn by Canadians is now imported, and as a result of the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations Canada has agreed to reduce the tariff on imported footwear by 2.5 per cent, what steps does the government propose to take to provide jobs for the thousands of shoemakers whose employment is now in jeopardy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is aware that the house has agreed to call the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce tomorrow afternoon for the purpose of considering the very type of question now raised by the hon. member. I believe that might be the time to discuss this matter.

The hon. member for Portneuf.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question concerned the situation in the shoe industry, to which attention was drawn a moment ago.

[English]

TRADE

CHEESE—INCREASES IN QUOTAS ESTABLISHED BY UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it a fact that the United States import quota on Canadian cheddar cheese has been raised, and if so by how much? I ask this question, in view of the fact the house is closing tomorrow and certain planning is necessary in the industry if in fact the quota has been raised.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the quota has been raised. The United States administration, through Secretary Freeman, has now for the first time established a separate annual quota for aged cheddar cheese with effect from July 1 last. This quota amounts to 1,225,000 pounds annually on a first come, first served basis and no import licences are required. Shipments to the United States under this quota would, however, have to be certified as being made from unpasteurized milk and aged not less than nine months. If Canadian producers are able to take up the whole of the quota this would represent a doubling of the 614,000 pound cheddar cheese quota previously available to Canada in the United States market.

In addition to this specific quota for aged cheddar, the United States administration have also substantially increased their over-all quota for regular cheddar to 8.8 million pounds, as compared with the previous level of 2.8 million pounds. This quota for regular cheddar is not limited as to type of cheddar supplied. We are working with the United States authorities to ensure an appropriate portion of this over-all quota for Canada.

HONOURS AND AWARDS

AWARDS UNDER ORDER OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO CENTENNIAL MEDALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, according to reports Her Majesty yesterday invested the Governor General as Principal Companion of the Order of Canada. This is very proper and appropriate. Now I ask the Prime Minister, what is the present position of this award in view of the fact it was generally felt, as I recall, that the award would be made on or before Dominion day? What is the position also in respect of the 28,000 centennial medals and the award thereof?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am sure the house will share the satisfaction of the right hon. gentleman—I certainly share it—that in accord with the regulations setting up this order the Governor General has been invested by the Queen as Principal Companion. These matters are decided by a committee and I know nothing about the deliberations of that committee, but through inquiries I made this morning I understand that the first list will be coming out tonight or tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the centennial medals?

Mr. Pearson: I believe the centennial awards will be following within a week or two. I am not sure of the exact date, but there is a committee at work on that now.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State is supplementary to the one asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is about the centennial medallion. Can the Secretary of State inform the house exactly how many of these medals will be struck, what Canadians will be eligible for them and whether members of this house, as a memento of this great year in our history, will receive them?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the committee responsible for this matter issued a statement some time ago about the individuals or classes of individuals who would be getting the medals. It was quite clear that it was to apply to all members of both chambers of parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Is my name also on the list of members of parliament to receive this centennial medal?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: Why?

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DECISION TO REMOVE COMMISSION OFFICE FROM NORTH BAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I will ask it of the minister who is taking his place. In view of the decision that has been made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to move its North Bay office and district audit office to Sudbury in the near future, thereby causing hardship and the probable resignation of some 26 employees, would the Minister of Labour request the commission to reconsider this move and allow this office to remain in North Bay as a service to that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that this is not the type of question that can normally be asked on orders of the day. However, I appreciate that there will be an adjournment tomorrow, and in view of the special circumstances perhaps the question can be allowed.

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED MOVE OF DEPARTMENTAL STAFF FROM NORTH BAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say whether there has been a decision to move the public works departmental staff from North Bay to Sudbury? If so, would he give favourable consideration to cancelling that move?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there has been a decision in that regard, but I would prefer to give a full answer tomorrow and provide an explanation which I think will be more satisfactory.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works and/or the minister of mines and resources. Has any complaint been received by the respective departments concerning the flood levels of lake Timiskaming on or about June 12 of this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether this is a question that could be accepted even in the very special circumstances that I mentioned a moment ago.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN SITE OF NEW BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the precedent that you established a moment ago but may I, coming from Vancouver, address a question to the Minister of Public Works in view of the recess beginning tomorrow. May I ask the Minister of Public Works what consideration has been given to the motion that was passed by the Vancouver city council prior to June 1 relative to the location of a new federal building in Vancouver.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, a very great deal of consideration has been given to that matter. The department expects to be in a position in a very short time to make an announcement about the location of the proposed new federal building.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

CIRCULATION OF COMMISSION MEMO IN FRENCH ONLY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State. Is the Secretary of State aware that Gilles Bergeron, associate commissioner at the centennial commission, circulated a memo to staff this morning on a code of discipline; and as the memo is in French only does this mean that the code should not apply to those who speak English?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that question is in order.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say that I did not, of course, know about it, but happily most of the members of the commission are fully bilingual.

AIR TRANSPORT

STEPS TO DEAL WITH RESERVATIONS NOT PICKED UP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any progress to report with regard to the problem facing Canadian air lines, especially Air Canada, with regard to "no show" passengers? I understand that on some routes more than 20 per cent of the reservations that are made are not taken up.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, I made a suggestion in the house and conveyed it to Air Canada and to Canadian Pacific Airlines. I judge from the public prints that this is under discussion, but I had not thought Air Canada had any special obligation to report on the matter to me. However, I would be glad to make inquiries, and I will see whether I can give the hon. gentleman an answer tomorrow.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—THREATENED STRIKE BY SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour about the negotiations between shipping companies on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence and the Seafarers International Union which, as I understand from articles in the Montreal Star, have broken down. What steps does the government intend to take to alleviate any problems that may arise when parliament is not in session?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to take that question as notice and answer it tomorrow if possible.

[Mr. Monteith.]

IMMIGRATION

PROCLAMATION OF NEW APPEAL BOARD LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to indicate when the government intends to proclaim the new immigration appeal board legislation and bring into effect the new principles therein contained?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): We intend to do it as soon as possible. I think it would be difficult to do it before September 1, but I hope it will not be later than October 1.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED QUOTAS IN NEW CROP YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does he contemplate any changes in the initial quotas for wheat, oats and barley by the Canadian Wheat Board for the new crop year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is not normally a matter of whether the minister contemplates a change. That is usually a matter for the wheat board. I shall consult the board.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE OF SAINT JOHN FESTIVAL OF MUSIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State in her capacity as reporting to the house for the C.B.C. I am sure she is aware of the Canadian centenary festival of music at Saint John, New Brunswick, that is to begin today and end on July 15. I am sure also that she is aware of the circumstances of the participants in this festival. The question I wish to direct to her is, would she use her good influence with the C.B.C. in order that the corporation may either broadcast live or film, so they may be presented at some suitable later date, the finals of July 15. I have been informed that officers of the association have had little luck with the C.B.C. The corporation rejected their representations, saying that they were not of sufficient national interest to broadcast.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a representation which we must assume has been noted by the minister.

Mr. More: May I add one more word. I suggest to the Secretary of State that this matter is as important nationally as are the Oscar awards. Surely the C.B.C. could give the request consideration.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): To answer the only part of my hon. friend's statement which was a question, I might say that if ever I had any influence with the C.B.C. it has substantially waned in the last few months.

REPORTED OMISSION OF SASKATCHEWAN FROM CENTENNIAL TELECAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can the hon. lady explain to the people of Saskatchewan why the C.B.C., in its television coverage of the celebrations across Canada of July 1, completely ignored the province of Saskatchewan? The people of that province are gravely disappointed that their province was completely ignored and was not even honourably mentioned.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman's statement. By action of this government former prime ministers had their offices elevated so that present incumbents of the office of ex-prime minister would be fully in view at all times, unlike the situation during the last royal visit. Certainly a representative from Saskatchewan was large on all screens.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the answer.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): I think the hon. lady has missed my point. I was speaking of the celebrations that were shown on television. They completely ignored Saskatchewan. I am sure the C.B.C. could have been told about this by the hon. lady.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALGERIA—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF MOISE TSHOMBE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of Canada had made any representations to the government of Algeria concerning the release of Moise Tshombe, the former premier of the Congo. Since parliament does not have much time before it recesses I should think this question has become increasingly urgent. If world opinion is not mobilized against that act of piracy to which attention has been drawn I doubt whether Mr. Tshombe will have much time, either.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Tshombe is not a Canadian citizen. He is in Algeria. Whether he is extradited will depend on the law of Algeria. Compassionate as I am, I doubt if my writ runs that far.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE APPEAL OF COURT DECISION RESPECTING THE "FLORIDA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that the court has decided that the Florida, which we have discussed a number of times, is no longer to be considered a ship, does the Department of Transport intend to appeal that decision?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should say that the officers of my department have been discussing this question with the law officers of the government. Until these discussions are completed I am afraid I cannot give a definite answer.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1, which will be found on page 308 of the blue book, with the details listed on page 312.

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,850,056,375 for the purposes of Votes 1, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,221,323,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year, subject to the direction of the Treasury Board, in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, any member of the British Commonwealth or any provincial or municipal government and in respect of charges made pursuant to regulations under the National Defence Act for:

(a) clothing and kit items sold to members of the Canadian forces;

(b) living accommodation;

(c) food supplied to members of the Canadian forces and to messes and institutes catering thereto; and

(d) medical and dental care provided to dependants of members of the Canadian forces (details, page 312) $6,593,375.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, a few days ago when we first discussed vote No. 1 of the national defence estimates two members of the official opposition and I asked the minister some questions. As specific answers could not be given then, may I ask whether the minister intends to give us a brief resumé of some answers to those important questions? Would the minister also inform the house how much it cost the Canadian taxpayers to move our squadrons in France after they had been kicked out to another country, despite the fact that they had been placed where they were for the protection of France?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps I can answer briefly some of the questions which were raised the other day and then try to deal with the question just asked by the hon. member.

The hon. member for Edmonton West wanted to know the total strength of each service. The figures I have, are Royal Canadian Navy, 18,367; army 42,580; air force, 45,025.

The hon. member also asked how many of our personnel were on retirement leave on the same date. The figure is 1,104, which I think is the lowest for many months, perhaps even for many years. He also asked about recruiting by services and I can give that information for the first five months of 1967.

The hon. member for Calgary North asked about the increase in the dollar budget. This is due entirely to increases in pay and allowances and consequent increases in government contributions to the superannuation fund. There is an increase of $49 million for military pay and allowances, $8 million for civilian salaries and wages and $59 million in government contributions to the pension fund.

The hon. member asked about the cost of the hydrofoil. I understand that this question was answered in some detail in the house yesterday by the Minister of Defence Production.

As far as the CF-104 and its roles are concerned, there is nothing to add to what has already been stated in the house. It is to continue in the roles which have been assigned to the Canadian air force in Europe—reconnaissance, nuclear strike and conventional attack. It is planned to continue these roles for some time in the future. It is still the policy of the government as stated in the white paper of 1964 to reduce the strike role as the number of airplanes is reduced by attrition, so there will be a continuing reduction over the years in line with present policy.

The hon. member for Vancouver East asked about minesweepers. As he probably knows, five of our minesweepers were recommissioned this year as training ships. They are presently in commission, though they have not been restored to their minesweeping capability. This particular capability is still considered to have a relatively low priority as compared with other tasks assigned to the Canadian armed forces. I would add that the techniques of mining and minesweeping are changing. Continuing study is being given to these developments in order to determine what capability would be the most effective in the years ahead should a decision be taken to acquire some limited minesweeping capacity.

I was asked how many airplanes we expected to get from the CF-5 program. At the moment the number is still 115, at a cost of $215 million. There is some possibility that we might alter the number of airplanes to a small extent, but if we did this we would expect a reduction in the cost of the program. In other words, under a $215 million program we should expect to get a total of 115 planes.

A question was raised with respect to the tankers to be provided for these airplanes. It has been decided it would not be advisable to use the Hercules. Studies have been under way and are now under consideration by the government with respect to the acquisition of a jet refueller for the CF-5 and any subsequent follow-on aircraft.

A question was also raised as to whether there will be sufficient pilots to man the CF-5's. I assure the committee that there is in fact no pilot shortage. There will be an adequate number of pilots to man these planes in the years ahead. They will come from the training stream, which is being augmented. In addition there will be some pilots available from the air division in Europe as the total contribution there diminishes. So we anticipate there will be enough pilots to meet the demands consequent upon the formation of these three new squadrons.

I was also asked a question with regard to the manning of the Bonaventure. I wish to assure the house that on the basis of the most recent information given me by the commander of maritime command the manpower to run this vessel when it comes out of repair has been earmarked for many months. He has assured me that the men are available, that he knows where they are and that they will be assigned to this ship as soon as it is ready to come back into service.

Mr. Churchill: Is that in addition to the manning of the other ships?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: It is in addition to the manning of the post-war destroyers. As to the cost of the repairs to the Bonaventure, the present estimate is of the order of $12,570,000. This, of course, is greater than was anticipated at the time the refit commenced. The increase in costs is attributable to a number of factors. These include sales tax, wage escalations, increased material costs and an increase in the amount of work to be done which was discovered only after the ship was stripped down, at which time it was possible to see the state of repair of some of the original machinery which could not be adequately determined until it was actually in refit. I am advised, and I believe this to be the case, that there was no fault in the tendering which caused this escalation. The entire increased cost was due to the factors I have just indicated to the committee.

A question was also raised concerning the situation in respect of the DDH-280's, known as destroyer helicopters. Tenders have been called and the lead yard will be determined after the tenders have been received. It is anticipated that the starting date will be November 15, 1967, or approximately that date. The savings associated with the cost of constructing two ships in each of two yards as opposed to the cost of constructing one ship in each of four yards is appreciable. What the difference actually is is difficult to determine because it would be necessary to call tenders side by side in the two different manners in order to know precisely what it is. It is estimated, however, that this technique will result in savings in the order of $5 million on the project.

The figure of $61,196,000 which appears at page 318 is not related specifically to these two lead ships; it is the total of the 1967-68 cash requirement for all ship construction, including this program. I think this covers the question which was asked by the hon. member for Halifax. I believe it also covers the majority of the questions that were asked.

In respect of the question just asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East I should like to say that it is not yet possible to determine the actual cost of moving the squadrons to Germany from France. We are still in the process of negotiating a settlement in a number of areas. Until the negotiations are complete we will not be able to give precise figures. I would hope that during the course of the summer months it might be possible to have all of this work completed. Perhaps by the time the house resumes its sittings we will be in a position to indicate the total.

Mr. Winch: Is my understanding correct that France is not prepared to pay any part of the cost and that it is up to Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think I should comment at the moment on the specific details, because there are a number of negotiations under way. This is really only partly under my jurisdiction. I believe it would be preferable to wait until we know what the results of the negotiations are before reporting in respect of them.

Mr. Winch: I assume that the cost of moving the families will be completely the responsibility of Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: That is quite correct. These costs are our responsibility. As soon as the bills come in we will be able to compute this and give my hon. friend an answer.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not answered a number of other questions which were asked of him. I should particularly like him to comment on some of them in addition to the answers he has given at this time. I asked the minister several questions in connection with the proposed communications satellite and whether it was to be purely a military satellite or a combined military and civilian satellite. I am also interested in knowing how it will fit into the available slots, as it were, which are available in space for communications satellites and whether this program, if it goes ahead, would mean that Canada would have one less civilian communications satellite which it could use or could orbit. I wish the minister would elucidate on that matter.

I also asked the minister for a breakdown of the amount of money being spent on equipment for each of the services, the navy, the army and the air force, which he now prefers to call equipment for the sea environment, the land environment and the air environment, so that we may have some means of comparing what will be spent in the present fiscal year for these purposes compared with other years. This is not disclosed in the estimates at the present time.

In addition I asked the minister when the first keel will be laid for the four new destroyer escorts. He said something about the destroyer escorts and they have been talked about now for a considerable length of time. As I believe he mentioned when these estimates were under discussion on June 22, the only actual orders which have been placed in connection with them are for some propulsion machinery. We would now like to know when the keel of the first of these destroyer escorts is to be laid. We would also like to have some estimate of when they may be ready for service. After the minister answers these questions I should like to make a few comments on some other matters, including the hydrofoil.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the aim of the tactical satellite communications program is to develop satellite communications terminals and technology in tactical environments, that is, aboard ship, in aircraft, and mobile terminals for the land forces. This is to be a joint NATO program, the governments participating being Belgium, Canada, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the sponsor, the United States. A draft memorandum of understanding has been prepared. It likely will be agreed to at a NATO meeting some time in the latter part of this summer and will then be presented to the participating countries for ratification shortly thereafter.

The United States has already launched the first experimental satellite. The participating countries have agreed to provide their own terminals and share the results of the test program. Canada has initiated procurement of two mobile terminals and will commence technical trials about December, 1967. The information thus acquired, and shared by all countries, will be used to develop tactical hardware in a later phase of the program. Canadian test terminals will be manned by Canadian military personnel already on establishment.

In so far as the relationship between this project and the possibility of Canada putting into orbit its own communications satellite is concerned, I am told there is no interference between the two projects.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, when these estimates were under discussion before I believe the minister mentioned there would be a second communications satellite to be shared by the United States, Australia and Canada. The only one to which the minister has referred now is the NATO project which was agreed to earlier by the various NATO countries. I wonder what the effect of this second one will be so far as other civil communications satellites are concerned. It is my understanding that there is room for only a very limited number in space if they are to be effective.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I forgot the context in which this matter was being discussed. If I recall correctly from memory, there will be the possibility, under the program I have just discussed, of a second satellite being put in orbit at a later time in addition to the one the United States has already put into orbit. The question my hon. friend is asking has to do with the project known as project Mallard which is a trilateral project between the United States, Australia and Canada. This does not involve putting a satellite into orbit. It is a battlefield communications system which does not involve putting a separate communications satellite into orbit.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Harkness: In that event I think the minister probably misled us on June 22 when he interrupted me in respect of this matter and said there were two systems, one being developed by Australia, the United States and Canada for ground forces, and the other being a NATO system. From what the minister has now said there really is only one system, not two as he said at that time.

Mr. Hellyer: There are two separate systems. One involves putting satellites into orbit and the other does not. If that system requires satellite communication, presumably it will use satellites already in orbit and available for that purpose.

Mr. Harkness: I also asked the minister to give a breakdown in respect of the amount to be spent on equipment this year for the navy, army and air force respectively.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat reluctant to give that information. As I indicated to the committee previously, this information ceases to be relevant because the tasks which are assigned to the armed forces and the amount of money which is apportioned to each task are changing. For example, there might have been a transfer of an assigned responsibility in a certain area from one force to another. One would have to examine the relevant responsibilities as well as the amounts available to get a side by side comparison. In view of the fact we are moving in the direction of functional budgeting, and because of the reason I just stated, this information ceases to be relevant, particularly on a comparative basis so far as the navy, army and air force are concerned.

While I have the floor, perhaps I could elaborate briefly on an answer I gave regarding the destroyer escorts. The date I gave, November 15, is the best projection available at this time as to the commencement of work. Presumably the keels will be laid about that time or very shortly thereafter.

Mr. Harkness: What was the date?

Mr. Hellyer: November 15 of this year.

Mr. Harkness: I can understand the reluctance of the minister to give us a breakdown. I think it is related to the fact that he does not want us to compare what is to be spent for each of the forces this year with what was spent in the past five or six years. This is the basis of the complaint we raised when these estimates were before us before and on points of order and questions of privilege. The present form of the estimates is not in accordance with the law which is still in effect until the act in respect of the amalgamation of the three forces is proclaimed. If the estimates were in the prescribed form we would be able to compare what is being spent this year with what has been spent in previous years. I believe that the committee is entitled to this information and the minister should give it to us before the estimates are passed.

The Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Harkness: Is the minister not going to give us this information? He said he was reluctant to give it but I think the committee is entitled to it and I am now asking that he give a breakdown in respect of forces expenditures.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I hesitated to rise because I thought the minister might give an answer. Approximately a minute has passed since the question was asked. I should like to ask the minister to take a few minutes to explain the situation in respect of the 970 forces personnel who have now been brought back to Canada from the Gaza Strip. I should also like to ask the minister to clarify the position of our personnel assigned to the truce commission. Will he explain their function?

Will the minister also indicate whether we are keeping some kind of force on hand for the Middle East in the event that Canada is requested to perform some role there? I hope the minister will take us into his confidence and indicate the size and type of force we would be able to provide in the event of that necessity arising. Let me follow that up by asking the minister to bring us up to date in respect of the mobile command. When does he expect this command to be trained and fully equipped and able to fulfil its purpose as mentioned by the minister, namely, availability at quick notice?

Mr. Hellyer: First of all, let me say that the troops who served in the Middle East were drawn from units of the regular forces. In many cases their jobs were not filled. Therefore the men no longer required in the Gaza Strip will go back to their regular positions following their leaves.

So far as our capability to provide troops if they are needed in future is concerned, let me say that we can meet any reasonable request. As my hon. friend knows, we have one battalion on stand-by which is instantly available for United Nations duties provided the government of Canada decides it is in the interest of this country to participate in some United Nations role. Whether or not the need would be for an infantry battalion, we do not know. Fundamental to the whole philosophy of United Nations peace keeping, it has been our experience, as related in the white paper, that no two requirements are alike. For that reason, rather than building up a special force we have found that we have been able to meet each requirement as it occurred. This is true because we have well trained and well equipped forces and are able to extract from them those men with the particular capability required at a particular time. I am sure this would again be true regardless of whether it was support personnel, an infantry battalion or something of that nature. It would be quite impossible to speculate as to the specific individuals, units or sub-units that would go until the actual requirement was known. I think my hon. friend will appreciate this.

So far as mobile command is concerned, its reorganization is coming along very successfully. This is a major reorganization, as my hon. friend knows, and it will take a number of years to implement it in full. In other words, it will take a number of years to acquire all the machinery and equipment that is required for the total force and to have the troops trained in the use of that equipment and bring them to the maximum of operational capability. Throughout this period they are maintaining their operational capability and enhancing it all the time, but I think it will reach a new peak of effectiveness in perhaps three or four years time, around 1970 or in the early 1970's.

It will take that long, because of the lead times involved, to acquire the equipment, make it available to the various formations, set up the training requirements for each of the equipments and train the troops to be proficient in their use. So I would think the present high capability would continue to rise throughout, say, this entire five year period but that it would reach a new peak of military effectiveness in four or five years time.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a supplementary question? I appreciate the answer given by the minister. Developments happen very fast these days. The situation in the Middle East developed very fast, a war started and it was over in six days. The United Nations is now having to consider at the diplomatic level all of the occurrences in the Middle East. This leads me to the question I wish to ask.

I understand that the house may adjourn until September 25, approximately two and a half months from now. I am very pleased to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the chamber while I put this question to the Minister of National Defence. When things happen so fast, when we hardly know from day to day, let alone from week to week, what may happen in the Middle East or what decisions may be made by the United Nations general assembly, which has adjourned for a week, or by the security council of the United Nations, if a decision is made there which may involve a request to Canada for military aid, will a decision in this respect be taken by the government without the matter being considered by parliament or will parliament be asked to come back if such a request is made? I am certain the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence know what I am talking about. If we adjourn until September 25, having in mind the speed with which developments occur today—God knows they develop very quickly—and a decision is made by the United Nations general assembly to request military aid from Canada, will this requirement be met by the government during the recess or will it ask for the authority of parliament?

Mr. Hellyer: This is a hypothetical question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: But it is an important one.

Mr. Hellyer: I agree with my hon. friend that it is important. If the requirement was to send an augmentation for UNTSO, the United Nations truce supervisory organization, I am sure this is a matter that could be dealt with expeditiously without the necessity of calling parliament. If, on the other hand, the requirement was of a substantial nature it would of course be necessary to call parliament at once to ratify any action the executive had taken.

I believe this policy was well set out by Mr. St. Laurent and has been reiterated since then by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and perhaps by myself in the house. I can assure my hon. friend that if any action was taken by the executive which involved a substantial contribution beyond the present terms of reference, we would feel obliged to call parliament at once.

Mr. Winch: I believe 970 troops were withdrawn from this area. Does the minister's answer mean that this commitment is now finished and that our having had troops there previously does not mean we would automatically send them back? There would have to be a new agreement, would there?

Mr. Hellyer: I think that is correct, Mr. Chairman. Unless the force was a reactivation of UNEF, the order in council would not give authority.

Mr. Winch: That is the very point I wanted cleared up.

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think anyone would try to hide under that subterfuge. If it was a new force, new authority would be required.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut in on the argument put forward by my colleague the hon. member for Calgary North but I want to reinforce the argument he has made with regard to the breakdown of the procurement of equipment as between the forces as they exist today. I wish to draw to the minister's attention the remarks I made on June 22 last which appear at page 1827 of Hansard. As reported in the middle of the first column, I said:

> Let me point out that in the estimates there is no amount shown specifically for procurement of aircraft for the navy. There is an amount shown in respect of aircraft and engines for the whole force. That is all very well, but we have no specific information in this regard.

If we look at the item "Maritime Command" on page 319 of the estimates book, we see there is an item of capital expenditure proposed amounting to $115,957,000. This does not give us any detail with regard to the procurement of ships, aircraft, or any information with regard to ground or mobile installations, and so on. We certainly cannot obtain this information from the details which appear on page 318, where there is an item for major equipment, ships, of $61,196,000. Then there is an item for aircraft and engines amounting to $95,221,000. What the minister is actually asking the committee to do by his refusal or reluctance to give us a breakdown is to give carte blanche approval to very large items of expenditure for which we are given no details.

With respect to aircraft, for instance, we do not know how many are going to maritime command, how many are going to mobile command, how many are going to the air division, air defence command or transport command. We are told that the answer will be found in the total. This is not good enough. This is precisely the point raised by my colleague the hon. member for Calgary North. I am concerned about this matter. I should like to know just what part of this capital expenditure is for maritime command.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid there is a misunderstanding in this respect. I have no reluctance whatsoever to give the breakdown and the details in respect of ships and airplanes and to indicate where they will be used. I am quite prepared to do this. To break these figures down into army, navy and air force specifically would be difficult now.

Mr. Lambert: By law the estimates had to be printed that way because the act still insists that there is an army, navy and air force.

Mr. Hellyer: The estimates were prepared in precisely the same form as that used in previous years. In so far as the votes are concerned, there is no difference now in the way they appear compared with last year or the year before. My hon. friend is aware of this.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, there is a difference.

Mr. Harkness: There is a big difference, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that in all previous years the amount of the equipment procured for each of the navy, army and air force was specifically set out in the estimates.

Mr. Hellyer: It was in the details, but not so far as the votes were concerned.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Perhaps I could give the breakdown of the three major items:

Ships: Maritime Command
Miscellaneous construction in 1967-68	$1,000,000
Design support	4,255,000
Mechanical and electro mechanical equipment	1,269,000
Small boats and motors	168,000
D.D.H. class	16,494,000
Oberon submarines—equipment, material and construction costs	8,540,000
St. Laurent class conversion (program completed)	—
Restigouche class conversion	15,000,000
Operational support ships	11,500,000
Bonaventure improvement	2,970,000
Total:	$61,196,000

This is an increase of $24,462,000 over the estimate for the same class of objects last year.

Aircraft:
Cariboo aircraft (no expenditure contemplated)	$ —
Yukon aircraft, CC-106	300,000
Starfighter aircraft, CF-104	2,100,000
Hercules aircraft, C-130-E	1,000,000
Re-engining the Cosmopolitans, CC-109	800,000
Silver Star, T-33	550,000
Tracker midlife modernization, CS-2F (maritime command)	2,500,000
Buffalo aircraft, CC-115 (mobile command)	11,396,000
See King helicopter, CHSS-2 (maritime command)	8,000,000
Light attack aircraft, CF-5 (primarily mobile command)	60,000,000
Voyageur helicopter, Labrador helicopter (no expenditures this year)	—
Tudor Aircraft, CT-114	660,000
Utility jet, CC-117	7,700,000
Miscellaneous	215,000
Total:	$95,221,000

This is a decrease of $23,339,000 over the previous year's estimates.

Electronic and communications equipment:
Communications equipment:
fixed	$11,955,000
mobile (air)	1,407,000
mobile (sea)	1,303,000
mobile (land)	3,056,000
Radar, nav. aids, infrared and I.F.F. equipment:
fixed	1,168,000
mobile (air)	1,289,000
mobile (sea)	1,775,000
mobile (land)	530,000
Operational data processing equipment:
fixed	550,000
Electronic warfare equipment: E.C.M.
fixed	3,021,000
mobile (air)	198,000
mobile (sea)	2,030,000
mobile (land)	267,000
Sonar and anti-submarine warfare equipment:
air	8,463,000
sea	1,126,000
Cash abatement imposed to meet exigencies re programming	(5,000,000)
Total:	$33,138,000

Mr. Winch: May I ask the minister a brief supplementary question? As the minister may know, I and other members of the defence committee who were previously members of the reserve and the militia had a major complaint, namely, that there was a lack of proper equipment for the reserves, the militia and the cadets. In the breakdown which the minister gave us no sum was allocated for the equipment and re-equipment of these men. It seems to me it is most important that this be done so as to build up morale and facilitate their training. Why did the minister not mention the allocation of one cent for new equipment to provide proper training and to build up the morale of the thousands upon thousands of civilians who are in the militia? Is nothing being allowed for this purpose? I cannot understand how it is possible that this year there is not one cent in the estimates for new equipment for the reserves and the militia.

Mr. Hellyer: I did not cover all the details but just the major items because these were the ones which involved the largest dollar expenditures. We have here some minor equipment for the reserves as follows: ships, $46,000; armament equipment, $701,000; miscellaneous technical equipment, $190,000. The total is $937,000. I may say that this expenditure is programmed to increase slightly in the years ahead. We will be providing more new equipment than has been provided in the immediate past. It does not mean we are going to provide new equipment for the total reserves as this is not feasible within our budgetary limitations, but it does mean we are going to provide sufficient up to date equipment to enable the men to see what the equipment looks like and when they exercise with the regular forces they will be in a position to make the maximum use of their training.

Mr. Harkness: In the list that the minister gave us I noticed that no equipment was being provided for the army except for some communications equipment, and thus the minister's reluctance to give the type of breakdown that was asked for becomes more and more understandable. In addition to the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, that no equipment for the reserve forces was mentioned by the minister, no equipment was mentioned with reference to the army except for some communications equipment for what the minister now calls the land environment.

However, I should like to say something about the hydrofoil. I asked a number of questions with regard to the hydrofoil when the estimates were last discussed on June 22, and in reply a short time ago the minister merely said that the cost of this craft had been given in answer to written questions. Actually they were questions put on the order paper by the hon. member for Melville and they showed that the cost of this program is now estimated at $50 million. I think this is a matter of very considerable concern to all members of the house. A great deal of consideration was given to the authorization of this program in 1961 and 1962. At that time the total cost of the program was supposed to be under $10 million. Now the cost has escalated to five times that amount and I think the end is not yet in sight.

This seems to be an example of very poor estimating. I know there was a fire which caused some increase in costs, but it seems to me there must be some other reason for the enormous escalation in the cost of this program.

Looking at the Auditor General's report for 1966, we find that he goes into this matter in some detail. He indicates that in April, 1963, the estimated cost of the hydrofoil project was $9,100,000. Then, in March, 1964 it went up to $16,300,000. By June, 1964, only three or four months later, it was up to $20,655,000. By November of that year the cost had risen to $26 million. I should like to ask the minister the reason for this big jump in the estimated cost from $20 million to $26 million in the course of about six months. Then, in June 1965, another eight months or so later, the cost went up to $36 million, a jump of $10 million. By April, 1966, the cost had risen to $43 million. Now there is another big jump in the space of one year to $50 million.

What are the reasons for these very large increases in costs? As I say, in a few months' time the cost rose from $16 million to $20 million, from $26 million to $30 million and then from $43 million to $50 million. This is the type of thing which I believe causes a large number of people to lose confidence in estimates. We have an estimate for a certain amount of money for a certain project and then we find the cost has increased fivefold. Another example of an estimate which has increased by four or five times over the original estimate is the arts centre, close to where we are sitting. In view of our primary function as members of parliament to keep an eye on expenditures, I feel we should have a full explanation.

Mr. Hellyer: I agree with my hon. friend that the original estimate for this project was not as accurate as it might have been. Since my hon. friend was the minister at the time the original estimate was made, perhaps he could help me explain why the estimated cost was not more accurately forecast at that time. Since that time there have been a number of contributing factors. There have been increases in taxes and wages. I presume, and I am saying this only from memory, that the weapons system has been included since I believe the anticipated cost of the weapons system is of the order of $10 million.

This figure was included in the amount the Minister of Defence Production gave the house yesterday. The total amount for the ship system, therefore, would be $40 million and about $10 million for the weapons system. In addition, there was the cost of the fire, as my hon. friend explained, the extended program period due to the fire and the extra overhead that is involved resulting from the extension of the program. My hon. friend is quite right, however, in pointing out one of the serious difficulties, particularly in development projects, of getting more accurate estimates. We are making an effort to improve the technique, and I feel with some success. I do not believe there will ever be perfection in this field because historically in this country, the United States, Great Britain and France, the estimated cost of these major development programs, airplane developments and ship developments, has escalated by a factor of two, three or four or even more over the original estimate.

Under our new system we are requiring much more extensive program definition than was the case previously. This in itself involves some expenditure. The aim of the project has to be more clearly outlined and the various steps involved recorded on paper. The cost of each of the steps involved has to be estimated with a greater degree of accuracy and detail than was previously undertaken. I fully expect this will reduce the margin of error in the future perhaps by 50 per cent, but I am not yet confident that any system has been devised which will predict accurately the cost of new development projects.

I should point out to my hon. friend, however, that as the cost increased the options available were to cancel it, which would have meant a total loss in so far as the determination of these new areas of knowledge is concerned which we were pursuing, or to continue to spend the extra money required and gain experience in a number of very important areas. This is a new method of propulsion. The fixed foil system for open ocean travel is a new concept. The method of transferring the power involved new techniques. The habitability of this kind of ship is unknown. For these and other reasons we felt that the knowledge which would be gained for the armed forces through continuing the project and from taking the ship to sea for trials would justify the expense involved.

Mr. Harkness: Dealing with the latter statement of the minister, I point out that when the project was first authorized it was, of course, on the basis of the high potential value it would have if it proved successful. It was authorized, to begin with, on the understanding that the cost was not going to run to anything like the figure it has. In other words, at that time the estimate was, as I understood it, practically guaranteed to be in the neighbourhood of $10 million. I should like to ask the minister if the contractors doing this work have been working on a fixed price contract or a cost plus contract, and to what extent has this contributed to the increase in the cost of this project?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not have the entire answer to this question, Mr. Chairman, since it relates to the responsibilities of the Minister of Defence Production. The original contract, which I think has been recently changed since the fire, involved a bonus incentive system whereby the units were priced out at agreed rates and there was an incentive to the contractor to try to complete the ship at less than the unit cost and in less than the prescribed time. If this were the case, his profit margin would have been enhanced. If it were not the case, he would suffer a loss.

It is very difficult with a development project of this kind to get a fixed price contract because there are so many unknown elements that no one would bid on it in those terms. However, I do not disagree with my hon. friend when he says that perhaps if the total cost had been anticipated at the time the project was authorized it might have been looked at differently. But when you get half way through a project and have spent $30 or $35 million, then the decision is really to spend another $15 million in order to gain knowledge in a number of areas that are of interest to you, and that is the decision you have to take and not the original one.

Mr. Harkness: Has the supervision of this project been in the hands of the Defence Research Board, the naval construction branch of the department or who has been supervising the work being performed by the contractor?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: We have a project officer in the Department of National Defence in charge of the project, but of course the contract itself is the responsibility of the Department of Defence Production and any increases in cost have to be approved by Treasury Board in the normal manner.

So far as recommendations to carry on with the project are concerned, this matter was considered at defence council where the advice of the chief of technical services and his officers, other senior staff officers and the defence research board was obtained. There was an opportunity for everyone who was interested to state their point of view before a decision was taken.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the minister quite understood the question. When a naval vessel is built—and this vessel is a naval vessel—there has always been to my knowledge a supervisory staff present at the site to ensure that the proper standards are met in constructing the vessel, in regard to the equipment put into it, and so on. Who is in charge of this on the construction of the hydrofoil?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, we have a naval captain in charge of the project who has officers responsible to him, and they are responsible for the technical standards.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, as a result of the fire that occurred on the hydrofoil the government and therefore the taxpayers have to spend an additional $3 million on the project. It is my understanding that the Department of National Defence has a project manager—I believe that is the term—present at all times. This gives rise to the question I have in mind. My information—and I would not disclose it unless I considered it authentic—is that the fire occurred because of the complete neglect of all safety factors at the shipyard. As I say, I have this information on what I consider the highest authority. Apparently there was inflammable material in the engine room at the time and when the engines were tested an explosion occurred followed by the fire.

I should like to ask the minister what report he has received from the project manager as to the cause of the fire and whether the cause was, as I am informed on highest authority, neglect of safety factors. If that was the case, then the $3 million extra cost should be a charge on the shipyard, not a charge on a department of the government or the taxpayers. Can the minister give the house any factual information from the report he received as to the cause of the fire and state whether or not there was complete neglect of safety factors in construction?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, there was a board of inquiry and I would not want to answer the question without getting a copy of its report and refreshing my memory. I do not think the situation was as my hon. friend states. Certainly that is not my recollection of it, but I would not want to comment without taking another look at the findings of the board.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I am also interested in the answer given by the minister in regard to the assumed total cost of the hydrofoil project. It was rather significant that in this morning's paper there appeared another item dealing with defence but in relation to another country altogether. It tells of the decision of France to pull out of a joint venture with the British to build an Anglo-French V-G aircraft, which was to be a very sophisticated strike and reconnaissance aircraft. It was hoped that it would be the pride of the Royal Air Force after delivery in 1975, but the scheme has been shot down.

The last two paragraphs of the article have some interesting things to say about the experimental work that goes on in the defence industry and I think it applies equally to Canada in relation to the hydrofoil project. The article has this to say:

> Industrially, the V-G was considered vital because it gave Britain's substantial aircraft industry a chance to work on a technically advanced model. The theory was that such work would produce valuable expertise for British industry as a spin-off.
> Without advanced military projects, British airframe makers may be unable to keep first-class designers on their payrolls. The industry would decline, it is feared, and dependence on U.S. planes would increase.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, looking at the estimates of the department and noting the enormous expenditure on defence by a country with the population of Canada, that we should seriously question whether in this day and age we should be prepared to launch into experimental work in defence unless it is almost guaranteed that there will be some valuable spin-off into private industry of some commercial worth as a result. I also feel we need to pause and reflect on the fact that our dependence on the United States for defence, as the dependence of Britain or any other country which associates itself with the western group of nations, will be increasingly greater. I noticed that the minister of external affairs was with us for a while this afternoon listening to this debate, and I regret that he has now left because external affairs and foreign policy are so keenly involved here.

The real question for Canadians now is not what we spend on defence or what kind of projects we will launch or are launching but rather whose umbrella we are under. I asked a question during the question period today which related very indirectly to which side we were on in today's world. A related question dealing with a matter outside the minister's department was asked by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce on June 19. It concerned the training of pilots for Algeria under external aid. The Prime Minister promised at that time that an answer would be given the next day. I looked at the next day's Hansard but did not find an answer there, and I have not had time to make a diligent search to see whether an answer was given.

On that occasion the Leader of the Opposition asked: When did they become our allies? I know that the official opposition has been very preoccupied lately with its own labyrinth of leadership problems and in various ways has been marching along roads more tangled, I am sure, than the streets of the Casbah, but I can tell the Leader of the Opposition when Algeria became an ally of ours. It was in March, 1966, a day or two prior to March 18; I cannot be exact on the date. We then signed an accord with that nation which involved providing a variety of forms of aid, and if the information presented by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is the case, something very close to military aid was to be provided and so is very important to us today.

It seems to me that we do not examine closely at the present time who our allies are, where our aid is going and for what purposes it is given. Though we spend $1,688 million on defence we seem to be engaged in several external affairs policies that could be detrimental to the very defence that we boast we are spending so much for.

The minister mentioned the hydrofoil program. I wonder what other experimental programs we are engaged in at the present time. Much could be learned from this program and the way that its costs have accelerated. I doubt that there will be much spin-off into private industry or into the shipbuilding industry of Canada from this project. It seems to me that at a much earlier time we might have shown the sort of realism that France has shown with some of its defence projects. We might have cut this project off. It was not a joint project but entirely our own.

Incidentally, defence costs in future will be such that there could be increasing collaboration between Canada and other middle powers and small, industrialized countries on a variety of ventures. Here again, when becoming involved in joint defence projects with other countries of the world we shall need to be extremely concerned about who our allies are and when and why they have become our allies.

It behooves all members in the opposition to be aware of small matters which go unnoticed. Our cultural agreement with Algeria, our exchange agreement with that country, went unnoticed because it was alluded to only in the French language press of this country. The English language press did not mention it. The agreements aroused little interest when they were entered into.

We are involved in a complicated scheme which goes by the name of Francophonie. This scheme is motivated by the highest cultural motives, the aims of which are to increase exchanges between countries that use the French language. Several nations of North Africa, particularly because of their histories, are involved in the use of this language. We tend to enter into agreements with those countries despite their being governed by regimes that ordinarily we would not countenance. Through the highest of motives we enter into alliances that will come home to roost in ways we least expect. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce mentioned one such matter which came into prominence with the outbreak of war in the Middle East. That war caught us by surprise, and policies such as contributing to a United Nations peace keeping force, policies in which we had put our trust, were found to be incapable of fulfilling the purposes for which they had been designed.

As we reach the point where we end discussion of defence estimates we should think carefully of the total costs involved in expenditures for external affairs and defence matters. We should be prepared to examine and to rethink schemes such as the hydrofoil project. We should think carefully about what we are doing in both these fields of government activity.

I appreciate the close questioning that the hon. member for Calgary North has directed toward the hydrofoil scheme, because its total cost of $50,006,000, is staggering, especially if one thinks of 50 $1 million schools or 50 $1 million hospitals. An equivalent sum could have been spent in a variety of constructive ways in Canada.

[Mr. Johnston.]

The minister has expressed the wish that the added knowledge the military personnel will gain will prove worth while. If that added knowledge is confined only to the armed forces it will be worth no more than the worth of a new toy. Such knowledge, in return for an expenditure of $50 million, will not increase the defence capability of Canada. I hope it may be possible to translate some of that knowledge into the private industrial, productive, and commercial sector of this country.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, as I rise to speak there are two main questions I wish to ask about this department. I will not refer to details. The first question is: In view of what has happened since we had the opportunity to question the minister in February, March and April of this year and in view of what happened in the Middle East recently, what is to be the future role of the armed forces of Canada? My second question is: Is there a role for Canadian peace keeping forces in the world today? Before the minister enunciates defence policy I would ask him to answer these two questions.

For a few moments I wish to refer to some comments the minister made in opening the discussion of his estimates. As found on page 1816 of Hansard for June 22 he said:

> The purpose of our defence policy is not and never was to create simply a giant peace keeping force.

That is a far cry from what he said in this house several months ago. The minister shakes his head. I shall quote certain statements he made before the defence committee. I take it from the minister's nod at the present time that he is indicating that he never maintained that one of the purposes of his defence policy was to create a giant peace keeping force.

Mr. Hellyer: I always said it was one of the purposes but not the sole purpose. So long as my hon. friend clearly delineates this distinction I am sure that we shall both be on common ground.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes. That is what I want to get straight, Mr. Chairman. I find it hard to reconcile what the minister said on the defence estimates previously and what he has said at the present time with some statements that the chief of the general staff has made. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred to those statements. I ask the minister whether the chief of the general staff had authority to make the statement which is attributed to him in the Globe and Mail of April 24. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred to that article which is headed, "Mobile Peace Force Is Goal." Then follow the general's remarks:

> The creation of a mobile world peace keeping force as well as elimination of waste are the goals of Canada's proposed reorganization—

The minister a few moments ago said that this is not one of the goals of defence policy. Whom are the people of Canada to believe? Are they to believe the chief of general staff or the Minister of National Defence? Is this another red herring with which the minister is trying to confuse the public? Regardless of the question asked him, he can say both yes and no to it. I will refresh the minister's memory as to what the chief of the general staff has said. He has told us that Canada's forces are being made into a highly mobile force in keeping with their role as peace keepers in the world. He further said that in the wake of the defence white paper it was clear that Canada was committed diplomatically and militarily to an expanding peace keeping role. Here again, I say that the statements of the chief of staff are not in accord with what the minister has just told us. This is one of the matters we should clear up before we go further with these estimates. Just what is Canada's defence policy? Let the minister get up and express it clearly. I invite him to do so in the course of this debate. This is the time.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, the policy is as stated in the white paper of 1964 and as reiterated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this house a few weeks ago and by myself. The priorities are set out at page 24 of the white paper on defence and they are still in effect.

Mr. McIntosh: Some of us believe the emphasis has been placed on peace keeping. The minister informed us in the committee in no uncertain terms that this was the major role. The subject was discussed many times in the committee. We were afraid we might be opting out of our collective commitments under NATO and NORAD, though the minister denied this when it was brought to his attention during the latter part of the debate.

Some people think Canada is taking a position of neutrality in her approach to external affairs. If this is the case all the figures we are referring to today might very well be wiped out. Before Canada adopts a position of neutrality we should reflect upon what happened to certain other countries which adopted a similar attitude. I say that Canada cannot possibly take such a position because of her geographical situation. If a neutral country lies in the path of an aggressor the aggressor will not recognize a declaration of neutrality. Think of what happened to Belgium and Holland in the first world war. Canada cannot adopt a neutral role in world affairs today. We are committed to the collective defence of our country and this, I think, is the major consideration in any policy devised for our protection. We must honour our commitments for peace in the world.

The minister also told us that during the period of reorganization there had been no falling off in our organizational capacity but that on the contrary in practically every field our operational capacity had been enhanced. I wonder what basis the hon. gentleman had for making such a statement. Is this his opinion or is it the opinion of our allies? I understand that under the program of reorganization which the minister has undertaken, the force for which his department is responsible, will no longer fit in with the requirements of NATO commanders. Maybe the minister is putting the cart before the horse. We are devising a force unlike any force in the world and then expecting NATO and allied commanders to use it. The first step should be to ascertain what the requirements of these various forces are likely to be and the best way in which our forces can fit into the general scheme as devised by NATO commanders.

I submit too that in attempting to insist upon Canada's idea that there should be a peace keeping force we are also putting the cart before the horse. It has been obvious for many years in the history of the United Nations that many of the great powers in that organization do not want a peace keeping force. The minister stated as much during his opening remarks in this debate. He said that certain factors, economic, political and so on, should be decided first. I agree, and if these factors were correctly dealt with there might be no need for a peace keeping force at all. I cannot for the life of me see why Canada should be so insistent upon putting a peace keeping force into areas where such a force is not wanted and not required.

The minister mentioned this himself when he was referring to the supervisory organization in Palestine. He said it was possible that the United Nations might have to build on that organization to supply a United Nations presence in the Middle East as a result of recent developments. I would ask the minister this question. As a result of the recent developments in the Middle East, does he think that while we are here as members of this parliament any of the countries of the Middle East will ever ask Canada to participate in a peace keeping force in that area? I doubt it very much. It may be unjust to say that this is the result of statements made by some members of the present cabinet, but I doubt that the Arabs would ever ask Canada to participate in any peace keeping force.

What good is accomplished by sending such a force to that area? The minister tells us it kept the peace for ten years. I do not believe that. I think the Israelis and the Arabs kept the peace themselves. I find fault with the United Nations for failing to make some effort to solve the economic and political problems which existed in the region. The very fact that the refugees were there for so many years, neglected by the United Nations, is one of the factors which contributed to the recent outbreak. I believe Canada should put forward more effort in the debates at the United Nations in calling attention to the necessity of eliminating these problems rather than spending Canadian money on once more establishing a force which is not required and which to my mind was of very little use during the ten years in which it served in the Gaza Strip.

The minister said that the fault was not with the peace keeping force but with the failure to come to grips with the social, economic and political problems which made the peace keeping force necessary in the first place. He was referring to the withdrawal of the UNEF force from the Gaza strip. He went on to say it was typical of the efficiency of this force and of transport command that when the word came to leave the area the force was removed in a remarkably effective manner. I fail to see how the minister or any Canadian can take pride in what happened to our force at that time. I wonder, though, whether this is what the minister had in mind when in January of this year he told us that Canada will have her name indelibly etched as a world leader in military organization. Or is this what he meant when he made the statement that Canadians were now becoming leaders in defence organization, not just followers? Just what did he mean? In this respect the hon. gentleman said:

> In this regard I would like to emphasize the success, not failure, of our Canadian soldiers and airmen of our force in Gaza. To keep the peace in such an area for more than ten years was a remarkable achievement for the force which included more than 10,000 Canadian soldiers and airmen who served there since the inception of the operation. They should all be proud of their accomplishment.

I suggest that they actually did nothing during the ten years they were there. When the Arabs and the Israelis no longer wanted them there they told the Secretary General of the United Nations to take them out and they were taken out. How can one give the Canadian force credit for keeping the peace in the area in those circumstances? They certainly did not.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I think that again we are putting the cart before the horse. I think we should concentrate our efforts in the United Nations on an attempt to overcome the problems which we know exist. I believe Canadian funds are being wasted. The same thing is apparently happening in Cyprus.

I say to the minister that with the addition of the peace restoring role he is getting deeper and deeper into hot water than he has been. It is a more dangerous role. The fact that we have so few troops means that we cannot be an effective force in that regard in any event. During the debate in the defence committee I believe figures were presented concerning how many personnel would be needed to keep a force of 1,000 men in the field in such a role. The minister is aware that any time Canada has sent forces overseas she has relied on other nations to look after their supply.

If the minister says, as he said a few moments ago, that it is not the intention to concentrate on peace keeping, then why did he put all the emphasis on mobility and the ability to supply these forces when he talked to us in February, March and April of this year. At this time I should like to ask the minister to clarify, for me at least, what he meant by his statement in respect of peace keeping and to explain how he can reconcile it with what the chief of the general staff has said. Is the minister right or is the chief of the general staff right? I think Canadians are entitled to know this. I should like the minister to reply to this before I ask any further questions.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. McIntosh: No, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what is the matter with the minister.

He has been given the opportunity to answer this question. I think the Canadian people have a right to an answer of some kind. I do not want to repeat what the chief of the general staff as said. He did say, however, that peace keeping is the goal of present government defence policy. Is he right and has he the authority to speak for the department? If not, he should shut up and I think the minister should tell him to. If the minister permits the chief of the general staff to make this kind of speech, then surely he should get up in the house and support what the general has said or deny it. I believe the minister owes the people of Canada an answer in this regard.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Churchill: No. We are being faced this afternoon with the typical reaction of the Minister of National Defence. For four years he has stubbornly refused to disclose facts and give information to members of the house. It is to be expected that we would be a trifle annoyed at this. We have had four long years under this stubborn and obstinate Minister of National Defence during which time he has concealed information from us, has sat silent and has refused to answer questions. He did not give a satisfactory answer this afternoon to the question with regard to equipment for our forces. He has not given an answer to the member who has just spoken. He has not answered the things which were said when we discussed the estimates on June 22. We have had silent treatment and evasive answers from the minister.

Some time ago I asked the minister about our naval commitments this summer with regard to NATO. He did not have the information then and he has not given it since. Is he prepared to give it now? What are our naval forces doing, if anything, with regard to NATO this summer? We get nothing from the minister except great statements about how wonderful his program is and that he is striking out on a new departure which will be an example to the world. These statements are not based on fact; they are not supported by evidence. I have just read a very interesting book by a member of the cabinet in England who resigned last year. I forget his exact position but I believe he was associated with the minister of national defence. This gentleman was here in 1965 at which time he looked into the matter of the rearrangement of Canada's defence forces. With the minister and his officials he examined the program of unification. In his book he sets out very clearly that he believes such a program would be unsuitable for the United Kingdom to follow. He says that it sounds fine to have a unified force with everybody in one uniform and everybody put together but that in actual fact it will not work. So he rejected it and the minister of national defence in England rejected it.

The other day I spoke to a member of the Australian parliament. I told him that during the course of a defence debate we had here our minister used as evidence the example of a civil servant in Australia who had written an article commending the project of unification. I asked him whether he knew anything about this. He said he had never heard of it before. Yet the minister paraded that in the house as evidence that other countries are keenly interested in what we are doing and are about to follow suit. All these years have gone by and no other country in the world has followed the course laid out by the minister. As I have said time and time again the people of this country have been confused and bemused by the minister's statements. The minister has no good evidence to give us.

Earlier this afternoon the minister was asked about the mobile force. He now tells us that it will take four to five years to get it in shape for action. Yet he has fed us propaganda to the effect that this mobile force would be ready on almost instant notice to go anywhere in the world and play a part. Now he says that it will take four to five years. All he could tell us this afternoon is that one battalion is ready for service on the request of the United Nations.

This is a very confusing picture indeed. The minister has been asked questions about the role at which Canada is aiming. We spoke about this at some length on June 22. No answer has been given. We heard again the statement made by the chief of the defence staff to the effect that this is the major role for Canada. He said that the transformation—that is the word which was used by the chief of the general staff when he appeared before the committee—set out in the white paper was to alter our role to one of peace keeping under United Nations auspices. The minister has made no reply to this. Obviously he agrees with the chief of the general staff. Perhaps he told him to make the statement as a roundabout way of attempting to influence the public.

The minister is now saddled with a failure in his much lauded cost efficiency or cost accounting procedure. I recall many occasions when he accused our government of failing to estimate costs correctly. With great glee he used the example of the armoured personnel carrier. Now he has a hydrofoil on his hands. The cost of this project is about four times as great as it was estimated it would be and it is not finished. Yet this minister has told us that he has set up a system which is so superior that this type of error would not occur.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The minister criticized the hon. member for Calgary North about the difficulties he encountered in respect of the armoured personnel carrier. Now he has his own white elephant, the hydrofoil, and he does not know what to do with it. He has talked about efficiency and a new method of determining expenditures and costs, but what has he saddled us with at this time? He has created enormous expenditures amounting to millions of dollars but has given no satisfactory explanation as to the progress or effectiveness of this project. He has given no explanation why other countries appear to have had greater success with a similar type of vessel. He is afraid to cancel the program. Instead he carries it on, perhaps in order to load it on his successor after he leaves the Department of National Defence this year. At that time I suppose he hopes to be free of complaints.

The record of the minister over the last four years is one of colossal failure and the people of Canada are beginning to realize it. His unification of the forces has proved to be ineffective and unwise, and the people of Canada clearly realize now that the wiping out of the history and traditions of our fighting men was an unsatisfactory step.

During the last week the people have been able to observe our forces, particularly the army, in their special regimental uniforms, proudly displaying their esprit de corps. This is what the minister wants to destroy. I suppose that if we have other state ceremonies in a year or so our armed forces will all be in the same uniform and will look alike. I hope the people of Canada will not stand for that. I have been told that the military tattoo, which I have not had a chance to see, has been regarded in the various cities where it has been seen as a wonderful success.

Mr. Winch: It is a wonderful performance.

Mr. Churchill: The minister has spoiled at least part of it by amalgamating the bands and putting them all together rather than leaving them in their own formations. The minister put the sailors along the royal route to Uplands airport in spotted positions along the route where they stood solemn and alone in their white dress. He should have kept them together so they could be proudly displayed. This is the type of activity the minister has been undertaking.

My complaint, ever since we began to talk about this situation a few years ago, has been that the emphasis should be placed on military efficiency rather than just on managerial arrangements. It is in this regard the minister has made his greatest mistake. He is so concerned with the managerial approach that he overlooks everything else. He is a great follower of Mr. McNamara of the United States and has learned some of his lessons from him. I hope the minister is aware of some of the disputes taking place in that country in respect of standardization of aircraft in the armed forces.

There is a great distinction between the requirements of the navy and the air force in respect of aircraft. Different aircraft are needed because of weight requirements, particularly in regard to aircraft carrier functions. There is also a distinction in respect of weaponry. This minister wants to put everything together and wants to make everything the same. He has no comprehension of the requirements of our military forces. If our men are called upon to take some part in an action at the risk of their lives will they be efficiently trained and properly equipped? This is the sole purpose of the department of defence and the minister. Our people in the services must be efficiently trained and properly equipped.

We have asked the minister many questions but we receive no answers or answers which are evasive. We have been subjected to the silent treatment. The minister sits silent hoping that the time will run out. This has been a very unsatisfactory display this afternoon. I thought the minister would rise to this occasion to explain his thesis and defend his position. He has not done so. He has sat silent.

The hon. member for Calgary North asked the minister to give a breakdown of the money spent in support of our three services. The minister said it is difficult to give such a breakdown because of the amalgamation of the forces. He says the costs cannot be separated. This displays a most unsatisfactory and regrettable attitude. We are facing an early adjournment and we cannot continue to press the minister for an accounting of his stewardship of our forces. I think this minister has done more damage to Canada's armed forces than any other minister. According to the book I mentioned earlier, he told a minister from the United Kingdom who visited Ottawa in 1965 that he was lopping off the head of the armed forces and tying up the arteries to stop the bleeding. The bleeding continues.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to follow in the vein of the remarks of the hon. and gallant member for Winnipeg South Centre, although I am very much in agreement with the views he has expressed since I came into the house about ten minutes ago. I do intend to bring before this committee and the country a matter of importance to human freedom and the preservation of the rights of the individual which should be and must be of concern to parliament.

Today the Prime Minister stated that the government would be convening a conference late this year or early in 1968 with a view to bringing about a constitutional amendment in respect of the Bill of Rights, which was so long condemned and ridiculed. I hope he will be successful. During my period of office we tried to bring about an acceptance by the provinces of a constitutional Bill of Rights with the idea that the rights and freedoms of Canadians would be the same in all parts of Canada, regardless of geographical address. It is my intention to bring before the committee a matter of freedom which deserves immediate action on the part of the government. It has to do with a teacher at the College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean. This man, Mr. A. David Price, was a lecturer in the department of English of that school when he was removed.

I bring this matter to the attention of the house because I believe that a gross and grave injustice is being done to this man. The royal prerogative permits the crown, even today, to deny the individual the right to know the reasons why action is taken against him. Indeed, whenever the crown has decided that it is not in the public interest to reveal the reasons for its action, the courts have found themselves impelled to accept the archaic principle that the king or the queen can do no wrong. That principle, which over the years has been basic to the system of constitutional monarchy, is no longer applicable. In 1953 or 1954, I think it was, the high court of the United Kingdom decided that no individual could be deprived of his rights by the simple expedient of a declaration by a representative of the crown that it is not in the public interest to reveal the true facts.

Within the last ten days in the United Kingdom the question of the royal prerogative has again received attention. The court of appeal of the United Kingdom has come to the conclusion, one judge dissenting, that the old principle that used to be in effect, namely, that the individual vis-à-vis the crown must accept whatever decision is made with reference to him under the crown, when the crown takes the stand that it is not in the public interest to reveal the reasons for the alleged wrongdoing, is no longer valid.

I bring this matter to the attention of the house because for months there has been an endeavour by Mr. Price and the Professional Institute of Canada to find out what actually took place which brought about the end of the service of Mr. Price in the department of English at this military school. The argument advanced at one time was that he was not a Ph. D. and that there could be no promotion without the teacher holding a Ph. D. I have here a list of the promotions in this college during the last two or three years which indicates that this rule has not been honoured by acceptance in its entirety, or indeed at all. For several months there have been reports of unhappy conditions at the defence college which one would take to be, as it should be, a model for all Canada.

All of us remember the story of Archer-Shee. In the United Kingdom in 1911 Archer-Shee was fired from the naval college he was attending. The reason given was that he had been guilty of wrongdoing. The most able counsel in Britain at that time, Sir Edward Carson, undertook that case and fought it for several years against an almost impenetrable stand taken by the military authorities. Finally Archer-Shee was cleared. One of the first officers of the Old Contemptibles in the expeditionary force in 1914 to fall in France was Lieutenant Archer-Shee. I recall that case because it represents the epitome of an attitude that too often grips those who have power without that responsibility which should accompany power and should ameliorate wrongdoing or the suggestion of wrongdoing.

I say at once that I do not know Mr. Price except by reputation. That reputation has been given to me in numbers of letters from outstanding representatives of the professional institute. These people have said Mr. Price has a high reputation for integrity and that his moral life is of the best. Yet what has happened to him? He is out. He is out because a certain person made charges against him and his reputation. Mr. Price was an instructor in English. The reason given for his dismissal is that one of the teachers, who is a tale-bearer, a West Indian, made allegations against this man of moral wrongdoing of the most ridiculous kind. I have here a statement containing those allegations. It is alleged that Mr. Price acted in a way that would render him a suspicious person, indeed of being a homosexual, because on one occasion he put his arm around the janitor and said, "Happy New Year to you."

That is the sole evidence of alleged wrongdoing. The man who made the allegation has been a troublemaker. The reputation of Mr. Price has been destroyed as a result of unfounded insinuations. No one claims to understand homosexuality, but I wonder whether anyone would make an advance in a public place, in a hall of a school, with other people there. Yet that is the sole evidence against this man. So serious a situation has been created that one teacher resigned in protest against the treatment of Price.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The Professional Institute of Canada has received a number of unsolicited letters from members of the staff supporting Price, his integrity and his moral purpose. Price does not ask to be cleared of wrongdoing without being given the opportunity of clearing himself. What he asks for is a public inquiry, and until the last 24 hours the Department of National Defence has not shown any willingness to grant him that. One of the major elements of justice is not only that justice shall be done but that it shall appear to have been done. This man is out. He raised a grievance, made a complaint and took his case to the deputy minister under section 90 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We were told that this piece of legislation passed in 1966-67 was one of the finest ever to be placed on the statute books to protect the rights of those in the public service of Canada. I quote the section because Price has been advised that he should proceed under it. It reads as follows:

(1) Where any employee feels himself to be aggrieved.

(a) by the interpretation or application in respect of him of (i) a provision of a statute, or of a regulation, by-law, direction or other instrument made or issued by the employer, dealing with terms and conditions of employment, or (ii) a provision of a collective agreement or an arbitral award; or

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

(b) as a result of any occurrence or matter affecting his terms and conditions of employment, other than a provision described in subparagraph (i) or (ii) of paragraph (a), in respect of which no administrative procedure for redress is provided in or under an act of parliament, he is entitled, subject to subsection (2), to present the grievance at each of the levels, up to and including the final level, in the grievance process provided for by this act.

Price did so, but the deputy minister decided that what had happened to Price was not a grievance within the meaning of section 90. I believe that section 90 is wide enough to deal with such a case, but that was not the view of the deputy minister. He simply said "You do not have this right under the section, and that is the end of it".

That is not the end of it. The associate minister of defence said that Price can appeal. There is no provision for appeals under this act in respect of this matter, and I say that as one who has some knowledge of the law. The associate minister cannot hide behind that technicality. I may use stronger words later unless some action is taken in this regard. At present there is provision for a request for ajudication under section 91, but that deals with disciplinary action. What is required is not a simple examination of Price's case on the basis of an individual grievance but an inquiry into the administration where it can happen that a man's reputation which is equal to that of anyone in this house can be destroyed as a result of the scandalous machinations of a little fellow who has been a scandalmonger on at least one other occasion. Surely the time has not come when in the administration of the rights of the individual a man can be turfed out on the unsupported word of a colleague working with him in the same organization.

I now come to what I want to request with all the force at my command. Price is out. He is just like a wandering person with the blight of immorality on him. Let any hon. member consider how he would like to be ousted because somebody said there was something wrong with his moral character. I see the hon. member for Lotbinière is smiling. I take that to be agreement on his part that it would be a terrible thing if we in this House of Commons were to be ousted on the basis of some uncorroborated statement regarding our alleged moral misconduct. Such a thing would not happen in the case of the hon. gentleman, but as he has taken an interest in what I am saying I thought I might mention it. How would he like that kind of treatment? He would not accept it. As a good lawyer he would be the very first to object.

Mr. Choquette: I would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman always has an eye to the future, and pensions have an attraction. Price received no pension. He will not receive $18,666. He is out. He is stigmatized and condemned, and an aura of deserving the treatment which he received hangs over him.

The Professional Institute of Canada asked for information with regard to this case and the information that has been given has been as scanty as the reasons advanced for his removal. It is said that he was not removed but was just not rehired. The reason he was not rehired was the result of what this scandalmonger produced. The excuse given is that he did not have a Ph.D. and therefore there could be no advancement. Let me point out the fact that Mr. R. Lapierre, M.A., history, was promoted to assistant professor, as is reported in the commandant's annual report of 1962-63. Mr. G. Lapointe, M.A., French, was similarly promoted, as reported in the commandant's annual report of 1963-64, and so was Mr. J. P. Rivet, M.A., mathematics, as reported in the college calendars of 1961-62 and 1963-64. Mr. Y. Pigeon, M.A., French was promoted from assistant professor to associate professor, as reported in the college calendars of 1964-65 and 1965-66, and Mr. S. Stallard, M.A., mathematics, was also promoted from assistant professor to associate professor, as reported in the college calendars of 1961-62 and 1963-64. None of the above mentioned had a Ph.D. So the excuse that Price did not have a Ph.D. or was not on his way to getting it is unsatisfactory.

I mentioned that letters of protest from other members of the staff had been received by the government. I ask the minister to produce these letters from the staff condemning the arbitrary and unjust decision in this case. I will go further than that. I say, let us forget what has taken place and let us act. I ask that the government pass an order in council to provide for an inquiry under part II of the Inquiries Act.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I have had considerable correspondence of a personal and confidential nature, but I shall not refer to that. The letter from the minister reads:

> I find that Mr. A. David Price submitted a grievance on February 17, 1967, and that this was considered through the appropriate stages, finally being dismissed by the deputy minister on April 28 because "The charge made in Part II of the Public Service grievance form is not a grievance coming within Section 90 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act".

If it does not come within that section, and I am not going to argue that at all, then something else must be done. I continue reading from the letter:

> I understand that it is open to Mr. Price to take advantage of the appeal procedures under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the regulations and rules of procedure made thereunder relating to the grievance process. Up to the present time, apparently, he has not elected to do so.

I have read the act and I find no provision for appeal in a case such as this. When we passed this bill, naturally we could not contemplate all the possible exigencies that would arise. This is no criticism of anyone. We all worked together to make this a good act. However, there is no appeal procedure of which this man could take advantage under the law as it now stands in respect of the matters I have set out.

The minister writes as follows:

> If Mr. Price elects to take advantage of the procedures open to him under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and if the appeal board should rule that it does not have jurisdiction, or in the event that it dismisses the appeal and Mr. Price still feels that his case has not been adequately considered, I would be prepared to recommend to the governor in council the establishment of an inquiry under Part II of the Inquiries Act.

This letter of yesterday was the culmination of months of representations made by Mr. Price and others on his behalf. The matter came to my attention and I looked it over. Somewhere, somehow, there has been a slip and a man's reputation has suffered harm that will be irreparable unless he is cleared by the appropriate body. If he has been a wrongdoer, an inquiry will determine it. There is strong feeling amongst the staff members that this man has been given kangaroo court treatment, but if an inquiry is established justice will have been done.

I could go into a great many other facts but I am not going to do so. However, I should like to summarize the situation in this way: On January 23 he was presented by the head of the English department, Dr. Agop Hacikyan, with a curt note from the director of studies saying that his services were no longer required after May 31. No reason was given except privately by Dr. Hacikyan who said the man was not proceeding quickly enough on work for his doctorate.

This letter I have reads in part as follows:

> On January 26 at a meeting before the entire department of English with the director of studies in the chair, I required Dr. Benoit to answer if I had been charged with moral turpitude.

Dr. Benoit is the director of studies.

Each time he hesitated more and finally said, I must say no.

At the same meeting a charge of slander and character assassination was made by me and six members of the English department against one Felix Cherniavsky, a lecturer in the same department.

Incidentally, this man is out now. He has gone elsewhere. I believe he is in the western provinces. He had better not try any of his monkeyshines out there. Mr. Cherniavsky was accused of slander on three counts, none of which he would deny. He claimed that Price was an alcoholic, that he was a homosexual and that he was a moral danger to the cadets at the college.

Just imagine a person walking around with such serious allegations made against him at what was more or less a public gathering, a meeting of the staff. Furthermore, it was then reported that Price had been dismissed for these reasons and that Cherniavsky had supplied these alleged reasons to the head of the English department to pass on for action. As I have said, Cherniavsky is not now a member of the college staff.

Therefore, without further ado I ask the minister, in the name of justice, to remove this cloud which hangs over Mr. Price by providing immediately for an inquiry. Let the chips fall where they may. No Canadian deserves to be placed in a position where he is out of employment, especially in a profession like teaching where moral conduct is of the first importance, when the justification given after the event was that he was not a Ph.D. The letters I have show there is concern. The government has received quite a lot of correspondence about this matter. I am not going into it because I am simply going to request an inquiry.

You will not always do right when you are the government. You make your decision. Your deputy minister decides there is no basis for an appeal under section 90. If there is no basis for an appeal under section 90, then surely this is indeed a case in which the individual has a right to that basic element of British justice, namely, to no man will we delay the right to have a fair and full inquiry. You say he has not been convicted of any offence, and that is so. He is a man who goes about and people say, "I wonder". A department of government was his employer. We cannot ask others to do more than the government will do. I make this appeal to the minister. I am not going into other considerations. I simply say, do not crucify this man.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Do not destroy his work and his reputation. There is no right of appeal under section 90, the deputy minister says. Give the man an inquiry; it will not take long. The evidence will be very simple and it will be a wonderful opportunity for somebody to cross-examine Mr. Cherniavsky, churn him up and get the facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Chairman, the question brought up this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was not unexpected, because we have been exchanging correspondence on this matter for the last three or four weeks.

The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) also wrote me on this matter and I have communicated with him in what I believe to be a spirit of objectiveness, not being tied down by previous decisions within the service.

When the Leader of the Opposition speaks so eloquently of individual freedom, I am quite at ease in replying that I also believe in individual freedom, that I also believe that a civil servant must not be crushed by the civil service and that his rights must be respected. For that reason, facts and responsibilities must be ascertained. It is necessary not only to be just but also to appear just.

In the present case, I want to co-operate as far as I can in establishing the truth and ensuring that justice is done.

There is, first of all, the position of the department which explains the situation in a certain chronological order, as follows: In the present case, it is a matter of a term appointment of one year, and reference is made to section 21 which provides that a one year appointment is generally renewed for two years.

In the case of Mr. Price, that was done, and his appointment was not renewed after the two year period. That is the first and official explanation.

There is also the second aspect, with regard to the charges made by other professors, which would actually be considered as libellous. According to the legal interpretation given at a certain time in that connection, it was a personal matter coming under the jurisdiction of civil courts.

This however remains to be established: has the appointment of Mr. Price actually not been renewed for strictly academic reasons, as our officers claim? That is what must be established. And I agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), since I wrote to him saying that if Mr. Price was not satisfied with the decision on the appeal, I would agree to recommend to the governor in council that a special court of inquiry should be instituted to deal with the matter. Therefore, there is no conflict, and I undertake to follow up the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, which I had made anyway in the letter which he was kind enough to quote and which I sent him by messenger yesterday morning.

Therefore, I trust that the two of us will have helped to ensure the recognition of the rights of an individual, regardless of where he fits in society, and to have those rights respected and upheld by people who are not prejudiced and who do not hide behind the rules. There is a saying in English which I have never accepted: "They throw the book at you." I am not saying that we did that in this case, but since there are such serious doubts, it is surely in the interest of everybody, including the government, to throw some light on this matter. And the way to do this is to recommend to the governor in council to set up an inquiry into this matter. And I am very pleased to undertake to do that.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the minister at once that this matter came to my attention after having been dealt with previously. Four of the professors had communicated with the department. As soon as I started to deal with the minister he showed the attitude he now reveals, and I thank him on behalf not of Mr. Price but for doing justice. I look forward to the early appointment of this inquiry to the end that justice will be done.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, a matter has been brought to my attention very recently by a very well known Vancouver solicitor, and because it is necessary for us to go away now for some time and I will not be able to get information in any other way I wish to raise it with the minister today. It concerns two women, one of whom who is from West Vancouver and the other from Vancouver itself. One of them is the wife of a retired army major and the other the wife of a wing commander in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Both are separated from their husbands. They did not consult their solicitor professionally on this question, although both have a solicitor acting for them in connection with their personal problems, but they wanted some help in forming an organization to attempt to get support inside and outside parliament for changes in the law so that they and other wives in their position can attach the pay, allowances and pensions of their husbands for alimony purposes.

From what they say it is understood by the solicitor that the pay, allowances and pensions of members of the armed forces cannot be attached at present and that the Judge Advocate General's branch provides members of the forces with legal assistance in defeating the just claims of their wives and children. The comment of the solicitor is that it is hard to understand why in the year 1967 a man in the forces should be immune from ordinary civil process.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether the legislation in this regard is such that women in this position are unable to make a claim on the pay, allowances and pensions of their husbands as presumably can other women separated from husbands who are not members of the forces. If that is the case, then is there any possibility of changing the legislation? If these women are separated from their husbands and have children, in fact, even if they do not have children, they are faced with problems of alimony and maintenance. At this stage what I want to find out from the minister is the exact position of these women under the law, before inquiring what they should do next.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Chairman, I admit frankly that this is such a thorny question that I would rather consult with the legal advisers of the department and give an answer tonight at eight o'clock, if that is agreeable.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I ask a further question of the minister on a point which has interested me for the last two months? I understand that the minister's policy is that the Canadian forces shall be mobile and we know from answers he has given in the house, in committee of supply and before the defence committee that he is satisfied with the progress being made in the implementation of this policy and with the equipment that is being obtained. If we can meet an emergency call to supply a brigade or battalion to NATO or to the United Nations—and I hope that such a call will not come—I am puzzled as to why, in moving militia personnel and cadets across Canada to their training grounds, it is necessary to charter aircraft from Air Canada for such movements. That has been done in the past and is to be done this year.

The minister will see what I am driving at. If we have the equipment to meet demands to move our regular forces quickly, why should it be necessary to charter commercial carriers to transport militia personnel and cadets to training camps, particularly to Camp Gagetown?

For the first time we are sending some 300 militia personnel to Germany. They are to take part in military training in the field. Are these men to be flown overseas by our air force or are they to be taken by commercial carriers which have been chartered for the purpose?

Perhaps I might be given an honest answer to another question. Possibly I should not have said that inasmuch as I know that any answer from a minister supposedly is honest. I still wish to know what the actual strength of our brigade in Germany is. What is the actual number of personnel serving with it? Only by answering that question will the minister dispel the impression that the 300 militia reservists are being sent to Germany to bolster the number of those on strength in the brigade in order to meet our commitment.

I hope the minister will also explain why, if we can airlift combat forces overseas, it is necessary to charter commercial carriers to transport militia personnel and reservists inside Canada. The United Kingdom sends either a regiment or a battalion to the Camp Gagetown manoeuvres, but why are we sending men to Germany? Is this a new policy?

Mr. Hellyer: On the first point, Mr. Chairman, we have a considerable airlift capability. It is not yet as great as I should like to see it and it is the intention of the government to augment it in the years ahead, as was indicated in the white paper and in subsequent statements before the house.

We move a tremendous number of people each year and much equipment. To keep the forces at maximum potential they are exercised regularly in the movement of personnel and equipment. That is the best possible training for any real emergency. Our peak load period is in the summer and we fly across the ocean large numbers of servicemen and their dependants on rotation. We try to do as much as possible of this in the summer to meet the need of dependants to move between school years. Our requirement for airlift capability is much larger during the two summer months than at any other time of the year and each year we have had to augment that capability by hiring commercial carriers to move cadets and, in some instances, militia men. Mostly cadets have been moved by such commercial carriers. That is because larger numbers of people are moved in the summer than at other times of the year and our total capabilities are strained.

In respect of those who are being taken overseas, I should like to give the hon. member a definitive answer. From my experience they are taken by the regular R.C.A.F. overseas flights. Our men go over there for precisely the same reason, in reverse, that the British send troops to Canada. It is to exercise them in a different environment and to increase their total military training. We are taking advantage of this excellent opportunity this year to a greater extent than in previous years. Selected individuals are to be taken to exercise with the regular forces in Germany during manoeuvres. This is first class training for the individuals selected and gives a real incentive to militia units to have in their ranks and at appropriate levels of training individuals who can be so employed. We think that as a result of this we shall obtain a better utilization of the reserve forces as potential reinforcements in case of emergency. That is why we are doing it.

Keeping the brigade in Europe at full strength is a high priority, but that is not the reason for moving the men over there. It is true that some of the jobs that the reservists do over there are marginal and might otherwise have to be done by men who would need to be sent over to do them. Primarily, the reservists are sent over so they can participate in an environment which would otherwise not be available to them.

Mr. Winch: I understand that the men have a tremendous opportunity for training. I ask the minister whether the 300 men are being sent to Germany to bring our brigade over there up to full strength. Would the brigade be below strength without them?

Mr. Hellyer: The brigade is close to full strength, though it probably is not at 100 per cent full strength. It is slightly less than that, which is normal.

Mr. Winch: Will the 300 militia men bring it up to strength?

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps it would be better if I obtained the figures.

Mr. Winch: I wish to know whether the 300 militia men who are going to Germany will bring the brigade up to full strength. I understand that that is why the men are going over.

Mr. Hellyer: The 300 men are not going over for that purpose. They are going for a short period which is to be devoted primarily to training.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, if I may return to the matter of information about details of the capital equipment of the forces, the minister gave us a breakdown of three major items under vote 15 as they appear on page 318. I asked on June 22 as well as today for a breakdown of those items appearing on page 319 as they relate to capital items under the various commands. It is all very well to say that we are to have so many ships, tanks and aircraft, the kinds of aircraft they are to be, and so on and so forth, but how are these being allocated in the commands? So far there has been a great silence in this regard. I should like to see a breakdown in reasonable detail of the capital expenditures as they appear on page 319.

In his earlier replies this afternoon the minister gave the figures with regard to recruitment. I wonder whether, particularly with regard to the men, any of these figures include re-engagement. Is recruiting deemed to include re-engagement?

There is a third point I should like to draw to the minister's attention. I refer him to a series of questions which appears in Hansard at page 1826. I asked for an explanation of what is happening with respect to subclauses 3 and 4 of clause 6 of Bill C-243. Although the act has not yet been proclaimed, I want to know whether the six months notice is now being generally applied throughout the services in respect of every man who wishes to retire ahead of time.

I wonder also whether the minister is in a position to tell us the conditions of retirement under clause 6 (3) when the act is proclaimed. The hon. minister will remember that when the bill was being studied by the committee he undertook that any regulations of general application under the act would be referred back to the defence committee for determination, particularly as they concerned the implications of a single service.

Mr. Hellyer: To answer the last question first, the regulations at the present time with respect to retirement are precisely as they were when I outlined them during the unification debate. There has been no change since then.

There is one additional breakdown I can give the hon. member, the one requested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. It is as follows: Armoured fighting vehicles, armoured personnel carriers, the M-113A1 command post carrier, M-557A1, and the cargo carrier M-548A1, $4 million. Command and reconnaisance armoured vehicles, $5 million. Howitzers, medium, self-propelled, 115mm, M109, $500,000. General purpose armoured vehicles, $5 million. Total, $14,500,000, an increase of $1,342,000 over the estimates of the previous year.

Mr. Winch: I have tried not to be absent from the house both today and on June 22 when I believe these estimates first came up for consideration. I hope I have not missed anything, but in case I have there is one question to which I would appreciate a definitive answer today, even if it is repetitive.

The minister and the associate minister will remember that in all the long discussions we had in the defence committee on the unification bill there was one phase of the program which caused much concern. This concern arose from the necessity of making regulations and passing orders in council consequent upon the unification measure, and the minister told us it would take a few months to draw up the regulations and the orders in council which were required. As I understood the situation, the minister undertook that once the required regulations and orders in council had been completed they would be submitted to the defence committee. I should like to know whether they will be submitted to the committee prior to proclamation when the house reconvenes after the recess or whether they will be submitted to the committee only after they have become faits accompli. I think it would be most interesting to members of the committee if they could be told what is in the mind of the minister relative to these regulations and in particular to the orders in council required under the unification act.

Mr. Hellyer: The undertaking was to refer them to the committee after they had been promulgated. This was made clear by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Winch: The minister's answer leads to my next question. May we take it for granted then, since we shall be dealing with these matters as faits accompli, that if the defence committee feels changes should be made their recommendations will receive the careful and, I hope, the favourable consideration of the minister? Otherwise, why produce them?

Mr. Hellyer: They will certainly receive careful and sympathetic consideration. This is what the hon. gentleman would expect.

There is another summary I could give of the types of equipment by commands, but perhaps that could wait until eight o'clock in view of the fact that it is now so close to six. Would it be possible to pass item 1, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. McIntosh: Not yet. I asked the minister whether he would confirm or deny the statement made in public by the chief of the general staff that the present defence policy of the government has a mobile peace force as its goal. Will he confirm or deny that statement? To my mind it is in conflict with what the minister told us in his policy statement of June 22.

I should also like to ask the minister whether there is any foundation for the statement which appeared in the papers not long ago that the Department of National Defence intended to acquire land in the Bahamas or the West Indies either by purchase or by leasing for the training of Canadian troops. If so, would the minister table the names of those with whom he has been negotiating in connection with this project? The minister looks at me with some amazement, but I have seen two articles in the press indicating that this is a possibility. I understand an approach has been made by certain people in the Bahamas and I ask him to confirm or deny this rumour.

Mr. Hellyer: On more than one occasion the chief of the defence staff has sent me copies of the speeches he has made and the impression given by this speech is quite different from that conveyed in the newspapers and quite different from that received by the hon. member, it would appear, in the instance he mentioned this afternoon. It is always a problem in reporting to put into balance various points which are made in a speech, and I have no doubt that the hon. member has experienced this difficulty.

• (6:00 p.m.)

The chief of the defence staff in his speeches sets out the same general policy and the same general procedures that are set out in the white paper and which have been reiterated by the government from time to time. At no time have I found anything inconsistent between what he has said and the government policy. I must admit that the emphasis which has been placed on some of his speeches in the newspapers tends to give a different slant to the policy.

Mr. McIntosh: They quote his statements.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, but they quote them out of context or do not quote sufficient of his remarks so that they are in proper context with exactly what he has said. So I say that in his speeches he reflects the policy of the government which still is, as set out in the white paper, to maintain forces for the support of our alliances, for the defence of Canada, for United Nations peace keeping activities as required and in accordance with the general priorities which are set out in the white paper. Therefore there really is no inconsistency whatsoever, except perhaps in respect of the weight or emphasis which some newspapers have placed on other aspects of it.

So far as the second question is concerned, to the best of my knowledge we have neither purchased nor leased any land in the West Indies. We did carry out exercises there last winter on land which is owned, I believe, by the United States government. There is no plan of which I know to lease land. There is, however, great interest in the West Indies with the idea that the relations of the Canadian armed forces with those countries will not only continue but also be built up and perhaps increased in the years ahead. This is a matter for study as we try to augment the capability of our forces to respond to any situations which may arise in the years ahead.

The Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, the associate minister promised that at eight o'clock tonight he would have the reply to my question. I should not like this vote to carry before I receive the reply.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, it would not jeopardize the answer if the hon. lady would agree that the associate minister give the answer during consideration of the remainder of the items.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): There may be other questions which hon members might wish to ask arising out of the answer.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I realize that by unanimous consent the house has agreed to forgo private members' hour today and tomorrow. I understand, however, that there is urgency in respect of two private bills to incorporate mutual insurance companies which have been approved by the Senate. They are orders Nos. 4 and 5 on page 22 of the order paper and I understand there is unanimous consent to allow them to pass today. I would ask, therefore, that we proceed now to deal with these two private bills.

The Chairman: The hon. member is requesting that I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day?

Mr. Starr: Yes.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Criminal Code—proposed amendment respecting representation by counsel; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), The Canadian economy—sugar—increase in price; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Housing—suggested change in formula to determine mortgage rates.

Yesterday an order of the house was passed to the effect that the hour for the consideration of private members' business today would be suspended. I understand there has been some agreement in the house in respect of the request of the hon. member for Ontario that by unanimous consent we now proceed with consideration of the two bills the hon. member has mentioned. I should like to remind hon. members of the context of standing order 102. However, there is no objection on the part of the Chair if there is unanimous consent that we proceed. Is there unanimous consent that the house proceed with the consideration of these two bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to raise any objection to the procedure which has been suggested. I understand, however, that Your Honour has referred to an agreement which has been arrived at. I should like to say that so far as I am aware no contact has been made with our group in this connection.

Mr. Starr: I understood from the sponsors of the bills that they had spoken to representatives of all parties. If that is not the case, then I apologize. It is an oversight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the intention of the house to proceed with private members' business for the purpose of considering Bills S-12 and S-13 which appear as items Nos. 4 and 5 on today's order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

WESTERN FARMERS MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-12, to incorporate Western Farmers Mutual Insurance Company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the understanding of the Chair that we should deal with both bills at the same time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARMERS CENTRAL MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. John Loney (Bruce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Farmers Central Mutual Insurance Company.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, this is a procedure which is new to me. Is it all right to deal with two bills at the same time in committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I may say to the hon. member for Vancouver East that there is a procedure provided for this purpose, although it is not used very often. There is nothing irregular in the procedure.

Motions agreed to, bills read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

Supply—National Defence

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental Administration, including grants to military associations, Institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,850,056,375 for the purposes of Votes 1, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,221,323,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year, subject to the direction of the Treasury Board, in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, any member of the British Commonwealth or any provincial or municipal government and in respect of charges made pursuant to regulations under the National Defence Act for:

(a) clothing and kit items sold to members of the Canadian forces;

(b) living accommodation;

(c) food supplied to members of the Canadian Forces and to messes and institutes catering thereto; and

(d) medical and dental care provided to dependants of members of the Canadian Forces, $6,593,375.

The Chairman: Pursuant to an order of the house passed yesterday I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Defence, Vote No. 1.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, will the minister reply to my question now?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Chairman, just before the supper adjournment the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway raised a question regarding the attachment of pay, allowances and pensions for alimony purposes. According to the Queen's Regulations and Orders, article 207.02(2):

When there is in effect an order or decree enforceable under the laws of Canada or any province thereof requiring payment to be made by an officer or man in respect of the support, care or maintenance of his wife or former wife or any legitimate or illegitimate child, the commanding officer may order a monthly compulsory allotment of pay as prescribed in (3) of this article.

[The Chairman.]

Section (3) of this article states:

The compulsory pay allotment shall consist of such portion of the pay of the officer or man, not exceeding the amount of the order or decree, as the commanding officer from time to time thinks fit, but no such compulsory pay allotment shall, in any month, exceed an amount equal to ten days pay of the officer or man.

So an active service officer or man can be required to support his dependants. Further this article states in section (9):

When there is no order or decree in effect but it has been represented to the Chief of the Defence Staff that an officer or man has deserted or is otherwise without reasonable cause failing to maintain his wife or any child under the age of 16, the Chief of the Defence Staff may order deductions to be made from the pay of the officer or man in the manner and subject to the limits prescribed in (2) and (3) of this article.

With respect to those officers on pension, the hon. lady will find in section 14, appendix 22, of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act—and I am quoting subsection (2)—the following:

Where any court in Canada of competent jurisdiction has made an order requiring a recipient to pay an amount to his spouse, former spouse, child or other dependant and the court has issued to the minister a notice, in the form prescribed by the regulations, requesting on behalf of the recipient that there be paid to the person named in the order an amount specified in the notice, the amount so specified or any lesser amount specified by the minister shall, if the minister so directs, be deducted either in a lump sum or in instalments from any amount that is or is about to become payable to the recipient under this act, and shall be paid to the person named in the order.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it appears that in both these cases, if a court order is obtained it would be applied within the regulations and orders of the Canadian Armed Forces. In the case of diversion of pension under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, it is the current policy not to divert more than 50 per cent. Under the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act a court order is not necessary. The matter is investigated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the minister acts on their recommendation.

Finally I should like to deal with the question that the Judge Advocate General's department provides legal help for the Canadian Armed Forces. I am informed by the Judge Advocate General that the Judge Advocate General simply informs the serviceman of the legal implications of any order but does not appear in court on the serviceman's behalf. If I may be permitted to create a pun, the legal officers of the Judge Advocate General's department advise the serviceman to get a lawyer. I think this answer should satisfy the concern expressed by the hon. lady.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for his very careful and comprehensive reply. It would appear to me that the lawyers and ladies in question were unaware of the possibilities open to them. I shall lose no opportunity to convey to them what the minister has said, because it would be a misfortune if an organization were formed by these women to get something if they are able to get it by applying under the act. Unless there are circumstances of which I do not know, it should certainly be possible for them to obtain the redress they are seeking. I thank the associate minister for his reply.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): If I may say so in respect of these people, it is both unfortunate and unnecessary.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a follow-up question to that asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I admit that in 14 years I have had only two such cases, but I should like to ask the associate minister a question in this respect. I ask the question because the associate minister has said that the authority of the commanding officer is governed by the word "may" and the authority of N.H.Q. also includes the word "may". I took particular note of this. The commanding officer or N.H.Q. "may" order such a deduction.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Upon occasion, and particularly the two I have in mind, the payment of alimony was not a legal requirement, and yet the officer or O.R. still has to bear the responsibility. I understand the decision of the department is to apply the permissive policy to everyone from the commanding officer to the N.H.Q. I should therefore like to ask as to the position or the policy of the department with regard to this?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): From my experience the word "may" is more than permissive because every time I have come across a case like that, alimony is deducted.

Mr. Winch: So the minister's opinion is that although the word "may" is used all the way through the regulations, it really means "shall". Is that his experience?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): That is my understanding, in practical terms.

Mr. Davis: I should like to ask the minister a few questions having to do with the disposal of property owned by the Department of National Defence on the west coast. However, first I would like to compliment him, in view of the criticism which he has received today from the other side of the house, on the businesslike way in which he has been running his department. Over the last five years our national income has risen from roughly $40 billion to $60 billion. In other words it has gone up 50 per cent. We have seen expenditures on many fronts go up by comparable amounts. On the other hand, the expenditures of the Department of National Defence have been kept constant. Five years ago they were $1.7 billion a year, that is for the year 1963-64, and this year 1967-68, they are estimated to be the same amount, that is $1.7 billion.

Mr. Churchill: But what is the size of our forces?

Mr. Davis: In other words, our outlay on defence as a percentage of the national income has gone down from more than 4 per cent in 1963 to about 3 per cent in 1967. Considerable evidence meanwhile has been presented both in the house and in the committees of the house, that the effectiveness of our armed forces has been substantially increased. So I would say that for the same number of dollars—dollars with a declining purchasing value—to get a greater value in terms of defence in this country is no mean accomplishment.

I would like to deal more specifically with property owned by the Department of National Defence and then say a word about the disposal of lands which have been acquired by the department over the years. I understand that under the present minister a new policy was instituted. It was instituted a few years ago and it gave a real incentive to the members of the armed forces with authority over supply to get rid of surplus supplies, to sell off land that the Department of National Defence no longer required, and to dispose of inventories, out-dated materiel, ammunition, equipment, etc.

The policy was that the Department of National Defence would itself receive and keep the funds which resulted from selling off these surplus properties. In other words, the officers responsible for the administration and disposal of surplus materials, land and so on, could count on having this money put back into the coffers of the defence department and not paid over to the Receiver General of Canada.

This was a revolutionary idea because prior to that time there was no real incentive for the defence department, particularly for those in the armed forces, to dispose of land, equipment etc., they merely accumulated and maintained them, guarded them and watched them deteriorate. In the last few years we have seen the disposal of a substantial amount of property which was deteriorating, and which otherwise would have deteriorated to no value whatsoever.

In my own particular riding there was a large ordnance depot. I would put its present value at around $3 million. It was built in 1944 for naval stores and it continued to be filled with the same naval stores as were put into it in 1945. When the present minister took over in 1963 it was like a naval museum with guards but no one was allowed to see it. This materiel it contained was promptly disposed of under the new policy. It was turned over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, and subsequently sold to the National Harbours Board. This property, on the waterfront in Vancouver, is now earning an income of the order of $300,000 a year. So instead of being a liability, it is a source of revenue to the people of Canada. This is the kind of policy, the kind of businesslike thinking and the kind of management which we need not only in our private affairs but also in the affairs of the government.

There are one or two other properties in my riding which I would like to see disposed of, one of them being a rifle range. It is located on 500 acres which used to be a long way out in the bush. Subsequently a $20 million bridge was built across the Vancouver harbour, almost to the doorstep of this property. These 500 acres suddenly became extremely valuable.

Mr. Winch: Is the hon. member referring to the Blair rifle range?

Mr. Davis: Yes, the Blair rifle range in north Vancouver. Residential properties of considerable value are building up around this range. Roughly a third of the Blair range land has been cleared. Occasionally the clearing is used as a rifle range, but the rest is still covered with trees. I urge that the Department of National Defence turn all of this property over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, in effect sell it to the highest bidder, and with part of the proceeds buy other land farther away and develop a comparable rifle range, if one is required.

I have corresponded with the defence department concerning this matter. I was told it is prepared to consider this proposal and that shortly it will be sending out one of its appraisers to look at this land with a view to selling it for residential purposes. The district of north Vancouver has already zoned this property. It is an ideal property for residential construction. My own estimate of the value of these 500 acres is $3,000 an acre, so that it should be worth at least $1 million. The national defence department would have at least $1 million in hand with which, I am sure, they could buy several other rifle ranges. Let us hope they can get one other rifle range with a fraction of that money, put the rest back in the kitty—thus reducing the sum total of new taxation required to pay our defence bill.

I should like to speak now about another property which is a classic case. It is on Jericho beach in the Vancouver area occupied by the Department of National Defence. Jericho Beach is on the north side of Point Grey and forms part of the outer harbour in Vancouver. It is one of the finest recreational areas in Canada, located near an area referred to as Spanish Banks, where early Spanish explorers first dropped anchor. They dropped anchor there because it was an ideal location. There are miles and miles of sandy beach there. When the tide goes out, the beach runs out half a mile. It looks across at the coast range, which is snow capped, and into the downtown area of Vancouver. It is a beautiful spot. Yet, right in the centre of that long beach there is a defence base. The defence base is located there because originally it was a seaplane base. During world war II the Department of National Defence bought out a handsome golf course and several expensive homes in that area. They bought approximately 154 acres. Ever since the beginning of world war II there has been a defence base bisecting the beach there, requiring everyone travelling along Marine drive in Vancouver to circumvent this area of 154 acres. What is there now? The golf course went to rack and ruin. Gigantic hangars were built in the early 1940's and paint is now peeling off them. There are only a few hundred men in uniform there now. According to a recent editorial in one of the Vancouver papers, the area is now being used as a supply depot by the construction engineers detachment, transportation section, supply section, and maintenance subsection. Basically this is a supply depot for the army base at Chilliwack which is approximately 100 miles away.

• (8:20 p.m.)

This waterfront land is extremely valuable. It is land which politician after politician, elected member after elected member from the Vancouver area has said should properly revert to the people of Vancouver to be developed for recreational purposes. The Department of National Defence or some other department of the Canadian government can keep part of the property, the highlands. However, a wide strip along the waterfront should be turned over to the city of Vancouver. I suggest that after these many years all of the waterfront area should be turned over to the city of Vancouver at no cost.

What does the city of Vancouver do in return? I suggest that the city of Vancouver might well rezone the remaining acreage, the highland, for multiple housing, for apartments, essentially high density residential purposes. What happened during the previous administration? Hon. Howard Green was the member for that area and he promised many times to have it turned over to the city. Instead of that the highlands were built upon by the Department of National Defence. We have now a number of small brick boxes, homes obviously designed for eastern winters, placed on land which would otherwise have been available for homes of many times their value.

This area should certainly be developed for high density residential purposes. I know there have been discussions from time to time between the city fathers in Vancouver and members of parliament, between the mayors of Vancouver and successive ministers of national defence. I know that the present minister has had a study carried out in respect of the land values. I hope he will give sympathetic consideration to the division of this land so that all of the waterfront between the sea and a new rerouted marine drive will give the city of Vancouver an area to be developed for recreational purposes. The rest of the land, given an agreement from the city, would then be rezoned and developed for other purposes.

I know the people of Vancouver would be overjoyed if this were to happen. I know every second person visiting Vancouver, perhaps every person visiting Vancouver during the summer months, would drive along a marine drive which was not cut up by an ugly property owned by the Department of National Defence. The buildings are run down and a substantial acreage has simply gone to seed.

I might mention that the waterfront itself is unused at the moment, except by some 20 officers who have pleasure boats there. Close by the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club, with literally hundreds of members, exists on a fraction of the waterfront area owned by the Department of National Defence.

I suggest to the minister that if he would apply his policy of selling off surplus property, of selling off the upland property, he will recover far more than the original investment of a paltry $325,000. Perhaps he will recover several millions of dollars. In the meantime the people of Vancouver, and indirectly the people of Canada, will get a recreational area four or five miles long on what is probably the most glorious waterfront in all of Canada.

Mr. Winch: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that we, the members of parliament from Vancouver proper, appreciate the great interest and the remarks of our colleague from North Vancouver. May I, in making a very brief comment, draw the attention of the Minister of National Defence and the associate minister to the fact that when they consider what shall be done with Blair range they base their considerations not on disposal but on the fact this is a rifle range? I speak as a result of being a training officer for some four years for the Irish Fusiliers, second battalion, Vancouver regiment. This is not just a rifle range. It was a range for submachine guns, light machine guns and three-inch mortars. If you are considering getting rid of the Blair range, and perhaps you should, keep in mind the reserve militia regiments of Vancouver, North Vancouver, New Westminster, Burnaby and Fraser valley. They all require training facilities. I plead with the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, not to sell it for a million dollars; it is worth a lot more than that. Do not sell it until proper arrangements have been made for training facilities right from rifles through submachine guns to light machine guns and three-inch mortars. There is no purpose served by trying to train a person in an armoury in the use of these weapons. You must have an actual firing range in the immediate area.

Now, that is all I am going to say about the Blair range. I want to thank the hon. member for what he had to say. I am sure every member from Vancouver supports him in respect of the Jericho area which, in one area alone, is owned by the Department of National Defence. I just want to add this, sir, because it is my home. There is only one block which prevents a complete beach area from Spanish Banks to Jericho, around Kitsilano, around False Creek, English Bay, First, Second and Third Beaches, around

Stanley Park until you hit Coal Harbour entrance. This is a most fantastic area with only one block, the Jericho Beach area, preventing a complete waterfront drive. As pointed out by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, every citizen of Vancouver, the city council and the parks board are asking for some arrangement whereby we might have a complete marine drive from Spanish Banks. We need this beach area, this promenade area, for Vancouver. According to the latest figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics it will not be long before the population of metropolitan Vancouver will reach one million.

The history of the United States indicates that they did not save beach or park areas and it has cost them millions to reclaim them. We are not asking, as the hon. member said, for something for nothing. We in Vancouver do not want that area for nothing. All we want is a 99 year lease at $1 a year. We are prepared to pay for it. I will pay for the 99 year lease myself at $1 a year if the department will agree to it. There is a little difference between the hon. member for Coast-Capilano and me. He said that the department could make millions out of the beach area at Jericho for high rise buildings. I plead with the minister not to have a high rise development because we need a park area. This land is at the foot of our university area, between the university and the residential area of Kitsilano. It should be a beach and park area.

I know there have been negotiations with the associate minister in respect of this matter. Although there may be a little differentiation as to details, in view of the inquiry tonight by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, supported by all hon. members from Vancouver, before this vote is put through can the associate minister tell the committee what consideration is being given to the request that this beach area should be leased for 99 years at $1 per annum to complete the entire marine drive around that beautiful paradise of British Columbia, Vancouver?

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, the associate minister has suggested that I reply because I was here the other day when a consultant whom we had engaged to look at the North Jericho area was in Ottawa and reported to us.

I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano and also what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver East, and they will of course be taken into consideration. I am sure that these hon. gentlemen will be pleased to know that some months ago we did engage a consultant to draw up a plan for the redevelopment of the entire North Jericho area. He has recently reported to us his suggestions how this might best be carried out.

A couple of days ago I wrote the mayor and said that I would be pleased to meet with the mayor and his council, perhaps in Vancouver later this summer, in order to discuss with them the report that we have received and to engage in negotiations as to how we implement the report, or something along those lines.

I should like to see this project go forward because I think it could be an outstanding redevelopment project. I should like to save the city of Vancouver the dollar and the legal fees for the beach area by offering some more realistic plan which would make available to them the area most needed for parkland in exchange for rezoning some of the other surplus lands which we could then dispose of. This would reimburse us for the loss which would accrue in the disposition of the property. I can assure the hon. members that if the city of Vancouver is as reasonable as the department of defence is prepared to be, we should be able to reach agreement on this project and to trigger what should become an outstanding and really wonderful development of the North Jericho area.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Two very brief comments, Mr. Chairman. The first relates to national defence headquarters. I submit to the minister that he ought to use all the influence which he has with the Minister of Public Works in order to commence the development of national defence headquarters as soon as possible. We have lost a great deal by having delayed as long as we have. I blame not the present government any more than any previous administration, but the time to get out of the old buildings in Cartier square has long since passed. The development of the new national defence headquarters should take place as quickly as possible. Every day that goes by is going to cost a great deal of additional money to the people of Canada, and we should proceed with the greatest possible expedition.

The second matter about which I want to comment is the thrill that so many people experienced on seeing the display yesterday on parliament hill. It was a wonderful show, with Her Majesty the Queen and all the colour of the uniforms there. This indicates to us that within our human hearts there is something that has an appeal that is not going to be satisfied by a simple green uniform.

I want to put to the hon. gentleman, the Minister of National Defence, tonight, that he should not abandon all the traditions of the individual units. I speak for example of the P.L.D.G.'s, the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards, which had such a great reputation in this community that you and I represent, Mr. Chairman. I hope that some of this tradition which we saw yesterday on parliament hill will be retained because if it is not retained we will not have the type of nation during the next 100 years which all of us so much desire.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I think I should reply at once to those two suggestions, and I should like to deal with the second one first. Both the associate minister and myself have said on numerous occasions, to the point where it should now be clear to anyone willing to listen or believe, that we have no intention of doing away with the regimental dress uniforms. It is planned to keep them. Indeed this has been in the plan from the time that the idea of a unified force was first conceived.

Mr. Churchill: No—you have changed your mind.

Mr. Hellyer: It has not been changed at any time and I can show the hon. gentleman the record on that.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, you may.

Mr. McIntosh: Time and time again the minister has made that same statement in the house, with the exception that in his original statement to the house he said that there would be no change until such time as unification takes place. The word he used was "until". What does he mean by that? He said there would be no change.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sorry, but I do not follow that question, Mr. Chairman. The policy which was enunciated right from the beginning was that the regimental system would remain and that regimental full dress would be retained. There has never been any deviation whatever in this policy, right from the outset.

I should warn my hon. friend that if he looks back to the uniforms of 20 or 30 years ago he will find there have been changes in regimental full dress since then, and I would not want to bind future generations to the precise details of regimental dress. But so far as the colour, pageantry and tradition are concerned, they remain, and there is no reason that they should not. We came quite consciously to the conclusion that one would always have for ceremonies like the one we enjoyed on the hill yesterday the variety of colour and uniforms which would add to the occasion in this kind of thrilling military ceremony.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question for clarification. Perhaps I have a different understanding from those to my right, but it was my understanding in the defence committee and in this house that when the minister spoke of a common uniform he was speaking only of a walking out uniform, not a traditional parade uniform. Is that correct?

Mr. Hellyer: That is quite correct. The new service dress or walking out uniform is comparable to the day to day uniform which has been worn by the three services in summer and in winter, and it replaces a number of uniforms. However, it does not replace regimental ceremonial dress, where no change is contemplated.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister a question on this. The minister has now recognized the importance of distinctive regimental attire. Why does he not feel the same concern for the Royal Canadian Navy and permit its members to continue to have their distinctive attire so that they are marked off from airmen and from soldiers?

Mr. Hellyer: In so far as ceremonial occasions are concerned, if this is deemed to be desirable there is no reason why it cannot be.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Now the minister is being vague—"if it is deemed to be desirable".

Mr. Hellyer: There is a question of cost involved. My hon. friend will appreciate that, with the exception of the Canadian Guards, regimental full dress outfits are acquired by the regiments themselves out of regimental funds. They have deemed it desirable to acquire full regimental dress, and that is what I would have in mind.

May I now comment briefly on the defence headquarters and about the connection of the Minister of Public Works with this matter.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Before the minister proceeds to that matter may I ask him, as a supplementary question, what is to be the position of members of what used to be the Canadian navy when Canadian ships visit foreign ports? It should be remembered that the only Canadian servicemen those in foreign countries see are, or were, sailors in their distinctive naval uniforms. Around the world naval uniforms generally follow a similar pattern. It does not matter what country the sailors come from, they take pride in being recognized as sailors.

Our sailors, when visiting foreign countries—as they frequently do—become ambassadors of this country. I should like the minister to say, if he can, that when our ships visit foreign ports Canadian sailors will be able to go ashore to be recognized for what they are.

Mr. Churchill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: I have talked to quite a few sailors in the last three or four weeks who told me that in future they would be very proud to wear the Canadian service dress when they visit foreign ports.

So far as the new headquarters is concerned, I assure the hon. member for Carleton that the Minister of Public Works is as anxious as is the associate minister and as I am to see this matter go forward. Pretty well, so far, we have stuck to the schedule. As my hon. friend knows, this project has been more thoroughly planned than any other major office building has been planned in the history of the Canadian government. At the same time there is an urgency to get ahead with it. It is being actively considered at the present time by the government, and I hope that a decision may be taken shortly to proceed with the project as planned.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the minister be good enough to tell me what the time scheduling of the building is?

Mr. Hellyer: From memory, the last time schedule I saw called for completion in 1972.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Commencing when?

Mr. Hellyer: I have to qualify that answer, because it depends on the contract. If it is a fixed price contract the commencement is likely to be later than if separate contracts are let for separate parts of the building.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When does the minister expect tenders will be called?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: Not sooner than one year from now, or perhaps two years from now, depending on the type of contract that is approved.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why is there such a long delay?

Mr. Hellyer: Considerable detailed work has to be done in the plans for the building —these are the working drawings. If a fixed price contract is decided on by the government it will require about one year's additional detailed work before tenders can be called. The time involved is approximately of that order.

Mr. Knowles: Before the minister leaves that question, may I raise a point? Was he leaving that question?

Mr. Hellyer: That question, yes.

Mr. Knowles: Before he leaves that question may I ask whether the plans for the new national defence headquarters, and particularly the height of the building, have been reconsidered? As the minister knows, some of us registered an objection to a building which would be higher than the peace tower on parliament hill being built close to these parliament buildings.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether the height of the building has been reconsidered?

Mr. Hellyer: After the objection was raised the matter was reconsidered. Nevertheless, following consultations with some of the best site architects on this side of the water, and on the other, it was concluded that the building is sufficiently removed from parliament hill that it will not interfere in any way with the skyline. In fact, it will enhance the skyline, particularly from the Hull side, the Interprovincial bridge and the Macdonald-Cartier bridge. The present plan is to proceed with the building, as designed.

Mr. Knowles: The minister has expressed an opinion with which some of us may disagree. Have we yet voted the money for this building?

Mr. Hellyer: No, not yet. My hon. friend at the requisite time will have another opportunity to state his views on this matter. He appreciates, I expect, that there are as many views about architecture and town planning as there are people involved with respect to those matters. We obtained the best professional advice that we could get. The consensus was that the new defence headquarters, as they have been planned, will enhance the skyline of Ottawa considerably and will be pleasing aesthetically.

Mr. Knowles: Granted that there are many views; but is it not also admitted that the final decision on the matter should be that of parliament? Should parliament not be heard before the matter is made final?

Mr. Hellyer: Parliament will have that opportunity. We cannot begin construction until the funds are voted. That will be parliament's opportunity to approve or disapprove of the existing plans.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When the minister said that he had obtained opinions from architects on this side of the water, I was not sure whether he was referring to the Ottawa river or the Atlantic.

Mr. Hellyer: I was thinking of the Atlantic.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Being more parochial than the minister, perhaps I was thinking of the other side of the river when he made that remark. I wonder if the minister will not give the assurance that the plans for the building will be submitted to the special joint committee which his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, has proposed should be appointed to deal with matters affecting the national capital. I share the view that has already been expressed, that there could be considerable difficulty with a building as high as this building being built close to parliament hill. This matter, I think, should be studied by members of parliament—by the representatives of our people—before a final decision is taken.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not in a position to give that assurance. That is the prerogative of the Minister of Public Works—if I am correct in assuming that the Department of Public Works will ask parliament to vote the money for this building.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the minister not recommend the view I have expressed to his colleague?

Mr. Hellyer: I shall be glad to refer it to him for his consideration. Perhaps I ought to say that the requests of my two hon. friends, in a sense, are conflicting, as plans have reached the stage where any redesign might entail considerable delay, with resulting escalated costs. I added that remark by way of caveat so that my hon. friends will not overlook the contradictions in their suggestions.

Mr. Knowles: May I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Carleton that this question be referred to the joint committee for study? I realize that parliament has the final say and that we have not yet voted the money. However, I have not seen many occasions when parliament has turned down a vote for money that was placed before it. When that point is reached, when we are asked to vote money, the die is pretty well cast.

The minister will recognize, from opinions which have been expressed here tonight, that the opinion I happen to hold is shared by many other hon. members. I wonder whether there are not already too many high structures close to these parliament buildings to spoil the skyline of this city. Some are private structures and should not have been permitted to be as high as they are.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hear, hear.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: To permit a government structure only half a mile from this building to be higher than the peace tower itself, higher indeed than the flagpole on top of the tower, is I think a mistake symbolically. Further, I think it would destroy the beauty of this setting. I urge the minister not to rely on the proposition that before construction can begin an estimate has to come before the committee of supply. In practical terms it would be too late, then, bearing in mind the way in which the house votes money. I think the suggestion that this should be studied in advance by a committee considering the whole Ottawa situation is one which the minister should recommend strongly to his colleague.

Mr. Hellyer: I must admit that at the outset I shared the hon. member's concern. Having looked carefully at the site plan and the model, I was reassured. This does not say that the hon. member would be reassured if he were to study them. I will certainly recommend to my colleague that he consider this request. I think it is a reasonable one and I am sure he would be pleased to give it his thoughtful consideration.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Thank you very much.

Mr. Hellyer: This afternoon I undertook to put on record one further table, a breakdown of construction and equipment by commands. It is under the general heading "Capital acquisition or Construction of Building Works and Lands". The details are as follows:

Supply—National Defence

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: I have one brief question to ask. I apologize for not having been here this afternoon. I wonder whether the minister has touched on the broad problem, which seems to be raising its head again in Halifax, having to do with tenders called for H.M.C.S. Scotian. Can the minister enlighten us on this matter?

Mr. Hellyer: No; I did not touch on that, Mr. Chairman. I have no up to date information on it of which I am aware. There has been no change in the plans of which I know.

Mr. Forrestall: Then there is no money in these estimates for that building program?

Mr. Hellyer: That project is being paid for from what we call vote 48, which is the vote in respect of the funds we have accumulated from the sale of surplus properties.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a more or less related question. Have any steps been taken to improve the efficiency of our east coast dockyards? The minister is aware that because of the peaks and valleys our naval dockyards are an efficiency expert's nightmare. I wonder whether any consideration has been given to an attempt to level out the flow of the work at the dockyards, for example in respect of the refit work, without impeding the efficiency of the fleet. Has any consideration been given to this aspect of the refit work, especially as it pertains to the east coast?

Mr. Hellyer: If I understood the question correctly, it is this: Have any studies been made in an attempt to level out the amount of work?

Mr. Crouse: Yes.

Mr. Hellyer: I think the answer is yes, subject to confirmation by the members of my staff. I remember seeing a paper not too long ago which mentioned that they were attempting to cycle the refits and the other work being done in the dockyards in such a way that there would be the least tendency toward peaks and valleys in the work load, and so that there would be the maximum utilization of the personnel there.

Mr. Crouse: Has any consideration been given to going back to the old system of allocation of work at the yards, particularly at Lunenburg and Liverpool, whereby they could look to the federal government for assistance in the form of refit work when their own yards are experiencing a slack period or a period when there is a certain amount of unemployment. This is a policy which has been followed in years gone by, as I am sure the minister knows.

Mr. Hellyer: This really is something which comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defence Production, since it pertains to allocation of work.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister said either too much or too little in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Halifax. He said that this applied to what we call vote 48, and that this is the vote in respect of the funds that we have accumulated from surplus. Now, sir, surely it cannot be the funds we have accumulated from surplus. I have before me the existing vote 48, which is a one dollar item. I will not go into my views in connection with one dollar items and their legislative capacity; but surely the minister cannot say, as he has, that this is something we have accumulated from surplus. I do not think there is any right vested in the department to accumulate anything from surplus. The department must go back to parliament and obtain a vote of parliament for anything that they may have in the way of surplus. The minister either has said too much or too little.

Mr. Hellyer: Last year parliament did in fact grant the department the right to dispose of properties up to a value of $5 million and to use the money for other works as approved by Treasury Board. During the course of last year we did just that. We sold slightly over $5 million worth of property and are now spending that money on necessary works and buildings including H.M.C.S. Scotian. This in essence really is the good management policy which the hon. member for Coast-Capilano was talking about a few minutes ago, when he said that a system had been implemented which provided an incentive for the department to get rid of surplus stores, including lands and buildings. This is the same kind of an incentive a private corporation would have. I can assure my hon. friend that it is working exactly the way we might expect it to work. Before we had this authority there was a great reluctance on the part of the staff to dispose of anything because the revenue went back into the consolidated revenue fund. There was no benefit to the department, and if anyone could make even the slightest case for retention of the stores, lands or buildings, or whatever it might be, it was kept in inventory.

Now, with the authority to use these funds for important projects such as the one at Halifax, the staff is trained to make an effort to declare surplus anything we really do not need and invest the money in something which will be more productive on behalf of the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Has this been considered by the standing committee on public accounts?

Mr. Hellyer: I think the Auditor General made some comment about this last year, but I am speaking from memory.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I might make an observation here: It was discussed by the public accounts committee. If my memory serves me correctly, that committee was of the opinion that it is a good method to dispose of surplus material. The money goes into the consolidated account, but Treasury Board should have some say over how the money is spent. I think possibly Treasury Board does have some say concerning how this money which has been accumulated by the sale of excess or obsolete equipment is spent.

Mr. Hellyer: That is quite correct; we cannot spend a cent of the money without Treasury Board approval.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It seems to me that there should be some special report to parliament in relation to these items.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a brief and perhaps not unrelated question. With the completion of the plan for unification a great many badges, flashes and markings will become obsolete. Therefore their value will increase sharply. Has the department given any thought to registering or licensing legitimate collectors, and to formalizing the arrangement by which such materiel which is not actually called surplus materiel, proceeds on to the market, because although the fictitious idea is that it is destroyed, it does somehow get into the hands of dealers who thereby are able to make a profit on it.

Mr. Hellyer: I will take that question as notice, Mr. Chairman. I am not sure what the details are. I believe the Queen approves the badges and there would be a crown patent in respect of them. In so far as the method of disposal is concerned, I am afraid I really cannot say anything in that regard at this time.

While I have the floor I might reply briefly to a question raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke when he was referring to the expenditures of the department. I should like to say to him that in principle there often is a very real fall-out, or whatever he called it—

Mr. Johnston: Spin-off.

Mr. Hellyer: —spin-off to the civilian economy from defence research development. One might think of many examples of this. Our market for turbine engines, for example, is something which is a direct derivative of defence expenditures for airplane turbine engines. Many of the developments in the electronics field fall into this category. One of the most dramatic examples is the proposed new Canadian communications satellite. At the time the Defence Research Board undertook this development there was no known defence requirement for it. Similarly there was no known commercial requirement for it; but during the course of the development, which began some years ago and is still continuing, there have arisen two requirements, one defence and one commercial.

• (9:10 p.m.)

We are very much interested in satellite communications in the defence department and we are getting real value from the development of the Defence Research Board. In addition to that there has been much discussion about Canada putting a satellite into orbit for our own communications. If we do this—and I think there is no doubt about our intention because this is something our nation should do—the technology and know-how of our experts who will implement that project will increase from the knowledge and experience they derive from these defence expenditures.

I must say there has been a great deal spent on defence research and development. I think it is fair to say there is no nation in the world which has not made expenditures for a similar purpose. We can thank many industries for the amount of experience we now have in this regard, and thank them again for the work which has been done in previous years, from which the defence department has gained.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words before vote No. 1 passes.

First let me say how proud we are in Renfrew North to have the Canadian Forces Base, Petawawa, in our area. This base is of great economic importance to my area, and its existence adds colour in many ways. We have a great deal of respect for the present camp commander, Colonel Reilander, who has upheld his position with dignity and prestige, as a result of which he has terrific public relations with the various municipalities which surround the base.

This camp was first started in 1905 and has played a very important role in the economy of the area since. Sometimes we lose sight of the fact that the people at the camp are very important to this area and play a major role. We must always keep this fact in mind. A couple of weeks ago I had the privilege of attending the dedication ceremony of a new chapel on the base, and I should like to thank the minister and the associate minister for the interest they take in matters such as these. Not long ago there was a drowning tragedy in the Petawawa river near the base. There were 17 volunteers from the Canadian army based at Petawawa who searched the river for a distance of two miles. This type of thing certainly adds to the respect people have for our Canadian Armed Forces.

In conclusion I should like to say to the minister and the associate minister that if they have any problem in finding a location for that proposed tall D.N.D. building in the city of Ottawa, we in the Pembroke-Petawawa area will welcome it with open arms. We do not care if it is built high enough to cast a shadow on Ottawa during the course of the evening. I think the minister and his associate once again for the excellent co-operation I have received from them since coming to Ottawa as a member of parliament in respect of many items within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Forrestall: Let me say one final word before we conclude our deliberations on vote No. 1. I should like to ask the minister to say a few words about our present armed forces voting rules. Perhaps he will indicate whether or not the department considers them adequate, or whether in view of our present day communications system there is some way that the information in respect of exercising of a franchise could be delivered in a shorter period of time.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am completely dissatisfied with the present system. It has long been said that there is nothing which can be done about it, but I do not believe that.

Mr. Forrestall: Neither do I believe it.

Mr. Hellyer: I think if enough effort is put into solving this problem, with our present-day modern communications we can accomplish something which will mean that the federal recorded vote will be known the same night. I have this electoral situation high on my agenda of things to do during this summer recess, and I intend to meet with the chief electoral officer to see if he can come up with something to assist in accomplishing my intention. I hope to work with him in co-operation with other experts to find out how to do this, because I am convinced it can be done.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you very much.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to warn the hon. member for Carleton not to be taken in by the answer he received from the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): He has not been.

Mr. McIntosh: The hon. member asked a question as to whether or not there was an accumulation of surplus funds. This is a question which has been asked repeatedly by a number of critics of the present defence policy. Let me refer to the minister's speech of December 7, 1966, and his words in this regard. Before doing so I should like to say that this afternoon he was also asked whether he denies or confirms the statement made by his chief of defence staff. He got around the question by saying that members had on many occasions taken these words out of context. He did not deny or confirm these words. Nor did he deny whether the present policy of department was leaning in the direction of a peace keeping role.

In his statement to the house at the opening of our consideration of these estimates the minister left hon. members in some doubt as to his meaning. I think he forgot that some of us had attended the meetings of the committee, during which the chief of general staff made certain statements. We in the opposition were particularly anxious to examine his speech to determine what he meant by "unification". At that time he left us confused. Let me refer to several things I said at that time, beginning with the following:

> We in the opposition were particularly anxious to examine this speech to determine the minister's meaning—

I asked the minister how the three services could be different and still be identical. I asked how the three separate service entities could be abandoned in favour of one without any change in the three services. I also asked the minister what he meant by his statement that none of these aspects would be changed by moving to a single service from three separate services. I then went on to say that I did not hesitate to reveal that after reading the minister's speech I was confused as to his intentions regarding the present services. I said it was my hope that we had found a declaration in the minister's statement that we were going to retain the three services as we have known them—the army, the navy and the air force. I said I was not sure what the situation was, but reread the statement and discovered the last paragraph under the heading "careers" in which the minister said:

> One general principle should be underlined again: the combat units will retain their identity, and their specialized functions and training. It is important to state that it is not and never has been any part of the planning associated with unification to convert our servicemen to "Jack-of-all-trades". An infantry soldier will not be asked to do the job of a sailor in a fighting ship: a sailor will not be asked to fight in an infantry platoon; and a fighter pilot will not be required to drive a tank.

Under the heading "continuation of Units and Elements" we find these words:

> • (9:20 p.m.)
> At the time the new force comes into being its units and elements shall be those which then exist in the navy, army and air force.

The minister said units and elements of the force are the command entities. For example in the navy, ships and squadrons; in the army, the battalions of infantry, regiments of artillery, armoured regiments and brigades; in the air force, squadrons, wings and groups. He said all these would remain unchanged. I read that last sentence over three times. I reflected back to the minister's previous words, when he said:

> None of these will be changed in moving to a single service—

There was to be no change in the organization of these force units. I began to wonder why we had been concerned about the minister's coined word "unification." I began to wonder why the large number of senior officers had resigned or taken early retirement. The minister had stated there would be no change in the three separate services. I was beginning to understand the minister. What he meant was integration at the top, in administration and supply; and as we said at that time, we agreed with the requirements for integration. We would support such a move. I was further elated when I read in the same paragraph the following statement by the minister:

> This system will not be changed by reason of unification. Certainly we will continue to have infantry regiments as well as the Royal Canadian Armoured Corps and the Royal Regiment of Canadian Artillery.
> Although a unified personnel management system will be introduced, the separate units and elements of naval, field and air force will continue to exist.
> Personnel in the combat forces will continue to be identified as sailors, soldiers and airmen.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the roof fell in on me because the minister ended his sentence, after saying all those things about no change, with these words; "until the force structure within the unified force is developed." The minister said there would be no change until that time. I want to know when this force structure will be developed and when all this change will take place.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. McIntosh: No, Mr. Chairman. I should like the minister to answer that question. When does he intend that the change in the force structure shall take place?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure to what force structure the hon. gentleman is referring.

Mr. McIntosh: I am referring to the statement the minister made on December 7. If he has his speech there he will be able to find it. The minister said there would be no change until the force structure within the unified force was developed. When is this to take place?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I explained all this once to my hon. friend and I would have thought he could have referred to what I told him and spared the committee. If he is wondering at what time, say, the drivers of the three forces will be put together in one list, I cannot say. I would say, frankly, the sooner the better, but certainly not until we have had a chance to get the regulations drawn up and promulgated. Therefore I cannot answer the hon. member specifically. But I would hope that within a few months in regard to those areas that are common in the support sections we shall be able to develop common lists and the people in those lists will know what their seniority is, and so on. This is all I was referring to, and it should not excite my hon. friend in any way because it does not relate to the fighting units or sub-units.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre stated that too much emphasis had been placed on the administrative aspect of this department and not enough on the combat aspect. I would suggest that in view of the unhappy events that within the last two or three weeks have taken place in the Middle East, and what has happened to the peace keeping force which was there at the time, the minister should take a second look at any plan that would change the combat structure of our forces. We have time and time again warned the minister that if we cannot live up to our commitments in the collective defence of the North American continent we will place an added strain not only on our ally and good neighbour, the United States, and will be fast approaching a position of neutrality in respect of external affairs, which would be disastrous as far as Canada is concerned.

I referred this afternoon to what would happen to this country in the face of a determined aggressor. Canada is not in a position, because of its geographic location, to adopt a position of neutrality. The minister should look twice before he changes any of the combat units in being at the present time, because they may not fit into the requirements of our collective alliances. I would say again to the hon. member for Carleton that he should not be too sure that there will not be any change in the traditions of these regiments, which he mentioned in such glowing terms a few moments ago, because if this minister and his government remain in power I am quite sure the Canadian forces will in the future not be a source of pride to Canadians because of the actions taken under the guidance of the government.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

Defence services—

15. Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces and $1,850,000 for Grants to the Town of Oromocto. $1,467,713,000.

Defence research—

Defence research board—

20. Operation and maintenance, $35,670,000.

25. Construction or aquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $8,947,000.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

30. To foster defence research in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence applied research programs, on terms and conditions approved by the treasury board, $4,500,000.

35. Research satellite program—to provide for the design and instrumentation of a series of satellites to carry out a scientific research program agreed upon jointly by the United States national aeronautical and space administration and the defence research board, $3,000,000.

Mutual aid—

45. Contributions to infrastructure and the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the transfer of defence equipment and supplies and the provision of services and facilities for defence purposes in accordance with section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, not exceeding a total of $27,076,000 including the present value of defence equipment or supplies or the cost of services made available by the Canadian forces estimated in the amount of $9,076,000 and provided by appropriations for those forces in the current and former years in respect of which, notwithstanding subsection (3) of section 3 of the said Act, no amount shall be charged to this appropriation or paid into a special account; provided by this vote, $18,000,000.

General—

48. To authorize, notwithstanding the financial Administration Act and section 11 of the Surplus Crown Assets Act, the payment into the special account in the consolidated revenue fund referred to in national defence vote 48 of the main estimates for 1965-66 of revenues received during the current and subsequent fiscal years from the sale during the current fiscal year of surplus buildings, works and land not exceeding an aggregate amount of $10,000,000, $1.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this is the right vote under which to raise the matter I have in mind. This is a department that over the last five years has spent about $85 million per year in buying equipment, material and supplies. I realize that the department keeps a physical inventory of this equipment, but if any member of parliament should ask the Minister of National Defence to give him the value of this inventory, that is, the cost price of the inventory, the minister could not answer. The department is not keeping a dollar value of its inventory. It is only keeping a record of the physical count. This is no way to run a business. It is obsolete, it is old fashioned, and it is not good housekeeping.

To improve the situation would involve only a matter of tabulating when the equipment was bought, counting it and recording the cost price of the equipment. This record would become very valuable when the Department of National Defence turns its obsolete equipment over to Crown Assets for sale to the public. Goodness knows, the department turns over a great deal of equipment to Crown Assets because the equipment has become obsolete. If we ask Crown Assets what this equipment cost, they cannot tell us because the Department of National Defence cannot tell them.

I ask the minister: Are you endeavouring to keep not only a physical inventory but a record of the dollar value of the inventory; and if so, at what stage is the department, and does the minister hope to have this system in operation in the near future?

Mr. Hellyer: The answer is yes, Mr. Chairman, the previous system, which we all felt to be inadequate, is being changed. We have it practically up to date at the present time and by this time next year it should be thoroughly accurate in so far as inventories are concerned, and broken down by activity within the department. We are at the moment, I think for the first time in living memory, in the process of calculating a dollar inventory value based upon cost.

Mr. Hales: It is high time.

The Chairman: Order. It being 9.30 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to special order made Monday, June 26, 1967, to interrupt the proceedings and successively forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the main estimates of the Department of National Defence, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Transport.

• (9:30 p.m.)

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

General—

48. To authorize, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act and section 11 of the Surplus Crown Assets Act, the payment into the special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund referred to in National Defence Vote 48 of the main estimates for 1965-66 of revenues received during the current and subsequent fiscal years from the sale during the current fiscal year of surplus buildings, works and land not exceeding an aggregate amount of $10,000,000, $1.

An hon. Member: On division.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

50. Civil pensions and annuities as detailed in the estimates and to authorize in respect of members of the Royal Canadian Air Force on leave without pay and serving as instructors with civilian training organizations operating under the British Commonwealth air training plan who were killed, payments to their dependants of amounts equal to the amounts such dependants would have received under the Pension Act, as amended, had such service as instructors been military service in the armed forces of Canada, less the value of any benefits received by such dependants under insurance contracts which were effected on the lives of such members of the Royal Canadian Air Force by or at the expense of the civilian organization, $9,990.

Item agreed to.

Defence construction (1951) limited—

55. Expenses incurred by Defence Construction (1951) Limited in procuring the construction and maintenance of defence projects on behalf of the department of national defence and procuring the construction of such other projects as are approved by treasury board, $2,350,000.

Item agreed to.

[The Chairman.]

Railways and steamships—

15. Payments to the Canadian national railway company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the company to the Minister of Finance, to be applied by the company in payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1967 in respect of the following:

(i) Canadian national railways system, (subject to recovery therefrom of accountable advances made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund):

(ii) Ferry services:

Newfoundland ferry and terminals; Prince Edward Island ferry and terminals and Yarmouth, N.S.—Bar Harbour, Maine, U.S.A., $36,397,600.

20. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land, dock and terminal facilities, including improvements to terminal facilities owned by Newfoundland, and of vessels and related equipment as listed in the details of the estimates provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amounts within the vote to be expended on individually listed projects, $24,527,000.

25. Payments under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, payments to provinces as contributions to assist highway construction related to the abandonment of railway branch lines, grants in aid of transportation research to universities and such other organizations as may be approved by the treasury board, and payments for supplemental pension allowances to railway employees, subject to the terms specified in the subvote titles listed in the details of the estimates, $16,247,100.

Air services—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder and the administration of the Radio Act and regulations issued thereunder, $118,888,000.

35. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities, contributions towards construction done by local or private authorities with respect to such airports; amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act, and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed for airports and other ground services a total amount of $37,240,000, for radio aids to air and marine navigation a total amount of $15,273,000, and for meteorological services a total amount of $3,189,500, $47,253,000.

40. Grants, contributions, subsidies and other payments as detailed in the estimates, Canada's share of the cost of the international radio, telephone and telegraph organizations listed in the details of the estimates and Canada's assessment for membership in the world meteorological organization, $3,493,200.

B—Air transport board—

50. Salaries and other expenses, $1,000,000.

52. Payment of operating subsidies as approved by the treasury board to regional air carriers, $3,000,000.

C—Board of transport commissioners for Canada—

55. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,833,300.

57. Amount to be credited to the railway grade crossing fund, in addition to the amount to be credited to the fund under the Railway Act in the current fiscal year, for the general purposes of the fund and, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize the making of commitments totalling $43,967,000 (in addition to any commitments in respect of which amounts are appropriated under this or any other act) in the current and subsequent fiscal years, $10,000,000.

D—Canadian maritime commission—

60. Administration of the commission and the degaussing of Canada government ships and Canadian-owned merchant ships of 3,000 gross tons to 20,000 gross tons, of Canadian registry or of United Kingdom registry if subject to re-transfer to Canadian registry under special inter-governmental arrangement, $405,000.

Less—Amount to be expended from replacement and other funds	6,531,000

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

L110. Loans to the St. Lawrence seaway authority in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, $45,500,000.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1968, the sum of $2,450,967,350.24 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, before the resolution is agreed to—

The Chairman: Order, please. I doubt there can be any debate at this particular time.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): With great respect, Mr. Chairman, we have a right to comment in the committee of ways and means, and I only want to put one simple question to the President of the Treasury Board. I wish to ask him whether he would facilitate proceedings by agreeing to increase the amount by only a small amount in order to provide increases for retired civil servants.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, in reply to this question, and with due deference to my hon. friend, I will say that I do not think this is a matter to be debated at this time. However, I can assure him that the government has as much or more concern for retired civil servants as anyone else in this house. This is a matter which requires careful consideration by the government, as I have explained previously, and after due consideration the government will bring forth its proposals in this regard.

The Chairman: I must point out to the house that the Chair is attempting to follow the direction given to the Chair by the order of the house made on June 26, which was to put successively every question relating to the supply of the departments concerned. It is the interpretation of the Chair that it is the duty of the Chair to put these questions now.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The order said "successively" but it did not say "without debate", and there is nothing in this resolution which says that it shall be put without debate. I venture to suggest that this house could go on indefinitely under the terms of this resolution. I have no intention of pursuing the matter further but I suggest that debate cannot be guillotined in this way.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member for Carleton would permit me to differ with him at this particular time, but as I read the instructions given to the Chair—and the Chair is in the hands of the house—the order of the house made on June 26 was that every question shall successively be put forthwith. The Chair interprets that order of the house as meaning that all the questions dealing with the estimates of the department concerned should be put now.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-146 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the bill has been printed?

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the bill has been printed and copies of it are available.

Mr. Knowles: May we look at it, even if we cannot speak about it?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Benson moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think we have been given the wrong bill. The bill I have received is the bill for interim supply, which comes later.

Mr. Benson: This probably means we are a little bit ahead of time.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May we just sort out this confusion? While that is being done, I wonder if we at least have the right to hear the minister give the customary assurance that this bill is in standard form?

Mr. Benson: This bill contains nothing which is not usual in such bills. I should like to say that the form of this bill is the usual one for full supply bills, and the procedure herein proposed is similar to that followed in April, 1957 when Appropriation Act No. 5,1957 granted total supply and supplementary estimates for the Post Office Department. I should like also to state that this bill contains full supply as contained in the main estimates for the various departments involved, those departments it was agreed would be passed at this time. It does not deal with the matter of supplementary estimates.

Mr. Winch: May we also ask why we have a bill that has no number?

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Winch: May I ask, as a matter of interest, why this bill has no number? I thought it was necessary for a bill to have a number.

Mr. Benson: I presume, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter for the Chair rather than for the minister involved. I can assure my hon. friend the number will be put on this particular appropriation bill. I think it is appropriation Bill No. 5.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Starr: Now, by leave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Chair should point out that since this particular activity is under an order of the house, this bill could not be passed by leave.

Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $965,328,156.84 being the aggregate of—

(a) four twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament and not otherwise provided for, except public service commission item 5 and loans, investments and advances item L40, for which no proportion is granted hereby, $889,450,033.33;

(b) four twelfths of the total amount of Public Works item 65 (Schedule A) of the said main estimates, $4,883,333.33;

(c) three twelfths of the total amount of Legislation item 15 (Schedule B) of the said main estimates, $46,950;

(d) two twelfths of the total amounts of External Affairs item 10, Secretary of State items 35, 40 and 45, Trade and Commerce item 29 (schedule C) of the said main estimates, $5,942,766.67;

(e) one twelfth of the total amounts of Agriculture item 55, Finance item 10, National Film Board item 1 (Schedule D) of the said main estimates, $4,874,691.67;

(f) seven twelfths of the total of all of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates A for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $55,713,715.17;

(g) four twelfths of the total amounts of loans, investments and advances items L40a and L112a (schedule E) of the said supplementary estimates, $4,416,666.67, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As a minor concession to parliamentary control, would the minister explain why the fractions are different?

Mr. Benson: The proportions requested in this bill, as indicated, are to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up until October 31, 1967. In no instance is the total amount of any item being released by this resolution and the subsequent bill. The form of this resolution and the subsequent bill are in the usual form for interim supply. The passage of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in the committee. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected, and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passage of this measure.

In answer to the specific question of my hon. friend, I should like to assure him that in some instances it is necessary to require more than the usual seven twelfths which would be included in this bill in order to pay accounts which may come due because particular projects happen faster in particular departments involved. However, in no case is more than eleven twelfths to be granted, and in some cases less than seven twelfths is being asked for, and I hope granted. The matters involved are completely open to debate.

Mr. Starr: I think the minister should clarify what he said a moment ago, that no member is precluded from criticizing any part of these appropriations when we come to committee, in view of the order of the house.

Mr. Benson: In future, I meant to say.

Mr. Starr: I do not believe you mentioned the word "future".

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: I mentioned that in no case in the interim supply bill were we closing out any items which have not been passed in full supply in the preceding bill. So that in future, Mr. Chairman, members in committee will have the full right to criticize or raise any question on any item.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1968, the sum of $965,328,-156.84 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-147, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on a bill entitled an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1968.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A to D inclusive agreed to.

On schedule E:

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, in the footnote to schedule E the amount should read $4,-416,666.67. There was a "6" left out and I should like to correct that figure.

Mr. Knowles: Where was the "6" left out? In the hundreds or the tens?

Mr. Benson: In the hundreds.

The Chairman: The correction to which the Minister of National Revenue refers is to a footnote at the bottom of page 8 in which there is a misprint, a "6" being left out. This is not part of the bill and is therefore not subject to amendment, though subject to correction.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the bill contains no provision for increases in the pensions of superannuated civil servants, I ask that it be passed on division.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion on division?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—SUGAR—INCREASE IN PRICE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on June 21 I asked the Registrar General whether he could indicate why the price of a ten pound bag of sugar in Canada's third largest city, Vancouver, had risen from 97 cents at the beginning of June to $1.12 at the present time. In view of the fact that within the last half hour this evening we have passed, if my arithmetic is correct, the sum of $3,416,295,507.08, it seems to me slightly bewildering to think we should be concerning ourselves about this rise in the price of sugar. It is bewildering until one realizes that for people across the country the costs of sugar, bread, meat and milk are the costs that matter most, and some of our people unfortunately have smaller means than they should have with which to meet these costs.

• (10:00 p.m.)

I want to stress that the price of sugar in Vancouver within a three-week period rose from 95 cents to $1.12. The public was given no reason for that increase. One correspondent of mine in Vancouver was told by a merchant that the Israeli-Arab war caused the price increase. She said that that could not have been correct as sugar stocks were on hand before the war broke out. The war could not have affected sugar prices in so short a period.

I also wish to emphasize that on June 17 Christie's Bread announced that it would increase the price of its 24 ounce loaf to retailers by two cents, and the one pound loaf to retailers by one cent, effective as of June 26. Shoppers in Ontario and Quebec are affected by this increase. Also, on June 23 General Bakeries Limited and Canada Bread Company raised their prices. General Bakeries Limited raised its prices by the amount that Christie's had raised theirs, and Canada Bread Company increased its price for the 24 ounce loaf by one cent.

Though the Registrar General is new to his job it is high time that he looked into matters affecting consumers. On June 16, in the speech in which he outlined his plans for the whole department under his control, he said, as reported on page 1608 of Hansard:

> It is all very well to go off in all directions like a chicken with its head off, but I feel this would only cause unnecessary distortions in marketing practices and would provoke more difficulties than it would solve. If I were to suggest something which perhaps is un-Canadian, I might say I think we should have facts before we have policy. I intend to proceed with all deliberate speed in that fashion.

I am afraid that Canadian consumers will get the idea, if they have not already got it, that the minister is proceeding with more deliberation than speed, when one considers the price increases of commodities such as sugar and bread that I have spoken of tonight. The cost of living index is steadily creeping upward and has done so for items such as rent, household appliances, as well as many other commodities which are taken into account in the cost of living index.

I appreciate that the minister cannot single handed investigate what is happening. He cannot run to the bakeries to ask why prices are going up; nor can he go to sugar refineries to ask why their prices are rising. I believe that there should be a board—some of us have called it a prices review board—to look into price increases and to determine whether they are justified by increased costs that manufacturers have to pay.

I notice that when the prices of bread charged by Christie's were increased, H. A. Vivian, vice president of sales for Christie's Bread division of National Biscuit Company of New York, refused to say what the price increase is to retailers. He did not want the public to know what the dealer margin is. The joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on prices feels that that is exactly what the consumer should know. I urge the minister to establish within his department at once a fact finding body to determine why prices are going up.

The consumers are being most patient. The costs of bread, milk, sugar, housing and rents have increased, raising the cost of living. The price of milk has increased recently, as has the price of sugar. The cost of housing and of medical services has risen, together with many other items which make up the cost of living. Increasingly consumers will want to know why they are finding it harder and harder to make ends meet.

If the minister knows, let him tell us tonight why the cost of sugar increased in Vancouver. That is a specific inquiry I have to make. If he can do so, let him also tell us why there have been increases in the prices of bread and milk—increases which have caused great concern to families across this country. If the hon. gentleman does not know the reason, I should like him to tell us what steps he will take to ascertain it under his fine program of finding out the facts before making policy.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): I wish to say to the hon. lady in reply to the specific question she asked that Canadian refined sugar prices react almost immediately to changes in the world price for raw sugar. As a result of the Middle East crisis, world raw sugar prices advanced in early June and prices for refined sugar went up accordingly. Thus the B.C. Sugar Refinery in Vancouver, which was selling 100 lbs of cane sugar on June 1 for $7.85 had by June 5 raised its price to $8.95 per 100 lbs. Between June 5 and June 20 four reductions in price were made and by June 20 the refinery price was down to $7.40 per 100 lbs, lower than it had been on June 5. Similar price changes were made by the refiners in eastern Canada. It is to be hoped that retail prices will soon reflect the decreases in refinery prices which have taken place since June 5, if they have not already done so.

On the general question of prices, I wish to say to the hon. lady that constitutionally neither the federal government nor parliament has the authority to impose pervasive controls over the price of goods and services, except in a national emergency such as war. Consequently parliament would not have the authority to enact legislation regulating prices.

The movement of prices depends on a number of complicated factors. Some of the factors depend on world economic conditions; others relate to domestic fiscal, monetary and tariff policy. The conditions and economic expectations of the marketplace also come into play.

Under the Combines Investigation Act it is the responsibility of the Director of Investigation and Research to scrutinize all significant price movements which come to his attention and which may involve illegal restraints on competition. He is charged under that statute with the duty of initiating an investigation whenever he has reason to believe there has been an offence against it. If the hon. lady has any information to suggest that there has been any violation under that statute as it presently exists, she should send that information to the director and he will take the appropriate action. If I receive any information to the same effect, I will immediately make the same reference to the director under the statute.

HOUSING—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN FORMULA TO DETERMINE MORTGAGE RATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): On June 23 I asked the Minister of Labour, who is in charge of housing, a specific question with regard to the change in the formula governing interest rates under the National Housing Act. The question I asked reads as follows:

In view of the probable increase in N.H.A. mortgage rates from 7 to 7¼ per cent, and in view of the serious decline in housing starts so far this year, does the government intend to change the formula for determining N.H.A. rates to encourage an increase in housing starts to meet the housing crisis today?

• (10:10 p.m.)

My question was prompted by an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of June 16 by Kenneth B. Smith under the headline, "N.H.A. rate rise, easier money predicted soon." In that article the writer predicts the possible change in the rate from 7 to 7¼ per cent. One of the comments in that article is by David B. Kirkup, research director of the Toronto Real Estate Board, who said:

It would be illogical for the government to raise the N.H.A. rate at a time when the demand for maximum N.H.A. loans has diminished, at least in the Toronto market.

Another item in that article is as follows:

A June report on mortgage market conditions by the Toronto real estate company A. E. LePage Ltd. said N.H.A. mortgages for houses through approved lenders were in limited supply and for apartments and town houses almost non-existent.

On the conventional side, apartment and town house mortgages commanded a rate of 7¾ to 8 per cent, but the supply was extremely limited. The same rate applied for houses both presold and speculative.

That was the reason I asked the question. In his reply the minister suggested, in the first place, that the premise on which the question was based was completely wrong. He indicated that there had been an appreciable increase in the number of housing starts this year. When one recalls that the number of completions in 1965 was 166,000 and that in 1966 the number had dropped to 134,000, almost 20 per cent, then one realizes that the figures which have been released thus far indicate a further drop. This puts us on notice with regard to housing prices in Canada.

Then in the Toronto Star of July 1, I read that the N.H.A. rate has been increased from 7 per cent to 7¼ per cent. The headline of the article reads, "House costs up $840 as N.H.A. rate rises". Then the article continues:

It costs a Canadian homebuyer $840 more today than it did yesterday for a house financed under a government-insured mortgage of $18,000 over 25 years.

The hike—$33.60 a year—came within a whisker of being twice that much.

Costs are up because Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. last night boosted the National Housing Act interest rate from 7 to 7¼ per cent.

I would imagine the reason this was done was that the minister thought there would be an increase in housing.

Here are some of the comments which are pertinent to this increase:

A C.M.H.C. official in Ottawa said the increase would "hopefully" make N.H.A. mortgages attractive enough to stimulate lending—and building.

However, John McCulloch, C.M.H.C.'s Toronto manager, said money was so hard to find for any kind of investment the hike would probably not be effective.

He said mortgage money from conventional or private sources—usually trust and insurance companies—was already running between 7¾ and 8¼ per cent.

Reg Ryan, vice-president of Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada, said other investment areas—such as bonds—were too attractive for an increase in N.H.A. lending to occur soon. He said there is very little of this government-insured money being turned into mortgages in Metro.

M.I.C.C.'s Ryan said the demand for mortgage money is away ahead of supply and this means Canada is entering another painful, tight money period.

Harry Sadler, chief of Toronto Metro Home Builders Association, said this would likely mean higher house prices in the months ahead and a slowdown in building.

Builders are already predicting Canada will fall short of the 170,000 housing units expected by C.M.H.C. in the 12-month period which began June 1.

Donald Kirkup, research director of the Toronto Real Estate Board, blamed mortgage companies for contributing to tight money by holding back funds in anticipation of the N.H.A. increase.

There is one consolation though. It should mean some more money for mortgages but we fear there won't be as many takers because of the increase.

He said it was "sad news" for young families just starting out.

Kirkup said the average price of a new house in Metro is close to $30,000, up about $5,500 in one year and resales around $24,000, up over $2,000.

These are the comments with regard to the increase in the formula. Then, today I find in the Globe and Mail that there is a further increase with regard to home improvement loans. This formula did not apply to home improvement loans which prevailed at 6 per cent. They are now applying that formula, and the interest rate in respect of home improvement loans will be 7¼ per cent.

We have a housing crisis in Canada and we have a slowdown in housing starts. We have the minister attempting to solve this problem by increasing the interest rate. We in the N.D.P. feel that this is not a proper solution, but that the solution should be to set up a federal ministry of housing and urban affairs, and to fix the rate of interest on N.H.A. mortgages at no more than 5 per cent. We also believe that, if necessary, the government should make more money available in order to have government participation in the building of homes with young families. If this was done I think Canadians would find an easing in this crisis and a solution to this problem.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to apologize to the hon. member for the absence of the minister and the parliamentary secretary responsible for this department. On behalf of them and the government let me assure the hon. member that recent statistics indicate housing starts have picked up remarkably in recent weeks and months, and that we expect by the end of the year they will be higher than in the previous year.

I regret, as does the minister and the government, that interest rates are as high as they are, but I think the hon. member should reflect upon the reasons. These rates are not high because of arbitrary action, but as a result of a shortage of money and a severe demand on this continent for money. I am sure the hon. member is also aware that the federal money available through C.M.H.C. is greater than it ever has been, but that the demand has been increased sharply. Finally, I am sure he is aware that as a result of recent revisions to the Bank Act, money is not available for housing from the chartered banks.

The government is doing everything it can to increase available money, but the interest rates reflect the economic condition of tight money supply. This is prevalent throughout the western world, together with a shortage of capital. The situation results from an over employment of monetary resources and an excessive demand for the same resources.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 7, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT OF MR. LÉON-J. RAYMOND AS CLERK

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Clerk of the house is discharging his duties for the last time today as he is retiring.

I have no doubt that all the members of the house will join with me in expressing our appreciation to Mr. Raymond for the outstanding and learned way in which he has performed his duties since his appointment to that important post in 1949.

He served his country for many a year, first as member of parliament and then, for 18 years, as Clerk of the house.

Allow me to express, in the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), our personal gratitude for his constant courtesy and untiring attention to administrative matters which are of such importance for the debates of the house.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that Mr. Raymond has served his country for a long time with great distinction; first, as many of us recall, as a distinguished member of this house and then, as we all know, for 18 years as Clerk of the House of Commons. The Prime Minister would like to have been here today to express his personal gratitude for the great contribution made by Mr. Raymond. It is my privilege in his absence to thank Mr. Raymond for his courteous attention to all of us and for the remarkable way in which, through his great knowledge of our rules and procedures, he has enabled us to carry out more efficiently the responsibilities entrusted to us by the people of Canada.

• (11:10 a.m.)

It is now my privilege to move a resolution, to be seconded by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), which I am sure will meet with acceptance by all the members of this house. I move, seconded by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition:

> That the members of this house, desiring to record their deep appreciation of the long and distinguished services rendered by Mr. Léon-J. Raymond, Esquire, O.B.E., as Clerk of the House of Commons, and acknowledging the dignity and profound learning with which he graced his office, designate him as honorary officer of the House of Commons with an entrée to the chamber and a seat at the table on ceremonial occasions.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is an opportunity for all of us to pay tribute to one whose contribution to parliament has meant so much. Mr. Raymond has been the friend of all the members of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I recall when he first came into the House of Commons as a member in 1945, and was re-elected in 1949. I remember his first days as Clerk of the House of Commons. I have recollections of the courtesy and innate modesty that have characterized him throughout, but I recall in particular the occasion in 1950 when as a member of the Canadian parliamentary delegation to the Empire Parliamentary Association meetings I visited Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. Raymond knows parliament both as a member and as a most distinguished Clerk. He has shown reverence for this institution, realizing at all times that unless the dignities and proprieties are maintained the institution cannot maintain the greatness of its traditions. The rules were his constant companions. He was guided at all times by the principle that while rules have to be made to maintain the operations of the house, they should not be interpreted in such a way as to curtail the rights of members.

As a student not only of parliament but of the law I am proud and happy to join in the resolution moved by the Acting Prime Minister. We shall hope that in the days ahead Mr. Raymond will enjoy health and happiness and that we will see him back on ceremonial occasions, filling with that dignity that has always been his a position that has added lustre to the parliament he has served.

Tributes to Mr. Léon-J. Raymond

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party desire to associate themselves most enthusiastically with the motion before the house paying tribute to the distinguished service which has been rendered to this House of Commons by Mr. Raymond. In his public capacity he has served this House of Commons exceedingly well. It is true that we follow the procedures of Westminster, but our procedures and practices have to be adapted from time to time to meet our particular needs. This requires the genius of understanding and interpretation, and this the Clerk of the House of Commons, Mr. Raymond, has displayed to a remarkable degree. He has discharged his duties in a manner that is a credit to this house. He has maintained the high standard and great traditions of the office he has occupied.

However, I should like to add a further word and that is to speak of his personal contribution to all of us who have had the privilege of sitting in this house. His unfailing kindness, his innate courtesy have made him the friend of every member of this house. This has been particularly true of new members, who felt that they could go to him at any time and get the benefit of his advice and encouragement. I think there is probably no topic that has come before this house in many a day on which there has been such complete unanimity as that of paying tribute to a very fine Clerk of the House of Commons, a very generous and kindly gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, for the French-Canadian group it is my privilege to represent in the house, it will be readily understood what joy it is for us to support the motion of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) to confer the title of honorary officer of this house to such a man as Mr. Raymond who has given 18 years of his life as Clerk of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that for us, a third party, particularly a new party in the house, we owe a personal debt of gratitude to Mr. Raymond for his warm and so understanding reception after our first election.

Mr. Raymond has always been also the first man for the new member to meet and from him we get our first greeting. For the second year member, Mr. Raymond has shown himself to be a valuable adviser, just as he was through the years for any member who sat in this house. Mr. Raymond has always been there to give us the necessary encouragement to fulfil our task.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

We feel Mr. Raymond has been a model of simplicity and dignity in the pursuance of his duties. His undisputed competence, due to his thorough knowledge of the two languages, makes Mr. Raymond the perfect model of the Canadian civil servant. Through his frankness and his charitable disposition, and particularly through his fairness, he has earned the confidence of all in this house.

For us and for those who come after us, I feel that Mr. Raymond will be an example to follow, and we wish him long and happy days. Rest assured, Mr. Raymond, that we will always be happy to meet you and to shake your hand.

• (11:20 a.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we wish on this occasion to join in expressing to Mr. Raymond our deep appreciation for the services he has rendered and to express our best wishes to him on this occasion when he is about to enter retirement.

Much has been said about the spirit of helpfulness and courtesy which has marked Mr. Raymond's attitude to the members of the House of Commons throughout the past years. Since coming to this house for the first time in 1953 I can certainly appreciate those sentiments because in my personal contacts with Mr. Raymond he has at all times evidenced a spirit of helpfulness and courtesy that made it easier to become acquainted with the house, its procedures and our responsibilities here.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that we in the Social Credit party support the resolution designating Mr. Raymond as an honorary officer of the House of Commons, with the attendant privileges that this resolution confers.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in this formal parliamentary tribute to the retiring Clerk of the House of Commons. I should like to do this as government house leader, but more particularly for personal reasons. It is appropriate that we should acknowledge in this way the silent service of one whose counsel has played so important a part in the moulding of the practices and procedures of this house.

I know, as one who like most of us came to this house in awesome ignorance of its rules and practices, that I am grateful to Mr. Raymond for his great patience, his wise counsel and his friendly guidance along the tortuous paths of parliamentary manners and mores. Under his guidance I have tried, as other members have tried, to understand the workings of parliamentary practice and procedures. I have observed the Clerk of the House in action at the table. As a result I have come to appreciate that a Clerk of the House of Commons must, in a sense, be a biblical paragon with the wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Job, the agility of David and the survival qualities of Jonah.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: The Parliamentary Companion of 100 years ago described the Clerk of the Commons House of Parliament as one who holds an office of great trust and importance. The Canadian parliament has been particularly gifted in its choice of clerks, and Mr. Raymond has followed in the tradition of such names as Bourinot and Beauchesne. Perhaps, on this particular day, it would not be inappropriate for the Clerk to hear one last citation from Beauchesne, his favourite authority. I quote from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, 1958, as follows:

> —a thousand ... questions have to be solved by the Clerk who may be consulted at any time by the Speaker and the leader of the house. In the midst of a debate, questions of order of all descriptions may be raised and the Clerk must be ready to supply authorities for a decision—
> During a crisis, when the government and the opposition are using all the strategy possible under the rules of the house, the leaders are in continuous consultation with the Clerk with respect to their motions and amendments. A wrong interpretation of the rules may then lead to the most dangerous miscalculations, and the Clerk has to be very sure of his ground when he thus advises the men whose political future must be decided on the floor of the house.

I am sure Mr. Beauchesne was not simply attempting to justify his own status when he maintained that the Clerk's executive duties are absorbing and keep him busy the whole year round. He comments as follows:

> If a member of the house loses his railway transportation card during the summer, as it sometimes happens, the Clerk has to issue another one under a new number and send out forty three notices to the railway companies.

In conclusion, I am sure the house would wish the retiring Clerk many years of pleasant contemplation and other restful pursuits in his well earned retirement. We hope, as well, that from time to time he will take advantage of his entrée to this house so we may still benefit from his guidance and experience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to multiply words, but as one who has enjoyed Mr. Raymond's friendship for the 22 years since he first entered parliament I wish to express my own appreciation of the tremendous contribution he has made to the House of Commons of Canada. The things that have been said by those who have already spoken have been said with deep sincerity, they have been said on behalf of all of us, and they are all true. Mr. Raymond has been a true friend to all members of the House of Commons. He has exercised his responsibilities with that care, integrity and impartiality that are so necessary to the important office that he has held for the past 18 years.

Not only has he been a friend to us all; not only has he worked diligently; we have known that his feeling for parliament has been like that of his distinguished predecessors. We are happy to associate his name with those of Bourinot and Beauchesne on this historic occasion.

• (11:30 a.m.)

I happen to remember Mr. Raymond's first speech as a member of the House of Commons. I remember it because I was following him in the debate that day, and I recall the thoughtfulness of his address to us on that occasion. I went to the library this morning to look it up again. My memory of it was correct; it was a thoughtful speech on the problems facing the world and on the various problems facing Canada, economic and social, as well as the need to build a united country on the basis of our two founding races.

Although it was made many years ago, the thoughts contained in this speech are still very timely. There is one paragraph in it which I should like to put on record again at this time. It is to be found at page 70 of Hansard for March 19, 1946, at which time the House of Commons was debating the address in reply to the speech from the throne. As I say, Mr. Raymond had dealt with various problems which were facing the world and facing Canada. He had built up quite a picture of the difficulties which had to be met. Then he said this:

> The following statement may appear rather childish, Mr. Speaker, but I am convinced that all our problems can be solved provided we base their consideration on a spirit of mutual trust. However, this sentiment can only be awakened, nurtured and matured provided justice and charity govern the consideration of all these problems.

When Mr. Raymond uttered those words he had no notion, of course, that a few years later he would be the Clerk of the House of Commons. But I draw attention to the three characteristics he emphasized, mutual trust, justice and charity. These are the characteristics which have marked his régime as Clerk of the House of Commons and which have helped to make his services to us so helpful and so successful.

I join with others in expressing warm personal greetings to Mr. Raymond. I wish him health and happiness in the years ahead. It is perhaps unfortunate that his position does not enable him to say a few words from the floor of the House of Commons; he is probably glad he cannot. But may I add the wish that in the years of retirement ahead he will have time to write a book and enrich our knowledge of the practices of parliament.

TRANSPORT

CHAMPLAIN WATERWAY—TABLING OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I beg to table in French and in English copies of the report of the international joint commission on the improvement of the internal Champlain waterway for commercial navigation.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

DEPOSIT INSURANCE REGULATIONS—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): With the leave of the house I should like to table correspondence I have exchanged with the prime minister of Quebec—the letter I wrote to him on June 22, and his reply to me of June 30—relating to deposit insurance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Will the house allow the hon. minister to table these papers?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNITED NATIONS

TABLING OF REPORT ON WITHDRAWAL OF EMERGENCY FORCE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs) tabled the report of the secretary general on the withdrawal of the United Nations emergency force, in both French and English.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the parliamentary secretary consent to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That the house adjourn immediately following the giving of Royal Assent to the supply bills referred to in paragraph (5) of the special order made Monday, June 26, 1967, and to any other measures, and that the house shall stand adjourned until Monday, September 25, 1967, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.; provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: Smile, you're on candid camera.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am made speechless by that blinding flash.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: May I assure the Minister of Transport who led that round of applause that I have tremendous powers of recovery when it comes to making a speech.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to one aspect of the motion which the leader of the house has just moved, and if I cannot persuade the house to accept an amendment to it I shall have to oppose the motion for the reason I shall specify.

First may I make it clear that I am not opposed to the idea of parliament taking a recess. Editorial writers in some of our newspapers notwithstanding, I think parliament should take a recess, that we should have the benefit of being back among our constituents and other benefits which flow from a few weeks away from Ottawa. But I object as strongly as I can to the idea of our breaking for a summer recess without dealing with the question of the pensions of retired civil servants. The motion now before us has been worded in such a way as to make it impossible for this question to be dealt with before we recess.

• (11:40 a.m.)

I wish to point out that this motion is somewhat different from the usual motion which is made to provide for a break in a session of parliament. On occasion such a motion has been made without notice, requiring unanimous consent. The government was quite right in anticipating that such consent might not be forthcoming today, for I would not have agreed. On other occasions when a motion has been put on the order paper to provide for a recess there have been consultations among the house leaders. Let me make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that there were consultations with regard to the date that we are to come back, namely, September 25. I for one agreed to that date, so I am not now objecting to it. But unlike other occasions I was not shown the form of this motion until I saw it on the notice paper attached to yesterday's Votes and Proceedings.

When I look at the motion I note it is drafted in such a way that once the government has arranged for the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General to come and give royal assent to the supply bills we passed last night, nothing further can be done in this House of Commons. I object to this way of doing it. I object to our not being consulted as to the form of this motion, and I object very strongly to the government's performance with respect to the question of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants.

As I indicated a moment ago, I intend to move an amendment to this motion which would accept the fact of adjourning, which would accept the fact of a recess until September 25, but which would require that before adjourning we deal with the question of the pensions of retired civil servants.

An hon. Member: Blackmail.

Mr. Knowles: There is an interjection from over there, but I am not sure that I understood it.

A lot has been said today about the workings of parliament. One of the ways in which parliament works best is when there is the keeping of promises, when there is a carrying out of things that have been understood. This question that I am talking about is not only one that has been before us in parliament in a general way for more than two decades but it has been before us in a specific way for more than a year.

I do not intend to go into all the details because I am citing this only in support of my opposition to the motion, but the fact is that after a committee study a unanimous recommendation was made on May 8 this year that the pensions of retired civil servants be increased. We have been assured a dozen times since then, on the floor of this house, that the matter was under active consideration. One cannot talk about the things one is told outside the House of Commons, but one knows what one reads in the press and the indications were clear a few weeks ago that something was going to be done before this session broke. This commitment was very definite, but now we come to the time of recess and nothing is being done.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) is trying to tell us it is a complicated issue. I cannot accept that as an excuse for not acting on this matter. The President of the Treasury Board has as his deputy minister one of the most accomplished individuals in the public service of Canada, a man who overnight could draft a proposition to deal with this matter. As a matter of fact it was dealt with several years ago during the régime of the previous government, and I suggest there has been plenty of time to bring before parliament a measure dealing with the pensions of retired civil servants.

To argue, as the President of the Treasury Board does, that the government across the way has done more for civil servants than anybody else, is nonsense. It is arguing by assertion, and it does not meet the point that nothing is being done in this part of the session about the pensions of retired civil servants.

The plea that is made to me, both on the floor of the house and by Liberals out in the hall, is that I should wait until fall. It is going to be done, they will get the pension increases and they will be retroactive, so what am I complaining about. Mr. Speaker, when people have waited for years, when they have waited for months, when for weeks they have had reason to believe something would be done, then to ask them to wait until fall is unfair and unkind on the part of the government.

I know, if we are asked to wait until fall on this issue, that there will be other matters that will have priority. We would not reach the matter until October or November, and these people would not get their increases until next December or January. I know further, Mr. Speaker, that unless action is taken now we have no guarantee that action will be taken in the fall.

Even yesterday when the President of the Treasury Board was asked questions he did not firmly say it will be done. He did not firmly say any increases will be made retroactive. Rather, he expressed the hope, the personal belief, that it ought to be done. Anyone can read the signs. It means that this matter has not yet been approved by the government and that the whole question is not only being delayed but is in jeopardy.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, after the government's action in referring this matter to a special joint committee, after that committee's thorough consideration, after that committee making a unanimous recommendation that increases be made, and in view of the fact something like this was done a number of years ago, it is unthinkable for action not to be taken on this issue.

To argue that it sets a pattern for pensions in other areas is fine. Of course it does. It is time we were setting such a pattern. It is time the government of Canada acted as a good employer and gave a lead in this matter by facing up to the fact that retired people have the right to be able to live in retirement on incomes that will expand and grow as the cost of living increases and as the standard of living improves. It is no argument against taking action in this field to say it is setting a pattern that will have to be followed in other areas. Of course it will set such a pattern and I want that pattern to be followed.

What I am concerned about is that a government which led us to believe that action would be taken, and has led us to believe that for months, is now saying, "Oh no, you cannot do anything about it before the summer break. We have got to go home some time today and we will deal with this matter in the fall." I regard this as callous, as most unfair, and as quite unnecessary. In my view parliament should stay here long enough to deal with this issue. I think this issue could be dealt with today, but under the government's motion we will not be able to do so because just as soon as we get word from the Senate that they have passed last night's supply bills there will be a letter read from the Chair to the effect that the Deputy to the Governor General is over there, and so the guillotine will fall and we can deal with nothing further.

If it is necessary to stay another day or two I think this parliament owes it to our retired civil servants and owes it to our retired people generally to do so. I urge that there be an end to the kind of excuses that the President of the Treasury Board has been giving. I urge that there be an end to these appeals from members opposite that some of us be patient and wait until the fall. I say that if we wait until fall and people get these increases in December or January, some of the pensioners involved will not get them. Some of them will have died in the meantime and others will suffer for the want of whatever increase they are going to get out of the government's promise.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say again that I quite approve of the idea of this parliament taking a recess. I was in on the consultation as to the date of our return, and I support the date of September 25, but I do not agree with our leaving now without dealing with this issue. I contend it could be dealt with today. That would be fine, but if it cannot be dealt with today we should stay here until it is dealt with, no matter how long it takes.

Therefore to bring this about, to make the motion one that is acceptable and more responsible I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

> That the motion be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the words "and to any other measures," the following words: "including a measure respecting the pensions of retired civil servants,"

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that if my amendment is accepted and these words are inserted the first part of the motion as amended would read as follows:

> That the house adjourn immediately following the giving of Royal Assent to the supply bills referred to in paragraph (5) of the special order made Monday, June 26, 1967, and to any other measures, including a measure respecting the pensions of retired civil servants, and that the house shall stand adjourned until Monday, September 25, 1967, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.;—

• (11:50 a.m.)

I need not read the rest of the motion because it is only that first part which is affected by my amendment. I contend that the good name of parliament, as a responsible body which does not fool people, which does not build up their hopes and then let them down, is at stake in this question. We should not break for our summer recess until we have dealt with the matter of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, and that is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish merely to raise a point of order in respect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The amendment introduces into the proposal before us a matter which is certainly outside the scope of the proposition itself. The motion deals strictly with the ending of this part of the session and the resumption of the session in the fall. This amendment introduces a declaration of policy in the words following "any other measures", respecting the pensions of retired civil servants. If the amendment were permissible it would be possible for any member to add to it a series of further legislative requirements, thereby obliging the house to take further actions other than those required by the motion which are concerned strictly with the adjournment and resumption of the session. On procedural grounds I submit the amendment is irrelevant to the motion and cannot be entertained or put to the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the attitude taken by the minister. No one has a monopoly of sympathy for retired civil servants. Members on this side have continually pressed for action in this regard. The government gave an implicit undertaking, at least it could be so interpreted, that action would be taken. I am surprised that the minister now repudiates, by raising a technical objection, the promise that retired civil servants would receive a measure of consideration which the government has not given. The minister has said that parliament would be placed in an impossible position if this amendment were passed. Let me point out that a committee of both houses unanimously supported this measure some months ago.

Mr. Douglas: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There can be no justification whatsoever for the argument raised by the minister. However, it will be supported by those members who support the government. They will by their support be joining together in repudiation of the undertaking of the government, reinforced by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but I think I should remind him and other hon. members that the motion has not yet been put to the house. We are considering the point of order raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I suggest that our discussion should be limited to that point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you separate the wheat from the chaff, the chaff having been placed before the house by the minister. That is the difficult position in which we are placed. When the minister advanced this argument I took it that he was not serious about it, and that this was just another roadblock put forward by the government to delay action.

Miss LaMarsh: He is a better lawyer than you are.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think everyone is pleased to have an adjournment in sight. My own opinion is that parliament undermines itself when it sits as long as it has in the last few years. In this way it destroys itself. I cannot understand why the adjournment is until September 25. I could understand it if it was until September 18 because that is my birthday. An adjournment until September has some significance. I would ask Your Honour not to let the house be hogtied by a technical argument such as the one advanced by the minister for the purpose of bailing the government out of difficulty.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as government house leader, has raised a point of order. It is a very clear and simple one, and I suggest that the answer to it is also very clear and simple. I ask Your Honour to note the words immediately preceding that point in which I suggest we insert the words of my amendment. Those words are "and to any other measures". The minister suggests that this is a restrictive motion and relates merely to royal assent to two supply bills.

The government in its own motion put in the words "to any other measures". What the minister has said is quite correct. Anybody could bring in another measure and be within the four corners of that phrase. I am not adding something new by my proposal, and I suggest it is within the four corners of that phrase.

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles: Surely.

Mr. MacEachen: Is not the limitation here related to measures which are ready for royal assent? The effect of the amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is an instruction to the house to initiate and pass a measure, which is totally different. Surely this is not related to the motion which would require the house to deal with measures ready for royal assent.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the minister that had he wanted to present that kind of a motion he should have consulted with his experts so that it would say what he intended it to say. In fact the motion refers to "any other measures". It does not refer to any other measures that are ready for royal assent. Nor does it refer to any other measures that are now before the house. It only refers to "any other measures". The minister is now trying to tell us what was in his mind. This is the same argument we have heard from him before in respect of the medicare bill, the pension bill and so on.

You must be guided, Mr. Speaker, not by what is in the minister's mind but by the words of the motion before us and the words of the amendment I have proposed. I submit that the words in the motion are "and to any other measures". The minister says that if my amendment was accepted and passed, any other measure could be proposed. He says it is an instruction to the government. In the strict sense of my amendment, it is an instruction to the house to sit here until we have dealt with this other measure. It would then be in the hands of the government to bring in that measure.

Mr. Byrne: Blackmail.

Mr. Knowles: That is the second or third time today I have heard the word "blackmail" uttered by someone on the other side of the house. That is the answer of Liberal members to the 45,000 retired civil servants and widows who have expected this government to keep its promises. This is their answer to my effort to get the government to keep its promise. I submit that is a word that ought not to be used, certainly not by members on the opposite side.

• (12 noon)

Surely parliament, not the government, is the master of its times of sitting and when it is to be here. Surely parliament has the right to say that we shall stay here until certain things are brought before us. If we cannot make the horse drink, at least we can lead it to the water.

I suggest that the amendment is perfectly in order. When I was looking at the motion and trying to draft an amendment I felt I should call the Minister of National Health and Welfare and thank him for having worded the motion in such a way that there was no problem. I repeat that the motion says without any qualification, that we shall stay here until we have received royal assent to two specific bills "and to any other measures", so I identify one such measure, namely, a measure respecting the pensions of retired civil servants.

I submit that the amendment is perfectly in order and that Your Honour should allow it and should allow the house to decide its own affairs so far as our times of sitting are concerned. While the debate has been going on I have been looking at the citations in Beauchesne regarding amendments. There is citation 201 on page 168, the gist of which is that a motion may be amended by leaving out certain words in order to insert others, or by inserting other words. My amendment does that. There is, of course, citation 203(1) which provides as follows:

> —every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

I submit that what is before us is a motion having to do with the times of sitting of the house, in direct relation to how much business we shall pass. I am proposing that the "other measures" which the government says should be finalized before we leave here should include the specific one I have named. I contend that my amendment is in order.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word in direct reply to what the hon. gentleman has said. I do not think there is any substance in the argument he used about the words "other measures", but if there is it would clearly indicate that his amendment is redundant. If "other measures" would include this measure, then it is quite unnecessary to put it in. But of course it is quite obvious that it does not have that significance at all and that what the hon. gentleman is seeking to do by his amendment is to do indirectly what he has no right whatever to do directly. There is no motion and no notice of motion on the order paper of this house—

Mr. Knowles: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: —for this measure.

Mr. Knowles: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can call "Shame" all he likes. He poses as a great authority on the rules.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: He knows he can never win an election and sit on this side of the house, and he is trying indirectly to substitute himself for the government—and to substitute his motion for the message from the crown that would have to precede any such measure which the government alone, under our parliamentary system, has the right to bring forward.

Not only is the hon. member doing that but he is seeking by a procedural motion to direct this house in advance that it must pass this bill which we have never seen and whose contents we do not know anything about. The hon. member is seeking to say that the Senate must also pass this bill because he says we are not to adjourn until the bill is ready for royal assent.

I suggest that not only is the hon. member vastly expanding the motion but he is seeking to do indirectly what he knows perfectly well, as a private member who has never been able to get enough confidence in this country to sit on this side of the house, he could never do directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport always manages, under the guise of dealing with a point of order, to bring in all the political connotations he possibly can.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: If there is anyone who ought not to be talking about the confidence of the country, it is a government that is now trying to find refuge behind the rules of the house to cover up the fact that they have betrayed a promise they made to the retired civil servants of Canada.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the minister wants to rise on a question of privilege. I have the impression that we are now slowly slipping into the debate which might take place, and which I assume will take place, either on the amendment proposed by the hon. member if it is accepted and, if not, on the motion itself. The motion is, of course, a debatable one and hon. members have at least this day to debate it. Therefore I suggest that we try to limit our consideration at the moment and follow the excellent example of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition a moment ago. Having made these comments, I recognize the Minister of National Revenue on his question of privilege.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): My question of privilege is this, Mr. Speaker. It has been implied several times that something would be done by a specific date. This is just not the case, and hon. members opposite know it as well as I do. The committee reported back in May. The government has been considering the matter. I have stated that it is under active consideration and that I hope action will be taken in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hope springs in due course.

Mr. Benson: But at no time has the government promised that action would be taken before the house adjourns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that a promise was made. Whether a date was attached to it or not, the time has come for the promise to be implemented. These promises are made with an indefinite date in mind which never seems to arrive. They are the Hamlets of Canada—tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow. But tomorrow never comes.

I agree with Your Honour that we are getting off the point of order, but I can assure Your Honour the debate started to slip in that direction before I rose to my feet. May I deal with the point of order raised by the Minister of Transport. It is with reference to the phrase "and to any other measures." If the house has the right to discuss any other measures before the adjournment, then surely the house also has the right, in the control of its own business, to indicate what one of those measures should be. The item which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is seeking to have the house delineate as an item for discussion prior to the adjournment for a summer recess is that having to do with pensions for retired civil servants. It seems to me that since the government itself put this phrase into the motion the house has the right now to indicate what item it would like to discuss prior to the adjournment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank hon. members for their assistance to me in ruling on the very interesting point of order raised originally by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have had the usual consultations in the light of the advice given to the Chair and I am now in a position to render a decision, or at least give an expression of opinion.

It seems to me there is something to what was said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he suggested that it is a new proposition which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seeks to introduce in the consideration of the motion. To my mind this amendment goes even further in that to a considerable extent it is a substantive amendment raising an entirely new question and would require notice.

However, there is some doubt on this point and I might have tended to accept the amendment if there were that objection only. There is another objection which is more serious and which I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of hon. members. I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 260(1) which reads as follows:

> The tendency has been in the Canadian House of Commons, for the past 25 years, to rule out all motions purporting to give the government a direct order to do a thing which cannot be done without the expenditure of money. Our Journals are full of precedents to this effect.

To my mind this citation is exactly on the point, and because of this I must rule the amendment out of order.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word on the motion. The members of this party are extremely disturbed that the house should propose to adjourn for a summer recess without dealing with the matter which has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The fact that the retired civil servants have over the years seen the cost of living rise annually, which has meant a diminution in the purchasing power of their pensions, has caused great distress among them, and this distress has not just been felt in the last two or three years or the last two or three months. The government has been in office for over four years.

As my colleague said, the previous government dealt with this matter and the present government, fully aware of the distress which has been caused among the retired civil servants, claims to have been studying the matter. It was referred to a joint House of Commons and Senate committee which put forward a unanimous recommendation for action. There have been months of delay. We have been told that the matter was under active, serious and urgent consideration. Consideration has been given to it every time but no action is ever taken.

We had hoped that in view of the fact that the government had plenty of warning it would have brought in legislation to deal with this matter before the house recesses for the summer. The complexity of this legislation is no excuse. There have been plenty of precedents for this legislation and there has been plenty of time to deal with this matter. If the ministers are so busy with other matters that they think this one is less important and can be delayed, then they are wrong because the Canadian people, who have a high regard for civil servants, feel that they have an indebtedness to them and owe it to them to see that they do not suffer by virtue of the rising cost of living and that their pensions should be adjusted to meet the rising cost. Since the government has completely failed to do this, we think that the house has no right to recess until this great injustice is remedied.

Since the government refuses to act, we have no other recourse but to vote against the motion to adjourn, and not because we do not want to see the house adjourn because we recognize the need for members to return to their respective constituencies. But surely no recess is more important than the passage of a measure to relieve the distress of the retired civil servants of this country.

When the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) speaks about blackmail because we are trying to get the government to live up to its commitments, I want to tell him that the people of Canada will not consider it blackmail and that anybody who can get this government to keep its promises is doing a public service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: When the hon. member for Kootenay East says it is blackmail of the taxpayers, I challenge the government to ask the taxpayers of Canada whether they want to upgrade the pensions of the retired civil servants of this country. Let the government not blame the taxpayers. The government is not covering up for the taxpayers; it is trying to cover up for its own inability, inefficiency and failure to grapple with a problem whose solution is long overdue.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question? Now that he has displayed his complete lack of confidence in the government, would he inform the house why he and his party have so frequently sustained the government by their votes during the last two years?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that many times we have moved motions of non-confidence in the government which would have been passed had it not been for the absenteeism of members of the official opposition.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all of us in the house would want to welcome the hon. gentleman who has just spoken back to his seat, particularly when he knows now that his leadership has been confirmed. However, some of us were a little mystified by the conclave which took the hon. gentleman away from the house. We know now that he is the leader of the reactionary group in his party and that the forces of liberalism which sought to assert themselves at the convention were regrettably unsuccessful.

Mr. Knowles: Now we know why the external affairs of our country are in such a mess.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend drew a picture of the government leaving business unattended. That reminds me of what I saw on page 7 of the Globe and Mail this morning indicating that the N.D.P. convention broke up without dealing with the resolution on a guaranteed annual income.

Under the rules of the house it is not possible to challenge the sincerity of an hon. member, and I certainly would not challenge the sincerity of my hon. friend when he says that we must not adjourn today unless this very important matter is dealt with. My hon. friend, however, should not seek to convince any of us that he is really serious in that proposal. I suggest there is no one who would be more disappointed if we did not adjourn today than my hon. friend who, after his leadership race at the convention, is now looking forward with justification to a well earned rest.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) has dealt with this matter. He is the minister in charge of it. Yesterday he replied to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and pointed out the government's intention with regard to retroactivity. He has recognized, as has the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on a number of occasions, the concern and the interest of the government in this problem. As my hon. friend knows, this matter was considered very carefully by a joint committee of the house in the last session of parliament. No less than eight meetings were held at which evidence was received from 21 witnesses. A report was filed by that committee late this spring. It contained certain recommendations which are now before the government.

In the light of what the Minister of National Revenue said yesterday, it is not fair for my hon. friend to make the suggestion that he made a few moments ago. No government in this country has done more by way of old age retirement plans for civil servants and others than has the government represented by the party which sits to Mr. Speaker's right.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Whom does the minister have in mind, Judge Landreville?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not a fair argument to suggest callousness on this side because we have all agreed on a program of adjournment. It is not fair to suggest that because the government is a participant in the adjournment proposal it is callous and uninterested in the economic stress which faces a section of the population of our country. The government is considering the report and it will give it the consideration which has been urged on it by the committee which gave the matter such thorough study. We on this side of the house are as concerned about the plight of retired civil servants as is my hon. friend or anyone else in the house.

In conclusion I want to say that I speak with friendship and affection for my hon. friend. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) said, my hon. friend has been busy. He has been too busy to follow what has been going on in the house. I am sure we all understand that because many others have preoccupations. My hon. friend has not been allowed the opportunity of knowing what we have been doing here because, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said in Toronto on Thursday, my hon. friend has been preoccupied.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who greatly admire the ingenuity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). He can produce a smokescreen at any time. He has done so today. The aspersions he has cast on his allies in the New Democratic party do not indicate that appreciation of good things of which the minister is usually purported to have a monopoly. He said that the New Democratic party had gone right. Well, as I read what they had done I felt they had adopted Walter Gordon, the President of the Privy Council. They adopted him and it began to look to some of us as though a future alliance was being built up, if not in fact, then indeed in name. This reminds one of the old song, "Walter, Walter, Lead Me To The Altar."

All these things are indications. The Canada Development Corporation has a new name, the Canada resources corporation, but behind in the shadows standeth Walter keeping watch on his own. I had hoped that the alliance of the last several years between the socialists and the neo-socialists might lead to the culmination—

Mr. Starr: They are going to have more meetings.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of a happy reunion. Today they are just playing with one another.

I was amazed at the argument advanced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It had all the clarity that he normally exhibits when answering questions on foreign affairs. He said his heart bleeds for the retired civil servants. He referred to their economic distress. He recognizes the need and he feels, with all his heart, that something should be done. But when he is asked to do something he increases the salaries of the highly paid civil servants. He multiplies those increases and forgets those who were retired years ago and who today, he admits, are living in economic distress. This government has been recreant. The same situation prevails in other fields to which I shall not refer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask my hon. friend a question, a very kind question? Why did my hon. friend not act in 1962 when I asked him to do so?

Mr. Starr: What have you been doing in the last five years?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Interruptions of that kind result in no detour on my part. I say to the government, you have failed to act. You have deceived parliament and the retired civil servants. Now you say, "Give us a little more time to continue the deception. Next fall we may act; we are going to do something." The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) said, "We hope to do something." Let him give an undertaking now. What are you going to do? Let us have none of these hypothetical promises and nebulous excuses. They say they are working on it. The very countenance of the Minister of National Revenue indicates how deeply he is thinking about this subject. Can he not come up with an opinion? Does he not agree with the committee that was composed of members from all parts of the house? Is it so difficult? Why is there this delay? It is simply that this government is playing with the retired civil servants and intends to continue to do so.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to congratulate the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) upon what may be his last speech in that position in the house. I hope that in our concern, and everyone else's concern for retired people, we will also consider retired leaders of the opposition. With respect to our position—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is rather high class wit.

Mr. Benson: —with regard to pensions for retired civil servants, I should like to point out that there was an adjustment made in 1958 by the government led by the Leader of the Opposition. I should like to point out also that there was no further adjustment made from then until 1962, by which time he ceased to form the government. I should like to point out further that there was a deficit of hundreds of millions of dollars in the superannuation account when the hon. gentleman left the government. This matter was referred to a committee—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Haven't you got a surplus today?

Mr. Benson: —which indicates the deep concern of this government for retired civil servants. My hon. friend says the matter is a rather simple one. It is stated that the committee has reported, so we should simply come up with a proposition, give it to the house today and that would be the end of it. I should like to assure him that the matter is not as simple as that. This government for the first time in history, when it passed the Canada Pension Plan and the amendment to the old age pension, attached a cost of living index to them. This was new ground in Canada. I should like to point out that to my knowledge none of the labour unions in Canada has a cost of living index attached to their pension plans.

When we reach a decision on this matter, if it is to be a permanent solution as hon. members opposite have suggested, then perhaps there must be some sort of cost of living index attached to it. This is not a simple matter. The worst cases of retired civil servants, indeed the worst cases of all pensioners throughout this country, have been taken care of through the supplementary old age pension plan which guarantees every older Canadian, whether or not he be a civil servant, a minimum income of $105 per month when he becomes pensionable. This pension has the cost of living index attached to it.

Very careful consideration has been given the report of the committee. I have assured hon. members in answering their questions that the whole matter is being given careful consideration. We intend to continue this consideration. Our course of action will be announced in the fall. I have said publicly and privately what my own hopes are in connection with this matter, but it is up to the government to make a decision on the specific plan that will be brought forward. We should not make a decision that will give somebody $25 and somebody else $5. This is not the way to solve this problem. It has to be solved in a way that will prevent its recurrence every few years, as happened under the Leader of the Opposition when action was taken and then nothing happened for the next four years. I believe the retired civil servants got behind relative to the cost of living at that time as well.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if the government had not given any consideration to a formula prior to receiving the report on this matter from the joint committee of the house and the Senate?

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the government has given consideration to many formulas, including the formula used in 1958 which we deemed not to be appropriate as a method to solve this problem finally. We are continuing our consideration of this matter but it is not quite as simple as my hon. friend tries to point out. People are receiving pensions from the civil service having worked for varying periods of time. One could argue that if one made a flat rate adjustment of some sort and somebody receiving $110 a month received $125 or $135 a month, that person may have worked for the civil service for only a very short period but would be treated in the same way as long-term employees, which would be unfair. It is a complicated matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not want to interrupt the minister but I think I should take the liberty of reminding all hon. members who are taking part in this discussion that contributions to the debate must be, to some extent at least, relevant to the motion before the house. I assume it is in order to refer to the pensions of retired civil servants, but remarks should be related to the question as to whether or not we adjourn. That is the question which is before the house.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is very important that a number of us say something on this matter. There is no monopoly in this house, certainly none on the other side, when it comes to diverting attention away from the real issue that is under discussion this morning. That issue, as Your Honour has just pointed out, is whether or not we adjourn or take time off—I do not call it a holiday because most of us know better than that, though it will provide a change of scene and some respite for us—before we deal with the pensions of retired civil servants.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has had so many years of practice at covering up that he has tried to cover up this matter with a very entertaining diversion about the recent convention held by our party. Other diversionary tactics have been tried. But the fact remains that this matter must be discussed now and we must decide whether or not this government is falling down on its duty by not dealing with the pensions issue before we adjourn.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) indicated that the government could not in the last five minutes bring in a pension plan, or he indicated that the government should not be expected to do that. I suggest there is no validity to that argument. This matter has been under discussion for a long time indeed.

All I want to do at this stage is to adduce the evidence of a witness, one not from our group but one that speaks for a great many people across this country. There are many other witnesses of this type. I want to quote an editorial which appeared in the Vancouver Province on June 24, 1967. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Vancouver Province does not belong to our party. It is not influenced by our party; neither does it give credit to our party unless that credit is very dearly earned indeed. In dealing with the question of retired civil servants' pensions, the Vancouver Province has this to say in an editorial:

> The New Democratic party has sound reasons for threatening to keep parliament sitting until legislation is introduced to increase the pensions of retired civil servants.
> In view of the rising cost of almost everything, the tiny pensions given many former civil servants are a national disgrace.

I picked up a paper this morning, Mr. Speaker, and read that the cost of living index is up once again. The cost of food is up a full percentage point and the cost of clothing, rent and other essentials is again up, showing a steady rise. The editorial continues:

> Finance minister Sharp last March disclosed the pension levels of Canada's 30,922 retired civil servants. At the lower end of the scale, 458 draw federal pensions of less than $20 a month.

Pausing there, Mr. Speaker, may I say that these people have given their lives to this country by working in the civil service. I think it is an insult to suggest that these people are looked after by the addition of the old age security supplementary pension to their income. We are insulting our retired civil servants by failing to look after them better than this. We are also insulting the old people of this country by offering them this sort of pension. The article goes on:

> At the higher, 2,382 get allowances of $300 or more a month.

This is the argument used by people who are anxious to justify what the government has done in the matter of pensions.

> In between, 28,082 draw pensions that range from a meagre $30 a month—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether the hon. member is not straying a little from the motion now before the house. It seemed to me that the first part of her argument was relevant, but perhaps she is now getting away from the subject before the house.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): With due respect, Mr. Speaker, that is why I do not want to go home until we have dealt with this question. I think this is exceedingly relevant. It is why I think that we as members of parliament are falling down on our duty. We are failing to do something for those people who have incomes of this type. However, I have nearly finished with the figures, and I believe they are very relevant.

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether it is the figures that are wrong? I would point out that they are accurate.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is the hon. member who is out of order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I will skip the figures then and continue with the editorial. However, I must point out that 20 per cent of all retired civil servants receive between $100 and $150 a month. Now I have finished with the figures. The editorial continues:

> Is this the way a nation with one of the world's highest living standards proposes to recompense its public servants for a lifetime of service? Do these cheese-paring allowances reflect Canada's grateful thanks?
> Obviously not. A Public Service Alliance brief calling for wide improvements in civil service pensions has been endorsed by representatives of three political parties, including the government.

I am getting rather nervous now lest by continuing to read I will be out of order, so I will desist. I just want to say that in spite of the cynicism expressed by the minister a moment ago, there are members of the House of Commons of all parties who would willingly stay here for several days, if need be, if we could get action on this matter before we go home for our much needed respite in our own constituencies. There are members of the House of Commons who put their duty to the people of this country—the retired civil servants in this instance—ahead of their own holiday plans and who would cancel their plans to go home in order to stay here to deal with this matter. I do wish, Mr. Speaker, that members on the other side of the house would recognize that there are members in all parties, even their own, who would be glad to stay to deal with this matter.

I know I am not out of order, or I do not think I am, when I say that I feel sure that the work that has been done over the years by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) puts him way beyond the cackling that I hear from some quarters that this is a last minute move to seek political advantage. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has fought and fought and fought for this particular group of pensioners, and I feel that if by staying a little while longer we could get some action from the government we would feel a lot better when we go home. I am also sure that the government would on mature reflection feel a lot happier too, as well as feel a lot happier about their own prospects at the next election.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the motion before us to recess the house for the summer is one that has been agreed upon by all parties in the house. However, that does not preclude our saying some of the things which have been said about the government's failure to act on behalf of certain segments of the community and of the economy.

I was shocked to hear the callous words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when he spoke of those in economic distress. He admitted that in 1962 he rose in the house as an opposition member and asked the government to do something about the matter which we are now discussing. The present government then came to office and declared a war on poverty. For five years the Secretary of State for External Affairs has done nothing to declare war on the poverty which affects retired civil servants.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Starr: Does he not realize that some retired civil servants are living in squalor in one room, with hardly any amenities? Does he not realize the economic distress some of them suffer? Has he not heard of the suicide attempt of a widow of a civil servant which was occasioned by her economic distress? In his callousness is he going to continue to leave the matter unattended, as he has left it unattended for the past five years?

I realize that his interests range far beyond the war on poverty in this country. He is interested in the war on poverty in other countries. He is interested in wars between other countries, wars he has unsuccessfully tried to deal with. Even more unsuccessful have been his efforts to deal with poverty in Canada.

I know that nothing has been done because the government is not prepared to do anything. The cabinet is divided. Some in the cabinet feel that action ought to be taken now, while others are definitely against any action at this time. I wonder whether the government intends to do anything about this matter. The Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) said that he hoped something might be done. That leads me to believe that he wishes to do something to correct the situation but that his colleagues are against him.

It is small wonder that no action is being taken. The government is divided. In the cabinet there are those who wish to do something for those in economic distress, for the retired civil servants, and there are others who are callous enough to do nothing. What is the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Which of those categories does he occupy?

An hon. Member: He is on both sides.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. member want me to answer his question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's comments about the war on poverty seem to be outside the scope of the motion. Perhaps he might sight his guns on the motion itself.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I was only following the theme and words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He said that some of our people are in economic distress. The enunciated policy of the government was that it was declaring war on poverty. Because of the callousness of some cabinet ministers that policy has not been carried out.

I thought the minister was most unkind today to his bedfellows of the New Democratic party. I realize that he thought he had a golden opportunity to try to give the impression that there might be a divorce between the two parties until after the summer recess. As the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said earlier, the N.D.P. has adopted the policies of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon). They feel closely akin to him. It is possible that the meetings that used to be held for the purpose of amalgamating the two parties might be resumed in future.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think that is a good idea.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a fact.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of saying a few words on this motion for the adjournment of the house inasmuch as I do not believe that the house should adjourn until it is seized of some facts regarding illegal fill in Lake Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Motion for Adjournment

Mr. Cowan: I sincerely trust that hon. members have enjoyed their light laughter, because before I am through I want to inquire whether the government is under the influence of two members of this house who are law partners of a lawyer involved in this illegal filling in of Lake Ontario or whether the government is acting on its own. I have been pushed around for two and a half years on this matter and I will not take any more. I will name them before I am through.

With regard to this adjournment motion I have in my hand—and I am sure that the Department of Public Works has not even seen it yet—a decision of the Ontario Municipal Board which was brought down on Tuesday, June 27, with regard to an application by the borough of Etobicoke for the zoning of Lake Ontario out to the international boundary, which is Etobicoke's southern limit.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot admit or accept that we have now reverted to a grievance period. Obviously this is what some hon. members seem to think. They seem to think that hon. members may take up any grievance, justified or otherwise, which they may have against the government or against the administration, and discuss it thoroughly in connection with the motion before the house. I feel that there must be some relation between the matters raised by hon. members and the motion before the house, which is a motion for adjournment. I assume that the hon. member for York-Humber will wish to establish this relationship because, otherwise I think we shall be severely infringing against the rule of relevancy.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the decision of the Ontario Municipal Board which will show you how relevant this matter is to the motion for adjournment, and perhaps you will allow me to read the second and third paragraphs of this decision. The house has before it a motion to adjourn until September 25. This decision was given by the Ontario Municipal Board on Tuesday, June 27. The typewritten copy of the formal decision is dated June 30 and reads:

With respect to these lands—

The illegal fill in Lake Ontario.

—the board feels that due to special circumstances affecting them that there ought to be further study made and the board will therefore reserve its decision until such time as evidence is adduced as to the results of such further studies, or in the alternative until such time as application is made to this board for final disposition by any interested party. The board wishes to state that an application for final approval with respect to the remainder of the bylaw may be made at any time prior to the one year period, upon proper notice according to directions to be given by the board.

I read this to you for the simple reason that I was present at the hearings on Monday and Tuesday, June 26 and 27, and it is quite possible that an application will be made to the Ontario Municipal Board for the right to erect apartment houses on Lake Ontario while this house is in adjournment. I maintain that the cabinet must take this matter under advisement and give it consideration right away—not next October, next November or next December, by which time the proposed structures may be half up.

With regard to this matter and the gale of laughter that swept the house on the part of the unthinking, I would point out that on June 22 when I was speaking in the house during private members' hour the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), in his paternalistic manner toward backbenchers or private members, pointed out that I was again riding one or two of my hobbyhorses that I ride from time to time. I would not have to trot out these hobbyhorses if the cabinet would take action on the matters that I bring to their attention. I am now bringing up the matter of illegal fill again because of this decision of the Ontario Municipal Board of June 27, the date on which it was rendered, which decision could be appealed during the adjournment period.

This filling in of Lake Ontario is not a matter that is peculiar to the riding of York-Humber or the riding of York West which is represented by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), an able, capable and good representative of that area. This sort of thing applies to the entire Dominion of Canada. I speak of this matter of illegal fill in Lake Ontario because the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) has not taken action under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I get telephone calls, personal notes and letters from all over Canada on this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I ask the hon. member to be relevant to the motion before the house.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Cowan: With regard to relevancy, may I point out that the former village of Long Branch, which was absorbed as a part of Etobicoke as of January 1 of this year, granted permission to Millgate Park Investments Limited to erect an 18-storey apartment house on illegal fill south of the lakeshore of the township of Etobicoke in 1965 and 1966. Whether or not the granting of the right to erect an 18-storey apartment house on that illegal fill will be recognized by the borough of Etobicoke is, I suppose, a matter for the courts, because the village of Long Branch granted the right to build in what is now Etobicoke. It is now a question whether the developers will go ahead and begin to build during the summer months when it is proposed that this house will be in adjournment.

I have brought up this question on numerous occasions, pointing out, first of all, the illegality of the filling. The Navigable Waters Protection Act covers the matter 100 per cent. On more than one occasion I have referred to the fact that there is a lawyer in the case by the name of James F. McCallum who might be seen performing for his clients at public meetings, before the Long Branch council and in other places where these matters were being discussed. At page 3371—

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member is looking for the page perhaps I might remind him again that he does have to show some consideration for the rules of the house which require that discussion should be relevant to the motion before us. The hon. member says he is addressing himself to the question, which is the adjournment of the House of Commons. It seems to me that very little of what the hon. member has said until now bears any relation whatever to that motion. I would ask for his usual co-operation in bringing his remarks within the rules.

Mr. Cowan: I suppose it would be considered easier by the cabinet to order the steel spider for an apartment house taken down next October after the house resumes than to take action now to stop this development.

I was about to refer to the statement made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) on March 29, 1966, a year and four months ago, which can be found on page 3371 of Hansard:

> The explanation given by the minister to the question raised by the member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is rather confused.
> The member mentioned earlier the name of a lawyer, Mr. James F. McCallum, who is greatly interested in this fill in Lake Ontario, in the Mimico area or on the other side, in Long Branch. When we asked the member for York-Humber whether Mr. McCallum had any associates to help him in his transactions there, he said he was not aware of it and that he did not know Mr. McCallum.
> However, I find that in the Canada Legal Directory, which contains the names of law firms or offices in Canada, under No. 123, appears the name of the law office "Cameron, Brewin, McCallum & Scott, 372 Bay Street". Now, I wonder whether Mr. A. J. P. Cameron could not add "M.P." to his name and whether Mr. F. A. Brewin would not also be a member of the New Democratic party, I do not think Mr. Scott is a member of parliament, nor Mr. Joseph Lemire either—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is continuing along lines which I suggested again a moment ago he has no right to follow. He has to be relevant. If the hon. member does not think that at this point he can be relevant to the motion before the house, we shall have to call on another member who will perhaps be able to do so.

Mr. Cowan: I want to ask the cabinet, before this vote is taken, whether any action is to be taken to stop this illegal fill in view of the fact that the Navigable Waters Protection Act gives authority for doing so and provides that plans for such a building as I have described must obtain prior consent before progress is made. This decision of the Ontario Municipal Board is current and relevant. Nothing has been done by the cabinet. No action has been taken for two and a half years.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants.

We are in favour of an increase but we are also for the settlement of all problems. There have been increases year after year and the more salaries and pensions are increased, the more unbalanced is the economy. And it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and his party, cannot find a solution to balance our economy. There certainly are ways of balancing an economy. The more we increase salaries and pensions the more we create difficulties in the nation, and the more it is difficult for families to live, and poverty is becoming more pronounced. There has never been any solution other than increasing salaries and pensions. For over 20 years the labour unions have been calling strikes to get higher salaries and pensions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am listening to the hon. member with great interest but a very specific motion is before the house. It deals with the adjournment of the house and I hope that eventually the hon. member will talk to that motion.

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of the adjournment of the house, we want to adjourn. What we have done since September, we could have done in three months, if we had worked like men, but we worked like school children. We have done almost nothing for the people, except to increase taxes. We have found no way to balance the economy of the country or to meet the aspirations of the people.

For instance, there has never been an opportunity to speak of family allowances; no means have been found to increase them nor to adjust them to the cost of living. The children need more than the federal civil servants who are paid adequately. Families are in trouble; they are being strangled by taxes; they can no longer afford to live. No solution is found.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should restrict his remarks to the motion now before the house.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

You have reminded several members that we were discussing an adjournment motion and that the discussion should be limited to the said motion. If we are considering a motion for the adjournment of the house, I feel that such a motion is not debatable and I wonder why it is being discussed. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I should like to elucidate my point of order.

What is before the house is not a simple motion for adjournment but a complex one comprising several other points, and that is why I suggest it is no longer an adjournment motion, but a motion designed to determine when the house will adjourn, when its sittings will be resumed and what measures will be discussed. It is therefore a rather complex motion which tends to broaden the scope of the debate since in the third line of the motion the following words appear:

—and to any other measures—

Therefore, this broadens the scope. That is why I feel you should allow the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot substitute his judgement for that of the Chair and I call his attention to the fact that standing order 25 to which he referred does not apply in the case of a substantive motion like the one now before the house.

Mr. Grégoire: That is what I am saying, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

[English]

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief since we are on a motion for adjournment. Like the other members, I am anxious to get home, to take holidays and to have the time to go around my riding to meet my electors. Indeed, I am convinced all the members are in the same situation and we surely want the house to adjourn.

Still, before so doing, I take it upon myself to point out that we have been unable to do many things. The government has not been able to get all its legislation passed because, as I said earlier, we wasted a great deal of time on many questions. The debate on some matters could have been much shorter, and the house is to blame, for we made no changes in the rules.

Therefore, I hope we can change the rules of the house in the future so that we may work in a more relaxed way, have shorter sessions, and find time to think of doing something for the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying earlier that we should have had time to discuss family allowances. The cost of living has increased fourfold since 1944 but the rate of family allowances has not been raised.

On the other hand, taxes have increased and, each time they are increased and each time the salaries are increased, sometimes as a result of strikes, the cost of living goes up. When the cost of living goes up, the currency is depreciated, and this drags down the entire economy of the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member goes off in a new direction, I would like to remind him that he should restrict his observations to the motion now before us.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, up to now, we have always observed the rules and I thank you for your observations. I will submit to your decision because we have heard many speeches and I shall not be long. I would have a number of remarks to make but since the rules must be observed, I shall cut them short. If we have not had the time to do all that should have been done, the motion of the New Democratic party must wait, as other things wait.

Therefore, let us wait, let us keep on going as we were before, let us keep on waiting and, during all that time, the people will manage as they can. As far as we are concerned, we still have the satisfaction, or the pleasure, to have done our duty at least during the session.

We have felt some after-effects, and we have followed the rules of the house. We have done all we could. I am glad to have done my duty, to have done only what was possible. I would have liked to do better yet and I think that all the members are in the same situation. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all the hon. members. If we have not done everything, at least we have done something, and we wish that the people will benefit therefrom as much as possible.

[English]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say to the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) that I listened with interest to what he said this morning—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I remember this morning's proceedings the minister has already taken part in this debate. Is he now rising on a point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was rising to tell the hon. member that I will see to it that the matter he raised is brought to the attention of the ministers concerned as quickly as possible.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just one or two comments on the motion now before the house. I would like to suggest that the discussion we have already had on it and on the amendment that was proposed evidenced very clearly the desirability and necessity of passing the motion. It seems to me that if we took a recess we would be in far better humour following our return to proceed with the business of the house and deal with it in a much better way.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that we all share the concern for superannuated civil servants. It is not limited to just a few members or to one or two parties. It is shared by all of us.

I had the opportunity of being a member of the committee to which reference has been made. I know there is keen disappointment at the fact that the committee's report has not been acted upon and legislation introduced to take care of this urgent problem. I think that today we have been engaged in an exercise in futility and that the time has come to make a decision on this motion.

I do not believe that the motion and the amendment proposed are the best way to deal with a situation like this. Many of us would have liked to add further qualifying phrases. For instance, we have been urging the absolute necessity of introducing legislation to deal with veterans' allowances, particularly the allowances to dependants of veterans. There are many categories of pensioners and I do not think it is wise to concentrate on one category and by this method try to force the government into action.

A few days ago we postponed until today debate on a most important matter, namely, the agreements reached in the Kennedy round of trade negotiations. Time is now running out and apparently that important matter is not going to receive too much attention today. While we are sympathetic to the objections which have been raised to an adjournment at this time, we believe it is urgently desirable that the motion should now pass. For that reason we intend to support it.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about this matter because I am concerned about the statement made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) this morning and about what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Both these ministers made it very clear that there had been no commitment made by the government that increases in retired civil servants' pensions would be implemented this year. From what they have said I wonder whether the government intends to implement this measure at any time. We all enjoy listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, particularly when he is referring to the leaders of political parties, because he knows what it is to think about becoming a leader. However, no one on the other side of the house has given any clear assurance that this matter will be dealt with in the fall, and the Minister of National Revenue was very careful to outline all the difficulties involved. I do not often speak on the question of pensions because my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite capable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has revealed his intention to speak on pensions. Let me suggest to him that the question now before the house is the motion for adjournment.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on the adjournment motion and the importance of discussing this matter before we adjourn today because I think—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: —it is important that we get some action on the part of the government or at least a specific commitment that there will be action. This matter has been raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) on several occasions. We have heard statements by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of National Revenue and the Secretary of State for External Affairs all indicating that they agree with this proposal. The house committee made a series of proposals in this regard and presented the house with a unanimous report.

The Minister of National Revenue indicated this morning that the legislation involved is very complicated. Let me inform him that I am concerned not about the complications but about a commitment by the minister and others that these retired civil servants will be looked after this year. There has been a great deal of talk about when and if this is going to happen, but the emphasis should be placed on the fact that this legislation should be brought forward as quickly as possible, with a provision making the increases retroactive. The implication of the statements made in the last few months—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must again interrupt the hon. member. He must realize that there are rules which must be followed, one of which is to the effect that speeches should be relevant to the question or subject before the house for discussion. The question now before the house is a motion for adjournment. The hon. member must realize that he cannot completely disregard this rule and the motion before the house for consideration at this time.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I was speaking in opposition to the adjournment motion. I was referring to what was said this morning by the house leader. I indicated my opposition by stating that I believe we should deal with the pension legislation referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We should have a specific commitment on the part of the government that this legislation will be brought forward when the house resumes and that it will be in such a form that the increases will be retroactive. I do not intend to take up much more time but I should like to indicate to the house—

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have many problems, as do many other hon. members, which I should like to raise on this occasion. It seems to me that the debate now taking place reopens the earlier debate on the proposed amendment. Although I may subscribe to the idea embodied in the proposed amendment, I do not feel that this debate should be completely open for the discussion of individual problems. I am sure if I raised the problem I am now thinking of your Honour would wonder how it could be related to the subject before us, which is the motion to adjourn.

I have restrained myself with some difficulty from presenting this problem to the house. I am sure that if I had risen and mentioned it you would have ruled me out of order. In all fairness to myself and other hon. members who would like to raise specific problems at this time, I think you should apply the rules to the hon. member and restrict him to the subject now before us.

Mr. Speaker: I am in full agreement with the hon. member for Mackenzie and feel that his point is well taken. That is why on a number of occasions today I have asked hon. members to relate their remarks to the motion now before us. There must be some order in the house and that is why we have our house rules. They do not allow hon. members to discuss grievances of the type that have been discussed by the hon. members for York-Humber, Compton-Frontenac, and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the limited subject of the motion now before the house.

Mr. Orlikow: I will take just another moment, Mr. Speaker, and I will restrict my remarks to the subject under debate. I should like to indicate to the Minister of National Revenue that there has been a strong rumour circulating in Ottawa, not just in this house, that he has sympathy for these retired civil servants but does not have the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to put forward the required legislation. For this reason we do not feel we should adjourn before the legislation has been brought forward or until an absolute commitment has been made. We all remember what happened in the case of medicare, and until the government gives some indication that it intends to go ahead with this legislation we do not feel that we should accept the statements made and adjourn.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope to stay within the confines of the rules in relation to relevancy to the terms of the subject matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must warn the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to say very much about the adjournment motion which has precipitated a great deal of discussion and concern, but I should like to say that the form in which the motion is worded is not in accordance with the usual motion to adjourn. It seems to be a very simple motion but it is worded in a way which is not in keeping with the usual motion for a recess.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I am told that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) consulted with his very learned colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and arrived at a motion that they felt was designed to obviate exactly what has happened today. It seems to me that this kind of machination of the rules for a specific purpose is not in our interest. Members of parliament may have made statements outside the house about what they were going to do, but it seems very foolish for the house, and it certainly makes Your Honour's position very difficult, if ministers, particularly those responsible for house business, arrive at a wording that is designed to eliminate a certain type of discussion but which in fact always has a reverse effect and promotes that kind of discussion. The type of wording used in this motion offers a challenge to those people who look at the situation as not being insurmountable.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this kind of motion and the way it is put before us. It is a modification of the guillotine. A motion put forward by the house leader should lead to the type of discussion that is required. In future the wording of a motion of this kind should be referred to a committee of the house to recommend a standard wording in respect of an adjournment or recess. It should recommend a form of wording which would eliminate this kind of discussion taking place. I think this would be of advantage to us and to you, Mr. Speaker, in that it would put Your Honour in a much better administrative position than is the case with a motion which is designed to do a specific thing and obviously does not do it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one or two comments about the procedural aspects of the motion and the terms of the motion itself. I intended to say a word or two about the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has unfortunately been called out of the house. Perhaps I will have an opportunity to say something in his presence before completing my remarks.

The motion before the house provides essentially for two things. One is that the adjournment will continue until September 25, 1967, at 2.30 o'clock p.m. This aspect, the timing of the resumption of the session, was discussed through the usual channels and there has been no disagreement about this. There has been some suggestion that the house has been kept in the dark with respect to the adjournment itself. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who has just resumed his seat, suggested that some machinations are at the root of this motion. That, of course, is absolutely false. It is absolutely false because on Monday, June 26, 1967, I outlined to the house the program we had in mind. After having outlined the program I said:

> With that program in mind we would hope to adjourn the house on Friday, July 7, unless it were necessary to remain for the following day to secure royal assent. If it is not, we will conclude this part of the session on that Friday.

That is to say, if it was not necessary to remain over until the following day, which would be Saturday, we would conclude this part of the session on Friday, July 7, which is today. So as early as Monday, June 26, the house was served with clear notice that it was the intention of the government to bring this part of the session to a close on that day. I pointed out that we would conclude this part of the session today if it were possible to secure royal assent. That is still the intention.

We must keep in mind that the supply bills passed last night have gone to the other place. The other place is meeting at three o'clock and must have an opportunity to deal with those supply bills. As soon as the other place completes its consideration of the supply bills we will be in a position to secure royal assent.

The purpose of the motion, contrary to the misstatement made by the hon. member for Timiskaming, was merely to take into account the fact that no one could foresee when the other place would complete consideration of the supply bills and when it would be possible to obtain royal assent.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Peters: I have no disagreement with the second part of the proposition put by the minister, that is, that the house was to stand adjourned until September 25 and so on. This is the normal procedure. However, is it not true that the first part of the motion would not apply and could not apply to any other circumstance than the one facing us at this time? It would not have applied the last time we recessed and even leaving out the date it would not have applied to any other circumstance.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the work of the session had advanced to the point where it was possible to forecast the circumstances in which royal assent might be forthcoming. If the other place deals with the supply bills royal assent, if it is possible, will be given at 5.15 or 5.30. If the other place continues to discuss the supply bills and that discussion is not completed until later this evening, we will have royal assent at that time or tomorrow, as was indicated on June 26. That is why the motion was phrased in this way. It was in order to take into account the time, possibly prolonged, that might be taken by the other place in dealing with the supply bills.

There is nothing sinister about the motion at all. It is simple. The reason we put this motion on the order paper was so that the house would have an opportunity to deal with it in the regular way, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had served notice that he would use every possible method to hold up the adjournment of the house.

If I had come into the house later today and asked for unanimous consent to present an adjournment motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would have been able to veto the desire of most hon. members to adjourn today by withholding unanimous consent. Undoubtedly that is what he would have done.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not clear, then, that this special, unique motion was drafted in such a way as to prevent me from insisting that the house deal with the matter of increased pensions for retired civil servants?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of this motion was to give an opportunity to the house to deal with this matter based on an understanding that had been reached by members of the house that we would complete a certain amount of legislative business and the discussion of the main estimates of a certain number of departments. When these estimates had been translated into supply bills it was agreed that we would pass interim supply, after having dealt with so much legislation, and would wind up the session today. That was the understanding.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister another question?

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Knowles: Then I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. McIlraith: Don't abuse the rules.

Mr. Knowles: My question of privilege is that every time there was any understanding at a meeting of the house leaders about the ending of the session, it was agreed by all of us that we would wind up the business of supply last night. But any understanding about adjourning today was always clearly stated to be without prejudice to my right to insist that we stay to deal with the question of the pensions of retired civil servants.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has of course illustrated the impasse in which he has placed the House of Commons. Some weeks ago the hon. member for Timiskaming appealed to me as house leader to state clearly what the program of the government was. I stated it clearly in the house and elsewhere as required. I have been asked by ministers on this side of the house to add further items of legislation which they regard as important and which they thought should be passed before the house adjourned. But from the beginning I have adhered strictly to the understanding that I would add nothing further to the list of items that would be dealt with before the house adjourned. Hon. members opposite understand that, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre feels that he occupies a special place in the house and enjoys a special status and that at the opportune moment, after he has chosen his timing very carefully, he can say "The house will not adjourn until my special interest is satisfied". He served notice earlier this week that he would frustrate adjournment and he has done so today and thus placed the house in a totally absurd position.

We have before us a simple adjournment motion indicating the time at which we will adjourn, depending upon the securing of royal assent, and indicating the time for the resumption of the session. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows full well that on an adjournment motion of this kind it is totally improper to debate issues of substance.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has led the house into an absurd situation because, first of all, he forced us to deal on an adjournment motion with the substantive issue of pensions for civil servants. Then the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) felt it appropriate, and justly so, to raise the question of the illegal filling of Lake Ontario. He was followed by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) who rose to tell us that the financial system of Canada should be changed. All of these matters were to be settled before we adjourn the house. Then the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) said quite properly, "I have other grievances and other matters to raise on the floor of the house. Surely I should have an opportunity to do so before we adjourn." That is the situation.

There is no admission or statement by the government that every grievance is satisfied or that every claim on the government is fulfilled. All we have before us is a simple adjournment motion. I am surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is an acknowledged authority on the rules of the house, would take this misguided course of action.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. MacEachen: By taking this course of action today he has obviously put the house in the absurd position that on a simple adjournment motion it is possible to ask that the financial system of Canada be reformed before we adjourn the house.

We talk about the image of parliament. Everybody makes wonderful speeches about it. Well, the Canadian people must have received a wonderful impression of parliament today. The responsibility for creating such an impression lies on the doorstep of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who decided, after the procedure under which we would adjourn had been clearly understood, that he would place before the house his special problem and project. I assume the hon. member is sincerely dedicated to this proposition, but I think his dedication is misguided and his action today has been irresponsible. It has created a very bad impression because the people of Canada may think that we cannot even get the house adjourned, we cannot carry out our own business efficiently and successfully, without getting into a wrangle and in this case over a simple adjournment motion.

His Honour the Speaker has ruled already on the irrelevancy of the debate. If this discussion were relevant the amendment would have been in order. However, it was declared out of order. Following that the Speaker has been on his feet trying to get the house to come to some sense of sanity and deal with the simple motion before it. The only plea I make is that we return to sanity and deal with this motion on the clear understanding that the problem about which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre feels so strongly can be debated when we resume in the fall. If we take the view that the house is not in a position to adjourn until every last grievance is satisfied, then let us decide today to have continuous sittings of the House of Commons from the beginning of the year until the end.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: I want to conclude by making a remark about the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). This will be a very friendly remark so I want him to relax.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never have to relax for any kind of remark.

Mr. MacEachen: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has often asked me from that side of the house to take the house into my confidence. I regret that the Leader of the Opposition has not taken the house into his confidence and told us whether he will be occupying his seat when we resume on September 25. For my own part I sincerely hope he will be sitting in that seat when we return in September because parliament would really not be the same without his presence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Was that a grievance?

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to answer questions?

Mr. MacEachen: One question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: My question to the minister is this: Is it not a fact that we are having this debate today and that we are engaging in what the minister calls "this wrangle" not because of one individual grievance but because the government has failed to keep its promise to our retired civil servants?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, at no time did the government make a commitment to deal with this matter before the summer adjournment.

Mr. Knowles: That is all the more reason why we should not adjourn.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Peters: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I listened very carefully when the minister indicated that I had argued on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that the rules have been fractured enough today and that we should try to respect them to some extent at this point. If the hon. member has a question of privilege it should be a valid one, not simply a reopening of the debate which should be closed by the minister's statement.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, my point of personal privilege is based on the minister's supposition that I argued on a false premise.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Churchill: That is a debating point.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Let hon. members over there keep quiet and we will get through more quickly.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have no difference of opinion with the minister on the other remarks he made. However, he concluded that I was falsely informed or proceeded on a false premise when I said that the form of this motion lent itself to the abuse which has occurred. I believe this is true. The minister has said that there has to be royal assent for the supply bills that were presented and that no additional bills could be presented unless they were followed by another supply bill. My point was—

An hon. Member: There is no point of privilege.

Mr. Peters: Well, I feel I have a point of privilege whether or not the members on the other side do. Originally the point of this motion was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should state his question of privilege. Up until this moment he has given no indication whatever that he has a legitimate question of privilege.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that the premise I used as the basis for my remarks that the motion had nothing to do with the problem was false. It was not false. The whole argument has flowed from the wording of that part of the motion which reads:

> —royal assent to the supply bills referred to in paragraph (5) of the special order made Monday, June 26, 1967, and to any other measures—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. This is a point of debate. The hon. member intends to argue with the interpretation placed on his remarks by the minister, and if I allowed the hon. member to make his statement then members on the other side could get up on a question of privilege to disagree with the interpretation placed by the hon. member on the minister's interpretation of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. We could go on for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

The house divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DESTRUCTION OF CRIMINAL RECORDS

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-148, to amend the Criminal Code (destruction of criminal records).

An hon. Member: No explanation needed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RESTRICTION ON PUBLICATION OF PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-149, to amend the Criminal Code (restriction on publication of proceedings).

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is also to facilitate the rehabilitation of those who have served sentences in our penitentiaries. A similar bill is being considered in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, and I understand that it is a government bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

UNITED NATIONS

USE OF CANADIAN FORCE IN CONGO OR GAZA STRIP

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether or not there has been any suggestion from the United Nations that Canada's mobile force be made available in the Congo. If not, has there been any offer on the part of Canada to make the force available in the Gaza strip or those areas between Egypt and Israel, and Jordan and Israel?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the situation in the Congo, there is no proposal before the United Nations for a United Nations presence which would call for the contribution of military forces from countries such as Canada where preparations have been made in anticipation of such circumstances. If the United Nations is faced with such a situation, Canada will of course, pursuant to its obligations under the charter, give the matter the consideration which is habitually given to such situations by the government.

With regard to the situation in the Gaza strip, there is no proposal now for the establishment of a new United Nations presence there. One body is already in existence between Israel and Syria and Jordan; the United Nations truce and supervisory organization on which Canada is represented by some 22 officers. It is thought that this body can serve to carry out the necessary function of observation, and help to make a cease fire effective and ultimately, it may be, to assume other obligations which have yet to be extended to it by the security council.

RHODESIA—EFFECTIVENESS OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question with respect to the situation in Rhodesia? In view of the statements which have recently been made by the prime minister of Great Britain with regard to the situation in Rhodesia and the degree of effectiveness of economic sanctions, may I ask the hon. gentleman (1) whether the Canadian government is reviewing the effectiveness of these sanctions, and (2) whether the Canadian government intends to advance any proposals, either in the security council or at the United Nations assembly, for tightening up economic sanctions in order that they may prove more effective?

[Mr. Lachance.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, Canada has fully subscribed to the requirements of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the security council a few months ago. Canada is not in a position by itself to assess the effectiveness of these sanctions. The Secretary General will be making a report to the security council soon on the sanctions and then, when this report is before the security council the UN member states, including Canada, will be in a position to determine whether or not additional economic sanctions are necessary. However, it is noteworthy, as my hon. friend has just indicated, that the recent statement by Mr. Smith shows that the sanctions are having effect.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question with regard to sanctions in Rhodesia. Is it the purpose of the Canadian government through the imposition of sanctions to create serious economic distress in Rhodesia and vast unemployment?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend knows that the purpose for which Britain and all commonwealth countries, and most other countries in the world, have agreed to the mandatory sanctions program of the United Nations is because they wish to bring down a government that has exercised a form of discrimination which in this day and age simply cannot be tolerated by the international community.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask one other supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to take similar action against various governments in the countries of the world that have been established by revolution and military dictatorship, and are therefore illegal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend knows that on the orders of the day such a sweeping question could only bring a sweeping answer in an exchange that would be of little practical meaning.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY OF CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the explosive situation that exists in the Congo I ask the minister are there any Canadians in the danger areas and, if so, what steps are being taken to protect them?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the dangerous area, around the community of Kisangani, which is the old Stanleyville, there are in all about 20 Canadians. I believe that these, together with citizens of the United Kingdom and other countries, are not in immediate danger but steps have been taken for their security.

TELEVISION

TRANSFER OF CHANNEL FROM BARRIE TO TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will he assure the house that in any action to approve the application of channel 3 for its licence he will have cabinet approval?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I would be permitted to say that, if rumours are true, this may be the last day's attendance by the hon. gentleman in this chamber and he, apart from some of his partisan activities, is a very popular member of the house. I will not go so far as to say we wish him well in any new endeavours, but I know that from a personal standpoint, so far as his health, wealth and happiness are concerned, we would all wish him very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may add that in connection with many of the arrangements that had to be made, when I had the honour to be the leader of the house when this government was first formed, I always found the hon. gentleman, although he pushed the interests of his party just as far as he possibly could, to be really co-operative, as a good whip should be.

Having said that, sir, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will endeavour, as I always do, to comply with the law made by this parliament.

Mr. Winkler: Before directing a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I wish to acknowledge the good wishes of my hon. friend, and I can assure him I could never depend on his support for what I have in mind for my future. I might add that I had a sensible, responsible farewell speech prepared, but in the light of what has occurred earlier today I wish to say I agree with some hon. members who said that the Canadian people may have reason to be disgusted, particularly with some of the people on my left.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: With reference to the minister's reply regarding channel 3, I would simply ask him whether he will meet the very unique protests made by some of his backbenchers, and some of his front benchers, which have been in line with what I have requested, because I do not believe—and I say this frankly and directly—that approval of this application will be in the best interests of television.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, is making a representation at the moment and not asking a supplementary question.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. I understand that the minister has the prerogative in approving the transfer. Will he give the house an assurance that he will not, alone and unguided, make the decision but seek the views of the cabinet before making it?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this is the same question that was asked previously by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Possibly I could ask this question of the minister, Mr. Speaker. Was it brought to his attention at any time that Mr. Snelgrove and those connected with him during the 1965 election, when Mr. Snelgrove took such an active part for the Liberal party here in Ottawa, boasted they were going to bring about the achievement of having this television station transferred from Barrie to Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is in order.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a further supplementary question, I would ask the Minister of Transport if it is a fact that one of the board of directors, not having sat in on any of the hearings, attended the final meeting, voted in favour of it, and at that time the chairman of the board was not even aware of the fact that he was a newly appointed member of the board, and did not find out until the coffee break?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That would be nothing abnormal for this government.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. It arises out of a report on the C.B.C. screen yesterday of a sale that took place at Christie's, the famous art and antique sales market in London, of a chart drawn by Captain James Cook of the St. Lawrence river, including the area adjacent to Quebec, a chart actually used by General Wolfe in the assault on Quebec. Surprise was expressed in London that there had been no attempt on the part of the Canadian government or any Canadian body to seize the opportunity to obtain this historic chart. My question is this: Did the Canadian High Commissioner in London inform the government of this opportunity to acquire in centennial year a priceless piece of Canadiana for the National Archives? I might add that the bidding did not reach the owner's reserve price.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your Honour did not give the Secretary of State an opportunity to answer the legitimate question I asked, and apparently she was prepared to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The member knows that the minister did not rise to answer the question. There was no attempt on my part to prevent the minister from answering.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REDESIGNING AND RESCHEDULING OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, since the house will not be sitting again for some time perhaps I may be permitted to ask the Minister of Public Works a rather general question. Has the government yet come to a final decision with regard to a redesigned crossing to be built to Prince Edward Island across Northumberland strait, and has any decision been made respecting the schedule of construction? If the answer is no, and I expect it to be, could the minister give some indication of when he hopes such a decision to be arrived at by the government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first two questions is no. In respect of the time of the proposed redesign and modifications now in the hands of the consultant, I cannot give an accurate estimate. I doubt very much that this will be placed before parliament until after it resumes. As the hon. member knows, I did indicate to the committee which considered these estimates that there would be an opportunity to discuss the matter when this information is available for study.

TRANSPORTATION

NOTIFICATION OF HEARINGS ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. When the transport commission holds its hearings in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan, will members of parliament, members of the provincial governments, representatives of the municipalities and others interested in rail line abandonment be notified of the dates and places of the hearings?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, according to the notice I received, the Board of Transport Commissioners has arranged a conference to be held in Winnipeg on August 8. I suggest that anyone who wishes to participate in or attend this conference should get in touch with the secretary of the board to ascertain its procedures. I am afraid I do not know now what they are, but I am sure the secretary would reply very promptly to any inquiry.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the conference to be held on August 8 in Winnipeg, will the results of the special technical surveys being done on certain branch lines be available to interested parties before that meeting?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a result of a notice I received, I assume that what is to be discussed is not the abandonment of any specific line, but rather the general procedures to be followed in dealing with the applications. For that reason I should not think the results of any study would be relevant to the purposes of the conference.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a further supplementary question. Will the results of the studies be made available to interested parties as they are completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure any information in the possession of the board or under my control as Minister of Transport which is relevant to the conference will be made available.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question which is related, or could be construed as supplementary. Will the minister put some teeth in the guarantee in respect of certain branch lines, which will assure the replacement of the bridge which was destroyed at Chelan, Saskatchewan, in order to provide service as it was prior to the destruction?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have already taken this matter up with the officials of the Canadian National Railways. As the hon. member suggested, this particular line is a guaranteed line. I assume the Board of Transport Commissioners will have certain jurisdiction in respect of this matter, although it is hazardous for a minister to make statements which probably constitute a legal opinion. In any case I have drawn this matter to the attention of the board.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie, is the minister aware, as I am sure he is, of the serious situation in which the people along this line find themselves as a result of the fire which destroyed the bridge on May 16?

I need not bring to the minister's attention the fact that this loss of transportation facilities to outside areas has resulted in complete stultification. While the minister does not have the authority to direct, will he bring to the attention of the officials of the Canadian National Railways the imperative necessity of transportation through this area, and the fact that there has been a long delay in this regard?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be happy to bring the words of the right hon. gentleman to the attention of the railway officials, and I am sure they will be much more effective than anything I might say.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a further supplementary question. Can the minister give us some assurance that the transport commission will be duly appointed in such a way that representations can be made to an authority which will have greater power than the present board of transportation commissioners?

Mr. Pickersgill: Since parliament decided the Canadian Transport Commission should be established, it is not difficult for me to give an assurance that it will be established. I cannot give a concrete date in respect of this establishment, but I hope it will be early in September.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CLARKE CITY, P.Q.—REHIRING OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but in his absence, I shall put it to his parliamentary assistant.

It has to do with a Canadian Press release, under date of July 5, announcing the closing down, at Clarke City, of the Gulf Pulp & Paper pulp mill which had been in operation for 60 years, and the lay-off of its 200 permanent employees. I should like to know from the minister whether arrangements have been or will be made to transfer or place those workers in other industries, preferably in the mining industry of that very region?

[English]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the facilities of the Canadian manpower centre have been made available to assist in replacing and retraining the displaced workers at this plant.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSAL THAT PROCEEDINGS BE TELEVISED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister about the expressed desire on the part of the C.B.C. to film parts of parliamentary procedure as a special centennial project. In view of the fact that all opposition parties have agreed to this suggestion, and in view of the fact the C.B.C. will need some time to make plans, can the government give us some definite indication that it will be agreeable to this project?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already indicated his views in respect of this matter. Whether those views will represent a final decision, I cannot say. I will direct the hon. member's question to the Prime Minister. I can say that this matter is one which the Prime Minister has had under consideration.

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED MOVE OF DEPARTMENTAL STAFF FROM NORTH BAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I addressed a question yesterday to the Minister of Public Works regarding employees presently employed by this department at North Bay. The minister said in response that he would make a reply today in greater detail. Is he prepared to do so now?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked whether a decision had been made to move the Department of Public Works staff from North Bay to Sudbury. The answer to that question is no, there has been no such decision taken. Perhaps I should add, to assuage any doubts that may be in the hon. member's mind or the minds of those involved, that formerly the North Bay office of the Department of Public Works was required to report to the district office in Toronto. We are creating a new district office in Sault Ste. Marie in relation to a certain portion of northern Ontario, and the North Bay office in future, along with the Port Arthur office, will be required to report to that new district office. It may in its working out involve some changes in personnel, but there is no intention to close the North Bay office.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DECISION TO REMOVE COMMISSION OFFICE FROM NORTH BAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I realize that yesterday I asked a question that would normally be ruled out of order, but because this part of the session is about to conclude Your Honour allowed it. I asked a question in respect of the Unemployment Insurance Commission office at North Bay being closed and removed to Sudbury, affecting some 26 employees. The Minister of Labour was not in the house and no minister indicated that he was acting as minister of labour in respect of this matter. I wondered whether anyone took notice of my question and has an answer today. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare acting as minister of labour?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I took note of the question yesterday, but unfortunately I have not received information in a form to give to the hon. member. I will obtain the information and make sure that he receives it at the earliest possible moment.

AIRPORTS

LATE ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE OF JET AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Goyer (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Does he intend to enforce at Dorval airport during the summer, the regulations forbidding take-offs and landings after midnight which disturb the sleep of the inhabitants of that area and in particular those of Ville Saint-Laurent?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not only the hon. gentleman's constituents who would like to be allowed to sleep in peace. About once a month I get a telephone call at about three o'clock in the morning from some irate person in the hon. gentleman's constituency asking why jets are allowed to land at Dorval after midnight. I do not like having my sleep disturbed any more than the people there do.

A very serious effort is being made to prevent, to the greatest possible extent, these landings and takings-off after midnight. There have been a large number of landings and takings-off recently because of the inordinately large amount of air traffic. It is difficult not to allow planes to land if they have been delayed, and if they land and we say they cannot take off until morning we would have a great many irate passengers who are not able to continue on to their destinations.

It is a very complicated problem to solve. We are doing everything we can to keep it down to the minimum. However, it does not seem very advisable this year to detain planes as a punishment, because I am afraid those who would be punished would not be the air lines but the passengers, whose reservations would thereby have no validity.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I might make an observation in regard to the statement made by the Minister of Transport, it is a terrible thing for a minister of this government to be awakened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AIR TRANSPORT

STEPS TO DEAL WITH RESERVATIONS NOT PICKED UP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) about "no shows" on Air Canada. Up to now they have not thought they could take advantage of my advice as to how to run the air line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: My feelings are not unduly hurt on that account. However, Air Canada have instituted a system of telephoning a few hours before the flight, everyone who has a reservation. In that way they are getting a great many cancellations that apparently people would not make on their own. I understand they are still giving consideration to the other possibility which I suggested, but there are some very serious difficulties in putting it into operation.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—PROTEST AGAINST HEAVY IMPORTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the mass importation of eggs, which is creating disastrous conditions for the farmers, would the minister not have an announcement to make as to a policy that could take care of this severe disadvantage for the agricultural class?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not feel this is a supplementary question.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase in a more precise way the question I directed a while ago to the minister.

Is the government willing to announce a policy concerning the purchase of eggs, since the agricultural class is suffering from a mass importation of eggs?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Agricultural Stabilization Board is going to announce an egg purchasing policy today.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—REACTION OF ISRAEL TO RESOLUTION RESPECTING JERUSALEM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what communications have been made by Canada directly to Israel or through our ambassador in respect of the resolution passed by the United Nations, for which Canada voted. This resolution provides that Israel shall desist from its action in annexing Old Jerusalem. What is the reaction of Israel to the resolution that was passed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, immediately prior to the general assembly vote I had a discussion about this matter with the ambassador of Israel in Ottawa. The foreign minister of Israel had a meeting recently with the secretary general, and Mr. Eban I think today or late last night announced that his government would be making a statement about the matter some time toward the middle of next week, when it is expected that the general assembly will be resuming its session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister another question in connection with the refugees. Has Canada made any offer, directly or indirectly, to the United Nations, to any of the Arab states or to Israel as to the number of refugees Canada would be prepared to absorb if they were able to come to this country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not possible for me to go beyond the statement made in that connection by the Prime Minister about ten days ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: There has been no change?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

HONOURS AND AWARDS

CANADA MEDAL—REASON FOR PRODUCTION IN ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure to whom I should direct this question, but the Secretary of State looks her usual courteous and capable self so I will direct it to her. In view of the fact that we have master craftsmen at the Royal Canadian Mint whose work, I am sure we all agree, is unexcelled, why is the Order of Canada medal being produced by Garrard's of London, England, and not by the Royal Canadian Mint?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I did not know it was being produced by them, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be happy to find out what the position is. It may be some time before I can give the hon. member an answer here so I may mail it.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I trust his answer will be such that I will not be asking questions on the subject when we return later this year. I should like to ask the minister how he is coming along with establishing the base line co-ordinates under the Fishing Zones and Territorial Seas Act.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to make an announcement earlier than this. I am not in a position to do so. I hope I will be able to make an announcement before I next see the hon. gentleman.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—EMERGENCY MEASURES TO PROVIDE FORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of hon. members from the province of Saskatchewan. In view of the serious drought situation that has developed in several large areas of western Canada in the past several weeks, has the minister had any communication with Hon. Ross Thatcher, premier of Saskatchewan, with a view to setting up emergency measures to provide forage to maintain basic cattle herds? I might say that most of Saskatchewan has had approximately half an inch of rain since May 1.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the premier of Saskatchewan attended here, I think the day before yesterday, and communicated those thoughts to me. He indicated that he would be keeping us apprised of the seriousness of the situation and whether in his opinion an emergency program was needed.

DIVORCE

POSSIBLE ACTION ON REPORT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any intentions with respect to the report on divorce which was filed in this house on June 27, and would he tell the house whether he will introduce in the fall legislation on that report?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, since the committee's well researched and well thought out report was tabled, officials of my department and myself have been considering it.

It is my hope that in the near future I will be able to make suggestions to the cabinet with regard to legislation, and it is my expectation there will be legislation on this matter in the fall.

TRADE

POSSIBLE LOSS OF CANADIAN PREFERENCE IN U.K. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is based on a report that the United Kingdom may dump Canadian safeguards in a headlong dash to enter the common market. In view of the assurances given by the prime minister of Britain that continuous and close negotiations will be carried on with commonwealth countries in this connection, has the government received any indication from the British prime minister that Canadian interests might be jettisoned if such a course would facilitate the entry of Britain into the common market?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could be permitted to answer that question. Liaison committees have been set up in accordance with the agreement reached at the ministerial conference, and last week or the week before members of the Department of Trade and Commerce, supported by other departmental people on the site in London, did have a conference with their opposite numbers in London at which there was no mention of jettisoning.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he now in a position to make an announcement in respect of the appointment of the chairman and vice president to the board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, not yet.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE MODIFICATION OF ANNOUNCED POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, who is well aware of the representations made during the past months by leaders in agriculture regarding the agricultural policy of this government. Can the minister inform me whether announcements will be made in the near future regarding a modification of the government's agricultural policy, or will we have to wait for legislation to be introduced in the fall session?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we are appointing a task force to review long term goals and objectives in agriculture, and we hope to announce very shortly the appointment of the personnel of that task force which will work in close conjunction with the government. This will not be a commission that conducts its own deliberations and then reports in a year or two. If any of their recommendations require legislation, of course it will be introduced and brought forward in the normal way. Apart from that, the government will continue to review the needs of the agricultural community and to bring forth any legislation or other direction which is needed to keep Canadian agriculture in the forefront.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member rises on a point of order I wonder whether the house would be willing to hear the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac who has a question. I may say that I have allowed the question period to go over the allotted time.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the fact that family allowance rates have not been increased since 1944, does the minister intend to make a statement in this respect for the future?

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the problem of family allowances was raised some time ago at a federal-provincial conference and was discussed there. Since then the department has been considering the structure of family allowances with a view, at some future time, to making recommendations to the government. However, there is no intention to introduce any measures in the house in the foreseeable future.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, one last question to the Minister of Agriculture, whom I wish sincerely to congratulate as one of those who are doing the most for farmers since he has assumed his functions, and my opinion is shared by the farmers.

The question I should like to put to the minister follows upon a statement made yesterday by one of the advisers of the Canadian Dairy Commission before the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development suggesting the possibility of a change in quotas in the implementation of the dairy policy. Will this change be announced shortly?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the dairy commission announced two or three weeks ago that it was authorized to modify the quotas and I think that the commission is giving new quotas every day to dairy producers. In fact, I hope it will continue to make these changes and give the producers the quotas they desire.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I realize it is the intention of the house to proceed to the consideration of the first item in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. However, if there is agreement in the house, I suggest we now suspend sitting until we are called to the other place.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this sitting be suspended until the call of the Chair, which will be signified by the ringing of the bell?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATION FROM BOTSWANA

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is to be a suggestion that we revert to motions, but before I recognize the member who wants to make this motion perhaps I might be allowed to bring to the attention of the house a letter I have received from the Speaker of the Botswana National Assembly. It reads as follows:

On behalf of the National Assembly of Botswana I desire to send to you and through you to the Canadian House of Commons the very sincere congratulations of this Assembly on the occasion of Canada's centenary. We are still only one year old and we derive inspiration and hope for our future from the progress made by countries such as yours which have in so short a history become world leaders.

May God continue to guide and bless your parliament and country.

Yours sincerely,
A. M. Merriweather.
Speaker, Botswana National Assembly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since we are adjourning until September 25 in a few minutes and as several members would like answers to questions they placed on the order paper, with the unanimous consent of the house, we would be ready to provide answers to 24 questions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: 20, 51, 127, 164, 193, 198, 200, 218, 231, 233, 245, 246, 270, 288, 290, 297, 300 and 318.

If questions Nos. 86, 187, 208, 222, 241 and 265 could be made orders for returns, such returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, sir, that the remaining 73 questions be allowed to stand.

CANADIAN LAW REFORM COMMISSION

Question No. 20—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the government received any representations from (a) the Canadian Bar Association (b) other organizations or persons, advocating the establishment of a Canadian law reform commission?

2. If so, what consideration has been given to such representations?

3. If the answer to part 1 (b) is yes, from what organizations or persons?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. The government has received representations on this matter from the Canadian Bar Association, based on a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association (1966). Other representations have also been made.

2. The problems involved in establishing a Canadian law reform commission have been under study in the Department of Justice, but to date no formal recommendation has been made to the government.

3. Formal representations advocating the establishment of a national legal research institute, the functions of which might be comparable to those of a Canadian law reform commission, have been received from the faculty of law of the University of Saskatchewan.

RAINMAKING EXPERIMENTS

Question No. 51—Mr. Laprise:

1. During the year 1966, did the government carry out any experiments, anywhere in Canada, on land or in the air, in order to produce rainfall and, if so, where did these experiments take place and what were the results?

2. During the year 1966, to the knowledge of the government, did any private enterprise carry out any research, on land or in the air, in order to produce rainfall?

3. During the year 1967, does the government propose to carry out or allow any private enterprise to carry out any experiments, on land or in the air, in order to produce rainfall?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. No.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

2. Informal advice has been received to the effect that private firms carried out experimentation in this connection during 1966 in the provinces of Alberta and Nova Scotia.

3. No governmental projects are planned.

INDIAN BENEFITS FROM CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 127—Mr. Dinsdale:

Do the Indians who live and work on reserves benefit from the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): An Indian who lives on a reserve benefits under the Canada Pension Plan: (a) from earnings received for work performed off the reserve, and (b) provided he is a contributor to the public service superannuation fund, from earnings received for work performed on the reserve as a federal public servant.

An Indian who lives off a reserve benefits from work performed either on or off the reserve.

CANDIDATES' REPORTS ON ELECTION EXPENSES

Question No. 164—Mr. Godin:

Have any candidates produced reports since the date on which the Chief Electoral Officer's report on electoral expenses appeared and, if so, what are their names?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: As far as can be ascertained the following candidates have filed with their respective returning officers their return of election expenses subsequent to the date on which the Chief Electoral Officer submitted his report in that regard.

As required by the Canada Elections Act, each report was accompanied by a judge's order. Fred Stevenson, Peterborough; Ken Binks, Russell; H. D. P. Logan, Victoria, Ont.; Val Scott, York Centre; Edward G. Phillips, York-Scarborough; Paul Labrie, Lapointe; Raymond Doré, Lévis; G. B. Alex, Hutchison, Saint-Antoine-Westmount; Robert J. Butler, Halifax; John E. Lloyd, Halifax; Harold W. Parsons, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador; Robert Taft, Winnipeg North; Ron Allen, Bow River.

PENSION OF C.B.C. PRESIDENT

Question No. 193—Mr. Ormiston:

1. Is the pension of the president of the C.B.C. approved by the board of directors of the C.B.C.?

2. Is the pension of the president of the C.B.C. authorized by statute?

3. What is the formula for determining the pension benefits of a president of the C.B.C.?

4. Are the pension benefits of a president of the C.B.C. at retirement normally greater than those pension benefits which accrue to a president who resigns prior to the termination of his appointment by governor in council?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes, in that it is governed by the terms of the C.B.C. pension plan which was established by the C.B.C. board of directors.

2. The C.B.C. board of directors was authorized by statute to establish a pension fund for the directors, officers and employees of the corporation and their dependants.

3. (a) The normal pension benefits of a president are the same as for all contributors —2 per cent of average salary during the highest paid five years within the last ten years of service, multiplied by the number of years of service. This is subject to some reduction in respect of service rendered after January 1, 1966, when the Canada and Quebec pension plans became effective. If 25 years of service have been rendered, earned pension rights are granted in full on retirement at or after age 60, otherwise they are granted in full only at age 65. If retirement takes place before 65, or before 60 in the case of employees of twenty-five or more years of service, pension benefits are actuarially reduced.

(b) If his statutory appointment were to expire after at least five years' service a president would be eligible to receive the greater of: (1) the normal pension rights described above, or, (2) a pension based on final salary rate and on actual service with a minimum of 15 years and a maximum of 30 years maturing at age 50 or actual age if later. (c) On his retirement, the present president will receive only the benefits outlined in (a).

4. Yes.

C.I.A. FUNDS EXPENDED IN CANADA

Question No. 198—Mr. Ormiston:

Is the government aware of any CIA funds entering Canada through the international affairs department of the AFL-CIO of America?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of the Solicitor General and External Affairs as follows: no.

REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION OF STATUTES

Question No. 200—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What progress has been made in the revision and consolidation of the statutes of Canada?

2. When is it now anticipated that the revised statutes will be (a) published (b) proclaimed in force?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. To date the statute revision commission has consolidated a total of 363 public general statutes in French and a similar number in English. A total of 332 statutes have been revised for a first time in the English version and 7 revised for the second time; 289 statutes in the French version have received a first revision and 3 a second revision.

2. The commission is attempting to complete its consolidation and report to the governor in council as soon as possible after the 31st day of December, 1967. It is hoped that publication of the revised statutes, 1967, and promulgation will follow some time in the fall of 1968.

FEDERAL GRANT FOR WRITING HISTORY OF CANADA

Question No. 218—Mr. Caouette:

1. Did the Department of the Secretary of State or any other federal government department grant any amount to Mr. Stanley Ryerson to write a History of Canada?

2. If so (a) on what date (b) what was the amount of the grant?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the centennial commission as follows:

1. Yes, Canadian History: British North America 1815-1873.

2. (a) Contract dated April 7, 1966; (b) $2,000, $1,000 paid out by cheque dated April 25, 1966. The balance of $1,000 to be paid when the history is completed and a manuscript presented to the centennial commission. The centennial commission's subsidy is limited to assisting the preparation of works, not their publication or distribution.

VENTILATION STANDARDS IN CARGO SHEDS AND SHIPS' HOLDS

Question No. 231—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is gasoline-operated equipment permitted to work in national harbours board cargo sheds?

2. If so, what safety standards are laid down for the protection of stevedores and freight handlers?

3. Do such enclosed sheds have any mechanical ventilation and, if not, for what reason?

4. Have any studies ever been made by the government to determine the necessity, or otherwise, of adequate ventilation in sheds and in the holds of ships and, if so, when, by whom and with what results?

5. What safety standards govern "clean air" in the holds of ships while in Canadian ports?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Transport and National Health and Welfare as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Users of equipment on N.H.B. property are required to observe proper care in the use of such equipment, and the equipment may be removed by the board if proper care is not exercised.

3. Not generally. Shed doors can be opened to allow adequate ventilation without mechanical ventilation. Most sheds, due to their particular construction, have gravity roof ventilators.

4. (a) An air contamination survey of transit sheds at Saint John, New Brunswick, was conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare in April, 1961. The results of the survey were made available to the national harbours board. (b) The board of steamship inspection has considered the ventilation of holds of ships. Cargo hatches are open when cargo is being worked and normally provide an adequate volume of fresh air. However as a result of the board's studies it was recommended that the tackle regulations be amended to govern the use of internal combustion engines used in cargo holds.

5. Section 63(3) of the tackle regulations, made under the Canada Shipping Act by order in council P.C. 1961-188 of February 9, 1961, provides that "where internal combustion engines are used in cargo spaces the carbon monoxide gas concentration shall not exceed 100 parts per million".

INVITATIONS TO MEETING RESPECTING HALIFAX HARBOUR

Question No. 233—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Was the government of Canada or any of its departments or interested agencies, other than the national harbours board, invited to attend a special meeting arranged by the city of Halifax on June 3, 1967, for the purpose of discussing declining port activity and, if so, which departments were invited and which attended?

2. Were any departments invited who were not able to send representatives and, if so, why were they not present?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all departments as follows:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

VOTE BY CHAIRMAN OF LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

Question No. 245—Mr. Simard:

Has the president of the Canada Labour Relations Board the right to vote in the case of a dispute among unions where the members of a union are not unanimous in their choice of representation, so that employers will not be required to decide the matter for their employees?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): All members of the board have the right to vote on any matter coming before the board.

UNION DISPUTE BETWEEN C.L.C. AND C.N.T.U.

Question No. 246—Mr. Simard:

In the case of an inter-union dispute involving an affiliated member of the CLC and an affiliated member of the CNTU, must the CNTU and the CLC be represented in equal numbers, that is, two for the CNTU and two for the CLC?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Every matter coming before the board is dealt with on its merits by the board as a whole without distinction as to the nature of the issue involved.

CANADIAN FOREIGN AID

Question No. 270—Mr. Ballard:

1. What was Canada's contribution to foreign aid in the years 1956, 1961 and 1966?

2. What were the amounts contributed in the years 1956, 1961 and 1966 to each country or international agency receiving such aid?

3. What amounts, in aggregate, for each of the years 1956, 1961 and 1966, were tied to the procurement of goods in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Canadian government made the following amounts available during the fiscal years 1956-57, 1961-62 and 1966-67 for Canada's development assistance program:

	($ Canadian millions)
	1956-57	1961-62	1966-67

3. As a general rule, funds expended on Canadian bilateral assistance programs are used for the purchase of Canadian goods and services. The external aid office has worked to the regulation that all projects undertaken must have 80 per cent Canadian content unless special authority is obtained from the Treasury Board. Few applications have been made for special authority. On the other hand, many large purchases have been for products with 100 per cent Canadian content, so that the average of all purchases would be well over 80 per cent.

PAROLE OFFICERS, JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 300—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice, and what is their jurisdiction?

2. How many of these are trained social workers?

3. How many are university graduates in the social sciences?

4. Does the department make provisions for bursaries for the training of more parole officers and, if so, how many bursaries and for how much?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. There are 74 parole officers employed by the National Parole Board, which now forms a part of the Department of the Solicitor General.

Parole officers interview inmates of penal and reform institutions, both federal and provincial, and investigate home conditions in order to appraise their prospects for rehabilitation in the light of conduct, industry, maturity and prospective community environments. They make comprehensive reports of their findings and make recommendations to the board.

Parole officers provide supervision for parolees either directly or indirectly through after care agencies. They are empowered to suspend parole and make recommendations for revocations, continuation or forfeiture of parole.

They also review applications for remission or suspension of court orders prohibiting operation of motor vehicles under the Criminal Code, conduct investigations and make dations to the board.

2. Thirty-three of these parole officers are trained social workers.

3. Thirty-nine are university graduates in the social sciences.

4. The department does not make provision for bursaries for the training of more parole officers. Rather, it promotes and encourages existing parole officers to improve their professional qualifications, particularly in the fields of social work and criminology. Departmental assistance takes the form of educational leave with pay and reimbursement of tuition fees.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, July 7, 1967

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 7th July, at 5.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before we proceed further with the ceremonial part of the afternoon, may I be allowed to remind hon. members that they are invited to attend in room 16 after the royal assent, where we will be honoured by the presence with us of the Clerk of the house, Mr. Raymond, who is looking forward to the opportunity of exchanging greetings with his friends in the house.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Lieutenant-Colonel Alfred Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Royal Assent

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

An Act to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

An Act to revise and consolidate the Interpretation Act and amendments thereto, and to effect certain consequential amendments to the Canada Evidence Act and the Bills of Exchange Act.

An Act to incorporate Western Farmers Mutual Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate Farmers Central Mutual Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate United Investment Life Assurance Company.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: May I add as a postcript to the invitation I extended a few minutes ago that this invitation is, as usual, extended to the officials of the house and to members of the press gallery.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, to Monday, September 25, pursuant to special order.
