A PRINTER'S ANSWER.—A printer, well known in this town as being more remarkable for his odd humor than the length of his purse, that while he was traveling from Lowell to Boston, was met by a highwayman, who politely (as is the custom with those gentry) demanded his purse.

"My dear sir, quoth Corporal Nym, I perceive you don't know me."

"That is nothing to the purpose, sir; give up your purse immediately, demanded the highwayman."

The corporal repeated, with earnestness which could not be misunderstood—

"Positively you don't know me."

"Well," said the highwayman, some what surprised at the manner of the Corporal, who the devil are you?"

"A printer! Wheu! I'm off, dry picking!"

A DEAR HUG.—A young man was brought before the Mayor at Woodstock, on Monday, charged by a young woman with having assaulted her on the street, and putting his arm around her. For this delicate act of attention he was fined $10 and costs, or fifteen days imprisonment.

The blockade runner Constantine sailed from Halifax on Wednesday. It is reported for Wilmington, N. C. She chased by a Federal gunboat and ran into Ketch Harbour that night, which post she left the next morning, hugging the coast.

English papers give currency to the rumor that the Earl of Carlisle is likely to yield to the opinion of his medical advisers by withdrawing for a time from public life. The Duke of Devonshire will probably be his successor in the viceregency.

A lie is the handle which fits all sin.

Poetry.

The Buttery's first Flight.

Thou hast burst from thy prison,
Bright child of the air,
Like a spirit just risen,
From its mansion of care.

Thou art joyously winging
Thy first ardent flight,
When the sky lark is singing
Her notes of delight.

When the sunbeams are throwing
Their glories on thine,
Till thy colours are glowing
With tints more divine.

Then tasting new pleasure
In summer's green bowers,
Repeating at leisure
On fresh open'd flowers.

Or delighted to hover,
Around them to see,
Whose charms, airy rovers,
Bloom sweeter for thee

And fondly inhaling,
Their fragrance, till day,
From thy bright eye is falling,
And fading away.

Then seeking some blossom
Which looks to the West,
Thou dost rest in its bosom,
Sweet shelter and rest—

And there dost betake thee
Till darkness is o'er,
And the sunbeams awake thee
To pleasure once more.

TRIPLES.

A WORD TO THE MARRIED PEOPLE.

The singing of the door-bell has a pleasant sound to me, especially in my idle-moods—

Like an unopened letter, there is a mystery about it, and one waits with a pleasurable excitement to see who or what is coming.

Returning home one day, earlier than usual I found my wife had gone out: and while lounging idly over the paper, the bell rang.

I waited expectant till Bridget appeared with a note containing a request, from my friend, Dr. Stearns, to ride out to his residence in the country the next day, to transact some business that had been long pending, and an invitation to bring my wife and spend the day.

I was pleased; first, because I wanted the business completed; and second, because I thought I needed a day's recreation.

But the next morning everything seemed usual I could not get off as early as I wish ed, consequently, I was peevish and fretful, and Alice reflected my humour, I suppose, as it appeared to me she had never been so unamiable.

At length, however, I drove away, though not in a very pleasant mood. It was a lovely October day, and as I rode along noting the tints of the landscape, my memory went back to the golden autumn when I wooed and won my bride.

How lovely Alice was then! I thought, And how happy we were! But that was long ago. Yet nature is the same, though we are changed. Let me see; we have been married three years; is possible it is no longer.

And I felt a pang as I contrasted the past with the present, to think that we could settle down into the commonplace life we now led.

We had no serious trouble, we didn't quarrel; though when I felt gross, or other things didn't go to suit me, I took no pains to conceal it, and often spoke harshly to Alice, who sometimes replied in the same spirit, sometimes with tears. Yet we were generally good friends. But the charm, the tenderness of our early love had imperceptibly vanished.

I had become careless about my appearance at home, and Alice was equally negligent. Her beautiful brown hair, which she used to wear in the most becoming curls and was usually brushed plainly behind her ears unless she going out or expected company. I dismissed the subject with a sigh, as the doctor's gate, with the reflection that it was the same with all married people——must be so in fact—how far could romance and sentiment find a place among so many prosy realities? I supposed we were as happy as anybody; and yet it was not the kind of life I had looked forward to with so many bright anticipations.

The doctor came out and greeted me cordially. In the hall we met Mrs. Stearns, looking fresh and lovely in her pink muslin wrapper, with her jetty hair in tasteful braids. She scolded me playfully for not bringing my wife chatted a few minutes, and then fitted away, while the doctor remarking that his motto was business first and pleasure afterwards, led the way to the library.

As we entered the room I noticed a vase of bright autumn flowers on the table, imparting an air of taste and cheerfulness to the apartment. I made remarks about it to which the doctor responded:—

"Yes, I am very fond of flowers, and I love to see them in the house, and as I spend much time here, my wife always keeps a vase of them on the table as long as they last."

Our business was finished before dinner, and we walked out in the grounds, which were quite extensive, and tastefully arranged.

There was a variety of flowers in bloom and I noticed that the doctor selected here and there the finest, until he had a hand-bouquet.

When we reached the house, Mrs. Stearns was on the steps. The doctor, continuing our conversation, gave her the flowers with slight bow and smile; and holding up a spray of crimson berries, which he had broken off, she bent her head while he fastened it among her dark braided hair.

It was a trifling incident, yet their manner arrested my attention. Had I been a stranger I should have pronounced them lovers instead of sober married people. All through the day, I noticed the same delicate attention and deference in their deportment to each other.

There was nothing of which the most fastidious guest could complain; yet while showing me the most cordial attention, they did not seem to ignore each other's existence, as married people so often do.

I had never visited the doctor before, and was much pleased with his tasteful home. I said so, after dinner, when we strolled out into the woods.

"Yes," he said, "I think it is pleasant; and, he added, "I believe I am a contented man, so far I am not disappointed in life."

"How long have you been married, doctor?" I asked.

"Ten years."

"Well," I pursued, "can you tell me whence is the bright atmosphere that surrounds your home. Tell me how you and Mrs. Stearns manage to retain the depth and freshness of your early love, as you seem to do?"

I should think the wear and tear of life would dim it somewhat, I never saw a home where my ideal of domestic happiness was realized before. It is what I have dreamed of."

The doctor smiled, and, pointing to a thorny grape-vine climbing over a trellis, and loaded with purple fruit, he said—

"That vine needs careful attention, and if pruned and properly cared for it is what you see; it; but if neglected, how soon would it become a worthless thing! So the love which is to all, at some period, the most precious thing in life, but needs so much care to keep it unimpaired, is generally neglected. Ah, my friends, it is little as trifles—that so often estrange loving hearts. I have always made it a point to treat my wife with the same courtesy that characterized my deportment in the days of courtship; and while I am careful not to offend her mind will be equally respected."

That night I rode homeward, pondering the doctor's words; and reviewing the years of our married life, I was surprised at my own blindness, and determined to recall the early dream if possible.

The next morning at breakfast I astonished Alice by a careful toilet, chatted over the dinner, and, after tea, invited her to ride.

When she came down in my favourite blue dress, with her hair in shining curls, I thought she had never looked lovelier.

I exhorted myself, as of old, to entertain her and was surprised to find how quickly and pleasantly the evening passed.

I resolved to test the doctor's theory pro and con, and the result exceeded my most sanguine expectations.

For all the little nameless attentions so gratifying to a woman's heart, and so universally accorded by the lover and neglected by the husband I find myself repaid a thousand fold; and I would advise all who are sighing over the non-fulfilment of early dreams to go and do likewise, remembering that, that which is worth winning is worth keeping.

An engineer of experience says that to ascertain if mining operations are going on in any vicinity it is only necessary to dig deep holes and place men in them to listen. He says that in some kind of soil the work of excavating can be detected by sound at sixty rods distance.

We give away nothing so generously, and receive nothing so reluctantly, as advice.

Hope.

Surrounded with misfortune, and oppressed by calamity, man stands in need of some helping hand to assist him in this world of troubles. The assistance which he gains is the pleasing idea that something more congenial to his wishes will take place. He feeds upon the prospect of better fortune—he lives upon the expectation of more blissful days: "He imagines that to-morrow's sun will shine with uncommon joyousness—that peace before unknown, and pleasures never tasted, will be showered upon him."

Although the morrow arrives with the same ill fortune and envelopes him in the same cloud of misery, yet he departs not of taunting at some future period, the real enjoyment of happy life. Thus Hope, "the balmy and life-blood of the soul" enables him to support with fortitude the frowns of a giddy world, and the scoffs of fickle fortune.

Indulgent Heaven, granting to mortals every needful aid, gave them through life's dangerous paths. Hope throws a mantle of consolation over our sorrows, and administers comfort to our despairing minds. In her we find much to alleviate our distresses.

The hope of happiness in a life to come operates upon all our earthly conduct. No joy is so perfect as that which the christian feels when hope inspires him to his noble and heavenly doings; the prize of glory is before his sight, and he is spurred on to his discharge his duty by the inspiration of a heavenly reward. When the grim messengers of death seize upon the christian for his victim, then Hope shines the brightest—then Hope is most ready to administer comfort—then Hope is prized the highest, and is then present with her smiling countenance.

Hope, although an advocate of peace and happiness, does not carry with her blessings. "She calculates her schemes for a long and durable life, presses forward to imaginary points of bliss; and grasps at impossibilities;" and consequently ensnares men into beggary, ruin, and dishonor.

In whatever state man exists he continually hopes for an alteration, which may be more agreeable to his wishes. The present is not so pleasing, as fond satisfaction realizes in the future. When disappointment crowds the mind and fresh sorrows hover round the soul, the imagination is called into action to paint a more pleasing scene of things which soon shall happen. The friend, whose faltering limbs scarce support his feeble frame, draws forth the sympathetic wish that his health may be restored.

From Hope sweet consolation is derived. From Hope the palpitating heart receives a cordial. All that can please or delight the fancy, leads a new influence from Hope's fascinating charms. Let hope be banished from the mind of man, and what joy is there left in his heart? Without the first and best gift of heaven, the manly vigor of the soul would droop away, the energies of the mind would languish, and every faculty would cease to operate.

Religion in the Home.

Home! It is a word of sacred charm. There is perhaps, no other word in the language which awakens so many pleasant memories and associations. It glides into the heart very gently, yet when there takes possession of sympathy and affection. But is there not in very many a touch of sorrow in the word—a blamefully yearning sense of a cordial.
