Hon. W. H. BENNETT: Honourable gentlemen, I have listened to the debate with much interest, and propose to vote for the Bill introduced by the honourable the Minister of Labour. I am at a loss to understand some of the arguments that have been adduced here to-day. In the first place, it has been argued that there is enormous expense in having to institute criminal prosecutions. I do not know of any country in which there is not expended annually an enormous sum for criminal prosecutions. Take the province of Ontario, in which there have been some big criminal trials, like the Hyams case and the case at Woodstock some years ago. The country spent a great deal of money in both of those murder cases in order to secure convictions, and everybody will agree that it was money well spent. That being the case, if any person shows a disposition to contravene any section of the Act, he can be prosecuted, even if the prosecution does cost the country a good deal of money. I suppose the effect of enforcing the law and prosecuting is to deter others as well as to punish the accused. For that reason it is to be hoped that if any prosecutions do take place under the Immigration Act or under any section of the Criminal Code, they will have a deterrent effect on other persons. One would imagine from the remarks of some honourable gentlemen that there was not a decent labouring man in Canada; that from one end of Canada to the other there was a seething mass of men who were out to murder and burn down houses and commit all sorts of crimes.

Some Hon. SENATORS: No, no.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: There has not been a word said to that effect.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: My honourable friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) was reading a list of horrible crimes for which men would be deported.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Those are the men you are speaking in favour of.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: When my honourable friends can prove that men have been doing that sort of thing, then it will be high time to threaten other people with the dangers of it. Now, were there any charges in Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: They have to do those things before they can be deported.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Were there charges of murder or anything of that sort—

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Yes, there was murder in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: —against Dixon or any of those other men?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I say there was murder.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Was there a charge of murder laid? It is true that in Winnipeg there was a terrible state of affairs; there is no question about that. But there was no other city in Canada where the Government intervened and prosecutions resulted.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Suppose they had succeeded in Winnipeg, what would have taken place in other cities in Canada?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I admire the Government's action. It was the Government, not the city of Winnipeg—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me when I tell him that the city of Winnipeg asked the Dominion Government to keep away from Winnipeg and they would settle the matter themselves. And they did settle it: the Committee of One Thousand Citizens of the city of Winnipeg settled that strike.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: All honour to whom honour is due, and if the honourable gentleman wants to throw so much discredit on the Minister of Labour—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: No.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Wait a moment. The minister was there—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me? He must not put into my mouth words that I did not say. I said not one word in disrespect of the Minister of Labour, for whom I have the highest regard, and it ill becomes the honourable gentleman to make that statement.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If the honourable gentleman will refer to Hansard he will find his words there—that the Committee of One Thousand or One Hundred asked the Dominion Government to keep out of the matter. These were his own words. Surely the Minister of Labour is a member of the Government.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: They settled it: they took charge of all public utilities. How did the Government do it?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If the honourable gentleman still sticks to his former statement, that the Committee of One Hundred, or One Thousand, asked the Dominion Government to keep out of it, all right.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: When the honourable gentleman does not know the difference between the Committee of One Hundred and the Committee of One Thousand, he knows very little of what took place in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The honourable gentleman will find in Hansard, when he refers to it, that he made that statement—that this Committee invited the Government to keep out of it and they would settle it themselves.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: That is no disrespect to the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Not the slightest.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that the Minister of Labour was not invited by your Committee to come back. He was there throughout the proceedings.

In the next place, I think it is only a fair principle of ordinary British law that a man is entitled to see his accuser face to face. Yet we are told by the Minister that under the deportation arrangements that have been made during the past year a man did not even know who was making the accusation against him.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not think the Minister would seriously make that statement.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: In proceedings of that nature the man accused may not even know who is making the accusation. There may be a charge preferred against him, and the next night he may be hurried out of the country. Some persons contend that lawyers do not know anything at all about law. Well, some lawyers may and some other lawyers may not. I know one thing, however, that there have been many miscarriages of justice; there is no question about that. Let me give you an instance. When Sir Charles Fitzpatrick was Minister of Justice of Canada a man was convicted at Owen Sound on a charge of rape and was sentenced to a term of 15 years in the Kingston penitentiary. He was released the next year because the woman who had made the charge of rape and had given the evidence against him gave birth to a mulatto child. The man was released, but had it not been for that incident he might be in the penitentiary to-day serving a 15-year term. I know there are many cases of miscarriage of justice, and one can readily understand that in this country, where there are so many fire-eaters. There may be fire-eaters outside this Chamber too. Let us assume that a foreigner has a choice location of land in the Canadian Northwest, and a charge is preferred against him by someone who wants him to be driven out of the country, while the time has not lapsed in which he can prove up on the property. What is the result? The result is simply this. The charge may be preferred against him behind his back, and he never has the opportunity of meeting his accuser face to face. He is dispossessed of his land and is hurried out of the country. Yet in Canada we are to-day saying that we need population to come into the country.

My honourable friends from Winnipeg seem to resent that I should dare to say anything at all in opposition to it. Let me tell them what is going on in Winnipeg to-day.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You do not know anything about what is going on there.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Well, I will tell you what is going on, according to a despatch appearing in the newspapers to-day.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They nominated all the blackguards.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I will ask my honourable friend not to forget that he has made use of that term, "all the blackguards."

Winnipeg, May 27.—F. J. Dixon, M.L.A., Rev. William Ivens (convicted strike leader), F. G. Tipping and W. A. James will be the Dominion Labor party's candidates at the provincial elections. They were nominated at a meeting of the party in the labor temple Tuesday night as the result of a ballot by mail of the membership, marked according to the proportional representation system of voting, and the four were chosen from a slate of nine.

While the party originally intended to run six candidates, the meeting before the count was proceeded with, decided to cut the number down to four. This reduction was made in consequence of a tacit understanding with other labor organizations regarding labor candidates for the Winnipeg seats.

These men did not nominate themselves. They were nominated by the Labour party.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Tell us who they are.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT (reading):

It is expected the other labor nominees for the ten city seats will be as follows:

Socialist party—Four: R. B. Russell, W. A. Pritchard, R. A. Johns, and George Armstrong (all convicted strike leaders).

Ex-soldiers' and ex-sailors' Labor party—

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Let me ask the honourable gentleman a question. I notice he has mentioned Mr. Ivens. What was he convicted of?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I cannot give the particular count of the indictment, but he was convicted.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Sedition.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT (reading):

Ex-soldiers' and ex-sailors' Labor party—President Cartwright or Ald. John Blumberg.

Social democrats—Ald. John Queen (convicted strike leader).

Including Mr. Dixon, who was charged with seditious libel and acquitted, seven of the candidates who are named, are men who figured in the prosecutions that followed the strike of last summer.

This Labour convention selected those very men who were accused, and some of whom were convicted. They have agreed on the number to be selected—agreed to cut down the number to four. And the agreement is an arrangement with other labour organizations in the city. Now, we had a great war. My honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury), my honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans) and my honourable friend from Manitou (Hon. Mr. Sharpe) were all gallant colonels of battalions that went overseas. Are they going to tell me that they did not have among the battalions thousands of good labour men?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Good, honest men—yes.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: And these honourable gentlemen kissed the tips of their fingers to those labour men and bade them good-bye, and hoped they would come back safe.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is a contemptible statement to make. It was made in that spirit—

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would have wished good luck to the men who had gone.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It is about all you would do, I think.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I want to say that when the labour men nominate these candidates there must be a feeling in Winnipeg even for these men. They have made amends by their conviction and by the punishment which followed their conviction, which I think was well deserved. I think they were properly dealt with and had fair trials.

I do maintain that there should be in Canada henceforth at least a chance for any man to meet his accuser face to face when any charge is preferred against him. For that reason I propose to vote for the Bill introduced by the Minister of Labour. I am paired for the occasion with an honourable member who has left the House, but if he returns I shall vote for the Bill. When there is in this country a little less flag-waving, when there is less of this war talk, it will probably be better for the material interests of the country; and if this country is to be built up, it will be built up by the workingmen of Canada to a great extent; and when I observe conventions in the city of Winnipeg select those men as candidates, I cannot believe that the labouring men of Winnipeg do not know where they stand. They would not select those candidates simply to be beaten. They are not going to be candidates for the Senate, but for places where they will meet the voters. I say in all sincerity that I believe the minister's Bill is in the right direction. If there are wrong-doers they can be prosecuted under certain clauses of the Criminal Code.

My honourable friend the leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock) objected to the line being drawn at five years, because a man might be prosecuted who had not been five years in the country. There is no special reason for fixing at 21 years of age instead of 20 the age qualification of the voter, because he has fully as much sense at 20 as at 21; but there must be some limit fixed by law. In this case I assume that the idea is that when a man has been in the country five years, that man—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He has acquired a right.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes, he has acquired a right; and not only that, but, having been in the country for that length of time, he has a better idea of the institutions of the country and will be more in love with it; for I think all men who come to this country should be in love with the country's institutions.

Now, I am very sorry if any of these honourable gentlemen should be disturbed because after they have risen en masse to give their opinion anybody should dare to differ with them. But I want to tell these gentlemen from Winnipeg that if they go up there—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Does the honourable gentleman refer to me when he speaks of the gentlemen from Winnipeg? There is only one man here from Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The honourable gentleman from Winnipeg and the honourable gentleman from Selkirk.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Then put it that way.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would advise them strongly—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to know if I am the special object of your references, that is all?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: My honourable friends—I will say honourable and gallant gentlemen, too.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes, that is better.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Then nothing will be missed from the military standpoint.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I wish I could say the same for you.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: You are too careful of the dollars you have. You would not spend the money.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I do not know of any gentleman who has sneered more at men who went into the military and endeavoured to do something for the country than the honourable gentleman has done.

Hon. Mr. POWER: One at a time, please.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I would ask that the honourable gentleman who has the floor be allowed to proceed without interruption.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE. Should we sit here and be insulted by a man like this? I do not think we should. I raised a battalion and took it overseas, and did my best, and spent thousands of dollars of my money; and I am not going to be insulted by a man like this. I do not care who he is, I will not stand for it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I desire to reiterate what the honourable gentleman has just said. I too have lost of my substance and of my blood in this war; I too went out and did my best to raise men; and this honourable gentleman has no right to get up and sneer at men who have done that.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I occupy the same position. I raised my battalion and spent thousands of dollars. There is not one of the so-called political colonels who has not spent from $10,000 to $15,000 to raise a battalion. They have gone overseas and risked their lives, only to be sneered at by a gentleman who has done nothing.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Since the honourable gentlemen have got over their self-congratulation and adulation, I am satisfied that they should take all the honour that they can get out of it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: They will not get much from you.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If they feel that they have done more than their share, very well.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: We have not done more than our share. We have not done enough.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Now, to come back to where we were. I want to say to the honourable gentlman from Winnipeg and the honourable gentleman from Selkirk that there will be an opportunity afforded of proving whether I am right or wrong. I understand that in the provincial elections in Manitoba these men will be brought out by the labouring classes of the city of Winnipeg as candidates, and my honourable friends will have full rights on the platform, and I hope they will give them a merry fight. We will see the results. But, as I think the time has gone by to hold the club over these men, I propose to vote for the Bill as it stands.

Hon. WM. PROUDFOOT: Honourable gentlemen, I did not intend to say anything on this question; but, as I intend to vote for the amendment of the honourable gentleman from Hamilton, perhaps it is right that I should give my reasons for so doing. I am sorry that this debate has brought forth so much ill-feeling, and that we had to listen to the statements made a few moments ago. I do not think it is quite becoming to the dignity of the Senate that matters of this kind should be aired in that way. I am sorry that such a thing should take place, and I am also sorry that the Minister of Labour saw fit to introduce this Bill. I do not think it is wise to bring it forward at the present time. I think it is brought forward, not in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole, but in the interest of certain agitators who have made it their business—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I want to assure this House, and I think this House knows, in view of what I had to do last year to maintain order and peace in this country, perhaps in the face of my own better judgment and convictions from a labour standpoint; that what I did was done because the interests and the safety of the State required it when Canada was in danger; and now I will not stand idly by and have an honourable gentleman suggest that I am bringing in this legislation in the interest of any class of agitators. I want further to point out that different honourable gentlemen this afternoon have classed labour men generally with the men who have been guilty of sedition in this country. It is most unfortunate and most unfair, and such a suggestion will be repudiated by all honest labour men throughout the country. I beg honourable gentlemen's pardon for having taken up the time of the House.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I had no intention of attributing to the Minister of Labour any such motive in bringing forward the Bill. What I meant was that the agitation in certain quarters had induced the Government to bring forward the Bill at the present time. If it were not for the agitation the Government would be satisfied to let the legislation stand as it is. I have no desire to say a word against the labourites. It is not the main body of labour who are the cause of the trouble in this country; the trouble is caused by the agitators, the very men who should come under this Act, the very men that you had in view when the legislation was brought into existence in June, 1919. I was not personally present when the Bill was brought into the House, and I was somewhat surprised to find that the Bill had been rushed through in a very few minutes, as appears to have been the case. It was a very important Bill. I do not believe that any man, no matter how high he may stand in the Government—whether he is the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Immigration, or the Prime Minister himself—should be given the right to dispose of a man's liberty without a trial; and that is what is done when a man is deported from the country without a trial. I say that is unfair and that no man should be given that power.

What facts are we confronted with at the present time? The Government saw fit to place this Act on the statute book in 1919, and it was placed on the statute book for a very good reason. Then we had the trouble in Winnipeg, on account of which certain men were tried and found guilty of sedition and other crimes against the commonwealth —men who, if they had had their way, would have done what, so far as the people of Canada generally and the people of Winnipeg particularly are concerned? They would not only have taken possession of the country, but would have been trying to govern it at the present time. Why should the Government now seek to change that law? I am going to vote for the amendment, because, if we pass the Bill, what is going to be the result? We will be saying to these men in Winnipeg, to these men in prison: "Come out from prison; we cannot do anything with you." We are going to say to agitators all over the Dominion of Canada—and they are not all confined to Winnipeg, unfortunately—that the Government has thrown up its hands, that it is not going to be able to control the situation as it did, and that admission is going to encourage these men. That is what I object to mainly in the present Bill. Why should we take such a course? Why should we not say: "We are going to let the law remain as it is until the affairs of the country are quieted; until this agitation has ceased to exist." That is the course I think the Government should take. I think that if the Government were well advised they would withdraw the Bill. As the leader of the Opposition has said, the Bill does not deal with the situation; it only deals with a very small fraction of it; and if we pass it the men whom we are trying to prevent agitating in this country will say: "The Government has withdrawn their efficient piece of legislation, and we can do as we like." There are only one or two things that I want. I want to see the amendment carried, and I want to see the Minister of Immigration have backbone enough to deport those men when they are released from the penitentiary at Stony Mountain.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I do not intend to give a silent vote on this question, but I shall be as brief as I can in giving my reasons for voting for the Bill and against the amendment. What does the Bill say? It says:

> Section forty-one of the Immigration Act, as the said section is enacted by section one of chapter twenty-six of the Statutes of 1919—which declares the conditions under which people may be deported—> —is hereby amended by striking out the proviso at the end thereof and substituting therefor the following:

>
> Provided that this section shall not apply to any person who is a Canadian citizen.

That is, if this Bill is passed, no one who is a Canadian citizen will be deported under the Act. Now, what is a Canadian citizen? A Canadian citizen is described under three heads: First, "a person born in Canada who has not become an alien;" second, "a British subject who has Canadian domicile" —that is, who has been five years in this country; third, "a person naturalized under the laws of Canada, who has not subsequently become an alien or lost his Canadian domicile." The Act of last year excepts from deportation a person who is a British subject either by reason of birth in Canada, or by reason of naturalization in Canada. Honourable gentlemen will see that the exception covers a Canadian citizen born in Canada, and a person who, under the naturalization laws of Canada, has become a Canadian citizen; but it does not cover a British subject who has Canadian domicile. I confess that I am very much surprised at the stand taken by a number of my honourable friends in this Chamber who oppose this amendment to the Act which will comprise as a Canadian citizen a person of British birth. You are excepting from deportation Canadians born and aliens who have become naturalized, no matter from where they may have come; but you say to the British-born, who come here from the Mother Country—from England, Scotland, or Ireland—that, although they have acquired Canadian citizenship by five years' residence in Canada, they shall not be treated as Canadian citizens, but may be deported as aliens.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER: A Canadian may be deported as well.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, a Canadian-born cannot be deported. An alien who comes from any quarter of the globe but Britain, and who has his naturalization papers, is a Canadian, and is free from deportation under the Act; but a Britisher born, a man of your own blood, who has been five years in the country and has acquired Canadian citizenship, who is as much a citizen as the alien who has not British blood in his veins, will be subject to deportation and treated as a stranger. I well remember the slip of the tongue of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1904—if I am not mistaken as to the date—when, in discussing the case of Lord Dundonald, he spoke of him as a foreigner instead of as a stranger. I remember the wind that was raised from the Atlantic to the Pacific because a scion of England had been called a foreigner. You are declaring that a man who comes from England, Scotland, or Ireland, and who has been five years in this country, and has acquired Canadian citizenship, is still an alien and a foreigner, and can be deported without a trial.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Only if he does certain things.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, only if that Britisher, > by common repute belongs to or is suspected of belonging to any secret society or organization which extorts money from or in any way attempts to control any resident of Canada by force or by threat of bodily harm, or by blackmail, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, etc.

After five years, a person of British birth who has acquired Canadian citizenship may be deported on the report of one or two employees of the Immigration Department, if by common repute he belongs to or is suspected of belonging to any such organization. If you think that is a brotherly or a proper Imperialistic view to take of the Englishman, you are welcome to that view.

I am ready to accept the amendment as proposed in the Bill, because it puts all men who have acquired Canadian citizenship on an equal plane, no matter from where they may come—even if they are from London or Liverpool. I do not say that the Act, framed as it is, has my approbation. It did not have my approbation when it was moved by the honourable gentleman from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) as an amendment to the Immigration Act. This special Act was passed in my absence. Had I been here I would have renewed my objections to the form of the clause of which I have just read a part. But the present Bill is, I think, a fair one. Although my honourable friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Bostock) will vote against it because in his opinion it does not go far enough, I shall accept it as far as it goes, because it puts all Canadian citizens on the same plane. It is not a question of sympathy; a Canadian-born or a naturalized alien can be as bad as a man who has come from the British Isles and is called a "Red," and we must bear with him, and can only cope with his misdoings by the application of the criminal law; and we shall do likewise in the case of the British-born who has been here five years and has acquired Canadian citizenship, as we do in the case of aliens who obtain naturalization papers.

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: Honourable gentlemen, I have listened with an open mind to the discussion on this Bill and have been sincerely endeavoring to place myself on record as doing that which is in the best interests of our country. I am sorry that the discussion this afternoon has led to some little differences of opinion, because I am sure we all wish to be placed upon the plane of having considered every question coming before us in an impartial manner and without allowing our temper to interfere in any way.

In the first place, I would like to correct an impression which seems to have been made upon the minds of some honourable gentlemen that other honourable gentlemen have this afternoon said things reflecting upon labour of any description in this country. I did not hear anything of that sort, and did not understand that any such remarks were made, and I think that on calm reflection it will be concluded that nothing of that nature was said.

I would be opposed to this Bill if it were simply, as some honourable members seem to think it is, a proposal to take away from the Minister of Immigration the right to deport, and if it did not leave in the hands of the authorities a weapon with which to deal with agitators. We must not think that deportaion is the worst thing that could befall an agitator. Sometimes you are sending an agitator over to the neighboring country from which he came, and where he may still breed sedition of all kinds. It appears to me it is much better to do as the Criminal Code has always allowed and will always allow the authorities to do, that is, to put him into prison here after he has had a trial by his peers. I think that the principle of ordering deportation or any other punishment without a trial is wrong, and I am glad, therefore, to be able to concur in the principle involved in this Bill.

I think that the effect of this proposed legislation will be good. It will not help to allay unrest of the agitators, but none of us care about that. We want to allay the unrest among right-thinking men. As far as the agitator is concerned, there is not a man in this House who does want to get rid of him as expeditiously as possible. If I thought for a moment that this Bill would allow the agitator to escape I would be absolutely opposed to it; but, as I have already mentioned, I think the Criminal Code will take care of him properly.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I will not take up much time, but there are two or three questions that have been raised—

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Mr. Speaker and honourable gentlemen, do I understand that the Minister is now closing this debate?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I must have an opportunity of speaking on this question. I do not intend to give a silent vote. I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crosby, the debate was adjourned.

DIRECTOR OF COAL OPERATIONS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON moved the second reading of Bill O3, an Act respecting the Director of Coal Operations.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill was discussed at some length the other day, and I think the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) requested some information as to whether or not the Department of Justice considered it in order that it should be passed. For the honourable gentleman's information I desire to state that both the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister have personal knowledge of the Bill and have passed upon it. I have a memorandum from the Department of Justice endorsing it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend read it?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I have not the memorandum with me, but I can get it for the honourable gentleman.

As outlined the other day, the purpose of the Bill is to enable the Government to continue the control and guidance of coal operations in what is known as District 18, comprising the province of Alberta and the southern portion of British Columbia, for a period of one year or such shorter time as in the opinion of the Governor in Council is desirable. It is needless for me to enter into the details again.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I would like to ask the minister exactly what is meant by the Orders in Council that are dealt with. The Bill as it stands refers to many Orders in Council. Some of them apparently are to remain in force. I have no knowledge of what they are.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Orders in Council referred to are noted in clause 1 of this Bill. Under the War Measures Act the Government, by Orders in Council P.C. 1725, P.C. 1896, P.C. 3224 and P.C. 426, created a Director of Coal Operations and clothed him with certain authority. By Order in Council passed a few months ago, these and certain other special orders were to continue in force during the present Session of Parliament, and they would automatically become extinct at the end of this session unless continued by legislation. It is deemed desirable by the Dominion Government, by the representative of the Alberta Government with whom I have discussed it, by the Coal Operators' Association, with whom I have had verbal, telegraphic, and written communications, and by special representatives of the United Mine Workers, who are representing the men affected, and with whom I have communicated by telegram and by letter, that the co-operation now existing amongst the Government, the coal operators and the United Mine Workers should be continued for the purpose of stabilizing, maintaining, and insuring the production of coal in that area until all danger of any repetition of the difficulties which we have had in the past has disappeared. This Bill proposes that the Director of Coal Operations shall continue to exercise the powers with which he was vested under those Orders in Council, and that the orders which are enumerated in the schedule at the foot of the Bill, and which have been issued by him, shall be validated and continue in force, until cancelled by him, for a further period. It is purely for the purpose of carrying on the control, which has proved successful, until it appears to be no longer necessary. There is absolute unanimity on the part of all parties interested as to the desirability of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is quite evident that my honourable friend who has just asked a question (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) and probably other honourable gentlemen in the House are not aware of what matters are dealt with, and in what manner they are dealt with, in these Orders in Council; and the answer which my honourable friend the Minister of Labour has just given is more remarkable for the information it does not contain than for the information it contains. What my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) evidently desires to know is what are the subjects dealt with in those Orders in Council. They are mainly questions of the hours and the wages of the men employed in the mines. These are the main subjects.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Oh, yes. I have read them. They deal mainly with the hours and wages of men employed in those mines, the conduct of the operations, etc.

I took the ground the other day that before the Bill passed the second reading we should have the opinion of the Department of Justice. Notwithstanding the respect which I have for the Justice Department, I maintain that we have no right whatever to deal with this matter here. This Bill is wholly unconstitutional, because it deals with a subject which falls exclusively within provincial jurisdiction, namely, property and civil rights. If hours of labour and wages of labourers are not matters of provincial jurisdiction, coming under the head of property and civil rights. I do not know what could come under that head. I repeat, I have the greatest possible respect for the Department of Justice, but I am quite clear in my own mind, from my own experience, that this Parliament has no right to deal with hours of labour and wages of employees.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Robertson) could perhaps, when we go into committee, lay upon the table, or place at our disposal the opinion which he has obtained from the Minister of Justice on this matter, and also the series of Orders in Council, in order that we might scan them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Orders in Council were laid upon the Table, at the request of the leader of the Opposition, some days ago. I shall be glad to lay upon the Table the orders issued by the Coal Director, the numbers of which appear in the schedule referred to in the Bill.

It is perhaps out of order for me to reply to the observations of the honourable member from Ottawa regarding the constitutionality of the Bill, but surely, inasmuch as the Federal Parliament have dealt with hours, wages, etc., in coal mines, by the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, which has been in force for the past thirteen years, without any exception having been taken by the provinces, coal mining must be considered as coming within Federal jurisdiction, especially when these properties are Federal natural resources and are still in the hands and ownership of the Federal Government to a great extent.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend told me the other day, in answer to my question, that these Orders in Council or regulations did not apply exclusively to lands owned by the Crown, but applied to all mining properties in the West; so this distinction is quite in conflict with the statement he made the other day.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Not at all; for the reason that I have just stated. The properties are largely owned by the Government; that is, they are Federal natural resources. That is what I stated the other day.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If my honourable friend had stated that these Orders in Council and regulations were confined to Crown coal lands, I would not have raised the question of constitutionality.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It would not alter the situation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He told us that the Orders in Council applied to all mining lands, whether owned by the Crown or by individuals. That is why I raised the point that, notwithstanding his opinion and that of the Department of Justice, we had no right to deal with such matters here.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Do I understand the minister to promise that he will lay the Orders in Council and also the communication from the Minister of Justice before the House when it goes into Committee on this Bill?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER: And then there would not be any objection to discussing the constitutional question, although, strictly speaking, that should be discussed at the second reading.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No objection on my part.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

EXCHEQUER COURT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 108, an Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, last Session we amended the Judges Act, making provision for the salaries of a president and two puisne judges of the Exchequer Court. This apparently was in contemplation of some constitutional changes taking place in that court. Why it was done it is difficult to say at the moment, because the Government apparently had not determined upon making the changes which the draftsman of the Bill perhaps assumed would be made. I need not point out that this is not in conformity with the Exchequer Court Act, which simply makes provision for a judge and for an assistant judge. The object of this Bill is to bring it into conformity with the legislation of last session, to a limited extent, contemplating of course an amendment being made in that Act to meet the changes which we shall make by the Bill now before us.

This Bill provides that the Exchequer Court shall be presided over by a president and a puisne judge instead of by a judge and an assistant judge. It also gives authority to the Government to appoint a deputy judge. This is very desirable in the event of their being a congestion of business in the Exchequer Court necessitating further assistance.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How is the deputy judge appointed?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The deputy judge will be appointed by the Governor in Council. It further gives authority to the Government to enlarge the jurisdiction or the powers of the Registrar of the Court. With these changes we shall, I think, improve upon the constitution of the Exchequer Court and to some extent bring it into conformity with the legislation of last year.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I notice that under clause 13 a registrar is to be appointed. I understood that there was already a registrar of the court.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. This simply amends the section of the Act under which the registrar is appointed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is it the intention to appoint a third judge now?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. No provision is being made for the appointment of a third judge. Provision is being made for the appointment of a deputy judge under certain conditions. The judge of the Exchequer Court becomes the president of the court, and the assistant judge becomes a puisne judge.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: A puisne judge has been appoined?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The assistent judge will become the puisne judge.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: He has not yet been appointed?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; but not as puisne judge. That appointment will be made in pursuance of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The object of the Bill is merely to give the title of puisne judge to the assistant judge?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and to give authority to the Governor in Council to appoint a deputy judge.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I observe that the deputy judge is to have "the qualifications for appointment hereinbefore mentioned." I suppose this refers to the qualifications for puisne judge?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, already in the Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Friday, May 28, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NAVIGABILITY OF THE SASKATCHEWAN RIVER.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY moved:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for a return of all plans and reports made by the engineers of the Public Works Department in connection with a survey made of the Saskatchewan river, to determine the possibility of navigation from Lake Winnipeg to Edmonton.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF RETURNS IN HANSARD.

INQUIRY.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: At this point there is a matter to which I should like to refer. I asked for certain information, and the return was brought down on the 26th. I find, however, that the part of the inquiry that I particularly desire has been left out. I do not know whose fault it is. The answer to question 8 refers to a schedule, but the schedule does not appear in Hansard. I was under the impression that in the case of an inquiry the information would appear in the printed report. Should not all the information that is brought down be published in Hansard?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I do not think that is usually done.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is my point. How much of it should be published? I find in the next inquiry that a long schedule has been published in Hansard. It is for the purpose of finding out what should be published that I raise the question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say to my honourable friend that discretion is given to the Editor of Hansard in matters of this kind, and it would be very unwise to take up space in Hansard to publish voluminous returns that are frequently published in blue-books. My honourable friend has the information on the Table of the House, has he not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I presume the information is there, but I thought it should be published in the printed report.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It depends upon the volume of the information asked for.

DIVORCE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill A 4, an Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Bulley.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

Bill B 4, an Act for the relief of Beatrice Booth Gendron.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Hon. G. V. WHITE moved the second reading of Bill 52, an Act to incorporate the Western Canadian Union Corporation of Seventh Day Adventists.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think the honourable member in charge of this Bill should give us some explanation as to the purpose of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WHITE: Honourable gentlemen, this is an application for incorporation on the part of the Western Canada Union Conference of Seventh Day Adventists. The petitioners are officers and members of the Conference. The Western Canadian Union Conference is an unincorporated organization which administers the affairs of the Seventh Day Adventists' Church in Western Canada. The territory of the Conference includes the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and that part of Ontario lying west of the 89th meridian. The Seventh Day Adventists' Churches in the provinces mentioned are represented in the Union Conference. The Union Conference desires incorporation for the purpose of administering the temporalities of the Conference, and such of its property as may with advantage be handled by a body having corporate existence. This action, namely, that of obtaining some sort of corporate existence is a very usual one on the part of religious associations, or local organizations of religious bodies, as it facilitates the handling of their property and their business activities generally. There are many such acts of incorporation in the statute books of this Parliament. An Act of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada (6 and 7 Geo. V., Chapter 56, of 1916) which I have here, incorporated the Eastern Canadian Union Conference of Seventh Day Adventists. The present Bill, which is practically an adaptation of the Act referred to, is designed to obtain the same advantages for the Western Conference. The present Bill is applied for with the written concurrence of the Eastern Canadian Union Conference.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is it true that those Seventh Day Adventists work on Sunday? What about the Lord's Day Alliance? I understand the Seventh Day Adventists keep Saturday, the seventh day of the week.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The honourable gentleman is all wrong. They work only one day in the week.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE moved the second reading of Bill 72, an Act to incorporate The North-West Route, Limited.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think we ought to have some explanation of this Bill. A Bill similar to this was introduced into this House two or three years ago.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Last year.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If my memory serves me rightly, at that time the committee to whom it was referred did not agree to the Bill and it was thrown out. Perhaps the honourable gentleman who is in charge of the Bill can explain to us whether this is exactly the same as the last one?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Honourable gentlemen, I am satisfied that this is the same Bill as the one that was introduced into this House last year and was turned down by the committee. It has been introduced this year in the House of Commons and has passed the Railway Committee there, and also the House. Now it comes to us. It is a charter to improve the waterways and to build short pieces of railway from the Hudson bay into the Great Slave country. That is what it amounts to. While this Bill stands in my name, I feel quite free to say that I shall be ready to criticize it as strongly as I did last year if I think there is on it anything that should not be put through.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SUPREME COURT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 109, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in a word, this Bill is for the purpose of bringing about simplification and uniformity in the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and preventing appeals being brought in matters of trifling importance, more particularly on the plea that the title of land or future rights are involved. Several sections of the Bill embody amendments and additions to the Act made from time to time to meet special cases as they have arisen. Honourable gentlemen will doubtless recall that for a number of years we have been adding amendment after amendment to the Acts respecting the Supreme Court, the Exchequer Court, and many of the other judicial tribunals of the country. It is desirable, therefore, to consolidate those amendments and to render them as compact as legislation can make them. Another purpose of the Bill is to prevent a class of appeals which to-day occupy a large part of the time of the Supreme Court. It is now proposed that an appeal shall not lie in any case unless the sum involved is $2,000 or over.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does that refer to appeals to or appeals from the Supreme Court?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Appeals to the Supreme Court. Protection is being given to litigants in matters which might not come within that class of case, by making provision for the Appellate Court or highest court of any particular province to give a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. That will be recognized in a certain class of case, which the Supreme Court hereafter may hear.

A great deal of judicial controversy has arisen on certain definitions, such, for instance, as the terms, "final judgment" and "judicial proceedings." There has been more or less diversity of opinion on those terms in the different provinces. One object of the Bill is to render uniform, so far as possible, the use and meaning of certain technical terms.

When we go into Committee I shall be very glad to explain in greater detail many of the amendments, which are largely of what might be termed a domestic or internal character, so far as the court itself is concerned. I think it sufficient to say that these amendments are being carried out at the instance of the Supreme Court itself, and we are greatly indebted to the judges of the court for the preparation of the legislation now before us.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Honourable gentlemen, in new section 37 it is provided that "an appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court from any final judgment of a provincial court, whether of appellate or original jurisdiction." Is it intended by that that appeals may be taken directly from the trial judge, or must they be from the appellate division?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I cannot answer my honourable friend's question, but I shall be prepared to do so when we go into Committee.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: There are a number of other points, but it would probably be better to leave them until we go into Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. When we go into Committee I shall have all the information my honourable friend may desire.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I notice that by section 39 appeals are to be limited to cases in which over $2,000 is involved? In Ontario there has always been an appeal in any case involving $1,000 or over, and it has been found to work very satisfactorily in our courts. This will deprive many persons of the right to appeal?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The fact that the judges of the Supreme Court desire these changes is, I think, one reason why we should scrutinize the Bill very closely. Possibly they want to save themselves considerable work. However, I will bring these matters up in Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL.

CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

The Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill D, an Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend give us an explanation as to the effect of those amendments? They are stated on page 250 of our Minutes, but without the Bill it is rather hard to tell exactly what is their effect.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This Bill should have stood in the name of my honourable friend the Minister of Labour. It appears to have been put in my name.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: In reply to the inquiry of the honourable leader of the Opposition, I may say that the proposed amendments as made by the House of Commons do not in any way alter the sense of the Bill as introduced and passed here. The word "duly," in two places, I think, has been taken out of the original Bill, which read, "duly authorized." Only the word "authorized" remains. I do not think it changes the sense of the sentence at all. By an amendment made in the other House, at page 1, in line 24, they strike out the words "members of the union" and insert "union members affected." That does not change or affect the meaning in any substantial way whatever. The other amendments are of no consequence and do not change the general meaning of the Bill. They are entirely acceptable so far as I am concerned.

The motion was agreed to.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said province.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill has appeared on the Order Paper for some weeks. It is desirable now to proceed with it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon. Did I not understand that this Bill was postponed from day to day in order to await the arrival of another Bill?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The other Bill will probably be here by the time this receives its third reading. The other Bill is scarcely as germane to the present Bill as I had first thought. However, the two Bills are entirely independent of one another, notwithstanding the fact that both deal with Indian affairs.

In 1912 an Order in Council was issued in pursuance of an agreement that had been entered into between the Federal Government and the Government of British Columbia, touching certain differences concerning Indian reserves in that province, and which rendered it desirable that there should be a settlement between both Governments in the interest of the Indians themselves. A Royal Commission was appointed by both Governments in 1913, and that Commission sat and took evidence until 1916, thoroughly investigating the whole of the Indian reserves in the province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It sat as a Joint Commission?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A Joint Commission. There were a certain number of representatives selected by the British Columbia Government and a certain number of representatives appointed by the Federal Government, and they sat as a Joint Royal Commission. A report was made by that commission along the lines of the agreement which had been entered into, and in pursuance of which the commission was appointed. Probably the essential features of the report, more particularly those with which we have to do, have relation to the reduction of some reserves and the addition of other reserves. That is to say, it is proposed to reduce, by way of cut-off, certain reserves occupied by the Indians to the extent of some 47,000 acres; and the British Columbia Government, in view of this reduction, are conveying to the Crown, in the right of the Dominion Government, for the Indians some 87,000 acres.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Has that conveyance been accepted by the Indians?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was proposed in the original agreement that before effect would be given to the cut-off of the different reserves the Indians of the respective reserves should surrender that particular cut-off; but it has been found that effect cannot be given to the report of the Royal Commission in that way. Consequently the British Columbia Government some time ago passed a Bill, almost in the same language as the Bill now before us, and it is proposed by the enabling legislation—that which has been secured from the British Columbia Legislature and that which it is proposed shall be secured from this Parliament—that effect shall be given to the report which was made by the Joint Royal Commission, except in the matter of securing the surrender by the Indians of the various cut-offs which have been made.

I need scarcely point out to honourable gentlemen that the interests of the Indians in the hands of the two Governments can be protected by the two Governments better than by any other means. The Indians upon those reserves would number, in round figures, I understand, about 20,000 scattered over the whole province of British Columbia. The reserves include nearly three-quarters of a million acres of land. The title of the land has been for a long time in dispute as between British Columbia and the Indians, and, I might say, as between the Federal Government and the Indians. There never was a formal cession of the Indian lands in the province of British Columbia after the province came into the Union. There was, as honourable gentlemen will recall, a time when there were two Crown colonies in what now constitutes British Columbia—one on the Island of Vancouver, and one on the mainland. Those two colonies came together in 1866, if I remember rightly, and became one colony. I need not refer to the entry of British Columbia into Confederation in the seventies. The question of the Indian title is practically the same to-day as it was at that time. Under the Imperial Government there were certain lands allotted to the Indians. They were permitted to occupy them. There was never any formal cession of those lands to the Indians. They claimed to have had—and possibly we might not dispute it—what is known as an aboriginal title to the land; but the right of occupation had always been ceded to the Indians by the Imperial Government, by the Crown colonies, and afterwards by the British Columbia Government, and likewise by the Federal Government. But in some of the provinces there had been a formal cession of the Indian lands by way of Treaty to the Federal Government. That did not take place in British Columbia. The old practice has been carried on from Crown colony days down to the present time. It is now proposed under this agreement that the reserves which have been delimited in the report shall be conveyed by the province of British Columbia to the Crown in right of the Dominion Government for the Indians. When any of those lands are sold hereafter, the money will be carried in trust account for the particular band of Indians that occupies those lands. There is one condition, however, which has been imposed by the province of British Columbia, and which is similar to that obtaining in all the other provnces of the Dominion, namely, that should the band of Indians occupying the reserve in question become extinct, the land would revert to the province, together with any funds which might stand in trust for the band. There is no difference, I understand, between the arrangement so specified in the report and that which obtains in the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Might I interrupt my honourable friend for a moment? I thought there had been a change in that particular case, and that some arrangement had been made whereby the province of British Columbia had foregone half of its claims to the reversionary title.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know that I have the report before me. However, we can satisfy ourselves on that point before we go into Committee. I need scarcely say to honourable gentlemen—because they are probably aware of the fact, as some of us have been circularized—that certain parties who believe they have a divine mission to reveal to the Indians rights which are not conceded by either the Government of British Columbia or the Federal Government, have asked that they be permitted to appear before a Committee of Parliament and make representations with a view of having the whole subject determined by the Privy Council. Such an opportunity was given in the House of Commons to those who felt that that mission had been imposed upon them on behalf of the Indians in the province of British Columbia, and I might say that the Committee of the House of Commons was not very greatly impressed with the representations made, and consequently refused to give effect to such representations. It is not desirable that there should be a repetition of that at this particular time. It is not desirable that encouragement should be given to parties to guide the Indians as against the paternal supervision which has been exercised by the Government of the province and likewise by the central Government in looking after the Indians of this Dominion. I am satisfied that I am justified in saying that no other Indians have been as well looked after as the Indians of Canada. When the treatment of the Indians of Canada has been compared with the treatment accorded to the Indians of other countries, particularly in neighbouring countries, it has been proverbial that the credit of Canada stands very high indeed. I have never heard of the treatment of the Indians of this Dominion by either Federal or Provincial Governments being successfully attacked. In this particular case I might say that the province of British Columbia, and likewise this Government have at heart the interests of the Indians within the boundaries of that province; and when a Royal Commission is appointed and the two Governments arrive at a conclusion based on common ground, it is in the public interest that we should give effect to that finding; and this legislation has in view only the giving effect to the joint action of the Government of British Columbia and the Government of the Dominion.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, my honourable friend has dealt with this question in a rather light kind of way. It seems to me that it is a very serious matter. The Bill which is now before us has only two clauses, and does not look to be very formidable; but it proposes to give effect to the report of this Commission that was appointed under the agreement made between the Government of this Dominion and the Government of the province. The agreement sets out that the consent of the Indians shall be obtained to the findings of the Commission. Section 2 of the agreement reads:

> 2. The Commission so appointed shall have power to adjust the acreage of Indian Reserves in British Columbia in the following manner:
>
> (a) At such places as the Commissioners are satisfied that more land is included in any particular reserve as now defined than is reasonably required for the use of the Indians of that tribe or locality, the reserve shall, with the consent of the Indians, as required by the Indian Act, be reduced to such acreage as the Commissioners think reasonably sufficient for the purposes of such Indians.

The Bill, if it becomes law, overrides that agreement. Clause 2 of the Bill provides:

> To the full extent to which the Governor in Council may consider it reasonable and expedient the Governor in Council may do, execute, and fulfil every act, deed, matter or thing necessary for the carrying out of the said Agreement between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the province of British Columbia according to its true intent, and for giving effect to the report of the said Royal Commission, either in whole or in part, and for the full and final adjustment and settlement of all differences between the said Governments respecting Indian lands and Indian affairs in the province.

Honourable gentlemen will notice that the clause says it is to be a final adjustment and settlement of all differences between the Dominion and the provincial Governments, not only with regard to the reserves, but I take it to mean that it is to cover all questions that may affect the Indians. Then clause 3 says:

> For the purpose of adjusting, readjusting or confirming the reductions or cut-offs from reserves in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission, the Governor in Council may order such reductions or cut-offs to be effected without surrenders of the same by the Indians, notwithstanding any provisions of the Indian Act to the contrary, and may carry on such further negotiation and enter into such further agreements with the Government of the province of British Columbia as may be found necessary for a full and final adjustment of the differences between the said Governments.

This question is one that has caused a considerable amount of trouble between the province of British Columbia and the Dominion Government for a great many years. My honourable friend refers to the fact that the province of British Columbia has never recognized the Indian title, as it is called. As he very truly said, the Government of British Columbia, while that province was a Crown colony, set aside certain lands for the Indians to live upon; and I do not think those Indian lands were ever conveyed to the Indians in any way. At the time British Columbia came into Confederation, a clause was placed in the terms of union which read as follows:

13. The charge of the Indians and the trusteeship and management of the lands reserved for their use and benefit shall be assumed by the Dominion Government, and a policy as liberal as that hitherto pursued by the British Columbia Government shall be continued by the Dominion Government after the Union. To carry out such policy, tracts of land of such extent as it has hitherto been the practice of the British Columbia Government to appropriate for that purpose shall from time to time be conveyed by the Local Government to the Dominion Government in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians, on application of the Dominion Government, and in case of disagreement between the two Governments respecting the quantity of such tracts of land to be so granted, the matter shall be referred for the decision of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

That was the basis of arrangement between the Dominion and the province in this matter, and it apparently provided that if the Dominion Government and the provincial Government disagreed in this matter the Secretary of State was to decide.

The matter apparently went along until 1875, when an endeavour was made to bring about a setlement, and an Order in Council was drawn up as a result of negotiations and recommendations between the province and the Dominion Government. At that time the Attorney General of British Columbia, Mr. Walkem, afterwards Mr. Justice Walkem, made a recommendation to the Government; and a clergyman of the Church of England, a Mr. Duncan, made certain recommendations on behalf of the Indians. Mr. Duncan was apparently very much interested in this matter, and he and the Attorney General of that time apparently did not altogether agree as to how the question should be settled. As a result of their work the Dominion Government passed an Order in Council, which was the basis of the understanding arrived at. It is rather a long document, but I think that possibly I had better read it to the House in order that honourable gentlemen may understand the situation. It is dated the 5th of November, 1875, and says:

The undersigned has had under consideration the Report of the Executive Council of British Columbia of the 18th August last, adopting the recommendations contained in a memorandum of the Local Attorney General, the Hon. Geo. A. Walkem, as the expression of the views of that Government as to the best method of bringing about a settlement of the Indian land question and submitting those recommendations for the consideration and assent of the Government of the Dominion.

The action of the British Columbia Government in this matter was no doubt brought about by the Order of Your Excellency in Council of the 4th November last, on the subject of the Indian Reserves of British Columbia, which was communicated officially to the British Columbia Government by the Secretary of State.

The suggestions contained in Mr. Walkem's Memorandum and adopted by the Order in Council of the British Columbia Government are as follows:—

1. That no basis of acreage for Indian Reserves be fixed for the province as a whole, but that each nation (and not tribe) of Indians of the same language be dealt with separately.

2. That for the proper adjustment of Indian claims the Dominion Government do appoint an agent to reside with each nation.

3. That reserves of land be set aside for each nationality of Indians. Such reserves to contain in addition to agricultural land, a large proportion of wild and forest land. Every application for a reserve shall be accompanied by a report from the agent having charge of the nation for whom the reserve is intended; and such report shall contain a census and give a description of the habits and pursuits of each nation, and also of the nature and quantity of land required for the use of such nation.

4. That each reserve shall be held in trust for the use and benefit of the nation of Indians to which it has been allotted; and in the event of any material increase or decrease hereafter of the numbers of a nation occupying a reserve, such reserve shall be enlarged or diminished as the case may be, so that it shall bear a fair proportion to the numbers of the nation occupying it. The extra land required for any reserve shall be allotted from vacant Crown lands, and any land taken off a reserve shall revert to the province.

5. That the present local reserve be surrendered by the Dominion to the province as soon as may be convenient, the province agreeing to give fair compensation for any improvements or clearings made upon any reserve which may be surrendered by the Dominion and accepted by the province.

The suggestions in question are stated by Mr. Walkem as having been made by Mr. Duncan in a letter which is appended to the Order in Council.

The undersigned would remark that the suggestions as given by Mr. Duncan in the letter in question do not correspond precisely with the propositions formulated by Mr. Walkem.

Mr. Duncan's suggestions are as follows:

1. That no basis of acreage for reserves be fixed for the province as a whole, but rather that each nation of Indians be dealt with separately on their respective claims.

That for the proper adjustment of such claims let the Dominion and the Provincial Governments each provide an agent to visit the Indians and report fully as to the number and pursuits of each nation and the kind of country they severally occupy.

3. That the Provincial Government deal as liberally with the Indians as other Provincial Governments in the Dominion. My opinion is that a liberal policy will prove the cheapest in the end; but I hold it will not be necessary in the interests of the Indians to grant them only cultivable lands; rather I would recommend that a large portion of their reserves should be wild and forest lands, and hence may be very extensive without impoverishing the province, and at the same time so satisfactory to the Indians as to allay all irritation and jealousy towards the whites.

4. I think the Provincial Government might reasonably insist upon this with the Dominion Government, that no Indian shall be allowed to alienate any part of a reserve, and in case of any reserve being abandoned, or the Indians on it decreasing so that its extent is disproportioned to the number of occupants, that such reserve or part of a reserve might revert to the Provincial Government.

Mr. Duncan adds: "The existing reserves are shown to be by the correspondence both irregular in quantity and misplaced as to locality by following tribal divisions, which is no doubt a mistake and fraught with bad consequences.

"My advice would be in the meantime simply to ignore them, as it certainly would not be wise to regard them as a precedent, and it would be impolitic to have the two systems of reserves in the province, one tribal and the other national."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Whose document is this?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This is Order in Council No. 1088, of the 10th of November, 1875. This is the memorandum attached to the Order.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: By whom is the memorandum signed?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: By R. W. Scott, Acting Minister of the Interior. It goes on to say:

It will be observed that Mr. Walkem speaks of the appointment of an agent by the Dominion Government whereas Mr. Duncan proposes that the Dominion and Provincial Governments shall each provide an agent to visit the Indians and report upon the question of reserves.

While the undersigned is of opinion that in view of the very large experience Mr. Duncan has had amongst the Indians of British Columbia and the marvellous success which has attended his labours amongst them, that gentleman's suggestions on matters of Indian policy are entitled to the greatest weight, and while he concurs entirely in the general principles enunciated by Mr. Duncan, yet he thinks that both the suggestions of Mr. Duncan, and the propositions of Mr. Walkem adopted by the Government of British Columbia in their Minute of the 8th August last fail to provide a prompt and final settlement of this long pending controversy.

Mr. Walkem provides merely that the agent shall make an application for a reserve and report upon the subject and Mr. Duncan recommends that the Dominion and Provincial agents shall report merely as to the number and pursuits of the Indians. Looking to Mr. Walkem's admission, "that the Indians have undoubtedly become discontented and that they are restless and uneasy as to their future," and to his further statement "that the local government have been keenly alive not only to the advantage but to the absolute necessity and urgent importance of a speedy settlement of all the questions connected with their reserves," and again to Mr. Duncan's expression of opinion as to "the urgency and importance of the land question and its vital bearing on the peace and prosperity of the province," the undersigned submits that no scheme for the settlement of this question can be held to be satisfactory which does not provide for its prompt and final adjustment.

In lieu therefore of the propositions submitted by Mr. Walkem and sanctioned by the Order in Council of the British Columbia Government, the undersigned would respectfully propose the following:—

1. That with a view to the speedy and final adjustment of the Indian reserve question in British Columbia on a satisfactory basis, the whole matter be referred to three commissioners, one to be appointed by the Government of the Dominion, one by the Government of British Columbia, and the third to be named by the Dominion and the local Governments jointly.

2. That the said commissioners shall as soon as practicable after their appointment meet at Victoria and make arrangements to visit, with all convenient speed, in such order as may be found desirable, each Indian nation (meaning by nation all Indian tribes speaking the same language) in British Columbia and after full inquiry on the spot, into all matters affecting the question, to fix and determine for each nation separately the number, extent and locality of the reserve or reserves to be allowed to it.

3. That in determining the extent of the reserves to be granted to the Indians of British Columbia no basis of acreage be fixed for the Indians of that province as a whole, but that each nation of Indians of the same language be dealt with separately.

4. That the commissioners shall be guided generally by the spirit of the terms of union between the Dominion and the local Governments, which contemplates a "liberal policy" being pursued towards the Indians; and in the case of each particular nation regard shall be had to the habits, wants and pursuits of such nation, to the amount of territory available in the region occupied by them, and to the claims of the white settlers.

5. That each reserve shall be held in trust for the use and benefit of the nation of Indians to which it has been allotted, and in the event of any material increase or decrease hereafter of the members of a nation occupying a reserve, such reserve shall be enlarged or diminished as the case may be, so that it shall bear a fair proportion to the members of the nation occupying it. The extra land required for any reserve shall be allotted from Crown lands, and any land taken off a reserve shall revert to the province.

6. That so soon as the reserve or reserves for any Indian nation shall have been fixed and determined by the commissioners as aforesaid, the existing reserves belonging to such nation, so far as they are not in whole or in part included in such new reserve or reserves so determined by the commissioners, shall be surrendered by the Dominion to the local Government so soon as may be convenient, on the latter paying to the former, for the benefit of the Indians such compensation for any clearings or improvements made on any reserve so surrendered by the Dominion and accepted by the province as may be thought reasonable by the commissioners aforesaid.

It will be observed that the preceding paragraphs Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 are substantially the same as those submitted in the memorandum of Mr. Walkem approved by the Order in Council of the British Columbia Government.

The undersigned would further recommend that each commissioner be paid by the Government appointing him; and that the third commissioner be allowed ten dollars per day while acting, and that his pay and other expenses be borne equally by the Dominion and the local Governments; and the undersigned would further recommend that if this memorandum be approved by your Excellency, a copy thereof and of the minute of Council passed thereon be communicated to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia for the consideraation of his Government, and that another copy be placed in Your Excellency's hands for transmission to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The whole respectfully submitted.

(Sgd) R. W. Scott,
Acting Minister of the Interior.

That Order in Council, I think, represents the situation existing at that time. As a result of that, the Commission was appointed which proceeded to set apart the reserves in British Columbia. But of course they did not deal with the question of the aboriginal title, which has been in the minds of the Indians for a long time. The policy of the provincial government throughout had been that they did not recognize any title of that kind. It was presumably when the Indians of British Columbia came to know more about what was done in the rest of Canada, probably as a result of the province coming into Confederation, that they became more interested in the question of the aboriginal title, and found that the Indians in other parts of Canada had had arrangements made with them whereby their title was surrendered. If I understand it aright, that was the policy of the Dominion Government throughout the whole of Canada outside of British Columbia, and it has been because of the attitude of the province of British Columbia in this matter that the question has never been settled in that province. But I find that a surrender was made in one particular case in the year 1899, when the Dominion Government made arrangements about the land in the Peace River area. It was before the province of Alberta was established, and when the land was in the hands of the Dominion Government. An arrangement was made with the Indians for the surrender of the Indian title to certain lands in the northern part of British Columbia. Whether that was done without the knowledge of the province of British Columbia, or whether it was done under an agreement between the provincial government and the Dominion, I am not in a position to state. The situation as I see it, therefore, is a rather peculiar one, inasmuch as in one part of the province certain arrangements have been made with the Indians and in the rest of the province the whole matter has been ignored or treated in the way that I have endeavoured to describe.

Honourable gentlemen will understand that this may lead to confusion in the mind of the Indian. He probably does not distinguish between the provincial and the Dominion Government. He looks upon both Governments as the representatives of the Crown. One of the Indians, who was in Ottawa a short time ago and who comes from the Shuswap Reserve, which is nearest to my part of the country, said when he came to see me that he considered the Government as representing the King and he looked to the King to treat him fairly and properly. That, I think, is the attitude of the Indians with regard to all matters of this kind, that they look upon the Government, whether provincial or Dominion, only as representing the King of England, and they are not able to distinguish the nice differences existing as between the provincial Government and the Dominion.

In the other House a petition was presented by the Indian tribes; and in order that honourable gentlemen may understand this matter, it might be well to read the words of that petition. It reads as follows:

1. The Indian tribes of British Columbia have always claimed tribal ownership of their respective territories under aboriginal title and the Proclamation issued by King George Third in the year 1763.

2. In the year 1875 by report of the then Minister of Justice of Canada adopted by the then Governor General of Canada in Council it was declared that the land claims of the Indian tribes of British Columbia are well founded and that those tribes are entitled to an interest in all the lands of that province.

3. The then Government of the province of British Columbia and succeeding governments of that province refused to recognize the land rights so declared, and proceeded to deal with the lands of British Columbia as the absolute property of the province, notwithstanding the fact that in the year 1875 the then Land Act of the province had been disallowed upon the ground that its provisions ignored the land rights of the Indian tribes.

4. The present position of the Indian land controversy which thus arose and has ever since continued is shown by the following extract from the statement of the Allied Tribes prepared at the request of the present Premier of British Columbia and presented to him on 13th December last:—

"By means of the direct and independent petition of the Nishga tribes we now have our case before His Majesty's Privy Council. We claim that we have a right to a hearing, a right which has now been made clear beyond any possibility of doubt. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when Prime Minister, on behalf of Canada, met the Indian tribes of northern British Columbia, and promised without any condition whatever that the land controversy would be brought before the Judicial Committee. Moreover, the Duke of Connaught, acting as His Majesty's representative in Canada, gave positive written assurances that if the Nishga tribe should not be willing to agree to the findings of the Royal Commission, His Majesty's Privy Council will consider the Nishga petition. In view of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's promise and the Duke of Connaught's assurances, both of which confirm what we regard as our clear constitutional right, we confidently expect an early hearing of our case."

5. By communication which on 27th May, 1918, the London agents of the Nishga tribe addressed to the then Lord President of His Majesty's Privy Council, it was submitted on behalf of all tribes allied in support of the Nishga petition, among other things as follows:

"They are unwilling to be bound by the agreement regarding reserves mentioned in the petition which was made in the year 1912 between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, as therein stated, 'as a final adjustment of all matters relating to Indian affairs in the province of British Columbia,' and under which the findings of the Royal Commission have been made. On the contrary, the allied tribes contend that both that agreement and the Order in Council adopting it which was passed on 27th November, 1912, are beyond the power of the Government of Canada."

3. Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that your honourable body do not read a second time said Bill No. 13, until all matters above set out and related matters shall have been fully considered by your honourable body.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Peter Calder, of Nishga tribe.
George Matheson, of Tsimpshian tribe.
Peter R. Kelley, of Haida tribe.
Basil David, of Shuswap tribe.

All representing the Allied Indian tribes of British Columbia.

Dated at Ottawa, the 23rd day of March in the year 1920.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK.

The Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has placed in my hands the reply of the department to that petition. It would take too long to read the whole of it, but I would like to read a part of it. in reply to the second and third clauses of the petition the department says:

In order to understand the bearing of these clauses, and to appreciate the erroneous statements or implications made therein, it is necessary to state the facts with reference to the entry of British Columbia into Confederation.

I do not think that I need go into the whole question; it would take up too much of the time of the House; but on page 6 of this reply it is stated:

The reference in Clause 3 of the petition presented to the House of Commons this session regarding the disallowance of the Crown Lands Act of the Province of British Columbia in 1875 is so slight as to be misleading. What occurred at that time cannot be understood without an extended explanation. I am attaching hereto a copy of the documents as they are printed in Hodgin's collection,—"Dominion and Provincial Legislation, 1867 to 1875," page 1014 et seq. By an Order in Council of the 16th March, 1875, this Act was disallowed because the Indian title had not been ceded. It will be observed that the memorandum of the Minister of Justice states that:—

"It is not necessary now to inquire whether the lands to the west of the Rocky Mountains and bordering on the Pacific Ocean form part of the lands claimed by France, and which, if such claim were correct, would have passed by cession to England, under the Treaty of 1763, or whether the title of England rests on any other ground, nor is it necessary to consider whether that proclamation covered the land now known as British Columbia. It is sufficient for the present purposes, to ascertain the policy of England in respect to the acquisition of the Indian territory rights, and how entirely that policy has been followed to the present time, except in the instance of British Columbia."

The memorandum also states that the policy "of obtaining surrenders at this lapse of time and under the altered circumstances of the province may be questionable." The assertion of the claims was, on the part of the Minister of Justice, made as a matter of duty.

The Crown Lands Act was disallowed; meanwhile negotiations had taken place between the two Governments and a working basis on which the reserves were to be set aside had been fixed and the decisions were incorporated in joint Orders in Council. This arrangement having been made the matter was further considered by the Dominion Government, and the Honourable Edward Blake, then Minister of Justice, recommended that the Act should be allowed to go to its operation. He stated as follows:—

"Although the undersigned cannot concur in the view that the objections taken are entirely removed by the action referred to; and, though he is of opinion that, according to the determination of council upon the previous Crown Lands Act, there remains serious question as to whether the Act now under consideration is within the competence of the provincial legislature, yet since, according to the information of the undersigned, the statute under consideration has been acted upon, and is being acted upon largely in British Columbia, and great inconvenience and confusion might result from its disallowance; and, considering that the condition of the question at issue between the two governments is very much improved since the date of his report, the undersigned is of opinion that it would be the better course to leave the Act to its operation.

"It is to be observed that this procedure neither expresses nor impliedly waives any right of the Government of Canada to insist that any of the provisions of the Act are beyond competence of the local legislature, and are consequently inoperative."

Many amendments to the Crown Lands Act of the province have since been made and allowed by the Dominion Government.

The matter stood thus until the appointment of the commission. Amongst other reasons given in the general report of the commission, on page 17, the commission state:

The Land Act of 1875 provided for the conveyance of lands to the Dominion Government "in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians." By Section 9, of Chapter 38 of the Statutes of 1899, an amendment was made by adding to the provision in the Land Act these words "and in trust to reconvey the same to the Provincial Government in case such lands at any time ceased to be used by such Indians." In 1911 this enactment was made:

"Provided always that it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to at any time grant, convey, quit claim, sell or dispose of, on such terms as may be deemed advisable, the interest of the province, reversionary or otherwise, in any Indian reserve or any portion thereof."

In the previous year the following had been enacted:

"There shall not be registered in any Land Registry Office any title derived from His Majesty the King in the right of Canada . . . . . land forming part, or that at any time formed part, of an Indian reserve, without the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council."

Honourable gentlemen will see from that the kind of entanglements that had arisen as between the Dominion and provincial Governments; and, as it states here:

To remove the administrative entanglement thus occasioned and to provide for the final and complete allotment of lands for Indians in British Columbia, the agreement hereinbefore quoted in full was entered into by the Governments of the Dominion and the province, and this Commission was appointed thereunder.

As my honourable friend has said, this Commission has gone very fully into the question of these reserves, and has cut off parts in some places and added on in others. I understand that when the Commission was sitting in British Columbia the question was raised by the Indians as to the title referred to by their petition, and the Commission stated that they had no power under the terms of their appointment to deal with that question. The matter was left in that way, and the Indians of course could not deal with the question before the Commission.

But now, if I understand the situation aright, what the Indians fear in this Bill, should it become law, is that they will be entirely put out of court, and be unable to proceed on any question of title, and I am in hopes that before this Bill goes through the Senate my honourable friend will allow the matter to be discussed before a special Committee, in order that honourable gentlemen who are interested in this matter and who realize that it is not a good thing to allow these people to feel that consideration has not been given to what they have had to say, may be enabled to discuss the question.

My honourable friend referred to the fact that the question had been brought up in another place. I do not exactly understand how that has been done, except in the discussion on another Bill. The Bill before the Committee in another place is Bill 14, which deals with different matters to those dealt with in this particular Bill. Of course, it may be possible that the Chairman of the Committee allowed these people to come forward and make a statement; but Bill 13 would not be before the Committee, and, under the rules of the House, I do not see how it could be discussed.

There is another feature in regard to this matter which I think requires considerable consideration: that is the quesiton of the fishing and hunting rights of the Indians, and matters of that kind. Honourable gentlemen will remember that yesterday I referred to the Treaty lately made between the Dominion and the United States with relation to salmon fishing on the Pacific coast. That Treaty was drawn up for the purpose of restoring, if possible, conditions in the Fraser river. For years past the numbers of fish going up the Fraser river have been very much depleted from year to year. As honourable gentlemen know, these Indian reserves in British Columbia, especially those set apart in the early days, were nearly all along the banks of the Fraser river. That was the line of travel taken by the early settlers going into British Columbia for the purpose of opening up the mines and minerals of that country, and therefore the traveller came more quickly into contact with those Indians than with Indians in other parts of the province. The Indians on those reserves had naturally fishing rights, and now that the salmon that run up the Fraser river have become so depleted the Indians do not get anything like the same quantity of fish that they got in former times. That difficulty is recognized by the Fishery Superintendent of the Provincial Government. In the report that he made to the provincial Government in 1918 he used these words:

> The right of the Indians to take salmon is unquestioned, but the number of salmon they can now catch is so small as to be of little benefit to them. Owing to the fact that most of the Indians now grow the bulk of the food they use and are no longer dependent upon salmon, and that drastic measures must be taken to restore the runs of salmon to the Fraser, the Government should step in and acquire by purchase the Indians' right to take fish above the commercial boundaries. It is suggested that the Indians, if deliberately approached, would dispose of their fishing rights to the Government, and that the Government is fully warranted in entering upon negotiations to acquire those rights. The sooner the better.
>
> It is self-evident that salmon taken from the vicinity of their spawning grounds are much more valuable, individually and collectively, than the fish taken within commercial fishing waters. Sockeye that were worth 75 cents each to commercial fishermen on the Fraser the past year are worth many times that amount to the spawning grounds. The runs of the future depend upon the number of eggs deposited and hatched within the river's basin. The female sockeye of the Fraser produce averagely 2,500 eggs each.
>
> It has been suggested that the Indians be deprived of their right to fish above commercial fishing boundaries, and in lieu thereof be aided to do all their fishing within commercial limits. Possibly the Indians in the delta of the Fraser and those resident south and west of Yale might operate to advantage and fairly economically. The suggestion is wholly impracticable so far as the great majority of the Indians are concerned. Very few of the Indians from the Chilcotin or north of Bridge river have ever engaged in fishing within commercial waters. For them to journey, with women, who do all of the work of dressing and smoking the fish, from their homes to tidal waters and then back again with their bales of dried fish would cost the Government many times more than to purchase and transport a far greater supply of other foods for the use of the Indians at home.
>
> The Indians of the Fraser are reasonable beings. There are many clear-headed men in their councils. If this matter be taken up with them in a deliberate, clear and painstaking manner, it is advanced that they would soon see the benefits to be derived by disposing of their fishing rights. Their right at the present time is of little value to the most of them, and is steadily lessening in value. Many of them realize this to be true. The Government should act in this matter without further delay; the expense to be covered from the collection made for fishing licenses.

That is an expression of opinion from an official of the Provincial Government who has had some considerable experience of fishing conditions on the Fraser river and the rivers tributary to it. Honourable gentlemen will notice that he refers to the spawning grounds, which, of course, are a long way back in the country, and the fact that it is hardly likely that the Indians who have been brought up in that part of the country, and who probably have never been down to the coast at all, would care to transfer themselves from a point like Shuswap lake, which is perhaps 280 or 290 miles from Vancouver, down to Vancouver or the mouth of the Fraser river in order to catch fish and take them all the way back to Shuswap lake to the reserve there for the purpose of having a store of smoked fish for the winter supply, in accordance with the system which they have followed in regard to the fish which they use for food in the winter. The Indians seem to fear the portion of the Act which says:

> and for giving effect to the report of the said Royal Commission, either in whole or in part, and for the full and final adjustment and settlement of all differences between the said Governments respecting Indian lands and Indian affairs in the province.

They seem to fear that this will cut them out of a settlement of their fishing and other rights to which they think they are entitled. Then in the past certain arrangements have been made touching Indian reserves which have not been conducted along altogether satisfactory lines; and the question of the value of the reserves and the amount of money that has been paid for them has also stirred up a certain amount of feeling amongst the Indians that they have not been properly dealt with.

I have been so long in dealing with this matter that I do not want to take up time at present to go into any particular question of that kind; but I think it is a matter that should be taken up and gone into if we have a Committee to deal with this Bill.

As stated in the petition which I read to the House, the question of Indian title was brought to the notice of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I think at the time of his visit to Prince Rupert; and I understand that he took the view that the best way of dealing with the question was to have it referred to the Privy Council. I think it is correct to say that the attitude of the Dominion Government from the time that British Columbia came into Confederation up to within two or three years ago was that there was something to be considered in regard to the question of Indian title. The provincial Government took a different view, and in consequence the question could not be dealt with. But in view of the condition of unrest throughout the country, I think it is important that the Government should consider this question, and that the Indians should feel that they are being fairly treated and that proper consideration is being given to what they deem to be a fair claim on their part. I trust my honourable friend will agree to allow this Bill to go to a special Committee so that these questions may be gone into and so that honourable members of this House may understand the matter more clearly than I have been able to put it before them this afternoon from the documents which I have read to the House.

I feel that I should apologize to the House for having taken so much time this afternoon in dealing with this matter; but I think it is a very important matter and that the House should very carefully consider the whole bearing of the question and the effect it may have if we come to a conclusion hurriedly and without proper consideration.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? If this Bill is passed, what effect will it have on the treaties already in existence between the Government and the Indians, or will it have any effect at all?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There was no treaty made with the Indians of British Columbia except in the case of the one I referred to, which was made by the Dominion Government in 1899.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Will the passage of this Bill affect that treaty?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No, I do not think it will have any effect on that treaty at all. The point is, if this Bill goes through as a final settlement of the whole question between the provincial Government and the Dominion Government, whether, if the question should be brought up in any way again and the conclusion arrived at that the Indians had certain rights, the Dominion Government, representing the Indians, would be in a position to get any consideration from the provincial Government. This being a final settlement between the Dominion Government and the provincial Government, the provincial Government would say: "We have washed our hands of the whole thing; we have made a final settlement, and the question rests in the hands of the Dominion Government;" and the Dominion Government has no lands outside of the railway belt in British Columbia at all.

Hon. GEO. McHUGH: Honourable gentlemen, when this Bill first came up I was very much pleased to hear the leader of the Government say that he was going to hold it over for consideration with Bill 14. I felt that in that he was acting very generously toward the Indians, and that their rights might be considered; and I thought that it was in his mind to grant a special Committee of the House to consider the two Bills together, as there is an interweaving of the interests of the Indians of British Columbia, as dealt with in Bill 13, and those of the other Indians of the Dominion of Canada, as dealt with in Bill 14. I am sorry that the honourable gentleman has found it necessary to change his mind in that respect. I do not know whether he has done so because Bill 14 has not yet been reached or because he perhaps thinks that it will not be reached in time to consider the two Bills together in the way I have mentioned.

However, I think it is a very important matter. There are not many Indians in my part of the country; but from what I have known of them for a long time I have always had a kindly feeling towards them. I have felt that Canada is big enough and the people of this country ought to feel generous enough to deal with them not only justly but generously.

There is one thing in this Bill that I view with some alarm, that is, the overriding of clause 49 of the Indian Act of 1906. The Government is taking from the Indians the right to be consulted regarding the reduction or cut-off of any reserve. By clause 49 of the Indian Act of 1906 male Indians over 21 years of age, in a band, on a reserve, had to consent by vote to any reduction or cut-off being made in their reserve. This Bill takes away from them that right, and, I think, places it within the power of the Government to make any reduction that they may see fit. Some person, perhaps a covetous rancher or lumberman, may see in the reserve a good place for a ranch, or a good timber limit, that i not used by the Indians, and he may appeal to the Government that this portion of the reserve ought to be sold; and, without consulting the Indians at all, or giving them any right to say whether it should be taken from them or not, it may be cut off.

There are clauses in Bill 14 which overlap provisions in this Bill regarding the reduction of reserves and which could be dealt with better if the two Bills were before us. I would very much regret to see the reserves reduced, because they are mere patches of the former holdings of the Indians. They have been shoved back on their reserves, and now, if they want those reserves kept intact and not broken up, by sale or otherwise, I think they have a right to have their wishes respected. Before any of the reserves are broken up the Indians ought to be consulted. If you take away from them their homes you are going to see in this country, I think, what you never saw before, that is, tramp Indians. To my mind the Indians' right in the reserve should be respected just as much the title that any individual may have to a piece of land that he has bought from the Crown.

I know that there are many Indians quite capable of placing their views on this question before Parliament, and I do not think that this House or any other body can obtain too much information when dealing with an important question of this kind, relating to the settlement of affairs between the white people and the Indians The Indians should be given an opportunity of being heard, and I do hope that the honourable the Minister will see his way clear to grant a Committee in this case, and, if he does, I would prefer to see the two Bills dealt with by that Committee at the same time. I would like to see the honourable leader of the House take the stand that the rights of the Indians should be protected in that way. Mind you, it is an overriding of the Indian Act of 1906 to undertake to make cut-offs or reductions in a reserve without obtaining the consent of the majority of the male Indians on that reserve. It is a serious matter and ought to be seriously considered.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee of the whole House on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand my honourable friend will not refer it to a special Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no. The whole Senate can deal with it better than a special Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION (DEPORTATION) BILL.

DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING FURTHER ADJOURNED.

On the Order: Resuming the further adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson for the second reading Bill X2, an Act to amend the Immigration Act (Deportation of Undesirable Persons), and the motion in amendment thereto, by the Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton, that the said Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read this day six months.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, before proceeding to discuss the matter that is now before us, I would ask the permission of this honourable House to make a suggestion. This is a very important question. Perhaps no question of greater importance has come before this House since Confederation. Indeed, it is part and parcel of the constitution of this country. I would therefore suggest to the honourable the Minister of Labour to permit me to move the adjournment of this debate until Tuesday, because, as you all see, we have a very small House, little more than a quorum, and it would be unfair to take a vote on the question in this House to-day.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I desire that every member of this House should have an opportunity to express his views and sentiments, both by speaking upon the question and by voting upon it. I have therefore no objection if my honourable friend desires that the Bill stand until Tuesday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crosby, the debate was adjourned.

DIRECTOR OF COAL OPERATIONS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, the Senate went into Committee on Bill O3, an Act respecting the Director of Coal Operations. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—ratification of Orders in Council respecting Director of coal operations:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understood the honourable the Minister of Labour was going to give us the report of the Minister of Justice on this question. I think he promised yesterday to bring that down for my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt).

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If I remember correctly, I assured my honourable friend from Ottawa that the Bill had been before the Governor in Council and had been referred to the Justice Department and approved by that department—both by the minister personally and by the deputy minister, who had reviewed it. The honourable member from Ottawa did not see fit to accept my word that that was the case; he is not here to-day; and I am sorry if the House is of the view that I understood was held by my honourable friend from Ottawa. The Bill was referred to and approved by the Department of Justice and is now before this House for consideration.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think, if I may say so, there is a little difference between the honourable the Minister of Labour and my honourable friend from Ottawa. I was myself under the impression—and I think the honourable member from Ottawa was also—that the minister had a written opinion from the Department of Justice. From what he says now I gather that there was no written opinion; that the Bill was simply referred to the Minister of Justice and discussed by him, as to whether it was ultra vires of this Parliament or not. Is it correct to infer that there was really no written opinion given on the matter?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I made no statement to the effect that the Minister of Justice or the Department of Justice had expressed a definite opinion upon the constitutionality of the Bill. I simply stated that the Bill had been referred to the Department of Justice after it had been approved by the Governor in Council, to see that it was in proper legal form for presentation. The Justice Department returned the proposed Bill to me. The Minister of Justice personally handed me a memorandum to the effect that the department saw no objection to the Bill and regarded it as proper to be proceeded with. I did not give any intimation that the Justice Department had expressed any particular opinion, in writing, as to the constitutionality of the Bill. I do, however, express to the Committee the view that there can be no question on that point, because district 18, over which the Coal Director's authority extends, is in two provinces; because the coal that is produced from those mines is exported to three different provinces as well as to the United States; and because almost all of the coal lands which are affected are owned by the Federal Government. It is not a provincial matter; it is absolutely interprovincial. The people of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are absolutely dependent upon this coal to keep themselves alive during the long winter months. This Bill is in keeping with the authority of the Federal Government under the British North America Act, section 91. It is in the interest of peace, order, and good government to exercise this control, which during the past two years has prevented hardship and catastrophe that otherwise, I am sure, would have occurred, and that the people of the West agree would have occurred. It is proposed to continue that control and prevent any unfortunate occurrence happening to the people in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba particularly, who are dependent on this coal which is not within their own boundaries. I feel, honourable gentlemen, that there can be absolutely no question as to the right of this Parliament to deal with this question. The Bill simply continues the machinery which has been in operation for three years, which has worked satisfactorily, and which all parties interested ask to have continued until the end of the next Session of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I have no doubt that what my honourable friend says is perfectly correct, that this arrangement should be carried on; but the difference in the position as I see it is this, that those Orders in Council dealing with this matter were passed by the Government under the War Measures Act, which applied when conditions were very different from what they are to-day; and now the Minister is asking us to do by legislation what was done by Order in Council under that Act. The difficulty in the situation as I understand it is that this proposed legislation is an interference with civil rights, which, under the British North America Act, are entirely in the hands of the Provincial Governments. The Bill, I understand, deals very largely with questions regarding the hours of labour, the price of the coal, and similar matters, which come under that clause of the British North America Act respecting property and civil rights. I do not claim to be in a position to discuss this question as legal gentlemen in this House could do; but I think that before passing legislation of this kind we ought to understand thoroughly what we are doing, and we ought to do it with our eyes open. There is a danger that this Bill may not be constitutional.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I presume my honourable friend is viewing this matter from the standpoint of sub-clause 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act, which does assign to provincial legislatures full jurisdiction respecting property and civil rights within the province. Sub-clause 2 of section 91 of the British North America Act, however, delegates to the Federal Parliament the absolute right to regulate trade and commerce. The production and the distribution of this coal are not provincial matters. The coal is produced in two different provinces and is transported to two other provinces as well as to foreign countries. This is therefore purely a matter of trade and commerce, solely within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will risk the constitutionality of it.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 and the schedule were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

EXCHEQUER COURT BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 108, an Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act. Hon. Mr. McMeans in the Chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—registrar, appointment and salary:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This is not appointing a new registrar?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; it simply enlarges the power of the registrar. The Governor in Council may delegate to him increased powers in the event of there being congestion of the work of the court.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Subsection 3 of new section 13 reads:

> There may from time to time be appointed such other officers, clerks, stenographers and servants as may be required, all of whom shall hold office during pleasure.

Under the old Act they used to be part of the Department of Justice, if I remember rightly. These would not be appointed as part of the Department of Justice?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So they would not come under the Civil Service Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think they would. There is no intention, so far as I know, to appoint any. This is simply the power of appointment for those particular offices.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They would come under the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would think so. Before we give the third reading to this Bill, I will make inquiries on that point. My impression is that the Civil Service Act extends to judicial officers of Dominion courts of that class.

Section 3 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

HONEY BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved concurrence in the amendments made by the House of Commons to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill 29, an Act respecting Honey.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Explain.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Apparently we passed the Bill without making proper provision for the imposition of a penalty, and the Commons simply inserts words to make it read in this way:

> Every one who is guilty of wilful adulteration of honey under section 2 or who violates any provision of section 3 of this Act is guilty of an offence, and liable upon summary conviction to the penalties provided by section 16 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1920.

I submitted this to the Law Clerk of the Senate, and he concurs in the amendment made in the Commons. It is necessary to embody this clause in the Bill; in fact, I cannot account for its absence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adourned until Tuesday next at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Tuesday, June 1, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill 14, an Act for the relief of George Emerson Fox.—Hon. Mr. Todd.

Bill J4, an Act for the relief of Edith Ellen Holmes Austin.—Hon. Mr. McMeans.

Bill L4, an Act for the relief of Ethelbert Gilmour Harris.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

Bill M4, an Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Wice.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill N4, an Act for the relief of Peter Sutherland Cowie—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill O4, an Act for the relief of Roy Bradley.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill P4, an Act for the relief of Joan Doran.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill Q4, an Act for the relief of Alexander Ross, Jr.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls

Bill R4, an Act for the relief of Jean Mary Sandford.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill K4, an Act respecting Dominion Trust Company.—Hon. Mr. Planta.

KAMLOOPS GOVERNMENT BUILDING SITE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired of the Government:

1. Does the Government own a building site at the southeast corner of Seymour street and 3rd avenue in the town of Kamloops?
2. Is this site the same as Lots 1 and 2 in Block 29 on which a church and frame house are located?
3. Is this site within the fire limits of the town?
4. How much has been paid for this site?
5. From whom was it purchased and for what purpose?
6. Who made the selection on behalf of the Government?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. No.
4. $15,000.00.
5. From James Roper Hull, as a site for a public building.
6. William Henderson, resident architect, Victoria, who examined a number of sites and recommended this one.

STARKEY DIVORCE PETITION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That Exhibits Nos. 2 to 11, both inclusive, filed during the Session of 1918, at the hearing and inquiry into the petition of Walter Starkey, of the village of Star City, Saskatchewan, for a Bill of Divorce form Mary Elizabeth Starkey, of the said village, be returned to Counsel for the Respondent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I say to my honourable friend that I am informed that the exhibits in question are being held for production in proceedings in the Manitoba courts. I have no further information upon the subject than a memorandum which has been placed upon my desk to that effect. Whether the Committee has been informed of the fact, or whether proceedings have been taken to have them held, I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not think there is any serious objection to allowing these records to go from the Senate, but if there is, I have no objection to moving that the question be referred to our Committee on Divorce, and that they report back to the Senate. It seems to me that probably is the most regular way.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER: With the permission of the House I move that the motion be referred to the Committee on Divorce and that they report back to the Senate.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

DIRECTOR OF COAL OPERATIONS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill O3, an Act respecting the Director of Coal Operations.—Hon. Mr. Robertson.

EXCHEQUER COURT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 108, an Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

DIVORCE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill A4, an Act for the Relief of Albert Ernest Bulley.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

Bill B4, an Act for the Relief of Beatrice Booth Gendron.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill C4, an Act for the relief of Mary Oakley.—Hon. Mr. Gordon.

Bill D4, an Act for the relief of Margaret Elizabeth Cooper.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill E4, an Act for the relief of Catherine Burfoot.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill F4, an Act for the relief of Margaret Henrietta Pettit.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill G4, an Act for the relief of Thomas Lindsay Thacker.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill H4, an Act for the relief of John Durose.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

SUPREME COURT BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 100, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I ask the permission of the Committee to bring within the Bar Mr. Cameron, the Registrar of the Court.

On section 1—final judgment:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend tell us just what is the meaning of the alteration in this section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that in the province of Quebec a different interpretation is placed upon the term "final judgment" to what is placed upon it in the other provinces. It is very largely of a technical character. A judgment may be final in the province of Quebec that would not be regarded as final in the other provinces. It is proposed therefore that finality should be reached on all judgments, entirely irrespective of any technical meaning that may be attached to the term, and to bring into uniformity all the provinces of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not think that the meaning of this paragraph is altogther free of doubt. It says:

> "Final judgment" means any judgment, rule, order or decision which determines in whole or in part any substantive right of any of the parties in controversy in any judicial proceeding.

If you leave out the words "or in part," then we know what it means; but any judgment is liable to decide in part a question before the court. I think there should be a little more light upon that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For instance, there may be two branches to any particular question, and the court may be able clearly to decide finally as to one of them. That finality may not extend to the other questions which may arise, but the court pronounces a final judgment upon that particular question. That is to say, a series of questions, or a series of legal propositions, may be in controversy. So long as there is finality given to it, and it cannot again arise in that court, the judgment is final.

Hon Mr. PROUDFOOT: To what extent is that intended to affect the existing law?

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I pointed out, there is a distinction between the province of Quebec and the other provinces; there is an absence of uniformity as to that particular term. The consequence is that if a question arose in Ontario, similar to one which might be brought before the Supreme Court from the province of Quebec, it would not be appealable because it was not the final judgment.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Under this new section, would a party to litigation, where a portion of any substantive right was determined, have a right to appeal without the final determination of the question having taken place?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, there would have to be a final adjudication of the entire issue between the parties before there could be an appeal.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is not my understanding of the wording of this subsection.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, it might have relation only to part of a substantive right. That is to say, the whole question might not be in issue.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH STAUNTON: The clause is not in any way extending the meaning is it? It is just explaining it, is it not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On the 6th of June, 1913, the former clause in the Act was amended. I will read from the Act as it is now:

> Save as regards appeals from the province of Quebec, final judgment means any judgment, rule, order or decision which determines in whole or in part any substantive right of the parties in controversy.

The difference between the law as it stands now and as it stood then is that the province of Quebec is taken out of the exception, and is included with the other provinces of Canada.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Then there will be no exception at all after this.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On new section 35—jurisdiction throughout Canada:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is the amendment in this?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might say that a number of these sections are repealed on account of their representing amendments to the Supreme Court Act passed over a series of years. Some seven or eight sections deal with subjects which under the proposed amendments will be consolidated or rendered more compact in the new sections which are proposed. This section is as it stood before. It is precisely the same as in the present Act.

New section 35 was agreed to.

On new section 36—appeals from court of last resort:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH STAUNTON: Is this the same?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, there is a change. Section 36 in the Act as it stands to-day reads as follows:

> Except as hereinafter otherwise provided, an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any final judgment of the highest court of final resort now or hereafter established in any province of Canada, whether such court is a court of appeal or of original jurisdiction, in cases in which the court of original jurisdiction is a superior court: Provided that:
> (a) there shall be no appeal from a judgment in any case of proceedings for or upon a writ of habeas corpus, certiorari or prohibition arising out of a criminal charge or in any case of proceedings for or upon a writ of habeas corpus, arising out of any claim for extradition made under any treaty; and
> (b) there shall be no appeal in a criminal case except as provided in the Criminal Code. Revised Statutes, etc.

The only material changes being made in the section which we are now considering are in relation to the transfer of the word "final" to subclause a, and the elimination of the words, "in cases in which the court of original jurisdiction is a superior court." Other changes are purely verbal or formal. The restrictions in regard to the origin of appealable proceedings is removed, in order to bring in cases now covered by section 37.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: There is no intention apparently under section 36 to extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in capital cases.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think the jurisdiction should be extended. At the present time a man may be convicted of murder or some other very serious offence whereby he may be deprived of his life, yet he has no appeal to the Supreme Court. I think he should have an appeal. According to the law as it stands at present, if $1,001 is involved, in the province of Ontario, an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court. Under the present Bill the minimum is increased to $2,000. Yet, while his life may be at stake—and some people consider life of more importance to a man than the question of one thousand or two thousand dollars—he has no appeal. I think there should be appeal in other cases, but I certainly am of opinion that there should be, to commence with, an appeal to the Supreme Court in capital cases, and I will move that the clause be amended to that effect.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is so large a question as to involve a question of policy, which could not be very well dealt with in the Bill now before us: it would have to be taken up by itself. Of course, there could be an enlarged jurisdiction given to the Supreme Court, beyond that which is provided for in the Criminal Code, by which a case might be reserved and sent to the court of appeal or to the full court in the province, and from there to the Supreme Court. I understand the present practice to be that if the accused have one judge with him, an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is, if there is a dissenting judge.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. If we are going to deal with the subject of enlarging that jurisdiction and making the Supreme Court an appellate court of criminal jurisdiction, I think it should be taken up separately. My honourable friend might very well have discussed it in connection with the Bill which was introduced a short time ago by my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. McMeans) dealing with the review of criminal cases and the reduction or extension of sentences by the full court of the province. It would have been very germane to the discussion on that Bill. My honourable friend will be at liberty to take up the question at any other time, but it cannot be appropriately taken up at present.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It struck me that, when dealing with the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, this would be a very good time to make the change. Then we would not be tinkering with the Act. The subject of an appeal in criminal cases is not a new one. It has been discussed to a considerable extent by lawyers throughout the province of Ontario and, I think, in other portions of the Dominion; and, while it may not be satisfactory to amend an Act brought down, as this one has been, by the Minister of Justice, yet it seems to me that it is very worthy of consideration and that this is the proper time to make the amendment.

New section 36 was agreed to.

On section 37—appeals from other than court of last resort:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Section 37 deals with appeals from other than the highest court of last resort in the province, and makes provisions as to the conditions in which appeals shall lie.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Before the adoption of section 37 I would like to understand what change that makes in the Act as it stands at present. You will observe that it provides "that an appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court from any final judgment of a provincial court, whether of appellate or original jurisdiction, other than the highest court of final resort in the province." What I do not understand in that language is this. May an appeal be taken direct from the trial judge to the Supreme Court without going to the Court of Appeal, for instance, in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This makes provision whereby you may go from the trial court to the Supreme Court without appealing to the highest court of final resort. Section 37, as it is now, deals with an entirely different class of case. It is not perhaps so much an amendment to the existing section as a following in rotation of the new procedure or the new jurisdiction which is being laid down by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It strikes me that it is not a very wise procedure to enlarge the jurisdiction so that an appeal may be taken direct from the trial judge. I think it is very much better that the appeal should take the ordinary course going to the Court of Appeal before being sent to the Supreme Court. You will find that the Supreme Court will be burdened with a great many appeals which otherwise would never reach it, and many of which now go to the Court of Appeal in the province. I am speaking more particularly of the province of Ontario. This amendment is, I think, not a step in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: An appeal from a trial judge will often bring only the same result as in the original court. Rightly or wrongly you may consider the decision erroneous, and, by permission of the Appellate Court, or the highest court of the province, you may go directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. Every practising barrister who has had to do appellate work knows that if he goes to the highest court in his own province it is almost impossible to change the decision already rendered; yet the parties to that previous decision do not see fit to carry it to the highest court of Canada. The appellate court, or the highest court in the province, renders its decision, and the litigant says: "I am not satisfied with that decision: I want to go straight to the Supreme Court." I think that by sending it direct to the Supreme Court there will be a saving of considerable expense to the litigent.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Do I understand from what my honourable friend has said that at the present time there is no such power as is given by this clause? Is it a fact that at the present time it is necessary to go from the trial judge to the appeal court of the province before going to the Supreme Court? Is that the position?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes, practically.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There was power before.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: There was a certain power before.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So the clause practically makes no change.

New section 37 was agreed to.

New sections 38, 39 and 40 were agreed to.

On new section 41—leave of provincial court of last resort:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If one party says there is $2,000 in dispute, can the other side not dispute that? It can be proven by affidavit, but has the opponent the right to file an affidavit to dispute the claim?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I would ask the Committee to go back for a moment to paragraph b of section 37, which deals with the amount involved.

On paragraph b of new section 37—where over $2,000 involved:

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That section provides:

> "Where the amount or value of the matter in controversey in the appeal exceeds the sum of two thousand dollars without leave but by consent in writing of the parties or their solicitors verified by affidavit. . .

I think the statute as it stands at present fixes the amount of $1,000 so far as the province of Ontario is concerned.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: And this is going to have the effect of doing away with probably one-third or one-half of the appeals that come from that province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But I might point out that under section 41 the leave of the court may be secured. An appeal to the Supreme Court will lie if the highest court of final resort gives leave to appeal, but not by right.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is quite true. I understand that is the effect of the other section. But the point is this, and this is why I complain of the change. It is almost as expensive to apply to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not to the Supreme Court; the court of appeal.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is not as expensive to apply to the court of appeal for leave, but it involves a considerable amount of expense; it involves argument—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: A chamber motion before a single judge.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It involves argument on the appeal. I think it is rather absurd that a judge in chambers should have the right to say whether or not a party may go to the Supreme Court with an action of this kind. I think there was no call for the change, so far as the bar in Ontario is concerned. I have not heard a word of complaint from that bar. I think the law should remain as it is. Why should a man be obliged to apply for leave if he has a case in which he thinks he should appeal? He cannot appeal that case unless he gets the leave of some judge. I think it is unfair. I know that in many cases the question of jurisdiction has been brought before the registrar of the Supreme Court when an even $1,000 was involved, and it has been held by the Supreme Court that while a person might appeal for $1,000.01, he cannot without leave take an appeal when an even $1,000 is involved, and leave in such cases has frequently been refused. Without some request on the part of the bar of the province of Ontario, I do not think the Parliament of Canada should make a change of this nature, cutting down greatly, as it will, the number of appeals. One could very readily understand why a change of this nature would be made if the bar or the legislature of the province asked for it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But they will never do that. The bar will not ask for a limitation of appeals.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Oh, yes. Well, possibly not the bar; but the people were not saying anything. The bar is guided to a great extent by the opinion of the people who are interested in litigation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Undoubtedly.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You have great confidence in the bar.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Probably the honourable gentleman is speaking from the western point of view, which may be somewhat more enlightened than that of the province of Ontario. The Ontario bar probably takes a view of these things different from what is taken farther west. I think we should not make that change, and I move that the clause providing that the amount in controversy shall exceed $2,000 be struck out, and that the amount, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, be the same as it was, namely, $1,000.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Honourable gentlemen, I think that my honourable friend should remember that it is a very expensive matter to go to the Supreme Court. It costs a great deal to have the proceedings printed, and it has always seemed to me very improper that a case involving so small an amount as $1,000 should be carried from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, where the cost will certainly double the amount in issue. The Court of Appeal in the province of Ontario is composed of four or five able judges, men of large experience. The judges will always be men of large experience, and surely when the amount in controversy is only $1,000 they can be trusted to decide the rights of the parties. The last court is only the last guess anyway. I have known many cases go to the Supreme Court where the party who had the most judgments lost the case in the end. I think that by the time a person has had his case pass through the criticism of five judges he ought to be pretty well satisfied. I do not agree with my honourable friend that there is no feeling in Ontario that there should be a limit to appeals. In most civil cases, when the amount in issue is small, one appeal ought to be sufficient, especially for the man who wins. He does not want to take another chance at a loss. Then, these cases that go from the trial judge will always be cases which would not reach the Supreme Court anyway, because the Court of Appeal will not grant leave unless it is of opinion that when the case is disposed of in that court it will go on; but the parties will not consent unless they both are agreed that, no matter what the judgment of the Court of Appeal is, they will go on. I do think that the limitation of appeals from the provincial courts is a very wholesale amendment to the law.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend from Huron — or was it my honourable friend from Hamilton?— referred to an appeal to the Supreme Court as being a luxury. As honourable gentlemen know, we are trying to suppress luxuries at the present time, and I think that it is very desirable that this should be done. In the province of Ontario a thousand dollars is at issue. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) would have many thousands of dollars contracted in the way of costs to both parties for the purpose of deciding this question of $1,000. In the first place, the trial judge gives judgment. Then the case may go to the full court, and from the full court it may go to the Court of Appeal in the province. It may run the gamut of three courts in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Excuse me.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If the three courts in the province of Ontario are unequal to deciding regarding the $1,000, I doubt very much if the Supreme Court could settle the case more satisfactorily to the litigants. In the meantime many thousands of dollars would be spent in costs. As a matter of public policy, as a matter of public interest, as a matter of safety to the public, those appeals should not be countenanced by Parliament. As my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) has said, the judgment of the Appellate Court in Ontario is just as likely to be correct as the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada; and why multiply the expenditure of money and of effort, and why add to proceedings? That cannot be in the interest of the litigants.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The leader of the Government has just said that you appeal from the trial court to the Divisional Court and then to the Court of Appeal. Some years ago in the province of Ontario we did away with the Divisional Court, and there is only the one appeal to the Court of Appeal direct, and from there to the Supreme Court. I did not refer to an appeal as a luxury; that must have been my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), if the reference was made. I was looking upon an appeal more as a matter of right. Why deprive a man who can only afford the loss of one thousand dollars of the right of appeal and allow a man who can afford the luxury of a case of over two thousand dollars to go to appeal? A change that should be made in the interest of economy, if my honourable friend desires economy, is to cut down the costs of the Supreme Court. In going to the Supreme Court you have to print all the evidence, the pleadings, and everything pertaining to the action, in what is called an appeal book. In addition to that, each side has to prepare and have printed a factum. This printing costs considerable money. If it is economy we want, why should not the Supreme Court do as the Court of Appeal in the province of Ontario does—accept typewritten copies of the evidence? That would cut down the expense more than half. The honourable gentleman from Hamilton knows that the expense in connection with the printing of appeal books and the factum is a deterrent from going to the Supreme Court. I think it is unfair to litigants that the Supreme Court should be able to make rules involving very great expense. If we are going to amend the law, I think we ought to amend it in the way of economy, and not in the way of cutting down appeals.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is in the interest of the country that we should have as few appeals as possible, and for that reason, as a matter of public policy, we should make them as expensive as possible. In the United States—in Chicago, for instance—there are no costs recoverable. That means that the courts are absolutely overwhelmed with business, and it means a denial of justice. Men will bring actions over nothing. You cannot get an ordinary promissory note case tried in Chicago in less than three years, because there is no responsibility imposed upon a litigant. It only costs him $30 if he loses and in going into the litigation, he makes a bargain with his lawyer. A few years ago there were $30,000,000 of damage actions pending in the courts of Chicago.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: That is rather a reflection on your profession.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: In this country a man who goes to law has to count the cost, and he feels that if he loses his action, it will cost him $1,000.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Why not let him appeal if he wants to?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Because he is dragging his opponent on. If a man counts the cost he will settle with his neighbour in nine cases out of ten, and the more expensive litigation is the better, for it stops fighting.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Proudfoot was negatived, and paragraph e of new section 41 was agreed to.

Paragraph f of new section 41 was agreed to.

New sections 42 and 43 were agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—date of commencement of Act:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I was going to draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the Act which we put through the other day in reference to the Exchequer Court. In that Act I understand we raised the salary of the registrar. I see that section 14 of the Supreme Court Act says:

> The registrar shall have the rank of a deputy head of a department, and shall be paid a salary beginning on his appointment at three thousand five hundred dollars per annum, with an annual increase of one hundred dollars, until a maximum salary is reached of four thousand dollars.

I understand that the deputies of all departments have had their salaries increased to $6,000. I quite understand that the Senate is not in a position to deal with any question of that kind; but inasmuch as the salary of the Registrar of the Exchequer Court was increased in the Bill which was before us the other day, I want to know whether the Government has raised the question of whether or not the registrar of the Supreme Court should be placed in the same position.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I regret very much that I cannot give my honourable friend the information he asks. I was not in Council when the matter was taken up, and even if I had been I could not very well state on the floor of this House what took place. I am not aware whether any consideration has been given to that question. Furthermore, inasmuch as it would constitute a money clause, of course it could not originate in this Chamber. We are therefore helpless to meet the views expressed by my honourable friend.

Section 4 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE POSTPONED.

On the Order:

> Committee of the Whole House on Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.—(Hon. Sir James Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. POWER: Perhaps the honourable leader of the House would not object to letting this stand over for another day. I understand that back of the matter that is directly involved in the Bill there is the question of the Indian rights in lands in the province of British Columbia. That question has never been settled, and now that it has come up, I think it is desirable that an effort should be made to secure a final and satisfactory judgment. I should not have risen now but for the fact that it was only to-day that I received a pamphlet containing the case of the Indians with respect to lands in British Columbia; and, while I have no prejudice in favour of the Indians, still I should like very much to see what their case is before I take it upon me to put them out of court.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: I would ask the leader of the House to be kind enough to let this matter stand until to-morrow. This Bill was dealt with only in the last hour of Friday's sitting, and I would ask the leader of the Government to let it stand until to-morrow.

The Order was postponed until to-morrow.

IMMIGRATION (DEPORTATION) BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Senate resumed, from May 27, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson for the second reading of Bill X2, an Act to amend the Immigration Act (Deportation of Undesirable Persons), and the motion in amendment thereto by Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton, that the said Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read this day six months.

Hon. A. B. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, when this matter was last before the House I asked that the debate be adjourned until to-day. I might have said the few words that I have to say in regard to this matter on that occasion, but the honourable the mover of the amendment was not here, and, as I understood he would be here to-day—and I am glad to see that he is in his place—I mived the adjournment of the debate.

I think there has been an attempt on the part of some honourable gentlemen, not intentionally, to intimate that some of us in connection with this question are belittling the labour men of this country. Some of us are lauding labour men. I do not think the workingmen are interested in this Bill in any way, shape, or form. If I may be permitted to make a personal remark, I would say that I feel as close to the workingman as anyone can, either in this House or out of it. I am truly and sincerely of the working classes, and in the part of the Dominion from which I come I am sure there is not a workingman who would not have the greatest confidence in my taking the part that I conscientiously thought best in any matter coming before this Parliament.

The honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett), when discussing this matter the other day, made a statement which I am sure he could not have intended to make. It does not look well in Hansard, and I am sure that when he read it himself —if he has read it—he must have come to the conclusion that it would have been better not to have made it. He intimated that some of the members of this House who were supporting the amendment moved by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton did so because they had come to the conclusion that the workingmen of Canada were seething, and wanted to murder everyone, and burn down houses, and destroy everything. I will read his words, so that I shall not be misunderstood. Here is what the honourable gentleman said:

> One would imagine from the remarks of some honourable gentlemen that there was not a decent labouring man in Canada.

No honourable gentleman whom I heard speak in this House said anything upon which anyone could found an opinion of that kind. The honourable gentleman said:

> —that from one end of Canada to the other there was a seething mass of men who were out to murder, and burn down houses, and commit all sorts of crimes.

Surely there is nothing to warrant any such statement as that. It often happens that honourable gentlemen in endeavouring to put their views before the House rather try to put the views of other honourable gentlemen in such a way as to show that they are wrong.

Now, honourable gentlemen, what is the reason for this Act? How did it come to be placed on the statute book? It did not originate here. We did not say it was necessary, but we had a request. Where did that request come from? It came from the Government of the city of Winnipeg and the local Government of the province of Manitoba. The Government and the Opposition unanimously called for this legislation, and, as has been said before, this Act was passed in a very short time. How was that brought about? The leaders on both sides of this House, and the leaders on both sides of the other House, must have understood one another pretty well, and must have come to the conclusion that this was an important matter and that the Act must be put through at very short notice, in order to get control of affairs in Winnipeg at that time. The Act was put through in that way, and it was considered necessary, for we could not have got along without it. God knows what would have happened if it had not gone through. It was put through, and was a credit to the Parliament that put it through. When my honourable friend refers to the character of the men that this Act interferes with, and tries to make out that they are to be found among our working classes, he is wrong. The men who played leading parts in Winnipeg, and who were responsible for the introduction of this Act, were not workingmen of this country. They were agitators who came to this country upon the invitation of no one but themselves. They came here for a purpose, and they are the men whom we want to look after. As I say, the Bill was put through unanimously; one dissenting voice in either branch of Parliament would have prevented its passage. The representatives of the people of Canada in the other House and the representatives of the people of Canada in this branch unanimously decided to put the Act through.

Having gone so far why should we alter that Act? The honourable member from Simcoe read a despatch that appeared in the papers regarding some nominations which had been made in Winnipeg. What has happened in Winnipeg? The provincial government and the municipal government and the Committee of One Thousand were unanimous and united in their efforts to protect the civil rights of the people of that city. What happened after Mayor Gray was asked by the agitators to resign his position and hand it over to somebody else whom they would name? The agitators demanded also that Premier Norris leave his position, and they said they would name a man to take his place. There were intimations of assassination and all that sort of thing. My honourable friend from Simcoe reads to us a paragraph about the nominations that have been made in Winnipeg; but what do we find? The agitation took place in June, but in December of the same year Mayor Gray, who had played a noble part in this matter, appealed to the citizens of Winnipeg for election, and was returned by an overwhelming majority; by whom? By the working people of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Will the honourable gentleman allow me to interrupt him? The nominations referred to in the newspaper item which I read were not nominations for the municipal elections at all, but were in connection with the elections, which are to take place in a month, for the legislative assembly.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I followed the honourable gentleman very closely, and I know that that is what he read. He used that as an argument to indicate that a change had taken place in that community, and to show that these men were supported. I am telling the honourable gentleman now that nominations do not amount to anythinf, because when Mayor Gray, who played a prominent and laudable part, went to the people and contested the election in the city of Winnipeg he won by an overwhelming majority, as I have already said, and the majority was given him by the working classes of the city. It could not have been given by any other class. This is a country of workingmen. My honourable friend is an old politician, or at least he has had a little experience in matters of that, kind, and he knows very well that nominations do not mean very much. In fact, there never was an election in which at least one of the nominees did not amount to much. So I do not think that my honourable friend's argument regarding the nominations was a good one. I think I may speak for the working people of this country. I have as much right to assume to do that as any other honourable gentleman here. I am sure that the workingmen of this country have no sympathy for what took place in Winnipeg on the occasion which we are discussing. That being so, what harm can be done by leaving the Act as it is?

The honourable member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) took a good deal of trouble to find excuses for voting against the amendment. It took him a lnog time to find those excuses. I think he must have repented, for I do not see him in the House, and he evidently does not want to be here for the vote. I would like to read some of the honourable gentleman's reasons that prevented him from voting for the amendment. This is what the honourable gentleman said, after declaring that he had come to the conclusion not to vote for the amendment:

> First of all, my dislike, my fear, of the foreign agitator, especially the man who who has been called the international agitator—the man who carries on the nefarious business of agitating, sometimes in Canada, sometimes in the United States, and sometimes in Europe.

This is the man who is giving the honourable gentleman a great deal of worry. You will see by what the honourable gentleman says that he is worried.

> I hesitate also because of the tendency, which it seems to me is too much in evidence nowadays in Canada, that of pandering to, and endeavouring to meet the wishes of, the labour men in this country.

I think the honourable gentleman is wrong in that. If he had said the agitators of this country rather than the labour men, it would have been better. But he made that little mistake, and we shall have to forgive him for it. I suppose he will take that back as soon as he has an opportunity.

> Another reason which causes me to hesitate is my hatred—

Mark the word—

> —my hatred for most of the war legislation, especially the war Orders in Council, such as are by this Act continued indefinitely.

My honourable friend is such an eminent lawyer, a man of such high standing at the Bar in his own city and province, one would suppose he would have known that this had no connection whatever with the War Measures Act; that this was an Act that was put into force only last year, after the War Measures Act had gone out of existence—after the Orders in Council in connection with the War Measures Act had ceased. Yet the honourable gentleman gives as a reason for voting against the amendment, that this Bill is going to continue the War Measures Act. I say that the honourable gentleman's arguments are all distinctly in favour of the amendment moved by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton and against the repeal of the legislation which we passed a year ago.

Honourable gentlemen, if for a single moment I believed that the working classes of this country were in sympathy with what took place in Winnipeg last year, I would be proud to declare myself against the working classes. I consider myself as much a workingman as any other person in Canada, and as coming purely and simply from the working classes, and I feel confident that I voice their sentiments when I say that they had no sympathy with the disturbances in Winnipeg. Where did we find Mr. Moore, the head of the labour organizations of this country? Did you find him or any of his colleagues sympathizing with the agitators in any way whatever? No; you did not find them doing so, and they are not doing so to-day.

The Parliament that passed the legislation showed itself capable of dealing with emergencies as they arose; and let me say to you, honourable gentlemen, that there may not be again such a Parliament as this. You will have elections some time. There is no doubt. Some people say the election will be this year, some people say next year, and some say it would be better not to have any more elections. But whenever the elections come I doubt that you will have in this country a Parliament of the character of the men who passed the legislation of last Session because it was necessary for the proper government of this country. The honourable members of this House should consider carefully before repealing that Act. It is on the statute books because we were compelled to place it there. Therefore I say it ought to be allowed to remain there. It does not infringe upon the liberties of any man. I therefore declare myself in favour of the amendment moved by the honourable member for Hamilton. Had this not been so important a question I might not have said a word; but I consider this to be one of the most important matters that has come before this Parliament since Confederation. Never has such an Act been passed by the Parliament of Canada, with such concurrence or with a greater desire to safeguard the peace and welfare of this country. That was what the legislation was intended to do, and I am confident it has had that effect.

Hon. W. H. SHARPE: Honourable gentlemen, I too do not wish to give a silent vote on this question. I think it is one of the very important questions that have come before this House this Session. I would like to repeat the question which I asked the other day, and to which I did not receive a clear answer: Who is demanding this legislation? who is agitating for it? I am sure it is not the honest labourer or the good citizen of Canada; because under the law as it stands to-day, the honest labourer or the good citizen has nothing whatever to fear, in my opinion; but the men who are afraid of this, I take it, are the men who would be afraid they might be deported under the law. Now, let us look for a moment to see who may be deported. Men who advocate assassination; men who advocate the unlawful destruction of property; men who assume the authority of government; blackmailers, etc. Surely this young country of Canada can do without that class of people; and if they do happen to come within our borders, we are justified in enforcing a law whereby we may deport them, and deport them quickly. There is not a man belonging to the House of Commons or to this Chamber who wants to keep that class of people in Canada.

I must say that I was very much surprised at the Minister of Labour the other day stating that the honourable members of this House who had spoken against this Bill were making a charge against the labour people in Canada. There has been nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Will my honourable friend quote the statement from Hansard?

Hr. Mr. SHARPE: I shall be delighted. My honourable friend from Huron (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) was speaking, and he said:

> I do not think it is wise to bring it forward at the present time.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Pardon me. Read all the rest of what the honourable gentleman from Huron said.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I will read what is necessary:

> I think it is brought forward, not in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole, but in the interest of certain agitators who have made it their business—

And then he was interrupted by the Minister of Labour, who said:

> I want further to point out that different honourable gentlemen this afternoon have classed labour men generally with the men who have been guilty of sedition in this country. It is most unfortunate and most unfair, and such a suggestion will be repudiated by all honest labour men throughout the country.

There is nothing in the whole discussion of this question, from start to finish, that can justify those remarks of the Minister of Labour.

Then we heard the quotation, just referred to by my honourable friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Crosby), read by another honourable member—if I may use that term. There has been nothing under heaven which could justify the words of either of those honourable gentlemen in connection with this discussion. They have been trying to say that every man who has spoken against this Bill was attacking the entire labour class in Canada. That is absolutely devoid of truth. No person has attacked labour at all. It is the agitators who have been attacked, and, I think, justifiably.

What was our experience in Winnipeg during the great strike of last year? We were refused a supply of milk for women and children—not by labour; the labour man was willing that we should be supplied; but the agitators, the leaders, they were the persons who would not allow the workingmen to supply those things. We were refused a water supply for the hospitals. Transportation for the people was refused. As I said a moment ago, the men wanted to supply these things, but they were kept from doing so by the agitators and by the leaders. The leaders wanted to turn the new parliament building in Winnipeg into a labour temple and establish a Soviet government there. These are the kind of men some honourable gentlemen in this House would like to keep in Canada. Remember, honourable gentlemen, that it is not only in Western Canada that we have these agitators to-day. Go to the great city of Toronto, and what do you find? You can find the Red doctrines preached on a good many corners in that city. Go to all the large centres of Canada and what is the condition of affairs? I may tell you that any person who is in close touch with the situation at all must consider that there is a very serious state of affairs.

During the discussion the other day, I asked my honourable friend—I think he would be classed as the junior member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt)—what was the method used to deport Reds or undesirables from the United States. I asked that question in all humility, hoping to get an opinion from one of the leading lawyers in this House. But he answered that he did not get his inspiration from the United States. I could not help thinking that it was only a short time ago that he was looking to the United States for inspiration. How quickly some people change. The United States to-day is a great democratic country, and how do they handle the Reds or undesirables in that country? Do they give them trials? Do they spend millions of dollars trying to find out whether people are desirable citizens or not? Indeed, no; they deport them, not by dozens or by hundreds, but by thousands and by shiploads. That is the way they handle these fellows. Take for instance, the case of Emma Goldman, and the rest of them. In my humble opinion, the Government of Canada to-day could well afford to take a leaf out of the book of the United States, and send these undesirable people out of the country as soon as possible.

Some say, "Give them a fair trial." I want to say, honourable gentlemen, that I believe every Canadian citizen who is law-abiding and is truly a Canadian citizen should get his trial; but when we have among us those who want to establish Soviet government, who want to turn Parliament buildings into a labour temple, and that kind of thing, I think the quicker we get rid of them the better. As the law stands, if those men who are to-day in jail in Manitoba continue preaching their Soviet doctrines in Canada when they get out, they can be deported; but if this Bill which has been introduced by the Minister of Labour goes through, it will be impossible to deport those men without the expenditure of millions of dollars of your and my money to give them another trial. If the law was good last year, it is good enough for me this year.

The other day, when we were discussing the deportation of undesirables another question was brought in, which, from my point of view, and from the point of view of any layman, could not very well be connected with the deportation of undesirables. It was brought forward by the honourable gentleman from Midland (Hon. Mr. Bennett), who used these words:

> —and the honourable gentlemen kissed the tips of their fingers to those labour men and bade them good-bye, and hoped they would come back safe.

As I was saying, I do not understand how this could be connected with the deportation of undesirables, unless it was perhaps through his pent-up feeling that he had himself done nothing during the late war, while others in this House had tried to do a little of something.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I rise to a point of order. The honourable gentleman has just stated that any remarks I made were due to the fact that I was giving vent to my pent-up feelings because I had done nothing during the war. I shall not say what I gave in subscriptions to the Patriotic Fund; I would cheerfully compare it with the gifts of the warriors; but I would ask, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the honourable gentleman knows nothing of what I may have done, that he be asked to withdraw the statement that I did nothing during the war toward the public good.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Mr. Speaker,—

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I use these words, then, Mr. Speaker: he did nothing that I know of.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Once again I ask the honourable gentleman to withdraw his statement. The honourable gentleman has made the insulting remark that I did nothing that anyone else knows of. I ask that there be a ruling, and that he either prove the truth of his statement or withdraw the remark.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I was conversing with the honourable member from Hamilton when the honourable gentleman from Manitoba made his remarks. But as he has said that the honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) had done nothing to his knowledge, I do not believe there is much harm in that.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I hope the honourable gentleman is satisfied. I said that he had done nothing that I knew of. If he did do anything, God knows it would be safe betting it was not very much. Not satisfied with throwing that slur at men in this House, he went out into the corridors of this place, where he met other honourable gentleman belonging to this House, and he said in that boastful way of his, "Look at Hansard and see what I did to those political colonels." He does not deny that, you see.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I absolutely deny that I made such a statement outside, and I will repeat all that I did say about it outside. I apologized to the honourable gentleman from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans). I said that I regretted that I had named him with the other colonels; and, owing to the fact that he had lost his son in the war, I apologized to him, and like a gentleman he accepted the apology. As for the other two gentlemen, when they get an apology they will know it.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: We do not want to accept an apology from you.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: If the honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) says that he did not say what has been stated, his statement must be accepted.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Certainly. Just the same, I do not think that any honourable gentleman would believe what he said.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I ask your ruling that no member of this House can make the statement in the House that he does not believe the word of an honourable member, or that no person else will. If that is parliamentary, very well, let it be parliamentary.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is right.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Let us have a ruling.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I hold that the honourable gentleman must use expressions which are not insulting, and which can be accepted by the whole House.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that there is no man in this House who wants to observe the rules of the House, and your rulings particularly, more than I do. I wish to stand right by your ruling every time, and you can be sure that no matter what that ruling may be I will submit to it. But not satisfied with meeting senators outside and telling them to look up what he had done, the honourable gentleman went to his brother-in-law's paper, or to the editor or the reporter, and got him; and then I have been told he went to others—

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I make the statement now, that since this occurred last Thursday I have absolutely never seen Mr. Southam, my brother-in-law, until this morning; so the statement is absolutely outside the fact. As to the statement that I saw any reporter of the Citizen newspaper or ever opened my mouth to him about it, it is absolutely false.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Once for all, we have to accept the statement made by the honourable gentleman from Simcoe. I believe it would be just as well for honourable gentlemen to speak of other things now.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Mr. Speaker, I did not say he had seen Mr. Southam. I said that I was told that he saw the reporters. But I was talking to an honourable gentleman who sat in the House of Commons with the honourable gentleman from Midland (Hon. Mr. Bennett) for over twenty years, and he said to me: "Do not bother with him; he was always like that; he would always use the serpent's tongue to bite any person who was trying to do anything."

Now, so far as my career as a political colonel is concerned—and I suppose I come under that term, because I was a politician, and I was also a colonel—I never asked for any credit or any thanks for anything that I did. In 1916 I saw the need of men, because they were calling from France, "More men!" I answered the call. I volunteered, and Sir Sam Hughes gave me a commission to raise a battalion. I did so. I raised my battalion and took it to England; and, if it is of any advantage to my honourable friend to know it, my battalion was broken up before I landed in Liverpool. I saw the orders breaking it up before I landed at all, although I did not hand the battalion over for some days after that. But I want to tell you, honourable gentlemen, that every battalion that went to England in the summer of 1916, with the exception of that of my brother Sam, was broken up and sent to France as reinforcements. My brother was the only colonel who went over during the summer of 1916 who went to France with his battalion. While I was only a political colonel, I must say that I was very fortunate in getting some good officers, and that 90 per cent of those men were sent to France without any further training in England, so we must have had them in fairly good shape, even for a political colonel. But I want to say this, and I want to say it with all the emphasis of which I am capable, that there was not a man that I know of who took a battalion to England during 1916, or any other year during the war, who would not gladly have gone to France with his men and stayed with them all the way through.

Now, honourable gentlemen, what did my honourable friend do during the war? He has held us up to ridicule for helping when we saw that help was needed, and were ready to volunteer and go to help our King and Empire. Did he give a helping hand in any way? Did he give one dollar to the Red Cross or the Patriotic Association in Canada? I am not saying whether he did or not.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Does the honourable gentleman ask my reply to that?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I am not asking: I have the floor. A little later I will give you a chance. But I would be willing to leave it to the judgment of this House and to the judgment of the members of the House of Commons, who have known him for the past twenty years around these corridors, how much he gave to the Patriotic or Red Cross associations of Canada, and whether he sat around, as I believe he did, with a sarcastic smile and a bite on his serpent's tongue for every man who tried to do anything during the late war. You have all read Kipling's poem, "The Woman with the Serpent's Tongue." It has been said that there was only one woman in the whole of England to whom that poem could be applied. I want to say that if Kipling wrote another poem and called it, "The Man with the Serpent's Tongue," there is only one man that I know of in the British Empire to whom it could be applied, and that is my honourable friend from Midland (Hon. Mr. Bennett). In my humble opinion, honourable gentlemen, the man who used the words, "Kissed the tips of their fingers to their battalions, and bade them farewell, and hoped they would return safely," is simply a contemptible cur.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, is it the rule of this Chamber, where gentlemen are supposed to be, that one honourable member can call another honourable member a contemptible cur?

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I hope the honourable gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Hon. Mr. Sharpe) will withdraw the expression.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, I bow willingly to all your rulings. In using that term I thought I was going a little further than I should; but I wanted you and the other honourable members of this House to know my opinion of that gentleman. It is only true—

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Do you withdraw it?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Why certainly, certainly; but, Mr. Speaker, it is not only my opinion; it is the opinion of all those in the House of Commons who have sat there for twenty years. I want to say, Mr. Speaker and honourable gentlemen, that my intentions are—

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. No honourable member of this Chamber can come into the House and say that the opinion held outside, by members of the House of Commons, is that a member of this House is a miserable cur. I think that was the gentlemanly phrase that emanated—

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: That is it.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I asked the honourable gentleman to withdraw the expression, and I understood that he withdrew it.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I did, Mr. Speaker. I wish to say this—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned. I rise only with reluctance and because of the fact that I happen to be the introducer of the Bill which has provoked this discussion. I respecfully suggest that it is not in order to debate subjects entirely apart from that of the subject-matter of the Bill, we ought to refrain from so doing. I would respecfully suggest that the debate be confined to the Bill before us.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, I feel very sorry, and I certainly apologize to the House for having had to take up this question in the way that I did. We did our duty as we saw it, and a man in this House—an honourable gentleman, I should say, in this House—deliberately insults and slurs every man who tried to raise a battalion and who did his duty as he saw it.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I can quote Hansard to prove that I made no reference to other honourable gentlemen, but only to three members of this House. I did not refer to every honorary colonel, or colonel, who organized a regiment. Hansard will bear me out in this; and to one of those honourable gentlemen I did apologize.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Honourable gentlemen, I do not like to interrupt members who are speaking, but, my attention having been called by the honourable the Minister of Labour to the fact that the discussion is going too far, I hope that honourable members will confine their remarks to the question before the House.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: It comes in good time, Mr. Speaker. I had just finished. I have said all I intented to say.

In conclusion, to come back again to the Bill, I maintain that the legislation which was necessary last year is just as necessary now, and I will certainly support the amendment moved by my honourable friend from Hamilton.

Hon. G. G. FOSTER: There is, I infer from the discussion that has taken place in this Chamber and from what I hear outside, considerable misunderstanding as to what was meant by the Bill submitted by the honourable the Minister of Labour, which is now before us for consideration. Some people are under the impression that the amendment to the Act of last year, which the honourable the Minister of Labour is introducing, is an unfair method of obtaining some unreasonable advantage for labour organization. On the other hand, there are persons throughout the country who are under the impression that the passing of the Act of last year was an unfair and unreasonable attack upon the rights of every British-Canadian subject. Perhaps I may be accused of repeating what others have said in this House, but I would ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I state the reasons why I intend to support the Minister of Labour in the Bill which he has brought down.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the circumstances under which the legislation was passed, I would once more remind the honourable members of this Chamber, and the people of this country, of the events that accurred in the year 1919. No man knowing the state of mind of the peoples engaged in the world war can question the statement that we were in an abnormal condition. Every nation which had been engaged in the war was in that condition. At that time, when we were endeavouring to restore the happy situation which had previously prevailed in Canada, there was thrust out of that great western country and that great city of Winnipeg the red hand of rebellion anarchy and revolt. The situation was not that a few railroad men had united for the purpose of securing higher wages; it was not that a few street car conductors had united to obtain shorter hours, or that the city employees of Winnipeg, like the employees in other cities, had united for the purpose of securing some advantage for themselves; but it was that the red hand of rebellion and revolt appeared at that time. Any man who knows Canada could not but be astounded when he heard that throughout this country other centres of industry, including Vancouver and Calgary and Toronto and Montreal, were being poisoned by the same hand, and similar conditions threatened us in these cities. The Government of this country came before Parliament, and this is what they said: "We find that it is necessary, in order to deal with particular men and particular phases of this trouble in Winnipeg, that we should have the right to deport without trial men who have committed offences, or are threatening to do so, although they are British subjects and cannot otherwise be deported." The Bill, as has been stated here, passed the lower House in ten minutes and passed the Senate in five minutes, because we all realized that the condition existing in Winnipeg and throughout the country threatened the very existence of our political and national institutions.

I do not know whether or not that law served any useful purpose in connection with the disturbance, but I always felt it must have been a strong weapon in the hands of those charged with the administration of the law. However, there arose in that great city of Winnipeg the splendid body of men and women known as the Committee of One Thousand, who united to protect their city and their country, and who in so doing wrote their names on the pages of Canada's history just as surely as did the men who fell on the fields of France and Flanders, and no one should ever forget the service they rendered not only to Winnipeg, but to Canada. When their work was done and order was restored, and when the wheels of justice had begun to move for the punishment of those who were deserving of punishment, the whole labour question in Canada, for the time being, was settled.

Now the honourable the Minister of Labour comes before this Chamber and says that the condition which existed at that time has passed, and that the great labour body of this country and a large number of British Canadians in Canada ask that the law enacted last session be repealed. I do not always agree with the honourable the Minister of Labour. I doubt if there is in this Chamber any man who has differed oftener with him than I have. On the other hand, although we may have disagreed, I have always respected him, and I do to-day respect him, as the greatest representative of labour in the Dominion of Canada. I believe and know him to be a great, brave Canadian who, however much he may sympathize with labour, is as interested as any other man in this Chamber in the development of everything that is Canadian and in the building up of a great Canada; and I believe that the department which he represents, no matter whether he occupies that seat or not, will for all time play an important part in the affairs of our country. He and I have disagreed on other important matters, or on matters which to me seemed important; but, removing all the electricity, both inside and outside of this room, and throwing aside all the frills that have apparently been used for the purpose of surrounding this debate with some mystery, he appeals to me and he appeals to the Senate, and this is the plain, simple proposition that he puts to us: You, the Parliament of Canada, have placed British-born Canadian citizens in a position different from that of other citizens of Canada. In other words, the Italian, the Greek, the Russian or the Frenchman, who have become Canadian citizens, cannot be deported if they have lived in this country for five years and have complied with all the formalities necessary in order to become Canadian citizens; but, on the other hand, under the law as it stands to-day, a British-born Canadian citizen can be taken by the back of the neck and pitched out of this country without that trial to which every man with a drop of British blood in his body has for hundreds of years been entitled. That seems to me the only consideration which we should examine at this moment. Have we treated, and do we treat, British-born citizens differently from others? I understand the honourable the Minister of Labour to say that we do. I understand that under the amendment made to the law we are in a position to treat British-born citizens differently from any others. My view of the future is different from that of some honourable gentlemen. I want to see a quiet, steady, serious condition in Canada, which I regret to say has not existed during the last few months or the last few years. I want to see a tendency among the citizens of Canada to talk less about their provincial and narrow-minded politics than politicians in Canada, in every province, have done in the past year or two. I do not say that such talk was not natural under the conditions which prevailed, but I look forward to the time when the people of Canada will unite in the desire to secure for Canada that influx of people which is necessary for the development of the resources of this country. Some prefer one nationality, others prefer another; some people do not care whether the future citizens of Canada come from the north pole or the south, or from the east or the west, or where they come from. I have a preference. I do not want to see this country built up with thousands or millions of people who are unable to understand the political, national, religious and other feelings that permeate the best Canadian citizenship. I want to see the Dominion of Canada filled with British-born citizens who have come here to help develop this country as men of their race have done in the past. I do not want to see immigration retarded. I do not want to see any handicap put upon Irishmen, Scotchmen and Englishmen coming here, by treating them differently in any respect from others. I want to see the hand of friendship and fellowship extended to them, in order that they may come here with proper ideals in their heart and may assist in developing that Canada which our fathers dreamed of, and which it is our proud hope to see realized. I say, honourable gentlemen, that having in mind my duty to the people I represent, and holding the belief that under the amended law no critical condition can occur in this country which cannot be dealt with; without one word of regret that the law was passed last year; without a word of apology to any labour organization, because at that time of stress we were bound to take some extraordinary action, but believing that the measure has served the purpose for which it was passed, I feel we should revert to the normal condition, treating all who desire to come to this country on the same plane. I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the honourable Senator from Hamilton, and I shall vote for the Bill as introduced by the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will the honourable gentleman answer a question? To which amendment of the Criminal Code does he refer?

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: The amendment of last year.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What section?

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: I have not the section before me, but I will give it to the honourable gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The Minister of Labour was asked the same question. So far nobody has been able to turn it up.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I have very few words to say. My principal reason for rising is to ask a question of the honourable the Minister of Labour. I have had the honour of being a member of this Parliament for a number of years, and I must say that I have found it more difficult to-day than ever before to make up my mind how to vote. I want to ask the Minister of Labour for a little explanation of his remarks on page 460 of Hansard:

> Hon. Mr. Robertson: My reason, honourable gentlemen, for expressing the view that the same conditions could not arise again is that the Criminal Code itself has been so amended since this legislation was passed as to meet all necessary requirements and all emergencies.

I was not present the other day when the discussion took place, but I would like to know all that the Minister of Labour means by that declaration.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am not in a position, honourable gentlemen, to quote the section of the Bill, but I think honourable gentlemen will remember that it was found that the Criminal Code did not sufficiently define the term "sedition," or was not clear as to what were the rights of the individual at the time. There was no doubt it was because of the fact that the code was in doubt that these amendments to the Immigration Act were brought down on the 7th June, 1919, when in the opinion of the Government and of Parliament it was necessary that prompt and adequate action to meet any emergency should be taken. This legislation was therefore passed. I think the Solicitor General did bring in an amendment to the Criminal Code at the fall session. I do not recall the details of that.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does not the honourable gentleman mean the amendment to the Naturalization Act?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I stand corrected. It may be the Naturalization Act. At any rate, the necessary steps were taken to amend our statutes, so that the necessity which existed on the 7th of June, 1919, for the passing of the amendment which we did pass, to the Immigration Act, existed no longer.

I do not desire to take up time, Mr. Speaker, except to answer the question, but while I am on my feet may I inquire of the honourable the Speaker on a point of information? I understood you, Sir, the other day to state that it would not be my privilege to speak again upon the Bill. I would point out to the House that as the introducer of the Bill I should be, either by right or by consent, permitted to say a few words in closing, because some of the observations made concerning the Bill deserve reference on my part before the debate is closed.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: What I said the other day was that you had no right to speak a second time on the amendment, but that after the amendment had been voted on you had the right to close the debate on the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: Honourable gentlemen, it has been said that the reason and the necessity for this legislation a year ago does not exist to-day. I wish I could believe that; but I am sorry to say I cannot. Canada is not normal, and I doubt if it will be normal inside of three or four years. During that period I do not see what harm can result from leaving this Act on the statute book. It will not affect persons in Canada who are obeying the laws; it will affect only such persons as will not obey the law. The honourable gentleman from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has said that this Act discriminates, as it applies only to British-born Canadian citizens. I would be very glad to see the Act amended to include all citizens regardless of where they were born, and allowed to stand in that way until conditions become normal. I think that in this country, and in nearly every country in the world, we are quite liable to see greater agitation and greater trouble from the Bolsheviki and other people who are trying to upset Governments everywhere than we have ever seen in the past. It seems to me that the Act as it stands is much the same as the storing of guns, rifles, and ammunition by the Government and I think it would be quite in order if the law were to say to the people whom it affects that their guns, rifles and ammunition should be taken out and dumped in the Atlantic, because they are going to be good citizens thereafter and will not use them. If they are good citizens, the law will not affect them. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton was negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Blain,	Proudfoot,
Bostock,	Ross (Middleton),
Bradbury,	Schaffner,
Crosby,	Sharpe,
Curry,	Tanner,
Daniel,	Thorne,
Girroir,	Todd,
Lynch-Staunton,	Watson,
McMeans,	Webster (Brockville),
Milne,	Yeo.—21.
Mulholland,

NON-CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Beith,	Michener,
Bennett,	Mitchell,
Cloran,	Planta,
De Veber,	Power,
Farrell,	Ratz,
Fisher,	Robertson,
Foster,	Smith,
Godbout,	Taylor,
Gordon,	White (Pembroke),
Lavergne,	Willoughby.—21.
McSweeney,

The motion for the second reading of the Bill was agreed to on the following division:

CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Beith,	McSweeney,
Bennett,	Michener,
Cloran,	Mitchell,
De Veber,	Planta,
Farrell,	Power,
Fisher,	Ratz,
Foster,	Robertson,
Godbout,	Smith,
Gordon,	Taylor,
Harmer,	White (Pembroke),
Lavergne,	Willoughby.—22

NON-CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Blain,	Proudfoot,
Bostock,	Ross (Middleton),
Bradbury,	Schaffner,
Crosby,	Sharpe,
Curry,	Tanner,
Daniel,	Thorne,
Girroir,	Todd,
Lynch-Staunton,	Watson,
McMeans,	Webster (Brockville),
Milne,	Yeo.—21.
Mulholland,

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Honourable gentlemen, I should like to direct your attention to the fact that the honourable member from Alberta (Hon. Mr. Harmer) did not vote the first time because he was paired with the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff); but that he broke his pair, as I would think, and voted the second time. I do not think his vote should be allowed to count.

Hon. Mr. HARMER: I was paired with the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia for one day. He wanted to leave for a meeting. I thought that possibly I should not have voted in the first instance; but my understanding with him was that if the amendment was lost I was free to vote. That is my understanding.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 2, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill S4, an Act to incorporate the Bank of Saskatchewan.—Hon. James H. Ross.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend tell us what he proposes to do about the adjournment? Are we going to sit to-morrow, it being the King's birthday, and is it the intention to sit on Friday?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have been waiting to ascertain what action the House of Commons would take as to sitting to-morrow. Notice of motion was given there, but whether it will be adopted by the House I cannot say. My own judgment is that we should adjourn from to-night until Tuesday next. There is very little on the Order Paper, and I am under the impression that public business would not suffer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: By leave of the House, I would move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, at 3 p.m.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Eight.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Three.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE: I move in amendment that the Senate adjourn until Wednesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The House must be unanimous.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: If it is not unanimous, we will sit to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE: The other day, when the leader of the Senate moved to adjourn until Tuesday, a Senator from Prince Edward Island moved that the House should adjourn until Wednesday, and we agreed to it. Now, I hope the same measure of courtesy will be extended to me.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If the House is disposed to deal with the matter now, and agrees, I have no objection; but it is very desirable and even necessary that we should do it unanimously. I leave it to the House.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE: If you do not make it Wednesday I will object.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: In view of the attitude of the honourable gentleman, I believe the House should not be coerced into doing what it wishes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: With the leave of the House I will withdraw the motion, and we will keep on sitting.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of the House as to either Tuesday or Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The Government are responsible for the transaction of the business of the House, and in the past, under former administrations, the leader of the Government did not delegate the power to set the time of adjournment to any back-bench member who chose to press it. I think we had better stick to the old rule. Further, I believe there is some hope that we may expect prorogation before the end of this month, and I do not think that we would be justified in adjourning beyond next Tuesday at any rate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The memory of my honourable friend does not serve him aright, because I remember some combinations of the present leader of the Government and myself when we defeated the then leader of the Government quite often.

Hon. Mr. RATZ: I think the leader of the House should have the right to say when we should meet again. I have no favours to ask, but I should prefer that we should adjourn until the evening, whether it be on Tuesday or Wednesday. Otherwise some of us have to sacrifice a day. I think that we should get through the business in the evening as well as in the afternoon.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, I will take the responsibility of saying Wednesday at 3 o'clock, and will move:

That when the House adjourns to-day it do stand adjoured until Wednesday next at 3 o'clock.

The motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

C4, an Act for the relief of Mary Oakley.—Hon. Mr. Gordon.

D4, an Act for the relief of Margaret Elizabeth Cooper.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill E4, an Act for the relief of Catherine Burfoot.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill F4, an Act for the relief of Margaret Henrietta Pettit.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill G4, an Act for the relief of Thomas Lindsay Thacker.—Hon. Mr. Ratz

Bill H4, an Act for the relief of John Durose.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

SUPREME COURT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 109, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Senate go into Committee on Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.

Hon. L. G. POWER: Before the House goes into Committee I should like to say a word or two with respect to this matter. Honourable gentlemen may perhaps remember that I asked yesterday that the consideration of the Bill might be postponed until to-day. I find there is a statement submitted on behalf of the Indian tribes of Briish Columbia, and after reading it over with a reasonable amount of care, I think the Indians have made out a decidedly strong case to the effect that they have not been dealt with fairly in connection with these lands in British Columbia; and, inasmuch as the honourable leader of the House does not expect to have anything to do in the way of parliamentary business other than this during the next week, perhaps it would be a good idea for him to take a few days to look into the claims of the Indians so that when we meet again he would be in a position to submit a reasonable and fair Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, when I submitted this Bill for second reading I took occasion to say that in the judgment of the Government it would not be desirable to refer this to a special committee in order to hear those who are self-appointed state what they regard as the claims of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend says "self-appointed."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But the Indian chiefs are appointed by the Indian tribes and are representative.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This may possibly involve my making a statement of a sort which I usually endeavour not to make, casting reflections upon individuals. If there be any dissatisfaction—and one would judge from the circulars which have been issued that that is the condition of the Indian tribes in British Columbia—it is largely, if not wholly, due to one individual, who is a self-appointed missioner, so to speak, of the Indians of that province. Since 1908, I think it would be, this matter has been stirred up amongst the Indians of British Columbia, and the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was confronted with the same problems that are being thrust upon us to-day. In the Crown colony days not only of Vancouver island but of the mainland, and afterwards of both when they became the province of British Columbia, and since British Columbia joined the union, the same policy has been pursued in regard to the Indians of that province as we are following to-day. The Imperial authorities in the Crown colony days allotted certain lands for the occupation and use of the Indians. When the two Crown colonies came together that same policy was pursued by the united colony of British Columbia, and when British Columbia joined the Union provision was made that the Indians should be similarly treated by the Government of Canada, and that has been consistently done. Not only has it been consistently done, but if there has been any departure from that policy it has been along the lines of greater generosity being extended to the Indians than at any previous time.

There appeared upon the scene some years ago a certain gentleman, who apparently made it his mission in life to promote dissatisfaction amongst the Indians of that province and to induce them to make what I might term the preposterous claim of having an interest in the land title of the whole of British Columbia. They asserted their claim not only to the aboriginal title of their reserves, but to the whole of the province.

The Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and this Government also, I understand, consented, in view of the agitation which had been stirred up by the means to which I have alluded, to submit to the Privy Council, through the proper channels, the question of the aboriginal titles and to pay the Indians compensation therefor. But this is not considered sufficient; the whole title of lands in British Columbia must necessarily become disturbed to satsify the claims of those who are responsible for this movement. Moreover, this same gentleman assumed the responsibility, on two or three occasions, of petitioning the Privy Council of his own motion to disturb the status quo, so to speak, of the Indians in British Columbia, and to deal with this important question entirely irrespective of the intervention of the Dominion of Canada. The Privy Council of course rejected the claim, it could not do otherwise. It could not give consideration to so important a problem unless the Government of Canada set the case in motion, and this the Government of Canada refused to do.

For a number of years there have been certain differences between the province of British Columbia and the Government of Canada touching the Indian reserves. For the information of honourable gentlemen who were not present when I moved the second reading of this Bill, I might say that about three-quarters of a million acres of land have been set aside by the Government of British Columbia for Indian reserves in that province. There are about 20,000 Indians in British Columbia, and the reserves which have been allotted to them for their occupation and use have not been entirely used or occupied. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Bostock) read an Order in Council, passed as long ago as the time when the Mackenzie Government was in office, in which it was stated that a commission representing both Governments should be appointed to adjust those differences. Apparently nothing definite was done upon the subject until 1912. In that year both Governments took up the subject. An Order in Council was passed by the Dominion Government making provision, in pursuance of the agreement that had been entered into between the two Governments, for the appointment of a joint Royal Commission to inquire into all those differences with a view to adjusting them and to reaching a common understanding regarding the future treatment of the Indians of British Columbia. The British Columbia Government appointed a certain number of gentlemen to that Commission, and a like number were appointed by the Dominion Government. They proceeded in the beginning of 1913 to investigate the differences which were submitted to them for adjustment, and in 1916 they made a report. The main question that was dealt with in that report was the reduction of certain Indian reserves. The Commission considered it very desirable that that should be done. Accordingly, those reserves were reduced by some 47,000 acres, and the Government of British Columbia transferred, or agreed to transfer, to the Indians, in lieu of the 47,000 acres of cut-off, some 80,000 acres. There were certain Indians in British Columbia who, I understand, had not been furnished with reserves, and provision was accordingly made for the occupation of certain lands, which were delimited by the Royal Commission for the use of those particular Indians.

The main question to be decided between the two Governments is this—and it is one of great importance to the Indians; and what is of importance to the Indians is, of course, important to the public of British Columbia—in fact, to the public of Canada; because it is not desirable that there should be any dissatisfaction in the minds of the Indians in regard to the treatment accorded to them by this Government or the Provincial Government. The province of British Columbia, since its entry into the Union, claimed that it had a reversionary interest in all the Indian lands. It had conveyed, as I have already said, about three-quarters of a million acres to the Indians for reserves, for their occupation and use; but it claimed that at all times it had a reversionary interest in those lands. That is to say, by way of illustration, if, as provided for by the Indian Act, the Indians agree to the surrender of any portion of their reserves, that reversionary interest had to be satisfied before a transfer of those lands could be made. The consequence was that if a surrender of certain lands should be made to A, then either A or the Indians had to pay to the province of British Columbia whatever consideration might be fixed for the transfer or surrender of its reversionary interest.

Honourable gentlemen can readily see that a situation of that kind would be provocative of more or less trouble, and it was very undesirable that friction should be caused by this constant assertion of the right which British Columbia apparently had. In the other provinces of the Dominion the reversion of the title to Indian land passes to the province in the event of the Indian tribe occupying any particular land becoming extinct; and it was therefore very desirable that the land tenure in British Columbia, so far as the reserves are concerned, should be on the same basis as in the other provinces of Canada. This was one of the subjects, in addition to either the reduction or the extension of the reserves, dealt with by the Commission. It has been dealt with satisfactorily, so that hereafter the province of British Columbia will be in the same position as the other provinces of Canada so far as the reversionary interest is concerned.

There were a number of minor matters also dealt with. It therefore became necessary that effect should be given to the findings of the Royal Commission. The only departure that this legislation makes in regard to the agreement which had been entered into and the report which had been determined upon is with reference to the surrender of the cut-offs which had been taken from certain reserves. I do not know that the matter was seriously considered, but it was anticipated that the Indians would probably surrender the cut-offs under the provisions of the Indian Act. But, in the adjustment of matters of that kind, more or less dissatisfaction is, of course, bound to arise. The consequence is that both Govenments have assumed the responsibility of saying to their respective legislatures that it is desirable that power should be vested in both Governments to dispense with the surrender by the Indians of those particular cut-offs. We are not invading the Indian Act. When this matter was up for consideration the other day the opinion seemed to prevail that we were entirely overriding the Indian Act as to the Indians deliberately or willingly surrendering their land. We are simply confining the exercise of the power to these 47,000 acres by which we are reducing the reserves, and we are in turn conveying to the Indians almost double that quantity of land.

Honourable gentlemen have been urging —and the demand has been, I understand, circularized amongst the members of the Senate—that this Bill should be referred to a special committee for the purpose of hearing certain of the Indians, and, more particularly, for the purpose of hearing the gentleman to whom I have referred, and who seems to have assumed the responsibility of being the spokesman for the Indians of British Columbia. When this matter was before the House of Commons, the Bill which we are now considering was disposed of, and it was followed by what is known as Bill 14, dealing with the franchise of Indians. Representations were made to the committee that the Indians should be heard. They were heard, ostensibly, in the first place upon Bill 14; but all parties who appeared before the Committee of the Commons insisted upon obtruding upon the Commons their representations concerning this Bill, and, notwithstanding the protests of the Committee, it was finally determined to hear the whole matter. It was heard by the Commons Committee, and I may say no weight was given to the representations. It has been pointed out to me by the Government, and likewise by members of the Commons from British Columbia, that it is not desirable that this matter should be further stirred up amongst the Indians. I say unhesitatingly that the man who assumes the responsibility of stirring up the Indians assumes a very grave responsibility and should not be encouraged in that by Parliament. That is the attitude which the Government takes, and which I hope this Senate will take, upon this particular subject.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The province of British Columbia has, with a parental attention, I might say, looked after those Indians since Confederation. The Government of Canada has done likewise. The treatment of the Indians by the Government of Canada has been proverbial for sympathy, for generosity, and for all that parental solicitude could do for any section of the population. I say unhesitatingly, honourable gentlemen, that no greater attention or sympathy has been given to any subject with which the Government of Canada is charged than to the Indian question. The treatment by Canada of the Indians has always been pointed to by the United States as one of the greatest tributes that can be paid to the Dominion. In the treatment of the native tribes Canada has proverbially stood above every other country. Now, I ask, is it desirable at this particular time that consideration, weight, and seriousness should be given to any one individual who may choose to travel from tribe to tribe throughout the province and create dissatisfaction and stir up trouble among the Indians? I say no, honourable gentlemen. We feel that the responsibility rests upon us not to be party to that. The Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada have come together. The Royal Commission, representing both Governments, and extending over some three years of continuous labour, paid the closest attention to the different questions submitted by the Indians, with the result that they have arrived at the report already submitted to Parliament to which I have referred, and to which it is poposed to give effect by the legislation before us. The province of British Columbia passed almost precisely similar legislation to that which we have before us. This is an enabling Act to permit both Governments to come together, and to give effect to the findings contained in the report. I might say further, honourable gentlemen, that we do not propose to exclude the claims of the Indians. It will be manifest to every honourable gentleman that if the Indians have claims anterior to Confederation, or anterior to the creation of the two Crown colonies in the province of British Columbia, they could be adjusted or settled by the Imperial authorities. Those claims are still valid. If the claim be a valid one which is being advanced by this gentleman and those associated with him as to the Indian tribes of British Columbia being entitled to the whole of the lands in British Columbia, this Government cannot disturb that claim. That claim can still be asserted in the future. But whatever differences exist between this Government and the Government of British Columbia, it is very desirable that they should be settled, and that both Governments should unite in a mutual and co-operative plan for the purpose of doing what is in the best interests of the Indians in that province.

Under these circumstances, I do not think it is in the interest of the Indians themselves, it is not in the interest of the two Governments involved, and it is not in the interest of the public, that this matter should be further stirred up. And let me point out this: that the same problems which are now being thrashed out in this agitation would be thrashed out in every province of Canada. They affect the Indians of every province and would be common to all the Indians of every province; and, if carried to their logical conclusion, would instil unrest in the minds of all the Indians of every province, and would disturb the land tenure of the Dominion. I therefore think that a Committee of the Whole House would be better adapted than a small Committee which we might select to deal with the subject. I invite the closest attention of every honourable gentleman to the matter, and ask him to give his best and most intelligent consideration to the questions involved in the Bill.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: There are certain differences between my honourable friend and myself in regard to this question. He would lead one to suppost that the attitude of the Government with regard to it had not changed at all of late years. He referred to the fact that the question was brought up in the time of the Government of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when in the West, had this question placed before him, not only at Prince Rupert, but at Kamloops, and on one occasion made this statement:

> The situation arising from the refusal of British Columbia to consent to a reference of the question of Indian title to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was brought by the "Friends of the Indians" and the Moral and Social Reform Council of Canada before the then Government of Canada, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in the course of the answer given to the delegation, said:
>
> "The British Columbia Government contends that the Indians have no claim. If the case could be referred to the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, it would bring the matter to an issue at once. Unfortunately, Mr. McBride would not agree to that submission. He only agreed to leave out of the question the very thing he wants to have a decision upon. We do not know if we can force a Government into court. If we can find a way I may say we shall surely do so, because everybody will agree it is a matter of good government to have no one resting under a grievance. The Indians will continue to believe they have a grievance until it has been settled by the court that they have a claim or that they have no claim."

Now, I have understood that it was the attitude of the Dominion Government, practically up to the time this Bill was brought into Parliament, that there was a claim on the part of the Indians that ought to be settled; and, if I understand the position at the present time, they feel that they should still have the right to test that claim out, and they fear that the legislation which is now before the House would prevent them dealing with that matter and putting their case forward in the way in which they desire. My honourable friend has said that they tried to have their case put before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That is perfectly true. They tried to do that, and on previous occasions the Dominion Government recognized, I think, that there was some justice in the claim on the part of the Indians that they should be heard in this matter. Away back in 1875 the Minister of Justice had to deal with this question, and on the 2nd of November, 1875, the then Minister of the Interior addressed a letter to the Government of British Columbia in which he said:

> On 2nd November, 1874, the then Minister of the Interior, in a letter addressed to the Government of British Columbia, said:
>
> "A cursory glance at these documents is enough to show that the present state of the Indian land question in our territory west of the Rocky Mountains is most unsatisfactory—and that it is the occasion, not only of great discontent among the aboriginal tribes, but also of serious alarm to the white settlers.
>
> "The guaranteeing the aborigines of British Columbia the continuance of a policy as liberal as was pursued by the local government seems little short of a mockery of their claims. If there has not been an Indian war it is not because there has been no injustice to the Indians, but because the Indians have not been sufficiently united.
>
> "In laying the foundation of an Indian policy in that province on the same permanent and satisfactory basis as in the other portions of the Dominion—the Government of the Dominion feel that they would not be justified in limiting their efforts to what under the strict letter of the terms of union, they were called upon to do. They feel that a great national question like this—a question involving possibly in the near future an Indian war, with all its horrors, should be approached in a very difficult spirit, and dealt with upon other and higher grounds.

"The policy foreshadowed in the provisions of the 13th clause of British Columbia Terms of Union is plainly altogether inadequate to satisfy the fair and reasonable demands of the Indians. To satisfy these demands, and to secure the good will of the natives, the Dominion and local Governments must look beyond the terms of that agreement—and be governed in their conduct toward the aborigines by the justice of their claims, and by the necessities of the case."

Hon. Mr. BLAIN: Mr. Speaker, in order that we may intelligently consider the question, may I ask the honourable gentleman what he is reading?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This is a memorial got out in reference to this matter. It contains a quotation from a letter of the Minister of the Interior to the British Columbia Government on the 2nd November, 1874.

Hon. Mr. BLAIN: Whom is the memorial presented to?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is a memorial of the Conference of Friends of the Indians of British Columbia, and this document is addressed to His Royal Highness the Governor General of Canada in Council.

Hon. Mr. BLAIN: At what date?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The 4th of November, 1912. It sets forth their claims in regard to this matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can the honourable gentleman tell us why the question was not settled in 1874, inasmuch as it seems to have been a very live one?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My understanding of the whole situation is that the question has never been settled because British Columbia would not agree to joining issue on the matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Nor the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The attitude of the Dominion Government all along has been that there was a claim, if I understand the position.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not to the whole of the Indian title of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That the Indians had a certain claim, and that there was a question to be settled between the Indians and the Government of British Columbia. After British Columbia came into Confederation, of course the Indian administration was placed in the hands of the Dominion Government, and, as I stated on the second reading of this Bill, the Dominion Government made an arrangement as to certain lands in British Columbia in the year 1899, when they settled with regard to land in what is known as the Peace River district, and also in the northern territory. That, I say, is one reason why the Indians think that the whole question should be dealt with in the same way, and that the Indians in the northern part of British Columbia should not be placed in a different position.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Is there any doubt about their having agreed to it?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I have not discussed the matter with the present provincial Government at all, but I have here an Act passed by the British Columbia Legislature which I might read to the House. This Act was assented to on the 29th of March, 1919. There are two clauses in it. The first is entitled: "Power to give effect to report of Commission and settle all differences." The other reads as follows:

Without limiting the general powers by this Act conferred, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may, for the purpose of adjusting, readjusting, or confirming the reductions, cut-offs, and additions in respect of Indian Reserves proposed in the said report of the Commission, carry on such further negotiations and enter into such further agreements, whether with the Dominion Government or with the Indians, as may be found necessary for a full and final adjustment of the differences between the said Governments.

As far as I know, that represents the position of the provincial Government to-day. I understand that some question with regard to this clause of the Bill has come up in Ottawa, and that the Justice Department takes the view that the province of Britsh Columbia has no authority to negotiate with the Indians directly, but that the negotiations must be carried on between the two Governments, the Dominion Government representing the Indians.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Does that Act, in the judgment of the honourable gentleman, enable the present Government of British Columbia to carry out the intention of the Bill which is now before this House, as far as they have the power?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand that the British Columbia Act has been drawn up in consultation with certain officials of the Indian Department.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am asking my honourable friend's opinion of that statute. Does he think it is sufficient to enable the British Columbia Government to carry into effect the arrangement proposed under the Bill before the House?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Oh, yes. I think this Act passed by the provincial Government will certainly enable them to do all that is necessary; but the point is that it is a full and final adjustment of all differences between the two Governments.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: The British Columbia Government are concurring in proposed arrangements?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes, so far as I know they are concurring, but they have no responsibility to the Indians. The British Columbia Government have all along taken the stand that there was no question of title to be settled with the Indians. That was very clearly brought out in the report made by J. A. J. McKenna, which had to do in the first instance with the appointment of this Commission. In that report Mr. McKenna said:

> The position taken by the province was that the title of Indians to lands reserved for them was a mere right of use and occupancy; that under said article no beneficial interest in such lands was to be taken by the Dominion as guardian of the Indians; and that whenever the Indian right to any such lands or to any portion thereof became extinguished through surrender or cessation of use or occupation or diminishment of numbers, the land reverted, unburdened, to the province. The Indians, as they advanced in knowledge of affairs, became aware that they were not regarded as having the same right in reserved lands as Indians in other parts of Canada were recognized as having in lands set apart for them.

My honourable friend has spoken of persons going about agitating amongst the Indians regarding this question; but this is not due to the work of any individual agitator, so far as I know, although the gentleman to whom he refers has of course busied himself in presenting these questions to the Government and to Parliament. I doubt that the Indians will be quieted simply by the over-riding of anything that is said by this gentleman. The Indians themselves know the situation, and there is danger that they may feel that they have not been fairly treated and are not being given a fair hearing in this matter, and that they will therefore have a grievance against the Dominion Government. My reason for raising this question in the House as I have done is that I think it most desirable at the present time that we should do all we can to satisfy those people and let them understand that we wish to treat them as fairly and give them as fair a hearing as we possibly can.

The purpose of the Bill before us is to confirm the arrangement made by the Commission, which was the outcome of that report of Mr. McKenna. The fact that this Bill provides for the final settlement of the question of cut-offs, and that under clause 3 it does away with the necessity for the surrender by the Indians of those reserves, will likely lead the Indians to think that they are not being properly dealt with by the department. The Indians appeared before the Commission, I understand, but of course they did not know what the Commission's findings were. The department have agents throughout the province, and I presume they know what are the feelings of the Indians with regard to these reserves.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I should like to get a little information. We from the East do not understand this question very well. Cannot these Indians bring an action in the courts to determine the validity of their title?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think the best answer I can make to my honourable friend is this. I read to the House a short time ago Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement that he was unable to bring the matter into the courts because the Provincial Government of that day would not agree to any question being submitted to the courts.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: That was fifty years ago.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That was in 1909 or 1910.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I thought you were reading the document you said was prepared about 1874.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I did afterwards.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I am trying to follow the honourable gentleman, but he is getting things mixed.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is a very difficult question, I know, and it is rather difficult to keep it clear, but that statement of Sir Wilfrid Laurier—

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I would like to ask my honourable friend a question. As my honourable friend on the left (Hon. Mr. Girroir) says, we are not familiar with these matters, but if I understand the situation the British Columbia Legislature have passed an enabling Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: And if I understand this Bill aright, it also is an enabling Bill to provide for the two Governments getting together and giving proper and special consideration to the settlement of this whole question. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes, but it goes further than that.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: If it goes further, then so much the better for the Indians. I do not want to make a speech, but it seems to me that the two Governments which are having these enabling measures passed may well be trusted, by means of a commission or in some other manner, to settle this question satisfactorily to the Indians. If that be so, I can se no harm in our passing the Bill which is before use.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would point out to the honourable gentleman that the Bill now before the House purports to deal with this question as a full and final adjustment of all differences. That puts the Government in the position that if later on there is any question decided with regard to the claims which the Indians themselves make, the Government cannot go back to the Provincial Government and say, "Now, we want you to give us more land," or, "we want you to do this, or to do that," because the Provincial Government can refer them to their own Bill, which says that this is to be a full and final adjustment.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Would the honourable gentleman tell us what really is the Indians' claim?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is just what we would like to know. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is a rather difficult question to answer exactly. My honourable friend knows that all kinds of rash statements or extreme claims may be made on this account. But, as I understand, the claim of the Indians is that their aboriginal title, whatever that amounts to, has never been settled for.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The title to the whole province?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: To the whole province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Has not the Privy Council passed upon the question of aboriginal title in other provinces many times?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think it has.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Has not the Privy Council passed upon the aboriginal claims in Ontario more than once?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I am not in a position to speak definitely about that. I think there have been questions referred to the Privy Council, but not in regard to British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The Indians have always understood that they had no fee simple in the lands at all; that they were only wards of the Crown, as it were, and had no real title except what the Crown gave them. The Privy Council has decided that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If the Privy Council has decided that in one case, then why not allow this question to be decided?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The judgment is of universal application in the Dominion of Canada, I think.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This Bill will not prevent the Indians from having the question settled.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Are there any half-breeds among the Indians?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Not that I know of. I have not seen any half-breeds.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The reason I ask is that I know that the question of the title of the half-breed in the Northwest was settled by the Government issuing script. I thought there might be some half-breeds in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There are of course a number of half-breeds in British Columbia. I suppose some of them might be interested in this matter. It all depends—

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I did not get an answer to my question. Cannot the Indians bring action in the courts for a declaration of their title?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: As I understand the situation, the Indians themselves cannot sue in court. The Indians would have to depend on the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: They are wards of the Government.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They would have to depend on the Government taking action. The Government is the trustee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend permit me to intervene? I may perhaps throw a little light upon this question. In 1914 an Order in Council was passed to facilitate the submission of this matter to the Privy Council along certain lines recommended by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and up to the present time advantage has not been taken of it. I will read the Order in Council; the House will perhaps be interested in it:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report from the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, dated 11th March, 1914, submitting the accompanying memorandum from the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs upon the Indian claim to the lands of the province of British Columbia, in which he concurs.

The Commiittee, on the recommendation of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, advise that the claim be referred to the Exchequer Court of Canada with the right of appeal to the Privy Council under the following conditions:—

1. The Indians of British Columbia shall, by their Chiefs or representatives, in a binding way, agree, if the court, or, on appeal, the Privy Council, decides that they have a title to lands of the province, to surrender such title, receiving from the Dominion benefits to be granted for extinguishment of title in accordance with past usage of the Crown in satisfying the Indian claim to unsurrendered territories, and to accept the finding of the Royal Commission on Indian Affairs in British Columbia as approved by the Governments of the Dominion and the Province as a full allotment of Reserve lands to be administered for their benefit as part of the compensation.

2. That the Province of British Columbia by granting the said reserves as approved shall be held to have satisfied all claims of the Indians against the Province.

That the remaining considerations shall be provided and the cost thereof borne by the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

3. That the Government of British Columbia shall be represented by counsel, that the Indians shall be represented by counsel nominated and paid by the Dominion.

4. That, in the event of the Court or the Privy Council deciding that the Indians have no title in the lands of the Province of British Columbia, the policy of the Dominion towards the Indians shall be governed by consideration of their interests and future development.

All of which is respectfully submitted for approval.

The memorandum is attached. It sets out what should be submitted, etc. But up to the present time the Indians, at the instance of those who are advising them, have refused to accept the proposal which has been made by the Dominion Government. This Order in Council stands today, and the Government is prepared to start a case in the Exchequer Court and to refer it through the proper channels to the Privy Council and have the whole question decided. But it is utterly impossible to get the Indians to accept that proposition.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Because, if I understand the situation, this Order in Council to which my honourable friend has referred insists that:.

The Indians of British Columbia shall, by their Chiefs or representatives, in a binding way, agree, if the Court, or, on appeal, the Privy Council decides that they have a title to lands of the Province, to surrender such title, receiving from the Dominion benefits to be granted for extinguishment of title in accordance with past usage of the Crown.

The Indians at the present time, if I understand their attitude, think they are being asked to give up any claim that they have before they go into court, and the question is whether that impression of theirs can be dispelled.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Now, may I ask a frank question of my honourable friend? Would he be willing that the whole of the land tenure of British Columbia should be placed in the balance, as in this case, without proper safeguards?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My idea is that the claim does not go as far as that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It does. The Indians claim to be entitled to all the lands in British Columbia. We are satisfied to test the aboriginal title. Furthermore, at the hearing of the Royal Commission the subject did not come up at all.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Commission has not dealt with this subject, nor will this matter, in my judgment, be dealt with by the two Governments.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The reason it did not come before the Royal Commission was, I understand, that the Indians appeared before the Commission and asked them whether they were in a position to deal with the question, and the Commission said that the terms of reference did not give them any power to deal with it at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And we do not assume to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Royal Commission was appointed for the purpose of dealing with the question of reserves, and this whole question has come up because the Indians have felt that here is a danger that this legislation may put them in such a position that they will be debarred from raising the question at a future date. That is as shortly as I can state the situation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then who is to decide what the question to be submitted shall be? Somebody has to decide what the stated case to the Privy Council shall be.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The feeling of the Indians, as represented, is that the Dominion Government have somewhat changed their position and are not prepared to place the Indians in a position as favourable for dealing with this matter as they would have been placed in by the proposal made by the late Government, if the Provincial Government could have been brought in and the cases taken into court.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This proposal is still open. We absolve British Columbia: we assume the responsibility for the British Columbia Government, as far as compensation is concerned. We release them of all responsibility.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But if there should be a decision that the Indians are entitled to more land than they have so far received, the British Columbia Government would not be in a position to give that land to the Dominion Government for the purpose.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not the question at issue. My honourable friend will not say that the question at issue is as to whether the present Indian reserves are sufficient or insufficient. The question, as my honourable friend knows, involves the Indian title to the whole province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Would the honourable gentleman tell us if the Indians succeeded in this case what would they expect to get?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is what I would like to know.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Suppose the litigation takes place and they succeed, what do they expect to get that they are not now getting?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The whole matter is so complicated that it is very difficult to give the honourable gentleman a direct answer. As I think I stated before, the Indians may have very great expectations in this matter.

Hon. M. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is their smallest expectation?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: What is the least they would take?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I really cannot give my honourable friend a definite answer.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: What do they want?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We can take the assurance of the honourable leader of the Government that if this Bill passes the Indians will still be in the same position. When this question is settled, which they claim ought to be settled, I think their objection to the Bill would be done away with; but their feeling is that this Bill in its present form is going to debar them from having that question settled.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What material benefit would they expect to lose if this Bill goes through?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: All they want is a grievance.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No, I do not think that the Indians want a grievance. The point is that this Bill deals with two things. First of all, there is the statement in clause 2 of the Bill that this is a final and full adjustment of all their claims, and they feel that they are being placed in a position in which they may not be able to get this question of title settled.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: As the honourable gentleman knows, they have been agitating for many years, and surely they have come to some conclusion as to what they want.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I have never heard any definite conclusion stated. Clause 3 of the Bill says, regarding the question of the reserves that have been dealt with by the Commission, and from which cut-offs or reductions have been made, as referred to by my honourable friend, that notwithstanding any provision of the Indian Act to the contrary, the Governor in Council—

> May carry on such further negotiations and enter into such further agreements with the Government of the province of British Columbia as may be found necessary.

That is another point altogether, and the Indians of those reserves are not altogether satisfied with the findings of the Commission. They want to be heard; they are not satisfied to have this question settled in this way by the Government. The Department here may be desirous of doing all they can for the Indians, but they have to act through their agents in the various parts of the province. Honourable gentlemen may have heard of the Kitsilano reserve. The province undertook to deal with that question and made a settlement with certain Indians, which was overthrown by the courts; and there are some seventy Indians who claim that their interest in that particular reseve was never settled at all. They wanted to get some statement from the Department with regard to that particular reserve, but I understand that up to the present time they have never been able to get any statement as to how the matter stands. They object to this Bill going through and the whole question being settled without the consent of the Indians being considered at all. I think that is an important matter. It means, unless there is some settlement of that particular phase, that the Indians will feel that they have not been fairly treated.

The other day the Government of the Dominion and the Government at Washington came to an agreement relating to fishing for sockeye salmon on the Fraser river. For a great number of years that question has been a troublesome one. I want to draw the attention of the House to the situation in that regard as I see it. Honourable gentlemen will see that on page 444 of the report of the Royal Commission which we have before us, there is a map of the reserves in what is known as the Lytton agency. The map shows the old reserves, the new reserves that have been set apart, and the cut-offs. Honourable gentlemen will see that the reserves are on both sides of the Fraser river; they will see also that a number of the reserves are small. Any honourable gentlemen who have been down the Fraser river will know what the country is like down to the coast, and that from Lytton down to Yale the reserves are only places where the Indians can go every year and pitch their tents and fish for the salmon and smoke them, to carry them away back to the places where they live for use in the winter. Now, under this fishery agreement, which I understand has been completed, section 5 of the International Regulations for the protection and preservation of the sockeye salmon fisheries of the Fraser river system reads as follows:

> No net fishing or fishing of any kind, other than with hook and line, except for hatchery purposes or scientific purposes, shall be permissible in the Fraser river above the down-river side of Mission Bridge.

As my honourable friend from Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) probably knows very well, the down-river side of Mission Bridge means the lower part of the Fraser river. I do not know whether I am right in saying that it is practically the limit of tidal water. My honourable friend apparently agrees with me. Then from the limit of tidal waters there is to be no fishing other than with hook and line except for hatchery or scientific purposes. The Indians on those reserves in the Lytton agency and the other agencies are excluded from fishing there for sockeye salmon.

The other day I read to the House from a report of Mr. Babcock, who is the Fishery Commissioner for the province of British Columbia. What I read was for the purpose of showing what in his opinion the Indians would have to do. He also said in that report:

> The Indians resident in the Fraser river basin have always fished for salmon. Before the advent of the white men they depended almost wholly upon salmon for their winter food. They take them as near their homes as possible, and cure them by smoking. An approximate estimate of the number of sockeye salmon taken by Indians above the commercial fishing limits on the Fraser river in the years of the big runs previous to 1913, place the number at 200,000. It probably largely exceeded that number. The number taken in former years of the big runs by the Indians resident in the Chilcotin river section is placed at from 40,000 to 50,000.

The Chilcotin river is of course a good deal farther north than this part to which I have referred, and the question is whether under these regulations the Chilcotin, which is a tributary of the Fraser river, would be included. The treaty itself refers to the Fraser river and the Chilcotin river, but honourable gentlemen will notice that in the section which I just read only the Fraser river is mentioned. That, no doubt, is a question for legal gentlemen to decide. The report goes on to say:

> Those taken by Indians from the Fraser basin above the mouth of the Chilcotin is given at 20,000, and between the mouth of the Chilcotin and Bridge rivers at 40,000 odd; while those along the banks of the Thompson and Shuswap and Adams lakes at 30,000; in the canyon of the Fraser and Yale, at 15,000; and in the Harrison-Lillooet lakes section, at 40,000. The figures here given include only sockeye that were taken, dressed and cured. They do not include the other species of salmon taken or the sockeye consumed in a fresh state. The catches made by Indians in the years of the big runs previous to 1913 were not a serious drain on the run of those years. The numbers taken during the lean years, though considerably less than in the big years, was a serious drain on the spawning beds. During the last decade, none of the tribes above the canyon at Yale have been able to get any considerable number in any lean year, and their catches in both 1913 and 1917 did not exceed those of early lean years. The drain on the runs was nevertheless serious.

That will show the position on the Fraser river.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is my honourable friend aware that the Government has always been ready to furnish supplies for the Indians in lieu of the salmon? In the interest of the fisheries it is not desirable that this fishing should be carried on.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: At the same time, last year an Indian was caught fishing in the Fraser river, and he was hauled up and fined $500. That sort of thing is going to rankle very much in their minds.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Is not that a matter that should have been brought up when the treaty was settled? It cannot come up now.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It may be a matter that the Canadian Government should have brought up.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does not the treaty govern it now?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think it does. But this shows that the Department of Indian Affairs was not watching the interests of the Indians when dealing with the treaty; it shows the House that the Indians have not been getting the consideration which they deserve from the Department; and it shows that, if there is a feeling of unrest, as my honourable friend has stated, there is some ground for the Indians feeling that they are not being properly treated.

I have tried to explain the situation to honourable gentlemen so that they may understand it. I do not want honourable gentlemen to think that I have brought this matter up with any intention of stirring up trouble in the country; on the contrary, I want to allay as much as possible any trouble. It would be very serious if anything were done which would lead the Indians to believe that the Government is not treating them fairly and as they deserve. I am sorry to say that some of the Indian agents in British Columbia are not what I think they should be. I think it is only right that the Department should go very carefully into the matter and make some changes in their agents in British Columbia. Those men represent the Department, and if they are not doing the right thing by the Indians, the Indians get the idea that the Department is not looking after their interests, and they have not the confidence in the Department that they should have. That is a very serious matter, and I want to impress upon the Government the desirability of giving it careful consideration.

Before I leave the question of the fisheries I want to refer the House to what the Commission itself said about this matter. On pages 542 and 543 of the report I find the following:

Fishing Rights of Indians in B.C. Minute and Resolution of the 6th June, 1916:

Whereas former Indian Reserves Commissioners, acting joint Governmental agreements, allotted defined fishery rights to certain tribes or bands of Indians in British Columbia;

Whereas this Commission has been unable to obtain any advice from the law officers of the Crown in right of the Dominion of Canada as to the authority of the said former Commissioners to allot such fishery rights—

Apparently that is an admission on the part of the Fishery Commissioners that fishery rights were allotted to the Indians on previous occasions—

And Whereas this Commission desires that any right or title which Indians may have to such allotted fisheries may not be adversely affected by inaction on its part—

Be it resolved: That, to the extent to which the allotting Commissioners had authority to allot such fishery rights, this Commission, insofar as the power may lie in it so to do, confirms the said allotted fishery rights, as set forth in the schedule hereto appended.

Then the report deals with the various tribes in the Lytton agency, to which I have already referred:

Anderson Lake Tribe. Minute of Decision of September 5, 1881, constituting Anderson Lake Reserve No. 1: The exclusive right of salmon fishing on Mosquito river through the entire length of reserve No. 1, a distance of 1 mile.

Bridge River Tribe. Minute of Decision of September 1, 1881, constituting Bridge River Reserve No. 2: The exclusive right of salmon fishing on both banks of the Fraser river from half a mile south of Bridge river upstream to Fountain Indian fishery.

I would ask honourable gentlemen to consider the impression which it would make on the Indian mind to have the Commissioners appointed by this Government go there and make this finding, giving them the exclusive right of salmon fishing on both sides of the Fraser river, and then a day or two afterwards to have a man come along and arrest them and fine them $500 for fishing on the Fraser river. That is the position things are in to-day. These findings deal with all the different agencies of British Columbia. As honourable gentlemen know, the Fraser is a large river, and with its tributaries covers the greater part of the interior of the province, and is the spawning-ground of the sockeye salmon. I think we ought to be exceedingly careful in our dealings with the Indians, showing them every consideration; in fact, in dealing with any matter in dispute, we ought to give them more consideration than we would give to a white man. We should try to show them that we are looking after their interests, and are trying to treat them fairly and as they have a right to be treated.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, may I be permitted to attempt to take this matter out of the clouds and bring it down to the region of practical business? As I see it, the Bill before the House has no connection whatever with what is known as the Indian title in British Columbia, but by its terms expressly refers to the settlement of all differences between the Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada. The interest that the people of British Columbia have in the settlement of these differences is this. The Indian reserves, as established in British Columbia about 60 years ago, when white Government first came into practical existence there, have become surrounded by the cities of Victoria and Vancouver and New Westminster and other white settlements throughout the province, until conditions have arisen when the welfare of Indians and whites alike is menaced by the location of the reserves. At the time of the Union there was an agreement between British Columbia and Canada that land required for the Indians from time to time should be provided by the province of British Columbia out of the Crown lands of that province; and, on the other hand, that lands surrendered by the Dominion of Canada, when no longer required for the use of the Indians, should become the property of the province of British Columbia. As I see it, that agreement is very plain in its terms; but the legal department of the Dominion Government, like the legal department of any other Government, may always be trusted to find a way of avoiding any agreement which appears not to be to the financial interest of that Government. So it came about that British Columbia, when from time to time the province wished to have its reserves removed from the vicinity of the cities, came to a deadlock with the Government of the Dominion, because that Government said, in effect: "If we do as you desire, and cause the Indians to abandon those reserves, you will immediately become the owner of the reserves, and will sell them and pocket the proceeds." So we have been deadlocked for more than a generation, to the prejudice alike of the Indians and the white settlers of British Columbia. Finally this agreement was made, not affecting in any way the claims of the Indians to title in British Columbia or any of their rights. But, the two Governments getting together on a common-sense basis, the Dominion Government has said, in effect: "We will not accept your full claim that you have a complete reversionary interest in these reserves, but realizing that certain reserves now held by the Indians should be terminated, we will agree to the appointment of a Joint Commission to determine which of the reserves shall be terminated or reduced, and which shall be increased in compensation; and, as to the land cut off, we will agree that that land shall be publicly sold and the proceeds divided, half to go to you, who up to the present have claimed the whole interest, and the other half to go to us for the benefit of the Indians as a whole." Honourable gentlemen, that is what is being carried out, in accordance with the report of the Commissioners, a report that engaged the best attention of five able gentlemen for three years, during which time they personally visited every one of the 330 or 350 reserves in British Columbia.

As to British Columbia itself, that province is entitled, I suppose, to have its sentiments in this matter expressed. I am free to say, from an intimate knowledge of the province, that there is nothing but satisfaction in British Columbia with the report made by the Commissioners. As to dissatisfaction on the part of the Indians, I agree with the honourable leader of this House that it is wholly artificial and manufactured; that it has no natural cause; that if the agitators were removed, or ceased their efforts, we should hear nothing further whatever from the Indians as to any grievances they have in connection with this report.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Why not deport them?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The question has been asked in this House, what is the Indians' claim as to their so-called title? It is, in effect, that they have a title to the whole province of British Columbia as the aboriginal inhabitants, and that we, the white people of British Columbia, are there only on sufferance, and should make terms with the Indians, whom we found there, for the privilege of continuing to reside in that province. It is true that in the several documents submitted the spokesmen for the Indians state that they will not insist upon the whole of their terms, but that if we will take their case into court they will be satisfied with something less than what they have demanded.

I observe from some of the correspondence which has been distributed that they set up the claim that the report is unsatisfactory to them, on the ground that it does not allot sufficient land to be added to the reserves that are to be increased. As to that point, I will say this: that at no time have the Indians of British Columbia occupied, or attempted to occupy or make any use of, more than a small proportion of the land already alloted to them; that throughout the province they have selections of the very best, most available, and most desirable lands, in the best agricultural districts, and that not only do the Indian reserves become nuisances to the cities, as I have said, but they are plague spots in the agricultural communities, because their agricultural lands are not cultivated or kept free from noxious weeds, the seed of which spread over all the districts surrounding the reserves. The reserves are made the homes of dogs that kill the settlers' sheep and worry the settlers' cattle; they are the harbourage for undesirables and for nuisances of every description. The present condition of the lands held by the Indians is in itself a sufficient answer to the claim, put forward on their behalf, that in the adjustment a very much larger area of land should be set apart for them.

These Indians claim, in addition, that as part of the settlement, the title remaining in the reserves should not be a title held by the Dominion Government in trust for the Indians as a whole, but rather that it should be the title of the Indian tribes or bands, and that the individual members of those tribes or bands should be the beneficiaries whenever those Indian reserves come to be surrendered. They claim that not all the Indians of British Columbia, as at present, but the few individuals who survive in a particular band, should be the beneficiaries. So it comes about that there is an obstacle to obtaining from the Indians the surrender provided for in the agreement between the two Governments; and by the Bill now before the House it is proposed that, in this respect only, the agreement be set aside. It naturally follows that the fewer the Indians remaining in any band, the greater the financial interest which each one of those Indians has in lands to be surrendered, as being no longer used by his tribe. Therefore it happens, as to the lands the surrender of which is most imperative, because they are not used, that the individual claims of the few survivors are the strongest; and so long as there is any person to hold up to these Indians the prospect that they may obtain fabulous sums by refusing their assent to any settlement made by the Governments, so long will it be difficult for the two Governments concerned to make an agreement. It seems to me, therefore, that that is a strong argument in favour of making provision that where the Indians prove recalcitrant, and where in the opinion of the Department of Indian Affairs the resistance of the Indian survivors interested in any surrender is carried beyond a reasonable point, the Department, as guardian of the Indians, shall have power to overrule their opposition and proceed to make an agreement with the province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: When land is taken from the Indians without their consent, who fixes the price at which the land so taken is to be sold? I mean, if this Bill passes and cut-offs may be taken without the consent of the Indians, who will fix the price?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That will be determined by the two Governments.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: According to the agreement, I understand, land is to be sold by public competition, and the price so obtained is to be divided, half being given to the Provincial Government and half to the Dominion Government for the benefit of all the Indians, not for the benefit of the few Indians who claim to be more particularly concerned.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Just another question. I understood the honourable leader to say that in place of the land taken, probably double that area had been allotted to the Indians.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Speaking from my memory of the report, I think it is proposed to cut off about 47,000 acres, and to add in other localities 87,000 acres, or double the area.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: And, speaking subject to correction, I think that the agreement between the two Governments is that wherever further land is found to be necessary for the purposes of the Indians, the province is bound to supply it. I think that agreement will continue even after this settlement. I say that subject to correction, because I am not sure of it; but the general agreement is that the province of British Columbia shall at all times provide what extra land may be required.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For the information of my honourable friend, may I refer to the 13th clause of the Act of Union, which provides:

The charge of the Indians and the trusteeship and management of the land reserved for their use and benefit, shall be assumed by the Dominion Government, and a policy as liberal as that hitherto pursued by the British Columbia Government, shall be continued by the Dominion Government after the Union. To carry out such policy, tracts of land of such extent as it has hitherto been the practice of the British Columbia Government to appropriate for that purpose shall from time to time be conveyed by the Local Government to the Dominion Government in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians, on application of the Dominion Government, and in case of disagreement between the two Governments respecting the quantity of such tracts of land to be so granted, the matter shall be referred for the decision of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is not terminated by this new agreement?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. This remains as one of the conditions of the union, and notwithstanding any agreement between the two Governments this must necessarily prevail.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: So, as I said, honourable gentlemen, not only do we give them 87,000 acres in exchange for 47,000, but the agreement continues, that if at any time more land is found to be required for the Indians that land shall be provided by the Provincial Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would the honourable gentleman allow me a question? The Provincial Government, of course, are disposing of their land to the white men, right along. How are they going to fulfil that agreement.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, we will not bid the devil good morning until we meet him.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The answer is that the agreement distinctly provides that these lands shall be taken out of the unalienated Crown lands, and when the Crown lands have all been alienated, then the Provincial Government will have no more land to give the Indians, and the agreement will be at an end. That is not affected in any way by the agreement just made. However, British Columbia is no small province, and there are many millions of acres of Crown lands not yet alienated. When the time arrives that the Crown lands have all been alienated, the responsibility of providing for the Indians will be on other shoulders than ours.

In conclusion, honourable gentlemen, I would say that, if we can secure, through the action of this Parliament, together with the Act already passed by the Provincial Legislature, the acceptance of the report of the Indian Commissioners, we shall be doing a great deal to remove dissatisfaction, unrest, and menace to the white people of British Columbia, immeasurably greater than even the fancied grievances of the Indians of that province; and when we are doing that, I think we may very well leave the Indians to the generosity of the white people of British Columbia and of Canada, who have always looked after them well, and who, so far as our Indians in British Columbia are concerned, have kept them satisfied, law-abiding and loyal, easy to get along with, easily susceptible to good arguments as well as evil arguments, and in such a mood that if, for instance, my honourable friend the leader of the other side (Hon. Mr. Bostock) would use his eloquence to persuade the Indians of the Lytton district as he has used it this afternoon to persuade this honourable House, I feel quite satisfied they would come to the conclusion that they had nothing at all to fear from any action of Parliament with respect to their claims.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Blair in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—power given to Governor in Council to settle differences between Canada and British Columbia with respect to Indian matters:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not want to take up the time of the House any longer, but I propose that the words "full and final" in lines 17 and 18, be struck out. The clause would then read:

Either in whole or in part, and for the adjustment and settlement of all differences between the said Government respecting Indian lands and Indian affairs in the province.

I think that from what I have said honourable gentlemen will realize that one of the objections to this Bill, as viewed by the Indians, is that those words prevent them from proceeding as they think they are entitled to proceed. For the purpose of bringing the question before the House I move that those words be struck out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This section is practically the same as was passed by the province of British Columbia. The British Columbia Act reads:

2. To the full extent to which the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may consider it reasonable and expedient the Lieutenant Governor in Council may do, execute, and fulfil every act, deed, matter, or thing necessary for the carrying out of the said agreement between the Governments of the Dominion and the Province according to its true intent, and for giving effect to the report of the said Commission, either in whole or in part, and for the full and final adjustment and settlement of all differences between the said Government respecting Indian lands and Indian affairs in the Province.

That corresponds almost word for word with section 2 of this Bill, which is practically a reproduction of the statute passed by the Legislature of British Columbia. I am sorry that I cannot, in deference to my hon. friend's feelings in the matter, waive any of the language which we have imported into the Bill.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Bostock was negatived.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—power to order reductions or cut-offs from reserves without surrender by Indians:

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: Did I understand the honourable leader of the House to say that this was to legalize the cut-off of some 45,000 acres?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Forty-seven thousand acres.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: And that it was not giving power to the Government to override the Indian Act of 1906?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it does not affect anything outside of the specific reductions which appear in the schedule attached to the report. It does not affect the other Indian lands at all.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: It does not interfere with chapter 49, the Indian Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not in the slightest. It does not affect land outside of these cut-offs.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: There is another matter I would like to be clear on. I thought it a very pertinent question, that asked by the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff), as to the settlement of the price of those Indian lands cut off. The honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) said that the Indians were given 80,000 or 85,000 acres for about 45,000. Now, I do not think that is an answer. What I would like to know is, who values the lands that are being taken as cut-offs, and who puts a value upon the lands given back to the Indians? If the value of the reductions and the value of the additions balance, well and good; but if the 45,000 acres are of greater value than the 85,000 acres, then I think a portion ought to be set aside for the Indians.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Indians will profit by that. They sell 47,000 acres and they receive 50 per cent of the proceeds. Under the present scheme British Columbia claims to be entitled to the entire reversion; but, in pursuance of the arrangement entered into, British Columbia concedes to the Indians 50 per cent of the proceeds of the land, which will probably be sold by public auction, or subject to public tender, and they receive 80,000 acres.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: In regard to the cut-offs and the surrenders, I think my honourable friend might give us some information as to whether any inquiry has been made on behalf of the Government, or whether they have any information, as to how the Indians themselves view this question. The Government is not going to deal with this matter without getting the consent or surrender of the Indians, and I presume the department has some information as to how the Indians view the matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Government has sought an opinion as to this adjustment from the Indian agents of British Columbia. With the exception of two or three isolated cases, there has been general satisfaction on the part of the Indians on the various reserves at what has been done. When you take into consideration that there are, I think, 300 or 400 reserves—

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Twelve hundred.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:—one cannot expect absolute harmony on a subject of this kind. Furthermore, the Chamber will remember that this Commission, representing both Governments, visited in person all these reserves, took the matter up with the Indians, and left nothing undone for the purpose of ascertaining what the judgment and the wishes of the Indians might be.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: A short time ago I raised the question of the Kitsilano reserve. The position of that reserve is peculiar. I understand that certain Indians have had some settlement made with them, but that there are some seventy Indians who still claim that they have a right to be heard in regard to this matter. They will naturally look upon the settlement that is being made here as an unsatisfactory one. I think there is special reference to that in the report of the Commission that we have before us. On page 112, volume 1, the report says:

> The Commission, pursuant to section 8 of the agreement referred to in the Commission, has had under consideration the application of the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners to acquire the Kitsolano Indian reserve No. 6, which reserve is one of those allotted for the use and benefit of Squamish tribe or band of Indians, of the New Westminster agency;
>
> The Commission having duly considered the said application and examined the plans submitted in respect thereto, and it appearing that the said reserve is necessary for the purposes of the works of the said Vancouver Harbour Commissioners,
>
> The Commission recommends that, subject to compliance with the requirements of the law and to due compensation being made (1) to the Indians of the said Squamish tribe or band; (2) to the Government of the province of British Columbia in respect of the reversionary interest of the said Government therein; and (3) in respect to any interest or interests therein other than the interests aforesaid, which may be found to be affected, permission be granted to the said Vancouver Harbour Commissioners to enter forthwith upon the said Kitsilano Indian reserve Number 6, and to acquire the same for the purposes set forth in the application hereinbefore referred to in accordance with the plans filed in respect thereto, a copy of which plans is attached hereto.

I would point out to honourable gentlemen that the Commission recognize, first, that due compensation should be made to the Indians of the said Squamish tribe or band. I understand that the seventy Indians to whom I have referred claim to be members of that band, and that they have been unable to get any information from the Department.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand it, the Harbour Commissioners at Vancouver have expropriated this property with the concurrence of both Governments, pending effect being given to this report or to an adjustment of the differences between the two Governments. This is one of the matters which will be settled when this legislation is completed. Whatever the claims of the Indians are, due recognition will be given to them. That is a very good illustration of the necessity of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I have here certain correspondence in regard to this matter, but I do not want to take up the time of the House reading it. In this correspondence there is a letter addressed to the present Minister of Indian Affairs, on the 10th of June, 1918, the reply to which was that the Indians could get no information except by applying to the agents. A further letter was written on the 17th of March, 1919, and a similar reply was apparently sent by the Department. Then a further letter was written to Mr. Burn, the agent at Westminster, and I understand that so far no reply has been received to it. That seems to be a rather curious way of dealing with the matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What information could be had? Here is a dispute between the two Governments. The Government of British Columbia claims to be entitled to a reversionary interest in the Indian lands in that province. This Government is attempting to get an adjustment of the matter. My honourable friend is opposing this. In what way can we get a settlement unless both parties come together and settle their differences?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think the Department could have written and given the answer which my honourable friend has given just now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That might have given offence to the province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps we should suggest to the Prime Minister that he should appoint my honourable friend the Minister of Indian Affairs.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All right. Section 3 was agreet to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, June 9, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Wednesday, June 9, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

PETITION OF INDIANS FOR A HEARING.

Hon. GEO. W. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to present the petition of the Nichga Indians—in fact, of the allied tribes of Indians of British Columbia—praying that a special committee of this House be appointed for the purpose of hearing the representatives of the Indians in connection with Bill 13 from the House of Commons. This Bill is now standing for its third reading. Indian delegates have come here all the way from British Columbia for the purpose of placing their case before a special Committee of this House. They feel that a great injustice will be done them by the passing of this Bill, and they desire to be permitted to avail themselves of the right of petition. Therefore they have asked me to introduce this petition in the hope that this House will see fit to grant the prayer of the petition and permit them to be heard and present their case before a select Committee of the House.

STARKEY DIVORCE PETITION.

RETURN OF DOCUMENTS.

Hon. Mr. TANNER presented the Ninety-third Report of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

He said: Perhaps the House will permit this report to be adopted now. It deals with a matter that was referred by the House to the Committee a few days ago relating to a petition that was filed by one Walter Starkey, but was not proceeded with. I understand that it was withdrawn. The respondent is now asking to have some of the documents which were filed with the committee returned, inasmuch as proceedings have been taken in a western province for a divorce; and the Committee think it would be very proper to return these documents to the respondent, and have so recommended. I understand it is desired to have them as soon as possible, and if the House has no objection to the Committee's Report might be adopted now.

The report was concurred in.

HUDSON BAY AND STRAIT.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER presented the Second Report of the Special Committee on the Navigability and Fishery Resources of Hudson Bay and Strait.

He said: This report is accompanied by a précis of the evidence taken, and also by all the evidence. I move that the report be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, as I understand, there is a good deal of evidence, and I understand further that the evidence has already been printed. I do not think that the Senate should be called upon to dispose of this report until the members of this House have had an opportunity to look over the evidence. I think that is a position that will appeal to every member, and I hope the honourable gentleman will move for the consideration of the report a little later than to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have no desire to hasten the matter. Make it Friday or Wednesday or Tuesday or any other day that will suit.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Tuesday.

The report was placed on the Order Paper for consideration on Tuesday next.

PRIVATE BILLS.

REMISSION OF FEES.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON moved:

That, inasmuch as the Bill L2, "An Act respecting the Hamilton Provident and Loan Society, and to change its name to 'The Hamilton Provident and Loan Corporation'," was not passed by the House of Commons, the Clerk of The Senate be authorized to refund the fees paid on the said Bill, after deducting the cost of printing and translation.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill 71, an Act respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Todd.

Bill 40, an Act respecting The Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. DeVeber.

Bill 23, an Act to incorporate Aberdeen Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Schaffner.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

MOTION FOR THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I was going to ask the honourable leader of the Government if he could see his way clear to letting this Bill stand for a day or two. I understand that the Indians interested in this matter have arrived in Ottawa. The honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) has presented a petition this afternoon in regard to the matter, about which the House of course knows nothing; and I think my honourable friend might let the Bill stand, in view of all the circumstances.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might say to my honourable friend, and to the House also, that, out of courtesy to my honourable friend from Kings and Albert, I should have been very glad to have given every opportunity for the House to consider the petition which has been presented; but during his absence last week this matter was fully discussed. I think we spent practically a whole sitting of the Senate in discussing the subject, and we had the subject-matter of this petition before us. There is nothing new in the petition—nothing which was not then before the House and which was not fully considered. Furthermore, I might point out that the consideration of this subject by a special committee would not alter the object sought by the Government, inasmuch as any rights which the Indians may have will not be precluded by reason of what has already been done, or what will be done by the legislation embodied in the Bill. No good purpose will be served by continuing this matter; by allowing it to remain in suspense; by permitting further agitation to be carried on amongst the Indians in British Columbia by those who have some object in view which I cannot very well fathom; and I consider that it is not only in the interest of the Indians, particularly the Indians of British Columbia, but in the interest of the public, that this matter should be determined at once without any further delay.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I may say, honourable gentlemen, that the position taken by my honoured and revered leader is not well taken in this instance. I regret very much to have to say this about the honourable leader of the Government, who generally takes a very proper position. The right to be heard is a right that was fought for and obtained by the British people many years ago, and to deny that right is, in a certain sense, a denial of justice. Why should not these people be heard? They feel that they have a grievance, and in order that that grievance may be remedied, or at any rate may be considered, it will be necessary to have a special Committee or a Committee of the Whole House before whom they can appear and have a chance to state what their grievances are.

My honourable friend has said that a full opportunity for discussion has been given. This appears to these people to be a matter of such grave import, affecting their entire status, that a discussion of an hour or an hour and a half, if it did last that long, would not be sufficient to lay before the House all the matter connected with their petition. They say, in the first place, that a great deal of misinformation is shown by the remarks made by the leader of the House; that matters had not been presented to him in such a way as to make him fully seized of the importance or all the particulars of their grievances and complaints; and they think it is necessary in their interest and in the interest of justice that they should have an opportunity of explaining matters before a select Committee of this House. A select Committee of the lower House was asked for, but it was denied them. Because it was denied them in that House is no reason why this House, which stands peculiarly for justice and fair play, should deny it. I trust the leader of the Government will change his view in that regard. Nothing can be lost so far as the Bill itself is concerned. Much can be gained if you succeed in allaying the suspicion in the minds of these people that this legislation is being railroaded through Parliament by reason of the majority which the Government can command. It is not well that a suspicion of this kind should exist. It is proper that it should be allayed, and it should be shown to these people that, though they are not of the same complexion as ourselves, we are willing to accord to them the justice which we ourselves demand.

There are a great many matters in this connection that have not been settled. It has been stated that the British Columbia Government is in accord with this Government in this legislation. That statement is denied by the petitioners. They say, and they claim that they are able to prove, that differences do exist between the two Governments in that regard. They claim to be able to prove that they have had distinct promises from responsible men connected with this Government that certain things would be done which have not been done. All these things tend to create in their minds a suspicion; and because they are weak and small in number is no reason why justice should not be done them; no reason why their petition should not be heard; no reason why they themselves should not be heard by Parliament, having travelled 3,000 miles for the purpose. Shall we lock the doors against them, and say that they shall not be heard? That is not in accord with the way that the British people have usually treated the natives of the countries they have taken. It has been the proud boast of the people of British origin that in all cases the native peoples have been well used and treated, and have been placed in a better position than that which they occupied before the conquest of their country. We in Canada, who have succeeded to the position of Britain in this regard, have hitherto treated our native peoples well. Shall we refuse, not only justice, but to hear them and to permit them to lay before Parliament whatever grievances they think they have? If these grievances are not well founded, that fact can be pointed out to them, and a decision arrived at accordingly. If, on the other hand, they are well founded, it behooves Parliament to do justice to these people and to make things right for them which are not now right. I do not wish to go into the merits of the case now, but I wish to reserve the right to speak on this matter at greater length if the right to be heard is denied to these people.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, it seems to me that it would be a good thing if the members of this House were acquainted with the facts. A good many of us do not know very much about this question. We have a number of standing committees, and if these Indians have a case I do not see why they should not be allowed to present it. I have always been against the practice of referring any public Bill to a private committee, but this seems to be a special case concerning the rights of the Indians generally, not only those of Victoria and Vancouver. It concerns their lands and their fishing rights and reserves, and I do not see what harm could come of it if the Government consented to have this matter brought up say before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which is a very efficient committee. It could hear the evidence, and these people could then go back home and say, "We have had a hearing." Perhaps there would not be any amendment made to the Bill, but it would give satisfaction to these people. Parliament is the court of last resort, and it is the undeniable right of every subject to be heard. I see some of these people in this House now; they have travelled a long way. Why should not the Senate give them a chance to be heard? We do not necessarily have to grant their petition. I have been here for twenty-four years, and this is the first time such a petition has been refused. Surely it is not because these people were the first inhabitants of the soil. They are the wards of our Government. Why should we not give them a hearing to-morrow morning before the Banking and Commerce Committee? I am sure the House would be willing to have that done, and if I had a seconder I would move that this matter be referred to that committee, and also, with the leave of the House, that any rule which might prevent it be waived. I have no doubt that there is enough of a spirit of justice in this House to give these people a hearing. The honourable gentleman from Moosejaw (Hon. J. H. Ross) seconds my motion.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I was simply rising to second the motion which has been seconded by the honourable gentleman from Moosejaw, and to say that my views are absolutely in accord with those expressed by the honourable gentleman from New Brunswick (Hon Mr. Fowler). As guardians of minorities' interests, and of people who are entrusted to the care of Canada, I think it would be entirely out of place not to give these delegates an opportunity of being heard. If there is any branch of the legislature of Canada where they should receive the kindest consideration and sympathy, it is the Senate of Canada. We are specially placed within the constitution of this country for that purpose, and I am sure that under the circumstances the majority of this House will approve of hearing the delegation who have come so far in order to be heard in regard to matters of special interest to them.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Honourable gentlemen, within ten miles of Montreal there is an Indian reserve called the Caughnawaga reserve. Some fifteen years ago some gentleman got into that reserve and created a fuss similar to this, stating that the Caughnawaga Indians were being deprived of their property, of their lands, and of their fishing and shooting rights. This gentleman got a new survey made of the reserve, and got by-laws passed, so that no white man could set his foot in the reserve. One day the Indians woke up to find themselves isolated from the neighbourhood and from the white people amongst whom they had lived and from whom they were making a living. The gentleman who brought about this condition died, and since then we have never heard anything more about it. The Indians came back and said: "We thought he was a friend of ours. He painted a very glowing picture of the future of the reserve if we did this and that and the other thing, but we have found that the only result of what he did was that he lived at our expense for ten years; and to-day we are, as we were before, perfectly satisfied."

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: In supporting the motion to refer this matter to a special committee, I may say one of the chief grievances which I think the Indians have is that they claim the Government have not kept faith with them, inasmuch as one of the terms of the agreement entered into by the Government of British Columbia, the Federal Government and the Royal Commission was that all cut-offs proposed by the Commission should be submitted to the Indians, and that their consent should be obtained before the cut-offs were taken. That has not been done, and that, I think, is one of the chief grievances which the Indians have. There seems to be a good deal of feeling, and perhaps not without foundation, that the Indians have been stirred up in this matter by those who have no particular interest in the matter. I may say that there are members of the Indian tribes present in this Chamber who have come 3,000 miles, who are quite capable, without the assistance of any interpreter or spokesman, to present their case to the Committee in a most intelligent manner, and I am sure that the members of the Committee, if the matter is submitted to them, will be surprised that they can place the matter before the Committee in such a way. I hope this House will support the motion of the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), because I think it would be a great pity to have the Indians return to British Columbia saying that they had not an opportunity of being heard.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I rise for the purpose of supporting the motion of the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudière. I do so for the reason that I believe that there is a feeling among the Indian tribes throughout Canada that they have not been treated fairly by the Government. Whether that feeling is justified or not I am not at this moment in a position to say. But I have a strong feeling against any Government taking away from the Indians their reserves or their lands without their consent. During the regime of the late administration there was a notorious case of this kind, in which a great reserve was taken away from the Indians without their proper consent having been secured. At that time I took strong ground on behalf of the Indians, because I thought that they had been unfairly dealt with, and that the law had not been observed. The Indian Act is very distinct and definite on that question; but I understand that some amendments have been made by which the Government has the power to take away or make any settlement in regard to reserves adjacent to a city or a town, without the consent of the Indians. I hold that the Indian's title to his land is just as sacred as the title of any other man; consequently these people should be dealt with not only fairly but generously. I do not say the Government is not dealing with them in that way, but I do say that when they petition to be heard in regard to their own affairs, it would be unwise for this branch of Parliament to refuse to hear them. I do think, though, that instead of referring this matter to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, there ought to be a special Committee of this House appointed to investigate it. I do not think there would be any great harm done if we spent two or three hours in Committee of the Whole hearing the Indians.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I heard the other day the remarks which were made by the honourable the leader of the Government when he moved the second reading of this Bill, and I must say I was strongly impressed with the reasons which he gave in support of it; but I would be disappointed if the honourable gentleman, on further consideration, did not consent to allow this Bill to be referred to either the Banking and Commerce Committee or a special Committee. I think that parties who express a desire to be heard should be heard. It has been the practice of this honourable House—and the practice has been appreciated by the country at large—to give a free hearing to all parties who insisted upon being heard, and not to grant the petition in this case would be an exception which I, for my part, would very much regret. I think, moreover, that the best way to prevent agitation is to give the parties who think they have a grievance an opportunity to ventilate their grievance and to be heard. I think that it will have a beneficial effect, and that the measure will be more acceptable to all parties concerned if the matter is referred to a Committee.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the situation. This Bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House and the Committee passed it, and it now stands for the third reading.

The motion of the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) is to refer the Bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I do not think that is the proper procedure. Perhaps the honourable gentleman may be right, but if he is I am surprised. However, I rose for the purpose of making the suggestion that the third reading of this Bill be allowed to stand, and the honourable gentleman might move that the petitioners be heard in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is before the Chair. The Chair can decide whether I am right or not.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I move in amendment that the third reading of the Bill be not now proceeded with, but that it be deferred until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not an amendment.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Defer it until Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think it is quite in order for an honourable member, on the motion for the third reading, to move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole or to another Committee. I think the motion moved by the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) is quite wrong, and I doubt very much that the amendment now proposed would be in order.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is not germane to the case at all.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I do not rise to discuss the merits of the point of order, but I have a suggestion to make. This matter of hearing the delegates, I presume, has been sprung on the honourable the leader of the House on short notice, but it would seem a great hardship to return those people, after they had come 3,000 miles, without giving them a hearing. I would suggest that all these motions be allowed to stand, and that the honourable the leader of the House be given until to-morrow to decide whether he will allow the question of the third reading to go to a vote, or whether he will accept the motion that has been made. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Before the debate is adjourned, I desire to ask a question, which I think is important. I have heard this matter discussed very fully by the honourable leader of the House and by the honourable leader of the Opposition and other honourable members, and if I understand the situation aright, Bill 13, which is now before the House for the third reading, would not in any manner interfere with the rights of the Indians. I understand it to be an enabling Bill, to permit the Dominion Government to take up the matter with the provincial government, to be decided between them. The passage of this Bill does not in any way prevent the Indians bringing any claim before any tribunal. When the honourable leader of the House is giving his information, I shall be glad if he will deal with this point.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, by a strange coincidence, my three honourable friends who have been most urgent that this matter should be referred to a special Committee were not present when the matter was discussed on the last occasion, and, if I mistake not, on the second reading. My honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), my honourable friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope), and my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler), were all absent on that occasion. Had they been present, I would have been hopeful that they would have viewed the situation in the same way that the House viewed it. The matter was fully discussed at that time, and had there been a division of opinion in the House as to the propriety of sending it to a special Committee, instead of dealing with it in Committee of the Whole, I have no doubt that the House would have supported a resolution along those lines. But, after a very full discussion of the whole subject, the House seemed to be unanimously of the opinion that we should proceed with the Bill in Committee of the Whole.

Now, there are two or three statements which have been made, unwittingly, I have no doubt, but which I think are entirely incorrect. One is that the British Columbia Government is not in accord with this Government upon this subject. I may say that the two Governments are entirely in accord as to the desirability of getting this matter settled. There can be no two opinions upon that feature of the question. The British Columbia Government, in anticipation of this legislation, has already passed legislation precisely along the lines which we today are discussing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: With a very important difference.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend point out the difference, while I sit down.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, while you go on I will point out just what the difference is.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Last year the British Columbia government passed an enabling Act, precisely similar to this Bill, of which I now ask the third reading. The object of the two Bills is to permit the two Governments to come together and not only to give effect or approval to the agreement which had been entered into by the Joint Royal Commission, but to deal with other matters as well. The Governments are not tied down by the report or the agreement, but have an amplitude of authority to deal with the question either along the lines of the report or along other lines. Consequently it would seem to me that the proper, the most appropriate, place for the Indians to appear and state their grievance would be before the representatives of the two Governments. It will appeal to every reasonable mind within hearing that a Commission of that kind, representing the two Governments, met together under an amplitude of powers granted by the two Acts, would be a very much more appropriate and effective Committee to hear the grievances of the Indians; and to refer the matter to them would be much better than the rather cumbersome method of referring it to a special Committeee which would have to report back to this House. If any change were made in the Bill, it would then have to go back to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Were the Indians heard?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am coming to that question in a moment.

My honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) stated—and I have no doubt he based his statement upon information communicated to him—that the Indians had not had an opportunity of being heard upon this subject. The Indians had a full hearing before the House of Commons. Upon Bill 14, a measure dealing with the franchise, coming before that House, they asked for a hearing, having been disappointed in not being heard on Bill 13, concerning which the Commons had refused to give the Indians a hearing. The House of Commons finally consented to permit a full hearing of the Indians upon all their alleged grievances before a committee. Consequently those Indians and the gentleman who represents them stated their case which occupied, I understand, two mornings, before the House of Commons Committee, and the House of Commons did not see their way to give effect to the representations which were then made, but dismissed the matter.

So much for those two statements. Now, with regard to the real grievance, the grievance which is of the most essential character, entertained by the Indians, and which has been pressed very strongly for the last generation, or at least since 1908, particularly by the gentleman who seems to have taken upon his shoulders the responsibilities of an office to which he is self-appointed, namely, that of presenting the claims of the Indians and keeping them stirred up and in a state of agitation and ferment. The whole question comes down to this. The Indians of British Columbia claim title to all the lands in that province. If honourable gentlemen in this House deem it important that a claim of that kind should be entertained, and that the title, not of the reserves of British Columbia, but of all the lands of that province, should be placed in suspense, and should be the subject of agitation and the cause of a state of ferment which would disturb the title to every foot of land in that important province, then I for one do not appreciate the wisdom of entertaining any such claim, and particularly of discussing it in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend allow me to ask him, what induced the Commons to give them a hearing?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was given by reason of their importunity. It reminds one of the woman in Scripture who was heard by the unjust judge. I do not know whether or not the unjust judge granted her request by reason of her importunity—

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I think he did.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend from Halifax is a biblical scholar of very much better standing than I am, and if he says the unjust judge did I shall not controvert that. But upon this occasion, I fancy, that will not be taken as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend, of course, understands that Bill 13 was not referred to a committee of the House of Commons at all. Certain references were made by those people to it, but the Bill was not properly before the Committee; only Bill 14 was referred to it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but I am informed that that Committee gave a full hearing to the Indians on Bill 13, because in the discussion on Bill 14 the Indians who were present insisted upon obtruding the subject-matter of Bill 13 on the committee, and the House of Commons eventually said that the shortest way to dispose of it would be to permit them to discuss the whole subject, and that was discussed.

So far as concerns the last subject to which I alluded, namely, the disturbance of title to the whole province of British Columbia—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is the essential point.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —if the Indians are permitted to raise this question—and they have attempted to do it, through their representatives going to the Privy Council on two or three occasions, and raising the question until the Privy Council absolutely refused to entertain any such application—that same question will extend to the Indian lands of every province of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. POWER: But would not the decision of the Privy Council extend to the lands in the other provinces too?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, precisely; but the provinces of Canada do not propose, nor does the Parliament of Canada propose, to permit a question of that kind to be submitted to the Privy Council. Does my honourable friend think for one moment that any government will assume the responsibility of deliberately permitting a question of that kind to be submitted to the Privy Council, so that the people of this Dominion occupying its different provinces will remain in a state of uncertainty as to the tenure of the lands which they hold? Not for a moment.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Will the honourable gentleman pardon me? He misapprehended my meaning. I meant that if the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had decided in the case of British Columbia, the same decision would apply to the other provinces, and there is no danger of trouble in the other provinces.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will readily appreciate this fact, that if that subject were submitted to the Privy Council so far as the Indians of British Columbia are concerned, and there were an adverse judgment given by the Privy Council, the Indians of the various provinces of Canada would at once say: "We are in the same position; this judgment applies to the lands of the province which we occupy, and consequently we assert our rights thereto."

Hon. Mr. POWER: I thought the Privy Council had decided?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. This matter has not been before the Privy Council, but the Government has agreed upon a case that they are willing to submit to the Privy Council, regarding the aboriginal title of the Indians and the granting of compensation therefor, and the indemnifying of the Government of British Columbia as to any amount which has to be paid by reason of the judgment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That opens up the question of title, then?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; as to the aboriginal title.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the only title they claim.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But these gentlemen come and assert this claim, that even to-day they are entitled of the value of all the lands in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, no: you are misinformed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, I am being advised by the law officers of the Crown as to what the claim means.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Could my honourable friend tell us whether the reference of which he has just now spoken is with regard to the lands at large, or with regard to the lands occupied by the Indians on the reserves created for him?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The lands at large. As I have stated on two former occasions, when the province of British Columbia comprised two Crown colonies, those Crown colonies made provision for land for the use and occupation of the Indians. The obligation to make such provision was imposed upon the colonies by the Imperial authorities. When British Columbia came into the Union, in 1874, that obligation was likewise imposed upon the new province, which had to carry out the provisions which the Crown colonies had carried out. Accordingly three-quarters of a million acres of Crown lands were placed in the possession of the Indians for their use and occupation. But the claim of the Indians is not limited to that three-quarters of a million; it extends to the lands of the whole province.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend by his present attitude wish to manifest a fear that the Privy Council is going to allow that claim to the lands at large?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. The Government of Canada quite recognize that there would be no probability, even though the question were submitted, of having an adverse judgment; but where there is no valid claim it would be very unwise for the Government of Canada to lead the Indians to believe that they had a claim sufficiently serious to submit to the Privy Council. That is where the mischief lies. The Governments of Canada from the time of Sir Wilfrid Laurier down to the present time—the last three Governments—have been busily engaged in trying to impress this upon the minds of the Indians, but the gentleman who represents them is not so impressionable as to be affected by the insistent expression of disapproval which we make.

My honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) has stated that he understands that the Government has not kept faith with the Indians, and that is one of their chief claims, and he illustrates that in dealing with the question of cut-offs. I took occasion to mention to the House the other day—in fact, on both occasions—that the cut-offs represent 47,000 acres, and that the British Columbia Government has placed at the disposal of the Government in lieu thereof 87,000 acres.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Of inferior land.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of less valuable land. But they have this advantage: that those cut-offs will be sold by public auction, and 50 per cent of the proceeds will be carried to the credit of the Indians and 50 per cent to the credit of British Columbia.

Now, the fact needs only to be mentioned to be appreciated, that it would be impossible to have the Indians surrender the cut-offs in view of the agitation which has been going on for some time. If we left those to the surrender of the Indians of their own motion, the mischievous element which has been stirring up this question would at once become active again, and the Indians of course would not willingly submit to the surrender of those cut-offs, although it would manifestly be to their advantage. The Royal Commission spent from 1913 to 1916 personally inspecting the 1,200 reserves in British Columbia and consulting with the Indians, and I am advised that there is a very large acreage of land attached to those reserves that has never been occupied by the Indians at all, and that it is desirable that those cut-offs should be at once removed from the reserves, because many of them adjoin the cities, where the Indiens have not profited by their contiguity to the urban population. We know very well that the morals of the Indians are not improved by a too close contact with whites; consequently, it is desirable that the cut-offs should be removed, and authority is to be given to the two Governments to alienate, if necessary, those cut-offs. But that does not extend to the other Indian lands.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is provision made for a hearing before that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend will look at the Bill now before us, he will see that it gives very ample authority to the two Governments to adjust all differences. It is not limited by any means to the agreement which was originally entered into in 1912, nor to the report which was made by the Joint Royal Commission in 1916. It permits the two Governments to settle all these differences —to come together to adjust them; and it seems to me, as I have already stated, that that would be the time for the Indians to appear before the representatives of the two Governments. My honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) shakes his head in a very sceptical way, as if the Senate were very much more susceptible to the appeal made by the Indians than the representatives of the two Governments would be. But where will you find any individual or group of individuals so interested in the Indians of British Columbia as the two Governments charged with looking after their affairs? Surely it cannot be contended that the gentleman who has assumed the responsibility of asserting the claims of the Indians can deal with the matter as satisfactorily as the Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada, both of which are charged with this particular duty and are more familiar with it, and in view of the public interests are concerned in seeing this matter satisfactorily settled.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I hope the honourable gentleman will extend to this House the confidence which he expresses in both Governments.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend from De Salaberry entirely misjudges the attitude which I take. It is not that I have not confidence in this House; but I appeal to this House and ask if it is in the public interest to permit the Indians to think for one moment that they can appear before Parliament and urge a claim which all the previous Governments of Canada have not seriously entertained.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend knows that the more a subject of this kind is stirred up the more the agitator believes he has a right, until it becomes a mania to such an extent that he finally enters upon a sort of holy war.

Possibly the better way, inasmuch as I have no intimation from the Government upon the subject, would be to allow the third reading to stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend told us that he would indicate in what way provision is made for the Indians being heard when this matter is taken up by the two Governments. I cannot find anything in the Bill which would assure a hearing to the Indians.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will see that both Governments may exercise a reasonable discretion in adjusting the differences between them. That would carry with it, impliedly, the right to hear the Indians.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This provision, I take it, would afford both Governments a reasonable means of adjusting; but it is not provided in any way that the Indians will be heard.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not specifically.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If I were sure the Indians would be heard, I would quite willingly waive their right in this House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let me direct my honourable friend's attention to the language of the preamble. It says:

> For the purpose of settling all differences between the said Governments respecting Indian lands and Indian affairs generally in the province of British Columbia, and for the final adjustment of all matters relating thereto by the appointment of a Royal Commission for the purpose set out in the agreement—and so on.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That refers to the Royal Commission that has already been appointed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no: that refers to the powers of this Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I wish to answer the question asked by my honourable friend the leader of the Government. I would refer him to the statutes of British Columbia of 1919. Chapter 32, section 3, says:

> Without limiting the general powers by this Act, conferred, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, for the purpose of adjusting, readjusting or confirming the reductions, cut-offs, and additions in respect of Indian reserves proposed in the said report of the Commission, carry on such further negotiations and enter into such further agreements, whether with the Dominion Government or with the Indians.

My statement was that the Act of British Columbia showed that the British Columbia Government was not entirely in accord with the course of conduct of this Government in refusing to listen to the Indians. In the British Columbia Act the Indians are recognized as parties; while in this Act they are not recognized at all. That is one of their grievances. The further fact that there is such a difference of opinion between my honourable friend and myself and others who are supporting the cause of the Indians here as to what is the actual claim of the Indians, is a strong reason why a Committee of this House should hear the Indians. The fact that, although they claim they were not heard with regard to Bill 13 when they appeared before the lower House, even if they were heard incidentally with regard to it while the Committee was dealing with another Bill, is a further consideration. Supposing it were true that Bill 13 was discussed with them, does that imply that this House, which is an independent body, shall not have the right to listen to these Indians and hear their story first-hand from themselves? If it is the desire of this Government and of the Indian Department of this Government to settle the differences which admittedly exist between themselves and the Indians of British Columbia, they could take no stronger step than to allow these men to come before a committee of this House to express their grievance. Even though the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia assume that they can do better than we can, nevertheless we are the masters of the Government of Canada at least; and, after all, they are only a committee of the two legislatures, and surely whatever powers appertain to them appertain to us. Surely the intelligence of this body is sufficient to listen to the Indians, and, if they have a just claim, to adjust it, and, if not, to tell them to depart in peace that we can do nothing for them. The time of the House would be saved and justice would be done. Real justice cannot be done unless these men, who have a grievance, and who have petitioned to be heard, are heard.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Bradbury was withdrawn.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suggest that the third reading stand until to-morrow. In the meanwhile, I will take up the matter with the Government.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Under the circumstances, with the permission of my seconder, I shall be very glad to withdraw my amendment.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Casgrain was withdrawn.

The Order for the third reading of the Bill was discharged, to be placed on the Order Paper for to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Bill K4, an Act respecting the Dominion Trust Company.—Hon. Mr. Planta.

DIVORCE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill I4, and Act for the relief of George Emerson Fox.—Hon. Mr. Todd.

Bill J4, an Act for the relief of Edith Ellen Holmes Austin.—Hon. Mr. McMeans.

Bill L4, an Act for the relief of Ethelbert Gilmour Harris.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

Bill M4, an Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Wice.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill N4, an Act for the relief of Peter Sutherland Cowie.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill O4, an Act for the relief of Roy Bradley.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill P4, an Act for the relief of Joan Doran.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Q4, an Act for the relief of Alexander Ross, Jr.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill R4, an Act for the relief of Jean Mary Sandford.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

IMMIGRATION (DEPORTATION) BILL.

REJECTED IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON moved that the Senate go into Committee on Bill X2, an Act to amend the Immigration Act (Deportation of Undesirable Persons).

Hon. GEO. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, in rising to oppose the reference of this measure to Committee, I do so for the purpose of referring to a debate that took place a short time ago on the second reading of the Bill. During that debate, the honourable the minister in charge of the Bill, and at least one other honourable member, made it appear that honourable gentlemen who were opposing this measure had defamed the labour men of Canada. I submit that any language which excites among the labour interests of Canada a feeling that they have been unfairly dealt with under the Immigration Act, or unfairly represented by members of this House, is not calculated to do any good in this country.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask the honourable member from Selkirk if it is his purpose or desire to discuss further the principle of this Bill at present? If so, I would ask the ruling of the Chair as to the propriety of his doing so. I think he is quite out of order.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not think it is out of order. I can discuss it on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: We are going into Committee.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I have a perfect right to discuss it on the motion to go into Committee.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: There is nothing to prevent the discussion of the principle of the Bill on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. However, the principle of a Bill is generally discussed at the second reading.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not intend, honourable gentlemen, to take up any great length of time; but there has been serious misrepresentation regarding this whole matter, and I desire to clear it up, not only for the sake of honourable members of this House, but also for the sake of the people in the country. I refer to the language that was used by the honourable gentleman and by one other honourable member, because I feel that it is not fair that those who have differed with the honourable minister with respect to this Bill should be held up to the labour men of Canada as unfair or unsympathetic to their interests. The honourable the Minister said:

> I want further to point out that different honourable gentlemen this afternoon have classed labour men generally with the men who have been guilty of sedition in this country. It is most unfortunate and most unfair, and such a suggestion will be repudiated by all honest labour men throughout the country.

I submit, honourable gentlemen, that there was not one word said by myself in discussing this Bill, and not one word said by any other honourable gentleman who took the same position as I did, in refusing to support the measure, that would justify any such language by the honourable the Minister of Labour. In fact, I myself went out of my way to pay to the labour interests of Canada the compliment which I believe they well deserve. I believe there is no labour class in the world better conducted or possessing more ability and intelligence than the Canadian-born labour men.

My honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett), who is not in his seat at present, went one better than the Minister and said:

> One would imagine from the remarks of some honourable gentlemen that there was not a decent labouring man in Canada; that from one end of Canada to the other there was a seething mass of men who were out to murder and burn down houses and commit all sorts of crimes.

I submit, honourable gentlemen, that language such as this coming from any man who has the honour of a seat in this honourable House is calculated to inflame the minds and the passions of the working people of this country, and make them feel that there are in this House men who are not ready to do justice to the labour interests.

I want to say, in conclusion on this phase of the question, that it is absolutely unfair for the Minister in charge of this Bill, and the other honourable gentleman who took the same view as he did regarding it, to use language which is so utterly out of accord with anything that was said by those who differed with them. The language used by either of those honourable gentlemen was not in any way justified.

Enough of that. The Bill has been so misrepresented that I feel that, in justice to myself and in order to correct the impression that has been created throughout the country, something ought to be said to set at rest the minds of the people. Innocently, I hope, but whether innocently or not, the honourable the Minister succeeded in completely beclouding this question by language that fails entirely to explain frankly the relative position of the British-born who come to Canada and the aliens who have become naturalized in this country, including of course the Austrian, the German, and the Italian.

Great stress has been laid on the apparent fact that while the British-born has obtained citizenship after five years residence in Canada he can be deported under the Immigration Act, yet aliens who have become naturalized in Canada can commit all the offences set out in clause 41 of the Immigration Act and be immune from deportation. That is the contention of honourable gentlemen who support this bill, and that has been published in the press of Canada and has gone broadcast over the country. If that contention were correct then I say it would be a serious state of affairs, and the legislation that is on the statute book at the present time would be justified only by an extreme emergency. Perhaps that emergency did exist when the legislation was placed there; but I submit, honourable gentlemen, that this contention, which has been made by honourable gentlemen in this House, is absolutely incorrect and entirely foreign to the facts. The ordinary layman might well be excused for making such a serious mistake; but it is difficult to understand how two very eminent legal gentlemen in this House could have fallen in to the error. I refer to the honourable member from DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), who, I regret, is not in his seat, and my honourable friend the Senator from Alma (Hon. Mr. Foster). Both honourable gentlemen took the same position—that a British subject could be deported from this country without trial.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend is mistaken. He misunderstood me. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I was not referring to the honourable gentleman from Ottawa; I was referring to the honourable Senator from Alma (Hon. Mr. Foster).

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I thought you said the member from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I confess frankly that I was much surprised at the speeches made by these two honourable gentlemen, because, as everybody knows, they are two very eminent lawyers, and the members of this House listened to them with a great deal of interest. Their speeches always carry great weight in this House. So much is this so that if those two honourable gentlemen had not addresssed the House when the Bill was before us on the last occasion it would not have passed the second reading. I believe that they convinced several honourable gentlemen that their contentions were correct, and that the Bill ought to pass.

A little knowledge is sometimes a dangerous thing. I think that if the honourable gentlemen had taken just a little more pains and looked a little more closely at what was behind the Bill, they would never have made those speeches. I am satisfied that they had no intention of misrepresenting the Bill or in any way causing a misunderstanding. They evidently overlooked entirely the important amendment made to the Naturalization Act of 1919, chapter 38, clause 7, which provides for the denaturalization of any citizen whose conduct would bring him within the meaning of clause 41 of the Immigration Act. In other words, honourable gentlemen, if an alien, from Germany, from the United States—no matter where he is from—if he has lived in this country and secured naturalization, and if he commits any of the offences mentioned in clause 41 of the Immigration Act, he can be proceeded against under the Naturalization Act; he can be denaturalized; and as soon as he is denaturalized he becomes an undesirable and can be taken by the immigration officers before a board that is provided for the purpose, and if found guilty can be deported just the same as the British subject. There is absolutely no difference between the British-born who comes into Canada and commits acts that bring him within the meaning of clause 41 of the Immigration Act, and the alien who has secured naturalization and commits acts which bring him within that clause. They both occupy exactly the same position and can be deported.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Is this a case in which they do not get a trial?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They do get a trial. If you will permit me, I will read the clause in a moment. It is very clear and distinct. The amendment made last year to the Naturalization Act is chapter 38, clause 7 of which reads as follows:

> 7. (1) Where the Secretary of State of Canada is satisfied that a certificate of naturalization granted by him under this Act, or granted under any Naturalization Act heretofore in force in Canada, has been obtained by false representation or fraud, or by concealment of material circumstances, or that the person to whom the certificate is granted has shown himself by act or speech to be disaffected or disloyal to His Majesty, the Secretary of State of Canada may recommend that the certificate be revoked and the Governor in Council may by order revoke the same accordingly.

Honourable gentlemen will realize that just as soon as the naturalized citizen is proceeded against under clause 41 of the Immigration Act, and the Secretary of State recommends the revocation of his naturalization, he can be denaturalized by Order in Council. When this is done he immediately becomes an undesirable, and can be taken before the Commission provided for under the Act, and investigated and examined, and, if found guilty, he can be deported. In other words, the department can deport the citizen who has been denaturalized, for just the same reason as as it can deport the British-born whose misconduct brings him within the meaning of clause 41 of the Act. You will see that there is absolutely no discrimination against any class in Canada. All classes are treated alike as regards deportation. The only real difference is that the naturalized citizen is denaturalized before his deportation, and the British-born, as every honourable gentleman knows, cannot be denaturalized, but can be proceeded against under the Immigration Act, which makes it possible to deport him for offences under clause 41. In a nutshell, the British-born is deported under the Immigration Act; the deportation of the alien who has secured citizenship by naturalization is provided for under the Naturalization Act and the Immigration Act combined. The methods differ, but both classes are treated exactly the same. As every one can understand, the Britisher could not be deported under the Naturalization Act, because he is a British subject.

To my mind, that disposes of the alleged discrimination against the British-born with regard to deportation. There is not a tittle of evidence to warrant the statement which has been made by honourable gentlemen, and which has gone broadcast over the country, that there is discrimination against the British subject.

Now, honourable gentlemen, there is another phase of this question which is very important, in view of the unrest which has been occasioned throughout the country. I refer to the statement made by the honourable Minister, who claimed that men have been and can be deported under the present Act without a trial. If that were true, I do not wonder that some honourable gentlemen were stampeded into believing that the Act was un-British; but that statement is absolutely foreign to the facts. Before I leave this subject I will prove to the House that the Government not only provided a trial but a special court by which these men could be tried.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It might save time if I were to point out that I did not make the statement which the honourable gentleman attributes to me. I said, "without a trial by a jury of his peers." I made no reference to a trial by a special tribunal which might be appointed by the Department.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The honourable gentleman is reported in Hansard as having used certain language, and when I read it the House will realize why this matter should be combated. The minister said:

The legislation does not serve any good purpose, but is simply an aggravation; and I assure honourable gentlemen that it is not the desire of this House, or any other constituted authority in Canada, courts or otherwise, to impose a system of this sort, whereby a British subject, resident in this country for five years or more, would be summoned and deported without being given a trial.

Then, later on he said:

Notwithstanding the fact that after five years residence in this country, under the Naturalization Act, a British-born subject becomes a Canadian citizen, he is, by the Immigration Act as it now stands, deprived of the right of a trial.

This is pretty plain English, honourable gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Absolutely true.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I think I will demonstrate that it is not so. (Reading):

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Then the man complained against was not even present.
Hon. Mr. Robertson: No.

Honourable gentlemen, I ask the opinion of this House as to what effect a statement like that, going out to the country, that a man is tried, and deported, and is not even present when he is being tried, is going to have.

Hon. Mr. POWER: He is as bad as an Indian.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Yes, worse. I would not place so much stress on this matter if it were not for the press of the country. They, believing the honourable gentleman's statement was correct, have to some extent taken up the cudgels on behalf of my honourable friend. I have here a clipping from an editorial in the Journal of yesterday, which pays some very nice compliments to this Chamber, and, as we get so few compliments, I think I had better read it to the House. It says:

While the Commons has been debating the Budget the Upper House has been having a stormy discussion about a clause in the Immigration Act which gives the Minister of Immigration power to seize British-born Reds or agitators and summarily deport them without trial. The Senate is supposed to be a place where a number of octogenarian gentlemen while away an hour or so each day in thoughtless meditation upon legislation sent it by the Commons. In reality it is nothing of the kind. It is a much more aggressive, more experienced, and more intellectual body than the Commons. Its speeches are more lucid, logical and compact than those of the Lower House; its members combine a higher average of legislative capacity; and above all, it has more independence.

It is something to have an independent House.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: That refers to the members on this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The article goes on to say:

Thus, this week when the Government through Senator Robertson, Minister of Labor, proposed to repeal the deportation clauses mentioned, it encountered a storm of non-partisan criticism. Senator Lynch-Staunton, a Tory of the old school, whose reactionary tendencies would have won him an Earldom in the days of George the Third,—

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY (reading):

—promptly moved the six months' hoist, and a procession of other good old-time Conservatives, to whom Radicalism is heresy, passionately rallied to his support. The result was a debate of singular bitterness—

Unfortunately that is true.

—and a division in which the Government found itself in the position of having to depend upon the Opposition to save its proposal from defeat.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I hope the day will come when we will have no Opposition in this House.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Explain.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I suppose, honourable gentlemen, being an Irishman, I have a right to explain. What I mean is this: that I look upon this Chamber as a great legislative body appointed for the purpose of considering all measures on their merits, and I believe we have too much Opposition and too much Government in this House; I believe that all measures ought to be treated on their merits, and that we should not be dependent upon one side of the House or the other to support them. Here is where the sting comes in the Journal's article, and this is why I refer to it. The Journal is absolutely fair, but it has been misled into believing that British-born citizens can be deported from this country without a trial. It says:

Senator Robertson, of course was right. Any legislation that deports a British citizen without affording him an opportunity of meeting his accusers in a fair trial, is anti-British in its very essence, and while it may have been necessary as emergency legislation at the time of the Winnipeg strike the sooner it is effaced from the statute books of the country, the better.

Now, honourable gentlemen, you can see at once what this debate has done, when, on the second reading, my honourable friend and some other honourable gentlemen took the position that a man could be deported without a trial. I want to say that it is a very serious position. Just what good purpose is to be served by it I do not know. I do not like to accuse any honourable gentleman of wilfully misrepresenting the facts. I do not believe that has ever been the intention. But I do say without hesitation that, if I am a judge of the English language, the gentlemen who have taken that position have misrepresented the facts as they stand on the statute book of the country to-day, and by doing so have caused a very unsettled feeling. The honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat. He went one better than the minister, which shows the effect that the debate must have had upon that honourable gentleman. He used this language:

In proceedings of that nature the man accused may not even know who is making the accusation. There may be a charge preferred against him, and the next night he may be hurried out of the country. Some persons contend that lawyers do not know anything at all about law.

I think it would be well for some of them to look up the law before they speak. (Reading):

Well, some lawyers may and some other lawyers may not.

The honourable gentleman is very candid about that. (Reading):

Well, some lawyers may and some other lawyers may not. I know one thing, however, that there have been many miscarriages of justice; there is no question about that. Let me give you an instance. There may be fire-eaters outside this Chamber too. Let us assume that a foreigner has a choice location of land in the Canadian Northwest, and a charge is preferred against him by someone who wants him to be driven out of the country, while the time has not lapsed in which he can prove up on the property. What is the result? The result is simply this. The charge may be preferred against him behind his back, and he never has the opportunity of meeting his accuser face to face. He is dispossessed of his land and is hurried out of the country.

I submit, honourable gentlemen, that these are serious statements to go to the country; statements that I do not feel justified in allowing to go on Hansard without any rebuttal; and I ask this House, in all seriousness, is such language, which entirely misrepresents the facts, in the interest of law and order in Canada? I submit that it is not. Utterances of this kind from members of this House are well calculated to inflame the minds and passions of certain classes in this country, whom this legislation has been placed on the statute book to control.

Now, honourable gentlemen, let us for a moment examine the facts in connection with this question, as to whether a man can be deported, run out of the country, without facing his accuser or without any trial. What does the present law provide, in all cases where deportation proceedings are taken? If the honourable gentleman had looked at chapter 27, clauses 13, 15 and 19, of the Immigration Act of 1919, he would have seen that ample protection is given for a fair and searching investigation before deportation takes place. Chapter 25, of 1919, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, puts a new clause in the Immigration Act making provision for the investigation to which I have referred. It reads as follows:

The minister may nominate at any port of entry any number of officers, not exceeding 5, any three of whom may act as a Board of Inquiry for the summary determination of all cases of immigrants, passengers, or other persons, seeking to enter or land in Canada, or detained for any cause under this Act.

Every great city in Canada and hundreds of towns are ports of entry; so if a man is arrested and proceeded against by the Immigration Board, he would be taken in charge and brought before this board. What happens then? This amendment of course refers to the Immigration Act. You go back to the Immigration Act, chapter 27, of 1910, and here are the powers taken by the Government under that Act to try cases of persons who are subject to deportation. Clause 15 of that Act reads as follows:

The hearing of all cases brought before such Board of Inquiry shall be separate and apart from the public, but in the presence of the immigrant, passenger or other person concerned, whenever practicable.

That clause says clearly that the accused has got to be present.

And such immigrant, passenger, or other person shall have the right to be represented by counsel whenever any evidence or testimony touching the case is received by the Board, and a summary record of proceedings and of evidence and testimony taken shall be kept by the Board.

That does not look as if a man could be arrested and run out of the country without a trial. Here the Government creates a special court, and the man goes before that court and meets his accusers and the evidence, and he has a right to have counsel, and further than that, he has the right to appeal. Clause 2 of the same Act reads:

The Board, and any member thereof, may, at discretion, administer oaths and take evidence under oath or by affirmation in any form which they deem binding upon the person being examined.

Now I am going to turn to clause 19 of the same Act just for a moment. I shall read only a part of the clause, because that is all we are interested in. It says:

In all cases other than provided for in the next preceding section an appeal may be taken to the minister against the decision of any such Board of Inquiry or officer in charge, by the immigrant, passenger, or other person concerned in the case.

All this shows, honourable gentlemen, that the Government has made ample provision under which men charged with offences shall be tried. They shall be brought before this special court; they shall have the right to employ counsel to plead their case; the evidence given shall be taken down; then, if the court rules against them and orders their deportation, they have a right to appeal to the Minister.

In the face of all these facts, was I not justified in saying that the honourable gentleman who took the position that these men received no trial and could be practically run out of the country in the night, as the honourable gentleman from Simcoe said, without meeting their accusers, took an absolutely unjustifiable position? In the interests of the people of Canada, whom this legislation may affect, or who might be led to think it would affect them, I am anxious that this matter should be placed in such a position before this House and before the country that there will be no misunderstanding, and that no class of people in Canada will feel that the Government has discriminated against them in the matter of deportation proceedings. I agree with what some honourable gentleman said —I think it was the honourable gentleman from Alma (Hon. Mr. Foster)—when he took the position that it would he horrible to deport a British subject without trial while an alien enemy who had become naturalized could not be deported at all. I confess frankly that after the two legal honourable gentlemen had spoken my confidence was shaken in the position which I had taken on the second reading of the Bill; but I had in my mind the provision that is made in the regulations, and, while I did not know the facts, I knew that I could find them, and consequently I voted against the second reading of the Bill.

Now, gentlemen, there is just one other matter that I would like to refer to for a moment. What class of people is it that the Immigration Act, that legislation that was so wisely placed in the Statutes of Canada, was intended to operate against? Does any honourable gentleman say that it is a desirable class, or a class that we should be very much interested in protecting in this country? Those people have been the curse of the honest labour men of this country. They have gone into their midst, and agitated, and, because some of the men they met were weak men, they induced them to commit acts that they would not otherwise have committed. As I say, it is wise that the law should remain just as it is.

The honourable minister of Labour said that this legislation was no good—that it was simply an aggravation. Why, honourable gentlemen, my honourable friends might just as well argue that the Criminal Code of Canada, which provides punishment for a man who commits a theft or a burglary or some other crime, is of no use, but is simply an aggravation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How about prohibition?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I think perhaps that might be an aggravation too.

Honourable gentleman, in conclusion, I want to say that in the best interest of the country and in the interest of law and order, the legislation that is on the statute book at the present time ought to be let alone, and this Bill ought not to proceed further. It would be to my mind a serious mistake for this Senate to adopt the suggestion made by the Minister of Immigration, who is, I believe, responsible for sending the Bill to this House. The Act of last year was passed because it was felt to be absolutely necessary then. The conditions in Canada have not changed sufficiently, in my opinion, to warrant the amending of that measure or the limiting of its effect. Therefore I hope that when the opportunity comes honourable gentlemen will see to it that this Bill is killed.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Thompson in the Chair.

On section 1—deportation of undesirables:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen—

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand that a motion of this kind is not debatable.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask the consent of the Committee, if that is necessary—I do not pretend to be an authority on rules of procedure—that when the Speaker resumes the Chair I may have the privilege of asking for his ruling on that point?

Some Hon. SENATORS: No, no.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I have to put the motion as I have it. Those in favour of the motion that the Committee rise—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make any extended remarks, but I suggest—

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand the question is not debatable.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Quite right. I am not going to debate the question. On several occasions this Bill has been before this House. No honourable gentleman can truthfully say that I have not played the game fairly, or that on any occasion I have not given the widest opportunity to everybody to express his views on any phase of question. And now to spring a motion of this sort to shut off debate in Committee, or consideration in Committee, I respectfully submit, is absolutely unjustifiable, and indeed ungentlemanly, conduct on the part—

Some Hon. SENATORS: Order.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON:—of those who have done so. It is not fair.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I appeal to the Chairman and to honourable gentlemen present, if the Chairman feels that he must put the motion, that we should not pass any motion that will restrict debate on this important question. I refrained from answering the honourable gentleman from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) because I did not wish to take up the time of the House. I can absolutely refute the arguments that he advanced, and would be glad to do so if the House gives opportunity; but I do not desire to project my views—

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The question before the House is that the Committee rise.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I am quite willing that the honourable the Minister should be heard if that is possible. So far as the point of order is concerned, I do not want to have my motion put in order to cut off debate.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand the motion is not debatable. I have consented to the honourable the Minister speaking so far, but it is for the Committee to determine whether or not the Minister shall have an opportunity to speak. My ruling is that the motion is not debatable. The question before the House is that the Committee rise.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Those in favour of cutting off debate will rise.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Cannot some proper means be found to allow the Minister to give expression to his views on this subject?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Let him do it by consent, then. I want to hear him.

Hon. Mr. BLAIN: Mr. Chairman, I think there is some misunderstanding in the House on this point. I do not think that any member in the House would desire that the Minister should not have an opportunity of making a statement. For my part, I wish to say that, although I voted against the measure, I am fully in accord with allowing the Minister to make his statement.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I am allowing the House very great liberty. I understand from the Clerk that the motion as put to the House is not at all debatable.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think that with the leave of the House the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) might withdraw his motion. That would solve the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Do you rule, Mr. Chairman, that I may withdraw my motion for the present?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand it cannot be repeated.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Then I do not want to withdraw it—if I cannot repeat it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I make a suggestion in the hope that it will help towards a solution of this little misunderstanding or tangle? The Committee stage of this Bill does not appear to me to be important. There are only two short clauses. If my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) desires to move a further motion on the third reading, that will permit of further debate, I have no objection; but I do not think we should shut off the discussion summarily at the Committee stage without giving honourable gentlemen an opportunity to say anything they may desire to say on the subject.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand that the House gives permission to the Minister to make some remarks. But other members will be debarred from speaking.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Question, question.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The question before the Chair is that the Committee rise. Those in favour of that motion—

Some Hon. SENATORS: No, no.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Allow the Minister to speak on it.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Yes, if that is the wish of honourable members.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I do not urge, honourable gentlemen, that I be given the privilege of speaking before the Committee if it is not in order, but I do crave an opportunity to speak at the proper time. If the House is agreeable now, I will proceed.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Yes, yes.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I thank you for your courtesy.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I think that is a rather irregular way of proceeding. The motion is that the Committee rise. As I understand, there cannot be a discussion on that; and if the Committee desire to rise, that is the end of the Bill. I am in favour of the Bill, but I think that we should follow the regular parliamentary practice. You have already put the question, Mr. Chairman, and I do not think there can be any legitimate debate after the question has been put.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I understand that it is entirely irregular; but at the request of honourable members of the House who thought that we ought to afford the Minister an opportunity to make some remarks, I personally consented.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Understanding that it is with the consent of honourable gentlemen—which consent I appreciate—I would like to make a few observations respecting this Bill, and by way of reply to some of the remarks of my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury). I was indeed pleased, during the debate on another subject this afternoon, to observe my honourable friend from Selkirk to be so heartily in accord with granting the humblest resident in the country an opportunity to be heard. He was desirous that the Indians should have every liberty accorded to citizens of the country, although he had previously taken the opposite view so far as certain classes of British subjects were concerned. The honourable gentleman expressed his opinion with reference to the Indians so strongly that I thought that he must have changed his opinion upon this question. However, I find that I was mistaken, and that the honourable gentleman still adheres to his former view.

I feel that it is necessary and important that we should approach this subject calmly and dispassionately. I do submit that the honourable member from Selkirk was in error in stating that the minds and passions of the people of this country had been inflamed because of utterances of mine made in this House upon this subject. The honourable member from Selkirk quoted from Hansard a remark of mine, in which I took exception to statements which had been made on this subject and said they would be repudiated by labour men throughout the country, or would at least be very unsatisfactory to them. I made those remarks with a clear understanding of what I said, and meaning what I said, and they were made in reply to the statement by the honourable member from Huron (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot), who in the course of the debate said with reference to this Bill:

> I think it is brought forward, not in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole, but in the interest of certain agitators who have made it their business—

And there I interjected and took exception to the honourable gentleman's remarks as coupled with those of other honourable gentlemen who had used the term labour, I fancy, intending it to apply to the agitators connected with the Winnipeg strike who were under discussion. Those agitators were referred to by the term labour, as generally applied to all labouring men in Canada, and to that I took exception. The honourable member from Selkirk, I think, has clearly pointed out that that interpretation was not in his mind at all, and doubtless it was not in the minds of other honourable gentlemen. It was probably wise for the honourable gentleman to mention that to-day, in order to clear up the point. But I submit, honourable gentlemen, that I was not acting unfairly in making the remarks I did at that time.

The honourable member was pleased to state that in his opinion the Minister of Labour had beclouded, if not misrepresented, the facts—he hoped innocently. I shall take occasion in a few minutes to vindicate absolutely every remark that I made and prove that they were all quite in order and true. With reference to deportation without trial, I think it will be found, if my remarks in Hansard are read, that throughout the debate I mentioned several times specifically "trial by jury," or "trial by a jury of his peers," and if on one or two occasions I made use of the word "trial" without the additional words it is in my opinion misleading to interpret my words as meaning a trial other than by a jury.

There has been, and, I think, there still exists, a good deal of misapprehension in the minds of honourable gentlemen as to just what the effect of these proposed amendments would be. I have taken occasion during the last two or three days to attempt to get the facts clearly and concisely before me, so that I might present them to the House, because I was informed casually that my Bill was to be buried and that the tombstone had already been ordered, the inscription carved, etc.—which of course was said in fun and received as an amusing comment. However, I stated the other day the purpose of this Bill, and I desire now to refer to that statement in order that my present remarks may be connected and understood. I said, as reported at page 458 of Hansard:

> Had the amendments which were made to the Criminal Code at the subsequent Session, and which are in effect to-day, been in force, it would not have been necessary to pass such special legislation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: What it the amendment?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I will answer my honourable friend in a moment. My honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), and I think the honourable gentleman from Boissevain (Hon. Mr. Schaffner) both questioned my statement that there had been an amendment to the Criminal Code that would in any way bear upon section 41 of the Immigration Act, and I frankly confessed that I had made the statement on the strength of the statement which the Minister of Immigration and Colonization made when he suggested that the Bill be introduced in this House, because we were not overworked while the Commons was busy. Therefore I did not take a definite position until I had looked into the matter, because I am not in the habit of making statements that I do not mean or do not believe. I have had the matter looked up somewhat carefully, and find that on July 7, 1919, one month, to a day, after the amendment to the Immigration Act was passed, sections 97A and 97B of the Criminal Code were enacted. They are contained in chapter 46 of the statutes, which was assented to on July 7, 1919.

Before referring in detail to the provisions of those amendments to the Code, honourable gentlemen, I would like to point out to you why there existed a necessity to make this amendment to the Immigration Act on June 7, 1919. It was because the Criminal Code did not make provision for all offences that it was necessary to deal with at that time; and I think I so stated clearly when discussing this Bill in the second reading. The Criminal Code as it existed prior to June, 1919, provided penalties for various offences for example, for treason, for which the penalty is death; for treasonable offences, for which the punishment is imprisonment for life; for conspiracy to intimidate a legislature, for which the penalty is fourteen years' imprisonment; for unlawful assembly; for riot; for riotous destruction of property; for common law misdemeanour of rout; for administering or being present at and consenting to the administration of an oath or engagement purporting to bind the person taking same to commit crime; etc. I need not give all the details. But there were two specific things which were not referred to or provided for in the Criminal Code, and which were at that time menaces to the safety of the state and people of this country. Those two things were: unlawful organizations that were in existence or were being formulated at that time, for the purpose of promoting revolutionary activities: and the publication and distribution of revolutionary literature.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would not that come within the definition of treason?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Department of Justice at that time thought that those things were not such as came within that category; therefore the amendment to the Immigration Act was brought in and hurriedly passed, as honourable gentlemen recall. Within thirty days—in fact, within I think, about ten days—of the time that the amendment to the Immigration Act was passed, there was introduced in the House of Commons a Bill known as Bill 160. To be accurate, it was introduced on June 27. It provided for two things; and for the information of the House and in order to make clear just what the provisions of those enactments were, I will simply read it:

Sections 97a and 97b of the Criminal Code, as enacted by chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1919, contain elaborate provisions for the suppression of any association, organization, society, or corporation whose professed purpose, or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by the use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, terrorism or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury in order to accomplish such change or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose; and any person who is a member of such an association, or who prints, publishes, edits, or issues, circulates, sells or offers for sale or distribution any publication or document of any kind in which the principles or purposes aforementioned are taught, advocated, advised or defended, is rendered guilty of an offence, and liable to imprisonment for not more than twenty years.

That, honourable gentlemen, is the amendment to the Criminal Code which was introduced on June 27, 1919, and assented to on July 7, and to which I referred when I stated that had the Criminal Code on June 7, 1919, been as it is now the amendment to the Immigration Act passed upon that date would not have been necessary or thought of.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does the honourable gentleman think they could be deported under the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No. I shall come to that later.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Why did they not repeal this Act entirely?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: We propose to repeal certain clauses.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand the honourable gentleman to say that had the Criminal Code been in the position in which it is now on the statute book, this Act would never have been passed.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: This amendment made on July 7 to the Immigration Act would not have been necessary, as it was necessary at that time.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Then, why not entirely repeal this amendment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am quite willing that that should be done. But I point out, honourable gentlemen, that two particular features, namely, the advocacy of obtaining governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada, by the use of force, and the publication and distribution of literature of the nature referred to, were not specifically provided for.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: By the amendment of 1919?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Were not provided for in the Criminal Code prior to June 7, 1919. Therefore, instead of our attempting to amend the Criminal Code, this amendment was made to the Immigration Act in order that the immigration authorities might deal with cases which it was important should be dealt with under those conditions. I point to the fact, honourable gentlemen, that within a period of about two weeks after that legislation was passed, it happened that certain men were arrested in the city of Winnipeg and charged with certain offences; and it was commonly understood, and the press announced on the morning they were arrested, that they were to be deported without trial.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Could they have been deported?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I have shown my honourable friend that under the Immigration Act they could have been.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is what we want to know.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That is the meat of the whole thing. Those men were taken into custody, and certain gentlemen in the city of Winnipeg—I happened to be there—came to me to discuss this point, and, I said, "Most assuredly no British subject will be deported without trial"—and they were not; but they might have been Furthermore, let me remind my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) of the fact that he himself proposed in this House the other day that these men, who have been convicted of an offence after a trial, and who are now in jail, when they have paid the penalty for the offence which they committed, should be deported. Therefore he himself must have believed that they were liable to be deported either with or without a trial.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Will the honourable gentleman permit me? In the first place, I should like to ask under what authority they could be deported without a trial? My position is this. These men have been tried and punished for an offence which they committed. They cannot be tried a second time, but just as soon as they come out of jail, under the Immigration Act they can be declared undesirable and deported.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think that is a very clear demonstration of the fact that my honourable friend desires to deport from the country men who have been here for twenty-five or thirty years, who have committed an offence under the law, have been tried, found guilty, convicted, and sentenced, and who, having served the penalty, would come out free men if they were Canadian citizens, but who, if they happened to be British subjects instead of Canadian-born, would be subject to a further penalty. I submit that this is un-British, as I said the other day, and contrary to constitutional liberty.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But would it be unlawful?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes, I think it is.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Would my honourable friend point out the law under which a man could be deported from this country without a trial?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I will come to that in a few minutes? I wish to keep my remarks as connected as I can.

I have quoted from the amendment to the Criminal Code as passed by both Houses in July, 1919, which provides penalties for offences which were not provided for under the Code, or which the Department of Justice thought were not provided for under the Code on June 7, 1919, when the amendment to the Immigration Act were brought in. Now I go one step further and point out that the amendment to the Naturalization Act, which also was assented to on July 7, 1919, gives still further protection. Therefore there have been amendments not only to the Criminal Code but to the Naturalization Act since June 7, 1919, when the amendments to the Immigration Act were passed, and which we now propose to repeal in part. Therefore I think the statement which I made the other day is manifestly true, that if the Criminal Code and the Naturalization Act had then stood as they stand to-day, Parliament would not have found it necessary or desirable to pass that drastic section of the Immigration Bill.

Now, coming to the question of deportation without trial. My honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) is a most capable and experienced lawyer; I therefore fully appreciate my very great disability in attempting to argue with him concerning a point of law. But I submit that the opinion of the Department of Justice of Canada ought to go for something, and I believe it is held in high regard by all honourable gentlemen in this House. The Department of Justice have pointed out that, notwithstanding the fact that in the time of Queen Elizabeth many people were deported, or transported, as it was then termed—sent to Australia and other parts—because they were undesirable at home, that has long since ceased to be the practice. After enumerating the items of legislation to which I referred, which have been passed since the amendment to the Immigration Act in 1919, the Justice Department point out:

> That it will be observed at once from the foregoing that very prompt and comprehensive provisions have been made for the punishment, otherwise than by deportation, of persons who, by the provisions of said section 41 of the Immigration Act, are brought within the prohibited or undesirable classes and rendered liable to deportation in the manner provided by that Act.

The Department of Justice point out that adequate and comprehensive provisions have been made for the punishment, other than by deportation, of people guilty of the offences named in the Bill. I think that makes clear the point raised by my honourable friend from Manitou (Hon. Mr. Sharpe) on the second reading, as to whether or not the men now paying the penalty for their offences can be deported after they have served their sentences.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: The lawyer who prosecuted these men is under the impression that they should be deported as soon as they are let out of jail.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: We are getting down to the meat of the whole matter. We are getting very close to the core of it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: You have not yet answered my question.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: We are coming to the point where it is to be decided whether a British subject of more than five years residence in this country—perhaps thirty years, as in one or two of the cases referred to—and having gained the right of citizenship, after having been charged with a crime, tried, found guilty by a jury, convicted, and sentenced by a judge, and having paid the penalty prescribed by the law and set by the court, is to be a free man, entitled to the rights of citizenship, as you or I, if we were to pay the penalty for an offence and were released; or whether, after having borne the ignomy and paid the price, he is liable to be regarded as a convict and to be deported to some other part of the world?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does the honourable gentleman really believe that is the question? Does he give his word that he believes that is the question?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I do, sir.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I am very much surprised.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Department of Justice in dealing with the case goes on to say:

> It is of course a question of policy whether a British subject who is guilty of any of the acts mentioned in subsection 1 of said section 41 of the Immigration Act should be rendered liable to the penalty of deportation; but I may observe for your information that a somewhat cognate form of punishment, namely that of transportation, which was devised as a statutory punishment in the time of Elizabeth, and in the 18th century became a statutory punishment for many felonies, has long since been abolished, penal servitude having been definitely substituted for transportation in 1857.

The amendments under this Immigration Bill proposed two things: first, that a British subject who has become a Canadian citizen, after he has been here for five years, cannot be deported from Canada for any offence without having a trial by jury; and, second, that the legislation shall not any longer be retroactive in its effect. The last part of section 41 of the Act permits the authorities to go out to-day and lay a charge against a man for an offence committed at any time since 1910, to give him a Star Chamber trial, and to send him out of the country. Possibly that was wise at the time the legislation was passed, but it is not wise now; and if the law is not amended as proposed by this Bill, the effect will be, notwithstanding the fact that a British subject has come to Canada, and by residence has earned citizenship and naturalization here, and has acquired property and all the rest of it, that he will be liable to be deported from this country without a trial by a jury of his peers, and he may be charged with an offence that he may have committed at any time since 1910. I am sure this House has gone on record on many occasions as being absolutely opposed to retroactive legislation; and I am sure the House must deal with that feature of the Bill even if it is not fully in accord with the other section.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am with my honourable friend on the principle, but I do not see why he argues that after trial these men are not liable to deportation. I do not think that is necessary at all in his argument.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I may have a peculiar method of facing any problem. Frankly, I realize that that statement might be taken advantage of by honourable gentlemen opposing the Bill; but it is my firm conviction that, after a man is tried by a court in conformity with the law of the land, found guilty, and sent to prison for any term the court may set, having paid the price, so to speak, he is then, and ought to be, a free man, and ought not to be thrown out of the country for the same offence.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend argue that he cannot be deported?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would judge from the representations of the Department of Justice that that is what they infer. I am no authority on the law.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not think the statement means that at all.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I may say that it is my opinion that he ought not to be deported unless he commits some further offence.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: You mean that he should not be deported for the same offence for which he has already been punished?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think I made it clear that he should not be deported for an offence for which he has paid the penalty.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend argues that he could not be deported, and I think that is the cause of his trouble.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I confess quite frankly that I may not be able to interpret a legal document.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is not a matter in issue on this Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: But do not honourable gentlemen agree that it is not desirable that we should continue to have on our statute book any unnecessary legislation which causes friction and promotes unrest among our common people? With the amendments to the Criminal Code which I have enumerated, and with the amendment to the Naturalization Act which has been referred to, I think every possible emergency has been adequately provided for. There are in Canada to-day thousands of men, Canadian-born citizens if you will, who have no direct personal interest in this subject, but who regard the present law as arbitrary and high-handed legislation, and who, so long as it remains, will continue to oppose it

I will not delay the House longer. I had intended to make some reference to the opinions upon this question expressed by certain of the newspapers, to which exception was taken the other day, when I moved the second reading. However, I will not burden the House with it. But I do hope, honourable gentlemen, that when deciding finally upon this question you will have in mind first and always the fact that retroactive legislation is undesirable, and will feel that a British subject who is a Canadian citizen should not and must not be deported from Canada without having an opportunity of being tried before a jury and a court as established in this country.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen—

Some hon. SENATORS: Order, order. Question, Question.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I would like to say to the honourable gentleman that the honourable the Minister spoke by consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I rose to ask consent to say—

Some Hon. SENATORS: No, no.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Mr. Chairman, it is now twenty minutes to six. We have devoted a very considerable portion of time to this measure, and I do not think there should be any further discussion. The Minister was—

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question, question.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I am speaking to the question of order.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The Minister was permitted by the unanimous consent of the House to make some desirable explanations. Now the matter is closed. The question before the Committee now is that the Committee rise.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think we had better stick to the rule.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question, question.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton, that the Committee rise, was agreed to: yeas, 30; nays, 17.

MAPLE PRODUCTS BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS DISAGREEMENT TO SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider a message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill 28, an Act respecting Maple Products.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I beg to move:

That the Senate doth not insist upon its amendments if the House of Commons agrees to the following amendment to the Bill as passed by that House:

Page 2, line 8, insert the following as clause 5:

(5) Section seventeen of the Food and Drugs Act, 1920, shall apply to any prosecution under subsection one of section two of this Act.

The object of this amendment is to give some protection to those who may bona fide handle maple products. The Commons will in all probability accept this, because it is but reasonable. Section 17 of the Food and Drugs Act deals with want of knowledge and would be applicable in this way. Assuming for the moment that a merchant is handling maple sugar products and is unaware of any adulteration, he should have the right to show that he had no knowledge of the adulteration of the product; because it is a very difficult thing to determine whether the product is adulterated or not. From appearance, and even from taste, one cannot determine it. A very close chemical examination may be required. Therefore I think it is in the public interest and in the interest of those who handle products of this kind commercially that some protection should be afforded.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We have not had much time to consider this motion, but I suppose my honourable friend has some understanding that the Commons will accept the present amendment. They did not accept our former amendment. Is there a chance of their receiving this better?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The former amendment was ill-considered: it was not properly drawn. I looked into it afterwards and found that it had been hurriedly prepared and did not take into consideration the different classes of offence. We limited it to one particular section, and other sections had been overlooked. But it seems to me that this amendment should be accepted by the Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 53, an Act to amend the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

INSPECTION AND SALE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 104, an Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 127, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners).—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

ADMIRALTY BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 139, an Act to amend the Admiralty Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

NORTHWEST GAME BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 151, an Act to amend the Northwest Game Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

YUKON PLACER MINING BILL

FIRST READING.

Bill 152, an Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 156, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 157, an Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 3.

FIRST READING.

Bill 166, an Act for granting to His Majesty Certain Sums of Money for the Public Service of the Financial Years ending respectively the 31st of March, 1920, and the 31st of March, 1921.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, June 10, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill T4, an Act for the Relief of Graziano Bertini.—Hon. W. B. Ross.

Bill Q4, and Act for the Relief of William Henry Caswell.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill V4, an Act for the Relief of John Covert.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill W4, an Act for the Relief of Mary Ireland.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill X4, an Act for the Relief of John Daniel Mills.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill Y4, an Act for the Relief of Joseph Aime Wilfrid David.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

PROPOSED HEARING OF INDIANS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion for the third reading of Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, in view of the expression of opinion of yesterday as to the desirability of hearing the Indians upon the Bill before us for consideration, it is thought advisable to comply with the request which has been made; so I purpose asking the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee to call a meeting of that Committee, say for Wednesday morning next, and to permit the session of that Committee, which will occupy I suppose two hours, or two hours and a half, to be devoted to hearing the Indians upon the subject; the Committee then to report what may be their views to the House. I hope this will be satisfactory to the House.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it the intention to confine the hearing to any set time, either two hours or two hours and a half? Because the subject-matter would extend over a long period of years, from the early settlement of the country down to the present time. It might take more than two hours and a half to hear the views of the Indians on the matter. If you are going to do anything, do it rightly, do it well, and with a whole heart.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Once for all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Once for all. Let us have a proper hearing. To say that you will give a certain set time, an hour and a half or two hours and a half to a subject that extends at least from 1763, the date of the royal proclamation down to the present time is to my mind not sufficient; that is the time may not be sufficient. But if the Government is willing to grant the request, let it do it whole-heartedly, and say, "You shall have whatever time is reasonable and necessary to present your case to the Senate Committee," and then the Committee can make its report.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is desirable to put this legislation through at the present session, and we expect to do so. Of course, if we are going to review the relations of Canada with the Indians for 200 years and there is to be, say, an elaboration upon that very important subject, historically and otherwise, I can very well conceive our not getting this Bill through during the present session. However, that is a matter that will be left entirely to the good judgment of the Committee.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Committee may possibly be so entranced with the relation of the Indian claims and the history of British Columbia that they may see their way to prolong the sessions of the Committee.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am satisfied.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But I leave it entirely to the Committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Can my honourable friend tell us if the claims in this case have been put in writing? Has any brief been prepared, or is there any way, or any place, in which we can find how the case of the Indians has been put?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should say the best place to find out will be in the Committee room next Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Some of us might read it and perhaps save time for the Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that several circulars have been sent out; in fact, I thought all the members of the Senate had received the literature which had been published upon the subject. If my honourable friend will apply to the honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler), he will be furnished with full information.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I shall be very glad to supply it. By to-morrow or Saturday there will be certain literature with reference to this matter distributed among the members of the Senate. My honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) has made a somewhat sarcastic or jocose reference to me as being an authority on this matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am always glad to appear on behalf of the lowly and oppressed.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: It is moved that the consideration of this Bill be postponed until Wednesday next, and that at the same time the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. The Committee will just hear the petition. They will report to the House upon the representations made by the Indians.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The Bill stands.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, the Bill stands. There will be a session of the Committee for the purpose of giving a hearing to the Indians. Then the House will decide the matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER: As I understand, the motion now is that the Bill stand for a third reading?

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The consideration of the Bill is postponed until Wednesday next.

Hon. Mr. POWER: That is a rather irregular way of doing things. It seems to me that the proper course is to refer the Bill to the Committee, and then the Committee will report and the House will deal with their report. I do not see how we can have the Bill in two places—have it here on the Table for a third reading, and have it before the Committee for consideration.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand, the Indians desire to be heard before a Committee of the Senate in respect of this Bill. The Committee on Banking and Commerce will be authorized to hear whatever representations are to be made. That Committee will then report to the House as to what those representations are, and what merit they may possess. But the Bill stands on the order paper for a third reading until after that Committee makes its report.

DIVORCE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill I 4, an Act for the relief of George Emerson Fox.—Hon. Mr. Todd.

Bill J 4, an Act for the relief of Edith Ellen Holmes Austin.—Hon. Mr. McMeans.

Bill L 4, an Act for the relief of Ethelbert Gilmour Harris.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

Bill M 4, an Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Wice.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill N 4, an Act for the relief of Peter Sutherland Cowie.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill O 4, an Act for the relief of Roy Bradley.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill P 4, an Act for the relief of Joan Doran.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Q 4, an Act for the relief of Alexander Ross, Jr.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill R 4, an Act for the relief of Jean Mary Sandford.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 126, an Act to amend The Bankruptcy Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Friday, June 11, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill Z4, an Act for the relief of Richard Simpson.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 53, an Act to amend The Civil Service Act, 1918, and The Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill consists of a series of amendments to the Civil Service Act of 1918 and the amending Act of 1919. Provision is to be made for the temporary employment of persons outside of Canada. At present it is not permissible to secure such employees without making application to the Civil Service Commission, or to employ them for more than thirty days. It is proposed to enlarge the powers so that temporary employees may be appointed outside of Canada for a period of ninety days.

Another very desirable provision, which was omitted from the two previous Acts, is that a person who resigned his position in the Civil Service for the purpose of engaging in the war, and who has returned from overseas, may secure a status that would give him a preference over persons who have not served and who may have qualified for entrance into the public service. It is only right that recognition should be given to that class of man. It does not follow that he gets his position back, but he is regarded as having qualified for the class of position from which he resigned.

Provision is also made for semi-annual increases, inasmuch as the present legislation simply provides for increases being granted annually.

Probably the most essential provision that is made in the Bill before us has to do with the retroactive effect of the classification, which has been completed, I believe, during the present year. It is proposed that the new classification shall be deemed to have come into effect in April, 1919; that is to say, a year ago last April. Comment may possibly be made as to retroactive legislation involving so large a sum as will be applied in this respect.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend state the amount that is involved?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My recollection is that something like $4,000,000 is being placed in the Estimates to meet the requirements. It does not necessarily follow that that amount will be exhausted. I understand that when the question of classification was first taken up, assurance was given by either the Government or members of the Government that it would come into operation on the 1st of April, 1919. The matter came before Parliament at the last Session, and my recollection is that when it was before the Senate the undesirabllity of making the classification retroactive was pointed out, upon representations which had been made by the minister in charge of the Bill in the Lower House. But, whatever took place at that time, it is said that the assurance which I have mentioned was overlooked. It will be for the Senate to determine what action to take in that regard.

These are the main provisions in the Bill now before us. Of course, they will be elaborated upon when we go into Committee, and such further particulars will be given as may be required.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, my honourable friend, in discussing this Bill, has not dealt very fully with the question of the Civil Service; not as far as some of us would have liked to see him go. There has been so much discussion throughout the country over the action of the Civil Service Commission that I for one thought the honourable leader of the Government might take this opportunity to make a rather full statement of what had been done in the classification made by the Commission. I do not know whether, by this Bill, we are asked to ratify the classification which was submitted to us last year, or a further classification.

If I understand aright, there are two matters in respect to this Bill that necessitate a considerable increase of expenditure on the part of the Government. My honourable friend has not expressed himself as being very strongly in favour of the provision which is being made under this Bill, that the reclassification shall be effective as from the 1st of April, 1919. I think the words he used were that it was for the Senate itself to consider whether that was an advisable course to pursue. I understand that in the Supplementary Estimates brought down this year there is an item of $12,500,000, reading:

> Provisional bonus allowance for the Inside and Outside services of the Civil Service, to be paid to such persons and classes of persons in such amounts and at such times as the Governor in Council may determine.

That has apparently something to do with the legislation that is now before us. My honourable friend has already stated to the House that there is also involved an amount of $4,000,000, which I presume is to be provided because of increases that have in some cases been made to salaries under the classification that we dealt with last year. I have not been able to obtain as clear information as I would like to have; therefore I raise this question in order that my honourable friend may explain the matter to us when we go into Committee.

I think that on this occasion it would be advisable to impress further upon the Government the disadvantage that the country is suffering because of the way the Civil Service is now being carried on, and because of the serious loss that has occurred through a number of technical officers having left the service owing to the conditions which confronted them. That is in my opinion an exceedingly serious matter at the present time, when we are anxious that everything possible should be done to increase the production of the country and to help in the development of its mining and other resources. I had hoped that we might have some statement from the Government that the condition of things which exists at the present time would be remedied in the very near future.

Hon. W. B. WILLOUGHBY: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to make only two or three observations in reference to the Bill which has been introduced by the leader of the Government. It will be remembered that last year a Committee of the Senate was appointed for the purpose of dealing with the Reclassification Bill. I had the honour of being the Chairman of that Committee. The Committee made a report, in substance concurring in the Bill as sent up from the Commons, and taking the position that it was not advisable to alter a money Bill; consequently, as some honourable gentlemen will remember, another report was made recommending to the Government the propriety of making the classification retroactive to the 1st of April of last year. That is all the Committee felt warranted in doing under good parliamentary practice.

That report was adopted, and I am glad to see that the Government has acted upon it. The Departments were numerously represented before the Committee, and evidence was adduced to the effect that certain representations had been made to organizations of the Civil Service by at least one member of the Government that the classification, when it became effective, would be retroactive to the 1st of April last year.

Just a word in connection with one matter raised by the leader of the Opposition. Representatives of the major Departments of the Government, particularly those employing technical help, appeared at the various meetings of the Committee; and I am free to say that I think a majority of them were emphatically of the opinion that the mode of selection of expert help was not working out very satisfactorily under the Civil Service Commission. However, I think the majority of the Committee were of the opinion that the Act was a new departure; that it provided a new scheme or arrangement for civil service reform; and that perhaps it would be as well to let it run its course, and see if the legislation which is now upon the statute book would work out satisfactorily. Perhaps because I sat on that Committee, many representations have been made to me since that time that the departments requiring technical help have been retarded in the performance of their duties by reason of the slowness of the Civil Service Commission in making appointments. I have no word of adverse comment to make on the work of the Civil Service Commission; but it is very much overloaded; and it is within the knowledge of anyone who has taken the trouble to make inquiries that the Government is losing the services of a large number of technical men, particularly in the departments employing chemists and scientists. I think it might prove advantageous if we were to do what has been done in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and take these appointments out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission for a period of time, and let the Department of Scientific Research, or some other body, have an opportunity for at least one or two or three years of dealing with the expert help that is required in the scientific departments of the Government.

Hon. G. W. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, the Committee on Oil Shales has had before it some very clever young men, experts from the Department of Mines, who have given evidence to the effect that men occupying important positions and doing important and valuable work for the country have, greatly against their will, resigned from that Department because of the insufficiency of the pay owing to the low classification in which they are placed by the so-called efficiency experts who were imported from the United States for the purpose of telling the people of Canada where they get off. Invariably these witnesses have said that those men, who have spent a considerable number of years of their life and a very considerable amount of money in preparing themselves for the work, would remain in the service, even at a very much lower rate of remuneration than they would receive outside, but that the disparity between the pay which they receive and that which they could get in private employment is so great that in justice to their families they have been obliged to leave the Service.

I think this is an unfortunate state of affairs, and I think it is due to a lack of knowledge on the part of those efficiency experts, who do not know enough to distinguish between the ordinary work of a clerk and the work of a technical expert who, as I say, has spent a considerable amount of time and money preparing himself for the position which he occupies. It seems to me that this business of importing experts from Chicago—I think that is their favourite stamping ground—is all wrong. Amongst our own men we could surely find some who would be quite as competent to do the work as these so-called experts. These gentlemen gave their evidence before the Committee, of which I was a member, and for my part I was not, nor do I think any other member of the Committee was, impressed by the superhuman ability displayed by them on that occasion. I understand that one department of the Government has had a Canadian efficiency expert, and that his work has been most satisfactory in reorganizing the department on efficient lines. I do not think it is necessary for us to go abroad, particularly when the rate of exchange is so much against us as at present, and import these efficiency experts from the United States.

That, however, is not the only fault I have to find with this Bill. I purpose when the House goes into Committee of the Whole —and I so notify the House now—to move an amendment to the Bill which will have the effect of taking the appointment of the permanent employees and officers of this branch of the legislature from within the operation of the Civil Service Act, and I trust that amendment will receive the support of this House.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I saw it reported the other day that part of the staff of this American firm which [illegible] the reorganization—I suppose I might call it making a reorganization—was going to be retained at a cost of about $10,000 a month for the purpose of reorganizing the different departments. I do not know whether that is the case or not; but, before this Bill is put through, I would be very glad to have the leader of the Government give us definite information on that point.

As to making the salaries retroactive to the 1st of April of last year, while I do not like that kind of legislation, I do not see very well how we can do anything else at the present time. If that was promised to the civil servants by the Government, it seems to me that the promise will have to be carried out, whatever terms were made.

Another bit of information I should like to have as to this Bill, is the total amount of the Civil Service remuneration at the present time, showing the division between the inside staff at Ottawa and the outside staff. This year we are voting, as I understand, about $16,500,000; but that is altogether outside of the salaries of the civil servants. That $16,500,000 is to pay the bonus that is being paid over and above salaries, and also, as the leader of the House has said, to provide for the retroactive feature of this Bill. Last year we voted $12,500,000 for bonuses. That is practically all paid. We are voting this year, as I understand, $12,500,000 for bonuses and $4,000,000 to pay the increases in salaries that may be granted, and which will be retroactive to the 1st of April, 1919 .

Now, I want to say just one word in reference to the Civil Service Commission. There has been a great deal of criticism of that Commission, some in this House, some in the other House, and a great deal in the country, especially in the city of Ottawa. I hold no brief for the Civil Service Commission. I think it was a great mistake. In my opinion the whole matter of the civil service administration should have been placed under a Minister and dealt with by a Minister. But that is neither here nor there at the present time. I have heard of a great deal of criticism of the Civil Service Commission which should be levelled at the House of Commons and the Senate. We made the Act under which they are working, and many of the things for which they are criticised are not their fault, because they are simply carrying out the provisions of the Act which Parliament gave them. We ought to be a little careful in criticising the commission, and we should make sure that the fault is not ours, and that the Act should not be amended. I will give you one instance of the difficulties at the present time. A surveyor goes out with a party; he cannot hire a labourer or a cook or any one else except through the Civil Service Commission. That is pure nonsense—and there are many other instances along the same line. We should not criticise the Civil Service Commission for that; we should amend the law.

Just one word more and I am through. I wish to refer to the remarks made by the honourable gentleman from Kings (Hon. Mr. Fowler) in reference to men leaving the service. I have said before, and I say it again, that I do not think there is any possible way to avoid that sort of thing. I think it is a good thing. And where members of the Civil Service have come to me about this or that or the other position, I have said, "For goodness sake, get out of the Service if you are not satisfied with it." That remedy is always at hand. In scores of cases men and women have come to me to get my assistance in obtaining a position; in a number of cases I have succeeded in getting them positions. But that is only the beginning of their troubles. Within six months they are after you harder than ever asking for an increase in salary, although probably the salary they started at is twice what they are worth, and in many cases more than they could earn outside. But they are not satisfied with that: they are after you for something else. If a Civil Servant is getting $2,000 and someone comes along and offers him $4,000 to work outside, the Government is precluded from giving him $4,000 simply because there are hundreds of others in similar positions drawing the same salary. If you raise one man's salary a couple of thousand dollars to retain him, either the others are very much dissatisfied or they are pounding at the doors of the Government to have their salaries increased to equal to that of So-and-so. That is one of the things they must expect, however, and I think it will always be so. I know it works a hardship in some cases. We lose some of the technical men, and that is a loss to the country. But that is one of the things that I do not think it is possible to avoid. That is about all the criticism I wish to make, and the reason

I speak at all is so that my honourable friend the leader of the Government may give us the information I have asked for before this debate is over.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to correct a mistake which I think the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia made in speaking of a surveyor not being able to employ help. I think there is a clause in the Civil Service Act which, in cases of that kind, enables him to employ help for thirty days. After that period the appointment has to be confirmed.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I accept the correction.

Hon. GIDEON ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I presume to make a few remarks on this Bill only because of the fact that I happened to be a member of the sub-committee of the Cabinet that had something to do with the adjustment of Civil Service matters a year ago, which has had a bearing on the retroactive feature of this Bill. In March, 1919, the civil servants in the Post Office Department came to the Government with a number of grievances which they desired to have adjusted. This was in addition to the general readjustment of wages which the whole Civil Service was seeking at that time. The honourable the President of the Privy Council, my honourable friend the Postmaster General, and myself happened to deal with this question. We met the committee representing the employees in the Post Office Department, and by negotiation successfully adjusted something like twenty or thirty different grievances which they had. But as to the question of salaries, upon which they were very insistent, the committee was forced to tell them that they could give them no promise as to what the new rates or the new classification would be, because that was a matter not yet determined. It had been recommended by the Civil Service Commission that the classification should be effective as from the beginning of the fiscal year, which was April 1, 1919. With that understanding they accepted generally the adjustment of the difficulties and awaited the outcome of the new classification. The new classification was brought down before the end of the session, but, as honourable gentlemen will remember, there were in it a great many points that it was deemed necessary to revise or to consider further, and it was not finally approved. The rates under the new classification did not go into effect in 1919. Bonuses were first paid to civil servants in addition to their salaries in 1918. The Civil Service Commission in 1919 recommended a cost of living bonus based upon the salaries which the Commission expected would be received under the new classification as from April 1, 1919, and that bonus was paid. Consequently, the civil servants have ever since anticipated that when the new classification came into effect it would date as from April 1, 1919. The bonus this year has not been increased, and this fact is, I think, an additional reason which we should take into consideration in dealing with the retroactive feature of this Bill, because it is well known that the cost of living did increase somewhat during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, and it might be contended that a larger bonus should have been paid this year.

With reference to the reorganization referred to by my honourable froend from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff), that is a matter quite separate and distinct from the reclassification referred to in this Bill. After the investigation held by the Arthur Young Company in connection with the reclassification, they were instructed by reason of incidents with which this House is familiar, to investigate the Printing Bureau and recommend a basis of reorganization. That work has been accomplished successfully, with the result that between 300 and 400 employees have been found unnecessary, a great deal of machinery and old equipment has been done away with, and efficiency has been increased. The saving to the country is estimated, I think, at between $500,000 and $700,000 per year, and it has cost about $45,000 to bring that about, if my memory is correct. As a consequence of the satisfactory results obtained by that experiment it has been deemed advisable to carry the inquiry into other departments of the Government. Honourable gentlemen may have noticed during the last few days some press comments—which are, I presume, based on authoritative information, and which are substantially correct—to the effect that it is proposed to conduct a similar investigation into the working of some of the other departments with a view to increasing their efficiency and placing them on a more business-like basis. In order to remove any confusion which may exist in the minds of honourable gentlemen, I point out this distinction between the term reorganization, as applied to the departments which have not yet been investigated, and the reclassification which is part of the subject-matter of this Bill.

Hon. A. B. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, I believe that there has existed some misunderstanding between the Government and the civil servants, particularly the employees of the Post Office Department, that whatever bonus or increase in salary was granted them would date from the 1st of April, 1919. It appears that this date, from which it should have been paid had passed. I understand that the civil servants were given a strong assurance to that effect. If that be so, there is no reason why it should not be carried out.

While on my feet, I desire to make some reference to the Civil Service Act as it now stands upon the statute book. I concur in what has been said by the honourable Senator from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr Turriff). I do not believe that when that Act was passed by Parliament either House took the interest in it that should have been taken. There is much to be done in order to make the law what it should be, and what it was intended to be.

To give some idea of the situation, I would point out the case of a skipper—as we would call him—or the captain of a small boat engaged, as many are in the province of Nova Scotia, in going around the coast inspecting the setting of trawls and lobster traps at particular seasons of the year. You understand that there is a season of perhaps three months when in some parts of Nova Scotia the fishermen are allowed to fish for lobsters. In other parts of the province the season is at another time of the year. One of the skippers on those little boats resigns his position. He is a man who gets $75 a month and pays his own expenses. He has to do his own cooking. I suppose the Civil Service Commission would have to see that the man appointed was a good cook, lest his cooking might bring about indigestion, and in case of death, the Civil Service Commission, being responsible for his appointment, might be held responsible also for the loss of life. How can the Civil Service Commission or any other combination here in Ottawa select a man for that particular position, which is purely local? The representative of the constituency, whoever he may be, is in a much better position to make the selection—to recommend a man who is fully qualified and whom he knows to be satisfactory to the people interested. How can the Civil Service Commission get their information? They must appeal to somebody and ask his opinion, because they do not themselves know. I mention that as just one illustration.

I have had a small part to play in politics, and I want to say that in that experience I have been much interested as to what is the best way for people to be represented, and I know of no better or more democratic method of representation than by the person whom the people themselves select by ballot at the polls. If the man selected in that way to represent the people in Parliament makes a mistake or does wrong, the people who have sent him to Parliament have the remedy in their own hands, because he must go back to them in four years, or five years at the most, to ask again for their endorsement, and if they are not satisfied with him, if he has not conducted the affairs of the constituency as they expected and hoped he would, they will not return him. But if the representative of some constituency does something wrong or is not able to conduct the affairs of the constituency as he should, is that a reason for doing away altogether with democracy? What kind of government are you going to have if the public affairs of this great country are going to be handed over to one commission after another?

I did not intend to say so much, but I do want to point out with regard to the men who have inaugurated the classification of the Civil Service that they have been hired over in the United States and have been brought here at an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. No man could be hired in Canada under contract to go to the United States to earn ten cents; it is against their law; he would be deported the next day. Yet we send over to the United States for experts and spend our money on them. Why do we not go over there to look for a premier? Why do we not go over to the United States to engage the heads of our different departments? My honourable friends on the other side of the House may say that the Government went over to the United States to look for reciprocity. Yes, and the peole of Canada rejected it. And I say that we should reject those men to whom we are paying hundreds of thousands of dollars. We have in Canada men who are competent to deal with our affairs, and if ever a time arrives when we have not such men in this country, then we ought to let some other people come in and administer its affairs.

I have nothing to say against the Civil Service Commission. I know two of its members very well. One of the commissioners is a gentleman from Nova Scotia and is looked upon by the people of our province as a very competent man—and the people of our province are good judges. I know also the chairman of the Commission, Dr. Roche, with whom I had the honour of sitting in Parliament, and who is a very capable man. But are those men any more capable than the men who have been sent to the House of Commons to represent the people? Should not Canada be governed by the people of this country? I say that you cannot entrust the affairs of Canada to better hands than those of the men whom the people have selected and who have to return to the people within five years for re-election. To my mind, they are the men who should be held responsible.

I could cite many illustrations to show how unfair the Civil Service Act is, and how unreasonable it is to expect the Civil Service Commission to deal with the details of all appointments. The Civil Service Commission may have its place. It may be the proper authority to deal with the high officials in Ottawa, and it may be competent to set examinations for the Service, but it should not be called upon to make appointments in cases where it has to look to this person or to that for information. Some honourable members pointed out during a discussion the other day that a man who had been appointed as translator of the Senate proved to be absolutely unfit for the position, according to the statements of those who had investigated and were in a position to know. Personally I am opposed to the handing over of the affairs of this Dominion to any combination of men, whether it is the Civil Service Commission or any other commission. I think the men who have been elected by the people of Canada to do the people's work in Parliament ought to deal with these matters.

Hon. GEORGE H. BRADBURY: I desire to say just a few words. The Civil Service question is a very important one and for many years has caused a great deal of trouble in this country. When the Government decided to take the service out of politics and hand it over to the Civil Service Commission, in my opinion they did something that did not commend the Government to the people of this country. I agree with what the honourable member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Crosby) has said regarding the position that a public man ought to occupy. When a man is elected to Parliament, he ought in my opinion to be consulted regarding anything and everything that relates to his constituency. That is why he is elected. In many of our large constituencies there are four or five hundred postmasters. When one of those men dies or moves from the district and a new postmaster is needed, who should be asked to make a recommendation for the position? Under the present system, it is at times difficult to get a man to accept such a position. The remuneration is so small that it is very difficult to persuade a man that it is in his interest to assume the extra duty of handling all the mail for the district. In some districts which I know of, the man who becomes postmaster has to make his home practically an open house. People come from all over the district inquiring for mail, and they sometimes arrive just at meal time; consequently the postmaster has sometimes four or five persons as his guests. Under the present system, the man who has been elected by the people and is supposed to know every person in the county, and to know who would be the most suitable and most acceptable for appointment as postmaster, has nothing to do with the appointment. The Inspector is appealed to and he makes the nomination. I claim, honourable gentlemen, that that is not the proper method. It would have been better to leave recommendations for all appointments to the Outside Service in the hands of the elected representatives of the people.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What about the constituencies in which the Government candidates have been defeated?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Under the old system, the patronage of such constituencies was in the hands of the defeated candidates, and I have yet to learn that there was any great hardship even then.

The Civil Service Commission has been freely criticized for a great many things for which I believe it is not responsible. In the first place the Civil Service Commission has been overloaded with work. It has been given a great deal more work than it could hope to do thoroughly. In my opinion, if the Government was determined to take appointments to the service out of the hands of the members of Parliament, the proper men to deal with them, then they ought to have started with the Inside Service and to have put that Service on a proper basis first. Any man who has sat in Parliament during the last eight or ten years knows that there is not a department in Ottawa that is not from twenty to forty per cent overmanned to-day. That is a notorious fact, and everybody admits it

That has been the situation for years. Still no move has been made to weed out the departments. That is, to my mind, the first move that ought to be made. The Civil Service Commission or those who are responsible ought to see that the departments are not overmanned. There should not be two persons doing the work of one. The criticism you will hear to-day, on the streets and everywhere, is that if you go into a room in one of the departments you will see ten, fifteen, or twenty clerks, half of them sitting down chatting, or reading the papers, and perhaps three or four clerks trying to work. If the Service were properly reorganized the efficient men and women in the service would be paid a fair remuneration for their work, and yet the service would not be such a burden on the country as it is at present.

With regard to this wonderful classification which has been made by an American syndicate, I do not know of anything which is to my mind more deserving of severe criticism than this volume. They have adopted the very worst features of trades unionism, and it has some bad ones. They have robbed the Service of any incentive to be efficient. How have they done that, you may ask. Under this classification the men and women doing the work receive no consideration; they are simply machines. It is the job that is classified, not the individual. You go into a room where there are twenty or thirty clerks, all doing about the same kind of work. This classification says that a certain position calls for a certain salary, say, $1,200 a year, with certain annual increases. Now, it does not matter how efficient or how inefficient any of those clerks may be, they all get the same salary. In that room you may have five or six very industrious, painstaking officials who are trying to render good honest service to the country; the others may be indifferent, slothful, lazy. I say that in view of that the Service has been robbed of any incentive to efficiency by the classification adopted. I have been told by different chiefs of departments, and it is no secret, that the efficiency of the Service has gone down from 20 to 30 per cent during teh last three years. This is a serious state of affairs. The Civil Service of Canada is a very important institution; there is a large amount of money spent on it; and, in view oof that fact, I think the first duty of the Government is to secure efficiency. I have read in the newspapers that there is some scheme on foot to reorganize the different departments. That rumour has been set adrift in the press time after time during the last two years, and nothing has been done; but I hold that if any reorganization is undertaken the work ought to be done by Canadians. In the Service to-day there are men who are a hundred per cent better qualified to do the work than the so-called experts from Chicago, and yet these men are overlooked.

When this classification was first printed there were some most amusing things in it. Some of the definitions have been altered since, and the classification is in a little better shape than it was. And how were the alterations made? With the assistance and advice of officials in our Service. The mistakes were made by the so-called experts. There is one classification made by these experts that I am sure will amuse the House. The Clerk of the Privy Council was classified in the first classification as an ordinary clerk, and he was supposed to take down the minutes of the Council; but, as honourable gentlemen all know, he never sees the inside of the Chamber during Council meetings. There is another classification which I find affects the Senate. It may be a very small thing, but it should be rectified. According to the classification, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons has complete control of every inch of this building, including the Senate, and is to be responsible for the furniture, the grounds, and everything else. Here is the way it reads:

> Serjeant-at-Arms, House of Commons: To act as Chief Executive Officer of the House of Commons; to preserve order in the galleries, corridors, and other parts of the parliamentary buildings and grounds; to exercise responsibility for the care and maintenance of the furniture, fittings, and other property of the Houses, and prepare estimates of the expenses incurred in this connection; to have the direction of and maintain discipline among the employees of Parliament; to be responsible for the serving of processes, and the arrest and safe custody of persons committed by order of the House; to attend the Speaker in the assembling or prorogation of Parliament——And some other little things. That is only one of the dozens of anomalies in the classification. I would very strongly urge, if there is to be a reorganization, and I hope there is, that the work shall be done with absolute fairness and by Canadian citizens. Have it done, if you like, by officials of the departments, or other men who know the situation. We should not bring back these American so-called experts. The gentlemen who made this classification cost this country, I am told, from $30 to $45 a day each, so you can understand their willingness to come back.

I do not intend to take up much more of the time of the House, but in view of these facts I think something should be done to limit the scope of the authority of the Civil Service Commission. Under the Civil Service Commission, the outside service at the present moment is—I was going to say, little better than a joke; but it is worse than that: it is a crime. In my own county we have four or five dredges. In the old days, before the dredges started work, word would come from the Chief Engineer or the Deputy to prepare for the work, and the superintendent of the yard would look around and would employ men to run the dredge. Honourable gentlemen may be surprised to know that to-day he cannot employ one man. Every one of those men must be advertised for, and by reason of that an inefficient staff is got together; the good men have been lost. The Purchasing Commission is just about as bad. If anything goes wrong and a keg of nails is needed, nothing can be done until authority is received to purchase a keg of nails. Under the old system the man in the yard would go to the store or would wire to the resident engineer, and he would get the nails immediately; whereas at present they sometimes have to wait for days to make small repairs. I say that in view of these circumstances the Government might well consider whether it is not in the best interests of the country to make some provision for the outside service. If they want a Commission I have no objection; but the Commission should hav time and ample scope afforded them to do the work submitted to them.

Hon. P. C. MURPHY: Honourable gentlemen, as a member of the Special Committee in regard to this classification last year, I took strong ground, along, with my honourable friend from Kings (Hon. Mr. Fowler), that we should not handicap the Civil Service Commission in any way; that we should give them no excuse by adding any tails to the Bill which would enable them to say, "You handicapped us in this way, and tied us down in that way." We accepted the Bill as it came from the House of Commons, and gave the Commission a free hand, although in our own minds we did not feel that the Bill was a wise one. I, in common with some others, believed from the beginning that the Act of last year was going too far, and that it would not be feasible to carry it out to the satisfaction of the country. Time has verified the correctness of that opinion. I think the honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert was one of those who most strenuously opposed the Bill on its second reading; but, because the Bill had been sent to us unanimously by the House of Commons, we felt that there should be no alterations in it, and that it should be given a trial. As a result of that, you see the inaccuracies that have crept into the Classification, such as those just read by the honourable gentleman from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury). You see officials of this House under the sway of officials of the other House, and you will also observe that, if it is necessary to keep the members of this House in order, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the other House has to come here to do so. Honourable gentlemen will admit that that is a state of affairs that should not be long tolerated, and that there should be a demand from this House to have that condition remedied.

I am somewhat confused by the Act and by the amendments which have been introduced to-day. It is true that while we did not interfere with the Bill as it came before us, in the interests of the Service, we made a recommendation that certain provisions should be retroactive and should date back to April of 1919. But when we did that, honourable gentlemen, we did not suppose that bonuses were going to be paid in the year 1919. There was $12,500,000 voted for bonuses in 1918 and $12,500,000 in 1919; and this year there is more. In the face of that, we are asked under this Bill to vote, as the leader of the Government says, probably $4,000,000 to bonus the bonussed. I do not think that was the understanding when we made the recommendation. The recommendation was made on the understanding that the bonuses of the previous years were to be in place of the increases in salaries provided for in the Bill as it was to take effect in 1920.

There is another manifest injustice that I should like to point out. The postmasters of this country, some 13,000 in number, have received no bonus and no addition to their salaries, or, if they have, it has been a very small one. The Postmaster General will admit that, while the pay of every other civil servant has been increased by bonus or otherwise, the remuneration of the servants under his department is practically the same as it was in 1912. That is a state of affairs that should not exist. I know of cases in my own province of men working in the same building in which the customs offcer, doing six or seven hours work a day, is receiving as much remuneration as the postmaster, who has to employ an assistant, and who has to work twelve or fourteen hours a day. In addition to that, the customs officer is also receiving a bonus of $400 a year while the man in the post office receives not one cent, but is obliged to struggle along on the same pittance that he got in 1912. I think it will be admitted by all that that is a state of affairs that should not exist. The Postmaster General will tell you that last year he had a deficit of some $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. On the Canadian National railways there was a deficit of some $40,000,000, but at the same time we were informed, and nobody seemed ashamed to tell us about it, that department paid out to the employees of the railway 78 per cent of the gross receipts.

I submit that the shortcomings of the Civil Service Act are not the fault of the Commission, but the fault of the House of Commons and the Senate. The Commission have an Act put into their hands, and they have to administer it; they cannot do anything but go by the statute. I had an evidence of the difficulties under it the other day. In my own constituency there had been a Receiver of Wrecks. He died. While possibly there would not be a wreck on that north coast once in ten years, on the other hand there might be a wreck at any time, and there would be no person to take charge of it. I went to the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and said, "You had better appoint some one as Receiver of Wrecks. It is true that a wreck may not occur for a long time, but then again it may occur any time." He said, "I have no authority to appoint a Receiver." I said, "Oh, how is that?" He said, "That has got to go to the Civil Service Commission." The position has to be advertised, and the Civil Service Commission has to appoint a Receiver of Wrecks who may be employed once in ten years. As practical men, we must admit that this is an absurdity. If a ton or two of coal is needed, authority must be had from this, that or the other person, and eventually you get back to the Civil Service Commission. The Act should be remodelled and recodified and made practical.

I want to draw the special attention of my honourable friend the Postmaster General to anomalies that exist in his Department, and to the manifest injustice and absurdity of having officials drawing the same pay to-day that they drew in 1912.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: For the information of my honourable friend, I might say that the question of the pay of the postmasters stood in abeyance for the reason that the postmasters throughout Canada were apparently satisfied with the salaries they were receiving. I remember well the time when the Civil Service Commission was not in existence; then if a postmastership, even in the remotest and poorest hamlet in the country, became vacant, it always meant a hard time for the Postmaster General, because of the number of applicants for the position, all of whom would have been very glad to take charge of the post office for the salary that was provided.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That was in the old days.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I admit that in the course of the last year I have been in receipt of complaints on the part of postmasters. Those complaints have not come from those who are the lowest paid, but from those who apparently are in charge of the more important post offices. Since the creation of the Civil Service Commission the matter of the salaries of rural postmasters, as well as their appointment, does not come under the authority or purview of my Department. Such matters are left to the Civil Service Commission to deal with. Only lately I met a deputation of the postmasters of Canada. I listened to their claims, and referred them to the Civil Service Commission and to the Board of Hearing; and, I may add, the Department made very favourable recommendations to the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would ask the Postmaster General if he would support an amendment to this Bill recommending that any increase given to the postmasters should be retroactive, and that those men who have received no bonus—

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I have tried to go as far as the postmasters themselves have asked. They would be content, I suppose, if they were granted their request.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: By what authority under the Civil Service Act could the honourable gentleman make representations to the Commission?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The Minister or the Deputy Minister is always welcome to give his opinion on any matter affecting the Department.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Any one can make a recommendation.

Hon. L. G. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I know it is a cold-blooded thing to get up after this long discussion to add anything to what has been said. I think the honourable members of the Government did not calculate upon the discussion which has taken place upon the second reading of this comparatively limited Bill. The course which the discussion has taken reminds me of a practice we had long ago in the local legislature of Nova Scotia: on a certain day some honourable member who had previously given notice would move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the general state of the province, and when the House got into Committee of the Whole every member of the House was at liberty to talk upon any subject he chose. I feel in some ways that on the whole it would be more convenient if our members did not follow the example of the Committee of the Whole of the Nova Scotia legislature.

I do not propose to discuss the manner in which the Civil Service Commission have discharged their duties; but I would like to make just this one point, that we should have a certain feeling of sympathy and a good deal of consideration for the members of that Commission. These gentlemen have had handed over to them a system of classification, or an alleged system of classification, which it would puzzle the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer to make head or tail of. It is now some three years, at any rate, since they appointed this American Commission, which has cost us a good deal of money and the results of which have not been satisfactory. We are now trying to tinker up the work of that Chicago concern. There was no doubt that the Civil Service needed more or less reorganization. Shortly after the general election of 1911 the number of civil servants, which before that election had been larger than necessary, was increased—nearly doubled in some instances. No doubt it was desirable that the unnecessary officers should be weeded out, and that the merits of the different officers should be considered by some competent authority. Now, what would have been a competent authority? My humble opinion is that the ministers, instead of going to Chicago for a board of gentlemen who were not familiar with our system at all, should have taken one of their own number, and added some deputy ministers and prominent members of the Civil Service, with perhaps two or three business men from outside, and had them examine the whole system and report to Parliament. Within six months, I think, a body of that kind could have produced a report which would have been infinitely more satisfactory than the one we are trying to blunder through now.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INSPECTION AND SALE BILL

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 104, an Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, probably few subjects command the attention of the Senate more frequently than the Inspection and Sale Act. That is probably owing to the progressive character of the gentlemen interested in its application. We have in Canada the Fruit Growers' Association, one of our most progressive bodies, who necessarily, owing to the character of their business, are somewhat experimental. We have passed legislation at the instance of the Fruit Growers' Association, and have gladly done so. At a late conference of that organization it has been concluded that, owing to the progressive character of the business —I think I may appeal to my honourable friend from Wentworth (Hon. Mr. Smith) as to that being the reason—it is necessary to amend the legislation so as to have it conform to what might be termed the new requirements of the fruit growing industry; for it has become a very important industry in Canada. The legislation at present on our statute books is very largely a reflection of the views of the fruit growers. Notwithstanding that, it is now proposed that owing to changing conditions, which of course are indicative of progress, the law should be modified or substantially changed. It is proposed that new standards shall be adopted for apple barrels and containers of various kinds; furthermore, for the sake of elasticity, that certain powers, by way of regulation, shall be vested in the Governor in Council and in the Minister of Agriculture. It does seem almost an anomaly that those engaged in an industry such as fruit growing should have to come to Parliament from time to time to ask for the adoption of regulations regarding such manifest requirements in their business as containers and similar equipment. It will be a much more flexible method to have matters of this kind dealt with by the Minister of Agriculture, who has to do with this particular industry.

or by the Governor in Council. But some arbitrary provisions are embodied in the Bill, as honourable gentlemen will see in the rather lengthy section 1. There are in the House, I am glad to say, certain honourable gentlemen who are very prominent in the fruit growing industry. Therefore, when the House goes into Committee, we shall be able to give more particulars.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentleman, this Bill has apparently had a rather erratic career in another Chamber. I find on looking up its history that it was introduced to the House in another form, was then referred to Committee of the Whole and then to a special Committee, and apparently it comes to us in a form quite different from that in which it was introduced in another place. From the remarks of my honourable friend I understand that the fruit growers are satisfied with what is proposed, and I hope now that the arrangement which has been reached will be more or less permanent, so that in future we may know what are the regulations with regard to apple boxes and that sort of thing.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will carry us over until next session, I can assure my honourable friend of that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend apparently does not think that this is a final arrangement.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 127, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners).

He said: Honourable gentlemen, we have on the statute book provisions for the establishment and maintenance of hospitals for sick and distressed mariners. Those hospitals have been carried on for some time past at a loss to the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Is the honourable gentleman sure? I see it was alleged in another place that there was no deficit.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will be a deficit during the present year of about $15,000. I understand that the revenue already derivable from the statutory sources, namely, one cent and a half per ton upon shipping reaching ocean ports, will realize, it is estimated, about $75,000, whereas the estimated expenditure to be made during the current year will be $90,000. It is therefore proposed to increase the tonnage rate by one-half a cent—to return practically—

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: It used to be two cents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:—to the rate which prevailed in the early nineties, I think, namely, two cents a ton.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it proposed to make any exemptions? There is a letter which I have received, I think, in common with other members, with regard to some part of the shipping. The persons writing do not think they should be included in this.

Hon. SIR JAMES LOUGHEED: This applies only to shipping that comes into ocean ports; it is not intended to extend to shipping on inland waters. Furthermore, the imposition of the duty on vessels coming into ocean ports is limited, I think, to three trips a year. Formerly the Department of Marine and Fisheries maintained about ten hospitals for the care of sick and distressed mariners. The number has been reduced to four, owing, I fancy, to a reorganization of the service and to the use of civic hospitals. It has been found much more advantageous to use the general hospitals in municipalities for this purpose than to maintain separate institutions. At the present time there are four hospitals under the administration of the department. This service is to be transferred to the new Department of Health. It will probably be more appropriate to have it administered by that department than by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I suppose the honourable leader of the Government does not know, but if I remember correctly, there has been in the past a considerable surplus in the fund. The revenue was greater than the amount expended for the treatment of sick mariners. In fact, I understand there was a surplus nearly every year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Since Confederation there have been certain years in which there was a surplus in the fund. I stand subject to correction, but I make the statement with reasonable confidence that capital charges assumed by the Government were not debited to the fund; that the account simply dealt with the ordinary expenditure involved in the interior administration of the hospitals.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: And nothing at all was charged to capital account.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am told there is a substantial deficit to be charged up against overhead and capital. When we go into Committee I shall be able to furnish any particulars desired on this phase of the subject.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: A good deal of money was paid outside to physicians who attended the men.

Hon. WM. ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, I presume that the change in the tax levied upon shipping is not for the purpose of augmenting the general revenue, but for the purpose of supporting the hospitals. It is quite true, as has been observed, that a number of years ago a tax of two cents per registered ton was placed upon all shipping entered at certain ports. In consequence of the very great increase in the tonnage of vessels the rate of two cents wes reduced to one and a half cents. You will see the application of it at once. Formerly a vessel of 3,500 tons was supposed to be a large vessel and the tax upon a vessel of that size was not excessive, although the owners of ships objected on the ground that they were paying a heavy tax to hospitals when they did not use them for seamen. But now that vessels have increased from a tonnage of that size to 5,000, 10,000 and 20,000 tons, you will observe that the tax of two cents a ton would be an enormous one, especially if no seamen were put in the hospital at all. On a vessel of 5,000 tons the tax would be $100; on a vessel of 10,000 tons it would be $200. When the owner of a ship has to pay a sum like that and places no seamen in the hospital, it seems to him an exaction, and in the very moderate bills that agents have to present to the owners that item is generally picked out as something which is exorbitant and ought not to be paid, and the agent is requested to remonstrate with the Government regarding the payment.

I take the port of Halifax, for instance, because it has a special significance to the people of Canada, inasmuch as it is largely a port of call for ships from all parts of the world. A vessel may put in for say 100 tons of coal to take on her voyage, or because of some trivial accident to the machinery, or even for orders. To tax such a vessel $100 or $200 seems to be an exaction on the part of the Government. Moreover, these vessels frequently have not time to wait to put a seaman or an officer, who has some disease or has met with an accident, in the hospital. He cannot wait for the detention which takes place in the hospital, and a shore doctor has to be employed and paid for. The owners say: "We have paid the doctors' bills for attendance to our officers or seamen; now we are taxed by the Government $200 or $100 in addition, when no service whatever has been rendered."

There are other vessels which may come in three or four or half-a-dozen times; for instance, passenger ships which come in to land a few passengers. It is quite true they are charged only three times. Still a sum quite sufficient for the maintenance of the hospital would be secured if the one cent and a half already charged should be exacted. Vessels of large tonnage—mail line steamers, for instance—will make five or six trips or more in a year. The amount taken from them is limited to three trips. Perhaps if the charge extended over the number of trips made it would not be a very large sum. But certainly the objection is that the amount imposed on vessels of very large tonnage is too great in proportion to the service rendered.

I might call the attention of the minister also to the fact that at Halifax the Government has no hospital, but the hospital is maintained by the provincial government, the Dominion Government having the right to nominate, on the recommendation of certain physicians, seamen from ships to be treated. Only a proportion of the expenditure is demanded from the Dominion Government through the Marine and Fisheries Department.

I am not going to discuss how this tax would apply to places like Montreal, or St. John, N.B., or Sydney. Sydney is certainly in the same category with Halifax, because steamers frequently call there for coal, or for orders when they are bound up the St. Lawrence, or because of accidents to machinery. In those cases, where the stay is very short and where the tax is altogether disproportionate to the service rendered, I think the former rate of a cent and a half would be ample to cover all the expenditure that the Government would be called upon to make in this connection.

Hon. J. W. DANIEL: I suppose that no one wishes to place any increased cost on the operation of our shipping, and any costs that are imposed are put on because they cannot be avoided. Sick and distressed seamen are really the wards of the country, or the Government, and it is the duty of the Government to see that when they arrive at any of our ports they are properly attended to. It was supposed that the fund for sick and distressed seamen had a surplus to its credit; but, as the honourable leader of the Government has stated to-day, that surplus was due to the fact that many charges that ought to have been made against it were not made—that buildings and repairs, for instance, which were done by the Public Works Department, were charged to that department and not to the Sick Mariners' Fund. The same thing occurred with regard to overhead charges and matters of that kind. I think, in fact I am quite sure, that this extra cost is absolutely required. It is required because the hospitals—and most of the sailors are now treated in the ordinary general public hospitals in the ports where they arrive—are all charging a larger per diem allowance for looking after these men. The consequence is that the cost of maintaining the sick sailors has increased very materially, and so the funds must also be increased very materially.

There is another reason for the increased cost. I think it was the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) who spoke of the medical charges being one of the great causes of expense. As a matter of fact, in the large cities, at all events in Halifax, St. John, Montreal, and Quebec, the medical attendants have never been paid anything at all, and they are beginning to think it is about time they were paid. I do not see any reason why the wards of the Government should be treated as paupers and be put on the charity of the medical men. There is really no reason in the world, when you think of the matter, why the doctors of the country should be expected to treat these men for nothing. The Government, by means of the tax on shipping, is perfectly well able to pay for that service. It may be that in small rural communities where there are no hospitals at all, and which are remote from hospitals, the local physician or surgeon has been called upon to treat these men, and has treated them in private houses or wherever arrangements could be made for their treatment; but in the larger ports the hospitals are now charging fully double what they did a few years ago, on account of the increased cost of living; and that, with the attendance fee for the physician, will mean quite an addition to the expense. In view of these circumstances, I think the tax is a proper one to be placed on the shipping of the country.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I should like to explain to my honourable friend, who misapprehended me, that I did not say the owners of the ships objected to paying for seamen if they went into the hospitals; it was only that when seamen did not go into a hospital, and the owners had to pay outside physicians to visit and treat them, they thought they should not be charged hospital expenses in addition to the medical bills.

Hon. A. B. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, this is a very important Bill. Of course, there is no doubt about the wisdom of the principle of the Bill. There is a great deal of truth in what the honourable gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) and the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) have said with regard to the situation. A ship of 5,000 or 10,000 tons, with a crew of from 250 to 400 men, comes into a port like Halifax, and it is found that four or five of the seamen are sick. The sick mariner's fee can be paid, and the men handed over to the authorities, and the Government is bound to find them a hospital. It is true that the Dominion Government has no hospital; but in Halifax we have a provincial hospital, and the Dominion Government is charged for every seaman put into that hospital. Whether the doctor receives anything or not I do not know, but I think my honourable friend from St. John is quite right as to that. At any rate, the provincial hospitals get paid, and the Dominion Government is bound to find a hospital for the men. I would suggest that when we go into Committee on this Bill a great deal of improvement might be made in it. The honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) knows as well as I do that if a ship comes into Halifax with one or two or three sick men on board, the captain has to send them to the hospital. I think that the proper method of handling this problem would be for the Dominion Government to appoint a competent doctor, who would be paid out of the Mariners' Fund, to go aboard ships and see whether the men really were sick or not; because, in order to get out of the ship, men frequently pretend they are sick when they are not, and in that way difficulty is caused and ships are delayed. As the honourable gentleman from Halifax has said, a ship coming in for orders or to land a few passengers, and wanting to get away quickly, is sometimes delayed by reason of the fact that the captain has to send men to the hospital and has to wait until the doctors are pleased to see them and make a report. If that is not done, the captain has to go without the men, and has to leave money there, perhaps three months' pay, so that when the men come out of the hospital they get their money and are taken care of. This causes great inconvenience in shipping circles.

Suppose we were to say that we would not pass this Bill, and that the ships should not pay two cents a ton to take care of these men. It would be an outrageous situation. When a ship came in, the men, if they were sick, would be carried off to the hospital without a single cent being paid by that ship. It seems to me that it would be rather better to increase the rate and to increase the accommodation by having a doctor paid out of the fund, who could go to the ship to examine the men, and see whether they really were sick. Now that we have wireless telegraphy the shipping agent could be informed if the men were sick.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would not the quarantine officers do what my honourable friend suggests?

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: No. The quarantine officers have nothing to do with that. There is a port officer who looks at the crew to see if they have any contagious disease. The quarantine officer sees that the passengers have no contagious disease. If the captain says to the agent, "I have one, or two, or three, or a dozen men sick, and want to send them to the hospital," the agent goes to the custom house and gets a certificate and hands it to the captain, and the men are landed in the hospital and the hospital has to take care of them. As I said before, these men may be shamming sick. A ship may come into port for only a few hours, and if any of the men on board are sick it may not be possible to get a doctor to look after them for twenty-four hours; and as the captains cannot go without making provision for the men, great inconvenience is caused. I think it would be better to increase the fee than to decrease it, and at the same time to increase the facilities that we have to-day. I think we have had a Sick Mariners' fee since Confederation. I know there has been such a fee for the last thirty years, and it has been of the greatest possible advantage to ships from all parts of the world to know that the minute the two cents a ton fee was paid the members of the crew would be looked after and taken care of until the ship returned again. No one would be more disappointed than the shipping interests if we contemplated wiping this provision off the slate altogether. I am sure that my honourable friend from Halifax, who has had great experience in these matters, will see that an advantage is to be gained by increasing the fee. Men may come in with broken arms, or they may break them in port. I think the principle of the Bill is a good one. To-day every little ship that goes to a United States port has to get a bill of health. A ship going from Canada to a United States port, no matter whether she is 50, 100, 200, or 300 tons, has to pay $5 for a bill of health, even if there is no indication at all of sickness on board. We do not make American ships bring a certificate to our ports, but every ship that goes from the Canadian Atlantic ports has to have a certificate from the American consul in order to be able to land at an American port. The principle of this Bill is good both for the ship-owner and for the seamen, and I am sure that they would not want to see it wiped out of existence. If we can amend it so as to make it of greater advantage to the shipping interests I think we should do so.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ADMIRALTY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 139, an Act to amend the Admiralty Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, under the law as it is at the present time the power of appointing a deputy judge to a local judge in admiralty rests entirely with the local judge; and there has been no way of interfering with those appointments. Let us assume that a local judge becomes so ill as to lose his mental grasp or power to deal with the situation; he makes an appointment, and his act cannot be undone. The solution of the difficulty is found in giving power to the Governor in Council either to express approval or disapproval of the appointment, or to revoke the appointment. It is desirable to have this legislation because of a certain case which has arisen in one of the Maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I would draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that there is considerable difference between the wording of this Bill and the wording which we adopted in the Exchequer Court Bill which we put through the other day. However, this is a matter that can be very much better discussed in Committee, and I intend to bring it up again when we reach that stage.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

NORTHWEST GAME BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 151, an Act to amend the Northwest Game Act.

He said: For climatic reasons, honourable gentlemen, it is desirable to extend the area of the present Act. It is proposed, as honourable gentlemen will see in clause one, to extend the area a distance farther north. A further provision is made for the creation of sanctuaries for the protection of game. Another object in view is to bring the Dominion law into conformity with certain provincial legislation. It is of course desirable that the authority of Dominion and provincial Governments should be so exercised as not to conflict.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 2.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 166, an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1920, and the 31st March, 1921.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a Bill to provide for the voting of one-sixth of the supply. We have already passed a similar Bill this session. It will be necessary to pass the present Bill before the end of the month. The amount provided under clause 2, as honourable gentlemen will see in the margin, is $62,900,000. Under clause 3 and under clause 4 specific sums are voted. What I said on the presentation of the similar Bill less than two months ago is equally applicable to the present Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does my honourable friend mean the end of this month or the end of last month?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that the money is required by the 15th of this month.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, this is the second Appropriation Bill we have had this session. I hope that in future we shall not have to pass Appropriation Bills in this way. It is, I think, very desirable that the Government should call Parliament early enough to permit of voting the money needed for carrying on the business of the country before the beginning of the fiscal year, so that we shall not have to pass interim appropriations of this kind to enable the Government to carry on. I think it is in the interest of the whole country that Parliament should be called together earlier in the year, and that its business should be done at a time more convenient to the members, especially those who have to come from the West. They ought to be allowed to leave at an earlier date, in order that they may enjoy the salubrious climate of the West, which they so much appreciate, and may help in the production of the crops which are so necessary at the present time.

There is another matter to which I should like to draw the attention of the House. In passing these Appropriation Bills I presume we do not commit ourselves to the different items that will be included in the Supply Bill—such items, for instance, as the loan to the Canadian Northern Railway. I have raised this question before in the House, and I raise it again to-day in order that honourable gentlemen may consider it and express an opinion upon it when the final Supply Bill is presented. I think it is a most objectionable procedure on the part of the Government to ask this House to pass items of this kind in a Supply Bill. It does not seem to me that such an item as a loan to a railway company for the purpose of making up a deficit of the year before, and carrying on its business and obtaining the necessary equipment, etc., should be included in a Bill to provide appropriations for carrying on the administration of the country.

In the present Supply Bill there are two or three items that have no right to be there. One is a loan of $25,000,000 to the provincial governments for the purpose of enabling them to deal with the housing problem.

I do not want to take up the time of the House at present in discussing this matter more fully, but I do think that honourable members should consider these questions, and that we ought to find some method of urging upon the Government that in future such items should not be put into the Supply Bill, as they have been for the last two or three years.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill 72, an Act to incorporate The North-West Route, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill K4, an Act respecting the Dominion Trust Company.—Hon. Mr. Foster.

Bill X3, an Act respecting The Colonial Investment and Loan Company.—Hon. Mr. Foster.

Bill S4, an Act to incorporate The Bank of Saskatchewan.—Hon. Mr. Foster.

PENITENTIARY BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 138, an Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 141, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

FEEDING STUFFS BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 165, an Act to regulate Sale and Inspection of Commercial Feeding Stuffs, Bran, Shorts, Middlings and Chop Feeds.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 15, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Tuesday, June 15, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill A5, an Act to incorporate the Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Michener.

DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill B5, an Act for the relief of Nora Dowle.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

RAILWAY LINE FROM VICTORIAVILLE TO ARTHABASKA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Government to the necessity of building a branch line on the Grand Trunk, from Victoriaville to Arthabaska, a distance of 3 miles, so that the railway may reach the chief town of the district of Arthabaska, and inquired whether it is the intention of the Government to build such a branch line

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in putting this inquiry before the House I would ask the privilege of saying a few words in support of my position. As perhaps not many honourable gentlemen know the place well, I may say that the town of Arthabaska is situated three miles from the town of Victoriaville, which is on the main line of the Grand Trunk, and that there is no railway connection between the two towns. The result is that in going to Arthabaska one must drive from Victoriaville. Arthabaska is the chief town of the district of Arthabaska, which comprises the three large counties of Megantic, Arthabaska, and Drummond, which have a population of over 100,000 souls, including 22,000 electors. The court house is in Arthabaska, and when the Courts of the King's Bench for criminal business, the Superior Court, the Surrogate Court, or the Magistrate's Court sit, the majority of the jurymen, witnesses, and parties to the litigation are obliged to drive from Victoriaville to Arthabaska. The Crown Lands Agency is also situated in Arthabaska, as are the offices of the Collector of Provincial Revenue, Sheriff's office and the Registry office, so that this branch line is very much needed.

Another reason for the building of this road is that the Government would benefit. More trade would be directed to the railway at Arthabaska than now goes to it at Victoriaville. If these 3 miles of branch line were built the people of St. Adrien and the township of Ham would send their freight by the Grand Trunk railway, which is now a Government road, instead of by the Quebec Central Railway. Some honourable gentlemen may say: "Why did not the Grand Trunk build this line?" Well, they always said they had no money to build it—and now I believe that. In addition to all this, there are splendid gravel pits between Victoriaville and Arthabaska which would supply gravel for ballast, which would save money to the Government. To build this small branch line would only be doing justice to Arthabaska and doing what has been done for some places on the National railways in the West. There is a large furniture factory in Arthabaska which makes high-grade furniture. That concern is obliged to send its furniture to the station at Victoriaville by teams, which makes it difficult for them to carry on business successfully even though the goods they manufacture are first-class. This line would be of great benefit to that factory, as well as to the hospital, the college, and the convent which are situated there. Arthabaska is an historic place, as the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier lived there from 1865 until 1896. After that time he went there every year to the place where his residence still stands. I may tell you, honourable gentlemen, that it is one of the finest towns in the province of Quebec, being built on the slope of a mountain. The air is very healthy; and in proof of that I would say that many people have been cured of consumption by going there. For example, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who came there in 1865 threatened with consumption, had his health restored by living in that place, and, as you all know, lived for many years afterwards. I would ask the leader of the Government in this House to explain these things to his colleagues. He has the talent to explain them well and put them in a good light; and if he wishes to take a trip I invite him to come to Arthabaska, where I am sure he will be well received by all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I am sure the House has listened with great pleasure to the remarks which have been made by my honourable friend from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Lavergne). Furthermore, I am confident that the public of that particular district will feel sure that he has fully done his duty in pointing out the attractions and the importance of the town of arthabaskaville. I may say, however, that the remarks of my honourable friend are rather premature, inasmuch as the Grand Trunk railway has not yet come absolutely under the control of the Government. As my honourable friend knows, that railway is being administered practically by a commission. or by representatives of the Grand Trunk Company and of the Government. But I have no doubt that in due course, notwithstanding the attitude which my honourable friend took upon the question of acquiring the Grand Trunk, every consideration will be given to the remarks which he has made to-day.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

The Hon. the SPEAKER informed the Senate that he had received a communication informing him that the Deputy Governor General would attend in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, June 16, at 4 p m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

PRIVATE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 52, an Act to incorporate The Western Canadian Union Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.—Hon. G. V. White.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 126, an Act to amend The Bankruptcy Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it will be recalled by the Chamber that last year we passed what is known as the Bankruptcy Act. A provision was made therein by which it was to be brought into operation by Order in Council. An Order in Council was accordingly passed, declaring that the Act should come into force on the ensuing 1st of July. The chief purpose in giving sufficient time between the Royal Assent to the Bill and its coming into operation was to ascertain from chambers of commerce, boards of trade, the legal profession, the judiciary, and others who would be interested in the administration of bankrupt estates, their views as to the practicability of the Bill in its various features. The Government has since received from authoritative bodies and individuals, such as I have mentioned, a number of communications pointing out wherein it would be desirable to make certain changes, particularly in the matter of procedure; not necessarily involving a change in policy or in principle. The Bill before us has been prepared along the lines suggested. There are in the Bill some 21 sections which deal mainly with matters of procedure and are largely, if not altogether, the outcome of the recommendations made by those bodies and individuals I have mentioned. It is not necessary for me to deal with the clauses of the Bill seriatim, as that would involve explanations which would have to be made again in Committee. I therefore move the second reading of the Bill, with the understanding that when we go into Committee all the sections will be discussed fully.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, it seems rather curious that a Bill should require amendment before it has gone into operation. The various amendments made by this Bill do not seem to effect any great change. I think their purpose is to make some of the sections a little clearer and to provide for one or two alterations that were overlooked when the Bill of last session was drawn. It seems to me that the most important amendment that is being made is that which deals with the question of fees, not only of solicitors and witnesses, but also with regard to inspectors. When we go into Committee the members of the House should look into that matter very carefully, because I believe, as a layman—and I suppose it is the opinion of others—that the expenses of winding up an estate should not be allowed to mount higher than is absolutely necessary for proper administration.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER moved the adoption of the second report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the navigability and fishery resources of the Hudson bay and strait.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, early in the first session of 1919 a committee consisting of twelve members of this House was appointed for the purpose of taking evidence with regard to the navigability of Hudson bay and strait and the natural resources of the Hudson bay district. This Committee was continued during the short session of 1919, and again this session, and has now presented its report. The evidence taken is somewhat voluminous. The members of the Committee were imbued with the idea that the subject-matter of their inquiry was a very important one. For many years there has been projected a railway to the Hudson bay and a route through Hudson bay and strait to the Atlantic and thence to Europe. There has been a great deal of discussion throughout the country with regard to this project for the last thirty-five or forty years, some people being in favour of the route and others bitterly opposing it. Some years ago a Bill was passed by this House authorizing the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. About 1912, I think, the railway was begun, and it has been continued until steel is laid to about 100 miles from the bay and the grading, I believe, is all done to the bay. The work, however, was allowed to stop during the latter years of the war, because the energies of this country were entirely devoted to winning the war. In 1919, the conflict being over, it was felt by members of the Senate that sufficient knowledge had not yet been obtained, officially at least, with regard to this work, and with regard to the probability of the successful navigation of Hudson bay and the strait leading into the Atlantic, and also the resources of the Hudson bay region. This Committee was therefore appointed. The Committee held many sessions and examined many witnesses, and the result of its inquiry is now before you. I shall take the liberty of reading the report. It is familiar to all the members of the Committee. I may say it is almost unanimous. Only one member present was opposed to the findings of the Committee, and one member who was not present has—

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: How many members were present altogether at the time this report was adopted?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There was at least a quorum.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Yes, just a bare quorum.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: A quorum is sufficient to transact business, and a quorum did transact it, and it is for the House to say whether they approve of the findings of this Committee or not. One member of the Committee who was not present has expressed himself to me as being opposed to the report. All the other members of the Committee have expressed themselves as being favourable (reading):

> The Senate,
> Committee Room No. 534,
> Friday, June 4, 1920.
>
> The Special Committee of the Senate appointed to take evidence and report at this session upon the navigability and fishery resources of Hudson bay and strait, and of the character of the ports of said Hudson bay with regard to their fitness as railway terminals, beg leave to make their Second Report, as follows:—

This is, I may say parenthetically, the second report made this session, but several reports were made in previous sessions.

> We have held some fifteen meetings and called and examined twenty-one witnesses drawn from all parts of the country. The Committee had in view acquiring information on the following points:—

(1) The length of the season during which the bay and strait were reasonably navigable having in view the presence of ice, the occurrence and persistence of snow storms, the advantages to be gained by aids to navigation such as wireless telegraphy, light houses, fog signals and hydroplanes.

(2) The style and size of vessels to be used for the carrying trade.

(3) The relative merits of the two ports, Nelson and Churchill, and the relative cost of the development of each port.

(4) The fishing resources of the bay and strait and of the rivers emptying into the bay.

(5) The mineral resources of the country tributary to the bay.

(6) The utilization of the country for the production of meat and furs to be obtained from the Reindeer and Musk Ox, which would subsist upon the extremely nutritious grasses grown there.

A large number of witnesses were called with respect to the length of the season during which the bay and strait can be safely navigated. There was some variation among the several witnesses regarding the length of the season of navigation but all agreed that the minimum would under ordinary circumstances be at least four months while the maximum would not likely exceed five months. Voyages have been made through the strait as early as the 5th day of June, and as late as the first part of November with the ordinary type of vessel without meeting any difficulty, but these were admittedly rather exceptional cases. All were agreed, however, that modern navigating appliances, such as light houses, wireless stations, hydroplanes and fog signals would greatly facilitate navigation in these waters and in a large measure overcome the natural difficulties from ice and snow. In order that the route would be able to compete with the more southerly channels of communication between this country and Europe, it would be necessary to have a type of freighter capable of carrying from 5,000 to 10,000 tons of dead weight, and in the opinion of this Committee from the evidence adduced before us, there would be no difficulty in handling so large a vessel on the route, provided it was properly strengthened and protected in the forward part. Of course, heretofore only vessels of smaller size have been used because ships of larger capacity have not been required.

The concensus of opinion is that Hudson bay remains open all the year through and that the ice does not extend beyond thirty or forty miles from the shore. The strait is also open for the greater part of the year and would probably be open all the time except for the ice which comes down late in the autumn from Fox channel and obstructs navigation in the strait.

That is, the ice is not formed in the strait itself; it is extraneous ice which comes into the strait through Fox channel.

It was generally conceded by the eight witnesses who gave evidence on this point that the aids to navigation which might be installed along the strait would greatly facilitate the passage and considerably extend the season of navigability.

Your Committee took a large amount of evidence regarding the relative merits of the two western ports, Churchill and Nelson, and there was a considerable divergence of opinion among the different witnesses as to which of the two should have been selected, having in view the shorter railway haul in the one case and the cheaper construction of the port itself in the other. Churchill was shown to be an absolutely land locked harbour entirely protected from every wind no matter from which quarter it should blow, where a few ships could at all times ride at anchor in perfect security. Nelson on the other hand has no natural protection from the sea except such as it receives by reason of its remoteness from the body of the sea, there being a twenty mile stretch of shallows between it and deep water. A narrow channel bordered by wide shallows connects the proposed harbour of Nelson with the open bay. A very large amount of money has already been expended upon the harbour improvements of Nelson, but a much larger sum is still required before the present plans can be carried out. There seems to be considerable doubt whether or not, even when the proposed plans are completed, the harbour at Nelson will be an entirely safe one against an easterly gale. To utilize Churchill it would be necessary to build about eighty miles of road across a country which has been described by one witness as very difficult, it having a stretch of thirty miles of morass almost impossible to cross owing to the difficulty of getting a firm foundation for the roadbed. This is, however, denied by the testimony of two witnesses, of each of whom the Committee was greatly impressed. Both J. B. and J. W: Tyrrell testified that there was a perfectly good and comparatively short route from the present route deflecting at a point some fifty-six miles from Nelson and going north and east to Churchill. The present harbour of Churchill is rather small, but, according to the evidence of the Messrs. Tyrrell, uncontradicted, could easily be enlarged enough to accommodate all the trade likely to offer for many years to come. Beyond the present deep water harbour there is a large basin of shallow water, the bottom of which is composed of hard clay mixed with boulders, which could be easily dredged and the resultant harbour would be of its size one of the finest in the continent. The Tyrrell brothers are very familar with the country around Hudson bay, having spent several years each in research and in examination of these regions. Mr. J. W. Tyrrell spent one winter at a station in Hudson strait taking observations for the Canadian Government and also looked over the country from the Pas to Churchill on behalf of a company who had some intention of building a railway in that part of the country —a scheme which was afterward abandoned. He had no hesitation in saying that no difficulty whatever would be found in extending the railway to Churchill. It is the opinion of this Committee that the Government would be well advised if before expending any more money on the harbour works at Nelson they were to appoint a committee of expert engineers and railway builders to examine the route to Churchill and ascertain whether or not it is really possible, as the Messrs. Tyrrell say, and what would be the cost and advantage of making Churchill the port and terminus of the Hudson Bay road rather than Nelson.

In the meantime, laying of the rails could be completed to Nelson, and that part could be used for the present in its present state.

In other words, we do not propose that the prosecution of this enterprise should be interrupted while an examination of Churchill was being made.

While no one was able to speak with certainly as to whether the codfish were plentiful in the bay or not, there is no doubt as to the strait. All the rivers flowing into the bay team with fish, and walrus and seal are also found in large numbers in the strait. No doubt as soon as the Hudson Bay route is established, a very large and lucrative fishing industry will be established there. Recent discoveries have shown that the country surrounding Hudson bay is strongly and richly mineralized, particularly in gold and copper.

Mr. Stefansson, the distinguished polar explorer, gave evidence before your Committee. He is a devout believer in the possibility of utilizing what have always been known as the Barren Lands of the North, and the islands within the Arctic Circle, in the cultivation of the reindeer, cariboo and musk ox for the production of meat. He gave evidence as to the splendid quality of the flesh of these animals as food for the people, and as to the cheapness with which it might be produced. He said that the wild lands of the north which have always been looked upon as worthless could carry at least fifty million head of reindeer and ten million head of musk ox, and that the cost of handing these huge numbers would be trifling in comparison with the profit to be made. The effect of this upon the world's food supply would be tremendous, and your Committee would strongly recommend that the matter be energetically taken up by the Government.

I see in the meantime that the Government have passed an Order in Council making a certain grant of territory to Mr. Stefansson for thirty years, fifteen of which are to be without remuneration, and the last fifteen years with considerable remuneration.

Your Committee makes the following findings upon the evidence adduced before them—

(1) That the Hudson Bay route is feasible and will probably in time be profitable.

That may sound strange in some ears, but we know that there always were doubting Thomases.

(2) That the season of navigation under present conditions is at least four months in length and may by reason of improvements in aids to navigation be considerably increased.

The increase is not so much in the length of the navigable season as in the improvement of navigability itself by those aids, making it much safer than at present.

(3) That in the opinion of this Committee sufficient care was not taken in the selection of Nelson as the terminus of the railway, and that the Government should not make further important expenditures upon this port without first making a new and thorough examination into the relative merits of Churchill and Nelson as a terminus for the railroad.

(4) That the waters of the strait and rivers tributary to the bay teem with fish and valuable marine animals, and we believe that the bay is equally well stocked; but there has not yet been sufficient data collected as to the extent of the fisheries of the bay to enable an authoritative statement to be made as to their value.

(5) That the mines already discovered in the Hudson bay district are of sufficient number and richness to indicate the existence of great potential mineral wealth.

(6) Your Committee feel that they cannot too strongly endorse the valuable suggestion of Mr. Stefansson as to the cultivation of the reindeer and musk ox, and would urge upon the Government that the Department of the Interior be empowered to take hold of this matter, earnestly taking advantage of what has been done in this regard by the United States Government.

That, I am thankful to say, has already been done by the Government.

(7) Your Committee, although it is somewhat outside the scope of their mandate, cannot close this report without making some reference to the national value of the explorations of Vihljalmur Stefansson. He has completely revolutionized our ideas of the region within the Polar Circle. He has demonstrated that it is possible for white men to live and thrive in that northern region though drawing from no other resources than those afforded by the country itself, and he has proven that those lands which were looked upon as barren and utterly worthless will eventually be a valuable asset to Canada. The Committee ventures the hope that the Canadian Government will not be unmindful of the great services performed by Mr. Stefansson, whose reward so far has not been commensurate with the national importance of the work he has accomplished.

(8) Your Committee expresses its thanks to the gentlemen who have voluntarily come forward and given valuable evidence upon the important matters under consideration.

(9) Your Committee submit herewith an extract in narrative form of the evidence given before the Committee, and beg to recommend that 1,000 copies of this report and the extract of the evidence be printed in pamphlet form for general distribution.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Geo. W. Fowler,
Chairman.

This, gentlemen, is the report of the Committee, and connected therewith is a precis of the evidence taken, thrown into narrative form, eliminating all matter that did not touch upon the questions at issue, and thus made more readable and attractive. I submit that every one of the findings of the Committee is supported by the evidence. The desire in preparing the report was that it should be absolutely supported in every instance by the evidence which accompanies it. While in some instances there was evidence both pro and con, including evidence that the season of navigability was shorter than we have found here, yet there is evidence to support the finding of the Committee as to the season of navigability. We will always find differences of opinion between witnesses, but after careful consideration of all the evidence placed before them the Committee came to its findings. There was a question in the minds of some gentlemen about the voyage in the strait being as early as the 5th of June, but Mr. J. W. Tyrrell spent a winter there, making observations on behalf of the Government, and I will read, for the benefit of one member of the Committee, who challenged the statement—

Hon. Mr. POWER: What year, please?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: On the 5th of June, 1886. This is what Mr. Tyrrell said:

I was still occupying my shack at Ash Point (in the Hudson strait) and a whaling steamer came into the strait and anchored right in front of our station without knowing we were there. The ice in the harbour was still firm, but there was no ice to be seen in the strait. The captain told me that he had not seen a pan of ice in the Hudson strait up to that time, and he passed on next day to the west. The ship was a Dundee whaler, I think she was wood. He got through all right, and returned in the autumn.

So I say in every case you will notice that our findings are supported by evidence. Speaking for myself—and I say this knowing that my words will be taken down, but I am prepared to stand by them—I have the utmost faith in the feasibility of the Hudson bay route, and also in its future success. We have people who lack faith in the resources of this country, and even in the country itself. When the Canadian Pacific railway was built, the masses of the people lacked faith in the enterprise, but against the doubts of the majority of the people, some of whom were representatives in the House of Commons and in the Senate, a few strong men, nation-builders, by the force of their personality were able to carry the project through. The reports sent out by the Hudson bay people with regard to the country that is to-day the granary of Canada, and to some extent the granary of the world, were to the effect that wheat and such grains would not grow in that country at all. We were told that everything would be frozen up and nothing would grow. Well, the refutation of such statements is found in the fact of the mighty West we have to-day, on which will largely turn the future of this country. What was true at that time of the West will be true, in my opinion, of this northern country in the future. Geographically, there is every reason to have faith in it. It is much farther south than many parts of Europe which are supporting a large population and adding materially to the wealth of the world; and those regions and those waters, which are looked upon by some of our Eastern friends as frost-bound during a great portion of the year, and therefore unfit to be navigated with commercial success, are not so frost-bound as many parts of the territorial waters of northern Europe, which are navigated commercially, to the great advantage of a very large and increasing population.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Would you mind giving us a resumé of the arguments on both sides of this most interesting subject—not only your conclusions, but the evidence that was given before the committee?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It would be almost impossible, I can assure you.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I mean the argument on both sides.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There was not much argument. You will hear the argument from our friend the genial and handsome member from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who was one of the opponents, and also from one of the genial members from St. John, who was also an opponent. They will give you the dark side of the shield; I am showing only the silver side. You may be sure, when the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudière gives his views, it will be exhaustively done. I understand I will have an opportunity to reply at the close of the debate, although I am not so sure it will be necessary, because I believe the arguments that can be brought forward against this measure will not be sufficiently cogent or important to call for an answer from me, their basis being so flimsy that I do not see how an intelligent argument can be founded upon them. I would therefore move that this report be adopted, and that rule 100 be suspended in so far as it relates to the printing mentioned in paragraph 9.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The honourable gentleman has very much impressed me with the agreeable and convincing way in which he has expressed what was brought before him; but I should like to ask what was the character of the witnesses who said that the strait was not navigable for four months. Were they amateurs or visitors, or were they vessel-masters, and experienced people of that kind? That would have a great influence on the findings of the Committee as to the period of navigability.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In reply to my honourable friend I might say there were a few men who said they did not think the strait was navigable for so long a time as four months. Like their confreres who held to the contrary, they were shipmasters. There were others who held the opposite view, and we chose to believe the others, according to the weight of evidence.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I have spoken here so often on this subject that I am almost ashamed to trouble the House once more; but I must say that, although there are some parts of the report with which I agree, there are others from which I differ. For instance, I do not agree with the conclusions of the report; but I agree with the Committee when they say that Port Nelson is no place to make a harbour, and will never be a good harbour; that it will always be exposed to an easterly gale —or, as I would rather say, a northerly gale—that renders that port absolutely dangerous. I have the authority of Captain Max, who has been sailing a ship for the last nine years in Hudson bay, that he once went to Port Nelson with a Hudson bay ship drawing about 18 feet of water, and that he would not expose his ship again for any consideration. The Chairman of the Committee has said, quite truthfully, that for some 20 miles from the shore there is a narrow channel leading to deep water. According to the figures of the Government, when you are out 16 miles from the shore there is a depth of 17 feet of water; but you have a sweep from the north of over 1,200 miles, making a very short, choppy, wicked sea, and when that sea is rolling over those flat places, even in the channel, a rolling ship would touch bottom even if it drew much less than 16 feet. The report of the Committee says that Fort Churchill is a better port. For the last 15 years I have been quite tenacious in bringing this matter before this House, which perhaps I wearied, for I remember on one such occasion the leader of the Government, having the courtesy to answer my remarks, said, "We have heard the annual wail from the prophet Jeremiah." But he comes from the Northwest, and I understand that any man in the three prairie provinces who does not advocate the construction of the Hudson bay railway might just as well go out of politics. The people there are living thousands of miles from the water, not knowing anything about the difficulties of navigation, and they simply say: "We must have the Hudson bay route; we don't care if no ship comes." It is 35 years since Mr. Hugh Sutherland used to come down here with the project of the Hudson bay route, but it was not taken seriously. There is no political capital in this question. The party to which I belonged before I came to this House were just as active as the other; they started the survey, they began the work, they even erected a bridge at Le Pas; but both parties were simply catering to the voters of the prairie provinces, by offering them something, when most men who look at this question seriously know there is no possibility of that Hudson bay route ever being worked commercially. If the Committee had desired, it would have been easy for them to have called any one of the managers of the various steamship companies in the country, and get them to speak. I spoke to one of them, who has some fifty ships, and he said, "I would not think for a moment of sending a ship up in that direction unless I were paid the price of the ship."

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Will the honourable gentleman permit me? You were a member of the Committee, were you not?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Did you ever suggest calling anyone who was not called?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know whether it is in order, Mr. Speaker, to say what took place in the Committee; but I said that the only way of finding out in regard to this question was to get shipping men, not land surveyors or engineers —they are not navigators—to tell you if they will take shipping there, and if so at what price. After all, it is a ques-question of money. If a farmer is going to get his wheat sent more cheaply by the southern route, he will send it that way. The grain men will follow the line of least resistance. If they find that the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence route is the cheaper route, they will go by that route; therefore if the Hudson bay route is to be used it will have to be as cheap or cheaper than the other.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: The northern route is shorter.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly it is shorter, but of what good is that? If you are travelling in an automobile, you may have a very short road that is next to impassible and you will take the longer way round if it is a good road. That is self-evident. It would have been an easy matter for the Committee to inquire as to what would be the cost of carrying one bushel of wheat; it would have been easy for the Committee to inquire how much per ton it cost the Government to send in the materials they had sent up there.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Why did you not suggest it to the Committee?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I was not the majority of the Committee by far.

Hon Mr. WATSON: Why did you not suggest it to the Committee?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I have asked several times.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The honourable gentleman was never refused any request that he made.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It would have been easy to find out how much a ton it cost to bring cargoes, not from Europe, but from Halifax. Oh, no; I will say that the Chairman of the Committee was very impartial all through the sitting, and I think he had an open mind; but we have people in the West, very able men, who are bound to have this route.

I am sorry to say that there were many meetings of the Committee which I could not attend. If I could have been there oftener I would have been; and I regret very much that I was not able to be there. However, I was present at several meetings. I was there, for instance, when we heard Mr. Stefansson; and when he came to Montreal to lecture, I paid to hear him. I never lost $5 easier. If I had not been able to doze off a bit, I would have lost the evening too. I say to this House that I have no faith whatever in Mr. Stefansson when he comes along with his 30,000,000 reindeer and 10,000,000 musk ox down here.

I would point out that for nearly four hundred years past people have been going up north, and when their provisions gave out it meant starvation. Why should one man go up there and find it an eldorado, and find that he could live there as well as if he were at the Chateau Laurier? Stefansson said that they got all they wanted; in fact, they got fat, and were better off there than here. Picture a man who was asked about navigation and ice conditions—and I defy the Chairman to contradict this—saying, well, that there was ice, but that he thought they might use submarines and go under the ice, and could have wheels underneath the submarine.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I can turn that up and show it to you. That is Mr. Stefansson. From that day I marked him down, and I am glad to denounce him in the Senate to-day. There is no sense in a man coming before a Committee of serious men and talking of having wheels on a submarine so that it could go underneath the ice. I think there must have been wheels in his head.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is that part of the evidence?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is what he said. I would take that with a grain of salt and I would put the musk oxen and the reindeer in the submarine under the ice in the strait. But, speaking seriously, the question of the navigation of Hudson bay is old, old, old; but I will make the prediction now that as soon as the rails reach the shore of Hudson bay there will be no more Hudson Bay Company boats coming in to bring supplies: they will come by rail. Hudson bay boats have been going into Hudson bay for the last three hundred years, and very few have been lost—why? Because they have been small sailing vessels, made saucer-shaped. The Neptune was made saucer-shaped, and when the ice formed and the pressure came she was simply lifted bodily out of the water and stayed there until it pleased Divine Providence to loosen the ice and change the current. You will find by the report of Commander Wakeham—and I have had many cruises with him, although not in the Hudson bay—that he went up there in a ship called the Adventurer, which had an oak rudder 14 inches thick. That rudder was snapped off like the stem of a clay pipe. His ship was lifted clean out of the water, and remained there for three days. She was an iron ship, but she was built saucer-shaped, and the ice crowding underneath her lifted her up; but she was bent so badly that you could see daylight through the decks, and the rigging hung like ribbons from a maypole. Strange to say, when the ship went back into the water she resumed her shape and everything became taut again. That happened at the end of July. Fortunately for them, they had their provisions with them. That, honourable gentlemen, is nothing new. In 1697 D'Iberville fitted out an expedition to sail from Newfoundland. He was on board the Pelican, and his two other ships were crushed by the ice within his very sight. I have often related this incident in the House, and I only repeat it for the benefit of those who may not have been here then. That happened in the latter part of August. Captain Bernier, who has navigated a great deal of that part of the world in a sailing ship, with an auxiliary, says that the immense volume of water that pours not only out of the Fox channel but out of the Hudson bay when the tide lowers, comes down at the rate of nine knots an hour—that is at the rate of 10 miles an hour; as fast as a good horse will trot along the road—and that the ice which is running at that rate at the surface does not change its course as it does at the bottom. There are what they call growlers, huge icebergs drawing 500 or 600 feet of water. Fancy the pressure of water at such a depth. These growlers are carried with the out-going tide for an hour or two hours after the tide on the surface has set in the opposite direction. The tide on the surface changes first, and these growlers, coming at the rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour through the surface ice, can be heard for miles. If a ship is caught in the surface ice, and comes in contact with one of those growlers, she is absolutely wrecked. The only thing to do is to get into soft ice, that is, ice that is supposed to have been formed the same year. Old ice, that has been in the North for years, is as hard as rock, and no ship can resist it; but if she waits in the soft ice until the growlers go by, and until a lead is opened up, she is all right. Captain Wakeham told me that one time when he was going into Hudson bay he was carrying an officer of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. He told this police officer that there was no use in insisting upon going into the strait just at that time, because he would gain nothing by it. The other man was in charge, however, and he said, "You are here to take me into Hudson bay, and I order you to go in," and they went in. That was at the beginning of July. They got caught in the ice; and it was somewhere about the 20th of July when they got out of the ice again. Commander Wakeham says that if they had waited until perhaps the 6th or 7th of July they would not have got into this ice.

Now, the Northwest passage and the navigation of Hudson bay is a very old problem. Honourable gentleman may have asked themselves why it was that in times gone by the different nations were looking for a passage to Cathay or India through the North. That is a thing that has puzzled many people. The reason the Dutch, the English, and the French too, were trying to get through there was because at that time Spain reigned supreme, and if the other nations attempted to send vessels by the southern route they fell a prey to the Spanish navy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would the honourable gentleman indicate about the time that Spain ceased to be supreme on the southern seas; and whether or not there were expeditions searching for the northwest passage centuries after Spain ceased to be a maritime power?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I am very glad that the honourable gentleman has put me on the track. The first explorer we know of was called Corte-Real; that was in 1500; but he did nothing. In 1776, not so long after Spain lost command of the sea, Frobisher discovered Frobisher's bay. I will give you some of the details. I think I have studied this question probably as much as any other honourable member of this House. Frobisher had two ships of 20 tons and one of 10 tons. Those ships were about 35 feet long and about 12 feet wide. One of our canal boats to-day is 150 times as big as one of those ships. Those ships were so shallow in draught that the ice would lift them. An ordinary modern 10,000 ton cargo boat with iron sides would draw at least 26 or 27 feet of water, and she would not rise on the ice when it came crushing around her. Here is the ice coming at the rate of 9 miles an hour; that ship would be crushed like an egg-shell. Honourable gentlemen know that the thickness of the skin of an ocean steamer is only three-eights of an inch. Why does the honourable gentleman think the Hudson Bay Company built the sides of their ships an inch-and-a-half thick and all the other parts in proportion? Why did they build them so that with a crew of forty men on board they could carry only 45 tons of cargo? They had to be made strong to resist the ice. Instead of three-eighths of an inch you have an inch-and-a-half of thickness, and every other part of the ship is reinforced accordingly. This report of the Committee says that the forward part of the ship could be strengthened; but what is to prevent the ice coming at her in other ways in the eddies? The Chairman of the Committee (Hon. Mr. Fowler), born by the sea, is now some distance from the ocean, or he would know that. If you are going to build an ice-breaker you have to make her an ice-breaker all round.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would suggest to my honourable friend that he look at the evidence of his idol, Captain Bernier, and he will see that that is the only part of the ship that needs to be strengthened.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Captain Bernier bought a boat from the Government—the Arctic. We have all heard of her. I think my honourable friend remembers the Arctic and the afternoon teas with the Esquimaux ladies. I saw the Arctic, and what was her construction? She was a wooden ship, if I remember rightly, and she was a very poor freight carrier. She was braced with great big timbers running from one side to the other, and perpendicularly, so that she would not be crushed in the ice; and she was such a poor freight carrier that when she left Quebec there was no space in the hold, and the cargo, which consisted of food for the crew and coal, had to be piled on the deck. It was a providence that it was the middle of the summer, and that they had nice, calm weather. While speaking of coal, I want to say that I believe they did find coal in the North, and got enough to fill their bunkers and bring some back.

I do not want to continue this long story; but, honourable gentlemen, this is a commercial proposition. Where are you going to get insurance for ships sailing into Hudson bay? Of course, you can insure anything; but if the insurance is going to cost as much as the value of the wheat, this route will have no advantage over the ordinary route. I have asked some insurance people, Lloyds among others, whether they would take such insurance. They say that no one ever thought of sending a ship up there. I have asked shipping men, and they say they would not consider it. The first thing I think the Committee should have done was to have got some solvent, reliable company to say that they would carry wheat up there, even if it cost a dollar a bushel. I am told that when a cargo of wheat is shipped a draft is attached to the bill of lading and that it is honoured by the bank and the money paid over to the shipper of the wheat. Well, before the bank would advance the money to pay the draft they would want to know if the wheat had been insured. Otherwise, if the bank advanced the money and the wheat or other cargo were lost, who would repay the bank? Certainly not the person to whom the cargo was consigned.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The bank would not take the draft unless the insurance policy was pinned on.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is exactly what I have been told. Even this morning a shipping man said to me, "There must be an insurance policy pinned on." It would have been easy for the Committee to call some insurance men and to ascertain from them at what rate they would insure; and if the rate had been prohibitive that evidence would have been enough. I must say that the Committee gave very careful attention to the work. The members were very assiduous in their attendance at the meetings, and the chairman was very industrious. He asked a great many questions of the witnesses. But that was the kernel of the thing. When I saw the drift of the Committee I must say I lost confidence in it, because it was so easy to have begun at the beginning by finding out first if there was any company that would volunteer to send a ship to take out a cargo; and I defy anybody to find such a company anywhere throughout the length and breadth of this country. I said, "There is really no use in proceeding further with this inquiry if we have not started at the beginning by finding out first whether we can get ships to go there or not." I have inquired of shipping companies and they would not send a ship there unless they were guaranteed the price of the ship. That settled that point. The next thing would have been the insurance.

But there is in the report one good thing with which I thoroughly agree. The report recommends that no more money be spent on Port Nelson. I concur absolutely in that recommendation. That is a very good thing. In any case the Government had decided not to spend any more money on the Hudson bay route for this year at least. The expenditure had been absolutely stopped, and I do not think there is any chance of it being resumed this year.

With regard to the interests of the people of the Northwest, I could cite figures to show that the crop of the year could not be shipped out, but would be there for eleven months. It would cost at least 5½ or 6 cents for storage, with wheat at the normal price of $1; and it would be much more to-day. That would have to be added to the freight charges. On the other hand, as everybody knows, wheat has been moved in normal times from the head of the lakes, Port Arthur and Fort William, to Liverpool for 12 cents a bushel.

As to the relative merits of Port Nelson and Fort Churchill, the report states that at a point 56 miles from Port Nelson the railway line might be switched off to the north and east towards Fort Churchill. But some say there is a swamp many miles in extent which could not be bridged over. I do not think the swamp will cause very much trouble. The swamp never thaws out; so there would be a good foundation on the ice. Underneath the moss there is solid ice, on which the sleepers could be built, and they would last a long time, being kept in a fine frozen condition. There would be no trouble in that respect. But in Fort Churchill there is a harbour, they say, big enough to accommodate all the steamers that would be used commercially there. I say amen to that. I say that Churchill harbour is big enough to accommodate all the steamers that will ever go there. I agree absolutely. So there are things in the report with which I do agree: first the condemnation of Port Nelson; then, the statement that Churchill is big enough for all the steamers that will ever go there.

However, to be practical, I do not see how it can ever be of any possible advantage for the Government to spend any more money on that enterprise. There is absolutely no chance whatever of its ever being of commercial use. I would commend to the members of this House the reading of the evidence taken by the Committee. The Senate should certainly weigh the evidence well before adopting this report and committing the Senate to the feasibility of the scheme. After all, the opinion of this House should be worth something, and should be so considered by the country. It is not wise for us to jump to conclusions, after the evidence of some of the witnesses. One of the star witnesses was Mr. Stefansson. After such evidence as has been presented, it would be only right for this House to allow the report to remain on the Table some time for consideration. We want to be taken seriously. Men engaged in the shipping business, not only on the Great Lakes but on the Atlantic coast and on the Pacific, will tell you—and they know—that the route is not practicable. There is a book in the Parliamentary Library called "The Arctic Pilot," and in that book you will find what I have told you. Commercial navigation is not possible in Hudson bay and strait. I think the Senate would be wise to leave the report on the Table until such times as the members have taken cognizance of it. Having taken cognizance of it, I do not think that the Senate in its wisdom would decide in favour of the scheme, against what is the almost unanimous opinion. Senators might themselves consult some of the shipping men and ask what they think of the navigation there. I do not think there is one shipping man who would say that he would like to navigate those waters.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I was hoping that as the years went round my honourable friend who has just taken his seat would lose a little of that pessimism that he always expresses so volubly when this subject is brought up. My honourable friend says that the shipping in Hudson bay is altogether impracticable—impossible. Perhaps the season is not as long there as in other places, but if everybody followed the policy that my honourable friend advocates the country would never make any progress. I myself have seen a dozen ships at one time frozen in the ice in the St. Lawrence river in the fall of the year—in the month of November. Does that mean that we should not try to navigate the St. Lawrence during the months of November and December? It has never been claimed that you can navigate Hudson bay and strait during a long season of the year. But if they can be navigated for four months in the year, is not that an advantage? Does our western produce go out by the St. Lawrence? How much of our wheat goes out by the St. Lawrence? It goes by the United States. If we can send more of it out through Canadian ports, will it not be an advantage to do so? And my honourable friend must not forget that for between two hundred and three hundred years the Hudson's Bay Company navigated Hudson strait and Hudson bay and lost only two vessels. That is not a bad record. I agree that they were not 5,000 or 10,000-ton vessels. But you can build vessels that will in all probability stand the conditions of navigation there, and there are men in this House who will live to see a big trade done on that route. There are in the Hudson bay district resources that will naturally employ shipping, and many ships will go out through Hudson bay and strait for about four months of the year.

I do not say, honourable gentlemen, that I am greatly impressed with the value of the Hudson bay route for the shipping of wheat. Some wheat, I think, will go that way. In the early days, when we were advocating that route, there was a great shipment of cattle from the West to the Old Country. That trade has fallen off—has practically ceased. Few of our cattle now go to the Old Country. The cattle that we export go to Buffalo and Chicago, chiefly to Chicago. But the day will come again, no doubt, when we shall be exporting tens of thousands of head of cattle from the western plains to the markets in the Old Country. When that day comes we shall have in the Hudson bay line the best possible route for shipping cattle. Anybody who has had any experience knows that one of the difficulties in shipping cattle across the Atlantic is the long railroad haul, which is particularly hard on the cattle when the weather is warm. The Hudson bay route will be a good cattle route, because it is the shortest and the coldest.

But I want to point out that even if there were never a bushel of wheat exported from Canada by the Hudson bay railroad and out through the strait, the railroad would still be worth building. That road will open up the country and develop trade as a colonization line. I can remember very well, honourable gentlemen, the time when people living out in the West, or many of them, had little or no faith in that country west of the province of Manitoba. They claimed that wheat could not be grown in any part of what is now the province of Saskatchewan, or in Alberta. Over forty years ago I settled in Manitoba. I was there for four years and then moved out farther west to what is now Saskatchewan. I was never on the trains going back and forth but there were dozens of persons who would say to me: "Why did you make such a mistake as to go out into that country? You can never grow wheat out there. It is too dry. The season is too short. Your grain would be frozen even if it did grow." And the people believed that. I had to defend that western country every time I came back to Manitoba. Well, we all know to-day that Saskatchewan is the great wheat-producing province of the West, and Alberta is a great wheat-producing province. Large parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta are not wheat-producing, but are mixed farming districts. And the farmers engaged in mixed farming in any part of the northern country, where wheat is not made a staple product, are far better off after five or ten years than the farmers in the best parts of the wheat-growing plains of southern Manitoba, southern Saskatchewan or southern Alberta.

Furthermore, in my judgment, after a long life spent out West, there is no part of that country which could not of itself develop a traffic and in which a railway could not be operated successfully after a little time, if common horse sense and ordinary good judgment were used in the building of the road. A great mistake was made in our railway construction, and for that mistake we are all more or less to blame. One party cannot put the entire blame on the other As I heard a man express it the other day, we built too many railroads in the wrong place and too few in the right place. The system that was adopted, of paralleling lines for hundreds of miles, was a rotten system, bound to bring bankruptcy to the railroads. In my old constituency, where the Canadian Northern railway located a line, the Canadian Pacific railway had the right to build without applying to Parliament for a charter, and they deliberately paralleled the Canadian Northern railway for fifty or sixty miles. The Canadian Pacific railway said: "We may as well teach them a lesson once and for all," and they proceeded with the construction of their own line. The result is that in my old constituency the two roads are so close together that you could stand on one and throw a stone across to the other. That situation is absurd and should never have been allowed; yet it was permitted by the Government that was in power at the time and that I supported, although I raised as much row as I could with the Railway Department about it. We are suffering the effects to-day. We now recognize and acknowledge our mistake, and we know that one side is as much to blame as the other. I only hope that the present Government will have the courage to take a strong stand, and will, if necessary, pull up hundreds of miles of duplicate track, using the rails and the ties—the rails especially—where they will be of some advantage in opening up and developing the country.

I do not profess to know anything more about this question than what I have been able to pick up; and I think that most persons who talk about the Hudson bay and strait not being navigable are in a somewhat similar position and do not know whether those waters are navigable or not. However, I feel pretty certain from what I have been able to learn that a good traffic would be developed along the Hudson bay route after a time. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) says that there are two kinds of ice that interfere with navigation; that when the ice becomes a few years old it is as hard as a rock and is all the greater danger to navigation. Let me tell you that if you encounter heavy ice that is one month old you have about as much trouble as if that ice were ten yers old. When ice is once frozen it does not get much harder; it cannot freeze any more. Ice may get a little thicker, but it will not get any harder, and my honourable friend would find that out if he attempted to navigate those straits.

My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) made much of the attitude of the insurance men and their unwillingness to insure. You cannot do anything at all in the way of insurance until you have something to insure. You cannot be altogether certain of what it is going to cost until the business has opened up. But I will venture the assertion, honourable gentlemen, that when freight offers at Port Nelson or Fort Churchill, you will find vessels to take it and insurance companies willing to insure it, and after a little while—I will not say right at first, but after a little while—you will find that the rates will not be so very different from those on the St. Lawrence. If insurance rates could stop business, we would not be shipping anything by the St. Lawrence. The insurance companies charge a great deal more for insurance in the river and the gulf of St. Lawrence than they do from American ports —why? Because the risk is greater. The risk may be greater in the Hudson straits, and if that is the case the companies will charge a little more for their insurance.

My honourable friend tells us what should have been done by the Committee that is now reporting; but I want to point out to him that it was his duty as a member of that Committee to have called witnesses to prove his contention. It was not necessary to leave everything to the chairman. My honourable friend, I think, does not represent any of the big financial interests in the East who are opposed to this scheme, but he is advocating their views. If he thought that navigation of the bay and straits was impossible, that there would be no shipping at Port Nelson or Fort Churchill, and that the whole scheme was absolutely useless, as he claims, he ought to have brought witnesses to prove that his views were correct. All he had to do was to suggest their names to my honourable friend the chairman (Hon. Mr. Fowler), and we would now have their evidence, which might have changed somewhat the recommendations of the report. But I think my honourable friend is too shrewd for anything like that, and would not take the risk of calling men to try to prove the statements that he has made today, because I think he would be rather a failure in that line.

As a western man I have faith in that route being a success even if there should never be any wheat exported by that route. The road will open up the country. It should be remembered that the day of homesteading on open prairie land in the three prairie provinces is over; we have no more of that class of land, and must now put people on land that is partly wood, partly lake and scrub. There is a great deal of land between Le Pas and Fort Churchill or Port Nelson that will carry a very considerable population.

That road will also develop the mineral interests in the northern country, just as did the Ontario and Temiskaming railroad that was built by the province of Ontario. A great many people condemned that project, saying Northern Ontario was an absolutely good-for-nothing country, and the railway would have nothing to do there, just as many people were against the Canadian Pacific railway and said it would not be a success. But see what that Ontario and Temiskaming railway has developed. The Cobalt country has produced $500,000,000 worth of silver and other minerals. That road has also opened up and developed the Porcupine country in which the Hollinger mine is situated, the biggest in the world, I am told, that has paid millions of dollars in dividends every year. These facts show that when we use common sense in putting in a railroad, it will repay the country the cost of building it. So I believe the Hudson bay railroad will pay the investment of the Dominion of Canada, even outside of any export of wheat at all.

I have not given this subject sufficient consideration to judge whether Fort Churchill or Port Nelson would be the best terminus; but what little consideration I have been able to give leads me to believe that Port Nelson is not the proper place. Although Fort Churchill is 80 miles farther by rail, I think it would be a much better harbour, because at Port Nelson a long narrow channel must be dredged out for miles, and in my judgment it would be better to build 18 miles more of the railway.

I hope the Senate will not do as my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) suggests, leave the report on the table, but that they will give it thoroughly good consideration. I say this, although I do not want to advocate the expenditure of money at present, and think we ought to economize, for I believe we are spending far more money than we should—three times as much as we did before the war. I would also say that millions and millions, that would finish that road over and over again, are being put into works that are not one-half as good, and will not be one-half as necessary to the future prosperity of the country.

Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL: Whatever importance may be accorded to this report, or whatever opinion we may hold as to its fairness, so far as it is supposed to show the trend of the evidence which was taken before the Committee, we must admit that the project itself is very important, not alone to the people in the Northwest who are specially advocating it, but to the whole of the people of Canada who will have to pay for building the railway and providing the port, afterwards making up any deficit that may accrue from the carrying out of the project. I have always taken a very great interest in ships and navigation, and everything that pertains thereto. It has been my fortune to make several trips across the Atlantic, three of which I made in sailing vessels, one of them occupying six weeks, and the last one in a large full-rigged ship, heavily laden with railroad iron, which took no less than nine weeks to go from London to New York. I have seen the Atlantic in all its moods, have enjoyed the pleasure and comfort of running before a fair breeze and with a free-flowing sail, and the seas following after. I have also experienced the discomforts and dangers attached to weather that compelled the lying-to of that ship for no less than three days at a time in a storm as severe as ever came on the North Atlantic. So far, as being somewhat familiar personally with matters of that kind, I have at least that experience to guide me. In all those trips, I had only one experience of fog and ice combined: that was on the last trip I made in the old Virginian, the most comfortable ship I was ever on. After a pleasant voyage until we came near the shores on this side, and began to approach the Straits of Belle Isle, we suddenly ran into a dense black fog, just such a fog or mist as has been described by those navigators several of whom appeared before the Committee. I thought it very strange when the captain of that ship not only slowed the vessel down, but brought her to a dead stop; but the matter of ice never occurred to me at that time. We were delayed by the fog for quite a long time, and finally a breeze sprang up and blew away the mist, and we emerged into sunshine. On doing so we found ourselves absolutely surrounded by icebergs of strong, clear, hard, Arctic ice. That ship could not have gone on in that fog, either at slow speed or at any other speed, without crashing into ice. Therefore, when I hear civil engineers, or engineers in charge of terminal works, and all that, giving advice that tramp steamers, which are nothing but floating tanks, can go through fog with safety at slow speed, when ice conditions are prevalent, I feel that they are entirely ignorant of the conditions on which they are giving their advice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to know what part of the water the honourable gentleman was in when he was surrounded by those icebergs.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Coming towards the Straits of Belle Isle. As I say, in those matters I rely entirely upon the advice and knowledge of the navigators, the captains, the men who are responsible for the safety of their ships and of their cargoes, and the crews that manage the ships, rather than on mere landsmen who, in order to push forward an operation, would send tramp steamers into Hudson strait and advise them to go through fog and snowstorm, even at slow speed, when they are liable to meet with ice. One of the witnesses before the Committee told us that he had, right in this city, photographs showing ice in the Hudson straits for every week in the year and for a series of years. And yet gentlemen come and say: "Oh, there is never any ice in Hudson strait; you can navigate it in the winter time," and all that sort of thing. It seems utterly absurd that people should make such statements without smiling to themselves, for everybody should know that they were speaking at random.

It gave me a great deal of pleasure to be present at meetings of the Committee. With the experience that I had had on the water I was able to take in the evidence of those navigators. Take, for instance, Captain Freakley, a man who has been in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company, travelling and commanding ships in that region for twenty years. It was a great pleasure to hear those men who had been there and knew what they were talking about. Those are the men on whom will depend the navigation of those straits; not men who remain on shore and tell them they can do this, that, and the other thing. The evidence showed that the whole scheme is dominated by the conditions of the straits. If honourable gentlemen will compare the evidence we have before us to-day with that taken years ago by Committees of this Senate with regard to this very subject, they will find no difference whatever in the conditions in Hudson straits from that time to this.

The merits or demerits of this scheme as a whole do not depend in the slightest degree on any report of this House or the other House, or any other body, that is fancifully optimistic and unwarranted; nor can the project be injured by a report of an opposite character. The merits or demerits of this scheme depend entirely, and always will depend, on the inherent possibilities of the route itself, and cannot be make to depend on anything else. If the conditions are such that only a certain period of time can be counted on, and to utilize this period only certain kinds of ships will be safe, then all the speeches we may make, all the reports we may adopt, will never make the slightest difference. Any remarks that I have made or will make are not intended in the slightest degree to criticize the undertaking. I realize that the Government of this country—both Governments—have determined to put this project through and to test it; there is no doubt as to that, and, to use a vulgar term, I am not making any kick about it, for it is the policy of the country, and I have nothing to say about it now. My remarks are not in criticism of the undertaking, but they are in criticism of this report, because I do not consider that it is based upon the evidence which was taken before the Committee. We know that the influences which operate on the success or non-success of this route are the length of the season, the safety of the route, the size and capacity of the ships, etc. Now, what does the report say on that matter? The first clause to which I call your attention is this:

> There was some variation among the several witnesses regarding the length of the season of navigation.

But the particular words I wish to quote are these:

> But all agreed that the minimum would under ordinary circumstances be at least four months, while the maximum would not likely exceed five months.

Now, there is a statement that I hold is entirely contrary to the evidence taken by the Committee. It is, on the whole, contrary to the evidence of which this compilation of evidence is full from one end to the other. That is one reason why I say that this House should not be called upon to pass a report without having an opportunity of reading the evidence for themselves, and I do not see how they can intelligently take any other course. The matter is of importance, and if this report does not coincide with the evidence that was taken, why should honourable members of this House be asked to pass on it without having an opportunity of informing themselves? The report winds up with the request that this Senate order 1,000 copies—of what? Of this report? No; of the emasculated report which accompanies the written report of the Committee—the partial report which the Chairman, and I might say the majority of the Committee, picked out of the evidence. They apparently do not feel satisfied that the members of this chamber should be afforded an opportunity of looking over and perusing the whole evidence for themselves. Apparently they want it cut out, and that is what I object to. Before this report is acted upon in any way I think the members of the Senate should have an opportunity of reading the evidence for themselves, and thus being able to give an intelligent vote on the matter.

Now, the report goes on again:

> Voyages have been made through the strait as early as the 5th day of June—

I want to call attention to the wording of that statement:

> Voyages have been made through the strait—

That means through the eastern end and through the western end—

> —as early as the 5th day of June, and as late as the 1st part of November, with the ordinary type of vessel without meeting any difficulty.

I think it would be very difficult to make a sentence of that number of words contain as many inaccuracies as are contained in that short sentence; and I think I can prove to you the truth of my remark. First of all, I will give you another sentence. It says:

> All agreed that the minimum would under ordinary circumstances be at least four months.

I will call as the first witness Mr. O'Hara. Some honourable gentleman may very well ask: "What does Mr. O'Hara know about this matter, he being the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce?" I will allow Mr. O'Hara to answer that question for himself, and will read exactly what he says. He appeared before the Committee, and the Chairman said to him:

All you know about would be the elevator, Mr. O'Hara—A. No, sir, I have further information than that. Early in 1914 when Sir George Foster, when the Government contemplated erecting an elevator at Fort Nelson, asked me to prepare all the information I could as to the feasibility of the Hudson Bay route, I delved into everything I could find, principally reports of ships' captains and navigators, log books, etc., and I divided the whole subject into arbitrary phases, as, for example: aids to navigation; arrival and departure of ships, 1913; channel; construction and style of vessels; currents; extracts from logs of Government steamers, 1912; general difficulties of navigation; general navigation of Hudson Bay route; insurance; periods of navigation; routes suggested; situation and difficulties at Nelson; terminal facilities; tides; tonnage available; and wrecks.

That is the scope of investigation that Mr. O'Hara made for the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I might say that to my mind his report is a model one. It is one which might very well have been taken as a model by the Committee whose report is now before us. Mr. O'Hara's report is not in what is called narrative form, but it makes statements and suggestions, and gives authorities. The third paragraph of that report says:

The minimum period of navigation, according to all the various authorities quoted in the attached, appears to be from the 1st of August to the 15th of October—two-and-a-half months.

Then we have this report saying that all the witnesses said that the minimum season of navigation would be four months. Two and a half months was Mr. O'Hara's statement. In order to substantiate that statement I am going to quote a little more from the authorities, some of whom gave their evidence before our Committee. The captains referred to in O'Hara's report are principally Newfoundland captains, men who have been engaged in that business for many years. Captain Webb says:

From the last week of July until the 15th of October, navigation should be fairly safe for ordinary trading vessels, provided ordinary precautions are taken and there is a competent master in charge.

Another witness, Mr. Harling, of Montreal, a shipping broker, says:

For the three midsummer months any ordinary vessel could navigate the Hudson straits and the Hudson bay with comparative safety.

Then there is Herbert B. Saunders, who says:

In my opinion the season, under ordinary conditions, should open about August 1, and vessels can remain in safety at Port Nelson until the 27th of October, which practically gives a working season of three calendar months.

Captain Kean says:

In my opinion navigation of the Hudson bay would be safe during August, September and October. In July ice would frequently be met with, and in many cases very hard and heavy.

Captain Kean again:

Have seen a heavy jam of ice as late as the 18th of August, but this is the exception rather than the rule. Most years the coast is clear in July.

Captain Couch, another Newfoundland captain says:

In my opinion, navigation on the Hudson bay by steamers of the type of the Stephano, Florizel, Beothic—

I think they were specially built for Hudson bay traffic——and Adventure would be comparatively safe from the 15th of July to the 5th or 6th of October.

There you have a short season, even for specially built vessels.

This would not apply every year, as conditions vary each year. On one occasion we encountered three tides in the strait, and our steamer, the Bellaventure, was jammed in the ice four days from the 15th of July.

Then there is Captain Wakeham, who says:

Winter in Hudson strait sets in early in September. We had our first regular snowstorm off Cape Digges, on the 7th of September (1897). From that date on snow continued to fall regularly.

These conditions, together with the fact of the short days, the difficulty in distinguishing the land, or judging accurately the distance when you do get a glimpse of it, and always covered with snow, and the gales of wind shifting constantly from one quarter to the other, the navigation of the Hudson straits during the month of October, extremely difficult and hazardous.

In September, 1885, and also in 1886, heavy gales followed each other in quick succession.

Then, among our own witnesses we had Mr. Bowden, who is Chief Engineer of the Railway and Canals Department, and I think honourable gentlemen of the Committee will bear me out when I say that in his testimony he gave more aid and comfort to those who were taking the optimistic view of this undertaking than any other witness we heard. He makes this remark with regard to the navigation of the strait:

It is a strange thing that although Commander Wakeham was able to make two voyages through the strait during the early part of July, we have had great difficulty getting through with a sealer; in fact, some years our sealers have not been able to get through in July at all—it has been August—so that the opening date of July 10, suggested by Captain Gordon, and to some extent confirmed by Commander Wakeham, appears to us to be altogether too early.

Captain Gordon spent three years at Fort Nelson.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What page is that?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Page 241. He continues:

For commercial studies of the question, I think August 1 would be a better date to consider as the opening of navigation. For the closing of navigation we have information enough now to say that it is not earlier than November 1st.

That is, navigation is open for August, September, and October; three months again. And yet the report says that every witness coincided in the opinion that four months was the shortest period.

Now, with regard to matters like ice in the strait, which is all part of this question, if the honourable gentleman wishes to look it up, I might say that on page 22 Captain Anderson says:

On account of the presence of ice in Hudson strait at any time of the year vessels trading there ought to have their own bows specially strengthened to resist the ice.

Also at page 25:

A sharp lookout must be kept at all times, because not only icebergs and fields of ice, but isolated masses of hard ice, called growlers, may be met with, and as they float little above the surface there are very difficult to see, especially at night, and a vessel coming in contact with one might receive serious damage.

There is more of that; but I want to call attention to one witness that I am now going to bring before you. He is a gentleman whom you all know; I think the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudiere (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) said that he was in the Chamber this afternoon; I refer to Colonel W. P. Anderson. We all know him and have perfect confidence in his opinion, because we know he would not express an opinion for which he had not good grounds. At page 156 of this book, Colonel Anderson is asked this question:

From your study of the reports and from the general knowledge that you have acquired from various sources, what is your opinion with regard to the navigability of the bay and strait?—A. The concensus of the testimony that has been given is that the bay and the strait are navigable for a minimum of three months, and a maximum of four months in the year.

Still this report of the Committee says that every witness agreed in the expression of opinion that the minimum was four months. Later on Hon. Mr. Sharpe asks Colonel Anderson:

Q. With proper aids to navigation could not that time be extended greatly?—A. No.

Q. What makes you say that?—A. Simply what I know of ice conditions in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the River St. Lawrence and on the Great Lakes.

Colonel Anderson afterwards said that while all these aids might facilitate the passage of a ship here and there they could not extend the period of navigation, because they would not have any effect on the climatic and physical conditions. His reasoning in that respect, of course, was absolutely correct. He was asked by Mr. Campbell:

What would be the period of navigation of the strait? From when to when? You gave the time, but you did not say from when to when?—A. From the 1st of August to the 1st of November is the normal period. You might get in a few days before the 1st of August, and you might get out a few days after the 1st of November.

Q. The original navigators went in there in June in sailing vessels?—A. Well, I know that a few years ago Captain Anderson tried to get in at the end of July with a powerful steamer and did not get through the strait until the middle of August.

Then the Chairman says:

I suppose if it is late in starting, it is late in finishing?—A. Not necessarily, I think. I don't think so.

Q. If you could not get through until the middle of August, the season would hardly be three months?—A. It was the middle of August the year I sent up a man with aids to navigation—with automatic lights, unwatched lights, to be put up at salient points in the strait and bay, and he was so much delayed in getting the work begun that he could not finish it that year. That is how I happen to be so sure about it.

This book is so full of that sort of thing that I do not like to weary the House by reading any more remarks; but I want to emphasize the importance of the suggestion I make, that members should be provided with a copy of the evidence so that they can read it themselves. Colonel Anderson speaks again about the aids suggested by Mr. Campbell:

Q. It has been suggested that an aeroplane station be established on Mansell Island, and wireless aids to investigate thoroughly the ice conditions in the strait?—A. That won't abolish the ice, though, will it?

Q. No, but what do you think of that idea?—A. I think it ought to be a valuable aid, but only during the navigable season. I mean to say it would not in any way increase the navigable season.

There is the opinion of a man whose opinion we all respect and treat with the greatest confidence. I spoke of Captain Freakley as being a witness in whom I placed a great deal of confidence. He also refers to this matter. At page 133 he was asked by myself:

Would it be possible for an ordinary tramp steamer such as we know to trade to Nelson and back just as she is, without any strengthening on her?—A. Ordinary tramp steamers have been employed by the Department of Railways and Canals to run between Halifax and Port Nelson, for instance, the ss. Alcazar, ss. Sinbad, ss. Sheba, ss. Sharon, ss. Durley Chine, ss. Cearense, ss. Allette. Of these the Cearense was wrecked at the month of the Nelson river on September 13, 1913, and the Allette, leaving Port Nelson on September 14, 1913, encountered ice and damaged her bows.

Now, with regard to the Allette. She was a tramp steamer, and her bones are still bleaching on the shores of Port Nelson. Inquiries were made in the Committee whether there had been any investigation into the cause of her loss, and it developed that there had been none. The reason is very obvious. I think when I tell you what happened to her that you will readily understand why it was quite unnecessary. It would be quite unnecessary to hold an inquest into the cause of death of a man who tumbled out of a tenth-storey window and was killed by falling on a pavement.

The Sheba made the latest departure from Port Nelson. She was a tramp steamer. She left on October 22nd, with two sealers to convoy her; when they got to Mansell Island they met a belt of ice 12 miles wide, and if it had not been for the two sealers she could not have got through. Captain Freakley says:

The only ice encountered by these ships was a belt 12 miles wide, encountered by Mansell Island. The sealers assisted the Sheba in making a passage through it.

Then he goes on to speak of the Allette. He says:

During that same season the tramp steamer Allette which left Port Nelson on the 7th of October encountered ice near the Mansell Island, and received a hole in her bow.

Is it any wonder the captain turned around and beached her, in the middle of October? What else could he do? I presume he came into Port Nelson with his pumps working to their fullest capacity to keep her afloat. There was no accommodation ready for her in the way of docks, and all he could do was to run her ashore. That is what he did.

I feel diffident in detaining honourable gentlemen, but this book is absolutely full of such evidence. The report says that every witness agreed to the same thing, whereas what they agreed to was entirely different from the statement in the report. Our old friend Captain Bernier, I think, refers to this matter too. He says that the average season might be four months. Captain Bernier is the only one that I have read so far who spoke at all of four months; the rest of the witnesses mentioned three months.

There is a special point to which I desire to call your attention. The report makes this statement, which is, I think, not warranted by the facts:

Voyages have been made through the strait as early as the 5th of June.

That statement is made, as I understand it, on the strength of some testimony that is not contained in the book at all; it is the testimony which was given by one of the Tyrrell brothers. This Mr. Tyrrell had wintered at a place called Ashe Inlet, which is on Big Island, on the north coast of the Hudson strait. I believe it is about one-third of the way through. The testimony of Mr. Tyrrell is that he saw a Dundee whaler that had anchored in front of his place. He states that his harbour at the time was frozen absolutely solid, but in front of that the strait was clear, and this Dundee whaler entered there on the 5th day of June. He says that she left there the next day and went west. That is what he said—"went west"—and that is all he knew about her until she came back again in the autumn. Nobody knows what time she got into Hudson bay. Nobody knows—at all events, nobody has given testimony that she ever went into the bay at all. She was a whaler seeking whales.

Then there is another reference, on page 230, not to that vessel specially, but to what I call the June bugs. Mr. Bowden is describing the construction of a ship called the Diana. He says she was a sealer of extremely heavy construction:

He arrived off the eastern end of the straits on June 22—

That was in the month of June, but it was the 22nd—

—and had no difficulty in entering and passing the first third of this distance through the straits—

In other words, he got to exactly the same place on Big Island—Ashe Inlet—

—when he encountered ice with which he battled until July 10, most of the time being in mid-straits about the region of Big Island; after which he got free from the ice and got through to Mansell island on the 13th of July.

Commander Wakeham was sent in there to make as early a passage through as he possibly could—to see how early he could get through and how late in the fall he could come out. I have no doubt he got into this favourable stretch on the northern part of the strait, probably with a northern wind blowing the ice away. He got in so far, but no farther. That is how former vessels, whalers and others, often got that far in the early part of June. But that is entirely different from getting through the strait into the Hudson bay. So I say that the statement made in this report, that a vessel got through—mind you, that Dundee whaler must have got into Hudson bay on the 5th day of June to make this statement correct—is utterly absurd. But the statement is put in such a way as to be misleading in the extreme, and I for one object to having a statement like that put into a report as being taken from the evidence presented before our Committee. It is not so. No vessel ever got through at that date. There is no evidence in this report, nor, I believe, in any other report, to show that any vessel went through the strait, that is, into the bay, on the 5th June, or on any other day in June.

I think we may conclude, as I have already stated, that three months is about as long as you can depend upon navigation in that strait, and through the strait and to a Hudson bay port. The season will extend from August to perhaps the end of October. Very many clever suggestions were made with regard to ships getting through the strait with the aid of aeroplanes, hydroplanes, wireless, and all those things. The evidence given was that they would facilitate the passage of an individual ship here and there, but they could not possibly, in their nature, extend the time of navigation.

So much for that. Here is one sentence in the report with which I agree:

> The strait is also open for the greater part of the year and would probably be open all the time except for the ice which comes down late in the autumn from Fox channel.

That is as much as to say that if it had not been for the ice in the strait there would not be any there. That, I think, is correct.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is very clever.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Gospel truth.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Then the report expresses the opinion of the Committee that the Government would be well advised before spending any more money on the harbour works at Port Nelson to appoint a committee of engineers, builders, etc., to examine the route to Churchill. The majority of the Committee suggest that the work at Nelson be stopped, and at the same time that the railway be carried into Nelson, and that business be done with what is there now. As a matter of fact, you could not do any business with what is there now. Any business to be done would be the handling of grain, and it is utterly impossible to handle grain without an elevator. There is no elevator at Port Nelson. Still this Committee in cold blood suggests that the railway should be completed to Nelson but that no more work should be done there; that business should be done with what is there at present. The thing is utterly absurd to my mind—utterly absurd.

As to this Churchill-Nelson controversy, I must say I do not take very much interest in it. All the evidence given by the navigators—and they are, I suppose, really the best persons to judge—was to the effect that Churchill is more accessible in every way, and inside is a safer and better harbour, than Nelson. I think everybody will agree with that. But there must be some reason why the Government engineers chose Port Nelson in preference. Without delaying, as I could do, and intended to do, to give the statements of these engineers as to the reason why Port Nelson was chosen, I shall leave it to honourable members to read the evidence for themselves, and if they will vote for the amendment which I propose to make—

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: You might move the adjournment of the debate, if you want to enter into that question.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: With your permission, honourable gentlemen, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Until when?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Next week.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Well, next Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, that is too long a delay.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: This is a matter that ought to be disposed of this session. This is not a new subject at all, and the House is not taken by surprise; it is a matter that has been discussed in this House and in the House of Commons for the past forty years, to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I am ready to proceed at any time. I am only seeking the convenience of the members.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: To-morrow.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Thursday.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: We will say Thursday.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, may I ask what good purpose will be served by adjourning this debate? It will only prolong the discussion. It seems to me that if we take a respite, we shall start in again with renewed vigor.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: We have just to get all the ice out of the strait.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me it would be better to dispose of this question at once. If we are to go to Churchill let us go.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: In submarines.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But there is a very large amount of business before us. We have probably the most important business of the session now before us, and it would be very much better to clean everything off the Order Paper as we proceed, instead of dividing it up into sections to be dealt with on some other day, and giving renewed life to it. Personally I should like my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Daniel) to complete his remarks to-day.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Make it to-morrow, if we are not going on to-night.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Well, honourable gentlemen, if you want more of it, I shall have to give it to you.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I leave it to the House, but that is my opinion.

The motion for the adjournment of the debate was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I was commencing to say something about the controversy as between Churchill and Nelson. Personally I have no special interest in that matter at all. I stated that the engineers gave the reasons why the Government chose Nelson in preference to Churchill. For my part, I think the reasons given were very good, and they were deserving of the attention which they did receive at the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: Would the honourable gentleman be kind enough to state some of the reasons?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I am going to read them to you.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I should like to know what they were.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Here is one extract from the evidence of Mr. Bowden, the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals. He is speaking about the tenders for the building of the railway. Describing "tundra," he says:

I would apply the term to that character of country in which the moss is practically submerged in water—a small skin of moss overlaying a foot of semi-liquid peat which in turn rests upon perpetually frozen material that is chiefly water.

Q. To what depth?—A. A depth unknown. Mr. McLachlan made some investigations by digging pits to a depth of nine feet and never found the bottom. I do not know how far it goes.

By the Chairman:

Q. You were telling us to what extent you would have to build over this tundra?—A. There was another obvious factor determined that the construction to Churchill meant a longer line. So unless Churchill offered positive advantages there were good grounds for a preference for Nelson. Nelson had the obvious and positive advantage of being a shorter line.

By Mr. Campbell, M.P.:

Q. Would this be a good point at which to ask you how much shorter or how much longer?—A. It varied at different times, different surveys being pieced together from about a minimum of 67 to a maximum of 82 miles difference between the two.

By Hon. Mr. Daniel:

Q. From where would that be measured? Le Pas?—A. Yes. That is the difference between the length of the two lines. The same line would be used to a certain point on the route from which the branches would turn either to Nelson or to Churchill. At the time that report was published there was still some surveying to be done and the work was continued for several years later. The actual final determination as between Nelson and Churchill did not take place until the contract for section 3 of the Hudson Bay railway was let.

Now we come down to the final determination as to the port:

The call for tenders was made on alternative routes. The drawings exhibited showed a line to Churchill and showed a line to Nelson. The contractor was called upon to bid for each and it was not until the tenders for this work were received that the definite and positive decision was reached. Previous to that though there had been naturally a good deal of questioning as to what the Government's intentions were, and, in general, I think, pretty definite preference for Nelson had been shown before the contract was let, although the decision had not been at all final.

The call for tenders was issued in August.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: What year?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: 1912. Only a month was given for the preparation of estimates, and I expressed the opinion that that was a pretty short time. He said:

I don't think so. There were no features other than transportation to consider, and the contracts had been let for previous sections. Any contractors who purposed competing for the work would have had their representatives out looking over the character of the country long before they were called upon for tenders.

Now here is the point:

Our estimates showed the Nelson line to be about $3,000,000 cheaper than the Churchill line. The contractors' tenders made a still greater difference. The contractor's tender, extended, amounted to $3,668,000 and some hundreds for the line to Nelson, and $7,798,000 for the line to Churchill. At the same time, it was felt that although a very small development—such a very small one as would not justify the construction of the Hudson Bay railway—might be made at Churchill at a less cost than at Nelson, an adequate development would probably cost less at Nelson than at Churchill.

There, in a nutshell, I think, you have the reason why Nelson was chosen—that for a small business it would not be necessary to spend much money on Churchill, and it would be cheaper to go there, but for an adequate development, for a large business, it would cost more to provide facilities at Churchill even after you had the railway there, than to provide them at Nelson. There was also to be considered the additional length of railway, which would increase the cost of maintenance, because every additional mile of railway means additional expense. Now, I think that is the principle. He goes on to say:

In view of the difference in the tender costs there was a strong preference for Nelson. However it is on the economic side that Port Nelson has the chief advantage over Churchill; we were not building a harbour, we were building a port. The expenditure on the Hudson Bay system is not for the purpose of furnishing protection for vessels, but to get the grain overseas as cheaply as possible; and the extra length of line to Churchill, and the extra cost of maintenance, which is unquestionable, would offset a very considerable capital expenditure at Nelson. I am not at all sure that for 10,000,000 bushels development Churchill would not be cheaper than Nelson; but a large enough development, looking forward to the future, one that might take care of twenty-five or thirty million bushels, Port Nelson harbour terminals will cost less than terminals at Churchill. The railway, as shown by the tenders, has an advantage of $4,100,000; and the operating preference is all in favour of Nelson.

I think I have said sufficient with regard to that to show the reasons why Nelson was chosen and why Nelson should be retained. The cost of the undertaking thus far was given to us last year, up to the 31st of March, 1919, as $20,851,816. Of this, $14,526,560 is for the Hudson bay railway, and $6,125,256 is for the terminal at Port Nelson. The railway, as you know, is not completed. I think it requires about 90 miles to get into Nelson. The terminals at Nelson are not completed; I understand they could not be completed under about four years, supposing they had been gone on with. Under present conditions of scarcity and cost of labour, and everything in connection with the work, it is almost impossible to form anything like a near estimate of the expenditure that must be undertaken in the future even to get this port into a position to test it as to its commercial ability. I would not think it advisable, even in the interest of the undertaking itself and of those who are anxious to see it carried through, to have a break in it that would stop the business for an indefinite length of time, until engineers and railway men could go all over that country and locate a line and tell us how much it was going to cost. If I were a member from the Northwest, and anxious to see this railway put through, and the whole undertaking in operation, I would not vote for a clause like that. However, that is for those honourable gentlemen to decide for themselves; that is my own view.

Mr. McLachlan was another engineer who had charge; he was out there three years, and he is the one who undertook to examine the barren lands part, and he said in his evidence that in going over this line if you want to go to Churchill you have to go over thirty miles of this barren land. He describes the peat and moss in an interesting way. He says:

Mr. McLachlan: Here is a plan showing the country south of Churchill. There are many other plans, and better plans than this one. Just about 15 miles north of Port Nelson you run into what they call the barren lands. The barren lands are simply peat bogs; the only difference between them and peat bogs is—

The CHAIRMAN: There is no peat?

Mr. McLachlan: The only difference is that they are frozen, that is, they are frozen from a depth of about 20 inches from the surface down as far as you like to go.

By the Chairman:

Q. They never thaw out?—A. They never thaw out, and we do not know how deep that peat is, because we never dug a hole more than nine or ten feet deep. But we did dig a number of holes of that depth and brought out samples; we weighed them, thawed them out and weighed them again, and we found it consisted of ninety-five per cent water and five per cent peat.

Just listen to this:

It stinks even in a frozen condition. When I examined those barren lands, which I did in two places—once fifteen miles north of Nelson, once about thirty miles south of Churchill—I found a mat of moss on the top about eight inches thick. I think that fully two-thirds of it would be dead. Then underneath that mat of about eight inches of moss there would be a mixture of water and fibre for a depth of a foot. I think it would be nearly all water, but there would be just enough fibre to make it appear something like the stuff you see in the beater of a pulp mill. Underneath that the material below would feel like ice, but when you dug into it you would find it would be frozen peat.

And so he goes on to describe this, and he was there and examined personally, and knows exactly what he is speaking about. He goes on to say:

> The area that is covered by the barren lands extends practically all the way from fifteen miles north of Nelson clear up to within, I suppose, ten miles of Churchill.

That is one of the reasons probably, though of course I do not know, why the railway was sent to Nelson instead of Churchill. He says:

> Building a railway line to Churchill, I think, on the original location that was chosen by the people that ran it in 1908, you would cross about thirty miles——that is, of this stinking peat.

I might say that in opposition to all this there is the testimony of Mr. Tyrrell. Now, Mr. Tyrrell is not a civil engineer at all, but a mining engineer, and he made his trips through that country in the winter time, when everything was frozen solid and the country was covered with snow; yet on the strength of those trips then made he said, in contradiction of the remarks made by Mr. Bowden and Mr. McLachlan, which I have read, that there were some twenty inches of good moss growing in the gravelly soil in that country, and no trouble at all about building the railroad — statements that I can hardly understand. In fact, Mr. Bowden or Mr. McLachlan, in referring to this testimony, stated that there were a great many people up in that country in past years who made statements about the country on which he could not place the slightest reliance, and he characterized Mr. Tyrrell's evidence as of that kind. I could not see very well how he could go to that extreme, because we know that professional men are rather careful about statements they make about other professional men; but McLachlan had examined the stuff himself, while Tyrrell had only snow-shoed over it, I suppose, in the winter time, when everything was frozen, and he could not see anything under the snow. There is the difference in the evidence of the two men.

I think I already mentioned the futility of building this line to Nelson if the completion of the facilities is not proceeded with, because business could not be done there. On the other hand, if this learned Commission of engineers and railway men, after two years study, should bring in a report that it would be better to go to Churchill after all, then all that expenditure would be useless, and the 90 miles of railway to Nelson might be lost by having to be pulled up afterwards. So far as that suggestion is concerned, therefore, I must say I do not approve of it.

The Committee wind up with the recommendation that they—

> Submit herewith an extract in narrative form of the evidence given before the Committee, and beg to recommend that 1,000 copies of this report and the extract of the evidence be printed in pamphlet for for general distribution.

They ask that this report, and not the evidence that was taken, but their edition of the evidence, be printed. I object to that, and, as it is so near six o'clock, I will close by moving:

> That this report be not now adopted, but lie on the Table until such time as the members of the Senate are provided with a copy of the evidence as taken by the Committee on the Hudson bay railway.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I will second that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I beg to move the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow.

The debate was accordingly adjourned.

PICTOU HARBOUR BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 21, An Act respecting the Harbour of Pictou, Nova Scotia.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SITTINGS OF THE SENATE.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I suggest that we should meet at 2 o'clock hereafter, the same as the House of Commons, with a view of disposing of the business before us? I think it will be more desirable that we should meet at 2 o'clock rather than sit at night. Therefore, I would move, with the consent of the House, that when the Senate adjourns this afternoon it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and meet each day at 2 o'clock until further ordered.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Are we to understand from this that the leader of the Government thinks the end of the Session is near?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I may say to my honourable friend that it is within distance.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Wednesday, June 16, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill T4, an Act for the relief of Graziano Bertini.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill U4, an Act for the relief of William Henry Caswell.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill V4, an Act for the relief of John Covert.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill W4, an Act for the relief of Mary Ireland.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill X4, an Act for the relief of John Daniel Mills.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Y4, an Act for the relief of Joseph Aimé Wilfrid David.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

Bill Z4, an Act for the relief of Richard Simpson.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Senate go into Committee on Bill 53, an Act to amend The Civil Service Act, 1918, and the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919.

Hon. G. H. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to make a few remarks, which might or might not be in order when we went into Committee, regarding the outside service. If I am in order I would prefer to address myself to the House rather than to the Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend desires to make any remarks, I would prefer that he make them in Committee. I understood from a ruling given by the honourable the Speaker the other day that a member was not precluded from speaking on the principle of a Bill, even after the second reading. Of course, it is generally understood that under our rules the principle is discussed on the second reading, but my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) might be permitted to raise the question in Committee.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Of course it must be by consent of the House. My ruling the other day was that there might be a discussion regarding the principle of the Bill on the motion to go into Committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER: This Bill does not touch the principle of the Civil Service Act at all; it is simply a Bill to make modifications in certain clauses of the Act, and does not affect the principle, on which, I think, the honourable gentleman from Selkirk purposes addressing the House. As I look at it, there is nothing in this Bill which deals with the appointment of civil servants or their promotion, and, as I understand, these are the subjects which the honourable gentleman from Selkirk intends to discuss. My view is that they do not come within the rule which His Honour laid down the other day, because this Bill does not affect the principle of the Act at all.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: May I be permitted to explain? The honourable gentleman from Halifax has anticipated, or thinks he has anticipated, what I was going to say. My desire is to refer to a matter that affects the county that I once had the honour of representing, and this is, I presume, the only opportunity I shall have of referring to it. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the manner in which appointments are made in connection with some of the works in that constituency, and as this is the only Bill which will give me any right to address the House on the question, perhaps the honourable leader of the House will agree to my discussing it now.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Go on.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, the Bill that is before the House, providing for certain amendments to the Civil Service Act, gives us an opportunity of expressing our opinion on different phases of that Act. I desire to take up just a few moments in calling the attention of the House to the scheme outlined for the reorganization of the Civil Service of Canada. The Civil Service question has been mooted for years. Every honourable gentleman who knows anything about the organization of the service, especially here in Ottawa, has felt that it was overmanned. It is remarkable that, in face of that indisputable fact, thousands of appointments have been made to the service during the last two or three years. Notwithstanding the object lesson that we have before us in the classification made by the American experts, so-called, the Government now proposes, I am told, to bring back practically the same men under a different name. That would be a joke if it were not worse. I contend, honourable gentlemen, that the day has arrived when a thorough reorganization of the service should take place; but I submit that it is within the knowledge of every honourable gentlemen in this House that we have men in Canada competent to do the work. We have the great Canadian Pacific railway with its wonderful organization and its efficiency men who come from that service—men who have made that service one of the finest official services in the world. If the Government decided not to employ men in the Departments to make the reorganization, why could not they ask the Canadian Pacific railway to loan them two or three of their efficiency experts. Would it be asking too much to ask the Bank of Montreal or the Bank of Commerce, those great financial institutions which have to keep their staffs at the highest point of efficiency, to lend the Government one or two experts to accomplish this much desired work? I believe that in that way we could secure a Board that could accomplish the organization in a manner much more satisfactory to the country for one-tenth the sum that we would have to pay to these American so-called experts. Before leaving that point I would like to emphasize this fact. While there is a great deal of stress laid upon the inefficiency of our present service, I have never heard any man get up and try to place the responsibility where it belonged. If you want efficiency, you must have efficiency at the head; and if you have deputy ministers in the Service who are incompetent to control and regulate their departments, how in the world are you going to get an efficient service? I submit, honourable gentlemen, that when this reorganization takes place it should start among the deputies. We should see that we have in each department a thoroughly competent and efficient deputy minister, and we should make him responsible for the efficiency of his department, and the officials of his department should be amenable to him. You cannot have efficiency in a great department if you rob the deputy of authority. If he cannot retard or advance a man in his promotion, what is the result? The result is that the staff has no respect for or fear of the deputy. I trust that when this reorganization is undertaken it will be handled by a competent Canadian Board that will be well qualified to carry out the work. I am satisfied that we could go into some of the departments and with chiefs from different branches accomplish an organization that would be a credit not only to them but to the Government. If the Government fears that there would be favouritism if that were done, let them get Canadian experts from outside the Service to carry out this work, and not bring in these American experts to bedevil the Service as they have bedevilled the classification.

In this connection, I desire to call the attention of the House to an editorial published in the Winnipeg Telegram on May 5th. It will give the House some idea of how our outside service is handled under the present system. This editorial is headed, "Dominion Sweat Machine." It says:

> The Dominion government has advised the secretary of the Imperial Veterans in this city that it has two positions as lockmen at St. Andrew's Lock and Dam to offer returned soldiers, and the terms of labor and rate of pay are stated by the district engineer of the Dominion department of Public Works.
>
> The wages, set by the Dominion Civil Service Commission for each of these positions is sixty dollars per month.
>
> The men are required to work alternate weeks by day and night, the length of the working day being twelve hours.
>
> The duties outlined are: Opening and closing lock gates; handling lines of vessels going through the locks; maintaining and lighting navigation lights; cleaning grounds and locks; standing watch for approaching vessels; opening and closing sluices controlling the height of water in the upper canal.
>
> The qualifications required of each holder of these positions are: Primary school education; some knowledge of machinery; some knowledge of navigation regulations in regard to canal traffic; in some cases ability to speak both English and French; good sight and hearing.
>
> Sixty dollars a month is offered as pay by the Dominion Government to the returned soldier possessing these qualifications to perform these duties for twelve hours a day or night.

It is not offered by the Dominion Government: it is offered by the Commission.

> In these times under the present stress of living and the high cost of everything, this offer is nothing less than a public scandal. It is the methods of the sweat shop which people thought went out of existence a decade ago. The Civil Service commission should be made explain how it dare demand such work from men so qualified at a wage so inordinately out of all proportion to the ordinary living requirements of the day.
>
> It is hoped that, if only in the interests of the returned soldiers the Winnipeg members of Parliament will regard it as their bounden duty to bring this scandal to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. Either his department or the Civil Service commission needs very immediate and very great enlightenment upon that common justice which is the due of the Dominion's laborers, whether they be returned soldiers or any others.

No man with a family can live in decency on a wage of sixty dollars a month and give twelve hours work in daily return.

I desire to emphasize that article, if it needs emphasizing. This work happens to be in my own old county, and I understand every phase of it. The pre-war wage for that work was $75 a month, and in the face of the increased cost of living they offer these men $60 a month, when they should receive at least $90 a month. To my mind it is absolutely absurd, and I cannot understand why the Civil Service Commission should undertake to endeavour to secure men to perform this very important duty at such wages.

Now, honourable gentlemen, let me tell you in just a few words what this work is. St. Andrew's dam and lock is a work that cost this country close to $2,000,000. It was undertaken by the late Government and was almost completed by them before they went out of office. It is one of the finest pieces of engineering on this continent; in fact, I understand that there is only one other work like it on the continent. The machinery in connection with the work is very intricate. The gates are lowered and raised by means of electricity. The men employed there must be competent, sober, industrious and trustworthy. One careless move could easily destroy thousands of dollars worth of public property. In view of that fact you will realize the importance of securing efficient help; and to offer men $60 a month to work twelve hours a day in performing this important work is, as the editorial says, little short of a public scandal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is that wage based on the new Classification?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I presume so. The advertisement of the Civil Service Commission appeared only on May 5th, under the new Classification. Those who have given any study to the Classification will realize the absolute absurdity of it. The men who came here to classify this great service were absolutely at sea in regard to many positions. There are many men in this House who have had much to do with managing work of different kinds and taking charge of men; and they must realize that if the man charged with the conduct of any work has not something to say about the men placed under him, he cannot be expected to successfully conduct that work. The only man who could with any degree of success select these men for the locks and control this work is the superintendent of the works. I represented that county, and I would not have taken the responsibility of putting a man on that work without the consent of the superintendent, because I realized the very great importance of the position and the fact that a man so appointed might be the cause of serious damage and loss to the country. Ever since that lock and dam were built, even during the days when patronage was supposed to belong to members of Parliament, the superintendent has chosen his own men; and up to the present time he has made a great success of the position which he has occupied.

In this connection I want to draw the attention of the Government to the fact—I do not know whether it is worth while drawing the attention of the Commission to it—that the Superintendent of that great work, before the Classification was made, was receiving a salary of $1,800 a year and a free house. When the gentlemen entrusted with the Classification came on the scene, without ever seeing the work, or without knowing anything at all about it, they fixed his maximum salary at $1,800, or exactly what he has been getting for some years. I submit, honourable gentlemen, that the maximum salary of the superintendent of that work ought to be not less than $2,500, and the salary of his assistant ought to be not less than $2,100, or $2,200. These two men control this very valuable work, and they should be placed in a position to render good service to the country without serious sacrifice to themselves. My main complaint is this, however, that no group of men situated in Ottawa is competent to choose the men to be employed on works of this kind. They cannot know the facts. That is absolutely impossible. The idea of advertising for labouring men is absurd. If a man left that lock to-morrow the superintendent would have to send word to the resident engineer at Winnipeg, and would have to wait until he got instructions to employ a man. What I have said, honourable gentlemen, applies to public works all through the western provinces, and I suppose to works in all parts of the Dominion. The town of Selkirk is the headquarters of four or five dredges. They require from 100 to 150 men every spring. Since this Classification came into effect the superintendent there has had no authority to engage one man. They are all obtained by means of advertising and those employing them do not know whom they are picking out. The consequence is that the crews on many of those dredges must be away below the mark; the dredges cannot perform the work that they used to perform; they are endangered by the incompetency of some of these men, and the whole efficiency of the public service is very much impaired.

In view of these facts, I submit that something ought to be done, and done at once, to take the outside service from under the authority of the present Civil Service Commission. I have not one word to say against that Commission. I believe the Commissioners have more work than they can possibly perform. If they were given only the Ottawa situation to deal with and to reorganize, they would still have their hands full; but to load on top of that all the work in connection with the outside service of Canada is to my mind absolutely absurd, and under such conditions we cannot expect them to discharge their work in a manner that will result in anything like efficient service. Now, honourable gentlemen, this is a serious question. It is not a question of removing patronage. They talk of taking patronage away from the members. At one time we had 230 members from all over the Dominion, and patronage was largely in their hands, but an agitation arose to take the patronage away, as it was said that patronage was a great crime; and what did they do with it? They placed it in the hands of three or four men. They have not done away with patronage; they have simply transferred it from the members who were legitimately authorized to deal with it, who were elected as representatives; but under the present system those men are brushed aside, and are practically told: "You don't know anything about your county; these four or five men sitting in Ottawa will pick out those men for you." I say the thing is absurd, and absolutely impracticable in the best interest of the country; and I have no hesitation in adding that under the present system it will cost the country hundreds of thousands of dollars more to carry on the outside service than it would under the old system. In view of these facts I say that something ought to be done to rectify the situation. I know it is not a very popular thing for a man to air his opinions as I am doing, but I do so in the best interests of the country. I believe I know the facts that I am stating, and their absolute truth; and I am sure I am not the only one, for the members of the House of Commons and Ministers of the Government must know that the present system is absolutely impracticable and not in the best interests of the country. I would like to emphasize the fact that if there is going to be any efficiency there must be responsibility by chiefs who are placed in charge of this great outside organization. Those men must be trusted officials, and must be given absolute control over their men. I am told that such a situation has developed in Manitoba that employees, realizing that the superintendent has nothing to do with their employment and cannot dismiss them without first getting authority to do so, pay no respect to their superiors because they fail to exercise the control that they should have over their men. It is impossible that they should do that unless the Government places them in a position to employ every man who goes on their work. The only practicable method is for the superintendents of those great works to be made responsible for the help that they require.

Hon. Mr. POWER: While I think that the course of the honourable gentleman who has brought up this important matter should have been to give notice of an independent motion, because there is nothing in the Bill before us which deals with the question he has so vigorously put before the House, on the whole I am greatly in accord with the honourable gentleman in what he has said with respect to the works he has mentioned. Already on more than one occasion I have expressed my disapproval of the action of the Government in putting the reconstruction or reorganization of our Civil Service into the hands of a Chicago commercial concern. My view has always been that a Minister, three or four deputy ministers, and perhaps some other members of the Civil Service, with a couple of clear-headed business men from outside, would have brought about, at an almost infinitesimal cost, much more satisfactory results, and more promptly, than those accomplished. After putting in two or three years, I do not remember which, in allowing the Chicago gentlemen to deal with the question, we are now asked to hand over the further development of this reorganization to an American concern headed by a gentleman with a very German name. I think that is an unfortunate thing. I am satisfied that if the matter were handed over to our own officers they would in a very short time produce a much more satisfactory result at a much less expenditure than will arise in connection with the employment of this German concern.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The honourable gentleman from Selkirk has dealt with a certain phase of this situation, and I do not propose to follow up exactly what he said, but I congratulate him on bringing the matter to the attention of the House. The honourable gentleman has criticized the action of the Civil Service Commission and the working out of the Act of 1919. Of course, that Act, even to-day, is still somewhat on its trial. But I want to draw the attention of the House to the position at the present time as I see it. On Monday last the Montreal Gazette had a leading article on this whole question of the present action with regard to the organization of the Civil Service and the employment of this firm from Chicago. In that leading article reference was made to an order-in-council passed by the present Government, under which, as I understand, that reorganization is to be entered upon. I find that that Order in Council was published in the Ottawa Journal on the 9th of June, and for the benefit of the House I desire to read it. The honourable Minister of Labour is, I think, one of the members of the Government who is mentioned in the Order in Council, and if this copy from the Ottawa Journal is not absolutely correct he will be able to tell the House any way in which it is incorrect. The Order in Council, as reprinted in the Journal, reads:

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 28th May, 1920, from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, submitting as follows:

The contract made with Arthur Young and Company by the Civil Service Commission is about to expire, and the work therein contracted for has been very nearly completed. This work included the production of a system of classification of the Civil Service, and the reorganization of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. The question now arises as to whether or not the work of organizing other departments of the public service shall be proceeded with.

The matter has been discussed by a small committee consisting of Sir George Foster, the Hon. J. A. Calder, the Hon. N. W. Rowell, the Right Hon. A. L. Sifton, and the Hon. M. Burrell, which has given careful consideration to the work already done, and more especially as regards the reorganization made in the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. Arthur Young and Company have transferred to Griffenhagen and Associates, Limited, that branch of their work which especially has to do with the reorgnization of municipal and governmental civil service and the organization of business corporations in respect to staff organization, and plan work of the Arthur Young Company upon the same plans and with the same efficiency as the original company, and is prepared to continue the reorganization of the Public departments of the Government along the lines pursued in the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. The committee referred to has no hesitation in commending in the strongest possible way the work of Arthur Young and Company in connection with the reorganization of the Department of Public Printing.

As a result a total saving in labor alone of $500,000 per year has been made, which during the next year will be increased by an additional $200,000, making a total saving of $700,000 a year in that establishment alone, with the result that a larger output and a more efficient product per man and per machine has been attained under the reduction effected. The company itself, basing its statement upon its previous experience, and the work actually accomplished in the Department of Public Printing, is of the opinion that many millions of dollars can be saved in the operation of the Government departments by an application of up-to-date and scientific principles of organization and operation.

The committee, after careful consideration, is of the opinion that a very substantial saving, together with much more efficient and orderly work, would result from the reorganization of Government departments on the lines pursued by that company. They are of opinion that the services of Griffenhagen and Associates, Limited, should be retained, and that the reorganization of the departments at Ottawa should be proceeded with, taking up for commencement the two Departments of Post Office and Customs, the former of which has some 24,000 employees and the latter some 4,000 odd.

The company is of the opinion, and the committee sees no reason for disagreeing therewith, that commencing the reorganization of these two departments, savings will begin to be realized gradually after two or three months of work, which in the end, in respect to the Post Office Department, may well reach many hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, with proportionate saving in the Customs Department, and the committee believes that based upon the results already obtained, and the expenditure already made in respect to the classification of the whole Civil Service, and the reorganization of the one branch which has now been nearly completed, it is wise, if not imperative, that the work shall be carried on and the benefits extended gradually to the other departments. They therefore recommend that the services of the above named Company be retained, and that they proceed to reorganize the two departments mentioned above, and that, whilst engaged in that work, they also make their observations and examinations with a view to preparing a general plan for the reorganization of the departments as a whole, which may, at the option of the Government, be undertaken and carried out.

It is thought also, that under the circumstances, the company's operations should be carried out under the supervision of and in connection with a committee of the Cabinet in order that quicker despatch may be had than would be attainable if they worked under the supervision and direction of the Civil Service Commission. Besides the work already pressing upon the Civil Service Commission in carrying out the classification of the service is quite as much as they are able to handle with efficiency and despatch.

The staff that would be necessary in order to carry out the above programme would consist of seven principal experts and four associates of the company. These would work on the general organization referred to above, with one principal and one associate on the plan of accounting and financial control, which would be applicable to all the departments, with one principal and one associate; which would also be applicable to all departments; two principals and one associate for the organization and system of the Post Office Department; and two principals for the organization and system of the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue; these making up the total above referred to.

Associated with and under the supervision of these experts the departments would be asked to furnish some members of its staff who have a knowledge of the constitution and technique of the department, who would work in conjunction with the experts and in the course of the work would not only give clerical assistance to the experts, but would themselves acquire a knowledges of the methods and plans which would enable them afterwards to undertake a large part of the organization work of the future and render it unnecessary to have a large amount of expert work for future operations.

The company would be prepared to organize and commence their work on June 1, and they have submitted to the committee a statement of the expenses which would be incurred in respect to the work above mentioned. The committee are strongly of the opinion that the work outlined above should be undertaken at once and carried to completion, leaving the matter of further reorganization for future consideration and action.

As to the costs of the above work carried on with the staff indicated therein, the charges would be $10,000 per month, including all fees and charges, except actual travelling expenses, based on the assumption that the work would cover at least a period of not less than twelve months, that the Government would furnish office facilities and supplies and clerical help, and that the company would be reimbursed for the actual out-of-pocket and subsistence travelling expenses incurred by members of the staff in travelling to and from Ottawa and from point to point outside of Ottawa as rendered necessary in connection with their work on the Post Office and Customs Departments. The above estimate as compared with the unit charges, for the Printing Bureau work, is from ten to fifteen per cent, lower.

The minister therefore recommends that a contract be entered into with Griffenhagen and Associates, Limited, for the above mentioned work and on the terms as indicated therein, and that a committee of ministers consisting of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the President of the Privy Council, the Minister of Labor and the Minister of Immigration and Colonization, be appointed to oversee and direct the preparation of the contract and the execution of the work herein provided for.

What I want to point out to the House is that when we passed the Act establishing the Civil Service Commission, and gave them the powers of classification and reorganization of the departments, we assumed that the work was going to be handed over to that Commission. This Order in Council, however, would lead me to think that the Government have come to the conclusion that the Civil Service Commission is either not doing its duty or is not able to perfom all its work, and therefore the Government have appointed this Committee of the Privy Council, outside of the Civil Service Commission, to deal with the question of the reorganization of the departments. What was held out to the country was that the Civil Service Commission was to be a body absolutely independent of all party patronage, and that the members of the Commission were to be in the same position as judges, removable only by Parliament. Whether or not the work that the Civil Service Commission has been doing has been unsatisfactory to the Government I am not in a position to say; probably the honourable Minister of Labour can give us the information; but is seems that now the Government have practically superseded the Civil Service Commission with respect to this question of reorganization and are taking the work entirely out of their hands. I would judge, from this Order in Council, that the Civil Service Commission is not in any way responsible for the employment of Griffenhagen and Associates, Limited, and that the reorganization of the departments is to be carried on absolutely independently of that Commission. I thought it was right to bring this to the attention of the House in order that the present position of the matter might be understood. I noticed the other day that the honourable Minister of Labour, when speaking on the second reading of this Bill, drew a distinction between this question of reorganization and that of classification. The Civil Service Commission apparently have carried out a classification, but the reorganization is to be handled by this Committee independently of the Commission.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Did I understand from the Order in Council that was read by my honourable friend that those experts had effected a saving of $500,000 a year, and would possibly save a further $200,000?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Order in Council says:

As a result a total saving in labor alone of $500,000 per year has been made, which during the next year will be increased by an additional $200,000, making a total saving of $700,000 a year in that establishment alone.

That refers to the Department of Public Printing. That apparently was done by the reorganization made by the Arthur Young Company under the direction of the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: As I understand the matter, honourable gentlemen, that was not done by the Arthur Young Company at all. A commission was appointed a couple of years ago to investigate the Printing Bureau and make a report. That commission, composed of two or three Canadians, made a thorough investigation and showed in its report where great saving could be effected. It is the carrying out of that commission's recommendations that has effected the saving; and that commission has cost the Government very little. My understanding is that the work was not done by the Arthur Young Company at all, or that if they did any work they were just going over the same ground that had been covered by the first commission.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Was not that a commission appointed on motion of the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Dennis)?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No; it was, I understand, a commission of master printers. I brought up the matter in the Senate about two sessions ago. It is the carrying out of the recommendations made by that commission that is saving the country $500,00, which is likely to be increased by $200,000 additional, and has resulted in the dismissal of about 400 persons who were not needed at the Bureau, and in many other changes. So, to my mind, credit for this cannot be given to the Arthur Young Company.

Hon. R. DANDURAND: Up to this moment I have been under the impression that a committee of printers and journalists —I know there was one journalist on it— had made the inquiry into the Printing Bureau; but we are now informed officially by a report from Council that this is not so, but that it is the American company that has done the work. Between the official statement of the Government of the country and the impression which I have gathered from reading the newspapers I am somewhat at sea. Until I receive further light I can hardly contradict a statement made in an official document.

But I do not rise to discuss that point in particular. My purpose is to answer my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury), who suggests that we retrace our steps and withdraw the outside service from the control of the Civil Service Commission. He makes that suggestion because he believes that the members of Parliament, who have heretofore had control of the patronage in their respective constituencies, could perform that function with advantage to the country better than the present Civil Service Commission. I am not inclined to agree with my honourable friend's argument or to accept his conclusions. We have been clamoring for a number of years for an independent administration of the Civil Service of this country in order that it might have properly qualified employees and staffs. Its administration has been made independent. It may be that in the working out of the new system it will be found necessary to make amendments whereby the heads of departments shall have a say and shall play a part. That may be; but I am not disposed to think that the present system, which is only in its beginnings, should be abandoned, and that we should revert to the old system. If we did revert to the old system my honourable friend would recognize, I think, that the heads of departments had no more control over their staff under that system than they have now. Appointments were made on the recommendation of the members supporting the Government of the day, and the persons so appointed felt that the political influence behind them made them somewhat independent of their chiefs.

I want to draw the attention of my honourable friends to a situation which existed in the large towns and cities and which created considerable of an abuse. There are in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg large offices manned by a large staff. In Montreal, for instance, there are the Customs, the Post Office, and the Excise office. The members of Parliament for such districts were hounded from morning till night by people who wanted situations for friends who could not earn their own living. The persons who obtained the appointments were those who could command the greatest political influence in the ward or constituency. Occasionally there was appointed a man who rendered efficient service, but at other times men were appointed who were absolutely incompetent. This took place chiefly in cities of large population, and I can testify that the representatives of those districts were unable to discharge effectively their duties as members of Parliament, because their time was taken up mainly in meeting the hundreds of persons who wanted appointments or in meeting the relatives and friends of disappointed office seekers. The result was that great efforts were constantly being made to increase the staff.

When an administration which had been for some time in office was replaced by another, the gates were forced open and hundreds of new appointments were made. I will not refer to 1896. There may have been at that time an opening of the gates. I cannot say. It is for my friends on the other side to look into the record of that time, and if they find that the gates were thrown open as wide as in 1911, that will simply strengthen my argument. I do not believe that the gates were opened as wide in 1896 as in 1911. In 1912 hundreds of new appointments were made in the Montreal post office. Perhaps the same thing happened in Toronto. I know that numbers of appointments were made in the Customs—

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does my honourable friend not know that since the reclassification under the new Civil Service Act the gates have been thrown wide open?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If that were the case it would simply prove that greater safeguards must be employed and we should direct all our attention and efforts to increasing the safeguards. But I remember the old system. When I speak from the point of view of Montreal I may be answered, "That is only one place," but it must be remembered, honourable gentlemen, that there are between 700,000 and 1,000,000 people in that district, and if you add a similar number in the district of Toronto and the population in the other large cities, you quickly reach a figure equal to one-third of the population of the country. The state of things became deplorable. One-third of the members of Parliament when they were at home were hounded from morning till night, and when they were in Ottawa they had no time to read Bills, but had to run from one department to another, or from one minister to another, in order that they might bring back on the following Saturday answers which would be agreeable to a few of the applicants.

We felt that in order to have an efficient Civil Service it must be removed from political influence. A change has taken place. Should we now declare, before trying the new system and endeavouring to improve it if possible, that we must revert to the old system? I am not in favour of a return to the old system until we see if the present one is not to be in the best interests of Canada.

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER: The honourable member from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) labours under the disadvantage of never having been a direct representative of the people; consequently his view of the responsibilities of a man in that position, and the manner in which such a man carries out those responsibilities, is somewhat distorted. I have had many years' experience as a representative of the people, and to my mind there is nothing which so militates against a member in his constituency as to recommend to office a person unfitted for the position.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend represented a rural constituency, which has far less patronage than a city.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But the same thing is true in proportion. The eyes of the whole constituency are on the member as to the course he shall pursue and the judgment he shall exercise in the selection of the persons for recommendation to those positions that may become vacant from time to time. As any honourable gentleman who has had experience knows, it is not so much the line of conduct which he has pursued in Parliament that governs his fate in the next election as the recommendations he has made for appointments to office in his constituency. That may be all right; that may be all wrong.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What about those he has not recommended?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How do you mean?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Suppose there are half a dozen applicants who have not been appointed

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am speaking, not of the disappointed candidate for office, but of the mass of the voters, who know whether the man whom the member has chosen and recommended is the best man or not. I disregard altogether the disappointed office-seeker, who, after having been turned down, may or may not be in accord with the member. I am speaking of the mass of the voters, who judge of a man's fitness as their representative by his ability to choose the right men for positions that have to be filled. It is impossible for anybody sitting in a chair in Ottawa, without making some inquiry, to select a person suitable for a position in the outside service in any county in Canada. Therefore the Civil Service Commission, not knowing the people, must depend upon somebody for their information. From whom do they get their information? Who is so well qualified to give that information as the man who represents the constituency in Parliament, and who, at least if he is on his job, knows almost everybody in the constituency? It seems to me there can be no possible question with regard to that. I say it is an insult to the representatives of the people in Parliament to take away from them the right of patronage. And I say that there have never been as many scandals—if they may be called scandals—in connection with appointments or promotions when patronage has been in the hands of the representatives of the people as when it has not been; and the character of the men appointed to office under the former system will compare very favourably with the character of the men appointed at the present time.

Another thing. Patronage being in the hands of the representatives of the people, it made men who were ambitious to attain public position take an active part in the political affairs of the county in which they happened to live. Is not that a healthy thing for the public? Is it not a good thing that the young and rising generation shall take an interest, a strong personal interest, in the choice of their representatives in Parliament and in the affairs of the country? I say no man is worthy of citizenship in this country who does not take an active interest in politics. In order to incite this interest, the reward of office, of a position of some kind in the public service, if a man had a leaning that way, was open to him. That is a horrible thing, it seems, with regard to political matters, but that is all right with regard to every other matter. In education we offer prizes and medals of all sorts. In the war there were prizes and medals for the men to win. Yet in politics prizes or rewards are a crime, a scandal, a shame, according to certain persons. How shall I describe them? I scarcely know a suitable word in the English language—and I have some familiarity with it—to express my contempt for that class of reformer who would so reform politics as to take away the responsibility of members of Parliament. They would place that responsibility in the hands of a Commission, who certainly have not received any divine inspiration making them more capable of controlling these matters, or selecting persons suitable for appointment, than the men who are familiar with all the circumstances of the case.

I am opposed to this whole thing, root and branch. I am opposed to the Civil Service Commission, and, as the honourable member for Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) has said, I would be glad to see a return to the old system. I believe my honourable friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) is honest about this matter and wishes to see the best thing done with regard to it; but he is mistaken. I wish that before he entered this sacred Chamber he had had a baptism, as we might call it, in the other House. Then he would have understood better the whole matter, and I am satisfied that with his ability in this respect he would have taken an altogether different view. I can understand that in a city constituency there would be a considerable amount of work thrown upon the representative; that, particularly in hard times, when other work was scarce and considerable Government work was going on, there would be pressure put upon the member by persons in his constituency desiring to get jobs upon that Government work. But, after all, most of the Government work is done by contract, and that, it seems to me, would relieve the member considerably. Regarding other positions there would be some strain, but the honour of representing a great city, or part of a great city, like Montreal, the leading commercial city in Canada, ought to be sufficient to compensate anyone for a considerable amount of labour expended in looking after the interests of the voters. The strain upon members of Parliament did not, in my opinion, warrant the changing of the system as has been done in this case. I do not like to criticise the Government of the day, for it is a much better Government than anything we might expect to get from the other side—and that is a sad thing to have to say.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What side?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Any side.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What is the other side?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Any side. It is the best thing in sight. But it seems to have its ear to the ground more for a certain type of moral and social reformer than for the common-sense business men of the country; and I regret that that is the case. Honourable gentlemen, I do not wish to take up more time; I shall only say that I should like to see a reversion to the old system of patronage in the hands of the members of the House of Commons, not in the hands of the members of the Senate, because we are not supposed to have patronage; and I am very glad it is so, because it is not a very pleasant thing to administer.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, whilst I thoroughly agree with my honourable friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) that this is hardly a subject for discussion under this Bill, as it does not seem to me to be germane to it, nevertheless, as the discussion has gone on, and as it is quite possible that honourable gentlemen may not again have an opportunity of putting themselves on record in regard to the subjects discussed, I think I owe it to myself to rise and voice my protest against the action of the Government. My proposition is that the reorganization and classification was the work of the Government or of the Civil Service Commission. Above all, it should not have been handed over to people who are not citizens of this country and who have no responsibility to the people of this country. Although they are probably thoroughly honest men, they are foreigners. To-day the very ugly and frightening hint is being thrown out—I do not know what is in it—that some of those foreigners are Germans. Are we to-day faced with the fact that Germans are going to reorganize the whole civil administration of this country? Are we going to run the risk of putting it in their hands to work all sorts of mischief in this country for an almost indefinite period? Frankly, I may say that I am appalled at the situation which is hinted at.

When it comes to discussing patronage I must confess that I fear that I cannot do so with very great moderation or even patience. During the twelve best years of my life I had such a taste of it in the city of Ottawa that I fear I am prejudiced.

I rose to utter my strong protest against what the Government have done, and particularly against what they now propose doing. In the past I have not criticized the asking of advice from these foreigners; but when I see the organization of the whole Civil Service about to be placed in their hands, not only for a moment or a day, but probably indefinitely, I am amazed. These gentlemen from the republic to the south of us have been consulted for two or three years past, and in future if anything goes wrong they will have to be called in to see whether their recommendations are being carried out, and if not where the trouble is—whether it caused by some defect in the system recommended or because the system is not properly administered. We are therefore faced with the possibility of having our Civil Service indefinitely in the hands of foreigners, and possibly Germans at that.

There is another thing which worries me terribly, and that is the confession by the Government—especially after the example of efficiency and courage and determination and willingness to face great dangers and grave responsibilities during the war—that there is nobody in this country that can put our Civil Service on a proper basis, and that we must therefore call in gentlemen living in the republic next to us to do the work for us. That is a confession of incompetency and weakness, or a shirking of duty, of which I am pleased to say Canada has given very few examples. I am ashamed to think of what the Yankees will say. They are saying to-day that we had to call them in to put our house in order. It is amazing to think that this has been done, not by Liberal rebels and traitors, as we were charged with being when we proposed the Reciprocity Treaty in 1911; but by the very men who, from one end of the country to the other, were shouting: "No truck nor trade with the Yankees." This Government since coming into power has rushed to Washington at every opportunity without the slightest provocation; and I say that this example of incompetency and weakness—I almost said imbecility—on the part of the gentlemen who a few years ago were shouting that cry in calling these men to their assistance, is marvellous. I do not know which is the most to be wondered at—the audacity of the Government in doing it, or the inconsistency of the people supporting that Government. I am very much disturbed over the future of this country, when measures of this kind can pass through both Houses of Parliament and receive so little attention from the people of Canada. But, after all, when we had the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk railway deals palmed off on us, I do not suppose we should marvel at anything. Any Government that could put those deals through can put through this reorganization of the Civil Service. It seems to me that there is an indifference or a want of interest in public affairs in Canada which is a very bad omen for the future of the country. If the people of Canada will not rise in their might and tell the Government that the time has come when they must stop doing these foolish things, I do not know what will happen. As I said in opening, I rose to voice my protest; and I cannot make it any too solemn.

With regard to patronage, I can hardly speak with moderation. For twelve of the best years of my life I was a member of Parliament for this city. During that period, every day, from the time I got up in the morning until I got into bed at night, I had no rest. I have frequently left my office a few minutes before 3 o'clock to walk up to Parliament, which occupies five minutes or so, and on many occasions I did not arrive at the building until the House was about to adjourn at 6 o'clock. I could tell you something, honourable gentlemen, of what it means to be a member for this city, and yet I did no good to anybody. I spent twelve years of my life scrubbing the floor and washing the dishes, politically speaking, and did no good to anybody. I had no opportunity of attending the sittings of the House or the meetings of Committees of which I was a member, for I was seldom allowed to sit in my seat or attend a Committee. That, honourable gentlemen, will give you some idea of my views on patronage. I am one of those who welcomed the establishment of the Civil Service Commission, and to-day I am sorry to see this Commission shorn of its powers and the means of doing the service it is called upon to render, a service which I have no doubt it could render if it were left alone and not worried and bothered by foreigners who know nothing of the situation. What position is the Civil Service Commission going to be in hereafter? Without any responsibility at all, they are going to be called upon to put into effect a Classification and to carry it on. They are going to be called upon to execute plans formulated by someone else; but they are to have no direction or control.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What the honourable gentleman has said is not true of the Classification. The Civil Service Commission appointed the men to make the Classification. This is simply a reorganization. It is just as bad from the standpoint of nationality.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The two things are so intimately related that you cannot separate them. The Classification has everything to do with the Civil Service. It must be made upon a scientific basis; there must be some scientific principle at the bottom of it. The Commission will be bound by the principles laid down in the Classification, and I leave it to you, honourable gentlemen, to say with what interest, with what willingness, they will put into effect a Classification with which they have had nothing to do. The whole thing is absolutely wrong, and I am amazed that the Government should have done this thing. It seems to me almost incredible. I sometimes have to ask myself if it is really so that any Government could put through a measure of that kind and stick to it. I think the Government owes it to the country to drop these foreigners. Their work is not going to satisfy anybody, and it is going to destroy the efficiency of the Civil Service. If the Government will listen to what is being said, not only in Parliament but on the streets throughout the cities of this country, it will drop these gentlemen from the other side as quickly as possible.

Hon. GIDEON ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, the remarks and inquiries made by the honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock) merit a reply, and the observations of the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) also call for an answer. While I agree that the subject discussed by the two honourable gentlemen mentioned does not properly come into the discussion of this Bill, probably the House will permit me to occupy a few minutes in attempting to straighten out what appears to be a serious misapprehension in the minds of some honourable gentlemen as to what is contemplated in this proposed reorganization of the Civil Service.

May I repeat what I said the other day respecting the distinct cleavage between the terms "Classification" and "Reorganization." The honourable gentleman from Ottawa a moment ago properly referred to the necessity of a classification of civil servants being based upon some principle. For many years, perhaps ever since Confederation that principle has been length of service: the longer a man was in the Service the more annual increases he received in salary, and in consequence his salary increased with length of service, regardless of his qualifications and abilities. The result was that aged and infirm and crippled and incompetent civil servants were receiving the highest salaries, whereas the young, virile, competent men, the men who were doing the work, were receiving perhaps half what others received for doing nothing. That evidently was not a proper or just principle upon which to base the classification of civil servants; therefore an investigation was ordered, and an experienced firm of accountants, Arthur Young & Company, were employed. Notwithstanding the fact that their headquarters happen to be established in the city of Chicago, both Arthur Young and his partner were born in Glasgow. Arthur Young & Company were engaged for the reason that they had been carrying on this sort of efficiency work in the United States. They had established themselves there because of the fact that Canada until very recently had not offered a large enough field for a firm of the size of Arthur Young & Company to engage in that kind of work.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Was any attempt made to have that work done by anyone in Canada?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I cannot speak with definite assurance on that point, and do not propose to make a statement on which I am not sure.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Most of the actuaries are Scotchmen.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes. I might also say that a considerable proportion of the employees of the firm of Young and Company, and also of Griffenhagen and Associates, incorporated, who are now under consideration, are Canadians who qualified themselves for the practice of efficiency engineering, but who could not obtain employment in Canada because of the fact that opportunities did not offer.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Surely Griffenhagen is not a Canadian.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Many of our Canadian boys have gone to the United States and have obtained certificates from the efficiency institutes, particularly the Boston institute, and are now employed by such firms as Young & Company, and are frequently sent to Canada. It might be interesting if I were to state that of the eleven men referred to in that Order in Council, at least four are Canadian citizens; another is of French birth and has been residing in Canada for more than four years, and will soon be eligible for naturalization if he desires it; and the rest, I believe, are all American-born citizens. I make that statement to point out to honourable gentlemen that this is a business proposition, and that in obtaining the services of these people we were merely obtaining services which were not obtainable in Canada. This firm have been for some time past, and are at the present time, carrying on similar work for the Bank of Montreal; and I might mention that other business concerns in this country are also utilizing their services. Because there happens to be a joining up of an Irish name, and perhaps a Scotch one, is no reason for saying the name is German.

Hon. Mr. POPE: What is the name of the firm?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The name of the firm is the Griffenhagen Association. It is an association of accountants and efficiency engineers who, in partnership, carry on this work. It happens that the name Griffenhagen is associated with it. Mr. Griffenhagen is an American citizen, and, I am informed, an American born. Judging from his name, I should say that probably his ancestors came from Denmark, but I do not know anything about that.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Do you think he is or is not a German?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I do not know. He is an American born.

Reference has been made to the reclassification work and the reorganization of the Printing Bureau by Arthur Young & Company, to whom, as my honourable friend was pleased to interpret this Order in Council, credit was given for the reorganization plan and work. I think if the whole facts were laid bare they would be about like this. When the present Minister of Customs became Secretary of State he discovered a most deplorable state in the Printing Bureau. Arising out of that discovery a committee of Canadians whose names I forget—I think the late Mr. Slack of Montreal was one of them—made an investigation, as directed by the Government, and made a report. The Civil Service Commission in turn were authorized and instructed by the Government to endeavour to bring about a reorganization. Arthur Young & Company were in the city engaged in the classification work. The classification was something entirely different from the reorganization; but they being experts in that line their advice was obtained, certainly with marked success and the saving of a great deal of money.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend tell us what the Commission appointed by the Government did and what Arthur Young & Company did?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am sure my honourable friend is just as familiar with the facts as I am.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, I am not; and I am sure many other honourable gentlemen are not.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Commission of three gentlemen made a report as to the necessity in their opinion of a reorganization and in a general way outlined the saving which they thought could be effected by it. Acting upon their report Arthur Young & Company were authorized to make an investigation and to recommend what in their opinion should be done. They made their recommendations to the Civil Service Commission, who in turn reported the findings to the Government, and very largely the reorganization proposed has been carried out in some details, perhaps not entirely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Are those gentlemen to be credited entirely with that?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It was all the result of the fact that there was a Minister on the job, and he caused the rotten situation that existed to be cleaned up.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why did not that apply to the rest of the Civil Service?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It does, and I am coming to that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would the honourable gentleman permit a question? Was not the Immigration Department organized or reorganized by a Canadian efficiency man?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That situation was not entirely similar. I think when the Immigration Department was reorganized there was some reorganization under the Minister himself, but to what extent I do not know, and never inquired.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would it not have been a fair policy to have inquired how far succcessful this Canadian was in doing this reorganization work, so that it might not have been necessary to engage those foreigners?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I assume that that must have been done, because the Minister of Immigration, who conducted that reorganization of his own department, was a member of the sub-committee of the Cabinet which had to do with the employment of the Arthur Young Company on the Printing Bureau. I happened to be associated with him; therefore I assume that from his experience in his own department he deemed it desirable that this other plan should be adopted.

It has been suggested by one or two honourable members who have spoken this afternoon upon this subject that in engaging the services of a firm such as Griffenhagen or Arthur Young and Company, the Government and the Civil Service Commission are surrendering to those people absolute control, and are under their authority, and compelled to carry into execution their decisions and recommendations. I desire to dispel any such view, if held seriously by honourable gentlemen, because those people are only engaged to make investigations and propose such plans as their experience and ability, because of their training, may enable them intelligently to make. The Committee of the Cabinet as named, in co-operation with the Civil Service Commission, may act upon such recommendations and suggest them to this House. In regard to the engaging of these experts, I will not use the term my honourable friend used, because I do not think it is even decent or courteous to the gentlemen who have been engaged on this work, a considerable number of whom are Canadians, to suggest that the Government is in any way exiling itself from actual control. Whatever action is finally taken as to reorganization of any of the Departments will be the action of the Government, and not of any committee of experts that have been engaged.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend allow me to ask a question? He mentioned that the Committee of the Cabinet was working with the co-operation of the Civil Service Commission. What I tried to make out was that, so far as that Order in Council went, the Committee of Council would practically supersede the Civil Service Commission and work altogether without them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I assume that my honourable friend overlooks the fact that there are certain provisions in the Civil Service Act which no Order in Council could supersede, and therefore the interpretation of the Order in Council must necessarily be subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act itself so far as they may bear upon it. I may assure my honourable friend that the Civil Service Commission are in complete accord with what is being done, and to some extent at least it is done upon their advice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it or is it not the case that some members of the Civil Service Commission have objected very strongly to the engaging of those foreigners in the matter of reorganization?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If they have, I have no knowledge of it. I can say that frankly, because I have never heard that there was any disagreement as between the members of the Commission on the point.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Was it at the instance of the Commission that the Government acted, or without consulting the Commission?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It was not done without consulting, I am quite satisfied. I do not wish to weary the House unduly on this matter, but I do say in all sincerity that there is no doubt whatever, from the information that has already come to hand, as far as the investigations have gone, that there is ample room for very considerable improvement in the organization and the cost of conducting the public service of this country. The investigations in other departments may not show the same results as they did in the Printing Bureau, but, if they should, surely no citizen of Canada, let alone any honourable member of this or the other House, would take exception to saving the millions of dollars that necessarily would be saved under that increased efficiency.

There is one other point to which I wish to call the attention of the House: that for a very considerable number of years, when the patronage system was in vogue, there was great anxiety on the part of the people throughout the whole country to get into the Civil Service, which became overloaded; and, when members of the Civil Service came to the Government asking for rates of compensation necessary for them to exist decently, what did they find? They found themselves encumbered with a large number of incompetent men in the Service who are and have been receiving all that they are worth; and therefore, if an honest and capable Civil Servant is to receive reasonable compensation for fair and honest work, the Service must be rid of all this surplus useless part of it, otherwise the country is going to be loaded up by paying for incompetent service the current wages due to good men.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Would the Minister allow me a question just there? I quite agree with what he has said in reference to the number of persons in the Civil Service who are past their labor, as the saying is; but what I want to know is why the Government, in order to get rid of those incompetent and expensive men, did not introduce a respectable system of superannuation? That is the way to get rid of them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: In answer to that question, I would point out that in the case of the Printing Bureau such provision was made, and I assume that similar provision, or such as may be proper, will be made in the case of other departments. In the Printing Bureau every employee over 65 years of age was dispensed with, and will receive during the rest of his natural life one-half of his average salary for the past three years. He is thus reasonably provided for, and at the same time the country is saving very much money, instead of those old employees going to the end of life drawing full salary, sometimes the highest salaries in the Department, while young men were being discouraged from year to year because of having to do the work of those old employees, and getting perhaps half the compensation for it.

I am sure that all honourable gentlemen will agree that a general reorganization of the Service is desirable and necessary, and because of the existing emergency with reference to the high cost of living, and the necessity of greatly increased compensation to Civil Servants, it is more than ever important, indeed it is imperative, that the old and infirm Civil Servants should be properly and adequately taken care of and retired from Government service, that all unnecessary and incompetent employees in the Civil Service should be weeded out, and that those who are necessary should be competent, active, qualified and ambitious. Such conditions cannot prevail under the present system. Those old servants should be and will be paid adequate compensation for services rendered. Under the present system, however, an unnecessary number are retained in some departments, and their wages, if maintained at the point they have now reached, would mean a tremendous loss and unnecessary burden to the country, and a demoralizing of the Service itself; because just so long as men, incompetent and aged, whose years of usefulness have passed, are drawing $2,000 or $3,000 a year, while younger men are doing their work for about half that salary, we cannot expect either satisfaction or loyal service. Therefore I hope that honourable gentlemen will realize, as the Government does, first, the necessity of a general reorganization in the Civil Service; second, that it must be done on some modern scientific principle; third, that to accomplish this competent and experienced men must be obtained to do the work; and fourth, that those men have not heretofore been available in this country. We might find individuals, but not firms—a firm consisting of probably fifteen or twenty men, all expert in some particular line, just as a law firm is made up of different gentlemen, one of whom may be prominent in criminal law, another in some other branch, and so on. The very fact that large commercial concerns in this country have gone outside of Canada to secure competent and qualified men to do such work must surely demonstrate the truth that the necessary men were not available here. As I have shown, this bugaboo about foreigners coming into Canada to take control of our Civil Service, as one gentleman put it, is absolutely unfounded and misleading to the people generally. With reference to the Bill itself, I may be pardoned for making one observation in conection with it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Before my honourable friend goes on with that I would ask if the contract has been made with those gentlemen under the Order in Council?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There has been no contract signed so far as I am aware, and I think if there had been I would be aware of it, because I am a member of the Committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is it proposed that there shall be a contract signed without any legislation being submitted to Parliament with regard to it? In other words, is this going to be purely and exclusively a Government matter, or is it to be submitted to Parliament for approval?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would suggest that the information on that point should probably come from the other House of Parliament, or from some other member of the Government rather than myself. I am not Chairman of the Committee, and I do not feel justified in making a statement of which I am not sure or without the knowledge of the Committee. I think my honourable friend's question will have to remain unanswered in the meantime. My own view is that a signed contract is not necessary between the Government and a firm of this sort. There was no contract signed, so far as I know, between the Government and the Arthur Young Company.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That was not exactly the purport of my question, which was to ascertain whether any definite agreement is made—I do not care whether it is signed or not—and whether the matter will come up in Parliament for discussion, or whether this is the last we shall hear of it. Is there going to be any legislation submitted with regard to the contemplated agreement?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I may say that I do not prepare or propose the legislation for the Government, and therefore I cannot answer the question as to what the Government will do in the matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose the Government will ask us for the money?

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

The Honourable Mr. Justice Anglin, of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy Governor General, having come, and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Pilotage).
An Act to amend the Oleomargarine Act, 1919.
An Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.
An Act respecting Food and Drugs.
An Act for the relief of William George Mackness.
An Act for the relief of Charles Elias Vardon.
An Act for the relief of John Hamilton Harvey.
An Act for the relief of James Goddard.
An Act for the relief of Frederick Stephen Hartmann.
An Act for relief of William George McBride.
An Act for the relief of George Stinson.
An Act for the relief of John James Davis.
An Act of the relief of Arthur Jones.
An Act for the relief of Eva Mary Moss.
An Act for the relief of Nellie Adeline Wallace.
An Act for the relief of Marion Olive Booth.
An Act for the relief of William Edward Vinall.
An Act for the relief of James Lewis Price.
An Act for the relief of Frederick Tristram Clarke.
An Act for the relief of Jessie Elizabeth Hudgin.
An Act for the relief of Caroline Ewing Gudewill.
An Act for the relief of Charles Lindsay Keys.
An Act for the relief of Irene Martin Chapman.
An Act to incorporate United Canada Fire Insurance Company.
An Act respecting Honey.
An Act for the relief of Francis Charles Dean.
An Act for the relief of John James Garrison.
An Act for the relief of Dora Lumsden McLaurin.
An Act for the relief of Edith Sarah Bell.
An Act for the relief of Albert Graham Elson.
An Act respecting the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada.
An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.
An Act to amend The Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.
An Act to amend the Supreme Court Act.
An Act respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.
An Act respecting The Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
An Act to incorporate Aberdeen Fire Insurance Company.
An Act to amend the Employment Offices Coordination Act.
An Act for the relief of Jennie Wright.

An Act for the relief of Alfred Charles Edwin Westley.

An Act for the relief of George Orville Scott.

An Act for the relief of Harry Davis.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Conway Murray.

An Act for the relief Lockhart Pierce Sutton.

An Act for the relief of Frank Fulsom.

An Act for the relief of James Proudfoot.

An Act for the relief of James Lyon Lincoln Cobbin.

An Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Bulley.

An Act for the relief of Beatrice Booth Gendron.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (French Version).

An Act to incorporate The Western Canadian Union Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1920, and the 31st March, 1921.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor was pleased to retire.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The sitting having been resumed:

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON (resuming): Honourable gentlemen, in concluding the remarks I was making in reply to the honourable gentleman from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Bostock), I desire to observe that the subject of the reorganization of the Civil Service is not referred to in any way in this Bill, or concerned in it in any way. The amendments contained in the Bill now before the House are amendments to the Civil Service Act, which are necessary to keep faith with the Civil Servants, and to carry out the pledges given to them more than a year ago; and I sincerely trust that they will be promptly concurred in.

Honourable gentlemen must have noticed in the press reports of the unrest that exists because of the delay already incurred in the passing of this legislation. It was anticipated that the new Classification would have been passed at the session of Parliament last year, and that it would have been effective as from the 1st of April, 1919. The bonuses which Civil Servants received last year, and which they have been receiving up to the present time, were based upon the new Classification. The Civil Servants have not yet received the increase in salary that the Classification grants to them as from that date. Many of them have represented, and probably properly so, that they have gone into debt in anticipation of receiving this compensation which was assured to them, and which they needed in order to live. To refrain now from implementing the promises made and the pledges given would in my opinion result in very serious consequences so far as the Service is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. WILLIAM ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, I listened with great interest to the explanation made by the Minister who has just vacated his seat (Hon. Mr. Robertson). With regard to the system of nomination to Civil Service employment that has been spoken about by my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) and others, to contrast that with the system in vogue may be of interest. Those who were nominated formerly, when the members for the counties had the patronage, were to some extent known, and their qualifications were known, to the nominators before they recommended the appointments to the Government. I understand that now the candidates who are proposed for office have to pass certain examinations; and I believe that those who have the duty of selecting the successful candidates have based their selection mainly upon the university qualifications of the candidates; so that if a man has a college degree, or has passed through a college, that fact is a desideratum which in any chance of selection places him far above and beyond persons who may not have enjoyed similar advantages. Now, a man having a college education may be able to criticise the enumeration of a strophe of Sophocles, or he may be able to operate a differential or integral calculus, or calculate the parallax of one of the new stars, but he may be totally unqualified for the practical work of a Department, which may consist of the adding up of a column of figures, estimating materials or the amount of work that can be done in a day, or very many other matters; and his efficient practical knowledge is discounted, and the ornamental or exterior knowledge that is not useful in a department is the qualificatoin which entitles a candidate for office to receive it. That there is thorough unrest in the departments and thorough dissatisfaction with conditions and the rates of pay that individuals receive is quite patent to everybody in this House, for it is well known. The men who do the work of the Departments are left in the background, and frequently have no substantial addition to their salaries. The ornamental men, or men who have the favour and patronage of some person, receive preferment and advancement, and, it may be, are transferred to some more lucrative employment, while the drudge goes on year after year and the other man gets the credit for his work. Now, when these experts make their report, what do they report? Do they know the man who is going to be appointed to the office? He may have elegant manners, he may have an elegant exterior, he may be a person who will take well with the examiners; but can they examine his character, his efficiency, his industry, his adhesion to his work day after day? That is what is wanting in the departments.

Some honourable gentleman has said that the departments are greatly overmanned; and I may voice the opinion that they are also greatly over-womaned, and that if a good many of the women were to leave the departments and others were to be put in their places more might be done. I have no fault to find with the women; they are affable and obliging; but I think that if there is going to be a diminution of the number of clerks, and a consequent saving of money, a great deal more work would be done if men were substituted for a number of the women in all the departments.

How has the expert commission reported? Not upon men; they know nothing about them; they have not examined their qualifications in the office; they have not gone into their work or anything of that kind. They have affixed a certain salary and grade to a certain kind of work, irrespective of the individual who does the work. While that system is in vogue, you will have all the difficulties of the Civil Service system perpetuated, because these men merely deal with an abstract question, not with a concrete one of the individual and the work that he does. They deal with what he is supposed to do, or how his work would compare with that in another department or another grade. They do not individualize at all. I have some men in my employ who are worth five other men—and the other men present an elegant exterior an dare very agreeable, and they do the routine work, or part of it. What is wanted is men who will laboriously work in the departments and earn the pay which they get, irrespective of outside qualifications, outside influence, or exterior qualities; depending only on the actual work which they perform in the Department making them useful to the Department and to the community. Until we get that condition and enter into it and find the qualifications of the different men in the offices, all systems will pass away, and the inefficiency of those appointed will be manifest to anyone who deals with the Department.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill, Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—temporary employment outside of Canada:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Mr. Chairman, when this matter came up the other day I asked the leader of the Government if he could give me some information as to the total cost of the Civil Service at the present time, giving the salaries apart from the bonuses, and showing, if possible, the division between the outside service and the inside service.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say to my honourable friend that the information would have to be secured from the different departments of the Government, and that up to the present time I have not been able to secure it. I may be able to ascertain from the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission what the approximate amount would be.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That is all I want.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: During the consideration of the Bill in Committee I will make that inquiry.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: When this Bill was up for second reading I gave notice of an amendment. I move, seconded by the honourable gentleman from Regina (Hon. Mr. Laird):

That the following clause be inserted in the Bill immediately after clause 2:

2a. The provisions of the Civil Service Act of 1918, and the amendments thereto relating to appointment, promotion, and classification, shall not hereafter apply to permanent officers, clerks, and employees of the Senate.

I think the Senate should have control of its own officials, so that authority might be exercised by the Senate or by a Committee of the Senate over those officials. At the present time that is not the case. The messengers, as I understand it, and all the permanent officials of the Senate come under Civil Service rule, and we have absolutely no control over them. I do not think that is in the best interests of this House, and I do not think it is in the best interests of the Service. The question of patronage does not enter very largely into it; but in my opinion the question of control is a very important one. In the Classification as performed by this Arthur Young Company we have certain positions classified. For instance, there is the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and there is the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons. We have no control of our Sergeant-at-Arms, who, being a modest person, has not asserted himself in that aggressive way that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons has done, and as a result his classification varies very much, and is not nearly so important as that of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons. As I understand, this classification was made by some official of this company going to the officer whose position was to be classified and asking him what his duties were. If he was a very modest person he did not make those duties very extensive. If, on the other hand, he reached out for everything in sight, he took upon himself duties and responsibilities which perhaps did not always pertain to his own office, but in a certain degree encroached upon the office of others. I will just read, for the information of the Senate, the definition of the duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Commons:

To act as chief executive officer of the House of Commons.

That is all right.

To preserve order in the galleries, corridors, and other parts of the Parliamentary buildings.

That includes, as I take it, not only the House of Commons, but the Senate as well, because the Senate occupies a part of the Parliament buildings. Therefore all the messengers and all our permanent officers connected with the building here would be under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, and not under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

To exercise responsibility for the care and maintenance of the furniture, fittings, and other property of the Houses.

Not of the House of Commons, but of the Houses, which includes the Senate as well as the House of Commons. So we have the Sergeant-at-Arms assuming to have authority over every stick of furniture in the Senate.

And prepare estimates of the expenses incurred in this connection.

If we want anything in connection with the furniture of our rooms or the furniture of our Chamber we have to go to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, and on bended knee and with bated breath request that the high functionary of Parliament shall grant our most humble request.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend pardon me, so that he may be aware of what has been done since that Classification was made? There is authority vested in the Civil Service Commission to amend the Classification from time to time, and upon its being pointed out that the extraordinary powers mentioned by my honourable friend were given to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, that was overcome by an amendment which has been made thereto. The letter of the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission, which was sent to the Clerk of the Senate, reads:

Dear Mr. Blount:

In view of your representations that the definition of class for the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, as shown in September edition of classification, gives that officer jurisdiction over certain matters in the Senate, the definition is being recast in form as shown on the attached sheet. The Commissioners are of opinion that the definition of class for both Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons and Sergeant-at-Arms of Senate should be along the same lines, and I am to ask if you have any comment to offer on this suggestion or on the proposed draft of definition.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What date is that, please?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: April 16, 1920.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Pardon me. About three days ago I was proceeding, as a member of the Building Committee, around the front entrance to the Senate Chamber, and at the corner was held up by the gatekeeper at one of the gates and informed that I could not proceed around the building. I was politely allowed to go around the building the day before, because I told him who I was. In this latter case, when the gatekeeper stopped me, I asked him by what authority he did so, and he replied, "The Minister of Public Works." I suggested that he telephone to the Deputy Minister of Public Works, but he replied that that official had nothing to do with him; and when I asked him who was his authority he said he took his instructions from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons. I replied that with all deference to his request I was going, and I went.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is what we might expect. Our very worthy representative of the Senate has looked after the interests of this House, and I trust that the matter will be remedied along those lines.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask my honourable friend from Portage la Prairie whether that was an employee of the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No, he is a man in charge of the gates at the entrance to the House. I think he must be employed by Lyall and Company, surely.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend is able to indicate who he is I shall be very glad to make inquiry and see that there is no repetition of that conduct.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: He was a lame man. He said, "You would not want to make me force you when I am a lame man?" I said, "What would you suggest? If you were not lame, something would happen." I do not blame the man at all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I had the same experience the other day. I am sometimes late in getting out from the Senate, and tried to make a short cut, and was told I could not go through the gate, and that the authority was in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: In justice to the man, I think he was only doing his duty in carrying out his instructions, and I do not find fault with him. At the same time, he should not have had that information, and in the face of the regulations just quoted by the honourable gentleman, I think we ought to have some control of this building.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think we should assert ourselves in this House, and not allow the House of Commons to dominate this House.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They might exclude us from the House after a while, as they did from their own Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes. The attitude of the House of Commons towards this Chamber is of a character that does not meet entirely with my approval.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think that this amendment which I now offer will to a certain extent remedy the evil that now exists. The present Speaker of the House of Commons has issued instructions that no member of the Senate can come within the precincts of their honourable House. I have no desire to go within the precincts of their honourable House, although I was in that House for many years as a member of it. In any legislature outside of this, a former member of the legislature has the privileges not only of the ante-chamber but also of the floor of the House. In the province of New Brunswick, from which I come, any former member of the House has the right to come within the House and take a seat upon the floor, and there are places provided for ex-members to sit; but this sacred chamber of the House of Commons, under the superintendence of the present Speaker, is too sacred a place altogether for even former members to come to, let alone members of the Senate. In the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick any member of the Federal House of Commons may take a seat upon the floor, not by special invitation, but by actual right; and so with a member of the Senate of Canada. These are courtesies that I think should be extended. But I do not plead for this sort of thing: I am not anxious, and do not care if I never see the inside of the chamber of the House of Commons. I am content with my position as a member of the Senate of Canada; I find it to be the greatest position in Canada. I trust that honourable gentlemen will pass without opposition this very proper amendment which I have offered.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, may I be permitted to point out to my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) a difficulty which possibly he may not have foreseen in moving the amendment which is now before us? The passage of this amendment would place the Senate in a most anomalous position. We would be, like Mahomet's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth in what I might call a state of suspended animation. We have repealed the rights which we possessed under the British North America Act and under the Revised Statutes of Canada whereby we had control over our own staff, etc. Having passed the Civil Service Act of 1918 and the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1919, we have handed over to the Civil Service Commission the rights which we enjoyed by statute, which were given to both Houses by the British North America Act, and afterwards elaborated upon in the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 10, 1906. Now, it is quite manifest that if we pass this provision it does not revive the rights which we have already sacrificed or lost by the passage of the former legislation, and we are therefore facing that peculiar difficulty. I might point out to my honourable friend that the control previously exercised by the Senate was under section 18 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

> The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons and by the Members thereof respectively shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and by the Members thereof.

That section was repealed in 1875 by the following section:

Section 18 of the British North America Act, 1867, is hereby repealed, without prejudice to anything done under that section, and the following section shall be substituted for the section so repealed.

The substituted section reads as follows:

The privileges, immunities and powers to be enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any Act of the Parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities and powers, shall not confer any privileges, immunities or powers exceeding those at the passing of such Act, held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.

Then, by section 4 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 10, we legislated as follows under the heading of "Privileges and Immunities of Members and Officers":

4. The Senate and the House of Commons respectively, and the members thereof respectively, shall hold, enjoy and exercise,—

(a) such and the like privileges, immunities and powers as, at the time of the passing of the British North America Act, 1867, were held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom, and by the members thereof, so far as the same are consistent with and not repugnant to the said Act; and,

(b) such privileges, immunities and powers as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, not exceeding those at the time of the passing of such Act held, enjoyed and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom and by the members thereof respectively.

My honourable friend will observe that if we passed this amendment we would have no authority.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Perhaps my honourable friend would read the provisions in the Act of 1919 to which he referred?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have not that legislation before me, but we handed over everything to the Civil Service Commission, and of course it is manifest that the acceptance of the amendment moved by my honourable friend would not revive the legislation already repealed. Consequently, if the principle of this amendment is to be embodied in the Act, it will have to go very much further: it will have to make provision for the appointment of employees, officers, etc. I fact, we will have to restore the legislation under which we were previous to the passage of the Civil Service Act of 1918. I simply point that out so that we may not hastily adopt an amendment to the Act which would place us in a very embarrassing position, and thus render us helpless in the matter of our staff. There has been put in my hands the Civil Service Act of 1918, section 34 of which reads as follows:

So much of this Act as relates to appointment, transfer and promotion, and to salaries, increases and classification and the provisions of sections thirty and thirty-two, shall apply to the permanent officers, clerks, and employees of both Houses of Parliament and of the Library of Parliament, and wherever any action is authorized or directed to be taken by the Governor in Council or by order in council, such action, with respect to the officers, clerks and employees of the Senate or the House of Commons, shall be taken by the Senate or the House of Commons, as the case may be, by resolution; and with respect to the officers, clerks and employees of the Library of Parliament, and to such other officers, clerks and employees as are under the joint control of both Houses of Parliament, shall be taken by both Houses of Parliament by resolution, or, if such action is required during the recess of Parliament, by the Governor in Council, subject to ratification by the Senate, House of Commons or both Houses, as the case may be, at the next ensuing session.

Then, in section 2 of the Civil Service Act, under the head of definitions, reference is made to the various branches that are under the Commission.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does the Commission appoint Senators?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Government of Canada did not forego its privilege in that regard.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, I am entirely in accord with my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler). I think the difficulty to which our attention has been called by the honourable leader of the Government might be overcome by an amendment of this sort, which I want my honourable friend from Kings and Albert to consider:

1. Those provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1918, as amended by the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919, and by the foregoing sections of this Act, which apply to the Senate, to the Speaker of the Senate or to the officer, clerks and employees of the Senate, shall cease so to apply on and after the passing of this Act.

2. All such privileges, immunities and powers of the Senate with regard to its officers, clerks and employees as existed before the passing of the Civil Service Act, 1908, Chapter 15 of the Statutes of 1908, shall be deemed to exist unimpaired as if that Act and the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the amendments of these Acts, respectively, had not been passed.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Can you not make it shorter by just restoring the powers?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not know. If my honourable friend can suggest an improvement, he may do so. I commend this to the consideration of my honourable friend from Kings and Albert.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like very much to find the principle upon which the amendment of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Fowler) is based. We discussed session after session the desirability of establishing the Civil Service Commission and entrusting to it the appointment, classification and promotion of the Federal Government employees. The House of Commons passed the Civil Service Bill and we accepted it. We transferred to that Commission the rights which the Senate and the House of Commons possessed regarding appointments to their respective staffs, thereby affirming our preference for that system. We felt that it was in the interest of the country that all of the departments should be administered, and we were willing that the House of Commons and the Senate should likewise be administered, under that general Civil Service law. Are we now deciding that we were wrong in establishing that general principle for the various departments of the Federal Government? If we are, let us say so. But will it not seem strange that, after adopting the principle of that new system, and before it has been put into full operation, we should declare that what is good for all the other departments of the Government is not good for the Senate, and that we will withdraw? What principle are we laying down if we decide that the Civil Service Act should apply to all the departments, but not to the Senate or the House of Commons? I would like to know why it ought not to apply to us when we still cling to the principle that it is good for the other departments of the Government.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I am not in accord with the amendment of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Fowler) or the amendment proposed by the honourable Senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt).

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I did not propose it; I merely made a suggestion. I would not like to propose it.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Or with the suggestion made by the honourable member from Ottawa. I agree with my honourable friend who has just taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Dandurand). If it is not right that the Civil Service Commission should look after appointments in connection with the Senate, then we ought either to amend the Civil Service Act or get rid of it. I do not think it would be good policy to withdraw the Senate from the operation of that Act. That would be practically saying that it is good enough for others, but not good enough for us. The Act should be given a further trial before we take any such drastic step.

But, as the question has been brought up here, I desire to say that I feel very hostile to the action of the Commons in refusing to allow Senators, members of the Parliament of Canada, to enter the lobby of the House of Commons. I have heard it said—perhaps it was my honourable friend the leader (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) who said it: "Wait until we get into our own permanent quarters, then we will take similar action." I do not think that would be good policy. I think it would be rather beneath the dignity of the Senate to retaliate in so small a matter as that. I think the Commons have acted in a very small way. If the members of the House of Commons generally had understood what it meant, I do not believe for a moment they would have agreed to it. I understand it was practically the work of one or two officials of the House of Commons who agitated for that and got it passed. My principal object is to ask the honourable leader of the Government, or the honourable the Speaker of the Senate, if he would not again take up the matter. The Commons have now had a trial of the arrangement, and I am sure it is not very satisfactory to them. I agree with my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) that they would not be very much concerned about the matter. Surely members of the Senate of Canada should have a right to enter the lobby of the House of Commons if they so desired. To my mind it would be much better to take the matter up and have it properly arranged, if possible, than to think of any retaliation when we enter our own permanent quarters.

Hon. Mr. POWER: There is just one point with respect to the amendment suggested by the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt), which I think the Committee should consider. As I heard his proposed amendment, it was to the effect that we should go back to the condition of things that existed before the Civil Service Act of 1918. The honourable gentleman probably lost sight of the fact that the complete control which this House had of its officers was given away in 1908, and if the amendment that he has suggested were passed we should not again control those officers; we should be back under the rule that prevailed under the Act of 1908. My feeling about this matter is that it is better not to be in a hurry; it is better to stop and think a bit. I understand that the members of the House of Commons are not satisfied with the existing conditions as regards their own staff. If we passed this amendment to the Bill—which amendment, by the way, is not germane to the Bill—if we passed this amendment, saying that appointments to the Senate staff and the control of the Senate employees should not be in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, we could not expect the amendment to be concurred in by the Commons. They would naturally say, "We have a right to control our staff too," and the probabilities are that nothing would be done. I sympathize very much with the sentiments of honourable members who have felt that we would be better if we were back under the condition of things existing before 1908, but I think the businesslike and practical way is to come to an understanding with the House of Commons and have a measure introduced after due consideration and fair notice; not to have an amendment sprung on either House as this is being sprung. Then next session, after the two Houses could agree, we could get back to our old position of—self-determination, I think, is the proper word.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of small bodies.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would point out to the honourable member for Halifax that by the present Civil Service Act the Act of 1908 is repealed.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The amendment proposed says that we should go back to the condition of things which existed before the passing of the Act of 1918. At that time, before the passing of the Act of 1918, the Act of 1908 was in operation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But if the Act of 1908 is repealed I do not quite see how the amendment would restore it.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Any Act that has been repealed can be revived by another Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think we ought to do something in this matter if we can. I am afraid that the amendment proposed by my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) will hardly meet the situation. But we have been in difficulties ever since the passage of the Civil Service Act in 1908, when the Senate and the House of Commons were brought under it. I think that was an afterthought. When the Bill was first introduced in Parliament the Senate and the House of Commons were not included in it, but they were brought in later. At that time, as honourable gentlemen will remember, the powers of the Commission were not nearly so great as they have been since, and we did not lose nearly as much of our authority regarding appointments to the staff, or control of the staff, as we have since delegated to the Commission. The Civil Service Commission may be satisfactory so far as the Government departments are concerned. That is a matter for the Government themselves to determine. They may think that administration by a Civil Service Commission is the best method of dealing with appointments to the various departments, and with departmental organization. But I do think that the Senate and the House of Commons should keep in their own hands the control of their own staffs. The Houses of Parliament ought to be capable of managing their own employees. A distinction should be drawn between the employees in the Government departments and employees of Parliament. That distinction should be made as clear as possible, and I would like to see some amendment made that would meet the situation. But I am afraid that my honourable friend's amendment does not do so.

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, with regard to the amendment, I suppose I have been in a certain sense to blame for not having familiarized myself with the former legislation before accepting the amendment and moving it. The amendment was not of my making. It was made, as I understand from the person who handed it to me, by the Parliamentary Counsel. As I say, I did not take time to familiarize myself with the legislation, but supposed that the amendment, coming from the Parliamentary Counsel, would be all right. However, I am satisfied now that it is not all right. But I do think that the change proposed by the honourable member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) would answer the purpose. At any rate, I am still convinced that it is a bad thing, from every standpoint, for us not to have the control of the permanent officers of this House. I think it would be a very good plan to have a conference with the House of Commons. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to any means being taken that will bring about the desired result. I am not the real father of that amendment; therefore I do not intend to defend it when I do not think it is defensible. I might make an effort to defend it if I had really drawn it—even though it were not defensible; but under the circumstances I do not intend to make the effort.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: For the accuracy of our records, I do not want to be put down as proposing the amendment which I read. I read it merely for the purpose of drawing my honourable friend's attention to it as perhaps a better means of reaching the end he had in view than the amendment he proposed. I have not made up my mind exactly what I would do if that amendment were really put. But I certainly do not desire to have it placed on record at this stage, as honourable gentlemen have repeated several times, that I am proposing the amendment. While on my feet may I add that I hope the staff of the Senate will be saved from the reclassification or reorganization to be made by this Grieffenhagen firm.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The honourable gentleman need not be afraid of having to assume the responsibility. I am prepared to assume the responsibility and run the risk of whatever criticism may result, because there is absolutely no question in my mind as to my attitude in this matter, and I am not afraid to state my attitude when I have once taken it.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I am in favour of the amendment proposed by the honourable member for Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler), provided that he adds to it something which will revive the powers of the Senate that were destroyed by past legislation. I think the honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock) has given the answer to the honourable Senator from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) with regard to the reason why we should have one rule for the Senate and another for the departments. The distinction as between the two, as has been pointed out by the honourable leader of the Opposition, is that this is a legislative body; it is not a department of the Government at all. A Government department has new ministers from time to time. Of course, we have new Speakers from time to time, but this is a more permanent body. To my mind there is a very clear distinction between a legislative body and what is, after all, a department of the executive.

My main reason for rising, however, is to say this in answer to the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), who suggests delay, and a conference with the House of Commons, and perhaps a separate Bill. In my humble opinion, if you want this amendment, you had better insert it in this Bill; otherwise you may never get it at all. What is going on now in the House of Commons? After Bills have been passed in this House and are sent down there, they are smothered. We passed a Bill introduced by the honourable gentleman from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans) with regard to criminal appeals. It went down there: nothing is heard of it. There is another Bill, with which I had, I think, a good deal to do, with regard to the judges. It went down to the other House: it is never heard of again. There were two divorce Bills passed by a very large majority in this House at the present session, and nothing has been heard of them. I do not know how the House of Commons would like it if we were to treat their Bills as they are treating ours. One of these days we may have to do something of the kind—refer a Bill that comes up from the House of Commons to a special committee and let it lie there until they come up and ask us what has become of it. Then we can ask them what has become of some of the Bills that we sent down. I am not saying they ought to pass a Bill because we passed it. What I do say is this. The Minister of Justice has a Bill which is coming up here, regarding criminal law. If he expects that to be treated with courtesy by this House, then the Bill relating to criminal appeals ought to be taken up by him and submitted by him to the House of Commons, and either voted or voted down. And the same with regard to the divorce Bills. I do not say that the House of Commons ought to swallow them because we approved of them, but I do say that it is about time for them to take them up and to do either of two things with them—either reject them or pass them into law. We have in the present Bill a provision, section 5, that you will find is imperative. I think the honourable the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) pointed out that it is of great importance that this Bill should pass. Now, if you want this amendment, put it into this Bill, and I will venture to say that you will have it passed; whereas if you put it into a separate Bill and send it down to the House of Commons, that will be the last you will hear of it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Draw an amendment.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: The present amendment moved by the honourable member for Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) is all right; all he has to add to that is a provision to the effect that the powers and privileges of the Senate with regard to their staff should be as existing in and prior to the year 1908.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am willing to accept anything that will give us control. Whatever may be the concensus of opinion as to the phraseology necessary to bring about the desired result will be acceptable to me.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I entirely agree with with the opinion expressed by the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) that it is now or never. I think that what we desire can be accomplished now more easily than next year. The longer we wait the greater will be the difficulty. Having been a member of the Internal Economy Committee for about twenty years, and having had some little experience in the Senate, I believe I am safe in saying that the administration of the staff of the Senate by the Internal Economy Committee was fairly satisfactory to the members of the House and to the members of the staff as well. I think that if we had retained our control of the staff the service would to-day be much more satisfactory than it is. If possible, I think that we should take the staff out of the control of the Civil Service Commission. We have plenty of time to look after such matters. Only this session His Honour the Speaker made a request for a translator. A translator was secured through the Civil Service Commission, and, as honourable gentlemen will remember, that translator turned out to be of no use. The Civil Service Commission were wrong in that case; the man could not do his work. I dare say that if the Internal Economy Committee had had control a satisfactory man would have been secured.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Who established the rule that 25 per cent should be given to returned soldiers?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I do not know. Apparently that is a rule of the Civil Service Commission, or a rule made by the Chicago people. From the expressions of opinion to-day I am inclined to think that most of the members of this House are strongly in favour of the control of our staff remaining with ourselves, and I think that if representations were made to some authority in the House of Commons we would encounter no difficulty in getting this amendment passed. I think the House of Commons is in somewhat the same position as we occupy, and would like to have the control of its staff. I believe an understanding could be arrived at, and if an amendment were inserted in this Bill the chances are that the House of Commons would accept it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, inasmuch as I have charge of this Bill it is but natural that I should defend it. It has occurred to me since the discussion has taken place, and since my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) moved his amendment, that there is really no evidence before us to justify us in making the very radical departure which is now proposed. We not only passed the Act of 1918, but we passed the Amendment Act of 1919, and we approved of the principle of the Civil Service legislation when we were charged with its consideration. The only evidence before us that would seem to make a change advisable is the fact that there was an unfortunate appointment made in the case of a translator. The same thing might very easily have occurred if the appointment had been in the hands of one of our committees. It happens that an Order in Council was passed by the Government of the day giving recognition by way of preference to returned soldiers in all appointments, and this particular translator, being a returned soldier, was selected by the Civil Service Commission on account of the regulations passed by the Governor in Council. The Civil Service Commission were compelled, so to speak, under the peculiar conditions which invested the case, to appoint a returned soldier. Outside of that particular case I have heard of no dissatisfaction.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would that account for the delay in the translation? As I understand it, there was a delay of some six or seven months.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There may have been a delay. I understand that the position of translator has been satisfactorily filled by a temporary appointee, and that consequently there is no pressing necessity for immediate action.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We should have direct action.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I agree with the position taken by my honourable friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), who very properly points out that the Senate has approved of the principle of this Bill. We have passed the Act removing the patronage not only of members of Parliament but of the ministerial heads of departments, and likewise we have taken out of the hands of Deputy Ministers the power which they exercised over their staffs. We have committed ourselves unalterably to the principle of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not unalterably.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Until the present time we have. Now we deliberately say to the ministerial heads of departments, to members of Parliament, and to all others whose patronage has been removed: "Notwithstanding the fact that we imposed upon you the duty and obligation of sacrificing the patronage which you formerly exercised, we, one of the branches of Parliament, are prepared to revert to the exercise of patronage, but at the same time we expect you to submit to the provisions of the Act." This, it seems to me, would place the Senate in a most anomalous position. We should be prepared to say that what is good enough for others is good enough for us, or that, if the principles of the Civil Service Act are not good enough for the Senate, we should repeal the whole Act. I think if the honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert had moved a resolution along those lines it would have been perfectly consistent. I suppose that most legislation is more or less inconsistent, and that occasionally members of Parliament find themselves occupying an inconsistent position; at the same time, I am bound to say, being in charge of this Bill, that consistency is a jewel and a principle to be observed in this case.

Hon. M. DANDURAND: Could the honourable gentleman, for the enjoyment of the new Senators in this Chamber, relate the little comedy of the Internal Economy Committee as to the appointment of a barber of the Senate?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not entirely recall that incident. Such things will occur. Think of the position in which we would be placed, having regard to the encomiums which have been passed upon this Bill in this very House. Honourable gentlemen in this House have been clamouring for years for the removal of patronage. They have been condemning in the strongest language the exercise of patronage by Ministers, members of Parliament, and others. They have been clamouring for the removal of all those evils and have extolled the principles of the Civil Service Act to the seventh heaven. Notwithstanding the position which we have taken on the subject, are we to-day prepared to revert to the old principle of "to the victor belongs the spoil"—the principle of the dominant party exercising the patronage?

It seems to me, honourable gentlemen, that we are confronted with another difficulty. This will involve legislation. We cannot by a motion revive and place upon the statute book the legislation under which we previously acted. This motion is equivalent to a new Bill. It will have to be sent to the House of Commons to receive their concurrence before it becomes law. I ask honourable gentlemen to consider that phase of the question.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They might join us.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think they would join us.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The House of Commons cannot amend their own Bill. Having sent that Bill to the Senate, it is too late for them to amend it and join with the Senate in the action which is proposed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: We had better include the House of Commons in the amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I commend to my honourable friend the further problem of getting the co-operation of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend claim that we cannot amend the Bill?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My argument is that the amendment would have to pass the House of Commons, and that the House of Commons could not take themselves from under the provisions of the Bill, and do what we propose doing, because they have already parted with the Bill and sent it up to this House.

There is a further problem to be considered, and that is the question of the House of Commons voting to the Senate the necessary supplies for the maintenance of our staff, and so on. Unless the House of Commons will adopt legislation similar to what we are proposing we will be facing a very peculiar situation, particularly in having our supplies voted. I simply point out these difficulties.

I feel particularly sympathetic to what my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) has pointed out. I think probably a good purpose is served by directing attention to this matter. I think it is very unfortunate that Bills sent by the Senate to the House of Commons should meet a premature death in that House—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is not altogether new.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —without having even a chance of life. At the same time, wrongs of that kind do not justify us in adopting such a radical step as the one now proposed, unless that step is defensible on other grounds.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The leader of the Government has made a very fair argument; but he has not succeeded in convincing me, and I am sure he has not convinced himself, that his attitude on this occasion is the right one. I am satisfied—not from the remarks that have fallen from his lips, because I know he is generally a very sensible man—that his heart is in sympathy with the proposed amendment—and no sensible man, I think, could possibly entertain any other view. I have consulted with some of the gentlemen who are well versed in the law, and as a result, with the leave of the Committee, I will add the following words to the proposed amendment:

And the powers and privileges of the Senate relating to the appointment, promotion, control, and classification of its permanent officers and employees shall be such as existed in and prior to the year 1908.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I should like to ask the honourable gentleman how an official of this Chamber appointed by the Governor in Council would be affected. There has been a good deal said this afternoon in reference to the Sergeant at Arms. I may be mistaken, but I had the idea that the Sergeant-at-Arms—and there may be others—was appointed by the Governor in Council, not by the Civil Service Commission. I am not very well versed in matters of that kind.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They would not be affected by this amendment. This is only a restoring clause. Officials who were appointed by the Governor in Council would not be affected.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: All officials except Deputy Ministers are now appointed under the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: We are getting back to the good old days when we had control of this House ourselves. The fact is that the whole Civil Service is becoming demoralized under the existing law. In the old days a Deputy Minister had control of his staff. I suppose under the existing law, if I ask a boy to bring me a book and he declines to do so, that instead of appealing to the Speaker I would have to appeal to the Civil Service Commission. We are only getting back to what has got to come in the House of Commons and in the Departments as well as here—the principle that the man at the head of a Department must have control.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: As the leader of the Government has pointed out, we may be embarrassing the House of Commons in sending this amendment to them, inasmuch as they have no power to amend their own Act. But they certainly have power to amend our amendment, and by including the House of Commons in the amendment we can accomplish what we desire.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) has used the word "permanent" in his amendment. That may be misleading.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I agree with my honourable friend from Ottawa. I think the word "permanent" might come out.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Strike it out.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That would not matter. I understand that at the present time we have control of all temporary employees.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I was going to suggest that possibly it would be better to let this matter stand until to-morrow so that we could have a proper amendment drawn up. I must say that I do not exactly understand the position at the present time. I think we have first of all to repeal the legislation that has gone before, and then we have to revive the privileges of the Senate under the British North America Act, as read by the leader of the Government. I would like to point out to my honourable friend that he moved an amendment to the Maple Syrup Bill. That Bill went to the House of Commons, which did not agree to our amendment, but made another amendment, which we accepted. I think that is exactly what my honourable friend suggested they could not do.

Hon. Mr. BOURQUE: Mr. Chairman, just a word before the amendment is put. Reference has been made to a translator who, unfortunately, was not found to be properly qualified. I happen to have had the pleasure of meeting this gentleman once incidentally when he first came here, and since then I made it a point to acquaint myself with the circumstances in connection with his dismissal, and I must say that it is very unfortunate for Mr. Stehelin that he was not properly employed by the Senate, because his services were most remarkable as far as the war was concerned. I am not blaming any officials of the Senate whatever, but I want to say that when he first came here as a stranger he was certainly given more work by the superior translator than any translator could possibly do. I understand that it was brought out that he was given five pages of translation to be done in one day, which I am told it was impossible for him to do. I am not surprised that the translation was not found proper or good, because no translator could possibly do five pages of translating in a day. Later on, I am told, two and a half pages were given, and his translation was found to be good.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Do you mean to say he could not do five pages of translating in a day?

Hon. Mr. BOURQUE: That is what I am informed. We want to give this returned soldier justice, but under the circumstances, with the chance that he had from the superior translator who was above him, I am not surprised that the officials of the House and His Honour the Speaker, according to the records, found him unqualified.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Before the amendment is put, I think the attention of the House should be drawn to what seems to be a very serious matter. Honourable gentlemen must realize that in voting for the amendment they are going to reject all that has been done in the last two years by the Civil Service Commission with regard to three things which will be of very great importance to our officers here. These are: the statutory increase, the increase which will result in the salary of quite a number of our employees from the reclassification that is being made, and the reclassification and reorganization to be made during the year. An increase of salary has been granted to a number of our employees by reclassification, in one case by $500, and in the same way the bonus that has been voted and the statutory increase granted by the Civil Service Commission will be affected.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: How is that?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Because we cannot rely further on the Civil Service Commission for increases. I am not opposing the amendment, but I am putting it to the Senate that if we carry it we impliedly pledge ourselves to put through and carry out the increases granted by the Commission, and when we are in the Committee on Contingency Accounts we ought to have this in mind, if we adopt this amendment.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Referring to the remarks of the honourable member for Richibucto (Hon. Mr. Bourque), he certainly must have been misinformed when he was told that Mr. Stehelin was obliged to translate five pages a day. He was employed in the Senate only three months, and in all those three months he translated twenty-five pages, which was about a third of a page every day. I have stated the reasons why I was disposed to replace Mr. Stehelin. Sympathy is asked for Mr. Stehelin as a great warrior who spent part of his time in the trenches; but I understand that is entirely incorrect, as he was never less than a few hundred miles from the trenches, having been employed in a lumber camp, where I believe he did his duties well; but the fact that he was a good lumberman would not imply that he was a good translator.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: This House is composed of men of wide experience and sound judgment, men who are disposed to think before they act. We have passed this Civil Service Act, and it has only been in operation for a short time. To change it now would seem to me to be rather inconsistent, and we would be acting in a fickle way. I do not think we have given the Act a fair trial; I do not think it would be fair to the Act to adopt this amendment at this time. If it is thought best at another session to do so, a Committee might be appointed from this House to meet a Committee from the other House and look into the whole matter; but I think that this body will stand in a very bad light before the people of this country if we tamper with this legislation at this time.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: On the contrary, I believe we will receive more eclat if we deal with it now. From one end of the country to the other there is nothing but a rip and roar about the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: We should give it a fair trial.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not see why it should have a trial at all, or why we should waste time over it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The point made by my honourable friend from Ottawa with regard to the bonuses and additions to salaries of the different clerks is well taken. These have become vested rights, and cannot be taken away by this legislation. I have had this amendment recast and redrawn and put in better shape than it was before, and I now submit the result:

Those provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1918, as amended by the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919, and by the foregoing sections of this Act, which apply to the Senate, to the Speaker of the Senate, or to the officers, clerks, and employees of the Senate, shall cease so to apply on and after the passing of this Act.

2. All such privileges, immunities and powers of the Senate with regard to its officers, clerks and employees, as existed before the passing of the Civil Service Act, 1908, chapter 15 of the Statutes of 1908, shall be deemed to exist unimpaired and as if that Act and the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the amendments of these Acts respectively, had not been passed.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I do not find myself inclined to support the amendment. If it were adopted this House would be the first to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. It does not matter whether or not we approved of that Commission in its inception. It may have been passed with misgivings on the part of some of us; still it has only been a short time in operation, and I believe it has done its work well. I have kept a little in touch with the Commission, and I know it is greatly overloaded in the duties and responsibilities it has to perform. In addition to the classification, which should not have been loaded on it, we have put the outside service on the Commission, and now the reorganization of the departments is proposed. There has been no specific grievance as far as this House is concerned, except that we have not had the control of our own officers. I do not want the statement to go through the country that the Senate of Canada, which approved of the Civil Service Act, is the first body to withdraw from the operation of that Act. If we are prepared to go that far, I would be prepared to go a great deal further and repeal the Act altogether as to the outside service. If that be the attitude of honourable gentlemen, let us not go at it piecemeal, but tackle the whole problem. I am willing to deal with the principle; but I think we would be taking a retrograde step to adopt this amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I doubt very much that we shall receive very considerable encomiums throughout the country for withdrawing from the operation of the Civil Service Act. There will be a question as to why the Senate is acting thus, and it will weaken the confidence of the people of the country in the solemn action of the Parliament of Canada in establishing the Civil Service Commission and allowing the Departments to be manned by that Commission for a number of years. I want to tell my honourable friend from Middleton that this Senate will get some eclat and encomiums if it will only give as much time to frowning down the large expenditures that will come before us for revision before the end of this session as we are spending on this question of withdrawing the Senate from the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am sure the Senate does not desire to act hastily in this matter, whatever justification there may be, and as it is within a couple of minutes of six o'clock I would take the liberty of moving that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. Mature consideration between now and to-morrow will certainly help us to deal properly with so important a subject.

Progress was reported.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, June 17, 1920.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

FRANKLING DIVORCE PETITION.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. TANNER presented the 101st report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, as follows:

In the matter of the petition of Arthur John Frankling, otherwise known as John A. Holmes, of the city of Toronto in the Province of Ontario, Electrician; praying for the passing of an Act to dissolve his marriage with Ellen Elizabeth Frankling, of Norwich, England, and for such further and other relief as to the Senate may seem meet.

1. The Committee have, in obedience to the Rules of the Senate, examined the notice of application to Parliament, the petition, the evidence of publication of the notice, and all other papers referred with the petition.

2. The Committee find that the requirements of the Rules of the Senate have been complied with in all material respects, except personal service upon the Respondent of a copy of the Notice of intention to apply to Parliament for a Bill of Divorce as required by Rule 137.

3. Inasmuch as personal service has been made upon the Respondent of a copy of the petition and information, and in view of notice received by the Committee from the Respondent, indicating that she is fully aware of the proceedings, the Committee recommend that what has been done be deemed and taken as sufficient service, and that the Committee be authorized to near and inquire into the matters set forth in the petition.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, there may be no objection to adopting this report now. The Respondent, who resides in England, was served with the Petition; but under the rules of the Senate it is also necessary to serve upon the Respondent a copy of the notice published in the Canada Gazette. This is merely a formal notice. By the service of the Petition the Respondent really has had all the information conveyed to her that any Respondent could desire, and the Committee came to the conclusion that no injustice would be done if that service was accepted as being sufficient. Under the rules, however, it is necessary that the decision of the Committee should be concurred in by the Senate, and if there is no objection I would move that the rule be suspended and that the report be now concurred in.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I should not object to the suspension of the rule to read a Bill; but I think that the members of the House should have an opportunity of seeing the report of the Committee.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: This does not dispose of the Petition for divorce. It only enables the Committee to go on and hear the evidence without requiring the Petitioner to send over specially and serve a copy of the notice which has been published in the Canada Gazette. The Respondent has already received a copy of the Petition, and, as a matter of fact, a letter which is in the custody of the Clerk acknowledges the receipt of it.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: If there is any objection, the rule cannot be suspended.

It was ordered that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Monday next.

COAL SHORTAGE AT MONTREAL.
INQUIRY.

Hon. R. S. WHITE inquired:

1. Is the Government aware that no Nova Scotia coal has been brought to the Port of Montreal this season?

2. Is the Government aware that practically the whole output of the Nova Scotia mines is being exported?

3. Is the Government aware that the annual requirements of bituminous coal for the district of Montreal is between four and five million tons?

4. Is the Government aware that Nova Scotia has in the past supplied these requirements to the extent of two million tons and that this source of supply does not presently exist?

5. Is the Government aware that there is a shortage in production of American bituminous coal and there is difficulty in obtaining nominal supplies from this source?

6. Is it the intention of the Government to introduce legislation to relieve this situation which may become acute if immediate action is not taken?

He said: Honourable gentlemen, with the permission of the House I wish to qualify this inquiry and point out that it is not in any sense a criticism of the mine owners. This time last year I was in Sydney, and I fully appreciate that for some years past mine owners have not been able to carry on the trade they might otherwise have carried on had it not been for the lack of shipping. On account of the shipping facilities being commandeered by the British Government they had large supplies of coal piled on the dump, and this coal was in danger of fire. This inquiry largely concerns the question of whether transportation might be afforded to the mine owners outside of what they are able to secure for themselves. Montreal has not had a very large supply of coal from Nova Scotia for the last three or four years, but during the war the American mines were deprived of some part of their regular trade and were able to give Canada a much larger supply than they would do under ordinary conditions. Normal conditions are now returning and the transportation by the American railroads is not as good as it might be; consequently we are not able to get in Montreal the same supply of bituminous coal as we did have during the last two or three years. The supply of Nova Scotia coal has been cut off from us almost entirely. I understand that the Nova Scotia coal is being bunkered in ships. It is exported, or, what is practically the same, it is leaving the country, and the owners are getting a very good price for it.

It seems to me the Minister of Marine, by means of Canadian Government boats, might relieve this situation; or the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, who is still in Canada and available for negotiations of this character, might be approached by the Government for the purpose of obtaining at least 100,000 tons of British Shipping, which I understand is available. If, as Colonel Amery claims, the British Government wish to show their good will towards Canada, why should not the Canadian Government apply to them for a certain tonnage to bring the Nova Scotia coal to Montreal and other Canadian ports? The object of my inquiry is not to find any fault with the mine owners, who are exporting their coal at a good price, and who are perhaps only compensating themselves for losses they may have sustained under war conditions. My purpose is to urge upon the Government the need of taking some action, which possibly private companies cannot take, to secure proper transportation facilities, so that the Nova Scotia coal may be available for Canadian consumption.

Hon. P. C. MURPHY: Honourable gentlemen, I think that this is a timely inquiry on the part of my honourable friend from Inkerman. He speaks about the conditions in Montreal, and there is nobody in a better position than he to explain the situation just as it exists. Down in my own province, which is almost within a stone's throw of the mines at Sydney, importers wired the other day for five cars of coal, and they were informed: "Absolutely impossible to supply you." This coal is required for the running of our lobster canneries, lobster canning being one of the chief industries of the Maritime Provinces. I overheard my honourable friend from Inkerman the other evening discussing the matter, and I was amazed to learn that the situation was such that it might at any time become acute, and that the industrial establishments of Montreal might even have to shut down for want of bituminous coal. This is a situation with which the Government should grapple. The conditions are serious in the Maritime Provinces when we cannot get even five cars of coal, but what about the 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 tons required to run the industrial establishments of Montreal? I have risen only to speak in commendation of the action of my honourable friend from Inkerman in bringing this question to the attention of the honourable leader of the Government, who I believe will bring it before his colleagues.

Hon. R. S. WHITE.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, the inquiry made by my honourable friend from Inkerman is very pertinent to the situation which we unfortunately are facing, not only at the port of Montreal, but also at other points. The Government is doubtless aware of the different conditions mentioned in the inquiry. Unfortunately they are known only too well, through the experience which the public have had within the last couple of years.

As a remedy for the situation, the Prime Minister has introduced in the House of Commons, within the last day or so, legislation which would permit of the Government dealing with conditions such as have been outlined by the honourable gentleman from Inkerman. That legislation will doubtless pass the House of Commons; at least I hope it will. It will be in the public interest that such power should be vested in the Government as would permit of the situation being regulated or controlled by governmental action. I have no doubt that when the measure comes up to this House it will receive the support of the Senate.

DIVORCE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill T4, an Act for the relief of Graziano Bertini.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill U4, an Act for the relief of William Henry Caswell.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill V4, an Act for the relief of John Covert.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill W4, an Act for the relief of Mary Ireland.—Hon. Mr. Proudfoot.

Bill X4, an Act for the relief of John Daniel Mills.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Y4, an Act for the relief of Joseph Aimé Wilfred David.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

Bill Z4, an Act or the relief of Richard Simpson.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE.

The Senate again went into committee on Bill 53, an Act to amend The Civil Service Act, 1918, and The Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, when we were discussing the amendment that I had proposed, the honourable member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) raised the point that bonuses or additions to salary had been recommended by the Civil Service Commission for certain officers and employees of this House. I stated that in my opinion the amendment would not interfere with them; but I have since thought it would perhaps be as well to crystallize that opinion in the form of an addition to the amendment. I would propose this:

Provided, however, that any benefit enjoyed by the officers, clerks, or employees of the Senate under the provisions of the said Acts, and the amendments of those Acts, with respect to status, salaries or increase of salary, bonus, superannuation or retirement, Civil Service insurance, gratuity to an employee's widow, and like benefits, shall continue to apply with respect to the staff of the Senate.

Some question was raised as to whether the amendment proposing to take the control of our officers and employees out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission would affect the present status. I propose this addition—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: —in order that there may be no mistake in regard to it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: If I understand my honourable friend, he means that the positions in which the staff have been placed under the Civil Service Act, after all this inquiry, shall remain as they are, and that this amendment shall not interfere with them; that any of the advantages which employees derive from that reclassification shall take effect.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Exactly.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I hesitate to express myself further upon this subject, owing to the expression of opinion which I gave yesterday, but I feel that I cannot allow this amendment to be submitted without again pointing out to the Senate what in my judgment are the disadvantages under which we would place ourselves as a legislative body. I asked yesterday, by way of interrogatory, so to speak: what is the basis for the very radical position which it is proposed to take in legislating ourselves out of the Civil Service Act? And since the discussion arose yesterday there has been mentioned in support of it only one particular case, which was not a glaring case, and which, one can readily understand, might arise under any appointive system. Outside of that particular case there has not been one example or fact cited upon which we could base such action as that which is proposed.

On the other hand, what have we enjoyed from the operation of the Civil Service Act since it has been in force? It seems to me that we have had all the advantages which must necessarily arise from legislation of that character, by which we delegated to a Commission the appointment of officers of this Chamber, and relieved ourselves of any responsibility in that respect.

Honourable gentlemen who have been in this House for some years can readily recall, if they send their memories back far enough, the very unpleasant duties that we had to exercise under the old system. The Senate, under the old system, was entrenched by all the evils of the patronage system, without the members of the Senate deriving from it any advantage. There was not a day when members of the Senate were not importuned by messengers, by subordinate officers of the House, and others, for an improvement in their positions, for appointments to vacancies, for increases of salary, or for the ventilation of abuses and grievances which they thought they laboured under. Our lives were harassed. I say that advisedly. On many occasions we had to discuss seriously the advisability of making it one of the rules of the House that any officer or servant of the House approaching a Senator with reference to an improvement of his position should stand discharged. That was discussed repeatedly. Notwithstanding that, honourable gentlemen, are we going back to a similar state of affairs? Are we going to submit ourselves to the importunities to which we were then subject? What are the advantages of doing so? I fail to see why that should be done. Let us assume that the Civil Service Commission is all that its critics and censors claim it to be; and from that I differ very much. But suppose that to be the case. How is our position to be improved? Are honourable gentlemen here yearning to appoint messengers and inferior officers of the House? Do they wish to be urged or importuned by the man in the street who wants a position in the Senate? Instead of seriously occupying their time in the transaction of public business, do they wish to have it constantly taken up, as it used to be, in listening to complaints and in dealing with small, uninteresting, and humiliating matters which may be presented to them from time to time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And wrangles.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I venture to say, honourable gentlemen, that we spent more of our time years ago, before the introduction of the Civil Service Act, in dealing with matters of that kind than in dealing with the more important subjects which came before us for our consideration as a legislative body.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, surely not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend from Kings and Albert was not here at the time. I venture to say that if he had had the experience through which most of us went some years ago he would be less ardent in suggesting this very radical change which is the subject of his motion to-day. I am not one to take exception for a moment to the improvement of legislation or to a departure from say well-established routine or practice, but I naturally do ask myself what good reason is there for the proposed amendment, and I do protest against our making a very substantial change unless there be some good reasons for it.

I have already pointed out that we are taking a very inconsistent position. I do not mean to say that we are precluded from retracing the steps which we have taken in former years in regard to this legislation; for the progressive mind must necessarily recede frequently from positions already taken. But we have consistently supported this Act from the time of its introduction in this House down to the present. The Senate has been a greater champion of the Civil Service Act than the House of Commons or any other body. I recall that last year, when the classification was referred to a Special Committee, a very representative Committee of the Senate, that Committee took the deepest interest in the measure, and my honourable friend from Kings and Albert, if my recollection is correct, was one of the greatest supporters of the Bill when it was before the Senate on that occasion.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, no.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In Committee—yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In Committee; that is my recollection. However, my honourable friend has a right to change his mind. But I remember very well suggesting, when the Classification Bill was before the Committee, that there should be more flexibility about it than there was. That was the outcome of suggestions made by one or two ministers from practical experience with reference to the application of the Act. But the Committee were inflexible, and decided that the Bill should be made as rigid as possible so as not to admit of any elasticity whatever. I remember that distinctly. I had no desire to intrude my opinions at that time upon the Committee, but I did take the liberty of suggesting to some few members that in my judgment the Bill was too rigid, and would suffer from that rigidity if some flexibility were not imported into it by allowing ministers and others charged with the administration of the departments to exercise their discretion to some extent, but not without the intervention of the Civil Service Commission. However, I remember, as the Journals of the House and Hansard will show, that when the Bill was brought from the Committee to the House it had many champions, and my recollection is that not a word of dissent was uttered against the Bill on that occasion. Therefore it seems to me that from the origin of this Bill in this chamber down to the present time, with the different amendments which have been made to it, the Senate has been the champion of the policy of the Civil Service being vested in the Commission; and up to the present time, with the exception of the one case referred to, the appointment of a translator, no abuse has been shown respecting this Act.

I cannot take my seat without saying a word as to the manner in which the Act has been administered by the Commission. When we take into consideration that this was an experiment of a most radical character, that it involved the whole patronage system being attacked and practically wiped out, one can very well understand and appreciate the overwhelming task which faced the Civil Service Commission. They had to deal with something like 60,000 appointees, I understand; my recollection is that that is approximately the number of Civil Servants in Canada. They had naturally to face the opposition not only of members of Parliament, who had been accustomed to exercise patronage on a lavish scale, but also of organized political parties and other bodies throughout the country. They had to face an army of critics to which I believe no other public measure could possibly have been subjected, not only during its discussion, but even since the Act was put into operation. Yet I venture to assert that no public duty could have been more satisfactorily discharged by any public commission than has been the case with the Civil Service Commission, although there are isolated instances where perhaps proper discrimination was not shown. I speak with personal knowledge of the gentlemen who constitute the Commission; and, while I have not seen eye to eye with them in respect to my own appointments, yet I know that those gentlemen have loyally and capably applied themselves to administering this Act; and I for one, who did not view with very sanguine expectation the successful administration of the Act, have had to express my surprise at the success it has met with throughout the entire country. I venture to say that the entire press of the Dominion is to-day in support of the policy embodied in the Civil Service Act, and that the Senate, in moving to take itself out of the Act, will be placing itself in a position of defiance against public opinion, against public policy, and against everything that makes for the building up of a desirable public service in the government of the country.

I therefore regret very much that I cannot view this matter in the same way as my honourable friend who has moved this amendment and those who have expressed their support of it. The very fact of my honourable friend amending his amendment, as he has already done this afternoon, demonstrates how completely successful the Civil Service Act has been in dealing with all the ramifications of the public service, because it has extended to the Civil Servants benefits and advantages to which exception cannot be taken, but which my honourable friend is importing into his amendment.

Now, if the Senate wishes practically to say that the Civil Service Act shall not apply to itself, so far as its public servants are concerned, what remains to justify us in taking the step we are now considering? Is it that the Senate may be simply charged with the responsibility of appointing and controlling a small body of messengers and inferior officers?—because the superior officers of the Senate are practically appointed by the Governor in Council. I ask myself the question, honourable gentlemen, and I ask you the question, if it is worth while, if that be the object which we have in view? Is it worthy of the Senate of Canada, and are we justified in placing ourselves in opposition to a public policy so desirable as that involved in the Civil Service Act?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I wish to set myself right in the eyes of the leader of the Government in this matter. He stated that I was in favor of this measure in its inception. I was not. As I remember it now—and I remember the discussion—I was one of the very few members who spoke against the Bill; but after it became law, having being appointed on the Committee, I was anxious to do everything I could.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the stage to which I referred; I know my honourable friend did take that position.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Because I believe in the rule of the majority, and the majority having decided that the Civil Service Commission should have charge of all these matters, I, as a good subject of the realm, in duty bound, bowed to the wishes of the majority and said no more in opposition. In the Committee I tried to give the Commission as strong a Bill, that is, as much power, as was possible, so that they might not have their hands weakened by anything in the Bill which would prevent them from carrying out the desired legislation that had been passed.

I cannot quite believe that the picture of former years in the Senate is quite as black as has been painted by the leader of the Government. In a sense it is a very strong arraignment of the character of the men who compose the officials and employees of the Senate. To listen to the honourable leader one would think that the chief thing those officials did was to lie in wait for the innocent and unwary Senators as they passed through the corridors of the building, get them into a corner, and importune them for increases of salary or promotions. Surely the business of the country was not neglected during that time. I was not a member of the Senate then, but as a member of the other House since 1900 I kept in somewhat close touch with the doings of the senior branch of the legislature, and I felt that some good work was being done all the time in the Senate—some good legislation was being passed and other good legislation was being initiated. Therefore I do not think the honourable leader of the Government should have made such a sweeping charge as he did in saying that the Senate was unable to transact the necessary business of the country that came before it by reason of the time of its members being taken up by importunities of officials. It is very easy to get rid of that sort of thing. I have never been importuned by any official for an increase of pay, or a promotion, or anything of that sort, and if we revert to the old order I do not think such evils will follow as the honourable gentleman has stated.

I think we have now had enough discussion about this, and for my part I do not propose to carry it any further. I only wish to set myself right, and to say that I am not actuated by any feeling against the Commission. I think the gentlemen who compose that Commission have done wonderfully well, considering the magnitude of the task before them. I know two of them well, and those two had considerable parliamentary experience which fitted them well for the task they had before them. Knowing those gentlemen, I know they are actuated solely by a desire to do what is best for the Service and for the country, and I know they have the ability. I wish to pay that tribute to those gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Now that my honourable friend has taken up this matter, it might be well to refer to the experience we had in this House in the passing of the Bill in 1908. I do not think the members of the Senate realized what was done under that Act until it was put in force. I think the older members of the Senate can remember that after the Act of 1908 came into force we had a considerable number of discussions in the House over the question as to who really exercised authority under that Act, and whether the Internal Economy Committee of the Senate had anything to do with the staff of the Senate. Those discussions took up considerable time and sometimes were not altogether pleasant.

Then, honourable gentlemen will remember that when the Bill of last session was before the House, we arranged that the question of the promotion of the officials of the Senate should be left in the hands of the Senate. I think that also applied to the House of Commons, which I understand is in a different position from the Departments in regard to this matter. There was some objection taken by the honourable gentlemen in this chamber to the clauses of the Bill, and also to the classification, and when the Bill was before the Committee of the whole Senate an attempt was made to give Ministers and Deputy Ministers more power in the matter of appointments in the Departments, and I rather think that my honourable friend the leader of the Government was in favour of that.

The Senate, therefore, has shown considerable dissent from the Bill as it stands at present. I think there were a large number of members of the Senate who would have liked to change some of the clauses of the Bill from what they are in the present Act I think I am right in stating that the Department over which my honourable friend the leader of the Government presides is not at present controlled by the Civil Service Commission in the same way as some other Departments. After what my honourable friend has said in favour of the Civil Service Act to-day, and the commendatory way in which he has spoken of the Civil Service Commission, I presume he will be quite ready to rectify that omission at once and put the matter straight.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no; because those are all temporary employees in the Department to which I belong. They are being demobilized at the present time —at least not all, but they will be shortly. It was because they were not permanent appointees that they were not put under the Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: With regard to what has been said about the work of the Civil Service Commission, I think everybody agrees that the members of that Commission have had very heavy work placed on their shoulders, they have had a tremendous number of difficulties to overcome, and they have shown themselves capable of handling the situation to a very great extent; but I think that the Senate is justified in desiring to keep the control of its own staff in its own hands. As I pointed out yesterday, we want to make a distinction between the employees of Parliament and the employees of the Government. That is one reason why I favour the amendment moved by my honourable friend. Further, the Order in Council which I read to the House yesterday shows, I think, that the Government consider that the Civil Service Commission have too much work at present, and are therefore taking the task of reorganizing the departments out of their hands and assuming charge of it themselves, under a committee of the Privy Council. To my mind, all those different points are arguments in favor of the Senate taking the action proposed under this amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: I would like to know from the leader of the Government if the men engaged in this House are to go under the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I expressed my views yesterday, and to-day I feel stronger than I did then as to the conclusion I drew. I feel that we are placing ourselves in a very inconsistent position before the country when, after passing an Act covering the whole Civil Service, we now declare that it is unsatisfactory in its operation for the Senate of Canada. Having reached this conclusion, I must stand by the position which the honourable leader of the Government takes, and vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would be very glad to support this amendment were it not for the views and opinions expressed by the honourable member who has just taken his seat, with which I agree.

Having only two years ago adopted this whole Civil Service measure after due consideration, I think it would be a reflection on our judgment, either at that time or at this time, to make a change after so short a period of experience. While I think it would be a great deal better for the efficient carrying out of the work of the Senate for us to have control of our employees and officials, under the circumstances I do not think it would be advisable for the Senate to adopt an amendment which would make the Senate the sole exception to the policy of the Government.

I do not want to go into the question of patronage and that sort of thing. That has already been discussed. While we may have different views on that question we all understand it. But I wish to make my position plain. If some understanding or arrangement were made to the effect that the proposed amendment should be adopted by both Houses—and I think it might very well be—I should be very glad; but I think it would not be advisable for this House to endeavour to act by itself.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Fowler was agreed to: yeas, 22; nays, 21.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Under the circumstances may I ask what is the duty of the Chairman? Has he the power to give a casting vote?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It is not a tie; the amendment has been carried by a majority of one.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: On the other hand, if the Chairman voted it would be a tie.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Order.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Chairman, I draw attention to the fact that His Honour the Speaker did not vote.

Section 2 as amended was agreed to.

On section 3—appointments of Civil Servants who resigned and went on active war service overseas:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend say whether there are many civil servants who come under this clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that there are comparatively few; but there are some cases in which civil servants resigned their positions and went to the war, and who upon their return could not be reinstated.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Will this provide for such cases?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: Before this clause is carried, may I mention a case which I have in mind of an employee in the Service who went overseas. This young man was employed in the School Lands Division of the Dominion Lands Branch. His position was that of a clerk bookkeeper. The Classification took place subsequent to his enlistment. While he was overseas certain appointments were made, and when he came back he found that under the Classification he was junior to some of the employees who had been taken into the Service during his absence and rated as Senior Account Clerks. This gentleman's chief took up the matter, and if I may be permitted to do so I should like to read from a memorandum submitted by his chief to the Deputy Minister, as follows:

> I am forwarding you herewith "Duties of Office" card prepared by Mr. H. J. Davidson of this office—

Mr. Davidson is the young man to whom I refer.

> —and would request that you be good enough to forward this on to the Organization Branch in order that they may have same before them when dealing with his case.
>
> As you will remember, at our Conference with the Commission a few days ago, I requested Dr. Roche to give the case of Mr. Davidson favourable consideration.
>
> I might state on his behalf that, before he went overseas, his duties were not so important as they are at present. Upon his return to work, however, I placed him on the ledgers doing the same work as others who are classed as Senior Account Clerks, and I find Mr. Davidson fully as competent as any of the other clerks employed on this work, and more efficient.

Had he not been called for Active Service, he no doubt would have received in the Reclassification the position of Senior Account Clerk, as the work he is performing entitles him to this Classification, and I strongly recommend that he be granted the classification of Senior Account Clerk instead of Clerk Bookkeeper as he is now classified.

(Signed) W. T. Rollins.

It appears to me that the fact of this young man having enlisted for overseas service was detrimental to his advancement in the Department, and I think in a case of that kind some special consideration should be given.

Hon. M. CROSBY: The case should be taken up.

Hon. Mr. G. V. WHITE: The case was taken up, but apparently nothing has been done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has the Minister been apprised of it?

Hon. G. V. WHITE: A letter was written to the Deputy Minister, and I myself told the Deputy Minister.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What has the Deputy Minister done?

Hon. G. V. WHITE: I understand from him that he has taken the case up with the Civil Service Commission. I got in touch with Mr. Davidson this morning and asked him if anything had come of it, and he said that up to the present time, as far as he knew, nothing had been done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If you will put the facts on Hansard I will direct the attention of the Minister to them.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—classification deemed to have come into force on 1st April, 1919:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend give us definite information as to why this change is made? What representations were made to the Government to bring it about?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When the Civil Service Commission entered upon the reclassification of the Service, it was anticipated that the work would be completed in the early part of 1919, and the Classification was based upon that assumption. The work proved to be more overwhelming than was anticipated, however, and consequently a greater period of time was consumed, and it was not until the spring of 1920 if my memory serves me right, that the Classification was concluded. In the meantime a large body of public servants who had been anticipating an increase in their salaries, and so on, had ceased to make further demands upon the Government, expecting that the Classification would be retroactive to the 1st of April, 1919. The Bill was so prepared, but when it came into the House of Commons Hon. Mr. Maclean thought it would be better to make it operative from the 1st of April, 1920. But apparently many Ministers had committed themselves to its coming into operation on the date which I have mentioned, and an Order in Council was passed on December 3rd, 1919, to that effect. It seems to me that Hon. Mr. Maclean, who had charge of the Bill in the House of Commons, and who gave instructions that it was to be amended and to be made applicable only after the 1st of April, 1920, must have overlooked the Order in Council. The Order in Council reads as follows:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a memorandum, dated 21st November, 1919, from the Minister of Justice, reporting upon reference to him of certain memorandum, prepared in the Post Office Department in regard to the application of the new Classification schedules to the Civil Service, that in his view the effect of section 13 of the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919, as amended in the Senate and adopted by the House of Commons, is that the classification thereby ratified and confirmed, will not become effective with regard to persons in the Civil Service at the time of the coming into force of the Act, until the 1st day of April next, except such persons as may have been or are appointed or promoted to any position in the Civil Service after the 1st day of April last, and that the class of persons included in this exception are entitled to be classified and paid in accordance with the provisions of the said classification from the date of their appointment or promotion.

The minister observes that the effect is, therefore, that persons appointed or promoted after the 1st of April last, are given preferential treatment over those appointed or promoted on or previous to that date.

The minister is unable to perceive any sound basis for this distinction as it appears to him that if the Classification is to relate back to the date of appointment or promotion in the case of persons appointed or promoted on or after the 2nd April last it should contain not less favourable provision with regard to persons who were in the Service previous to that date.

Moreover, it seems to him that in view of certain assurances which were given in the House of Commons and in correspondence passing between the Civil Service Commission and the several departments of Government there was some justification for the assumption which appears to have existed in the Civil Service that the classification schedules when ratified would become operative as of the 1st of April, 1919, and further it is to be observed that the Honourable Mr. MacLean at the special session of Parliament recently prorogued, made the statement that this matter would in the recess receive due consideration by the Government.

In view of this situation the Minister entertains the view that the Government should take such action as lies within its power to provide a remedy.

The minister, therefore, recommends that the Government do undertake to submit such legislation and to ask for such appropriations at the session of Parliament as will provide for the application of said classification schedules to the Civil Service generally as of the 1st April, 1919.

The Committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

This Order in Council will make clear the reasons which have led the Government to commit itself to the Classification coming into force on the 1st of April, 1919. Of course, the amounts receivable by the different employees of the Government will be as shown by the Classification; that is to say, the Classification will determine what each man will receive. If he has been classified for a higher salary than he has been receiving, that salary will date back to the 1st of April, 1919. Under the circumstances it seems to me not unreasonable that this should be done.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There is another question that I should like to ask. Last year we confirmed the Classification that was drawn up by the experts of the Civil Service Commission. Are there any amendments to that Classification to be confirmed this year?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. The Classification is in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. They can vary it as circumstances may warrant them in doing. It is under the power vested in the Civil Service Commission that the duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons will be modified and the officers of this House placed upon a parity with the officers of the House of Commons.

Section 5 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Section 33 of the Act reads as follows:

The Commission shall by regulation prescribe working hours for each portion of the Civil Service, and there shall be kept and used in each branch of the Civil Service a book, system or device approved by the Commission for preserving a record of the attendance of the employees.

I move to add, as clause 6 of the Bill the following:

The Civil Service Act of 1918 is hereby amended by inserting therein, immediately after section 33, the following section;

33a. The following days and none other shall be the holidays to be observed in and by the Civil Service: 1. Sundays; 2. New Year's Day; 3. Good Friday; 4. Easter Monday; 5. Victoria Day; 6. The birthday of the reigning Sovereign or the day fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council for the celebration thereof; 7. Dominion Day; 8. Labour Day; 9. Christmas Day; 10. Any day appointed by proclamation of the Governor in Council to be observed as a general fast or thanksgiving, or as a holiday.

At the present time many holidays are being observed to the great financial loss of the country. It is thought that if there are nine holidays, in addition to the ordinary holidays granted each summer, the Civil Servants will fare quite as well as people in ordinary occupations in the outside world, and there will not be the great loss to which the country is now put by reason of so many holidays being observed. The honourable member from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) seconds this motion.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Before the honourable gentleman sits down I should like to ask him how many days this cuts off?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have not estimated. Quite a few.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Would it cut off nine?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know just how many?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Should we not have a list of those holidays, so that we may know what we are doing?

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do honourable gentlemen not think there are quite enough, when there are nine holidays outside of Sundays? There are 52 Sundays and nine other holidays; that is 61 days. There are also three weeks of statutory holidays. That would be 18 more days, or a total of 27 days besides Sundays.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: And Saturday afternoons.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Fowler) pardon me for intervening? I may say to the House that my honourable friend who has just moved the amendment spoke to me about it, and I have taken it up with the Civil Service Commission. I understand it is their opinion that this should be done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Fowler) asked me a question. I have not decided in my own mind how many holidays should be observed, but I wanted to know what days we have been observing, so that we might know exactly what we are cutting off.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It takes off four or five days.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the case of a day observed by the Commons and the Senate as a holiday, and observed throughout the country as a banking holiday, it would be quite natural to allow it to the Civil Service. Not having the list before me, I simply wanted to know what we are cutting off, so that we may be au fait.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) makes a perfectly reasonable request. If we are called upon to cut off some of the holidays which are now statutory, we should know what we are cutting off.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You know that there are nine days observed as holidays that are not cut off, and there are eighteen granted as vacation. That is a total of twenty-seven, besides Sundays. If you subtract that total from the number of days that are now observed, the residue will be the information you require.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Would that amendment interfere with sick leave being granted?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I observe that some religious holidays that used to be observed are to be cut off. I have not the list of those. I know the Senate sat twice on Ascension Day—last year and the year before—while the Commons did not sit. This year we decided not to sit. I would like to know before this amendment is adopted what holidays used to be observed as Government holidays and bank holidays, so that we may know whether they are observed generally throughout the country or not.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They are not all generally observed throughout the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If they are observed throughout the country I do not see why the Civil Service employees should not have the advantage of them.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I made inquiry as to this when I received notice of the amendment, and I find that the other holidays are: the Epiphany, Ash Wednesday, Ascension Day, All Saints' Day and Conception Day. These are holidays under the Bills of Exchange Act in the province of Quebec, but they are not Civil Service holidays. There is no statutory enactment of which I know giving specific holidays to the Civil Service. The Commission has been under the difficulty of determining what holidays the Civil Service should take. Apparently, in accordance with custom, the public offices from the Atlantic to the Pacific have been closed on certain of those holidays, the public being thus subjected to great inconvenience and the country to very substantial loss. To close up public offices on any holiday of this kind costs this country in the vicinity of $400,000 a day, in addition to the inconvenience suffered by the public in being obliged to wait for the offices to open. For instance, I recall a recent holiday when a large delegation had to wait at one of the hotels because the public offices were closed. It was Ascension Day, I think, and the public offices should have been open. Commercial and other business was going on just the same as usual. The amendment which has been proposed coincides with the view of the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This amendment is sprung upon the Senate. I can only say this. When the various provinces entered Confederation their customs were to be preserved. Some holidays have been observed in Quebec which have not been observed in other provinces. I cannot support that amendment without ascertaining what effect it will have on the holidays which have been observed in our province in accordance with custom and tradition but not in the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Do I understand that if we pass this amendment there will be no authority to grant a holiday on any day that is not specifically mentioned in it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It can be done only by proclamation of Council.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But it would not be possible, for instance, to grant to Civil Service employees in the province of Quebec a holiday that is generally observed in that province?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is just the difficulty. As I have often stated, I would be very careful never to attempt to impose on any other province the manners and customs of my own province. In the same way I would not want to see any other province impose its manners and customs upon the people of Quebec. We had in this Senate a formidable fight over the application of the provisions of the Lord's Day Act, and the stand we took was that each province should be free to exercise control over its own population. We succeeded in having inserted in the Act a clause whereby no proceedings could be started under the Lord's Day Act without the consent of the Attorney General of the province. Likewise in the present instance, if there is any holiday which the province of Quebec observed before Confederation and has observed to this day, and which the Civil Servants in Quebec have enjoyed, I would be slow to accept an amendment that would vary the present conditions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will see the difficulty of discriminating amongst the different provinces with regard to such holidays as have been mentioned. What would my honourable friend do with regard to those persons whose homes are in Quebec and who are employed in Ottawa or in other parts of the Dominion? In the province of Quebec they have been accustomed to certain holidays. If my honourable friend's argument is good with regard to civil servants who are performing duties in the province of Quebec, it would be equally applicable to those who formerly resided in that province and now reside in Ottawa. The recognition of such a principle—if it may be called a principle—would dislocate the whole public service. The trouble is that you could not permit persons who had come from the province of Quebec and were residing in Ottawa or elsewhere, and whose duties were interrelated with those of other employees, to enjoy a holiday which others were not granted. I think that in this case the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission might well be accepted. The province of Quebec is represented on that Commission.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Fowler was agreed to.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Before the Bill is reported I desire to ask the Government what is their policy with reference to salaries of men and women doing the same class of work. My attention has been drawn to the case of a young lady in one of the departments who passed through college with the very highest honours as a mathematician. She has been for several years working in a department and drawing a fairly good salary. Under the classification she is put in a lower grade than all the men in the same branch of the department who are doing the same class of work, and whose qualifications, to put it mildly, are no better than hers. The only reason that can be found why she is put in a lower class is the fact that she is a woman and the others are men. I think myself that that is rather an injustice. A similar case occurred here in Ottawa the other day. Under like circumstances a school teacher resigned her position, and the school authorities of Ottawa were compelled by public opinion to reinstate her and give her the same salary as a man would have received for doing the same class of work. I would like to ask what is the policy of the Government in this connection?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No distinction or discrimination is made at all in the classification of employees of the Government. I might say it is sexless.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If that is the case, this young lady should get the same salary and be in the same grade as the others in the office who are doing the same class of work.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I know of an instance very similar to that mentioned by my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Turriff), in which promotion has not come to a woman who was much more capable than some in the office who have been promoted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, a difficulty has arisen with regard to the interpretation to be placed upon the word "ship," and I desire to move the following amendment:

Section 38a of the Civil Service Act, 1918, as enacted by section nine of chapter ten of the statutes of 1919 (second session), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following subsection:—

2. In this section the expression "ship of His Majesty" includes every description of vessel, however propelled, which is used in navigation or in the improvement of navigation, and which is the property of or chartered or employed by His Majesty, or the cost of which, or any portion of the cost of which, has been defrayed out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

This description is taken from the Canada Shipping Act, Revised Statutes, Chapter 113, section 2. This, Mr. Chairman, would be section 7.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This would result in taking a group of employees out of the control of the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, those in ships.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand that previously they came under the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Some did and some did not. It depended on the interpretation placed upon the word "ship;" and this amendment is to make it clear.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

INSPECTION AND SALE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 104, an Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. Hon. Mr. Crosby in the Chair.

On section 1—Sections prescribing sizes of apple barrels, fruit boxes, etc., penalty section, and section authorizing minister to appoint inspectors, etc., repealed:

Hon. Mr. BOYER: You say here:

All apple boxes manufactured in Canada, and all boxes containing apples packed in Canada, for sale in Canada, shall contain as nearly as practicable two thousand one hundred and seventy-four cubic inches:

How are we going to find that out?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Regulations will provide how that shall be determined. May I read the memorandum prepared by the Department on this particular question, as it is largely technical:

The dimensions and specifications of the various fruit packages contained in these sections were unanimously approved and adopted at a Conference of representatives of the Fruit Growers' Association of the various provinces, held in Ottawa, March 26th, 1918, and were included in Bill 108, passed May 24th, 1918; but it has since been demonstrated that, owing to the highly technical character of these sections, which have to do with the dimensions, capacity and quality of material of some of the containers, manufacturers have found it difficult and, in some cases, impossible to meet all the requirements.

The specifications and dimensions of the standard barrel are practically the same as the standard barrel of the United States. These work out very satisfactorily in Ontario and Quebec and, with a stave of 28½ inches in length and a circumference of 64 inches, give a cubic capacity of 7,056 inches; but in Nova Scotia where soft wood is used both for heads and staves, it is necessary to increase the circumferences and length of staves in order to secure the legal capacity (7,056 cubic inches).

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I presume it is not really contemplated to make any great change in the barrel?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not as to the shape of the barrel, so long as it contains that number of cubic inches.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is difficult to see how they are going to arrive at that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will see, further on in the Bill, that regulations may be made by the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Could not the height and circumference of the barrel be given, so that it could be known whether it contained 7,056 cubic inches?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The difficulty is that in Nova Scotia, owing to the class of wood which they use in making their barrels, they cannot be made as in the other provinces, though they can make a barrel containing the same number of cubic inches; therefore it cannot be a matter of circumference or height of the barrel. The difficulty to-day is that the dimensions are arbitrary: barrels must be a certain height and certain circumference, and the Nova Scotia wood does not permit of that being done.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It seems to me the inside measurements of the barrel might be given.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is 7,056 cubic inches.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: But the inside capacity of the barrel would not be affected by the nature of the wood; it would only require a difference to be made in the length of the staves and the size of the head.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The swell in the centre is likely where the difference comes in.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: A few years ago there was a similar Bill in which a cylindrical barrel was mentioned.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is right.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: It may be right, but what is a cylindrical barrel? We never hear of a square barrel.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: All steel barrels are cylindrical.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In regard to baskets, I might read from the memorandum handed to me by the Department:

It will be noted in Section 326 that the specifications for the Climax baskets are of a highly technical character, and it has been found practically impossible for manufacturers, who use machinery of a somewhat delicate mechanism in parts, to meet the requirements, especially as regards the radius at corners. The greater portion of these baskets are still being made by hand, but there are several manufacturers operating machines, and unless a change is made in the specifications these manufacturers would be placed at a great disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: In new section 325, subsection 2, the words "four-fifths of a quart" mean that the consumer is to be done out of one-fifth of his quart of berries.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No, the sizes are the same in the old Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It gives the cubic inches as nearly as practicable.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It says four-fifths of a quart. I see a good deal of complaint in the newspapers about that.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Who is going to travel with a quart measure to test the boxes?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the contents are the same. The difference is simply in the shape of the basket.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I am not opposing the Bill, which probably goes in the right direction; but I observe the new clause 330 provides a penalty not exceeding $50 for any violation of new section 325. In the city of Halifax berries are brought down and sold sometimes in the market and sometimes at houses of residents. They are sold very largely by coloured women, and generally by people who are not very well up in the law. Further, the baskets in which they put their blueberries, strawberries, raspberries, or whatever they may be, are made by themselves, and there is no desire on the part of those poor people to cheat anyone; yet under that section, if one of those coloured women happened to make a mistake in the basket, and it was not of the correct dimensions, she would be liable to this heavy fine, and not being able to pay would be liable to imprisonment. I have no amendment to propose, but I draw attention to that particular point. I do not know whether there should be imprisonment or a minimum fine.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not desirable that there should be a minimum, because it is merely a nominal fine. This has been the law for a great many years.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Supposing that by some misfortune the box did not contain a full quart, would the vendor be fined just the same?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not think so, in such a case.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is there any good reason why a box that purports to contain a pint should do so, while a basket which is supposed by the public to contain a quart contains only four-fifths of a quart?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the present law.

Hon. Sir LYNCH-STAUNTON: I understand that is a new regulation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The poor consumer suffers, of course.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might say that the four-fifths and two-fifths provisions have been in operation for years, and the only thing that is new is the pint. That is put in on account of British Columbia conditions; the pint is the quantity adopted in the United States, consequently British Columbia growers will have to meet competition there by putting their berries or currents up in pints.

Hon. Mr. DANIELS: Does that mean Imperial pints? I do not think that they use Imperial pints in the United States.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The interpretation clause will govern that.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Could we not put in a clause that no inspection will be complete unless all the boxes are turned upside down? As a rule all the fine fruit is on the top, the second layer is passable, and the third and fourth do not amount to a row of pins. We ought to instruct our inspectors to turn the boxes completely over, and that no inspection will be complete unless that is done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That applies to the human race generally: I think the good ones are usually on top.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL, 1919.

FIRST READING.

Bill 135, an Act to amend the Railway Act, 1919,—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 127, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners). Hon. Mr. Boyer in the Chair.

Section 1—definition—was agreed to.

On section 1, new section 382—Minister may rent and equip premises for hospitals:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend tell us whether the Government have any hospitals in connection with this Act, or whether they use provincial hospitals?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Government had ten hospitals in connection with this Act, but four are now being administered by the Department. It was found that the sick mariners can be more advantageously dealt with in the general hospitals of the different Provinces than by maintaining separate institutions at very great expense, as those hospitals have all the advantages of first-class equipment.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: While I agree perfectly with the general policy of the Bill as to the maintenance of hospitals for sick and distressed seamen, I think the price per ton to be paid for the use of hospitals should not be advanced from one and a half cents to two cents in certain cases. Where ships do not put men in the hospitals the charge might be deemed excessive, on account of the very large tonnage of vessels now, which makes them entirely out of proportion to what formerly existed. Where a vessel does not put men in a hospital they have to employ a physician; then they have to pay the tax to the hospital, and if men be put in the hospital they have to pay for their maintenance there. That would be three charges. In view of the very large tax upon shipping, amounting to $200 in the case of large ships, I think when they do not put men in the hospital the tax should be one and a half cents, and if they do put men in the hospital they should be charged two cents. That could be easily collected when the application is made through the custom house for the admission of seamen, and the one and a half cents exacted on the tonnage would go to the support of the hospital, or the sum that is to be paid to the provincial authorities for the use of the hospital. I think that would be acceptable to vessel owners and those who have to pay the taxes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The difficulty of adopting a moving tax of that kind is quite apparent. There would be no fixity about it, and it is impossible to estimate what the expenditure would be under the changed conditions to which my honourable friend refers. I might point out that previous to Confederation these hospitals were maintained by the Imperial authorities, and that the tax was 2 cents a ton. That tax continued down to 1908. In 1908-9; it was reduced to 1½ cents a ton. Since that time a substantial deficit has arisen; consequently we are reverting to the former rate. I need not point out that shipping rates have increased during the period which has been mentioned, and that the cost of maintaining hospitals has increased in many instances 100 per cent. I know the experience of the Department with which I have to do has been that, whereas at the beginning of the war we were paying a certain daily rate for patients in the hospital, to-day we are paying 100 per cent more. That is the difficulty confronting the Government, and, notwithstanding that increase, we are simply reverting to the tax which prevailed from before Confederation down to 1908. For the assurance of my honourable friend I might say that no unreasonable tax will be imposed. If it is ascertained that a larger amount than is really necessary is being collected for the sick mariners, the tax will be reduced. There is no desire on the part of the Government to have any excess in hand by reason of now fixing the tax at 2 cents. Under the present law, $75,000, I think it is, would be collected. The Estimates for the year will be $90,000, and we have to collect the difference. This is largely an experimental measure, and it is estimated that the deficit of $15,000 can be made up.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are there similar taxes in foreign ports?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I have no doubt that the leader of the Government feels perfectly certain that what he has stated is accurate, and I think that probably it is accurate in a way; but I notice that during a discussion in another place the Minister who had charge of the Bill admitted that up to 1919 there had been a surplus from this tax, and that it was only during the current year that there had been a deficit. I think it is a pity that the Government should have undertaken to go back to the old rate of taxation.

Things have changed a good deal since 1908. The practice of shipmasters coming to ports like Sydney and Halifax for bunker coal has grown to a very great extent indeed. If a steamer goes into either of those ports—say a steamer of 10,000 tons—under this Bill she would be obliged to pay a tax of $200, and would be getting practically nothing for it. That is a serious consideration. But when a ship does not enter, but simply puts into port, it does seem to me unreasonable that this tax should be levied. If the ship enters at the port, and therefore her crew come under the operation of the law, it may be well enough. Honourable gentlemen do not seem to think that this is a matter of any consequence, but it is a matter of very considerable consequence. We are trying to build up the trade of the Dominion ports. The effect of this measure, as far as it will have an effect, will be to prevent the building up of that trade. The tendency will be to shut out ships, particularly large ships, from ports like Sydney and Halifax; and, inasmuch as up to 1919 there has always been a surplus, I think the Government had better try to get along for another year or so and see whether they will not again have a surplus. Let me call attention to the fact that there is no such tax as this on lake shipping; it is only on sea-going shipping. I think the tax should be limited to ships which enter ports. If a ship is under stress, or puts in for coal—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might say to my honourable friend that by Order in Council ships bunkering coal are exempt.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The Order in Council can do a great deal, no doubt, but it cannot contravene the statute.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of just what does my honourable friend complain?

Hon. Mr. POWER: My complaint is this. In the first place, I do not think that a ship putting in for bunker coal or putting in in distress should pay a tax any more than ships on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence. My contention is that unless a ship enters the port she should not pay any tax. If she does enter she should pay the cent-and-a-half which she pays now.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It appears to me, honourable gentlemen, that the point at issue is just this: shall the ships pay for the care and treatment of their sick seamen or shall the country pay for it? If the ships do not pay for it the country will have to be taxed for it. Which will it be? It has always been the custom for the ships to pay the expenses. It was stated that there was a surplus of, I think, a couple of hundred thousand dollars, or something like that. That surplus was obtained, I understand, by not charging to the fund certain expenses that should have been charged to it, but by charging them to public works or something of that kind; so it was not a real surplus.

The necessity for the increased tax is one with which I am very well acquainted. The increase is necessary because of the increased cost of caring for these distressed seamen. It has been said that a 10,000-ton ship coming in has to pay a very large tax; but she has a very large crew, and she may leave in the port quite a number of the members of that crew who have to be looked after for an indefinite time at a very much greater cost than the amount of money which she has paid. If they were not all taxed some ships, of course, would get off scot free; but if the tax is paid by all of them, all sick seamen will be properly looked after. It might be that some ship on a particular voyage would not reap any special benefit, but that on some other voyage she would reap a benefit very much greater than the whole amount of the tax which she had paid. Either you have to call upon the shipping for it or you have to tax the people generally.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I think the honourable gentleman from St. John is in error. Ships now pay this tax computed on the tonnage. If men are left in the hospital, their board and attendance have to be paid for in addition. So my honourable friend's argument does not apply. Then, with regard to the difficulty of collecting the tax, which the minister suggested, ships could be charged 1½ cents, for instance, when they entered a port and paid their dues at the Customs House. If they applied for an order subsequently to admit seamen to the hospital, then the 2 cents could be charged. I will point out another reason why there was a deficiency in the amount received from shipping when contrasted with the amount paid for hospitals. During the war, at Halifax—I do not know about other ports—although there were hundreds of vessels coming in and seeking shelter, and waiting for a convoy, not a cent of dues of this kind was charged at all; so I suppose expenses were going on but nothing was being paid.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I point out to the honourable gentleman from Halifax how this works out? He pointed out the other day that this would bear very heavily on the larger ships. A statement has been placed in my hands showing the loss which the Government incurred in carrying out this work, particularly having regard to some of the larger ships. These figures are for 1919. The Montcalm, a ship of 5,371 tons, and 67 of a crew, paid $186.54, while the Government had to pay out $310.50 for the treatment of its sick mariners. The Empress of Japan, a ship of 3,039 tons, with 247 of a crew, paid a revenue of $136.77, while the Government incurred an expenditure of $254. The Empress of Britain, a ship of 8,023 tons, having 366 of a crew, paid $361.08, while the Government expenditure was $254. The Montfort, with a tonnage of 4,126 tons, and a crew of 67, paid $184.57, while the Government paid out $204.50. The Mottisfont, a ship of 4,228 tons, having a crew of 48 men, paid in revenue $190.26, and we paid out $670. I might go on all along the line, and show that the increase of the tax by half-a-cent is not very material, and it is very doubtful if it will meet the expenditure that the Government has been called upon to make.

As the honourable gentleman from St. John has pointed out, there was an apparent surplus because certain expenditures which were made and which should have been charged to capital account were charged against the Department of Public Works. Had those expenses been charged against this particular account, as they should have been, a very substantial deficit would be shown.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The ships named are all passenger ships, and not at all of the class of ships which I have indicated. They were running to the port, and they probably had returned troops on board, Furthermore, possibly the Government had the whole expense and the hospital had not made its claim on the ships for the maintenance of these people in the hospitals. That is a very important difference. I am only speaking of the casual vessels.

[Hon. Mr. ROCHE.]

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: There is no one who knows better than the honourable gentleman from Halifax that if there is an excellent principle upon which to base a tax, it is the principle embodied in this Bill. It is an excellent principle because it provides a guarantee to the shipping people that their men will be taken care of. The leader of the House has read a statement regarding some of the ships. If what the C. P. R. ships, for instance, pay for the treatment of sick seamen were all bulked together, there would possibly be a surplus, and rightfully so. But what is the position? The honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche), who has had a large experience, knows as well as I do that it would be a great disaster to the shipping interests for this tax to be removed altogether. The Montreal men want to have it removed. I cannot understand why. One or two of them spoke to me about it, and I asked them how the removal of the tax was going to be of advantage to them. It is a small tax. As the leader of the Government has said, from Confederation up to 1908 the tax was 2 cents; then it was cut down to a cent-and-a-half. We find now that the country has been keeping up four, or is it eight hospitals? But there is a changed condition, and, as the leader of the Government has said, if there is a surplus this year some adjustment can be made. My own judgment, as a man having some experience in shipping, is that instead of decreasing the rate of the tax, we should rather put it up another half-cent or one cent a ton.

The ships that come into a port nowadays are large and are equipped with wireless telegraphy. A captain coming into Halifax or any other large port with a ship of 5,000, 10,000 or 15,000 tons and with from 200 to 500 men, can send in notice that he has a certain number of sick men on board. My idea is that it would be well to have a doctor appointed at each of the principal ports, so that when this wireless message came in the doctor would go on board the vessel and be able to see how many of the men were really sick; for it frequently happens that men on board a ship pretend to be sick when they are not sick at all. Under the present regulations, the agent goes to the custom house, enters his sick and pays the sick mariners' fees. Then he gets a certificate from the collector of customs to the effect that there are a certain number of men who are sick. During the whole time the ship is in port, if any man has his leg broken or meets with some other accident, he is taken into hospital and is cared for, and when the ship is leaving, if the man is not ready to go to sea, the ship pays him off and the hospital continues to take care of him. This is a great guarantee to seamen as well as to ship owners. In my judgment there is no tax imposed on a ship for anything that is of greater assistance to the ship and the mariners.

Montreal men have come and spoken to me about this tax. I am sure the honourable member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) will agree with me that it would certainly be a great disadvantage to abolish it. I do not know how we could do without it, because ships would continue to come into port with sick men on board. The conditions nowadays are not like those prevailing years ago. You must take very great care of your men and see to it that they have proper hospital accommodation and doctor's care. It would be impossible for the captain of the ship to attend to such matters and at the same time to transact the business he has to do. In the old days when sailing ships came into a port they were likely to stay for a month, but the ship that comes in now remains for probably only 10, 12 or 24 hours. A big ship calling at the port of Halifax and bound for New York or some other port may have one or two sick men on board, and these men must be cared for. It is a great relief to be able to go ashore and hand these men over to the hospital. It is also a great satisfaction to a man to know that he is going to an hospital that is properly equipped.

The principle of the Bill is an excellent one. The only point is as to the lowering of the tax. But two cents is a very small tax after all. As I said before, while a vessel may come into port and have to pay the tax although there are no sick men on board, it may happen that on the next trip the whole crew will be down with sickness. A few hundred dollars do not go very far in providing hospital accommodation, medical attention, medicines and other needs. That tax of two cents a ton provides for hospital accommodation, medical attention, and the medicine that is required. All that is covered by the two cents a ton, and the sick mariner who cannot take care of himself is cared for in the provincial hospital in just the same way as a citizen who goes into that hospital, and the accommodation and attention do not cost him a cent. So that, after all, the tax is not a heavy one.

The honourable leader of the Opposition asked me the other day when I was discussing this question why the immigration doctor, or the port doctor, could not do this work. The business of the port doctor is to board the ship and examine the crew as to contagion, but not as to anything else; and if he finds a contagious case on board the ship he orders it quarantined. The immigration doctor does not go on board the vessel until the port doctor has passed the ship; then he examines the passengers. That is his work.

I believe that it would be of great advantage to the shipping interests to provide a doctor at each of the great ports so that quicker and readier relief might be given to the seamen than they get under the present arrangements.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would remind my honourable friend that I have not advocated the abolition of the tax.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I know.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I have merely advocated the reduction of it in certain cases.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I only stated that the honourable gentleman would agree with me that it would not be well to abolish the tax. It is not a very large one. What I mean is that the principle of the tax is good and should be, I think, continued.

New section 382 was agreed to.

On new section 383—duty on ships:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move the following as subsection 7 of section 383:

(7) The Governor in Council may, if he see fit, by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette on or before the first day of December, 1920, fix a later date than that hereinbefore mentioned on and after which the said duty shall be levied and collected with regard to all or any class or classes of vessels which he may designate whose registered tonnage exceeds one hundred tons; provided that every vessel, whether subject to the provisions of this subsection or not, shall be liable to pay the same duty as heretofore until the date fixed by this Act or by such proclamation as the case may be on and after which she shall be liable to pay the duty imposed by this Act.

That is to say, it vests in the Governor in Council authority to fix a date later than the 1st day of December, 1920, for vessels over 100 tons. If that Order in Council is made, they shall pay the cent and a half a ton in the meantime, but after that date they shall pay the two cents.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That amendment, as I understand it, does not meet the situation as I presume honourable gentlemen from Montreal, if they were here, would wish to have it met. If I understand the Montreal position, it is that they want the tax abolished altogether, for the reason that, as they claim, Canadian vessels going into ports in the United States have to pay a tax of six cents a ton, whereas American vessels coming in here pay only two cents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They are quite willing that the Government should pay the entire shot. However, honourable gentlemen from Montreal who may wish to point out any alleged abuse of this legislation can do so on the third reading. The third reading will take place on Monday or Tuesday, and they will have an opportunity of doing it then.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand that the lake shipping in Ontario is not subject to this tax at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; no inland shipping, simply ocean-going vessels.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: As to the figures which my honourable friend read, regarding the money that has been paid out and what the ships themselves have paid in taxes, the situation could be met in another way by requiring each ship to pay its own expenses. I think that is the system that is followed in different ports with English ships. I speak subject to correction, because I have not been able to look into the matter very closely, but I understand that British vessels going into a port and having sailors that need to be cared for turn these sailors over to the consul, and he looks after the men while they are in hospital, and the full expense is charged back to the company owning the ship. In that way a tax of this kind is not necessary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Suppose a ship left fifty or sixty sick men at a certain port and did not call back again for some years; and suppose the ship changes hands in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there no means of reaching the owners of the ship?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We do not want an international difficulty to arise over the collection of a hospital bill.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to, and new section 383, as amended, was agreed to.

New sections 384 to 389, inclusive, were agreed to.

Section 2 of the Bill was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to and the Bill was reported as amended.

ADMIRALTY BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed the Senate went into committee on Bill 139, an Act to amend the Admiralty Act. Hon. Mr. Planta in the Chair.

On section 1—appointment of deputy judges:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, this Act, as I understand it, gives power to the Governor in Council to appoint a deputy judge in admiralty. It places the power directly in the hands of the Governor in Council under any conditions. In the Bill that we dealt with a short time ago respecting the Exchequer Court there were certain limitations under which the power might be exercised. I do not quite see why a difference is made between these two Bills. As I understand this Bill, it will give the Governor in Council the absolute power to supersede the judge in admiralty who is at present acting.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; there is only one judge in admiralty. But all local judges have this authority. The difficulty is that if a local judge should appoint a deputy judge, and through mental disability or otherwise should be unable to revoke the appointment, the deputy judge so appointed remains. This has happened, and the purpose of the amendment is simply to make provision for an alternative power of appointment and revocation. The local judges will continue to appoint their deputy judges just the same as heretofore, but the Governor in Council may intervene if any difficulty of the kind which has already confronted us should arise.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Is there any provision for the appointment of nautical assessors to sit with the judge under certain circumstances?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not familiar enough with the procedure to say.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: There used to be nautical assessors.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: And there are now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This legislation is due to a particular case which has arisen, and of which my honourable friend from Halifax is aware. This amendment seems to be the only solution.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The Bill, or something of this kind, is necessary, because the judge is not only incapable of acting, but is, I think, incapable of appointing a deputy. The only thing to which I would like to direct the attention of the honourable leader of the Government is that under this clause the deputy appointed by the Governor in Council is appointed, apparently, without any limitation of time.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The Governor may revoke the appointment, though.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The deputy might be left there for his lifetime.

Hin. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is necessary to have him there. It is simply a very minor appointment.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: It seems to me that the judge in admiralty should not have the power of appointing a substitute for himself. It is the bench of judges who ought to assign certain work to a certain judge or his substitute.

I may say in reference to a remark by the honourable gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) that the judge in admiralty generally associates with him on the case some ship master or some authority on the practical part of the ship.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

NORTHWEST GAME BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on Bill 151, an Act to amend The Northwest Game Act. Hon. Mr. Watson in the Chair.

On section 1—making close season for muskrats begin later to north of latitude 64:

Hon. Mr. POWER: This extends the operation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it extends the area farther north.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The power of the Governor General in Council to change the season applies to a great many other animals, I suppose, than muskrats?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The provincial authorities are invariably consulted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is done in conjunction with them?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So that there will be no conflict.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I thought that this Bill would probably deal with the Migratory Birds Act, but, looking at the title, I see that it does not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does this Bill apply simply to the territory north of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta? It is called the Northwest Game Act. I do not quite understand how far the powers extend.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Section 3 of chapter 36 of the statutes of 1917 applies only to the Northwest territories, and section 4 goes on to state what particular animals are to be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It does not apply to the Yukon?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

YUKON PLACER MINING BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill No. 152, an Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the object of this Bill is to enlarge the placer mining regulations of the Yukon territory. The principal amendment is in section 2, which is an amendment of section 91. It has as its object the enlarging of the area in which a discoverer may explore. It seems that in the Yukon territory there is a very large area of abandoned claims, and it is proposed that instead of an explorer being entitled to 1,500 by 500 feet, which I understand is the present area he is entitled to take up, he may apply for and secure exploring rights over five miles of territory. He will then apply to the Gold Commissioner for a license to explore on that particular area, and it will be reserved for the work which he may do thereupon.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How long will that be for?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It may be for three years; during each year he will have to expend $1,000 in the work of exploring, or development work, as the case may be. This class of territory has already been abandoned by miners, and it is believed that if this additional encouragement is given them it will result in a more thorough exploration being made on a large section of the placer ground in the Yukon territory. I might say that I have asked my honourable friend from Moosejaw (Hon. J. H. Ross), who was at one time Gold Commissioner and Governor of the Yukon, to give me his view on the Bill, and he has expressed himself favourably to it, and regrets that it does not go even further than it does. He says it is very much needed.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 156, an Act to amend The Customs Tariff, 1907.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it seems that at one time books, stereotypes, electrotypes, and products of that kind which were in languages other than English and French were placed upon the free list. It is now proposed—and I think my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) will enthusiastically endorse this legislation—that they shall be put upon the dutiable list the same as like articles in English and French.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: English and French books we pay duty on, but German we do not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Books and literature in other languages, and likewise the articles which I mentioned, were on the free list. The object was to promote education in languages other than those we employ in Canada. It is sometimes difficult to analyze the customs mind, so to speak, and we therefore wish to place them on an equality with the others.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This Bill, I understand, also deals with the question of the remission of the 7½ per cent duty. My honourable friend did not refer to that, but I think section 3 of this Bill deals with remission of that duty on those articles from which the duty was not taken off last year. I remember that at the time the Minister of Finance of that day was making his Budget Speech he referred to this duty, and estimated that he might have a considerable loss of revenue, from the fact that he took the 5 per cent ad valorem duty and the 7½ per cent off certain articles in the customs tariff. But, although the honourable gentleman at that time was apparently very much exercised lest we might suffer a diminution of revenue owing to his taking off this duty, I think the figures show that instead of the revenue decreasing, as he then estimated, it has considerably increased since that time. The figures as given by Sir Thomas White on June 5, 1919, show that the total revenue for the year ending 31st March, 1919, amounted to as much as 310 millions, and the customs duties of that year would amount to 147 millions. The estimated revenue from customs duties for the following year, 1920, he put at 145 millions, estimating that there would be a reduction in the revenue on account of the remission of the preferential tariff of 5 per cent and the partial repeal of the intermediate and general tariff of 7½ per cent under the Customs Tariff Revenue Act, and certain other remissions that he then made in the customs duties. I am glad to find, however, that up to the end of the year, 31st March, 1920, in place of the customs revenue falling down to 145 millions, as was estimated by the Minister of Finance at that time, the figures show that the customs revenue amounted to 168¾ millions. This, I think, is very satisfactory. I think it also shows the way the country is progressing when, instead of a reduction, we have an increase in customs revenue. Honourable gentlemen on the other side of the House are rather afraid of reducing the duties on articles coming into this country, but I think our customs tariff has arrived at a pitch where it would be very much to the benefit of the country generally that reductions in duties should be made, and I think the Government is to be congratulated on taking the duty off in this particular instance. The benefit to the whole country of reducing the tariff in this way will be very considerable, I think, apart from the fact that the figures I have quoted show a very considerable increase in revenue. In fixing a tariff for the purpose of raising a revenue the object is to arrive at a point where the reduction of duty will bring in the greatest amount of revenue. I think the experience of every country has been that where the tariff is too high you cut off trade in consequence, and instead of increasing you rather decrease the revenue. The figures I have given show the great benefit that can accrue to the country from a reduction of customs duties. Therefore I think I should congratulate the Government on the action they have taken in this particular case.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 157, an Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the object of this Bill is to reduce the business profits war tax of 1916. It involves consideration of the various Bills which we have passed from time to time, and looks to a very substantial reduction therein. Inasmuch as the graduated reduction which we propose making involves comparison with the different Acts, I prefer that we should postpone that until we go into Committee, when I can explain it in greater detail.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: On any business earning ten per cent on its capital no tax is paid. Upon profits exceeding ten per cent, and not exceeding fifteen per cent, do you pay on the first 10 per cent, or are they deducted?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Formerly it was 7 per cent: when 7 per cent was realized, then the tax was applicable. That is now increased to 10 per cent; the tax does not become applicable until that amount is earned.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Up to 10 per cent, by this Bill, nothing is paid?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: From 10 per cent up to 15 per cent profits the tax is 20 per cent?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The tax becomes applicable in a graduated form for the balance of the profits.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Then do they only start counting profits from 10 per cent up?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is from 10 per cent up, instead of 7 per cent as formerly.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I imagine it will be necessary to discuss the principle of the Bill in Committee; I suppose the Government will not object to that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am quite willing that that should be done. It may be said that it is to some extent an involved Bill, and I shall be very glad to have Mr. Breadner here. But the policy is a policy of reduction of taxation, and from what my honourable friend has said I judge that that policy would be rather popular.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Can you not introduce another Bill to reduce the cost of living?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We would very gladly do it if my honourable friend could suggest how to do it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY moved concurrence in the Second Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I have no doubt that the House will be interested in knowing that the Chairman of the Joint Committee (Hon Mr. Dennis) is not enjoying the robust health that we would all like him to have, but that is no reason why this report should not be adopted. I will call attention to one or two points:

> The Joint Committee takes pleasure in calling attention to the remarkable results which have been achieved in two and a half years by intelligent editorial supervision. For instance, comparing 1915-16, the last year of the old system, with 1918-19, the first complete year in which the Editorial Committee had jurisdiction over printing of departmental reports, it appears that the number of copies of such reports has been reduced from 325,265 to 151,425; the number of printed pages form 210,007,404 to 55,742,120; and the cost from $255,813 to $150,509.
>
> Similarly, with regard to supplementary reports, the number of copies printed in 1915-16 was 222,085, and in 1918-19, 56,080; the total number of printed pages in 1915-16 was 60,799,190; in 1918-19, 11,067,120; the cost in 1915-16 was $87,488; in 1918-19, $38,457. These comparative figures added together are: 1915-16, $255,813 and $87,488, a total of $343,201. 1918-19, $150,509 and $38,457, a total of $188,966.

This represents an annual saving, if the present policy be continued, of $154,335. Through the activities of the Editorial Committee several publications have been dropped, while many others, not coming within the category of departmental reports, have been greatly reduced in bulk. The economies already accomplished will, therefore, easily aggregate $250,000 per annum.

I think the record of that Committee entitles the Committee to a great deal of credit, and is one of which the members of this House may feel to a certain extent proud. I am happy to say that I think the moving spirits in bringing about this reduction have been from the Senate rather than from the more popular House. The report goes on to suggest such a line of action in the future as will make a further reduction in the expenditure for public printing and stationery. I am not very fond of talking on merely formal matters; but I feel that it would not be quite fair to the Joint Committee or to the Editorial Committee to pass this report without any special notice, and I feel that it is a duty to call attention to the good work that has been done.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

PENITENTIARY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 138, an Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a very short Bill, consisting of only three sections. The first section proposes to give authority to the minister to make regulations for the administration, management, discipline, and police of the penitentiaries. The next section proposes that when a warden is appointed he shall not be appointed for a specific penitentiary, but shall be sent to such penitentiary as the minister may appoint from time to time. Section 3 repeals the schedule of salaries. This is done because they now come within the classification of salaries under the Civil Service Act. I therefore move the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 131, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it is proposed to extend certain branches of what was formerly the Canadian Northern railway, and it is necessary to secure the authority of Parliament so to do. Section 2 of the Bill sets out explicitly what the extensions are to be.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I should like to ask the leader of the Government whether the lines authorized are new lines, independent of the Canadian Northern, or whether this simply extends the time for building certain lines belonging to the Canadian National railway?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that they are extensions of existing branches.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But this deals with new lines altogether. Are they extensions of branches which already exist?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A charter has to be secured covering the extensions. That charter has to be granted by Parliament just the same as if this road were being operated by the Canadian Northern Railway company. Notwithstanding the fact that the stock is controlled by the Government, they have to make application to Parliament just as an outside railway corporation would. These three extensions to present lines of railway in Saskatchewan and Manitoba are required, and there is an item in the Estimates providing for their construction. This Bill is the authority to build over the particular territory specified in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: These lines will really be built under the separate charters of the Canadian Northern systems to which they belong?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: As the present line in British Columbia is being built under the Canadian Northern Pacific railway charter?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Fowler for the adoption of the second report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the navigability and fishery resources of the Hudson bay and strait, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Daniel in amendment thereto:

That the said report be not now adopted, but that it do lie upon the table until the members of the Senate have been provided with copies of the evidence as taken before the said committee for consideration.

Hon. ROBERT WATSON: Honourable gentlemen, I moved the adjournment of the debate yesterday because I wished to make a few remarks upon this subject, which is not an entirely new one to this House. I probably occupy a somewhat peculiar position, inasmuch as I have lived some thirty-six years since I first took part in a Committee of the House of Commons in regard to the Hudson Bay railway. I think the criticism which has been directed towards this project is a little late in the day. Two Governments, two respective parties, have already come to the conclusion that a railway should be built, and it seems a little late now to consider whether or not the navigation of the bay and strait is feasible.

The criticism has been levelled against the report that it claims that navigation is open for a longer period than the evidence justifies. As a member of the Committee I want to say that I think the findings of the Committee are very moderate indeed in view of the evidence adduced. I will quote only two or three statements made by gentlemen who have been referred to. A statement was filed by Mr. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and among others whom he quotes is Captain Anderson. Captain Anderson reports:

The period during which vessels can enter Hudson strait with comparative safety may be taken to extend from July 15 to November 15, with an extension of a week at either end according to the season.

That, honourable gentlemen, is the testimony of Captain Anderson, who has been referred to as being unfavourable to this route. I will only quote what has been said by one more of these gentlemen, namely, Captain Bartlett. He is probably the greatest navigator of the northern waters that the Government ever sent out—one of the greatest of all the navigators of northern waters. He said:

I would consider navigation on the Hudson Bay route safe from the last of July to November; but with ships constructed to contend with the ice and with a good ice pilot on board could navigate the bay from early in July up to late in November.

As I say, in view of the action of the Governments of the past, I think it is now a little late in the day to consider whether or not it is advisable to go on with the scheme.

The question of navigation has been referred to, but I prefer to direct my remarks more particularly to the building of the railway. Two Governments of Canada, one Liberal and one Conservative, approved of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, and I think properly so. I say that even if not one bushel of wheat is shipped from the Hudson bay the building of that road is justifiable. It has opened up and is developing a very large territory which is capable of maintaining a very large population and producing a great deal of wealth. Some years ago, when the question was raised as to whether or not the Government was justified in building it, the then Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Frank Oliver, devised a scheme whereby funds could be secured for the building of the road. A certain tract of land was set aside which was to be disposed of by the Government to settlers for homesteads and pre-emptions at a certain price per acre. I have the figures as to the quantity of land set aside, the quantity sold, and the amount of money realized. In volume 2 of the House of Commons Hansard of 1909, page 2961, Mr. Lake, the present Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, then a member of the House of Commons, inquired:

It was understood by this House, I think, that the money to be expended on the construction of the Hudson Bay railway was to come from a special fund to be created by the sale of pre-emptions.

To which Mr. Graham replied: "Yes." I will not bother you with the details, but I wish to lay before you the fact that on the 23rd of March this year a memorandum was sent to Mr. Cory by the Chief of the Land Patents Branch, showing that the amount received on account of pre-emptions up to the 31st of December, 1919, was $12,277,699. The approximate amount to be received in the event of sales being completed is $14,000,000. The approximate area covered by the pre-emptions is 7,386.160 acres. Then, as to purchased homesteads, the amount received up to the 31st of December, 1919, was $3,095,171. The approximate amount to be received is $525,000. The approximate area covered by purchased homesteads is 1,131,680 acres. This means that a total of $15,372,870 has been received on account of these lands, and that when the payments are completed the total will be $29,897,870. It was the duty of the Government to build that road, and I think we have just cause to complain of the delay in its completion.

If the delay had been caused by the war there might have been some excuse for it, but at no period during the war was construction stopped.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: Where is this land that was sold? Is it alongside the road?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No, it is in the northern parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The people there will be specially benefited by the road. The delay has occurred since the cessation of the war. As a matter of fact, in the session of 1918 a vote was placed in the Estimates for the purpose of completing the laying of the track. Up to the present time about $14,000,000 has been spent on the construction of the railway, and about $6,000,000 on the harbour. The report of the Committee recommends that before anything further is done in the harbour thorough investigation should be made into the relative merits of Churchill and Nelson. I have no hesitation in subscribing to that proposition, because that is a matter that we do not thoroughly understand and upon which we are not thoroughly settled. According to estimates given before the Committee it will take an immense amount of money to make a safe harbour at Nelson. In Churchill we have a natural harbour that has been used by navigators for 250 years with no loss. The harbour has 60 feet of water, and we were informed by engineers who appeared before the Committee, and whose evidence is given in the Committee's report, that they believed that if the bottom, the hard pan and boulders, were loosened up, the harbour would be greatly extended by the inward and outward flow of the tide, which would take out the silt. However, it is considered that for the present the harbour is sufficiently large for the purpose of testing and demonstrating the navigability of the bay and strait.

The House is not taken by surprise in being asked to deal with this matter. I have looked up the Journals of the House of Commons for 1884. That is going pretty far back. In the year 1884 Mr. Royal, one of the members from Manitoba, asked for a Committee on the Hudson bay, and as a result an investigation was made which was similar to that of the Committe whose report is now before you. The summing up of the evidence secured at that time is as follows:

> If we sum up the evidence collected by the Committee as to the present condition of the navigation in Hudson's Bay and Strait, we find that the great majority of those who have been there, and consequently who know, reckon the duration of navigation in these waters at three and four months. For more than two hundred and fifty years, sailors have counted upon having an uninterrupted navigation of from two months and one-half to three months, and this without marine charts, without an accurate knowledge of these waters, without lighthouses, without a system of telegraphic communication, and without the aid of steam. It is not then an unwarranted belief, that with all the appliances now at the disposal of nautical science, this navigation will be prolonged for some weeks.

Amongst other statements made at that time by witnesses who gave evidence, I might read something which is known to probably a great many men. I am sure it must be known to the honourable member for De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who opposes this measure on every occasion. I may just here remark that I feel, and the Committee feel, rather flattered that we have had such strong opposition from that particular source, because we have reason to believe that he belongs to an organization that pretty well controls the shipping from Port Arthur east, and he apparently fears that this is one of the organizations being built by the Government that they cannot get into the merger, and they may have competition.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I think I am right in raising a point of order on that statement. The honourable member is imputing a motive, and a sordid motive too, to one of the honourable members of this Senate for the action he has taken. I would ask for your decision on that matter, Mr. Speaker; and if you decide that the point is well taken I think you should ask the honourable member to withdraw his statement.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I have no desire to impute any motives of that description, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I am of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and I would ask the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie to withdraw his statement.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I certainly will withdraw it. I wish to refer to the difficulties that presented themselves on the St. Lawrence river. I find in this report by Mr. Royal, Chairman of the House of Commons Committee:

> In 1716, Captain Vautrou wrote that of all known countries, the navigation of the Gulf of St. Lawrence was the most difficult and the most treacherous. From 1684 to 1730, the wrecking of seven large vessels, belonging to the King, in the Gulf was recorded; the loss of these vessels, loaded with merchandise of the most valuable description ,several times caused the most extreme embarrassment to the colony. Of three expeditions fitted out by England to seize upon New France, and sailing through the Gulf of St. Lawrence, only two were able to cast anchor in the harbour of Quebec. Everybody has heard of the disaster which overtook Walker's fleet in 1711.

I am sure that in any of the reports we have regarding the navigation of Hudson bay and strait there is nothing to compare with the reports made at that time on the navigation of the St. Lawrence. Time and experience and improved methods of navigation, which are referred to in that report, will no doubt assist the mariner in making his course through the Hudson bay and strait. As I said before, I think it is now too late in the day to discuss the navigation of the Hudson bay route. The Government of the country is committed to it, and what I would urge on this House and on the Government is the rapid construction and completion of the railway to Hudson bay. As I have stated, $20,000,000 have been spent on it up to the present time, and there are only about 92 more miles of rail to be laid to the bay.

As to the value of the country, I need only point to the mineral deposits that have been discovered as a result of the construction of that road and the consequent exploration of the country, which, in my opinion, would not otherwise have taken place. Millions of dollars worth of minerals have already been taken out of that area. The total length of the road from Le Pas to the bay is 424 miles. There are 332 miles of steel already laid and 214 miles of railway ready for operation. I am glad to say that, as a result, I think, of the representations made by a large delegation that waited on the Government a few weeks ago, the Government are at the present time putting that 214-mile section of the road in condition for operation. It must be remembered that some of the track was laid six or seven years ago, and unless it is kept in repair it will all go to waste. Ties last only so many years, and some of the ties on that line may have rotted.

I have said that both Governments are committed to the Hudson bay route. I would like to place on record a petition which was presented to the Government in 1919, subscribed to by practically all Senators and members of the House of Commons from the West, urging on the Government the necessity of proceeding with this work. The petition points out that the Government is under obligation to carry it out, and amongst other reasons they refer to the fact that the contract for building the Hudson bay road was let by Hon. Mr. Graham, as Minister of Railways under a Liberal Government. As honourable gentlemen remember, that was prior to the general elections of 1911. It was apparently thought by some people that there might be something wrong with the contract or that the proper route had not been selected. The incoming Government therefore stopped Mr. McArthur, the contractor, for a few months. Mr. McArthur had got in some supplies, but I do not think that the construction had actually begun, although the first sod had been turned by Hon. Mr. Graham at Le Pas. It was suggested that there should be an examination into the contract and into the route before the incoming Government allowed the construction to proceed. That was done, and after a thorough inspection of the road, and after Mr. Cochrane, Minister of Railways, had gone there himself and inspected it, it was concluded that the route had been properly selected and that the contract was fair, and Mr. McArthur was directed to proceed.

Moreover, the incoming Government had pledged themselves on certain matters affecting that northwest country. In the platform on which Sir Robert Borden appealed to the country in 1911 he stated:

> The Conservative party has been committed to the construction of the Hudson's bay railway since 1896. The road will be built by the next Conservative administration without one day's unnecessary delay. It will be operated by an independent commission on behalf and in the interests of the people with full control of rates.

That was Sir Robert Borden's announcement to the people of the West. So both Liberals and Conservatives are committed to that scheme.

Again, I find that the Grain Growers' Guide, referring to Mr. Cochrane's visit to the Hudson bay district, said:

> Mr. Cochrane is taking hold of the road to the bay in a businesslike manner. He has investigated the needs of the West this summer and realizes that the western farmers were right in their demand for a Government-owned and operated road to the bay. It will probably take three years at the lowest estimate to open the road for traffic, and by that time every outlet from the west will be taxed to the utmost. Mr. Cochrane will have western sympathy in bending every effort to a speedy construction of the road to the bay.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You have the Conservatives, the Liberals, and the Agrarian party.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Yes, we have them all. (Reading):

Hon. Frank Cochrane, who travelled by land to Port Nelson and crossed both the bay and the straits as the above lines were written, on his return to the capital, to the dismay of the "Monetary Times" and such-like spoke enthusiastically of the project. I have every faith in the scheme, and I will push the Hudson Bay Road for all it is worth. We intend to make this a good road. We have four-tenths grade. We are using eighty-pound rails. I believe that the Hudson Bay route will mean much to the west in the way of lower freight rates. It will be a leveller, east and west. Just consider how much cheaper iron, steel and coal, for instance from Sydney, could be shipped to the prairies. It will be of the greatest advantage to the east, and I believe eastern opposition is dying out. We found the bay free from ice. In fact, the only ice we saw to amount to anything was the bergs near Belle Isle, where all the Atlantic steamers encounter them. The straits are very wide, and with the aid of wireless I believe can be kept open for a long period. Wireless stations and other aids to navigation will be established as soon as needed. . . If the route was only open two months after the wheat of the west started to move, it would be worth while.

That was the view of Hon. Frank Cochrane. Mr. Cochrane was a man credited with having a good deal of common sense. He had travelled over and had thoroughly examined the land route to Port Nelson, and from there had taken ship and come out through the bay and strait, and that was his view of the situation.

Some reflections have been cast on Mr. Stefansson and his scheme for the raising of reindeer and muskox. I want to say as a western man that I feel proud of Mr. Stefansson, and I only wish there were more persons who had his broad views, his wide horizon. If there were we would hear less of carping criticism about the expenditure of money in this connection. I believe that western country is worth opening up for settlement, and I believe it is worth while to open up the Hudson bay route for the transportation not only of wheat but also of cattle and dairy products. If you look at the map, honourable gentlemen, you will see that cattle could be shipped from the ranches in the West, even from as far as Lethbridge, to the bay in three days; whereas it takes ten or twelve days to bring them to Montreal. Any person who understands the shipping of cattle knows that in two or three days there is very little shrinkage, but after that the shrinkage is very rapid. In the hot season, when cattle are shipped all the way from Lethbridge to Montreal for the English market, they lose a great deal of weight. Even if the Hudson bay route were open for only a month or two months of the wheat season, and even if it did not carry large quantities of wheat, it would be a leveller of rates. Mr. Stefansson spoke of the development of the reindeer and muskox industry. Any person ought to know that any country that will maintain reindeer and muskoxen will maintain domestic animals as well if they are given a little care. There is no question about that at all. All you have to do is to look at the kind of grasses growing there to know the kind of animals that can live there. If there is cereal grass growing on the prairie, you know that is a pretty good place for the growing of cereals—wheat, oats and barley. Mr. Stefansson on viewing that northern country came to the conclusion that by means of reindeer and muskoxen it would furnish large supplies of meat. Now, I say that where you can raise such animals as those you can raise domestic cattle. Let us remember that in the northern portions of Alberta and Saskatchewan, apart altogether from the ranch lands in Alberta, we have a country that will maintain immense herds. Miles and miles of the best grass that grows on the face of God's earth are going to waste there every year. It ought to be used for cattle raising.

I wish to refer now to the Manitoba Government. My honourable friend on the opposite side (Hon. Mr. McMeans) will agree with me that Manitoba suffered a great loss in the recent death of Mr. Val. Winkler, Minister of Agriculture of Manitoba, who inaugurated a scheme for the encouragement of stock-raising. It was known as the cow scheme. The Government of Manitoba bought the cattle and turned them over to people who were willing to take care of them. This scheme has been in force now for three or four years, and hundreds of thousands of cattle have been distributed amongst the settlers in a large tract of country similar to the district north of Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg. What has been done there can be done in the region to the north of Manitoba. Large areas of that country are just as suitable for the raising of stock. And I want to say that in my opinion it would be much better for returned soldiers to get a few head of cattle and go into a country of that kind than to take chances in wheat-raising on the open prairie.

Another matter, which I referred to before, is the change in climatic conditions. People laugh when you suggest that conditions do not remain always the same. It is supposed that if severe conditions prevail this year those conditions will still prevail a hundred years from now. I think that is not correct. I have lived in the Northwest for 46 years and I remember that during the first ten years I was in Portage la Prairie there was not a year in which we did not have more or less frozen wheat. Practically every year we had frozen wheat, and it was nearly all frozen. If you were to suggest to a man in Manitoba at any time during the past twenty years, "It looks like frost," he would laugh at you. The conditions, so far as frost is concerned, have entirely changed; why? Because of settlement and cultivation. There is no question about it. I have seen frost taken out of the ground on Portage plains at nine feet eight inches from the surface. I measured the depth. I venture to say that at no place on Portage plains can you to-day find frost at a depth of six feet in the ground in any season of the year. What is the reason for this difference? It is because prairie fires used to burn the grass in the fall and the snow did not lie on the ground and prevent the frost from penetrating. When the spring came the grass grew up again; and grass is a non-conductor of heat. The only thing to keep off the frost is the radiation of heat from the surface of the soil. But, whatever the cause, the frost does not exist at the present time as it did over 30 years ago practically every month in the year. Now, in that great northern country we have an area capable of producing immense wealth and of maintaining many settlers.

Another point in favour of the construction of the Hudson bay road is that it will attract settlers to that country. The grain farmer on the prairies must have labour to help him. We find that the best possible labour that the farms on the plains can have is the foreigner who is prepared to go into that country. It is called a Galician country. A country is sometimes known by the nationality of the people who live in it. In the Galician country you find hay, wood and water, and the women and the children look after the stock; and I want to say that there is no stock better cared for anywhere than the stock that is cared for by those Galician people. They will keep the mosquitoes off in summer time; they will wash their cattle off and take good care of them; the women will cut the hay, and carry it out sometimes and stack it up, and furnish feed for the stock when the men are working. In that country, where we must have labour at seeding time, harvest, and threshing, it is most valuable to have those people living where they are needed. The question of labour is now so serious that farmers do not feel safe in putting in large crops of wheat, because they are not sure about getting labour.

All these considerations warrant the Government in pushing that road to completion. Both political parties are under obligation to push it; the Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba Governments are all in favour of the Dominion Government constructing it at an early date. As a western man I want to thank the Chairman of this Committee for his great assistance in this matter. He is an eastern man who has a large enough vision to see that the eastern and western parts of Canada are mutually interested, and that the prosperity of the one means the prosperity of the other. I trust that the report of the Committee will be unanimously adopted, and that the report and evidence will be valuable to the Government in determining what they shall do. So far as the operation of the road at the other end is concerned, I think from evidence received that we have properly advised the Government to go ahead without further evidence in the matter. There is no question that Churchill, though not very large, is a first-class harbour, with no impediment to navigation. In the other case, from evidence received, vessels can only get within twenty miles of where they attempt to make a wharf and harbour, and the difficulties in buoying a channel to it are very great. I understand that Professor McLennan has an invention whereby a great many of the difficulties would be avoided; instead of lighthouses he has a cable that can be laid in the channel, by which the mariner simply follows lights in the channel right up to his terminal. If that can be done, all these things will be helped. Cochrane and other witnesses say that the strait is never badly blocked with ice. One of the aids to navigation is wireless telegraphy, and right across the strait it would be possible to notify a ship what course to take to get through without striking ice at all. With all those improved aids, and in view of the importance of the work, we do hope that the Government will proceed with the construction at an early date.

They will have to do it in order to save the property they have at present. The road is all graded to Nelson, and even if Nelson is not maintained as a terminal, if the other port is preferable by building about 80 miles more of railroad, I believe that those two ports, about 80 miles apart, could be profitably maintained because of the resources that we know are within the bay, on the banks, and in the minerals around the shores, so that the Government would be warranted in keeping both those ports open for local and coasting trade. If the Government find our suggestions worthy of consideration; I think they would be justified in making a thorough examination, and even if they place the terminal at Churchill, it would be profitable to build and maintain both ports as open ports for the purpose of occupying that territory.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I think it is hardly worth the time of this House to discuss whether we are going to build this railway or not, because it has been sanctioned by all the Governments of Canada, and has been constructed, so far as grading is concerned, up to the harbours that are under discussion. I would not venture my opinion upon the harbours or the navigation of those northern waters, for I have discovered since this debate began that the only gentlemen who seem to be authorized to express an opinion on those matters are men who have lived close to the Atlantic or the St. Lawrence waters. As I was born on the highlands of the eastern part of Quebec, my opinion would not be graciously received by those gentlemen who have lived close to running water; therefore I will not venture to express an opinion on that. I can only say that I have met many men who have navigated those northern waters, and personally I am absolutely satisfied that there is a practical course for steamers or boats to go from either of those ports through to England. We must never forget that we are a northern country, and a northern country only; that our future development is all north, not south; and therefore we should be very careful not to make any statement or adopt any resolution in this House that will reflect upon the feasibility and advantage of the development of the northern part of this continent. I am sure no one feels that more keenly than honourable members of this House, whether they agree or not with this report. I met Mr. Stefansson for the first time, and being a rancher, having been interested in cattle all my life, I was delighted with my conversation with him. I was not a member of the Committee, and had not the opportunity of hearing him when he appeared before the Committee to give evidence, but certainly he gave me very inspiring hopes of the development of that northern country. I read yesterday the report of Sir Auckland Geddes' address at Princeton University, in which he took occasion to point out that for probably fifty years past the tragedy that has taken place during the last five years in Europe had been postponed by food supplies that the United States, through their development, had been able to send to Central Europe; but that when the United States began to find its own population increasing to 50, 75, and 100 millions and requiring those supplies, the pressure of social conditions that had been created in Central Europe began to affect the condition of those nations, and this, in his opinion, had as much to do in contributing towards this war as any other single thing. Looking forward to the future condition of Central Europe and Asia, I see in the development we may make in the northern part of this continent not only its importance to Canada, and to the individuals who are going to live in this country, but also one of the important contributions towards maintaining the peace of the world; because you cannot have peace and starvation going hand in hand, whether in Canada, Central Europe or Asia. If there is to be improvement in the northern half of that western country, every future development in the production of grain and other food supplies will be of advantage to Canada, and a favourable report on that part of the world, irrespective of ports or railways, will benefit this Dominion. I am satisfied that cattle will live where buffalo live, because I have been breeding cattle where buffalo did live. Mr. Stefansson told me that the northern country there can maintain those large herds of wild animals —moose, deer, and all the rest of them. If those grasses are fit for that purpose, they are also fit for domestic animals, and when you can grow first-class grass you can grow other natural products. This Dominion is composed of various sections called provinces, and in this House we are in the habit of accepting the opinions of honourable members and residents of those various provinces, and we vote immense sums of money for Quebec, for Ontario, for New Brunswick, for Nova Scotia, because those various representatives come here and tell us that these things are essential for the development, peace, happiness, and prosperity of those provinces. When honourable gentlemen from our western provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—come here in practically united force and say to us that the development of that section of the country—the construction of this road and the opening up of that navigation—is essential to the prosperity and happiness of those three great western provinces, I for one am prepared to accept their word in the matter and give them every possible encouragement in the development of that vast northern country.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: As a Westerner I had the honour of being on that Committee, and I think I did not miss a single meeting. I concur in the findings of the Committee, which is greatly indebted to its Chairman for the close attention he gave to it, and I want to bear tribute to the work he has done in writing the précis of the evidence, putting it in narrative form from the question and answer which were used before the Committee—a most laborious task, involving elimination. While that work in the précis form has been criticised as not in conformity with the text as given before the Committee, I thought it was a wonderfully fair presentation of the whole thing. It was necessarily condensed for the sake of brevity and to make it more readable to the public, and I think it would be an advantage to the people of all Canada if we had this evidence printed and published in the way suggested by the resolution. It is only to voice my concurrence in the findings of the Committee, and my appreciation of the services of the Chairman of the Committee, that I rise at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: As it is almost six o'clock, and as it is absolutely necessary, in view of the remarks of the honourable member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel), for me as Chairman of the Committee to attempt to make some reply to his strictures upon the Committee's report and other things, it will not be possible to answer a speech which occupied an hour and a half—

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Oh, no, not more than an hour at the outside.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The speech and the extracts together occupied about an hour and a half, and it is not possible for me to answer that, even in the impertinent way that I would have to answer it, in the short space of three minutes, and it may be that some other gentleman would like to speak also. I would therefore move the adjournment of the debate, and if there is no other person to speak I will close the debate tomorrow.

The debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READING.

Bill B5, an Act for the relief of Nora Dowle—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Friday, June 18, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill C5, an Act for the relief of Muriel Curren Gilmour.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill D5, an Act for the relief of Marie Jeanne Yvonne Albertine St. Amour Lallemand.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill 53, an Act to amend the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919, as amended.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE: Honourable gentlemen, before this Bill is read a third time, I would move that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee and be amended by inserting Epiphany, Ascension Day, All Saints Day, and the Immaculate Conception, as legal holidays. Those days are observed by people of the Catholic religion, and I hope the House will permit that action.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend has moved, as I understand, that the Bill be not now read a third time, but be recommitted to the Committee. I may say without entering into any discussion that I am opposed to that.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Would it not meet with my honourable friend's ideas if we were to say that those days should be observed in the province in which they are holy days?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will see the difficulty of that. We would then have one province observing certain holidays and the other provinces of the Dominion not doing so. It would entirely dislocate the public service. It seems to me that there is no good reason why those holidays should be observed in one province when they are not observed in the others. My honourable friend will see the difficulty of discriminating in that way.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that this Bill compels Roman Catholics to work on these holidays.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: No.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I think it does.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They can stay at home. They do not have to work.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Order.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that they are liable to dismissal if they do not work.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would the leader of the Government tell us what the position would be? There seems to be a misunderstanding. Honourable gentlemen on this side of the House say that Roman Catholics will be obliged to attend to their duties on these days. Is that so?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: If they are not legal holidays, they will have to go to their offices and work. They will have to go to their offices on All Saints Day, which is one of the most sacred days. It is like a Sunday, and public servants, for instance the staff of the post office in Quebec, would be obliged to go to the office on All Saints Day if it is not a legal holiday.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: There are religious holidays which are not legal holidays.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I am not going to make any motion. I think that all Christians recognize the fact that Ascension Day is a great feast, and I regret that the honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) should have stricken out that day. Some other days, for instance the Immaculate Conception, the 8th of December, are purely Catholic holidays and are not looked upon as great holidays even in the Church to which I belong; but I do think—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would the honourable gentleman permit me a question?

Hon. Mr. POWER: Will you allow me? Then you can go on.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Thank you for the courtesy.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I say I regret that the honourable gentleman should have stricken out Ascension Day. As to the others, I have no particular objection. I do not wish to make people go and worship in my church, but I think all Christians are supposed to observe Ascension Day.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was going to ask the honourable gentleman a question when he rather discourteously refused to permit it. I am not very well up in these matters myself, but I understood that Ascension Day was usually celebrated on a Sunday.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: No, no. I beg my honourable friend's pardon.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: The honourable gentleman has just said that he does not know anything about it, and he has proven his statement.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have been so informed by probably as good a member of your Church as yourself.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: He is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He may be mistaken, and I do not profess to know anything about it. In moving this resolution I was moved by the fact that there are many public holidays observed to the great loss of the public service. That is an unfortunate thing. I was once in a country where they had about a hundred and fifty holidays, and we will pretty nearly approach that condition here if we permit all these holidays. There is no reason why a man who takes his religion seriously—and every man should take his religion seriously—there is no reason why he should not go farther. He would be making a greater sacrifice if he gave up his day's pay, and there would be no difficulty as far as his employer was concerned. The day of all that I would think would be observed is All Saints Day.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: Epiphany also.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If you take that, you take practically all, because the only days cut out are Epiphany, All Saints Day, Conception Day and Ascension Day.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: Five days.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Five days loss to the Civil Service of Canada which embraces 60,000 people is a pretty important matter, and I think is not one to be treated lightly.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Might I put it this way? Would my honourable friend consider it a very light matter if he had to disobey the teachings or commands of his Church? Would he take it very lightly if he were placed in the position of having to choose between doing that and possibly losing his position?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: A man would not lose his position.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I submit that he would. If the Civil Servant does not attend on Ascension Day or Epiphany he is absent without leave, and he may be dismissed if he is not at his desk. I do not consider that a very light matter. He will have to choose between running the risk of losing his position or disobeying the order of his Church.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And it is not a light matter for a country that needs to save all the money it can, to make all these days legal holidays in order to meet the religious scruples of this one man. No man would be dismissed from the Service who failed to attend on a day which was a holy day of his Church.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It seems to me that when it is a choice between two holidays and one of them is a holy day to a portion of the community, you should choose to observe the holiday which is of no moment to anybody as a matter of conscience. Easter Monday is still preserved. Easter Monday is nothing at all to anybody.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Strike it out.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Easter Monday, which is observed only by Government officials, should be struck out, and Ascension Day, which is observed by most Christians who observe feasts of the Church as a matter of conscience, should be inserted. Let us strike out days which are of no moment to anybody as a matter of conscience.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is agreeable.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I suggest that we strike out Easter Monday, and substitute Ascension Day.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why not strike out Good Friday and add All Saints Day? Good Friday is not a feast of obligation. My honourable friend proposes the change as a matter of conscience.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Of course, there is no mass on Good Friday, but I would consider that it should be observed in preference to nearly any other day.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I wish to explain why I intend to vote for the Bill. I was born and brought up in the Catholic Church, and while I may not be as good a Catholic as some others, I have as strong a desire to follow the teachings of the Catholic Church as any man in this building, and I am as faithful to the teachings of that Church as any man in Canada or anywhere else. The advantage we have in the Catholic Church is that we can go to God at any time. We have the Church there, and we can go early in the morning or in the evening. You will always find some one there, and you are always welcome. The question of work or non-work does not make religion; it is a man's heart and his desire to serve God that counts; and if he wants to he can go to Church on any day during the year. Whether he is compelled to work or not has nothing to do with the question. He can serve his God and go to his Church whenever he wants to. I sometimes think that is one of the misfortunes of the Protestants. They should fall in line in the morning, and go where there is something going on. No Catholic, man or woman, can be prejudiced in any fashion by any legislation passed in this House or any other legislature in this country. There has been a great deal of legislation passed, but it has not interfered with the good people: many of them are in heaven, and I hope they are praying for us.

Hon. Mr. POWER: You need their prayers.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I am going to vote for the Bill as it stands because I do not think it interferes in any way, shape or form with a man performing his religious duties.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I move that the words "Ascension Day" be struck out, and that "Easter Monday" be substituted.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I always mean exactly what I don't say. I turn it around.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Before voting on this, I want to tell this House that Ascension Day is not an obligatory holiday in our Church, and for that reason I cannot see that much is to be gained by striking out Easter Monday. I will vote for the Bill as it stands.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE: I think the honourable gentleman who says there is no obligation is mistaken. Ascension Day is a feast of obligation for the Catholics like All Saints Day, Epiphany, and the Immaculate Conception. I stand for my motion.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton was negatived, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION AND SALE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 104, an Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

ADMIRALTY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 139, an Act to amend the Admiralty Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

NORTHWEST GAME BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 151, an Act to amend The Northwest Game Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

DIVORCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill B5, an Act for the relief of Nora Dowle.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

PRIVATE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill A5, an Act to incorporate The Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Michener.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate sent into Committee on Bill 126, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like to bring within the bar Mr. Mulvey, Assistant Secretary of State.

On section 1—short title:

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not wish to go into the details of this Bill, but I desire to make a few observations at the start. Up to the year 1879 we had an insolvency law. There was such a law first passed, I think, immediately after the union of the provinces; then there was another law passed in 1875, for which I think Hon. Edward Blake was chiefly responsible. Every care was taken in preparing that measure to prevent the waste of money, and to provide satisfactory procedure. That Act continued in operation for about five years, and the country became tired of it, and when it was repealed in 1879 or 1880 there was a general feeling of relief throughout the country. The Dominion Insolvency Act having been got rid of, the various provincial legislatures passed measures which to a very considerable extent took the place of that Dominion law, and those measures, which were naturally a little crude, were improved as time went on, and now they are working satisfactorily. The only reason that I can see for passing this proposed measure, which is sure to involve delay and considerable expenditure, is that a debtor who acts honestly may get a discharge. He cannot get from a local legislature a discharge that will bind in provinces outside of the one in which he happens to be resident. I am not finding fault with the drafting of this Bill, but I think that, instead of this cumbrous and expensive measure, we should pass one which would authorize the Governor in Council or the Secretary of State to give a release to any man who had honestly complied with the requisites of the provincial law. That would not involve any unnecessary expenditure or lost time, and it seems to me that it would be the businesslike and natural way of disposing of this matter. As it is now, when this Bill becomes law and is put into operation there will be a good deal of unnecessary conflict between the provincial and federal spheres. I simply wish to make that little protest before we go into the details of the Bill.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—"Debtor:"

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the change made in that section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The change extends only to the addition of the words "except by leave of the Court" in lines 21 and 22.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—"Locality:"

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This section amends paragraph 10 of section 2 of the Act, merely interpolating the word "either" in line 32 and substituting the words "at any time" for the words "for the longest period" in the second line on page 2; also adding after the word "situate," in line 7, "or where the debtor resides."

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—Affidavit:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This section is merely changing the procedure. As the Act stands, the affidavit must be made by a creditor or somebody on his behalf; in the amendment the affidavit may be made and served as prescribed by the rules.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does not that make it very much wider? Is there any particular object in letting other people than the creditor make the affidavit? The creditor would be the person interested, I should imagine.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The creditor ought to make it, too.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not know what the rules are.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me desirable that a matter of procedure of this kind should be regulated by the rules, and whatever the rules call for will be complied with.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: There is no necessity for rules in regard to that at all.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand the old clause read, "The petition shall be verified by affidavit of the creditor or of some person on his behalf." So that the object would be covered by the old clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is simply a matter of verifying the proceedings, and it seems to me that the situation might be met very much better by the adoption of a rule than by a rigid form of statute. We can only gain experience as to what should be done after the Act is put in operation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Act has not been administered at all so far?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is not to come into operation until the 1st of July, and the general opinion expressed regarding the Act is that it is desirable to have elasticity, so that it can be adjusted to various conditions that may arise, consistent with the stability that should be given to it.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Whoever was responsible for making this change must have had some reason for changing it from the Act of last session.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. All these changes are due to the consideration which was given to the Bill of last session by judges, chambers of commerce, boards of trade and those who could speak with authority upon the administration of an Act of this kind. The Bill is the outcome of suggestions which have been given from those various sources as to improvements that might be made in the Act which has been already placed on the statute book.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Could we definitely know who shall have the right of making that affidavit?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The office boy.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The man in the street?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A creditor might make it.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It is an obligatory form in the original Act; this leaves the form under the rules, as to who should make such an affidavit.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Who may?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Anybody provided for in the rules.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Where do we find the rules?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The rules are already printed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The rules are worked out by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Sometimes I have found them good, and sometimes not. It seems very strange that we should not know who is going to have the right to make the affidavit. If I could be sure it was the creditor or some representative of the creditor I would be satisfied, but I am not satisfied to leave it to the open street.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Surely this is wide enough. The present clause is:

> The petition shall be verified by affidavit of the creditor or of some person on his behalf having knowledge of the facts, and be served on the debtor in the prescribed manner.

I submit that that is as wide as it should be, and that no man who is not a creditor or who has no knowledge of the facts should have the right to put any person in insolvency.

Hon. Mr. POWER: But, as I understand, no one but a creditor can present a petition, and this provision is that the petition shall be verified by affidavit in the manner prescribed by the rules; and the manner of service has also to be as prescribed by the rules. I can see that that is a more convenient arrangement than that in the original Bill.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What was wrong in the original Bill, will the honourable gentleman say? I am quite willing to concede the point if there is anything that can be wider than that. What is the good of tinkering with the Act unnecessarily?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Here is the rule with respect to the affidavit:

> 26. Every affidavit shall be drawn up in the first person, and shall state the description and true place of abode of its deponent, and shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and as nearly as may be shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject. No costs shall be allowed for any part of an affidavit containing unnecessary matters or which in the opinion of the taxing officer is unduly prolix.
>
> 27. The Court may order to be struck out from any affidavit any matter which is scandalous, and may order the costs of any application to strike out such matter to be paid as between solicitor and client.

And again:

> 32. Where by this Act or in these rules it is provided that an affidavit or declaration be made by a debtor, authorized trustee or any other person and such debtor, authorized trustee or other person is a corporation such affidavit or declaration may be made by the Manager or by any officer or employee of the corporation who has knowledge of the facts deposed to providing that he states therein that he has such knowledge.

Hon Mr. BELCOURT: What is the honourable gentleman reading?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The rules passed by Order in Council under the Bankruptcy Act. The clause in the Act under consideration reads as follows:

> The petition shall be verified by affidavit of the creditor or of some person on his behalf having knowledge of the facts, and be served on the debtor in the prescribed manner.

That is not sufficiently comprehensive to include a corporation.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: "Person" includes a corporation under the Interpretation Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me this amendment meets the situation very much better. The regulation would, it seems to me, dispose of all doubt as to whether the existing clause, namely, subsection 2 of section 4, would cover a corporation. This is simply a matter of procedure, and it is not important.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There is no real objection to the clause as it is, in my opinion. It states all that is essential, namely, that the facts should be verified by affidavit. If the facts required under the statute to put a person into bankruptcy are not contained in the affidavit, then the order cannot be made. The words in the amendment proposed cover the ground. I do not think it adds very much to the old section, but it seems to me it is not objectionable in its present form.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—proceedings taken in wrong court:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I do not see why, if a man takes proceedings in the wrong court to put a person into bankruptcy, or if he takes proceedings in several courts, he should not bear the costs himself. If I institute bankruptcy proceedings in a court in Ontario, and the case has to be sent to Manitoba because I have gone into the wrong court, the debtor may be put to considerable expense.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The question of costs would be at the discretion of the court.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The clause does not provide for that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It would not prevent the judge from exercising his discretion.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If a man goes to the wrong court why should he not be required to take the case out of that court and bring it to the proper one?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is just a question of costs, that is all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The object of this is to prevent proceedings from being invalidated by reason of having been commenced in the wrong court. The proceedings may be transferred to the proper court if it is found that an error has been made. It seems to me that is common sense.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What does it mean?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If a lawyer can go into any court he pleases and if the petition is recognized by this particular clause even when he has made a mistake, he will not care whether he goes to the right court or not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not think any lawyer would wish to risk his reputation by starting proceedings in the wrong court.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: When the bankruptcy law is passed there will be a rush to undertake winding-up proceedings. A man may start proceedings anywhere in Canada. Does this clause refer to the wrong court in a province or the wrong court in the Dominion of Canada? That is what I would like to understand. Suppose a person takes proceedings in the Yukon and lets them lie dormant there, and then some one else takes proceedings in Quebec, where they are properly brought, can this person come up after an order is made and say, "I had my application filed first in the Yukon and I want to have it come up ahead of this?" I would like to know what is the meaning of this section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The meaning, I think, is apparent in the language of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Surely somebody can explain the reason for putting it there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The reason for putting it there is this. Time and again proceedings are instituted in the wrong court. Invariably an application is made for costs of the proceedings, which may be large; and frequently delays are occasioned through a mistake of that kind being made, particularly when there is a multiplicity of courts. This is a new Act, just coming into operation and it is, I must confess, considerably involved. Through the inexperience of those who would be called upon to act either for the parties concerned or for the winding-up of the bankrupt estate, it may happen that proceedings are started in a court which has no jurisdiction. That will not be unusual. This will permit of the proceedings being transferred to the proper court.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does it refer to proceedings started in the wrong province?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; it means in any of the courts in this Dominion. A very nice question may arise as to whether the proceedings should be started in the province of Quebec or in the province of Ontario. Business is now not as insular as it used to be; it is interprovincial; it is practically international. Large businesses extend through all parts of the world. It is a comparatively small business in Canada that is not in operation in almost every province of the Dominion. Consequently there is this convenient arrangement whereby, if a mistake has been made, in applying to a certain court, or if it is inconvenient to hear the case in that court, it may be transferred to the proper court.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It seems to me that the only matter involved is a question of costs. That is the only question that can possibly arise here. Costs are always left to the discretion of the court.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend pardon me for pointing out this? It may not be limited to the question of costs. There may be also a question of delay, or a question of priority.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I agree with my honourable friend, but what I mean is that the only ultimate question would be one of costs.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I would not say that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I thoroughly agree with my honourable friend. Allow me to put it in another way. I quite agree that there may be a question of delay, perhaps of great importance, and the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the results which might be occasioned by delay. For instance, if there is a delay in the proceedings, the assets may be dissipated, and in the meantime the estate turn out to be much worse than it otherwise might have been. I can see that one purpose of the amendment is to prevent that, and I am in favour of that provision. I can see that it is necessary in that regard, and perhaps in other respects. I think this clause should not be limited to the courts in one province, because, after all, there can be no harm resulting from enabling a judge in the Yukon, for instance, to refer the matter to a court in Ontario, if proceedings have not been taken in the right court. If they are taken in the wrong court, no advantage can be derived from that, as suggested by the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton). The only disadvantage pointed out so far, and the only one that I can see, is that the question of costs will have to be settled; and that question will be left to the discretion of the courts. If, for instance, somebody in the Yukon, merely for the purpose of seeking an advantage which he should not have under the statute, commences proceedings there instead of taking them in Ontario, when the matter comes before the court the question of jurisdiction will be decided. The court will decide whether the case is properly taken in the Yukon or in Ontario. If the judge finds that there is no jurisdiction in the Yukon he will refer it to the Ontario court, and it will be for the judge in the Yukon to determine whether or not the man who brought these proceedings had any sort of justification for doing so. The judge will award costs accordingly.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman one question. Take, for instance, a case started in the Yukon in which a judgment has been given there. It is then transferred to the province of Ontario on an appeal. Where will that appeal be from? The court in the Yukon or in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think my honourable friend is wrong. I do not think this contemplates any transfer after judgment has been rendered.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Let me ask my honourable friend another question. Suppose a man has a judgment against some one and that judgment is registered and is a lien on the property. It is registered in Ontario. Suppose proceedings are started in the Yukon. Under the next clause, the moment an order is made it takes precedence over all attachments of debts by way of garnishments, etc. If the case is wrongly taken to the court in the Yukon and an appeal is made to the court in Ontario, you see what a mix-up there will be. I think the applicant ought to select the proper court in the first place.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, he ought to do so, and if he does not he will pay the penalty in having to defray the costs. But this transfer must necessarily be made before a judgment is given. The clause does not contemplate a transfer after the judgment. It cannot contemplate that, because after the judgment is rendered no judge can make any order; the case is out of his court.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The court of appeal can.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Certainly it can. if the court of appeal had original jurisdiction under the statute.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The court of appeal could not have original jurisdiction after a judgment.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It has original jurisdiction where it is entertaining an appeal.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The court of appeal has not original jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I do not care.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The court of appeal has not original jurisdiction when the original jurisdiction has been exercised by some other court in the same province.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This just shows the controversy that can arise in court.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend proposes a theory which on second reflection he will see is utterly wrong.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This shows what is provided—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Let me say what I have to say, without constant interruption. My honourable friend states that the court of appeal in the province has original jurisdiction, and that the matter could be transferred—oh, I give up.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I am not going to answer it; so it does not make much difference.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I move that section 5 be struck out.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I think this question ought to be left to the legal profession.

Hon. Mr. POPE: What is the good? They cannot decide it. They get into a row.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like my honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans), and likewise my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), who agrees with him, to indicate what will happen if important proceedings are taken and carried on up to a material stage, under the administration of the Bankruptcy Act, and then it is found that the proceedings have been instituted, say, in the wrong court. If an application is made to discharge all proceedings and invalidate all that has been done, the trustee in bankruptcy and the creditors likewise would be rendered helpless, and the result might be the dissipation of all the property. Very serious results might flow from a mistake of that kind being made.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: Would it be possible for a court that had not jurisdiction to take up a matter and deal with it? Would not the judge know whether he had jurisdiction or not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not always. That is the reason why courts of appeal exist. If a judge were accurate in every step he took there would be no necessity for a court of appeal; but it just happens that judges are human, and some of them very human.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The question of non-jurisdiction might not be apparent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it might not be apparent. It might transpire from a disclosure of evidence, after an important stage had been reached, that the court had no jurisdiction, whereas prima facie it might have seemed that it had jurisdiction. It is not only in the interest of the creditors and of the estate, but also for the protection of the public, that this provision is made.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I have not read the Act, and do not propose to do so, because I do not question the opinions of honourable gentlemen of the legal profession. But does not this Act name some court with jurisdiction?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. If my honourable friend will look at section 3 of the Act he will see what courts are constituted courts of bankruptcy.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: If a case is taken into a court, cannot that court determine whether it has jurisdiction under that section or not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Proceedings may be started in one province that should have been started in another. That is one of the difficulties that may arise.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: As this clause is now drawn, it says that proceedings shall not be invalidated by reason of having been commenced in the wrong court, "but the court may at any time transfer to the proper court the petition, application or proceedings as the case may be." But it does not say anything as to what effect these proceedings shall have in the court to which the case is tranferred. If I were drafting that clause I would add: "and in the court to which the proceedings have been transferred they shall have the same force and effect as if they were originally commenced in that court." That would be the proper way. But, as it is now, it simply provides that if you are in the wrong court you may transfer to another. When in the other court what standing have you? This whole clause is ridiculous and useless.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I think there is a great deal of force in the argument of the honourable leader (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), if I may say so, but it strikes me that the whole procedure under the Act is so simple that there can be no mistake about it. Section 63 specifies the courts in which proceedings may be taken. There can be no mistake made in the province of Ontario, or in any other province, as to the court in that province to which application should be made. The question will arise only if a man begins proceedings in one province which he should have begun in another. I would draw the honourable leader's attention to section 64, which reads:

> The courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this Act shall not be subject to be restrained in the execution of their powers hereunder by the order of any other court.

If you insert in a preceding section this proposed amendment, and if I, for instance, live in Nova Scotia and have a claim against a man living in Ontario, I go to my lawyer and he says: "Let us start it right here. If we get into the wrong court it does not make a particle of difference: the Act prescribes that we can transfer the case." It is an invitation to bring the proceedings in the wrong court if it suits the convenience of the applicant. Then you have a fight between two courts. The Ontario man claims the case should have been brought in the Ontario court, the other man claims otherwise, and neither the Ontario court, the Supreme Court, nor the Exchequer Court has any power to compel these proceedings to be taken. My objection is that the Bill encourages people to bring proceedings recklessly in the wrong courts, and that is a very serious matter, which we should prevent if possible. We have a practice in Ontario under which a case improperly brought in the County Court can be transferred to the High Court, and vice versa. That is all right in the province, but where a man can transfer it, battledore and shuttlecock, all over the Dominion of Canada, I think the remedy is worse than the disease. Otherwise, I quite agree with what the leader of the Government has said.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. McMeans was negatived.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—receiving orders and assignments to take precedence of attachments, etc.:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I want to draw attention to the fact that, in the section immediately following this, in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick certain judgments that are already liens against the property are excepted. If the province of Manitoba is put in the same position I have no objection, but in Manitoba if you get a judgment you take the certificate and register it, and that is accepted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is the case in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: And it seems to me that this is a very extraordinary provision:

Every receiving officer and every authorized assignment made in pursuance of this Act shall take precedence over:

(a) All attachments of debts by way of garnishment, unless the debt involved has been actually paid over to the garnishment creditor or his agent; and,

(b) All other attachments, executions or other process against property, except such thereof as have been completely executed by payment to the execution or other creditor;

but shall be subject to a lien for one only bill of costs, including sheriff's fees, which shall be payable to the garnishing, attaching or execution creditor who has first attached.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is the practice in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If two men attach, one gets his costs and the other does not?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They allow one set of costs only.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the rule in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I want to draw to the attention of the House the report of the Committee on Printing which we adopted yesterday. On page 291 of the Minutes we find the following:

The Joint Committee is asked by the Editorial Committee that the provision in the Bankruptcy Act of last session (Chap. 36, section 11, subsection 7) be reconsidered. The subsection reads:

"The King's Printer, upon request of any person who is by the Act required to keep on file for public reference a copy of the Canada Gazette, shall regularly supply to each person, gratis, two copies of every issue of such Gazette."

It is not known how many names the subsection will add to the 'free' list of the Gazette. Every thousand, however, means an additional annual consumption of over 10 tons of 'Parliamentary Report' paper, costing 13½ cents per lb. under the latest contract, as compared with 3.67 cents per lb. in 1915. Besides increasing the work in the press and bindery rooms at the Bureau, the 'free' list will augment the operations of the Distribution Branch of the Department of Public Printing, and of the Post Office Department. It is suggested that a single sheet containing Bankruptcy notices as "from the Canada Gazette" should serve all purposes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Mr. Mulvey informs me that there was a mistake or misapprehension on the part of the Editorial Committee and that they have receded from that position. They were under the impression that four or five thousand copies would be requisite, whereas only four or five hundred would be necessary.

Section 6 was agreed to.

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—avoidance of preference in certain cases:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me that three months, the time named in this section, is too long. A great deal could happen in three months. It might be assumed that a man was solvent, but something could easily happen in three months.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The creditor may not learn of this for three months. Maybe no person is able to make the application.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Exactly. But here is a transaction that is perfectly proper at the time. Both the grantor and the grantee are of opinion that the man is perfectly solvent; something occurs and he becomes bankrupt.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I see the point.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me that 30 days would be sufficient. It means that a title is liable to be destroyed by reason of proceedings in bankruptcy being taken, and that the title is only good after three months.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Fraud must be established.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is prima facie.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should the innocent man suffer? Why should his title be in jeopardy for three months?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I see the point.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This is copied from the Ontario statute.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That does not put any seal of approval on it. The trouble with these members from Ontario is that if a law passes the Ontario House they seem to think it is divinely inspired.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: This is the Act of last year, only the language is transposed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are not amending that provision. This is the Act as it stands.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: When this was up before several of us pointed out that this section as originally passed was imperfect and uncertain. Since that time several leading judges, I am told, have been consulted, and they have revamped the section entirely so as to make it according to the settled law. This was done by Mr. Justice Middleton and another judge, who recast the section. It was protested against here by several senators last session.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I still think that three months is too long a time. It leaves the title in an unsettled state. One party to the transaction might be perfectly innocent and he might have transferred the property and given a warranty deed to it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes, but under subsection 2 it does not mention any time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That would show that the party receiving the conveyance was aware of the bankruptcy and that he was being made a preferred creditor. The party to whom the liability is due might be perfectly innocent of the whole transaction. He takes a transfer of the property to cover his debt, supposing the man who makes the transfer to be perfectly solvent. In the meantime he disposes of the property to another person. We will say that it is real estate and that he gives a warranty deed. The property is taken from the other person—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The first transfer must be made with a fraudulent intent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The party receiving it should have knowledge of the fraud.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend will look at line 5 of the amended section, he will see that it says:

> And every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any insolvent person in favour of any creditor or of any person in trust for any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a peference over the other creditors shall—and so on. The debtor and the creditor must have been parties to the fraudulent transfer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Exactly. But a man who receives a deed say in a transaction in real estate may think the debtor is absolutely solvent at the time.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It means a deed given by the debtor to his creditor, not to a third party.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I know that perfectly well. That is elementary. It is stated there in plain language. There are two parties, the debtor and the creditor. The debtor has knowledge that he is going to be insolvent. The creditor has not that knowledge. The debtor from a desire to protect the creditor gives him a deed to a certain property. The creditor takes it in good faith, thinking the debtor is still solvent. He makes a transfer to some third party, giving a warranty deed, and this party comes on him and soaks him in damages because the transfer is declared fraudulent by this Act.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It could not affect property in the hands of an innocent purchaser for the value without notice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If the transaction is fraudulent, then it is no transaction at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend's interpretation is different from mine. It deals with the debtor giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors. Now, could a condition arise in which the debtor gave to the creditor a transfer of land with a view to giving him a preference without the creditor being aware of it?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why, yes, easily. Supposing a man had been a great friend of the debtor, and had become his creditor to a large amount. The debtor says to himself, "I am likely to become insolvent, and I want to protect Jones, because he is a good friend of mine." Without telling Jones he is insolvent, he sells him some of his real estate. Jones takes it perfectly innocently, thinking the debtor is perfectly solvent; still the transaction is treated as fraudulent. I say that both parties should have a knowledge of the fraud.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should think anyone would learn that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The provision is there in the law for anybody to read. A man who gets a conveyance of property or money in payment of a debt ought to inquire what the condition of his debtor is in order that he may know that such conveyance or payment is not made against the provision now under discussion. It is his duty to make inquiries and make sure that he is not acquiring a title that is open to objection. I think that 99 creditors out of 100 would realize that when they were getting their debts paid and others were not, there would be a pretty strong assumption that there was a preference.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That would mean, then, that every man who took over property or purchased from a person who owed him money would have to inquire whether or not that person was insolvent. He would have to go through that man's books, find out to whom he was in debt, and make inquiries in that regard. To say that because Smith owes Jones $2,000 and Smith comes to Jones and says: "I cannot give you that money now; it will be inconvenient to pay the money; but here is this piece of land; I will sell you that for $2,000"—why, it is absurd. He suggests it, and Jones says: "No, I cannot; I must go first and examine your books; I must get a list of your creditors; I must go to the bank with which you are dealing and find out just how your account stands there." It seems to me you are putting a tremendous burden upon him, and if you wanted to bring about the bankruptcy of a person you could not take a better way of doing it, because the very inquiry that this man would be making to protect himself would make people suspicious, and they would say, "By Jove, Jones must be in a parlous way, and we will refuse him credit."

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It seems to me that there is a great deal in what my honourable friend has just said. Any payment made within three months might be deemed fraudulent and void. Suppose a creditor who lives in Quebec receives a cheque for $5,000 from his debtor, who lives in Manitoba. He accepts the money, and an order in bankruptcy is made within three months of that time; he is bound to disgorge that money, no matter how innocent both parties may have been. That is the way I interpret that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Surely: no question about it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That preference may be on the part of the debtor alone. He may intend to give a preference to a man who has treated him well, and the man, who takes it innocently, and perhaps gives him more credit on account of getting that payment, may be put out. I am very diffident about disturbing this statute, because the law is the result of so many years experience and so many lawsuits that it is a very serious thing to disturb it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It has been the law of Ontario for a quarter of a century.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: Why should a debtor have a right to make a preference because another man has done him a good turn, when the law has adjudged him insolvent?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There is a principle running through French law which states that all the debtor's property is the common pledge of all his creditors. I think if we remembered that principle in framing this law we should be very much helped.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If the other party has knowledge that this man is insolvent of course it is a fraud, but fraud should not be presumed.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The trouble is that it is so very hard to prove; the other fellows swear it out.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But here fraud is not only presumed, but he cannot clear himself of the fraud even by showing that he is absolutely innocent of the transaction.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I think the answer to the honourable gentleman is quite simple. He takes the case of a purchaser from a preferred creditor, who was liable to attack for thirty days, and he asks what has become of an innocent purchaser from that creditor.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, I did not say that. I said, suppose that was a case of real estate, the innocent purchaser would have an action against the creditor, and merely paying back the amount of money would not clear him. If it did, that would be a different thing.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Take the case of a sale of real estate. The remedy of the purchaser as against a vendor who could not give title would be either specific performance or damages. If he wanted the property he would sue for specific performance, and that is on the equitable side of the court, and surely no judge would compel the vendor to give him land which the vendor had acquired innocently, but against the provisions of the Act. We are presuming that the creditor has acquired it innocently, and the preference has been given at the instance of the debtor. The judge might give damages, and to the extent of such damages surely that creditor who had damages against him for the sale by him of the property he got from the debtor had been preferred.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How is he recouped afterwards?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He simply returns to the estate what he got.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He would not be recouped out of the estate; he would lose that personally.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think there is a clerical error in section 8, new section 31, line 9: "praying" should be "paying."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is quite clear that that is a typographical error; it is "paying" in the Act of 1919.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Might I take this opportunity of asking my honourable friend for that long-promised amelioration of having Bills printed to show the old words in one clause and the new words in another?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I quite agree. My honourable friend has not suffered as much as myself from the absence of that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would it not be well if my honourable friend would appoint a small committee to go into that question? One of the officers of the House told me that the matter had been considered, but they had found it difficult to arrange it as suggested.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will bring that matter up to-morrow.

Section 8 was agreed to.

Sections 9 and 10 were agreed to.

On section 11—remuneration of trustees not to exceed 5 per cent:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I invite the attention of the Senate very seriously to this question. Section 40 is intended to be struck out—all the words as they were before, down to "cash receipts"—and then words added so that the new section will read:

> The remuneration of the trustee for all services shall not under any circumstances exceed five per cent of the cash receipts unless otherwise directed by the creditors or inspectors in any case in which the dividends paid by the trustee under section thirty-seven hereof amount to less than one hundred cents on the dollar, or unless otherwise ordered by the Court in any other case.

This section and section 17 are those to which I take most serious objection. When this Act was before the Senate last year I was asked by the promoters to support it, as I suppose many other gentlemen in this Chamber were asked. I told those people at that time, as the honourable member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) has stated to-day, that a Bankruptcy Act is totally unnecessary in the Dominion of Canada; that we have for a great number of years settled the winding-up of estates cheaply, expeditiously and satisfactorily to the people of the country; and the only advantage which anybody can imagine to arise from a Bankruptcy Act is to give the honest debtor a discharge. The honourable member for Halifax has pointed out a way for that which is simple, and should be adopted. This Bill was prepared, as I understand, by a solicitor employed by a collecting agency in Winnipeg, and is promoted by a lawyer from Montreal, a member of the House of Commons. Those two gentlemen came to me, and I consulted the best legal authority in Canada on this question, a Chief Justice of the province of Ontario, who has had a wide experience over many years, and we discussed this at very serious length, and with the concurrence of the promoters of this Bill and the concurrence of the Government we amended the Bill in the two sections which are now sought to be put out. I consider that the whole success of this Act depends upon our not passing this section, and for myself I consider my duty done when I point out my objections to it. There is no legislation which comes before this country so important as this Bill. It affects the whole commercial community; it affects debtors and creditors engaged in all trades of every description in Canada. In my humble opinion this section is fatal, yet it went through the House of Commons without a single member opening his mouth on it; it passed without any discussion or any comment; it was put through as a matter of pure form. The honourable member who promoted the Bill said, "Hear, hear;" that was about the only incident when it was put through. He spoke to me about making these amendments. I told him that we protested against them before, and we would protest against them again. He went, as I am informed, with the member for Stadacona, to the Board of Trade in Montreal, and they flatly refused to countenance these amendments. The Board of Trade in Toronto objects to them; the Board of Trade in Hamilton objects to them; and any man in business in Canada who thoroughly understands and appreciates them will object to them. They are made entirely in the interest of the trustees and lawyers, and entirely against the interests of the debtor and the creditors and against the good of this Bill. I wish to read again the letter which I received last year from the Chief Justice of whom I spoke. When I sent to him the two sections which are now asked to be repealed, he wrote this letter:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON.

Your letter of the 22nd, has just reached me.

I more than approve of your intended addition to the Bankruptcy Bill; if they effect their purpose the Act may be a success; if they fail of their purpose like the Insolvency Act of 1864 the new Act is doomed.

You may not be old enough to remember that the Act of 1864 was turned into one really for the benefit of a few lawyers and a good many assignees at the cost of the creditors; and it fell because the creditors thought the debtors might as well rob them as anyone else.

Eliminate delay and cost or else your Act fails. That is easy to say, it is hard to do; but you most do your best to accomplish it.

It is very hard to cure the evil of too much cost with one blow. The V.C. Blake tried to do so as to partition and administration in Chancery by means of commission in lieu of costs; but it is no news to you that the remedy was occasionally worse than the disease. But you are on the right road; and I am sure "will get there" if I may use the expressive vulgarism.

That letter was read to this House. Those gentlemen who are promoting this Bill said that it was a proper provision. They were insincere, for as soon as the Bill is passed they propose new sections eliminating what I consider to be the only good work in the Bill. Let me give you some idea of what this insolvency law means. As soon as I had intimation of that intended amendment I consulted one of the most experienced actuaries, a gentleman who has been interested in insolvent estates in the province of Ontario, Mr. C. S. Scott, of Hamilton, who has had as wide an experience as Mr. Clarkson in Toronto, and has the confidence of all the western community. He has such a large business as auditor for the great companies in the West that he has had to go out of this business entirely. But he was engaged in it for many years. I asked him whether or not the Ontario Assignment to Creditors Act had given satisfaction to the commercial community, with whom he is very intimately associated. In his opinion this insolvency Act is quite unnecessary and will occasion delay, increase the costs and prove the failure which the other Act proved to be, unless these provisions are retained in the Act. He says that estates are now wound up with very little, if any, litigation. Now we propose to plunge all these unfortunate people's estates into the courts again. We have had experience, and bitter experience, in the past few years of the winding up of estates in the courts. Some banks have been in the hands of liquidators for twenty years, and they are not out yet.

Now, what has been done? Here is a set of rules which have to be learned by all the lawyers throughout the Dominion of Canada. A new practice is going to be inflicted on the province of Quebec, which does not understand anything about the practice in the province of Ontario. You must remember that the law costs are made up on a tariff. I pledge my word as a lawyer of thirty-five years' experience that in my opinion there is no more extravagant bill of costs anywhere in the Dominion of Canada than the one which has been passed by the Governor in Council and has been attached to this Bill. It shows that the originators and promoters of this tariff have had thoughts, not at all of the interest of the estates, but of the interests of the people who are winding them up. Mr. Justice Middleton in the province of Ontario drew up a splendid bill of costs, on what we call the block system, and if the persons who prepared this had had the interest of the people in view they would have followed that form of bill of costs and not this one. Let me point out to you item 84 of this tariff. You must understand the making up of a bill of costs to appreciate what this is:

84. Counsel fee on settlement or compromise when proceedings have been taken or services rendered by a barrister in or out of court to expedite proceedings, save costs, to compromise or settle actions, proceedings or claims, or in negotiations leading up to a compromise or settlement, a counsel fee or allowance may be made therefor in the discretion of the taxing officer. . .

I say that that clause will be the fruitful mother of enormous costs. No such thing should be permitted. No such thing is permitted now under any other system of costs that I know of. No such wide latitude is given to anybody. The only way to make this bill of costs reasonable is to carry out the system which we adopted last year. Let the parties pay as much costs as they choose within reasonable limits. Section 40 of the Act was passed unanimously by this House after a thorough discussion by all. It was approved by those who were interested in the Bill; it was approved by the Government. An officer of the Government came down here and redrafted it. Yet before the Bill is put into operation the whole thing is to be struck away and a new section put in its place. The section which clause 11 of the Bill proposes to repeal is this:

40. (1) The trustee in bankruptcy or in any other proceedings under this Act shall receive such remuneration as shall be voted to him by the creditors at any general meeting.

(2) Where the remuneration of the trustee has not been fixed under the next preceding subsection before the final dividend, the trustee may insert in the final dividend sheet and retain as his remuneration a sum not exceeding five per cent of the cash receipts, subject to reduction by the court upon application of any creditor or of the debtor.

(3) The remuneration of the trustee for all services shall not under any circumstances exceed five per cent of the cash receipts.

(4) The disbursements of a trustee shall in all cases be taxed by the prescribed authority unless such taxation is waived either by creditors at a general meeting called prior to the declaration of the final dividend, or by the inspectors.

If you allow the trustee to receive more than five per cent what are you doing? You are inducing him to protract the winding-up until he can some before the court with half-a-dozen years of work to be paid for. That was actually done in the case of one of the banks in Toronto, and, if I recall correctly, the trustee was allowed $50,000 for one of his claims in winding up that bank. If the trustee knows that there is only five per cent in it for him he will wind up the estate as expeditiously as possible.

All the leading trust companies of Canada are limited to five per cent. They wind up the most complicated and greatest estates in Canada for five per cent, the limit that is recognized by our courts in all surrogate proceedings, in all trusteeships of estates, as being legitimate and fair to put upon the business. There is nothing in winding up an insolvent estate that requires more than is required to wind up a solvent man's estate. The very reason that the Bill was brought in at all was that we might go back to the conditions which prevailed when the insolvency law was repealed, because the people thought they might as well be robbed by the debtors as by anybody else. I therefore move, honourable gentlemen, that section 11 be struck out.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What about the disbursements?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Leave the disbursements as they were. Under the other Act we provided for the disbursements.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, when an amendment of this kind is made to an Act of Parliament it is to be assumed that there is good reason for it. I would invite your attention to the words which have been inserted in this section:

Unless otherwise directed by the creditors or inspectors in any case in which the dividends paid by the trustee under section thirty-seven hereof amount to less than one hundred cents on the dollar, or unless otherwise ordered by the court in any other case.

When an estate has been so successfully wound up as to realize one hundred cents on the dollar, and the question is brought before the creditors, to whom the estate has been practically transferred, is there any good reason why they should not exercise their discretion in making inquiry into the duties involved and in considering the high class of ability which has been brought to bear in the winding up of the estate?

Hon. Mr. POPE: And they pay for it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They make the poor debtor pay.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Let them inquire and let them show their appreciation by paying.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They will want to take it out of the debtor.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me that if you fix an arbitrary commission you are not going to get the best service from those upon whom falls the duty of winding up the estate. The presumption is, according to my honourable friend's argument, that there is a uniformity of work in winding up all estates. That is not the case. There may be an entirely different condition of affairs as between different estates. One estate may be very much involved, another considerably less. Section 40 of the Act places all estates, whether involved or not, upon a parity. In other activities remuneration is paid on the basis of the service rendered; but in this particular matter, at one fell swoop, we wipe out what is apparently a very well-established practice in remunerating for services rendered, and we declare that all services shall be assumed to be of equal value.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No; we fix a limit.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend's answer is that we limit the remuneration, but if the commission for the winding up of estates is fixed at five per cent, I say unhesitatingly that five per cent will be charged in all cases. On the other hand, the maximum may not be sufficient to remunerate for the services rendered. Consequently an estate that would by proper and very close application be made to realize a large amount for the creditors, may not be dealt with so attentively or with such ability that the maximum may be realized upon it if the trustee considers that the remuneration he is to receive will be inadequate to the services he renders. Is it not according to human nature for a man to consider at the very beginning whether he will receive sufficient remuneration to compensate him for carrying out properly and successfully the work which confronts him?

My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) says there is no difference between an insolvent estate and a solvent estate. Why, there is all the difference in the world. The reason an estate is insolvent, the difference between it and a solvent estate, is that there are complications and problems which the debtor has not been able to meet successfully; it is the mess, so to speak, into which the estate has fallen. The insolvent estate is in an embarrassed condition, but the solvent estate is in such a condition that he who runs may read of its success and of its means to meet its obligations. I am satisfied that if my honourable friend, as a practising lawyer, had the choice of winding up either a solvent estate or an insolvent estate he would not hesitate for one moment as to which he would accept.

This subject, I understand, has been submitted for an opinion to some of our most eminent judges, who have had more experience probably than many others in the winding up of estates. The question is, I confess, a very important one, and we attach importance to it, not because of our solicitude for the trustee, but because of the desirability of realizing as much as possible for the creditors and doing the best than can be done for the debtor, who is quite as much interested. An estate may have been so successfully wound up by the trustee that the debtor profits thereby. That is to say, if the creditors are paid in full, there may be a balance in favour of the debtor. The statement made to the officer representing the Government who has had charge of this Bill is that this provision would work out satisfactorily. A distinction is drawn between the administration of an estate under this Act and the administration of the ordinary estate wound up by a trust company. Here is an Act which provides for the winding up of bankrupt estates by trustees or others who would not naturally have so much experience in this respect as trust companies have in the winding up of solvent estates.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH STAUNTON: But the trust companies wind up solvent and insolvent estates alike. They do not deal only with solvent estates.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But we must remember this. Here is an Act coming into force under which there will be, I venture to say, very few trust companies winding up estates. They will be, in my judgment, wound up largely by individuals, although provision is made for the winding up of estates by trust companies.

In support of the view which has been expressed it has been contended that under the Surrogate Court Acts and the Trustee Acts of the various provinces the amount of recompense to the trustee was fixed at five per cent. Assuming that to be correct, there would seem to be good reason why a flat rate of five per cent should be fixed under the Bankruptcy Act. But on investigation and inquiry it was found that the statement that five per cent was payable by rule under the Surrogate and Trustee Acts is not correct.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is fixed, not by rule, but by statute. The statute of Ontario says that the remuneration shall not exceed five per cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am informed that the allowance is not five per cent—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is quite wrong. Get the statute.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:—although that is the amount usually awarded. It is within the discretion of the judge to fix compensation in all cases.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No; the statute says that five per cent is the limit.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the law in my province: the remuneration is not to exceed five per cent, and in the case of some estates, when there has been very little work done, the award by the court is smaller.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is set out in the Surrogate Court Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend is a lawyer of very prominent standing, and when a lawyer takes the very strong ground which my honourable friend does against his profession receiving what I might term adequate fees for services rendered it is very hard to meet the situation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Perhaps the honourable gentleman is not considering this Bill as a lawyer, but as a law-maker.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I must say that that is the proper view.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does the word "adequate" bear the same interpretation in connection with remuneration that it does in connection with protection?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: As much as you can get.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am unaware that I can say anything more upon the subject than again to impress upon those within the sound of my voice the principle that adequate compensation for services rendered cannot be fixed by any arbitrary rule but must be left to some competent authority.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The trouble is that these authorities differ in different places. Some would think 3 per cent would be adequate, and some would think 10 per cent was adequate. It is well to have it fixed; then everyone knows what the remuneration will be, and in that way an estate can be protected. I am strongly impressed by the learned argument of my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), and I shall certainly vote for his amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think that if the light which has been shed upon the original Act, amendments to which we are now considering, had been shed before the passage of the Act last year, it never would have been passed. I remember I made some inquiry about it, and the impression left in my mind was that commercial men all over the country were looking for an Act of this kind. I am a humble member of the Board of Trade in my own city, and I did not hear there, or in fact anywhere, any expression of a strong desire for an Act of this kind.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: There was none.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The statement made by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton goes to show that, instead of this measure being the result of the keen desire of the commercial public, it is just an expression of the wishes of quite selfish men. However, just now we are not concerned with the motive. But, taking the clause which is before the Committee:

The remuneration of the trustee for all services shall not under any circumstances exceed 5 per cent of the cash receipts unless otherwise directed by the creditors—

That is a comprehensible thing.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That does not apply to estates under $5,000. In such cases it would be 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER: As I understand it now, the feeling, probably not of the commercial public, but of the gentlemen who have been chiefly instrumental in having the Act passed, is that they would not get enough under the law as it stands. Then we get this, that the remuneration of the trustee shall not exceed 5 per cent of the cash receipts unless otherwise directed by the creditors or inspectors. The rest of the clause I do not quite understand.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is where the joker comes in.

Hon. Mr. POWER: It says:

—in any case in which the dividends paid by the trustee under section 37 hereof amount to less than 100 cents on the dollar, or unless otherwise ordered by the court in any other case.

If the estate pays one hundred cents on the dollar there might be some reason for being generous with the trustee.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: At the expense of the debtor.

Hon. Mr. POWER: But where the estate does not turn out to pay more than 30 cents on the dollar, I do not see why the trustees should get more generous remuneration.

Then there is this point to which I direct the attention of the members of the Committee. I remember when the old Act of 1875 was in operation that after a little while the creditors generally got tired of attending the meetings summoned by the Commissioner—I have forgotten his name—and in the end very frequently you had just the assignee and perhaps the inspector or one or two of that kind present; and they would naturally give directions to have the most liberal sum paid to the official assignee, or, as we call him here, the trustee. I am generally disposed to support a department in its legislation, but I could not vote for this measure as it stands.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I should like to ask the leader of the Government what is the meaning of the words "directed by the creditors or inspectors." Does that mean the unanimous voice of the creditors or a majority of the creditors? Does it mean the majority in value, or the majority in number?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Nobody knows.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If I were a creditor for, say, two-thirds of the estate, and if there were twenty other creditors they might come in and be willing to vote my money to the trustee. I think when this Act was drawn that should have been made clear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Could my honourable friend fix that up?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Wait until I get through. I have something else to say. Now, it says here, "or inspectors." Surely the creditors of the estate are the ones vitally interested. Why should they leave it to two inspectors to say, "We are going to increase the remuneration of the trustee." The inspectors surely only represent the creditors. The two inspectors, who are very close to the trustee, may say, "We will fix it up for you"—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The inspectors do, in a sense, represent the creditors.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Then, why should not this matter of remuneration be left to the creditors? And if it is left to them, is it to be a majority in numbers or in value?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is the value that votes.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Not necessarily, according to that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In all estates it is the value that votes.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The whole amendment just makes for injustice against the debtor. He is not considered here at all. He is like the poor bankrupt in Shakespeare. If there are 100 cents on the dollar what is left can be taken and divided among the trustees and the lawyers. The man who drew that section had no idea of justice. If you compel a man to go into insolvency, surely you should not have the right to make him pay for it after he has paid 100 cents on the dollar.

It is very easy to give other people's money away. The Bill says that he can apply to the court. If you pass this section, honourable gentlemen, you simply leave the amount of the costs of these proceedings to the direction of a taxing officer, and you leave the door open to the same abuses that led to the repeal of the other Bankruptcy Acts. They had just the same provisions in them, and they were both rank failures because the creditors would rather be robbed by the debtors than by anyone else. When we have had experience with this kind of legislation; why should we run on the same rock again? The Act is only required for one purpose; and if anyone wants to be an assignee, let him do the work for a reasonable amount of money. I hope this House will not bring back from its grave that old Insolvency Act which was buried twenty-five or thirty years ago—and that is what we will be doing if this provision is allowed to go through.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Bankruptcy Act was put through last session, and I believe that up to the present time it has not been put into operation. It was provided in the Act of last year that the remuneration of the trustee was not to exceed 5 per cent of the cash receipts. The leader of the Government seems to think that that would be too small a remuneration, but I do not think his argument showed conclusively that it was going to militate against the winding up of estates in a proper way. I think my honourable friend from Hamilton has made out a strong case in favour of the amendment, and I would much prefer to see the Act put into effect as it stands. If it is afterwards found that there is difficulty in getting trustees to properly conduct the work, then we can amend the Act. But I think we should first of all give it a trial.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton, to strike out section 11, was agreed to.

On section 12—inspectors' fees:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is this a change from the original Act?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Under the original Act we did not allow the inspectors anything.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am inclined to think that they should be paid.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How were they paid under the old Act?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It was supposed that the inspectors would be creditors, and would look after their own interests.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think it is fair at all to say that the inspectors shall not be paid; they are entitled to be paid, and I think the remuneration provided here is fair enough if they do not have too many meetings.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is all right.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not think the charges are unreasonable.

Section 12 was agreed to.

On section 13—proof of debts:

Hon. Mr. POPE: What is the change here?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Everything after the words "authorized assignment" is new. It is simply a matter of procedure.

Section 13 was agreed to.

Sections 14 and 15 were agreed to.

On section 16—appeal from registrar:

Hon. Mr. POPE: What is that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It simply makes provision for an appeal from the registrar of a court to a judge, which is not an unreasonable thing.

Section 16 was agreed to.

On section 17—solicitors' and witness fees:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The same argument which I addressed to section 11 of the Bill applies to this. This is a section which affects the solicitors' costs. The costs were payable according to a tariff, but were not to exceed 5 per cent of the estate, except where the estate was worth less than $5,000. Supporters of this amendment say that unless you take off the bridle and allow all the costs that are provided in the tariff no one will be very zealous in hunting up fraudulent transactions. In my judgment that is one reason why the limitation should stand. Usually there is a sort of co-partnership between the solicitor and the trustee, and the trustee will attack anything if he is not responsible for the costs. He will say, "Well, we ought to look into it." If he wins his case, he will get his costs out of the defendant; but if he goes into reckless litigation and loses the case, his cost should be limited. I do not think a man should be encouraged to plunge into litigation at someone else's expense before looking carefully and seeing whether or not he has a case. There is another thing. In the winding up of estates, these wonderfully expensive and intricate actions are as scarce as hen's teeth. Look at the law reports in Ontario, or in any province, and you will find that there is very little litigation arising out of insolvent estates, because there are very few cases which the law does not reach without litigation. In olden days, when we were settling the law, the courts were filled with cases of that kind. Now there are hardly any. Ninety-nine cases out of one hundred are wound up without any litigation at all. For the same reason that I expressed before, I submit that we should not depart from the section that we passed last year.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Honourable gentlemen, the honourable gentleman who has just spoken said that he was reiterating arguments with regard to the compensation of trustees which were well known to this House when this Act was put through last year. While I did not press the matter to a vote, I for one spoke against what is commonly known to lawyers as a block system. That is a round sum, no matter what the value of the services may be. That, I believe, is the system in force in the provinces of Ontario and Alberta. It is not in force in the other provinces of Canada, nor under the English Bankruptcy Act, because the subject has not been investigated at all. That question has been up before the bar of Saskatchewan on many occasions, and, as a bencher of some years standing, I may say that it has always been rejected.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is not the case here. Here is a man paid for his services according to the tariff, but a limit is placed upon his fee under this section.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: You have no right to fix the value of a man's services when you do not know what they are. The section before the Committee simply applies to bankruptcy proceedings the same principle which is applicable to all litigation, namely, that the costs are taxed by a proper officer, subject to review.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This is not litigation; this is the winding up of an estate and should not be treated as litigation.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I again demur to the statement that trustees all over Canada are only paid 5 per cent. Take the ordinary cases of executors or administrators—I cannot speak as to the province of Ontario—and I think you will find that the practice in the western provinces and the practice in England is that the fees paid to the executor or administrator, as the case may be, are fixed by the county or district court judge, who passes the accounts. When an executor or administrator goes into court for the purpose of passing his accounts and getting his discharge it is in the discretion of the judge, who passes the accounts according to value and intricacy or lack of intricacy of the services rendered. I have personal knowledge that that is what is done, and the fees paid to the solicitor are taxed on a scale similar to that applied to ordinary litigious proceedings in court, and subject absolutely to the taxation of the ordinary taxation officer, a court official; and the judge fixes the amount of the counsel fee which is allowed to the advocate who acts for the administrator or executor. Now you propose to introduce this block system. I do not deny for a moment that it is a popular proceeding to say to a lawyer, "No matter what the value of your services rendered, you shall not receive more than a certain amount of money;" but I am quite willing to trust the intelligent court officials all over Canada, who are appointed for the purpose of taxing bills of advocates in litigious or other proceedings. We are willing to trust them in Western Canada in a lawsuit, a reference, or the winding up of an estate, and why should we not do it in this matter? While five per cent in the case of estates of $5,000 or more may be adequate compensation in most cases, in a large number of cases it may prove entirely inadequate, and under the proposed section the discretion is left to the trained officials of the court, whose business it is to tax and say what is adequate compensation for work done. The schedule is attached to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Did you ever see a more extravagant schedule in your life?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It would be a very mild one compared with the bills of costs which I have seen in connection with the English Bankruptcy Act. I have been told, and presume it is correct, that this tariff of costs has been examined and approved not only by those who promoted the Bill but by Judge Middleton.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No; I would like to read from Judge Middleton's letter on it:

> Frankly I do not like the tariff, but I could not devise a better. Our Ontario block system could not be made to apply to a reference, and the old tariff still answers for proceedings in liquidation.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I cited Mr. Justice Middleton as supporting this tariff. He said, "Frankly, I am not altogether pleased with the tariff, but I cannot devise a better one."

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But he says, "I am not pleased with the tariff."

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: And he says that the block system—which is supported by the honourable gentleman who has moved this amendment—is not suitable. The block system means to put a lump sum—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No, it means putting so much for the writ, so much for the fees—

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: A lump sum for the various steps in the proceedings. He says that he is unable to suggest or devise a better system, and he has inferentially approved of the tariff set out in this Bill. Whatever else may be said of Judge Middleton, everyone knows that he is most familiar with practice, that he is what is known as a practice judge, and was a practice lawyer before he went on the bench. I am also told that the tariff is approved by Judge McLennan of Montreal, who stood extremely high at the bar of Quebec. You can take any lawyer's bill that is rendered, and make it look absolutely ridiculous, just as you can a doctor's bill—so much for writing a letter, so much for posting, a hundred little items, one after the other, and even so much for making out his bill; it is like so many pin-pricks when the client gets it. The question is, on the whole is the bill too high or too low for the work done? I am willing to trust all the officials throughout Canada to say what is the proper sum for the solicitor for the services he has rendered in connection with the work? I recognize that it would be popular to say: "I don't care whether you cut all these fees, whether they are high or low, is decidedly indifferent to me," but I am not going to stand here and say that a lawyer should not be compensated for the work he does in his proper capacity, as well as any other labourer in Canada.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I say a word before the question is submitted to the Senate—because the members of the Senate seem to be so anxious to wipe out compensation for trustees, attorneys, solicitors and counsellors, that one has to be expeditious in expressing his views. The argument of my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) as to compensation for trustees may be quite logical, and according to the vote of the Senate there is a good deal to be said in that regard; but when we consider section 67, which is being amended, there is an entirely different problem; not that the legal profession should be treated differently from the vocation of trusteeship, so to speak, but the situation is entirely different. Let me illustrate this by an example. An estate is being wound up; five per cent is the maximum that can be paid for the agrregate services of the professional man, whether he be attorney, solicitor, or counsellor. A piece of litigation is being brought into court, say a claim for $5,000, on the recommendation of the trustees, inspectors and creditors, for the purpose of prosecuting a $5,000 claim, say against a debtor, in the interest of the estate. Now, the most that can be paid for all services in that litigation, even if the case goes from the original court up to the Supreme Court, is $250, although the litigation may be of the most complex character, and may involve counsel attending court for several days. Does any sensible man who has had business experience, more particularly one who had been engaged in or in touch with the profession of law, think that this litigation could be carried on for $250? Why, it is absurd upon the face of it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is not what the section says.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The statute provides that where he succeeds he may recover his costs from the other side.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But suppose he does not succeed? Both sides cannot succeed. Then is the estate going to drop the claim? No trustee or creditor or inspector would authorize the prosecution of a claim for a substantial sum of money in view of this clause. I simply cite that as a practical illustration of tying down the remuneration for services rendered in the arbitrary and rigid manner mentioned. All I can say is that in cases of this kind those against whom such litigation might be directed would with impunity refuse to pay the estate, simply saying, "There is no probability of the estate prosecuting us for the recovery of this amount, because the Act limits the compensation to five per cent." For instance, take an estate of $50,000; the utmost that can be paid for attorneys, solicitors, counsel, and all the legal work that may be done in realizing on that estate would be $2,500. Of course it may be said that that is ample compensation for realizing that amount of money. That may be so in the great majority of cases; but there will be claims of a litigious character which must be prosecuted, and which the trustee may not feel himself justified in prosecuting if that limit is fixed.

Hon. Mr. POPE: There is nothing in this Bill to prevent the creditors from paying the trustees or the solicitors any amount they like out of their own pockets.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Then let them go to it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If an estate is losing a hundred cents on the dollar the creditors have to pay it. If a trustee has a case which he thinks should be prosecuted, and his lawyer will not go on because there is not enough money in it, the creditors can say, "Well, we will authorize it." That is the custom now. There is a provision of the law which allows creditors to prosecute at their own expense, and then they get the benefit of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They would not under this.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They can do so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If the creditors choose to authorize it they can do so. This does not apply to those rare cases my honourable friend has spoken of; this applies whether there is any litigation or not. The honourable leader did not take any exception to the amendment the last time this matter was up, and there is no reason why it should not stand, because if it stands they will be getting sufficient remuneration. If an estate is under $5,000 there is 10 per cent allowed; if its over $10,000 there is 5 per cent allowed. That is the amendment which was passed last year unanimously by this House.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to point out one thing that the Government may not have taken into consideration. If a trustee authorizes a solicitor to start proceedings to set aside a conveyance, and the litigation takes perhaps a week or ten days in court, in Manitoba not more than $300 in costs can be collected from the unsuccessful party in a lawsuit. Even supposing the trustee were successful, and the property were saved after ten days litigation, he could not collect against the opposite party more than $300. Who is to pay the balance?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They never have cases like that.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes, the woods are full of them. Take a case where the first decision goes against the trustee, and he takes it to the Court of Appeal, and counsel argues there for probably a week, and the trustee succeeds in the appeal, all he can recover is $100. Now, I do not believe he could get the services of the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) for $100 for three or four days in the Court of Appeal. Then who is to pay? The fees in the Province of Quebec are very high, but in the western provinces legislation is being passed almost every day to cut down the fees of lawyers.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Still you are all getting rich.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: On what?

Hon. Mr. POPE: I don't know, but you scrape out somehow.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: We are getting rich on the sessional indemnity. I do not see how it is possible for a trustee or anybody else to employ a solicitor under these circumstances, because even if he succeeds somebody has to pay.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It just shows where the money is going under this Act. I move that section 17 be struck out.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton was agreed to: yeas, 16; nays, 11.

On section 18—trial of issue, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the alteration in that section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That adds a new subsection to the Act.

Section 18 was agreed to.

On section 19—undischarged bankrupt obtaining credit:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The only change there is that the words "five hundred dollars," in the twelfth line, are substituted for "fifty dollars."

Hon. Mr. POWER: What do you propose to do as to the five hundred dollars?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the limit of credit?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It means that the bankrupt is able to obtain credit of five hundred dollars instead of fifty dollars.

Hon. Mr. POPE: What does that mean?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That has to do with the penalty. The present Act reads as follows:

90. Where an undischarged bankrupt or an undischarged authorized assignor,—

(a) either alone or jointly with any other person obtains credit to the extent of fifty dallars or upwards from any person without informing that person that he is an undischarged bankrupt or an undischargegd authorized assignor. . .

That is to say, he must inform anyone from whom he purchases on credit that he is an undischarged bankrupt if the credit amounts to fifty dollars or more. We are increasing the amount to five hundred dollars. It is humiliating for a man to have to make that statement.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Do you not think that a clause of that kind ought to come under the Criminal Code?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is better to have this Act contain the whole law on the subject than to have to refer to the Criminal Code to get the information.

Section 19 was agreed to.

On section 20—pretending to be trustee; trustee acting without bond:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The change in section 96 of the Act consists in the insertion of the words, "with intent to defraud" after the word "trustee" in the first line of paragraph c. The purpose is merely to make a trustee liable if his noncompliance with the Act is with intent to defraud. No person should be found guilty of a criminal act unless it is intentional.

Section 20 was agreed to.

On section 21—repeal of section 97:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We seek to repeal section 97 because it is somewhat unreasonable. It might l ad to fruitless and unnecessary prosecutions. There is no such provision in the Bankruptcy Act of any other country, and it is felt that we should not have it in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Was there not a good deal of discussion about that particular clause when the Bill was going through before?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not recall that.

Section 21 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Fowler for the adoption of the second report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the navigability and fishery resources of the Hudson bay and strait, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Daniel in amendment thereto:

That the said report be not now adopted, but that it do lie upon the table until the members of the Senate have been provided with copies of the evidence as taken before the said Committee for consideration.

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, as there are apparently no other speakers I will proceed to close the debate. I would not inflict any remarks upon the House at the present time if it had not been for some statements made by two honourable gentlemen, both members of the Committee, who spoke against the report. One of those gentlemen was not present at the time the report was decided upon by the Committee. The other one was present for a short time and left the room before the items were completed.

A statement was made by the honourable member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) with regard to the précis of the evidence taken that was prepared under the direction of the Committee. It was felt by the Committee that as the Hudson Bay route is a matter exciting considerable interest, particularly in the western part of Canada, the evidence taken before the Committee should be printed. There was a great deal of evidence and a considerable portion of it, as was natural in an inquiry of that sort, was not altogether germane to the matter at issue. The evidence was in the form of question and answer, and the pages would thus be multiplied. It was felt that a précis containing in narrative form all the evidence that had to do with the case before us, and that could be easily read, should be made; and it was so decided. I was asked to prepare such a précis, and I did. It was a labour of many days, I may say, and I challenge the honourable member for St. John or any other honourable member to find in the evidence that was taken and printed anything germane to the matter at issue that is not in the précis; and I challenge him to find anything—

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I can find plenty.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then produce it. I say that everything, whether it made for the view that I held, with the majority of the Committee, or against that view, was put into that précis, and in this I think the gentlemen of the committee outside of my honourable friend hold the same opinion as I do. I know that was my object. In presiding over the deliberations of this Committee I was as impartial as a man possibly could be, I think.

The honourable member from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) went out of his way to make an attack on one of the witnesses who was before that committee. That was Mr. Stefansson. He not only refused to accept the general opinion of Mr. Stefansson as being a man who deserves very well of the country, but he denounced him as a fraud, as an impostor; almost in that language. And why did he denounce him? Because, he said, of certain statements which Mr. Stefansson made before the committee with regard to the use of submarines in those northern waters. He did not read the evidence, but I intend to read it, even though it may be of some length. In fairness and in justice to Mr. Stefansson, who has been so traduced by an honourable member of this House, I intend to read what he actually did say with regard to the use of submarines in that section. In the latter part of his evidence, on page 127 of the printed volume, he says:

With regard to the navigation of the straits, I think you have perhaps not considered the possibility of the use of submarines. I do not know whether this committee has taken up the question of submarines or not. That is a matter to which I have given a great deal of thought for the last three or four months. I have interviewed some of the best submarine men. I went to Washington and Secretary Daniels very kindly introduced me to his best submarine man. I have also read books on the subject, and have conferred with Simon Lake, who is one of the best known living submarine inventors in America, and we all agree that the presence of ice is an advantage and not a disadvantage to the submarine; that the submarine can navigate any sea irrespective of the ice. In other words, when Hendrick Hudson discovered this bay he was looking for a short route to China, and he failed, as many others had failed before and after him; but the short route to China that people dreamed about, across the pole, has now been discovered through the submarine, and if Germany had had the same motive for sending the Deutschland to northern Siberia, or Alaska, that she had for sending her to New York, there is no reason, so far as we can see, why should she not have gone across.

That does not sound like the ravings of a lunatic.

I will not take sufficient time now to explain that, but that is my opinion based on investigation, and Simon Lake concurs in it, and Captain Hart, who is the head of the submarine section in Washington has written me a letter in which he says that if I plan to cross the polar sea from the Atlantic to the Pacific and if I have a submarine of approved construction I would have no difficulty in getting volunteers from such men as he has under him.

Those are men in the submarine line.

I mean, they look upon it as a fairly possible thing.

All of these things have to be tried out.

Then I should say it would be a profitable thing perhaps for this committee to consider the possibility of submarines in winter for limited cargoes, such as mail. They are a wonderfully perfect invention when you come to examine them. The submarine is an invention that, you know, was used in the American Revolutionary war, and even for centuries before that, and the submarine has been brought to a much higher degree of perfection than the aeroplane, for instance, although the eyes of all are now centred on the aeroplane. The submarine is a more highly developed invention and is capable of great possibilities. Now, I am not an authority on the subject, but I have been able to give Simon Lake and others some information about ice which together with what they know about the construction of the submarine, makes us all agree that voyages under ice are possible. Simon Lake has himself had a good deal of experience on the north coast of Russia at the time that Russia was under the government of the Czar. He has done a good deal of under-ice work with submarines, in connection with icebound harbours. The Czar's Government was very much alive to that question before the war.

Hon. Mr. Thompson: In a place like that channel up there, the depth under the ice would be very different for the submarines from what it is between Prince Edward Island and the shore, where the ice reaches almost to the bottom.

Mr. Stefansson: Submarines would not be successful, of course, except where there is deep water under the ice. It is a question of the depth of the straits. There are many types of submarines. One of Simon Lake's inventions has wheels on the bottom. Although a submarine carries a cargo, say, of 500 tons, still, by adjusting the buoyancy of it, it will weigh only half a ton on the wheels; that is, only half a ton weight will rest on the wheels. He claims that using wheels over the bottom is very satisfactory.

Mr. Stefansson is not giving his own idea with regard to this; he is simply giving a statement of what was said by Mr. Simon Lake, a well-known inventor in connection with submarine work.

He claims that using wheels over the bottom is very satisfactory If this channel were well sounded, he could get his submarine right on the bottom, if the channel is not too deep, and by watching his depth gauge he could always keep in the channel, because he can always see within two feet how deep he is.

It is on the strength of that statement, made in that way, and just as I have read it, that the honourable member from De Lanaudière denounced Mr. Stefansson. It is not necessary for me to defend Mr. Stefansson. I suppose if this man were like some others, a miracle worker, a modern Moses, who instead of striking living water from the rock strikes volumes of watered stock, then the honourable gentleman would bestir himself and spend sleepless nights and weary days in getting up banquets and other things to do honour to such a man. But because this is a man who spent years in the unknown regions of the north acquiring information, which he has given to us, about our northern empire, he is to be sneered at and traduced and abused. I think the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudière ought to be ashamed.

My honourable friend also made some statements with regard to insurance on ships: you could not possibly get any insurance; nobody would insure. This is a new route. It was very difficult to get insurance on the St. Lawrence when the St. Lawrence was first used in commerce by steamers. Insurance on the St. Lawrence to-day is high. That is quite reasonable and quite right. But the Government itself should insure until this route has been proved to be safe, as I believe it will eventually be proved to be safe. So there will be no question about that. Let the Government take the risk with regard to the insurance.

The honourable gentleman wants to know what will be shipped by this Hudson bay route. As other persons speaking on this matter have already said, if there were never a pound of wheat shipped over that Hudson bay route, yet it would be valuable. It would open up an exceedingly valuable country. The evidence that we received showed that. Other evidence there is in plenty to show its value.

At the risk of being somewhat prolix, I am going to read from a statement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier with regard to the future, in which he showed himself, in this case at least, to be a statesman of vision, and right vision:

I hope that I shall live to see a city at the terminus of a Hudson's Bay Railway . . . . It is not enough for us to confine our views to Canada that is now settled, we must look ahead, we must push northward as far as colonisation can go. I have great confidence that before many years are past we shall see towns and villages on the shores of Hudson's Bay, as we see on the shores of Norway, where people will be prosperously engaged in the lumbering business, the pulp industry, the fishing industry, the mining industry, and others. This is what I hope Canadians will see ere long.

That is the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking in the House of Commons on April 3, 1906. Sir Rodmond Roblin says:

The benefits of this route to Europe, when completed, especially to this province—meaning the province of Manitoba—

—cannot be over-estimated.

Where is this Hudson bay situated? Have we anything to guide us, in the experience of the world with regard to other regions situated no better than this? We have, in northern Europe. Someone will say: "Oh, but the western countries of Europe are affected by the Gulf Stream and for that reason portions of Europe are habitable much farther north than our side of the ocean." But far beyond the region where the Gulf Stream exercises any influence there is a country settled, maintaining a very large population and carrying on very successfully the world's work. The Gulf of Bothnia lies between Sweden and Finland, and is much farther north than the region we are discussing here.

Between Aland Island at its southern extremity and the Tornea at its northern end—

Aland Island is the southern extremity of the Gulf of Bothnia and the Tornea its northern—

—although in those countries very little of the population live in towns, several important cities can be found, such as Gefle, population 32,000 Soderham, 11,000; Sundsvall, 15,000; Hernosand, 6,000; Uleaborg (about 60 degrees), 16,000; Bjorneborg, 13,000. . . The Pas, the southern terminus of the Hudson terminus of the Hudson Bay road is 6 degrees further south; Port Nelson 3 degrees further south, and the most northerly point of Huson strait only one degree further north than Aland Island, at the south extremity of the Gulf of Bothnia; that Tornea the furthest point north on the Gulf, is 5 degrees further north than Hudson strait, 9 degrees further north than Port Nelson, and 12 degrees further north than the Pas.

No one doubts that the Gulf of Bothnia is of very great value to the adjacent countries for the transportation of the crops of their most important products, and Hudson bay has over the Gulf of Bothnia the advantage that it never freezes over. The area of Finland north of the 60th degree is 144,255 square miles, and it has a population of close to 3,000,000. Twenty years ago their exports amounted to $39,000,000 and their total foreign commerce to $84,000,000.

Take the White Sea. Archangel, which is on the White Sea, is practically the only ocean port that Russia has. Archangel is a great many miles farther north than the entrance to the Hudson bay, or Nelson, or Churchill, and for 6 months in the year the port is closed by ice. Yet it has a population of 40,000 inhabitants, and is the sea outlet for a great portion of Russian products. I commend this book from which I am reading to the attention of gentlemen who have not already come to the conclusion that this route is feasible, and that this north country, instead of being frozen in practically all the year round, is a very habitable country, and a country with great prospects for the future.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What is the name of the book?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The Hudson Bay Road.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: By whom is it written?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: A. H. de Trémaudan.

Now we come to the question of the climate. In 1774 Arthur Dobbs, the historian of La France, said about the Hudson bay:

> There might be comfortable settlements made in most places, and very tolerable even in the worst and coldest parts of that continent, which are the northeast and northwest sides of the bay; but on the southern and western sides of the bay there might be made as comfortable settlements as in Sweden, Livonia, or on the south side of the Baltic; and farther into the country southwest the climate is as good as the southern part of Poland and northern part of Germany and Holland.

In 1752 Joseph Robson, the architect of Fort Prince of Wales, said:

> I have seen a small pea growing without any culture at York Factory. Most kinds of garden stuff, particularly peas and beans, grow here to perfection. I am of opinion that barley would flourish. Gooseberries and red and black currents are found in the woods growing upon such bushes as in England. I should expect by no more labour than would be proper for my health to procure a desirable livelihood, not at all doubting of my being able to raise peas and beans, barley, and probably other kinds of grain on Hayes river. The natural produce of Hudson bay grows very fast, and comes to perfection much sooner than that of England. There is no spring or fall—a leap from winter to summer. The soil is fertile, the climate temperate, fit for the produce of all kinds of grain and for raising flocks of tame cattle. At Churchill horses and cows have been kept in winter, though greatly exposed to the frost and cold. At Moose Factory sown wheat has stood the winter frosts and grown very well the summer following. Black cherries also planted here have grown and born fruit, as would other trees if propagated. The climate is not worse than that of Sweden, Denmark, Russia, Poland, and North Germany.

Now, I will quote a man nearer our own time. Mr. E. Mosher, of Halifax, was at Churchill from September 2nd to January 7th superintending the construction of buildings for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. He said:

> So far as the weather is concerned, I would as soon have spent the months in Churchill as in Halifax.

He did not find the cold any more severe than in the East. According to his observations, the lowest temperature registered was 39 degrees below zero.

Then we come to Professor Macoun, who says:

> In conclusion, I may say that the climate of the whole north land is a stable one, and as local conditions change it will improve, and where small spots are now called good land whole areas will take that term.

That is the history of the West, as has been pointed out again and again; yet the honourable gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) and the honourable gentleman from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) sneer at this whole proposition.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I rise to a point of order. The honourable member from Kings and Albert has made a statement which is absolutely incorrect, and which I challenge him to prove. I ask that that statement be withdrawn. In the speech that I made I distinctly stated that I was in no way criticising the undertaking of the Hudson Bay route, but that my criticism was entirely of the report that was on the Table.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Don't make a speech.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The honourable gentleman knows that. I rise to a point of order, and I ask your decision, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: If the honourable gentleman from St. John thinks that he has been misrepresented by the remarks made by the honourable gentleman from Kings, he will have an opportunity to explain what he said and to correct the misrepresentation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It would need explanation, because the honourable gentleman did not make himself clearly understood, and that is the understanding that I had.

Professor Macoun continues:

The low altitude and the long day are fixed conditions and will always be the same.

"The long day"—what does that mean? It refers to the long period of sunlight when crops will grow, and grow much more rapidly than in our southern country. Other men have borne testimony to the fact that in that country the temperature is the same at 6 o'clock as it is in the middle of the day, which is another advantage in the growing of crops.

The forest will be cleared and the muskegs drained, and as the land becomes drier the frosty conditions will pass away, and a good country will result.

Now I have finished with the shipowner, and I come to consider the remarks made by what we may call the shipmaster or the shipmate. The honourable gentleman from St. John, with the purpose of showing that he was an expert, laid the foundation necessary to give expert testimony. He told us that he himself had gone down to the sea in ships. We who had always been in the habit of thinking of him as a well-dressed, comfortable-looking, dignified senator, skilled in the science of medicine, were somewhat shocked when we were called upon to visualize him in tarry breeks, climbing up into the mizzen shrouds and viewing the waste of waters from the point of vantage of the crowsnest.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I went up to the main royal yard.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: My honourable friend was much more supple then than now. He told us some wonderful stories with regard to this; and when he was relating these episodes in his naval career I was reminded of the tales of Sindbad the Sailor and the adventures of Huckleberry Finn. We heard of the wonderful winds he met with that blew first from this quarter, then from that. First, we had the wind astern, and our ship went merrily bounding over the waves. Suddenly the wind shifted and blew from over the bow, and the ship rolled ignominiously backwards; later it shifted again and blew from the starboard quarter, and her nose fell off towards Newfoundland; then the wind veered to larboard, and the ship sagged off down towards the coast of Florida. I was reminded of those famous lines of the late Dr. Drummond, in The Wreck of the Julie Plante:

> For de win' she blow lak' hurricane;
> Bimeby she blow some more.

This was not the only startling episode in my honourable friend's career as a sailor man. He was coming out once, afterwards, and suddenly he ran into a fog. Well, the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) might say, "That is no new condition for the honourable gentleman from St. John, because he comes from the foggiest town in the Maritime provinces;" but the honourable gentleman from Halifax in saying that would probably be actuated by the jealousy which he feels for the more prosperous sister city of St. John.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I never ran anyone down.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They generally got out of your way, I guess.

The honourable gentleman from St. John went to sleep that night soothed to slumber by the somewhat familiar sound of the foghorn. When he awoke he looked out, and behold, he was surrounded by icebergs. We are reminded of Tennyson's lines:

> Icebergs to right of them,
> Icebergs to left of them,
> Icebergs in front of them,
> Volley'd and thundered.

—or whatever icebergs do under those circumstances. Icebergs—where? Not in Hudson bay; not in Hudson strait; but on the free sea-path that stretches across the Atlantic from this continent to Europe. That is where these icebergs were. The honourable gentleman did not tell us how he got out of that scrape, so we will have to conjecture for ourselves. It may have been that they got out the long boat and towed the ship through between the icebergs; it may have been that they got out the pike-poles and shoved the icebergs out of the way; or it may have been that they followed what would be the easiest way if time was not important, and sat down and waited for the icebergs to melt. We know he got out, however, because he is here to-day. And these are the reasons he gives for being an expert in the navigation of the Hudson bay and straits.

The honourable gentleman has charged that the evidence does not support the findings of the Committee, and he has read to you certain testimony which was given, not by any man who was there, but by Mr. O'Hara, whom he quoted as an authority. Mr. O'Hara was never near the Hudson bay in his life; Colonel Anderson was not there. None of the people whom he has quoted as authorities was there—

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What about Captain Anderson?

Hon. Mr. FOWELR:—except Captain Anderson. I think I can give you a quotation from his evidence which certainly will support the findings of the Committee. Mr. O'Hara presented a report which was of very great assistance and value to us, and it was very well gotten up; but it was the result of the findings of other people. As to the period of navigation, Captain Anderson says:

As to safe navigation during the summer season year by year, the question is open to individual opinion.

Navigation in Hudson bay can safely be relied upon from the 15th of July until the 15th of November, though the seasons vary very considerably. Some are excellent and some are very bad.

My honourable friend did not quote this, but if you figure out the time between those dates you will find that it comes to about four months.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That is the maximum.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is not the maximum. It says:

—can safely be relied upon from the 15th of July until the 15th of November.

Captain Couch says:

We now leave Montreal about the 10th to the 15th of July, and arrive in the bay about the 25th, returning about the 1st week in October.

Captain Kean says:

In my opinion navigation of the Hudson bay would be safe during August, September and October. In July, ice would frequently be met with, and in many cases very hard and heavy.

The service in most seasons would begign about the end of June and continue until the end of November.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Finish that. It can be done with the class of ships to which he made reference.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is what we propose to have—a class of protected ships, as they should be in any place where ice is present. I do not say that the report of the Committee professed that during those four or five months there would be no ice. The Atlantic ocean has been navigated although icebergs in plenty are found there. That great ship the Titanic went down on the sea-path of the Atlantic, with an enormous loss of freight, and a more enormous loss of human life. Accidents will occur. But I say that, with ships properly protected, the consensus of opinion is that from the 10th of July—the whole of July, in fact—the strait is navigable. My honourable friend sneered, because we said if it were not for the ice from Fox Channel the strait would be clear all the time. I am sorry if the mentality of my honourable friend is such that he could not understand what that meant. But I do not think that is the case: I think he did not want to understand it—that he was so put to it to find something to criticize that he criticized that; and no stronger evidence could be given that the report is all right. What was meant by that in the report was that the ice is not formed in the strait but is extraneous ice coming down from Fox Channel at certain periods of the year. That is what was meant, and I think my honourable friend quite understood that. I think that is the only point to be made.

I only say, as I said in the beginning, that I have absolute faith in the future of this route—not only in its feasibility, but of its commercial success. In my opinion some day the greatest part of Canada will be that northern country. Rigorous climates breed the right class of men, and the day will come when the vision of Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be realized and we shall see at the mouth of the Nelson or of the Churchill, whichever is chosen, a strong, large, flourishing city, and all around we shall see towns supplying to the inhabitants of the interior the goods they require for their use.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to make a few remarks on this question.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I would point out to the honourable gentleman that the debate is closed.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I only want to ask the honourable gentleman who has made this very interesting speech why he objects to the members of this Senate having a copy of the evidence?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not object to it at all.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It is to be observed that the mover of the original motion has signified his willingness that every member should have a copy of the evidence which the honourable member for St. John seeks to obtain through his amendment.

The amendment was negatived: contents, 7; non-contents, 20.

The motion was agreed to.

IRRIGATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 168, an Act to amend the Irrigation Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

POST OFFICE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 167, an Act to amend the Post Office Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 21st, at 2 P.M.

THE SENATE.

Monday, June 21, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—SUSPENSION OF RULE.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: By leave of the Senate, I wish to move that Rule 100 be suspended in so far as it relates to the recommendation for printing contained in the second report of the Special Committee of Inquiry into the Navigability of Hudson Bay and Strait.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill E5, an Act for the relief of Charles Henry Foster.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANKS.

THE RATE OF INTEREST ON DEPOSITS—MOTION.

Hon. L. G. POWER moved:

That, in the opinion of the Senate, it is the duty of the Government to increase the rate of interest to be paid to depositors in Post Office and other Government Savings Banks to 4 per cent.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I do not propose to trouble the House very long in dealing with this matter, although it is an important one. This is not the first time that this question has been brought before the Senate. I had the honour of bringing it up in 1912, in 1913, and again, at considerable length, in 1916. However, there are a number of honourable gentlemen here who probably were not here when the question was discussed before, and, at any rate, those who were here have forgotten what was said; so I think it only right to put the position as it stands to-day.

There is an impression, I think, in the minds of some honourable gentlemen that it would require a statute to alter the present rate of 3 per cent paid on deposits in the savings banks. If honourable gentlemen will look at the Act respecting Savings Banks, chapter 30 of the Revised Statutes, they will find, in I think the last section of the statute, that the Governor in Council shall fix a rate not to exceed 4 per cent. Up to the 30th of September, 1889, that rate was paid on deposits in the Post Office savings banks and in the Government savings banks. The rate of interest payable to outside lenders was less than that. On the 30th of September, 1889, the rate payable to the depositors was made 3½ per cent; and on the 1st of July, 1897, the rate payable to outside lenders by the Government having fallen to 3 per cent or thereabouts, the Finance Minister of that time, Hon. Mr. Fielding, reduced the rate to 3 per cent, at which it stands now. When he reduced it, the rate payable to lenders to the Government was, as I say, not in excess of 3 per cent.

Evidently the reasonable thing is that the depositors in the Government savings banks, who are as a rule reputable citizens, people who have contrived to save something, but not very much, should get some of the benefits which accrue to wealthier people, who are now getting 5½ and 6 per cent. The last loan that the Government made was only a short-time loan, and was, I think, at 6 per cent. If the Government pay American capitalists 6 per cent, and their own fellow citizens only 3 per cent, does not that, honourable gentlemen, seem to you to be on the face of it an unreasonable and unjust attitude to take? It does so strike me, and I think it must so strike people generally.

I look at the Canada Gazette and other sources of information and find that at the end of May last there were in what are known as the Post Office savings banks $30,310,000 and in what are known as the Dominion Government savings banks $10,764,000; making altogether $41,075,000. An addition of one per cent on that amount would be $410,000, which would be distributed amongst people who, I think, constitute a very deserving class. Naturally the banks, which all have savings departments, will not pay more than the Government pays; so the attitude of the Government really prevents the bankers from paying a decent rate of interest to their depositors, and enables the bankers to borrow immense sums at the rate of 3 per cent; and then these bankers turn around and lend money to the Government at 5½ per cent, and they lend to private borrowers at rates running as high as 8 and 10 per cent. The truth is that the Government, by the attitude they assume, give the bankers an enormous protection. I cannot understand why this distinction should be made between the banks and the private depositors. These depositors, as honourable gentlemen know, are as a rule people who are not overloaded with this world's goods.

It is true that on former occasions it was stated that the depositors could get Government bonds. In the first place, honourable gentlemen, the depositors are frequently widows and other persons who are not familiar with business and do not know how to go about obtaining the bonds. Further, not universally, but as a rule, the sums deposited in these savings banks are comparatively small, not large enough to pay for a bond. There is no doubt that during the last two or three years a very large proportion of the money which had been in the savings banks was invested in Victory bonds and other bonds issued by the Government. Notwithstanding the fact that there was a considerable transfer made from the savings banks to the bonds, the remarkable thing is—and it shows that there is a great deal of money in the country—that at the close of last May there was deposited in the savings branches of the different chartered banks no less a sum than $1,209,000,000. That is an enormous sum, honourable gentlemen, and there is this to be considered with respect to it, that, as I said a while ago, this enormous sum, which the banks have, or had, in their vaults, they lend at rates going from 5½ per cent paid by the Government up to 8 or 10 per cent paid by private individuals.

I think, honourable gentlemen, that common justice demands that the people whose money is being treated in that way by the banks should get some benefit from the rise in the value of money. Unfortunately, the law as it stands does not go further than to give the Government power to raise the rate to 4 per cent. Every honourable gentleman must feel that it is only fair and reasonable that the Government should raise the rate so that these people, who are, as I say, generally not capitalists, should benefit from the increased value of money.

From what I have said, I suppose, almost any honourable gentleman who is not personally interested would feel that it was the right thing on the part of the Government to make this change, that it was their duty to do it. On a former occasion, when this matter was considered, the ground was taken by one or two honourable gentlemen that an action of this kind would seriously damage the banks. In fact, one would almost be tempted to think that the banks would be put out of business. Well, the banks were in business when the rate was 4 per cent before, and when the banks could not get anything like the rate of interest that they get outside now. And even if the change were to diminish to a certain extent the profits of the banks, I think they are not greater objects of consideration than the public who put their money into the savings accounts. What is the fact about the banks? As every honourable gentleman of course knows, the banks have for some considerable time been paying dividends of not less than 10 per cent, and some pay as high as 14 per cent. If this change were made it might reduce the rate of dividends somewhat, but not very materially, and it would help out a large number of deserving people all over the country.

I dare say honourable gentlemen have noticed what very large sums of money are expended by the banks on buildings. Their buildings do not look like business offices, but are more suggestive of Grecian temples or something of that sort, and they are scattered all over the country. The banks are now establishing small branches in all the important cities, not with a view to transacting the ordinary business of a bank, but just for the purpose of getting the deposits of the people in the immediate neighbourhood.

There is this further point, to which attention was called by the honourable gentleman from Toronto, whom I do not see in his place just now. If the Government were to raise the rate to 4 per cent, and if the banks found that it did not suit them to pay that rate, then the money would be deposited in the Government savings banks and the Government would have at their disposal a very considerable sum for which they were paying only 4 per cent instead of 6 per cent, as they are paying now. Honourable gentlemen, as I said at the beginning, I think that anyone who has not a personal interest adverse to the public must feel that it is the duty of the Government to raise the rate to what it was previous to 1889.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I think my honourable friend is to be congratulated on his perseverance in this matter. As he has already told us, this is the third or fourth time he has brought up this question and tried to impress on the Government that it is their duty to pay a higher rate of interest to depositors in the Post Office savings banks. My honourable friend pointed out that the rate of interest was reduced in 1897 because the Government found they were able to get money in the ordinary way by lower rate of interest than 4 per cent. This shows that at that time the Government took into consideration the rate at which money could be borrowed in the open market. It seems only logical and reasonable, therefore, that the Government should likewise take into consideration at the present time the rate at which money can be borrowed in the open market and should raise the rate of interest in the Post Office and other Government savings banks to 4 per cent, or even more, inasmuch as the Government, if they go into the open market to borrow money, have to pay a considerably higher interest rate than 3 per cent.

My honourable friend referred to the question of bonds, but he overlooked the savings certificates which the Government are issuing at the present time, and on which, I think, the purchaser gets 5 or 5½ per cent. I am not sure which rate it is. The savings certificates should be of some advantage to the ordinary depositors in the Post Office savings banks because they bear a little higher rate of interest than is being paid on deposits. The savings certificates, I presume, can be turned in at any time, and their cash value allows of 5 or 5½ per cent interest on the money. So there is a certain advantage to the ordinary depositors in the Post Office savings banks in understanding the arrangement with regard to savings certificates.

I think the Government should take this question into serious consideration, and see if they cannot meet the views of my honourable friend from Halifax.

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER: I think there is one element that has been left out of consideration so far, and that is the fact that the chartered banks will have to follow suit and pay 4 per cent, or the rate, whatever it is, to which the bank advances interest on savings accounts. That means that the banks will charge a higher rate of discount if they have to pay a higher rate for deposits. Perhaps it is selfish on my part, but that is the only end of the banking system that I am interested in; and I think it would be a misfortune to put so heavy a tax upon business. There are many persons who in their business are obliged to borrow large sums from the chartered banks. These in turn get the money from depositors, who are able to save. If you raise the rate in one case it must be raised in the other. It is to the credit of the banks that they have not advanced the rate. Although the cost of everything else throughout the country has been advanced, the banks have maintained the same rate of discount. Now the depositor, for whom the honourable member for Halifax pleads, has an opportunity to invest his savings at a larger rate of interest than 3 per cent if he wishes. He can invest them in war bonds and war savings certificates. So nobody is hurt, and I do not think there is very much demand for a raise in the rate of discount. I hope that the Government will not raise the rate, and will turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of the honourable senior member for Halifax, and let the rate remain as it is in order that business men will not be hampered with a too hard rate of discount.

Hon. JAMES DOMVILLE: Conditions have changed materially from what they were before the war. I speak subject to correction, but I understand that our patriotic people are buying German marks at 10 cents on the dollar, and they calculate to get a thousand per cent. They do not need to put their money into the savings banks. A gentleman who spoke in another House did not seem to understand where all the coin was. Already paper is getting dear, and therefore the printing of those bank notes is going to cost a lot of money. I agree with my honourable friend from New Brunswick (Honourable Mr. Fowler) that it is not a serious question to-day as to the rate paid in the savings banks, because depositors have other opportunities of getting big interest. They can buy Dominion securities at 5 per cent or 5½ per cent, or provincial bonds at 6 per cent, and take their money from the post office savings banks, but those banks are an advantage to people who have a small amount of money, as it is perfectly safe, and they are happy when they have a deposit to their credit. Those savings banks are for small depositors, not for speculators or traders. Down our way they have been very successful and give a great deal of satisfaction, and I do not think there need be much kick against the Government in regard to them. We can kick them on something else, but not on that.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: I think my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) has forgotten one phase of the subject. He says the banks are not charging more interest than they formerly did. My experience is rather different from that; and, besides they are not paying any more interest for their money. The banks get the bulk of their money for nothing, or at a very low rate of interest. First of all, they can issue paper money up to the full amount of their capital by paying to a guarantee fund of 5 per cent. All those $5, $10, $20, and $100 bills they get practically for nothing.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Fiat money.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Then, again, the banks get all the current money accounts, amounting to hundreds of millions, for nothing. I think that is right enough, because they have to keep a large amount of fluid assets in money, in order to meet the cheques; but on the great bulk of the savings, while they are supposed to pay 3 per cent, they pay only an average of 2½ per cent; so I am told by bankers. For instance, a depositor puts $100 into a savings account on the 5th of the month; he gets no interest for that month. If he draws it out on the 25th of any month, no interest is paid for that month. So that the highest rate the banks pay for any of their money is only 2½ per cent, and to-day they are loaning it out at 7, 7½, and 8 per cent. To my mind that is too big a margin. In the United States the banks pay 4 per cent on deposits.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The great bulk of the money is loaned at 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Very little nowadays.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not think the bulk is loaned at 6 per cent now; but, even granting that it is, there is too much margin when we consider that the banks get the amount of their capital for the cost of printing bills and a guarantee of 5 per cent, and the current-account money which they get for nothing. In the United States the banks pay depositors 4 per cent and do not charge any higher interest for discounts.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I would like to know what banks pay 4 per cent?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: When I was in business in the West I lived near the boundary line, where the banks paid 4 per cent on all deposit moneys, and I am satisfied that if they paid it there they paid it in other parts of the United States as well.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Canada paid 4 per cent then.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, this was subsequent to the time that Canada was paying 4 per cent on deposits. The banks are in a good position and could easily afford to pay 4 per cent on savings deposits without incommoding borrowers to any degree either; and I am satisfied that if they had to pay 4 per cent the rate to borrowers would not necessarily be raised. About 1897 the interest rate was lowered from 4 per cent to 3 per cent, and rightly enough at that time, because the Government could borrow money in England for 3 or 3½ per cent. If that was a proper action to take then, I leave it to the House to say whether it would not be proper now that the Government should increase the rate, because it is paying or has paid as high as 7 per cent in the United States for money; and if the Dominion Government cannot borrow money under 5½ or 6½ per cent, why not give 4 per cent to the people of Canada who have money on deposit? That seems to me only fair in view of the reverse action we took in 1897. It is a question well worth consideration, and I quite agree with my honourable friend the Senator from Halifax who has brought this matter up that some action ought to be taken. The matter was brought up in the Commons several times when I was there, but the Government never saw their way clear to act; and it seems to me only fair, now that the Government has adopted the policy of borrowing in Canada the money it needs, that the rate should be raised on savings bank deposits when it is paying 5½ per cent on its bonds, or nearly double what it pays on deposits in the savings banks.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: But the deposits in the savings banks amount to a mere bagatelle. Does the honourable gentleman mean that his argument should apply to all the deposits in all the banks?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: What I mean is, let the Government pay 4 per cent on their deposits, and then if the public choose to put their money in the banks at the average rate of 2½ per cent, let them do it; but the banks would have to pay 4 per cent. I think the motion of the honourable Senator from Halifax is very opportune.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: I cannot agree with what has been said by the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff). If he takes the trouble to inquire from different banks he will find that after the banks have administered the money which is deposited in their savings departments it costs them much more than 3 per cent; as a rule, it costs about 3½ per cent. As to the banks in the United States paying 4 per cent, he is altogether mistaken. I defy him to find in New York any bank in good standing that pays 3 per cent, or even 2½ per cent for its money. They will not pay it; they pay a very small rate of interest. In England not a cent of interest is paid for deposits in the banks; in fact, in a number of banks the depositor has to pay something to get them to receive his money on deposit. In France the same is the case. Those are countries of as large experience as this country; and if it were such a misfortune to the Canadian people not to command a higher rate than 3 per cent in the banks, one might wonder why the people in France or England might not command that interest or even a rate of 1 per cent.

The honourable gentleman from Assiniboia and the honourable gentleman from Halifax lose sight of the duties incumbent upon the banks in receiving the savings of the people. They must keep in reserve, of the money which is in their coffers, at least 25 per cent, and even 30 per cent or 40 per cent, to answer all the calls that are made on them.

I have heard the honourable gentleman from Halifax repeatedly make the statement that the banks pay high rates of dividends to their shareholders. Well, they pay high rates of dividends because those dividends are paid not only on the capital but on the reserves which have been accumulated from year to year; but if the honourable gentleman inquired he would find that the dividends do not, as a rule, exceed 6 per cent on the money that has been invested by the shareholders. The stocks of the banks are distributed over the whole country, and it is open to any person living in this country to invest in those stocks; and if they are so attractive or remunerative, people who have money on deposit with the banks can buy them, and the more bank stocks are bought the better for the country, because the industries of the country, not only manufacturing but agricultural and others, depend upon the credits accorded by the banks all over the country.

I think the people of this country are proud of our banking institutions. They have been rendering valuable service to the whole community, because as a rule they have been well conducted and have been established and maintained on the proper principle, and it is that very principle that the honourable gentleman speaks of from year to year. I think it would not be in the interest of the people at large to disturb that position by inducing the Government to pay a high rate of interest. It is open to depositors in Government savings banks or in chartered banks to buy either 5 per cent or 5½ per cent Dominion bonds. Why do they not? Because they are depositing their money under such conditions that they can command it at any time; they put it on deposit and the next day they can draw a cheque upon that deposit and purchase what they desire, whereas they feel that if they were to purchase bonds from the Government or deposit their money with the Government they would not have the same facilities. If the honourable gentlemen who have propounded the view to which I refer were to study more carefully the conditions of our banks, and the financial conditions that are required in the interest of the country at large, they would see that the rate of 3 per cent is a reasonable rate, more especially when depositors have at their command the means of placing their money at 4, 5 or 5½ per cent, with the guarantee of the Government.

It has been stated that the rate of interest for money has been raised. Well, I have had something to do with banks; I think I know what is being done in the chartered banks of this country; and I say without fear of contradiction that the rate for money has not been raised. The money which was obtained all through the war and before the war has been at the same rate that obtains at the present day in the different banks, and I think the banks are not protected more than what is in the general interest of the country or more than the bank themselves are entitled to.

Hon. L. McMEANS: I rise, not to discuss this financial question with the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat, but merely to suggest that if the Government of this country wants money it will have to pay a little more interest, for this reason, that the provincial governments are now entering the field and are receiving money on deposit and paying 4 per cent for it. The Manitoba Government is taking deposits at 4 per cent and lending money at 6 per cent. I do not know that I can say whether that is going to be an unqualified success or otherwise. The honourable gentlemen from Assiniboia speaks about a bank rate of 6 per cent or 8 per cent; but it must be borne in mind that that is compounded every 3 months, so that at the end of the year it is a very much larger rate than 6 or 7 per cent, or whatever the rate of discount may be. To my mind the question is, how much the Government of Canada require money. If they want it they will have to increase the interest.

Hon. V. RATZ: Most of the depositors in the Post Office savings banks are not business men or monied men, but generally speaking are poor people—workingmen, widow women, etc.

My honourable friend says they could invest their money in bonds. So they could, but they are not business people; in fact, many of those people do not know how to go about getting the money from those savings banks unless some one tells them. Some of them have not money enough to buy a $50 bond, even if they were right on the spot. As most of those depositors are poor people with small accounts I do not see why the Government should not pay at least 4 per cent on those deposits. That would seem only reasonable and right.

I do not know much about the banks, and do not propose to speak about them, but I know that I never figure on any interest at all from them. If I want to pay a cheque I can get the money quickly from the bank, but if I have money to invest I do not invest it with banks. They are good for accomodation, and we need them, but their reserves are paper money, and they do not lose much by it even if they have to keep considerable amounts in reserve.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I fear that I cannot give my honourable friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) any further assurance than I have given on former occasions when he rose to favour us with his views on this subject. It may be said that the Dominion Government in no way enters the field as a rival to invite the deposit of money in the Government savings banks, but rather as matter of convenience to those who have funds and who desire to have them conserved, and conserved on a very conservative basis. It is quite manifest that, if the Government increased the rate of interest upon deposits in the Government savings institutions, a like increase on bank deposits would result. The honourable gentlemen from Halifax directed our attention to the fact that there is on deposit in the chartered banks of the Dominion $1,200,000,000. The increase in the rate of interest upon those deposits to 4 per cent would result in the banks having to pay $12,000,000 a year extra to keep peace with the Government. I am not now counting upon the extra interest which the $40,000,000 in the Government institutions would represent; that would be $400,000 a year. But if an added burden of $12,000,000 annually were imposed upon the chartered banks of this Dominion, by their being compelled to pay 4 per cent instead of 3 per cent, there is no doubt that the public would have to pay the banks that extra $12,000,000.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: The banks pay 10 to 12 per cent dividends.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I venture to say that there is no bank in the Dominion paying dividends at that rate.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The Bank of Nova Scotia does.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My impression is that the everage dividend of the banks upon the shares would only represent about 5 per cent. I do not think that the Bank of Montreal, that old and well-established institution, is paying more than 5 per cent upon the market value of each share. But, although a bank advertises its dividend at 10 per cent, honourable gentlemen must remember that the purchasers of its shares upon the market only receive a dividend of 5 or 6 per cent. In my judgment it is not desirable that great inducements should be held out to depositors, either by the Government or by the banks, to place their money in what I might term a stagnant fund. Money is made for circulation, and to stimulate and develop the trade of the Dominion; and, if the Government and the banks should enter into rivalry in the investment of funds, this money would be withdrawn from the legitimate channels of business, in which it is of use in the development of our trade and commerce and industries and many of our resources. That, in my judgment, would not be a desirable condition. I may say that the Government of the day has provided a multiplicity of investments whereby those who wish to deposit their funds and who do not desire to place them in business enterprizes may receive between 5 and 6 per cent. It goes without saying that an investment in government securities is practicaly the same thing as a deposit in a Government savings bank except that the money realizes a higher rate of interest. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the Government has kept fully in view the necessities of the public, so far as paying a fair rate of interest is concerned. If the people choose to put their deposits in the Government savings banks at 3 per cent they are at liberty to do so; on the other hand, the Government says: " Buy Government securities, and we wil pay you a percentage practically equal to bank dividends." Under these circumstances I think the public are well protected.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I do not propose to detain the House at any length; but I wish to refer to one or two points made by the honourable gentlemen from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique). He alleges that money costs the banks more than 3½ per cent. Well, the banks would be open to receive deposits, even though they bore 5 per cent interest; and he is probably rather exaggerating the position when he says he thinks that the taking of these deposits would cause a marked increase in the cost of running the banks. The banks are there for business, and whether they are paying 3½ per cent or 4 per cent for deposits really does not make any material difference in the work or in the cost.

The honourable gentleman undertook to say that 4 per cent was not paid in the United States. As to that, we have the authority of the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) who lives near the boarder, and who is personally aware of the fact that in the United States 4 per cent is paid in the savings banks; and I know the same fact from another source.

The honourable gentleman drew a picture of the serious things that might happen if the banks were compelled to pay 4 per cent; but the honourable gentleman must realize that it is not compulsory. If the banks do not wish to pay 4 per cent, they need not do so, and then the people who have made deposits in the savings departments of the banks will make their deposits in the Government savings banks, and the Government will be getting a large sum of money at a very low rate of interest, and when the Government next issues bonds it will raise the money without going outside and will get it at 4 per cent instead of at 5½ per cent.

As to the banking system of this country, I am quite aware that it is a good system. It was a good system when 4 per cent was paid, and when 3½ per cent was paid, and it is still a good system, and would continue to be a good system if the rate of interest went back to 4 per cent.

The leader of the Government said something about the fact that people could get bonds. Well, as the honourable gentleman from North Middlesex (Hon. Mr. Ratz) said, a very large proportion of the people who make deposits in the savings banks are people who do not know how to go to work to get bonds; and, further, the money comes to these people in small amounts and they wish to have it put where they can get it again if occasion requires. So practically the bonds are not available to them. Then there is the fact, honourable gentlemen, notwithstanding all these supposed methods of getting rid of their money, that there are $1,200,000,000 of the people's money in the savings departments of the chartered banks. I think that is the best evidence that the honourable gentleman is mistaken.

I must say that I am not just able to see the point that the leader of the House is undertaking to make. He told us that it was desired to have the money conserved. Well, the savings bank is a good place in which to conserve it. Later on he said that if the Government adopted the policy embodied in this resolution, it would interfere with the development of the resources of the country. If the money is going to stay in the banks just to be conserved, I do not see how it can at the same time be developing the resources of the country. The truth is that the banks are now protected, and the people who are not capitalists have no opportunity to deposit their money in a safe place where it will bring in anything like a decent return, and the temptation is to put their money into speculation where it may be lost. I think the case is a perfectly plain, clear one, although some honourable gentlemen have apparently been trying to becloud the issue. I move the resolution, seconded by my honourable friend from Liverpool (Hon. Mr. Farrell).

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I hope my honourable friend, having directed the attention of the Senate to the subject upon which he has favoured us with his views, will not insist upon placing the Senate in the position of having to divide upon a subject of which we have no particulars before us. I need scarcely point out to him that the financial situation is entirely too important and intricate a one to be dealt with in this light-handed way. I think my honourable friend will not accomplish anything by pressing this matter to a division.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think it is a question on which the Senate should have an opinion, and should express its opinion.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Power was negatived.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

MOTION.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF moved:

That, in the proposed reorganization of the various departments of the Government, it is the opinion of this House that men with expert ability of a high order can be secured in Canada who are capable of doing this work in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to say at the outset that I am quite in favour of the proposal of the Government to reorganize the various departments. I think that if there is any work that the Government should take up and carry to a conclusion it is this very work. There is no doubt in my opinion that a great deal can be accomplished a great deal of money saved by the reorganization of the various departments. The main question is how it can best be done—whether by men in Canada, or whether we have to go to the United states to get a German-American firm to do work that we in this country surely ought to be able to do. I have no doubt, honourable gentlemen, that this firm could do very good work and could effect very great saving; but are there no men in Canada other than these Heaven-born experts who can do this work which is so badly needed? We have had some little experience of these gentlemen. They were employees of the Arthur Young company, who made the reclassification and who have been working for a couple of years and have managed to draw a couple of hundred thousand dollars out of the treasury of Canada. Thinking, I suppose, that they had accomplished about all they could do in that line that would look well, they assigned this work to this German-American branch of theirs, and apparently the Government proposes to fall in line and be their victim, and to allow them to go on and do the work of reorganizing the different departments.

I will give credit to Arthur Young and Company for accomplishing one good thing. Prior to the reclassification, officials doing the same class of work in different departments were paid altogether different salaries. In one department a clerk doing a certain class of work would get $800; in another department another clerk doing exactly the same class of work would get $1,000; in another department another clerk doing the same kind of work would get $1,200; while in still another department another similar clerk would get $1,500. That condition has been done away with, and in that respect I think a great deal of good will result when the reclassification is put into force. But if we are to judge of the work of this firm in classifying the different individuals in the different departments, by the fact that they give $4,000 to one man, and $2,000 or $2,500 to another who is doing far more important work, I think we shall come to the conclusion that they have not done very good work. If this branch of their firm is not going to do any better in the future than the parent company has done in the past then I say, honourable gentlemen, that it would be pretty hard to pick out a committee of three men in the Dominion of Canada who could do any worse. And look at what it is proposed to pay them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Who are the men? I have not heard yet.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Griffenhagen and associates. I do not know who Mr. Griffenhagen is, but the name is a very German-sounding one, and I see it has been stated in the other branch of Parliament that this firm is a German-American institution. I think it is rather unfortunate that the Government should advertize to the whole world the fact that we in Canada cannot produce a committee of three men who have brains enough, common sense enough, and courage enough to reorganize a couple of Government departments, and that we have to go to the United States to get them. I think the Government must have a very poor opinion of the ability of our people; in fact, I think it is rather worse than that.

During the past five or six years, as you all know, Canada was engaged in a very serious war. We sent across the water some half a million of men and sixty odd thousand of them sleeping their last long sleep in France. They helped to save this country and the Empire. It seems to me that if the country cannot produce a committee of men who can reorganize a department without sending to the United States for assistance, it is a question whether the country was worth saving. That is something to think about. Was the country worth saving if we have not got men with brains enough to reorganize our Government departments? I know that we have many such men. The two departments selected for reorganization are the Post Office and the Customs. I know that my honourable friend the Postmaster General has brains enough and common sense enough, and I think that if he were let alone he would have courage enough, to make a reorganization. My honourable friend knows that a reorganization is in order, that it is badly needed, and that hundreds of thousands of dollars can be saved by it. And he has known that, and the Government has known it, for years, and it has not been done. Now they propose to hand over to an American firm the work that they have not done themselves.

My honourable friend the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who is on that Committee of Council who are looking after this matter, said that we have nobody in Canada with the necessary experience. In the same breath he stated that there were four Canadians amongst those men whom it is proposed to engage to do the work. Has it come to this, that Canadians have to be sent over to the United States to go through an apprenticeship before they acquire brains enough, sense enough, and ability enough to reorganize a department? I do not think that is necessary at all.

Another thing. In this Order in Council that the Government have passed taking authority to do this work they lay stress on the good work that Arthur Young & Company have done in connection with the Printing Bureau. Does anybody here believe that it is Arthur Young & Company who have done the good work in connection with the Printing Bureau? At least I do not—not for one moment. Some of you may remember that I brought up this question of the Printing Bureau two sessions ago, and there was appointed by the Government a committee of three Canadians to investigate the working of the Bureau. That committee was composed of Mr. Lewis, of Ottawa, Mr. Tarte, of Montreal, and the late Mr. Slack, of Montreal, at that time general manager, I think, of the Montreal Gazette. They were master printers and knew something about printing. They made a report to Parliament. I have that report, and I am going to read a few extracts from it to show you what they recommended to the Government. If the Government had carried out their recommendations there would be no need to have anybody else at work reorganizing the Printing Bureau. They found that the Printing Bureau was in a very sad state. That report was made, I think, over two years ago, and until quite lately nothing had been done. This American firm was sent down to the Printing Bureau after the committee's report was made, or after a great deal of their work had been done. The committee's findings were pointed out to the members of the American firm, and they went down and questioned the men in the Bureau—and there are a lot of good men in the Printing Bureau. They sucked the brains of those men. Then the Government, in this Order in Council, give them full credit for everything that has been done in connection with the Printing Bureau, that is saving $500,000 a year and will go on to save another $200,000, making a total saving of $700,000. No credit whatever, in any shape, form, or manner, is given to the men who did the work. Why should the Canadians not be given credit for what they have done? Why should this German-American firm be given credit for the work that the Canadians did do?

What is the cause of the great unrest in the Civil Service to-day? I think I need not claim to be a special advocate of the Civil Servant, for I am not. I have always gone on the principle that if men, or women either, are not satisfied with their positions in the Civil Service, it is open to them to do as I did when I was not satisfied—to get out.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: And come into the Senate.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But there is much dissatisfaction and unrest throughout the Civil Service to-day, and it has been largely brought about by the employing of foreigners to do this reorganization, which, in my judgment, could have been a great deal better done at home. I am not in favour of appointing a committee of Civil Servants to reorganize the service. I am in favour of appointing outside men of standing and ability, with a fair amount of brains, some common sense, and a considerable degree of courage. If you appoint a committee like that, you will get good results: you will get big results. But all the credit is given to these Americans who are brought in to do the work.

It is proposed to pay this outfit $10,000 a month, plus all their travelling expenses and all their sustenance expenses when they are outside of Ottawa going from point to point in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: To Hull.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Well, I think there would be some fairly expensive junketings: it is only human nature. And these men stipulate that for the reorganization of the two departments they must be paid for not less than twelve months; so there would be $120,000 to the principals.

Then, the Government has to provide all the clerks—to supply men from the various departments to give them the necessary information. What sort of reorganization could they make if they did not have the brains of the departments to assist them? In view of these facts is the proposed reorganization by this firm worth while?

The Minister of Labour, who is a member of the committee of the Privy Council, stated the other day that the bargain was not definitely made; and I am bringing these facts to the attention of my honourable friend and the Government in order that they may look into the matter further and see if it is not a mistake to employ these outsiders when we have good men at home.

While this is only a business matter—and I am dealing with it altogether as a business matter—I want to say this to the Government, from the political standpoint. As I said a moment ago, there are 60,000 of our men sleeping in France. They died for this country. There are in Canada 200,000 or 300,000 of their relatives—fathers and mothers and brothers, sisters, wives, and sweethearts. Do you think these relatives will take kindly the action of the Government of the country that their men gave their lives to save from being overlorded by Germany? A great many of these people will not know whether Griffenhagen is a German or not. I do not, but the name sounds very like a German one. I know that some of the men who are working with him are German Americans. Will the relatives of our soldiers who saved the country, or helped to save it, take it kindly that we should go outside and go, as it were, to men of the enemy races and ask them to accomplish this work for us? I cannot understand it.

My honourable friend the Minister of Immigration also is a member of the committee of the Privy Council. When he wanted to reorganize the Department of Immigration he did not do anything of that kind. He did the reorganization himself, or put one man on the job. Of course, it is a small department. The one man did the work well and it did not cost very much. I venture to say that if the Minister of Immigration were at liberty to take hold of this reorganization work he alone could do it far better than any committee of 3, or 11, or 7, or any other number you would get from the other side of the line to come here to do it. I know he can do it. I know his ability and I know his courage. The main thing it needs to do this is that a man shall have the courage to do what he thinks is the right thing, and shall not be influenced either by the Government or by the Civil Servants themselves. If the work were done by somebody here in Canada you would bring about such a reorganization as would be a credit to the Government, and, as this American firm shows, would save to the Government millions of dollars in the years to come.

In order to prove what I say about the work having been done in the Printing Bureau by this Canadian committee, let me read a few extracts from their report, which was printed, and a copy which was sent to every Senator and every member of the House of Commons. It is a report that should be read by every member of this House and every member of the other. It is an illuminating document and is well worth considering, and if the recommendations contained in it had been carried out there would have been an end of the matter. Right at the first they say:

> General conditions in the Printing Bureau.—The conditions found to exist in the Printing Department, viewed from the standpoint of commercial efficiency, may be briefly described as shocking.

When these men point that out, would it have been a very serious matter to remedy? Something has been done along this line. Last year, or this present year, quite a number have been superannuated. Some of the causes the Committee give are:

> First, the publication of matter of little or no value; and, secondly, distribution in quarters where its only usefulness was to fill waste-paper baskets.

In addition to the appointment of these men whose names I have given you, another committee was appointed by the joint Houses of Parliament—an Editorial Committee; and the carrying out of the recommendations made by the Editorial Committee has saved in the past two or three years hundreds of thousands of dollars, although the recommendations have not been carried out in full. The Cabinet Committee was composed of Sir George Foster, Hon. Arthur Meighen, and Hon. Martin Burrell; and the Editorial Committee was: Fred Cook, Assistant King's Printer, Chairman: F. C. T. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce; and F. C. C. Lynch, Superintendent of the Natural Resources Branch, Department of the Interior. That committee made very many recommendations, all in the line of cutting down the expenditure. They showed where printing could be saved. They showed also how the cost of printing had gone up between 1913 and 1917 from $1,274,000 to $2,401,000. They stated that in the printing of the Civil Service List there could be an annual saving of $4,000; in the Adulteration of Foods bulletins, an annual saving of over $1,900; in the Insurance Report changes might be made effecting a saving of over $2,500 a year; in the Trade and Navigation returns, an annual saving of over $2,000; and so on. The committee say:

> The Hydrometric Survey reports should not be published. They are not called for in the public interest. This would give a saving of $30,000 annually. Any person desiring to build a pulp mill on a certain stream and wishing to know the water capacity of that stream could secure the information on application to the department.

There have been recommendations made by that Committee which, if carried out, would mean a great saving. This is altogether separate from the Committee of Master Printers. The Government acted promptly on the report of the Committee of Master Printers. I do not wish to take up too much time and am reading only a few extracts from it:

> The Editorial Committee was appointed by Order in Council under date of October 4, 1917. The assertion of the committee that such a board could save the country thousands of dollars annually has been proven. Your committee has, however, not the slightest hesitation in declaring that the economy thus effected has at the best only been partial.

Speaking of the Proofreading Department, here is what they say:

> The Proofreading Department is largely overmanned, and, what is worse, a very considerable proportion of the staff is not competent. It appears to have been a "catch-all." The staff could be reduced by at least 60 per cent.

In view of that, is it any great work for Griffenhagen to go down there and follow along the path that has been blazed for him? And he gets all the money and all the credit. That seems to be a very strange proceeding.

The committee, discussing the retention of unnecessary employees, go on to say:

> The mere fact that there is no work for the employee to perform has no longer any bearing on his retention.

The conclusion:

> Our conclusions and recommendations will be found in the "technical report." Briefly, they may be summarized: Get rid of the unnecessary employees, and make those remaining render efficient service.

Now, should the Government need anything more than that to bring about a reform? Is it necessary to send a new set of men at $10,000 a month, when this report sets out in black and white exactly what is wanted in order to bring about the proper state of affairs?

Here is an extract taken from the Technical Report:

> In general, our investigation will prove that, while great economy has been made possible through the establishment of the Editorial Board, in the elimination of unessential printing, and by the Distribution Department in the elimination of unnecessary circulation, to a very great extent, owing to the "system" in vogue at the Bureau, the opportunity for economy that might have been effected has been rendered impossible.

Here is what they say could be saved:

Table of Reduction in Staff and Possible Saving.

Department.	Wage Saving Per Annum.
Office staff	$ 70,000 00
Proofreading	40,000 00
Typesetting	125,000 00
Bindery	55,000 00
Chief mechanic	5,000 00
Caretaker's staff	20,000 00
	$315,000 00

Three or four years ago the Government made a change and gave all the men in the Printing Bureau—the labourers, printers, mechanics, etc.,—two weeks' holidays with pay.

The committee say:

> Now the employee is not asked to help the plant out in this way, but on the contrary is given two weeks' holiday with pay. This one item will this year cost the public $28,900, a saving which could be added to the sum mentioned in paragraph 44.

That is the sum mentioned in the table that I have just read, amounting to $315,000.

Now take the question of caretakers and charwomen. For the Printing Bureau building alone there are 64 charwomen, one watchman and 11 caretakers, at a total cost of $31,318, and they say that $20,000 could be saved in that respect.

Referring to the staff at the Bureau, they say they are not much good. Listen to this:

> On the staff we find school-teachers, lawyers, notaries, doctors, a machinist, a musician, a baker, and a dry-goods clerk. It appears to have been used as a dumping-ground for people who could not otherwise be placed.

You would think, honourable gentlemen, that it would be a simple thing for the minister in charge of the department, if he had any backbone, to take that report and just go to work and reorganize the department and save a large amount of money. But, while the work was done by Canadians, the pay and the honour must go to this firm from across the line. They instituted comparisons between the work done here and that done in the Government Printing Bureau at Washington, and they suggested that men be sent down there to see how it can be done so much cheaper. That was the idea of this Committee. But the idea of the Government is not to send men down to find how it is done—although I am sure such information would be very willingly given by the American Printing Bureau. Instead of that, the Government must go down and bring up a firm who want to earn a big salary, and make the work drag out for a long time; and that is what the Government is recommending. I am anxious that they should stop before going any further with this plan, and see if they cannot do the work in a more patriotic and more businesslike manner, and in a much cheaper way, and accomplish better results than by the method they are pursuing.

This whole report would bear reading, but I cannot take the time to read it all. In conclusion, the Committee say:

> We beg to express our regret that the time at our disposal did not permit of our investigating many matters which came to our attention, and in a way it may be said that we have merely followed up the surface leads. We have, however, shown that the Editorial Board and the Distribution Board have inaugurated measures capable of development into great economies in the public printing; that these savings have been largely nullified by the deplorable inefficiency of the Bureau mechanical staff, and we are firmly of the opinion that if our recommendations, arriving at a greatly reduced wage cost through the elimination of unnecessary labour and higher standards of efficiency, are not adopted, the only recourse in the public interests is to close the Bureau.

That report was submitted to Mr. Jamieson, of the Civil Service Commission, and he made a report, from which I will quote two paragraphs. Speaking about the carrying out of the Committee's recommendations, he says:

> They should, I think, be Canadians. None other would be sufficiently familiar with the conditions, purely Canadian, arising from the use of two official languages in Federal publications.

Then he mentioned the names of those men:

> Mr. Adam L. Lewis, of Southam Press, Ltd.
> Mr. Eugene Tarte, of La Patrie Publishing Co.
> Mr. E. F. Slack, of the Gazette Printing Co., Ltd.
> All of these gentlemen have had years of experience in the printing business, and the oversight and management of large and well-equipped plants, and would bring with them experience gained not only in general printing but in government printing as well. The undersigned has been in communication with them and understands they would be willing to serve without pay; a living allowance being made when they are from home and engaged on the work.

This is what Canadians did; it is a little different from $10,000 a month, with living and travelling expenses in addition. So I feel justified in drawing the attention of the Government to this state of affairs, and suggesting how the reorganization could best be done. My only desire is to have it done in the best manner possible; and, from what I hear throughout the city and from people to whom I have spoken, there is no body of opinion in favor of delegating this work to men who do not belong to Canada, and who are not interested in this country further than in drawing down $10,000 a month plus their expenses. If I felt for a moment that we could accomplish the work better by the proposed method I would gladly support it, because I want to see the reorganization. I know that those men whom it is proposed to engage would make great savings, because the opportunity is there. Some of you may remember that I brought this matter up a couple of session ago, and I pointed out that though the revenues from the post offices of Montreal and Winnipeg were practically the same, in the Montreal Post Office we had 1,351 officials, while in Winnipeg we had 556. Now, it does not take any Heavenborn genius to know what is the matter. You have too many officials; they are not working; their work is overlapping; and you want a man of common sense to go there and straighten out the trouble. We have hundreds of men at home who could do this work, and do it well, without sending to a foreign country and advertising ourselves as a nation stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with eight millions of people, who cannot choose out three men able to reorganize the departments. I would be ashamed of Canada if I believed for one moment that that was the true state of affairs. It is not true, and I say that the duty of the Government is to call a halt on this business, and set about carrying out reorganization in a proper and reasonable manner, and bringing about the necessary results.

This Order in Council is rather a "dandy," if you come to read it and study it a little. It alludes to what is done in the Printing Bureau and gives all the credit to these outside people. Now they are going to start on the Post Office and Customs Departments. There are 24,000 officials in the one and approximately 4,000 in the other. 24,000 is a large number of people to deal with; but the Order in Council does not point out that of these 24,000 there must be many thousands in country post offices between the Atlantic and the Pacific, and that those thousands of country postmasters could be divided into about twenty groups; that is, they are all paid by salary based upon a percentage of the postal revenue in those post offices.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They cannot be reorganized anyway.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: In most of those country offices there is only one person working; sometimes there are two; but I do not think any of them would have more than two or three. They could be divided into classes. There would be thousands, for instance, in the class that sell $100 worth of stamps and would get $35 per annum, I suppose; then those that sell $500 worth; those that sell $1,000 worth; and so on. It would not be necessary to go to see one of those men; they could just be figured out in ten, fifteen or twenty grades according to their revenues. The chief work would have relation to cities like Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Toronto, London, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary, and such places. The reorganizers would have to visit these cities and see what work was being done and how many officials were necessary, and they would have to cut the staffs down to the number that could do the work. I would not expect to overload the Civil Service with work; you could not anyway; but you could fairly cut down the number. That is where the work would be, but it would not require a year to do it but for the fact that there is an allowance of $10,000 a month and expenses in doing it.

My honourable friend the Minister of Labour laid a great deal of stress on the statement that we had not anybody in Canada with the necessary experience for this reorganizing work. When the war broke out we had nobody in Canada with the necessary war experience. In the last fifty years we had two rebellions in the West and we sent a small contingent of men to South Africa; but that was all the experience we had had. Now, what would any man, woman, or child in this country have thought of the Government if, in August, 1914, when we needed our contingent for the war, the Government had begun to say: "Canada has had no experience; we have no men here who have had experience in war; the United States had a war with Cuba not long ago; they are experienced, and they are Heaven-born artists; therefore we will send to the United States and get some German Americans to come over and organize our army, and lead them in France and Flanders"? That would be just as sensible, honourable gentlemen, as what the Government proposes to do today; it is just the same thing. When the United States went into the war in 1917, three years after we had been at war, what did they do? We had had three years experience; did they send over to us for a committee to go over there and raise and lead their armies? No; they sent military experts to Canada to find out from our military people how we had done certain things, and what mistakes we had made; and these military experts came and got the information, and they were thus able to keep from making the mistakes that we had made, although the United States made many mistakes after they got started, as every country had done. But that is what they did.

Now, if this Griffenhagen and Associates are such wonders they must have accomplished great things in the Government offices of the United States. Possibly they put the Printing Bureau there on a good foundation so that it can turn out the work cheaply. If they had done great work in the United States, why did not this Committee of Council send over two or three men from Canada to see what they had done and find out if they had anything new? The United States are a friendly nation and would have been glad to give us any information in that respect, and those men would come back and put that information into effect here, and we would reorganize our departments and bring about results a great deal better than will be brought about under present conditions. When we started the war we did not have any experience; but did we not make good? Did any nation on earth do any better than we did? When the war started we were not manufacturing anything in the way of munitions of war. Our men started experimenting on steel, and in a short time, though we were making no steel successfully when the war started, the steel company down east and a company of which my honourable friend the Senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Edwards) is president did great work in making steel and munitions to help win the war. If we could do that, can we not reorganize a couple of departments? Not along ago I went with some other members of this House to visit the Angus railway shops in Montreal. They were a revelation to me. Thousands of men were at work under one roof, and the management have the cost of everything figured down to a cent. It would be very little trouble for the men who organized that industry to reorganize our Post Office and Customs departments, and any other departments that we have.

Honourable gentlemen, I feel deeply on this subject. It hurts me as a Canadian to think that our nation is so poor in brains as the Government seems to think. It sounds somewhat offensive that they should have such a low opinion of the people of Canada, when we have men here who, I think, can do anything as well as any other class of men on the face of the earth. I started out with the idea of being extremely moderate in my remarks and I hope I have been so, though it is a little difficult for me sometimes to be just as moderate as I would like; but my whole object is to try to have the Government call a halt in this business, look into it a second time, and see if hindsight will not be a little better than foresight, and if something cannot be done by which this object can be accomplished without going outside of our own country to get men to do it. I say again that there is a great deal of room and need for improvement through reorganization, and I believe our men at home will accomplish more good than men whom we get outside of Canada to carry on this work.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF.

Hon. GEO. W. FOWLER: In seconding the motion of my honourable friend from Assiniboia, I am moved by the fact that I am a most ardent supporter of what is known as the National Policy. I do not believe in importing from abroad anything that can be manufactured or produced at home. We think, and I believe it has been amply proved by the honourable gentleman who has preceded me, that we have a very large number of people quite capable of performing the task for which the Government has apparently thought it necessary to import people from abroad. I saw the gentlemen who were engaged in the task of classifying the various positions in the department, and I must say that I was not impressed with their personality or with the idea that they were supermen. We heard a great deal about supermen before the war began, and of a certain nation which, according to their foolish newspapers, was composed almost entirely of supermen. But, when brought to the acid test of war, substantiation of these claims of super-humanity was found wanting. The men who came before the Special Committee, of which I was a member, did not impress me as having the wonderful knowledge of things that they professed to have, and I venture to submit, honourable gentlemen, that there could be found in this Senate plenty of men who, without cost to the country,—

Hon. Mr. DOMVILE: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Without salary cost to the country, at any rate,—

Hon. Mr. DOMVILE: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER:—would undertake to perform this duty. I notice a supercilious smile on the face of the honourable Minister of Labour when I make that statement. I am surprised, I may say, that the honourable Minister of Labour should think of importing labour from abroad. Surely that is against the principles which he espouses. Surely this work should belong to the labourers of Canada. If there is any one who ought to resist an effort to bring outsiders into the country to perform the work and the labour of the country, it is the honourable gentleman who is the champion of labour, and its avowed advocate. Therefore I say I am surprised that he should treat with superciliousness the statement I make that there can be found within this Senate a commission of men who, in the interest of the country, without any remuneration to themselves, would gladly undertake the work of recasting or reorganizing the Civil Service of this country.

That the Civil Service needs to be recast and reorganized no one will deny. Even members of the Civil Service themselves—that is, certain members of it, men in the Civil Service who are devoted to the Civil Service and anxious to do their duty—will say it should be recast and reorganized. Let me tell honourable gentlemen of this House that there are a good many men in the Civil Service who are just as devoted to their duty, just an anxious to perform their services in the best interest of the country, as any man who sits within the walls of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: And women too.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, and women too. My always chivalrous friend from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) never forgets the women. I supposed the men embraced the women: that is why I did not mention them specially. There are in the Civil Service people who are faithful, patriotic, and anxious to do their duty; and in the Service there are drones, just as there are in a busy hive of bees; and it would be the duty of the Commission, or of anyone who was reorganizing the Service, to see that that should happen to the drones in the Service which happens to the drones in the hive.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: They have large families: what more do you want?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Put them out of business; get rid of them. I say the country is not bound to support any man who is not wiling to work—and there are men in the Civil Service who are not willing to work. In making that statement I know that I lay myself open to be abused by a certain paper called The Civilian, which is not by any means civil.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Did I cast any slur on my honourable friend when I spoke of big families? I meant to say they were doing their duty to their country.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You did not say the ladies were raising big families. The ladies in the Civil Service are not allowed to raise big families; they have to get out of the Service when they start in the family business. I say I have absolutely no sympathy with the people in the Service who are not doing their duty and are not trying to perform the services for which they are paid; but I have every sympathy for the men who are doing their duty, who are devoted to the Service, and who, in some cases, are not receiving as much remuneration as they should and have the humiliation of seeing other men who are not doing their duty receiving larger remuneration than they.

Now, as I say, all this work of reorganization could be done by a committee of the Senate; but if the Government has not that confidence in the members of the Senate to lead them to pass that duty over to the Senate, I say they can find in this country, without going abroad, men with business ability and business acumen who can reorganize and recast these departments. We talk about Canada for Canadians; we talk about greater production in our industries; but the industry of raising men is as important an industry as we have, and if we raise men they must have employment, and we should protect that employment by not bringing men from abroad when we have at home those who are capable of doing the work.

The other day I quoted from the Classification to show that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the adjoining House was claiming authority over this Chamber, and in fact over the whole of the Parliament buildings. I read the Classification as it appears in the book. I understood that the different officials had been asked for a statement of their duties and what they did, and I supposed that course had been followed in this case. But the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons assures me that these men never asked him for a statement of what his duties were, nor of what duties he performed, and that this Classification was made up by them without his being consulted or asked about it, and that the first he knew of it was when he saw it in print. In the interest of that gentleman, Colonel Bowie, a gentleman for whom I have the highest respect, and considerable affection and regard, I am very glad to make this explanation. I criticized him and his conduct as I did because I thought he had presumed to take too much power to himself; and, although not long a member of the Senate, I for one am as jealous of the privileges of this House as even the honourable the senior member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power). I am just as jealous of any encroachment upon the rights of this body as if I had belonged to it for fifty years; and I simply make this explanation because I would not want the opnion of honourable gentlemen to be prejudiced with regard to Colonel Bowie when he is not guilty of the offence with which I charged him.

I do not know whether or not it is the intention of the mover to press this motion to a vote. But I hope the Government will take notice of the temper of this body, at least with regard to this matter, and by that will be able to judge of the temper of the people of this country with regard to it; because I am sure it is not in accordance with the best Canadian thought or the best Canadian opinion, that the Government of the country should throw such a slight upon the business ability of the people of Canada as to intimate, by employing men from abroad that this work cannot be done properly and as it should be done by any one in this country.

Hon. JAMES DOMVILLE: I think there is a good deal in what my honourable friend has said. We have been loaded up. But you are not giving credit to the Cabinet. Have they not two leading members from Hartford, Connecticut, sworn in only two years ago and naturalized one in a very important position in England, exhibiting to the world that we are glad to have outside men conduct our affairs? Lots of people in this country could do the work, but it was thought by those who knew best that those two American gentlemen could teach the Cabinet and ourselves something. If you are going to put Americans into the Cabinet, and whitewash them and turn them into loyal British subjects, why cannot they come in another direction? Why limit them? My honourable friend talks about employing the Senate to do this work. I think the Senate is too hard-worked now; we are given too much work to do, and too little money for what we do. All these things come out in the washing; but at this late hour I am not prepared to find fault with anybody. I have too much experience. I am like the unjust steward in scripture. Take care of your position; make terms. However, if any good can come out of this debate, all right; but I do not suppose my honourable friend really intends to press his motion. No one ever reads what the Senate says, so it does not make much difference.

Hon. GIDEON ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, without desiring to go into a detailed analysis of the question involved in the motion, it might be proper to refer briefly to one or two of the phases put before the House by the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) and the honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler). I am sure the House has been pleased to listen to their views upon this important subject, as doubtless the people throughout the country will be to read what they have said. However, I desire to call attention to one or two things. First, the interpretation placed upon the Order in Council by my honourable friend from Assiniboia is quite contrary to the intent of the Order, at least so far as it relates to expenses being paid to the gentlemen engaged, outside of the retaining fee which is specifically mentioned in the Order, $10,000 a month, and certain railway fares when travelling to and from places in Canada in connection with their legitimate work. As I gathered, my honourable friend intimated that over and above that subsistance would be paid.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: The Order in Council says subsistence.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My honourable friend will find that he is mistaken. My honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) was pleased to make reference to a particular kind of smile as having been indulged in by me. I desire to assure him and the House that the smile was prompted by the remark that many would be glad to do the work without compensation, and not because of the reason which he was pleased to give.

With reference to the principle of reorganization in business, it is well known to honourable gentlemen that business concerns, and institutions such as our universities, have for many years gone outside of Canada when they wanted expert men for a purpose and such men were not obtainable in this country. As the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia points out, it would be at least a reflection upon the ability of individual men in this country to say that there was no one in Canada competent to undertake a task of this sort; but he quite overlooked the fact that in the reorganization of the various departments of government no one man is competent to deal with all the branches of the subject, and that an association such as we are negotiating with for this purpose is composed of specialists in many lines. As I pointed out the other day, in law firms you find half-a-dozen different men associated together, for the purpose of carrying on legal practice. One is a specialist in criminal law; another is a specialist in another branch of law, and so on, and in the firm there is some gentleman who is particularly qualified to take care of any specific task which may be referred to that firm. Si it is when you engage a firm which has experts in every branch, whom they can assign to do a particular thing. The reason why at least eleven men are specifically mentioned in this Order in Council is that ther are at least that many different classes of specialists necessary to make up the organization, and an organization of that sort is not to be found in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the particular firm the Government is dealing with?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Government, as I explained some few days ago, dealt with the Arthur Young Company.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It dealt with the Arthur Young company before, but now?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Griffenhagen and Associates, who were associated with Arthur Young and Company, are efficiency engineers, whereas Arthur Young and Company was originally a firm of expert accountants. While they are working in close affiliation, we dealt with Young and Company in regard to the reclassification; but in the other matter the negotiations have been with Griffenhagen and Associates instead of Arthur Young and Company.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Arthur Young and Company are not in any way responsible now if this arrangement goes through?

Mon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think they are indirectly interested. The honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), who is not in his seat, urgently requested the other day that information should be obtained as to the nationality of Mr. Griffenhagen. At that time I assured the House that Mr. Griffenhagen was an American citizen, and I endeavoured to get information on that point, but he had left the city. I may say, however, that I am informed by the Civil Service Commission that Mr. Griffenhagen's father was born in the United States and was an American citizen. So it is quite unfair and unbecoming, I think, to endeavour to hitch up any German influences with this firm.

I will not further take up the time of the House in dealing with this matter, because I think, generally speaking, each of the points referred to to-day, and dwelt upon by the honourable gentlemen who discussed them, were dealt with when this matter was under consideration a few days ago, and that it would only be repeating largely what was said at that time. The Government have no desire other than to improve and render as efficient as possible, at as small a cost as possible, the necessary public service for the people of Canada, and it is believed that engaging the services of a firm of expert efficiency engineers who have men competent and skilled and experienced in the various lines of investigation that will have to be taken up, will be useful and beneficial to the Service.

Hon. J. S. McLENNAN: Honourable gentlemen, there are one or two phases of this matter to which I should like to draw the attention of the House. Whatever may be true of the ability of individual Canadians, or a group that might be got together ad hoc, so to speak, to deal with a particular question, there is no doubt that there is not in Canada any organization trained to carry out work of this particular kind. The example which has been given of printing does not apply. I am in entire sympathy with the mover of this motion in his statement that the committee of three expert master printers who investigated the Government Printing Bureau dealt with it adequately and, owing to their knowledge of local conditions, did the work better than it could have been done by any outsiders who might be brought in. But the art of printing in Canada is in a very high state. Canadian printing in all its departments is thoroughly good. The Printing Bureau was an isolated institution, not seriously larger than, possibly not so large as, the various printing establishments with which those three gentlemen were thoroughly familiar. But the Civil Service is an employment requiring special organized facilities and special experience to deal with, and local men have not such facilities and experience.

Objections have been made to the bringing in of persons from the United States to do this work. It is an accident that the United States, to a greater degree than any other country, have carried on the analysis of business methods in a formal, organized way, that can be applied from one industry to another. But the art of auditing and keeping accounts is one in which, notwithstanding the great size of that country, they are away behind England. The consequence is that all the principal firms of auditors dealing with the great corporations of the United States are English firms, or rather branches of English firms established in the United States. The same is true of Canada. The people of the United States might well say: "Are we, a nation of 110,000,000 not more capable and more able than others? Why should we not have our own auditors?" That might be said, but it is not said. And if we can find in the United States persons who have made it their business to deal with this particular problem and who are dependent for their reputation upon their success in dealing with it, why should we not employ them? I do not see any reason. It is certainly a quicker method. Better results would be arrived at more speedily than if we had three or five Canadians volunteering their services, going to the United States, or to England, or France, and learning about the organization of the customs, the post office, etc., acquiring information which these experts now have at their finger tips. The application by Canadians of the principles followed in other countries might be just as good, but there is a great deal of time saved by employing the experts who now have the information. Whether you save money or not I am not prepared to say; nor am I dealing at all with the question whether or not this firm is the best available to do the work. I saw some of these gentlemen last year in connection with the committee of this House on the machinery of Government, and I am bound to say that in discussing with them various phases of government organization and administration I was very much impressed with the extent of their knowledge, and how they had that knowledge at their fingers' ends. What we in Canada want, I think, is the best we can get, wherever we can obtain it to the best advantage.

Reference has been made to what Canada did in the field. At the time the honourable leader of the House (Hon Sir James Lougheed) was in the Militia Department, we did not wait until some Canadian would invent a machine gun and Canadians would manufacture it. We bought the machine guns which our men needed, wherever we could buy them most quickly, and our troops, armed with them, gave a good account of themselves. When we want to get a compass for our ships we do not wait to get a compass made in Canada, although compasses will finally be made in Canada with skill; we buy the best we can get any place.

I think the impression ought not to go abroad that Canada is hostile to other countries, in hospital to persons brought here, or unwilling to do its share in the community of nations. Canada has contributed a great many men who have helped the United States, to their own advantage and to the advantage of Canada; and if we can get persons from the United States who are better than any others, or who are the most available, we certainly ought to utilize their services.

A great deal has been said about Government departments. I regret that the honourable leader of the House has not left for the moment, as I know that he is a modest man. We have now an absolutely new department of the Government which grew out of the Hospital Commission, with which I was actively connected, and I am perfectly certain that the honourable leader of the House as Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment is in a position from day to day, or from week to week, to tell how the business of that department is carried on—its overhead cost, the cost of its medical services, the cost of administration, the number of persons that he has—as promptly as the head of any bank or railway or any industrial institution in Canada or the United States can tell about his business. The system has grown up from very humble beginnings. It grew up through the ability that Sir James brought to it, the way in which his staff was selected, and the loyalty of that staff. But Sir James did not hesitate when there were any question of organization. His department has a perfect system of accounting, a system the sheets of which I took over to England two years ago, when I had the honour to represent the Commission at an international conference. There was no nation represented there that had anything to compare with them. The perfecting of that system was brought about largely through the fact that from time to time, whenever it was necessary, Sir James employed an expert on accounting, on organization, on administration. He found an accountant who was, I think, a Canadian, but had got most of his experience in the larger field of the United States. A great part of the success of the department is due to the intelligence with which Sir James selected the best men for it, instead of trying to have the work done by amateurs.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I do not wish to take up the time of the House much longer, but there are in this question one or two things that should be referred to. My honourable friend who has just taken his seat has alluded to the one department which has nothing to do with the Civil Service Commission. We all give the honourable leader of the Government in this House (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) great credit for the work he has done for the country, but I do not think my honourable friend's remarks are pertinent to this particular case, for the very reason that the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment does not come under the Civil Service Commission.

The honourable Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has referred to the situation as he sees it, but I do not think he has given to the House a clear understanding of the situation as it exists. First of all, when this question was up before, the Civil Service Commission made an arrangement with the Arthur Young Company, of Chicago, to undertake the work for them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My honourable friend will pardon me. I fear that he is confusing the reclassification which the Arthur Young Company were engaged to do with the reorganization which is now being undertaken. He is regarding them as being the same, whereas they are two separate and distinct matters.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understood that they made an arrangement with the Arthur Young Company to do the reclassification work for them. The Arthur Young Company, I understand, is a firm of some repute in Chicago. The Civil Service Commission made arrangements with that company, who sent their officials here to carry out the work. I understand that Mr. Griffenhagen was one of their head officials, and made periodical visits here, representing the firm and overhauling the work that was being done. He had power to get rid of men if he thought they were not doing the work properly; or he had power to put men at different work; or he had power to take them away and send them to the States if necessary. I understand that when the Civil Service Commission was negotiating with the Arthur Young Company—the minister can correct me if I am not rightly informed—that company, after considering the matter, said they would be able to do the work in about five months and the cost to the country would be about $12,000. But we now find that the Arthur Young Company took about two years to make the reclassification, and it has cost about $150,000. I do not know what other honourable members of this House may think; but the fact that the officials of the Arthur Young Company were so far astray in their estimate as to the time the work would take, and how much it would cost, does not give me confidence in them. As the minister has stated, the Arthur Young Company are a firm of chartered accountants, and Mr. Griiffenhagen and his associates were the members of that company who looked after the industrial efficiency work; but, as I understand, the present position, if the Government make an arrangement, it is with Griffenhagen and Associates, who are no longer members of the firm of Arthur Young & Company. Therefore I think the minister should tell us what responsibility these men have behind them. Nobody up to the present moment knows anything further about them than that Mr. Griffenhagen has been an official of the Arthur Young Company, and that he has disassociated himself from that company. What if Mr. Griffenhagen and his associates fail to carry out their contract? That is a rather important point, and one on which we should have some information from the Minister.

Furthermore, the Civil Service Commission found it necessary to appoint a committee to deal with the classification that had been made by the Arthur Young Company and was submitted to the House last session. The total number of classifications contained in the volume was about 1,500, and the committee appointed by the commission to deal with them has had to insist that about 300, or one-fifth of the total, should be changed, and there are many more classifications to be considered and altered. It does not look as if the classification work was very satisfactory. So much for the work of the Arthur Young Company.

The other question I want to raise is: under what authority did the Government find that they could take this action at all? When the Civil Service Bill was brought down in 1918 it was held forth to the country that the Civil Service Commission would be independent of the Government and the members; that its members would be removable only by address of both Houses of Parliament; that patronage in that way would be abolished and the Civil Service dealt with on business lines, free from all outside influences, which honourable members, both in this House and in the House of Commons, felt had been a great detriment to the Service in years gone by. It was stated that by putting the whole matter in the hands of a commission it would be possible to build up a proper Civil Service on business lines and to make it thoroughly efficient. In Part I of the Civil Service Act, clause 3 deals with the appointment of the commission, and clause 4 deals with its duties. Paragraph c of clause 4 says that one of the duties of the Commission shall be:

(c) to report upon the organization or proposed organization of the departments or any portion of any department or of the civil service, and upon any proposed change in such organization.

Then paragraph d says:

(d) to obtain the assistance of competent persons to assist the Commission in the performance of its duties.

I consider that when we passed that Act we put the whole organization and reorganization of the departments in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. I can find in the Act of Parliament nothing that gives the Government power to set aside the Act and the Civil Service Commission or to override them by Order in Council. During the war the Government had on the statute book the War Measures Act, which enabled them to override Acts of Parliament and to do all sorts of things by Order in Council; but the War Measures Act has been repealed and we have now got back, I hope, to the position in which an Act of Parliament represents the law of the land. The Government must abide by Acts of Parliament just the same as any member of this House or any individual in the country. I do not see that there is anything in the Civil Service Act which permits the Government to pass an Order in Council such as that which I read to the House the other day, taking the organization of the service entirely out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission, as it is evidently the intention to do under this Order in Council, and proceeding to reorganize the service without any reference to the Commission. I think that the Government should explain the situation to the House and show where they derive authority to act as they have done.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to go on record as being in favour of the principle laid down in this resolution, particularly as it appears from all the information obtainable up to the present that the members of the Government as a whole are not posted as to what has been done with this firm who have been brought in to reorganize our service. It seems to me that through too sublime a confidence in advisers they are being led somewhere they ought not to be led. As I see it, the initial mistake was made when the Government permitted the Civil Service Commission to go outside the authority confided to them by Parliament, so far as that authority was expressed, and, as the honourable leader on the other side (Hon. Mr. Bostock) has just said, to transfer to some gentlemen from Chicago the duty which Parliament had entrusted to them. It seems to me that when the Civil Service Commission were given charge of the outside service in Canada it was essential for them, in order that they might intelligently administer that service, to make themselves familiar with the conditions of the Service throughout the country. I know it was the confident expectation of the members of the Service outside the city of Ottawa that they would do so. Instead of that, we find the Civil Service Commissioners taking no steps to post themselves, but entrusting the duty of getting in touch with the Outside Service solely to a body of strangers coming to Canada for a temporary purpose, as represented to us, and, even though strangers, being at no pains to make themselves personally acquainted with the conditions in the Canadian Service.

I speak as a business man with some knowledge of and experience in the management of affairs when I say the result is precisely what any business man might have expected—that these strangers did not make a proper classification of the outside service; hence it became necessary to continue their services in order to correct and apply that classification, and there is no evidence up to the present time that anything like a complete job has been made or that the classification will be of permanent value to the Service in Canada. The other day I read in a newspaper which is held in respect wherever it is known in Canada, that the action of the Civil Service Commissioners and of the Government now in entering upon the transaction referred to in this resolution, is making of the Service "a collection of atrophied automatons." It seemed to me that the description very accurately fitted the case, and that, instead of having entered upon an era of Civil Service reform or improvement, of which we have been talking lately, we are going as far as the legislative authority can go to paralyze the Civil Service and reduce it to a level of absolute inefficiency. I find the opinion expressed in this resolution:

That, in the proposed reorganization, men of expert ability of a high order can be secured in Canada, who are capable of doing this work in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

I have no authority to speak for the gentlemen whom I propose to mention, but it is my opinion that if the Government would give similar authority to that conferred upon the firm of Arthur Young & Company in connection with the recent Printing office investigation, to the permanent heads of the two departments now about to be reorganized—the Deputy Postmaster General and the Commissioner of Customs—they would be found to be much more capable than the whole of the eleven experts combined. Those experts are to be put upon this job, if Parliament sanctions the contract, at what seems to me a most improvident bargain. They are to be paid $10,000 per month, or an average of close to $1,000 per month per man for eleven men whom we do not know; whose very names we cannot get, no matter how diligently we apply for them; the details of whose accounts while in the employ of the Civil Service Commission we cannot obtain—because I myself have applied for them here. Knowing that the return made to the Senate did not begin to cover the emoluments received by these strangers for their services in Canada, but only covered one head of it, I placed a motion on the Order Paper which might have been answered in two days, because I am sure the accounts were audited and added up; but last Session passed without any return being made, and this Session has thus far passed without any return. I am satisfied that the firm of Arthur Young & Company ran absolutely out of control while in the employ of the Civil Service Commission; that they had that Commission, and through them the Government, at their mercy; and that if this contract be permitted to be completed—if it is not completed yet, and no one will admit that it is completed—the new firm will run absolutely out of control in this service, and that we will have, as a result, just as little efficiency as we received from the classification, and even a larger bill.

Something has been said about the reorganization of the Printing Bureau. I think it was the Minister of Labour who told us the other day that we would save from $500,000 to $700,000 a year because of that reorganization; and I wondered at the Minister's complacency when he told us that.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I correct my honourable friend? I read from the Order in Council; they are not my figures.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I think it is significant, honourable gentlemen, that when figures which, I believe, are in the Order in Council upon which this proposed appointment is based, are quoted in this House, they are repudiated by the responsible Minister, who is one of the sub-committee of the Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I beg my honourable friend's pardon; they are not repudiated; I believe them to be true; but the honourable gentleman stated that they were my figures, and nobody else's, and that is not the case. The figures are correct, I believe, but I did not compile them, and did not announce them on my own responsibility as being a statement of a fact.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The Minister did not compile them, honourable gentlemen, neither does he endorse them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I just did endorse them.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The Minister does endorse them now. A few minutes ago he took occasion to stop me to say that they were not his figures. The mystery, it seems to me, deepens. As I am speaking from recollection, it seems to me those figures were presented to the House as the figures of the sub-committee of the Cabinet, of whom the Minister of Labour was one, who advised their colleagues in Council to appoint these gentlemen to reorganize the Civil Service because of what they had done at the Printing Bureau. Now, I was proceeding to say that I wondered at the complacency of a Minister in telling this House that we were to save $500,000 a year, or $700,000 a year, through the reorganization of the Printing Bureau; because as far back as I can remember the condition of the Printing Bureau has been known to every person interested in the subject. Two years ago an expert committee of master printers made a detailed report showing what could be done with the Printing Bureau if the Government applied itself to the task; and though what could be saved is estimated at $500,000 to $700,000, we are given no explanation why two years were allowed to pass before this thing was done. Honourable gentlemen, that means a direct loss to this country, since the Bureau was officially reported on, of from $1,000,000 to $1,400,000—which, even in these days of $800,000,000 budgets, is not a sum of money to be despised. If the answer be that it took any long period of consideration on the part of these experts to arrive at the knowledge of what to do in the Printing Bureau, I will say, with the authority of one who does know the printing business, that any master printer, if given authority, could have reorganized the Printing Bureau in one week and that it was not necessary to pay any large sum of money to any body of experts to secure what has been secured there. I am informed, on what I think is very good authority, that the results we got at the Bureau did not come from those experts; that their suggestions, when first presented, were very crude indeed, and almost impossible; and that it was only the brains supplied to them by officials administering the Printing Bureau that brought about the measure of reform that we have there now. It seems to me cruel, honourable gentlemen, that a recommendation involving this further huge expenditure should be made, without any inquiry, without even the knowledge of the Minister responsible for reporting to Council, without any precautions whatever to see what we are going to get for our money. The proposed expenditure is $10,000 a month, sure, for salaries, with probably an equal amount for travelling and subsistence allowance—which the Minister of Labour thought did not exist, until the Order in Council was produced—and also a very large amount in salaries of assistant clerks, in rents and other expenses, representing an expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars a year for an indefinite number of years. It seems to me cruel that that should be entered upon in this haphazard way, without any real knowledge on the part of the Government as to where this step is leading us.

Now, in all sincerity I would urge upon the representatives of the Government in this House that this matter should not be allowed to proceed without Parliament having an opportunity of voting upon it. There is no urgency connected with a contract of this kind, which is just about being entered upon by Order in Council, without the matter being formally laid before Parliament for adoption—or rejection, which I think it is not impossible would be the effect of the proposal if laid before Parliament in broad day, and I would suggest to this House, and particularly to the representatives of the Government in this House, the wisdom of considering whether or not really efficient servants, as we know them to be in their Departments, like the Deputy Postmaster General and the Commissioner of Customs, are not capable of reorganizing these services, if given authority to do so, much more capably than any body of strangers who could possibly be engaged.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Turriff was agreed to on the following division:

CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Blain,	Planta,
Bostock,	Pope,
Bradbury,	Power,
Cloran,	Ratz,
David,	Roche,
De Veber,	Ross (Moosejaw),
Edwards,	Taylor,
Farrell,	Thompson,
Fowler,	Turriff,
Girroir,	Watson,
Laird,	White (Inkerman),
Murphy,	—23.

NON-CONTENTS.

Honourable Messieurs

Bolduc (Speaker),	McLennan,
Daniel,	Mulholland,
Fisher,	Robertson,
Lougheed, (Sir James),	Ross (Middleton),
McLean,	Webster (Brockville).
	—10.

INLAND REVENUE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 178, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill F5, an Act for the Relief of Frank Cox.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

THIRD READING.

Bill 127, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. (Sick and Distressed Mariners), as amended.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

YUKON PLACER MINING BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 162, an Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act. Hon. Mr. McLennan in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On subsection 1 of old section 91—lease to prospects for gold, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is a short amendment that I desire to have made in this section. Strike out the word

"gold" in line 14, and insert the words, "the purposes of placer mining". The section will then read:

The Gold Commissioner may grant a lease to prospect for the purposes of placer mining, as defined in this Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the definition in the Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Placer mining is very well known. This was overlooked in the Commons.

Subsection 1 of old section 91, as amended, was agreed to.

Subsection 2 of old section 91 was agreed to.

On subsection 3 of old section 91—application:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say that I went over this with the honourable gentleman from Moosejaw (Hon. J. H. Ross), and he quite approved of the legislation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I see that in the original Act there are different kinds of claims—a discovery claim of 1,500 feet, a claim of 1,000 feet, and another kind of claim of 500 feet. In reading this Bill it is not quite clear as to what is intended in regard to these old grants. As my honourable friend will see, an application for a lease of abandoned ground has to be made. Under subsection 6 the rental is $25 per mile; then under section 8 it says that a lessee may take out placer mining claims to the full extent of his lease. Subsection 8 refers to clause 25 of chapter 64 of the Revised Statutes; and on looking at that clause I find that it simply deals with the form of claims, the line between posts to be cut out, the number of post, etc. I was wondering if there had been an oversight in any way.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can take the whole of the five miles.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is only for the purpose of the lease, for three years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: When he comes to stake out the claim—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can take a prospecting lease. A person acquiring such a lease may before the termination thereof stake and acquire under the provisions of the Act whatever portion he desires of the area of abandoned ground covered by his lease or in a case of virgin ground he may within the same time stake out and acquire a discovery claim comprising a portion of his leasehold; that is, an area equal to three claims of the ordinary size. Under the present Act the largest area of mining rights which may be included in one claim is about 23 acres; that is, a tract of 500 feet by 2,000 feet. A person having recorded such a claim has not the right to record another claim within the valley of the same creek or river within 60 days from the date of locating the said claim. As to the particulars, I really do not know more than I have stated. This has been very carefully drawn by the Mines Branch.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Of course the advantage that the man has is that he can stake out the whole of the 5 miles if he is on old ground.,

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The area must be an abandoned area; that is, not a virgin area at all. Apparently he stakes out in the manner prescribed in section 25 of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That only prescribes the manner of staking out; it does not prescribe the size of the claim.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He would be entitled to the largest, I suppose, so long as it did not exceed the 5 miles.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It does not matter what the size of the claim is.

Subsection 3 was agreed to.

Subsections 4, 5, 6, and 7 were agreed to.

On subsection 8—lessee may stake out placer mining claims:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In line 44, of this subsection, I wish to insert the words, "form prescribed by," immediately preceding the words "schedule A." The Commons omitted to incorporate into this Bill these schedules.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to, and subsection 8, as amended, was agreed to.

Subsections 9 to 11, inclusive, were agreed to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: moved that section 3 be added to the Bill.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that section 4 be added to the Bill.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on Bill 156, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907. Hon. Mr. McLennan in the Chair.

On section 2—schedule A amended:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I have previously explained, the purpose of this section is to put on the free list books, stereotypes, electrotypes, typewriters, etc., as described in the schedule.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Apparently item 172 and item 483 were dutiable before?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; they are now put on the free list.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—duties reduced:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Section 3 proposes taking off the 7½ per cent, and the 5 per cent on the preferential tariff.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Section 4 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Senate go into committee on Bill 157, an Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax, 1916.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend let that stand? We have a rather thin House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have Mr. Breadner here, and he is a very busy man just at present. If after we go into committee there is any explanation that is not quite clear to my honourable friend, I am perfectly willing to let the question stand.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—amount of tax changed:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As honourable gentlemen will see this reduces the taxation under the Business Profits War Tax Act. By subsection 2 we are exempting 10 per cent instead of 7 per cent. The tax at present commences at 7 per cent; hereafter it will commence at 10 per cent. In the next paragraph 10 per cent supersedes 7 per cent, and 20 per cent as mentioned there supersedes 25 per cent; that is to say, there shall be paid a tax equal to 20 per cent of the profits, whereas to-day we are imposing a tax of 25 per cent. In the next paragraph:

> Upon any such profits exceeding 15 per centum per annum and not exceeding 20 per centum per annum upon the capital employed, there shall be paid a tax equal to 30 per centum of such profits.

Thirty per cent takes the place of 50 per cent. That is to say, we are to-day imposing a tax of 50 per cent, and hereafter it will be only 30. The next paragraph imposes a tax of 50 per cent in place of the 75 per cent charged at present. In the following paragraph 60 per cent is imposed in place of 75 per cent. In the next subsection 20 per cent is substituted for 25. So it will be seen that the policy of the Government is gradually to lessen the tax until we reach a minimum.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Did my honourable friend refer to subsection 3, dealing with the capital of the business, as well as to subsection 2?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I was just explaining clause 1.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The whole of clause 1?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, the whole of the clause, mentioning the amounts that will supersede the present rates.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But under subclause 3, referring to any business capital which is not less than $25,000, and not more than $50,000, the only tax is that of 20 per cent on the profits?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There is no graduated scale in that case, as there is in the other?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; but the tax has heretofore been 25 per cent. Then, under the final subsection, subsection 4, we make clear the interpretation to be placed on section 5 of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1916, which is at present somewhat involved. A business engaged in manufacturing or dealing in munitions of war comes under the tax.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Was it not subject to the tax before?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. This simply carries out the policy followed before.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Making the provision rather clearer?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As my honourable friend will see, the previous legislation is very complicated. There was some doubt as to its meaning. The purpose of this subsection is to clear up the statute on this point. Section 5 of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1916, the clause under which that tax was imposed, reads:

> 5. The businesses to which this Act applies are all trades and businesses (including the business of transportation) of any description carried on, or partly carried on, in Canada whether continuously or not except:—
>
> (a) the business of any person the capital employed in which has been throughout the accounting period less than fifty thousand dollars, other than a business which or twenty per centum or more of which, is or has been the manufacturing or dealing in munitions of war or in materials or supplies of any kind for war purposes...

I read that clause and found it difficult to arrive at its meaning. Subsection 4 of the present Bill makes it much clearer. That is to say:

> —a capital of less than $50,000, if 20 per centum or more of such profits have been derived from the manufacture or dealing in munitions of war or materials or supplies of any kind for war purposes—
>
> —such a capital becomes subject to the tax.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under subsection 3 any business with a capital of less than $50,000 is subject to a 20 per cent tax.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Why is this necessary at all? Why should this distinction be made as to the profits?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Because there was in the former Act an exception as to manufacturing or dealing in munitions of war. It was intended that if on the capital invested there was a profit of 20 per cent derived from the manufacture of or dealing in munitions, the capital should become subject to the tax.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That was previously?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, previously, but the provision was expressed in such involved language that there was a serious doubt as to its meaning. This subsection elucidates the meaning. The tax has been imposed on this class of business right along, but there has been a question as to whether the language of the Act warranted the collection of the tax on such business.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But, as the matter stands now, I am not quite clear as to why this subsection is needed at all. Would not the whole matter be covered under subsection 3?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; because there is an exemption of 20 per cent, if less than 20 per cent of the profits were derived from the making or manufacturing of munitions, the business would be exempt. That class of business has always been exempt up to 20 per cent, it was taxable only if the profits exceeded 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But the capital will not be taxable if the profits are under 20 per cent?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Well, this is the same as subsection 3 of the Bill, is it not? It seems to me that the same result would have been arrived at if you had repealed the legislation of 1916.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; because doubt would still have existed as to what was the meaning regarding the 20 per cent of profits arising out of the manufacture or dealing in munitions of war.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Have the Government still to collect taxes under this Act of 1916? I suppose that is what it means.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, any tax still unpaid. There has been a doubt as to whether we were entitled to collect a tax on this class of business or not. Now we want to make the matter perfectly clear so that the boubt cannot continue, particularly in regard to those businesses that have not paid the tax.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The only remark I have to make to the Government about this clause is that in the interest of the country it is probably wise to be reducing the taxation, but I think it would have been very much more in the interest of the country to base the tax on the profits made out of a business rather tan to tax the dividends, as this really does. As I understand it, the difference between the way that this tax is collected in England and the way it is fixed in this country is that there they take so much per cent of the profits of a business without any reference to the amount of capital invested in it; but the system under which we have acted is to tax the profits according to the dividends they represent on the capital. Then we have a graduated tax instead of a fixed tax. The result is that a man who has a business with a small amount of capital, but who through his energy and enterprise manages to make considerable profits, is taxed much more highly than a man who is not so energetic and enterprising, and who does not make such large profits in his business.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But this catches him both ways; that is what we are after. As it is a disappearing tax, there is no need of departing from the policy. I might also point out to my honourable friend that in England they do not seem to have met with any greater satisfaction in the imposition and collection of the tax than we have.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is not so much a question of collection of the tax; it is to what extent it interferes and prevents enterprise in business.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not think it has prevented anything in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Perhaps that is hardly worth discussing at the present time.

Section 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—capital in case of merger of companies:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is simply to prevent water in stock of any companies that may enter into a merger. It places the merging companies in the same position as they occupied under the previous legislation, and gives them the advantage of any increase of capital which may be employed in connection with the business. It is simply to exclude anything like watered stock.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I take it that it is actual capital?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, actual capital.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Some one called my attention to the fact that it is made retroactive to 1916.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, because all those companies are still liable for more or less of the tax which has not yet been collected. It can only apply to a company that has not paid its tax, or a merger or group of companies that have not paid their tax.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But in making this retroactive is the Government going to tax companies more than they were taxed before?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; the law as it is to-day on the statute book will apply to those companies that have not yet paid up. We must necessarily protect ourselves as to those.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Supposing, in the case of a merger, that two or three companies have been merged, one with a capital of a million, another with two millions, another with three millions, and the one with a capital of a million has a reserve say of another million; if, in making the merger, that reserve is taken in and stock is issued to the members of that company so that it practically brings the amount up to two millions, then they are going to be taxed?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is part of the capital, under the Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But that will work a hardship. The reserve has not been taxed as capital up to the present, I understand.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The reserve was taxed as capital before, as well?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So that there will not be any further taxation under this?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Section 3 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With the consent of the House I would like the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Could not my honourable friend let this stand until to-morrow? There are very few members in the House.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Very well.

The order stands.

PENITENTIARY BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 138, an Act to amend the Penitentiary Act. Hon. Mr. Watson in the Chair.

On section 1—Minister to have power to make regulations for administration, etc., of penitentiaries:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This section has to do with the making of regulations.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Who is it that has the power?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The difficulty now is that, owing to the removal, to some extent, of the Ministerial authority over the employees of the penitentiary, certain authority vests in the Civil Service Commission, and it is necessary that there should be some Ministerial administration by way of regulation, etc. That is to say, it will be by the Minister of the Department in charge of the penitentiaries, who at the present time is the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is simply providing for that condition?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—wardens and deputy wardens to be appointed not for particular penitentiary:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The warden is appointed for a particular penitentiary, and it is desirable that the warden and deputy warden should be appointed subject to transfer to any point. That is the object of this section.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—schedule of salaries repealed:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is for the purpose of giving effect to the reclassification.

Section 3 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE— PROGRESS REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 141, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways. Hon. John Webster in the chair.

On section 1—short title:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We might congratulate the Government on providing a short title to the Act they passed a year ago.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is never too late to receive congratulations.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—lines of railway authorized:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Has my honourable friend a map so that he could explain to the members of the Senate where these lines are? We are in the habit of having a map, to see what we are doing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: These have already been authorized by statute, as I understand.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I thought we were extending them somewhat.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; this is for the purpose of constructing and operating. I think the legislation is already on the statute book.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does my honourable friend know the length of these different roads?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: These went to the Railway Committee in the Commons, apparently. No, I know nothing about them. This was referred to the Railway Committee in the ordinary way. Those would be just the same as if the applicant came before Parliament for charters for building the roads.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: He wants to build a new branch? When the Canadian Pacific made application the other day to build a new branch we had a map before the Committee; so we could understand what we were doing. I do not think any honourable gentleman can understand what we are doing at present until a map is put before them.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am satisfied to have the Bill go to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think it would be a good idea, because this is a matter for conference with the Railway Committee of the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-morrow.

Progress was reported.

PICTOU HARBOUR BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGEED moved the second reading of Bill 121, an Act respecting the Harbour of Pictou in Nova Scotia.

He said: The object of this Bill is to transfer the harbour of Pictou from the Harbour Commissioners of Pictou to the Public Works Department. The property at present is apparently vested in or owned by the Harbour Commissioners of Pictou, and the revenues from the harbour are so inadequate as to make it desirable that the Government should take it over. Consequently the Government is taking it over and putting it in the Public Works Department.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Will my honourable friend be able, when we go into Committee, to give us a statement of the obligations and liabilities that we are going to assume by taking this over?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I shall try to get that to-morrow. I fancy we are already liable for them.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p m.

THE SENATE.

Tuesday, June 22, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill G5, an Act for the relief of Joseph Dubé.—Hon. R. S. White.

YUKON PLACER MINING BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 152, an Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, as amended.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 156, an Act to amend The Customs Tariff, 1907.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 157, an Act to amend The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

PENITENTIARY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 138, an Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

DIVORCE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill C5, an Act for the relief of Muriel Curren Gilmour.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill D5, an Act for the relief of Marie Jeanne Yvonne Albertine St. Amour Lallemand.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

THE NEW PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

CHIME OF BELLS FOR THE TOWER—REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. GEORGE H. BRADBURY moved concurrence in the Second Report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the cost of the installation in the Tower of the Parliament Buildings of a first-class carillon in connection with a clock.

He said: In moving the adoption of this report I desire to read one clause:

> In the opinion of the Committee it is very desirable that a Carillon, to be called "Memorial Bells," should be installed in the tower of the Parliament Buildings. As to the expenditure to be made in connection therewith, and the selection of the most suitable type of bells, your Committee recommend that these matters be left to the decision of a Committee composed of members of the Senate and House of Commons and the Architect, said Committee to be named by the Government.

I feel that something ought to be added in the way of a brief statement, so that the House may have all the facts that can be given at this time. In the first place, I desire to say that every avenue where reliable information could be had regarding the cost and quality of the carillon has been thoroughly investigated in order that your committee might be able to lay before this honourable House an intelligent and reliable report as to the likely cost of a first-class carillon suitable for the purpose which is contemplated. As the report indicates, we have an estimate from John Taylor & Company, of Loughborough, England. This is one of the oldest and most reliable firms of bell founders in the world, which has installed many very fine carillons throughout the United Kingdom and in Belguim. That the House may be apprised of the facts in the possession of your committee, I will read two letters and a cablegram which I have received from this company. After the House empowered the committee to proceed in the matter, the committee cabled to John Taylor & Company, Loughborough, England, as follows:

John Taylor & Company, Loughborough.

Committee of Senate appointed to investigate wisdom of installing in new tower Parliament Buildings here first-class carillon. Can you submit suggestion likely cost, space required, any information necessary to an intelligent understanding? Committee sitting daily.

Bradbury, Chairman Committee.

To this I received the following reply, addressed to myself:

Bradbury, Chairman, Committee of Senate, Ottawa, Canada.

Recommend grand carillon four octaves chromatic, forty-nine bells; weight of largest, sixteen thousand pounds; note F perfect tone and tune; total cost, including freight and fixing in tower, at present prices, forty thousand pounds exclusive duty; inside space twenty-five to thirty feet square.

Taylor.

In a letter from John Taylor & Company, confirming their cablegram, they say:

The carillon which we have advised is that which we feel would be in character with the importance of its position.

It will be noted that we state in our cable that the internal size required for the bell-chamber is 25 to 30 feet square. The carillon we propose could be installed, however, in a tower of somewhat less size than 25 feet, but we have always found that the musical effect produced from the bells is the more pleasing the larger the bell-chamber, within reason.

If we may venture to trouble you, we should be very much obliged if you could kindly have a plan and elevation of the tower sent to us.

The carillon for the new City Hall of Rotterdam, which is now nearing completion in our foundry, consists of forty-nine bells, four octaves chromatic, with largest 9,000 lbs., note A flat, and here the quarters will be simple, just a few notes—the intention of the carillon being for artistic bell-music to be played by the clavecinist.

I think that is all it is necessary to read from that letter; but I have from the same firm a subsequent letter, which I think ought to be placed on Hansard in full. This is dated May 19th, and is addressed to myself:

We are very much obliged for your kind letter of the 24th ult.

(This was not delivered here until Sunday, the 16th inst., which appears to us a very long time for delivery.)

We thank you also for the copy of the Hansard enclosed, which we have read with much interest.

We received of course your cablegram first, on the 1st inst., and we hope that you received our reply cable in due course and that our letter of 3 May, confirming this, is delivered by now, or will soon be delivered.

As we have said in that letter, we shall be able to advise so much better as to the most suitable carillon when we have details of the tower, plan, elevation, etc., and we should be glad to be permitted to advise as to the arrangement of the tower as regards the position of the bells in relation to the window openings, &c., &c., in order that the most musical result may be obtained, for this is a point we have studied very considerably and with the advantage of having had much and varied experience.

We note that it may probably be about 300 ft. high, and being of so noble a height it is probable that its internal size will exceed the 30 ft. square mentioned in our letter.

We have no hesitation therefore in advising the carillon as specified in our cable, viz., a scale of 49 bells, being four octaves chromatic, with largest bell of about 7-tons (15,680-lbs.), note F, the total weight of the 49 bells being about 50-tons.

The scale would run chromatically from the deep bass F bell, viz., F, F sharp, G, G sharp, A, B flat, B natural, C, C sharp, &c., through about 50-tons.

This would be a truly majestic carillon, and we feel perfectly justified in claiming that it would rank as the finest in the world—for although the largest bell of the Malines carillon is reputed to be heavier than we are proposing for Ottawa, still there are serious inequalities and blemishes in tune and tone in the Malines scale, which is really not a matter to be surprised at, considering the varying dates of the bells, as see under appendix D of Mr. Gorham Rice's "Carillons of Belgium and Holland", where five different centuries are mentioned.

At Ottawa, however we should ensure that each bell would be perfectly in tune in itself in its own harmonic tones, as well as in tune with the other bells of the carillon, a similar artistic result indeed, but on a grander scale, to that which we have achieved at Queenstown Cathedral in Ireland, and to which The Times was good enough to bear testimony in August last, writing as follows, viz.:—"The Queenstown Carillon is tuned in equal temperament to the accuracy of a single vibration—a very rare achievement. In the Continental carillons, not excepting the most famous ones, particularly when they contain bells of many periods and founders, the tune has never been accurate enough to allow any consideration as to "just" or "equal" temperament. The task of the carilloneur has always been to hide the defects of his instrument and to choose only those keys and harmonies which are most effective. The Queenstown bells offer no such difficulties to the player."

The carillon which we have suggested, viz., with the 7-ton F bell as the foundation, certainly seems to impose itself upon us as the ideal carillon for the stately Parliament House of Ottawa. But we could of course instal a carillon of smaller size, indeed of any size that may be desired.

We may mention that a carillon similar to that we have now in course of founding for the City Hall of Rotterdam, viz., with largest 4-tons, note A flat, would cost about £24,000, completely installed with clavier, but exclusive of clock or automatic mechanism.

We note, however, that there is a feeling that there should be an automatic chiming apparatus, and no doubt by the time you received this letter you will have had delivery of ours of the 3rd inst., and will have considered upon the suggestion therein set forth as to quarter chimes, viz., whether the elaborate "tambour", playing music in two or three "parts", see page 54 (1st Edition) of "Carillons of Belgium", be preferred, or the simple single note melody, as at Queenstown Cathedral, or the still simpler "Quarters and hour", be it Guildford, or Westminster, or another.

Then if any decision has been arrived at as to which of these automatic chimes would be desired at Ottawa we should be very pleased to submit an approximate estimate for installing this complete and for connecting with the bells.

And here we may comment upon the postscript you kindly add to your letter relative to the apprehension that is entertained by some as to the bells being likely to be an annoyance to the members in session.

We cannot see why there should be any fear of annoyance, for if the "tambour" with its lengthy "quarters" is decided upon and it is found that these quarters are distracting during session, it is a most simple matter to have the chiming machinery disconnected with the clock so that the quarters are silent during session, or indeed at any time that silence is desired. The hour bell only could be left striking if it was found that this was not too disturbing.

The same practice could be followed if the simple quarters are installed, and of course the carilloneur, the artist who would play the bells from the keyboard, would perform and practise only as arranged.

We may comment here upon the word "carillon." This word is used vaguely; sometimes the intention being to describe the bells only, sometimes the bells and the clavier or bell-player's keyboard, sometimes the automatic tune or chime-playing machinery, and sometimes the whole group of these. For our own part we endeavour to employ it solely when referring to the range of the bells. We mention this because we note in the Hansard report, page 180, after mentioning names of cathedrals and town halls the text runs "All these have carillons installed by the firm of Gillett & Johnston." We beg to comment that although this firm may have supplied the automatic machinery they certainly did not supply the bells of Worcester and Dublin cathedrals, nor of Bradford, Rochdale and Manchester town halls, for all these are from our foundry.

We may mention that it is very probable that the great carilloneur of Malines, W. Jef. Denyn, will be giving a recital on our carillon at Queenstown Cathedral towards the end of July and we wondered whether possibly any member of Senate interested in the proposed scheme would be in Great Britain then and would be able to arrange to be at Queenstown on that occasion to hear this great artist's playing upon what we claim to be the most accurately tuned large scale of bells in the world. It would we are sure be helpful and instructive to any such Member, and in any case it could not fail to be a musical delight, and it is for these reasons that we are taking the liberty of mentioning this. We would give further details when Mr. Denyn's visit is definitely arranged

Respectfully awaiting the favour of your further communications,

We beg to remain, Sir,
Your obdient servants,
John Taylor & Co.

I read that letter, honourable gentlemen, so that the House may be thoroughly informed as to what your Committee has been doing in the way of seeking reliable and accurate information on this question. In addition to the offer from John Taylor & Company, your Committee has also received an estimate from Gillett & Johnston, of Croydon, England, a very reliable firm of clock and bell manufacturers. I have from them a letter, and, as it is a very short one, I think I might be permitted to put it on Hansard. It is addressed to myself, and says:

Dear Sir:—Referring to your favour of the 16th ultimo, we now have pleasure in sending you approximate estimate of the cost of a carillon of forty-seven bells for installation in your new Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. We have suggested a tenor of 5 tons.

You will notice, honourable gentlemen, that that is 2 tons less than the one suggested by John Taylor & Company.

—but if your funds permit we could, of course, quote for a carillon based on a tenor of a lower pitch.

We have not quoted for the cost of freight and landing charges on your side nor for fixing, as probably it would be better to get some idea of the actual scheme to be adopted and we could then quote you definitely. With regard to the fixing, we should suggest sending out one of our skilled bell hangers who would be able to supervise the labour, which would have to be found in Ottawa. Here again the cost of fixing would depend upon the weight of the bells decided upon.

We enclose a blueprint showing the suggested hanging of the bells, and this will give you the dimensions which would be necessary for this particular carillon.

Our Mr. Housman is sailing for Canada next week and proposes to call upon you on reaching Ottawa, which will be about the 22nd proximo. He will probably be staying at the Chateau Laurier. He would then be able to discuss the matter fully with you.

Yours faithfully,
for Gillett & Johnston,
Chas. Dean.

The Bells to be clean and sound castings composed of the best pure copper and tin alloy and accurately tuned on the Five Tone Simpson Principle, viz., each bell to be absolutely in tune with itself and also the rest of the carillon. Inclusive of wood washers, special wrot iron staples and clappers and bell bolts, and all the necessary cranks, crank chairs, S-hooks and wires, connected with a piano clavier having 47 hand levers and pedals as necessary. To supply an independent steel frame and assembling and marking same in our Foundry. Special packing of the bells and material for abroad, and f.o.b. at the London docks. £8,165 sterling.

When I received that estimate I discussed the matter with the members of the Committee, and it was thought advisable to cable this firm giving them an opportunity of submitting an approximate estimate on the cost of a carillon similar to the one quoted on by John Taylor & Company. A cable was sent asking for that estimate, and just a day or two ago I received the following:

Approximate cost forty-nine bells, four octaves, with 7-ton F bell as foundation, fourteen thousand pounds. Would guarantee to surpass all existing carillons.

You will notice, honourable gentlemen, that the estimate of £14,000 is f.o.b. in England, whereas the estimate of Taylor & Company is for the carillons complete and installed in the tower. However, there is a great discrepancy, and we feel that there may be some misunderstanding in regard to the latter quotation. While the question of transportation has to be taken into consideration, the estimate of Gillett & Johnston is just about half of that of Taylor & Company, and the difference suggests the wisdom of caution in further negotiations.

The Chief Architect, Mr. Pearson, who was before the Committee, spoke in glowing terms of the wonderful memorial room which he proposed to finish in the tower. The inside of the room is to be finished with stone or earth taken from the battlefields of France. There will be on the walls tablets which will contain the name and rank of every Canadian who now sleeps in France or other foreign land. In the centre of the room there will be a dais or pedestal with a large Book of Doom resting thereon, containing the name and rank of every soldier who gave up his life in the defence of the principles which the civilized world was contending for.

Mr. Pearson, who was present at the meeting of your Committee, said, while discussing this question:

What more fitting finish could there be to this memorial Chamber than the magnificent carillon proposed.

This, gentlemen, would be the finishing touch to a truly majestic memorial to our honoured dead. 55,000 Canadian boys now sleep in France and other foreign lands, having made the great sacrifice that we who are left might enjoy peace and freedom from the tyranny that the Hun tried to fix upon the civilized world.

In view of the object of this memorial, nothing short of the best that can be secured in the way of a carillon, would satisfy the people of Canada. No doubt some may hesitate on account of the estimated cost, but after all is it not infinitesimal when considered in connection with the cost of this great building, which when completed will have cost over ten millions of money.

It does seem to me that there is no memorial that the Canadian Government could devise that would be more acceptable and more appropriate than the installation of this great carillon in connection with the memorial chamber for which provision has already been made in the tower.

That the Committee may be properly seized of the wonderful possibilities of a carillon, I am going to read to the House a short article on the opening of what is designated as the greatest carillon in the three Kingdoms, installed by John Taylor & Company in the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Queenstown, Ireland.

I shall now read extracts from an article headed, "Queenstown Cathedral," by W. Wooding Starmer, one of the greatest authorities in the world on carillons. It says:

The clock and the carillon machine is by Messrs. Smith of Derby, and the movement is the largest and most powerful in Ireland. The clock face is 7 feet 6 inches in diameter. The quarter chimes (Westminster) are played on four bells, and the hour is struck on the great bell—the first stroke being the exact time. The clock also operates the chime—tune mechanism which requisitions seventeen bells of the carillon and plays twelve tunes: (1) The Minstrel Boy; (2) The Harp that Once; (3) Let Erin Remember; (4) Faith of our Fathers; (5) Erin, the Tear; (6) God of Mercy; (7) Adeste Fideles; (8) Hail; glorious St. Patrick; (9) God bless our Pope; (10) Tantum Ergo; (11) How dear to me; (12) Avenging and Bright.

I read this, honourable gentlemen, for the purpose of showing that anything that can be played on a pipe-organ or a piano can be played on a properly-constructed carillon. The article goes on to say:

The chime-tunes are so arranged that, so far as possible, the bells are used equally, such a method keeping the whole of the mechanism in working order and preventing the undue wear of any particular bells and their connections.

The carillon of forty-two bells with clavier 3½-octaves in compass is the largest and finest in the United Kingdom, and the most perfect set of bells in the world tunes to equal temperament. The founders are Messrs. John and Denison Taylor, of Loughborough. The total weight of the bells is 17 tons 2 cwt.

Remember, honourable gentlemen, that while this is the greatest carillon in the three kingdoms, and while it has the finest bells in the world it is not half as heavy as the carillon proposed by Taylor & Company for the tower of the Parliament Buildings. There are three programmes given in this article which show the possibilities of a carillon placed in what is going to be one of the finest towers on this continent. They are as follow:

Morning, 11.15 to 11.45.

Sonata.. .. .. G. Van Hœy.
Ave Maria.. .. .. Schubert.
Prelude in C major.. .. .. Bach.
Adagio from "Pathetic"
Sonata.. .. .. Beethoven.
Neapolitan Song.. .. .. .. Casella.
"Rubensmarch".. .. .. .. Benoit.

Afternoon, 3.45 to 4.30

Song of Victory.. .. .. .. Mestdagh.
Pêcheurs de perles.. .. .. . Bizet.
O Star of Eve.. .. .. Wagner.
Gavotte.. .. .. Vanderveli.
Spring Song.. .. .. Mendelssohn.
Seranade.. .. .. Gabriel Marie.
Rubensmarch.. .. .. Benoit.
Berceuse de Jocelyn.. .. .. Godard.

Evening, 7.30 to 8.15.

Fantasia "Les Cloches de Corneville".. .. .. Planquette.
Flemish Songs:
(a) My Mother Tongue.. Benoit.
(b) When the Swallows Homeward Fly.. .. .. De-Broeck.
(c) Antwerp Tower.. .. Verhaeren.
Stances.. .. .. Flegier.
Andante cantabile.. .. .. .. Denyn.
Intermezzo.. .. .. Mascagni.
Fantasia, "Carmen".. .. .. Bizet.

In conclusion, permit me to say what I believe this memorial would mean. It would mean the immortal principle of patriotism; it would mean love of country; it would mean sacrifices for the country we love; it would mean not only love of country but love of liberty. This alone, gentlemen, could have inspired over 500,000 Canadian soldiers to leave home and family and to offer to die, if need be, for their imperilled institutions. Love of country alone could have inspired 55,000 of our Canadians to die for the great cause for which they were contending. Nothing less sacred than love of country could have sustained our gallant men during the years in which they offered their lives as a sacrifice for the perpetuation of great principles that the civilized world was contending for. It is a noble patriotism, and it impels every Canadian to be interested in the erection of this magnificent monument to the honour and memory of those gallant men who now sleep in France and other foreign lands.

That, gentlemen, is what this great carillon would mean. That is the message it would convey to the present and to all future generations. It would mean that the cause in which Canadians died was a righteous one, and it would mean that the cause which triumphed shall be perpetuated for all time. In the erection of this magnificent tower and the finishing it off with the proposed memorial bells, we would be doing that which would strengthen our devotion to free institutions and help to ensure their permanency for the remotest posterity. We would not only be rendering immortal the fame of the men who participated in the war, by this magnificent structure, but we would be making immortal the principles for which they contended and for which they sacrificed their lives.

Honourable gentlemen, I have much pleasure in moving the adoption of the Report.

Hon. EDWARD MICHENER: Honourable gentlemen, I do not know that I can add any information to what has been so fully given by the chairman of this Committee; but, as one of the members of the Committee, I would like to emphasize the desirability of the Government of Canada installing a carillon as a feature to the proposed memorial tower in connection with our great national building.

The report mentions the fact that the United States are considering the erection of a great national peace monument and the installation of a carillon of 54 bells, representing each state of the Union and the other associated possessions. One very distinctive and interesting feature is that, in the construction or manufacture of those 54 bells, German war material captured in the great war is to be used, and Congress is being asked to supply that war material so that those munitions that once poured forth death and destruction will peal forth notes of harmony and peace at the great capital of the United States.

The report also mentions the fact that Great Britain is considering the installation of a great carillon in the Westminster tower, in the centre of the British Empire. Even though there were no other proposals of this nature and no precedents—I am not one of those who care very much about precedents—Canada, as a result of the war, is taking an increasingly foremost place among the nations of the world; and, in leading in this patriotic movement in connection with our memorial tower, I am sure we would be doing ourselves credit. It would be not only a source of pride to every Canadian citizen to hear notes of harmony and melody pealing forth from our capital building, but it would be such a distinctive feature that distinguished visitors to Canada from all parts of the world would want to come to our national capital to hear the wonderful music played by the carillon.

It may be urged, in consideration of this report, that it is largely a matter of sentiment. Well, honourable gentlemen, I can agree to that; but, after all, was it not to a large extent sentiment that called forth 500,000 of our citizens in defence of our liberties? Is not sentiment a large part of our national life? National sentiment is an accompaniment of national greatness. Material wealth alone does not constitute a nation's greatness. We need only to recall the great empires of the past to know that their fame which has come down in history was not a matter of material wealth, but rather greatness of ideals and sentiments. Music, art, poetry, science, scholarship, statemanship—these are the things which make for the greatness of a nation; and if we are to have a strong national sentiment we must promote these things, which, after all, figure largely in the national patriotic spirit of our people. It is my opinion that the installation in the memorial tower to be erected in connection with our national capital buildings would be a fitting complement of that memorial tower, inasmuch as it would say to every Canadian that there is a true national spirit in the Dominion of Canada. Since the Parliament buildings have cost so many millions of dollars, it seems to me that the small amount which would be required to install a first-class carillon, the best that we could buy, to complete the memorial feature of our tower, should not be a deterrent in comparison with the large cost of the buildng.

Another fact, which I think the chairman of the Committee did not mention to-day, is that the architect informs us that the tower will be of such construction as at present designed that no added expense would be required for the installation of a proper carillon, and that the tower will be ample in size and strength and all other qualifications to admit of such installation.

I therefore believe that the honourable members of this House will at least adopt the report, inasmuch as it simply recommends the desirability of the installation of a carillon, and requests the Government of the Dominion, if they see fit to appoint a Committee, composed of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate of Canada, to take further into their consideration the question of the installation of a carillon. Personally I hope that the desire of the Committee in this respect may be supported by the honourable members of this House.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. P. E. BLONDIN (Postmaster General) moved the second reading of Bill 167, an Act to amend the Post Office Act.

He said: This Bill is brought before this House in order to increase certain charges which for a long time past have been inadequate and out of proportion to the cost to the department of the two items mentioned in the Bill.

The first deals with the rate of registration of letters. In the past it has been five cents. According to the report of the department that Branch has been carried on at a loss of half a million dollars yearly. In the United States and Europe the rate for the registration of letters is ten cents. The Department believes that by increasing our rate from five cents to ten cents the cost of carrying registered letters will be met.

The second section deals with the rate on newspapers. In the first years after Confederation a privilege was granted to the newspapers, which at that time had to face a situation that does not now exist. Daily newspapers were small; they had to be distributed through a sparse and scattered population, and advertisements did not take the place they occupy in modern newspapers in assisting that business. The last report of the Post Office Department states that the carrying of newspapers costs the country from five to six millions, while the total amount of money paid by the newspapers to my Department does not exceed $261,000. We are charging the people of Canada 2 cents an ounce for carrying their letters, which means $32 for 100 lb., and for the carrying of third-class matter $8 for 100 lb. is the price also exacted from the public; but ever since Confederation we have been charging newspapers only 25 cents per 100 lb. In this we have been following rather the American Post Office system than the European or British system. It seems that in Europe the principle is admitted that the main business of the Post Office is to see to it that a letter is brought to the four corners of the country in the speediest and cheapest way; the carrying of newspapers and parcels being incidental. I think that whatever incidental service the Department chooses to enter into must be made to pay its cost, in order that the service of letters and postcards to the people of the country be not curtailed. If you look at the reports of British or European post offices, you will see that the charge for the carriage of newspapers averages between 7 and 8 cents. They are not sent in bundles, as American and Canadian papers are allowed to be, but require a stamp on each paper; and as a matter of fact the mails are not used in Europe or Great Britain for the purpose of carrying newspapers, it being too costly; so the newspaper owners use the express, and they have to make their own distribution. In Canada the department estimates that 60 per cent of the expenditure of the large post offices and 60 per cent of the carrying of mails on the railways is chargeable to the newspapers. We would require two-thirds less space on any baggage or mail-car if we had not the duty of looking after newspapers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What would the other third be used for?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: For letters, for which we charge the public $32 per 100 lb; while for the newspapers we are charging 25 cents per 100 lb. I presume I need not go further into that question.

I might explain why I have not increased the rate to a larger extent than I have done by this Bill. The first proposal was to follow the example of the United States, who have been forced, in the face of a large deficit, to change their method and increase the postal rates on newspapers. For the last there or four years, starting from a quarter or half a cent, they have reached to-day a rate of 1½ cents; but they have made this distinction, which at first strongly appealed to me, that they have made a special charge on the reading matter of the publication, and another and higher and special charge on the advertisements section of the paper. Besides, they have fixed zones within which those two scales of prices increase with the distance.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How can you distinguish between the advertising and the reading matter?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Very easily. We have now a rule in the Department which obliges newpapers to have at least 40 to 50 per cent of their paper covered by reading matter. It is very easy for the postmaster in Montreal, on one of his employees, by looking at the Star or La Presse, to figure the percentage of the paper which contains advertisements.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Or should contain.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Or should contain. I will admit that there has probably been some laxity in the past in this part of the administration of the Department; but it is my intention to have this rule strictly adhered to in the future. I must point out, however, that the United States, with their large population, can try experiments on new systems. The Postmaster General of the United States is dealing with a population of over 100,000,000, and the mails are carried in territory which is densely populated, the large cities not being separated by great distances. Besides that, his organization is so huge that he can well afford to provide for a special organization to take care of the papers under the different conditions that must be complied with by the papers. In Canada we have to give, as much as possible, the same good Post Office service to a population of 8,000,000 people scattered on about the same area as the population of the 100,000,000 in the United States, so we cannot afford to undertake the experiments that they are trying.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Could my honourable friend tell us the cost, proportionately, more or less, as the service increases? For instance, comparing our service with that of the United States, do we pay in the same relative proportion that our population has to theirs, or is it less?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I do not catch the meaning of my honourable friend's question.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Suppose we had to serve a population of 18,000,000 instead of 9,000,000 would the cost be in the same proportion that it is to-day, or less or more?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The cost of the service is higher and the revenue is much less. For example, take a stretch of 300 miles in the West, or in northern Ontario or in lower Quebec, where the roads are difficult on account of the formation of the land, and where there are very few people. At the same time, we have to bring them their letters, and have to hire labour to do that whether the population is one or ten thousand, and the expenses reach very high figures.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am afraid I did not make myself understood. For instance, the telephone service increases in cost in greater proportion as the number of people served increases. If you have a service say of 10,000 telephones it costs so much; if you increase it say to 15,000, the cost will be more than in the proportion of 50 per cent. I am asking my honourable friend if it is the same in the Post Office.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: My honourable friend does not seem to make the distinction clear between transportation and the telephone. Transportation involves the problem of the short haul versus the long haul; so it is with regard to street cars and railways. But it is quite apparent that when you have a small population scattered over a large country, the cost is going to be much more.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Might I suggest that we could take that question up again when we are in committee? Many representations have been made to the department. It has been represented that there are very few papers which at present circulate beyond a certain limit. We have rather a service of local daily papers. In the whole of Canada there are probably not more than two or three papers which go from one coast to the other and beyond. The zone system would have meant an increased expenditure, whereas we are not expecting any large revenue for the present owing to the small number of large newspapers which exceed a certain limit of business. The first proposal of the Department was to increase newspaper rates from one-quarter of a cent, which is the present charge, to one cent. Representations have been made by those papers that they have been given to understand that ever since Confederation they had been entitled to that privilege; that in undertaking a large business, they had counted on that privilege, and it would be unfair to make such a sudden change, particularly at a time when they have to pay very high prices for their newsprint, and when they have to face increased wages and increases in everything else. We considered it a fair compromise to raise the rate on the newspapers for this year by 200 per cent; that is, to make the rate three-quarters of a cent instead of one-quarter of a cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the department decided on the increase of one cent a pound, did they hope that they would thereby cover the cost of transportation of the newspapers?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Not at all. A rate of one cent, or a rate of two cents, would not for the present meet more than one-fifth or one-quarter of what the carrying of newspapers costs the Department. My honourable friend will readily appreciate the situation when he recalls what I said at the beginning of my remarks, that the present revenue from the carrying of newspapers is $260,000, and the estimated cost is $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. So the Department at present is not so much after the money of the newspaper people for this year or for next year as it is concerned with the principle. I think the important thing in this Bill is not so much the $200,000 or $400,000 of increase that I shall get for next year, as the principle, which is now recognized by Parliament, that newspapers or any other mail matter, whatever it is, that may be carried through His Majesty's mail must pay the cost of transportation and that we must do away with the existing privileges.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But is it not a fact that the charge which the Department is making is one which should be borne necessarily and ultimately by the advertisers rather than by the newspapers? It is upon the advertising matter that you are losing so heavily.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: This rate has been reached after many long discussions with all the interested parties—with associations representing the different papers, and they will have to prepare for a considerable change in their existing prices. My impression is that the increase will be borne proportionally by the advertisers and by the regular subscribers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Could my honourable friend tell us if three-quarters of one cent will pay for that proportion of the newspaper which is given over to advertising? Will that be the cost of it?

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Well, to what extent will it not cover the cost? Can my honourable friend tell us that?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: My honourable friend will make his own deductions when I tell him that if the present revenue from the carrying of newspapers, namely, $260,000 is doubled, that would bring us only about half a million dollars for this year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Against an expenditure of—?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Of five or six millions.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Millions?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: As Postmaster General I would be glad if the House of Commons and the Senate would see their way to fix the rate at five or six cents at once; but this would mean that under present circumstances you would put all these papers of Canada out of business immediately. I find, after long discussion and after giving with my officers, the best of my thought to this matter, that there is only one way out of the difficulty: it is to admit the principle that the newspapers must be notified that in future they will have to pay and shall be made to pay what they cost to my department. The only way is to make a gradual annual increase as is proposed by this Bill. This year the increase is to one cent; next year it will be to 1½ cent. I hope that by that time the conditions will have become more nearly normal and that Parliament will be in a better position to determine what is the exact amount that ought to be charged the newspapers, in order that they may pay the cost of transportation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is 1½ cent the maximum that the Postmaster General is able to charge under this Bill?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: It is the only amount that is provided for. I have no objection to provision being made for more.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It would be interesting to know how the Post Office Department at certain times—for we have had one or two cases of the sort—was able to declare any surplus?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: If the honourable gentleman would just let me deal first with the principle of the Bill, we might more easily discuss the whole matter in committee.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: Will my honourable friend allow me to correct him in one particular? I would ask him, when referring to the bad state or the backward condition of the roads, not to use the province of Quebec as an example. Quebec happens to possess more first-class roads than all the other provinces throughout the entire Dominion of Canada put together.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The reference was hardly intentional, but I happened to think of the most beautiful and most interesting part of Quebec when I alluded to the lower St. Lawrence. It is because that part of the province is a very hilly country. My honourable friend would certainly not like to run his best automobile at 60 miles an hour along some of those roads.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: I may be pardoned for saying that it was not my honourable friend I was referring to. I just wanted the Senate to know that the benighted province of Quebec stands in such a magnificent position in this respect.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: Of course it does. Everybody knows that.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The last clause of the Bill deals with the franking privilege extended to legislatures. For the information of the Senate I should say that there was a provision for the purpose of rendering more difficult the use or the abuse of the franking privilege of the members. It is needless to refer to that provision; it has been struck out by the other Chamber. This clause deals with the privileges which in the past have been granted to the different legislatures of the Dominion. The effect has been that the Post Office Department has had to carry all the official matter of the different legislatures. It is, I think, sufficient to mention that fact in order to appeal to honourable gentlemen that such a state of affairs should no longer be tolerated.

With these explanations, I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. L. McMEANS: Is there not a very large deficit on the carrying of parcels from the departmental stores by parcel post? Is the revenue from that source sufficient to offset the expenditure? It seems to be very unfair that these departmental stores should get their parcels carried at the expense of the public. Their parcels are sent at a very low rate and are distributed throughout the entire country. Those stores are in competition with the small storekeepers. It seems to me that if there is a deficit the public is paying for the delivery of the parcels from the departmental stores.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The Department considers that the parcel post service is self-sustaining, and I must say that the large deficits in the Department do not come from that source.

Hon. W. PROUDFOOT: I would like to say a word on the question of parcel post, because I have taken some interest in that, and I would like to know if the Postmaster General has considered the question of increasing the rates of parcel post. We all know that a great injustice is done to the storekeepers throughout the rural municipalities; and I find that, while increases have been made in the salaries of postmasters in cities and towns, no increase whatever has been made in the emoluments of those in charge of the small post offices. As an illustration: Most of them are paid by a commission on the stamps that they sell, and in the course of their business they are obliged to handle all the parcels which come from the various departmental stores. It may be quite satisfactory to compel newspapers to pay an additional rate, but why confine the increase to the newspapers? I think that where departmental stores enter, as they do, into competition with other businesses, they should be required to pay fair carrying charges. My information is that the departmental stores do not pay sufficiently; that is, the Post Office Department carries a large proportion of the parcels at a continual loss. Possibly the Postmaster General can tell me if my information in that regard is correct or not?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I may say in answer to the honourable gentleman that the rates which at present prevail for parcel post are kept down to the point at which they can compete with the rates charged by the express companies. They are lower than the express companies' charges. If we were to increase the rate there would be only one result; people would send their goods by express instead of using the post office organization. I think there is a false impression in the minds of many in regard to the management of the parcel post. It is supposed that the large departmental stores benefit to a large extent from it. In the first place, the stores are not able to distribute their catalogues by parcel post. They use the express in the same degree as they use the mails for distribution in a special zone. It is a question for this House and the people of Canada to decide whether they ought to be debarred from using the services of the rural post office, for the use of which they pay full compensation. On the one hand, the people interested, namely, the farmers of the country, and all who benefit by the lower cost of transportation, are very insistent that the parcel post rate ought to be decreased. On the other hand, representations are made to the Government by the local merchants that the parcel post rate should be increased. I think the principle on which the system was based was the reduction of the cost of articles, and any attempt to increase the present rate would not meet with the approval of the public. I think it would be in order, honourable gentlemen, to defer these questions for a few minutes, in order that they can be more appropriately discussed when we go into Committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: May I ask the honourable gentleman what was the deficit in his department last year?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The net revenue of the department was $21,000,000 and some thousands, and the expenditure amounted to $19,000,000. This shows a surplus of nearly $3,000,000. But I do not regard that as a surplus, because it is but fair to deduct from that a proportion derived from the war-tax stamps, which I figure amounts to about $6,000,000 of this year's revenue. If the war-tax stamps had not been in existence this year, the Department would show a deficit of nearly $4,000,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman has stated that he would reckon that $6,000,000 of the income of his department should be credited to the war-tax stamps. Does he base that reckoning only upon the sale of the stamps which bear the words "War Tax," or is he simply making a guess or an estimate? Personally I do not affix one of those special stamps to a cheque, nor are they used by the people about me. We use the ordinary stamp. That is why I put the question to my honourable friend. How does he arrive at his estimate of $6,000,000? Does he base that upon the revenue from the sale of the stamps bearing the words "War Tax," or how?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I fancy, honourable gentlemen, that this estimate is based on a much plainer system. Before the war tax existed most of the stamps sold by my department were two-cent stamps. Now the majority are three-cent stamps. My officers attribute one-third of the revenue as being derived from the one-cent stamp. When you buy a three-cent stamp we say there is one cent for the tax and two cents for the postage. This is as close as we can come to the exact figure. We speak of the revenue as $6,000,000, but if the honourable gentleman were to ask me, "Do you think that the $6,000,000 was derived from the sale of stamps to put on letters?" I would say no. We allow about $2,000,000 for stamps which have been used on cheques, etc.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

IRRIGATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 168, an Act to amend the Irrigation Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it will be recalled that some years ago we placed upon the statute book a general Act touching irrigation. Irrigation in Canada is something novel, the full development of which must be reached by experience. Since its introduction several large enterprises have been carried out involving the expenditure of a very great deal of money, and it has been found desirable to secure amendments to the Act.

Interpretations which have been placed on many of the sections of the Act have cast certain doubts upon them and have rather embarrassed the Department of the Interior. It is therefore proposed to amend the general Act in order to give more lucidity to the provisions already passed, and under which we have proceeded to administer the Act. In fact, all the amendments are in a sense of a technical character, so far as interpretation is concerned, and would only be appreciated by those having a knowledge of irrigation. Inasmuch as each section deals with a peculiar feature of the practical working out of the Act, I deem it unwise to enter into any lengthy explanation as to the purpose of the Bill, except to say that it is to make the general Act more workable, and to give greater facility to projects of irrigation upon which capital has been expended in the West.

A very controversial point, and one upon which more or less doubt has been thrown, is the extent to which the Crown may appropriate water for the purposes of irrigation. The language used in the original Act was intended to give the Crown authority over all available waters in lands over which the Crown exercises authority. In the Western territories, particularly where irrigation is being carried out on a large scale, the title stands in the Crown through the Dominion Government. Some doubts have been thrown upon the law in relation to certain classes of water—water from creeks, springs, and so on—and one of the objects of this Bill is to clarify, not only the water, but the language used in appropriating the water.

This Bill also deals with the subject of expropriation. As honourable gentlemen can very well understand, expropriation must necessarily be a feature of carrying out any projects of this kind; but, because these projects are all of a public or semi-public character, and involve the absorption of individual rights, there is in the Act a classification of the purposes for which water may be acquired. There are superior purposes and purposes that are subordinate, and it will be clearly appreciated that we must acquire the inferior properties for carrying out any large project that may be for the public service.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, all of us, especially those of us from the West, understand that the question of irrigation is a very important one, and that it is necessary to have our legislation in such shape that those who have to deal with the question may understand exactly what their position is, and may know whether or not they have a proper title to the waters which they have to use.

My honourable friend has said that the question of irrigation is more or less a new one. In certain parts of Canada irrigation has been carried on almost since the time of Confederation; in fact, I think before British Columbia came into Confederation there was a good deal of irrigation work done in the different parts of that province, although, of course, the work was not done on the same large scale on which we are doing it to-day particularly in Alberta.

I do not want to take up the time of the House unnecessarily, but I want to point out to my honourable friend that there are some very objectionable features in this Bill. One is that—its provisions are retroactive to 1894. I hope my honourable friend will be able to explain to us why it is necessary to adopt legislation of this kind. I think we are all pretty well agreed that is not a desirable kind of legislation, and that it should only be passed in exceptional cases.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, TELEGRAPHS, AND HARBOURS.

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 141, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, inasmuch as we were in Committee on this Bill yesterday, and the Committee rose to report progress, I thought we had better go into Committee again for the purpose of carrying out what I am about to propose. The object of the motion I am about to make is to indicate that the Government, in entering upon the building of branch line railways, particularly in connection with the Canadian National railways or the Grand Trunk railway, when the Government assumes authority over it, should make application to Parliament in just the same way that any railway company would make application, so that the committee of the House may have an opportunity of determining whether or not the branch line is necessary.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Bill was referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs, and Harbours.

PICTOU HARBOUR BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 121, an Act respecting the Harbour of Pictou, in Nova Scotia. Hon. Mr. Murphy in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, at the resquest of my honourable friend from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Bostock) yesterday, I said I would obtain certain information in regard to this wharf. It seems that the expenditure involved in maintaining the wharf exceeds the revenue derived from it. The revenue from 1913 to 1919 amounted to $3,388 and the cost of repairs alone amounted to $3,840. It seems that under the legislation by which this wharf is administered the cost of repairs must not exceed the revenue, although apparently it has done so.

It is proposed to make a transfer of this wharf to the Dominion Government. The financial statement of the wharf on December 31, 1919, shows that there was to the credit of the wharf, or to the credit of the Harbour Commissioners, I presume, the sum of $280.25, and four harbour buoys of a value of $300; and that the estimated value of the wharf was about $5,000. There is no recently approved valuation of the wharf, the figures which I have given being approximate. It is therefore not such a public institution as is susceptible of maintaining itself, so to speak; hence the Government finds it necessary to take it over.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend has not told us whether this Government originally built that wharf, or whether it was built by the Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was built, I think, by the Dominion Government, and then a Harbour Commission was appointed to administer it, and they have been administering it under the unfortunate conditions that I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So they would get back the munificent sum of $280?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That will be carried to the credit of the Government for future maintenance.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Those wharves were all built by the Commisioners without any aid from the Government, and they have always been maintained without such aid. The Dominion Government is really getting a large asset, and the Harbour Commissioners had no liabilities whatever: in fact they have some moneys coming to them. The principal reason, as I understand, why the Government is taking over the supervision of this Harbour is that a very large expenditure has been made to dredge out East River near New Glasgow. That expenditure was commenced under the Laurier Government. I think nearly a million was expended to make a ship channel. I understand that large interests have developed, and, as the boundary extends to New Glasgow, it was decided that the Department should take over the whole supervision of the harbour, and incidentally they get those wharves, which are valuable assets and have not cost the Government one cent.

Sections 1, 2, 3 4, and 5, the schedule, the title, and the preamble were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is a very old friend of the Senate. It has been before us on many occasions, and apparently, with respect to some provisions of the Bill, the Senate has not been able to see eye to eye with the House of Commons; consequently there has been more or less disagreement as to these particular sections, to which I shall afterwards allude. The Bill embodies quite a number of amendments, which affect many features of the Criminal Code, and therefore I cannot deal in a comprehensive way with the policy or principle of the Bill, because of its being very largely a matter of procedure.

The first section deals entirely with definitions of Appeal Court, owing to legislation in the different provinces constituting courts of appeal.

There is a proposed amendment to the provisions of the Code dealing with firearms and unlawful weapons, enlarging very considerably the law in that respect.

There is also a provision dealing restrictively with the making of affidavits, with penalties attached.

Then we come to sections 4 and 5, which have to do with the offences to which I have referred, namely, the seduction of girls between 16 and 18, the seduction of female employees, and the seduction of girls of more tender years. We have dealt with those two sections on many occasions, and I direct the attention of the Senate to their having again come before this Chamber to be considered.

Section 7 of the Bill contains some elaborate provisions as to betting. This section is very largely the outcome of the inquiry which was made recently into the whole subject by Dr. Rutherford, who was appointed a Commissioner for that purpose. This section 7 may be said to lie midway between those who advocate say an open door in regard to betting, and those who are opposed to it entirely. I think a perusal of this section will lead honourable gentlemen to conclude that the public interests affecting morals, etc., will be well protected under this section, more particularly as it is designed to promote the legitimate interests of breeding.

An amendment is made to the provisions dealing with whipping. There is also one as to the unlawful wearing of decorations or uniforms, growing out of the late war. There are other provisions, perhaps of a less important character than those to which I have referred, dealing largely with procedure. When we go into Committee we can enter into the details of all those provisions.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not propose to discuss this Bill on the second reading, because I think we can deal with it better in committee. I have not been able to understand why subsection 2 of section 2 is inserted, calling for the insertion after the word "weapon" of the words "firearm, air gun," because the definition of "weapon" or "offensive weapon" in the Criminal Code includes both of those terms; therefore subsection 2 is merely a duplication of words.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I shall have that looked into.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I wish to call the attention of the House and the Minister to section 11. It reads:

> 664A. No warrant or other process shall be issued in any province for the arrest or summoning upon a criminal charge of any person residing in another province without the approval of the Attorney General or a Judge of the Superior Court or of a County Court or of a District Court, of the province where it is sought to issue the process.

When we go into Committee I would like to have a pretty full explanation why this section is inserted, and just what persons are meant to be covered by it. To me it seems somewhat ambiguous, and I fear a certain construction will be put on it that strikes me as subversive of what has always been a principle of our criminal law—that a man shall be arrested and tried where he commits the offense. If the section means that a man may commit an offence in New Brunswick and be prosecuted in British Columbia, and taken there to be tried, I object to it. I call that to the attention of the House so that honourable gentlemen may consider it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Without entering into an explanation of its application, I may say that this section was discussed at length in connection with some liquor legislation that we passed, I think a couple of sessions ago, and my recollection is that the Senate amended that by providing that the process should not be effective without the consent of the Attorney General of the Province in which the accused lived. I think my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) was largely responsible for urging an amendment of that character. I cannot recollect at the moment whether that amendment was made, but I remember it was very lengthily discussed in the Senate at the time.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I will say this, that when the Liquor Bill was discussed there was a clause which had a resemblance to this, and I endeavoured to have it struck out altogether. The amendment was not mine; it originated on the other side of the House. When we come to deal with this matter I want to discuss it fully again.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If a crime is committed in one province you cannot arrest a man in another without the consent of the Attorney General: is that it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, you cannot prosecute without the consent of the Attorney General of the province into which it is proposed to bring the accused from the other province.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: In connection with paragraph a of section 2, I want to know if my honourable friend and the Government have considered the advisability of eliminating the words, "elsewhere than in his own dwelling house, shop, warehouse, counting-house or premises, or is carrying concealed". I would think it should be made a criminal offense for anyone to have one of those weapons, whether in his house or on his person or anywhere else. Why should he be allowed to have a "sheath knife, bowie knife, dagger, stiletto, metal knuckles, skull cracker, etc."?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think there is a gentleman in Toronto by the name of Rosenthal who very much wished he had such weapons in his possession a few evenings ago.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The suggestion was made in the House of Commons that it would prohibit a man from having a collection of weapons. There are many collectors who have a great number of antique firearms and knives, and so on.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But those are not dangerous, because they have become wholly unfit for use. I imagine, however, that most of the skull-crackers a fellow would have in his house to-day would be useful, and would be likely to be used. I do not see why anybody should have any such arms in his house, in his cellar, on his person, or anywhere at all. It seems to me the sooner we do away with allowing people to have firearms and weapons of this sort, the sooner we will reduce the criminality of this country. We have many people coming from foreign lands, Italians and others, who are in the habit of carrying stilettos, and who use those and other weapons in this country, with the result that the criminality among those people generally is much larger on account of the fact that they are allowed to carry on in this country as they did in Europe. I would strongly urge that those words be struck out, and that the carrying of any such weapons anywhere be made a criminal offence.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Do I understand that my honourable friend would be opposed to a man having in his own home a revolver for self-protection?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I would.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would that not be practically a broadcast advertisement to house-breakers that they can go in with impunity, that they can be stopped by nothing, that practically the owners of houses would be "hands up"; that so long as people were forbidden to have revolvers or any other weapons the housebreakers would be sure to meet with no possible opposition; that the proprietor would have nothing that would bring any danger to them; that he would be an easy prey; that they could go in and steal and make themselves absolutely at home in his residence, ransack everything, go away with everything, and bid good-bye without encountering any danger? It seems to me that the spirit of our legislation is very different from that. A man in his domicile is a king. He has a right to protect himself. The privacy of his house is his own. It seems to me that this is the basis of the criminal law that comes from England, and no man has the right to break in or even go into that domicile if the proprietor does not want him to do so. It is a very different thing when a man is at large in society. Of course, he has then no right to be armed; I understand that thoroughly; but when he is at home he is not to be deprived of those firearms required to protect the sacredness of his home, and his own property and children. It seems to me the distinction is very wide.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend assumes that my proposition is that the burglar can obtain and carry firearms that other people cannot get; but my proposition is that the housebreaker or the burglar should not be allowed to have them. My honourable friend argues as if I wanted the housebreaker to have a privilege of which I would deprive others. That is not my object at all. My argument is that nobody should be allowed to have or carry firearms or other weapons.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: My honourable friend is very candid about it. When a law is passed it must be observed by everybody; therefore, when we solemnly insert this clause in the statute, it will at once forbid all persons to carry firearms—the person who abides by the law as well as the person who breaks the law. Surely my honourable friend's argument is not offered seriously. My honourable friend knows very well that the persons who would break into a house are those who would have no regard for the law, but that the immense majority of the people of Canada are law-abiding, and have a right to protect their domiciles against law-breakers. The Criminal Code has been made for that very purpose—to protect the good people against the bad. In my opinion the difference between the two classes is, as I said before, absolutely self-evident.

Hon. L. G. POWER: I agree with the honourable gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien). I dare say the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) also agrees with the honourable gentleman from Montarville as to the correctness of the statement that an Englishman's home is his castle. That is true in a sense; but unfortunately nowadays our people do not live in castles as a rule. There is no chance either to raise the drawbridge or let the portcullis fall. If one could do that, if one could shut the outside world out completely from the privacy of his house, the view of the honourable gentleman from Ottawa might have something in it. But that is not the case. Our houses are not like castles in that respect, and I quite agree that it would be a thing very prejudicial to sound sleep to have to go to bed with the feeling that any burglar or murderer might get in, and that one had no means of defending himself.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My proposition implies that there should be no sale, that it would be impossible for people to get revolvers or other weapons. Possibly I should have stated that, and if I had done so we might have avoided some of the discussion that has taken place. My proposition necessarily implied the impossibility of procuring firearms. When I said that nobody should have these weapons in his possession, I meant that they should not be found on sale in the stores. If you eliminate the manufacture, distribution, and sale of these firearms, where are the people going to get them to do mischief with?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What would you do to prevent them from being brought across the border? They are brought across.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There might be a certain provision made to allow persons to get them on a permit. I would not do away with them altogether. It might be left to the discretion of the authorities to allow people to have firearms. But what justification is there for anybody carrying a bowie knife, or sheath knife, or dagger, or stiletto? What reason is there for that? I can see no reason at all.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Would not the purpose be attained by making it obligatory that a permit should be secured by anybody who had in his possession any deadly weapon?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is what is proposed.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: It seems to me that would enable any person to protect the sanctity of the home and would prevent housebreaking. The law should provide that no person should have any deadly weapon in his possession, either within his own home or outside, without obtaining a permit from the proper authorities.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: On the second reading we are to adopt the principle of the Bill. What principle is this Bill supposed to have?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There are so many principles in it that I should prefer not to enumerate them until we get into committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is not supposed to be any special principle in an omnibus Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The principle of morality, I might say, and self-protection. If there are any amendments, they can be moved in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

FEEDING STUFFS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 165, an Act to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Commercial Feeding Stuffs, Bran, Shorts, Middlings and Chop Feeds.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is an entirely new Bill. The principle or policy of it is to insure what I might call pure food for animals. It corresponds to some extent with the legislation which has recently been passed regarding pure and unadulterated food for human beings. It is well known amongst breeders of stock that a large number of deleterious feeds are prepared and sold for stock feeding, and the purchaser of a feed cannot tell how injurious may be its effect upon his animals. It is proposed by this Bill that hereafter the sale of feeding stuffs shall be largely under the control of the Minister of Agriculture, who may enforce regulations regarding the analysis and registration of feeds, and the safeguards necessary to insure that what is fed to our live stock shall be of good quality. It surrounds the importation of feeds with a like protection. In a word, it insures, so far as is possible by human ingenuity, that the live stock industry shall be protected. This measure has the strong support of those who are interested in the industry. My honourable friend from Brockville (Hon. John Webster), than whom there is no better authority, I think, in the Dominion, has expressed himself as very strongly endorsing the Bill, and I shall be very glad indeed if he will favour the House with a few observations upon it.

Hon. JOHN WEBSTER: Honourable gentlemen, I must congratulate the Government on the manner in which they have risen to the occasion in introducing Bill 165. This is, in my humble opinion, one of the most important and far-reaching measures which this House has had to deal with during the present session. The ordinary man not engaged in the great industry of live stock production may not realize what a serious effect poisonous feeds have had during the past five years in this country. Legislation was passed at last session for the protection of purchasers of feeds manufactured by the large milling companies of Canada; but the definition placed by the Wheat Board on the product that the millers bought from the elevators as No. 1, gave the millers the opportunity to sell feeding stuffs as being of the same quality. But no person knew exactly to what extent noxious weed seeds were mixed with the bran. The result has been a serious loss to live stock owners in this country. I know of some hog feeders in my own section who have lost one-half of their herds owing to poisonous weed seeds. I brought a sample of a feed that had killed half a herd, and I sent it to the public analyst here, who had it analysed and told me that it contained five distinct traces of poison.

The destruction of live stock affects not only our domestic supply of milk, cream, butter and cheese, but also our export trade. It causes a decrease in the returns to producers of milk products. In my section of the country dairying is the principal industry, and the farmers of that community are deeply interested in this particular Bill, for some of them have suffered severe losses. In the town from which I come there is held a weekly Cheese Board, at which there is sold within a few hours' time at this season of the year $150,000 worth of cheese products. And cheese is only one product of the milk supply. That will enable you to understand the situation and appreciate how deeply these people are interested in this legislation. None of the farmers in that community grow sufficient feed for their herds. They are compelled to patronize the feed stores, in many of which these poisonous feeds are sold as the No. 1 article, but they have found it is far from being No. 1.

I think that on the board which will enforce the provisions of the Bill there should be one practical veterinary who would understand better than the ordinary individual the importance and the method of treating cattle and hogs affected by those poisons. I have myself observed how certain herds of milking cows are affected. First dysentry occurs, then paralysis sets in. The result is that after three days you have a dead cow. The hog is affected somewhat differently; with him it is paralysis from the start—and you all know what that means.

If any members of this honourable House will take the trouble to read the report of the analyses made by the Public Analyst in Ottawa, they will see that more than one-half of the samples have contained poisons. Therefore I think that the Government should endeavour at once to protect those who have succeeded in building up to its present stage the live stock industry, one of the greatest in Canada to-day. The man who is feeding what may be termed grade cattle, or cows that are not milk producers, may not be so much interested in this Bill; but those who are building up the dairy industry and the cattle trade of Canada and are producing cows of the highest standard are deeply concerned. You must remember that a cow giving 100 lb. of milk every 24 hours consumes 3 times or 3½ times the quantity of feed that is consumed by the ordinary cow producing only 30 or 40 lb. of milk a day; and in consuming that large quantity of feed the cow is three times more exposed to poison than she would be if she were being fed pure grain. So I must congratulate the Government in bringing in this legislation, for it is one of the most important Bills that I have had the pleasure of reading since I have been a member of this honourable body.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Can the honourable gentleman tell us if the product from those animals that eat that poisonous feed is likewise affected?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: I think the effect is shown in the infant mortality of the large cities of Canada. I think that is the result.

Some of you honourable gentlemen may be interested to know that within a few miles of the town I come from we have one of the most valuable herds in Canada or in the world to-day; that is, the herd of Mr. A. C. Hardy, of Brockville. He has the honour of owning the champion milch cow of the world. He has had the good fortune to sell a calf of that cow for $106,000 to an American corporation, and in turn last week bought a calf for which he paid $50,000. I had the pleasure of looking at that calf last Sunday.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Yes, on Sunday—I will be truthful. That man's cattle are all exposed to those poisonous seeds, because he has to buy largely to feed his cattle. There are 150 cattle in his herd; so you can see how much feed he buys. That is the sort of business that the people in my section of the country are trying to develop.

Hon. Mr. BLAIN: Where is this feed grown?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: In the Northwest. These noxious weed-seeds all come from the elevators.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: You buy them mixed in bran, in middlings, or in shorts.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do you not grow any noxious weeds in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Not in such large quantities. In Ontario the grain is consumed on the farms on which it is grown. It does not go to the elevators at all. We have not enough for our own requirements.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I notice that in the discussion on this Bill in another place it was stated that the manufacturers of mill feeds in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER.

Hon. JOHN WEBSTER: The Northwest.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: —that they objected to the elevator men not being penalized for shipping noxious weed seeds in car lots. This Bill does not provide any penalty for the man who ships noxious weed seeds in car lots. It imposes a penalty on those millers in Ontario who buy the noxious weeds from the West and mix them up in concoctions that kill the hogs and the cattle of my honourable friend. It will be observed that the Bill does not penalize an elevator man for selling noxious weed seeds; it simply penalizes the miller who makes up the mixture to sell, perhaps in Ontario. That is a point that we might well consider.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is that not provided for in the Seeds Act?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think you will find that it was claimed in the other House that the miller could protect himself. But it is a great mistake to permit the indiscriminate shipping of noxious weeds or seeds for any purpose. The Government of Manitoba, realizing that fact, would not permit a bushel of noxious weed seeds to be taken from the elevator, even by the farmer who grew the seeds, unless the seeds were crushed. Anyone who knows anything about noxious weed-seeds knows that it is almost impossible to get a crusher fine enough to crush them. It is a question whether we might not well consider penalizing anyone selling these seeds for any purpose.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How can the separation be made?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: These noxious weed-seeds are small seeds taken out of wheat, oats, and barley in the elevators, and they are bagged and sold by the carload to millers and feed manufacturers who mix them with wheat, oats, and barley. As the honourable gentleman from Brockville has said, many of these seeds are rank poison. That has been demonstrated not only by analyses, but by the fact that stock have died after eating them.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL (ELECTRIC RAILWAYS).

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 135, an Act to amend the Railway Act, 1919.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in dealing with the Railway Act, I think it was last session, Parliament, without appreciating the difficulty which to-day confronts us, legislated so as to bring certain provincial tramways or suburban railways within the authority of the Government of Canada. The situation which at present exists was not discovered until the British Columbia Electric Railway Company made application to the provincial railway commission for permission to increase its rates. It was then found that by the legislation of last year we had included that road within Dominion jurisdiction. This Bill is designed to replace it within provincial jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The honourable leader of the Government has intimated that this Bill applies simply to the railway in British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I did not intend to put it that way; what I intended to say was that this particular railway was included, among others. At the time the legislation was passed, we had in view the Quebec Central railway. We passed the legislation in general language, and it has since been found to cover the class of railway to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I am one of those who are inclined to think it might be just as well to have all these railways under the general Railway Act and under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Railway Commission. Possibly, as the extension of these lines goes on, on account of the business that they will be doing with one another, it will become almost necessary that they should be in the same position as the steam railways. But apparently this legislation has been asked for, and, as the Government have seen fit to agree to it, I am not going to raise any objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 184, an Act to revive and amend the Naturalization Act, 1914.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Wednesday, June 23, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved:

That from and inclusive of to-day and until the end of the Session, Rules 23*f*, 24*a*, b, d, e and h, 63, 119, 129, 130 and 131 be suspended in so far as they relate to Public or Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is my honourable friend in a position to tell us when we are going to get through with the work of the Session?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman has already asked me.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I asked my honourable friend from De Lorimier, and he is hopeful that he will be through at the end of the week.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of next week.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill C5, an Act for the relief of Muriel Curren Gilmour.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill D5, an Act for the relief of Marie Jeanne Yvonne Albertine St. Amour Lallemand.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

SECOND READING.

Bill E5, an Act for the relief of Charles Henry Foster.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill F5, an Act for the relief of Frank Cox.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill H5, an Act for the relief of John Donnelly.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

PICTOU HARBOUR BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 121, an Act respecting the Harbour of Pictou in Nova Scotia.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

INLAND REVENUE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 178, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, owing to the dry legislation which has been passed, not only by the Parliament of Canada, but also by many of the provincial legislatures, the long-settled conditions of the Inland Revenue Department have been somewhat disturbed, and it is necessary to make more ample provision than we have on the statute book to deal with the various branches of activity in that department. Additional attention will have to be given to the manufacture of commercial alcohol of different kinds and the regulations which must necessarily attend the manufacture of that class of liquor. It is proposed also to pass further legislation with reference to the regulation of stills and warehouses. This is necessitated by the legislation passed by the various provinces of Canada, which in many instances required the abolition of long-established warehouses and brought about a change in conditions.

It is likewise proposed by the Bill to deal with the subject of tobacco, which is becoming a commercial product of very great value in Canada. The Bill contemplates making certain amendments to the existing Act respecting the importation and the regulation of the trade in raw tobacco. When we go into committee, more ample explanations can be made of the various clauses.

Mon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The honourable the leader of the Government has given us some explanation of this Bill, but I do not think he has dealt with what seems to me the most important part of the measure, that dealing with the manufacture of denatured alcohol.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have called that commercial alochol.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I did not catch that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I used that term to express what I meant. That is what I had in mind.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: In the western part of the Dominion notices have been sent, I understand, to all the people handling gasoline and oil to be exceedingly sparing in their sales. It is not at all a question of the Imperial Oil Company or the other companies dealing in oil raising the price of oil, but they are trying to impress on the public that they must conserve the oil to the greatest degree possible. It seems to me it is most important for us in Canada to try to find something that will take the place of oil, and if the manufacturing of alcohol can be done in such a way as to make it commercially feasible to replace oil with alcohol, that would be a most laudable undertaking on the part of the Government, and I hope would be successful.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: I might supplement what my honourable friend says. He has touched very lightly on the question of oil. Why is it necessary to raise such a dust over this question of getting oil when Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are full of oil? Have they had any sympathy? Have they had any assistance? You talk about alcohol: you can get that out of potatoes or cabbage, or wherever you can get starch. I do not want to take up your time more than a few minutes. I am told that in Montreal the dealers will not sell oil now, but are reserving it for the ships. Why not develop what oil we have? Must I plead all the time, like Paul before Festus, to ask the Government to investigate and see what we have. In this respect we give the impression abroad that either our hands are tied by some combination or that there is unwillingness to do anything in the matter. You cannot get any other impression abroad. If we want to develop our resources in oil, why do we not take up the question? There are many things to be considered in this respect; but with these resources right under your eyes I have brought up the question year after year and have spent a great deal of time trying to educate the country and to place before this honourable body the subject in all its bearings; yet there it lies dormant like a dead crow. Nobody even picks the bones. My honourable friend the leader of the Government gave us great encouragement on a previous occasion. I do not know whether he has the necessary influence or not, or what he has to do in order to get the question taken up. What have we to do to get this national question taken up in some practical way? That is the question. I would hate to think that we have not talked about it sufficiently.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Honourable gentlemen, in addition to what my honourable friend has said, I would point out that the Imperial Oil Company has from month to month given notice to importing firms in Quebec, where I live, that it would not furnish them with any more oil. If there is such a scarcity, and if Quebec cannot get any more oil, the gas company will not be able to supply gas to their customers. It will be a disaster to some of the cities if they cannot get any more oil. This shows the importance of the Government trying to encourage our native oils as much as possible.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Why in your opinion do they not do it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may observe that the Government is dealing with the manufacture of alcohol for chemical purposes. This recalls to my mind the fact that when the United States fixed a date after which alcohol could no longer be kept thousands and thousands of gallons were shipped by Canada to the United States. At first there was such a deluge of alcohol in Montreal that the warehouses were overflowing. But the Government were made aware of that situation and required the duty to be paid at the border and not when the alcohol would be taken out of the bonded warehouse. It would be interesting to learn what quantity of alcohol was thus imported into Canada after the United States had prohibited the keeping of alcohol in any shape or form. It would be interesting to learn also whether or not the Government has kept its eyes upon that immense volume of liquor from the United States which was sent to Canada for use in chemical processes. I put the question particularly because of my great concern for the virtue of Ontario and other provinces, which should be protected against the invasion of that alcohol from Montreal. I do not know where it has gone, whether its course has been followed, but I know that carload after carload came to Canada from the United States—to such an extent that cars were requisitioned as far away as the Gulf of Mexico to enable the manufacturers of alcohol in the United States to save their product by warehousing it in Canada.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am sorry I cannot give my honourable friend the desired information as to the amount of revenue collected by reason of that unlooked-for condition that arose and to which he refers, except to say that the Government quite recognized the capacity of Montreal to receive alcohol.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: They have it yet.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that it has arrived there in immeasurable quantities, and so far as practicable a reasonable distribution is being made in the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: Oh, oh.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

POST OFFICE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on Bill 167, an Act to amend the Post Office Act. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—maximum registration fee increased from 5 to 10 cents:

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: As stated yesterday, this amendment affects the rate of registration of letters.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And parcels as well?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: No; registration of letters only, not parcel post.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Last year at Christmas time, when a number of parcels were being sent through the Post Office, the advice given—

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Might I ask that my Deputy Minister be permitted to come in? This affects all registered mail matter.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Parcels as well?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—rate on newspapers issued less frequently than monthly increased from 1 to 2 cents per pound:

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: This provides for an increase of 1 cent per pound.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not quite understand that as it is printed in the Bill. Is it an amendment to section 52 of chapter 66 of the Revised Statutes?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes. We are fixing the rate at 2 cents.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—postage on newspapers and periodicals:

Hon. Wm. PROUDFOOT: Before we agree to increasing the rate on newspapers I would like to bring before the Postmaster General some points in regard to other articles carried at figures which I think are less than the actual cost. If we find that to be the case, then we should very carefully consider the advisability of increasing the rate on newspapers, which serve a very considerable number of people throughout the country by way of education. While it is true that for years past the department has carried newspapers at a very considerable loss, we must not consider that the money invested in that way is entirely lost. An increased rate means that newspaper readers from one end of Canada to the other will be obliged to pay very considerably more for their papers, because the publishing business is simply a commercial undertaking, and if a newspaper cannot be made to pay the publishers will not supply it at the figures they have been charging. I think almost every honourable gentleman will agree that unless a paper is made to pay it will very soon be discontinued. Why should we charge the newspapers an additional rate while other commercial businesses throughout the country are being supplied with the public service at considerably less than cost? It may be in the interest of the public that there should be an increase in the rate, and that the people who are supplied with papers should pay that increase; but before we reach that point would it not be well to consider if some other source of revenue cannot be secured. I think such a source could be found by increasing the present parcel post rates, which at present are very low. The regulations show that the charge on the parcel post is 5 cents for the first pound, one cent for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to 4 pounds, and 2 cents for each subsequent pound up to 11 pounds, within a radius of 20 miles from the place of mailing, irrespective of provincial boundaries; then, 10 cents for the first pound and 4 cents for each subsequent pound or fraction thereof to all points in the province in which the package is posted, outside of the 20-mile radius; and 10 cents for the first pound and 6 cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof—

Hon. Mr. BOYER: I rise to a point of order. There is no question raised in this Bill on parcel post; it is just newspaper business.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Quite true.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Newspapers go by postal rates.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is quite true that there is nothing in the Bill with reference to parcel post, but I am advancing an argument to show why this House should not increase the rate upon newspapers while other commercial enterprises are having their goods carried at much less than cost.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The honourable gentleman should confine himself to the section under discussion.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I thought I was doing so, Mr. Chairman. I am advancing these reasons as an argument why we should not increase that rate.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The section only refers to newspapers and periodicals.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Quite true, but I am pointing out, as a reason why we should not increase the rate, the position we occupy in reference to parcel post. I think that is quite within the subject under discussion and has to do with this particular section.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: But there is another objection; this is a money Bill; it is a question of raising revenue; we have no right to discuss it or amend it.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: While we are not in a position to introduce a money Bill, yet when the Commons sends a Bill to the Senate we have a right to consider the money aspect of the Bill. We would have a right, if we saw fit, to reduce or to eliminate entirely the charges which are made in that Bill. The Act only prevents us, as I understand it, from introducing a money bill, but once it gets here we can deal with it in any way we think fit.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You cannot amend it.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think we can amend it. Certainly we can amend the Bill that is before us, either by rejecting it or by cutting down the figure. At least, that is my understanding of the situation.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Please confine yourself to the section.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Mr. Chairman, if you rule that my remarks so far are not in line with the section under consideration, what I have yet to say will not be any nearer the mark. With all due deference I think I am quite within the subject under discussion, and have a right to discuss it from that standpoint.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Well, go on, only confine yourself to newspapers

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He has to develop his point.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I have now given you the figures showing what the parcel post rate is, and if newspapers could be carried in the same way I would hope that a change would be made in that respect.

I wish also to point out to the Postmaster General that it was never intended that the postal service should include freight or express-carrying service, but that is the position it is now in. We find that the public mail service is interfered with to a great extent by carrying a large amount of parcel post business. A few years ago one mail-car was sufficient for almost any of the lines in this country, but we now find that owing to that increased service, brought about by the low rates, the mail service has become very much hampered and interfered with. As a matter of fact, the letters now, so far as bulk is concerned, occupy only a very small portion of the space required to carry what is looked upon and said to be the mail of the country, while the mail service in carrying the parcel post at a very great loss. According to my information, millions of dolars everey year are placed in the pockets of departmental stores and mail order houses. That is unfair not only to Canadian newspaper publishers, who are interested in having their papers carried from one section of the country to the other, but it is also unfair to another very important class of people—those carrying on business in country stores in the various provinces of Canada.

Certain difficulties arose a couple of years ago in connection with the carrying trade, and as to the rates that were being paid to the railway companies, and in 1918, through the Dominion Railway Board, the railway companies secured an increase in their rates of 43¾ per cent; yet we find that there has been no increase in the parcel post rates. There was an increase of from 2 cents to 3 cents on ordinary letters; but the complaint is not so much in that respect as in the manner in which goods are carried by parce. post. The Railway Board in 1917 were instructed to make an examination, and they did so and made a report. We find that by the parcel post, caps, hats, and other light material are carried from 400 to 1,000 miles at from 16 cents to 22 cents in separate boxes, and the boxes containing those articles occupy a space of two cubic feet. To carry those articles by express would cost at least 50 cents each. Then, catalogues, which weigh from 4 to 5 pounds each, are shipped to distributing points either by express or by freight, and there handed over to the post office authorities and carried by mail for 8 or 9 cents from that distributing point to any point within a radius of 20 miles. If the mail order people were obliged to send those parcels by express they would have to pay at least 50 cents; but instead of that they secure the service, at the expense of this country, for less than half what it would cost them by express. That in itself is a discrimination against our country merchants, and in that respect it is unfair. If the Post Office Department is going to resolve itself into an express company, or a company for carrying freight, well and good; then it should charge the same rates as are charged to country merchants for a similar kind of service; but I say that the present system is an injustice to the country merchants.

I want to refer for a moment to reports made by the Railway Board on the 5th of July, 1919, and the addendum made to it on August 29, 1919. Under the Order in Council whereby the arrangement was made for the carrying of mail the railway companies were paid for a whole postal car at 16 cents a mile and for half a car at 9 cents. The report made on the 5th of July, 1919, shows that a very considerable volume of evidence was taken dealing with this very subject, to ascertain whether or not the railway companies were receiving proper pay for the mail service. I find in that report that the Commission used this expression:

> Giving due consideration to the averages involved and the element of judgment concerned in dealing with the question as to the proper participation of the mail service in general costs, it would appear not unreasonable that the rate accepted by the board for the kindred express service in the general express judgment should be adopted, that is a rate of 34.7 cents for a full mail-car mile. It would appear also not unreasonable that the changes for the other services set out in the Order in Council, as contained in the reference to the Board, should be increased in each case by the same percentage as the 34.7-cent rate represents over the 16-cent rate.

So that on the representation of the railway companies the railway board, on hearing evidence not only on behalf of the railway companies but on behalf of the department, came to the conclusion that the rate being paid to the companies for the railway service was wholly inadequate, and they recommended an increase of more than double what it cost. I do not know what arrangement was subsequently made by the Post Office Department; but I gather from this report, and from the fact that the railway companies were permitted an incease of 43¼ per cent in the ordinary carrying rates, that they also received a very considerable increase from the Government for postal service. If so, why has the rate not been increased for the parcel post service? If that service was carrying for from 16 to 22 cents parcels taking up a very considerable space, then why has that rate not been increased? It is quite clear that it should be increased. It is only fair to the country that people who are securing goods by parcel post should pay the cost to the country of carrying those commodities.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the honourable gentleman is wandering from the section altogether.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No, he is not.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: He has wandered, but he is back again.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not think, Sir, considering my premises, that I have departed from the proper rule of debate at all. I think I am keeping myself quite within the line of my argument. It all goes to show that if some commodity is not paying a fair rate, then we should not increase the rate against the newspapers.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The honourable gentleman will understand that that is perfectly correct in discussing the principle of the Bill; but we now have before us clause 3.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is clause 3 that I am trying to deal with.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I hope the honourable gentleman will confine himself to that.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I am doing the best I can.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You might occasionally say " as to clause 3."

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Then, coming back to clause 3, I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to the reason that I have for thinking that he can probably secure a couple of million dollars more of revenue. Parcel post packages certainly should not be carried at less than it costs the country to provide the service. I say, therefore, so far as the Post Office Department, that these parcel post packages should not be carried at all. The object of the post office is the carrying of letters and mail matter. It was never intended that the Post Office Department should develop into an express or freight business such as it is at the present time.

Now, what injustice does the course followed by the Department at the present time do to the country merchant? We all know that it is highly desirable that there should be country stores. Country stores occupy a very peculiar position. They are like the newspapers in that they are educational to the people in their own particular section of the country. People meet there, and as a rule wait for the mail there, and they discuss public questions of the day, and, after they have received their newspapers, they meet there and discuss the various issues presented by the newspapers. The effect of delivering parcels as they are delivered to-day is to cut down the business of these stores to such an extent that in many places throughout the country the storekeepers have been driven out of business. The country storekeeper has not the short hours that a storekeeper has in a town or city. Frequently you will find the country storekeeper running his store 14 or 16 hours a day; but under the present system of the parcel post his business is diminishing, and, as I said before, many have been driven entirely out of business.

Some time ago, when I was a member of another body, which had power to pass a different kind of legislation, I was in favour of imposing a municipal tax on the mail order houses in each municipality where they did business. Unfortunately I was not able to secure legislation of that nature; not because the majority of the members did not believe it would be good legislation, but because of the fact that so many people throughout the country received parcels through the parcel post that the members were afraid that such legislation might affect them in securing votes. In this House we are not influenced at all in that way, and are in a position to bring before the country legislation unaffected and untrammelled and free from any restraint which might affect us, if we were looking for the votes of the people.

Another reason, referring again to clause 3, why we should tax the parcel post business is on account of the fact that the people running these businesses receive cash on their orders as they come in, while the country merchants are frequently obliged to sell on time.

But there is a further reason. I consider that it is not healthy, not good business, to accumulate millions of dollars in certain centres, drawing that money, as they do, away from various parts of the country, and, in fact, almost bankrupting those sections so far as local business is concerned.

I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to take up very much more of the time of the House in dealing with clause 3. I want, however, to make it as clear as I can to the Postmaster General that there is a means of securing more revenue. More revenue is what the Government requires at the present time. Knowing as we do the position which the newspapers occupy at present, the hard time they have had in securing supplies, and the tremendous expenses they have been put to, we should not increase their expenses in this way. Knowing, as we do, that they are doing a good public service all the time, much of which they are not paid for, and much of which is for the general benefit of the public, why should we increase the taxation upon them? I know from experience that in many parts of the country newspapers have gone out of business. They have done so simply because they have been forced out of it. The expense of carrying on a newspaper is so great at the present time that many of them, owing to the increased cost of paper and labour, have been unable to carry on their business. Why should we make their condition worse than it is at the present time, when we can readily secure far more revenue from another source and in such a way as to not injure anyone in particular?

Nobody can successfully contend that the mail order business is an educator of the people. It is nothing of the kind; and I believe that the Postmaster General, once he considers the question from the standpoint which I have attempted to place before him, and when he sees that revenue can be secured in the way I have mentioned, will see fit to make the necessary changes.

The other day, when this matter came up, I thought of bringing in an amendment to the Bill; but, after considering the matter and discussing it with the law clerk of the House, I decided, as the amendment which I proposed would be an entirely new subject, that I would not introduce it in this Bill, and that the only way to accomplish what I desired would be to have it introduced in another House. I desired, however, to place the facts before the House so that some relief might be given along the line that I have mentioned.

Just another word or two in conclusion. If the parcel post delivery were placed on a fair basis, and the mail order houses were charged rates in keeping with express and freight rates—the same rates that are charged to houses distributing goods through the established channels of trade—the retail country merchant would more than compete with the mail order houses. But the mail order houses at present have such an advantage over the country merchant that he cannot compete with them. My idea is that the charges for this service should be at any rate equal to the express rates; if they were the country merchants would have no right to complain. But I say that not only the country merchants but also the newspaper people have a right to complain if the expense of a service such as that to which I have referred is charged against another branch of the business.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: How does it affect the consumer?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not know that we have anything specially to do with the consumer at the present time. We all know that the consumer must pay at any rate. The consumer pays every thing, so far as that is concerned. It is only another way of compelling the consumer or the mail order house to pay their proper proportion of the public taxation. My honourable friend says, "How does this affect the consumer?" The consumer who secures a parcel by post at half what it should cost is receiving an unfair advantage, and is getting something that he should not get from the public. If he is receiving a benefit in that way, he certainly should pay for it. The result of the change suggested, in my opinion, would keep the people of the country where their money is, namely, on the farm, and in the villages and small towns; thus these districts would be built up, which would be in the interest of the country at large. I do not say my honourable friend is responsible for the injustice which is being done at the present time. It is possible that it is a result of the system which was handed over to him when he took office. But I think we should remedy that condition, and in the meantime we should express our disapproval of increasing the rates referred to in clause 3 by striking it out.

Hon. Mr. RATZ: Honourable gentlemen, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question or two. I understood, when the Act in regard to the parcel post system was passed some years ago, that the Post Office Department was called upon to pay some millions extra on account of it. If that is the case what is the probable revenue derived from the parcel post branch? Is there a loss or a gain?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Up to the present time the carrying of parcels has been a paying proposition. The revenue derived from it by the department has been greater than the cost of operating it.

I beg to thank my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) for the suggestion he has made. I thought that he recognized that it would be impossible for me, even with the best possible intentions, to meet his wishes, because it would mean an increase in taxation, which must be taken up first by the House of Commons. I should like to point out to him, however, that the parcel post is not the main business of the post office. It is absolutely incidental, just as the carrying of newspapers is incidental. As I stated yesterday, the main business of the post office is the carrying of letters in the cheapest and speediest way possible, even to the remotest and poorest hamlets within the four corners of this Dominion. Those who have seen the soldiers in the tranches, and have seen their eagerness to get their letters, often preferring them to their rations, will appreciate what a letter means in many homes in this country. That is why all the energy of the department must be directed first towards that object.

The main object of introducing the parcel post system was to reduce the cost of living, and to permit people to bring certain articles into their homes at the least possible cost of transportation. It was thought that the post office, having a complete organization for the transportation and the distribution of letters and newspapers, could undertake the service in the case of parcels up to a certain limit of weight and dimensions without incurring any loss and possibly at a profit. It is very seldom that a railway mail car is filled to its full capacity with the regular mails. There is always spare room, and in the majority of cases the requirements of the parcel post do not necessitate the obtaining of greater space than we were already using. We are using no additional help, and the distribution is made by our rural mail carriers and our postmasters; without any substantial increase in cost to the department. This can be done so long as we do not lose sight of the fact that there is a limit to the weight and dimensions of parcels beyond which we cannot go. If that limit is exceeded, the Post Office Department will be turned into an express department. I am firmly of the opinion that it would be a great mistake to follow the example of the United States in increasing the weight beyond 11 pounds of parcels to be carried by the parcel post.

As to increasing the rate, I can only repeat that I think the intention of Parliament when the parcel post system was instituted was to decrease the cost of living. To-day we have to meet the claims of the local merchants, who think that they are hampered in their business by the large departmental stores. On the other hand, I think there is a larger proportion of the people of this country who would favour a decrease in the parcel post rates instead of an increase. I would point out to my honourable friend that when the parcel post system was instituted zones were established for the purpose of meeting the fears of the local merchants, and outside those zones there is a considerable advance in the rate. For example, the rate of postage on parcels mailed in the Maritime Provinces to the post offices within 20 miles is 5 cents a pound; to post offices beyond 20 miles, 10 cents a pound; to post offices in Quebec, 10 cents; in Ontario, 12 cents; in Manitoba, 12 cents; and the rate increases with the weight of the parcel up to $1.32. This was a protection for the local merchant. The manner in which this works can be illustrated by this fact, that when those large departmental houses have to send, for example, their catalogues they do not use the parcel post at all. Suppose that the T. Eaton Company has a large bundle of catalogues to send, say to Three Rivers for distribution in that district; they will send that bundle first by express to Three Rivers, and then they will use the local post office; but if they do they will be called upon to pay the rate that everybody pays on articles of the third class, namely, 8 cents a pound. I am at a loss to know how I could refuse to anybody, even to a departmental store, the use of a post office which is available to everybody. I appreciate all that my honourable friend has said; and, though it may be that the present rates of the parcel post may have to be increased in view of the increased railway rates, his suggestions will certainly receive on my part the earnest consideration which they deserve. But if I have to raise the parcel post rates that will not have anything to do with the present proposition, because, mind you, we have to meet a deficit of $6,000,000, and this Bill aims at the principle that the rate on papers must be gradually increased to 3, 4, 5, or 6 cents a pound, which we shall have to charge them some day if we want them to meet the expenditures of the department.

Yesterday I was asked what was the great source of expenditure in the Department, and I stated that the larger expenditure was due to the operation of the rural mail routes. If you refer to the reports of the Department you will see that from 1902 to 1914 there were increasing surpluses in the Post Office Department. They were increased from $5,000 in 1902 to $1,300,000 in 1912. That is the year when the rural mail service was established. It was only a year or two afterwards that the Post Office Department felt the result. If you follow this table you will see that in the next year there was a decrease of $200,000; the next year, $1,000,000; and in 1915 when the rural mail routes were in full operation, there was a deficit of $2,914,000. So I think I am pretty near the truth when I tell this honourable House that the main reason for the present deficit in the Department is the establishment of the rural mail routes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is there any hope of improvement in that respect?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Not for the present. I am sure everybody will admit that it would be very hard for me to stop the operation of the rural mail wherever a route has been established. I have felt in duty bound to be very careful not to open any new routes unless the revenues and the necessities at the present time would amply justify any such step. For the present the policy of the department is practically not to create any new routes until better conditions prevail.

The second reason for the increased expenditure in the department is that those very same routes which in 1915 caused a deficit in my department of nearly $3.000,000 cannot be served to-day without our having to pay three, four, five and in some cases six times the prices that we were then paying for the carrying of the mails. What I mean is that in most cases the rural mail contractor would at that time be satisfied to cover the mail route for an annual payment of about $300, whereas you cannot get anyone to do it now for less than $700, $800, or perhaps $1,200. We had to relieve rural mail contractors on account of the changed conditions. The number of those who have applied so far and whose contentions are being upheld by the department is about or over 1,200. The third reason for the increase in the expenditures of my department is that it is the department having the largest number of employees, and consequently the one most affected by the increases in the wages of civil servants.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Before leaving that point, might I ask the honourable gentlement a question? You say that the rural mail routes are costing more money I am informed that one cause of complaint by the of mail matter owing to the parcel post. I rural mail men is the increase in the bulk understand that is the principal reason outside of the ordinary increase why they want more money for their services.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I would not like to answer my honourable friend without making fuller inquiry, but my impression is that the argument of the rural mail contractor is not a very good one.

Hon. JOHN WEBSTER: If the honourable minister would permit me, I would be pleased to answer the honourable gentleman from Huron (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot). Five years ago you would have to pay a young man to drive the mails $20 a month. To-day you have to pay him $60. To get a horse shod five years ago you paid 80 cents; to-day you pay $2.50. For that horse's feed you paid 5 years ago 35 cents; to-day you are paying $1.50 a bushel for oats. Five years ago you bought hay at $10 a ton; to-day you are paying $30. So it is all along the line. That accounts for the increase.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Subsection 2 refers to "newspapers and periodicals published not more frequently than once a week in any city, town or village which has a population of not more than 10,000 persons," and having "a circulation of 2,500 copies per issue." After having discussed the whole matter with persons of experience, I found that a good reason for taxing the daily paper a little higher than we are doing; but, as no distinction could easily be made as between the daily papers and the magazines and the weeklies, we had to come to certain terms. The weeklies are not in a position to handle the proposed increase in the same way that the big dailies are. That is why we have agreed to the request of the weeklies and of the representatives of the magazines that any weekly published in a city of not over 10,000 population whose circulation is not over 2,500 shall be entitled to retain the old privileges given to weeklies and that there shall be a free zone of 40 miles. Any other papers, that is, those published in a city of over 10,000 population and having a circulation over 2,500, will have to pay the new rate on the excess above that circulation. The reason for this is that up to 2,500 copies not only may the newspapers have a sufficient revenue but it does not cost the department anything to carry them, for they are using the ordinary way in the post offices.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend tell us what the comparison is between the rates on newspapers and magazines from the United States coming into Canada and the rate which my honourable friend proposes by this measure?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: There is a great protection to be granted to the Canadian magazines. We treat all the Canadian magazines as newspapers, and we have granted all newspapers, whether magazines or not, and will for the present continue to grant them, the 25 cents per 100 pounds privileged rate; whereas the American magazines have to pay 4 cents to be circulated in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is one-quarter of a cent as against 4 cents?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: As against 4 cents. But I am sorry to say that that is all that the post office can do. We cannot remove the other obstacle to the development of Canadian magazines, which is that the American magazines come over here by express and are distributed to newsdealers without using the post office at all. I have investigated this question and find that in the post office there is a protection of 3¼ cents in favour of Canadian magazines; and, besides, any American magazine, in using the post office, has to charge for Canada a much higher price than it does for the United States. So far as the Post Office Department is concerned, that is the preferential treatment we give Canadian magazines as against American.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would the express charge be above the post office rate? I am speaking now of the United States periodicals.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Less.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Assuming that the post office rate is, as my honourable friend says, 4 cents, what would be the express rate? Has that been worked out to see which would be the higher?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: There is this fact which might answer the question: the American publishers use the express.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It would be lower than the postal rate, then?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes. Subsection 3 reads as follows:

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN.

Newspapers and periodicals which are required to be transmitted for a greater distance than is mentioned in the last preceding subsection, or the publication of which is of greater frequency than one a week, and the newspapers and periodicals described in the immediately preceding subsection, upon any copies in excess of the circulation of two thousand five hundred copies—

It is intended by this clause to charge three-quarters of a cent on all papers except those to which I have already referred, and in order to make this clear I desire to propose that the subsection be amended by adding after the words "two thousand five hundred copies," the words, " and all other weeklies and periodicals."

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does that cover the semi-weeklies?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There are certain papers published semi-weekly. They do not come under subsection 2?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: No; the semi-weeklies are treated on the same footing as the dailies, and the representatives of those semi-weeklies have been so notified.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: The honourable minister has told us that the parcel post is self-sustaining. I would like to ask, however, if the departmental store that ships, we will say, a carload of catalogues from Toronto or Montreal to Ottawa and then puts them into the post office here for distribution to individual customers has to pay the parcel post rate?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: In both ways. Either the departmental store will use the local post office in Ottawa to reach anybody in the city, and in that case will have to pay the third-class rate, 8 cents per pound—

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But you have to deliver by the rural mail.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN:—or it will use the parcel post in the 20-mile district, and in that case it still has to pay it.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It still pays all right. There is just one other point to which I wish to refer, and that is the rural mail delivery. The Minister has shown us that that is a source of loss at the present time. I can readily understand that from the point that was made by my honourable friend from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Webster). I was glad to hear the Postmaster General say that he was discouraging as much as possible the establishing of rural mail routes, but I want to say that there have been a great number of rural mail routes established that should not have been established. That was done because of members like myself, when I was in the House of Commons,—

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF:—to a certain extent advocating for the benefit of a few settlers the establishment of a mail route—I suppose, with the hope of getting some little kudos or some votes by it. But that was done at a time when the expense of the rural mail delivery was, as the minister has pointed out, only one-third or one-quarter of what it is at the present time. But the point I want to make is this, that rural mail delivery is not as necessary to-day as it was 10 years ago. I have heard numbers of men on free delivery routes say that it was a questionable advantage to them after all. In many cases they lived half-a-mile from the main road. They had to go down and put their letters in the box and get their mail out, and it was especially awkward in connection with registered letters, because they had to be there at the time when the rural mail-carrier passed. This man also pointed out that one man would go into a railway town 10 miles away and on his way back would bring mail for three or four of his neighbors. But since that time there has been a further great change, that is, in the number of automobiles the farmers possess. In my part of the country where rural mail routes are in operation one-half the farmers have automobiles, and they travel into the towns during eight months of the year, and can get their mail at the post office with just about as much convenience as by rural mail delivery. I am merely pointing this out to strengthen my honourable friend, if possible, in his argument for curtailing that part of the expense, because it is a serious matter if rural mail delivery is causing a loss of two or three millions of dollars a year. I believe the time has come when all those sinecures must be done away with. I believe that the people who use the railways for carrying freight should pay such rates as would make those railways self-sustaining, and that the deficit should not be charged on all the people of Canada. If any part of the post office service is not self-sustaining, that condition should be remedied as far as possible, so that the general deficit, which I understood my honourable friend the other day to say would amount to about four million dollars a year outside of the war tax, would be made up. This amount is too much to lose in one department, and it should be reduced by making the people who get the service pay for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is something very illogical in the whole system that has been described to us. Large commercial houses that want to advertise their wares issue catalogues; but, as they do not like to pay 8 cents a pound for sending them through the mail, they ship them by express to a certain point, and from there use the mail for distribution to individuals. But there is a much easier and more economical system than that. Instead of publishing a catalogue singly, they can publish it in a newspaper so-called, and thus reach hundreds of thousands of readers and under this legislation pay only three-quarters of a cent a pound. It seems to me that when this is shown the argument that is used to enlist our sympathy for the newspapers falls to the ground. In Europe, taking simply France and England, a newspaper is a paper giving the news, plus a sheet or two sheets of paper which contain political essays or articles on various questions interesting, informing, and educating the public on general topics and on questions of the day. That is a newpaper as understood in Great Britain and France; it does not comprise 44 pages, but four, six or eight pages. Canada has adopted the American system, and prints advertisements of all commercial institutions, private and public, and forces our Government to carry that advertising at a rate which causes a deficit of six million dollars a year. Now, we are charging 8 cents a pound to a man who wants to distribute his catalogue through the mails; why should we allow him to distribute it through the press at the rate of three-quarters of a cent a pound? We are complaining because of a shortage in the production of newsprint paper; but if we forced the people who carry on that advertising industry in the country to pay a proper charge for carrying newspapers through the mails. I am quite sure we would reduce the use of newsprint paper to such a point that the whole country would be served. We have to-day heard of some newspapers in the West being threatened with closing down for lack of paper. I am quite sure that if we forced the industrial and commercial companies to pay for the service that is being rendered them under the guise of newspaper circulation we would reduce the formidable abuse of the mails by newspapers which run into 20, 40, and 50 pages on Saturdays and Sundays, and wipe out that stupendous deficit which the Postmaster General mentioned.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I am surprised to hear the Postmaster General say that the parcel post service pays its way. If so, the 3-cent letters must be a very great source of income, because a parcel which goes by parcel post occupying a space of 2 square feet would take up the space of probably 200 letters. That shows a further discrimination in favor of the parcel post as against letters, because in the case of letters the Department gets a revenue of $6 and in the other case a revenue of 22 cents.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: They do not occupy the same space in the car.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The space in the car is another matter. I think you will find that considerably more space is taken up in the cars now than before, and that we have to pay a good deal more to the railways. I quite understand why the cost of rural mail delivery has greatly increased, and when speaking I had in mind the increase which rural carriers demand because of the parcels which they are required to carry. Formely a man with a single buggy could carry the mail for a number of places, but now he requires considerably more space, which has greatly increased the cost. Again, the postmasters in those small places are paid by mere commission on stamps sold, and get nothing for handling those large parcels which come by parcel post. Therefore, notwithstanding what has been said, the question might very well be considered with a view to placing the parcel post on a reasonable basis, of paying in proportion to the space it requires.

Subsection 2 of section 3 was agreed to.

Subsection 3, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 4—parliamentary papers:

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: This section deals with the franking privileges, omitting those that have been granted to the legislatures in the past, but not affecting the privileges of the members of either House of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I would like to know the Postmaster General's reason for introducing this section. As a former member of a legislature, I may say that we found it very convenient to be placed in a position, during the recess, of sending out free of charge to our constituents the printed matter we received from the departments. The withdrawal of that privilege means that none of the matter now sent to the members of the different legislatures will pass from their particular office or home, as it would cost them too much money, and they do not receive sufficient remuneration to admit of their sending it. As the circulation of such papers is for the benefit of the country at large and the education of the people, I think the Post Office Department might very well be burdened with that in the same way as it has been.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I understand very well that it is the duty of the Post Office Department to carry all papers of the different Federal departments as a matter of administration, without charging anything; but I fail to see more reason for carrying free the literature and occasional papers of the legislatures than for carrying free of charge the newspapers of this country. It means a very considerable amount of money, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and we may find it go higher than that. I would point out further that my department has received no recognition from the legislature of any province in the whole Dominion for the services rendered, and in spite of representations made to the different legislatures that they should provide service at a fair rate for carrying our letter-carriers on the tramways, which are organized by the province in the cities, or whose charters are given by the provincial government, no action whatever has been taken in that direction. That is another reason for the increase of cost in my department. I am facing an increase of three, four, five, or six hundred per cent in dealing with the different tramway lines of this country.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I quite appreciate that there is a great deal of expense in that connection, and I have always felt very kindly towards the department for giving us the franking privilege during recess. I do not know how it was arranged for during the sitting of the House, but during recess, when we received the departmental reports and other matter from the departments, it was of very great importance from the standpoint of enlightening the people throughout the province. Although the Provincial Governments have not seen fit to do something which they might very well have done with their railways, I do not know that that is a reason why we should now undo something which we have been doing for many years for the benefit of the Dominion at large.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: I do not understand that there are any franking privileges to members of either House except within ten days of the dissolution of Parliament or ten days before. The Act provides that all bluebooks officially published by the Government go free; therefore that is no franking privilege. My honourable friend misunderstood that.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The only criticism I have to make on section 4 is that it enables members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons during the recess of Parliament to send public documents free of charge. We have that right while Parliament is sitting. I do not approve of our doing it during the recess, and I would suggest that instead of the words "during the recess" we should say "during the session."

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: We repeal the old law, less the part of it relating to the legislatures.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I have listened with a good deal of patience to the discussions which have taken place on this Bill, and I think it only fair to say that it seems to me that the Postmaster General has made his case good in almost every instance. His replies to questions have been clear and satisfactory, and he has shown a reason for everything that has been done. I regret that the reform could not be carried further, but I quite understand the difficulty there would be in raising the rate on newspapers to 1½ cents at once. Evidently the intention is to break it gently.

Section 4 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 158, an Act to amend the Irrigation Act. Hon. Mr. Foster in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With the permission of the House I will bring in Mr. Drake, who is the officer in charge of this Bill.

One of the principal features of this Bill, which will be found running through several clauses, is that it is retroactive in effect. As I pointed out yesterday, some doubt has been cast on the interpretation to be placed upon the language first employed when the Act was passed. Consequently it is desirable to make the language, as we propose embodying it in the Bill to-day, relate back to the date mentioned. I am informed by the Department that no intervening interest has been created, that no vested right has arisen, and that consequently no interest will be affected. The language employed is simply to give greater lucidity to the principles which we have embodied in the original Act, and to give simplicity in the interpretation of the different clauses to which this relates.

On section 1—"Spring" included in waters vested in the Crown, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not quite follow my honourable friend in the statement he has made. This section says:

> Section 6 of the Irrigation Act, chapter 61, of the Revised Statutes, 1906, as amended by section 2 of chapter 38 of the Statutes of 1908, shall be deemed to have come into force and operation on the twenty-third day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

Section 6 of the Irrigation Act deals with "property in and right to use water vested in Crown." Then there is a subsection, "Diversion or use prohibited except in exercise of right." That Act, I presume, went into force at the time it was enacted. Of course, I have the Revised Statutes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The first Irrigation Act was passed in 1894. For the purpose of illustrating what I have said, I would point to the statute of 1894, where the following section will be found:

> After the passing of this Act, no right to the permanent diversion or to the exclusive use of the water in any river, stream, watercourse, lake—and so on. In the Revised Statute that was changed slightly, and in 1908 apparently another amendment was made. This Bill further amends section 2 of chapter 38 of the statutes of 1908. The only change that we make now is to declare that the clause shall be deemed to have come into force and operation on the 23rd day of July, 1894; that is, when the original Act was passed. That makes it quite clear that the application of the language shall relate back to that period; and if there is no intervening interest no harm can be done.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think the wording of this clause is rather different from the wording of the clause of the Act of 1894. I did not gather that the language of the Act of 1894 was as strong as this.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I read the clause of 1894. When the statutes were revised, in 1906, somewhat different language was employed. A further amendment was made in 1908. So we have practically three clauses dealing with the same principle which it was sought to embody in the law in 1894. Now we say the whole body of that law as laid down in the amending sections shall be in force as of the time the Act was passed in 1894. What objection can there be to that, if there be no intervening interests, no vested rights?

Hon. Mr. POWER: Does not the leader of the House feel that, in order to make it clear that no vested rights are being interfered with, there should be added, either to this clause or at the close of the Bill, something to the effect that nothing in this Act shall prejudicially affect rights existing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the difficulty. Then someone may come along and say that he places an entirely different interpretation upon this, and may claim to have a vested right in the water, which right has arisen since 1894. No one can realize or appreciate to a greater extent than my honourable friend opposite that the principle should be recognized that all water was vested in the Crown at the time of the passage of the Irrigation Act, and therefore it is for the service of the public, not of the individual; and if there be no evidence whatever that there was an intervening right it seems to me that we should declare it to be the law as of that date.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Something of this kind was done in the province of British Columbia. The question came up in regard to the granting of water rights, and rights that had been granted a long time before the legislation was passed were very much affected by power that the Government took under the Act. I would like to know whether under this Act there have been rights issued by the Department which might be affected in the same way. For instance, in British Columbia certain rights were granted previously which, under the Act, the Government had really no right to grant. Then they passed legislation which practically gave those rights a standing and put other holders on the creeks in a very bad position. When the Government had taken the property in the water in this way they undertook to say that they would take water out of one watershed and put it into another, with the result that the water was taken and there was not enough left in certain parts for proper irrigation. I think it is a principle which should be recognized that water should not be taken out of one watershed until it is proved that proper provision has been made for all the lands to which that water is accreditable, because in many cases it is impossible to get any other water for the purpose of irrigation. That may be a question that comes up in the administration of the Department, but it is sometimes a very serious one to individuals.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no analogy between the two cases. In the province of British Columbia the water was vested in the Crown through the province. In this case the water in the original Northwest Territory when the Act was passed in 1894 was vested in the Crown through the right of the Dominion Government, and the Act was made applicable only to that territory. The fundamental principle and policy of the Act of 1894 was declared in section 4 of that Act, which is as follows:

> Until the contrary is proved, the right to the use of all water at any time in any river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek, ravine, canon, lagoon, swamp, marsh, or other body of water shall, for the purposes of this Act, in every case be deemed to be vested in the Crown; and, save in the exercise of any legal right existing at the time of such diversion or use, no person shall divert or use any water from any river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek, ravine, canon, lagoon, swamp, marsh, or other body of water, otherwise than under the provisions of this Act.

Consequently there have been no rights acquired in that sense, the water being vested in the Crown through the Dominion Government, and being administered by the Department of the Interior, subject to the regulations of the Irrigation Act then passed, and since amended. As I pointed out the other day, irrigation in the sense in which it was introduced at that time was in its infancy in Canada.

My honourable friend referred to irrigation projects in British Columbia since Confederation; but this introduced a system of irrigation on a very much larger scale, and to-day every foot of water is administered by the Crown through the Department of the Interior. The legislation which we have before us is simply to clear up any doubts which exist, and more expressly to declare what the law is touching this subject.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This legislation would interfere with the natural rights of water.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no natural right of water. When the Act was passed on 1894 the natural right of water was declared to be in the Crown, and always to have been in the Crown; consequently it is for the Crown through its administrative officers or departments to say what shall be done with the water.

Hon. Mr. POWER: In reply to my suggestion that there should be a saving clause in the Bill to prevent interference with legal rights of other parties, the leader of the House said that might involve litigation. But if a man's rights have been interfered with, either by the Government or by any other person, surely he has a right to go to the courts and find out what his legal rights are. I do not understand why the honourable gentleman should object.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If the object of this be to clear up any doubt as to the interpretation that could be placed upon the law as it formerly stood, to introduce a proviso of that kind would render futile the object which we have in view, because it would permit anyone to say the law does so-and-so.

Hon. Mr. POWER: That only goes to show that this Bill is intended to affect legal rights.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will not say anything more about it.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—grants of land not to convey water rights:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What are the changes in this section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It enumerates the different courses or supplies of water. The same language is used in section 6 of the original Act, and we are simply bringing this clause into conformity with the section which was passed in 1894.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I notice in the Revised Statutes that the date is given as the 13th of June, 1898. Was there any particular reason for that change?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That was a clerical error made by the officers who had charge of the consolidation of the Statutes. They put in 1898 instead of 1894.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They also put in the 13th of June instead of the 23rd of July?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a mistake—purely a clerical error.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—applications for water, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would the honourable gentleman explain this section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The object of this section is to follow out the principle which was embodied in the Act, by which precedence was given to the rights in the following order: First of all, domestic supplies; second, municipal; third, industrial; fourth, irrigation; then, for other purposes. It is self-evident that the supply of water for domestic consumption by the population is most necessary. Say a municipality desires to secure water for water services. It should have the right, even at the expense of those who may have had a prior right, to absorb those prior rights by compensation. That is to say, suppose some industrial institution had come in before the municipality was established, and controlled practically all the water, or had a superior control of the waters within the boundaries of that municipality, this would permit the municipality to acquire that right by compensation. The second paragraph simply provides the machinery.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—power to reserve any unappropriated water, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is simply asserting the right of the Crown for the purpose of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We get a different case in this section. Can my honourable friend explain that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: An Order in Council was passed upon that case, and the question is whether we should not give solidity to the Order in Council by statute.

Section 5 was agreeed to.

On section 6—storage of water, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This entire clause practically gives the Minister control over constructive works or works in process of construction, so that the best advantage may be taken of the water supply which those works contemplate using.

Section 6 was agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8 were agreed to.

The title and the preamble were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. Hon. Mr. Crosby in the Chair.

On section 1—definitions of Appeal Court amended to meet changes in title of courts:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that paragraph a be amended to read:

A Divisional Court of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: As amended, paragraph a will read:

(a) In the province of Ontario, a Divisional Court of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to, and section 1, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 2—permit required for firearms and certain weapons:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do the words "permit in Form seventy-six" refer to an authorization or license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. There is now in the statutes a form for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Apparently a distinction is made between "gun" and "shotgun" in paragraph aa—perhaps the minister could tell us why? The proviso reads: "Provided that no British subject shall be required to obtain a permit with respect to any shotgun now owned by him." But the beginning of this paragraph reads: "Has in his possession any cannon, machine gun, rifle, gun," etc.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: "No British subject shall be required to obtain a permit with respect to any shotgun owned by him," but in the case of the other firearms and weapons mentioned in this paragraph a permit will be required. That is the difference.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What about a rifle? Does a person have to get a permit for a rifle?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Not if he has it in his house.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think that would be a hardship. There is hardly a settler in the West who has not a rifle in his house for shooting coyotes, wolves, etc.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can get a permit.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It seems to me that shotguns and rifles ought to be in the same class. Amongst British subjects the rifle is just about as common as the shotgun.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will see that if a rifle could be used without a permit the purpose of the Bill would be defeated. The purpose is to prevent rifles from being imported into the country.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: But I am referring to British subjects.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know; but in case of a threatened riot or rising a great number of rifles might be imported, and if every British subject is entitled to have a rifle without a permit the accumulation of those rifles might precipitate a great deal of trouble and difficulty.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Not in the hands of British subjects.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I need scarcely repeat what has been stated here before, that British subjects as well as others are human, and under certain conditions their minds are inflamed just the same as those persons of other nationalities. The policy of the Act is that no one shall have a rifle without a permit, no matter who he is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Even if he already owns one he must have a permit?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But if he has a shotgun he does not need a permit. Why do you make that exception for the shotgun?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A shotgun is very much less dangerous. It is not used in times of trouble as the rifle is.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It will reduce the high cost of living.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I have a shotgun in my house, and have had two rifles for, I think, the last 45 years. I have never been without a shotgun or a rifle to use for sporting. Shall I have to get a permit?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: While two rifles would be safe in the possession of my honourable friend from Portage la Prairie, they might not be safe in the possession of somebody else.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Does that mean he cannot shoot straight?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I understand that men who have had guns or rifles in their homes for the past 20 years have either to get a permit or throw them out on the street?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would not throw them out on the street. Evidence has been secured from authentic sources, and it is well known, that rifles have been introduced into the country, more particularly by foreigners, with a declared object in view. It is going to be difficult to suppress that kind of thing unless we require all persons to take out a permit, because the trouble is not confined to one nationality, and under certain conditions it may prevail generally.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend stated that it was going to be quite easy to obtain a permit. Is there anything in the permit that will limit the number of weapons? Will the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), who says he has two rifles and a gun, and who has perhaps one or two other weapons in the house, be able to get a permit for all of those? Will there be any difficulty about that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will be no trouble about that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not see why it is provided that you may have a shotgun in your house without a permit.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: How are you going to carry out this provision? I suppose there is hardly a house in the whole Dominion of Canada in which there is not a revolver. What are you going to do? Are you going to send search parties around?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are not thinking of doing that at the present time, but it is well to have upon the statute book a law such as this, so that at a critical time we may enforce it. There is no present intention on the part of the Government to give general enforcement to this Act, but it is very necessary to have authority to do so.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: While we are considering this paragraph, we might as well have it cleared up. The proviso reads:

Provided that no British subject shall be required to obtain a permit with respect to any shotgun now owned by him; or,

Or what?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then it would read:

—or sells, or without lawful excuse gives or lends, any such offensive weapon—

Then we come to paragraph b, which deals with the sale.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Any British subject in the future will have to get a license to buy or to own a shotgun?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, hereafter, if he has not a license to-day.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: With regard to subsection 2, I asked my honourable friend a question about the words, "firearm, air gun." My honourable friend has the Code before him. The definitions of "offensive weapon" and "weapon" seem to include firearms and air guns, and I do not quite see the necessity of adding these words in this clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am informed that the section to which my honourable friend refers is entirely too wide, and this gives it a restrictive force. It is necessary to restrict it in this way in order that the proper interpretation may apply to the new legislation.

I move as an amendment to section 2 that the following subsection be added as subsection 3:

Subsection 2 of the said section is amended by inserting after the word "municipality," in the sixth line thereof, the following words: "or any person authorized under the law of any province to issue a license or permit to carry firearms."

The object of this amendment is to give provincial officers authority to issue permits.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Would there be any charge for those licenses?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, they are issued gratis.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Who issues the license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Any provincial officer having authority to issue licenses, and we purpose to appoint our own officers in addition. Licenses can be issued by magistrates, police constables, etc. The power to issue licenses will be very general.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I take it that, according to paragraph aa, a returned soldier who has brought back with him some trophies, such as revolvers, will have to take out a license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: What is the reason for that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We cannot draw a distinction, that is the trouble. If we are to carry out the policy which I have mentioned, it is impossible to draw a distinction saying that one man shall be immune and another man shall not.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There should be no distinction because some of the returned men are subject to shell-shock and are apt to use those weapons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is all the more important for the returned soldier, because he knows how to shoot.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is the amendment moved by the honourable leader of the House an absolutely new clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, absolutely new. It is intended to enlarge the class of persons having the right to issue permits.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: With regard to paragraph aa, it has been suggested that a person may have a revolver, gun, etc., in his own house, and that the prohibition applies only to the carrying of weapons. That is not my understanding of this; I understand that if a man has any firearms, in his house or anywhere else, he has to take out a license.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is right if he has them in his possession.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to and section 2, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 3 (new section 179A)—signing pretended affidavit or declaration:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is to prevent false representations being made as to affidavits, and false use being made of them.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4, new section 211—seduction of girls between 16 and 18 instead of 14 and 16:

Hon. Mr. ROSS: I have a few words to say about this section. Sections 4, 5, and 9 are similar, and I do not know why they were not printed consecutively. These sections were before this House two years ago.

Hon. Mr. POWER: And previously to that.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There has been a great deal of time devoted to them since I have been here.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: These three sections are related to section 301 of the Criminal Code, which provides for the punishment of criminal assaults upon girls under 14, that is to say, upon children. That is not really a sexual offence at all; it is an unnatural offence, in which there is possibly only one guilty party, that is, the man. I do not know that there has ever been in Parliament any well-disposed person who would quarrel with that section 301 at all; in fact, it always seemed good legislation. But some advanced legislators, working along the lines of this section 301 which, as I say, deals with children and not women —have adopted practically the same language, and made it apply to girls between 16 and 18 in this section 4, and between 14 and 16 in section 9. Then section 5 deals with cases of seduction of a woman by an employer. Whoever drafted that legislation seemed to be oblivious of the fact that he was concocting legislation that dealt with a child, and was applying it to a different subject, namely, a woman, because the offence against a child, as I say, is not a sexual offence, but an unnatural offence. Where a woman is concerned it is a sexual offence; it is not unnatural, and, while it may be that the man is most often and chiefly to blame, that is not the fact always and everywhere. I do not think that any person who has lived to 40 years of age would accept any such proposition as that. When these sections were before this House previously I moved the rejection of all three, but that motion did not carry. Later on I moved an amendment, which I intend to move again to-day, that will be applicable to this section 4, and I propose to put it at the end of the Bill as an independent section; I will not put it in as a subsection to sections 4, 5, and 9, as I wish to avoid repeating it three times. It will be as follows:

18. On the trial of any offence against section 4, 5 or 9 of this Act the trial judge shall instruct the jury that if in their view the evidence does not show that the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame for the commission of said offence they may find a verdict of acquittal.

Now, that is about all I want to say regarding section 4. I am not moving now that it be struck out, as I moved before. This House accepted the Bill and put that amendment in it the last time, and I will ask the House to take the same course with regard to this section 4, as well as sections 5 and 9, as they did two years ago.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Commons did not agree to that amendment of the honourable gentleman?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No; and when it came back here we adhered to our amendment. That is as far as I am concerned.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suppose the proper method would be for me to move the adoption of section 4. I now so move.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I am prepared to support the motion which the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) says he proposes to make later. To my mind the better way would have been simply to have thrown out section 4; that is my feeling about this matter. Any one who knows anything about life in cities knows that as one goes along the street, not merely at night, but even in the daytime, he meets numbers of young women who are over 16 years of age—some of them not over 16—but certainly under 18. Now, take the case of a young man going along, perhaps having dined not wisely but too well, and one of those young women of 17 years of age talks to him in a very friendly way. If the natural consequences result, should that man be liable to be sent to penitentiary for years? It does not so strike me, and I have this feeling about it: I do not think that you can make people virtuous by Act of Parliament altogether; and when you pass legislation which enables perhaps an abandoned woman to exercise what we call blackmail towards a man, who is really not seriously guilty, it is a very undesirable kind of legislation. I think that young women over 16 years of age should learn to take care of themselves, and trust to their own virtue, and not trust to the chance of getting damages by levying blackmail on an unfortunate young man whom they have had to do with. I think the law goes quite far enough as it is now. It protects the young woman up to the age of 16, and I think that is protection far enough. I know that those proposed sections reflect the sentiments entertained by a good many moral reform associations, but my experience in dealing with such associations is that in trying to prevent one kind of mischief they often lead to other and more serious kinds. I am sorry that the honourable gentleman has not taken a vote straight on the amendment.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I entirely agree with the remarks of the honourable member from Halifax: I believe that it is an entirely vicious and bad section. I gave my reasons at length two years ago. If the honourable member will move to strike that section out now I will second his motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I am only expressing my regret.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Will you make the motion to strike it out, and I will second it?

Hon. Mr. POWER: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I will second that.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would like to call the attention of the honourable member for Halifax to the fact that this section does not apply to the kind of girls to whom he refers. It refers to having illicit connection with a girl of previously chaste character between those ages—not a prostitute or abandoned girl. I think that should be taken into consideration. But I do not see any reason for the last clause:

Proof that a girl has on previous occasions had illicit connection with the accused shall not be deemed to be evidence that she was not of previously chaste character.

If the girl was not previously chaste the section ought not to apply.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: But it does.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Why? There may be some legal reason with which I am not acquainted, not being a lawyer, but I cannot see why proof that this girl has had illicit connection on previous occasions should not be brought in at the trial, and relieve the young man of the charge of having had illicit connection with a girl of previously chaste character, because, although she was not of previously chaste character, he is not allowed to prove that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; my honourable friend misunderstands it. If she has had relations with the defendant before, she may have been of chaste character before he seduced her, and consequently he cannot be heard to say that because she had relations with him she is not of chaste character.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: He would be convicted on the first proposition.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, she may have been chaste previous to his having had relations with her.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, the indictment would fix a date, and in order to shake the evidence as of that date the defendant would prove the same illegal act of six months before against him. He would not escape then.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; he could not be heard to say that because he seduced her she was not of chaste character before. However, there is the motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER: And I move in amendment to strike out section 4.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might say, for the information of the Senate, that the present law relates to girls between 14 and 16. This new section 211 proposes making the age limit from 16 to 18.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Before the amendment is put I would like to make a few remarks. As a physician I am in possession of knowledge that in the West some young women of from 12 to 14 years of age, especially those from eastern countries, are just as old and as fully matured as our women in eastern Canada are at 20 or 25, so you can readily see the injustice that might be done. A girl of 14, 15, 16, or 17—how is a young man going to determine her age? He gets acquainted with her; he knows nothing about her any more than that she is the daughter of So-and-so; he meets her under proper circumstances, perhaps when his intentions are good; and, human nature being frail, he falls with that young girl. Subsequent to that, probably as the result of some untoward circumstances, he meets another woman or young girl, and throws her to one side as unfitted to be his wife. In that case she goes around and blackmails him, telling him: "You have committed so-and-so with me under such circumstances; meeting me after I was 16 years of age, and before I was 17 years of age, you had illicit connection with me, and you are liable to two years in the penitentiary, and unless you marry me or give me $5,000 I will prosecute you." Now, gentlemen, I appeal to you as reasonable and sensible men, men who are fathers of sons, and maybe fathers of daughters, from your knowledge, is that reasonable? Is it the right thing, to put your sons in jeopardy of that kind? For my part I would hesitate before I voted for any such vicious Bill, and be ashamed of myself if I did so on the floor of this Senate of Canada.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I did not intend to say anything on this question, as I supposed that the section, having been adopted on a previous occasion—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it was not adopted on a previous occasion.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I understood it was.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It was defeated three times during my term.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: There is the more reason, then, why I should say something on the question, because I am in favor of the section as drawn, and I think that this amendment to the statue should be made. One has to consider the situation, and see why an amendment of this kind is desirable. The matter has received a great deal of consideration from social reformers and others who have been engaged in work of that kind. Information was obtained from various centres in Canada, along the following lines:

1. The number of girls under care in the various homes, who were first led astray under 14 years of age.
2. The number who went astray, whether for the first time or not, between 14 and 16.
3. The number between 16 and 18.
4. The number between 18 and 21.

To such inquiries, the following replies were received:

Colonel Robert Hargrave of the Salvation Army reports that for 1918, 482 girls were cared for in the Army's Rescue Homes. Of these 4 were led astray under 14 years of age; 28 between the ages of 14 and 16; 69 between 16 and 18, and 20 under 21 but over 18 years of age were seduced by employers.

Misses Sage and Pettigrew, of the Presbyterian Social Service Home, Calgary, give us these facts; 55 girls under their care were first led astray under 14 years of age; 81 between 14 and 16; 70 between 16 and 18, and 53 between 18 and 21.

Miss Brooking of the Alexandra Industrial School states that of all admissions for 1917, 1918, 75 per cent of the girls committed have been between 14 and 16 years of age, and in nearly every case the charge has been immorality. Looking over her records for a number of years, Miss Brooking finds that an average of 75 per cent of the girls were demoralized between 14 and 16 years of age.

From Miss Askew, of the Edmonton Social Service Home, we learn that 12 of 80 inmates of the Home were led astray under 14 years of age; 50 between 14 and 16; 18 between 16 and 18. (No admissions over 18). Of these, 65 were suffering from venereal desease in such stages as would require from six months to two years for cure.

From Truro, N.S., Miss Strothard of the Maritime Home informs us that 53 of the girls coming under her care were led astray under 14 years of age; 42 demoralized between 14 and 16.

Brigadier Patten of the Salvation Army, Winnipeg, reports that in 1918, 3 under 14 were demoralized, 10 between 14 and 16, 11 between 16 and 18 one of 16 was seduced by employer, and one of 18.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if he does not think there would be just as many between 18 and 20 seduced by their employers if this were passed.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not know; I have not had much experience in that respect; and I have not the information here. Now, I want to point out a number of countries in which the age of consent has been fixed at 18. In England, until a year or so ago, the age was 16, but it has now been raised to 18. In that connection I want to read a short item called "The Bishop of London's Criminal Law Amendment Bill." It says:

The Bishop of London secured a ready assent in the House of Lords for the second reading of his Criminal Law Amendment Bill. Its main provision is the raising of the age of consent from sixteen to eighteen, and there are other provisions of the Bill which will greatly strengthen the hands of the authorities in dealing with criminal vice. The Government have a Bill of their own which it is believed is more controversial in its terms, but Lord Sandhurst viewed the Bishop's Bill favourably and, urged that it should be sent to a Select Committee, so that both measures could be considered together, and, if possible, an agreed Bill might result. This course was assented to.

Then take the British Dominions and colonies. In Victoria the age of consent is 18 years; in Queensland, 17 years; in South Australia, 17 years; in West Australia, 17 years; in Tasmania, 17 years. Coming to the United States we find that in California the age of consent is 18 years; in Arizona, 18; Colorado, 18; Delaware, 18; Idaho, 18; Kansas, 18; Louisiana, 18; Minnesota, 18; New York, 18; North Dakota, 18; South Dakota, 18; Utah, 18; Washington, 18; Wisconsin, 18; Wyoming, 18. In a number of the other states the age of consent is 16 years, the same as in this country. You will observe, honourable gentlemen, that in the state of New York, where the social question has been rather fully gone into, the age of consent is now 18 years; and it strikes me as being only fair and reasonable that we should increase it here.

In Edmonton this question was considered quite recently before Mrs. Murphy's court. She was dealing with the case of a girl of 17 years of age, who was sent from Flint, Michigan, to her aunt in Edmonton. When the girl left Flint she was pregnant. After living with her aunt for a time she was taken possession of by certain men who were engaged in a hotel in Edmonton, who kept her for a certain time for immoral purposes. If this girl had been seduced by a Canadian citizen, acording to our law, he could not have been dealt with; but, if the age of consent had been 18 years, and she had been of previously chaste character, he could have been prosecuted. Should not a girl under 18 years of age, provided she has been of previously chaste charecter, be protected as much as a girl of 16?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I should like to ask the honourable gentleman why she should be protected against his 18-year-old son, and why the boy should be sent to the penitentiary if he falls?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: She should be protected because she was previously of chaste character.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: So might he have been.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That would be very doubtful.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I am paying a better tribute to your son than that.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is going into an aspect of the case which I am not prepared to discuss with my honourable friend. This question having been considered and dealt with by people who are looking after subjects of this kind in all our cities, they know the situation very much better than I do, and this law, I understand, is asked for by them simply because they are not able to cope with the present state of affairs. I think we may very well pass the law and in that way give them an opportunity of dealing with the situation.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I think that this is vicious legislation. You cannot make people moral by act of Parliament. To my mind sumptuary laws are never effective.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: For the benefit of the honourable gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot), I want to read from the Journal of the Empire's Parliaments of April 20 the opinion of Viscountess Astor. She said:

—that women brought into public and private life a sort of moral courage which the men needed. As to the argument about age, they all knew that women at the age of 18 were far older and wiser in many ways than the man at 25. The people who did not want women in public life were too late; there were certain reforms the women wanted, and they were going to get them.

And here a boy of 18 may be taken in by a girl—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Several years older than he is.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I think that the objection of my honourable friend to my right (Hon. W. B. Ross) can be overcome. I do not think we should go back on the principle of punishing a young man who seduces a young girl. Why should he not be punished? If we throw out this provision we shall be proclaiming to the country that the Senate thinks that a young man who seduces a girl of between 16 and 18 years of age should not be punished for it. I cannot go as far as that. There is a good deal of truth in the statement that a young girl of 18 is farther advanced in life, so to speak, than a young man of 18; but I think it would be wise to carry this section, and that when my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) introduces his new clause we should adopt it also. By doing that I think we shall overcome the objection that some honourable gentlemen seem to have to passing this clause.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Just one word. I would be inclined to accept the suggestion of the honourable gentleman from St. John in the case of seduction, but the section before us says:

Every one over the age of eighteen years is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years imprisonment who seduces or has illicit connection—and so on. There are two different offences named there.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Why not take out the words "illicit connection?"

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes. I do not think we should lose sight of the fact that this clause applies to a virgin, and not to a woman of doubtful character.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is it not the same thing.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: In answer to a statement made by an honourable gentleman a few moments ago, I neglected to point out that the universal experience of those in charge of reclamatory work among girls who have gone astray is that it is not young boys, nor innocent, unsuspecting men who get these girls into trouble, but mature men all the way from 28 to 50, and even 60 years of age.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is in Toronto.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Power was negatived: yeas, 8; nays, 15.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I move that section 4 be amended by striking out of line 3, the words, "or has illicit connection with."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why are the words to be struck out? Is it because they are useless?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is the offence the same?

Hon Mr. POWER: You seduce a virtuous girl; you can have illicit connection with a prostitute.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: If you strike out those words then the last three lines are useless.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You are right.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think we should be careful to see how this affects the whole section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I should like to be enlightened. I take it that it is one and the same offence.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Not at all. Illicit connection is, I might say, a mere mechanical operation; but seduction is something more: it is the act of inducing a girl to take part in an immoral act. I think the section is bad in that it combines two offences. I do not agree that you need to change any other part. The rest of it is all right.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think that the amendment which my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) proposed before, and which as read seemed satisfactory, would be very much better than a change in this particular clause. I understood that he intended to move that the amending section be placed at the end of the Bill or in some other part after we had disposed of the general clauses. That amendment struck me as being rather fair. It would be much better, I think, to let this clause stand as it is. If you strike out those words you are going to nullify to a great extent the value of the whole section.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Ross was agreed to: yeas, 19; nays, 14.

Section 4 as amended was agreed to.

On section 5—seducing female employees:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I have an objection to this clause. At first sight the objection may seem verbal, but if you look into it you will see that it is really of substance. The section that you have just dealt with refers to "a girl." The section we are now considering mentions "woman or girl." Those words are not put in there for nothing, I presume. A girl presumably means a maid, and woman presumably means a married woman. Whatever you can say—and no doubt a great deal can be said—in favour of some legislation for the protection of a girl from her employer, I do not see why you want legislation with regard to a married woman. I move that the word "woman" be struck out wherever it occurs in section 5. After a woman is married and has one or two children it is absolute nonsense to talk of her requiring legislation of this kind.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: In what particular does this amend the law? Did it apply to domestic servants before, or were they specially excluded?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This proposes enlarging the scope of the offence, so to speak. At the present time it is limited to—> any woman or girl previously chaste and under the age of twenty-one years who is in his employment in a factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, or who, being in a common, but not necessarily similar, employment with him in such factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, is, in respect of her employment or work in such factory, mill, workshop, shop, or store, under or in any way subject to his control or direction, or receives her wages or salary directly or indirectly from him. . . .

It is now proposed to extend this provision to all classes of employment and all places of employment.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And all ages.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Not all ages.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; the amendment still reads "under the age of twenty-one years."

Hon. L. G. POWER: When a measure similar to this was before this House a couple of years ago, the particular point we are dealing with now was considered. While there never had been any objection to the latter part of the clause—that is, as to parties who in respect of their employment or work are subject to the control or direction of the man and are in a common employment with him—the House on that occasion felt that this clause, as it is worded now, and as it was proposed to be worded at that time, would expose any householder to being blackmailed by a domestic servant. And I remember there was some amusement created in connection with that matter. We all know that domestic servants to-day are not in the position in which they were 40 or 50 years ago. They are perfectly independent; it is the master and mistress who are now dependent. Every honourable gentleman knows that to-day the domestic servants as a rule go out in the evenings, sometimes every evening, sometimes every second evening—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: They would be better in the house.

Hon. Mr. POWER: —and remain out until 10 o'clock or later; and they are not always engaged in saying prayers when they are out. To hold that the master of the house is to be deemed liable for the mistake that a girl of that kind makes is very unreasonable, and, as I say, it opens the door very wide to blackmail. I think this is really pernicious legislation. It does not apply to quite young people; it applies to women up to twenty-one.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I cannot see that there is anything in this section to convey the idea that the word "woman" there refers to a married woman only. I cannot see where my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. Mr. Ross) gets that idea.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Well, what is the meaning of it?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It simply refers to a woman under the age of 21 years, that is all.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Call her a girl under 21.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The word "woman" is used instead of "girl" because, according to the previous section, when a girl arrives at the age of 18 she becomes a woman. That is the view I take.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the meaning of it is this, that a woman may be of chaste character and have children and yet be under 21, and a woman with children and under 21 would come within the Act. That is the reason the phrase is used. "Woman" and "girl" are not synonymous terms.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Do I understand that this clause is now intended to cover all classes of employment?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I observe also that this particular section we are now dealing with was passed by the Senate last year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it was thrown out.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I understood it was passed. My information was that it was defeated in 1913 and 1918, but last year, 1919, it was carried in the Senate.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes, that is right; it was carried, but there was an amendment made—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: An amendment about domestic servants.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: And later the Bill did not get through, because there was not time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. Mr. Gisborne tells me it was rejected last session. There was an amendment—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There was an amendment about domestic servants.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But we took that out.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I may be mistaken, but my information is that the Senate passed it last year.

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: We passed it in amended form, and the House of Commons refused to concur in the amendment; and the Bill came back here, and we adhered to our amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The statement given to me is that this was passed in the House of Commons in 1918 and 1919, but was rejected by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would like to know exactly what the change is. What was the old paragraph b?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have read that. The present provision is more restricted than that contained in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Was the word "woman" in the old Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, "woman or girl."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Does it now apply to domestic servants?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it will apply to everybody.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In any form of employment?

The amendment of Hon. W. B. Ross was negatived, and section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6 (new section 219A)—falsely pretending to be married:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This was stricken out before, was it not?

Some Hon. SENATORS: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is the boarding house clause?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It was struck out altogether.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: This clause was before the Senate last year and received very serious consideration from many honourable gentlemen, some of whom spoke for it and others against it, and it was rejected by a large majority—I think 19 to 6. At that time I took objection to the clause on the ground that it made the offence the registration in a hotel. Evidently this clause is framed for the purpose of preventing or prohibiting illicit intercourse between a man and a woman in a hotel. Now, it does not make that act itself the offence. As I understand the law to-day, it is that there is no offence in a man going into a hotel with a woman who is not his wife and occupying the same room with her. It is no offence in Canada for a man to live with a woman to whom he is not married. It is no offence for a man and a woman who are not married to go into a hotel or boarding or lodging house, or onto a steamboat, or into a sleeping car, but if a person enters a hotel and falsely puts on the register that the woman is his wife, or that the man is her husband, that is an offence and the person convicted of it is liable to a penalty of $500 or 6 months' imprisonment; whereas the man who takes a woman into a hotel for the same purpose and does not register her as his wife goes free. It does seem to me to be ridiculous and unfair. If they want to make it a crime for a man to have intercourse with a woman who is not his wife, why can they not provide in that clause that it shall be an offence against the laws of Canada for a man to take a woman who is not his wife into a hotel for the purpose of having connection with her. I will vote for a clause of that kind, but I certainly do not feel like supporting a clause like this, which camouflages the whole matter. There is nothing to it, for I am told that the difficulty in any hotel is not caused by the unmarried people who come in and register as man and wife; there is no trouble caused by that class of people at all. The trouble is caused by the man who goes into the hotel and gets a room, has the woman come in and get another room, and then goes from his own room into hers. That is where the difficulty is; but that is no offence at all under this section.

I might say further that this clause should not apply to any case where a man and a woman unmarried are living together as man and wife and the woman is the reputed wife and the husband the reputed husband. There are plenty of cases of that kind throughout Canada—cases in which people have been living together as man and wife under circumstances over which they have no control. Perhaps they cannot get married. There may be the question of the legality of a divorce; or the wife may have become a lunatic; or the husband may be in jail, or in the penitentiary. These people living together as man and wife may have children. If they travel, they go into a hotel and register as man and wife, and some one who knows the circumstances may go and lay an information against them, declaring that the man is living at a hotel with a woman who is not his wife. He is immediately brought up, and then the onus of proof is cast on him. I do not see anything to be gained by that. If I can find a seconder I will move, as I did last year, that this clause be struck out. It should not be approved until it is put into proper form.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I will second a motion to strike out this clause. I have very little to say about it, because two years ago I said what I had to say. My objections against the Bill were three in number. In the first place, this clause covers the case of a large class of men who served in the army. They are treated to-day, and were treated all during the war, as being the husbands of the women they had been living with prior to enlistment, and their wives were treated as lawful wives, and their children as legitimate children. Besides that, all the associations that took care of the women and children of the soldiers treated these women as if they were married, whereas there never had been a marriage ceremony at all. I made inquiry as to how many cases came from Montreal, and I was told by the Secretary of the Patriotic Association that in Montreal alone there were 180 cases. Then those men went to the war, and they are home again—some of them may have come home wounded, and some with medals—and it strikes me as absurd that a man who has served in the war and has been recognized by the Government as the husband of a wife, and whose wife and children are recognized, if he registers at a boarding house, should be fined $500. I do not believe in that. Then there is the second class that is very much larger. There are literally thousands of people in this country who were married and divorced, but the divorce was obtained on residential qualifications, by living in the United States for so many months or years, and they come to make a home in this country, where that divorce is considered as absolutely waste paper. In England a man getting such a divorce might be arrested and convicted of bigamy, as happened in a noted English case. You will find people answering that description in Ottawa, in the Parliament of Canada, and in the provincial legislatures, everywhere, who are not married, but who come under this section. In those two respects I think the section is all wrong; and, besides that, it is absolutely useless. I asked a hotelkeeper what value this provision would be to him, and he said: "None at all." He said: "Mr. A comes to this hotel and registers as Mr. A and is assigned to a room; Miss B comes and registers as Miss B and is assigned to her room. There is nothing wrong with the registration, but later on Mr. A finds his way to Miss B's room." I say there is no manner of use in drafting that legislation, and I think the section ought to be struck out altogether.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think the honourable member for Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) is unduly frightened about what may happen to people going to a hotel in that way. This legislation would not fit many of the cases he has referred to, and there is no intention that it should. This legislation is desired to a very great extent by hotel keepers who want to prevent their hotels being made houses of assignation. During the last few years some of the leading hotels in Toronto have had a great deal of difficulty with people coming there and registering as man and wife when they were not man and wife. While a man might go to a hotel and register, and a woman might go to the same hotel and register, and afterwards they might occupy the same room, you cannot meet a case of that kind in this Act, and it is not so intended. This Bill is to prevent people from making use of hotels in the way they do now. We know that quite a number of people are in the habit of going to some of those hotels, and the man will register the woman who is with him as his wife It is to prevent that sort of thing that this legislation is desired. During the last few years certain hotels in Toronto took advantage of the card system, and where the parties aroused suspicious they insisted on having the cards delivered, with the result that during that time the hotels succeeded in turning away about a hundred different couples. They are trying to get at people of that kind by this particular section, and as far as I can see it will not affect the returned soldiers or the man who desires to go to a hotel in the way referred to by my honourable friend. If he thinks that it would, even that difficulty could be removed by strinking out the words "to whom he or she is not married" in the nineteenth line, and then going on to the end of the sentence.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if the amendment he proposes at the end of the Bill will not cover those cases?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. McMeans was agreed to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and progress was reported.

DIVORCE BILLS.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill I5, an Act for the relief of Lauretta Estelle Cook.—Hon. G. V. White.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT.

Bill J5, an Act for the relief of Reginald Muir Barlow.—Hon. G. V. White.

Bill K5, an Act for the relief of Alfred John Crawford.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

Bill L5, an Act for the relief of Frederick Minskip.—Hon. Mr. Nicholls.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 P.M.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, June 24, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 141, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill 126, an Act to amend The Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Before this Bill is passed, I want to reiterate my fear that this may be a step which it will be necessary for us to retrace, as we had to retrace our steps when we repealed the Bankruptcy Act in 1879 or 1880. Conditions are not at all what they were a few years ago. Each province has had its own legislation for the liquidation of bankrupt estates. I am somewhat fearful of the policy which we are going to adopt; but time only will tell.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

DIVORCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill E5, an Act for the relief of Charles Henry Foster.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. —Hon. Sir James Lougheed. Hon. Mr. Michener in the Chair.

On section 8—penalty of whipping added:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The object of this is to punish rape by the penalty of whipping. At the present time it extends only to indecent assault.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: This is not for rape; it is for an attempt to commit rape.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is made an offence distinguishable from indecent assault.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—carnally knowing girl between 14 and 16:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I wish to propose the addition of certain words that have been left out after the word "girl" in the third line of new subsection 2. I move that after the word "girl," the words, "'of previous chaste character," be added. These words are in the other section.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I object to that amendment. We have amended one of the previous sections by increasing the age of consent from 16 years to 18. It follows, I think, as a matter of course, that the age should also be increased in subsection 2 of section 9. It is the idea, apparently, to add some words which did not exist in the clause that this is intended to take the place of. The adding of these words is going to nullify to a very great extent the value of this particular section. In dealing with girls of from 14 to 16 we are dealing simply with children; so why should a clause of that kind be added? If you were dealing with girls of a greater age, there might be some excuse for it. For years the law has been that it was a criminal offence to have carnal intercourse with a girl under the age of 14 years, no matter whether she was chaste or not. The clause as it stands deals not only with seduction, but with the offence of having carnal knowledge of a girl who, as I said before, may be regarded as a child. The qualifying clause has no place in this section. Take, for instance, a concrete case. A girl of very tender years has been demoralized. She is apprehended and sent to an institution, and is taken care of for a couple of years. She receives considerable training there, and is able, at the end of that time, to start out again. She is taken hold of by some of the men who had carnal knowledge of her before, and she is again seduced. She is still under the age mentioned in this section. Why should not girls of that description be protected?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Section 301 of the Criminal Code is untouched. It protects girls below or up to the age of 16. It remains exactly as it was. Under this section a new offence is constituted. This does not touch section 301, which protects girls up to 14 years of age.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Whether they are chaste or not.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: This new section deals with another class of girls altogether. Under the old law 14 was fixed as being approximately the age of puberty. All girls below that age were treated as being children, and they are left as much under this section. All girls between 14 and 16, and some even younger than that, have not attained the age of puberty, but there are many of them, Italians and Serbians and so on, who come here, who are fully developed women. All I say is that if you are going to deal with them, deal with them on the same footing as you deal with those between the ages of 16 and 18. In both cases you are dealing with women. Do not send a man to the penitentiary for five years if he is seduced by a prostitute off the sidewalk.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is quite true that you are increasing the age to 16, but my contention is—

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not want to interrupt my honourable friend unnecessarily, but that is scarcely stating the case exactly. We are not increasing the age. Section 301 deals with girls up to 14 years of age. That is a clause by itself. Up to that age they are children and are dealt with as such, and no one has ever quarrelled with that principle. But this section does not increase the age. It makes a new offence, that of having illicit connection with girls between 14 and 16.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: This clause simply takes the place of the clause which we are doing away with.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is the effect of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It strikes me that way.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are not repealing section 301.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: No, but an offence is created.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: You have two offences: one in the case of girls between 14 and 16, and one in the case of girls between 16 and 18. In one case the punishment is two years, and in the other five years.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The question of the years of punishment is not so important as fixing the age up to which children will be protected. I regard it as a protection of children, although my honourable friend says they have reached a mature age at 16. That is not the experience in the part of the country from which I come.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not say it is common of Canadian girls, but there are thousands of girls of other nationalities who attain puberty early—and some of our girls reach it at 14.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I submit that the clause should remain as it is. It is placed here for a purpose, and will afford a very considerable amount of protection.

(Hon. Mr. Crosby resumes the Chair.)

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Although I have charge of this Bill I must say that I do not see the wisdom of this section, which, if it were passed, would be subsection 1 of section 301. If we passed this subsection there would be two offences one of carnally knowing a girl under the age of 14 years, punishable by imprisonment and whipping, and one of carnally knowing a girl of the same class between 14 and 16 years of age, punishable by imprisonment without whipping. It is proposed that the latter provision should be amended by providing that the girl should be of previous chaste character.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The term of punishment in the Bill is five years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. It is the same offence, but the penalty is different. We come back to the question of raising the age from 14 to 16, because the penalty is a severe one in any event.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I should like to repeat substantially what was said in connection with an earlier clause. As I said before, everyone who lives in a city like Ottawa or Montreal or Toronto knows that there are numbers of girls between the ages of 14 and 16 who are running about the streets trying to lead men astray. Such a clause as the one before us would simply strengthen the position of those mischief makers. It does not even say that the girl should have been of previous chaste character. Any man who offends with any girl —she may be really a professional prostitute —is liable to imprisonment for five years. I think that is a most unreasonable proposition.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: If this amendment is carried, what protection have girls from 14 to 16 years of age? It is intended to add to this section the words, "of previous chaste character." If that is done, how is the girl protected if she has not been of previously chaste character? She has no protection at all. I regard a girl of 16 as being no better able to protect herself than a girl of 14; and when we have increased the age of consent to 18 years, as we did yesterday, we should follow that up by keeping the legislation in line, and increasing the age to 16 years in this case.

The amendment of Hon. W. B. Ross was agreed to: yeas, 34; nays, 6.

Hon. W. B. ROSS moved that at the end of the clause the following proviso be inserted:

No person accused of any offence under this subsection shall be convicted upon the evidence of one witness unless the evidence of such witness is corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused.

He said: We added these words last year, as applicable to certain sections of the Code, and I move that they be applied to this new subsection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 9, as amended, was agreed to.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: As we are dealing with sections 4, 5, and 9, I would like to be allowed to go back to section 5. That is a new section in substitution for section 213 of the Code. It is not very long, and perhaps it would help us to understand the question if the House would bear with me while I read it:

Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment,—

(a) who, being a set-parent or foster parent or guardian, seduces or has illicit connection with his step-child or foster child or ward; or,

(b) who seduces or has illicit connection with any woman or girl previously chaste and under the age of twenty-one years who is in his employment in a factory, mill, work-shop, shop or store, or who, being in a common, but not necessarily similar, employment with him in such factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, is, in respect of her employment or work in such factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, under or in any way subject to his control or direction, or receives her wages or salary directly or indirectly from him.

That is a pretty wide section, and I would have thought the provision sufficiently drastic. I would not object to the section at all, with the exception of the use of the word "woman." Now you have section 5 of this Bill, which it is proposed to substitute:

(b) who seduces or has illicit connection with any woman or girl previously chaste and under the age of twenty-one years who is in his employment, or who, being in a common, but not necessarily similar, employment with him—

—and so on, the same as section 213. You see, this is a blanket section. Though the old one was very wide, still it had some limitations. This covers household servants. What I would suggest is that probably the best thing would be to adhere to the old section 213. I move now to strike out section 5.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We will have to rescind our action of yesterday. We should have a motion to reconsider first.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Then I move the reconsideration of section 5.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The great defect in the section that we are trying to amend was that it did not protect women in hotels, restaurants, laundries, offices, or homes, The new section does protect them; that is, the section that we passed yesterday by majority vote, as it stands. To be really effective it should remain as we left it yesterday.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What is the penalty for the offence?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Two years in prison.

The motion to reconsider section 5 was agreed to.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I move that we strike out section 5. That will leave the law as it is in section 213.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But if section 5 was deemed by Parliament to be a good one for the protection of women under the control of certain classes of employers, what harm is there in extending that protection to other employees or servants who are under the influence, direction and control of another class of employers, since we have already established the right of those women to protection?

Hon. Mr. POWER: The question of the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier is periectly fair and reasonable—as his questions generally are, I might say; by the change proposed to be made in the Act employers who are householders are made liable in case a domestic servant should come to grief. As I said at an earlier stage of the debate everybody knows that, whatever may have been the case fifty years ago, to-day the master and mistress do not control those who are their servants. The domestic servant really controls the position of the master and mistress, though holding a comparatively inferior position. Everybody knows that in these days domestic servants go out, some of them every evening, some every second evening, and remain out of the house for hours. To say that a householder shall be liable in a case of that sort simply opens the door to blackmail to a very considerable degree, and I do not think that we should do that.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: With all deference to what the honourable gentleman has stated. I think he is entirely wrong. One would suppose from his remarks that if a servant girl went out during any evening and got into difficulty the master would be responsible; but that is not the class of case that is meant; it is where a master seduces or has illicit intercourse. If protection was considered desirable for people in workshops, why not have it cover hotels, restaurants, laundries, and offices? Because that is about all this section does. I would draw attention to the fact that we dealt with this section yesterday, and without any new light on the subject—though I am not trying to belittle the remarks made by my honourable friend—why should we go back to a section which we passed yesterday by a very considerable majority?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The motion is that section 5 be struck out. I think the noes have it.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No: one minute. Yesterday I asked the House to strike out the word "woman" where it occurred in that section, and I am not sure that honourable gentlemen understood that motion. Section 4 deals with a girl, while section 5 deals with a woman. Now, you must give some meaning to the word "woman" there as distinguished from the word "girl" as used in the other parts of the Act. The only meaning I can attach is the words "girl of previously chaste character" refer to an unmarried female or a maid, and that the word "woman" is used as distinguished from a maid, and is meant to cover a married woman. Without the word "woman" in this section it is, I think, quite plain that the offence would be the seducing or having illicit connection with a maid, an unmarried woman, of previously chaste character.

There is one objection, and a serious one, to all this legislation, though I do not say it is all-prevailing: it is that it opens the door to blackmailing by unscrupulous women. All the cases of blackmailing I have ever had to deal with in the course of my profession were those of attempted blackmail by married women, who very often acted in conjunction with their husbands. One of my very last cases was a charge made by a woman who extorted payment of money from a man for two or three years, and finally her husband came into it. He was not satisfied that the wife was always getting the money, so he put in his plea that he wanted money, and the man blundered by paying the husband some money, and then finally, tiring of paying, he consulted a lawyer, who suggested that a charge of conspiracy should be laid against the husband and wife, who had acted together. I have asked one or two lawyers about this, and they told me the same thing—that the blackmailer is the married woman. She is past the time when her sexual desire is very strong; certainly it is not so strong as her love of making money. If blackmail takes place under this law I am perfectly satisfied it will be by married women. When you look reasonably into the Act itself, there cannot be any possible reason why a married woman should have legislation of this kind passed for her. I can understand it perfectly well in the case of a chaste girl who may be seduced, but the idea of a married woman being seduced is perfectly absurd. If she is wronged by her employer by force, or anything of that kind, there are plenty of provisions in the Act to prosecute him for rape or attempted rape, as in the section just dealt with, where there is a provision for whipping. To my mind this section 5 would be very much improved if the word "woman" were taken out, and I move that that word be struck out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under the rules the honourable gentlemen will find it difficult to move a second time to strike out the word "woman," as he moved it yesterday and it was voted down. I confess that I was disposed to vote with him for that amendment. I looked through the interpretation clause of the Criminal Code and I did not find any distinction in the interpretation of the word "woman," and I would like my honourable friend who leads the House to tell us directly from his own knowledge, or from the Parliamentary Counsel sitting in front of him, what interpretation he gives to that word. If it means married woman, as my honourable friend says, I would be disposed to strike it out, but after the vote of yesterday I doubt if we can do so except on the third reading.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In my judgment the distinction is this. Though there is no provision in the Interpretation Act as to a distinction between a married woman and a girl, yet in this particular case there might be a married woman who was under 21 years of age, and she would be held to be chaste, that is to say, if she had not had relations with any man other than her husband. Consequently the term would cover a married woman under 21 years of age, as well as a girl or unmarried woman under 21 years of age. We are legislating for the protection of two classes of women—one a married woman under 21 years of age previously chaste, and an unmarried woman under 21 previously chaste. If the word "girl" alone were used, I think the court would hold that that would not include a married woman under 21, and in my judgment that is the reason why the term "woman" is used.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I do not interpret section 5 as constituting the offence of having illicit connection against the will of the married woman or the girl.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not talking about that at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then there would be consent on the part of the married woman; so I cannot put that offence on the same footing as the other.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would be under the Act. If a man had illicit relations with a married woman in his employ who was previously chaste, then he would come within the section just as fully as if he had relations with an unmarried girl previously chaste.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: The punishment would be the same in both cases?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Honourable gentlemen, do you not think that the cases cited by my honourable friend as requiring protection under this Act are so very few and the chances of causing a hardship are, on the other hand, so great, that this word "woman" if left in the Act would be rather dangerous? There are very few married women under the age of 21 who are in employment, as compared with the number from 25 to 30; and I agree with the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) and also with the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that the word "woman" is so elusive that it should be stricken from the statute altogether. Besides that, I think that the clause for the protection of the man that has been added to another section should be added also to this; that is, that the word of the woman should not be taken as absolutely final evidence, but there should be some corroboration. Otherwise there would be great danger that a woman employee might blackmail her employer. There should be some means of protection. Some corroboration should be required, either incidentally or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I rise to a point of order. I submit that my honourable friend, having moved yesterday the same amendment, which was voted down, is not at liberty to move it again.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: No, that amendment was not moved yesterday.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Yes.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It was only suggested, and was passed over.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Oh, no; my honourable friend from Middleton moved that the word "woman" be struck out.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: He suggested that, but there was no motion.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Yes, there was a vote taken on it.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The same situation prevailed yesterday as to-day; that is, after the honourable leader of the House gave the explanation, the clause was passed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I must say, honourable gentlemen, although I have charge of this Bill, that I do not think this clause should be made to extend to a married woman. I think a married woman should be able to take care of herself even though she is in the employ of somebody.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: With regard to what the honourable member from Tignish (Hon. Mr. Murphy) says about corroborative evidence, I find that section 213 of the Act, which section 5 of this Bill supersedes, is covered by section 1002, providing that there shall be no conviction on the evidence of one witness without corroboration.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. POWER: As to the point of order raised by the honourable gentleman from Huron (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot), it will be remembered that the Committee decided to go back and reconsider this clause. There is no limit to the powers of the Committee when the clause is reconsidered.

The amendment of Hon. W. B. Ross was agreed to, and section 5, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 7—betting, pool selling and bookmaking:

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I move that all the words after the word "repealed," in the third line, be struck out. The clause would then read:

Subsection two of section two hundred and thirty-five of the said Act, as enacted by chapter nineteen of the statutes of 1912, is repealed.

This would do away with the present legal standing that is given to betting.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You want to go back to the book-making sub rosa.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Just to repeal the existing law.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Is there any seconder?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It does not need a seconder.

Hon. Mr. POWER: This is to prevent betting on races.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: There is not much use taking a vote if there is no seconder.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I pointed out in introducing the Bill, this clause is the outcome of the inquiry made by Dr. Rutherford at the instance of the Government into the whole question of racing. It is well known that there are two extreme parties, one seeking to strike a blow which would mean total abolition, and the other seeking to maintain all the abuses which to-day prevail. The intention of this clause is to do away with book-making, to have the pari-mutuel machines regulated by the Government, and to compel them to make such percentage contribution as may be imposed by the Government. On the whole, I think—I say it with a good deal of confidence—that it has received the support of all reasonably-minded persons—those who take a reasonable view as to a sport of this kind. It is in the interest of good horse-breeding, and I think it may be said that, on the whole, it is in the interest of good morals.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I find myself in accord with my honourable friend on this matter. If legislation of this kind is not put through, the ultimate result will be that all racing in this country will be done away with. Betting is, I think, one of those things that we cannot abolish altogether, and the best way to deal with it is to see that proper regulations are made. I think that the Government are to be congratulated on the decision they have arrived at in regard to this clause.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: In view of the statements made by the two leaders, and of the evident intention on the part of honourable members present to carry this section, I will not trouble the House by giving all the reasons why many persons think betting should be done away with.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Carried.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Senate took the lead in 1900, I think, in abolishing betting in a very vicious form, namely, the selling of lottery tickets. We had allowed to grow in this country an evil practice which was being carried on under the pretext of advancing art: people were openly conducting lotteries in the large cities of Canada. However, although we abolished lotteries, we must remember that there is a sporting element which claims that betting in connection with horse-racing encourages the breeding of a good class of horses. I am not so sure that that assistance is necessary. However, this Bill is in the right direction, and if we find that under it considerable abuses continue, we can perhaps go a step further later on.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does this affect trotting races?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; it deals with running races only.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Honourable gentlemen, my attention has been called to this proposed legislation. I have no opposition to offer to it, for I have every confidence in the gentlemen who prepared the report on which the Government framed the Bill. But it has been urged that Parliament should not put this clause into operation until the racing associations have had their meets. They have made their purses, and they should have an opportunity to make the percentage which under the present arrangement must be taken out of the pari-mutuel receipts. You can quite appreciate the situation. Toronto and, I think, Hamilton have had their races; Ottawa is having its races now; but at other places like Niagara and Windsor the racing meets have not yet been held. They will have to pay to the provincial government a tax of $7,500 a day; and they have made arrangements to pay that tax. If we are going to legalize racing and permit racing associations to hold meets, we ought to see that the regulations are fair, and the Government should not bring this Act into force until after these associations have had their spring meets which they have advertised. I am informed by people interested in race tracks that on account of the war there has been no racing for the last four or five years; the race tracks have fallen into bad repair and thousands of dollars have had to be spent to put them into proper condition for the races. If racing is legalized, the persons who are interested in conducting them should not be penalized unfairly, therefore I am inclined to think that the Government would be well advised to delay the operation of this Act until after the associations have had their spring meets. I hope that this view of the matter wil be approved by honourable members, and that we may prevail upon the Government to delay the operation of the Act.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: If it were brought into force say on the 1st of October—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That would be all right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think that would be all right. By that time most of the associations would have had their spring and fall meets. The associations that have advertised their races should be allowed at least to hold their spring meets before this legislation comes into effect. You can easily understand that, as they have made up their purses, if this legislation is enforced, tthey will be faced with tremendous losses.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I might point out to my honourable friends by way of explanation that this clause is largely the outcome of an honest endeavour on the part of the Government to suppress many of those meets which would otherwise take place between the present time and the date in October mentioned by my honourable friend, particularly those held at places adjoining the American boundary. I cannot speak with personal knowledge on the subject, but I have suggested to those who seem to be very much interested in extending the time to permit of those meets and the continuance of those abuses that they should see the Minister of Justice or the department charged with the preparation of this legislation. Those who approached me on the subject promised that that would be done, but I have not yet been favoured with any further interview from them on the question. I am told by an honourable member of this House who has an intimate knowledge of conditions on the boundary that the extension of the time for the operation of this Bill to the date proposed would simply lead to a continuance of the abuses which have been a reproach to the people of Canada for some time past.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: If my honourable friend who advocates the extension of the time is really disposed to be friendly to those who are interested in racing, I think he makes a mistake for himself and for them. Since racing began in this country there have been abuses which opened the eyes of hundreds of people in Canada who would have been opposed to this legislation in the beginning if they had realized what it meant. If the people who want to run race-tracks are well advised they will see that the maximum amount of the dishonesty and robbery that has taken place in certain provinces ceases and that some protection is given to people who apparently do not know how to protect themselves when they go to a horse-race.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Honourable gentlemen, I am not here as an advocate. This case was presented to me by a former member of the House of Commons, and it seemed to me that his reasoning was fair. If the Government are going to legalize horse-racing, as they are doing by this Bill and as they have done by Acts passed previously, it seems to me that if the legislation is enforced at once it will catch only a portion of the associations who have advertised their race meets, and it will catch them after they have repaired their tracks and buildings, which have been unused during the five or six years during which there has been no racing, and after they have spent money in advertising. I am not an advocate of horse-racing at all, but I think it is only fair that those associations be treated in the same way as others. The fact that some of the associations have met before this legislation is passed would exempt them, while others would have to pay the tax. They have made their purses and advertised their programmes on the understanding that they would have to pay the province of Ontario $7,500 a day. They have based their estimates on that. But now, on top of that tax comes this legislation, which will interfere with their receipts by reducing the percentage of profit which they may take from the pari-mutuel betting. It seems to me that all the racing associations should be placed on an equal footing and have the privilege of carrying on the races as they have already arranged. As to the abuses mentioned by the honourable leader of the Government, it seems to me that the law of the land should prevent things of that kind. They are not legalized by this Act. My only contention is that all the associations should be put on an equal footing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend explain why those associations cannot operate under the clause which we are now considering? They have not yet paid out their purses; they still retain their properties, and if they are continuing they will have not only the advantages which this Bill proposes to give them but all the advantages which respectable courses operating under this Bill will have. What is good for the associations coming under this Bill should be equally good for those gentlemen. I might say to my honourable friend furthermore that, in order that every opportunity may be given for full consideration of his suggestion, I intend not to move the third reading of the Bill to-day, but will let it stand until to-morrow or the next day. The parties interested can have a hearing if there is a feeling in the House that they should have it. But I cannot myself understand why a distinction should be made between the two classes. If those abuses have been notorious and have been condemned by the evidence of the public, as reported by the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the subject, why should they be continued? No money has yet been paid out by those associations. The purses are in their own hands. They have had notice that the inquiry was made for the purpose of entirely reforming and reconstructing the whole subject of racing. Not only have they had notice of this from the Dominion Government, but for several months they have had notice from the Ontario Government, which has imposed a substantial license fee.

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 11 (new section 664A)—process not to issue for the arrest or summoning of a person outside a province without approval of Attorney General or a judge:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I want the House to consider seriously this section 11. On its face it may be rather innocent looking. It is familiar, I think, to practically all citizens, that the criminal law, for time out of mind—at all events, in English-speaking countries—I do not speak for the French provinces at all—has been that if a man commits a crime in Ottawa, be it murder, theft, or whatever else, he is liable to be arrested and tried here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the law all over the country.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: When the Criminal Code was first consolidated in the time of Sir John Thompson that was changed, and it was made possible, provided the crime was committed in Canada, to arrest a man and try him anywhere in the country. That raised a great uproar, and in less than two years time the old law was restored. It is a very serious thing to disturb a law of that kind. It has become part of the life of the nation; and I think we are entitled to assume that a law that has persisted so long is well founded, and is a sound and good law.

I have a suspicion as to where this section comes from, because it dates from the time when the Doherty Act, so-called, was introduced. If a man were to sell a bottle of whisky in the city of Ottawa to another man, knowing that the other man was going to take it into a province which at that time had a law against the importation of intoxicating liquors, say Manitoba, under the Doherty Act he would be held to have committed a crime. Now, the man who sold the bottle of whisky committed the crime and completed it in the city of Ottawa, because to have committed the crime he must have sold the whisky with the intention of its being taken to Manitoba. What the other man did after he got to Manitoba was none of the vendor's business; but the temperance people ask that he be tried in Manitoba. There might be cases in which that would impose great hardship. It is just as well to understand what that would mean. A man might be arrested anywhere in eastern Canada and be transferred to Vancouver or the Yukon or any place in the West for trial.

I have always put this question: suppose a man were arrested in Halifax, and were taken to Vancouver and tried there and found not guilty, how is he going to get home? From all the information I have been able to get, it would seem that he could only foot it home. Some temperance enthusiast—and they are not all of the highest character, I am told—goes to the Attorney Genneral or to a judge in the province of British Columbia, and says, "We want to arrest this man." He gets an order and sends a warrant down here, and the man is taken to that province. He should not be taken out there on the order of a judge of a county court or any one else out there; the papers should be sent down here and the matter should come before a judge in the East, who can find out what the man's circumstances are, where the witnesses are, and how the man is to get home again. If there is going to be any change from the existing law, the fair thing to do would be to provide that if a man is to be transferred from Ottawa to Vancouver, the transfer should be made on the order of a judge in Ottawa. In passing a law such as this you are only adding to government by Order in Council—government by a sort of back-stair influence. It will be just as bad as any tyranny that existed in the dark ages, and there will be no chance of redress or of finding out who is at the bottom of things and is putting the machinery in motion. I would be satisfied if this matter were left to a judge in the place where the man charged lives.

I move that the words, "it is sought to issue the process" be struck out, and that the words, "such person resides," be substituted.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: What is the law at the present time? Suppose I want to arrest a man in Montreal for an offence committed in Ottawa. I go to a police magistrate and lay an information. On that information a warrant is issued and sent to Montreal, and executed there; and before the man can be taken from Montreal the warrant has to be backed by a magistrate there. Is that correct?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes. But in that case the crime is committed in Ottawa. I have not the slightest objection to that. If you leave the law that way, well and good: I will accept it without the slightest hesitation. But you are turning that upside down and providing that a man shall go, not to the place where the offence was committed, but to a place where some temperance organization says they would like to have him tried.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that we have a statement from the leader of the Government as to the reason for this amendment. So far, under our procedure, we have been able to send out warrants to other provinces, have them endorsed there by a magistrate, and executed. I quite understand the fear of my honourable friend from Middleton, and I should like to hear an explanation from the leader of the Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand it, the law of to-day does not require the sanction of the attorney general of any province for the issuance of a warrant. The consequence has been that warrants have been issued, say in the province of Ontario, under which men have been arrested and carried to a far western province, where they have been tried and dismissed, and from which they have to find their way back. It is desirable for the protection of the public that that kind of thing should not be done and that no warrant should be issued to take a man outside of his own province without the sanction of some reliable authority within that province.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is what I want.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We propose to do that in this way—

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am perfectly right. My honourable friend was perhaps a little prematurely facetious. A process is being issued in this province, and it should not be issued without the sanction of the attorney general of this province, who will satisfy himself that a prima facie case has been made out against the person against whom it is directed. It seems to me that that should be a sufficient safeguard. If the attorney general of the province to whom application is made for sanction is not a reliable person, I do not know where you will find a reliable person. He surely is as much to be relied upon as a judge. Then you have the alternative of the approval of a judge of the superior court, of the county court, or of the district court.

My honourable friend transposes the whole procedure. He says the application must be made in the province in which the man resides. By the time that application from a distant province reaches the province in which the man resides, and by the time it has undergone the scrutinizing process, and inquiry, there is every probability that the accused will have heard of it and will have disappeared. It seems to me that the public interest is best served by the procedure proposed in the section before us. My honourable friend has not yet pointed out wherein it might be abused.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand that under this amendment, if it passes, a person living in Ottawa might be arrested under a warrant issued in British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: With the consent of a judge.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can be arrested at the present time on a warrant.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Not for a crime committed in British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can be if the warrant is backed. That is done perfunctorily without any inquiry or examination being made. So this will remove what might be termed an abuse.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me? When the crime is committed in British Columbia the warrant is issued there. If the man is here the warrant comes down here and is backed to take him to the place where the crime was committed. This section provides for something else. It provides that a person may apply to a judge in British Columbia for a process to take to that province for trial a man who it is said has committed a crime in Ottawa. There is no use denying that. I have discussed this question with the temperance people, and have asked them to give a justification of this provision. They say: "Unless you give up this power we cannot impose the Doherty Act; that is the weapon that we want. He sold the liquor in Ottawa and committed the crime in Ottawa; but for the good of the peace of British Columbia we want to take him to Manitoba to be tried."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Was this clause put in at the instance of the temperance people?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. My recollection is that in the liquor legislation which passed Parliament last session or the session before there is a provision by which this very thing is done. I think there is a clause similar to this in what is known as the Doherty Act.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It is not the same as this.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There should be some very good reason for changing the procedure in criminal matters. What is the evil that this is supposed to rectify? I have heard no complaints about the liquor law.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Clause 662 of the Criminal Code lays down the ordinary procedure to be followed when one is outside of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, so I cannot quite understand why this amendment is now proposed. To guard against the fear expressed by my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), this clause might be amended to read thus:

No warrant or other process shall be issued in any province for the arrest or summoning upon a criminal charge for a criminal act committed in such province.

Would my honourable friend from Middleton be satisfied with an amendment of that kind?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I am going to suggest to the leader of the Government that he drop this section for this year. If it is needed it can be brought up again with a proper explanation from the Department of Justice as to what it means and what specific need there is for it.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: My honourable friend from Middleton does not read the clause as I read it. I take it to mean that you still require to lay your information; but before you can send it to the province where you are going to have it executed, you must get the consent of the attorney general, a judge of the superior court, a county court judge, or a district court judge. That is additional procedure that you have to take. I do not think this section covers anything more than that. It is an additional safeguard to prevent magistrates sending out warrants in a way in which some people claim they should not be sent out. After many years of experience I have never yet found any hardship arising from the issuance of a warrant in one province and the sending of it to another province to be backed in order to bring a man to trial. Suppose this clause is passed, and it is necessary to arrest a man who has committed an offence in the city of Ottawa. You are required to issue a warrant because he has gone across the river, absconded from Ottawa, and is getting away as fast as he can. Besides laying the information and getting the warrant, you have to hunt up the Attorney General in Toronto, or get the country court judge—and he might be away—and in the meantime the criminal escapes. That is the great objection that I see to this section.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It is a pretty serious one.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will withdraw the clause.

Section 11 was struck out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: At the instance of the Department of Justice I desire to insert another clause. It has to do with procedure under the Secret Commissions Act. Under that Act prosecutions have been taken against employees of railways, particularly conductors, who have been charged with collecting fares and misappropriating the proceeds. At the time that Act was passed it was never intended by the Government or by the Department of Justice that a prosecution should take place under that Act, because it gives no right of election to the accused to be tried other than summarily. Hence the amendment is for the purposes of permitting trial to take place as practically under any charge of an analogous character which might be made. It will read as follows:

The Criminal Code, R.S.C., 1906, chap. 146, is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 412 thereof:

412a. Everyone is guilty of an offence who (a) being an officer or employee whose duty it is to collect fares or tolls wilfully neglects to collect fares or toll, or wilfully collects less than the proper amount, or accepts any valuable consideration for omitting to collect such fare or toll; (b) gives, or offers to give, any such officer or employee any valuable consideration for not collecting such fare or toll or for collecting a less amount than is properly due;

And shall be liable upon indictment to two years imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding $2,500, or both imprisonment and fine.

2. (1) section 773 of the said Act is amended by inserting the following paragraph immediately after paragraph (g) thereof:

(h) with any offence under section 412.

(2) subsection 1 of section 781 is amended by inserting the words "or (h)" immediately after the words "or (g)" in the second line thereof.

3. Any person liable to punishment under section 412 shall not be prosecuted under the provisions of the Secret Commissions Act, 1909.

I might add that this has been done with the concurrence of the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend let that stand until to-morrow?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will appear in the minutes, and I shall see that every opportunity is given to examine it before the third reading.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections 12, 13, 14 and 15 were agreed to.

On section 16—Attorney General of Quebec given power to apply for change of venue as well as accused when no criminal terms in district where accused is:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Attorney General of the Province of Quebec has requested that this section be re-drafted as follows, replacing the section which appears in the draft Bill before us:

887. (1) Whenever in the province of Quebec, it has been decided by the competent authority that no jury is to be summoned at the appointed time in any district in the province within which a term Court of Kings Bench holding criminal pleas should be then held the Attorney General or his agent or any person charged with an indictable offence whose trial should by low be held in the said district may in the manner hereinbefore provided obtain an order that the trial be proceeded with some district within the said province named by the Court or judge.

Section 16, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 17—appeal to Supreme Court of Canada where judgment conflicts with the judgment of any other court of appeal:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The reason for that section is this. A difference of interpretation of the criminal law has taken place in a number of cases, the courts of one province deciding in one way and the courts of another province in another way. This section provides for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada where the provincial courts of appeal have differed in their interpretation of the law. The object is to bring about uniformity of judicial decisions. I desire to insert the words "of appeal" in the 46th line, so as to make it read, "notice of appeal in writing."

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I am in favor of there being an appeal to the Supreme Court in every case of an indictable offence, and my suggestion is that we strike out the following words, commencing at line 40: "if the judgment appealed from conflicts with the judgment of any other court of appeal in a like case." That will give a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. At present there is practically no appeal to that court in a criminal case, unless there should be a dissenting judge in the court of appeal of the province. If a man has a claim for $1,000 or over he has a right to appeal his case to the Supreme Court and secure the judgment of the highest court in the realm; but his life may be in jeopardy, or he may be imprisoned for a term of years, and yet he has no right of appeal to the Supreme court; so that a mere matter of dollars and cents is placed on a higher level than a man's own liberty. For that reason I wish that an appeal should be given to the Supreme Court. The striking out of those words would permit of an appeal being taken in the way I mention, and there would be this safeguard, that an appeal would not go as a matter of course; it would be necessary to secure leave to appeal in the same way as in the cases provided for in this section. I would impress as strongly as I can on honourable gentlemen the desirability of giving a man who is unfortunate enough to be sentenced for a crime the same right of appeal as if he had had a judgment against him for $1,000 to $2,000.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I am very glad the honourable member from Toronto has brought this mater up. It is one that I considered last year and the year before. I entirely sympathize with the proposition he submits, that, while a man may appeal for a very trifling matter of property, he may be very seriously affected by a judgment in criminal matters, for any one of a number of crimes. In addition, there are a great many prosecutions under Acts which are not of a civil nature, but quasi criminal, and are particularly classified as criminal law. I believe there is a good deal of injustice done in such matters at the present day. It strikes me as absurd that a man should have an appeal where the judges are three to two in a trifling civil matter, while in a serious criminal matter he should have no right to appeal unless one of the judges chooses to write the judgment in appeal and let it go at that.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I would move that the words be struck out: "if the judgment appealed from conflicts with the judgment of any other court of appeal in a like case." The section would then permit an appeal in any case on an indictable offence.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: While very much might be said in respect to the proposition advanced by my honourable friend, yet it involves so much consideration, and has been the subject of so much discussion and deliberation in judicial circles, as well as in legislation in England and elsewhere, that at this late hour of the Session it would be futile to attempt to deal with a subject so important and comprehensive. My honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans) during the present Session brought down a Bill looking to the revision of sentences, which was, in its nature, somewhat of an appeal, so that a sentence might be revised by the Court of Appeal with the consent of the Attorney General of the province. The question of appeal was at that time discussed at considerable length in this House, and I think the consensus of opinion was that it would be unwise to depart from the principle of the great body of criminal law as we have it to-day on the statute book. The subject is entirely too large to be dealt with in a summary manner, as it would of necessity have to be at this particular time. In the United States the facility of appeal is said to be largely responsible for the failure to administer successfully the criminal law in that great country. It has been largely responsible for the delays, the failures, and the many abortive trials which have taken place in the most serious criminal offences; and it would be very unwise if we should introduce anything of that kind in Canada without considering very fully the experience which other countries have had in dealing with a subject so important. I am very sorry to say to my honourable friend that the Government at this late date of the Session would not give any serious consideration to it. If a subject of this kind is to be properly dealt with it seems to me that it should be introduced by the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice should be responsible for legislation of so serious a character, particularly as it makes a departure from the established principles of the criminal law.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I fully agree with the conclusions of my honourable friend, but I rise to remind him that his memory fails him when he says that the Senate did not approve of the Bill of the honourable gentleman from Manitoba.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We approved of that Bill, but we did not approve of an appeal, as is now suggested by my honourable friend from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Bill does not go so far. It has reached the Commons, and as we have not heard anything about it, though it has been there six weeks, I am quite sure that this proposed amendment would raise too large a question for the Commons to discuss now.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Does the honourable member from Toronto persist in his amendment?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: In view of what the honourable leader of the Government has said, I withdraw the amendment, with the consent of my seconder.

Section 17, as amended, was agreed to.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I announced that I would move an amendment as section 18. It refers to sections 4, 5, and 9 of the Act. It is a section that was carried in this House two years ago by a very large majority. I do not want to weary the House with it, but I would say that section 301, dealing with children, is left exactly as it was; if there is proof of the assault, that ends it. There is only one party to that, namely, the man, and he is punished. In those offences that come under sections 4, 5, and 9, under certain conditions there may be two parties to the crime, as there are two parties to the act; and it is quite possible that in some cases it may be the woman who is to blame, although in the majority of cases it is the man. But there must be some way to guard against possible injustice. Two years ago the House thought that a very good way to do that was to provide that the presiding judge should leave the matter to the jury; and the section which I submit to the House for its consideration and adoption is this:

18. On the trial of any offence against section 4, 5 or 9 of this Act the trial judge shall instruct the jury that if in their view the evidence does not show that the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame for the commission of said offence they may find a verdict of acquittal.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not want to oppose this, but I do not think the wording is quite correct. My honourable friend mentions sections 4, 5, and 9 of this Act. As this Bill will be incorporated into chapter 146, would it not be better to refer to sections 211, and so on?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No; that will all be worked out afterwards. This is definite as it is now, and when it is edited those points can be taken care of. This is identical verbally with what was voted by the Senate two years ago.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not want to object to what my honourable friend from Middleton proposes, but it seems to me the same objection applies to this amendment as to the amendment I proposed a few moments ago. If instructions are to be given to a judge, they also should be dealt with by the Minister of Justice and should be brought down by him. I do not like the wording of that clause, because it reads that the trial judge shall instruct the jury. I do not think we should place on the statute books any words to that effect. Suppose that the trial judge should not instruct the jury in that way, then there would be a mis-trial, and the conviction, if there was a conviction, would not be enforced. I think the sections as passed are sufficiently safeguarded and afford sufficient protection to the class of people we are dealing with, and that it would be a mistake to hamper the trial judge with a clause of that kind. I do not suppose it would amount to anything anyway. Nine times out of ten a judge in charging a jury would tell them practically what my honourable friend has set forth in that clause. So you are placing on the statute book something which, instead of being useful, may do a very considerable amount of harm. I think it would be very much better to let the legislation go as we have amended it, without adding to it a rider of this nature.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The word "shall," at all events, seems to be one that might well be changed to the word "may."

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have no objection to changing it to "may." That will be the only word in which the section differs from that which we carried at a previous session.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am a little doubtful of this rider, because it provides that if the guilt is shared to a certain degree by the other party, the offender is freed from the responsibility of his act. That is what this in effect declares, and it would to a considerable extent, I fear, nullify the effect of the three clauses.

The amendment of Hon. W. B. Ross was negatived: yeas, 10; nays, 12.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Honourable gentlemen, I move that the following be added to this Bill as section 18:

Section 216 of chapter 146, as amended by section 9 of chapter 13 of 1913, is amended by striking out, in line 2 of the said section, the word "five" and substituting therefor the word "ten".

This amendment met with the acceptance of the House when the matter was last under consideration. The reason for that acceptance was that the penalty applied to lesser offences was five years, the same as for the offences enumerated in clause 216. It seems to me that the House last year accepted the view that there was a very great difference in the nature of those offences, both as to the motive of the individual and the effect on society. Glancing at the headings of clause 216, you will see that the offences punishable by five years' imprisonment are: procuring a girl for defilement; enticing a girl to a house of ill-fame; procuring a girl for prostitution; procuring a girl to leave Canada for that purpose; to come into Canada for that purpose; to leave her abode for that purpose; carnal connection by threats, by false pretenses, by the administering of drugs for the purpose. These offences are all vastly more serious than the offences referred to in the clauses we have now dealt with and passed. I therefore propose that the difference in the anti-social nature of the offence be recognized in the penalty, and that the penalty be not the same as now, namely, five years alike for the lesser offences and for those far more odious crimes, but that for the latter class the penalty be made ten years.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: For what crimes is the penalty to be ten years?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For white slavery.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: The effect of the amendment is to impose a penalty of ten years' imprisonment on a man who procures a girl for a house of ill-fame, or who seduces her. This amendment passed last year in exactly the same form.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. McLennan was agreed to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that the following be added to the Bill as section 19:

This Act shall come into operation on the first of September.

This will permit of copies of the Act being printed and distributed amongst judges, magistrates, and other court officials.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I would ask the Committee to go back to clause 6, which we had before us yesterday.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the hotel clause?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Yes. I have been requested to have this clause brought again before the Committee.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: You cannot bring that before the Committee again without the unanimous consent of the House.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It requires a motion to bring it up.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I move that the Committee take up clause 6.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: The decision before, when I wanted certain matters brought up, was that I had to move and get a majority vote.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: But this clause has been carried.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I know, but the other clause, which my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) brought up, was also carried—the one he had reconsidered by the Committee.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: That was different; that clause had been allowed to stand. A clause carried by the Committee cannot be taken up again without unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: That is exactly what I contended a while ago.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: You were out of order at that time; and we are still going to keep order.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: If you rule that way—

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I must rule that way, because there is no other way to rule.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have been mistaken. Those sections that I had the Committee consider had not been passed.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: They were passed. That is the point.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: No, they were not passed.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Then, do you rule that—

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I am very sorry, but I cannot rule any other way.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Then we have had two rulings which are opposite to each other.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

DIVORCE BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill G 5, an Act for the relief of Joseph Dubé.—Hon. R. S. White.

INLAND REVENUE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 178, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to ask Mr. Taylor, of the Inland Revenue Department, to take a chair at the Table.

On section 1—"chemical still":

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The change in this section from the present Act is the introduction of the following words:

—"the measured content of which is less than fifty gallons."

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is it making the still smaller than it was before?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It does not alter the size?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—standard leaf tobacco:

Hon. Mr. MILNE: I wish to say a few words in regard to this section. I understand that this section is going to work a hardship on the manufacturers of tobacco in this country. They do not mind paying a proper duty on tobacco; but, as we know, tobacco coming in from Havana to Montreal is very susceptible to moisture, so that, instead of containing 10 per cent, it may contain up to 20 per cent. What the manufacturers complain of is the fact that the excise is put on before the tobacco goes into the warehouses. They claim that it should be put on after the tobacco is cured, and normal, and that the moisture will then not exceed 10 per cent.

It seems to me that we should be very careful in this matter. Times are very strange, and we do not want to put any obstacles in the way of the manufacturers of this country. I am informed that if this provision is carried it will cost the Tuckett factory from $60,000 to $75,000 extra per year, and will practically put them out of business. I think a good deal of this kind of legislation could be avoided if the Ministers understood what they were legislating about. There are plenty ways of getting information as to what is proper legislation, but it seems that some people prefer to take the responsibility on their own shoulders. As honourable gentlemen know very well, the manufacturers are very hard pressed at the present time, and we should not put any obstacles in their way if it is possible to avoid doing so. Some years ago legislation was proposed in regard to bottles which would have made it practically impossible for the brewers to carry on business. Their difficulty was that they could not get bottles from the glass manufacturers, and they had to pick up bottles as best they could. That legislation was put over for three years.

Since this year's Budget was introduced many amendments have been made, and much dissatisfaction has been aroused. We all know that the great war must be paid for. In that connection I would remark to honourable gentlemen that the mercantile community pay a large proportion of the taxes of this country. I do not mind paying my income tax and business tax, provided that the other fellow does the same thing. I know for a fact that a great many people among the farming community who should pay income tax do not pay it. The manufacturers have to pay their share of the tax, but it is unfair that they should have to do so unless others do likewise.

I hope the Government will see its way clear to do something in this case, because if this legislation goes through it is going seriously to affect the tobacco industry from which the Government gets millions of dollars in revenue. The other House passed this Bill without thoroughly considering what they were doing, and, as I have pointed out, it does an injustice which should be remedied by this House. We in this House do not have to go back to our constituents, and in that respect are independent; and, as I have heard honourable gentlemen say, we should look after the interests of the country as a whole, rather than those of one particular section.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, since this Bill was discussed in the House of Commons representations have been made to the Government as to the undesirability of passing this legislation and, as pointed out by my honourable friend from Hamilton, handicapping the manufacturers. Therefore, after discussing the matter with the Minister, I agree to withdraw this section.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The clause will stand as it is in the Revised Statutes?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Could my honourable friend tell us just how the present Act operates? Is the tax paid on the 90 per cent?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: 90 per cent of solid matter and 10 per cent of moisture. I understand that the Act as it is at present operates satisfactorily, and is not objectionable to the manufacturers.

Section 2 was struck out.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—abatements in computation of duty:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The new words in this section are as follow:

When stored in warehouse in wooden or in ventilated metal tanks approved by the Department, an abatement which shall not exceed four per cent for the first year after the date of original warehousing, three per cent for the second year, two per cent for the third year, two per cent for the fourth year, and one per cent for each succeeding year, up to ten years in all;

When stored in warehouse in wooden barrels, eight per cent for the first year after the date of original warehousing, six per cent for the second year, four per cent for the third year, three per cent for the fourth year, and two per cent for each succeeding year, up to ten years in all;

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: How about the retroactive feature of subclause 2?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It dates back to the 1st of April, this year.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is not quite so bad as it might be.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—spirits warehoused for two years, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This adds a proviso to section 171.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That means that it is not obligatory.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; the operation of the subsection may be suspended.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend say what those spirits are used for?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The object of this is to permit those using alcohol for commercial purposes to secure it without its being kept for this period of time.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does that cover the case of the denatured alcohol?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; there is a special clause in regard to that which we will come to later on.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—penalty for illicit distillation increased, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This increases the fine from $100 to $200.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Could my honourable friend say whether there has been a great deal of illicit distilling?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There has been a very great increase in illicit distilling. Last year no less than 985 stills were seized, which shows that they were doing quite a business.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is that all over Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not all in the holy province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The province of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) enjoys such a large measure of freedom in this regard that it has not had to resort to this sort of thing; but the necessities of the other provinces are so great that apparently it has been absolutely necessary for them to do so. In 1917-18 there were 13 stills; in 1918-19, 191; but business has increased so rapidly and to such an extent that in the year ending the 31st of March last the number of stills was 985.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Could you give us the figures by provinces?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The province of Ontario is showing marked progress in this direction. In 1917-18 there were none; in 1918-19 there were 50; but, owing to the enterprise of the Ontario people, this number increased to 296 last year. In Quebec, notwithstanding the very generous provisions which have been made for liquor in that province there were eleven stills in 1917-18, 37 in 1918-19, and 43 in 1919-20. That province has not made as great progress as one would naturally expect.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: How are the other provinces doing?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The province of New Brunswick was pure and undefiled in 1917-18; in 1918-19 it had only one still; but that number was increased to 8 in 1920.

Nova Scotia had 1 in 1917-18; 8 in 1918-19; and 20 in 1919-20.

Prince Edward Island had none in the former years, and only one in 1920. I am rather surprised at that, in view of the magnificent crops of potatoes produced in that province.

In Manitoba there were none in 1917-18, 28 in 1918-19, and 137 in 1919-20.

I am very glad to point out that my own province is showing almost more progress than any of the other provinces. In Alberta we had none in 1917-18, but we increased that in 1918-19 to 36, and now we have reached the very respectable number of 210. We are pressing the province of Ontario very closely. Very likely during the current year we shall catch up to the banner province.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What about Saskatchewan?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There was one in 1917-18, 15 in 1918-19, and 160 in 1919-20. In British Columbia there were none in 1918, 18 in 1918-19, and 110 in 1919-20. So the West is doing well.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Can my honourable able friend tell me if the Dominion Mounted Police are employed for the purpose of detecting illicit stills?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. That is included amongst their duties. That duty is delegated to them in the different provinces by the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I know that a few months ago the provinces had to employ their own detectives and inspectors for that work, and I think the Mounted Police felt that it was not properly their duty. I know also that an application was made to get their assistance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They are engaged in that duty now. I fancy that the duty is divided between the Mounted Police and the other officials.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I notice that we are raising the minimum penalty from $100 to $200. Is that because in cases of convictions the offenders have not been fined heavily enough?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is pointed out that this is such a profitable business that by the manufacture of a few barrels of alcohol at the very start of the business, a man will make enough to pay his fine. Consequently we have to keep pace with him by fixing a fine in due proportion to the price realized on the alcohol, and making it a very substantial one. There is a very large margin of profit in this business.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The question arises whether it would not be better to make the fine greater than the section mentions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It might not be wise to discourage it entirely, because we are enjoying a source of revenue which is not to be overlooked.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Those who have been administering the law have it in their power to impose a fine up to $500 for the sale of illicit liquor and it might be advisable to make the minimum still higher.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We have to leave it to the discretion of the magistrate.

Hon. Mr. McCALL: From the evidence just given by the honourable leader it is quite clear that fines do not prevent people from distilling, which is going on and rapidly increasing. A fine of $100, or even $200, is nothing, for a man working at an illicit still can make in a few days much more than his fine. I suggest that there ought to be the penalty of imprisonment for any person carrying on a still, for such a person not only defrauds the revenue but helps to debauch the men who drink the stuff he produces. I believe that in every town and in every community there are stills now in operation. I understand that a still can be made for a few dollars and attached to some kitchen utensil, and that spirits produced in that way are being bottled up and sold to people, to their injury in every way. If it is in order I would move that imprisonment be added to the fine.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say to my honourable friend that that provision is already in the law. For the first offence the accused is liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 and not less than $100 and to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than one month.

Hon. Mr. McCALL: Does the record show that that has been enforced.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know; that is within the discretion of the magistrate. In default of payment of the penalty the accused is liable to a further term of imprisonment not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, and for every subsequent offence to a penalty of $500 and to imprisonment with hard labour for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months; and, in default of payment of the penalty, to a further term of imprisonment.

Section 6 was agreed to.

On section 7—penalties increased for sale of liquor unlawfully manufactured:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Will my honourable friend tell us what the change is?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The fine is increased to $500 and not less than $200, and for each subsequent offence the penalty is $500.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The old one was $50?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 7 was agreed to.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—excise duties payable on spirits used in the production of vinegar:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Has there been no duty collected before on the spirits used in the manufacture of vinegar?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; simply on the vinegar.

Section 9 was agreed to.

On section 10—remission of duty on malt used to make vinegar:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under the British law, a malt vinegar manufacturer is permitted to use other cereals than malt in the manufacture of vinegar. A very large quantity of English malt vinegar has hitherto been imported into Canada, but during the past three or four years the Canadian manufacturer has had the market largely to himself. The food standards established for vinegar under the provisions of the Adulteration Act sanction the use of other cereals with malt, and recommend the purity of the article thus produced. The Canadian manufacturers claim that in order to compete with the imported article they should be placed on the same plane as the foreign manufacturer, and the object of repealing the existing section and substituting this section is to provide that refund of duty may be paid when other authorized cereals, in addition to malt, are employed.

Section 10 was agreed to.

On section 11—label on containers of methyl alcohol in medicinal preparations:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The words introduced here are "Methyl Hydrate —Poison," because several cases of poisoning have been caused by persons drinking mehtyl alcohol under the impression that, as the article was labelled as an "alcohol," they were consuming an intoxicant. It is therefore believed that the use of the words "Mehyl Hydrate," the chemical synonym for Methyl Alcohol, will, to a very large extent at least, overcome the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does that exactly meet what is known as wood alcohol?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And the word "poison" has to be on the bottles?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 11 was agreed to.

Sections 12, 13 and 14 were agreed to.

On section 15—license to pack or cure Canadian leaf tobacco:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This section 328B is new, is it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it is a new clause providing for a license for the packer of Canadian leaf tobacco.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What does it cover? I observe that subsection 1 says that every person who desires to pack or cure Canadian leaf tobacco must apply for a license; but the raisers of tobacco, the farmers throughout the country, are doing a certain amount of curing. Are they all obliged to secure a license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it only extends to the packer. The object of having a packer licensed is to enable the Department to follow the sale of the leaf. A cultivator otherwise could sell to a leaf dealer or packer, and this dealer or packer could sell to any manufacturer or retail merchant and evade the five cents duty on the leaf thus sold. Packers also cure the leaf and pack it in cases or bales and place the same upon the market. If the Department licenses the cultivator and the packer, they are in a position to know what becomes of all leaf grown; that is, whether it was sold to a retail merchant or to a licensed manufacturer, and whether the duty was paid thereon.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is it not a fact that a number of packers are also cultivators?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If they are packers they would have to take out licenses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is an interpretation in subsection 5 which states what a packer is.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; he is a jobber and dealer in tobacco, and may be a cultivator; but so long as he assumes the role of packer he comes under the Act.

Section 15 was agreed to.

Section 16 was agreed to.

On section 17—wood alcohol:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This deals with denatured alcohol.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend say whether this denatured alcohol would be handled in the same way as ordinary alcohol, the distiller having to get a license and have a bonded warehouse in the same way?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This denatured alcohol may, of course, be manufactured, and will be manufactured by the distiller and furnished to the trade without any restrictions.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But anybody wanting to undertake the manufacture of denatured alcohol would have to take out a license, just as an ordinary distiller?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And provide a bonded warehouse?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but in his ordinary business he could manufacture denatured alcohol and sell it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: But those matters would be attended to by the distillers if quantities are greater than one gallon?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What is the nature of the denatured alcohol?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is largely under the consideration of the Department as yet. Of course, it will be so manufactured that it cannot be consumed. Mr. Taylor tells me that the methyl alcohol cannot be recovered once it is denatured; that is to say, it must be used for these purposes, and cannot again be converted into alcohol that could be consumed.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What ingredient is used to denature the alcohol?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Wood alcohol.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But if wood alcohol is mixed with the other alcohol, would it have to be separated again?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Section 17 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FEEDING STUFFS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on Bill 165, an Act to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Commercial Feeding Stuffs, Bran, Shorts, Middlings and Chop Feeds. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would ask that Mr. Clark, of the Seed Branch of the Department of Agriculture, come within the Bar.

Sections 1 to 9 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 10—purchaser may have analysis made:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does the party have to send the sample down here, or is there any arrangement with the provincial governments to make that analysis?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He may forward it to any official analyst appointed by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is it the intention to appoint analysts in the various provinces?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Government has laboratories at Toronto, Winnipeg, and Calgary, and will establish them at other places.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Have they not some in Montreal and Toronto?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not at present.

Section 10 was agreed to.

Sections 11, 12 and 13 were agreed to.

On section 14—regulations:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Where will those regulations be published?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They will be published, together with a reprint of the Act, and distributed through such channels as may be desired.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Will they appear in the Canada Gazette?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, although the average farmer does not peruse the Gazette very closely. However, they will be well circulated.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is the Agricultural Gazette.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, they will be published in that and in all the literature in which they would naturally be expected to appear.

Section 14 was agreed to.

On section 15—penalty:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the penalty?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: For the third offence the party offending should be sent to prison and be fed on that stuff.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that would show what the effects of bad food were.

Section 15 was agreed to.

Sections 16 to 20 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 21—place of offence:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the section of the Criminal Code to which this refers?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Part XV deals chiefly with procedure in summary convictions. It deals with: "proceedings not objectionable on certain grounds:" "particulars to be ordered;" "description of offence in words of Act;" "variance or defects."

Section 21 was agreed to.

Section 22 was agreed to.

On section 23—commencement of Act:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Why should not this Act come into force at once?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will have to be an organization of that particular branch of the department on whom will devolve the administration of the Act. Organization will be required first of all, and then there will be more or less machinery to be set in motion.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is intended to bring it into effect as soon as possible?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 23 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 135, an Act to amend The Railway Act, 1919. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

On section 1—railways excepted from those deemed to be works for the general advantage of Canada:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I explained yesterday, honourable gentlemen, this is to take out of the Railway Act, in which we unwittingly included them, certain tramways, notably the British Columbia system of tramways.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 195, an Act to provide for the Insurance of Returned Soldiers by the Dominion of Canada.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 196, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

MILITIA PENSION BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 197, an Act to amend the Militia Pensions Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

PENSION BILL.

Bill 198, an Act to amend the Pension Act. —Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BOARDS OF TRADE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED presented Bill M5, an Act to amend the Boards of Trade Act.

He said: The object of this Bill is to enlarge the present Boards of Trade Act, with a view to affording greater facilities for the organization in towns and cities of so desirable an institution as the Board of Trade. It is represented to me by the Department of the Secretary of State that since the close of the war a great number of applications have come into the Department, indicating that the facilities or opportunities for organization are not wide enough under the present Act, and it is very desirable to recast it. I am not going to ask for the second reading until to-morrow. We hope by that time to have the Bill printed.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Could not Boards of Trade be established without coming under some Act of Parliament?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; the Boards of Trade now come under a general Act.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Several conditions are necessary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: However, we shall have a full explanation of the Bill when it is printed.

The Bill was read the first time.

ORFORD DIVORCE PETITION.

MOTION FOR REMISSION OF FEES.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT moved:

That the fees paid in the case of the petition of Frederick Orford, praying for a Bill of Divorce, be refunded to Counsel for the Petitioner.

He said: When the petition came before the Divorce Committee it was refused. It is usual for counsel then to make application for a refund. That was overlooked, and the only way it can be dealt with now, I understand, is to bring it before the House.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I understand that the petitioner is wealthy, and I do not see why his fees should be refunded when he fails to make good his application.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is the ordinaray procedure.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I am unaware of a refund having been refused. This has not cost the country anything.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is altogether at the discretion of the House. If a man brings in an action which he cannot sustain, and if he is well able to pay the expenses of the suit, he should be made to pay them.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: This will have to be considered as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: My idea was to have this motion referred to the Committee on Divorce.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I object. It is out of order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, the members of the Divorce Committee are more familiar with the practice than are other members of the Senate; but in looking through the printed evidence sent to me I have observed that sometimes, even when there were only a couple of witnesses to establish, for instance, that a divorce had already been obtained in the United States, the petitioner had paid the lawyers $600 or $700. It has seemed to me that the amount was very high. The amounut generally mentioned was $600 or $700, and the petitioner had taken a number of years to save it in order to get a divorce. I was somewhat shocked. Of course, I do not know how much was included for the deposit, the agency fees, and other expenditure, but the total would appear to be exceptionally high.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I think the large amounts to which the honourable member refers are the amounts obtained by the counsel. It is the lawyers who get the money. All that Parliament gets is $210, and I think it has been the practice, when a petition has been refused, to refund the petitioner the amount paid to Parliament.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Less the cost of printing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But has the Committee no rule fixing the fee that counsel are entitled to charge? I have seen amounts which were quite large and seemed cruel in the case of women petitioners who were earning their own living and had to save for a year or two in order to put aside the amount necessary to make the application to Parliament. Of course I know that divorces should be discouraged, but we have at the bar of the province of Quebec, at all events, a schedule of fees, and I am surprised that the Divorce Committee has had no such regulation.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The Committee has no power to tax the charges, but where application has been made for remission of the parliamentary fees it has been our practice to inquire how much money the counsel had received, and if he had received any such amount as that mentioned by the honourable member (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), we have made him pay the fees to Parliament on account of the money paid to him.

With regard to this application, I do not recall the circumstances. As a general rule it is better for the recommendation regarding the fees to come from the Committee itself. The Committee meets to-morrow, and the honourable gentleman from Huron (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot), who is a member, can bring up the question then and have a recommendation made by the Committee.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Honourable gentlemen, this looks to me like a very easy way for the counsel to supplement the already large fee which he has in all likelihood received from the petitioner. It seems to me also that, in order to obviate that, the Committee should provide for the returned fee going into the hands of some other person than counsel. When the petitioner says, "I am through with the case," it is very easy for the counsel to come here and make application for remission of the fee, and to put it into his pocket.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Particularly this session, there have been a great many divorce applications made on behalf of returned soldiers. At this and at other sessions, when application has been made for the remission of fees on account of the inability of the petitioner to pay, the Committee has invariably granted the request, but it has undertaken to tax the bill of costs. I suppose that is the term used by the legal gentlemen. The Committee has questioned lawyers and witnesses as to what the petitioner was paying, and I think the members of the Committee will agree with me that as a rule the expenses of the petitioner have not exceeded $300. In remitting the fees we have invariably done so on the understanding that they should be returned to the petitioner, not to the lawyer. The cheque has been sent directly to the petitioner. As a rule, the lawyers from Toronto have received only about $100 for their trouble in coming down here and pleading the case. Then there are the expenses of advertising; and the fees of the local agents in this city, which are, I think, in most cases about $75, for looking after the whole matter; and there are the witnesses' fees. All these matters have been inquired into, and I think I may safely say that in cases where application has been made for the remission of the fees the lawyers have not got away with the large amounts suggested by some honourable members of this House, but that the benefit of the refund has been given directly to the petitioner, who as a rule, this session, has been a returned soldier.

The motion was referred to the Standing Committee on Divorce.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Friday, June 25, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved:

That from and inclusive of to-day, and until the end of the Session, Rules 23b, c, d, e, and g, 24a, h, j, k, and 30 be suspended in so far as they relate to Notices of Motions and Motions.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Could my honourable friend say just what the object of that motion is? It is rather different from what we have had before.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That would be as to notices of motion to do away with the two days' notice. It is to enable me to move motion Number 2.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This is something rather exceptional.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is simply as to the time that must expire between the notice of the motion and the moving of the motion. If it is carried I am in a position to move that the House meet to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If it is passed it would apply to all motions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We lose control of everything.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will be candid, and say that I have not anything else that I know of at the moment to which it might apply.

The motion was agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved:

That commencing on Saturday next, and each succeeding Saturday until the end of the Session, unless differently ordered, there shall be a sitting of the Senate, commencing two o'clock in the afternoon, and that all Standing and Select Committees of the Senate be permitted to sit while the Senate is in session, notwithstanding anything contrary in Rule 86.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection to sitting on Saturday next week.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Possibly you might have.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend said yesterday that he would have us sit to-morrow only if he saw that is was absolutely necessary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say to my honourable friend that there is a very large body of legislation yet to be brought up to the Senate. For instance, there is the Franchise Bill, which I expected to be here to-day, and which in all probability will reach us to-morrow. In addition to that, there is other legislation which has been before the Commons, which I anticipate will reach the Senate by to-morrow. I think it is highly necessary that we should meet to-morrow. The Prime Minister informed me to-day that in the Commons they fully expect to get through by Tuesday or Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand, then, that the position would be that, even if the Franchise Bill were brought up in the House to-morrow, we would proceed with it at once.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. I am not committed, nor would I desire, to put it through all its stages to-morrow; but we should take one or two stages of the Bill to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, as amended.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, I was not here yesterday, and I have only now got this Bill in my hands. I want to draw the attention of my honourable friend to the provision in regard to racing. I refer to the provision which fixes the date when this Act would become effective.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not on the printed Bill; it will be found in the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I want to suggest to my honourable friend that, instead of making the date the 1st of September, it ought to be made the 15th of October. If you make it the 1st of September, certain clubs will enjoy the advantages of the present law, which entitles them to take up to 10 per cent, while others will not, and, if I may say so, those clubs which, according to Dr. Rutherford's report, are most deserving are the ones which will suffer most, while the clubs to which objection has been raised—I may say that they are those on the border, where gentlemen from the other side of the line operate—would get the benefit. I therefore suggest that, instead of the 1st of September, the date should be the 15th of October.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say to my honourable friend from Ottawa that it has been a somewhat controversial question as to when the Bill should come into operation, and I have not had an opportunity of seeing the Minister in whose department this particular clause will be administered. I should be very happy to postpone the reading of the Bill until I have an opportunity of discussing the matter with him, and I will direct his attention to the remarks of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I add that the first of the fall racing meets will be that of the Connaught Jockey Club, at Ottawa, and will begin on the 31st of August and terminate on the 7th of September. We would have the first day under the old law and the six remaining days under the new law.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, when this Bill was in Committee we had a rather small House, and I would suggest adding a clause to the Bill which I think is in the interest of justice. As the Bill stands, you prove the age of the girl and you prove a sexual offence; and the crime is complete; it does not matter whether the girl or the man is to blame. I have always admitted, and I think most men will admit, that in the majority of these cases you may assume that the man is the aggressor; but it is impossible to assume that in all cases. One of the best judges in Nova Scotia told me of a case which he tried. On a Sunday afternoon a negro girl looking out of a window saw a young negro coming up the street. She beckoned him, called him across the street, and asked him to come into the house. A few minutes afterwards he came out and went up the street, and almost immediately she came out and followed him up to a grove of bushes. An old negro saw them going up there, and he followed. Later a charge was made against this young negro under the section. The judge told me that the incident was all one-sided, and went to prove that the girl had provoked the whole thing; and that boy, if a verdict of guilty had been found against him, would have had to go to the penitentiary for I do not know how many years. The judge said that if the jury had done that, he would not have known what to do. But there was a little bit of doubt in the evidence about the girl's age, and the jury took advantage of that and found a verdict of not guilty. Under the law as it now stands you may have cases of young boys—not black boys or yellow boys, but white boys—who do not instigate the offence at all.

Now, I think there ought to be something to guard against what would be a very unjust punishment. That can be done by this clause without invalidating the law at all in the case of a man who is guilty. The section that I propose is this:

18. On the trial of any offence against section 4, 5 or 9 of this Act the trial judge may instruct the jury that if in their view the evidence does not show that the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame for the commission of said offence they may find a verdict of acquittal.

I need not again discuss sections 4, 5, and 9: they are familiar to you all now. This is a democratic age. The jury hear all the evidence and they see all the parties, and if the law is to be administered fairly and in the interest of the country we ought to leave discretion to the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal if the girl was chiefly or wholly to blame.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Does the woman's evidence stand against the man's? Is the woman's evidence paramount?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No, her evidence has to be corroborated.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: I think, honourable gentlemen, that the objection raised by the honourable member for Middleton deserves consideration. I have been told several times that in Montreal, for several years, there have been more boys seduced by young girls than girls seduced by boys. That is the experience in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: There is no doubt about it.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I move that amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I will second that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The honourable leader of the Government said he was going to allow this Bill to stand over until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We had better deal with this amendment now, and if it is carried we will then let the Bill stand until to-morrow for the third reading.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Then it would be better to defer the moving of that amendment.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No. We might as well dispose of it now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no reason why this motion should not be dealt with now and disposed of one way or the other.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The amendment cannot be moved until there is a motion for the third reading.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move the third reading; but I do not intend to press the motion. The third reading is on the Order Paper, and I move the third reading now if I did not do so before. Then I shall ask that it stand.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: And I move my amendment, that the clause which I have proposed be added to the Bill.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Ross was agreed to.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the debate was adjourned.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 184, an Act to revive and amend the Naturalization Act, 1914.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in 1914 the Parliament of Canada passed a Naturalization Act as the result of an agreement between the Imperial authorities and the Government of Canada. It was the outcome of an agreement among the different parts of the Empire with a view to making naturalization uniform and common throughout the whole Empire. At the same time we repealed the Naturalization Act which we had upon our statute book. In 1919, after the armistice was arrived at, and after public opinion had been excited over what should constitute the naturalization of alien enemies, we repealed the Act of 1914 and passed a new Act. Probably the most prominent feature of the later measure was a prohibition as to the naturalization of certain alien enemies until they had put in a residence of ten years in the Dominion. It was afterwards discovered that there had been a misunderstanding between our own Government and the Imperial authorities. The opinion was that Great Britain had acted similarly. It has been found that that is not the case, and, owing to certain amendments which were made at the time, it has been thought desirable to return to the Act of 1914. The consequence is that it is now proposed to repeal the Act of 1919 and revive the Act of 1914, making such amendments to the 1914 law as may be necessary to bring it into conformity and uniformity with the Act of the British Parliament. This, shortly, is the object of the Bill.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, the explanation given to the House by the honourable leader of the Government shows the position we are in to-day. The object of this legislation, I understand, is to enable the Government to deal with a question that arose under the Franchise Act in another place. When this Bill becomes law the Government will be able to give naturalization to aliens who lived in this country prior to the coming into effect of the Act of 1914, but who had not taken out naturalization papers.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and whose loyalty wil be proven to the satisfaction of the authorities.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think I am right in stating that there is another improvement in this Naturalization Act, inasmuch as certain powers which before were left entirely in the hands of the Secretary of State are now to be exercised by the Governor in Council on the advice of the Secretary of State. This brings the matter to the attention of the whole Government and in a way is, I think, an additional advantage to the whole country.

There is a point regarding the manner in which this Bill is drafted which I intend to bring to the attention of the honourable leader of the Government when we go into Committee. I may mention it now. If the honourable gentleman has Bill 184 before him, he will see that it is not stated where section 7 is to be inserted. When we come to discuss this in Committee, that should be changed so as to state definitely where section 7 of the Bill shall be inserted in the Act itself. It can be discussed better in Committee than at the present time.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does this Bill affect aliens coming into the country? I understand that at the present time an alien coming into Canada must make his residence here before securing naturalization.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: This does not affect that at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it does affect that. The honourable gentleman is referring to aliens coming into the country?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: To any aliens coming in now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or coming in hereafter. I could not answer my honourable friend. I have sent for the Under Secretary of State and I would suggest that we go into Committee and discuss the various clauses, and if any difficulty arises or I am not prepared to make an explanation I shall be very glad to have it stand. We shall make some progress by going into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill Hon. Mr. Donnelly in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—(new section 7)—revocation of certificate of naturalization by Governor in Council on report of Secretary of State.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This section provides for the substitution of two sections in place of section 7 of the Act of 1914. That is to say, we are amending the Act of 1914 by the substitution of the two sections to which I am about to allude. These two sections were intended to be introduced into the Act of 1919, to establish uniformity with the British Act of 1914, as amended by the British Act of 1918. There were, however, omissions, and some verbal differences between the clauses of our Act of 1914 and the British amendment, and these differences and omissions are corrected in the present session. The most substantial difference between the proposed section 7 and section 7 of the Act of 1919 is that paragraph b of subsection 2 was omitted in the 1919 Act, whether by oversight or for any special reason is not apparent. This clause was in the British Act of 1914, as amended in 1918, and was one of the clauses which formed the subject of previous consultation with the Dominion and which had been assented to. It is therefore one that should be included in the Dominion Act in order to maintain uniformity. In other words, we are simply inserting the same sections as are in the British Act.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does this repeal in any respect the power that the Government had under the amendment of 1919 to revoke the naturalization of an alien? I miss something from this, but I do not know just what it is.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I could not tell the honourable gentleman that We propose to repeal the whole of the 1919 Act. Then the question arises whether the Act of 1914, with the amendments which we are now moving, will meet the requirements in the Dominion. But I unhesitatingly say that this will bring our legislation into uniformity with the British Act. I do not intend to move the third reading to-day, and there will be ample opportunity to make a comparison between the proposed amendments and the Act of 1919.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I desire to point out that during the discussion on the Deportation Bill and the amendment proposed in this House it became quite evident that under the existing law the naturalization which had been granted to an alien could be revoked for certain reasons; and when his naturalization was revoked he would of course become an undesirable citizen; in fact, he would be deported. I have not the statute before me at the present moment, but I rather think that if you pass the amendment as proposed, while naturalization may be revoked for certain causes, some of the causes of revocation mentioned in the 1919 amendments are not included. That is what I fear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will the honourable gentleman look at paragraph d of the section we are now considering?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Paragraph e is a most extraordinary one. It gives complete and conclusive power to the Secretary of State to revoke a certificate if in his opinion the continuance of the certificate is not conducive to the public good.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move the adoption of subsection 1.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is not the difference between subsection 1 of the present Bill and the similar provision in the Act of 1919, first of all, that the matter is left in the hands of the Governor in Council on the advice of the Secretary of State, instead of being dealt with by the Secretary of State without reference to the Governor in Council; and, secondly, that if any of the conditions mentioned in the clause exist, then the Governor in Council has no discretion in the matter, but shall revoke the naturalization papers? In the Act of 1919 there was a permissive "may" instead of "shall."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is one of the amendments. I will come to that presently.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is the position as I see it. There is practically no alternative.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The one is mandatory; the other was permissive.

Subsection 1 of new section 7 was agreed to.

On subsection 2—cases in which certificate shall be revoked:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw attention to the fact that paragraphs a, b, c, and d are hardly necessary if in paragraph e we give the Governor in Council the right to recall a certificate in any case when he deems that the certificate is not conducive to the public good. That is an extraordinary power to give to the Governor in Council; yet it may be somewhat tempered by the preceding paragraphs which are precise and determinate. I realize that paragraph e was in the Act of 1919, but it was not in the Act of 1914. As the leader of the Opposition has said, it is not only the Secretary of State who can exercise this judgment, but it must be endorsed by the Governor in Council. I wonder if the person who is thus dealt with will have an opportunity of knowing the precise reason which actuates the Governor in Council? If the Governor in Council acts under paragraphs a, b, c, or d, the reason will be obvious; but if he undertakes to act under paragraph e, then it may be that no reason will be given. It would seem to be a very arbitrary action to withdraw the certificate without the person knowing the reason.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The paragraphs referred to lay down certain principles by which this act of revocation should be acted upon, and in my judgment they would be a feature in the event of any action being taken. When a country is in a state of war, conditions may arise which it is not possible to foresee, and it seems to me that this is not an unreasonable discretion, because the revocation of the certificate is not a very serious matter so far as the person holding it is concerned. It deprives him of certain privileges, but under such conditions it is not a very serious matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER: There is just one point to which I should like to direct the attention to the leader of the House. It strikes me that in subclause 2 of section 2 the word "shall" should be "may," because the Governor in Council might see some reason for not revoking the certificate, even in a case in which, under the wording of this clause, he could do so. I think the better way would be to leave the discretion with the Governor in Council, either to revoke the certificate or not to do so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why is the change made from the permissive to the imperative?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The section as we are now considering it is, I understand, verbatim with the British Act. It is with the object of obtaining uniformity that the amendments are being made. It seems to me that it would be very undesirable for us to depart in the slightest degree from the British Act. Of course, we may make a clause of this kind mandatory so far as the Governor in Council is concerned, but nevertheless the Governor in Council may exercise discretion. That is to say, I know of no power except the defeat of the Government that can compel the Governor in Council to commit an Act.

Subsections 2, 3, and 4 were agreed to.

On subsection 5—revocation of certificate granted in some other portion of His Majesty's Dominions:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is this a new subsection?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is taken from the English Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It was not in the Act of 1919. It is a new provision.

Subsections 5 and 6 were agreed to.

On new section 7a—effect of revocation upon status of wife or minor children:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsection a corresponds to subsections 1, 2, and 3 of section 8 of the Act of 1919, so that we have already passed those. I will therefore move the adoption of new section 7.

New section 7 was agreed to.

Naturalization Act, 1914, revived:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6 were contained in the Act of 1919, and therefore are not new.

Subsections 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 of section 3 were agreed to.

On subsection 4 of section 3—imperial naturalization:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsection 4 provides for the amendment of section 8 of the Act of 114, simply to correlate that section with the amendments herein made.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This subsection reads:

> In section 8 the words "Governor in Council" shall be inserted immediately after the words "Secretary of State of Canada" in the 10th line, and the words "and of the high court or superior court of the province in which the case arises."

Is that for the purpose of giving a right of appeal to the superior court?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In some of the overseas Dominions the court is termed the high Court and in others it is called the superior court. For instance, in Canada in some of the provinces the court is known as the high court and in others as the superior court. This simply indicates to what court application is to be made.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So application for naturalization is made to the superior court of the province?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, whatever is dealt with in section 8. An application regarding that subject will be made either to the high court or to the superior court, by whichever name it is known in the province.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The change is that the application will be made to a superior court. I think that previously it could be made to a country court in certain cases.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, apparently it was to a superior court.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That appeal to the superior court would be in the option of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Whatever the provision is under section 8. This is simply declaratory of the court.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: There is just one thing that bothers me a little at the present time, owing to discussions that have taken place in regard to the power the Government of the country exercises in the way of revocation of citizenship. I am wondering if the present amendments are intended to make it impossible for the Government to exercise control. Section 7 of the Act of 1919 reads as follows:

> Where the Secretary of State of Canada is satisfied that a certificate of naturalization granted by him under this Act, or granted under any Naturalization Act heretofore in force in Canada, has been obtained by false representation of fraud, or by concealment of material circumstances, or that the person to whom the certificate is granted has shown himself by act or speech to be disaffected or disloyal to His Majesty, the Secretary of State of Canada may recommend that the certificate be revoked, and the Governor in Council may by order revoke the same—

I was just wondering if that would be nullified by this clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It only changes it in this way. Paragraph d of new section 7 reads:

—was domiciled and had continuously resided in Canada for a period of at least ten years immediately preceding the seventh day of July, 1919.

So that he would have been in the country for several years before the war, practically five years before the war started——and who establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State of Canada that he has always during his residence in Canada conducted himself as a good and loyal citizen and that his allegiance to His Majesty will not be affected by sympathy or association with the enemy state of which he was formerly a subject.

—and it seems to me a very reasonable thing, even though he might have been the subject of an enemy country, that if he has been in Canada for ten years prior to the 7th of July, 1919, and in addition has established his loyalty to the Dominion to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State—

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is the granting of certificates. I am referring to the powers of revocation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend will look at the section which we have already dealt with he will see that the fullest power of revocation is given. We can revoke any certificate for the reasons set out there. Will my honourable friend look at paragraphs d and e of new section 7?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Those would cover, I suppose, the amendment of 1919, that is, chapter 38, section 7?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. I think the most ample protection is given.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—new section 19—application to court:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that in line 31, after the word "court" the following words be inserted: "in the province of Ontario, the court of General Sessions of the Peace." When this was up before I think my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) suggested that that should be done.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to, and new section 19 as amended was agreed to.

On new section 20—posting of application:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is practically the same as section 21 of the Act of 1919; in fact, so far as I can see, it is precisely the same.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I doubt that the wording will insure continuous posting. I think the language is hardly sufficient for that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will be done by the clerk or other proper officer.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I know, but that wording might mean merely a posting up three months before the application, and not a continuous posting up until the application is heard.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am informed that the form of the affidavit requires the statement that the application was posted up and kept posted up continuously during that period of time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But should not the section conform with the schedule?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Should not this read: "Such notice shall be posted up for a period of at least three months"?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would there be any difference between that and the present wording, "at least three months"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It says the notice shall be posted at least three months before, but it does not say that the notice shall remain up.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I appeal to the honourable leader that this would be clearer if it read, "for a period of at least three months."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will the honourable gentleman suggest to the Chairman just what the wording should be.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The amendment is that the clause should read:

Such notice shall be posted up continuously for a period of at least three months before the application is heard by the court.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Belcourt was agreed to, and new section 20, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 5, new section 24—issue of certificate of naturalization:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is the same as section 25 of the Act of 1919.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—"section 26 of the said Act is repealed":

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, of the Act of 1914?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Why is that done?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Section 26 provided that the Governor in Council should have power to appoint Commissioners to take oaths under this Act. Those officials are not now required.

Section 6 was agreed to.

On section 7—certificates granted to enemy subjects since 4th August, 1914:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is this grammatical enough for ordinary legislation? I doubt that it is.

Where a certificate of naturalization has been granted in Canada since the fourth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, to a person who, at, or at any time before the grant of the certaficate,—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This corresponds to section 8 of the Act of 1919.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This wording is very confusing, and it is certainly not grammatical. I know what the intention is, but I do not think it is correctly expressed. Perhaps it should read: "A person who, at the time of, or at any time before, the grant of the certificate."

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Or "prior to."

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Or, "prior to." I am not objecting to the word "before." I would put it this way: "who at the time of, or at any time before."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is not that what it really means?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If not that, what does it mean?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It does not read grammatically. I have no doubt as to what it means, but I do not believe it is grammatical.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order to make the phrase clear, I would ask my honourable friend to leave out the alternative and see what remains. I would like to know what then would be the meaning of the phrase.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What does the honourable gentleman propose to strike out?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I propose that it should be amended to read: "A person who at the time of, or at any time before."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will accept that.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Belcourt was agreed to, and subsection 1 of new section 7 was agreed to.

On subsection 2 of new section 7—no certificate to enemy subject for ten years after the war:

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think that that is a subclause which requires some consideration. That just means that any man who was a subject of Austria or Germany or Turkey, etc.,—any country that the Empire was at war with—cannot get a certificate of naturalization before the year 1928. It seems to me that this is an unreasonably long probation. I think we had better leave it at five years, as it is in some other portions of the Act. In the first place, after the expiration of five years the feelings that the war has created, feelings of hostility between different peoples, will have passed away. And then there is this other feature about it, that, while Germany, or Austria, or whatever the country may be, was at war with the British Empire, the individual subjects of that country may not have any hostile feeling towards the Empire at all; and I think we should also bear in mind that this long term of ten years may prevent Canada from getting immigrants who would be very desirable. It is one of our great objects now to get people to come to Canada who will help to carry the burden that the country will have to carry for several years. I move that the word "ten" in line 17 be stricken out and that the word "five" be substituted therefor.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say that in 1919 we passed this same legislation. In the Bill now before us we have slightly modified it by paragraph d so that it will not apply to anyone who was not residing in Canada ten years previous to the 7th of July, 1919. On the previous occasion the ten-years clause was very fully discussed, and I think it is not unreasonable, because if the persons to whom it applies could comply with a, b, c, and d, the refusal to issue them a certificate would not be made. But I think it is entirely necessary to retain the ten-years provision as to an alien from an enemy country.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Make it twenty-five.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I fail to see it.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Power was negatived.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I want to draw the attention of the leader of the Government to that clause. I do not quite see where it is going to come in in the Act. It is section 7 of the Bill, but it should really come in as section 7B.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The numbers of the sections in the Bills we pass are not observed when the statutes are consolidated.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Should it not have a number?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, because it is an entirely new section. It would be entirely immaterial whether it came at the end of the Act or in the middle of it.

Subsection 2 of section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—short title:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I would like to ask my honourable friend in regard to the revocation of certificates of naturalization. May anyone move the Secretary of State?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is provided for in the amendment, is it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the practice. The Secretary of State will take notice of any information which is brought to him from the police, from citizens, or from any other source. He is the depositary of all information in regard to the administration of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think every facility should be afforded for the revocation of certificates so granted, because in many instances these certificates are granted after very little investigation. In the past it has been a pure matter of form.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am told that that is a very serious reflection upon the administration of the Department of the Secretary of State, and that the closest investigation is made into every application for naturalization.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is something new.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Since the war we have found the necessity of it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: One would not have to have a very lively memory to remember the time when such things never took place.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Since it has been administered by the Department of the Secretary of State, it has been done in a model way.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Section 8 refers to the Naturalization Acts of 1914 and 1920. Are there any other Naturalization Acts in force? I thought they were all repealed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We repeal them formally.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Should not this be called the Naturalization Act in that case?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This, of course, repeals the Act of 1919, and I think it is desirable that the section should be as it is, because it shows that the Act of 1914 is again in force, and likewise this Bill, which will become the Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I understand quite well why the proposed title is in the form in which it is. I understand that the Act of 1914, except in so far as it is amended by this Act, is still in force, so you have to put it in the title.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The Act of 1919 disappears?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 195, an Act to provide for the insurance of returned soldiers by the Dominion of Canada.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is the outcome of recommendations made by the Parliamentary Committee which has been sitting since almost the beginning of the session, making a very extended inquiry into the re-establishment of returned soldiers. The subject of insurance for returned soldiers very naturally is one in which a very great interest has been evinced, particularly since the return of the disabled men from the recent war.

The principle underlying the Bill is this. The returned soldier has served his country patriotically and loyally, and by reason of that service has more or less suffered physical impairment or disability, and does not possess the physical qualifications to pass the necessary medical examination that very properly is enforced by insurance companies doing a commercial business. The question arises, is it not highly proper that the state should make provision to meet the difficulties which the returned soldier has encountered? The Government therefore proposes to establish an insurance scheme, by which the returned soldier who makes application may take out a policy just as he would do in any legitimate or standard company.

The only difference will be that the medical examination will be dispensed with.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: That is a very important difference.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Undoubtedly. But naturally we could not expect those who have served their country under the very trying conditions which faced those men to come back with all their physical energies and qualities unimpaired. If such were the case they would not require the assistance which the Bill proposes to give them. Probably it would be undesirable to go into the provisions of the Bill in detail now, inasmuch as they can be elaborated upon in Committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think that the suggestion made by the honourable gentleman from Fredericton (Hon. Mr. Thompson) deserves rather more consideration than it is apparently going to get. As I understand it, the principle upon which this Bill is based is that the man who has gone overseas and who has been permanently disabled shall be entitled to receive state insurance. The point is just this: how is the Government going to tell whether a man is entitled to insurance or not unless there is a medical examination? I think it is absolutely necessary that you should have a medical certificate stating that the man has suffered permanent physical injuries. There seems to me to be a disposition to leave our ordinary common sense behind when we come to deal with men who went to the front. If the money which the country is supposed to pay these men were to be picked up on the streets, it would be well enough; then we need not exercise any precautions in dealing with the matter. But that is not the case. The money that is to go to pay these benefits is money that will be taken out of the people of Canada, and I think the people are entitled to be satisfied that that money goes to persons who are really qualified by law to receive it, and I fail to see how you can deal with a man as having been disabled unless there is a medical examination.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think the honourable gentleman from Halifax has not very well considered the question. This Bill has for its object the insurance of soldiers who cannot pass a medical examination. They are badly injured, and will not be accepted as risks by ordinary companies.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I quite agree.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the applicant have to show that he has not been able to obtain insurance in a standard company?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Now I come to the second point. Those men are bad risks and they are taken care of by the Government. But suppose those who could pass an examination were to apply for this insurance, surely my honourable friend could not object, because they are good risks, and the more good risks there are the easier it will be for the Government to carry on the insurance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Provided that the rates are the standard rates charged by the other insurance companies.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: These are standard rates, I understand. They are based on 4 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I owe an apology to the House. I spoken under the misapprehension that this insurance was confined to soldiers who had suffered under disability, but I find it is a general enactment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say that this does not differ so widely from the class of business that is becoming, I understand, somewhat popular with standard companies—that is, group insurance. I know the matter has been discussed on previous occasions, and my impression is that we have already legislated along this line in giving certain companies authority to do group insurance, and under which authority they take insurance upon an existing group, entirely irrespective of individual physical standards.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Watson in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask Mr. Finlayson, the Superintendent of Insurance, to come within the bar?

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—definitions:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that after the word "child" in paragraph b, the word "legally" be inserted—"child legally adopted." Also that in paragraph g, in the second line, the word "has" be struck out, and that after the word "served" the following words be added: "as an officer or warrant officer, or who enlisted or was enrolled or was drafted for service."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Read the paragraph as amended.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN (reading):

"Returned soldier" means any person, male or female, who served as an officer or warrant officer, or who enlisted, or was enrolled, or was drafted for service in the naval, military or air forces of Canada in the Great War—

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The rest of the clause remains as it is?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In what capacity would a woman have been serving?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As a nurse.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would this include a V. A. D. girl also?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know whether the V. A. D.'s were enrolled or not. If they were enrolled they are entitled to the insurance. I could not tell the honourable gentleman at the moment what the military standing of the V. A. D. would be, because it is in a sense a voluntary organization. I understand it is not a military organization in the sense that nursing sisters are. Nurses became, and are, members of the militia.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They had the rank of officers.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would like to ask my honourable friend, with regard to paragraph b, why is the date set as the first of July, 1920—"a child legally adopted before the first day of July, 1920, or not less than five years before the death of the insured"?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You mean, it should be a later date?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No. Why is it not another date?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We did not want to give time to permit of any illegal act of the kind being covered up by an attempt at legalization.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The war ended in 1918, but this paragraph extends the time right to the first of July, 1920.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think the idea is to prevent people from going on adopting children for the purpose of getting under the Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely; and, furthermore, this anticipates the Act coming into force about July the first.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Does this mean that anybody who served can get an insurance policy at these rates?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, any person coming within the classes mentioned in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You would make it perfectly certain if you fixed a date anterior to the first of July. Quite a number of people have had notice of this Bill, and if they were inclined to perpetrate a fraud they would have an opportunity to do so. Why not say the first of January, 1920?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They would not have had any intimation of a particular clause of this kind. They might have a general intimation of a Bill providing for insurance for returned soldiers, but I think this would come as news to any of us; none of us would have anticipated this particularity in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: This is a special table of rates different from the ordinary rates?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They are based upon standard rates.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: If they are based on standard rates, could not the widow and orphan do just as well in any private company?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They could not get the insurance in a private company.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Why not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If they were insurable they could, but this is to cover a class of persons who have suffered from their war service and could not readily get insurance in standard companies.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is it confined to them?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is open to all who have served.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: But those are the necessitous cases.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Probably that class will be the more numerous.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is the difference, roughly speaking, in the rates?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They are practically the same; just a small fraction lower than the standard rates.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why are they made lower?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. These are based upon the 4 per cent table, whereas the insurance table, as my honourable friend will doubtless remember, was placed some years ago on the 3 per cent basis. The 4 per cent table will permit of rates being slightly less than the standard rates under the 3 per cent interest calculation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I suppose the rate has been made as low as is consistent with the cost of administration?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: The rates seem all right. This is a kind of clearing-house, is it not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is a clearing-house?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Do you not know that?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, I do not. I cannot tell from the definition that we have just had.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: I did not hear the definition. In the United States they have what they call a clearing-house for insurance companies. I want to ask the honourable leader a question: how do any of these people obtain insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Those who come within the classes provided for in the Bill will make application to a representative of the Government for a policy up to a maximum of $5,000, paying the premium prescribed in the Act.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: And proving that they are entitled to insurance by having been in the service?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, the necessary evidence will have to be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Has any estimate been made as to the number of persons to whom this Act will apply?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will apply to the whole Expeditionary Force. It is difficult to say how many will avail themselves of it.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: The widow of a soldier can take out insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Even if she is not insurable in an ordinary company?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, she can do that. The probabilities are that the risk—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I suppose that the larger the numbe: of insured the better for all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, the larger the number the better.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The lower, proportionately, the cost of administration will be.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The widow of the deceased soldier will probably be a better risk than he would have been in his lifetime.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: The rates are calculated on the expectation of life?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DOMILLE: And while the ordinary company does not take as many chances, the Government think these will be commensurate with the risk they take?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to, and section 2 as amended was agreed to.

On section 3—insurance and limits thereof:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The insurance runs from $500 to $5,000.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is the insured entitled to have the whole amount payable to his beneficiary at his death, or is it payable only in this way, one-fifth in cash and the remainder by annuity?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is at the option of the insured.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I had not noticed the words, " at the option of the insured."

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: One-fifth is payable at death and the rest is payable in annuities.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So that the beneficiary may not squander the whole amount.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Subsection 5 is a very complicated clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All insurance is more or less complicated. It will be worked out by the Insurance Branch of the Department of Finance. They will be quite equal to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will this insurance money form a special fund?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, there will be a consolidated fund established for the administration of this Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So that we may see from year to year what are the results obtained and whether we are going behind or holding our own?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The fund will be quite distinct and the results can be ascertained.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: With regard to the words,

—"if such disability is not deemed to be attributable to his service so as to bring him under the provisions of the Pension Act—"

Suppose that after paying four, five, or six premiums, the insured is declared to be unable to carry on a gainful occupation. He is granted a board and is found eligible for a pension. What becomes of the four, five, or six premiums that he has already paid?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suppose my honourable friend has in view a case in which the insured drops the premiums?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No. I have in mind this case. A man is insured say on the first of July, 1920. He pays five premiums. After five years it is found that because of disability incurred during war service he is absolutely disabled and becomes entitled to a pension. Does he retain his insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. He goes on paying the premiums if he desires to do so. But let us assume that he dies and leaves a widow and that the widow is entitled to a certain pension by reason of his services. The combined benefits of the insurance and the pension must not exceed the $5,000 or the benefits of this Act; but she will be entitled as beneficiary to a return of the premiums in the same proportion as the principal is reduced.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Take a converse case. The insured does not wish to continue, or rather his means is not sufficient to enable him to continue paying the premium. What becomes of the three, four, or five years' premiums he has already paid? I suppose he would be entitled to a paid-up policy.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no provision here for surrender, as in certain standard companies, but it can be made the subject of a regulation. When the Act is put into operation it may be found desirable to make an arrangement of that kind.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It seems to me it would be only fair that if the insured has paid for a number of years and is unable to continue the payments, he should get the benefit of either a paid-up policy or a cash surrender value.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There may be a regulation in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But can you have such a regulation if you do not provide for it in the Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, yes, it is provided for in the Act. Will my honourable friend look at section 17, paragraph f. The necessary authority is taken under that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT (reading):

Determining beforehand the cases or classes of cases in which an insurance contract may be surrendered and a cash surrender value paid therefor, or a paid-up insurance contract—

I see.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—payments, whom to be made to:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why is a creditor eliminated?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is only for the benefit of the insured or his family. The Government could scarcely be expected to extend the advantages of this Act to the creditor of a deceased man. The creditor has to look out for himself.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Creditors cannot come in on this insurance any more than they can on ordinary beneficiary insurance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If a creditor advanced loans on the security of the insurance why would he not be made a beneficiary?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That would be an insidious way of getting an assignment of the benefits which should go to his family. That would induce speculation. I think it better not to admit that.

Section 4 was agreed to.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—beneficiaries when insured is unmarried:

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Why not include the mother as a beneficiary?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: How is he going to determine the future children?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: If a man who is taking out insurance has a widowed mother why should not provision be made for her?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why this clause at all? The insurance would go to his legal heirs in any event.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They would not be his legal heirs in this case.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: A married man might have a grandchild, and this section would debar him from making the grandchild his heir.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Suppose he is divorced, what are you going to do then?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let us follow this section: the man's first duty is to his wife and children.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But he has none.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He can make the insurance assignable to his future wife, or future wife and children. At the time of his death he may not be married.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: This section would debar the children by his first wife altogether. It only includes his future wife or future children.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment proposed to this by the honourable leader of the Government, which reads as follows, immediately at the close of section 6:

—as he deems fit; but if at his death he is still unmarried or is a widower without children the insurance money shall, subject to sections 4 and 9 of this Act, fall into and become part of the estate of the insured.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Who is to be the trustee for the future wife and children?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Sections 4 and 9 make provision for the devolution of the estate in the event of this condition mentioned in section 6 not arising.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is only in the case of the death of the beneficiary named in the policy; but section 6 debars the insured from making a contract of insurance for the benefit of any but widow or children. What about the case of a grandchild?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That would come under section 4 and the amendment thereto. It makes provision that he may make the insurance money payable that way if he chooses. Section 6 presupposes that there is to be a future wife and children, and the object is to make provision for them to the exclusion of others; but if they are not in existence, then the ordinary devolution provided for in sections 4 and 11 apply.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Let me put the whole case. A soldier has been married; his wife is dead; by that wife he had a child; who is dead also; but that child gave birth to a grandchild; so that this unmarried or widowed soldier may have no children at all, but may have a grandchild. He may want to leave the insurance to the grandchild, but he cannot do it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But this section presupposes that he has a wife and children, or a wife or children. If those classes do not exist he may will it to the grandchild or anybody to whom he wish.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does that mean that the Act is not to extend to more than one generation?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not if they are in existence.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But suppose the children are all gone, but they have left a child, and the widower says, "I am going to insure my life in favour of my grandchild." He cannot do that under this section.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In case he has a second wife, and has children by that wife, they take preference over any grandchild that he may have by reason of a former marriage.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But that has nothing to do with my point at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will consider that. We will not give the Bill the third reading to-day.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am not going to prolong the discussion; I do not think it is worth while.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think section 6 outlines a good policy.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 7, 8, and 9 were agreed to.

On section 10—limit of benefits when death of insured attributable to war service:

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What does that computation mean?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It means that both insurance and pension combined shall not exceed the total amount of insurance.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I would call my honourable friend's attention to the peculiar wording at line 24: "which the amount of the said deduction is." I do not know what kind of language that is.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: My honourable friend from Ottawa will understand that these two things are taken in connection: the amount coming to the heirs under his pension and the amount coming under the insurance. The balance, which would be less than $5,000, we will say, would be proportioned.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is all clear to me, but the rest is not clear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We must leave something for the lawyers. It does not do to make these things too clear.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend has beside him the officer who is going to administer this Act, and surely we ought to understand what we are doing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If people read the discussion in Hansard they will understand.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But people who do not read Hansard will not understand. I really think we ought to put that in proper shape.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps that section might stand, and between now and to-morrow the Department can clarify it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will not ask for the third reading to-day, but if my honourable friend, in again looking at it, should think it desirable to amend it somewhat, I would be quite willing.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I cannot think of any amendment; I do not know what it means.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like it to be accurate, and I am quite willing to have it go back again for any clearing up if there is any doubt about it. Has my honourable friend any doubt?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes. I cannot say, any more than the member from Ottawa, what that means.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We know what it means: the question is, does it carry out the meaning?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What does it mean?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A deduction has to be made; that is assuming the benefits to be for $5,000, if the two funds combined exceed the amount of $5,000 a deduction will be made so as to reduce the amount to that, so that the beneficiary will not receive, by pension and insurance combined, more than the maximum amount of the insurance. That is the meaning. That is to say, they cannot have two benefits at the same time, one through the policy, and another through the pension, exceeding $5,000; and if on the death of the insured that condition does exist, then a deduction will be made, reducing it to the amount of the maximum.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: We need not go up to $5,000. Suppose we take the amount for which the soldier is insured at $1,000. His heirs are receiving pensions for their lifetime, and those are computed on an actuarial basis, and if they go up to $1,000 the premiums paid in by the deceased will be returned to his heirs proportionately, with 4 per cent, interest.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They may be entitled to a very substantial return in premiums; but until the death of the assured it is not possible to ascertain what the deduction may be. That being ascertained, the deduction is made.

Section 10 was agreed to.

Sections 11 and 12 were agreed to.

On section 13—Minister may refuse to insure:

Hon. Mr. GORDON: What would that cover?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If there are good reasons why insurance should not be taken, the Minister may refuse it. There may be an aggravated condition brought about by the man's own acts.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He might have got syphilis since.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 13 was agreed to.

Section 14 was agreed to.

On section 15—medical examinations:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: In calculating the cost, has any provision been made for probable benefits, that is to say, profits beyond the amount of insurance issued?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will be no profits; it is non-participating. I wish there were even a distant prospect of there being profits.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Bill first provides that no medical examination shall be required; then it provides that the Minister may require a medical examination. Would it not have been better all the way through to have medical examinations?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Then it would be absolutely useless.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Then what is the good of them at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Conditions may arise after a man's return from service which would make it apparent that he was not entitled to take advantage of the Act. In such cases the Minister may order a medical examination for the purpose of satisfying himself on that point.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I understand that this is not based on business principles at all; because to insure without medical examination is the most unbusinesslike thing that one could think of.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is done in the case of group insurance.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The reason for the passage of this Act is the claim, which is very well founded, that men in the service had put themselves in a position in which it was impossible for them to get insurance under ordinary conditions, and that the Government should step in and say: "If you received this disability as a result of your service we will do away with the medical examination and take you as though you had not gone to war at all, presuming that you were all right when you passed the army examination."

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is something we are doing for the returned soldier.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. It is being done in pursuance of the report to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But of course the insurance can be taken advantage of by others than soldiers.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no. It is confined to returned men.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought the benefit extended beyond that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. Further than that, the application must be made within two years.

Section 15 was agreed to.

Sections 16 and 17 were agreed to.

On section 18—money received to go to Consolidated Revenue Fund:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I see it is proposed to deal with this money as part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but there will be a separate account. My honourable friend will see from the next section how it will be kept.

Section 18 was agreed to.

On section 19—statement to be made, etc.:

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think we need a little information on this. There is a large blank in the section.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That should read: "The superintendent of insurance or such other officer as may be appointed."

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It is proposed in line 22 that the word "three' should be stricken out and the word "six" inserted.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I should like to ask the Minister if he does not think it would be wise to incorporate in this Bill a provision to the effect that a man who had lapsed in this payments one, two, or three months could have his policy reinstated. A man may carry on his payments for perhaps ten or fifteen years, and then lapse in his payments. In ordinary fraternal insurance there is provision made that within one or two or three months, by paying up arrears, a man may revive his policy.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: He has to pass another medical examination.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No, not within a reasonable time.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Why is it necessary to change the period from three months to six months? Is it going to take six months to make up statement at the end of the fiscal year?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let it stand at three months.

Section 19 was agreed to.

Section 20 was agreed to.

On section 21—commencement of Act:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why is the Act not put in force at once?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Forms and things of that kind have to be prepared and distributed; and different officers will have to be appointed.

Section 21 was agreed to.

The schedule was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

MILITIA PENSION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 197, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it will doubtless be remembered that last session or the session before we passed a provision in the Militia Act precluding a member of the Militia from drawing pensions from both the Militia and a second source. That is to say, he would draw only one pension. That provision worked in this way. Certain Imperial officers were in receipt of a pension, and at the same time they were entitled to a pension under the Militia Act. By our action we precluded such persons, while they were drawing a Militia pension, from availing themselves of the advantage of a pension from another source. It was done, I think, without our having a full knowledge of what we were doing. The Bill was sent down from the Commons and we acted accordingly. The purpose of this Bill is to repeal subsection 2 of section 25 of the Militia Pension Act.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would the honourable gentleman read the clause which we are repealing?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would suggest to my honourable friend that it might be better to go into Committee and deal with it then.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; when we go into Committee I will do that. The object of the Bill is simply to repeal that section.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—subsection forbidding duplication of pensions repealed:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is what we enacted in the session of 1919:

25. (1) The pension of a widow shall, if her husband was at the time of his death on full pay, be an amount equal to one-half of the pension to which he would have been entitled if he had been retired compulsorily immediately before his death, or, if at the time of his death he had been pensioned, an amount equal to one-half of such pension.

(2) If a widow or child is entitled to a pension, gratuity or allowance under this Act and is also entitled to a pension, gratuity or allowance under any other Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, or under any law of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or under the law of any other portion of His Majesty's Dominions, such widow, or, in the case of a child, the parent or guardian, or tutor of such child, shall elect which pension, gratuity or allowance she or he desires to accept, but no widow or child shall receive two pensions, gratuities or allowances.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That looks to be fair enough.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Does the beneficiary have the option of taking the larger pension? That is the case in England. When there are two pensions the pensioners have the option of taking whichever one they like. Naturally they take the larger one.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: Now they can get only one pension.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But we do not want them to get both.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. By the regulation of last year we precluded the widow or the child from participating in both pensions. They had to take one or the other. But if they have come rightly by both, it seems to me it is not equitable to prevent them from getting the two. Let me read this again:

The pension of a widow shall, if her husband was at the time of his death on full pay, be an amount equal to one-half of the pension.—

That deals with what the pension of a widow shall be. Then we went on:

If a widow or child is entitled to a pension, gratiuty, or allowance under this Act.

That is, under the Militia Pension Act—

—and is also entitled to a pension, gratuity, or allowance under any other Act passed by the Parliament of Canada.

She might have been entitled to a pension arising from an allowance which her husband should have drawn say from one of the railways or from some commercial institution, and that would have been under an Act passed by the Parliament of Canada—

—or under any law of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or under the law of any other portion of His Majesty's Dominions, such widow, or, in the case of a child, the parent or guardian, or tutor of such child, shall elect which pension, gratuity or allowance she or he desires to accept, but no widow or child shall receive two pensions, gratuities or allowances.

Hon. Mr. POWER: That is subsection 2 of section 25, is it? That is what we are striking out?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is what we propose to strike out.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What happens in a case of this kind? Suppose the widow is entitled to a pension in her own right, because of having served, for instance, as a nurse during the war?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: She could not draw both; she would have to forego one pension or the other, under the legislation of last year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, that is what I mean. But we are making it permissible for her to draw at the same time the pension to which she is entitled in her own right and the pension she should get because of her husband's death?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The Act will have the effect of enabling her to draw those two pensions?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. That was the law before last session.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not see why it should not be so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But last session Parliament unwittingly, without considering the effect or the injustice, passed this clause.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Does the honourable gentleman think it is an injustice? The system that prevails in other countries does not allow of two pensions being paid. Take England, for instance. A man in the army retires and gets a pension. If he takes any kind of service, either in England or in the colonies, and if the remuneration is greater than his pension, he foregoes the pension. He is not entitled to receive his pension in addition. The pensions are supposed to be reasonable. Why give two pensions to one individual? The Government must have become very rich. It does not appear to me unjust to provide that only one pension shall be paid.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Suppose that an officer in the militia, through his service in the Imperial army, was entitled to a pension; then he came to Canada and served full time, and became entitled to a pension under the Militia Act. Should his widow be deprived of the pension he earned in England before coming to Canada?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: She would be if she were living in England.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not prepared to accept that construction.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: She would not get the pension from the Imperial Government. The British Act says that if they get anything from any of the overseas dominions, then that amount is deducted from the pension in England.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Most of the honourable Senators present are I suppose, unable to foresee the effect of the repeal of this clause. Its repeal may result in abuses creeping in and causing commotion in the country. At the moment I am not in a position to say what effect it will have. I know that people generally are somewhat chary about the liberal granting of pensions, and if they hear that two pensions are paid to one person it may open their eyes and they may wonder what we are coming to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would be very sorry to ask the House to pass this legislation without full consideration being given it. I have made inquiry and am told that there are in the Militia Department ten or twelve cases that this would affect. I may say also that the next Bill to come before us deals with precisely the same subject as it affects the Mounted Police. If my honourable friend would like to look into this matter we will let the third reading stand until, say, Monday next.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This was recommended by the Pension Committee too?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Looking at the matter in its broadest aspect, I think it is but fair that if a widow is properly in receipt of a pension from another source and is legally entitled to a pension, say from the Canadian Government, she should not be deprived of the one or the other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have this case in mind—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have no case in mind myself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:—which I cite in order that we may see how far public opinion will endorse our action. In 1906, I think, the Parliament of Canada decided that a Minister of the Crown who had rendered five years' service, disassociating himself from his private business and giving all his time to the state, should ipso facto receive a certain pension, which was not a large one. I think it was $2,500 or $3,500 a year.

Hon. Mr. POWER: It was half his regular salary.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think it was about $3,500 a year. The ex-Ministers who were thus benefited received that pension for a certain number of years. But it happened that some of those ex-Ministers were re-elected to the House. One or two were sitting in this Chamber. There was such an infernal noise throughout the country because those men who had served the state for five years were receiving both the pension and an indemnity as members of Parliament, that the Government that had obtained the legislation came before Parliament and asked for the withdrawal of the pension. I think that that pension was a very proper one. I remember that when I represented to the Prime Minister that the action had been hasty, and perhaps the pension might have been suspended, or there might have been a deduction from it of the amount of the indemnity received by the ex-Minister as a member of either House—I was speaking, of course, of the impression prevailing throughout the country and the argument that was being used against the payment of both the indemnity and the pension—the Prime Minister said that he thought it was a mean view to take that a certain public man—whom he named—who had been Minister of Finance for a number of years, and had brought to the affairs of this country mature experiences and great talent, should be deprived of a pension of $3,500 because he happened to be continuing to serve the country and was receiving an indemnity of $2,500. Yet such was the state of opinion in the country a few years after the legislation was passed. Now we are adopting the same principle that we had to abandon because of the force of public opinion: we are declaring that a person may receive two pensions from this country. I am afraid it will create considerable scandal in the country, in view of the experience we have had, for I doubt that public opinion has changed very much.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Perhaps the Committee will permit me to say a word or two on the historical matter that the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has brought up. The Act to which he refers was supposed to be based on the English principle. The English law provided that in order to qualify for a pension the ex-Minister had to make a declaration that his private means were insufficient to enable him to live in the style to which he had been accustomed. That was one qualification. The other qualification was that if the ex-Minister became a member of Parliament the pension was to cease, or, at any rate, the amount that he received in the one capacity should be deducted from the amount that he received in the other. At that time, of course, in England, the members of Parliament were not paid, and that provision applied only to place-holders. Unfortunately in Canada we did not make the exception which was made in England. There was no declaration required from the ex-Minister that his circumstances called for the pension, and there was nothing to hinder him from occupying a position in Parliament or in the Government and drawing the pension. I remember that one gentleman who had been leader of the Government in this country was drawing $2,500 a year as a member of one House and $3,500 as an ex-Minister. He was a gentleman who was very well off, and his case attracted a good deal of attention. I thought it was worth while, just for the information of the committee, to mention the fact.

The Bill was reported.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 196, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the principle which applies in this Bill is that to which I have already referred with respect to the previous Bill, but the change in the statute is somewhat different. Last year, apparently upon the recommendation of the Committee on Pensions, we passed this legislation:

> Provided, however, that the amount of any pension, gratuity or allowance which any member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police receives or is entitled to receive or apply for, in respect of any injury received by him while serving in the military, naval or air forces aforesaid shall be deducted from any pension, gratuity or allowance to which such member would be entitled under the said Act, other than pension for four years of service, irrespective of any infirmity of mind or body or bodily injury; and no widow or child of any such member who received, or is entitled to receive or apply for any pension, annuity, gratuity or allowance in consequence of the death, incapacity or injury of any such member while serving in the forces aforesaid shall be entitled to any pension, annuity or allowance under the said Act.

Now it has been recommended by the Committee on Pensions and Re-establishment that this provision of last year should likewise be repealed. I cannot inform the House as to whether there are any specific cases on which this bears heavily, but the House of Commons has passed the Bill, and I presume it has done this largely upon the recommendation of that Committee. To what extent the Committee may have heard witnesses or representations as to the desirability of the legislation I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. POWER: As I understand, it simply puts the Police in the same position as the Army.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As they were before last session.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. McMeans in the Chair.

On section 1—proviso forbidding duplication of pensions repealed:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under the Pension Act, which is next on the Order Paper, are we increasing the pensions to these various persons?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The increase of pensions by Bill 198, which is, I think, next on the Order Paper, would have the effect of increasing, by way of bonus, the pensions of the police and the militia. It is not absolutely certain to increase them because those who belonged to the Canadian Expeditionary Force are not necessarily members of the militia at the present time. But it is well known that many of the police went overseas. There is a relationship in the three Bills so far as increased pensions are concerned. Of course, that does not affect the principle.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No; but the point is that under this Bill there would probably be a larger number who would be entitled to draw this double pension.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it does not affect that; it does not create a new class of pensioners. The Pension Bill proposes increasing the rate of pensions only by way of bonus; it does not propose creating new classes of pensioners.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend said, I think, with regard to the Bill we were discussing just now, the Militia Bill, that there were only some 8 or 10 cases of men drawing the double pension.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But under the present Bill there would be a great many more.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not necessarily. If it proposed creating a new class of pensioners I could understand that. It will increase the pension.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Were there not a large number of Royal Northwest Mounted Policemen who went overseas, and who would be entitled to the pension under the Northwest Mounted Police Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am assuming their pensions would have been fixed some time ago, anterior to the passage of last session's legislation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Those men would draw the pension under the Northwest Mounted Police Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And would now daw the pension under Pension Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, there is a possibility of their doing that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And under the Pension Bill we are also increasing the pensions?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We are going a good deal further by this legislation. Last year we enacted legislation to do away with this double pension matter, and now we are not only giving them immediately the double pension, but we are increasing the pensions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The injustice of last year was that rights which pensioners enjoyed up to the legislation of last year, and which they had enjoyed for years, were at once disturbed and interfered with, possibly wiped out. There were vested interests of a very substantial character interfered with; that is to say, pensions that had been drawn possibly for many years were suddenly discontinued by the Act of last year, but we apparently gave no consideration to the fact. However, I will make further inquiry before we give this Bill the third reading.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

PENSION BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 198, an Act to amend the Pension Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER: This is a long and important measure, and I think we should have a little more time to consider it before going into it. We have done a fair afternoon's work, and I presume the honourable leader does not object to our going into it to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We might have the honourable leader's explanation of the Bill on the second reading.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think the principle involved is that of making pensions all round. I think that might be considered.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let this stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

The order for the second reading of the Bill was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Saturday, June 26, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON presented the report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the subject of the steamship service to the Magdalen islands.

He said: I desire to make a few remarks in respect to this report. Until after the committee had met, I was not personally acquainted with the subject-matter to be considered. I found then that it had to do with matters that were of concern to 6,800 residents of Canada living on the Magdalen islands, which are, as I understand, part of the county of Gaspé. The Magdalen islands are situated at a considerable distance from the mainland, and the people living there depend entirely for their supplies of various kinds, such as flour and clothing, upon steamship connection with the mainland. The Magdalen islands are located nearest to the county of Kings, in Prince Edward Island, and the Government has subsidized a steamship service to run from there to the islands. For six months of the year, the Committee ascertained, they are practically in the Arctic zone, for they are surrounded by ice and the people have no chance of reaching the mainland. We found it to be important that a service should be made available to the people of the islands as early as possible after the opening of navigation in the spring, and as late as possible in the fall, in order that the supplies for the six months during which they are frozen in may be obtained. The people of the islands are engaged in fishing, and the products of their industry, such as fish and lobsters, are said to be worth upwards of $1,000,000. Their industry is a genuine wealth-producing industry, and these people belong to the Dominion of Canada and their interests should be conserved in the best possible way, even as we would be disposed to conserve the interests of a larger population. The steamship service they have had has not been equal to the demand, and that service is of vastly more importance to those people than the equipping of the Parliamentary tower with a carillon would be to the people of Canada.

In investigating the matter we have dealt with the different Departments which have to do with the subsidizing of the steamers. In many respects the service has been unsatisfactory, and in a general way the report, while not severely critical, brings to the notice of this honourable House the fact that there has been a deficiency in connection with this service. Permit me to read the concluding paragraph in the findings of the Committee:

> Your Committee, taking the whole evidence into consideration, would strongly urge the Government to build a steamer of 4,000 barrels capacity, with accommodation for about 50 passengers and speed of not less than 12 to 14 knots per hour, capable of making two round trips per week in the busy season.

The Committee was influenced largely by the views expressed by the honourable Senator from Souris (Hon. Mr. McLean), who is conversant with all the facts, who knows the people and knows their needs. The honourable gentleman is familiar with what is required to serve the people. I submit the report for the consideration of this honourable House.

LAKE WINNIPEG.

NEED OF A HARBOUR OF REFUGE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I desire to call the attention of the Government to a condition that exists on lake Winnipeg. I think it was four years ago that the Government undertook to build a small harbour of refuge on what is known as Big George's island, in lake Winnipeg. There are a great many boats going up and down that lake, which is 300 miles long.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is it a question of urgency? Cannot the honourable gentleman give notice?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It is a question of urgency, and I am leaving tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: That is the urgent part.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It has been customary to get through with some of the Orders of the Day. By the leave of the House the honourable gentleman would then be allowed to make a full statement.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Leave the honourable gentleman alone. He has as much right to talk as you have.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I will take only a few moments. This is a matter of great importance. There are large boats travelling on this lake which carry at times from 50 to 100 passengers. Three years ago there was very nearly a serious disaster because there was no harbour of refuge at that point. One of the big boats, the Grand Rapids, was in distress, and if it had not been for the fishing boats there might have been very serious consequences. At that time this matter was brought to the attention of the Department of Public Works, and it was again brought to their attention at the beginning of this session. I am told that they placed an item of $18,000 in the Estimates to complete this work, and I am speaking now in the hope that nothing will be allowed to prevent the recommendation of the Department being carried out. I predict that if this work is not done there will be a disaster at that point some time which may mean a very serious loss of life and property. The expenditure required is a very small one, as the work is fully half completed, and there is no excuse for not proceeding with it at the present time. I telephoned to the Public Works Department, and I was informed by the Deputy Minister that somebody had struck that item out of the Estimates. I want to protest against that action, and to point out that if a wreck takes place at that point and lives are lost the Government will be directly responsible for the loss of those lives.

DIVORCE BILLS.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill N5, An Act for the Relief of Mildred Euphemia Alsina Blanche Martin.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill O5, an Act for the Relief of Arthur John Frankling, otherwise known as John Arthur Holmes.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill P5, an Act for the Relief of Nelson Alexander Boylen.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Q5, an Act for the Relief of Mahala Burton.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill R5, an Act for the Relief of Joseph Henry Forbes.—Hon. Mr. Harmer.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 195, an Act to provide for the Insurance of Returned Soldiers by the Dominion of Canada as amended.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

MILITIA PENSION BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 197, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 196, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BOARDS OF TRADE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill M5, an Act to amend the Boards of Trade Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the object of this Bill is to amend the Boards of Trade Act so as to afford further facilities and encouragement for the incorporation of boards of trade. It is not a very radical departure from the present Act, but a glance over the eight sections of the Bill will impress honourable gentlemen that it is in the public interest that we should facilitate in every possible way organizations of this character.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill has come down to us at a rather late hour of the Session, and, although my honourable friend says it is not a very radical departure, I want to draw his attention to one or two matters in the Bill which I think indicate rather extraordinary forms of legislation. In the first instance, section 3 deals with the incorporation of boards of trade. When I first took up this Bill to read it, I thought we were repealing the old Act, which deals with the incorporation of boards of trade; but, on comparing it with that Act, I find that if the present Bill goes into effect in the form in which it is presented to the House there will be two methods of organizing boards of trade. It seems to me that this is an extraordinary kind of legislation to introduce. The honourable leader of the Government, when he introduced this Bill to the House, said that he desired to extend the facilities for forming boards of trade. If that is the intention I would suggest that a better way of dealing with it would be to amend the sections of the old Act, and not have different sections in the two Acts dealing with the same subject. Then, further on in this Bill we find other sections providing for the powers to be exercised by boards of trade formed under this Act; but it is not very clear whether they have all the powers possessed by boards of trade formed under the Act as it stands today. Possibly my honourable friend may have some amendments to make in committee which will put that matter right.

Then if honourable gentlemen will look at section 7 of the Bill they will see rather extraordinary drafting. That section reads as follows:

> Any Board of Trade established under the provisions of this Act shall have all the powers and authorities conferred on a Board of Trade by the principal Act and shall be subject to all the provisions of the principal Act except in so far as the same may be varied by the provisions of this Act.

I have always understood that when we amended an Act of Parliament the entire Act was to be read as one; but, as I see that matter to-day, this section, if adopted, will put us in the very peculiar position of placing on the statute book two independent Acts. We refer to the "principal Act" and to this Act. I think the ordinary form of legislation is to amend the old Act while we are dealing with the various sections, and then treat it as all one. Unless my honourable friend is prepared to amend this Bill very considerably in committee I think the legislation is in very undesirable form.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say to my honourable friend that the Bill before us proposes to furnish very much more simple machinery than exists under the present Boards of Trade Act. The organizations which would be formed under or would take advantage of this Act will not be so elaborate in their purposes and machinery as those under the existing Act. This Bill is designed for the purpose of giving encouragement in smaller places to organizations that will be of advantage to the community. I might illustrate that by stating that section 4 of this Bill is copied largely from section 7 of the amendment to the companies Act of 1917, which in turn is taken almost verbally from the corresponding section of the Friendly Societies Act of the United Kingdom. Co-operative associations and other bodies of local public activity are incorporated under it. That legislation has been on the statute book for many years, and its operation is widely known throughout the whole United Kingdom; but in Canada no such legislation has been introduced. It seems to me that no harm can flow from giving every facility to public organization for the purpose of united effort along any line that may be legitimate within that community.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We all agree upon that feature,

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Hence this Bill will furnish greater encouragement than the present Act, under which Boards of Trade are incorporated to-day. It is for that purpose that it has been introduced.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would ask Mr. Mulvey to come within the bar, with the consent of the Committee.

On section 1—short title:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: In view of the remarks made by the honourable leader of the Government just now, I would suggest to him whether it would not be better to call these organizations Chambers of Commerce, or by some other title, so as to make the Act absolutely separate from the Boards of Trade Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under paragraph 6 of section 2 of the Boards of Trade Act, chapter 124, the two terms are interchangeable; the organizations can adopt the one term or the other: "Board of Trade includes Chamber of Commerce." It seems to me, therefore, that by keeping this to the term we use here we establish a distinction between this Bill, or the Act as it will become, and the Boards of Trade Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The only distinction is that one is known as the Boards of Trade Act and the other is known as the Boards of Trade Amendment Act, 1920.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So far as legislation is concerned.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If anybody tries to look this matter up in order to find out under which Act he is going to incorporate a Board of Trade he would require that information.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under this Act the organizations would not be known as Chambers of Commerce, whereas under the present Act, Chapter 124, that name may be adopted. I think that in the province of Quebec the term chiefly used is "Chamber of Commerce."

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That does not get away from the difficulty of having two Acts governing boards of trade.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Except that the one makes provision for a much simpler organization than the other, and it cannot use the term "Chamber of Commerce."

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—definition:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is merely an extension of the description of the governing bodies of boards of trade, and provides that they may be designated as directors, trustees, or otherwise. I might say that it is proposed that some rather numerous amendments should be made to this Bill, and I will proceed now, or if honourable gentlemen prefer we will let the Bill stand till to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think it will be better to let it stand.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What I had better do is to go on now, and thus get the amendments on the Minutes, and then the Committee will rise and report progress. We propose striking out section 2, but leaving in subsection c, and it will then read as follows:

2. Section two of the principal Act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:—

"(c) 'council' includes 'board of directors' and trustees of the governing body, howsoever designated."

(2) In this Act the expression "the principal Act" means the Boards of Trade Act, chapter one hundred and twenty-four of The Revised Statues of Canada, 1906, together with the amendments of that chapter made by chapter nine of the statutes of 1908 and by chapter twelve of the statutes of 1917.

So that my honourable friend will see that we draw a distinction. That will be section 2. .

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If there are to be many amendments, would it not be as well that the Bill be reprinted with the proper amendments and distributed between now and Monday?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will just put the amendments in now, and if we can get the Bill printed by that time we will do so. At the end of section 3 we will add:

If and when the provisions of sections four and five of the principal Act have been complied with, section six thereof shall apply to the association.

Then, referring to section 6, we add, after the word "Canada":

Or any Act of the legislature of the former Province of Canada, or of any province now forming part of Canada.

Then, under subsection 3 of section 8, line 46, we change "may" to "shall."

Progress was reported.

PENSION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 198, an Act to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a Bill that has been prepared for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations made by the Pension Committee of the House of Commons. It proposes increasing the pensions, in round figures, by about 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the total amount of that 50 per cent?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think it will represent in the aggregate about $8,000,000 of extra payments; but I might point out that those are bonuses; they can be reduced at any time. The pensions are not definitely fixed at that amount, but upon the return of normal conditions it will be optional with the Government of the day to reduce them by whatever amount may appear to them reasonable.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Assuming that the pensions this year are $25,000,000, it would mean a total of about $33,000,000?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: They are taken care of pretty well.

Hon. L. G. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I looked over this Bill with a certain amount of care, and I have to confess that after reading it I really did not see where the increases came in. But I did see that the Act which this Bill proposes to amend was exceedingly liberal towards the beneficiaries under it. It was stated in another place by the leader of the Government that Canada was dealing more generously with her soldiers than any other country in the world, and I think there is not much doubt about that. It has been pointed out that we already proposed to spend $25,000,000 for the purpose of improving the material condition of the soldiers and their relatives; and now, having dealt so liberally with them, and having the testimony of the leader of the Government to the fact that Canada has dealt most generously with them, we would hardly expect to be called upon to spend another $8,000,000 a year for the purpose of still further improving the condition of these men and their relatives.

As I venture to say in connection with another matter, if these $8,000,000 were to be found lying about on the surface of the earth, and not extracted from the pockets of our people, there might be very little objection to such a measure as this; we might be as liberal as we pleased. But under existing circumstances honourable gentlemen must bear in mind that we are undertaking now to deal still more liberally with a class as to whom we have the authority of the leader of the Government for saying that they are dealt with more liberally than the same class in any other country in the world. I do not think, honourable gentlemen, that Canada is in a position to scatter millions about in that manner. If it were shown that anyone was suffering any severe hardship, I could understand it; but under the circumstances it does seem to me that we are not justified in undertaking to add to our liabilities in this way. It is not as though we were adding the $8,000,000 just for one year. The honourable gentleman (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) spoke as though, whenever we pleased, we could drop the provisions of this measure. But every honourable gentleman knows that that is not the case. We arrange for paying so much, and no Government would have the courage, and no Opposition would have the courage, to come out with a declaration that they were going to cut off some of the pecuniary benefits that are conferred upon the beneficiaries by this measure. If Canada were an exceedingly wealthy country I do not think that even then we should be justified in spending money in this way; but Canada is not a very wealthy country, and our population, or the bulk of them at any rate, have to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. I do not think they should be condemned to see their earnings taken for the purpose of paying unnecessary sums. That is the way this thing strikes me.

Honourable gentlemen here can afford to be independent in a way that the members of the other House cannot. There is no doubt that the Great War Veterans and other military associations control, or are supposed to control, a very considerable vote, and naturally, as the members of the popular House have to go back to look for votes, they do things that they would not do as a matter of business. Looking at this question in the interest of the country and considering our own reputation, the Senate should do what you can hardly expect the members of the other Chamber to do, and this Bill, I think should be thrown out.

Hon. E. L. GIRROIR: Honourable gentlemen, I for one would be very sorry to see Canada recede from the proud position which we occupy to-day, in being the country which has done most for her returned men. I believe that Canada's soldiers were the greatest soldiers in the war. I do not think that there were any soldiers who equalled them in bravery and in devotion to duty, and Canada owes them so great a debt for the lustre which they have shed upon her name that we ought to deal most generously with the returned men. I have always taken the ground that the man who has come home from the war as sound physically as when he went is not entitled to any great consideration on our part. In his day and generation it was necessary for him to make that sacrifice. Wars in the past have been fought by the young men of other generations, and in the future he will be relieved from that duty, which will be cast upon others in their time. But for the man who has been wounded, the man who has been physically disabled and unfitted for the work necessary to enable him to maintain his family and himself, we cannot do too much. For the widows and orphans of those who have given up their lives or have sacrificed their health we cannot do too much. Generosity in this case is, I think, a generosity which will meet with the approval of the masses of the people of this country.

I do not think it is fair to say that this Bill was supported by members of the House of Commons because, forsooth, they might have to call upon the electors to give them votes on some future occasion. I do not think that proposition is fair to the members of the House of Commons—

Hon. Mr. POWER: It is true, though.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR:—because I believe —and I cannot understand how anybody could believe otherwise—that the members of the House of Commons as well as the members of this House generally are firmly of the opinion that the men who have received assistance under the Pension Act and the widows and the orphans of those who have lost their lives in the service of the country are not getting too much. I for one feel that it is our duty to strain our finances to the utmost in order that those who have suffered and sacrificed in the Great War should not go unpaid.

One can hardly realize what it means to a family to lose its head. One can hardly realize what it means to the widow and orphans to be deprived of the husband and father. Men have gone from Canada in the flower of their youth, full of strength and vigour, and have fought in the war and have come back decrepit and unable for the rest of their lives to earn a livelihood. For the rest of their lives they are going to suffer mentally or physically. I do not think, honourable gentlemen, that any money that we can pay can ever make up for that great loss.

Those of us who, on account of age or other impediment, were unable to take part in the war and fight for that great cause, the liberty of this country, in order that the great institutions under which we live might be saved for ourselves and for future generations, surely should not hesitate to make every sacrifice that can be made in order that those men who have done that great work for us, who have made that great sacrifice for us, should be recompensed as far as possible. In the case of a young man with good prospects in life, who went overseas and has come back an invalid and is going to suffer for the rest of his days, does any one mean to say that a mere pension will compensate him for that loss? I say that money cannot compensate him, but we certainly should go to the very limit in assisting him. As to the man who has come back safe and sound in mind and body, all I have to say is that he is mighty lucky; but for the man who has suffered, and for the dependents of the man who has suffered, I think we can hardly do too much, and I was a little surprised to hear the honourable member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) make the statement that he did. I am sure that if he looks into this matter more carefully and weighs all the considerations that should count in a question of this kind he will come to the conclusion later on, if he does not immediately do so, that we should all hold up our hands in order that the returned man and the dependents of the returned man should be given every possible comfort and financial assistance. I for one am proud to be a Canadian citizen and to be able to say that Canada has done more than any other country in the world for the returned men.

Hon. R. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I feel in this matter exactly as does the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat. I think that no one can express sufficient admiration for the men who have returned from the war or sufficient sympathy for the widows who have suffered the loss of their husbands. I am unable, however, to pass judgment upon the work of the Commons Committee. It would have been necessary to follow the work of that Committee from day to day, attending its meetings and listening to the advice which was given, in order to be able to state that from A to Z its work has been absolutely satisfactory. As that Committee, if I am not mistaken, made a unanimous report, I assume that this is an indication that they have judged sanely and conservatively. I quite understand that my honourable friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) is a little fearful of the efforts that may be made from year to year to increase those pensions in one way or another, in view of the experience following the Civil War in the United States. During the last fifty years there have been influences, both in Congress and out of Congress, which perhaps unduly inflated the list of pensions in the United States. But as to the report which is now before us, I will not quarrel with it: first, because I am not qualified to express a judgment; secondly, because I am disposed to give a full measure of sympathy to the class of men and women who are being favoured by this Act.

There is only one query which I would like to make: that is concerning section 27, which amends the Pension Act by adding new sections 47A and 47B. I observe that the Committee reported—it must have so reported, as I find the provision in the Bill—in favour of increasing the pensions of the South African War veterans and the veterans of the Fenian Raid and the Northwest Rebellion to the level of the present pensions. I am wondering whether the people who have got those pensions will be entitled to an increase de plano, without their cases being examined individually for the purpose of determining whether or not they are entitled to pensions according to the scale to be found in schedules A and B, or whether they will have to pass some kind of examination to entitle them to take advantage of this Act. In other words, were the disabled veterans of the Fenian Raid or of the South African War treated more leniently, or more generously, than they would have been under this Act, and are they really all on an equal footing as to the rating of their disablement with the men who have returned from the Great War? That may require a considerable amount of money, and maybe there should be a distinction, which does not seem to be made in virtue of this Act. I should like to have some information from the leader of the Government as to that. I see that all those who were pensioned in 1867 and 1868 and who are still pensioners will have to stand an examination in order to receive the benefit of this.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Are there many of those pensions?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It is pretty hard for me to concur in the finding of the Committee on the question of the provision made for Fenian Raid pensioners and South African War pensioners. I do not believe there is any analogy between them and the men whom we are now pensioning. I think the pensions provided for the Fenian Raid and South African War veterans were ample. Conditions were then very different from what they are to-day: A dollar then was equal to three dollars to-day. While I have not followed the report of the Committee, I am heartily in sympathy with most of the suggestions contained in it, because, ever since the pension system was inaugurated in Canada, I have felt that the scale of pensions was absolutely inadequate. There were many in my own battalion, who when they went overseas were splendid, strong young men, but who, when they came back, by reason of having lost an arm, or having contracted lung trouble or something of that kind, were absolutely incapacitated. I say that no matter how much money we give to those men we cannot compensate them for the great sacrifices they made. The widows of men who made the supreme sacrifice are equally deserving of consideration; and the children of fathers who are lying in France are public wards and must be taken care of and educated; nothing the Government can do can wholly make up for the great loss which they have sustained.

There is one other phase of this question to which I should like to refer. In many cases the medical boards have failed to make a proper diagnosis, and as a result men receiving a pension in accordance with the disability found by the Board have not received their due. There are to-day many men on the pension list whose cases should be reconsidered; men who ought to have been given a higher disability than that given to them by the Board. I hope and trust that the Board will see that all such cases are thoroughly investigated; and, if there is any doubt, that the benefit of the doubt will be given to the man. I can mention the case of a young man in my own battalion. He was a lumber merchant from Northern Manitoba. He had a wife and two small children. When he went away he was in the pink of condition; but when he returned two years ago he was a broken-down man. The Medical Board gave him a pension of, I think, $12 a month. This man, although he had not been wounded, had contracted some kind of stomach trouble during his service, and the Board seemed to have difficulty in arriving at the extent of his disability. He is a reliable man, a real man; not a faker—and we have enough fakers, God knows—and the pension awarded him was entirely inadequate. This is only one case, and I am sure there are many similar ones.

I wish to say just a few words in reference to the men who have come back fit, without a wound or a scar. In hundreds of cases they came back better men than they were when they went away. I think that the Government of Canada has been more than generous to that class of men. The gratuity provided by the Government, in addition to the pay which they received, ought to have satisfied any reasonable person that the Government had gone to the limit in trying to recompense them for any sacrifice they made; but, in view of the agitation that has been raised by some of these men, I want to say that if a canvass were made of the dissatisfied element who are causing the unrest among our returned men, I believe we would find that 95 per cent of them are not Canadians. The real Canadian who went over did not do so for the money that was in it. He did not expect any compensation; he went over to do his duty and he did it well, and he has come back and as a rule is satisfied.

I am glad that the Committee has seen fit to bring in this report recommending protection and compensation for the real sufferers—the widows and the orphans and the men who have been maimed for life.

I do not think we need have any fear of future increases. There is no analogy between our case and that of the United States after the Civil War. Ours is a smaller country than the United States and I venture to say that we are a saner people along this line. I hope and trust that the present Government and future governments will always be generous to the men who made a real sacrifice for the sake of their country.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It would be very interesting to know the number of persons pensioned by reason of having taken part in the South African War, the Fenian Raid, and the Northwest Rebellion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: While I have not the particulars before me I may say that in the case of veterans who served in the South African War, the Rebellion of 1885, or the Fenian Raid, and who are to-day Imperial pensioners, it is proposed to make up the difference between the Imperial rate of pensions and the rate which we are paying. I am informed that these men are few, and that the maximum obligation which this would entail would not exceed $30,000 a year. For instance, there are in Canada men who lost their eyesight, and who are suffering a real hardship because of the low rate of Imperial pensions in force at the time they served. It seems to me that we would not be justified in establishing by statute a distinction between those men who suffered in the defence of the Empire and the men who suffered in the late war. They were all willing to make the supreme sacrifice, and it seems only right that they should be recognized by the Government of the country in whose defence they were fighting and in which they reside.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would ask Colonel Margeson of the Pensions Board to come within the Bar.

On section 1—paragraphs a, e, g, and i of section 2 repealed, etc:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend point out what alterations are made in the definitions?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am informed that there is no substantial difference between section 1 of the Bill and section 2 of the Act of 1919.

Hon. Mr. POWER: In line 9 we find "recurrence of an injury or disease" instead of "disability." I notice that where the word "disability" is used in the existing law, throughout the Bill the words "injury or disease" are substituted. Perhaps the leader of the House would explain the meaning of that change and what is the object of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: "Appearance of the injury or disease" includes the recurrence of an injury or disease which has been so improved as to have removed the resultant disability. Section 2A of the Act provided that if a disability reappeared after it had been reduced sufficiently to permit the member of the forces to serve in a theatre of actual war, the reappearance would be considered as being the original appearance, and anything that had happened in respect of the member of the forces previous to the reappearance would be considered as having happened previous to the appearance. He would thus be entitled to benefits such as additional pension for stepchildren as the result of his marriage with a widow who had children. If he died his widow would be entitled to pension, having married him previous to the reappearance of the disability. The subsection as it now stands means in practice the same as the previous subsection, although its scope is somewhat widened. The word "disability" in this section and in a number of other sections is changed to the words "injury or disease" from the point of view of clearness, involving no change in practice. That is to say, those two words will be used in place of the word "disability."

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there any alteration in paragraph i?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The old paragraph defines "member of the forces," as follows:

> "Member of the forces" means any person who was enlisted, enrolled or drafted during the war (1) for service in the military forces of Canada on active service, (11) for service on the high seas in the naval forces of Canada, or (111) for service in the air forces of Canada: provided, however, that after the Declaration of Peace, the words "member of the forces" shall not extend to or include any person who, notwithstanding that he was so enlisted, enrolled or drafted, is not at the time serving by virtue only of The Military Service Act, 1917, or under an attestation or declaration in which he expressed his readiness to serve overseas or on the high seas.

This is a very much more compact form of interpretation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think it is a little wider.

Hon. Mr. POWER: It is a good deal wider. Men who never went overseas could draw a pension under this.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They ought to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They could under paragraph i.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—salaries increased:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This has to do with the two Commissioners. Instead of $5,000, they are to receive $6,000.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—pensions to be awarded according to prescribed rates:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am informed that there is no change in that.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The change is in the schedule, I suppose.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Sections 4, 5, and 6 were agreed to.

On section 7—"injury or disease" replacing "disability":

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The words "injury or disease" take the place of the word "disability" where it appears in this section.

Hon. Mr. POWER: There has not been any explanation given of the reason for the change.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is simply in the administration of the Act; it works out much more satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not see why it should. Disability is, on the whole, a rather more appropriate word.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a generic term that flows from the injury or disease, and consequently it has to relate back to the injury or disease from which it comes. It seems to me very much better and very much more sensible to use the term "injury or disease," because disability might flow from something else, and you would have to inquire into that. Now we limit it to the injury or disease acquired on service.

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—pension suspended on imprisonment or paid to dependents; payment reconsidered upon pensioner's release:

Hon. Mr. POWER: I would like to have an explanation of the latter part of that section, relating to the prisoner's release from imprisonment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He may have recovered from the injury while in prison, and therefore he should be subject to another medical examination to ascertain the extent to which his injury has been reduced. Formerly we paid the pension while the man was in prison; we do not do so now.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Is the pension suspended while he is in prison?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: Line 30 says:

Provided, however, that the Commission shall have discretion to pay the pension or part of it to any person who was being or was entitled to be supported by the pensioner at the time of his arrest.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, in the case of dependents.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—repeal:

Hon. Mr. POWER: This is a section of some importance. Section 22, which it repeals, says:

If a person is entitled to a pension under this Act, and is also entitled to a pension, gratuity or allowance under any other Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, such person, or, in the case of a child, the parent or guardian, or tutor of such child, shall elect which pension, gratuity or allowance he desires to accept, but no person shall receive two pensions, gratuities or allowances.

Now, it seems to me that the law as it stands is perfectly clear. If a party is entitled to a pension under the provisions of the Act of last year which is greater than he would be entitled to under the provisions of any other law, he takes the pension under the Act of 1919. Why should he be allowed to take two? Why should he be put in a better position than the other beneficiary who takes just what the Act of 1919 gives him? I do not see it. I infer that this is a case, perhaps, of what is popularly known as greasing a fat pig.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This question was thrashed out somewhat last night in connection with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill and the Militia Pension Bill. Upon inquiry since then, I am informed that these pensioners pay for their pension. You might call it superannuation. They subscribe to a fund, as I understand it—about 5 per cent—and while we call it pension it is really for length of service; it is not for disability, and not for death. The pension scheme now before us goes on an entirely different principle. The officers of the Militia and Royal Canadian Mounted Police contribute during long periods of years to a pension fund, and upon the expiration of that period they are entitled to their pension. Likewise the men enlist at a low rate of compensation or pay in consideration of the benefits which will flow from long service; so that on retirement they get perhaps a superannuation allowance, just as the Civil servants in whom my honourable friend, since I have been in this Chamber, has been deeply interested in regard to superannuation. I see no distinction between the two. You might call it a pension or you might call it superannuation. Such a person might have bought an annuity for the same amount as the subscription which he made, and might thus have acquired the right of superannuation. Why should that be interfered with if in giving his services to his country he became disabled? He might have made provision through one of our insurance companies for precisely the same advantage, and it was never expected that the thrift, prudence, and caution which he might thus have exercised in making provision for his old age should be disturbed in case he rendered service to his country in the event of war.

Hon. Mr. POWER: After the explanation my honourable friend has given I assume that it is just; and there is no objection to that clause, because the Militia and the Mounted Police have all contributed at the rate of 5 per cent of their salaries to the Pension Fund, and of course it would be most unfair to interfere with that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it is simply for long service. I must say that yesterday I did not realize this; and I think that, in dealing with the matter last Session, we had not before us that information, either in the House of Commons or in the Senate. We passed that legislation without information, and unwittingly, and I think it is only right that we should restore the pension.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That relates to the permanent men?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, only to the men in the permanent force.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The only objection I would find in that regard would be that many of those men were increased in rank very rapidly; but I think they are entitled to a pension.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I quite agree with that.

Section 9 was agreed to.

Sections 10 and 11 were agreed to.

On section 12—discretion of Commission to pay pension to certain classes of children:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend explain what is meant by that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This change authorizes the Commission to pay an amount "not exceeding" orphans' rates instead of orphans' rates. It is only in case of need that this is paid. It gives a wider discretion to the Commission than heretofore.

Section 12 was agreed to.

On section 13—no deduction in certain cases of disability; no payment in certain other cases:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This amendment is made in accordance with the practice adopted, and is self-explanatory. The words "congenital defect" are new. I might say that for a long period claims were made by those applying for pensions that they having been accepted by the medical board, even if there had been no latent injury or disease, the Government was stopped from saying, " You were not physically qualified at the time you were enrolled." This will not permit a position of that kind to be taken. For instance, if a man had an artificial leg at the time he went overseas he could not be heard to say that he had not.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I had two or three cases in my own battalion of men who went overseas after having been examined by my own medical officer, paraded three times before they left Canada, paraded at Witley Camp before they went over to France, were passed by the medical boards, accepted as fit men, and then sent over to fight. One of those men returned with considerable disability; he contracted rheumatism, and was told by the medical board that he must have had some of this trouble before he joined up with my battalion. I do not think that is fair to men who were accepted by board after board, who went over and performed their duties, and after they came back developed disabilities. I say the country ought to be responsible for those men; it accepted them and took them over there; the men performed their duties; and the doctors should not be able to say, "You have fifty per cent or seventy-five per cent disability, but you must have had some of those troubles before you joined up with the force at all."

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Why did they take them?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: Because they were looking for quantity, not quality.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They passed the doctor, and it is hardly fair to say to those men now, "You have done your bit, you come back broken down, but you must have had some of this disease before you went to the trenches."

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: They do not say that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If they went to France and accepted all chances of war it is all right; but if they did not go to France it is not.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is satisfactory.

Section 13 was agreed to.

Section 14 was agreed to.

On section 15—minimum and maximum of increased pension in certain cases:

Hon. Mr. POWER: A little explanation of that section would not be out of place.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand this is the only increase that is given to commissioned officers.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Is that for medical attendance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 15 was agreed to.

Section 16 was agreed to.

On section 17—time for which payment of pensions for disability shall commence:

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: What does that mean?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This amendment is necessitated by the definition of the words "appearance of the injury or disease." This deals with the word "disability."

Section 17 was agreed to.

On section 18—difference between pay and allowances and pension to be applied for hospital maintenance:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The purpose of this is to make uniform the amount payable to all patients in hospital.

Section 18 was agreed to.

On section 19—annual allowance not exceeding $180 each for maintenance of parents:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is new.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The existing law provides:

> When the member of the force has no wife, or the additional pension on account of his wife has been refused, an amount equivalent to the additional pension for a married member of the forces may be paid to him if he is maintaining, or in the opinion of the Commission is substantially assisting in maintaining, one or both of his parents.

I do not see just what the change is or what is the object of the change. The wife is dropped out altogether in the Bill as it is before us.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The explanation as given to me is this. The amendment of this section provides for the payment of an additional pension to a disability pensioner for the parent or parents, even though he is receiving an additional pension on account of his wife or children. He may have been maintaining a parent as well as his wife. But the amount shall not exceed $180.

Hon. Mr. POWER: There is a provision here that $180 may be paid for each of his parents. Take the case of a young man whose parents are really very well-to-do. Perhaps he is the son of a millionaire. Should there not be some inquiry made?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, there is. He has to prove that he has been supporting his parents. The case is determined by the evidence submitted to the commissioners.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: The parents would not be millionaires if he had to support them.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. The matter of support has to be made very clear to the commissioners before payment is made.

Hon. Mr. POWER: All right.

Section 19 was agreed to.

On section 20—sickness and burial expense not to exceed $100:

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: That is a small price for lumber.

Section 20 was agreed to.

Sections 21 and 22 were agreed to.

On section 23 (new section 34, subsection 7)—pension to widowed mother not reduced on account of earnings, free lodgings or other small income:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the alteration in subsection 7?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is an amendment to the first proviso of the previous subsection 4 of section 34. It is to be noted that outside Canada the pension of a widowed mother would not be reduced on account of her earnings or on account of her having free lodging, and that inside Canada it will also not be reduced if she has an income which does not exceed $240 a year, or $20 a month. If her income does not exceed those amounts the pension shall not be reduced; otherwise it may be, at the discretion of the Commission.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Anything over that amount is taken into account.

Section 23 was agreed to.

On section 24—death pensions payable from day after death:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the effect of paragraph a?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Apparently to give the commissioners discretion as to when the dependency pension shall start. It will not necessarily start upon the death of the pensioner. It is for the commissioners to inquire as to when the dependency arises.

Section 24 was agreed to.

On section 25—supplementary pensions to members of allied forces:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Why is that limited to all who are of or above the rank of warrant officer?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Below that rank they are paid by the Imperial Government.

Section 25 was agreed to.

On section 26—additional pension to dependents while residing in Canada of members of Allied forces domiciled and resident in Canada at beginning of war to bring up total amount from other pensions to that of members of Canadian Forces:

Hon. Mr. POWER: We should have a lucid explanation of that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is the outcome of an arrangement between the Imperial Government and Canada by which, in the case of persons of the rank of warrant officer, or of a higher rank, we make up the difference between the Imperial Government pension and our own, and the Imperial Government make it good. As is self-evident, the purpose is to provide the pensioners with enough money to enable them to live in this country.

Hon. Mr. POWER: If a man entered the British army or navy instead of entering ours, this is to give his dependents the same pension that they would obtain from the Government of Canada?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, we make it equal to our pension rate, and the Imperial Government repays to Canada the difference—that is, if they were resident in Canada before the war.

Section 26 was agreed to.

On section 27 (new sections 47A and 47B) —South African War pensions, while recipients reside in Canada, to be brought up to amount payable under this Act; Fenian Raid and Northwest Rebellion pensions to be increased:

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honestly I do not think that is desirable legislation. The Fenian Raid took place 53 years ago.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There are about ten cases.

Hon. Mr. POWER: But I wish to call attention to the fact that although the American Civil war ended in the spring of 1865 the United States were paying three or four years ago as much as they had paid at any time previously. The widows and children and other dependents managed things so that the pensions kept on. We may find that there are a large number of Fenian veterans who would come in and make a claim under this provision. I was out during the Fenian Raid myself.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: So was I.

Hon. Mr. POWER: But, I may say, I have not put in any claim up to date. Then take the Northwest Rebellion. That rebellion took place 33 years ago, and the men who took part in it did not expect to receive liberal pensions. It was a very short rebellion; it lasted only a few weeks; and I do not see why we should go back 33 years for the purpose of trying to find someone who would feel like putting in a claim on that account. This is vicious legislation, in my humble opinion. These people have been satisfied up to a very recent date, and I do not see why the rest of the country should suffer now in order to give them something that they never expected.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say to my honourable friend that no abuse can arise from new applications coming in, because the provisions are confined to those who are to-day on the pension list and are receiving pensions. I understand that the Fenian Raid veterans and the Northwest Rebellion veterans will receive, in all, about $8,000 a year. As to the South African veterans, we make up the difference between the pensions which are now being paid to them and the amount payable under this Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER: "It is such a little one."

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Of course, these pensions for veterans of the Fenian Raid and the Northwest Rebellion are not granted for any disability or injury of any kind?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, yes; they have to undergo a medical examination before they become entitled to the payment under this Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I notice there is a difference in wording between 47A and 47B.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: These are all disability pensions, mentioned in 47A and 47B.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I thought there was a distinction there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course, there are paid to those who suffered the disability or to their dependents.

Section 27 was agreed to.

Sections 28 and 29 were agreed to.

On section 30—commencement of Act:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there any particular reason for fixing that date?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. It will require considerable preparation to obtain the necessary information to meet the new rates.

Section 30 was agreed to.

Schedules A and B, the preamble, and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT—JOINT ADDRESS TO THE KING.

The Senate proceeded to consider a Message from the House of Commons with a proposed Address to His Majesty the King, praying that he may graciously be pleased to give his consent to submitting a measure to the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend certain provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, in the manner set forth in the said Address.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the said Address by filling up the blank therein with the words "Senate and."

He said: The object of this is to secure Imperial legislation amending the British North America Act, whereby it will be placed beyond all controversy that the Dominion Government has authority to legislate extra-territorially. This legislation is desirable chiefly because of the new conditions which have arisen through the development of aerial transportation. Not only is the Government of Canada establishing an air service, but aerial transportation is being organized and established by commercial companies. This will involve of course a new branch of law, and it is desirable that there should be no question as to the authority of Canada to legislate for the punishment within its own territory of violations of the law which may take place over the territory of another nation. It is doubtful whether we have that authority to-day. Of course, every sovereign power has that authority; but, owing to the British North America Act being silent upon a question of that kind, or not dealing with it in express language, it is very desirable that we should secure the necessary legislation to permit of our regulations being enforced. We are entering into arrangements, for instance, with the United States, to enforce regulations that may be agreed upon between the two countries respecting aerial navigation. The United States, being a sovereign power, could exercise jurisdiction extra-territorially to enforce regulations, and persons who violated those regulations outside the United States could be punished upon their return to United States territory. It would be unfortunate if we in Canada were precluded from enforcing our regulations likewise. We do not say we have not inherently that right, by reason of the constitutional powers which we already possess, but it is desirable, in view of our relations with other countries, that this should be placed beyond all peradventure. Our object is, therefore, to seek legislation amending the British North America Act so as to give us expressly that authority.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I have listened to the very full explanation my honourable friend has given on this matter. I regret to say that I have not been able to look into it personally as much as I would like to do, but I cannot see why this legislation is necessary. It does seem to me that any citizen of Canada who goes outside the Dominion and infringes the law of the country can be punished when he comes back if the Government thinks it desirable to punish him.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not if the offence has been committed outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is just the point.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is the point.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The offender can be punished when he comes back. We cannot of course punish him if he is outside our jurisdiction.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not absolutely clear that we have the right, for the constitutional reasons I have pointed out.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Of course, if it is not absolutely clear, I do not see any harm in making it clear; but I should have thought that we had that right already.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think that after the aviator passes the three-mile limit he ceases to be within the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and it is questionable whether anything he did then would be an offence against the laws of Canada.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the point.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, it was resolved that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency would be pleased to transmit the said Joint Address to His Majesty the King.

The motion was agreed to.

It was ordered, that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that the Senate has adopted the said Address.

SHIPBUILDNG BLL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 51, an Act respecting the Dominion Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton.

SHIPBUILDING BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 199, an Act to assist Shipbuilding.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

INDIAN BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 14, an Act to amend the Indian Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Monday, June 28, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 51, an Act respecting the Dominion Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. G. G. FOSTER moved concurrence in the report of the Committee on Banking and Commerce with reference to the petition of the Allied Indian Tribes of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, as I understand it, if this report is now concurred in, the position with regard to this Bill will be a rather peculiar one. I wish to say that I do not altogether concur in the finding contained in this report. I do not think it goes far enough. The report says:

> The committee beg to suggest, however, that before exercising the authority granted by clause 3 of the Bill, an endeavour should first be made to secure a surrender, under the provisions of the Indian Act of the proposed reductions or cut-offs.

I appreciate very highly the recommendation of the Committee that the Indians should be considered before anything is done, but I feel that it would be very much better if clause 3 of the Bill were amended so that no action could be taken until after the Department had tried to come to an arrangement with the Indians to obtain their consent to what is to be done under the Commission; and, if in any particular case they cannot get the consent of the Indians and find that they are prevented from dealing with the matter, that they should come back to Parliament and ask for power to deal with the matter without obtaining the consent of the Indians. I do not know whether it is wise to go into a discussion on that point now, but I propose to move that amendment when we reach the order on the Order Paper dealing with this Bill.

I think it is a serious matter for the Government to announce to the country and to the Indians that they desire to have this power on the statute book before having shown that there is any necessity for it. They are altering the position of the Indians; and, in view of the situation which exists in Canada to-day, and, I may say, almost throughout the world, I do not think it is advisable for the Government to take such an action, which may be misinterpreted by the Indians. The Indians may feel that the Government is not giving them due consideration, but is rather trying to proceed with a club in its hands in order to make the Indians do things which they do not want to do.

I do not want to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter now. I think honourable gentlemen realize the situation, and I hope they will see their way clear to adopting the course which I have outlined. I do not want in any way to hamper the Government in their action. If the Government can show that there is any case in which they cannot get the consent of the Indians, and that it is in the interest of the whole country that a particular reserve should be dealt with, I would be perfectly ready to assist them in putting through legislation that would give them that power; but, until it is known that they have tried to obtain surrenders, and have not succeeded because the Indians will not give their consent, I do not think this legislation should be put through.

The motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF MR. JOSEPH BOUCHARD.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL moved:

That the action of the Senate of the 21st April last, adopting the 6th Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, be rescinded in so far as it relates to the retirement of Mr. Joseph Bouchard, Translator on the Senate Debates staff, referred to therein.

He said: The reason that I make this motion is this. The action of the Senate was to retire Mr. Bouchard on the 1st of July next at a certain salary, which, I think, was half the salary he had been receiving. As a result of the Superannuation Act now going through Parliament, which places the retirement of these officials in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, there has been nothing put in the Estimates to provide for that salary. Of course, the Civil Service Commission, under the Act, if it is passed, as I suppose it will be, will then be able to deal with the retirement of Mr. Bouchard according to the terms of the Act, and unless we take this action, as there is no provision to pay Mr. Bouchard anything, from the 1st of July he will not be in receipt of anything. For this reason it is considered necessary to rescind our former action, and to leave Mr. Bouchard as he is until the Civil Service Commission are able to act under the Superannuation Act.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL.

THIRD READING.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed for the third reading of Bill 137, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, as amended.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I beg to move that this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out the words "first day of September," and substituting the words, "the fifteenth day of October."

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

THIRD READING.

Bill 184, an Act to revive and amend the Naturalization Act, 1914.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN LANDS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill 13, an Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Cannada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, this question has already been very fully discussed in this House, and I feel that I ought in a certain sense to apologize for taking up the time of the House any longer; but I do feel that this matter should not be allowed to proceed without an expression of opinion by this House regarding the power that is given to the Government under Bill 13 to make reductions in the reserves without obtaining the consent of the Indians. I desire to point out one or two reasons why this power should not, in my opinion, be given at the present time.

The report on this matter brought down to the House by the Government contains a copy of the agreement which was made betweeen Mr. J. A. J. McKenna, Special Commissioner appointed by the Dominion Government to investigate the condition of Indian affairs in British Columbia, and the Hon. Sir Richard McBride as Premier of the province of British Columbia. The second clause of that agreement, paragraph a, reads as follows:

At such places as the Commissioners are satisfied that more land is included in any particular Reserve as now defined than is reasonably required for the use of the Indians of that tribe or locality, the Reserve shall, with the consent of the Indians, as required by the Indian Act, be reduced to such acreage as the Commissioners think reasonably sufficient for the purposes of such Indians.

That was the agreement made between the two Governments, and it specifically recognized that nothing should be done without the consent of the Indians. The Provincial Government was quite satisfied with that arrangement at that time, as was the Dominion Government. The Provincial Government since then have obtained the passage of an Act dealing with this matter, which is somewhat similar to the Bill we have now before us; but in the Act passed by the Provincial Legislature words were inserted to the effect that the British Columbia Government was quite ready to negotiate with the Indians. Honourable gentlemen will understand that the Provincial Government has really no power to negotiate with the Indians; that the Dominion is the authority responsible for the care and welfare of the Indians, and that anything to be done between the province of British Columbia and the Indians must be done through the Dominion Government. But I maintain that the Act passed by the Legislature of British Columbia indicated that the Government of that province desired to show to the Indians every consideration possible in this aspect, and did not wish to give the Indians the idea that the Government were using their power and authority to override the interests of the Indians and treat them in a high-handed, arbitrary manner, but were prepared to do anything they could to come to a reasonable and equitable settlement with the Indians.

We all know that a great portion of the areas held as Indian reserves is good and valuable land, and that as the population of the province increases it is but natural for people to say that it should be used to the fullest extent. Some people in British Columbia possibly think that the land is not being used as much as it might be if it were in the hands of white men; but that is a consideration which I do not think should be allowed to affect our attitude in this matter. The Indians had these lands set aside for them years ago, when the Indian population in British Columbia was greater than at the present day, and when it was very important for the white people that the Indians should treat them properly and should live peaceably alongside the newcomers. Therefore I think that the Government of British Columbia were perfectly right in showing that they did not want to act in an arbitrary manner, now that the white population had become so much greater than the Indian population and were in a position practically to dictate the terms.

I desire to draw the attention of the House to another point in regard to this agreement. Clause 4 says:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK.

> The lands which the Commissioners, shall determine are not necessary for the use of the Indians shall be subdivided and sold by the Province at public auction.

And clause 5 says:

> The net proceeds of all such sales shall be divided equally between the Province and the Dominion, and all moneys received by the Dominion under this Clause shall be held or used by the Dominion for the benefit of the Indians of British Columbia.

Under this arrangement the province of British Columbia, as I understand, is to get one-half of the money for which those reserves are sold. Under the agreement a certain acreage will be taken away from the reserve and a certain acreage will be added from the lands of the province of British Columbia. But I do not see why the two Governments should have agreed that the province of British Columbia should receive one-half of the proceeds of the sale of these lands.

The report of the Commission deals with the situation in British Columbia as they found it at the time of their investigation. On page 17 of the report the Commissioners state:

> The land Act of 1875 provided for the conveyance of lands to the Dominion Government "in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians." By section 9, of Chapter 38 of the Statutes of 1899, an amendment was made by adding to the provision in the Land Act these words "and in trust to reconvey the same to the Provincial Government in case such lands at any time ceased to be used by such Indians."

The Government of British Columbia, for some reason, did not deem it well to carry out the arrangement which they made in 1875 with the Dominion Government, and under which, as stated in the Commission's report, the onus was thrown upon them of conveying the lands which were set apart as reserves by the Commission that was appointed in 1876 for the purpose of surveying the reserves. The province of British Columbia never completed that arrangement in the way they ought to have done. Under this Land Act, as the Commission points out, the province had to convey to the Dominion Government the land set aside as reserves for the use and benefit of the Indians, and there was a proviso to the effect that if at any time those lands were no longer required for the use and benefit of the Indians, then the reversionary title of the province of British Columbia came into effect. That, I think, was a reasonable and proper arrangement to make. But the province of British Columbia later on was not satisfied with that, and, inasmuch as they had not carried out their part of the agreement of 1875 and conveyed the lands to the Dominion Government, they started in to make all the trouble they could. The report of the Commission goes on to say:

> Provided always that it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to at any time grant, convey, quit claim, sell or dispose of, on such terms as may be deemed advisable, the interest of the Province, reversionary or otherwise in any Indian Reserve or any portion thereof.

That was an enactment made in 1911. Now, the province of British Columbia had no power to make an enactment of that kind. They were abrogating a solemn agreement which had been made between the province of British Columbia and the Dominion, and which they had never properly carried out as they were bound to do.

Then the report, on page 18, quotes the following enactment:

> There shall not be registered in any Land Registry Office any title derived from His Majesty the King in the right of Canada... land forming part, or that at any time formed part, of an Indian Reserve, without the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council (Vide Section 2, Chapter 27, Statutes 1910, and Section 59, Chapter 127, R.S.B.C., 1911).

The report goes on to say:

> To remove the administrative entanglement thus occasioned, and to provide for the final and complete allotment of lands for Indians in British Columbia, the Agreement hereinbefore quoted in full was entered into by the Governments of the Dominion and the Province, and this Commission was appointed thereunder.

The Dominion Government should have insisted that the Provincial Government carry out the agreement made in 1875 and convey the title to those reserves which were set aside in 1876 and two or three years later. Instead of insisting that the Provincial Government hand over the title to these reserves for the use and benefit of the Indians, as the province had agreed to do, the Dominion Government entered into this agreement with the Provincial Government, and, apparently in order to bring the Provincial Government to some settlement, they were prepared to give them a half-interest in the proceeds in the sale of the land taken out of the reserve. I maintain that if the Dominion Government found it necessary to treat the Provincial Government in that way, and considered that the only manner in which they could bring about a settlement was by the payment of a certain sum of money to the province of British Columbia in order to induce them to accept an agreement of this kind, the Dominion Government should have come down to this House with a special Bill providing for the payment to the Provincial Government out of the funds of the country of the amount of money agreed upon, but they had no right to give way to the province in this matter by allowing the province to benefit by the sale of those lands taken out of the Indian reserve.

I draw this matter to the attention of honourable members of this House because I think it shows that the Dominion Government have not acted in the interest of the Indians as they should have acted, and that they have rather tried to follow along the line of least resistance in making an unjustifiable agreement with the Provincial Government. They should have insisted that the Provincial Government carry out the terms of that agreement of 1875 by conveying to the Dominion the title to those lands. This very fact alone should lead honourable members of this Chamber to realize that, when the Government ask us to pass a Bill of this kind, enabling them to proceed to complete the work of the Commission without obtaining the consent of the Indians, the Indians are not being fairly treated in the matter. I therefore beg to move:

> That Bill 13 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of amending clause 3 of the said Bill by striking out all the words after the word "council" in the twenty-fourth line, and down to and including the word "and" in the twenty-seventh line of the said clause.

For the information of the House I will read the clause as it would then stand:

> For the purpose of adjusting, readjusting or confirming the reductions or cutoffs from reserves in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission, the Governor in Council may carry on such further negotiations and enter into such further agreements with the Government of the Province of British Columbia as may be found necessary for a full and final adjustment of the differences between the said Governments.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I shall not occupy the time of the House at any great length in replying to my honourable friend. What he has stated, it seems to me, demonstrates very fully the inutility of making a charge against governmental administration in a matter which apparently is not fully understood. Criticism of this kind, which constitutes a bill of complaint, if not a wail of complaint, as to the attitude of the Government touching the solution of the Indian question, is not appreciated by me, at least from the honourable gentleman, who comes from the province of British Columbia, where he has been in touch with the administration of the Government ever since he has been in that province. So far as I have come in contact with either friendly or unfriendly critics, no one has been able to attack the policy of the Dominion Government in dealing with the Indians from Confederation down to the present time. If there is one feature of our Government that has been divested absolutely of all political and all party feeling it has been the administration of our Indian affairs; and if one feature has been emphasized more than another in that administration it has been the almost parental solicitude shown by the Canadian Government in dealing with the Indian tribes of this country.

My honourable friend has moved to strike out certain words in section 3, and he is gracious enough to leave the balance of the section, which would be entirely unnecessary, because the Indian Act as it is to-day has all the powers which this Bill gives, with the exception of the part which my honourable friend strikes out. Hence I fail to see why he has left the balance.

Permit me to say that this legislation which my honourable friend is attacking has been asked particularly by the Government of British Columbia. When the province of British Columbia in 1912 entered into the agreement to which my honourable friend has referred it made provision that agreement for the cutoffs should be decided by the Indians; but that decision had no sooner been reached than the British Columbia Government realized that if cutoffs were made in the event of the surrender not being secured, then a legislative transfer of the cutoff must be made. It was therefore necessary that, if the Indians refused to surrender the cutoffs, the Governments involved would be in a position to give legislative effect thereto. That was asked for by the Government of British Columbia, not by this Government.

Now let me point out to honourable gentlemen the effect of the mischievous element which my honourable friend insists upon calling into existence, namely, that the Indians should be first approached to give a surrender, and, in the event of a refusal, that this Government should come to Parliament and ask for legislation. Does my honourable friend seriously think that, if the Government approached the Indians for a surrender of these cutoffs, they would then be justified in coming to Parliament and saying: "We have deliberately negotiated with the Indian for this cutoff and that cutoff; they would not give it to us, and now we must have legislation to take it, absolutely against their will." Why, if anything would lead to trouble, it would be that. It is the purpose of the Government, honourable gentlemen,—and I say this upon a statement made to me by the officers administering this Act—to protect every scintilla of interest of the Indians in those cut-offs.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: In what way?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In this way. They intend to review the whole action of the Royal Commission in regard to these cutoffs; they intend to negotiate and discuss the whole subject again with the Indians. They do not intend to accept the arbitrary findings of the Royal Commission; but, with all the advantage of negotiating ab initio concerning this point, they propose entering upon such negotiations; then if the Indians do not surrender it will be for the Government to exercise its discretion in giving legislative effect to the agreement between the province of British Columbia and this Government.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would that be by means of expropriation?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would be by means of legislation. I am not prepared to say whether that legislation would not require the action of both Governments, inasmuch as the fee simple is in the province of British Columbia. I am not prepared to say that the Dominion Government could make a transfer of those cut-offs; but it could be a party consenting to carrying out the Indian Act. Because this would be an amendment to the Indian Act to the extent of consenting to any legislation involving the transfer of those cut-offs.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would the Department be prepared to vary the finding of the Commission if it should be considered necessary?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. This is purely a matter of adjustment of differences between the two Governments, and I cannot see how any honourable gentleman with a reasonable mind—and I am sure we are all possessed of that useful commodity, if we would only give it free play, though of course we sometimes cast impediments in the way—can arrive at any other conclusion as to how those differences can be adjusted. Surely it will not be contended that a committee of the Senate could adjust the differences, or that we could sit around a table in committee, or in this Chamber, and settle all those difficulties referring back several centuries, and involving almost all the constitutional difficulties; because, as seriously pointed out by the representative of the Indians, such constitutional difficulties would place the people of British Columbia in a position of jeopardy, and practically lead to a denial of their having any interest in those lands.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What disposition has the province of British Columbia shown so far, as to compensation of the Indians for whatever has been taken away?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will come to that in a moment. My honourable friend referred to the legislation of 1875, and construed the agreement with British Columbia as conveying to the Dominion Government a certain title over the Indians in their reserves.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It was following up Section 13.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It may have been, but my honourable friend entirely overlooks this point—that all those agreements have reference only to a qualified interest in the land. In the colonial days, when the two Crown colonies were administering Indian affairs—and I hesitate to again refer to this, because I have done it on two or three occasions—the agreement was that the Crown colony of British Columbia and the Crown colony of Vancouver Island would transfer certain lands to the Indians for their use and occupation. There never was any agreement that the fee simple would be transferred to the Government, but only a qualified interest in the lands, making the reversion of land in the province of British Columbia upon the extinction of the Indians; and that qualification has always been observed not only from Crown colony days, but from Confederation down to the present time. Section 13 of the Act of Union makes use of the words, "use and occupation," and any lawyer appreciating legal terms will know that a qualified interest in land can be transferred, giving the use and occupation of the land, and leaving the remainder or reversion upon use and occupation ceasing. That was the case here. Consequently the British Columbia Government always claimed the reversion of all the Indian lands which they transferred to the Indians in the province of British Columbia, which aggregated practically three-quarters of a million acres, and negotiations had always to be entered into with the province of British Columbia as to their transferring that reversionary interest even after the surrender was made by the Indians of the lands which they occupied. This was always an aggravation, not only to this Government, but to the Indians; yet the right of British Columbia to that reversionary interest was always conceded. The agreement of 1912 was due very largely to the very fact that it was desirable to adjust this difficulty between the two Governments and the Indians, and as a result the province of British Columbia agreed that if those cut-offs were made, and the land sold, and the other differences adjusted, they would forego their reversionary interest, taking 50 per cent of the sale of all lands, while 50 per cent would go to the Indians. That refers to the reserves where the Indians had disappeared or where they had become extinct.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would that percentage be paid to Indians living in the province, or to Indians generally?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Indians living in the province; and it is in order to give effect to this agreement that the two Governments have come together and arranged for the adjustment of their differences. The legislation we are proposing to-day is to give effect to that agreement.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Had any of those cut-offs been taken previously?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; they have all been delimited, under the agreement of 1912, by the Royal Commission.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And they all come under this legislation?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The cut-offs constitute 47,000 acres of the totality of the reserves in British Columbia, and in lieu of those 47,000 acres the Indians got 87,000 acres of land, which will be transferred by the British Columbia Government to the different tribes in that province. There are good reasons why some of those cut-offs should be made, and why the Indians should be compelled to surrender them, because we know that many of those reserves are contiguous to civilized communities, they impinge upon many urban municipalities, and in the moral interest of the Indians it is not desirable that they should live on reserves immediately adjoining cities.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is a cut-off only; that is, only a portion of the reserve is to be taken?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Only a portion. My honourable friend will see that it is only a fraction, because the Indians have in round numbers, three-quarters of a million acres of land in British Columbia, and those cut-offs will total only 47,000 acres.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How many reserves are there?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: About 1,200 reserves, I believe, in British Columbia. Some represent only a few acres; some represent perhaps a few hundred acres. But coming down to a common-sense basis, honourable gentlemen, I feel that we should try to see if there is any way in which the two governments and the Indians could get together and settle this business. Let us drop all discussion about the constitutional interpretation that should be placed upon the Act of Union, or the different agreements entered into between the Indians and the Government of British Columbia, or between this Government and that of British Columbia. There is only one way of doing this: it is for all parties to get together; and the intention of this Government is to get together with the Indians to settle those differences just as wisely and particularly as if no previous negotiations had taken place. I therefore oppose my honourable friend's amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I have given some attention to this Bill, and have perused the proceedings of the Royal Commission, and I must say that I am in sympathy with the main part of this Bill. I think, as was very properly said by the honourable leader of the Government, that this question should be approached by both sides of this House without any political bias. The Indian tribes all over this Dominion have been treated generously by all Governments, whether Liberal or Conservative, and I am sure that they expect to be treated by the present Government as they were dealt with by previous ones. My only trouble about this Bill is as regards giving power to this Government to go beyond the agreement of 1912, which was limited to dealing with Indian reserves; it in no way covered fishing or hunting grounds. The matter has been dealt with by the Government through a Royal Commission, which has made a report on the Indian reserves, and I do not think it would be proper for this Parliament to go beyond that agreement and adopt legislation to cover or interfere with or override the fishing or hunting rights of the Indians. For my part I am willing to approve of the present Bill to the extent mentioned in the agreement of 1912, because I think that it is such a vexed question as must of necessity be dealt with by the Government and not by Parliament; for the Government has to take the advice of its officers and assume responsibility for its own action. But I think that section 2 of the Bill should be amended, and as soon as this House has disposed of the present motion I propose to move that section 2 be amended by adding, after the word "differences" in line 18, the words, "falling within the scope of the said agreement." I think that the Government should have the power to deal with the Indian reserves or with the cut-offs, but not to interfere with Indian fishing or hunting rights. I do not think that, after the Royal Commission has been limited to the Indian reserves and the cut-offs, it would be proper for this Parliament, in enacting legislation to give effect to the report of the Royal Commission, to go beyond the scope of the agreement of 1912.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I think it is desirable that I should say a word or two upon this subject. It is perfectly true, as the leader of the Government has stated, that in Canada we have dealt very fairly and liberally with the Indians; but the point I cannot quite understand is why has it been impracticable, in dealing with Indian lands in British Columbia, to follow the same course that has been pursued in the other provinces. I understand that agreements have been made with the Indians in all the other provinces. Every little while the Government have made a treaty with such and such Indians for such and such land. Why has not that been done in the case of the Indian lands in British Columbia? I may be muddled intellectually, but I do not see why it has been impracticable to do the same thing there that has been done in other provinces, and it seems to me that if that had been done no difficulty could arise.

The leader of the Government told us that after this Bill becomes law the Government will consult with the Indians. It seems to me, honourable gentlemen, that that is a case of putting the cart before the horse. I think the consultation with the Indians should be had before the land is taken away. I say this in all humility: I do not profess to understand the question very thoroughly.

There is one other point that has not been made very clear by the leader of the Government. It is proposed that these lands, which it is clearly desirable should cease to be Indian lands, shall be sold, and half of the proceeds handed over to the provincial Governments. I really do not see why that should be. In dealing with Indians in other parts of the country the Government do not pay over half of the price for which Indian lands are sold to the Provincial Government; and I have not yet heard any good reason why that action should be taken in British Columbia. These, honourable gentlemen, are the reasons which induce me to vote for the amendment of my honourable leader.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Bostock was negatived, on division.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: For the reasons which I stated a moment ago I now beg to move:

That this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House, and that it be amended by adding after the word "differences" in clause 2, line 18, and in clause 3, line 30, the following words: "falling within the scope of the said agreement."

As I said before, I think it is not proper for this House to go beyond the agreement. The great objection of the Indians to this Bill, and, as I take it, their main objection, is that it may be interpreted as making away with their fishing and hunting rights. I think they should be reassured in that respect, and that the Government should be content with the power necessary to deal with the reserves and the cut-offs.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend who has just moved has, to my mind, given no indication whatever of the extent, if any, to which the rights of the Indians in regard to picking and choosing are going to be affected. Unless there is some danger of that I cannot quite see why the amendment should be carried. Again, should we not consider this element, that it is quite possible that when the two Governments and the Indians get together there may be a disposition on the part of the Indians to curtail their hunting and fishing rights for a consideration. It is conceivable that the whole agreement may turn on that question, because I imagine that there is nothing of more interest to the Indian than his right to fish and shoot. Therefore I do not see why at this stage we should circumscribe the negotiations to be carried out, and if we accept the amendment we may be taking something out of the agreement which would be the very thing upon which an agreement would be made.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would defeat the legislation.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was negatived, on division.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, on division, and passed.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

ADOPTION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. F. P. THOMPSON moved concurrence in the second report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the whole subject of the steamship service to the Magdalen islands.

Hon. JOHN McLEAN: Honourable gentlemen, after the remarks of the Chairman of the Committee yesterday in presenting this report, it is hardly necessary for me to say anything. I wish only to give my reasons for asking for the appointment of the Committee. To my mind the Magdalen islands have never been justly treated in regard to their steamship service. I know something of the experience of the province of Prince Edward Island in trying to obtain a satisfactory service. Happily its difficulties have been overcome by the steamer which has been put on that route.

The Magdalen islands are peculiarly situated. There are three harbours at which the steamer to the Magdalen islands are supposed to call—Amherst, Rindstone, and Grand Entry. On the bar in the harbour of Grand Entry there is only 12 feet of water at high tide; consequently the steamer has to be specially built so that she will not draw too much water, and at the same time, in order to carry the freight offering there, she must be capable of carrying 4,000 barrels bulk. So far, a satisfactory steamer has not been put on to do the work. While the company rendering the service at the present time have done the best they could with the steamers at their disposal, the service has not been satisfactory, because the steamers, owing to their lack of speed, are not able to make two trips a week. In the fall of the year freight has had to be left over from time to time; and, as the people of the Magdalens are almost entirely a fishing community, in the fall of the year they have to get sufficient supplies to carry them over the winter, and their fishing supplies for the next season. Honourable gentlemen who know anything of the fishing industry know that until the fishermen have sold their fish in the fall they are unable to buy flour and other necessities, and as the islands are isolated for practically six months of the year it is very necessary that they should be certain of getting their winter supplies.

Last year the Government did everything possible to place a steamer on the route to carry on the service satisfactorily; but she failed. The Montcalm was then sent down, but she failed to arrive until the middle of the winter. This spring the service has been very unsatisfactory, and there was no service when navigation opened on the 1st of April. If the Department had placed the matter in the hands of Captain Taylor, the agent at Charlottetown, I have no doubt that a steamer would have been provided which would have arrived at the islands not later than the 15th of April. The lobster season opens on the 25th of April and ends on the 25th of June, and, because of the failure the previous fall and on account of the steamer not sailing until the 1st of May, the supplies were not received by the people in time to be of use, but were left lying in the steamer at Souris. The Department failed in not placing the matter in the hands of a man on the spot; and, when the captain of the ship was sent down from Quebec, he found that the steamer had not sufficient coal on board to make the trip, which caused further delay.

As I said in opening, my reason in asking for a committee was to bring before the Government the necessity of an improved service and to place the matter before the Government in such a way as to show what would be in the best interests of the people of the islands. Some years ago William Leslie and Company and some others built a steamer for this service. She was called the Lady Sibyl. She was capable of 13 or 14 knots an hour, and carried about 3,000 barrels in bulk. She made two trips every week. This steamer was so punctual in her trips that passengers on board of her could depend on catching trains, either at Souris or at Pictou.

Your Committee have recommended that as the Government are building steamers at the present time they should build a steamer of 4,000 barrels capacity, capable of a speed of 12 or 14 knots an hour, and strengthened at the water line so that in the fall she would be capable of going through the sheet ice, and in the spring would be able to make her trips through the loose floating ice. The people of the Magdalen islands are at the present time paying three times the freight rate that they have had to pay in 1914, and I think they are entitled to a satisfactory service, the best service the Government can give them. When one takes into consideration the fact that a subsidy of $20,000 a year is now being paid, if a proper ship were built and put on the service, the cost of the operation of such a service as the people of the Magdalen islands are entitled to would be very little more than the present expenditure.

The motion for concurrence in the report was agreed to.

THE PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT.

ADOPTION OF REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (for Hon. Mr. Watson) moved concurrence in the first report of the Joint Committee on the Restaurant.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Before this report is concurred in, because I am a French Canadian and do not understand English, I should like to ask what clause 2 of the report means. It says:

> The restaurant shall be for the use of Senators and members of the House of Commons and their families, who shall have the right of inviting guests.

Does that mean that senators and members of the House of Commons shall have the right to invite guests, or that their families shall have that right? Could that be put in English in such a way that a man from the province of Quebec could understand it?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Before this motion is carried, I also would like some explanation. I understood at the beginning that steps were to be taken towards improving the restaurant, and my recollection is that a special Committee was appointed to look into the question. I presume it was expected that that Committee would report to the House before the end of the Session. Personally I am not familiar with the management of the restaurant, and it is for that reason that I am on my feet. I observe that this is described as the first report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Restaurant. Judging from the time of its presentation, it will also be the final report. There is not very much information contained in the report.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: There was a report in Toronto Saturday Night.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I do not know whether it has been the custom in the past for the Committee to give the House any fuller details as to the conduct of the restaurant or the regulations touching its administration. It is not material that we should know anything about the contracts that are made if both Houses are quite satisfied. I understood however, that this House was not satisfied, inasmuch as earlier in the Session we agreed upon the appointment of a special Committee for the purpose of bringing about what was described as " much needed improvement." I should like to know what steps have been taken in that direction, and I should also like to know a little more than this report discloses in regard to the administration of the restaurant. Perhaps it is over-inquisitiveness on my part, but I submit this question to honourable members of the Committee and shall be glad to have any information that they can give me.

With regard to the regulations which have been made, I would venture to make the suggestion that these regulations should be submitted to the House before they are put into operation. I understand that there was some little friction in regard to them. I do not know whether this Committee has carte blanche to make regulations without the concurrence of the House; but I should think that, at any rate, it would be expedient and would be in line with proper business methods for any Committee of this House, especially such a Committee as this, when it proposed to make regulations of this nature, to ask for the concurrence of the House before putting them into operation.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I may say, honourable gentlemen, that I have been a member of the Restaurant Committee for three or four years past. We have held meetings regularly and have tried to deal with matters in such a way as might meet the reasonable expectations of the members of this House and the members of the Commons. I do not know exactly what are the obligations of the Committee towards the Senate—whether we ought to present to this House a report on the menu or on the administration of the restaurant. The best judgment of the Committee has been used with respect to the management. In the early part of the session there was suggested the appointment of a Committee to deal with the new restaurant. We were to have an Empire club. The proposition was one that the Committee of which I am a member was not big enough to deal with. The members of the Joint Committee considered that the rules adopted were quite proper; but it is certainly open to any member of the Senate to make any criticism he wishes. In other years it was never considered necessary for the Committee to report on these matters to this House or to the Commons. What has been done may be right or it may be wrong. That is a question which is left to the judgment of honourable gentlemen; but, as I say, the rules made by the Committee have never been submitted to the House before adoption, nor has the Committee reported on its transactions. In regard to the restaurant, I may say that I have had meals regularly there since the opening of Parliament, and, although I have heard some criticism in respect to what we have to eat, personally it has been entirely satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I had the pleasure of eating some decayed fish, which poisoned me and made me ill for thirty days.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I do not think that the honourable gentleman came to the Committee and reported that. If he had done so, I as a member of the Committee would have taken some action and endeavoured to ascertain how that had occurred. I did not have any of that fish, and did not know anything about it. If I had, I would probably have made some trouble. However, with regard to the rules and regulations, any honourable member can read what they are and interpret their meaning. With His Honour the Speaker I have attended the meetings of the Joint Committee, and I know that the Committee have endeavoured to discharge their duties in the best interests of the restaurant and of the members of both Houses.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am not questioning the desire of the Committee at all. Do I understand that this Committee that is now reporting will have no power to continue next Session unless the House authorizes it to proceed?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: It is the view of the Committee that it is appointed only for the Session.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is all.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: I understand that in the early part of the Session the honourable leader of the House suggested a Committee to take up the question of arranging for this Empire club or a larger restaurant, when the accommodation is completed.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: I think it is too luxurious. At home we are not fed on such fine grub. However, if the restaurant is to be improved there is no use discussing or debating the question, but we should go down and see the chef and see what we can get him to do. Let us show him that the true way to an Englishman's heart is through his belly. We ought to have something better than we are getting. It is true, the price is low—very low; but I would rather go to a Chinese restaurant if I were not so lame that I cannot walk.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I am not so much interested in what we have to eat as what we are going to have to drink, and, since the details of this whole matter are being discussed, we might as well understand that all the privileges that were enjoyed by the House of Lords at the time of Confederation are enjoyed by this House of Lords in the Parliament of Canada, and nobody should infringe upon them. Are we to be imposed upon by the uplifters who are laying the foundations of a great deal of disturbance throughout the length and breadth of the land? If the Chairman of the Restaurant Committee is present, I would draw his attention to the fact that we are not limited to cold water and weak tea and miserable coffee and a glass of milk; we have privileges that extend far beyond. and, while I can quite understand that the honourable member from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) would not agree with me—

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: I am with you.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Oh, you would agree? With your approval, I feel that the Committee would be fully justified, according to the constitution, in recognizing that for men of our age, having lived a certain length of time and having acquired certain habits, it is dangerous to turn off the tap too suddenly; and if the gentlemen who occupy fleeting positions in another Chamber, and who like the clouds come and go with public opinion—if they are afraid to associate with us, then I say let us have a separate restaurant where we can have a drink of whisky or something else, and where we can enjoy all the privileges that we are entitled to under the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Whilst this matter is under discussion I would like to say a few words. I have been using the restaurant right along, and to me it is quite satisfactory. Of course, I have never been accustomed to anything very great—have always had to go pretty slow, but I can honestly say that I have got good value for my money. But it does seem to me that the Committee should proceed a little cautiously about inaugurating a new set of rules governing the restaurant. I do not know what powers they have; but I think that some of the new rules that have been laid down are not satisfactory to a great many members of Parliament. For a number of years, as I understand, it has been the privilege of members of the Press Gallery to come into the restaurant on practically the same terms as members of Parliament. That privilege has to a certain extent been taken away, and I really do think that this is a mistake. There is, I understand, a new rule which reads as follows:

4. Members of the Press Gallery will be permitted to use the Restaurant, and shall have the privilege of introducing non-resident guests connected with the Press, on the application of the Secretary of the Press Gallery to any member of the Restaurant Committee.

I do not wish to introduce any contentious matter in this debate, nor am I bringing up this question because I wish to criticise the action of the Committee; but I think that perhaps it would be better, in the interest of all concerned, if the old rules in that regard were restored. The chairman of the Press Gallery could hand in to the Secretary or the Chairman of the Committee a list of its members, who are well known here—just as well known in this House as are the members of the House of Commons and of the Senate—and it would not be at all necessary for them to go to the Secretary and obtain cards, because the persons in charge of the restaurant could identify them. This has been the cause of a little friction, I think, and it is my opinion at least that these cards are not necessary. If a list were handed in, that would be amply sufficient. I am sure that the members of this Committee have been doing the very best they can to make the restaurant a success. I know that it has been run to some extent at a loss, but that is not their fault. They are giving a very cheap meal, and very good meal. No doubt mistakes occur occasionally; but mistakes are made at home occasionally. I do not think we have any great reason to complain in this respect, but I do think there ought to be some modification of the rule with regard to members of the Press Gallery. They are a good lot of fellows; they are men we all like to talk to, because they have a fund of information on all public questions in which we are concerned; and it will not hurt us a bit to associate closely with them and to chat with them during the meals. They have to be here, and they have very arduous duties to perform, and no doubt it is a great advantage to them to be able occasionally to use the restaurant. I do not think they have used it in the past to any great extent, but it certainly is worth a good deal to be able to use it whenever they wish. We ought to restore the old arrangement, which, I think, was fairly satisfactory all round. If any abuses occur with regard to the persons whom members of Parliament, Senators, or pressmen bring into the restaurant, each particular question can be settled on its merits. But I really do think—I say this honestly—that in the interest of all concerned it would be better to restore the old situation and do away with the necessity of applying for those particular cards or tickets.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, I rise for the purpose of endorsing to some extent the remarks of my honourable friend from Antigonish (Hon. Mr. Girroir). It has been stated here that the restaurant is run in a splendid way. I do not think so. I may not be a good judge, but if I am right I think there should be some improvement and the restaurant should be run in first-class order. It has been intimated that there is a deficit from the restaurant, and I do not suppose that the members of the Committee make up the amount. I suppose the Chairman can tell me whether they do or not?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: The Speaker is Chairman of the Committee.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: If the Speaker is Chairman I am quite satisfied that he does not allow the other men to pay. The money must come from somewhere. The restaurant should be established and operated as a club for the members of the House of Commons and the Senate, and, as urged, also for the members of the Press Gallery. I am quite in accord with my honourable friend from Antigonish. Members of the Press Gallery ought to be allowed to bring in guests. If anything wrong should occur, the privilege could be restricted. But I cannot understand why the Committee, in the exercise of judgment or common sense, should decide that while a member of the Press Gallery might come into the restaurant and obtain his meals there whenever he desires, he could not bring his wife with him. I would like some honourable member of the Committee, if he had any part in making such an arrangement to state for what reason any such line has been drawn. The member of the Press Gallery is permitted to go to the restaurant, and yet, if he is a married man, he is not permitted to bring his wife with him! It seems to me that the Committee has not given this matter proper consideration, and, not having given it proper consideration, they should be asked to do so. Before the old Parliament Buildings were destroyed I had the pleasure of going to the restaurant frequently, and I know that it was splendidly conducted. It was very much better conducted than the present restaurant is. Of course, there have been disadvantages through lack of accommodation, but that should not interfere with the provisions. The honourable gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Tanner) spoke of the fish. Any man who knows anything about fish knows that he never can get anything but stale fish in the restaurant. I prefer fish to meat, and, coming as I do from a fish district, I am a fairly good judge of fish, and I must say that in the restaurant I have never got a piece of fish that was not stale, and sometimes it was worse than stale. This is a very important matter. Again, there is a time during the Session, namely, the lenten season, when some special provision should be made for men who ask for fish. The Committee should see that fresh fish is provided. And there is no trouble in getting first-class, fresh fish in the city of Ottawa, because there is a car coming from Halifax twice a week.

I did not have the opportunity to read the report, which was presented on Saturday when I was absent; but I would urge upon the Committee to revise their rules, and if there is anything in those rules which would exclude the wife of a member of the Press Gallery, I want to declare here and now that I am utterly opposed to that and will vote against it, unless some good reason can be given to show me why the man should be separated from his wife, or the wife should not be allowed to go where he may go for a meal. It seems to me this point has not been given proper attention.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Honourable gentlemen, just one word. The honourable leader said at the beginning of the Session that it was the intention to make of the restaurant a first-class club. Now, if you take a guest into any club, whether first, second, or third-class, you must register the name of your guest with the steward at the desk. As to the restrictions regarding non-resident guests connected with the press, it is no great hardship for any gentleman of the press to say to a member of the Committee, "Allow me to introduce to you Mr. So-and-so from Vancouver," or, "from Halifax."

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Does the honourable gentleman think that the wife of a member of the Press Gallery should be excluded?

Hon. Mr. BOYER: I am in favour of his wife, his cousin, or his aunt being admitted, as far as that is concerned.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The House may be somewhat surprised to learn that I am prepared to endorse this report without any qualification whatever. I think that, everything considered, the restaurant has been conducted very successfully. The food is good, as a rule; the cooking is not too bad; and the attendance is very good indeed. We are getting these meals, which are at least moderately good, at a remarkably low figure; and the one thing which I miss from the report of the Committee is a statement that in future Sessions Parliament will not be in a position to furnish meals to members at a loss. I think that we should add at least 50 per cent to the present price of meals. I do not think there is any question about that at all. I do not think that our restaurant should involve a heavy burden on the public purse. But as to the restaurant itself, I must say that I have been agreeably disappointed.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I would like to find out who is the Chairman of the Committee, or if there is any other member of the Committee who could give the information. I want to ask him whether there is any possibility of the Committee changing its views with regard to the rules?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Mr. Michael Steele is the Chairman.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: We do not care for Michael Steele. We do not know anything about Steele. There must be some member of the Committee in this branch of the legislature who can give us some information.

The motion for concurrence in the report was agreed to.

BOARDS OF TRADE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill M5, an Act to amend the Boards of Trade Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, it will be recalled that when we were last in Committee I moved certain amendments for the purpose of placing them on the Minutes, and stated that we would have the Bill reprinted if at all possible. The Bill, as reprinted, has now been distributed. As we have gone through the Bill already, I do not know whether honourable gentlemen will desire that we should do so again.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We did not go through the amendments which my honourable friend presented; but as they have now been incorporated in the Bill as reprinted, I think we ought to go through them so that we will understand what we are doing.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—formation; association:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend explain the object of that section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is to permit of wider powers being exercised by an organization, such as a Board of Trade, than they can exercise under the present Act. There are many subjects that are not of a strictly commercial character, such as town-planning, sanitary problems, and other questions of that kind. This section will permit of a very much wider sphere of operations than has heretofore been adopted by Boards of Trade, or than they could have undertaken, because of the restricted conditions fixed by the present Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There is another point about this section. Those thirty persons who are enabled to form a Board of Trade need not be residents of the district at all; they can come from the outside and form this body in the district.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there any particular reason for giving that power?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a very healthy thing sometimes to introduce new blood into organizations of this kind.

Persons may have interests in the community without being residents; they may have real property and other investments.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The Board of Trade in Montreal takes in all the surrounding country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then there may be specialists along certain lines, who may be desirous of engaging in a propaganda for the promotion of public questions, and they might interest themselves in different communities, although not residents.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there not a danger that this might conflict with existing Boards of Trade, so that there might be struggles between the two?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that cannot be done.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is provided for?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, so that there shall be only one.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: These Boards of Trade have no judicial functions—no authority to do anything.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Purely advisory?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, purely so.

Sections 3 to 7, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 8—annual summary; filing; penalty:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I suppose this section is to make every board throughout the country comply with these provisions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; the absence of provisions touching returns was felt very much, and it is to overcome that difficulty.

Section 8 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 14, an Act to amend the Indian Act.

He said: This is another Bill to amend the Indian Act. The Bill proposes legislation on two points. The first feature, and the most important one, is to give authority to the Government to undertake the education of children of Indian parents. The Government now maintains certain educational institutions for this purpose, and under the Act powers are vested in the Government to permit of that laudable purpose being carried out. This Bill, however, contains additional powers, so that we may give the fullest effect to the steps that have already been taken and to the plans which have worked out most satisfactorily on the different Indian reserves in the Dominion. I think I need not elaborate on that subject, because I appeal to every honourable gentlemen whether it is not desirable that the Government should assume this responsibility, and take every reasonable measure for giving practical effect thereto. In the past the plan has worked out most satisfactorily; schools have been established upon the different reserves; they have been manned by competent teachers; Indian children have been taken from their parents and furnished with educational advantages and desirable influences, and many of them have become self-supporting and are today good citizens. It is necessary that this work be carried on to a greater extent than has been done in the past. What I might say is the corollary of that is the next feature of the Bill, namely, that we should enfranchise the Indians as quickly as possible. The fundamental principle that underlies all the work that is being done by the Government with reference to the Indians is that they should be qualified for citizenship. The Bill proposes that authority shall be given to the Government to enfranchise the Indian compulsorily. It shall not be left to his option, but shall be at the discretion and wisdom of the Government to say that when a given time is reached he is presumed to possess those qualities by which he may assume all the responsibilities of citizenship, and take his place and share the burden, with the other citizens of the Dominion. This provision is surrounded by every safeguard so as to ensure that no abuse will follow from the authority which is being vested in the Government. Honourable gentlemen will probably appreciate the necessity of the effect given to this compulsory feature. The Indian has not those characteristics which make it proper to leave to his discretion, whether he shall assume responsibility or not. Up to the present time, and for some time to come, he is and will be the ward of the nation. But that condition must terminate some time; and when it is found that the Indian possesses the personal qualities and the qualities of experience and education necessary to the assumption of his duties as a citizen, the Government may take the necessary steps to declare him a citizen, and thus separate him from the Indian privileges which to-day he is enjoying.

These, in a few words, are the principles of the Bill. I think they serve a laudable purpose, and I am sure they will be supported by the House.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill, I think, raises a very serious question with regard to the whole Indian situation in this country. My honourable friend referred first of all to the clauses of the Bill which deal with the question of the schools. He has said that under that clause the Department proposes to take in charge the education of the Indian children and to compel them to be educated. I think every honourable gentleman in this House is anxious to assist in promoting the education of Indian children, and to help them to prepare themselves so that they will be able to take their stand alongside the white men of this Dominion and become citizens of the country. At the same time, I think there is a great deal to be said against the Government taking power to take these Indian children away from their homes at the age of seven or eight years and put them in boarding schools. We all know that there is a certain amount of compulsion in regard to the education of white people; but nobody so far as I know has ever suggested that the Government should have the power to take children of white people away from their parents and send them to boarding school and insist upon their being educated there. I think it is a very serious matter indeed for the Government to undertake to take these Indian children in this way and to separate them from their parents and their home surroundings and to put them in boarding schools, which, if careful inquiry were made, I think we might find were subject to certain objections and not altogether satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Will the honourable gentleman permit me to ask a question? Did he not have to send his own children to boarding school?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I sent my children to boarding school, but I did it because I considered that it was the best way to train them. But there was no compulsion on me to do it; the matter was left to my own judgment. I think that if the Government were to confine their powers to compelling the children to attend day schools on the reserves there would not be the same objection to it. I think the parents of these Indian children have as much right to be considered in this matter as the parents of white children. I think the course proposed by the Government is a very arbitrary one. The Indians are spoken of as the wards of the Government. The question of the condition of the Indians from one end of Canada to the other is a very important one, and I think we should endeavour to know what their real condition is. We are inclined to look upon them as people who do not know anything more than children, and we are inclined to think that therefore they have to be looked after. But there is another point of view from which the matter can be considered. The Indian has a mentality different from that of the white man. He looks at things in a different way; the course of his development has been along different lines from that of the white people, and consequently he will not view this question or any other question in exactly the same way that white people would. In view of this, I think we must very carefully consider their position, particularly in dealing with matters of this kind.

Another matter that must be taken into consideration is the arrangements that have been entered into with different bodies of Indians. It seems to me that there is a very serious question as to whether the Government has any right to ask for the power for which they are asking under this Bill—to take these children away from their homes and send them away to schools. If the Government could show that they had established day schools on the various reserves, where the children could be educated, there would not be nearly so much objection to compulsory education; and, from what I know of the Indians of British Columbia, with whom I am best acquainted, I think they have shown every desire to have their children educated and trained, and that the children themselves have shown that they have a mentality that makes them capable of acquiring information and of responding very quickly to the training which they are given.

There is a further power which the Government asks for under this Bill, namely, the power compulsorily to enfranchise the Indians. That also is a serious question. The compulsory enfranchisement of the Indians means that eventually the reserves will be broken up and that the Government will be relieved of the necessity and the trouble of looking after the reserves and the affairs of the Indians as they do at the present time. I am informed that certain arrangements were made between the Six Nation Indians and the Imperial Government a great many years ago. At that time there was trouble between the American colonists and the Imperial Government, and there was some question as to whether the Six Nation Indians would take part with the colonists or with the representatives of the Imperial Government. They came to this country and an arrangement was made laying down certain conditions and granting them certain territories. In the year 1887 a return was brought down to the House of Commons dealing with all of the documents, as I understand, affecting the Six Nation Indians and their position. On page 5 of that return which is a copy of a grant to these Indians of practically all the land on the Grand river, I find these words:

> Giving and granting and by these presents confirming to the said chiefs, warriors, women, and people of the said Six Nations and their heirs the full and entire possession, use, benefit, and advantage of the said district or territory, to be held and enjoyed by them in the most free and ample manner, and according to the several customs and usages of them the said chiefs, warriors, women and people of the said Six Nations.

I understand that these people think that if this legislation goes into force their rights will be overridden, and that the Government will be in a position compulsorily to enfranchise them and take away their reserves.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Each man gets his land.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes, but it breaks up the reserves. It breaks up their condition of life. Under their system those Indians live together in a community under the guidance and rule of chiefs, and it is their custom to meet together in council and to settle and arrange their own affairs. They have been trained in that way, and if they are compulsorily enfranchised, as I understand is proposed under this Bill, their whole system is broken up. I think it is a very serious matter that the Government should deal with this question in this way. I understand that at the present time there is on the statute book an enactment whereby Indians can become enfranchised if they wish, provided that they have advanced sufficiently, and have become sufficiently educated in order to take their place beside the white people of the country. In view of that provision, I cannot see why the Government should desire to have this power compulsorily to enfranchise the Indians against their wish.

Some reference was made in another place to the Indians not paying their debts, and it was said that, on account of their position at the present time on the reserves, they could not be given a line of credit by a storekeeper, an implement manufacturer, or anyone else. I believe that if a large number of white people could not get as much credit as they do to-day they would be better off and the country would be better off. The fact that the Indians cannot get credit is not altogether an argument in favour of this Bill. I think possibly the Indians may be happier and in a better position to-day than they would be if they were to get credit. It is acknowledged at the present time that no one would think of giving an Indian credit. If a man has anything to sell to an Indian he sells for cash, and if an Indian has not the cash he does not get the article which he wants to buy. That is thoroughly understood, and I think that the Indians are much better off under that condition than they would be if they were able to get unlimited credit, which in the end might mean that they would lose all the property they have.

This Bill, of course, has been under very careful consideration in the other House, and the members of that body have gone into a large number of questions relating to it. A Mr. Moses came before a Committee in another place, and the following question was put to him:

> When in your opinion should the Indians be enfranchised?

To this he replied:

> That is a very hard question to answer. We would place it this way; give us an opportunity to prepare ourselves, let us have a meeting and bring these matters before our people and let them know what is going on. Let me try and make a point right here—my own father was a hard-working man; he started with nothing and he has reared a family of ten; we are all on that reserve at the present time. He has worked hard and what he has made is going to be distributed among his family. But, gentlemen, if you call upon him at the present time to become an enfranchised man, and to be taxed up for his fee, and everything else, it is just simply impossible; he cannot do it, because he has never expected such a thing; you have never suggested it to him and he has never thought of such a thing. If you give us to understand that this is going to come, from this time forward, I will go home and I will prepare myself and my family for that time when we are going to become enfranchised and that will be the fair British way of doing it. And any parents on that reserve, who have reared their family of children, will be placed out on the road if this Act goes into force in its present form. I claim that we ought to strike the happy medium. I know that our Council has opposed this department in everything.

The League of Indians of Canada also passed a resolution one of the clauses of which reads as follows:

The League of Indians of Canada as an association is not unalterably opposed to the principles of enfranchisement so long as it is based upon educative ideals and the proper training for the eventual assumption of the individual for the highest status of citizenship involving all its responsibilities. At the outset, the will and pleasure of the individual to assume the role and status should be based on the true principle of self-determination, but by no means or measures of coercion. Any intention of this order should be also by concurrence of a wife —if man is married—in order that separation, divorce and estrangements may not be encouraged. And such intention should be a matter the council or chiefs and band should be fully advised primarily.

That is an expression of opinion which was laid before the other House, and I think it would be of interest to this House to know the feeling of some of those people who appeared before the Committee in another place.

We have placed in our hands a statement in reference to Bill 14. It is of considerable length, and I do not want to weary the House by reading the whole of it, but at the same time I think I should put before the members of this House some of the points raised in it. It says:

2. Judging the Bill from the actual effects it would have, we see in it a most serious attack against the position of all tribes in Canada and especially those of British Columbia for the purpose of

(1) Breaking up the tribes.

(2) Destroying their status.

(3) Preventing their obtaining recognition of the tribal rights guaranteed them by Imperial enactment.

(4) Preventing the Nishga tribe from proceeding with its Petition now before the Privy Council.

(5) Breaking up the reserves so these lands may rapidly become possessed by whites.

(6) The making of a large number of Indian vagabonds.

3. We consider the following features of the Bill are unjust, undemocratic, and detrimental to our best interests.

(1) The feature of compulsion.

(2) The unlimited and autocratic power which it is proposed to confer on the Superintendent General.

(3) In exercise of that power the Superintendent General may at any time destroy the very existence of a tribe by enfranchising all its members.

(4) He may at any time on recommendation of Indian agents or others forcibly separate from the tribe by enfranchisement any Indian who takes an independent stand or is active against the autocratic decrees of the Indian Department or its agents.

(5) He may at any time divorce from the tribe its best and most capable men by enfranchising them.

(6) The Bill sets out no definite standard to be attained by individuals preparatory to enfranchisement. Not over 5 per cent of the Indians of British Columbia are educated and some tribes have been in contact with whites only since about 1875.

(7) The Bill does not contemplate treating with the Indian tribes, nor does it in the slightest degree provide for the obtaining of their consent or views.

(8) The Bill throughout ignores the rights of the tribe and assumes that reserves and other properties belong to bands.

(9) The Bill proposes the breaking up of the reserves without the consent of the Indians who thus have no voice in the disposal of their property.

However advantageous any one may think Bill 14 to be, we consider it fundamentally unjust to lay violent hands on the Indian tribe, break its status, and divide up its lands by compulsory methods. If it can be demonstrated the Bill will be advantageous to us, the only just way is to treat with us and make us parties to any arrangements.

These are some of the objections taken to this Bill 14, and I think they are very serious objections. Legislation of this kind will not be acceptable to the Indians and will have the effect of stirring up serious dissatisfaction and unrest amongst them. We have been told by the Government on more than one occasion this Session that there exists a condition of unrest throughout the country, amongst other people besides the Indians. Every honourable gentleman in this House, I am sure, is anxious that the present discontent should be allayed as much as possible, and it is very undesirable to bring in legislation which, according to what I have read to-day, is not viewed with satisfaction by the Indians and will have the effect of adding to the unrest now prevailing. I therefore very much regret that the Government have brought down such a measure and are endeavouring to obtain this compulsory power at the present time.

I would urge that this matter be held over and that the whole situation be considered from the point of view from which I have tried to present the case. The Government should take further evidence from the Indians and try to please them instead of seeking to exercise compulsory power.

Hon. Mr. FISHER: As the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat referred more particularly to the Indians on the Six Nations reserve, I would like to say a word or two. The Six Nations reserve is situated in the riding which I formerly represented in the House of Commons. It is a reserve of about 5,000 Indians, and I think I may safely say, and it will not be contradicted, that they are among the most intelligent bands of Indians in the Dominion of Canada. So far as the franchise is concerned, I believe that very many of them, perhaps the majority, would be able to exercise the franchise just as intelligently as any white man in the Dominion of Canada. They are, however, objecting to this Bill on the ground that they do not want to be compelled to be enfranchised. I may say that in years past they have on different occasions asked that the franchise be granted them; but they do not wish to have it forced upon them. They take the ground that they are allies of Great Britain and not subjects. They have always taken that ground. I understand they now have before the Governor in Council a petition asking that their case be referred to the Supreme Court, or to some other court having jurisdiction, in order that their status may be defined; and they wish that until that status is defined they should not come under the provisions of this Bill. We had an interview this morning with the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and it was to my mind very satisfactory. He gave them assurances which, I think, should be satisfactory to them, and are certainly satisfactory to me. The representatives of the Indians—there are three of them from the Six Nations present to-day—stated that the assurances were satisfactory to them. They would of course prefer to have the whole section in regard to compulsory enfranchisement thrown out, but, that not being possible, I think that, as far as the Six Nations are concerned at any rate, the matter is in a satisfactory condition. I have referred to this more particularly because the honourable leader of the Opposition mentioned specifically the Six Nation Indians. I believe there is in the Bill a clause by which, if an Indian is to be given the franchise, the Governor in Council will not bring it into force for two years unless requested by the applicant to do so. That will give ample time for full investigation and, if necessary, for looking further into the matter. For my own part I cannot see that there is any great objection to the Bill. As I have said, if the Indians get the franchise, they will exercise it intelligently. The only thing they object to is compulsory enfranchisement but, according to the arrangement that we have made with Mr. Scott, I think that objection, at least so far as it concerns the Six Nations at present, has been removed.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: It seems to me that, in view of the splendid record that Canada has had in the past regarding our treatment of the Indians, we ought to be extremely careful not to do anything that would lower our reputation in this respect. The behaviour of the Indians has also been extremely good, and is an evidence of the manner in which the Department of Indian Affairs has cared for them and protected their interests. I think we have a right to depend on that. Unless I misread this proposed measure, there is no case here for compulsory enfranchisement. Section 107 says that the Superintendent General may appoint a Board to make inquiry and report as to the fitness of any Indian to be enfranchised, and when the report is received the Governor in Council may by Order enfranchise such Indian. It seems to me—I speak subject to correction—that this only gives permission to the Department of Indian Affairs to take such steps when they are necessary, and that in view of Canada's reputation for the treatment of the Indians, we may depend upon the Department, after the investigation, to take such action as is in the best interest of the Indians and of the country. If this clause had been different—if by the use of the word "shall" instead of "may" the Government would have to take up the case of every Indian in the country—I should have been more inclined to agree with the honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock). As it is, I think we can support this Bill and may depend, as Canada has depended in the past, on the wise and proper administration of the law in the interest of the Indians by the Indian Department.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government, has there been any request made by the Indians from any part of Canada to be enfranchised by this Bill, or have they, before the Committee of the other House, strenuously opposed this enfranchisement being forced upon them in the manner proposed? I understand that, with one bare exception, the Indians from British Columbia, from Quebec, from New Brunswick and wherever else they came from, have all opposed it, and the only exception was an Indian who, when asked whom he represented, said he was invited there by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In answer to my honourable friend's question I would say that many tribes of Indians have been looking forward to enfranchisement, but the difficulty lies in the carrying out of any system of enfranchisement without the Government having authority to make a proper investigation and to take action as a result of that investigation. To leave the matter purely optional is impractical and would not accomplish the desired end. It seems to me—and it must appeal to every honourable gentleman present—that the point must ultimately be reached where the Indians will become citizens, exercising all the rights, obligations and privileges of citizenship, and I cannot appreciate or understand how we are to arrive at that very happy consummation of our wish unless we lay down a well defined policy to bring it about. Every honourable gentleman will concede that the Government of Canada cannot continue for all time to be the guardian of Indians who by a proper process of education, might become as fit for citizenship as any other class in the community. To say that we should not adopt a well-defined scheme whereby, upon the closest inquiry and examination, we may determine who are fit for citizenship, would be equivalent to saying that the Indian must for all time remain helpless and must never become a citizen; that he must rely upon the Government for wardship.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH: He can become enfranchised now if he so desires. If he asks for enfranchisement the request is considered, and if he is intelligent enough to use his franchise he is permitted to use it under the present law, without any compulsory feature. It is the compulsory part that the Indians object to; they object to enfranchisement being forced upon them.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As my honourable friend from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. McLennan) has pointed out, the Indians will have a good deal to say about it themselves. This contemplates the appointment of a board including representatives from the Department of Indian Affairs and a member of the Indian band selected by the band themselves, to make inquiry into the fitness of each man. As an additional safeguard it is provided that the Governor in Council "may by order direct that such Indian shall be and become enfranchised at the expiration of two years from the date of such order or earlier if requested by such Indian." So there is a probationary period of two years during which the Indian may avail himself of the responsibilities about to be assumed. He then has transferred to him the land which he has occupied upon the Indian reserve, and whatever interest he may have in the funds of his band, and in that way he goes forth as fully equipped for the exercise of citizenship as any other member of the community. Unless we adopt some well-defined policy of this kind, by which in the process of time we may bring about the enfranchisement of the Indians, it must be obvious that for all time we shall have to look after the Indians as wards of the nation, and that is undesirable.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I must confess I am not convinced that a man can be fit for citizenship who does not want to become a citizen. I should think that the first essential qualification for citizenship is the desire to be a citizen, and if a man is lacking in that requirement it does not matter what other qualifications he may have. What kind of citizen are you going to make of a man who must be compelled to become a citizen?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not want to interrupt my honourable friend, but I would ask him to consider the principle which will be invoked in the case of the inquiry:

> It shall be the duty of the Board to take into consideration and report upon the attitude of any such Indian towards his enfranchisement, which attitude shall be a factor in determining the question of fitness....

So it is quite apparent that if the Indian did not choose to qualify he should not be brought within the clause.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not know. I am afraid that this is all wrong—to make a man a citizen against his will. The man upon whom citizenship is forced will be a very disappointing citizen. I doubt very much if that kind of man can become a good citizen. I should think that in this respect, as in regard to many other things, such as character and morality, it is necessary for the person to be educated and convinced; and for my part I doubt very much that it will be for the good of the Indians, or for the good of the community, to make the Indian a citizen against his will.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do you not think he would be equal to many of the aliens who have come here from the slums of Europe?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But you require them to be in this country for five years; and citizenship is a privilege—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But they do not improve very much.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is a privilege you are conferring upon the immigrant, and he is asking for it. If he is fit for citizenship it may be granted to him, but it is not necessary to grant it. Here the position is reversed: you proceed on the ground that the Indian must become a citizen whether he desires it or not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, we do not; we consult his attitude in regard to it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend used the word "compulsory."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Perhaps I used it inadvisedly. I withdraw that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But whether my honourable friend uses the word or not, the effect of this is compulsory, and for my part I am very doubtful about it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Crosby in the Chair.

On section 1 (new section 9, subsection 2)—power to declare any school to be industrial or boarding school:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend led the House to assume that there are a number of day schools established throughout the country. Can he tell us on what reserves the Government has established day schools?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I cannot give my honourable friend a list of the many day schools which we have. We have over 300 day schools on different reserves, and we have a large number of boarding schools. While on my feet may I point out this—and honourable gentlemen will, I think, appreciate it when I mention it—that in many cases it is very desirable to take the children away from the demoralizing influences which surround them in their homes. The children are placed in those boarding schools, under not only moral but religious influences, every regard being paid to the religion of which they are adherents. It is desirable to keep them away from the immoral influences which surround them not only very frequently upon the reserve, but also in the particular home to which they belong. If they drop back there they fall under those deteriorating influences. It is very desirable to keep them segregated. There may be conditions which warrant us in having the children sent to day schools on the reserves to which they belong, for there are many Indians who realize their obligations and take an interest in their children. On the other hand, there are others who do not do so. It must appeal to all, I think, that if the children are brought up in properly-conducted educational institutions they must in a very short time become qualified for citizenship. Certainly the influences which surround them will be of a more salutary character than if they were left in immoral homes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There is no doubt there may be homes wherein the conditions are such as my honourable friend depicts, but I am afraid that there are also boarding schools in which the conditions are not what we would like to see them. I think it is a very serious matter that the Government should be taking those children away compulsorily from their parents and putting them in boarding schools. We all know that in a school of that kind there may be undesirable children, and one bad child may have a very serious effect on a large number of others. I do not say that the Department does not exercise every care they possibly can to prevent that kind of thing, but I think this plan is open to very serious objection.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would like to know what proportion of those schools are directly under the Department of Indian Affairs and what number of them are run by the different churches.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A certain number of religious denominations enter into contracts for the carrying on of boarding and industrial schools, and the children belonging to those particular denominations are entered in those schools, but they are all subject to inspection and regulation by the Government, just as much as if they were conducting the different classes in those schools.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That does not answer my question. I would like to know what proportion of the education of the Indian children is directly under the Government. My experience has been that it is unsatisfactory to have the different churches running Indian schools and the Government paying for them. What I want to know is what proportion of the schools are conducted directly by the Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Some of the day schools are conducted by the Government, but most of the schools are under those religious denominations to which the children belong—the Anglican schools, the Catholic schools, the Presbyterian schools, the Methodist schools. Those four denominations, in fact, control all of them.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It seems to me it would be much better if the Government undertook the education of the children directly.

I would like also to ask a question in regard to those children in the boarding schools. I have understood that they go in at an early age and are kept there for six, seven, or eight years. What is the record of the children when they grow up to be young men and young women? My experience in the West was that in most cases when you educated an Indian child in that way you spoiled a good Indian and made a poor citizen. Those children are taken away and kept for a number of years from the surroundings in the agency or reserve; they are kept at school; and, after five, six, seven, or eight years of that school life, where they are educated among children many of whom are bright and clever at their books, they are more or less ashamed of their parents and do not like living at home. Then they are left to themselves, and what is the result? It is that they practically fall back to the Indian mode of life, and then you have a citizen with a pretty good education following the Indian mode of life; so that in the end he does not make a very good citizen. I would like to know if the Department has any record of what these children do in after years, because they have been turning out these educated young Indians for the last fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years, and there should be some good record now as to what has become of them. Have they become teachers, doctors, lawyers, or farmers? And do the girls take any part in the community? They do not make very good servants; they are spoiled for that by their education. I would like to know if the Department can give any information as to what has been the result of this teaching, and whether the scholars have become good citizens and are making a success in life. My experience, I must say, would incline me to think that the answer would be against bringing them up in that way.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I cannot produce statistics or data that would appeal to my honourable friend, except to say this, that the results are fairly satisfactory to the Department, considering the nomadic disposition of the Indians and other conditions which have to be overcome. You cannot expect to take the children of Indians, who have been nomadic for centuries, and civilize them at once; but many of those children who are educated in those industrial schools are placed in various channels of life and are doing very well, many of them learning trades; and there are successful colonies of those educated Indians settled on the reserves. I am informed that the parents of the children who went through those schools are beginning to appreciate the very great advantages that come from the influences which surround them in the schools. I live in a section of the West where I come more or less in contact with Indians, and I know many Indians who have accounts in the chartered banks; they come in and draw their cheques and do business just the same as any other man in business. When I first went to the country those Indians simply roamed about the streets with a blanket about their head and were looked upon as incapable of citizenship.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Are they farming?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, many of them are farming and stock-raising. They bring in their products into market and sell them as advantageously and with as much business acumen as if they had been engaged in business for many generations.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I just want to say, in conclusion, that if the Government would inaugurate a policy of giving the education directly, and do away with all the churches in the Indian communities, I think they would do it a mighty sight more successfully.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I should like the leader of the Government to tell us how often the Department holds an inspection of those schools so that they may know what is being done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They have travelling inspectors.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How often do they get a report?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, in addition to the various inspectors and superintendents they visit those reserves. The agent of each reserve is charged with the duty of exercising more or less supervision over any educational work that is being done on the reserve, and those agents from time to time report to the Department. They are always prepared to give information as to what is being done and as to whether it is being done satisfactorily or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I have an amendment to section 1, new section 10, line 20, after the word "officer," to delete the words, "and shall have authority to enter any place where he has reason to believe there are Indian children between the ages of seven and fifteen years," and to substitute the following: "but no child shall be forced to attend an industrial or boarding school without consent of his or her parent or guardian." It does seem to me that this idea of forcing these children to go to those boarding schools, taking them away from their homes, is very unfair to the Indians, and is exercising too strong power on the part of the Government. It means practically breaking up their homes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are doing that now. There is no necessity for the Bill if you strike that out.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes, there are other things in the Bill besides this particular question of education; but there seems to be no necessity for that particular clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are taking those children now and educating them; but we find that, after establishing schools, equipping them and assuming all the expenses incident to their maintenance, we cannot get sufficient children. We have either to abandon the schools and the provision we are making at considerable expense for the education of the children, or take the authority to secure children in this way. Which course will my honourable friend prefer to take?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Shut up the schools.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Bostock was negatived, and section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—enfranchisement of Indians:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would ask if many Indians are applying now, under the existing conditions, for enfranchisement?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, Mr. Scott informs me that a goodly number are applying for enfranchisement.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend tell us how many Indians have been enfranchised up to the present time?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: About 400.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Throughout the whole of Canada?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Have any Indians been enfranchised in British Columbia?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I understand not. They will probably see the necessity of becoming enfranchised and coming down here to represent their friends.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend, on the second reading of this Bill, in answer to the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt), stated that a Board is to be appointed consisting of two officers of the Department of Indian Affairs and two officers from the band to which the Indians belong; but, if I understand section 1, it puts the power into the hands of the Superintendent General to make such appointment without being required. It does not stand to reason that a Board is to be appointed because it says the Superintendent General may appoint.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsection 2 must be read in connection with subsection 1.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But my honourable friend sees that a report can be made without the appointment of any Board?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is a wrong interpretation of the statute. It presupposes that everything in subsection 1 has been done before the report mentioned in subsection 2 is made.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SHIPBUILDING BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill 199, an Act to assist Shipbuilding.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill introduces into the shipbuilding industry a factor in which we are all more or less interested. I do not need to point out that during the recent Great War a very great impetus was given to shipbuilding in Canada. Previous to the war we had reached a point when it looked very much as if the industry of shipbuilding would be largely confined to European countries. But necessity very frequently develops resourcefulness in people as in individuals; and immediately we found ourselves involved in the war we entered upon this very important industry, which has developed to a wonderful extent—in fact, to an extent which has far exceeded our anticipations. To-day we have no less than seventeen shipyards throughout the country carrying on this industry, many of them doing a business far in excess of their most sanguine expectations. It is estimated the shipyards of Canada are capable of turning out a maximum net tonnage of 250,000 tons a year, and employing something like 25,000 men. An industry which is capable of producing this tonnage, and of employing this number of men, together with many industries that are germane to it, must necessarily be of inestimable advantage to the industrial life of the country.

Now that shipbuilding has become revived to a great extent in Europe, and now that a new impetus has been given to it in the United States, it becomes incumbent upon the Government of Canada to consider in what way it can keep alive the industry that it has been building up during the last five years.

Many applications have been made for assistance, and many suggestions have been made to the Government. I may say that the great progress to which I have referred could never have been made but for the very valuable assistance which from time to time was given to this industry during its infancy; but the Government feels that the time is gone by when this industry can be supported by direct grants or by the payment of extraordinarily large amounts for the production of the tonnage which we are to-day receiving. To make a long story short, honourable gentlemen, we have discarded the idea of giving bonuses or of entering into contracts for the building of ships at a certain rate per ton, and it is proposed that a system of loans shall be adopted, whereby the Government of Canada shall advance to the purchasers of ships 50 per cent of the cost of the ships, and shall take back, mortgages upon the ships by way of security for the amounts advanced.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: Does the Government purpose floating those notes? The Bill says it is to endorse the notes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Government does not advance the money, but endorses the notes and assumes a liability of 50 per cent of the cost of the ship. A mortgage is taken from the purchaser, and the ship is registered in the Canadian register.

With regard to foreign ships, while the Government is prepared to give every financial assistance, security which must be ample will have to be furnished to the Government, because, of course, those ships will be of foreign register. Some of the European nations, particularly France, are willing at the present time to enter into contracts with our shipyards for the turning out of a substantial tonnage, more particularly if this assistance is granted.

Under the circumstances it seems to me that if the provisions of the Bill are administered so that proper security is taken, the Government would be amply secured for the amount of the guarantees. I may say that these guarantees will be on a much more satisfactory footing than the guarantees which have been given to our railroads. We have guaranteed bonds amounting to very large sums for the building of railroads, and, in order to realize upon them we have had to adopt in many cases legislation which was not of the most popular charcter. Here is a clean-cut proposition which in my judgment can be realized upon at any time. I doubt if there is any ship which would not realize in the open market 50 per cent of its cost; and if there is any default in the early stages of the transaction the Government can at once realize, as it will be its duty to do, upon the security.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The ships will be insured?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course, there will be insurance just the same as in the case of a loan company advancing money upon a building property and taking insurance for the amount advanced.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, the leader of the Government has said that the purpose of this legislation is to some extent to find employment for large numbers of men employed in the shipbuilding industry in Canada. If I recollect aright, he went on to say that the shipbuilding industry in Canada, which was started as a result of the war, has been a very great success, far exceeding anything expected of it when it was first started. That being the case, it seems rather curious that we should now be asked to assist that industry and to find work for those 25,000 men who are engaged in the shipyards.

If I am rightly informed, the labour situation throughout the country is such that no man who wants to work has any difficulty in finding work; and, if for the time being there should be a slackness in the shipyards, I fail to see why the men employed there should not be able to find work elsewhere. We know, of course, that in countries like England, where a great deal of that kind of business is carried on, shipbuilding has its ups and downs, and that there are times when work is slack and men have to be laid off. I presume that we in Canada have to face a similar situation.

The argument of my honourable friend, as I understand it, leads to this. We are being asked to guarantee this money in order to keep the shipyards going. During the present Session the Government brought down a report of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited; and in looking over that report I find the following shipyards mentioned: The Wallace Shipyards, Limited, Vancouver; J. Coughlan & Son, Vancouver; Davie Shipbuilding Company, Levis, Quebec; Tidewater Shipbuilding Company, Three Rivers, Quebec; Canadian Vickers, Limited Montreal; Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Company, New Glasgow; Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Kingston; Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Collingwood; Harbour Marine Company, Victoria; British-American Shipbuilding Company, Welland; Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company, Port Arthur; Halifax Shipyards, Halifax; Dominion Shipbuilding Company, Toronto; Prince Rupert Dry Dock Company, Prince Rupert; Midland Shipbuilding Company, Midland. That is a total of fifteen shipyards in which the Government at the present time apparently is having ships built for which, I understand, the country is putting up the money. My honourable friend referred to seventeen yards. When we go into Committee I hope he may be able to tell us what the other shipyards are, because I think it is very important that we should know all the particulars of the yards before making these guarantees.

Most of these shipyards, I think, have been built up as a result of the policy pursued during the war, first by the Imperial Munitions Board and afterwards by the Dominion Government, of finding money for the building of ships. According to the list which I have before me, at the time this report was brought down to the House some 44 vessels were being built in these various yards. I presume that some of them have since been completed, and are probably no longer in the yards. When this report was laid before Parliament 19 vessels had been completed, and 44 were still in the various yards, making a total of 63 vessels, which had been built or were being built for the Dominion Government. The total tonnage of these 44 vessels, according to the report, is 280,530 tons. I have not seen any statement as to the length of time it takes in these various shipyards to build a vessel, and I think it would be of interest to know how long the work at present going on in these yards will keep them employed.

My honourable friend has referred to the matter of guarantees, and to the fact that we had adopted a policy of guaranteeing railway bonds. It is not necessary to take up the time of the House in going into the railway situation of the country. We started in by guaranteeing railway bonds and ended up by taking over the railways; and now we have to find the money to keep them going. Remembering the railways that we have on our hands, I very much fear that later on we may find ourselves with these ships on our hands too, and will be in a position where we shall have either to face a loss or put up more money in order to keep the ships going. There is another difficulty that I foresee. Whereas the railways are in this country, and in handling them we have the competition of only one corporation, which is a Canadian corporation, when it comes to handling ships we shall be in competition with the whole world, and shall have to deal with a very different situation. Further more this shipbuilding is being done at a time when the cost of everything is exceedingly high. My honourable friend has said that we are going to guarantee only 50 per cent of the value of a ship; but it may be found when the ship is launched that 50 per cent of the value at the time the contract was made, owing to the altered conditions throughout the world, and a reduction in the cost of materials, and that kind of thing, will represent a great deal more than the actual value of the ship.

This question of the building of ships at the present time is a somewhat complicated one. I understand that in another place there has been some discussion on the question of the Government also putting up some $20,000,000 for the purpose of building ships. I suppose my honourable friend can tell us when the Supply Bill comes down whether that is being done. If we are asked to put up $20,000,000 for the purpose of helping to build ships under the direction of the Government, and are also asked to guarantee the notes of the purchasers, which I presume will be floated in the United States, because that is about the only country in which at the present time money can be had, it seems to me that we are being asked to provide a very considerable sum of money.

There is one more point to be considered. To-day the Canadian dollar is at a discount of some 15 per cent in the American market. If we were in a position to find this money within our own boundaries and to handle this matter ourselves it would not affect in any way the question of exchange; but if these notes are to be endorsed by the Canadian Government and the money is then to be found by some financial corporation in the United States, it means that a large amount of Dominion Government notes will be floating about in the United States, and that the rate of the exchange between the two countries will be seriously affected. I did not notice that my honourable friend made any reference to that matter. Probably he will be able to give us further information upon it when we go into Committee on the Bill.

If Canada were in the position which she occupied when she was guaranteeing the bonds of the railways, this would be a very different question; but to-day we have a very considerable debt; and if the Government has decided—as I understand they have and rightly so—that we will not go any further in the borrowing of money for the purpose of carrying on the affairs of this country, it seems to me that the proposals contained in this Bill are not consistent. We may not be borrowing money directly, but we are doing it indirectly by endorsing the notes of the shipbuilders. I think this is a very questionable policy, and I think that our experience in guaranteeing the bonds of railway companies has not been such as to inspire one with confidence that the policy now proposed is in the interest of the country.

I think it would have been better to have faced the situation. If these shipyards that have been referred to are not in a position to get business and cannot keep going, we had better face the situation and see where we stand. To my mind it is a question whether Canada is really in a position to build ships in competition with the other countries of the world. The other day some honourable members of this House, myself amongst them, enjoyed the privilege of listening to a speech made by a gentleman well known in the shipbuilding business of the West, who came here, as I understand, on his way to England. He is a hard-headed, shrewd business man who has built up a considerable fortune for himself. But I have not read that he has thought it advisable to try to get ships built in Canada at the present time. Of course, there may be reasons why the particular class of ship that he is anxious to get cannot be built in this country. But I do think that we are in a very serious position and we ought very seriously to consider this whole situation as to whether it is advisable for us to attempt to carry on this shipbuilding business, which must be carried on in competition with the whole world and which we cannot assist in the way that other businesses have been assisted in this country, by putting on a protective tariff.

I noticed that in my honourable friend's speech there was one "if"—that he qualified his statement by saying that if this matter were properly handled and carefully looked after, it would result satisfactorily and be a success. But we are entering upon an entirely new business. This legislation is brought down in the very last days of the Session, and honourable members of this House, at any rate, have not had sufficient time to consider it and to realize fully what its effect may be. It is questionable whether it is in the interest of the country for this Bill to pass at the present time.

Hon. J. S. McLENNAN: Honourable gentlemen, I might recall to the House that a couple of years ago, or perhaps earlier, I made some remarks in reference to shipping, which tended to show that it was inadvisable for Canada, as Canada was then circumstanced, to attempt to encourage shipbuilding by the ordinary processes of a bounty on yards or a bounty on tonnage produced. The scheme presented in this Bill seems to me to involve none of the disadvantages which are connected with the ordinary schemes for the promotion of shipbuilding.

I did not understand the honourable leader of the House to say exactly what was attributed to him by the honourable leader of the Opposition, namely, that this measure was introduced in order to keep some 25,000 men employed and certain yards busy. At a time when there is need for thousands and tens of thousands of men in Canada, it would be foolish to spend any of the country's money, or even to embark the credit of Canada in trying to find work for them in that particular way. The situation, it seems to me, is this. Canada in shipbuilding, as in the manufacture of munitions, displayed an extraordinary and unlooked-for ability, both as to the volume and the cost of production. My honourable friend on the other side who shakes his head has had some experience in this connection and knows that a great proportion of the munitions produced, the last part of them, was produced in competition with all the manufacturers of this continent; namely, that part supplied by Canadian firms to the American Government. But be that as it may, we have shown that we could build ships, at all events, vastly nearer the cost at which the English yards, the best in the world, were producing ships. The cost in Canada was astonishingly near that of the English yards.

What Canada is doing to-day is giving an opportunity to anybody, particularly any foreigner, who wants to build a ship and who will find 50 per cent of the cost of it. The Government will finance the other 50 per cent of the cost, for say about three years from the time of the completion of the vessel. The Bill says 57 months. Well, the vessel would take one year anyway to build. That would mean, at the most, something under four years that the Government would be carrying that particular burden. It seems to me that the provision of that 50 per cent would be substantial assistance, and that the shipbuilding yards in Canada would produce ships at a much better cost, as compared with English costs, than any firm that now has an opportunity of taking part in the work and getting business. If there are any French people, or any people in some other European country, who want to build ships and can find 50 per cent of the money, we will finance the other 50 per cent.

I cannot agree with my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition as to there being a parallel between the guaranteeing of railways and the guaranteeing of ships. The railway is built under a guarantee, and if there is not sufficient traffic between the two terminal points on that railway to make it pay, the guarantor will be called on—the country will lose. If this Bill is enforced you will get the ship for 50 per cent of the cost, and that 50 per cent will be reduced every few months that the ship is available for trade in any part of the world.

Shipbuilding has been extraordinarily successful during the war; but it must also be remembered that for six or eight years before the war the shipping trade of the world was enormously profitable. It must be profitable in decreasing degree if we are to get onto a sound basis, but it seems to me that within the time for which this guaranteeing is done—if, as the honourable leader of the House says, these contracts are carefully entered into—there is a reasonably good prospect of building up and strengthening the shipbuilding industry in this country with the minimum of risk to its people.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I wish on this occasion to put myself on record as being absolutely opposed to any proposition of this kind. You would think, when we are asked to guarantee money for building ships for France and other European countries and for people who want ships at home, that Canada was in a beautiful position, ready to lend money to anybody if the security was at all good. It looks to me as if the Government were embarking upon a policy simply to help out or to keep up the big interests that were started during the war, when conditions were not normal. This is exactly along the line of giving $25,000,000 to Greece and $25,000,000 to Roumania. It is all very well giving out the money, but sometimes it is a very different matter to get the money back.

My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan) who has just taken his seat thinks that 50 per cent is quite safe to advance on ships; and so does my honourable friend the leader of the House. Well, it may be, and it may not be. In the lending of money on real estate, the most that any one will lend is 50 per cent of his own valuation of the property, to be safe; and very often he is not safe. Here you are building ships to-day at double the cost or more than double the cost, at which ships could be built a few years ago, and at a higher cost than ships will be built in other parts of the world with which our ships will have to compete. At the end of four years from the time these ships are completed conditions may have changed very much, with every shipbuilding country on earth straining every nerve to build ships. In England they are building as never before. I am not aware of what France is doing; but, knowing what the French nation are and what they can do, I am satisfied that they are building to the utmost limit. Four years from now the situation may be very different: shipping may be a drug on the market; there may be more ships than you can find freight for; and in that case, I venture to say, those ships will be put on the market and sold, and you may not get anything like 50 per cent of their value.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: May I call the honourable gentleman's attention to the fact that under this Bill the ship would practically be paid for in four years.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I have known many cases in which money, loaned on more secure property than a ship, was to be paid off in five years, perhaps in five equal payments, and was not paid. Suppose the payment is not made—the second payment, or the first payment—what are you going to do? An individual or a company is in a much better position in that case than a government. We all know perfectly well that a government cannot take the extreme measures that the individual will take, and if this Government lend money on a ship and two or three years from now 25 per cent of the loan comes due and is not paid, what are the Government going to do? Simply wait, and let the matter stand. They will not sell the ship immediately. So I foresee the risk of a great loss in connection with this matter.

My honourable friend the leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock) was quite right in drawing a parallel between the railroads and the shipping. We guarantee the bonds. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan) says there is no comparison. The two cases may not be identical; I do not say they are. But we have learned our lesson.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: What guarantee did you have for the construction of the Transcontinental?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: You have the road, whatever you guaranteed it for.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Whatever you squandered on it.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: You have the ship also, but you take the ship at a time when it is very likely to be worth less than 50 per cent of what it costs to build the ship to-day. To my mind this is just a continuation of the policy of maintaining the institutions that were started during the war.

We have $1,500,000,000 on deposit in the banks. If the ship-building industry were legitimate and on a business basis, would the financial interests of Canada, the banks, not look after it? Would they not undertake to help out a deserving proposition? But they will not do it, because it would not be good business for them. So I say that the Government would do well to be very careful when they step in and undertake something that the common sense, level-headed, hard-headed business men do not see their way clear to undertake. Why should we, in the present financial condition of the country, come to the rescue of other people? My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan) says it is not for the purpose of providing work for the men, because there is plenty of work for everybody who wants to work; therefore it must be to keep going an industry that was started under mushroom conditions during the war, when the Allied countries, Great Britain, and Canada wanted vessels in the worst way, and, not knowing that the war would end when it did, undertook a large programme.

It is stated by the honourable leader that the business has proven to be much better and much more profitable than it was ever expected it would be. We do not know anything about that, honourable gentlemen. Twenty million dollars was voted in the other House in addition to the $50,000,000 we had already expended on the building of ships, and those ships are being built to-day. That is $70,000,000. And now the Government come forward with a proposition to provide $20,000,000 more in the form of a guarantee. It does not look to me like good business, and I would warn the Government to go slow in this matter. About the shipbuilding during the war I am not going to complain in any way. Anything we did to bring the war to a successful issue was well done, in my judgment, even if it cost a good deal of money. But now the war is over and we must try to get down to normal conditions. As my honourable friend across the floor (Hon. Mr. Bostock) suggested, why not face the issues when they come up, instead of padding them and backing them up as the Government is doing by endorsing notes? It is a poor business for individuals to endorse notes for other people as I have found out to my cost—

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: You got good security.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: —a mighty poor business; and I say, honourable gentlemen, that it is mighty poor business for the Government to start in to endorse notes for people at home, or for foreigners for the sake of having them come here to build ships. If shipbuilding in Canada cannot be done on its own merits, then it is not a business that will ever amount to much in this Dominion. I fail to see how we can come out ahead in it, because it is a well-known fact that in normal times we in Canada cannot build ships as cheaply as they can be built in many other parts of the world. What does that mean? It means that our ships have to earn more money to pay their way than have ships built more cheaply; and you cannot work ships that way; they have to take whatever freight they can get. I am aware that at the present time freight rates are high. I understood the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say a month or two ago, that he could sell at a profit all the ships that the Government have built. Well, if he could I think it would be very good business for him to sell them and take the profit for the country. No man becomes poorer by selling anything he has at a profit, and the Government would avoid the risk of loss if they would dispose of those ships at a profit, for in five years from now, I venture to say, ships can be bought or can be built very much more cheaply than to-day.

However, I will not take up any more of the time of the House. I desire to place myself on record as being utterly opposed to this style of financing and to the advancing of money to other countries on what is, to my mind, very doubtful security. We are deeply in debt and we are not paying our way nearly as well as other countries that are not by any means as wealthy per capita. It seems to me that we should adopt a policy of economy; and it is not a policy of economy to be lending money to nations all over the world and then to start lending money to shipbuilders or to the purchasers of ships. I will vote against the policy, and I hope it will not be carried out to any great extent.

Hon. A. B. CROSBY: Honourable gentlemen, I want to say just a few words with regard to this. If the honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Bostock) was as mixed when he voted on the Transcontinental and Grand Trunk Pacific scheme as he is on this question, I am not surprised that he voted for that measure. My honourable friend for Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) seems to be logical in most things he takes up, but I must say he too is pretty badly mixed on the question of shipbuilding. He does not understand it very well. He should make sure that he is on good ground before he undertakes to make a speech such as that which he made this afternoon. I asked him when he was discussing the question of railway construction in Canada: "What guarantee did you have for the construction of the Transcontinental? what guarantee was there that you were going to get anything out of it?" My honourable friend had no guarantee at all but the possibility of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company running the railroad if it did not cost more than they thought it should cost. That was the kind of guarantee the Government had in the Transcontinental matter

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I learned my lesson.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: I am glad you did, because it takes a good deal to teach you fellows a lesson. And I hope the honourable gentleman on the other side has learned his lesson too. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway is used as an illustration; but the present proposition is an entirely different matter. I appeal particularly to the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Edwards) because he as a business man is generally pretty careful about these things, and is a man of great understanding; although, I must say, I do not like his speeches as a business man. I want him to listen to this as a business proposition. We undertake to assist in the construction of ships in Canada. We have been lending money or giving credit to nations in Europe, not for the purpose of helping them, but for the purpose of helping the Canadian manufacturers and the working people of this country. What are we going to do in connection with the shipbuilding industry? We are going to do much more. We have good security. There is no possibility—I say this advisedly as a man who knows something about shipping—of the country losing on the proposition that is now being put before this House. When the building of a ship is to be contracted for, the contractor must in the first place be acceptable to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Finance. He must come before them as a business man, representing a business concern that has some standing. He must deposit 10 per cent of the cost of the ship before the contract is made; and after he signs the contract he must deposit 10 per cent more; and he must continue making deposits until he has deposited 50 per cent of the price of the vessel. What is the next thing? A mortgage is taken in order that the shipbuilding concern may proceed to make contracts for the carrying on of their business and the financing of it. They cannot expect to get more for that ship until she is about ready to launch. Then the purchaser may be able to arrange to obtain the money somewhere else and to bring that money in and complete the payment. If he does not bring in the money, the Government hold the mortgage on the ship and she is not transferred from the Canadian register to any other register until every dollar of the mortgage is paid. The vessel is insured for such amount and in such companies as the Minister of Finance may determine, and the insurance policy is held by the builder of the ship or by the Government. Therefore there is not the slightest possible chance of loss. As I have already said, 50 per cent of the total price is paid by the man who makes the contract; and the contract for the construction of a ship is not a contract involving $100,000, $200,000 or $300,000. For instance, a 3,000-ton ship could not to-day be constructed for less than $125,000 to $150,000—and I am making a very low estimate. There are ships that would cost something like $500,000 or $600,000 to-day. So the contractor makes a deposit of 50 per cent of the ship, and we take the mortgage on it. We have also the insurance. Moreover, the ship is registered in Canada and cannot be removed from the Canadian register until she is paid for. There is not a moment from the time the construction is begun until the ship goes to sea that we have to take the slightest risk.

My honourable friend from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) talks about notes and says they are very dangerous things. So they are. But how do the banks make all their money if not by notes? How does any business man make money but by lending it or investing it in business? True, my honourable friend may have endorsed notes for some persons who did not pay, but on the other hand he may have endorsed notes on which he has made a good deal of money. In this case the Government do not put up a single dollar of cash; the Minister of Finance simply endorses the notes when the contractor is seen to have everything in perfect order. In the first place, the purchaser must be reliable; secondly, the people who are going to construct the ship must be reliable; and then the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries jointly must decide that they are reliable before any credit at all is given. I do not care what Government may come into power—and I do not think there is any possibility of any other Government coming into power than the one that is in now, because they say there are not going to be any more elections. Therefore we can be perfectly sure, if we have the same men that we have now, that very good progress will be made.

It was said before that this was done for the purpose of giving employment and carrying on the shipyards. I do not say it is so; but supposing that to be the case, would my honourable friend say it was not well to keep 25,000 men at work in Canada here? But we could not have that condition without this legislation. Would the honourable gentleman say that it was a wise policy for this or any other Government to allow an industry to go down, and those thousands of workingmen to go without employment, rather than have the Government endorse the notes of reputable people, taking a fifty per cent chance on a thing that they hold in their hands—for they hold the mortgage, the ownership, the control of the entire industry, and the whole consideration. Would my honourable friend say he would not agree to that?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would say it is good policy, if a man comes to borrow money, if you have the money and you want to lend it to him, to let him have it; but if you have not the money, don't sign a note.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: My honourable friend knows as well as I do—and there are very few men in this House or anywhere in Canada who have had anything to do with business that do not know—that if a man never got any farther than his own money could carry him he would not get very far. I know that was my condition. If I had to wait till I got money of my own to put here and there, if I did not go to somebody and get a little credit to help now and again, I am afraid I would not have been here to-day. I know there are a great many men in Canada like me; nearly all Canadians have made their way by honest effort, and by trying to get assistance. My honourable friend did not answer the question I put to him. I say that if this Government did not take this chance, 25,000 men would be out of employment; and that would be a bad thing, as I am sure every man in this House will agree. If every dollar of interest, every dollar of subsidy, every dollar of endorsation made by the Government during the past years had been made on the same lines as this Bill calls for, we would never have lost any money; and I have no hesitation in stating that there will be no money lost by the Bill we are putting through, while a great deal of prosperity and a great deal of help and assistance will be given to the working people of Canada, and the shipbuilders of Canada as well.

Hon. W. C. EDWARDS: The matter of security is not the question that is involved in this Bill. During the war many extraordinary things were done in Canada that would not have been done but for the war, and no one is going to say that those things were not justified then. But the war is over, and if the Government desires to do that which is wise and judicious it will allow business to take its natural course, and not interfere with it in any manner or form. This Government meddling in business matters is a serious error, and the sooner the Government discontinues that practice the better. For instance, who ever heard anything so ridiculous as the suggestion of licensing foreign exports? All such suggestions are serious mistakes, and highly detrimental to the country. The sooner business is left to take its own natural course the better for Canada. Why undertake to aid shipbuilding, any more than to aid in a similar way various other industries in Canada? If this business of shipping is so fundamental, so secure, and has no doubts about it whatever, why not allow the business men of Canada to undertake the matter on their own account? I can assure the Government that, without any question of doubt, suggestions of this kind do not recommend themselves to the wise business community of the Dominion of Canada; and if the Government of Canada were composed to-day of business men as good and sound as my honourable friend the leader of the Government, no such projects would be undertaken. I am confident that my honourable friend disbelieves in such an undertaking as this to the same extent that I do, and I disbelieve in it absolutely.

Hon. IRVING R. TODD: The leader of the Opposition, speaking on this Bill a few minutes ago, said he thought it was a very doubtful piece of policy. I cannot agree with him, because I think it is the worst piece of business policy that I have heard proposed since I have been a member of the Senate. I would like to ask the leader of the Government what he would think of a corporation that would say: "We have a large debt, our expenses are heavy, we must reduce our expenses, put in the knife to the limit, we can hardly keep up," and the next minute turn around and vote $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 worth of notes? It is ridiculous on the face of it.

I cannot agree with the honourable member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Crosby) in regard to this class of security. I know ships that were built when shipping was not as prosperous as it is now; they never paid a dividend from the first trip, and within five years they were sold for forty per cent of what they had cost. I think there is no question that the Government may make a loss over this thing.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: We do not think they would run behind for five years.

Hon. Mr. TODD: What are you going to do if you are running behind?

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: They cannot run behind.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Terrible things happen when they run behind. I have known them to run behind. Why not let business men handle business affairs?

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Will my honourable friend say that ships are running behind now?

Hon. Mr. TODD: No.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: And no possibility of them running behind for the next year or two or three.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Yes, there is. The honourable gentleman might as well admit that we cannot build ships as cheaply as they can in England.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Oh, yes, we can.

Hon. Mr. TODD: And there is a big shipping policy being carried on in England, and also in the United States, and you will find that the building of ships will be overdone in the next four or five years. Why do not the large financial institutions of Canada advance this money—this fifty per cent? I would like to ask my honourable friend the leader of the Government that question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know. That is their own judgment. I would say to my honourable friend that I have not the slightest doubt that the large shipyards of Canada are being very largely helped by the banks of Canada and the other financial institutions.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Then why do not the banks keep on helping them?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suppose the banks have a limitation.

Hon. Mr. TODD. I only wish the Government had a limitation. The only institution in this country that has no limitation is the Government. I tell you it is a business transaction, and you will find inside three or four years that many gentlemen on the other side will agree with me in that.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: You will find you will be wrong.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: May I be permitted to add one word to what I said? I have some knowledge of the industrial conditions of Canada to-day, and I know of no industry that has to-day a sufficient supply of men. On the other hand, I know of some large institutions that have to close their works because of the lack of labour.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

SENATE AMENDMENT NOT INSISTED UPON.

A message was received from the House of Commons stating that that House had agreed to the second amendment made by the Senate in Bill 53, an Act to amend the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919, but had disagreed to the first amendment made by the Senate in the said Bill.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that the Senate do not insist on its first amendment, and that a message be sent to the House of Commons accordingly.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Which amendment was that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That was the one taking the Senate out of the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I cannot say that I agree with the reasons given by the House of Commons for objecting to our amendment. I think we have every right to take the staff of the Senate out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission if we wish to, and I think that the House of Commons has not taken the proper view of this matter.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I am quite at one with the honourable leader of the Opposition with regard to the reasons assigned by the House of Commons; but, as the situation is serious—for I feel that there would be trouble if we insisted on our amendment in these closing days of the Session—I do not think we should insist now. I am glad, however, that the leader of the Opposition has mentioned the matter, because I agree with him.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would like to ask my honourable friend whether it would be possible to put in a rider to that effect.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

The motion was agreed to.

INCOME WAR TAX BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 158, an Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 183, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

DEMOBILIZATION BORROWINGS BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 211, an Act to confirm certain Borrowings under the Demobilization Appropriation Act, 1919.—Sir James Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Tuesday, June 29, 1920.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SHIPBUILDING BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 199, an Act to assist Shipbuilding. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

On section 1—conditions under which assistance may be given:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: When this Bill was before the House yesterday, the argument that I understood the honourable leader of the Government to present to the House as the reason why the Bill should be accepted was that, as is stated in the preamble, "large numbers of men are employed in the shipbuilding industry in Canada," and there is danger that they may be laid off.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I did not say that. I said that the industry had assumed very large proportions, and I mentioned the tonnage that was constructed and the number of men who were employed; but I did not make that the central fact.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My honourable friend does not fear that these men will be laid off necessarily?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know nothing about that. But I did not base my statement on anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I rather misunderstood, possibly from the way my honourable friend put it. The list of different firms in Canada which I read to the House yesterday by whom at the present time ships are being built for the Government would, I suppose, be the firms that are to get the assistance under this Bill, if it goes into effect. The list that I read yesterday included only 15 different firms, and I think my honourable friend said that there were 17 altogether. Can he tell us who the other two firms are? I think this is an important matter which we should understand in order that we may not be subsidizing or encouraging new firms to start up in this business. As I understand the situation, we are being asked to pass this Bill for the purpose of helping the firms that are now in existence. If it is necessary to encourage the shipbuilding industry in this country and to keep these firms employed, I do not think we should allow this assistance to be given to other firms that are not now building ships for the Government or are not in existence. I would ask my honourable friend if he can give us some information on this matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, the proposal does not necessarily relate exclusively to yards constructing Government ships, nor has it relation only to those yards which are now engaged in shipbuilding. The purpose is to assist shipbuilding generally.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw the attention of my honourable friend to the preamble:

> Whereas large numbers of men are employed in the shipbuilding industry in Canada; and whereas at the present time there is not sufficient demand for the construction of ships by Canadian purchasers and the Government of Canada has ceased placing further orders.

These employees the present shipbuilding yards are about to lay off because they have no orders. If that be so, is it not logical for my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Bostock) to ask if this means what it says—that these subsidies or these encouragements are for the purpose of keeping those shipyards going and not for the purpose of encouraging other yards to open and other companies to handle contracts? I should assume that that went without saying; but the answer given by the honourable leader of the Government astonishes me. It is not the logical answer. If the existing shipyards are about to close because there is not sufficient work for them, should not my honourable friend answer readily and without doubt that this proposal is for the encouragement or the maintenance of those yards and is not intended to help other groups to open shipyards?

Hon. JAMES DOMVILLE: Let us bring my honourable friend's attention to this. It is now late in the Session, and everybody is happy because of the increased indemnity. The Minister is happy and everybody else is happy. I do not know that the public are unhappy. I am sorry the other honourable member for St. John is not present, and I see very few New Brunswickers here to fight the cause of New Brunswick. What about St. John as a shipbuilding centre? There is an immense dock being built there at Courtenay bay—I was going to say, the biggest in the world, but certainly the biggest in America. Why cannot ships be built at St. John? There is a bar sinister on this. I do not say it is placed there intentionally. My honourable friend may be able to explain, and probably will explain, that St. John is to be counted in. But it is my duty to bring this matter before the Government for serious consideration. We in New Brunswick are not in a very happy position: we have not intelligence enough to be represented in the Government. Many of our representatives have shown their popularity, or their jocularity, but the Government do not seem to recognize their value sufficiently to take them in. This will be viewed by our people down there in a more serious way than we may at the moment suppose. There is, as I have said, an immense dock at St. John, and there is no reason why ships should not be built there. In Belfast, where great ships have been constructed, the people had neither coal nor iron; the plates and the girders all had to be conveyed there and erected. The same thing can be done at St. John; the only drawback, or the bar sinister, would be the haulage from Nova Scotia—from Sydney or wherever else the plates are rolled. There need not be a bar sinister, because in the summer the shipments can come in by water, and as to the winter, there is no reason why the Government, which is endeavouring to assist various industries in this country, should not give them some assistance. I shall not detain you on this question, as I have so little support in this House fighting for St. John. We have only a few members, and they have gone home happy. The welfare of the individual, I suppose, is of greater importance than the welfare of the nation or of the province. Perhaps I may be out of touch with the situation; but I desire to bring this question, in a friendly, sensible way, to the attention of the Government. Did not New Brunswick at one time have the third largest fleet of ships in the world? Did it not build the Marco Polo, which in her day was the fastest vessel sailing the ocean on this side of the Atlantic, or perhaps anywhere? The same talent is there to-day and the same desire to develop along the lines of the development of the Dominion. The people of New Brunswick desire to have their part in any development that may be contemplated. They want only to be placed on the same footing as other shipbuilding provinces, and not barred. The impression is, as an honourable member has said, that this proposal is for the establishment or maintenance of certain firms. I do not take that line at all. I am looking to the Government as a kind of salvator mundi.

I understand that in another place the Premier stated that he had been misinformed about fuel. Winter will not be long in coming, and we shall find ourselves confronted with the fuel problem. I dare say the Prime Minister has been misinformed. I think that if he had been properly informed he would have taken a different view. Now, I would point out—perhaps it is the last time I shall ever bring up the question—that there is an abundant supply of fuel in New Brunswick. There is oil enough in that province to run almost the whole country, yet there has not been a friendly reference to it except what was stated by my honourable friend the leader of the House a couple of sessions ago: he said he would do what he could. We shall soon have the winter with us, and every month is vital. Let us get started and produce. If there were any doubt as to whether coal or oil should be produced, or any doubt as to the quantity or the available markets, or the requirements, I would certainly feel that the Government were justified in giving New Brunswick the go-by in regard to fuel or shipbuilding. We have nobody in New Brunswick of sufficient intelligence in the eyes of the Government to be in the Cabinet to protect our interests. If there were anybody he would not remain there long; he would be hurled out of the province. I make these remarks, as I said before, for the purpose of asking the Government if St. John is to get its share in the shipbuilding industry. I think the answer given by the leader of the Government put this Bill in even a worse light than I thought it was in yesterday. I can quite understand that there might be some justification for the Government coming down with a Bill of this kind, and asking the country to endorse notes for the purpose of keeping busy shipyards that are already established; but I think it is a very bad policy to pass legislation encouraging other shipyards to start up when those that we already have apparently not sufficient business.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do I understand my honourable friend to advocate the exclusion of all yards that hereafter come into existence?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No. The point I am trying to make is this. The shipbuilding industry is like any other industry in the country: it should be run on business lines. If there is no business for the present yards, other yards certainly will not come into existence. But if a group of gentlemen get together and think they can form a company and establish a yard, and get the Government to back their notes, they may be encouraged to start another yard in competition with yards which at the present time require assistance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would not that be a good thing for the country—another successful yard?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not think it would be a good thing to encourage competition with yards which are already in existence and which have not enough to do.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I should like to ask the honourable gentleman a question. Has the honourable gentleman considered the use of the words in the preamble:

And whereas it is advisable to assist in financing the construction of ships in existing Canadian shipyards.

Do the provisions of the Bill extend any farther than that?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The leader of the Government has said that they do. When I read the Bill yesterday I thought the assistance which was to be given was confined to yards already in existence; but the leader of the Government to-day has given an answer somewhat different from that. That is the very point I am trying to bring home to honourable gentlemen in this House —that the legislation goes further than we thought it did. In view of what has been said to-day, I think the Bill is even more objectionable than I thought it was yesterday. I think it is very questionable whether this legislation should be adopted at the present time. The leader of the Government has not shown to my satisfaction that the already-existing yards require assistance.

When the question is raised as to the providing of money for the purpose of enabling foreign companies to get ships built in Canada, we find the provision in the Bill that the Government will not take mortgages on those ships, but will take other approved security. It does not seem to me that there is much likelihood of this money being used for that particular purpose; it is more likely that the money would be used for the purpose of assisting people in New York, or some such point, where the notes will probably be financed, to come here and build ships very much to their own advantage.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would not that incidentally be of advantage to Canada?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would they not spend the money here for labour and materials?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Certainly, if there was enough business for the Canadian yards. I want to draw attention to a statement made the other day in another place when an item on the Estimates dealing with steamships subsidies was being discussed. It was pointed out, I understand, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that some of these subsidies could not be continued by the Government because there were not sufficient ships to put on the lines to do the business. Surely if the shipyards required work to keep their men going the proper thing to do would be to build ships to supply the people of our own country with facilities for carrying on trade. If, as is apparently the case, we have not enough ships for our own needs, surely we would rather be building them than helping other people to come in from outside to take up these yards with our credit.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I should like to ask the leader of the Opposition a question. Does he himself, or the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), or the honourable gentleman from Fredericton (Hon. Mr. Thompson), or the honourable gentleman to his right (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), think that they, or I myself, should be precluded from forming a company and building ships and taking part in world trade?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Since the honourable gentleman has put the question to me as well as to others, I draw attention to the fact just mentioned a moment ago, that this Bill is to provide assistance to existing Canadian shipyards. That does not preclude the opening up of other shipyards. But, if it is true that there are 25,000 men threatened with being laid off, I would suppose that this money was for the purpose of keeping them employed. That being the case, I think it would be very injurious to the country for the Government to subsidize new companies or to sign notes to assist in the opening up of new yards.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Why could not you and I open a yard and employ some of those men?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That could be done. But if shipbuilding in Canada is to succeed it must adjust itself to existing conditions, and I do not think it would be conducive to the health of the industry to expend money in such a way as to bring utter failure to existing shipyards. I suppose we have at present as many shipyards as we need, and if we can keep them going I think we may congratulate ourselves.

I am rising, not particularly to answer my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Murphy), but to ask the leader of the Government if he can lay on the Table the correspondence which has brought this Act into being. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has stated that foreign countries wanted to build ships in Canada, and that, while they were not ready to pay the cost of building them here, they would under this arrangement pay up to 50 per cent of the cost, the Government guaranteeing the other 50 per cent. There is no such statement as that to be found in the preamble of the Bill. Apparently this Bill is the result of negotiations with foreign countries or foreign firms for the building of ships in Canadian yards. I do not know whether the information I ask for has been furnished in the other Chamber; at all events, I have not seen it, and I would ask the leader of the Government if he can lay before us the correspondence leading up to the present legislation.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Honourable gentlemen, this measure appeals to me as being a step in the right direction, and one of the best business propositions which so far has been put forward by the Government. It is designed to have ships built in Canada which otherwise would not be built here. I understand that certain corporations in Europe are willing and anxious to have millions of dollars worth of ships built in Canada provided they receive help in the financing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Has the honourable gentleman seen that correspondence?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: No, but I was informed of that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He has more faith than you.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: We live by faith.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: As I say, this Bill is designed so that ships may be built in Canada which otherwise would not be built here. I think any honourable gentleman will readily admit that if that end can be accomplished without the country having to put up any money it will be a good thing for the country at large. There is nothing which the country requires to-day more than money. The building of these ships is going to be the means of giving the country hundreds of thousands of dollars not only through taxation on the material used in the construction of the ships, but also through the taxation which will be paid by the hands employed in constructing the vessels. One honourable gentleman said yesterday that he knew of vessels which had been built years ago, and which had been held for four or five years, and then, upon sale, had realized not more than 50 per cent of their value. Assuming that that might happen in this case, I do not believe that there would be any loss, because the taxes would make up the loss. I do not believe there is a chance of such a thing happening in any event, because the money will not be advanced to the ships' purchasers. In addition, the Government will have as security not only the mortgage, but also the company, and I am sure that they will be very reputable firms. If any reasonable care is taken in selecting the firms and in guaranteeing only for good, reputable business people, the loss which my honourable friend seems to fear so much will never take place. If, instead of guaranteeing 50 per cent to these companies, the Government were advancing the money, I would be the first one to stand up in this House and oppose such a policy.

One honourable gentleman asked yesterday why these people did not come to our banks for the money. He said that the banks of Canada had on deposit to-day over $1,500,000,000. I presume that the honourable gentleman's statement as to the amount on deposit in the banks is correct; but I would point out to him that the funds of the banks in Canada are pretty well employed to-day, and I would ask him why we should prevent these people from bringing in what we so much desire, and thus enabling us to acquire new capital?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Where will the Government get the money if not from the banks?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The Government is not getting the money. The Government is endorsing the notes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: They are backing the notes, but the notes have to be discounted at some bank.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It is for the maker of the note to get it cashed.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that the banks do not look very favorably upon ships as security.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Supposing any shipbuilding firm were to build a ship costing $4,000,000, is there any business man who, even under existing conditions, with the high cost of construction and so on, would not be glad to take that vessel off the builder's hands, and give 50 per cent of its value, in other words, $2,000,000. I do not believe the Government is taking any risk; I do not believe they will ever have to put up any money; and I believe that by this legislation, through taxation alone, they are going to make a handsome profit.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: Honourable gentlemen, my honourable friend seems to be barking up the wrong tree. We are not finding fault with the Government for encouraging business, but we want to know how far the limits of this assistance are going to extend. If one yard is going to be able to use the Government's credit to finance, why should not another? Why limit it? Of course, I can see the difficulty. The honourable gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Murphy) is perfectly right. But I can see before me the merger that we have been hearing about. The ramifications of that merger are greater possibly than any honourable gentleman in this House thinks. That merger would have power enough, I do not hesitate to say, to handle the Government or to handle nearly all the banks put together. It is a basket of chips.

We went into the Grand Trunk railway undertaking, and we had to pay off its liabilities. Why was it unsuccessful? Who made the Canadian Pacific railway successful? Americans. I for one would be glad to have them build up our industries, and I do not think we should be limited in the matter before us by any small ideas. I think the Bill before us implies that the shipbuilders require assistance and that they want to go on with their trade, but we are limiting the assistance to a few, and others cannot get the benefit of it. That is a very small policy. I agree that the assistance should be limited to a certain extent. There should be some means of knowing who are going to get the Government guarantees. The honourable leader of the Government says that we are not giving them money; that this is only a machine for making paper. But, as any honourable gentleman who is a shipbuilder or shipowner knows, we must consider the question of collisions, and things of that sort. However, I do not find fault with the Bill, except that it is not elastic enough, and perhaps, if I can get a seconder, we shall amend that clause so that it may apply to new industries that may be started. Are all the ships built on lake Erie, in Ontario? We in the Maritime Provinces built ships before they had a corporal's guard at work in Ontario. We owned ships and knew the art. I am sorry that my honourable friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel) is in the Chair, because otherwise he might have had a chance of standing up for his province. He is like the Scotchman's cow, which always came home at night because it was tethered by the mouth. The Irishman did not feed his cow in his pasture, but he always had some salt feed for it, and it came back at night to be milked. That was good policy. We on this side of the House are confined a bit: we are a miserable minority, and we know it, but are trying to assist you. No one is speaking against this legislation; but when it comes to a question of vital importance to our province, it is our duty to ask the leader of the House if he will not amend this clause. I think the principle is all right, and when the Bill is made so that it will not cut us out I think it will be good. I would ask the honourable leader of the Government if he would feel like doing that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: All right; then we are all loving one another.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like to ask my honourable friend if he has the correspondence.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I have not, I am sorry to say.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would my honourable friend get it for the third reading?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would be very glad to lay it on the Table, but really I think it is unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the public would be very much interested in having it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would be interesting.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But is not the public entitled to that information?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, yes, I would say, provided we had it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend knows, and we know, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has made the statement that foreign countries were ready to build ships in our yards, and approached the Government for the purpose of asking it to finance the operation. Well, since we have no statements except those that are before us, is not Parliament entitled to have that correspondence?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; but I would say to my honourable friend that if the orders do not come the Government will not have to incur the obligation.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen, I do not presume to know enough about the matter which is now before the House to undertake to deal with the details of the Bill; I leave that to honourable gentlemen who are better informed; but the preamble of the Bill places the matter in a light in which I think it should be considered. The experience of Canada, as well as of other countries, is that it is not desirable that Governments should go into lines of business which can be transacted by private enterprise. We have taken hold of railroads, and we have now a fair idea of what the practical result of Canada's undertaking to run nearly all the railroads of the country is likely to be. And now, not satisfied with dealing with the railroads, it is proposed that the Government should interfere in the matter of shipbuilding. I know that some little time ago the Government did interfere, and there was perhaps some justification for the Government's undertaking to build ships at a time when the tonnage available for traffic was not at all equal to the traffic which offered; and, in order to relieve the traffic distress which arose in that condition of things, the Government undertook to build ships. While I thought that that was an excusable thing, I believe it was a mistake. If there was so great a demand for tonnage, private enterprise, if given time, would have met the demand.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Does my honourable friend think that the risk of endorsing notes for ships is as hazardous as the risk of endorsing for the railroads?

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think the honourable gentleman has had sufficient experience to make him a little cautious about endorsing even the best-looking paper; and, if these foreign governments are anxious to have ships built in Canada, why do they not have them built by the shipbuilders who are engaged in the business? That is what I cannot see. I do not see why the Government of Canada should be called upon to step in between the proposed buyer of tonnage and the people who build the tonnage.

The honourable gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) referred to the proposed effect of this legislation on the plant at St. John, N.B.; but in the city from which I come there is a private company at work building ships. That company employs three thousand men, and it does not seems to me to be the right thing for this Government to interpose itself between that company and the foreign government, if there is such, that desires to have a ship built. That is the way it strikes me—that if the tonnage is needed and the customers are there who are prepared to pay for it, the Government has no business to interfere; and, if there is no one able to pay for the building of ships, then the ships had better not be built.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: When I first glanced over this Bill it struck me that it was a very good Bill indeed, a step in the right direction; that it tended to encourage shipbuilding in this country, providing a market for ship labour and for various materials that go to make up the ships. But when I heard the speech of one honourable member of this House, and observed the ominous silence of another honourable member, who very seldom misses an opportunity to enter into a debate, I began to think that there might be something behind all this that was not quite right. The honourable member for Rothesay intimated that the merger was behind all this legislation. The honourable member for De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) has been conspicuous in this debate by his silence; therefore it would almost look as if there were some connection between the merger and this assistance to shipbuilding. If that be the case, I shall scan with suspicion the various sections of this Bill; but, if not, I will revert to my original opinion, that this measure is really in the interest of the country and should be passed.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Just a moment, if I may, to answer the point raised by my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler). I can assure him that the thought that he has advanced is entirely without foundation. There were two or three means which might have been adopted to aid in preserving and promoting the shipbuilding industry of Canada. Other methods did not seem feasible. It did not seem desirable to bonus shipbuilding outright, or to continue the shipbuilding programme at the expense of the country; but it did seem desirable, if feasible, to continue having ships built in Canada, thereby preventing the closing down of that industry both on the Pacific and the Atlantic coast, and the throwing out of employment of approximately 25,000 men now engaged in shipbuilding, and an almost equal number engaged in subsidiary industries which construct the materials which must go into the building of ships; engines, etc. There is a demand for ships that is not satisfied. There is capital available in foreign countries, one in particular, that would like to obtain ships; but they cannot furnish the cash to purchase those ships in this country at this time because of the tremendous loss they would sustain by reason of exchange. Therefore it did seem feasible to provide some means whereby the country, at no expense to itself, and with ample security, would be in a position to assist in continuing the shipbuilding industry until the now disorganized exchange situation becomes more normal, after which time it is hoped that the industry will be continued indefinitely and permanently in the ordinary run of business. It is well known that ships can be produced in this country as cheaply as they can be even in English and Scotch yards. The shipbuilders there cannot supply the demand, because they cannot get sufficient materials at the moment, and are refusing orders, and the purchasers of the world are anxious to come to Canada because of the financial situation which I briefly referred to, as they find themselves unable to get the cash at the moment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On what does the honourable gentleman make his statement that other countries are anxious to place orders here?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: On information that has come to the Government, and inquiries made by those wanting to purchase ships in this country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What objection is there to laying that information on the table?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I have not the information to lay on the table. If this measure passes, in all probability it will not cost the Government or the people of Canada one single dollar. Each ship is to stand on its own bottom, not as belonging to any one corporation or combination and is to be its own security for the Government of Canada, which would by this means be amply secured for about 50 per cent of the cost. If it happened that the owners, who must put up 25 per cent of the cost of each ship in cash, failed to meet their liability, together with the additional 25 per cent which the shipbuilder himself must be prepared to risk before the Government is in any way implicated, they must lose their investment and the Government has the first security upon the ship. So it must be admitted the ships themselves constitute an ample security for the guarantee which the Government makes, and it will retain for Canada this important industry, and guarantee employment to anywhere from 40,000 to 50,000 men at a period of time which we are now approaching, when the prospect of unemployment during the coming winter and the next year is one for very grave concern. From the standpoint not only of maintaining the industry itself, but of lending such aid as we can to provide employment for the large number of skilled workmen who might otherwise emigrate from the country, and without any risk or cost to the country, this is a desirable measure, and I hope it will pass.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: My honourable friend does not reach the bottom of this question. He has said it takes iron to build those ships. Undoubtedly, unless you make them of something else. But where is the iron to come from unless this country produces it? From the merger, absolutely. The current story is that they are giving 20 per cent, or promising it, for taking up their stock. They have had all this money there, and they could easily negotiate an exchange for the shipbuilding through New York, not from our banks, who are pleading in forma pauperis backed up by a great many people who say there is no money; but if you go down our way you will find from 50 to 200 little Chinese shops collecting interest, but they do not want to lend it. That money is being produced for the benefit of somebody. I am not finding fault with the merger; I hope they will rob all Canada, for the people are green enough for it. A member of the House of Commons who is a shipbuilder has transferred his business from St. John to Sydney; he is a director. To my knowledge, and everybody's knowledge—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Who was that?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: You must ask the cook; I am not going to give anybody's name. I could give the name, if challenged, but it is unnecessary; it is a matter that has gone to the public press. When Mackenzie and Mann in their heyday sent three or four trains to the West. I got three telegrams to accompany the party, but I replied: "No, you can't catch me with a drink and a free passage." But all those gentlemen went there and they whooped it up for the Canadian Northern; their hands were tied, and the Government finally had to take it over. What could they say? They had been entertained; they had eaten salt with their bread. That would be foreign to my ideas, and is so to-day. I think this shipbuilding question is a very large one; it is like throwing your bread on the water, as the Scripture says, and it may return again, but it might return without the crust. I have asked the honourable leader of the Government to give us some assurance that St. John is not to be ruled out in the Subsidy Act, but that we are going to be encouraged, so that I can say when I go home: "Look at what the Government has done; it is going to give us a chance to build ships." They will say: "Where are our members? what did they say?" Well, I don't know what to answer; they did not say anything. If they ask me, "How do you know the Government are going to do that?" I will answer: "I don't know at all, but I believe it, I hope it, because I hope the Government of the day is intelligent." All I ask is that there should be in this Bill something to show that St. John is a shipbuilding port. The minister does not want to give us the assurance for which I ask, but we shall not be ruled out of court.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think if there was anything to convince this country that the Bill should not be passed it was the speech of the honourable Minister of Labour in which he said that if some assistance were not given, the shipyards in Canada would be shut up and many thousands of men would be thrown out of employment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If my honourable friend would quote me correctly he would not say that, because that is not what I said.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It is very difficult to hear my honourable friend. He talks so low that anyone sitting behind him does not hear him distinctly; but I know he referred to the closing up of the shipyards and the putting of a lot of men out of employment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is my honourable friend's own misfortune if he is sitting behind the minister, for he need not.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I chose my own seat, and, while I do not agree with this measure of the Government, there is a great deal that my honourable friend on that side says that I do not agree with—not for one second. Generally speaking, I am favourable to the low-tariff policy that we used to advocate on that side of the House, but I am not so sure that a good many of my honourable friends now advocate that policy.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: You will again, when you come back to us.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My sympathies are altogether with the Farmers' party, I am much more in favour of the Farmers' party and the policy they advocate, because I believe firmly that if they had the opportunity they would go a good deal further along the lines that I believe in than would my honourable friends opposite with whom I formerly acted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable leader of the Government will have to establish cross-benches in this Chamber before long.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If the honourable leader of the Government had cross-benches established in this Chamber I would sit on them. However, that is neither here nor there.

If I have misinterpreted my honourable friend I apologize for not hearing him correctly; but I understood the trend of his argument to be that if this assistance were not given shipbuilding would cease and men would be thrown out of employment. Now, for whom is this legislation passed? It is not for the labour men, because there is not one labour man in Canada who, if the shipbuilding were shut down to-morrow, could not get work, plenty of it, at good, high wages, because there are hundreds of industries to-day suffering for lack of men: they cannot get them for love or money.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman a question. Does he believe that a technical rivetter could get as much pay working on a farm in the Northwest as he could earn in a shipyard? It is nonsense to talk about getting enough to keep body and soul together.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I am not speaking of work on the farm, but I see there is a call for 50,000 men for the farms in the West. And let me tell my honourable friend, if he does not know it already—but I think he does—that the men on the farms are getting just as far ahead, so far as money is concerned, as the men working in factories, when board and lodging and other factors are considered. There is no use in my honourable friend bringing up that argument. It does not affect the question for one moment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should a skilled mechanic be obliged to go and work on a farm at something he knows nothing about?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I am not referring to a skilled mechanic working in a legitimate trade. If shipbuilders can afford to hire such a man and pay his wages and build ships, well and good; but if they cannot do that what are we going to do? Are we going to tax the people of Canada for all time to help up these infant industries.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is no taxation necessary.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Who are going to benefit by this? It is not the labour man particularly.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me again?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Well, I would rather that my honourable friend—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am not to be excused?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Oh, yes, go ahead.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would my honourable friend point out under what section of this Bill the people of Canada are going to be taxed?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My honourable friend was not in the House yesterday when I explained where we are very likely to be taxed. I would refer him to Hansard of yesterday: he will find his answer quite correctly and plainly stated there.

The point I am making is this. For whom is this legislation passed? I say it is not for the labour people, and it is not for the people of Canada generally. Then for whom is it? For a few pet shipbuilders.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: The merger and others.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: A few pet shipbuilders. Why are they entitled to any more consideration than men who have invested their money by the millions of dollars in other industries?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: I must call the honourable gentleman's attention to the fact that the principle of this Bill has already been decided. What we are discussing now is clause 1 and I think the debate should be confined entirely to that.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Mr. Chairman, I hardly think your suggestion to me has much point in it. My honourable friend the Minister of Labour went over exactly the same ground that I am touching on. However, I bow to the ruling of the Chair, and, having said partly what I wanted to say, I will try not to digress further, but will just finish the sentence I was at, and say that this legislation is exactly in line with a great deal of legislation that we are having at the present time—that it is being enacted for a few big interests at the expense of the rest of the country.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Minister of Labour, speaking a few minutes ago, stated that applications in regard to this matter had been made to the Government—by certain firms? Well, from certain countries.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That certain countries wanted shipping.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes. In that case, I presume the application came through certain firms. It would not be made by the Government of the country.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE: It came from the Allied powers.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The application must have been made by some firm that was anxious to get ships built. I think the honourable the Minister should give us some information on that matter, because we ought to know where those applications have come from. It has been suggested to me that applications have been made from the United States as well as from other countries. Probably the Minister can tell us.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: All the information that I feel free to give off-hand to my honourable friend is that, so far as I know, shipbuilders in this country, desirous of continuing the industry and continuing to employ the men who have been engaged in it during the past few years, have been seeking to obtain orders in foreign countries, from Governments or from purchasers of ships, and it is only to assist the building of ships in this country that this method, without cost to the country, is proposed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, this legislation was introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on a concrete case. The Minister said:

The bankers have been consulted in regard to this proposition for several months past. The shipbuilders who are putting up 25 per cent of the money will have to go to the banks to get it; but such a large quantity of tonnage as this, if we get the orders we hope to get, will run into many millions of dollars. The shipbuilder is going to put up a quarter, the buyer is going to put up a quarter, and the Government is going to lend one-half from time to time as the ships are being constructed, with the admirable security which I have mentioned.

I have no quarrel with the statement made by the Minister of Labour, but I restate my question. There has been correspondence on which this legislation is based, either emanating directly from the parties who want ships or coming through their representatives in this country. What good reason has the Government to offer to this Chamber why this correspondence, based upon a concrete case and resulting in this legislation, is not brought down for the information of members of this Chamber? I have not discussed the policy. I have not discussed one line of the Bill, its merits or demerits; but I have taken the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Government had been approached. Now, when we are asked to sanction this scheme why should we not be given the information which the Government has in its possession?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That the Government has been approached is apparent from the preamble, for it is stated:

Whereas inhabitants of European countries are desirous of placing orders for ships in Canadian yards, but owing to the present rates of exchange and the depreciated value of foreign currencies they are unable to finance such orders.

This shows that there must have been correspondence between the Government and people in foreign countries, and I think the demand made by the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) is fair, and that unless the Government says that there was no correspondence this House is entitled to have it.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I find, honourable gentlemen, that the information will be forthcoming, but that will be when the horse is out of the stable, not now. According to the last clause of the Bill, information is to be given to Parliament regarding the doings of the Government of the day; for this Government may go out within forty-eight hours. Information will be given of the endorsement made and of the liabilities incurred; but we are not to know whom we are endorsing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is not that sufficient assurance for my honourable friend? It is placed right in the statute.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but my honourable friend must not forget that we are not thinking merely of persons.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If my honourable friend has the correspondence he might let this matter stand and bring it before us on the third reading.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The information will be given under the last section of the Bill.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 158, an Act to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917. Hon. Mr. McLennan in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask Mr. Breadner to come within the bar.

On section 1—definitions; "dividends":

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We have added a paragraph there, honourable gentlemen:

(1) "Dividends" shall include stock dividends.

There was some doubt as to whether stock dividends were included in the former Act.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Do the words "stock dividends" mean this? Supposing a company is not in a position to pay a cash dividend and it pays a dividend in stock. Is it intended that that stock should be taxed as part of the income? It may not mean cash at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If it represents profits made since the Act came into force, then it is taxable.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This Bill seems rather peculiar in one respect. It is made retroactive and there are different dates at which various clauses shall come into effect. I would ask the honourable leader of the Government to indicate regarding each clause when it is proposed to make it effective. I think I am right in saying that this first clause with regard to stock dividends goes back to 1917?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It is rather difficult to understand exactly what is the date on which each clause is to take effect.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Since the Act came into force the Department has given effect to the interpretation which is here stated more clearly. This is simply declaratory of the interpretation that the Department has always given to the Act. It is not introducing a new element for taxation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It really makes no change at all in the administration?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is simply declaratory.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I desire to ask a question as to the effect of this. These stock dividends, I assume, can be taken only from a surplus. If that surplus is left it is entitled to be treated as capital.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: Not necessarily.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That question does not apply to the Income War Tax at all; it applies only to the Business Profits Tax.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Some honourable members may not be conversant with this matter. In my return I inserted something which affects everybody in this Chamber and in the other House as well. I put in as an exemption $1,000 for the extra cost of living at Ottawa and for the performance of my duties during the Session, and my good friend to the right (Mr. Breadner) writes and says he might allow me $10. I think he is probably a little parsimonious in his judgment. It is just as reasonable that I should get that exemption as that an allowance should be made for the wear and tear of my house. This is an expense incurred in the performance of my duty, and there should be an exemption for everything that pertains thereto.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Clause 2 of the Act of 1919 states:

> Deficits or losses sustained in transactions entered into for profit but not connected with the chief business, trade, profession, or occupation of the taxpayer shall not be deducted from income derived from the chief business, trade, profession or occupation of the taxpayer in determining his taxable income.

And the addition here is:

> —and the minister shall have power to determine what deficits or losses sustained in transactions entered into for profit are connected with the chief business, trade, profession or occupation of the taxpayer, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

I should like to know if the converse would be true. Would losses sustained in transactions entered into for profit, but not connected with the chief business, be deducted from the income?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would depend upon the nature of the transaction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am speaking of an exactly similar transaction. I buy a stock on margin, or pay in full for it. It goes down in value and I sustain a loss, and in virtue of this Act I cannot deduct the loss from my income. Then take the other case. I buy a stock and it brings me a profit. Does that go to increase my income on which I pay a tax?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend were a stock broker it would, but as he is not a different rule would apply. That, as I understand it, is the principle upon which the income is determined.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I mentioned a stock transaction as an illustration; I could mention many others, for instance, a real estate transaction. If a man is not a real estate agent or a broker, and goes into a real estate transaction, and sustains a loss, he cannot deduct that loss from his income. If that transaction brings a gain, does it affect the tax?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will, I think, appreciate the fact that if he were permitted to go into many side businesses and speculations he might destroy the whole of his income and render it unrealizable upon for taxation; consequently it is necessary to prohibit anything of that kind. That is to say, if my honourable friend should purchase a farm and should incur a loss which would absorb his whole income as a lawyer, he could not say, "I have no income."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not criticizing that feature of the law, although I think it is absolutely unsound. I would rather my honourable friend would address his illustration to the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), who has a few hundred acres of land and is doing some farming, although practising law. But I cannot understand how my honourable friend can say, if I earn $10,000 a year at my profession and lose it on my farm, that at the end of the year, when I present a statement showing that I have not made a cent but am living on credit, the King can come and draw blood out of a stone. But that is not my question. The question which I am now putting is in order to ascertain whether in this illogical state of affairs, there is a logical converse proposition. My losses are not to be deducted from the income from my main business. I think that is illogical; but dura lex sed lex. But suppose I make a gain of say $5,000 on the transaction, is it reached by the Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. You have increased your income by that amount.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Although during the preceding year I lost exactly the same sum and was taxed on the loss.

Hon. Sir. JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: If I lose on the goods in my store, am I supposed to be taxed on that loss?

Hon. Mr. SMITH: That is exactly the case of a business corporation under the Business Profits War Tax. They may lose year after year, and suddenly they come to a year when they make a profit, and they have to pay a tax.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The taxes are on the same principle.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Otherwise you could not determine what the Income Tax would be.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is it intended that clause 2 shall apply to a loss of capital?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This simply has to do with the income.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It would have everything to do with capital. Suppose you invested $10,000 last year in your own line of business, and sold out this year for $2,000, there would be a straight loss of capital.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You cannot take last year into consideration at all. The question is, what is your income this year?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: You invested $10,000 last year in your own line of business, and this year that business is closed out and you get back $2,000 in place of the $10,000 which you invested.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It depends on what your income on that $2,000 would be.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: There was no income. You get $2,000 of your capital returned instead of getting $10,000 and some profit.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The mill blew up.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It depends on what your income is. You have to say what it is.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I want to find out if it is the intention to allow on that capital lost?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, there is no allowance.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think this clause would read better if it said, "but the minister shall have power," etc., instead of "and the minister shall have power."

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: No, that is all right. That is good law.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—dividends or shareholders' bonuses:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What has been the policy with regard to this? I see that this is one of the clauses that do not come into effect until next year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does this apply to dividends declared at the end of the year and paid at the beginning of the next year?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This comes into force on the 1st of January, 1921.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Dividends would not be taxable until they were paid?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What change has been made?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend has the statute before him; he will see what it is. It is a very lengthy subclause.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If a dividend is declared in December and paid in the first days of January, is it part of the income of the year in which it is declared or the year in which it is paid?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The dividend would be income in the year when it was declared, but it would be paid the following year.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—income from an estate or accumulating in trust:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is to make the tax payable annually instead of permitting the income to accumulate and become subject to the surtax.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It has occurred to me that an income might be due and payable, and yet unobtainable. Take the case of a mortgage.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is simply dealing with estates, infant children, and so on. You make provision for the entire income during the year, so as to prevent accumulation at a future time when the surtax would become applicable and when it might possibly absorb the whole of the estate.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: An income might come from a mortgage or something of that description, and it might not be possible to collect it; yet you would have to pay a tax on it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In the statement of the income of the estate that would be shown.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It might turn out to be an absolute loss.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then you would so stipulate in your statement.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The latter part of the section says:

> Income accumulating in trust for the benefit of unascertained persons, or of persons with contingent interests, shall be taxable in the hands of the trustees or other like persons acting in a fiduciary capacity, as if such income were the income of an unmarried person.

What means is there of collecting the money?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It must be in the hands of someone.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: There are millions of dollars in court, and the money accumulates for the benefit of the children. What authority would there be for the trustee to pay it out?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He would have to make an application to the court. Because it is in court it does not follow that it is exempt.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: If it is in the hands of the trustee—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If it is in the hands of the trustee he must pay it.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Where is the justification for his making payment?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If he is administering the estate he shall make application to pay it as he would any other taxes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is the meaning of the words, "as if such income were the income of an unmarried person?" Is that as to the quantum?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 4 was agreed to.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—income tax and persons liable thereto:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I should like to ask whether there is going to be publicity given as to the number of people paying income tax? I understand that the proceedings are absolutely secret, and that you cannot find out anything about that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The policy of the department will be not to give information as to any particular individual—only as to the number paying the tax in defined areas.

Hon Mr. McMEANS: Suppose you know of the case of a man who is evading his tax.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Report it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You are pretty sure that he is evading the tax, but you cannot report it until you get the information. I might have a very strong suspicion, but I cannot find out anything definite.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is there any country in the world which allows the publication of the amount of income on which a citizen is paying a tax?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was my impression. This section covers the case of people who are not naturalized Canadians, but who live in Canada for a certain number of days. Has the Government arranged with the United States for reciprocity of treatment in this matter?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 6 was agreed to.

On section 7—5 per cent added to tax and surtax on income of $5,000 or more:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will that surtax be applicable to cases in which the Income Tax was paid in 1919? Suppose I have paid my Income Tax for the year 1919, shall I be called upon to pay 5 per cent?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There has been no assessment yet for 1919, but when the tax is levied this will be made applicable.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This is a tax on the tax.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a supertax on the surtax.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is the honourable gentleman quite satisfied with the drafting of this clause? It says:

The several taxes and surtaxes prescribed by subsections 1 and 2 of this section are hereby increased—

That is the tax. Then it goes on to say:

—by the addition of five per centum to the amount of each.

Hon Mr. BOYER: Could I get some information at this point? We have so far paid taxes for 1917 and 1918. A friend of mine who has quite an income told me that he did not receive any bill for 1917 or 1918, and that he has never paid a cent of tax, although he has sent in his returns.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He is a very fortunate man. Would my honourable friend have any objection to giving Mr. Breadner the name?

Hon. Mr. BOYER: Just as much as he has to giving us information about something else. Let him find out.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The trouble about Mr. Breadner giving the information is that he is not allowed to give information; that he is liable to a penalty if he does so. What I want to find out is this. Supposing a man has an income of $10,000, he has to pay the tax and the surtax as provided for by the existing Act. Then will he pay under this Act 5 per cent additional on the second $5,000?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will be 5 per cent on the entire amount of tax which he pays on his income. Supposing his income tax under the tax and the surtax came to $1,000, he would pay $50 more.

Section 7 was agreed to.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—military and naval pay; income from pensions:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If my honourable friend has the Act of 1919 before him he will notice that in the section referred to there is a figure 2, which I suppose represents a subsection, and then there is another 2 which probably means a subsection. It may be all right, but under section 10 the public are supposed to understand this Act and to be able to make out their own returns without any information except what they get from the Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The whole information is circularized, and will be sent out with all blank returns, so that the public will not have to refer to the Act.

Section 9 was agreed to.

On section 10—one-quarter tax to be forwarded with return; balance may be paid by instalment with interest:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would like to know the reason for this provision requiring the taxpayer to pay a quarter of the tax at the time he makes his return.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will facilitate the collection of the tax; that is the main thing. In fact, it should have been done long ago, and the Government would have been able to collect much more successfully than has been done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If I am not mistaken, when this Bill was introduced there was a clause requiring any one, when making his return, to send a cheque for the total amount he thought he owed the Government for income; is that correct?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section means that, although the taxpayer may only be obliged to send a cheque for 25 per cent, he has found the total which he admits owing, and it is upon that statement that he may be penalized for having committed an error. In other words, the taxpayer has himself to determine that total amount he owes, and he may pay either a fraction thereof or the whole. I would draw the attention of my honourable friend and the department to the great difficulty which most taxpayers will encounter in fixing the amount which they owe.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let us draw a distinction between the income and the tax itself. If a taxpayer makes a wrongful return as to income, then he is penalized, but not as to the tax itself; he may misapprehend what the rate is. The penalty extends only to his making a wilfully wrong return of his business.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He may make such wrong return on the income because, with his limited knowledge, he cannot satisfactorily interpret the Act itself. We were asked to prepare a statement of our income, and of certain charges which should be deducted, if upon stocks, we have heretofore left it to the Government to deduct a fair percentage, which is now 5 per cent. A few months later we have received from the department a statement which they prepared, containing all the deductions and the additions that the department were pleased to make. I am quite sure that nine-tenths of the people received such a statement, and took it for granted that it was useless to look to the department for information, or to wrestle with the amount found; so they sent the cheque. What the taxpayers have done to this date may be taken as a fair sample. A certain amount of work has devolved on the department to fix the amount which the taxpayer had to pay. If the matter is left to the taxpayer, without any help from the collector of the income tax in the various centres, I am convinced that there will be glaring errors in three-fourths of those returns made to the department.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What would my honourable friend propose?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What I propose is that since the work which the department now assumes will fall upon the taxpayer, he should have the opportunity of going to the representative of the department in his centre, showing him his statement, and verifying his conclusions. If that is not done, I know the department will be involved in frightful entanglements, because people around me have been asking questions about this Act, stating that they would be absolutely unable to draw conclusions as to the amount which they owe, unless they went to a lawyer or a specialist.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Department has inspectors in almost every centre, and the public are not only invited but welcomed by the inspector for the purpose of his communicating to them all the information they need. In addition to that, literature is distributed to all taxpayers with the view of giving them all the information possible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I make these remarks because I feel that the public will be very much demoralized.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; we will look after the public.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They have to face the threat of those numerous penalties.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There is no penalty.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I see a further objection to subsection 7 of section 10, requiring the taxpayer to pay 25 per cent with his income return, and the balance in three equal bi-monthly instalments thereafter. The next tax will be payable in April, but he will not receive notice until October. On the 30th of April or thereabouts he will be required to make his return, and as the tax for 1920 comes due at that time he has to pay the 25 per cent on it, and if he does not then pay that 25 per cent he must pay 6 per cent on the balance of the instalments. It looks to me as though this would work a hardship by requiring people to pay two taxes at the same time. I think further time should be given for making the payment called for in this subsection. I understand the Department checks over the returns sent in, and after they have done so the taxpayer gets a statement showing whether he is right or wrong, and he will be asked to make good a shortage if there be one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Provided I am not penalized.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: You will not be penalized.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think subsection 11 will interfere very much with the investment of money in this country. It points out that anybody in control of funds from non-residents is bound to make a return of the income and a tax on that money is to be provided for. If we are going to tax money invested in this country in that way we will find that people will not send money here for investment, and we will be very much hampered in securing money from outside as we have done in the past.

My principal objection, however, is to subsection 7, and I think we should have more time to send in the return so as not to have two taxes coming in at the same time.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: It seems to me the most serious part of this Bill is subsection 7,which practically enforces the payment of two years' taxation in one. I think it will not only be difficult, but many people wil find it impossible.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. I do not know how my honourable friend makes out that it will require two years' taxes to be paid in one. The assessment will be made in November, 1919, for 1920.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We paid this spring the 1918 tax, and we will pay the 1919 also.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, for 1920 the returns will be made in April.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The tax has to go in at the same time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: One-fourth.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And you have to pay interest on the balance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If there is anything for which provision should be made it is to expedite those payments. The Government has been attacked in every possible direction. Complaint was made that they had been remiss in placing in motion the proper machinery for the collection of this tax, but they no sooner do that than they fall under the criticism and censure of honourable gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: I do not want to impede this measure in any way but if the past practice prevails hereafter—the 1918 taxation, for instance, was not payable till 1919—I assert that when you make the return for 1920 you will pay your taxation for two years in one year. I do not think that statement can be contradicted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will be all right after that.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: If there is anything in this Bill for which I commend the Government it is this particular section. They have lost millions of dollars during the existence of this Act because they have not collected the money promptly. As to the argument of the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Edwards), it seems to me that the taxpayer ought to be very well satisfied that he has had the Government to carry his taxes for him for a year for nothing. He might be well content to pay two taxes at one time. He only has to pay 25 per cent down, but in any case he has had the use of the tax money for a year, which he ought not to have had. Moreover, there is a very strong suspicion throughout the country that there are thousands of people like the person my honourable friend from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Boyer) spoke of a few moments ago, who had not paid their taxes and had not made any return. The Government have lost the use of that money, though they will no doubt collect it some day. This man who has escaped paying his taxes will suddenly find he has to pay them; but in the meantime the Government has been done out of the use of that money. It seems to me this section is an admirable one, as it will compel the prompt payment of taxes, and secure for the Government the use of the money.

Hon. Mr. McCALL: I have an observation to make on this Bill, and I do it with the more pleasure because the able administrator of this Branch is present. Reference has been made to the difficulty of making up returns. I have a case in mind of a medical man who derives income from his practice, against which he can set off his expenses; he is also interested in a drug store, from which he gets some profit; he owns a farm, from where he derives some profit; he is interested in a little fruit ranch with a poultry attachment; and he has some money at interest. I doubt if that man is able to get assistance in his own locality that will enable him to make up accurately all the sources of income and make his return properly. I will say further, with some modesty, that I believe the method of inspection and collection can be improved. If it is left to the honesty of the individual, he may not always make his return. There are in this country people who are isolated. I have in my mind now the case of a lone widow who has a lot of money. She says she never heard there was an income tax. She knew that the assessors of the township had asked her if she had any income. She may know of the income tax by this time, but she did not know quite recently. There are cases of that kind. Then there are people in some doubt whether they ought to pay income tax or not. I would suggest that if the inspection district were made smaller—were made to include the limits of an ordinary county, and if an official of that county were to administer the Act, he could from his own knowledge, and from a search at the registry office and an examination of the assessment rolls and by other inquiry, ascertain the name of every person in that district who was liable, or nearly liable, for the income tax. Then he would issue a notice to all such persons to come to his office on certain days, bringing all their information, and there with his assistance they would make up a statement of the tax they should pay. When the amount payable was ascertained the individual should be called upon to hand in his cheque within ten days, the return being subject to correction at the Finance Department. If he had overpaid, the amount of the excess would be returned to him; if he had underpaid he would be called upon again. That inspection and assessment could be made in the early part of the year while the taxpayer's memory was fresh as to the operations of the year past, and the money would be paid promptly by the first of July on the assessment of the previous year. I do not know whether there is any merit in this suggestion or not. Of this much I am sure, that a very large amount of money is being lost to the treasury; that the owners of whole areas of successful farms which in these latter days with fruit-growing, the growing of clover seed, and all that sort of thing, are earning ordinarily an income of $5,000 or $6,000, have never been called upon, and the inspector does not know that such men are in existence, unless he goes from house to house and makes inquiries. But the local man, with local information, who has moved about in the community for a long period, perhaps all his business life, can pick out such men. I venture to say that in one inspection district with which I am somewhat familiar I could name one, two, three, or four men—bank managers who have been in the locality for very many years—who have in their office a credit list and could name the men who are near the taxable point. I offer these suggestions to the minister, and to the very able administrator of this Act for their consideration. As I am sometimes in the wrong, it may be that I am wrong in this case. At the same time I offer this suggestion with some knowledge of what I am speaking about.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I think there is a good deal in the suggestion of my honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. McCall) that the districts are altogether too large. I would go further: I would make another subdivision: I would subdivide down to the school districts. I venture to say that at least one-half the amount that might be procured if there were a proper levy of this tax is lost at the present time. I know that in the town in which I formerly lived there are men who, I am satisfied, have never made returns and whose income is very much in excess of the tax exemptions. If you utilize the school collector, he knows approximately the income of every man in his school district. It would cost a very small amount to utilize his services, and you would find that in that way a very large amount would be collected. In the interest of the country generally I would be very glad to see the services of these men utilized. It would, I think, increase very largely the amount of money that would be collected. It has a very—what shall I say?—maddening effect upon the man who is honest enough to make a true return of his income and to pay his taxes, to know that many of his neighbours are getting clear. There is nothing that causes greater unrest or a stronger feeling against this whole system of taxation than that. Everybody whose opinion is worth anything realizes that the country is involved in a very heavy liability, and that the people must pay it; and the honest man is willing to pay what he is properly called upon to pay. Of course, he does not want to pay any more than he ought to pay, according to the amount of his income; and when he knows that there are men who are escaping and that apparently the Government is doing nothing towards bringing them into line, he says: "By George, I will try to get clear too." That is the way it works out. He does not realize that this is a new thing and that it cannot be done perfectly at once—that it will take years to perfect it. I think the suggestion of the honourable member from Simcoe is a very good one, and I hope that the Government will take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have had occasion to place on record my opinion as to what would be the proper policy to apply in this country in the levying of the Income Tax. I will repeat it in a very few phrases. We shall never have a satisfactory collection of Income Tax throughout the land until the Act is amended so as to force every man to make a return to the Government. The labourer, the farmer—everyone who earns something or receives an income—should be required after he had passed a certain age to make a statement. If the Government had the courage to enact such a law—and it has lacked the courage to do so—then the Department of Finance would have a complete census of the financial strength of this country, and no one could escape, because everyone would be obliged to make a report. Until we have such a law I am quite sure there will be a state of dissatisfaction and unrest in the country, because men who are supposed to come under the Act are not making a return, feeling perhaps that they are absolved from doing so. A person, after examining into his income, may feel that he is not under obligation to make a return, and that in failing to make it he is not breaking the law. Only the person who recognizes that he comes under the Act and is obliged to pay the tax is under obligation to make a return. The person who, upon examining his income in the light of the law as he construes it, feels that he does not come under it, is not obliged to make a return. There is one saving clause in the Act by which the Department through its inspectors can reach him. The Department may inquire if AB, who lives in a township 600 miles away, should not be required to make a return. If they find that he should, they can write to him and call upon him to do so. Other persons situated in a position similar to his, and as to whom it is doubtful whether they come under the Act or not, may not be called upon by the Department to make returns. Is not that a ridiculous situation, honourable gentlemen? I feel that if we are to lift the immense burden of debt that the country is now carrying—if we are to levy an income tax sufficient to meet our obligations—every person who earns something in this country should be made to understand his relationship with the Government and with the Finance Department. What harm is there in asking a person for a statement even if he has the misfortune, or the good fortune, not to be earning an income which is taxable—if his earnings happen to be a few dollars below the maximum of exemption? Is it a great task for him simply to make a return? It seems to me that it would be a good lesson to the taxpayer to know that he is on the books of the Finance Department and that the time may come when he will have to pay something. It seems to me that it would have a salutary effect to require every person in Canada, even a farmer or a labourer earning $1,000 a year, to produce a statement. That may not be popular from the electoral standpoint, but I think it is sound. I think—and on this point my honourable friend might ask the Department now—that this is the law in most countries that collect an income tax.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Would it meet the situation outlined by the honourable gentleman for the Department to provide for the publishing in the newspapers of the names of all those who paid taxes and the amounts that they paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It would satisfy the curiosity of a small community to know that a certain number of persons named were paying the tax; it would arouse suspicion that certain persons of the same financial standing were not paying; but it would not furnish any information to the Department of Finance. Perhaps it might simply create greater dissatisfaction in the country; but it would not supply the Department with the names of all persons earning money in order that the Department might learn by further inquiry if a certain number were escaping payment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In all the cities of my province the newspapers publish a list of the men who pay municipal taxes, together with the amounts of taxes they pay. There is no trouble about that.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: That is on real estate?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: On everything—real estate and everything else.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: And personal property.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In the city of St. John a list is published, and also, I think, in the city of Fredericton. When the assessment comes out the newspapers publish the list of all persons whose total tax is over a certain amount—$50, I think.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is that information given out by the city assessor?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, and published in the newspapers. I know it is in the city of St. John and in the city of Moncton, and, I think, in the city of Fredericton.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON: It is a list of all who pay over a certain amount—$50.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes. I do not see why there should be any feeling about the publication of such a list with reference to the Federal tax.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With newspaper advertising so expensive as it is?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The newspapers would be very glad to publish it. They give the names of firms and persons, and the list is published at the newspaper's own expense.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: It strikes me that the case mentioned by my honourable friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) is already covered. We have the famous registration cards, that cost the country half a million of money to collect. You had to appear before an official and sign a card stating who you were, what you were, where you lived, etc. You could not even buy a railroad ticket without producing that card. The cards must be somewhere. Why does not the Department use them? They have cost enough money to the country. It seems to me that we were told at the time that they would give such valuable information to the country that nobody could escape. Surely they have been stored away somewhere.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: The purpose of the honourable gentleman from De Lorimier is evidently to have the people make returns. There would be of course no guarantee that the returns sent in were exact; but what the honourable gentleman is urging is that all should be required to make a report from which calculations might be made by the Department, and it could be ascertained whether the report was exact or not. Now, if there is an objection to publishing the amount of the tax paid by each person—and I think there is a very serious objection—what objection would there be to publishing simply the names of those who made returns, without stating the amounts? It seems to me that that would meet the case referred to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Information will be given out hereafter.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will the names of those making returns be published?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Information showing the number of taxpayers in each district.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That information would not at all serve the same purpose. If the Department sees no objection to publishing the names of those who have sent in their returns, that ought to meet the difficulty, it seems to me; because any person glancing around could ascertain those who should have made returns and had not done so. That is the information that we are seeking. Publication of the names would serve a very good purpose, because it is absolutely unfair that persons who are conscientious and honourable enough to bear their full share of the country's debt should see others pass by smiling and paying nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I still fail to see any reason why you should not publish the amounts as well as the names, because we do not know whether the persons who have made returns are, as the honourable gentlemen said, bearing their full share of the country's burdens. They may be taking a very small part of their share.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The objection which I formulated is one. I know there may be many others. I just put the question: was there any country in the world that publishes the name of the taxpayer and the amount he pays, and the answer was no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I answered yes, so far as the cities of New Brunswick are concerned.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Anybody can go into a municipal office and find out how much taxes a certain person pays.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would point out to my honourable friend this difficulty. The publication would enable everybody to see the financial standing of a firm. Any firm may pass from years of plenty to lean years, and as the commerce of a country is largely based on credit and confidence the whole fabric might be affected by the publication of those returns.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I fail to see why we should not have the opportunity of going into the office here in Ottawa and finding out at any rate what certain individuals are paying in the way of taxes. Supposing, for instance, I know of a man who has a certain income and I feel that he is not paying the proper amount of taxes, why should I not have a right to go to the Department and ascertain exactly what that man is paying?

As the law is at present the officials cannot give me that information without rendering themselves liable to certain penalties. I do not think the law should be left in that way. If you could find out what a man was paying, that would have the effect of compelling individuals to put in proper returns. I see no objection whatever to the returns being made as public as possible. Everyone should pay his taxes, and if one knew how others were situated in that regard one would be able to point out to the Department that those other persons were not paying a proper amount, and they could be compelled to do so.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It appears to me that such procedure, while it might satisfy the curiosity of a great many people, would not do much good. A gentleman goes to the Department and finds out that So-and-so has paid a tax of $1,000. He goes away, but perhaps his curiosity is not altogether satisfied. It may be that that gentleman will believe that So-and-so has not paid as much tax as he should pay. I cannot make myself believe that there are many people who have not paid their taxes.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: There are thousands.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: In the face of the penalties provided, I cannot believe it. I must say that gentlemen from other localities must be in a different situation from myself to see things in that way. In the locality from which I come I cannot tell you who has paid and who has not. I do not see what means any person has for saying at the present time that there are thousands or hundreds who have not paid their taxes. One honourable gentleman said that the Government was losing millions of dollars through uncollected taxes. If I knew that to be the case, I would think it my duty to go to the Department and inform them as to who was evading the tax.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: I said there was a strong suspicion that such was the case.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Suspicion means nothing.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: Oh, yes, it does.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Unless a person knows he should not say things like that.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: We want to put the people in a position to know.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It appears to me that such a position would be rather to satisfy curiosity than anything else.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I see very great objection to publishing the names of men and their incomes. All taxes are a hardship. Surely it would be greater hardship to have such things thrown open to the gaze of the public. It would open the way to many abuses. A man wanting a subscription would find out what another man's income was, and then he would go to him and say, "I know what your income is, and you have to pay so much to this church, or for this pic-nic, or whatever it may be." I can conceive of it leading to trouble between a man and his family, or his wife, or his intended wife. They would come to him and say: "You have so much money; what are you doing with it?" I may say that this is not with me a personal objection, but for some honourable gentlemen sitting here it may be.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: In the province in which I live there are no such great numbers of people who have not paid their taxes as one would gather there are in other districts. I have no doubt that there are in the city of Montreal hundreds and perhaps thousands of people who have not paid their taxes, but I think the publishing of the details would do a great deal of harm. There are merchants and others in the city who are in a weak position financially, who are struggling to get on, and if all the inside details of their business were published in the newspapers, they would be very seriously affected if they required credit from the banks or from people with whom they deal. Another thing is that it seems to me absolutely impracticable to carry this out. Take, for instance, the city of Montreal. I wonder if my honourable friend has considered how much space it would require in the newspapers to print a list of all the people who should make returns. This is a new line of activity in this country; but, while mistakes have been made in probably every quarter, I must say that the law has been administered from the head down by capable, honest men who have endeavoured to get every dollar that was due. The man who is at the head of the organization in my city has worked as hard as any man has ever worked at his own business. I suppose he has made mistakes; I think he has missed men who should have paid the tax, but I know he has worked hard to perform his duties, and it does seem to me that it should be possible to carry out the law without doing harm to a great many innocent people.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The arguments advanced in favour of secrecy would apply to such agencies as Dun-Wiman. We permit them to publish statements.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are confidential.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Anyone who wants to get a copy of Dun-Wiman's report can buy it. It is the business men to whom this information is important. It is important to the business men to know the position of the people who are skating on thin ice. My honourable friend spoke about the banks. Everyone who goes to a bank to get credit has to show what he is worth. That is an argument against secrecy. I do not see why there should be any secrecy, and if there were less of it I believe that a great deal of money that now escapes would be brought in.

Section 10 was agreed to.

Sections 11, 12 and 13 were agreed to.

On section 14—penalties for short payments, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I presume that this is not going to be enforced very rigorously at the beginning.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the complaint invariably has been that the Government has not enforced similar provisions with the same harshness that an individual would, or with the same degree of force. I think the public can rely upon the Government not doing anything unreasonable in exercising the rights which they may have.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: For a number of years the Department will have to act as schoolmaster to the taxpayers, who will need a great deal of coaching before they understand the Act. I would urge compulsory education in this respect.

Section 14 was agreed to.

Section 15 was agreed to.

On section 16—retroactive effect, etc.:

Hon. Mr. POWER: Honourable gentlemen. I should like to say a word before this Bill is passed. There is no doubt that the Income Tax law, as it stands now, is a very puzzling combination. The Act was passed I think in 1918; it was very largely amended in 1919; and now in 1920 we are largely amending it again. With respect to understanding the meaning of statute law. I think I am about equal to the average non-instructed person, and I find it very difficult indeed to tell just what should be contained in the return with respect to the tax. It seems to me, honourable gentlemen, that it is only the consideration which is due to the people who are expected to pay these taxes that they should have the law before them as it is, so that a taxpayer should not be obliged to go and look up the law of 1918 or the law of 1919 or the law of 1920. The Department should see that the law as it stands now, with all its amendments, is placed where the ordinary taxpayer can consult it. That is a mere mechanical thing, but I think it is very important.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is the intention of the Department to do that next year.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: What is the effect of making clauses 1, 2, 4, 8, 11, 12, 13, and 15 retroactive? Personally, I am always opposed to retroactive legislation. The principle is wrong, and when I find that you are going to tax people or make changes in the taxation years afterwards, then I think you are doing something that should not be done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The intention is simply to give effect to the interpretations which have been placed upon the preceding Acts by the Department. This does not call into operation any new law; it is simply declaratory of the Department's interpretation of the statute.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The section does not so state. Of course, that may be the intention of it, but I do not so read the clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think you will find that all the sections mentioned have been in operation since the passing of the Act.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: If that construction has been placed upon them, why the amendment? The construction apparently is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is an artistic way of making an interpretation clause.

On the preamble:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Before the Bill is reported, I would ask for some information about section 6. That deals with persons liable to income tax. It makes no exemptions whatsoever. As I understand, there are certain people in Canada who are exempt. There are the judges of certain courts. I know that certain judges of the superior court in Manitoba are paying taxes on the increased salary which they got, while the judges of the court of appeal do not pay any tax at all. This question has been the cause of considerable comment by these gentlemen, and I feel strongly that there should be some well-regulated principle in regard to it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will recall the legislation which we passed, I think last session, wherein we increased the salaries of superior court judges, and wherein provision was made that the increase should be liable to taxation. That is in the Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There is no exemption under this clause. You say here that every one in Canada shall pay.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You have to read it in connectin with the other law on the subject.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The Judges Act was passed some years ago. But even so, I do not like the discrepancy between one judge and another. The judges of the court of appeal whose salaries were not increased pay no tax whatever; the other judges got an increase of $1,000, and pay an income tax on the $1,000 only.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understood that it was to be on the whole salary.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: No. The judges of the superior court say, "Why should we pay an income tax on any portion of our salary when the judges of the court of appeal pay nothing at all?"

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not wish to anticipate any Bill that is coming down. but when the Judges Bill comes before us we will take that up.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 183, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915. Hon. Mr. Crosby in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask Mr. Breadner to come within the Bar?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS.

On section 1—stamp tax, bills and notes:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This proposes placing a stamp on notes for every $100 or fraction thereof. At the present time a stamp of two cents is payable on each cheque, bill of exchange, and promissory note.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This brings in everything.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Except cheques, and except three-day bills of exchange. Anything exceeding three days is taxed.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: How will paragraph d, which calls for a stamp tax on documents which contain promises to pay, affect mortgages?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Mortgages are not included. This only affects documents going through a bank.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: But banks frequently take mortgages.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But mortgages are invariably taken as collateral, and all the stamps would be on the negotiable paper to which the mortgage was collateral.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Shall section 7 be adopted?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I submit that the Bill before us is a matter of some importance, and it does not speak well for this legislature to be rushing it through in this manner. Some of us will not understand it, and I am asking that the Bill be read. I want you, Mr. Chairman, to read the Bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the House that I should read this Bill?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, it is. I think that is the rule of the House. My point is this, that this is very important legislation, and it is being rushed through, and nobody is understanding it. I am sure I do not understand it, and I would be very glad to do so.

The Hon. The CHAIRMAN: The motion is that the section shall be read in full.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not think that a motion is necessary. When an honourable member asks to have a section read I think he is entitled to have it read; I do not think it is a subject for a motion at all.

The Hon. The CHAIRMAN: All right. Now I will read section 1.

On new section 1, subsection 3—stamp tax on bills payable on demand, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Heretofore it was only two cents on a document no matter what the amount was, but hereafter it will be two cents on each $100 or fraction thereof.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: On $1,000 it would be 20 cents?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

On paragraph d of section 1—stamp tax on documents or writings containing promise to pay, or pledge of securities, to secure payment of advances:

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the explanation of that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no change in that. If it is more than a three-days draft the two cents shall be applicable for every $100 or fraction of $100.

On paragraph c—stamp tax on promissory notes given for advances:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is that new?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that requires a quarterly statement to be made by the Bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does that mean that for every $100 advanced to a person by the bank, he has to put a two-cent stamp?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, on the note, and the bank hereafter shall make a return to the department of all advances, and the persons to whom the advances have been made.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is this applicable to the loans already contracted?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, but if there is a renewal it is.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Will the department supply a special stamp, or may people use postage stamps, as heretofore? I think the idea would be very much better to have a special stamp.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, there will be a special stamp. They are printed now.

On subsection 4—transfer delivery of bill or note without stamp; penalty:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask about that penalty of $50. Sometimes banks have notes for $2,000, $3,000, $5,000, and I think the penalty would be less than the stamp duty.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think it is quite large enough.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They would be liable to the stamp tax as well as to the penalty.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under subsection 10 I understand the banks will now have to issue all their cheques with stamps affixed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily. They can put on an adhesive stamp in lieu thereof.

On subsection 13—stamp tax on sale or transfers of stock:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is a new provision—that the stamp tax shall be applicable to shares of stock of the face value of $100 or fraction thereof.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is that for every company?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How much is the tax on shares of the value of one dollar?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is intended to apply to shares of a par value of $100. It is not anticipated that it will be made applicable to shares of a dollar, such as mining shares. This provision is taken from the Ontario Act, I understand, and it is not intended to apply to cases of that kind.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: The tax is imposed on stock—I suppose it is not important whether it is of Dominion or provincial companies?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: We already have in Ontario a tax on all transfers of stocks in Ontario companies, and this will mean a double tax on the transfer of every share of stock. First the Ontario Government tax must be paid, and then also the Dominion Government tax, under this section. I think the payment of one tax ought to be sufficient.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: To-day, unfortunately for the taxpayer, a municipality may levy an income tax, a province may do the same, and the Dominion Government may also do so. That applies to the land tax as well. For instance, in Alberta and municipality levies a land tax on the value of the property; the provincial government likewise levies a tax on all lands, and I am very happy to say that up to the present time this Government has hesitated to do that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Here is a difficulty I see. The transfer agent is supposed to make the return. For instance, in mining stocks how are they going to distinguish between stock on which the Dominion Government will not collect the tax, and stock on which it will collect it? There is nothing here to show that any kind of corporation is liable for this tax.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All share certificates:

"No person shall sell or transfer the stock or shares of any association, company or corporation..."

It is made as sweeping as it can be made.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is nothing to indicate that it will not cover mining stocks as well.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If mining stocks be issued in $100 shares, it will. Will my honourable friend look at line 12, page 5?

Of the value of two cents for every one hundred dollars or fraction thereof of the par value of the stock or shares sold or transferred.

Consequently shares of stock not coming within that description of stock would be exempt from the tax.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not read it in that way. Suppose you have 100 shares of mining stock in one certificate. It seems to me that under this clause as it reads for every $100 of the par value of that stock you would be obliged to put on a stamp.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So that you have a certificate of $100.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: So long as it takes only two cents per $100, that is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It says, "for every one hundred dollars or fraction thereof."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the way the Ontario Act reads.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Is the fraction over the $100 or under?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say over the $100.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would say it would be this way. Suppose a man bought 50 shares of $1 each and you issued 50 shares in one certificate, he would pay two cents on that. That is a fraction of $100. Or if there were 75 shares and the amount were issued in one certificate, he would pay only two cents on it. Is that the understanding?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is what I am informed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would my honourable friend allow me to refer to section 10, on page 4: "penalty for issue of bank cheques, etc., without stamp." Here is the clause as it stands in the Act of 1915:

Every bank which issues, pays, presents for payment or accepts payment of a cheque or other bill of exchange or promissory note upon which a stamp of the value of two cents has not been fixed or impressed in accordance with the requirements of this section shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars.

Now, here is the amendment before us:

Every bank which issues, pays, presents for acceptance or payment or accepts payment of a cheque or other bill of exchange or promissory note upon which a stamp of the requisite value according to the requirements of this section has not been impressed shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars.

Not "affixed"; the word "affixed" is struck out.

—shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars.

The amendment would seem to require the printing of the stamp in the cheque itself, as part of the cheque, and to withdraw the permission to affix a stamp to the cheque.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If you compare section 10 of the Act with the amendment you are now making, it is quite clear that you are dropping the affixing of the stamp and leaving on the impressing of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me that "affixing" and "impressing" are almost synonymous terms. What is required now is a two-cent stamp on every $100 or fraction thereof. Under the old Act this was not the case.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I would draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that all the cheques which will be used henceforth will be impressed cheques. Is that the intention?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Is that in harmony with subsection 2 of section 1 of the Bill, which says:

No cheque or other bill of exchange shall be issued or paid by a bank unless there is affixed thereto an adhesive stamp or impressed thereon by means of a die a stamp or stamps of the requisite value according to the requirements of this section.

If I am permitted in issuing a cheque either to affix a stamp or to impress a stamp on it by means of a die I do not see why the bank would not accept the cheque.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: A word has probably been omitted from subsection 10.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It ought to read as in the present Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: "Affixed or impressed."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, "affixed or impressed."

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask my honourable friend how a no-par-value share will be dealt with?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say that it did not come within the section.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Therefore there is no tax for a new method of issuing a no-par-value share?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How would you issue a share of no par value?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: There are a great many shares that have no par value. The stock of a company may be divided into so many shares and they derive their value from their sale, so to speak; there is no par value at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From the balance-sheet.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is one thing that I do not think this section covers, and there should be some provision for it. May I go further? I do not quite understand the meaning of subsection 13 as it is drafted. You have to affix a two-cent stamp for every $100 of face value—or of par value, which I suppose, means face value in this case. Suppose I have a share of $100 and it has fallen in value to $30. If I transfer that, I have to pay two cents, because its face value or par value is $100.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Very well. Suppose I buy one share with a par value of $10, what do I pay?

Hon. Mr. POWERS: Two cents.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Wait a moment. I want to know about this, because we do not seem to be in accord.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If you buy one share of $10 you pay two cents; and if you buy ten shares and get them all in one certificate, you pay only two cents.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I want to have an answer from my honourable friend the leader of the House, because this does not seem very clear to me.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, that is the statement the honourable the leader made to me.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is that?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: If I buy one share of a stock with a par value of $10 I put two cents on it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If you have a certificate issued for that, yes.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: And if I buy ten shares of the same stock with a par value of $10 each, what do I pay on each certificate?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You pay two cents on each certificate.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Therefore it is going to cost me 20 cents. If I buy my stock in ten certificates instead of one, I shall have to pay 20 cents instead of two cents? Is that the decision?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think so.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If a person buys ten single certificates he pays 20 cents, but if he buys all in one certificate of ten shares he pays only two cents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He would save 18 cents.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is much better to buy wholesale.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not see that that is just. That is not the way to equalize the tax.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It aims at the certificate rather than anything else—just the same as a note.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: If they are no-par-value shares, what is payable on them?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No provision is made for that class.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: They go scot free.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No-par-value shares do not seem to be covered. I suppose they would have to pay only the minimum?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: However, it is very uncertain, because they may be worth more than that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That will be another source of revenue from taxation that we had not discovered. We are looking for sources of that kind. That may be the subject of another Bill.

New section 13 was agreed to.

Subsection 2 of section 1 of the Bill was agreed to.

On section 2 (new section 19BB)—new excise taxes; ten per cent tax:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can my honourable friend give us some explanation about these taxes?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: These are the luxury taxes, that is all.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I notice that under subsection 1 the tax is on the total price of the article hereinafter specified.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Then, on page 7, there is a 15 per cent tax, apparently on the total price. Then, on page 8, in subsection 2, there is a 10 per cent tax on the excess of price.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, we have classified them in that way.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The ordinary storekeeper is supposed to understand this whole matter?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And every assistant storekeeper as well?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is his duty to acquire the necessary knowledge.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think the Government is very hopeful in thinking that the storekeepers are going to be able to understand this kind of legislation. It seems to me it is going to cost an enormous amount of money to collect a tax of this kind, because the Government will have to check it all. They cannot depend entirely on the storekeeper doing the work voluntarily without some check upon him to see that he is collecting the tax properly. If it requires, as it will require, a great deal of time and trouble on the part of the assistant clerk in the store to see that the taxes are properly paid and the slips properly made out, it is going to take the Government a great deal of additional time to check up the figures. Has the Government calculated what will be the cost in the way of providing sufficient officials to see that the tax is properly paid?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The United States have done this very satisfactorily, and in the large departmental stores in Canada no difficulty is being experienced. They have expressed themselves as being able to do the work with the greatest facility. Of course, they are furnished with stamps, etc., and other facilities are afforded; but this problem can be worked out.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What about the small stores?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think the principle of this tax is splendid. I congratulate the Government upon putting a tax upon luxuries. If people buy expensive stuff, let them pay into the treasury of the country for it. The rest of us, who have to do with stuff of inferior quality, ought to be relieved of the tax because we cannot help ourselves; but let the millionaires pay. I believe in charging the millionaire everything that we can get out of him.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman is very self-denying.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: At the foot of page 6 there is an item, "sporting goods, such as tennis rackets," etc. What is the amount proposed on such articles when the value is over 50 cents?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Ten per cent on all these items until you come to paragraph b, on page 7.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I move that this item be struck out. I do not think we should charge anything on sporting goods, tennis rackets, and other articles as described at the foot of page 6 and at the top of page 7, ending with line 6.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not wish to enter upon a discussion of the power or authority of this House to amend a taxation Bill, but that is what my honourable friend proposes to do. I would suggest to him that up to the present time, at any rate, it has been assumed that we have no authority to deal with a taxation Bill in this way.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why does it come before us if we have not the power?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We can reject the entire Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not admit my honourable friend's statement, because if that principle were adopted, then the Bill would be read at the table and could be rejected on the second or the third reading or in committee pro forma. I claim that in reading the Bill clause by clause we are simply acting in accordance with the resolution passed unanimously by this Chamber whereby we declared that we had the right to amend a money Bill; and my honourable friend joined in that resolution.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I am not prepared to say that I went as far as my honourable friend charges that I did. However, it is undesirable that at this late hour in the Session we should enter upon a discussion as to what the powers of the Senate are in connection with financial measures. As to considering this Bill clause by clause, it is properly within our power to do that, because there might be a clause which would warrant the Senate in rejecting the whole Bill, and hence it is necessary to deal with it clause by clause. It seems to me it is more desirable to impose a tax upon sporting goods than upon clothing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, much more.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would ask the honourable gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Proudfoot) why he objects to the payments of a tax on billiards and pool tables?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: They come under the heading of sporting goods.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What objection has my honourable friend to that item?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I say we should not impose a tax at all on sporting goods, such as are described in the item which I read. That is the ground that I take.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But why?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: It is in the interest of the health of the young people of the country not to impose a tax on sporting articles that they are using constantly, day by day.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What particular benefit do they derive from playing billiards, for instance, in a super-heated room in the summer time, inhaling bad tobacco and cigarette smoke, etc.? Is that of any particular advantage to the youth of this country?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I am quite willing to drop the part of the item relating to billiard tables. I had not observed that billiard tables were referred to particularly in this portion. My motion would be to strike out the several lines at the foot of page 6 and the five lines at the top of page 7.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that there are sporting goods that are very luxurious. Only the other day I saw a rod which was given as a present to a friend of mine, and which cost $25. I live among people of but ordinary means. My honourable friend to my right knows of rods that have cost $100. It seems to me that since we are trying to reach the many who can afford to pay the tax, the younger generation should be asked to make a little sacrifice. It will teach them something of responsibility and will help to make them good citizens.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Proudfoot was negatived.

Subsection 1 of section 2 was agreed to:

On subsection 2 of section 2—excise taxes on excess of price:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would the leader of the Government say how the decision was arrived at that tax of 15 per cent should be paid on the excess in the case of boots and shoes, and that a tax of 10 per cent on the total price should be paid in the case of hats and clothing? It seems to me that boots and shoes are just as important as other articles of clothing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is a very much greater range of prices in boots and shoes which permits of this principle being applied to them. You can buy boots at any price up to $50 if you are rich enough and extravagant enough.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not quite understand that item about clothing, near the top of page 9.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For ready-made clothing the price is set at $45, and for custom-made clothes $60.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Subsection 2 of section 2 was agreed to.

Subsection 3 of section 2 was agreed to.

On subsection 4 of section 2—new excise taxes:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Are these taxes paid by the wholesaler?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: By the manufacturer or importer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does this section with regard to the tax on motor boats apply to new boats? Suppose a man has a boat which he has had for five or six years and he sells it, is there a tax on that sale?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would be applied only under two conditions: in the manufacture or in the import. As the boat is an old one changing hands it would not be subject to the tax. Of course, if it were bought out of the country and were imported it would be subject to the tax.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is a tax on automobiles. Why do you not tax gasoline?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is subject to the Sales Tax.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would suggest that there should be a special tax on gasoline, with a rebate to people who require to use it, because there is an enormous amount of money wasted by joy riders.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The difficulty is to follow it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is not this a very simple matter? There would be a tax on every gallon of gasoline sold. Then men like doctors and merchants—

Hon. Mr. McLEAN: And fishermen.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER:—and fishermen—whoever require in their business to use motors of any kind—would get a rebate. In that way you would get after the joy riders, and would stop the excessive use of gasoline. If it did not do that it would fill the coffers of the country if they continued their wild extravagance. I would suggest that something should be done along that line.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is worth considering. Of course, we now get 2 per cent on the sale.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You ought to get 20 cents a gallon from the joy rider.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will get after him.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should there be the tax which is proposed in paragraph f of this section? Have we not prohibition in the country? It would seem that the Government has not yet been apprised of the fact that we have prohibition.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman should know that each province has its autonomy, and the Government is recognizing that principle.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: All right, let it go.

Subsection 4 of section 2 was agreed to.

On subsection 5 of section 2—payment at time of sale or importation:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There is a matter here which I do not quite understand. This subsection says:

> The excise taxes as imposed by the preceding subsections 4 and 5 shall be payable on the duty paid.

It is subsection 5 that we are dealing with. I think there is an error there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is evidently wrong. Strike out the words "and five" and strike off the "s" from the word "subsections."

Subsection 5 of section 2, so amended, was agreed to.

Subsection 6 of section 2 was agreed to.

On subsection 7 of section 2—licenses:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would every person dealing in articles like lime juice in a retail store have to take out a license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is the cost of the license?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: $2 is the maximum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would call the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that there are little businesses—I would hardly call them stores—carried on by people in their own houses along the roads, where they sell ginger ale and other things. Of course, I do not know what profit they get in a year, but no doubt they get something. I have no objection to the Government levying a $2 tax on them.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They are not covered by this provision.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Those soft drinks do not contain alcohol.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is not the people who are selling ginger ale and things of that kind that we want to get at. But there are a great many grocers and others who are selling enormous quantities of essence of lemon, and that beverage is being drunk, to the injury of the people, instead of the good old liquors that they used to drink.

Subsection 7 was agreed to.

On new section 19BBB—tax on sales:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: What is the meaning of the words "for the purposes aforesaid" in subsection 2 of this section? What do they refer to?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Subsection 1 is the subsection aforesaid.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: You except there the articles for which a special license has to be had.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The words "by or for the Senate or House of Commons" at the end of subsection 3 do not seem to be in the right place.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think all the words after the words "His Majesty" should be stricken out, and I so move.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

New section 19 BBB, as amended, was agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On the preamble:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I should like to ask the leader of the Government whether the Government have been able to form any estimate of the amount of money that they are going to raise under this taxation? I have heard it said that the income to be derived under the one per cent sale tax would amount to $200,000,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It has been estimated that $75,000,000 to $80,000,000 will probably be realized.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was reported.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

DEMOBILIZATION BORROWINGS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed the Senate went into committee on Bill 211, an Act to confirm certain borrowings under the Demobilization Appropriation Act, 1919. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—excess borrowings confirmed:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This Bill is simply to authorize the Government to accept the subscriptions which were made in connection with the last loan. It is desirable that this should be done, as I understand from the Minister of Finance that when that loan was placed on the market the subscriptions exceeded the amount contemplated by some $340,000,000. This money is required, and will avoid the necessity of raising another loan of that amount. Consequently we desire to include these in the borrowing powers of the Government.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I presume that the Government has received this money, and has probably already made use of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That may be.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Some of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is making this proposition without a blush. That $340,000,000 was filched out of the pockets of the public and transferred into the treasury. He is not sure that it has been spent, yet he will have to render an account of it before many days.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I rise to a point of order. Perhaps I misunderstood the honourable member for DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), but it seems to me he used the word "filched"—that the Government had filched out of the pockets of the people that amount. Now, I do not think the honourable gentleman should use language like that in a dignified Chamber like this—accuse a body of men who are presumably respectable of having committed an offence of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, the expression must be very bad on which my honourable friend has raised a question of order. I may confess that I need a little more leeway than my friends of the Anglo-Saxon race, because I sometimes use an expression that comes to my lips for the first time, and I am not very sure that I could use a synonym. Of course, when I said filched I meant took by legerdemain. I suppose there is a French expression that is used in English, "from the pockets of the people," that is to say, from the public, for the purposes of the Government. The Government was authorized to borrow, I think, $500,000,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; we were authorized to borrow in all $1,750,000,000; that was the entire borrowing power. The subscriptions exceeded that amount by practically the amount in the Bill, and we therefore ask authority of Parliament for that additional borrowing power which, in any event, would have to be secured for the purpose of an additional loan if we did not take advantage of this over-subscription.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand how it was done; the people over-subscribed the last loan; but I feel all the same that the Government was enabled through that surplus subscription to boast lately that it would not appeal to the public this year for another loan. The question is as to the accounting, and I suppose that the close of this Session may be the end of this Parliament, and we may have a full accounting for the total sum.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am surprised, now that the honourable gentleman understands just how this money came, that he should not withdraw the word or apologize for its use as applied to the Government, because the people had so much confidence in this Government that when it asked them for $400,000,000, or whatever it was, they gave them $350,000,000 in excess. So that it was not necessary, you see, to filch even if they had been so minded; but the people, having that confidence in this Government that they would expend the money properly, and having that patriotic feeling that they must put up the money because it was needed for public purposes, over-subscribed. Now, this legislation is simply to take advantage of that over-subscription and use that money, not for the Government's purposes, but for public purposes. So that the honourable gentleman's language is astray on two counts: one, that he has accused the Government of filching the money from the people, and the other, that he claims the money is being used for Government purposes instead of for public purposes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the honourable gentleman is very much mistaken if he takes for granted that the surplus amount subscribed by the people means confidence in the Government. It means confidence in themselves, in the people of Canada, because the several by-elections we have had in the last few years do not seem to imply over-confidence in the present Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Those can all be accounted for.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: While the Chairman of the Committee is performing his duty of signing this Act, and as the honourable gentleman from New Brunswick is within the reach of my voice, I would like to read for his benefit a statement made by President Wilson, which could be altered in one word, in explanation of the fact that, in spite of his protest a year or two ago that my voice irritated him, I am still on my feet. President Wilson was asked to say a few words at a charity musicale, and as he was surrounded by ladies he said:

> For beauty I am not a star;
> There are others more handsome by far.
> My face I don't mind it,
> Because I am behind it:
> It's the people in front that I jar.

I can alter this by saying:

> My voice, I don't mind it,
> Because I am behind it;
> It's the people in front that I jar.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: That latter part is correct.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The people feel so badly about your voice, but I am quite accustomed to it now: it is like a saw-mill.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 12, an Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons and the Electoral Franchise.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 206, an Act respecting the Canadian Wheat Board.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is my honourable friend going to explain this Bill at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Shortly, it is this. The Government proposes asking Parliament for authority to continue the control of the Wheat Board in the event of conditions warranting their intervention. I will not say that the legislation in the United States is precisely similar to this; but they have a measure of legislation by which they can exercise control of the wheat crop under certain conditions. There are conditions likewise in Europe by which the Allied Powers may exercise, and as I understand are exercising, control over wheat and flour in the Allied countries. There are also conditions of a very disturbing character which may render it necessary for the Government of Canada, as well as the Government of the United States, practically to repeat what they have done on this subject during the last couple of years. It is difficult to say whether those conditions will reach such an acute stage as to warrant governmental action, but it is desirable to have this authority given the Government and placed upon the statute book, so that in the event of our being warranted to exercise that power which the Government now asks we would have it. It will be in the public interest that this be done. I may say that the Bill will be upon our files when we return this evening.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like the leader of the Government to be able to inform us then whether, in the United States, apart from the war legislation, there is any legislation in force giving that Government the right to control the wheat of the country. I understand that there was a bill there that had that effect, but that ceased some time early this month, and what is left is the War Act. There must be some one here in the Department of Foreign Affairs who can give us information on that, because I think it is a relevant point in the consideration of this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that wheat has been decontrolled in the United States: but under their War Measures legislation they have still the right to regulate, and that practically is our situation in Canada. The present intention is not to control, but to take authority to intervene if it is desirable. I notice that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who had charge of this Bill in another place, intimated that he was hopeful that it may not be necessary. It will be purely a matter of the Government exercising its discretion upon the conditions that may arise.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This Bill has been introduced by the Government in the dying hours of the Session, and we have not had an opportunity of seeing and studying the measure. It does seem to me that this legislation is somewhat extraordinary for the Government to be introducing at the present time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not more extraordinary than we have been passing for the last couple of sessions.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I know, but that legislation was brought in as a result of the war.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So is this.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We had hoped that we were getting through that condition, and that it would not be necessary in the future to go on passing this kind of legislation. From the remarks made by the honourable leader of the Government just now, it might seem that all the Government is asking at the present time is an enabling power to deal with this matter; but it may have a very serious effect on the business of the country. People will not know under what conditions this power is going to be exercised. If the Bill goes through there will be power in the hands of the Government to act or not as they think fit; but the people engaged in the business will not know whether this is going to be put into force or not. I have not had time or opportunity to read the Bill and therefore I may not fully appreciate all the sections of the Bill; but I do think it is a very serious matter to ask us to deal with legislation of this kind in the last hours of the Session, when we are very near prorogation. We have had the same kind of thing to complain of in the past, and I do not think that what has happened previously gives us any confidence in dealing with measures in this way. If my honourable friend will recollect, the Bill dealing with the formation of the Board of Commerce was introduced into the House in this way, in the last hours of the Session, and before we had had an opportunity of reading and understanding it, and I for one found it necessary to state at that time that it was impossible to understand the legislation we were putting on the statute book—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK:—and we practically refused to discuss the matter at that time.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: You have had this Act for three years.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: We have had other amendments made that were introduced in that way, and I do not think our experience has been of a kind to make us wish to legislate in that way any more than is absolutely necessary. I certainly think that this legislation is of a most objectionable kind, and I would prefer to see the House consider it very carefully before they pass the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

DOMINION ELECTIONS BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into committee on Bill 12, an Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons and the Electoral Franchise. Hon. Mr. Thompson in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—definitions:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Are there any alterations in this section, or is there any point in it to be considered?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. There are only about three sections in the entire Bill that have been discussed in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The advance poll is something new. I do not know whether other honourable gentlemen understand it or not. Perhaps when we come to the clause dealing with that we can discuss it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You can go back at any time.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Come back after the session.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose it would be cruel to ask the honourable gentleman to give us a definition of "advance poll"?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no. All I can say is that it is a poll of advanced character. When we come to the section dealing with it, we can elaborate upon that.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Sections 3 to 9, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 10—contributions for political purposes:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would like to have some explanation about this clause. I think this is a new provision, which states that companies are not to contribute for election purposes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, this is the old section.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is there nothing new in this clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This has been the law for years.

Section 10 was agreed to.

Sections 11 and 12 were agreed to.

On section 13—illegal payments to electors:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Should not the words, "or who may have voted," be added after the words, "who may intend to vote"?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The elector may not get the opportunity to vote.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But those words should be added in both paragraph a and paragraph b in order to cover what the section is dealing with. The section begins:

> Every person who before, during or after an election, directly or indirectly or by any means or device in attempted evasion of the following provisions,—
>
> (a) Pays or promises to pay in whole or in part the travelling or other expenses of any elector who may intend to vote—

He may intend to vote, or he may have actually voted.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: The clause is worded properly. It forbids providing transportation for not only the man who votes, but also for the man who has the intention of voting. Surely a man who has voted has had the intention of voting. Therefore the case is covered.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: And this is the law as it now stands on the statute book.

Section 13 was agreed to.

On section 12 (re-considered)—conveyance of electors to polls, etc., for hire forbidden:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, while the provisions of section 12 are suited to conditions in the rural districts, it is hard to find in it anything that would remedy its defect in regard to the cities. I have heard members of Parliament on both sides state that this clause could not be complied with honestly at elections in large cities. As to the country districts the prohibition to hire vehicles to convey electors is all right, because nearly every elector has a horse and cart, which under some pretext might be hired by one party or the other. But in the cities, where distances are great, the electors are often two, three or four miles away from their poll, and as candidates feel the necessity of getting the electors to the poll at dinner time or during the day, cabs are hired. The best of candidates, while making an effort to obey the law, will close their eyes to the fact that their friends step in and arrange for the hiring of cabs. It is said that there is not an election in a large city like Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or Hamilton, which could not be annulled just because of the hiring of conveyances to carry electors to the polls. This is a clause under which the candidates in the cities suffer. Of course, we Senators have not to go through the mill, but I dislike to see this clause repeated without an effort having been made to prevent the abuse of the law in those large centres. This is honoured more in the breach than in the observance. Such a clause is necessary for the rural districts, but as to the large cities, while it would hardly be proper at this late hour to try to find a remedy, I desire to point out that the law will continue to be violated and treated with contempt.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: What would you propose?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: He does not propose anything.

Sections 14 to 18, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 19—the Chief Electoral Officer:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It reads, "his Majesty's council."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would the honourable leader of the Government explain why the name of the Chief Electoral Officer is mentioned instead of the office itself?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that my honourable friend's political friends in the other House insisted that the name should be mentioned in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: We have given them their own way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does that imply that the Commons have insisted upon having the appointment of the officer?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, it is very desirable that the officer appointed to this office should have the confidence of both sides of the House, and I understand that it was mutually arranged that this appointment should be made and that the name should appear in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Should not a change be made to correct what is probably a clerical error, referred to by my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique)? It ought to be "counsel," not "council."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: It is only a clerical error.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: That will be corrected.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does this mean that Mr. Biggar will give all his time to the duties of Chief Electoral Officer?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand that Mr. Biggar is acting as counsel for the Government and that he retains his other fees. He will continue to perform the duties that he has been performing for some time past.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: He is attached to the Department of Justice?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily. He has been appointed Chief Counsel for the Government.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under a retaining fee?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He is paid a salary. I do not speak with absolute certainty about it, but I think he is receiving $10,000 for that office and $2,000 for this—a total of $12,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would it not be the reverse?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Does the honourable gentleman mean $10,000 for this?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, $2,000. It is provided here that a salary may be attached to this office.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The same salary as a Supreme Court judge?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The Chief Electoral Officer performs other duties as well.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What about the Civil Service Commission in connection with this appointment?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I do not understand the purpose of subsection 6.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If the Chief Electoral Officer should be incapacitated or unfitted to act, this provides the machinery for the appointment of a substitute.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The previous subsection provides for the appointment, and then it provides for the cancellation of the appointment. It gives one judge the power to appoint and another the power to rescind.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It may become necessary in the absence of these judges to rescind that order, and this makes provision for it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The latter part of the previous section provides for rescission.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This makes provision for a further contingency. If it should be necessary in the absence of the Chief Justice or a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada to rescind the order appointing the first substitute, it may be rescinded.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If those judges are not present it says who shall rescind it. It is perfectly logical.

Section 19 was agreed to.

On section 20—assistant chief electoral officer:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is a typographical error in this section. The word "head" should be changed to "chief."

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: "Chief clerk."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Section 20 was agreed to.

Sections 21 to 31, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 32—preparation of lists of voters:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Can my honourable friend explain how the lists are to be arranged?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand, in rural districts a list will be prepared by a registrar appointed for that purpose. In the cities the provincial lists, if not more than two years old, will be accepted. If the lists are over two years old, new lists may be made, or the old lists may be added to or taken from.

Section 32 was agreed to.

On schedule A to section 32:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Under rule 11, jurisdiction is given to more than one judge. It states that one only will act, but it does not state which.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The judge of the senior court shall act where there are both senior and junior court judges; in other places the County Court judge shall act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under rule 15 the list will be posted up 12 days before polling day.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think it is twelve days. It has to be posted up a reasonable time.

Schedule A to section 32 was agreed to.

Schedule B to section 32 was agreed to.

Sections 33 to 38, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 39—disqualification of candidates:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is a deposit still exacted from the candidates?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is this the same as the old Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is apparently taken from sections 70 and 71 of the old Act. The construction of the clause may not be the same, but from looking over it hastily I would say it was practically the same.

Section 39 was agreed to.

Section 40 was agreed to.

Section 41 to 50, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 51, paragraph 1—attempts:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In the other cases where a penalty is attached, the burden is on the accused to prove himself innocent, but in this case the burden of proof would be on the Government. Why is there a difference?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know.

Section 51 was agreed to.

Sections 52 to 65, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 66, subsection 8—ballot boxes delivered free of postage:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Those ballot boxes, I presume, would be absolutely distinct from the ones used in the advance polls, we come to later?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; I understand they are not the same.

Section 66 was agreed to.

Sections 67 to 88, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 89—election not avoided unless illegal practices by candidates, agents, etc:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why is that word "avoided" there?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It should be "voided."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; that is a typographical error.

Section 89 was agreed to.

Sections 90 to 99, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 100—advance polls for railway employees, sailors and commercial travellers:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend give us some explanation of this now? For whom are these advance polls to be established?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I really could not give my honourable friend any information other than what appears in the clause?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Has he no information at all other than is contained here?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I have not. The clause is not only lengthy, but explanatory. This seems to be entirely new.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How is this worked out? How many days before the other polling are the advance polls established?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Three days?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is the returning officer to proceed to establish these advance polls whether they are asked for by the candidates or not?

Hon. JAMES H. ROSS: There will be a notice in the Canada Gazette first.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On page 118, in Schedule two, will be found information as to where the advance polls shall be held. The different points are named. It will be observed that the advance polls are established by statute.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They are fixed in the Bill, are they?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, under Schedule two.

Hon. JAMES H. ROSS: The places are mentioned there.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I see that subsection 3 provides:

> (a) If a total of not less than fifty votes is polled at the advance polls held within any such place at the election which immediately preceded the amendment, he may strike off the name of that place; or,
>
> (b) If he is advised and believes that a total of fifty votes will be polled at any place in case an advance poll is established there, he may add the name of that place.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and under subsection 4 the Chief Electoral Officer gives notice in the Canada Gazette of so doing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have not time to read every clause. At one of those advance polls is the elector supposed to vote in the county in which the poll is held, or is his vote placed in an envelope which can be sent to his own county?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: His vote applies only in the electoral district to which he belongs; not in any other.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Subsection 9 states pretty clearly the conditions for voting at advance polls.

Section 100 was agreed to.

Section 101 was agreed to.

Schedules 1, 2 and 3 were agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time.

On the motion that the Bill do now pass:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: My attention has just been called to form A, the latter part of which says: "(or as the case may be) Returning Officer." If honourable gentlemen turn to clause 7 of the Bill they will find that it deals with the administration of oaths. The point raised is that it would be better that form A should read: "Returning Officer, or other person authorized to do so." Very often there is considerable confusion in regard to that oath and who may take it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As it did not occur to the Commons to change it, I think we had better leave it as it is.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It may be one of those things that was not noticed. I thought it only right to call it to the attention of the House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think we had better leave it; it will not be an insurmountable difficulty.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Perhaps it could be arranged at another session.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD BILL.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed the Senate went into Committee on Bill 206, an Act respecting the Canadian Wheat Board. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—Wheat Board may be constituted:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I understand that the present Act remains in force up to the 15th of August this year. Is that correct?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I cannot inform my honourable friend definitely on that point.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Subsection c of section 2 of this Bill provides:

"wheat" in clauses 6, 7, 9 and 12 means wheat harvested in 1920 or other wheat delivered to the Board after the 15th day of August, 1920.

It is evidently intended that this Bill shall not come into effect until the 15th day of August.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not in operation now. I understand that the business is now being controlled, and this provision does not come into operation until a proclamation is issued by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But is there not an Order in Council in operation at the present time, clearing up the work of last year?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I cannot speak definitely as to that.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—Board may make investigations, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Subsection 2 of this section might lead to the Government having to pay very large sums of money. If the board commenced operations late in the season, after the business had been running for say a month or six weeks, the members of the Wheat Exchange might find themselves very seriously hampered and very much injured in their business. It seems to me that it would be better if the Government were to fix a date and let the people know what is going to be done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend at my right (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who is better informed in regard to this matter than I am, informs me that the Act on the statute book is now in force, and will remain in force for the handling of this year's crop.

Hon. J. H. ROSS: Up to what date?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: August, I understand. It is probably the date which appears on the face of the Bill, namely, August 15.

In regard to the assumption of loss by the Government, on a former occasion they assumed the same responsibility when the Wheat Board entered upon its duties. They are fully cognizant of what that loss will be, so they are not going to assume a liability of which they have no conception.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Has my honourable friend any figures to show what that loss has been in the past?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There has been a very substantial surplus; in fact, the surplus from the handling of this business is so substantial that it amazes one. The farmers and the public get the benefit of it.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Up to the present time there has been no loss?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: It is claimed that the surplus in the hands of the Government at the present time is over 40 cents a bushel. They are going to issue cheques for 50 per cent of it by the 15th of this month. That goes to the farmer.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But that is not the loss which this subsection deals with. It is quite correct, as the honourable gentleman from Manitou (Hon. Mr. Sharpe) has said, that the Wheat Board has 40 cents a bushel which it holds. Those who held on will get 40 cents; but the grain dealer who went out and bought wheat at say $3, before the Government came in and fixed a price of $2.75, made a loss; and there was a loss last year. There has been a partial settlement of that loss, but I think there is still a claim of some $20,000 in that regard. I think that is what is referred to in this section. If you have an open market for a time and men buy wheat at certain prices the board is then appointed and fixes a price, it is possible that the price which they fixed may cause a loss to the men who have been buying in the open market. That is what this section provides for, and it is possible that there might be a big loss. I think, however, that that is not a thing to worry over, because at the time they constituted the board the Government naturally would know whether there had been much buying, and would take care not to fall into a hold of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Last year the Government were very undecided whether to go ahead and control the wheat or not, and for a time they allowed the Grain Exchange to buy and sell wheat. This year they will have their minds made up before they allow the Grain Exchange to open at all; and if they allow it to open, they will allow it to handle the whole crop.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—powers of Board:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I think this is an opportune time to mention a certain matter which I have in mind. I take it that the existing Wheat Board was constituted under the War Measures Act, or during war time; and, of course, I can quite well understand where the Board got its powers. But in the light of the British North America Act, I am puzzled to know where the Parliament of Canada gets power to pass this legislation now that the war is over. So far as we have gone, well and good. I quite understand that the Board should be able to make inquiries and reports in the public interest; but if you read section 6 you will find that some very drastic powers are being placed in the hands of this Board. Take, for instance, paragraph g, under which they shall have power:

> To fix maximum prices or margins of profit at which flour and other products made from wheat delivered to millers may be sold, and to fix standards of quality of such flour.

Then paragraph k, which says:

> For the purpose of performing its duties under this Act, to allocate Canadian lake tonnage and to distribute cars for rails shipments.

The Board will have power to take the whole of the lake shipping in hand. I understand very well that the Government claims to have got the power last year; but since then there has been a declaration of peace.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No declaration of peace?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no declaration of peace with Turkey yet.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have in my possession, and I could get it in a very short time, a proclamation of King George issued on the 7th day of July this year, stating that war between Great Britain and Germany and her Allies had come to a close.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With Germany, yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: With Germany and her Allies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Are we still in a state of war?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Under a statute passed last year, England is; but Canada, under international law, under the War Measures Act, and under the proclamation of His Majesty the King issued last July, is at peace with Germany and with all the Allies of Germany.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: How about Turkey?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: We are at peace with Turkey.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: They are firing on her now.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Great Britain is, but we are at peace with Turkey. Great Britain is working under the statute passed last year.

Then, paragraph q of this section says:

To require that any wheat sold or purchased in Canada shall be delivered to the Board or to its order in accordance with such regulations as the Board may from time to time make.

That is to say, they could order wheat to be delivered to them or to someone else. I would like to know where the Parliament of Canada gets the authority to give them the power to do that. Then you will find that under section T they have the following power:

To order any person holding wheat stored in any elevator or warehouse, or on railway cars or Canadian boats to sell and dispose of the same to any purchaser named by the Board, on such terms as the Board may direct, and any such order of the Board shall pass to the purchaser the title in the wheat mentioned in any such order.

This is a most sweeping clause, and I should like to know where we get the power to pass such legislation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Can the leader of the Government give us any information about that? I think the point raised is a very important one, and one upon which we should have some information.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We are exercising the same authority that we have always exercised. There may be something in what my honourable friend has said, but the Government is quite willing to accept the responsibility and to exercise this power of legislation. If anyone considers it ultra vires of the Canadian Parliament he has his remedy in the courts. But there is a good deal of force in the good old rule, the simple plan, that they shall take who have the power and they shall hold who can.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That was the German idea.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That may be, but the public have their remedy in the courts if they think that this is ultra vires of this Parliament.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The same question was raised about the Indian Acts the other day, but we passed those Acts.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The whole question was raised about the Commerce Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All legislation is susceptible of being investigated as to its validity.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But I do not think it is a good thing for this House to be passing legislation of this kind.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It has worked very satisfactorily in the past. The power that has been exercised in putting legislation on the statute book in former sessions is good enough to place it on at present.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But the conditions of the country when this Act was in force before are different from what they are now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; I would say that the conditions to-day are even more startling than they were when this legislation was placed on the statute book. They are all conditions arising out of the war.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: One of the first questions would be whether the Board could operate successfully without the powers granted in section 6. The powers are very extensive, and any one familiar with the handling of grain, if he studies that section, will conclude that those powers are absolutely necessary if the Government is to take control and handle the grain of Canada under certain circumstances, which is the object of the Bill. Many of the powers mentioned here were exercised before the War Measures Act was passed; that is, the Grain Commission had power of control in handling the cars. They allocated the cars, and ordered the different railways to send cars to certain points, and to observe the order of shipment. I do not know why we can do it with grain cars under the Railway Act and not with other cars; one is as much ultra vires as the other. There is something in the point raised by the honourable member for Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) that would give any lawyer ground for argument anyway. If we are going to give the Government this power and put this Act into operation I do not think section 6 contains power that is not absolutely necessary to work the Act properly.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That may be perfectly true, but the position is this. We may say that it is necessary to give the Government those powers, but we are not in a position to give them. If any man came to my honourable friend as a lawyer and asked his advice in the matter, he would probably say, "Go and sue the Government at once, and have the matter settled."

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: If he had a good fee he would.

Section 6 was agreed to.

Sections 7 to 15, inclusive, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 217, an Act to amend the Railway Act, 1919.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Daniel in the Chair.

On section 1—powers of Board of Railway Commissioners with respect to coal and other fuel supplies:

Hon. R. S. WHITE: Are the powers given to the Railway Board exercised over the Department of Marine, the Department of Labour, and the Department of Trade and Commerce, or what powers do they have?

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: The powers that the Railway Board may exercise under this Bill will be practically the same as those that were conferred upon the Fuel Controller during the war under the War Measures Act. It is intended that the Board shall have general jurisdiction over and assist in the obtaining of coal necessary to meet our requirements, and the transportation and distribution of it.

Hon. R. S. WHITE: If they find, for instance, that the production of coal is not sufficient, can they call on the Labour Department to increase that output, or not? Have they any power over the Labour Department, or any instructions about it?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I do not assume that the Board of Railway Commissioners would have any more power in that direction than the Fuel Controller had. They would simply make the necessary representation as to what, in their opinion, ought to be done, and the Departments would have some power to exercise in that direction. At the present time the fuel situation is indeed serious in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. During the first part of this year the importations exceeded those for the first five months of last year; but, owing to transportation difficulties in the United States, and the scarcity of coal, that is, the demand not being met even in their own country, drastic steps have been taken over there to control the situation; and the Interstate Commerce Commission has been placed in control of the coal situation under much the same powers as Mr. Garfield exercised as Fuel Controller during the war. Embargoes have been placed on the exportation of coal overseas. It is obvious that some control must be maintained over coal in Canada, and as it has been thought wise by the United States to suggest that coal should not be exported to Europe, we would expect that country to supply coal here. Therefore some body must have power in Canada to exercise such control as was exercised by the coal director under the War Measures Act; and inasmuch as the Railway Board are in direct touch with and control transportation movements, it is felt that they are the logical body in whom to vest this power.

Hon. Mr. WHITE: Would they have any power over the ships owned by the Canadian Government if they wanted tonnage?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would assume that they would represent to the Minister of Marine what was required in the way of ships. I would not assume that they had any commandeering power under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose the production of coal in Nova Scotia had fallen off, would they have power to take drastic measures to increase that production?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: They have power to take control of a mine and operate it, if necessary.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This Board of Railway Commissioners would have that power?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Bill says:

> The Board shall have power to do and authorize such acts and things and to make from time to time such orders and regulations as the Board, by reason of real or apprehended scarcity of coal or other fuel supplies in Canada, may deem necessary or advisable for the provision of such supplies and for the distribution, control and disposition thereof.

The regulations which the Board are empowered to make would, I assume, be along the lines of those that governed the operations by the Fuel Controller, and under those regulations he was empowered, in the event of industrial difficulties which interfered with or interrupted the production of coal, to take such steps as in his opinion were necessary to guarantee and continue the coal production, even to the extent of operating the property.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It would be assumed that coal operators, that is, the owners of the coal mines, would be anxious to produce as much coal as possible.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But they are often prevented from doing that by reason of the action of the miners. What extra powers would the Railway Board have to take hold of the situation and make them produce?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: All that they could do, I assume, if they found it necessary to take control of and operate the mine, would be to take such steps as were necessary in the way of production.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What steps could they take? Suppose the labourers refused to work?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Get labour that would work.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This Bill is open to the same objection as was raised by the honourable member from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) in connection with the Bill which has just been passed by this honourable House. There is no question that the Railway Board, under this Act, may prevent the exportation of coal; that would be within the power of this Parliament; but, as was stated by the honourable member from Middleton, they would not be entitled to interfere with contracts, nor to control the price at which coal was sold at the mines, nor would they be entitled to take possession of the coal, as that would be interfering with the provisions of the British North America Act. Of course, if we were in a state of war that would be another thing, but we understand that we are not. If we are not, then all contracts are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the province.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It is deemed desirable that there should be an amendment added. It is proposed to insert the following as subsection 3 of section 1, and the present subsection 3 will become subsection 4:

All orders and regulations made under this section by the Board shall have the force of law and may be varied, extended or revoked by any subsequent order or regulations; but if any order or regulation is varied, extended or revoked, neither the previous operations thereof nor anything duly done thereunder shall be affected thereby, nor shall any right, privilege, obligation, or liability acquired, accruing or incurred thereunder be affected by such variation, extension or revocation.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It seems to me that this measure, like the other one dealing with the Wheat Board, will be open to dispute; that in this case the Board of Railway Commissioners will try to enforce the law and some company or person will engage a lawyer and dispute the whole thing, and it will be tied up. It does seem to me that it is foolish for Parliament to pass legislation of this kind. It may be all right for the lawyers, but I do not see that it is wise legislation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We would not legislate at all if we adopted that principle.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON I would point out to my honourable friend and to the House that these are amendments to the Railway Act. Section 52 of the Railway Act, if I remember correctly, provides for an appeal at any time from the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners to the Governor in Council. There is therefore a safety valve.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Robertson was agreed to.

On subsection 3—duration of section:

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Subsection 3 now becomes subsection 4.

Subsection 4 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SITTINGS OF THE SENATE.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved:

That beginning to-morrow and for the balance of the session there shall be two distinct sittings of the Senate, the first sitting to be from 11 o'clock, a.m., until 1 o'clock, p.m., and the second sitting to commence at 2 o'clock; and that all Select Committees of the Senate be permitted to sit while the Senate is in session, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in rule 86.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE.

Wednesday, June 30, 1920.

First Sitting.

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE.

MOTION.

Hon. C. P. BEAUBIEN moved:

Whereas the abrogation of the Franco-Canadian Commercial Treaty on the 19th of June instant will seriously affect Canada's export trade to France;

Whereas the said abrogation will further place France at a grave disadvantage with her competitors on the Canadian market;

Be it resolved that the Canadian Government be earnestly urged to forthwith enter into negotiations for the purpose of concluding a new Treaty or a temporary agreement with France of a nature to protect and if possible stimulate trade between the two countries.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I have no apology but an explanation to give this House why this motion is presented so late. It is a case of necessity. The policy of the Government in this respect was not announced until the 26th of June instant. I was unable until yesterday to obtain from the different departments the information required; therefore it was, prior to this moment, impossible to put this matter before the House in an intelligent manner.

In these last fleeting hours of the session I would certainly not inflict on this House a subject of a rather dry nature, composed practically of quotations and figures, if I did not consider it of paramount importance to the country; but I do. I wish I had the natural ability that many members of this House possess, of putting a business proposition in concise, crisp and clear language.

Let me preface what I have to say by stating that this motion has been approved by very important bodies of men in this country. I will quote a resolution recently adopted by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at their last annual meeting:

Whereas, the Franco-Canadian Customs Tariff Convention will terminate about June 19, 1920, and

Whereas, it is highly desirable that the friendly trade relations between France and Canada should be improved by a new Customs Convention whereby direct shipping may be promoted and French markets opened which, owing to the high general Customs duties of France would otherwise remain closed against numerous Canadian products, both agricultural and manufacturing, and on the other hand desirable markets may be opened in Canada for various French products not made or produced in Canada.

Therefore be it resolved, that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in annual meeting assembled in Vancouver on June 9, 1920, earnestly petition the Dominion Government to negotiate a new Franco-Canadian Customs Tariff Convention, as soon as conditions become opportune.

A similar resolution was adopted by France-Amerique, a very important organization composed of men endeavouring to strengthen the trade and intellectual relations existing between Canada and France. This association comprises many of the heads of our big railroads, of our banks, of our industries—men who hold very high positions in every walk of life. The resolution adopted by this association is as follows:

Extract from the minutes of a meeting of France-Amerique, held in the city of Montreal on the 17th day of May, 1920.

Whereas the repeal of the commercial treaty between Canada and France will operate from the 19th day of June next (1920), and whereas the negotiation of a new treaty will no doubt entail protracted discussions, extending over a long period;

Whereas it is of vital importance that Canadian exportations to France, so highly developed during the war and to a substantial extent maintained since should not be jeopardized by such revocation, but should be protected and, as far as possible, helped by a temporary agreement between the two nations;

Wherefore it is unanimously resolved;

That the Government of Canada be earnestly requested forthwith to take such steps as may lead to the negotiations of such a temporary agreement prior to the 19th day of June, 1920.

Resolutions to the same effect have also been adopted by the Montreal Board of Trade and by the two Chambers of Commerce of Montreal.

These resolutions, honourable gentlemen, fortify the proposition I wish to lay before you. What is the position of Canada now? We were very unfortunate in the war in that we lost the flower of our manhood and burdened our country with a very heavy debt. But we have been fortunate in this, that our trade has been extremely prosperous, and that the unfavourable balance of trade, which had increased so alarmingly from 1910 to 1914 to the extent of $1,000,000,- 000 was offset by a favourable balance in the four following years, from 1914 to 1919, that is, to an amount of no less than $1,300,-000,000. This was very satisfactory indeed for Canada, being face to face with the enormous debt which she had to assume as her fair and glorious share of this world war, the war of liberty and of civilization.

But what I need draw your attention to is not so much the past but the present. While I am speaking we are consuming this favourable balance of trade at the rate of about a million and a half a day. Let me quote some figures. The favourable trade balance, in 1918, was $576,000,000; in 1919, $296,000,000; in 1920, $174,000,000. Let me now put before you, as business men, a comparative statement for the three last months of this year, as compared with the same period of last year. Taking March of 1919 and March of 1920, how do they compare? In 1919 we had a favourable balance of $28,000,000. What have we this year? We have an unfavourable balance of $49,000,000 —a reversal of $77,000,000 against Canada in one month. In April of last year we had a favourable balance, already declining, of $10,000,000. What have we this year? In April, 1920, we have an unfavourable balance of $44,000,000. Last year in the month of May we had a favourable balance of $20,000,000. What have we this year? An unfavourable balance of over $36,105,321. In the last three months, honourable gentlemen, we have already consumed no less than $1,432,-000 of our favourable balance. If we continue at this rate, in less than twelve months we shall have reduced it by no less than $522,000,000, which means that practically, in two years, all that we have accumulated during the war will be gone. Am I therefore right in contending that every effort must be made to increase our exportations and, if possible, to diminish our importations?

I have endeavoured to treat this as a business proposition and to find out where we have gained and where we have lost. A country has clients just the same as a corporation, a company or a business man. I have carefully examined the list of our customers; and have, first of all, eliminated all small countries with whom we do less than $1,000,000 of business, a year; secondly, I have ranged off on one side those countries with whom we are doing what I would call a profitable business—a business which at the end of the year will leave us something to the good. I have put on the other side those countries to whom we are losing money. How do we stand?

The countries with which we have a favourable balance are fifteen in number. The first one, of course, is the British Empire. In trading with the British Empire we make no less than $387,000,000. I know that the Government will do everything that is required in the near future to ensure that this favourable balance will be maintained and if possible increased. I have no doubt either as to their intention or their ability for so doing.

Hon. Mr. POWER: May I interrupt the honourable gentleman for a moment? Of what year is he speaking?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Of the twelve months ending on the 31st of March last.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And the first three months of this year?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think I made that quite clear. The British Empire is our best customer. Who do you think is our next best client? France, and with her we are no less than $52,642 to the good. Let us continue. Then we come to Greece with $28,888,000; then to Belgium and her colonies, with $27,526,000; then to Italy, with $15,962,000. Then we come to Roumania, with $12,953,000. You know what money we have loaned to Roumania. We fall off very much indeed at this point as we come to China, with $5,458,000; to Norway, with $4,000,000; Sweden, with $3,000,000; Denmark, with $2,832,000; Albania, with $2,741,-000; the Netherlands, with practically $1,500,000; Russia, with $1,477,000; Turkey, with $1,103,000; and finally we come to Brazil, with $729,000.

What about the unfavourable balances? First of all comes our good neighbour to the south, with an unfavourable balance of no less than $336,000,000; then comes Switzerland, with $6,273,000; then Japan, with $5,903,000; then Peru, with $4,798,000; then Mexico, with $2,238,000; then Cuba, with $1,256,000, and, finally, Spain, with $444,000.

Now let us ascertain how far these figures have been influenced by our commercial treaties. As already stated we deal with two groups of nations, one which pays us and the other which does not. We have had a favourable treaty with France. What has it given us? It brought us, just as soon as opportunity offered, no less than the amount which I have stated—over $52,000,-000—in the year just elapsed. You will say: "But why has this treaty been revoked?" It has been revoked for this reason: France, as you know, in 1871, shed her heart's blood, then she was bled of her gold, and then was shackled for all time to come in her business relations. Germany, indeed, said to her: "Our troops will not quit your soil until such time as you bind yourself not to grant commercial favours to any nation in the world unless they are automatically extended to us." So France has gone on for over forty years carrying these chains and making good the business of Germany. As soon as war was declared France thought of breaking her shackles, and in the month of September, 1918, she did so. But, honourable gentlemen, these shackles dragged other chains; and to free herself entirely denounced all her existing treaties.

But here, honourable gentlemen, a new necessity arose, and in this regard I do not blame the Government for what they did. We had to get more money, and it was only reasonable to impose heavier taxes upon objects of luxury. France exports to this country mainly objects of luxury. But that is not all. Whatever commercial treaty advantage is granted to France is now automatically extended by the most favoured nation clause to twelve other nations. We therefore had to denounce the French treaty. Notice was given, and the French Treaty was cancelled on the 19th of this month.

Now, honourable gentlemen, how is it that we are not free to trade separately with every nation? How is it that when we give an advantage to France we have to give it to twelve other nations? How is it that when we grant a concession to a country that benefits us to the extent of $52,000,000, we have at the same time to extend it to a country that costs us several millions a year? It seems to me that if you, as good business men, were dealing with a company, you would be extremely curious to find out the reason for such a state of affairs. Let me tell you how it is.

We were all proud indeed, during the negotiations of the Treaty of Peace, to see Canada so well represented by our Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet. Let me say here, looking towards my honourable friends opposite—and I feel that in a large measure they will share my opinion—that Canada has left in France a very deep and loving impression. This impression is due not only to the valour of our soldiers, which was unsurpassed, not only to their conduct as good, kind-hearted, generous men, who after fighting without food for a whole day to capture Mons, forgot the pangs of hunger and turned their kits over to the famished population—this impression is due also to the stand Canada has taken as a nation and to the manner in which she was represented by her statesmen. I can tell you without exaggeration that no country in the world stands closer to the heart of France than our dear country of Canada.

One thing has struck the French people, as it has struck you, honourable gentlemen, it was the sudden realization that Canada had gotten out of her swaddling clothes. We have been men of full virility in the trenches; we have been men of full maturity in the negotiations for the Treaty of Peace. Very often, indeed, the opinion of our Prime Minister has been accepted and is now reflected in the writings of the Treaty of Peace. Our Prime Minister and the other members of the Cabinet have insisted upon one thing—that Canada should stand by itself. England had magnificent men to represent her; she had men of talent and men of experience—men who came from a long lineage of diplomats; men who have been brought up generation after generation to be statesmen. Still Canada insisted that she should be represented by her own sons, the sons of the land. Therefore, gentlemen, we were bound by the signatures of our own peers.

Now, honourable gentlemen, if we were not willing to be held by the signature of Lloyd George or that of Balfour, what do you say to being bound by that of Lord Aberdeen? Or by that of Lord Beaconsfield? Or that of Lord Liverpool? Are you willing to be pledged by the signature of Charles the Second? Nay, are you willing to be bound by the signature of Queen Anne? What is your answer? Canada, at this hour, is obligated to extend the most favoured nation clause to twelve countries, as follows: Argentine, under a treaty made with Great Britain on the 2nd February, 1825; Colombia, under a treaty made with Great Britain on the 16th day of February, 1866—I believe it was then Robert Peel who had the rare privilege of tying us up long before a great many of the honourable gentlemen in this House were born; I shall not mention Japan, because we have seen fit to denounce the old treaty, and to make one ourselves, in 1913; Norway, under treaty with Great Britain, dated 18th March, 1826; Russia, under treaty with Great Britain dated 12th January, 1859; Spain, under treaty dated September 9th, 1713, which was confirmed by another treaty dated the 17th of August, 1814; Sweden, under treaty made with Great Britain on the 18th March, 1826; Switzerland, under treaty made with Great Britain on the 6th of September, 1855; Venezuela, under treaty made with Great Britain, on the 18th of April, 1825, confirmed by another treaty made with Great Britain on the 29th October, 1834, and again renewed and confirmed by an exchange of notes with Great Britain on the 3rd of February, 1903.

Your first question, I suppose, will be: Is it necessary that we should so be bound? Can we get out of this servitude?—because, after all, it is servitude. What did we do in the case of Japan? We made representations to England, and what happened? England gladly renounced her treaty with Japan. Honourable gentlemen, why should we not act similarly in all these similar cases? Now let me tell you how this most favoured nation clause works out. The nations that benefit by this clause (I cite from the customs tariff of 1907, with amendments, up to the first of December, 1919) are the following: the United Kingdom and colonies; France and colonies—I do not need to deal with those; the Argentine Republic. What business do you think we transact with the Argentine Republic? We import from it $49,000 worth and we export to it for $33,000. What is the sense of conceding such extraordinary advantages to a country that brings such an insignificant amount of business? At any rate, the result is that we lose $16,000. Colombia: we import $502,000 from her, and we export to her $101,000. The net result, while it may be insignificant, is unfavourable to the extent of $401,000. Denmark: we have a favourable balance with her although small; it amounts to $2,832,000. Then there is Japan. What do you think is our business with Japan? We lose with her to the extent of $5,903,000 a year—practically $6,000,000. Norway, we make something on Norway—$4,336,000. Russia: it is no use speaking of Russia now; we do not know when we shall be able to trade with her. We lose with Spain a small amount, $444,000. On Sweden we make a shade over $3,000,000. We lose with Switzerland over $6,000,000. On Venezuela we make a very small amount, $367,000.

Now let us add together what we make and what we lose, and where do we stand? Mind you, we make an immense sacrifice in being unable to treat separately with any nation in the world unless we say to them: "The advantage that we are going to give you is only a fraction of an advantage; it will have to be shared by no less than twelve other nations." Of course, they immediately retort: "What is the use? That is no advantage. We are prepared to grant you exclusive concessions and you, in return, offer advantages shared by a group of nations." You see at once on what footing of inferiority we are placed when negotiating commercial treaties. Well, taking all those nations together, we lose over $3,000,000 a year. It costs us over $3,000,000 a year to bear shackles of that kind Is this reasonable? I put the question to you: are you willing to agree to that?

Now, what is the purpose of my motion? The purpose is to show you, first of all, that it is worth our while getting free from the restraint of the above treaties so that we may go to France, our second best customer, and say—not that we are going to grant her our intermediate tariff, as was proposed on the 26th instant by the Minister of Trade and Commerce; no, but that we are willing to give her exclusive advantages on certain lines of goods, which we do not manufacture, provided we are given equally exclusive concessions for such of our goods that we can sell to best advantage on the French market as a result of the introduction of our goods into France during the war or by reason of the needs of France for the purposes of reconstruction or on account of replacement of goods that France used to import from Germany and Austria.

Prior to the war we used to export to France $3,630,000. During the eleven months ending on the last day of February of this year—the entire period being after the war and in fact beginning a number of months after the armistice was signed—we exported to France $57,427,000. There will be a slight difference between the figures for the eleven months and the total for the year which did not close until the end of March.

Our trade with France for the eleven last months comprises no less than thirty-one lines of goods which we did not export to that country prior to the war.

I know that with your business acumen you will come back to me with the question: "Is this permanent business?" Very well, let me answer it, if I can.

First of all, I think I may say that Canadian goods have acquired quite a reputation in France. Of course, you will have to accept my word for that, because there is no evidence except the volume of our trade to support my affirmation. That reputation is worth a great deal of money and should be preserved.

I mentioned reconstruction in France. Do you know that France has lost no less than 600,000 houses, 500 city halls, 1,200 schools, 1,600 churches? That is, she has lost many more buildings than exist in the whole province in which I live. There are, in my province, 1,200 post offices, many of which, as you know, have been established for the convenience of people scattered in the country districts, and at places where there are groups of only three, four or ten houses. In France no less than 560 city halls and 1,200 schools have been destroyed. You may say: "Yes, but how many of those are rebuilt—because we are interested only in future trade?" Very well, let us see how many have been rebuilt. At the beginning of the year there were only 60,000 houses rebuilt and 60,000 under repair. Therefore, at the present moment there are no less than 480,000 houses to build, leaving aside altogether the city halls, the schools and the churches. "But," you will say, "that requires only building material; what about the rest?" Here is my answer: The ten departments of France which were invaded comprised 85 per cent of the industrial production of France. Here is the list as briefly as I can give it. The products of these departments were: wool, 94 per cent; linen, 90 per cent; mineral ores, 90 per cent; iron, 83 per cent; sugar, 70 per cent; coal, 55 per cent; cotton, 60 per cent; electrical energy, 45 per cent.

The region invaded was utterly destroyed or stripped and its restoration will require years of strenuous efforts. But you will further ask: "How is our agricultural community interested?" Let me deal with that question. France has lost no less than 1,300,000 head of cattle. How many do you think have since been replaced? Two hundred thousand. There are still 1,100,000 head of cattle to be obtained by France somewhere. Why should we not furnish them? There are hundreds of miles of railway to be built, of canals to be repaired; there are no less than 504 bridges to be reconstructed.

With reference to the third point, the abrogation of the Treaty of Frankfort presents a great opening for us. What were the imports of France from Germany prior to the war? One billion sixty-eight million francs. And from Austria the imports amounted to 103,500,000 francs. Those imports include many articles which we are now prepared to supply.

What is the remedy proposed by the Government? It consists of an offer to France of our intermediate tariff, in exchange of special concessions on certain lines of goods. We are going to ask for favours and what do we offer? Equality. Equality with whom? With the worst competitors that France has. Do you think we are going to get much? Do you think we are entitled to get much? Should we not shake off our fetters of old, free ourselves from the servitude of the most favoured nation clause and then say to France: "We are free; we will bargain with you; what will you give us for our agricultural implements? We sell largely to you in this line; cut down your tariff so low that we shall have an exclusive preference. You want to export silk? Very well, we do not manufacture any silk, and for your goods we will cut down our tariff lower than for any other nation." We could apply this method to a great many lines of merchandise. That is by far the best way to negotiate.

But let me go further. Should the Government succeed in obtaining from France special concessions in exchange for our intermediate tariff, how will it work out for France? Let me call your attention to a very serious state of affairs. How was our tariff applied to France by the Department of Customs? I thought the method of its application so extraordinary, I received representations from France so often, that I made an earnest effort to ascertain the facts. The duty on French goods is imposed on a fictitions value of the franc. How does this fictitious value affect the goods imported from France? Let me take a very small sum as an example, so that I may be better understood. Suppose you are a merchant and you have one dollar to spend. You send an order to France for goods worth one dollar. That means that you buy goods to the value of 10 francs 35 centimes, at the present value of French currency, which is worth 10 francs 30 centimes to the Canadian dollar. Very well, you go to the Customs Department and you say: "I have paid a good Canadian dollar for this article. The duty is 35 per cent on this; now impose your duty; you have a right to 35 cents." "Oh, no," says the Customs officer, "you have bought goods to the value of 10 francs 30 centimes in France, but an Order in Council has fixed the value of the franc at 5 francs 15 centimes to the dollar. Therefore the duty must be imposed on 10 francs 30 centimes; that is to say, on two dollars instead of one." Therefore the goods are charged, not with 35 cents, but with 70 cents. That seems very unjust.

But that is not all. As you are aware, it is impossible to obtain short deliveries for any goods ordered in France. If your order is placed to-day you may not receive the merchandise for six months. The ocean is not as easy to cross as the border. You can go to the United States and order your goods and get them within 30 days, but you cannot expect to receive goods so quickly from France. Well, what happens? The customs regulation provides that in regard to goods upon which no actual value is placed at the time of shipment—and this is practically always the case for importations from France—there is a super-tax imposed of 20 per cent when three months elapse between the order and the shipment; 12½ per cent when two months elapse between the order and the shipment; and 5 per cent when the delay is reduced to 30 days. How does that work out? It means that the importer has to pay a double duty and the super-tax. When the goods reach Canada, he has to pay $1 for the goods, plus 70 cents for duty, plus 40 cents super-tax, or a total of $2.10.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Of duty?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Now if the duty was imposed on the real value of the franc, which is 10 francs, 35 centimes to the dollar, and even with the application of the super-tax, which I think is unjust, the amount payable would be only $1.55.

Now let us see how this compares with France's greatest competitor, the United States. You have one dollar to spend. You buy your goods in the United States and bring them in. What duty do you pay? Thirty-five cents, nothing more. Therefore you pay one dollar for your goods and 35 cents for duty. You get the goods mostly within 30 days; therefore the super-tax is only 5 cents, and the total cost to you is only $1.40. Of course, you have to add to that an amount sufficient to make up the depreciation on our own money, 15 per cent, which brings the amount to about $1.55 or $1.60. Is it reasonable to expect that French goods can compete with American goods under such circumstances? Increase that one dollar to $100,000 and in the case of France you will have to spend $210,000, whereas if you bought similar goods in the United States, the cost would be $160,000. It is altogether out of the question for France to compete under the present conditions.

Evidently you must say: "This difference in treatment in these two cases is so great that there must be a reason for it." That was my first thought. Very well, let us see whether there is a reason for it or not. Section 59 of the Act respecting Customs is very plain. My honourable friends can easily refer to it, it is chapter 48 of the Revised Statutes, section 59; it provides, in part, that unless there is a value fixed on foreign currency by Order in Council it shall be the duty of those importing goods from a country in which the currency is depreciated to obtain from any Consul residing in such country a certificate of the value of that depreciated currency at the date at which the goods are shipped. In such case the duty is imposed on the value of the currency so established. Why is that section not applied? Simply because there is an Order in Council which states that the franc is worth 5 francs, 15 centimes to the dollar.

You will further say: "Surely there is a reason why the value of the franc is so fixed and cannot be altered. It is only too apparent that it is to the detriment of France, and it is of no benefit to us, because the goods which otherwise come from France, come from other countries; therefore we gain nothing at all; we get the same amount of duty; other countries profit and France loses the trade."

Well, gentlemen, I find that this Order in Council is dated on the 1st February, 1918. The franc there is quoted at 19.30 cents, which is 5.15 francs to the dollar. This Order in Council was amended on the 5th of November, 1919, in respect to the currencies of Guatemala, Honduras, San Salvador, China, Paraguay, and Persia. In addition it does not establish the value of the American dollar. Why could it not be amended to eliminate from it the fixed value of the franc. Is there any practical or technical difficulty in the way? Honourable gentlemen, in the Republic to the south of us, with a very much larger and more complicated business than our own, whenever French goods are imported the American Consul certifies on the date of shipment of the goods the value of the French currency, and it is on the value so certified that the duty is paid.

Some time in 1919, I think it was on the 6th October last, as shown in Hansard, page 842, Hon. Mr. Maclean gave two reasons why our duty should be applied as it presently is. These reasons at first sight seemed plausible. The first one was that it was very difficult to modify the existing system. I think I have disposed of that objection by reference to the practice followed in the United States. But the other one was very much more serious in its consequences. He said: "If you favour France because the currency has depreciated, you are going to favour Germany very much more." Honourable gentlemen, are you aware that some of our good neighbours to the south take their raw materials across to Germany, get them there turned into finished goods, bring them back and pay duty, and lay them down on their own market cheaper than they could get them manufactured at home; and I would not be at all surprised to learn that they also often ship them across the frontier to us. Germany cannot get raw material as with her depreciated currency she has to pay 800 per cent advance on anything she imports whilst France pays slightly over 200 per cent. France wants all sorts of goods for reconstruction purposes. Why should we not furnish them? We have the sympathy of the people of France; they open their arms to us, they only ask that we make it possible for them to deal with us.

I am sorry to see that the ministerial chairs are empty at the present time, and that the advantage we possess of speaking directly to the Government through its representatives, in this House, is denied to me at this time. I earnestly hope, however, that pending the negotiations now going on with France, two things will be done: first, that we will get rid of the shackles—and, mind you, our freedom is within our reach and for our asking. England will not stand in the way; if we only express the wish, she will grant it. Let us be, first of all, free, let us offer to France special privileges in exchange for special privileges. Let us further have the customs duties imposed as they should be on the real value of French currency, and not on a fictitious value, which practically chokes every possibility of trading with a country to which we are drawn by every possible advantage and every possible sympathy.

Let me close by saying that it is good business for us to trade with France, as she in no way competes with our home industries. There is another reason which rises above purely material considerations: France has bled more than any other country, she has assumed a heavier debt than any other country. All of France has been bleeding and paying for all of humanity, and now that she is bravely striving to climb the steep and narrow path that leads her to the far but radiant summit of prosperity and happiness, surely she deserves the help and sympathy of people so deeply moved by her heroic deeds and so greatly benefited by her appalling sacrifices.

Hon. A. B. CROSBY: I wish to second this motion. I cannot find words to thank the honourable gentleman who has just spoken for the very eloquent, able, intelligent and businesslike presentation he has made to this House. As one very much interested in transportation, exporting, and importing, and very familiar with the conditions of Canada's products for export, the whereabouts of imports we desire, and with the countries that have been mentioned as at a disadvantage in relation to us, and knowing what they take from Canada, and what they cannot get anywhere else, I think the time has arrived when all those treaties with what we call the favoured nations should be set aside. All we have to do is to ask the mother country, who has done so much for us, and has always been glad to meet us on all occasions when we appealed to her on any measure that seemed to be in the interests of this country. This country should proceed at once, without any hesitation or reservation, to bring about conditions that will enable us to treat with those countries with which it is best for us to deal.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, we are nearing the end of this Session, the time at our disposal is very precious, and we have yet some Bills to which we must give our attention. For this reason I will not prolong the debate on this motion, except to urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make the greatest and most diligent effort to arrive at a provisional arrangement with France, so as not to allow a gap to intervene which would dislocate our trade with France. We sold ships to France to the amount of $20,000,000 last year, and this trade can be developed. We sold wheat to the value of $11,310,719 and oats to the value of $884,319. We may not expect a continuance of those sales, but we are justified in expecting to continue the sale of flour, of which we sold to France last year $5,631,860. We sold her agricultural machines to the amount of $2,867,542, and lobster and salmon to the amount of $2,487,060, and that trade should develop. We sold her boots and shoes to the amount of $1,627,750, and this is a developing trade; and possibly we may be able even under present conditions to continue that trade for some time to come. We sold pulp to the value of $808,257, and there is no reason why that should not be increased. We sold $803,671 worth of cheese, and this amount should be increased as soon as the French people learn that the English Cheddar that they have been buying for years from England is really our Canadian cheese, should be able to do a direct trade with France in that article, and increase it to a considerable extent. In lumber, including finished lumber for the construction of buildings, we sold to France $487,620. The honourable gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) has explained the great need of this lumber for the rebuilding of Northern France, and it is an article which could be sold in large quantities for a number of years. Of asbestos, which is a Canadian article, we sold to France $226,705 worth, and that should be increased. There are very many articles which we have sold to France, and I have only mentioned the principal ones. I believe that those channels of trade, and those relations which have been created and developed, should not be broken; and the responsibility falls upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce to do what is needful to prevent an absolute dislocation of that trade. I am convinced that if the Minister of Trade and Commerce will offer our intermediate tariff for the minimum tariff of France, we will get a solution of this matter immediately, because France sees the importance of preventing any dislocation of trade relations. We should not ask the intermediate tariff of France, but its minimum tariff, and it would be a splendid thing if we could get that minimum tariff against our intermediate tariff as a provisional matter until a definite treaty is signed.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT: I had intended saying something and submitting some figures on this subject, but as the time is very near when the House must adjourn I shall refrain from doing so. I hope that the Government of the day will take such steps as will not leave the commercial relations between France and this country in the position they occupy to-day owing to the suspension of the Treaty on the 19th of June last. That position is worse to-day than that between this country and a number of countries with which we have little or no relations, and which yet get an advantage. Of all the nations with which we trade, France is the one under the greatest disability.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: And shut out of our trade.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: As my honourable friend says, shut out of our trade. It is inconceivable to me that that country, for reasons that are so apparent, should be placed in the position of saying, "You treat me worse than you treat anybody else." It is absolutely inconceivable to me that that condition could continue any longer, and I am sure this Government will see the absolute necessity of remedying it at once.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until 2.30 p.m. this day.

Second Sitting.

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

MINISTERIAL SALARIES AND SESSIONAL INDEMNITY BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill 219, an Act to amend the Salaries Act and the Senate and House of Commons Act. —Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

SECOND READING.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 1—salaries of Ministers increased:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is known as the Increased Indemnity Bill. It seems to have met with a measure of approval in another place, which would discourage any adverse comments being made upon it in this House. Under these circumstances I do not propose to criticize the action of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I do not think it is necessary to criticize the action of the House of Commons; but at the same time I think that in going through this Bill we ought to discuss the terms of the Bill so as to know how they will apply. There are certain fines and regulations that may not be quite clear, and I think we should thoroughly understand the Bill before we part with it.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—First Minister, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Would my honourable friend explain just exactly what is the meaning of this clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Heretofore the office of the Prime Minister has not been dealt with as a distinct office; it has always been dealt with as that of a member of the Council holding the office of Prime Minister, and has necessitated his having a portfolio. Under the present Bill it is not necessary that the Prime Minister should be designated as holding a specific portfolio. The salary is voted to the office of Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Does it not amount to a change in the Constitution—in this way, that under our Canadian Constitution and also under the traditions of the British Constitution the Prime Minister has been looked upon simply as a member of the Cabinet whom the other members have agreed to work with, and who, of course, has been called upon by the King to form a Cabinet? No recognition was given to him as Prime Minister. He accepted a portfolio either as First Lord of the Treasury in England, or in Canada as President of the Council. Now we are going to adopt an altogether different programme, as it were: the Prime Minister is Prime Minister without any other portfolio.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We recognized him as holding that office. I think it is a distinct improvement in our Constitution.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But it is a change.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, to that extent it is a departure.

Hon. Mr. POWER: He has to run an election.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He need not necessarily do that. He might be a member of this Chamber.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—provisions applicable to present session:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think we might have a little explanation of this. The first two lines of this section provide that the other regulations in this Bill shall not apply to the indemnity for this particular session. That is to say, the rules and regulations that have applied to the paying of the indemnity heretofore will apply to this session except in so far as the amount of the indemnity and the amount that is to be deducted for absence are concerned.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The effect of it will be that notwithstanding the increase of the indemnity the Act as at present upon the statute book, with regard to payments and absences of members, and so on, shall be in operation as it the Act had not been amended, except to the extent of the greater compensation. The difference between $2,500 and $4,000 shall apply to this session.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: And $25 instead of $15 for absence?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The deductions will be made as they will be made hereafter; but the Bill permits members who were absent to take advantage of the increased indemnity less the increased deductions to the same extent as if no increase had been made.

Hon. Mr. POWER: Does not the leader of the Government see that there is to a certain extent a contradiction between this provision and the provision in clause 5? The clause we are considering provides that the members shall attend three-quarters of the sitting days, and new section 35 says:

> A deduction at the rate of twenty-five dollars per day shall be made from such sessional allowance for every day beyond fifteen on which he is a member, if the House sits on such days.

I do not undertake to say that under that provision a member could get away with the gross indemnity without attending three-quarters of the days. We will say that the session lasts 50 days. Three-quarters of 50 are in round numbers 36. Now, a member attends 22 days, and then he has these 15 days for which he is not penalized under section 35. Is there not some risk that we may get back to the old abuse? I think that, when we are getting so generous an indemnity as is being given by this measure, this provision allowing 15 days to a member on which he does not need to sit should be omitted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think not. The Parliamentary Counsel tells me that that has received every consideration, and that there is every safeguard surrounding it. The introduction into the Bill of a compulsory attendance of three-quarters of the days upon which the House sits will amply protect against that; and likewise there is an additional provision in the last proviso in subsection 1 of new section 35, under which a member must be in his place during the last two weeks of the session.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How is he going to know when the last two weeks will begin?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He will have to take his chances on that. He may have to wait here three weeks to ascertain when the last two weeks will begin, but that will be to the advantage of the Senate. Consequently the two provisions combined will pretty well assure a full attendance unless a member desires to throw away his indemnity.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was not here when section 3 was discussed, and I should like to ask a question. I see that a very generous allowance is made to the Speaker of the House of Commons and to the Speaker of the Senate. Does that mean that he gets in addition some $3,000 a year, I think it is for his house?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not under the Act. A provision has been made by Order in Council, I think, and afterwards carried into the Estimates, by which, under the exceptional circumstances growing out of the fire, the allowance was made to both Speakers as to residence. There is no statutory authority for that, however: it is simply an act of grace from session to session.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is this intended to cover the House allowance as well?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It does not preclude Parliament from making any further grants in lieu of residence.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is there a grant of $3,000 this year?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then this year each of the Speakers would receive $3,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I could not say exactly what the amount is. On the basis on which my honourable friend computes it he is correct.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: So that in four years the Speaker would draw $52,000. He is pretty well paid.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This increase would not come into operation until the end of the session. My honourable friend must keep this in view, that under the old practice quarters and also servants were allotted to the Speakers, and they also had the advantage of fuel and light, and other perquisites.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am not objecting to the $3,000 allowance, but I am objecting to the additional allowance provided for here, because I say that $13,000 is more than the position is worth, and I think that would be the general feeling in the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Now that the increased allowance appears upon the statute book and will come into operation when the Act is passed, of course Parliament can revise what it has done in the past. It does not follow that the same allowance will be made for house and servants and fuel.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I may tell the honourable gentleman from Kings (Hon. Mr. Fowler) that, as far as the $3,000 grant it concerned, conditions are far from being as good as they were in the old House. In the old House the Speaker was provided with fuel and with help—he generally had six employees at his command for the whole year—whereas now, for instance, I have bought a house on which the interest on the amount invested is $1,500, and I pay $500 for taxes. I have to hire all my servants, and I have to pay for my fuel, my light, and everything else. So it will be seen that former Speakers were much better paid than we are now. If I understood the honourable gentleman aright, he said that the Speakers were paid too much for their work.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think so.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I suppose that when the honourable gentleman is appointed Speaker of this House he will decide whether he will refuse the $3,000 or not.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think that is the right way to put it. I think I have a right as a member of this House to criticize, and I should perhaps criticize a little more closely now, since His Honour the Speaker takes that attitude. It is no argument to say what I or any other person would do if appointed Speaker; it is a question as to what the people who have to pay the Bill will consider with regard to this. I was not objecting to the $3,000 that was given in lieu of quarters, servants, and all that; but I object to the increase which gives to the Speaker $13,000 a year. Ministers of the Crown, who have to devote the whole of their time to the service of their country, receive $9,500, including their sessional indemnity; and yet the Speaker, who is obliged to give his time only when Parliament is in session and perhaps a week or two before and a week or two afterwards, to fulfil the duties of his office, is to receive $3,500 more than a Minister of the Crown received under the old Act. This applies not only to the Speaker of this House but to the Speaker of the other House as well. I say that the increase is too great. That is my opinion, and I am not afraid to express it.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—sessional indemnity:

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: This extends the minimum session for which an indemnity is payable from 30 days to 50 days?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And the new section 33 requires that a member must be in attendance for at least three-quarters of the sitting days of the House to be entitled to the indemnity of $4,000. Is not that the case?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: How does the 15 days allowance come in? Is it when the member has attended for at least three-quarters of the sitting days?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And the last two weeks of the session.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: In the new section 35 I find these words:

> Provided also that the deduction shall be made for every day on which a member does not attend a sitting of the House of which he is a member during the last two weeks of any session of Parliament.

So I take it that as the sessions generally run, the 15 days allowance will not be of any advantage to honourable members of this House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will not be of the same advantage as it formerly was.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: If a member is present for three-quarters of the time he gets his full indemnity.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: If he falls short of that the allowance is $25 for each day's attendance.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: That is the point I want to have cleared up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As I understand it, a member of Parliament will not be entitled to his full indemnity if he does not attend three-quarters of the sittings of the House of which he is a member.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But when he has attained that 75 per cent attendance he is entitled to the $4,000 indemnity; but from that $4,000 will be deducted $25 for each day that he is absent beyond the 15 days that are allowed him.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not think the honourable gentleman (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) has quite caught my point, because this provision regarding the last two weeks of the session does not apply there at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, the 15 days at the close of the session do not apply there. The 15 days must be taken before the last two weeks of the session.

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: You must be here for the last two weeks.

Hon. Mr. POWER: There is one point regarding section 32:

> For every session of Parliament which extends beyond 50 days there shall be payable to each member of the Senate and House of Commons attending at such session a sessional allowance of four thousand dollars and no more.

I think that neither the honourable leader of the House nor any other honourable member will venture to say that it is likely we shall have any session of less than 50 days. I think this is equivalent to saying that there shall be no session less than 50 days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I think we may trust the energy and perspicacity of the members of both Houses to feel assured that no session hereafter will be less than 50 days.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but those 50 days will not be 50 sitting days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It means 50 calendar days from the opening of Parliament. For instance, from the first of one month to the twentieth of the following month.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not think the fifteen days allowance is going to be of much value in the Senate. I asked the question because I want to have this point made clear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will depend largely on the length of the session.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Take, for instance, this session, which has lasted 52 days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no; 52 is the number of actual sitting days, but we have been over four months in session.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: There have been 52 sitting days this session. Three-quarters of that number would be 40.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, in this Chamber; but there have been more sitting days in the House of Commons. The number must have gone away beyond that; it is in the nineties, I understand.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Three-quarters of the total number of sitting days being 40, there are left only 12 days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend must keep in mind that the three-quarters applies to the sittings of the particular House of which the person is a member.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Yes. This is how I understand it will work out in the case of the Senate. It will be three-quarters of 52; that will be 40 days. Then there will be only 12 days over and above that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then there are the last two weeks.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: So the 15 days allowance will not amount to much.

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: Do not forget that.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to have some explanation of the latter part of subsection 2 of new section 35:

Except for calculating the number of days he attended a sitting of the House for the purposes of section 33, each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session for every member who was in attendance at a sitting of the House on the day immediately before such adjournment.

Does that refer at all to the provision respecting three-fourths of the number of days? I do not quite understand it. A member must be here on the day previous to the day over which it has adjourned; otherwise he will not get credit for the days that the House is adjourned. This does not apply to the three-quarters clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: To what does it apply?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It simply means this: that no absence shall be allowed for illness or other cause if a member was not here previous to the day of absence. Otherwise he might not be present during the session at all, and yet might come within the clause.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: He could not come within this section 35.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The time must be counted from the day of attendance. It was the same under the old Act.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: This does not refer to the three-quarters clause?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: And does not refer to the two weeks.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not understand the particular clause to which the honourable gentleman refers unless it is intended that the sitting days to be counted shall be the sitting days of the House of Commons. What is the object of these words?

Each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session for every member who was in attendance at a sitting of the House immediately before such adjournment.

Days of attendance are not going to count at all in this, I understand; it will be only the sitting days that will count.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I must say that I do not understand the point that my honourable friend makes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Take as an example the present session. The Senate has had 52 sitting days, and three-quarters of that number would be 40. The question of attendance, as I see it, does not come in. A member has to be here on the 40 sitting days in order to be entitled to the $4,000.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Unless he is ill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not see how this paragraph that I have read regarding attendance works out.

Hon. Mr. POWER: It seems to me, honourable gentlemen, that subsection 2 of section 35 gives a chance to perpetuate what was undoubtedly an abuse. If a member of this House is present on Friday, we will say, and the House adjourns for a fortnight, he is entitled to count every one of the days of adjournment as a day of attendance—as a sitting day. As I say, this would have a tendency, it seems to me, to open the doors to an abuse that we are trying to guard against.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Section 35 says:

Except for calculating the number of days he attended a sitting of the House for the purposes of section 33—

Section 33 states the condition on which the member shall be entitled to the full indemnity:

—each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House. . . shall be reckoned as a day of attendance.

This cannot affect the days included in the three-quarters, but only the lesser number of days. If you attend three-quarters of the sitting days you get the whole indemnity; otherwise the allowance is $25 a day, and if the days of absence are to count, the member must have attended on the day previous to the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I confess that until this moment I had not completely read the Bill, I have been going through it clause by clause and am becoming somewhat nonplussed. Coming to the subsection regarding illness, subsection 2 of section 35, I find that only half of it refers to illness, and the latter part seems to extend to the general question of attendance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand it, before a member is entitled to draw either the sessional indemnity or daily allowance he must have made an attendance. A member must have attended before he can take advantage of an adjournment. That is to say, if there be an adjournment of the House, the member must have attended the sitting on the day before. If this House adjourned say for three weeks, after meeting a fortnight, and if during the fortnight the member did not appear in his place, he is not counted as having been in attendance until after the expiration of that adjournment and he would not be entitled to his indemnity. Of course, if he was ill that would be a different question.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It would be as if he were absent all the time?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, precisely.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The first question is: is this clause supposed to apply only to cases of illness?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Or does it apply generally?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It deals with two classes of cases.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: It applies generally. The next question is: are days of adjournment to be counted as sitting days?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, if the member was in his place before the adjournment. He need not remain here during the adjournment, but he must have been here before the adjournment to be entitled to the allowance.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What provision has been made for monthly payment? I do not see anything in the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand, the provision in the old Act still remains.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then a member would receive the same—$10 per day?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That has been increased to $25.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But there is nothing here amending the Act with regard to that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think so.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I could not find it.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I find that I was perhaps a little in error in what I said about this clause a few minutes ago. Beginning on line 17 it reads:

—and, except for calculating the number of days he attended a sitting of the House for the purposes of section 33, each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House, in consequence of its having adjourned over such day shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session for every member who was in attendance at a sitting of the House on the day immediately before such ajournment.

Now I find that section 33 says that a member shall not be entitled to the sessional allowance if he does not attend the sitting of the House of which he is a member on at least three-quarters of the days upon which such House sits. I think that probably I was mistaken in supposing that he could get over the three-quarters clause, but that seems to be prevented by this exception in subsection 2 of section 35.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: As a rule, this House does not sit on either Saturday or Monday. Do those days count as adjournments or not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend, I think, must qualify that answer. He told us that subsection 2 of section 35 would prevent a member of Parlament from taking advantage of those days of adjourment if he had not previously put in an appearance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is all right. The intention of this is to prevent an abuse which has been complained of—the practice of members absenting themselves for a certain time during the session, and then appearing before the close and claiming all the days over which the Senate adjourned in previous months. I would draw the attention of my honourable friend to a phraseology which works out unjustly. In order to obtain the advantage of the adjournment say over the week-end, from Saturday to Monday, a member will need to be present on the day preceding the adjournment. So that it will work in this way: for instance, a member of this Chamber may be absent on the Tuesday, the Wednesday, and the Thursday, and those days will be deducted from his fifty days if the session is long enough. But if he attends on the Friday he will be entitled to count in his favour the Saturday and the Monday, whereas if absent on the Friday he will not be entitled to claim the Saturday and Monday as attendance days for the making of the 75 per cent. I do not quite understand why that word "immediately" is there, because if a man be absent on Friday, although he has been here all week, he would lose the advantage of that attendance, while another member may be absent the whole of the week, but be here on the Friday and gain those days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But will my honourable friend go back to new section 33, where he will see that the phrase "three-fourths of the days" is applied only to those days on which the House sits.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Then what is the good of it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It does not sit on week-ends.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But what do those attendance days mean?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It probably might be reasoned that it would affect you in regard to the 50 days.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The term "50 days" has no bearing on this.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The period of 50 days has been replaced by the terms "three-fourths of the days upon which the House sits."

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I think there is one case that should be remedied—the case of distant members. If we have an adjournment of three or four days or a week, and those members must be here on the day preceding the adjournment, a member living in British Columbia, for instance, if he wished to go home, would have to spend the whole time on the train. That is a serious handicap to members living at a distance, and I point it out in order that it may be remedied.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: What is the object of having a man living within ten miles of the city of Ottawa? Suppose a member from Montreal breaks his leg in Ottawa, and is carried home to where he lives?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is conditional. It would probably admit of a man remaining in Hull during the period of his illness.

Subsection 2 of new section 35 was agreed to.

New sections 37, 38 and 39 were agreed to.

Section 6 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may have some consolation in passing this Act, that at the end of next session we will know how it works.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; there may be a difference of opinion even then.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But before the Bill goes out of Committee I would strongly urge the leader of the Government to see if, after consulting with the Privy Council, the word "immediately" is essential to that phrase, and to the economy of the Act, because the phrase "within eight days preceding" or "within five days preceding" would seem to be preferable.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think it is necessary. If it works oppressively the House of Commons will be the first to end it.

The preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill 218, an Act to amend the Judges Act.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the House went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Fisher in the Chair.

On section 1—definition of "judge" made to include a president of a court:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is simply a change in the interpretation. It is made to include the judge of the Exchequer Court, which is a new term we adopted this session.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—Supreme Court of Canada:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The salary of the Chief Justice of Canada under the present law is $10,000. The proposed salary is $15,000.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The $15,000 is for other duties as well?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. It includes the duties he will perform as Deputy Governor. So it will do away with any question hereafter as to any additional duties he may be called upon to perform.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Sections 3, 4, 5 were agreed to.

On section 6 (new section 10)—New Brunswick:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I want to say, with regard to judges, that I think their salaries are fairly commensurate with the services they give to the country in most cases. I object to judges taking assignments, holding commissions, etc.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is provided for; that is one of the great things in this Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then that is all right; I have nothing more to say.

New sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 14A were agreed to.

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—Judicial Committee of the Privy Council:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I want to ask my honourable friend just what has been the situation in this regard during the last two or three years. It is traditional for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to attend the sittings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and for many years past provision has been made to cover his travelling expenses. Last year and this year the Chief Justice did not attend, but one of the other judges of the Supreme Court who is a member of the Privy Council attended the sitting, the amount necessary for his travelling expenses being voted in the Estimates. Apart from this Bill altogether, I want to ask why the Chief Justice was not chosen.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I really could not tell my honourable friend. I fancy that if the Chief Justice wanted to go there would be no objection to his going.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He was not strong enough.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Did my honourable friend examine him medically?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not need to. That is a notorious fact.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I might be willing to take my honourable friend's word on questions of law, but I do not know whether I should take it on medical matters.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: Take your medicine.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I think perhaps it would be safer to take it on medicine. No affront has been put on the Chief Justice.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I did not say there had been; but I wanted to know why the tradition had been departed from.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He did not want to go.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend know that?

Some Hon. SENATORS: Carried.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Before this is carried, I want to say a word or two. There have been some strictures passed upon a late member of the Supreme Court of Canada, which I think were not well deserved. I was informed by Chief Justice Strong that anyone attending the meetings of the Judicial Committee has to go well informed as to the whole course of judicial procedure and judicial decisions in Canada, and must be prepared to give some information as to what is going on in the United States. In addition to that, I found that he was working hard to get a general idea of what was going on in Australia, in India, and in Egypt, because a man cannot sit among the members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council unless he is qualified along the same lines as they are. This is no small matter, and I would be sorry to think that anyone should go away with the idea that the $3,000 is not a well-earned sum, no matter who the judge may be who takes the position.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I should like to ask if this $3,000 is sufficient to meet the expenses that the representative would be put to?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, I think they will see to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would it not be better that the Government should revert to the old system of designating the Chief Justice, and, if he did not wish to go, of allowing him to designate some one to take his place? We have been trying to maintain the independence of the judges and to keep them free from political influence. I dislike the idea of the Government selecting one of the judges of the Supreme Court of its own free will. It seems to me—I want to be as gentle as possible in my expression—that there may be a tendency on the part of the public to discuss the reason why Mr. So-and-so has been selected in preference to somebody else? This is not the result of a flight of imagination on my part, but is because of some questions put to me as to why the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was not selected and someone else was. Then the question of the relations between the judges of the Supreme Court and the Department of Justice or the Government of the day comes into the discussion. I say that advisedly, because we must rise above persons and personalities. We are legislating without having in view individuals. We are trying to establish rules to guide the Government of the day—and the Government of the day is the Government of this day and the Government of to-morrow. As I have said, I dislike the principle of allowing any department of the Government the discretion of selecting a judge. I think we should say that it should be the Chief Justice, or someone whom he may designate. In this way we would cut the connection between the Government and the judiciary with all that that may imply.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This does not say that the Government shall make the selection. It only makes provisions for travelling and living expenses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but that does not detract from the argument I have made, because the Government in later years, instead of applying to the Chief Justice, has appointed one of the puisne judges, naming him, and has given him the stipend.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why is the amount put in this Bill instead of being placed as usual in the Estimates?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is unnecessary to put it in the Estimates from time to time. The judge may not attend the sittings of the Privy Council every year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The same thing happens with thousands of items. Expenses are voted to be expended only if the required event takes place. In the past this item has always been voted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was not very pleasant for the Chief Justice to have it discussed on the floor of Parliament. It is not desirable that it should be so. This is a matter of uncontrollable expenditure, and it is very much better that it should be provided for in the statute, just as are the judges salaries.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That may be so; but if there is anything in the argument of my honourable friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), the public and the representatives of the people in the House of Commons, who have the right to discuss the question would be interested in knowing why one judge was chosen in preference to another.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think there is another reason for it. This Act determines what amount shall be paid to the judges, and closes the door to them receiving any other remuneration in case they are called upon to render other services than sitting on their regular courts. That being so, it became necessary to make an exception of this $3,000 paid for attending the sittings of judicial committee of the Privy Council.

Section 8 was agreed to.

Sections 9, 10, and 11 were agreed to.

On section 12—judges not to be paid any remuneration for acting on commissions, etc.:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I am more than pleased to find this section in the Bill, because it has removed what I think was one cause of rapid deterioration in our judicial system. The proviso at the end of subsection 2 is objectionable, but I hope the time is not far distant when we may get free of that. There are judges in Ontario who are paid allowances by the provincial Government. As I have said before—and I am satisfied now that the Department of Justice agrees with me—those payments to judges appointed by the Dominion, and whose salaries are fixed by the Dominion, are ultra vires. I think it is highly objectionable that any Dominion judge should have any sum paid to him by any province or any municipality. Now that the judges' salaries are being increased, I hope the provinces will see their way clear to abolishing provincial statutes authorizing that practice, and that they will keep their hands off the Dominion judges in the future, whatever excuse they may have had in the past. However, half a loaf is better than no bread, and this section is well worth the whole of the cost that is going to be thrown upon the country by the increase in judges' salaries. The proper course to follow is to appoint a judge and to fix his salary; the country is then entitled to his whole time. This will put an end to canvassing, or attempted canvassing, for appointments on arbitrations.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Like my honourable friend, I too am grateful for half a loaf; but to me it is only half a loaf; and so long as I have a seat in this House I propose every time that opportunity offers to get the other half of the loaf if it is to be got. I think that this Parliament ought to endeavour at the earliest possible moment to prevent any judge from doing anything beyond sitting in court performing judicial work. We have judges in this province, and some of the highest in the land, who are seeking appointments as arbitrators every time there is an arbitration in sight, and I have no hesitation in mentioning the Chief Justice of Ontario.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He is cut out under this.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, he is not cut out. He could act as an arbitrator, but he could only get his travelling expenses.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Your point is that he must employ his whole time with judicial duties?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Absolutely.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: And stop serving on commissions.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Even without pay.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think my honourable friend and I are agreed on that point. Judges are appointed to act as judges in court; it was never contemplated that any judge was to act as an arbitrator, either with or without pay.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They will not act very long without pay.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think that Parliament ought to prohibit them acting in that capacity in any way. They are not appointed for that purpose. A judge may think that it is a diversion to leave his court and to sit as chairman of an arbitration, even without pay; but during the time he is sitting on that arbitration his judicial duties are being neglected, and he is not performing the function for which he was appointed.

I am not completely satisfied with this Bill. I have been helping my honourable friend in his move to prevent the judges acting as arbitrators, and I propose to help him in the future; I hope we may stick together in that fight; but if he does not choose to keep on I will keep on by myself. I am not satisfied. Judges have no right to act as arbitrators, executors, or anything but judges.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have not changed my mind in the slightest degree since I stated in this House, not only last year but on several other occasions that the ideal condition is to have a judge attend to his judicial duties and to them alone. If we allow judges to leave the Bench to go out and sit on disputes that are not purely judicial, we are in danger of destroying their utility and the confidence which the people have in them. In England, where they have had several hundred years more experience than we have had, I find that the trend of opinion is all the same way. While the judges there were serving outside of their regular judicial positions during the war, now that the war is over the leading papers say they should get back to the old rule. The Law Times gave some instances of men who were as fine judges as ever sat on the Bench, but who, because they left the Bench and served on one or two commissions, lost their influence and the confidence of the public as a whole.

The administration of justice is the first thing in every civilized country. That is the difference between a civilized and an uncivilized country; and the only thing that will save us from Bolshevism and all the wild things which are floating around to-day will be to keep these men in such a position that everyone will have confidence that the poorest man as well as the richest, or the richest as well as the poorest, can go into court and get fair and honest treatment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There was a time in Canada when the judges from one end of the country to the other enjoyed the universal respect and admiration of the people. But that time has passed. I have often heard Americans, in times past, express their great respect and admiration for the Canadian judiciary, but they do not to-day entertain quite as high an opinion of them as they did in the days of which I speak;—and certainly there is not the same high regard for them in Canada —why? Largely because of this abuse that has been resorted to by the Governments in the Dominion and the provinces. I make no distinction between one party and another. It has been practised by both. It is largely because these gentlemen have been appointed to hold the balance between the public and the Government in such important matters, for instance, as the Canadian Northern railway deal and the Grand Trunk railway transaction. I dare say that 50 per cent of the people of Canada are not going to be satisfied with the judgment that will be rendered in either of those cases. No matter how just or how fair it may be, there will be a strong suspicion that will not down that some members of the Commission acted under some influence or other in arriving at the conclusion that they have reached. I cannot understand why this practice of appointing judges should be persisted in and should be on the increase. To-day there is no commission of any sort to which a judge is not appointed. I have felt warmly on this question for a long time, and I am glad to have this opportunity of giving expression to my feeling.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I have just a word to say. I do not agree with my honourable friend who has just spoken, that the judges do not stand as high in public estimation now as they formerly did.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Well, everybody else does.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Probably my honourable friend has some reason for feeling sore towards the judges and has made his remarks accordingly.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I have no feeling of that sort.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I do not know how that may be, but his statement is not in keeping with the universal experience in that portion of the province from which I come. There is a good deal to be said, however, in favour of the contention that judges should not act as arbitrators. We have at present in Ontario an illustration of how public business fails to be attended to owing to the judges accepting arbitrations. At the present time we have two judges sitting as arbitrators for the Ontario Government. They have been engaged in that arbitration now for something like three weeks, and I do not know how much longer it is going to be continued. The result is that other judges are obliged to do their work. Unfortunately there is a vacancy on the Bench, and another judge is ill. Consequently the ordinary duties of four judges are not being attended to, and business is congested. The Court of Appeal failed to sit from the 15th of June to the end of the month. At the close of the sitting there were some sixty cases not disposed of, and these must stand over until September. One can readily see that if it requires a certain number of judges to do a given amount of work, and if two of them are transferred to arbitrations and two are ill, or otherwise incapacitated, the work is not going to be carried on.

Now, just a word as to the payment of $1,000 a year to the judges of Ontario. The judges of the Supreme Court of the province of Ontario each receive the Ontario Government $1,000, which is paid to them for services they are supposed to perform.

It was originally given to them as members of what was called the Heir and Devisse Commission. I do not know what that Commission is now, or what work it does, but I do know that the judges, or at least two of them, at every session of the Ontario Legislature, receive from the Government all Bills of a legal nature and give their opinion upon them. They make changes in the proposed measures and return them to the Government with an expression of their views. In that way they are supposed to earn, or at any rate to do something for, the extra $1,000. Under this Bill they are to receive an additional $1,000, but if you deprive them of the $1,000 they receive from the province, the present Bill will be of no value to them, for they would be just where they were before.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do they not get $2,000 under this?

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: I think they get only $1,000.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: The Chief Justice of Ontario gets $10,000.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Under this Bill the Chief Justice gets $10,000, the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Court gets $10,000, and the Puisne Judges get $9,000.

Hon W. B. ROSS: Formerly it was $8,000 and $7,000; now it is $10,000 and $9,000.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: But you are overlooking the fact that their salaries were increased within the last couple of years to $8,000 and now you are increasing them to $9,000.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The Chief Justice is to receive $10,000, and the others $9,000.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: To-day the salaries in Ontario are: for the Chief Justice $8,000, and for the puisne judges $7,000.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: No; the Chief Justice gets $9,000 and the others $8,000, as I recollect.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, no; $7,000 from this Government and $1,000 from the Ontario Government.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Well I may be mistaken.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: You are counting in the Ontario allowance.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: No, I was not counting that in. The salaries were increased a couple of years ago, and I was stating my recollection of them.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: They were raised to $8,000 and $7,000.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Subsection 2 of section 34 reads:

> Every judge who may be nominated for the purpose by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall execute without additional remuneration any commission or enquiry for which he may be appointed as commissioner under any authority in that behalf exercisable by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor in Council,—

That is quite clear—

> —including the discharge of the duty of arbitrator in any case in which he may be named to act by the competent authority.

Is that the case of a judge being appointed by a council, we will say; not by the Governor in Council of Canada or the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province, but by a municipal council? Take the province of Saskatchewan. I suppose that similar provisions prevail elsewhere. The district court judge, corresponding to the county court judge in other provinces, is by law made the arbitrator in municipal arbitrations.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This does not apply.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I just want to have this made clear:

> Any case in which he may be named to act by the competent authority.

These words are at the top of page 8. The competent authority to name him in such a case would be the council of the city, town or municipality.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: As I read this, it seems to me it would cover a nomination by a municipal council.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This clause does not prevent a judge from acting in the capacity of a commissioner or arbitrator; it simply deprives him of any remuneration.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: He is not prevented from acting in any capacity at all, but in all these cases he is compensated under the municipal or provincial law. This seems, by inference, to take away the compensation that is given by the statute of the province wherein he performs his duty as an arbitrator. Does it apply to him at all?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will the honourable gentleman permit me to call his attention to the words in subsection 1 of section 34:

—or for any duty or service, whether judicial or executive, which he may hereafter be required to perform for or on behalf of the Government of Canada or the Government of any province thereof.

That is the limit. He gets no remuneration for any duty which he is called upon by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor to perform. So, by inference, any duty he is called upon by any municipal council to perform, remains as it was previously.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: And he can be paid for it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He can be paid for it because this is limited to Government work.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: It does not refer to anything else.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has said that some of the judges have lost their prestige by sitting on commissions. I think that in the particular instance he mentioned the blame must be shared by the present Government, and I accuse my honourable friend the leader of the Government of not having done his duty by one of the judges who sat on those Commissions. I refer to the Canadian Northern arbitration. Sir William Meredith was made chairman after the Government had said that he should not go beyond $10,000,000 in estimating the equity of the common stock. When from year to year, millions are asked for the purpose of meeting the deficit on operating account, the public will remember that Sir William Meredith decided the equity in the common stock to be $10,600,000, and will laugh heartily at that decision. Everybody looked upon that as a joke.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: A costly joke.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A costly joke. The Government has not done the right thing by that Commission. It has failed to lay before this House, at all events—and I doubt if it has laid before the other House—the report of the arbitrators. If my honourable friend will promise to bring down the report voluntarily at the opening of next session, I will not move in that direction.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Better not move under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will not move under this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Better put in a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At all events, those three Commissioners had some standing in the community, but it has been considerably shaken. They may possibly recover it to some extent—we have an open mind in the matter—if we are informed of the reasons for their conclusion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They will be glad to hear that

Section 12 was agreed to.

On section 13—increases of salary not to affect annuities equal to a full salary under section 20, and said section not to apply to judges hereafter appointed:

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: Will the honourable leader please explain this section?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under the present Act the judge has a right, after reaching a certain age limit or putting in 25 years of judicial service, to retire on his full allowance. This section proposes hereafter to do away entirely with that privilege. Furthermore, if the judge has put in the required period of service or has reached the age limit for which the Act provides, this limits his retiring allowance to the salary as it is to-day; he does not get the advantage of the increase which we have provided for in this Bill .

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And as to the judges appointed in future?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It does away entirely with the right of a judge to retire on full allowance. Up to the present time, in the case of judges who have accepted appointments, it has been regarded as a statutory contract between the judge and the Government of Canada that he shall have the right to retire on full allowance; but hereafter that will be abolished.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the judge retiring after 15 years—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He will retire on the basis of the salary he is receiving at the time of his retirement. This does not affect the two-thirds allowance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It affects only the full amount to which he was entitled under the Act of 1908?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: Honourable gentlemen, I am not going to take any exception to the item under consideration, or move any amendment to this Bill; but because I hope it will come up in the future, I want to put myself on record in opposition to the clause just referred to by the honourable leader of the House. I have in mind three instances of grave injustice being done to worthy members of the bench of the province from which I come. One is the acting Chief Justice of the Superior Court; the others are judges of the Superior Court who have served the full term of 25 years, and are entitled to retire. During that time these men, at small or inadequate salaries, have served the public faithfully and well, and have looked forward to an increase in their salaries, which has been promised them by different Governments and by different law societies which have been interested in this question. Those gentlemen —the acting Chief Justice of the Superior Court at Montreal, another judge in Montreal, and one in Quebec city—have been entitled to retire; but, because they were able to discharge their duties faithfully and well, and because their services were needed in their judicial districts, they have continued to exercise their functions. They now find themselves, according to the statement which the honourable leader gives, in this position. If the Chief Justice, for instance, retired to-morrow or in six months, instead of getting $10,000 as a retiring allowance, he would receive an allowance of only $8,000. In other words, the man who has borne the brunt of the troubles of the bench in that district, does not get the benefit of one single cent by reason of this increase. It seems to me that in a measure of this kind, which is broad and sweeping and is intended to do justice to everybody, it is wrong to make an exception in cases such as this. I do not think that the public interest would have been injured, and on the contrary I think that a very wise example would have been set if these exceptions had not been made—if these men who served 26 and 28 years at the miserable salary of $7,000 were enabled to retire with the full benefit of this increase. So far as I am concerned, I am never going to be satisfied that this law has done full justice to the Bench. It is an injustice to those men. While on the last day and in the closing hours of the session I do not intend to speak further on the matter, I hope to live till next year when we can see justice done to these men and others who will suffer grave injustice under the Bill that is being passed to-day.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You will not find the people weeping many sad tears over their fate.

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: Notwithstanding my honourable friend's sarcasm there are many who will resent this action, among the public as well as on the bench and at the bar.

Section 13 was agreed to.

Section 14 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC SERVANTS RETIREMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons, with Bill 120, an Act to provide for the retirement of certain members of the public service.

The Bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I desire to call the attention of the House to this Bill, because I think there is in it a matter with which we should deal. The definition clause provides that "deputy head" includes the Clerk of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Commons. Section 2 of the Bill says:

> The Civil Service Commission shall, immediately after the passing of this Act and after consultation with the deputy heads,—

That is, in the case of the Senate, with the Clerk of the Senate—

> —prepare and submit to the Governor in Council...

In the Act which we are amending, namely, chapter 17 of the Revised Statutes, there is this exception in the interpretation clause, section 2, paragraph c:

Saving all rights and privileges of either House in respect to appointment or removal of its officers and servants.

Under the Civil Service Act of 1908 we allowed appointments to the staff of the Senate to pass out of our hands, but, as I understand it, we still retain the right to say whether we desire any member of our staff to be removed. I do not think we should now allow this alteration to be made without at least uttering a protest against it. The other day the Senate thought it wise to adopt an amendment to the Civil Service Act stating their position—that they desired to take the staff of the Senate from the control of the Civil Service Act and place them back in their previous position under chapter 17 of the Revised Statutes. Our action in that case did not meet the approval of the other House in respect to the appointment and removal of the officers and servants of the Senate; and I think we should register our objection to what is being done now under this Act, and maintain that the Senate should still have the right of being consulted and of saying whether they desired that the members of their staff should be removed or not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not quite appreciate the point made by my honourable friend. Do I understand the objection to be to section 1 of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: No, it really comes in under section 2.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Whatever is done, the report of the Civil Service Commission to the Governor in Council must necessarily be based upon the report which hereafter will be made to the Commission by the officer of this House, that is, the Deputy head, who is the Clerk of the Senate. The Clerk of the Senate—

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Is appointed by the Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is appointed by the Government, but he makes his report to the Civil Service Commission. The Commission does not act on that report; it is submitted to the Council. The Civil Service Commission act only as a conduit for conveying that report to the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not quite agree with that. If the honourable Leader will pardon me, I would draw his attention to the first two lines of subsection 1 of section 2:

The Civil Service Commission shall, immediately after the passing of this Act, and after consultation—

They consult with the deputy heads, but they do not necessarily follow the advice of the deputy heads; they make a report after consultation with the deputy heads. That is, they are supposed to consult with the deputy heads, but they are not supposed to report in accordance with that consultation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But will my honourable friend peruse the Bill further, and it will be seen that the Civil Service Commission is simply used as a means of communication between the Deputy Head of the Senate and the Governor in Council. He reports to the Civil Service Commission certain facts; they embody those in a report as to all departments of Government; and then that report goes to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council acts. There is no discretion vested in the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not agree with you there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As we go through the Bill we will come to that; but it seems to me that this proceeding contemplates a report being obtained from all the branches of the Government service. Deputy heads of all the branches will be appealed to by the Civil Service Commission to prepare a report along the lines mentioned in the Bill. It does not seem to me to be a matter for the exercise of discretion on the part of the Civil Service Commission, but the discretion must be exercised by the deputy head of the department. He reports one fact, namely, those who are sixty-five or over; he reports other facts, as to those who are inefficient, etc.; so that the discretion is exercised by him. He conveys that report to the Civil Service Commission; they embody it all in one report, and it comes to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council acts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The very fact that they embody it in one report makes it a report of the Civil Service Commission, and not that of the deputy head. They get their information from the deputy head. They can get it from anybody else. They are supposed to consult with him, but they are not confined to the deputy head for the information they receive, and they are not obliged to act as a mere conduit, as has been said, but they make a new report; it may be founded more or less on the information they receive, but that is absolutely as they see fit. This report may not take into consideration one iota of the report that has been made by the deputy head, and yet it is the report upon which the Government must act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let us proceed with the Bill seriatim, and then we can discuss that more particularly.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 1—report by Civil Service Commission upon character of service of all officers of 65 and over:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: We are right up against the only point there is with regard to this. Will honourable gentlemen allow me to read paragraph C of section 2 of the Civil Service Act:

The Civil Service is defined, for the purposes of this Act, as including and consisting of the permanent officers and servants of the Senate and the House of Commons, and the permanent officers and servants employed in the Library of Parliament, saving all rights and privileges of either House, in respect to appointment or removal of those officers and servants.

If you pass this subsection 1 of section 2, the last vestige of authority that this House has over its employees will go; the last piece of influence that it has will be gone; because the Civil Service Commission make their report to the Governor in Council, and as far as this House is concerned there is nothing to do. Now, I propose an amendment, which I will bring in after paragraph c, so as not to disturb the section in any other respect. It is as follows:

In the application of this section to the officers, clerks, and employees of the Senate or the House of Commons, the expression "Governor in Council" means the Senate or the House of Commons, as the case may be.

If honourable gentlemen will look at the section they will see what this means. The Civil Service Commission reports to the Governor in Council as to departmental officials, but in the application of this section to the officers, clerks and employees of the Library of Parliament, or to such other clerks or employees as are under the joint control of both Houses of Parliament, the report is not made to the Governor in Council but to the Senate and the House of Commons.

This amendment will keep the control in the hands of the Senate. We gave way a few days ago to the House of Commons on another Bill touching this point, not insisting on our amendment which was very necessary in the public interest. I gave way unwillingly, as I think other members did. I move that amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There seems to be a misapprehension in the House, if I may be permitted to say so, as to the object of this Bill. Honourable gentlemen talk about the interests of the Senate being interfered with by the Civil Service Commission, and our rights being legislated away, and so on. This Bill is only a temporary measure, to be enforced for a year. It expires next year, as honourable gentlemen will see by section 8:

8. No person shall be retired under the provisions of this Act after the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one.

Now, there is a special reason, a reason which has been strongly urged upon the Government, for the passage of this legislation. The action that has been taken by the Government within the last year, looking to the reconstruction of the public service, has impressed upon the Government that there is a large class of employees in the different branches of the service who have reached an age that will not only warrant but require the Government to take steps for their superannuation in order that the most efficient service may be rendered. I am not for a moment saying that men of that age cannot render efficient service; but provision is made in the Bill so that no injustice will be done in cases of that kind. Then there is another class provided for in the Bill—men who have reached a certain age, and who, however inefficient, must be provided for. Honourable gentlemen who do not come in contact with those features of the public service do not appreciate the very great number of men who are in the public service throughout the whole of Canada—a service which numbers something like 60,000 employees—who are absolutely inefficient who are drawing public money but giving no value for it. We know perfectly well that in the past, when an appointment has been made to the public service, the tendency has been to omit to provide any way of removing the appointee from the service. But is it not a highly laudable object, unpleasant though it be to the Government, to have a thorough investigation into the whole public service, in order to ascertain what men are unable to perform their duties, through age, through inefficiency, through illness? I may say there are thousands of such men. If you force upon the Government by legislation machinery whereby this reconstruction will become abortive or be defeated, such action would be a reproach to the Senate of Canada. The Senate of Canada should be the first to hold up both hands to assist the Government in giving a competent service to the people of Canada, and this legislation has that object in view. If I can succeed in impressing upon honourable gentlemen the necessity of this legislation, I do not propose to be defeated in this purpose by any group of men who belong to the class whom it is proposed to superannuate. I know that opposition has been given to this Bill by some of those who may apprehend being disturbed or retired; but this Bill is so framed that no injustice will be done to any man who has been in the public service. It provides a rate of compensation that will prevent injustice. I say unhesitatingly that it does not permit the Civil Service Commission to exercise a discretion which can in any way prove an injustice to those who may be involved in the investigation which will take place. They will simply be used for the purpose of collating information and presenting it to the Governor in Council; and the Clerk of the Senate, or the Clerk of the House of Commons will be charged with precisely the same duty as the deputy head of any other department. I hope honourable gentlemen will realize that a measure of this kind, which has the efficiency of the public service in view, must not be defeated because some two or three public servants may apprehend that they will come under the class who will be retired.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think every member of the Senate must agree with my honourable friend in the desire that the public service of Canada shall be made as efficient as possible; and if such conditions exist in it as my honourable friend has depicted to the House, I am sure we would all desire to assist him as far as possible in this matter, because I think we all want abuses which we recognize as having existed in the service for a great many years to be done away with. But I do not think that my honourable friend's remarks have met the point that I made, and which I understand the amendment of my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) will effect, namely, that the Clerk of the Senate should be in a position to deal with the servants of the Senate, and that if he made a recommendation, the Senate should be in a position to say whether any of those servants shall be removed or not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then you propose to postpone the operation of this legislation until the Senate meets next session, because the Governor in Council is the Senate, and it is proposed that this legislation shall come into operation at once; but, as it expires in a year, the Act will have expired by the time the Senate could take action.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Not if I understand that section.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, you do not understand it.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The section says:

8. No person shall be retired under the provisions of this Act after the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one.

Does my honourable friend say that the next session of the House will not start before the first day of July, 1921?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I say, and I say it advisedly, that such a report as that which my honourable friend aims at could not possibly be prepared until that date. To-morrow is the first of July, 1920. We meet annually, and the probabilities are that next session will be even a longer one than this.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But I think a report on the staff of the Senate could be made within a comparatively short time. The report would be made by the Clerk as provided in this Bill, and it would be made to the Senate, and they would be in a position to deal with it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Excuse me for interrupting my honourable friend; but does he propose throwing a matter of this kind on the floor of the Senate, as to whether the Senate will sanction the removal of this officer, that officer, or the other? I am surprised that any honourable gentleman could advocate that that kind of business should be done by the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The Senate of Canada had that power to deal with their officers and servants.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and they handed it over, and were very glad to do so.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: They had it until 1908, and I think the members of the Senate are just as capable of dealing with the question as the members of the Government. It seems to me that the practice of the Senate of abrogating its privileges and handing them over to the Government, as it unfortunately has done in the past, should not be continued. I think the honourable members of this House and the members of the other Chamber do not realize the position which they occupy as members of Parliament. They should recognize the importance of Parliament, and should not delegate their powers to the Government as they have done in several instances. I think that they should assert their position in regard to this matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER: The leader of the House has painted a rather melancholy picture of things as they would prevail if the Senate continued to deal with its own officers. The Senate has been in existence now for a great many years, and though the practice which the leader of the Government finds so highly objectionable has been in operation during all those years, I think that on the whole the staff of the Senate will compare favourably with the staff of any department of the public service. Evidently the leader of the Government has believed for a long time that there is a great deal of virtue in an Order in Council. If every little thing of this sort is to be done by an Order in Council we are practically giving up parliamentary government. For that reason I am very much in favour of the amendment moved by the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross).

There is another point which has not been referred to. The Bill now before the Committee provides that if everything is satisfactory in the case of an employee he is to be allowed 50 per cent of his salary.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Would the honourable gentleman excuse me if I were to ask him not to mix that question with the other one? They are two distinct points, and they can be argued better separately.

Hon. Mr. POWER: I do not care about making a number of speeches. The point I was going to make is really relevant to the clause which we are considering—at least so it seems to me. The law as it stands to-day is that a civil servant, if he is reported upon favourably, is entitled to retire upon half the pay that he has been receiving. But a number of the employees of this House—and the same is true of some of the employees of the Commons and some in the various departments—have been working under the old superannuation law, which was in operation up to 1898, and which still operates as regards civil servants employed before 1898. Under that superannuation law a member of the Civil Service who had served thirty-five years was entitled to receive thirty-five fiftieths of his salary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We do not disturb that. We make special provision reserving the right of civil servants under the Superannuation Act.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: If that is preserved, it would be very satisfactory.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is preserved.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The other day I voted in favour of taking the employees of the Senate out of the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission; and, as this Bill seems to be somewhat similar to the one there under discussion, perhaps I ought to explain my position. I am going to vote for this Bill.

This is another Bill altogether. The leader of the Opposition is mixed on this Bill. The members of his profession work at the Bar and there are always mixers at the Bar; consequently they mix everything they come in contact with. This Bill is just as clear as it possibly could be; and, as a layman, knowing nothing about law, I can give a perfect explanation of it. If officials of the Senate are perfect and complete in their make-up, and are able to carry out their duties, they have nothing to fear. The Bill, as I understand it, permits the Civil Service Commission to go into the departments to consult with the deputy heads, and to investigate as to the age of every official and as to his ability to perform the work that was assigned to him perhaps twenty-five or thirty or forty years ago. While a man may have been perfectly capable at that time, he may not be so capable now; and if such a case is found provision is made to relieve the position of the incumbent, and to provide for him in such a way that with the assistance of his superannuation he may live the rest of his days in moderate comfort.

I understand that this is a temporary Bill, and will only be effective to the 1st of July, 1921. Am I right in that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: As I said when I spoke on the question of taking the Senate employees out of the control of the Civil Service Commission—and I think every honourable gentleman who spoke at that time said the same thing—where could you get a better set of men to deal with a matter of that kind than the men at the head of the Civil Service Commission? Where could you get better men to do the work of reorganizing the departments and making reports after having gone into the departments?

It seems to me that this Act is as clear as it is possible to make it, and I think that the sooner it is put on the statute book the better. No one will be hurt and the service will be improved. The leader of the Government is not speaking without some authority or without some experience; he is not speaking without some real knowledge of the situation and of the facts in connection with the departments. Therefore I have no hesitation in saying that I shall vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, speaking in reference to the amendment offered by the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), I might point out that it is to be observed that the Bill is to remain in force for one year. That being the case, it would not seem to me so important to give consideration to the amendment proposed by the honourable gentleman as it would be if this were permanent legislation. It is further to be observed that in all probability some form of permanent superannuation will eventually have to be arranged to fit the whole Civil Service. A few months ago, a survey of the Service was taken and it was found that there were approximately 1,300 people in the Service over the age of 65 years, many of whom were no longer able to give value for the compensation received. It is equally true that it is not possible for them to retire from active work and to discontinue receiving compensation; if they did, they would not be able to carry on and support themselves.

The Government has no desire, and I am sure Parliament has no desire, to treat these old and faithful employees in anything but a fair and proper manner. It is therefore deemed necessary, not only in justice to these people, but for the purpose of improving the efficiency of the public service, to make temporary provision whereby such employees as have reached the ages named and who are not able to give full time service should be retired upon the terms set out in the Bill, subject, of course, I assume, to the preparation and adoption at a future session of a permanent system of superannuation.

This measure also concerns economy as well as efficiency. A large number of these civil servants who have been in the service of the country for a number of years have reached the zenith of their ratings or gradings. They draw the top salaries, and doubtless have merited consideration in the past by reason of long service; but the situation at present is that juniors who are in receipt of much smaller salaries are in many instances performing the duties of these older employees. To continue in the Service employees who do not and who in many cases are not able to appear at their offices to render service is somewhat discouraging to these juniors. My experience covers perhaps the smallest department; but I have there one very pitiable case, so far as one's sympathy is concerned. It is the case of a man whom in my opinion it would be a very serious matter to retire without giving him sufficient compensation to enable him to take care of himself and his aged wife so long as he lives.

This Bill simply provides a modest but at the same time a very helpful retiring allowance. If the amendment of my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) is seriously put forward and should prevail in this House, with the prospect of prorogation to-night—and I think we have already had notice from the Governor General—it is quite possible that this Bill would not get back to the House of Commons and be returned here again. The result would be that it would fall, which I think would be regrettable. Inasmuch as the whole matter will likely come under consideration at a future session, I express the hope that my honourable friend will not press his amendment.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: One matter has been cleared up. I understand that there are men who, under the existing law, would be entitled to retire on thirty-five-fiftieths or seven-tenths of their salaries. Some of them are afraid that under this Act they might be retired on fifteen-sixtieths; but their fears should be dispelled by the assurance of the leader of the House that that is not so, and that anyone who has a vested right to retirt on seven-tenths of his salary is protected, and that even if there is something wrong in the construction of the Act it will be made good. As I understand the Bill will automatically cease on July 1, 1921, it may be as well to let it go. So, with the explanation I have made, I will be satisfied to let the Bill pass as it is.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson); and, while I quite agree with what he said, I would point out that he did not at all touch the point which I raised. I do not quite see why the Government should not agree to accept this amendment, as I do not think it would jeopardize the Bill in any way, and I do think we should put ourselves in a position to maintain the privileges of the Senate and to see that they should not be overridden. I do not exactly understand the action of the leader of the Government in desiring that the Government should take unto itself the work of managing the staff of the Senate, and in that way overriding the privileges of the Senate. That is the point that I tried to make. Perhaps honourable gentlemen did not understand me. I think the Senate should maintain its privileges, and I do not think that any argument advanced overturns that contention.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: If our rights revive after 1921, it will not be so bad.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is simply to permit of a reorganization similar to that which took place in the Printing Bureau.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Sections 3 to 8, both inclusive, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADA GRAIN BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 194, an Act to amend the Canada Grain Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. McLennan in the Chair.

On section 1—grading of grain inspected as no grade for moisture and dried:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The first clause honourable gentlemen, is to amend the grading of a class of wheat which is now inspected as "no grade," so that if it is recovered the inspector may place it in the grade to which it belongs. If honourable gentlemen will look at the section they will see it is self-explanatory. I move the adoption of the first clause.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—issue of cash purchase ticket or certified cheque on receipt of storage receipt; and section 3—failure to redeem cash purchase ticket:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The object of the other two clauses is to provide for certified cheques being paid for the purchase of grain, and for the payment of purchase tickets upon presentation. There has been considerable loss experienced by the farmers in accepting for the purchase of grain cheques which have not been certified. There is also a practice by which purchase tickets issued for grain are frequently not redeemed. The purpose is simply to insure the payment of those obligations incurred in the handling of grain in elevators.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I suppose these alterations are being asked for by the people interested?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The object is simply to protect the farmer.

Sections 2 and 3 were agreed to.

The preamble and title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

GENERAL DIVORCE BILLS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. W. PROUDFOOT: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to ascertain what has become of the Divorce Bills sent over to the Commons a considerable time ago.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I did intend to bring up that matter, and I am much obliged to the honourable member for mentioning it, because there is now a situation with regard to divorce that the House will have to deal with seriously. This year there have been over 100 Divorce Bills granted, and, so far as the signs of the times indicate, there will be applications for 200 next year. If this House is to hear and determine all those petitions we certainly shall need more than one Divorce Committee. There will have to be some change in the rule so as to provide for two or possibly three Committees. I have not attended the meetings of the Committee as regularly this year as I did in the prior seven years. I heard only about 34 divorce cases, and there were over 100. But the Committee has sometimes sat from half-past 10 in the morning until half-past 1, and from 2 o'clock until half-past 6, and then from 8 to 10 at night, in order to clear these cases. It is becoming a very great labour.

These Divorce Bills to which the honourable gentleman refers were passed through this House by very large majorities. They are very conservative measures. They do not enlarge the grounds upon which divorce is granted. On the contrary, they narrow them; because there are no limits to the grounds on which Parliament may grant divorces. But the divorce courts would be confined to the divorce laws existing in England in 1870, and in those laws the grounds for the granting of divorce are well-defined, and, I would say, fairly conservative.

I am very much disappointed that the Bills did not pass the lower House. I have tried to find out why, and, so far as I can understand, what happened was this. When the Bills were sent down to the Commons I asked Mr. Boys to take charge of them there. He was, I think, absent for two or three days, and by the time he was ready to move in the matter—he was perhaps a little off his guard—the time for private members introducing Bills had expired and he would have to get a day from the Government. As I understand, the opponents of divorce in the lower House say: "Why did you not move before it became necessary for you to ask for a day? If you had done that and you had a majority in the House, the Bills would have passed; but now, inasmuch as you have to ask for leave, and as we are opposed on principle to divorce, we are not going to help you out of the hole you have fallen into, and you must get out of it yourself." I do not think very much of that attitude myself; I think it is very technical and very narrow. As a matter of fact, I think there is no doubt that if the Bills came regularly before the House of Commons they would carry by a substantial majority. As I say, the Bills were conservative, and the province of Quebec was left out, the system now followed in that province being left as it is.

The only suggestion that I can make to help us out of the difficulty would be that these Bills should be introduced in the House of Commons on the first or second day of next session and dealt with there—either killed or passed. Then, at an early date they should be brought to this House and we should pass them, and the Royal Assent could be given within the first three weeks of the session. If that were done, the petitions that are before the House might be referred to the courts and any fees that had been paid could be handed back.

Hon. Mr. PROUDFOOT: Do we have to pass the Bills again?

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Oh, yes. They are dead now. The whole procedure has to be gone over again. You have to listen to all the speeches over again. But I think that what I suggest would be a way out of the difficulty. If that is not done, then I think we have to change the rules of this House and have at least two Committees, perhaps three; and I think that is very undesirable. The simplest thing of all would be to have the Commons pass the two Bills.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, I am glad the honourable member for Middleton has dealt with this question, because I think it is one that we should consider. To treat legislation coming down from this House as the other Chamber has treated these Bills, is not showing proper regard for the Senate. The honourable gentleman (Hon. W. B. Ross) spent a great deal of time and took a great deal of trouble in piloting this legislation through the Senate, and the Senate gave it careful consideration, feeling that they were doing something in the interest of the whole country in endeavouring to place it on the statute book. We have at present no means of knowing whether the House of Commons has any objection to this legislation or not, or why they took no steps to pass it. The only thing that I can suggest to my honourable friend is that, if he is prepared to second me in the matter, we should simly refuse to pass the Supply Bill until that divorce legislation is dealt with. We have the matter in our hands now, and if we desire to bring it to a head we certainly have the power to do so. It would certainly create a little excitement in the House and in the country, and at the same time it would be enforcing our rights and might perhaps lead to better consideration being given in the future to legislation that is sent down from the Senate to the House of Commons.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes. I do not think there is the least sign that the Commons have acted reasonably. Those Bills were really not a private member's Bills. Mr. Boys, a private member, was moving them, but as a matter of fact they were public Bills, and they passed this House by a large majority. I have already said, and I want to accentuate it, that the Bills have received very shabby treatment, and if I had power to hold up the Supply Bill I would be strongly tempted to do so until those Bills were passed. I know from private correspondence that the failure to pass them is a great disappointment, not so much to suitors as to the judges and others who are interested in the welfare of the country. A large number of public bodies have dealt with the question of divorce. The Methodists and the Presbyterians have expressed their opinion. You cannot afford to ignore all these people. I hear from Prince Edward Island, too, that there is a great disappointment there in regard to these Bills. I understand that there are a few cases in which soldiers are concerned, and it is a long way to have to come up here in the winter time, when, as everybody knows, the ice conditions are bad. I regard it as almost a public calamity that those Bills were not passed by the lower House.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: What do you say to refusing Supply?

The Senate adjourned until 8.30 p.m.

The Senate resumed at 8.30 p.m.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved that when the House adjourns it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 1.30 p.m.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 1.30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, July 1, 1920.

The Senate met at 1.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

FISH INSPECTION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 50, an Act to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Explain.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED.

On motion of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill. Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, this is a Bill making provision for the inspection and regulation of the packing of pickled fish. This has been introduced very largely upon the representations of the Canadian Fisheries Association, and it practically places fish upon the same plane of fruit and other products which are inspected and regulated by the Government. Up to the present time the inspection of fish has not been carried on to the same extent as the inspection of other products—in fact, it has not been done.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, the extraordinary thing that I see about this Bill is that, if it is a desirable measure, as my honourable friend has endeavoured to point out to the House, it has not been dealt with before. Had prorogation taken effect, as we expected, at 10 o'clock last night, this Bill would apparently not have been passed. It is now brought down to us—I was going to say, in the dying hours of the session, but it is later than that—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Say the eleventh hour.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: —when the members have gone home and we are not in a position to study the Bill.

As to the Bill itself, I had a copy placed in my hands only a few minutes ago, and it is hard to tell exactly what it means. However, I would draw the honourable gentleman's attention to the last clause, which says:

> This Act shall come into force, with respect to fish caught on the Pacific coast, on the first day of November, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, and, with respect to fish caught on the Atlantic coast on the first day of April, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one.

I therefore fail to see why there is a necessity to rush this legislation through at the present time. If the fishing business has been carried on successfully, as it has been carried on, in this country for a number of years past without this legislation, and if this is to apply on the Pacific coast only after November, and not to apply on the Atlantic coast until after the 1st of April, 1921, surely this legislation could have been held over until next session, when we could study it carefully and know what we were doing.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: This measure should have been passed ten or fifteen years ago.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Perhaps my honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) would explain the meaning of the provision at the end of new section 9:

> Provided, however, that there shall be no appeal in any case where the appellant is unable to satisfy the Minister that the identity of the container or fish with respect to which an appeal is desired has been carefully preserved.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There must be evidence on which the appeal is based. That is a principle of law that applies to all evidence.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But would there not have to be evidence in the first case if the inspector took a man up for not having his fish in conformity with the regulations under the Act?

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The evidence might not have been preserved afterwards. When the appeal comes before the Minister there must be evidence of the subject-matter of the appeal. That is all it means.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: If the appeal took a long time, the evidence might possibly get into such a condition that it would not be recognized in any court, or anywhere else.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You would not advocate an appeal if there be no evidence.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 4.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 221, an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending the 31st March, 1920, and the 31st March, 1921.

The Bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the Supply Bill now before us is obviously a large one, and a perusal of it will inevitably lead to the conclusion that the votes contained therein are entirely necessary for the public service. No good purpose would be served by making even limited remarks, let alone extended remarks, upon a Supply Bill so large and so important as the one now before us. When I say that no good purpose would be served, of course I have in view the fact that the constitutional functions of the Senate would stand in the way of our giving to it that analytical attention which so large a measure is entitled to receive, if it is considered at all. No other Bill that comes before Parliament receives the same degree of attention as the Supply Bill. It reflects not only a scrutiny and searching investigation by Parliament itself, but also, to an even greater degree, a scrutiny by the Government, more particularly the Finance Minister and his associates.

It is a mistake to think for a moment that every item which is presented to the Government by different Ministers as the subject-matter of a parliamentary vote is included in the Supply Bill. I say with every confidence, and unhesitatingly, that the searching examination which is made by the members of the Government concerning a Supply Bill before it is presented to Parliament, is very much greater and more searching than that of Parliament itself. Consequently honourable gentlemen can accept the Supply Bill with the greatest measure of confidence, knowing that it has undergone the investigation and examination to which I have referred.

The Main Estimates for 1920-21 represent:

Consolidated Revenue Fund	$440,496,333.09
Capital	58,189,695.00
Demobilization	38,463,400.00
Total	$537,149,428.09

The Supplementary Estimates of 1920-21 amount to $12,500,000, which is confined exclusively to the bonus which has been voted by Parliament for the different purposes set out in the legislation by which the amount has been authorized.

The further Supplementary Estimates for 1920-21 consist of:

Consolidated Revenue Fund..	$58,804,062.45
Capital..	1,329,420.48
Demobilization..	1,869,000.00
Total..	$62,002,482.93

Further Supplementary Estimates amount to $53,000,000, making the following totals for 1920-21:

Consolidated Revenue..	$511,853,395.54
Capital..	59,519,115.48
Demobilization..	40,332,400.00
Total..	$611,704,911.02

Supplementary Estimates for 1919-20 are:

Consolidated Revenue Fund..	$18,634,598.84
Capital..	416,600.00
Total..	$19,051,198.84

The grand totals are:

Consolidated Revenue Fund..	$530,487,994.38
Capital..	59,935,715.48
Demobilization..	40,332,400.00
In all, a total of..	$630,756,109.86

Hon. GEORGE W. FOWLER: Before the honourable gentleman resumes his speech, may I ask if this Supply Bill has been submitted to the Committee on Finance of this House that was appointed for the purpose of regulating the financial affairs of the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it has not, and may I say in that connection that I scarcely think the Finance Committee desires to assume a task so great as that of revising the Supply Bill. I rather think the object of the Finance Committee was to revise other financial Bills rather than the Estimates. Of course, the scope of the Committee was sufficiently wide to permit of any Bill being referred to it; but I have not yet heard of any motion to refer the Supply Bill to the Committee.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I may say in passing that the appointment of that Committee was opposed by myself; but I think that the main argument in support of it was that it could go into the Supply Bill. A Committee consisting of business men of high repute was appointed for the purpose of bringing to bear upon the Supply Bill the power of their strong financial minds, so that they could understand it and could explain it to the rest of us who do not possess that great business acumen which leads to great financial success. I regret to find that my forecast at the time has proved to be correct, and that the work of that Committee will be conspicuous by its absence.

Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK: Honourable gentlemen, when I listened to the leader of the Government introducing this Bill, I thought from his opening remarks that he realized the position in which he is placed at the present time and the enormity of the sins the Government have committed. I regret to find that as he proceeded with his speech he apparently was quite satisfied with the work that has been done and with the tremendous amount asked for in the Supply Bill. $630,000,000 odd is a very large sum indeed to have to find for the work of a country with a population not exceeding 9,000,000.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS: 8,000,000.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I wanted to give the Government the benefit of the larger figure. Supposing that the population is 9,000,000 this is an enormous amount to require for conducting the affairs of the country this year. Particularly does this seem so when we remember that the Finance Minister in his statement to the House estimated his revenue at $388,000,000 odd. It indicates the large sum of money that has to be raised by extra taxation through the measures which we put through the House the other day.

At the time the Bill dealing with the luxury tax was before the House my honourable friend made the statement that he hoped that the revenue from that tax would be between $75,000,000 and $80,000,000. Even if his hope is realized we will have to find an enormous amount in some way to meet the demands as outlined by my honourable friend to-day.

If we are to prorogue at half-past two this afternoon, time is too short to attempt to deal with this situation; but I want to refer to one or two things that appear in this Supply Bill—things which we in this House have before maintained should not be placed in a Supply Bill. We provide $140,000,000 to pay the interest on the public debt. The Finance Minister, when dealing with the public debt in another place, took an exceedingly courageous and bold stand when he admitted that certain items that had been carried in the accounts of the country for a number of years as assets were not longer to be considered as assets, and he put the net debt at $2,273,305,436. That is an enormous net debt for this country to be carrying. When you come to figure the interest on that debt at 6 per cent it only amounts to $136,398,826. So, taking this as the net debt, either we are paying on other items over and above the amount included in the net debt, or the rate of interest is higher than 6 per cent.

In the Supply Bill as brought down we have two items dealing with loans to railways. One is an item of $48,000,000 for the Canadian Northern railway, and the other is $25,000,000 for the Grand Trunk railway. In both case the Government provides that the loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent; but, as I have tried to show the House, it looks as though the rate of interest should be more than 6 per cent. It would appear as though, when the Government makes a loan to these railways and only charges 6 per cent, the Government is not getting enough interest to cover the rate charged.

We have also in these Estimates other figures dealing with the railway situation. I want to read to the House a couple of items which appear and to which I think attention should be drawn. In the Supply Bill and in the Main Estimates we have an item which reads:

> The Canadian Government railways, towards deficit of working expenditure for nine months ending December 31st, 1920, the management of the railways being hereby authorized to apply the receipts and revenues toward payment of the working expenditure, $5,000,000.

Then, in the Supplementary Estimates there is another item of $1,000,000, making a total of $6,000,000. Apparently it is proposed to adopt a system of accounting on the Government railways different from what we have had up to the present. Up to the present time the moneys received have been paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and expenditures have been paid out of that Fund, and the accounts have gone through the Department of the Auditor General. But this item is quietly put in and nothing is said about it. I do not suppose that any honourable gentleman in this House realized what the item was until it was brought to his attention. Apparently it is a change which the Government is going to make without acquainting the country with what they are doing. I do not know whether the country is prepared to have the accounts of the Intercolonial railway and the National Transcontinental dealt with in that way. I quite understand that some honourable gentlemen may say in reply, "Of course the accounts will be audited in the same way as other railway accounts." But I do not think, in view of the way the railways have been run in the past, that the Government is quite justified in calmly doing this without giving Parliament an opportunity of saying anything about it. At this late hour of the session it is impossible for any honourable gentleman properly to criticise an action of that kind.

Then we have in the Supply Bill other items of railway expenditure which I do not think should be treated in that way. In fact, I think all items of railway expenditure which are large items, and which deal not with the question of carrying on the business of the country, but with the development of these railways, or the supplying of greater equipment or something of that kind, should not be put into the Supply Bill proper. They should be brought in in a different form, and honourable gentlemen should be given an opportunity of discussing them.

The honourable gentleman from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) raised the question of bringing the Supply Bill before the Finance Committee of this House. I am sorry that the Finance Committee has not been able to do the work which I had hoped at the time it was established that it would do. I hope that next session the Senate will take this matter up, and consider it, and I trust that they will be able to bring it to the attention of the Government in such a way that the Government will realize that, when the Senate adopted the resolution of the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), they were serious and did not pass the motion simply for the pleasure they got out of it.

There are one or two other items to which I think reference should be made. The Government have placed in the Bill the amount of $1,700,000 for the purpose of dealing with the navy; but they have not stated to the House any definite policy with regard to that question. I think the whole question is a very important one, and one which in the interests of the country should be very carefully considered and discussed. I do not think the Government is justified at the present time and under present conditions in committing the country to an expenditure of this kind until they have thoroughly gone into the matter and decide upon a policy.

The same argument applies very largely to the amount set aside for the Militia. For many years we have been spending money on the militia, and it is probably necessary that we should have an organization of that kind. But I want to draw attention to the fact that, although we have been spending money on the militia ever since Confederation, when the war broke out the militia organization was not used in raising battalions, but the work that had been done in previous years by the Militia Council and by the officers and men of the militia and the permanent force was practically thrown to one side by the hon. Minister of Militia.

Some Hon. SENATORS: No.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY : You are wrong.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Absolutely wrong.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: The militia regiments were not used because of some bad legislation of a Minister that you followed, the late Sir Fred Borden. There was a misunderstanding because your people did not know anything about it, and we had not time to look it over. The foundation was laid, and it was of great assistance in sending 33,000 men overseas in the first six weeks after the war broke out.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The honourable gentleman may profess to know more about this than I do; but if he will inquire into the matter I think he will find that there was an organization in the Department which would have enabled the necessary battalions to be raised at a minimum of expenditure and trouble. I think that is a question that should have received careful consideration before we went on with an expenditure of a further sum of money on the militia.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Will my honourable friend permit me? Did the honourable gentleman not take the view of his leader that Germany was our friend at that time, and that we did not require any militia?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not quite understand what my honourable friend is asking.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Do you want me to ask again? My question is this: did you not at the time follow the opinion of your leader, who took the view that Germany was our friend and we did not require the money?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: The fact remained that we had the militia; that in 1910, I think it was, the then representative of the Government, the head of the Militia Department, went over to England and took part in deliberations there for the purpose of organizing the whole forces of Canada so that they would be in a position to be utilized when any emergency arose, such as the war with Germany.

Hon. Mr. CROSBY: They were utilized.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: And they formed an organization and adopted a plan and a policy that were to have been used if any trouble such as the war with Germany did break out. But I think that, as I said before, that organization was not used in the way that it should have been. We ought to have a thorough discussion and explanation of the whole situation before we go on spending more money on the militia.

I feel very strongly that the Government are to-day spending more money than they are entitled to spend in the carrying on of the affairs of this country. We are brought to a position in which we can no longer borrow money outside of Canada. We are not acting in the interest of the country, we are not benefiting the country, if we borrow more money from the people of Canada for the purpose of carrying on the country's business. The Government should have done more pruning on their Estimates, so that they might be more in keeping with the present condition of the country.

I do not want to take up any more of the time of the Chamber. There may be other gentlemen who desire to say something on this matter; and I do not suppose that any further protest that one could make would have any effect on the Government.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, the amount of the Supply Bill that has now been brought down should show the country that the Government are unduly extravagant and have not exercised the care and economy that ought to be exercised under present conditions. When Canada, with a population of from 8,500,000 to 9,000,000, has a Supply Bill amounting to some $630,000,000, and when the estimated revenue is only about $450,000,000 at the outside, then the situation is very serious for this country. Canada is about the only country in the world among those which are supposed to be up to date that is not reducing its liabilities. The United States, a country that I do not think is any richer per capita than we are, is reducing its war debt very materially. I saw it stated that during the month of April it had reduced its debt by $275,000,000. The British Government are reducing their war debt at such a rate that, although it may take a considerable number of years, the time is quite within sight when it will be wiped out. In Canada, more than a year and a half after the war has closed, not only are we not reducing our war debt, but we are not even paying our way; we are adding to our debt. There is a material increase in the debt this year. The Minister of Finance stated a short time ago that we were not going to borrow any more; but when your expenditure is $630,000,000 and you have only $450,000,000 to pay it with, if you do not have a public subscription for a loan, you must borrow the money in some other way; you cannot overcome the fact that the money has to be paid and the debt of Canada is increased. I am convinced that there is too much extravagance; that in many lines the Government could have cut the expenditure away down had they seen fit to do so; and I am sure that, if the people of the country once realize that at our present rate of spending we are not able to pay our way and that the situation will become worse and worse every year, they will be very much opposed to the extravagant policy that is apparently being followed at the present time.

Hon. J. W. DANIEL: Honourable gentlemen, I did not intend to say anything at this time; but I do object to the statements made by the honourable gentlemen who have just sat down. I object to this extent. If money should be spent on anything in Canada, it should be spent on those forces and those undertakings that are necessary for the peace, order and safety of this country. We heard in days gone by, before the late war, similar sentiments expressed: "Nothing for militia, nothing for the army, nothing for the navy!"—the very things on which the safety, order, and success of the country depend. What would have become of France if she had not been prepared to meet the German army in 1914? What would have become of this whole country under such circumstances? What would have become of our Empire if the advice of the peace-at-any-price people had been followed and the navy had been allowed to go down into desuetude and decrepitude? The inevitable result would have been that we would now be the slaves of Germany. We would have had no country of our own to live in, let alone to boast of. I cannot understand the views of people who want to spend money on everything else—even on the Hudson Bay railway—rather than on the forces on which the peace, order, and safety of our country depend. I certainly must protest against the statement that the armed force of our country must be the first thing to be set aside when economy is considered.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the sitting was resumed.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

His Excellency the Governor General having come and being seated on the Throne:

The Hon. the SPEAKER commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that: "It is His Excellency the Governor General's pleasure they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber."

Who being come with their Speaker:

The following Bills were assented to, in His Majesty's name, by His Excellency the Governor General:

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.
An Act to amend the Admiralty Act.
An Act to amend the Northwest Game Act.
An Act respecting the Director of Coal Operations.
An Act for the relief of Mary Oakley.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Elizabeth Cooper.
An Act for the relief of Catherine Burfoot.
An Act for the relief of Thomas Lindsay Thacker.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Henrietta Pettit.
An Act for the relief of John William Wallace.
An Act respecting the Colonial Investment and Loan Company.
An Act to incorporate The Great West Bank of Canada.
An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the British America Assurance Company.
An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the Western Assurance Company.
An Act for the relief of Edith Ellen Holmes Austin.
An Act for the relief of Ethelbert Gilmour Harris.
An Act for the relief of Albert Ernest Wice.

An Act for the relief of Peter Sutherland Cowie.
An Act for the relief of Roy Bradley.
An Act for the relief of Joan Doran.
An Act for the relief of Alexander Ross, Junior.
An Act for the relief of Jean Mary Sandford.
An Act for the relief of John Durose.
An Act to incorporate The North West Route, Limited.
An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.
An Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.
An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.
An Act respecting the Harbour of Pictou, in Nova Scotia.
An Act to amend the Irrigation Act.
An Act respecting Dominion Trust Company.
An Act to incorporate Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.
An Act respecting Maple Products.
An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Sick and Distressed Mariners).
An Act respecting Canadian National Railways.
An Act to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Commercial Feeding Stuffs, Bran, Shorts, Middlings and Chop Feeds.
An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1919.
An Act for the relief of George Emerson Fox.
An Act for the relief of Graziano Bertini.
An Act for the relief of William Henry Caswell.
An Act for the relief of John Covert.
An Act for the relief of Mary Ireland.
An Act for the relief of John Daniel Mills.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Aimee Wilfrid David.
An Act for the relief of Richard Simpson.
An Act for the relief of Nora Dowle.
An Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.
An Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.
An Act to amend The Pension Act.
An Act to amend the Post Office Act.
An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.
An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.
An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.
An Act to amend the Civil Service Act, 1918, and the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1919.
An Act to provide for the Settlement of Differences between the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of British Columbia respecting Indian Lands and certain other Indian Affairs in the said Province.
An Act respecting The Dominion Fire Insurance Company.
An Act to amend the Indian Act.
An Act for the relief of Muriel Curren Gilmour.
An Act for the relief of Marie Jeanne Yvonne Albertine St. Amour Lallemand.
An Act for the relief of Lauretta Estelle Cook.
An Act for the relief of Reginald Muir Barlow.
An Act for the relief of Alfred John Crawford.
An Act for the relief of Frederick Minskip.
An Act for the relief of Charles Henry Foster.
An Act for the relief of Frank Cox.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Dubé.
An Act for the relief of John Donnelly.
An Act to assist Shipbuilding.
An Act to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917.
An Act to amend The Special War Revenue Act, 1915.
An Act to confirm certain borrowings under The Demobilization Appropriation Act, 1919.
An Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons and the Electoral Franchise.
An Act respecting The Canadian Wheat Board.
An Act to amend The Railway Act, 1919.
An Act to revive and amend The Naturalization Act, 1914.
An Act to amend the Criminal Code.
An Act to amend the Salaries Act and the Senate and House of Commons Act.
An Act for the relief of Mildred Euphemia Alsina Blanche Martin.
An Act for the relief of Arthur John Frankling, otherwise known as John Arthur Holmes.
An Act for the relief of Nelson Alexander Boylen.
An Act for the relief of Mahala Burton.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Henry Forbes.
An Act to amend The Boards of Trade Act.
An Act to provide for the Insurance of Returned Soldiers by the Dominion of Canada.
An Act to provide for the retirement of certain members of the Public Service.
An Act to amend The Canada Grain Act.
An Act to amend the Judges Act.
An Act to amend The Fish Inspection Act.
An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1920, and the 31st March, 1921.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the thirteenth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following Speech:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from further attendance in Parliament, I am happy to recall that your labours during the session have resulted in many beneficial enactments.

You have given to the Franchise Act the long and careful deliberation which the importance of this measure amply justified. It embodies provisions which should insure the preparation of fair and impartial lists at all future elections.

The liberal increases in pensions which have been granted, the establishment of a scheme of state insurance for returned soldiers, and the further provisions concerning the settlement of soliders upon the land, have shown your determination to take every practical means of fulfilling just obligations towards those who have rendered to our country such conspicuous service.

In the taxation measures which have been adopted, you have courageously taken account of a difficult financial situation and it may be confidently expected that they will materially increase the revenues.

You have wisely made provision to continue authority for the supervision of the marketing of the Canadian wheat crops, if events in the world's markets should render this the most advantageous method of protecting the interests of the Canadian people. The exercise of this authority will necessarily receive the most attentive and careful consideration from my advisers.

The measure providing for the control of fuel recognizes the peculiar importance of this matter in the national economy and the need for insuring supplies to the greatest possible extent.

You have adopted legislation with respect to shipbuilding which should result in the continued employment of many thousands of men hitherto engaged in that and associated industries.

The provision made for the naval service wisely recognizes the importance of preserving a nucleus which can be developed if need should arise.

Provision for the air service has also been made in such a manner as will produce the largest trained personnel consistent with the financial capacity of the country. Because of Canada's peculiar geographical position and features, it is highly important that the possibilities of this new method of communication and transportation should be fully explored. The Air Board will be enabled to watch every new development and to take practical steps in the interests of aerial navigation in the Dominion.

The measure for the education and enfranchisement of Indians constitutes an effective means of enabling these wards of the nation to make further advance to the responsibilities of citizenship.

The settlement of the issues of the war still proceeds, but it is hoped that before another Session the final treaties will have been concluded. After obtaining your approval the Government have sanctioned on behalf of Canada, the ratification of the Treaty with Bulgaria; the Treaty with Hungary has been signed, but the Treaty with Turkey is still under negotiation.

During the Session, as a result of a Conference between the Government and the Governments of the British West Indian Colonies, an important agreement was concluded with the object of rendering still closer the trade relationship between Canada and these Colonies and of improving the means of intercourse and communication. This agreement will be submitted to you in due course.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In His Majesty's name I thank you for the provision you have made for the needs of the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

On your return to your homes, I trust you will find such reassuring evidences of a bountiful harvest and of continued productiveness in every sphere of national activity as will enhance your confidence in the prosperity and stability of the Dominion in these critical times.

INDEX TO SENATE DEBATES

FOURTH SESSION, THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT, 1920.

ABBREVIATIONS:—1r, 2r, 3r,=first, second or third reading. Com=Committee. M=Motion. Ref=Referred. Rep=Report. Res=Resolution.

Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech
Motion for 3, 8, 20, 34, 49, 60, 79
Adoption of, 91

Admiralty Bill. 1r, 511. 2, 527. Com, 596. 3r, 610

Agriculture
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill. See that title
Elevators, grain and flax, in Ontario, 413
Feeding stuffs. See that title
Fruit. See Inspection and Sale Bill
Oleomargarine Bill. See that title.
Weed Seeds. See Feeding Stuffs Bill
Wheat. See Canadian Wheat Board Bill

Alcohol, manufacture of. See Inland Revenue Bill
Illicit distilling, 720

Animal Contagious Diseases Bill. 1r, 323. 2r, 374. Com, 383. 3r, 394.

Annuities. See Government Annuities Bill

Appropriation Bills
No. 1. 1r, 2r, 3r, 111
No. 2. 1r, 2r, 208. 3r, 209
No. 3. 1r, 511. 2r, 3r, 528
No. 4. 1r, 2r, 860. 3r, 864

Arenmore, wreck of, 150

Armenia, mandate for, 271

Baker, M.P., the late Lt.-Col., memorial to, 32, 416

Bankruptcy Bill. 1r, 513. 2r, 530. Com, 610. 3r, 704

Beaubien, Hon. C. P.
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 675
Firearms, use of, 675
Franco-Canadian trade, 831
German Trade Identification Bill, 214, 216, 265-270
Income War Tax Bill, 809
Parliamentary librarians, appointment of, 190
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 735
Special War Revenue Bill, 815

Beique, Hon. F. L.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 492, 766
Divorce Courts Bill, 170
German Trade Identification Bill, 290
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 507, 510
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 132
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 639
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 846
Railway Act Amendment Bill, 830
Shipbuilding Bill, 800

Belcourt, Hon. N. A., P.C.
Bankruptcy Bill, 612-619
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 493-497, 767
British Empire Steel Corporation, 347, 348
Bulgarian Peace Treaty, 124
Civil Service Bill, 559, 565, 569-577, 609
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 675, 727
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 408, 409, 438
Divorce Courts Bill, 174, 220, 259-263
Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, 325-327
Firearms, use of, 675
Food and Drugs Bill, 303, 327-334
Franco-Canadian Trade, 838
German Trade Identification Bill, 288, 299
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 306, 362-373
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 424, 509
Indian Bill, 778
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 845-849
Militia Pension Bill, 743
Naturalization Bill, 732-734
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of, 93
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 736-742

Bennett, Hon. Wm. H.
Electrification of government railways, 197
German Trade Identification Bill, 291
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 430, 465
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 134, 162
Taxation, collection of Income and Business Profits, 249

Betting and Pool-selling. See Crminial Code Amendment Bill

Blondin, Hon. P. E., P.C.
Civil Service Bill, 522
Criminal Code (French version) Bill, 49, 206-208
Post Office Bill, 667-671, 681, 686-691

Bills. See their titles

Blain, Hon. Richard
Army and Navy Veterans Bill, 270

Boards of Trade Bill. 1r, 724. 2r, 748. Com, 749, 772. 3r, 773

Bolduc, Hon. Joseph (Speaker)
Message of the King—correspondence, 58
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 840
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment of debate, motion for, debatable, 170
Bill in committee—discussion of principle, 498, 551
Senate translator, appointment of, 342, 577

Bostock, Hon. Hewitt
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 13
The new Parliament Buildings, 13
Economic conditions, 13
The electoral franchise, 15
The high cost of living, 15
The Board of Commerce, 15
The Prime Minister, 16
Admiralty Bill, 527, 596
Appropriation Bills, 528, 861
Bankruptcy Bill, 531, 611, 616
Betting and pool-selling, 710
Boards of Trade Bill, 748, 749
British ambassador to Washington, 8
British Columbia Fisheries Treaty, 416
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 444, 476, 486-488, 489, 760, 761
British Empire Steel Corporation, 413
British North America Act—proposed amendment, 759
Bulgarian Peace Treaty, 122, 203
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company Bill, 277
Business Profits War Tax Bill, 659
Canadian National Railways Bill, 661
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 821, 826-828
Civil Service Bill 514, 555, 572, 576, 584-590, 790
Civil Service, experts in, 127
Civil Service reorganization, 652
Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Bill, 163
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 694, 695, 710
Customs Tariff Bill, 598
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 411, 453
Divorce Courts Bill, 173, 233, 858
Dominion coat of arms, 209

Bostock, Hon. Hewitt—Con.
Dominion Elections Bill, 822-826
Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, 302, 324-326
Esquimalt Naval Yard, 164
Fish Inspection Bill, 859
Food and Drugs Bill, 303, 328, 335
German Trade Identification Bill, 264, 274
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 305, 361, 372
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 385, 428
Income War Tax Bill, 801-806
Indian Bill, 774, 779-781
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 118
Inland Revenue Bill, 680, 718-723
Inspection and Sale Bill, 524
Interest rate of Government savings banks, 637
Irrigation Bill, 672, 691-693
Kamloops government building site, 455
League of Nations, mandates of, 150
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 838-844
Naturalization Bill, 728-734
Oil production, 680
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 381, 399-403
Ottawa Agreement Bill, 247
Ottawa Mint Bill, 147, 163
Parliamentary librarians, appointment of, 187
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of, 91
Peace Treaty expenditure, 271
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 851-856
Railway Act Amendment Bill—electric railways, 679, 830
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 138, 152, 745
Senate officials, appointment of, 572, 576, 584, 790
Senators, deceased
Landry, the late Hon. P., 98
Pringle, the late Hon. R. H. C., 322
Talbot, the late Hon. P., 98
Shipbuilding Bill, 783, 791-793, 799
Shipping Bill (certificates of service), 205
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 596
Sockeye salmon, protection of, 150
Special War Revenue Bill, 816-819
Steel and Shipbuilding Companies, 414
Supreme Court Bill, 461
Technical Education Bill, 119, 137
Trust Companies Bill, 337, 358
Yukon Placer Mining Bill, 657

Bourque, Hon. T. J.
Senate translator, appointment of, 577

Boyer, Hon. Arthur
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 66
Canada's financial condition, 66
Conservation of our resources, 67

Boyer, Hon. Arthur—Con.
The labour problem, 69
Canada's naval policy, 70
The Quebec marine agency, 70
Arenmore, wreck, of, 150
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 491
Canadian National railway—branch line to Oka, 339
Divorce Courts Bill, 176
Electrification of government railways, 200
German Trade Identification Bill, 294
Income War Tax Bill, 804, 809
Inspection and Sale Bill, 590
Lighthouse crews, rescue of, 99, 271
Parliament buildings—chime of bells, 161
Parliamentary restaurant, 768, 771
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 394

Bradbury, Hon. George H.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 492
Civil Service Bill, 519, 551
Food and Drugs Bill, 336
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 386, 415, 419-434, 498, 508
Lake Winnipeg—need of harbour, 747
Naturalization Bill, 730-732
Parliament buildings—chime of bells, 158, 161, 203, 662
Pension Bill, 752, 755
Saskatchewan river, navigability of, 440
Senate translator, appointment of, 340

British Ambassador to Washington, 8

British Columbia Indian Lands Bill. 1r, 163. M for 2r postponed, 304. 2r, 442. Com, 473. M for 3r, 489, 511, 761. See 488, 760

British Empire Steel Corporation, 343, 413

British North America Act—proposed amendment, 759

Bulgarian Peace Treaty Bill. Res, 112, 120. 1r, 157. 2r, 203. Com, 206. 3r, 210.

Business Profits War Tax Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 599. Com, 658. 3r, 662

Canadian National Railways Bill. 1r, 529. 2r, 600. Com, 661, 672. 3r, 704

Canadian Wheat Board Bill. 1r, 2r, 821. Com, 826. 3r, 829

Casgrain, Hon. J. P. B.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 71, 79
Appointment of Hon. Senator Proudfoot, 71
The Liberal party and its leaders, 71
Canada and the League of Nations, 73
A British Imperial Parliament, 73
Appointment of Hon. Senator Chapais, 79
The National railways, 81
The ship of state, 82
Armenia, mandate for, 271

Casgrain, Hon. J. P. B.—Con.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 491
Civil Service, experts in, 96, 126
Divorce Courts Bill, 169
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 361-371, 377
Hudson bay route, 535
Militia Pension Bill, 743
Oil shales, 152
Oleomargarine Bill, 398
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of, 94
Senate, adjournment of, 472
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 395

Chapais, Hon. Thomas.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 8
Appointment to the Senate, 8
Hon. Mr. Choquette, 8
The new Parliament Buildings, 8
The League of Nations, 9
The labour problem, 10
Soldiers civil re-establishment, 11
Commerce and finance, 12
Civil Service Bill, 608
Divorce Courts Bill, 223
Introduction to Senate, 1
Landry, the late Hon. P., 99

Civil Service
Experts in, 96, 126
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of. See Parliament
Reorganization, 642
Retirement. See Public Servants Retirement Bill

Civil Service Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 513. Com, 551, 580. 3r, 607. Senate amendment withdrawn, 790

Civil Service Insurance Bill. 1r, 310. 2r, 338. Com, 359. 3r, 360

Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Bill. 1r, 112. 2r, 146. Com. 163. 3r, 165, Cloran, Hon. H. J.

German Trade Identification Bill, 272

Coal. See Director of Coal Operations Bill

Cotton garments, prices of, 110

Criminal Code Amendment Bill. 1r, 550. 2r, 673. Com, 694, 704. 3r, 727, 761

Criminal Code (French Version) Bill. 1r, 49, 2r, 206. 3r, 406

Crosby, Hon. A. B.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 478, 493
British Empire Steel Corporation, 348
Civil Service Bill, 518, 609
Divorce Courts Bill, 230.
Fish Inspection Bill, 860

Crosby, Hon. A. B.—Con.
Franco-Canadian Trade, 837
German Trade Identification Bill, 275
Halifax garrison, 310, 357
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 452, 461
Ottawa Agreement Bill, 247
Parliamentary restaurant, 771, 772
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 855
Shipbuilding Bill, 787
Shipping Bill (certificates of service), 248
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 526, 594
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 391

Currency Bill. 1r, 112. 2r, 143. Com, 157. 3r, 162

Customs Bill (importation of firearms). 1r, 157. 2r, 203. Com, 206. 3r, 210

Customs Tariff Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 598. Com, 658. 3r, 662

Curry, Hon. N.
Civil Service Bill, 577
Food and Drugs Bill, 334
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 470

Dandurand, Hon. R., P.C.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 20
Appointment of Hon. Mr. Chapais, 20
Quebec and Union Government, 20
The financial situation, 22
Cabinet reconstruction, 23
Canada's constitutional status, 24
Alcohol, manufacture of, 681
Appropriation Bill, 111
Bankruptcy Bill, 704
Betting and pool-selling, 710
Civil Service Bill, 557, 571-578, 585, 588
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 707-717
Criminal Code (French version) Bill, 207, 407
Demobilization Borrowings Bill, 819, 820
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 408
Divorce Courts Bill, 234
Divorce fees, 725
Dominion Elections Bill, 823
Electrification of government railways, 245
Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, 375
Food and Drugs Bill, 329-336
Franco-Canadian Trade, 837
German Trade Identification Bill, 213
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 362
Loan Companies Bill, 337
Halifax garrison, 356
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 435
Income War Tax Bill, 801-811
Inland Revenue Bill, 681
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 846, 850
Mennonites, 376
Militia Pension Bill, 743, 744
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 841-844
Montreal Central Terminal Company Bill, 406

Dandurand, Hon. R., P. C.—Con.
Naturalization Bill, 730-733
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 400
Ottawa Mint Bill, 148, 149
Parliamentary librarians, appointment of, 186
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of, 92
Pension Bill, 752
Post Office Bill, 671, 689
Privilege, question of, 59
Quebec and Union Government, 20
Revision of Punishments Bill, 101
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 138, 153, 154
Senate staff
Appointment, 571-578, 585
Organization, 239
Sexual offences, 707, 708
Shipbuilding Bill, 791-800
Special War Revenue Bill, 814-818
Taxation, collection of Income and Business Profits, 253
Trust Companies Bill, 358

Daniel, Hon. John W.
Appropriation Bill, 864
Civil Service Bill, 576, 585
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 697-701
Criminal Code (French version) Bill, 207
Divorce Courts Bill, 176, 222
Divorce fees, 725
Hudson bay route, 542
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 419, 429
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 381, 399-405
Parliamentary services, proposed amalgamation of, 94
Revision of Punishments Bill, 105
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 138, 156
Senate
Bouchard, Joseph, retirement of, 761
Staff
Appointment, 576, 585
Organization, 237-239
Sexual offences, 697-701
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 525, 593

David, Hon. L. O.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 63
Appointment of Hon. Senator Chapais, 63
Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Union Government, 63
The tariff, 64
German Trade Identification Bill, 265
National labour unions, 78
Sexual offences, 728

Demobilization Borrowings Bill. 1r, 2r, 790. Com, 819. 3r, 820

Dennis, Hon. William
Halifax graving dock, 49, 110

Deportation. See Immigration Bill

De Veber, Hon. L. P.
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 156

Director of Coal Operations Bill. 1r, 392. M for 2r, 407. 2r, 437. Com, 452. 3r, 455

Divorce Bills

Adams, Meryl. 1r, 138, 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Addison, Gladys S., 1r, 204. 2r, 219. 3r, 230
Anderson, Richard E. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Austin, Edith E. H. 1r, 454. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Barlow, Reginald M. 1r, 2r, 3r, 704
Beadie, Robert E. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Bell, Edith S. 1r, 343. 2r, 380. 3rd, 394
Bertini, Graziano. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Booth, Marion O. 1r, 287. 2r, 321. 3r, 324
Boylen, Nelson A. 1r, 2r, 3r, 747
Bradley, Roy. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Bulley, Albert E. 1r, 415. 2r, 440. 3r, 455
Burfoot, Catherine. 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
Burton, Mahala. 1r, 2r, 3r, 747
Caswell, William H. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Chapman, Irene M. 1r, 2r, 3r, 392
Clarke, Frederick T. 1r, 310. 2r, 349. 3r, 360.
Cobbin, James L. L. 1r, 376. 2r, 407. 3r, 416
Cook, Lauretta E. 1r, 2r, 3r, 704
Cooper, Margaret E. 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
Cope, Fedorin. 1r, 205. 2r, 219. 3r, 230
Courtenay, Michael J. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Covert, John. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Cowie, Peter S. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Cox, Frank. 1r, 656. 2r, 3r 679
Crawford, Alfred J. 1r, 2r, 3r, 704
Cruickshank, Emily. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
David, Joseph A. W. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Davis, Harry. 1r, 393. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Davis, John J. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Dean, Charles F. 1r, 360. 2r, 395. 3r, 407
Dennis, Nell L. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Donnelly, John. 1r, 2r, 3r, 679
Doran, Joan. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Dowle, Nora. 1r, 529. 2r, 607. 3r, 610
Dowthwaite, Thomas E. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Dube, Joseph. 1r, 662. 2r, 3r, 718
Durose, John, 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
Ecclestone, Herbert W. 1r, 162. 2r, 201. 3r, 204
Elson, Albert G. 1r, 349. 2r, 380. 3r, 394
Forbes, Joseph H. 1r, 2r, 3r, 747
Foster, Charles H. 1r, 635. 2r, 679. 3r, 704
Fox, George E. 1r, 454. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Frankling, Arthur J. Rep, 578. 1r, 2r, 3r, 747
Fulsom, Frank. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Garrison, John J. 1r, 360. 2r, 395. 3r, 407
Gatenby, Thomas F. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Gendron, Beatrice B. 1r, 415. 2r, 440. 3r, 455

Divorce Bills—Con.
Gilmour, Muriel C. 1r, 607. 2r, 610. 3r, 679
Goddard, James. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Gray, William M. 1r, 183. 2r, 210. 3r, 230
Green, John A. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
Gudewell, Caroline E. 1r, 301. 2r, 324. 3r, 349
Hall, John B. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Harris, Ethelbert G. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Hartmann, Frederick S. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Harvey, John H. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Hudgin, Jessie E. 1r, 301. 2r, 324. 3r, 349
Ireland, Mary. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Jones, Arthur. 1r, 278. 2r, 301. 3r, 321
Karafel, Gele. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Keys, Charles L. 1r, 310. 2r, 349. 3r, 360
Lallemand, Marie J. Y. A. St. A. 1r, 607. 2r, 662. 3r, 679
Mackness, William G. 1r, 249. 2r, 279. 3r, 287
MacLaurin, Dora L. 1r, 360. 2r, 395. 3r, 407
Martin, Mildred E. A. B. 1r, 2r, 3r, 747
McBride, Albert H. 1r, 183. 2r, 210. 3r, 230
McBride, William G. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Mills, John D. 1r, 511. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Miniskip, Frederick. 1r, 2r, 3r, 704
Moss, Eva M. 1r, 278. 2r, 301. 3r, 321
Murray, Elizabeth C. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Oakley, Mary. Rep, 350. 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
O'Neill, Thomas P. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 279
Orford, Frederick. M, 725
Parizeau, Henri D. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Perugini, Ignace. 1r, 183. 2r, 210. 3r, 230
Pettit, Mary H. 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
Price, James L. 1r, 310. 2r, 349. 3r, 360
Proudfoot, James. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Ross, jr., Alex. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Sanderson, Ada M. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
Sandford, Jean M. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 513
Scott, George O. 1r, 393. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Scougall, Alex. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
Shemilt, George H. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Simpson, Richard. 1r, 513. 2r, 551. 3r, 580
Sinclair, Cyril G. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
Starkey, Walter. M, 455, 489
Stinson, George. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Sutton, Lockhart P. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Thacker, Thomas L. 1r, 416. 2r, 455. 3r, 472
Uren, William G. 1r, 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Vardon, Charles E. 1r, 270. 2r, 3r, 301
Vinall, William E. 1r, 301. 2r, 324. 3r, 349
Wallace, John W. 1r, 393. 2r, 415. 3r, 416.
Wallace, Nellie A. 1r,—. 2r, 321. 3r, 324
Wesley, Alfred C. W. 1r, 392. 2r, 415. 3r, 416
Wice, Albert E. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 512
Willis, Edith G. 1r, 209. 2r, 264. 3r, 272
Wright, Harry E. 1r. 138. 2r, 162. 3r, 165
Wright, Jennie. 1r, 392. 2r, 415. 3r, 416

Divorce Courts Bills
Bill A. 1r, 8. Withdrawn, 112, 150
Bill I (Ontario and Prince Edward Island). 1r, 137. 2r, 165; div, 182. Com, 201. 3r, 304
Bill J. 1r, 137. M for 2r, 219, 230; div and 2r, 236. Com, 255. 3r, 279
See 857

Dominion coat of arms, 209

Dominion Elections Bill. 1r, 2r, 820. Com, 822. 3r, 826

Dominion Lands Bill. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. Com, 280. 3r, 287

Domville, Hon. James (Lt.-Col.)
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 30
British Admiralty, correspondence with, 322
Civil Service, experts in, 97
Civil Service reorganization, 650
Cotton garments, prices of, 110
Electrification of government railways, 195
Food and Drugs Bill, 328
German Trade Identification Bill, 218, 293
Imperial Oil Company, 281, 321
Inland Revenue Bill, 680
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 637
Oil and oil shales, 59, 209, 280, 680
Parcel post and mail-order business, 284
Parliament
Buildings—chime of bells, 160, 204
Librarians, appointment of, 189
Restaurant, 770
Services, proposed amalgamation of, 95
Post Office Bill, 691
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 736, 737
Senate staff, organization of, 239
Shipbuilding Bill, 791-797

Donnelly, Hon. James J.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 47
Quebec and the Union Government, 47
Farming in Ontario, 47
Taxation and prices, 48
The farmers' political movement, 49
Divorce Courts Bill, 181
German Trade Identification Bill, 296
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 426

Douglas, Hon. James M.
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 401

Edwards, Hon. W. C.
Electrification of government railways, 199
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 309
Income War Tax Bill, 806
Quebec's good roads, 670
Revision of Punishments Bill, 108
Shipbuilding Bill,789 790
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 392

Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill. 1r, 278. 2r, 301. Com, 324, 375. 3r, 379

Esquimalt naval yard, 164

Exchequer Court Bill. 1r, 411. 2r, 439. Com, 454. 3r, 455

Expenditure, public. See Appropriation Bills

Firearms. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill, Customs Bill

Feeding Stuffs Bill. 1r, 529. 2r, 676. Com, 723. 3r, 724

Finance
Currency Bill. See that title
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 635
Monetary exchange and oil production, 59
National financial conditions, 6, 12, 22
Public Accounts referred to Finance Committee, 322
See Appropriation Bills

Fish and fisheries
British Columbia fisheries treaty, 416
Lobsters, rumoured French embargo on, 393
Sockeye salmon, protection of, 150

Fish Inspection Bill. 1r, 2r, Com, 859. 3r, 860

Fisher, Hon. John H.
Indian Bill, 777

Food and Drugs Bill. 1r, 281. 2r, 302. Com, 327. 3r, 349

Foster, Hon. George G.
Baker, M.P., the late Lt.-Col., memorial to, 32, 416
Betting and pool-selling, 711
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 711
Divorce Courts Bill, 259, 261
German Trade Identification Bill, 289
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 306
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 468
Income War Tax Bill, 810
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 851

Fowler, Hon. George W.
Appropriation Bill, 861
Bankruptcy Bill, 617-625
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 488, 490, 497, 512
Civil Service Bill, 515, 558, 567-578, 580-589, 608
Civil Service reorganization, 648
Criminal Code (French version) Bill, 207, 208
Demobilization Borrowings Bill, 819, 820
Divorce Courts Bill, 228
Electrification of government railways, 201
German Trade Identification Bill, 215
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 362-372
Hudson bay route, 254, 489, 531, 629
Income War Tax Bill, 807-812
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 637
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 845, 851
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 840

Fowler, Hon. George W.—Con.
Oil shales, 150
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 399-405
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 852
Ottawa Mint Bill, 147-149
Parliament
Librarians, appointment of, 188
Services, proposed amalgamation of, 92
Revision of Punishments Bill, 100-109
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 154
Senate officials and employees, appointment of, 567-583
Shipbuilding Bill, 796, 799
Special War Revenue Bill, 812-818

Franco-Canadian Trade, 831

German Trade Identification Bill. 1r,—. 2r, 210. Com, 264. M for 3r, 272; rejected, 288; div, 301.

Girroir, Hon. Edward L.
German Trade Identification Bill, 295
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 423
Parliamentary restaurant, 770
Pension Bill, 751
Revision of Punishments Bill, 106

Gordon, Hon. George
Electrification of government railways, 201, 210
German Trade Identification Bill, 268
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 436
Income War Tax Bill, 801, 803, 810
Parliamentary librarians, appointment of, 189
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 156
Shipbuilding Bill, 794

Government Annuities Bill. 1r, 112. 2r, 141. Com, 162. 3r, 165

Government savings banks, rate of interest in, 635

Governor General, Speeches of Opening Session, 1
Closing Session, 865
See Address

Grain. See Agriculture, Canadian Wheat Board Bill

Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill. 1r, 278. 2r, 304. Com, 361. 3r, 377

Halifax
Garrison, 310, 351
Graving dock, 49, 110

Honey Bill. 1r, 112. 2r, 146. Com, 336. 3r, 349. Commons amendments, 454

Hudson bay route, 254, 489, 531, 600, 629, 635

Immigration (deportation) Bill. 1r, 278. M for 2r, 384, 415, 416, 452, 461; 2r, div, 471. M for Com, 498; Com, 504. Rejected, 510

Imperial Oil Company, 281, 321

Income War Tax Bill. 1r, 2r, 790. Com, 800. 3r, 812

Indian Bill. 1r, 760. 2r, 773. Com, 779. 3r, 782

Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill. 1r, 49. 2r, 112. Com, 130. 3r, 161. Commons amendments, 442

Inland Revenue Bill. 1r, 656. 2r, 680. Com, 718. 3r, 723

Inspection and Sale Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 523. Com, 590. 3r, 610

Insurance. See Civil Service Insurance Bill, Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill

Irrigation Bill. 1r, 635. 2r, 672. Com, 691. 3r, 694

Judges Act Amendment Bill. 1r, 2r, Com, 845. 3r, 851

Kamloops Government building site, 455

Labour
Boards of Conciliation, 183, 323, 360
Industrial problems, 10, 69
National unions, 78
See Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, Immigration Bill, Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, Technical Education Bill

Lake Winnipeg—need of harbour, 747

Lavergne, Hon. Louis
Arthabasca, railway accommodation for, 529
Civil Service Bill, 607, 610
Senate adjournment, 412, 472
League of Nations, 5, 9, 150

Lee Quong Kip, deportation of, 285

Legris, Hon. J. H.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 83
Protection and profits, 86
Revision of the tariff, 86
French Canadians and the Government, 87
Wealth and taxation, 90
War expenditure and indemnity, 282

Loan Companies Bill. 1r, 310. 2r, 337. Com, 359. 3r, 377

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P.C.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 16
The new Parliament Buildings, 16
Hon. Mr. Choquette, 16
Peace and reconstruction, 17
The Government's problems, 18
Admiralty Bill, 527, 596
Alcohol, illicit distilling of, 720
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill, 374, 383
Appeals in criminal cases, 716
Appropriation Bills, 111, 208, 528, 860

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P. C.—Con.
Arenmore, wreck of, 150
Armenia, mandate for, 272
Arthabasca railway accommodation, 530
Bankruptcy Bill, 530, 611-629
Boards of Trade Bill, 724, 748, 749, 772
British ambassador to Washington, 8
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 304, 442, 473, 479, 486-488, 489-498, 511, 763
British Empire Steel Corporation, 413
British North America Act—proposed amendment, 759
Bulgarian Peace Treaty, 120, 203, 206
Business Profits War Tax Bill, 599, 658-660
Camp Borden, 271
Canadian National Railways
Bill, 600, 661
Branch line to Oka, 339
Operation, costs of, 111, 120
Receipts and expenditures, 376
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 821, 826-828
Civil Service Bill, 513, 567-575, 581-590, 607, 790
Civil Service, experts in, 129
Civil Service Insurance Bill, 338, 359
Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Bill, 146, 163
Coal shortage, 580
Cotton garments, prices of, 111
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 673-676, 694-702, 705-718, 727, 761
Currency Bill, 143, 157
Customs Bill (importation of firearms), 203, 206
Customs Tariff Bill, 598, 658
Demobilization Borrowings Bill, 819, 820
Divorce Courts Bill, 179
Dominion coat of arms, 209
Dominion Elections Bill, 822-826
Dominion Lands Bill, 277, 280
Electrification of government railways, 245
Elevators, grain and flax, in Ontario, 413
Esquimalt naval yard, 164
Exchequer Court Bill, 439, 454
Feeding Stuffs Bill, 676, 723
Fish Inspection Bill, 859-860
Food and Drugs Bill, 302, 327-336
Government Annuities Bill, 141-145, 162
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 304, 361-373
Halifax garrison, 356
Halifax graving dock, 110
Honey Bill, 146, 337, 454
Imperial Oil Company, 321
Income War Tax Bill, 800-812
Indian Bill, 773, 778-781
Inland Revenue Bill, 680, 718-723
Inspection and Sale Bill, 523, 590
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 640
Irrigation Bill, 672, 691-694

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P. C.—Con.
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 845, 846, 850
Kamloops Government building site, 455
League of Nations, 150
Lighthouse crews, rescue of, 99, 271
Loan Companies Bill, 359
Lobsters, rumoured French embargo on, 393
Maple Products Bill, 393, 510
Mennonites, 376
Militia Pension Bill, 742-744
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 838-845
Montreal Central Terminal Company Bill, 406
Naturalization Bill, 728-734
Northwest Game Bill, 528, 597
Oakley Divorce petition, 350
Oil shales, committee of inquiry on, 151
Oleomargarine Bill, 381
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 381, 399-406
Ottawa Agreement Bill, 246, 247, 279, 287
Ottawa Mint Bill, 147-149, 163
Parcel Post and mail-order business, 284
Parliament
Buildings—chime of bells, 161
Distribution office, organization of, 248
House of Commons, accommodation for Senators in, 33
Librarians, appointment of, 184
Restaurant, 33, 99
Services, proposed amalgamation of, 91, 93
Parliamentary procedure
Bill in Committee—discussion of principle, 551
Peace Conference—Declaration of Supreme Council on Economic Conditions of the World, 313
Penitentiary Bill, 600, 661
Pension Bill, 750, 753-758
Petroleum and Naptha Bill, 375, 384
Pictou Harbour Bill, 673
Pilotage Bill, 380, 396
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 852-857
Railway Act Amendment Bill—electric railways, 679
Returned Soldiers Emergency Fund, 393
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 734-742
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 138-141, 152-157, 164, 745
Senate
Adjournments, 100, 411, 472
Debates, publication of returns in, 440
Deceased Senators
Landry, the late Hon. P., 98
Pringle, the late Hon. R. H. C., 322
Talbot, the late Hon. P., 98
Sittings, 726, 830
Suspension of rules, 679
Translator, appointment of, 339
Shipbuilding Bill, 782, 790, 791, 795
Shipping Bill (certificates of service), 204

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P. C.—Con.
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 524, 592-596
Soldier Settlement Bill, 374, 382
Sockeye salmon, protection of, 150
Special War Revenue Bill, 812-819
Starkey divorce petition, 455
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 337, 390-392, 394
Steel and shipbuilding companies, 414
Supreme Court Bill, 441, 456-461
Taxation, collection of, 252
Trust Companies Bill, 337, 358
Valcartier camp, 281
War expenditure and indemnity, 282
Yukon Placer Mining Bill, 597, 656

Lynch-Staunton, Hon. George
Bankruptcy Bill, 611-628
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 479
Civil Service Bill, 576, 609
Divorce Courts Bills, 174, 256-263
Electrification of government railways, 200
Food and Drugs Bill, 330-335
German Trade Identification Bill, 210, 264-270, 273-276, 297
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 371
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 385, 504-509.
Supreme Court Bill, 459, 460.

Magdalen Islands steamship service, 278, 320, 343, 746, 767

Maple Products Bill. 1r, 230. 2r, 337. Com, 376. M for 3r, 379. Re-com, 393. 3r, 394. Message from Commons, 510

Marine
Certificates of service. See Shipping Bill
Lighthouse crews, rescue of, 99, 271
Pilotage. See that title.
Sick and distressed mariners. See that title.
Steamboat inspection. See that title.

McCall, Hon. Alexander
Income War Tax Bill, 806

McHugh, Hon. George
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 451, 487
Divorce Courts Bill, 236
German Trade Identification Bill, 269, 274, 292
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 428
Indian Bill, 777

McLean, Hon. John
Divorce Courts Bill, 201
Magdalen Islands steamship service, 278, 320, 767

McLennan, Hon. John S.
Civil Service reorganization, 651
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 676, 717
Firearms, use of, 676
Indian Bill, 777
Shipbuilding Bill, 785
Sexual offences, 717

McMeans, Hon. Lendrum
Bankruptcy Bill, 612-629
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 492
Canadian National Railways—deficits in operation, 111
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 702
Divorce Courts Bill, 177, 256, 261
Food and Drugs Bill, 332-336
German Trade Identification Bill, 269, 270
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 427-434
Income War Tax Bill, 803, 811, 812
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 639
International Loan Company Bill, 230
Loan Companies Bill, 359
Post Office Bill, 670
Revision of Punishments Bill, 57, 100-104, 109
Sexual offences, 702

McSweeney, Hon. Peter
Canadian National railways—operating expenses, 119, 376
German Trade Identification Bill, 212, 295
Mennonites, 376
T. Eaton Company General Insurance Company Bill, 142

Mennonites, 376

Michener, Hon. Edward
Parliament Buildings—chime of bells, 666

Military
Camp Borden, 271
Returned Soldiers Emergency Fund, 393
Valcartier camp, 281
See Demobilization Borrowings Bill, Militia Pension Bill, Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, Soldier Settlement Bill

Militia Pension Bill. 1r, 724. 2r, 742. Com, 742. 3r, 748

Milne, Hon. John
Electrification of Government railways, 195
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 117
Inland Revenue Bill, 718

Mineral
Oil shales, iron ore, and coal deposits, 150, 209, 280

Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill. 1r. 2r, Com, 838. 3r 845.

Mitchell, Hon. William
Camp Borden, 271
Civil Service Bill, 608
Valcartier camp, 281

Montreal coal shortage, 579

Murphy, Hon. Patrick C.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 493
Civil Service Bill, 521, 610
Coal shortage, 580
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 698, 709

Murphy, Hon. Patrick C.—Con.
Divorce Courts Bill, 171, 173, 287
Divorce fees, 725
Food and Drugs Bill, 303, 328-335
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 418
Income War Tax Bill, 801
Lobsters, rumoured French embargo on, 393
Maple Products Bill, 380, 394
Oleomargarine Bill, 396
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 399-405
Orford divorce petition, 725
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 739-742
Senate adjournments, 411
Sexual offences, 698, 709
Shipbuilding Bill, 793

Naturalization Bill. 1r, 679. 2r, 728. Com, 729. 3r, 761

Naval
British Admiralty, correspondence with, 322
Esquimalt yard, 164
Government policy, 70

Nicholls, Hon. Frederic
Appropriation Bill, 111
Boards of Conciliation, 183, 323
British Empire Steel Corporation, 343-349
Civil Service, Experts in, 97
German Trade Identification Bill, 292
Government Annuities Bill, 145, 146
House of Commons, accommodation for Senators in, 34
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 116, 131-134
Public Accounts referred to Finance Committee, 322
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 338
T. Eaton General Insurance Company Bill, 143

Northwest Game Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 528. Com, 597. 3r, 610

Oil and oil shales, 150, 209, 280
See Inland Revenue Bill, Petroleum and Naptha Bill

Oleomargarine Bill. 1r, 349. 2r, 381. Com, 396. 3r, 407

Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill. 1r, 323. 2r, 381. Com, 399. 3r, 407

Ottawa Agreement Bill. 1r, 164. 2r, 246. Com, 279. 3r, 287

Ottawa Mint Bill. 1r, 112. 2r, 147. Com, 163. 3r, 165

Parliament
Buildings, 8, 13, 16, 30
Chime of bells, 158, 203, 662
Message from the King, 2, 20, 58
Distribution office, organization of, 248
House of Commons, accommodation for Senators in, 33
Librarians, appointment of, 184
Restaurant, 33, 99, 768

Parliament—Con.
Royal Assent to Bills, 162, 412, 565, 864
Services, proposed amalgamation of, 91
Session
Opening, 1
Prorogation, 864
Sessional indemnity. See Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill

Parliamentary Procedure
Adjournment of debate, motion for, debatable, 170
Bill in Committee—discussion of principle, 498, 551
Motion that committee rise not debatable, 504

Peace
Declaration of Supreme Council on economic conditions of the world, 313
Treaty expenditure, 271
See Bulgarian Peace Treaty

Penitentiary Bill. 1r, 529. 2r, 600. Com, 661. 3r, 662

Pension Bill. 1r, 724. 2r, 750. Com, 753. 3r, 759
See Militia Pension Bill

Petroleum and Naptha Bill. 1r, 324. 2r, 375. Com, 384. 3r, 394

Pictou Harbour Bill. 1r, 550. 2r, 662. Com, 673, 3r, 679

Pilotage Bill. 1r, 349. 2r, 380. Com, 396. 3r, 407

Planta, Hon. Albert E.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 492

Post Office Bill. 1r, 635. 2r, 667. Com, 681. 3r, 691
Parcel Post and mail-order business, 282

Poirier, Hon. Pascal
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 60
The public expenditure, 60
Encouragement of literature, science, and art, 61
The Royal Society of Canada, 61
Scientific experts in the public service, 62
German Trade Identification Bill, 293
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 427
Parliament
Librarians, appointment of, 184
Services, proposed amalgamation of, 95
Senate translator, appointment of, 339, 343

Pope, Hon. Rufus H.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 25
French Canadians and the Cabinet, 25
The Liberal Conservative party, 26
Quebec's representation in the Government, 27
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 491

Pope, Hon. Rufus H.—Con.
Divorce Courts Bill, 178
House of Commons, accommodation for Senators in, 33
Hudson bay route, 606
Parliamentary restaurant, 770

Power, Hon. Lawrence G., P.C.
Admiralty Bill, 597
Bankruptcy Bill, 610, 612, 623-625
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 473, 495, 513, 766, 767
British North America Act—proposed amendment, 759
Civil Service Bill, 523, 551, 554, 564, 571, 608
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 676, 697-701, 706, 709
Criminal Code (French version) Bill, 208
Divorce Courts Bill, 172, 258-262
Firearms, use of, 676
Food and Drugs Bill, 327-336
Government Annuities Bill, 141
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 361, 373
Halifax garrison, 351
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 430, 505, 510
Inspection and Sale Bill, 591
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 635, 641
Irrigation Bill, 693
Income War Tax Bill, 811
Militia Pension Bill, 744
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 839-843
Naturalization Bill, 730, 733
Oil shales, 280
Parliament
Librarians, appointment of, 186, 189
Restaurant, 772
Parliamentary procedure—Bill in committee—discussion of principle, 551
Pension Bill, 750, 753-758
Post Office Bill, 691
Printing, public, 380, 599
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 855
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 735
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 140, 154
Senate
Adjournment, 472
Sittings, time of, 324
Staff
Appointment of, 571
Organization of, 237, 239
Sexual offences, 697-701, 706, 707
Shipbuilding Bill, 796
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 592
Starkey Divorce petition, 455

Printing, public, 380

Private Bills
Aberdeen Fire Insurance Company, 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 489
Armour Life Assurance Company, 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321

Private Bills—Con.
Army and Navy Veterans of Canada. 1r, 270. 2r, 301. 3r, 395
Bank of Saskatchewan. 1r, 2r, 471. 3r, 529
Bell Telephone Company of Canada. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 489
British American Assurance Company. 1r, 164. 2r, 249. 3r, 349
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Canada Security Assurance Company. 1r, 164 2r, 277, 3r, 321
Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy. 1r, 281. 2r, 302. 3r, 395
Canadian Pacific Railway Company
1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
1r, 324. 2r, 374. 3r, 489
Colonial Investment and Loan Company. 1r, 406. 2r, 415. 3r, 529
Dominion Fire Insurance Company. 1r, 2r, 3r, 766
Dominion Trust Company. 1r, 455. 2r, 498. 3r, 529
Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Hamilton Provident and Loan Corporation. 1r, 249. 2r, 279. 3r, 380
International Loan Company. 1r, 2r, 230. 3r, 279
Kettle Valley Railway Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Montreal Central Terminal Company. 1r, 360. 2r, 395. See 406.
Montreal, Joliette, and Transcontinental Junction Railway Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Montreal Southern Counties Railway Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
North-West Route, Limited. 1r, 415. 2r, 441. 3r, 529
Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company. 1r, 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Pacific Marine Insurance Company. 1r. 230. 2r, 277. 3r, 321
Reliance Insurance Company of Canada. 1r, 2r, 529. 3r, 610
Scottish Canadian Assurance Company. 1r, 112. 2r, 143. 3r, 279
T. Eaton General Insurance Company. 1r, 112. 2r, 141. 3r, 279
T. Eaton Life Assurance Company. 1r, 112. 2r, 141. 3r, 279
Trust and Loan Company of Canada. 1r, 112. 2r, 143. 3r, 279
United Canada Fire Insurance Company. 1r, 158. 2r, 204. 3r, 321
Western Assurance Company. 1r, 164. 2r, 249. 3r, 349
Western Canadian Union Corporation of Seventh Day Adventists. 1r, 415. 2r, 440. 3r, 530

Proudfoot, Hon. William
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 3
A new Canada, 3
Achievements of our soldiers, 3
Canada's national status, 4
Our place in the League of Nations, 5
The soldier settlement problem, 5
Trade and finance, 6
The Dominion franchise, 7
Proportional representation, 7
Divorce courts for Canada, 7
The Prince of Wales' visit, 7
The Prime Minister's illness, 7
Appeals in criminal cases, 715
Betting and pool-selling, 709, 710
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 696-703, 705-718
Criminal procedure, 712-716
Divorce Courts Bill, 202, 257-263
Elevators, grain and flax, in Ontario, 413
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 434
Income War Tax Bill, 805-811
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 848
Lee Quong Kip, deportation of, 285
Orford divorce petition, 725
Parcel post and mail-order business, 282, 285
Post Office Bill, 670, 681-690
Revision of Punishments Bill, 105, 108
Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation Bill, 143
Senate Debates, publication of returns in, 440
Sexual offences, 696-703, 705-709, 717
Special War Revenue Bill, 812-817
Supreme Court Bill, 442, 456-460
T. Eaton General Insurance Company Bill, 141
T. Eaton Life Assurance Company Bill, 143

Prowse, Hon. B. C.
Divorce Courts Bill, 169, 176, 233
German Trade Identification Bill, 269, 270, 289

Public Servants Retirement Bill. 1r, 2r, Com, 851. 3r, 857

Railways
Arthabasca, accommodation for, 529
Canadian National
Deficits in operation, 111, 119, 376
Oka, branch line to, 339
See Canadian National Railway Bill
Electric railways. See Railway Act Amendment Bill
Electrification of Government lines, 190, 210, 240
Grand Trunk Agreement Bill. See that title

Railway Act Amendment Bills
Electric railways. 1r, 591. 2r, 678. Com, 724. 3r, 724
Powers of Railway Commission. 1r, 2r, Com, 829. 3r, 830

Ratz, Hon. Valentine
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 640
Post Office Bill, 685

Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill. 1r, 724. 2r, 734. Com, 735. 3r, 747

Revision of Punishments Bill. 1r, 20. M for 2r, 57. 2r, 91. Com, 100. 3r, 112

Robertson, Hon. Gideon D.
Boards of Conciliation, 183, 360
Civil Service Bill, 517, 561, 566
Civil Service reorganization, 650
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 407-411, 437-439, 452
Electrification of government railways, 196
Employment Offices Co-ordination Bill, 301, 324-327, 375
German Trade Identification Bill, 268, 294
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 367-370
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 384-390, 417-434, 452, 470, 504-510
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 112, 117, 118, 130-136, 162, 442
National labour unions, 78
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 856
Railway Act Amendment Bill, 829, 830
Shipbuilding Bill, 796, 799
Technical Education Bill, 119, 137

Roche, Hon. Wm.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 27
Canada's status, 27
Peace and unrest, 28
The re-establishment of industry and trade, 29
Government loans and taxation, 29
The new Parliament buildings, 30
The Franchise Bill, 30
Tribute to the Prince of Wales, 30
Admiralty Bill, 597
Bulgarian Peace Treaty, 206
Civil Service Bill, 566
Civil Service, experts in, 165
Currency Bill, 141
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 410
Divorce Courts Bill, 235
German Trade Identification Bill, 217, 266
Halifax garrison, 354
Hudson bay route, 534
Senate Committees, quorum of, 49
Shipping Bill (certificates of service), 205
Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill, 525, 592-594
Steamboat Inspection Bill, 338, 390
Trust Companies Bill, 358

Ross, Hon. W. B.
Appeals in criminal cases, 715
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 821, 827, 828
Civil Service Bill, 573-578, 790

Ross, Hon. W. B.—Con.
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 674, 696-704, 705-718, 727
Criminal procedure, 674, 712-715
Director of Coal Operations Bill, 410
Divorce Courts Bills, 112, 165, 202, 219, 255-264, 857, 858
German Trade Identification Bill, 264, 274
Grand Trunk Railway Agreement Bill, 362
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 386
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 845-849
Oakley divorce petition, 350
Oleomargarine Bill, 398
Pilotage Bill, 396
Public Servants Retirement Bill, 853-857
Revision of Punishments Bill, 103
Senate officials and employees, appointment of, 573-578, 790
Sexual offences, 696-703, 705-709, 716, 727

Royal Assent. See Parliament

Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bills
No. 1. 1r, 111. 2r, 138. Com, 152. 3r, 164.
No. 2. 1r, 724. 2r, 745. Com, 745. 3r, 748

Saskatchewan river, navigability of, 440

Schaffner, Hon. Frederick L.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 34
The Union Government, 34
Canada's war debt, 35
The War-time Elections Act, 36
The agrarian movement, 37
Development of the western provinces, 38
The tariff and revenue, 43
Direct taxation, 44
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 470

Senate
Adjournments, 100, 411, 472
Committees, standing, quorum of, 49
Daylight saving time of meeting, 324
Debates, publication of returns in, 440
Deceased Senators
Landry, the late Hon. P., 98
Pringle, the late Hon. R. H. C., 322
Talbot, the late Hon. P., 98
New Senators introduced, 1
Staff
Appointment, 567, 790
Bouchard, Joseph, retirement of, 761
Organization, 237
Translator, appointment of, 339, 577
Sittings, 550, 726, 830
Suspension of rules, 679, 726

Sexual Offences. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill

Sharpe, Hon. W. H.
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 827
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 418, 426, 431, 434, 464, 508
North-West Route, Limited, Bill, 441

Shipbuilding Bill. 1r, 760. 2r, 782. Com, 791. 3r, 800. See 414

Shipping Bill (certificates of service). 1r, 157. 2r, 204. Com, 248. 3r, 255

Sick and Distressed Mariners Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 524. Com, 592. 3r, 656

Smith, Hon. E. D.
Electrification of government railways, 190, 241
German Trade Identification Bill, 288
Income War Tax Bill, 806

Soldier Settlement Bill. 1r, 323. 2r, 374. Com, 382. 3r, 394

Soldiers. See Military

Special War Revenue Bill. 1r, 2r, 790. Com, 812. 3r, 819

Supply. See Appropriation Bills.

Supreme Court Bill. 1r, 415. 2r, 441. Com, 455. 3r, 472

Steamboat Inspection Bill. 1r, 310. 2r, 337. Com, 390. 3r, 394

Steel and Shipbuilding Companies, 414

Tanner, Hon. Charles E.
Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech, 49
The protective policy, 50
Taxation, 51
Canada's constitutional status, 52
Quebec and the Government, 52
Tribute to Sir Robert Borden, 56
Frankling divorce petition, 578
Magdalen islands steamship service, 343
Parliamentary restaurant, 768
Pictou Harbour Bill, 673
Returned Soldiers Emergency Fund, 393
Starkey divorce petition, 489

Taxation
Collection of, 249
See Business Profits War Tax Bill, Customs Tariff Bill, Income War Tax Bill, Special War Revenue Bill

Taylor, Hon. James D.
British Columbia Indian Lands Bill, 484
Civil Service reorganization, 654

Technical Education Bill. 1r, 49. 2r, 119. Com, 136. 3r, 137

Tessier, Hon. Jules
Civil Service, experts in, 96
Oil production, 680

Thompson, Hon. Frederick
German Trade Identification Bill, 272, 274
Magdalen islands steamship service, 746
Parliamentary restaurant, 769

Thorne, Hon. William H.
German Trade Identification Bill, 219, 266

Todd, Hon. Irving R.
Civil Service Bill, 517
Shipbuilding Bill, 789

Trade, 6, 12, 30. See Franco-Canadian

Trust Companies Bill. 1r, 310, 2r, 337. Com, 358. 3r, 360

Turriff, Hon. J. G.
Appropriation Bill, 863
British Empire Steel Corporation, 349
Civil Service
Bill, 516, 556, 571, 589
Experts in, 128
Reorganization, 642
Halifax garrison, 353
Hudson bay route, 539
Immigration (deportation) Bill, 420
Indian Bill, 779, 780
Interest rate in Government savings banks, 638
Oleomargarine Bill, 397
Ottawa Agreement Bill, 279, 287
Parliament buildings—chime of bells, 161
Post Office Bill, 688
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 155
Shipbuilding Bill, 785, 798

War expenditure and indemnity, 282

Watson, Hon. Robert
Betting and pool-selling, 710, 711
Civil Service Bill, 568, 574, 575
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 694, 710, 711
Divorce fees, 726
Feeding Stuffs Bill, 678
Firearms, use of, 694

Watson, Hon. Robert.—Con.
German Trade Identification Bill, 267
Hudson bay route, 601
Parliament buildings—chime of bells, 204
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Bill, 140

Webster, Hon. John
Electrification of Government railways, 240
Feeding Stuffs Bill, 677
Oleomargarine Bill, 398
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 402
Post Office Bill, 687

Webster, Hon. Lorne C.
Introduction to Senate, 1

Wheat. See Canadian Wheat Board Bill

Whipping. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill

White, Hon. Gerald P.
Davidson, H. J., case of, 585
Seventh Day Adventists Bill, 440

White, Hon. Richard Smeaton
Montreal coal shortage, 579
Railway Act Amendment Bill, 829

Willoughby, Hon. H. B.
Bankruptcy Bill, 619, 626
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 828
Civil Service Bill, 514, 578
Divorce Courts Bill, 257-259
Hudson Bay route, 607
Judge's Act Amendment Bill, 849
Ministerial Salaries and Sessional Indemnity Bill, 844
Oakley divorce petition, 350
Supreme Court Bill, 458

Yukon Placer Mining Bill. 1r, 511. 2r, 597. Com, 656. 3r, 662.